I hope the reader will pardon me for this digression. Sometimes experiences of the past come before us and by that we can compare our life then with now. Then we were "carnally minded" which to be is death, but now I live in Christ.

From Helena I went to Bozeman on the Northern Pacific Rail Road. There I met Father J.

E. Reese and rode out fifteen miles with him to Reese Creek where I was made comfortable in his house. On the 13th of May I held two services in their neat and pleasant little chapel. I remained there until June 7th, preaching and visiting with the Saints. Brother J. C. Clapp met me there on the first of June, and immediately took up the laboring oar and remained with me until I left Montana. On the 2d and 3d we held a conference and reorganized the Montana district, with Gomer Reese president and William Nelson clerk. Brother Harry Wells and family, of Knob Noster, Missouri, arrived just in time to meet with us and enjoy rich blessings of the gospel that were vouchsafed to us. Whatever may be in store for the Reese Creek Saints, we may not be able to tell but all was pleasantness and peace during our efforts there, and during that time it was a spiritual feast to me. In all the years I have spent in this field I never had clearer assurances of God's acceptance. My stay there was a "love feast" and with my heart filled with gratitude to the Father above, and to them, I bade them good by, and left May 4th with brother Clapp for Deer Lodge. May God bless them and forever shield and save them. I shall always keep in grateful remembrance their loving kindness to me. I ministered the word to the Saints at Deer Lodge again in their little chapel on the tenth, and left them on the 12th for Oxford, Idaho, where I arrived on the 13th.

The weather was unfavorable for us each time at Deer Lodge. The Saints there, young and old, are alive and interested, both in church and Sabbath School. Sister Clapp is superintendent and is greatly loved by all. There again the same brotherly kindness was manifested that makes the heart of the missionary glad. We left them with the same "God bless you" that we so often hear, and while we appreciated that, we felt thankful for the substantial tokens bestowed.

At Oxford several of our people have thought best to change their location and but few are left. I arrived at the station at five o'clock in the morning, where I met Bro. W. H. Harris and his two boys with a team to drive me out to the little burg two and a half miles. At his house I was made welcome, and at night preached in the School-house to a very nice turnout. Spent next day in visiting the Saints. Bro. Peter Anderson met me there in the evening from Logan, Utah, and I again spoke to a good, and I believe, appreciative audience, and blessed three babes.

On the 15th we left Oxford for Malad with brethren W. H. Harris and Benjamin Crowshaw, and sisters Harris and Hall, and her son James. The drive was forty miles, and dusty, but we enjoyed the trip. Camped by a beautiful mountain stream, and partook of their hospitality. At Malad we found sadness in place of the joy and gladness we hoped to greet us. Sr. Thomas was laying at the river's brink, ready and expecting to be gathered to the other side at any moment, and Sr. Lewis, wife of our loved Bro. John Lewis, was also very sick indeed, while two days before our arrival death had invaded their home and their little grand daughter Lizzie, and daughter of Sr. Davis, had been laid to rest. All hearts were sad. There we met brethren R. M. Elvin, J. T. Davis and J. H. and S. D. Condit from Malta, and Father Bowman and Sr. Elefason and her son from Soda Springs. Our conference was well attended, especially the preaching services. The preaching was good except the effort of your humble servant, and that was a failure. I feel a little bad over that yet, but I could not help it. I think I was like a good brother I once asked to open a meeting for me. He said he would rather not, that he was out of practice in praying, but said if I would pray he would preach. To preach well, I have learned, it is good to pray much. I left the work at Malad in good hands. R. M. Elvin was laying siege to that city, while Bro. J. T. Davis heard a voice saying, "Come over to Samaria and help us." It was not the Macedonian cry; it was the voice of a Samaritan.—Bro. Owen Thomas, I believe. I wish to thank the Saints in Idaho for their goodness to me and hope I may have the privilege and pleasure of meeting with them again soon.

Next Monday I go to St. Johns to hear Bro. J. T. Davis and an opponent discuss the differences between the two churches, and do what I can. The heated term is coming when but little can be done, but just as soon as the evenings begin to lengthen, and heat subsides, we will, with the Master's help, enter vigorously into the fight and visit all the branches in Utah.

I hope and pray for good results from all parts of the field. With brethren Clapp and Gomer Reese in Montana, J. H. Condit and J. R. Evans in Idaho and Peter Anderson and R. M. Elvin in Utah, I believe with God's blessing we shall not be disappointed. May the Lord bless the Saints in all parts of this great field. In the past they have stood grandly to the front. Let us all now with one heart and one mind press on in Christ's name to victory.

Yours, in gospel bonds,

R. J. ANTHONY.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 19th.

Bro. Joseph Smith.—It is with a heart full of joy and thankfulness to God that I write to you, to let you know that the Lord is blessing our labors. I baptized one honest soul that was seeking after truth, in Georgeville the other Sunday. There were about one hundred that witnessed the baptism. I spoke to them on the first principles of the gospel, to which they listened attentively till I got through. I thank God that I had good freedom. Last Sunday another gave in his name for baptism. Still they come, not with a rush, but steadily. There are others standing at the door but afraid to knock. My prayer is that God will assist them with his spirit so that they will knock that the door may be opened for them. Many strangers attend our meetings and are very much interested in the speaking of Elder M. H. Bond, for when he speaks he speaks in power of the spirit of God. We have the Salvation Army on each side of us, one the English and the other the American. Some of them come to our meetings, and one young man had the Voice of Warning loaned to him. He is an officer. He said that he had been praying to God to show him more light, as he was willing to get all the light he could. One of the brethren (Bro. Perry) asked him if he knew what brought him here. He said that he did not. The brother said, "You have been praying for more light, and God has answered your prayer, and he has sent you here and now I have given you more light, it is now for you to receive it." He went away feeling much better and wiser. He came again at night and we had an excellent meeting. The Lord blessed us for we had such freedom. I went to speak to our friends and they said that was just what they wanted to hear. My text was 1st Cor. 9:16. When I went to my employment one of our men came to me and said he was glad he went to our meeting to hear me, for he heard a good sermon and should come again. O, I feel to thank God that his spirit is striving with men.

Your brother in the gospel,

T. H. MOORE.

GOLIATH SLAIN BY LITTLE DAVID.

WATERFORD, Ont., June 20th.

Bro. Blair.—There has been quite a tempest on the theological sea, here in this place, and it has been raging for some time. Elder R. C. Evans, the "boy preacher," came to this place on the 5th of May, and began a series of meetings, in the course of which some of the Reverends took occasion to ridicule, and with that dignified air pertaining to those gentlemen, solemnly warned their flocks to stay away. But as we are living in a progressive age, and the people are mostly desirous of hearing "some new thing," the greater part of the community paid but little heed to the instructions of these spiritual advisers, and each evening R. C. had a full house; and very often many were turned from the door for want of room. "Now, what is to be done?" was the question agitating the minds of the clergy, and although Waterford is a beautiful little town of about fourteen hundred inhabitants, sustaining some six or seven reverends, the question was a perplexing one. At last, a glimmer of light seemed to break across their benighted pathway, which seemed to offer relief; they would send for T. L. Wilkinson, the Methodist champion of Canada, who would soon settle this "boy-preacher," run him out of town, and repair the breach which had been already effected in the Methodist ranks. Wilkinson was sent for, and on the twenty-fourth of May was on hand (seeing the Methodists had agreed to give him two-hundred dollars) to do their work for them.

Accordingly, arrangements were made for a public discussion, to take place in Waterford, beginning on the 14th of June. The following propositions were agreed upon for discussion.

1st. "Resolved that water baptism is essential to salvation."—R. C. Evans affirms.

2d. "That the God who is believed in, and worshiped by the Methodist Church, is the God of the Bible."—T. L. Wilkinson affirms.

3d. "That Christian baptism, as taught in the New Testament is immersion."—R. C. Evans affirms.

4th. "That according to inspired authority, the infant children of believers are proper subjects for Christian baptism."—T. L. Wilkinson affirms.

Arrangements being made, bills were printed, and circulated in every little town and hamlet for miles around. The Methodists being confident of a glorious victory, were feeling jubilant; and although they don't believe in prophecy, some of them did venture to predict that this Methodist champion would demolish "that boy" before the first proposition was concluded. Others, of the Methodists said: "Elder Evans will never meet this man," &c., but when the time for the contest came Bro Evans was on the battleground, armed and equipped with God's eternal truth. The time came to open the debate, and Elder Evans began the first proposition by showing,—

1st. "God is unchangeable."—Mal. 3:6; Jas. 1:17; Heb. 13:8.

2d. His law is perfect.—Ps. 19:7; Jas. 1:25.

3d. The gospel was that law.—Rom. 1:16, 17; John 12:48-50.

4th. The gospel and doctrine of Christ synonymous.—2 John 9th verse; James 1:25.

5th. Obedience to the perfect law, the gospel, essential to salvation.—Luke 6:46-49; John 15:4-10.

6th. Water baptism is a principle of that law, or the gospel.—Heb. 6:1, 2; John 7:16, 17.

7th. Christ obeyed it to fulfill all righteousness. Matt. 3:13-17; John 15:10.

8th. He commanded his servants to baptize.—Matt. 28:19, 20; Mark 16:15, 16.

9th. We must keep his commandments.—John 14:15; 15:10-14; 1 John 2:4.

10th. Baptism is for the remission of sins.—Mark 1:4; Luke 3:2, 3; 24:47; Acts 2:37, 38. Rom. 6:1-7; Acts 22:16.

11th.—It must be complied with to get into Christ.—Gal. 3:27; Rom. 6:3.

12th. We are saved by it.—1 Pet. 3:20, 21; 1 Cor. 15:1; Acts 11:14.

13th. It was taught in every dispensation of time.—1 Pet. 1:25; Isa. 40:8; Gal. 3:8; Rom. 1:16, 17; Gal. 3:19.

This is but a brief summary of the arguments used by the boy-preacher, in support of the first proposition. Many other citations of scripture were used, with telling effect, and various lexicographers, and church historians, were brought forth by Bro. Evans which fortified his arguments with such convincing power, that this whale of Methodism was completely non-plussed; and by a process of logical reasoning, R. C. made him go back on the Methodist Disciplines of 1842, 1860 and 1886; also John Wesley's sermons, notes, &c., besides to repudiate his own printed works; all of which Bro. Evans had on the platform. The first proposition being discussed, there was about nine-tenths of the people on our side.

And now to cap the climax, on the evening of the third night's debate, Mr. Wilkinson appeared on the platform, affirming the second proposition, and after twenty minutes of twisting and quibbling, his vocabulary of argument being exhausted, he began to ridicule the Mormon idea of God. A point of order was raised here, showing that it was not the Mormon's God, nor the Hindoo's God, that was under consideration, but the God represented in the Methodist discipline—a God without body or parts—and he had no right to ridicule any one else's idea of God; but sustain by Scriptures, and logical inference, if he could, the bodiless, partless God of the Methodist discipline. This point of order being sustained by the chair, Mr. Wilkinson, the great Methodist champion, refused to debate farther, and frankly acknowledged before about six hundred people, that he could not prove the God represented in the Methodist discipline, unless he had the privilege of dragging in everybody else's idea of God. He packed his books, and hastily made himself conspicuous by his absence, amid the jeers and cries of "coward!" proceeding from the crowd.

The chairman, who was a barrister at law, and, by the way, was the man of Wilkinson's choice, was sustained in his decision by almost the entire crowd; less than a dozen voting in the negative. I had almost forgotten to make mention of one fact, which is as follows:

Mr. Wilkinson, in his efforts to prejudice the public mind against the position held by the Saints, challenged Bro. Evans to negative the proposition that "Joseph Smith was a polygamist;" this brother Evans cheerfully complied with; and when Mr. Wilkinson was packing his books, brother Evans reminded him of this challenge, saying, "If you can't meet your proposition on the God-head, I am ready now to enter into an examination of the subject as to whether Joseph Smith was a polygamist or not;" and although Mr. Wilkinson was bound by his agreement to remain several days longer, (as the debate was to last from the 14th to the 23d), yet now, he "had to go home and move his family."

And now, Mr. Editor, hear the conclusion of the whole matter: The general accepted verdict is, that the Goliath of Methodism (Rev. T. L. Wilkinson), has sunk to rise no more; being thrust through with the pebble of truth, hurled by the gospel sling as wielded with terrific force by Canada's youthful armor-bearer "Little David;" alias R. C. Evans.

WILLARD J. SMITH.

DOCKERY, Mo., June 21st.

Bro. Blair:—Brother Robert L. Ware was at my place last week and preached for us four nights with good liberty. He preached four old fashioned sermons. Some said that he was very precise in his preaching, and some said that he was very plain, while others remarked that the gospel must be the same until Christ comes again, that there should be no change in the gospel. Brother Ware left here to go south to Hardin, where he had been laboring before he came here. There have been three baptized, and he thinks that a good work can be done there. He wanted me to go with him, but I am so situated that I could not, but I wish him God's speed.

There has not been any preaching done there before. He said that there were more that would obey when he went back. I have been laboring in the Alma branch as an elder ever since Bro. Bozarth was here. I hope our district will revive again. It is very necessary that it should revive. We regret that Bro. Bronson was not assigned part of his time in this district, but hope that he will be blessed wherever he may be.

Yours in Christ,

G. W. CARTER.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 19th.

Bro. William Blair:—We are happy to say that the Saints as a rule are well and alive in the work; and that the labor of Bro. Gillen in this district is not in vain, but has given us a better understanding of our duty to God, and his church. In all things we have a better understanding of our condition and the position that we should hold in the world at large. Bro. Gillen has gone south. Late advices say that he has baptized two. May the Spirit of the Master be with him. Bro. R. Etzenhouser is with us now, trying to hold up the banner of the cross. The foundation for our new church is nearly ready and we hope to have a church of our own some day, so that when ye elders pass this way, ye can stay and preach the word in a house belonging to the Latter Day Saints. To that end the Saints are working hard, and our friends do not stay behind, but are willing to give a helping hand.

On the 22d of May we had a straw-berry party, given by the St. Louis Mite Society, to raise funds for the new church. It was a success, and we hope that their picnic on the fourth of July, for the same purpose, will also be successful. Am glad to say that the work is onward. The Spirit of the Master is striving with the people.

Ever working, watching, and praying for Zion's weal, I remain,

Yours in hope,
NOAH NEPHI COOKE.

LELAND'S GROVE, Iowa, June 18th.

Bro. Cochran:—We thought we would write and let you know where we are. We met with the brethren yesterday at Leland's Grove and had a good time. We have visited the brethren at their homes. We preached once to a full house of attentive hearers and have delivered several exhortations in public meetings with good liberty. We expected to have some influence over our grand-children. They are like all other peoples children; they will come when they get ready.

We intend day after to-morrow to go to Persia on our way home and get acquainted with the brethren there. Our health is tolerably good this morning. We do not know exactly when we will get home but think some of the last day in June. We have yet to call and see our son, on our way home, at Villisca, but we were to write to Bro. Butler to meet us at the depot.

Love to all the Saints,
JOHN and CHRISTIANA LANDERS.

EUREKA, Kan., June 19th.

Dear Herald:—Since we came into the church we have had a great deal of sickness and lost one dear daughter. She died the twenty-second of last March, of pneumonia and fever. She was eighteen years and six months old. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. Her name was Cora G. Cato. She is the second one we have had to give up, each one being eighteen. I had a dream about two months before her death, and after she died it was revealed to me the meaning of my dream. I dreamed I saw two angels, robed in white, and on white horses; and I thought some one told me that they were carrying messages, one traveling west and the other south east. The morning she died we started two letters, one west and the other south-east to our two married daughters.

Yours, in Christian bonds,

MRS. CYNTHIA CATO.

DEFIANCE, Iowa, June 24th.

Dear Bro.:—I write to give my testimony. I know that the latter day work is true. It is of God for the signs that follow the believer are had in the church in these last days as well as in former days. Last fall at the Reunion, one of my daughters was stricken down with a severe fever. She requested that I should call in brethren Short and John Roth. They came and anointed her with oil and prayed over her, and she was healed instantly. O, how good it is that God has restored the everlasting gospel to earth again, in these last times, to suffering humanity through the Prophet, Joseph Smith. It makes my heart rejoice to think that we have such a kind Father in heaven to bless his humble servants with the very same, and as rich blessings as he did in former days, showing unto us that he is no respecter of persons, but blesses those that diligently seek him.

It has been about six years since I obeyed the gospel, and the longer I live in obedience thereto the stronger I am in the faith. Let us one and all that have taken the name of Christ upon us live and set such examples as shall be worthy of imitation, and let our light so shine that the world's people, seeing our good works, may be constrained to say, surely these people are the people of God, for see how they worship God. They worship him in Spirit and in truth.

Yours in the faith,

N. M. GUNSOLLY.

SAND RUN, Ohio, June 19th.

Bro. Joseph:—I left Limerick May 10th, to open up the work in new places. The Saints at Limerick are in far better condition than they have been for the past two years. Every effort that could reasonably be made by the truth-loving Saints to honor the fair name of the church and to help the best of causes is being made there. So may it continue.

May 12th I opened a new place at Sand Ridge School-house, Athens county, Ohio. Bro. Thomas Matthews and the writer applied for the same house some two months ago, when the directors refused and said that the Mormon elders, as they called us, should not preach there. This is the home of Bro. and Sr. Pratt, and by their efforts the house was procured. Prejudice was removed and I was requested to come again.

May 23d I arrived at Sand Run. Met with the Saints in prayer and testimony meeting, and all took part. The good spirit was with us, and the Saints rejoiced in the great latter day work. An earnest, faithful little band of Saints, united in the grandest and best work on earth. May they all be able to continue to the end. I continued the meetings over Sunday with good interest. On Monday night I opened the work in a new place. At first the interest was not good, as the enemy had gone before us scattering falsehoods, and the ladies of the town seemed to be afraid to come to hear one of the sect that is so much spoken against. I continued the effort and the interest increased. I preached ten times. The last night the house was filled to its utmost capacity with more than half the congregation composed of ladies.

I was invited to return, and will do so on the 22d of June, when Bro. Thomas Matthews will be with me to assist in the good work. From there I went to Brush Fork, another mining town, to introduce the new doctrine, so called. We arrived at 7:45 p. m., and learned that the M. E., and M. P. ministers had refused to make the announcement. Bro. C. Cooper, president of Hocking Valley branch was with me. It was very wet and muddy, so we retreated in good order and went to the hotel. Bro. Cooper had thought he would be kindly cared for by some that lived at that place that he had been connected with in former church fellowship prior to his connection with the Latter Day Saints. However the line had been drawn and they could not think of stooping so low as to notice him when in company with one of those bad fellows that help turn the world up side down. We met with them in class meeting at nine a. m., and tried to get the use of the house at some time, but were refused. At two p. m. we met with the M. E. Sunday School, but the class-leader refused to let me speak, that being prayer-meeting night. I learned that the house would not be used on Tuesday night. I requested the privilege of announcing my meeting before the school was dismissed, but was denied. I called the house to order and gave out my meeting in the evening.

As we were walking on the railroad on our return to Sand Run, we got in company with the United Brethren classleader. He was enjoying the spirit of his father, and said that if it was not Sunday, he would give me what I ought to have—a thumping, with a good suit of tar and feathers to complete the work. Several gathered to hear and I talked to the crowd some thirty minutes, telling them of the things of the kingdom of heaven, and gave them some tracts to read, inviting them to come and hear for themselves. I then returned and had good liberty in speaking to a fair congregation of good listeners.

The work will be followed up there when a house can be had to continue the meetings. We think that some good can be done there in time. I was pleased that that religious fellow had so great respect for the Lord's day, and that I was favored to come in contact with him on that day. Lucky day for me. From there I introduced the work at Greendale Furnace. Left some near the kingdom. They will investigate our doctrine and claims, and I hope that some will obey the gospel. May the good work continue.

Yours for truth,
T. J. BEATTY.

GALLAND'S GROVE, IOWA, June 25th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I now intend to remain in western Iowa till after the Fourth of July; for the people here request me to deliver an oration on that day before a Union Basket Picnic.

Our meetings here are largely attended, and a deep and lively interest is manifest. Five were baptized yesterday, and others are believing. I feel confident that western Iowa will experience an active and fruitful revival of Church work this summer, fall, and winter. The Saints are generally in fine spirits, the elders are united in the main, are zealous and hopeful, and feel renewed determination to preach the word with all diligence, leaving results with the Lord. Many of the Saints are talking freely and favorably of the proposed college at Lamoni. All think it should be built at once, and express the ardent hope that it will be. The rising generation among the Saints are numerous and rapidly increasing, and wisdom demands that they should be educated free from the corrupting dogmas and doctrines of Mystery Babylon, and free from the seducing follies and enticements of the vain, giddy world. Only a few days since a young lady, a member of the church, who is attending college at Indianola, Iowa, related the crafty, zealous efforts put forth by some of the teachers, pupils, and friends of that institution, to prejudice her mind against the Saints and their doctrines and win her over to sectarianism. The scandalous stories told and published abroad relative to Joseph the Seer, and his fellow ministers, also some prejudicial reports in regard to the present President of the Church and the Saints, were displayed with jesuitical ingenuity and cunning, with the evident intention of alienating her faith and affections from the church of her choice and her people's choice. When I told her of the purpose of the Saints to soon have a college of their own, one devoted to education and not to dogma or denominational doctrines, she expressed heartfelt endorsement of the project and freely assured us it would meet with full and generous support.

She hopes to soon graduate as a teacher in music, painting, etc. etc., and devote her time as an instructor in those departments of education.

I find not a few throughout these regions who think very favorably of locating their homes at or near Lamoni in the near future. My advice, as in the past, is, that all who are well situated and doing well should not remove anywhere until they are assured of making a success by the change, for the world abounds with places where there are equally good and better opportunities for business and to make a comfortable living than Lamoni and vicinity, at present; but that, if persons have means so as to be beyond and above the needs of living by labor for others, or can make business of their own in town or country, and thus be independent of others for employment, then Lamoni and vicinity may prove an excellent region for them to locate in, for it is a pleasant, healthful, peaceful and beautiful region of country, and bids fair to continue such, and to eventually become very prosperous and prominent for the Saints. Wisdom is profitable to direct in all these matters.

W. W. BLAIR.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, June 20th.

Dear Herald:—Since coming here I have met Rev. Charles J. Godsmen, the pastor of the Presbyterian church of this place; the same, who was chief in importing the Rev. M. T. Lamb, here last winter to annihilate the claims of the Book of Mormon, as an inspired or divine record. This Rev. gentleman is quite verbose in his opinion that I failed to refute the argument presented, and more especially does he appear to be very much displeased with my letter from Provo, wherein I exposed the untruthfulness of Rev. Lamb's statements concerning the book being silent upon certain subjects. He thinks that I was not fair in my presentations in that Mr. Lamb was quoting from F. D. Richard's Compendium. Well, I write this additional as a further explanation of my understanding of the true inwardness of the case. "The Book of Mormon lies at the foundation, is the corner stone of the Mormon Church."—Golden Bible, p. 1.

The above are the opening words in the book, which cost the Rev. Lamb more than three years faithful labor, besides wealth! He and his admirers seem to have entertained the fond hope, that at last the wherewithal for the destruction of Mormonism had crystalized in the Golden Bible. That it can not be charged that I misrepresent, I quote: "But the book strikes, it is believed, a deadly blow at the 'tap-root' of Mormonism—by undermining the foundation upon which the whole system is builded."—Page 7 of the preface to Golden Bible.

Rev. Lamb most emphatically gives us to understand that it is the Book of Mormon that he proposes to criticise. And with this labor before him, he enumerates what the contents of the Compendium are, and then selects seven therefrom, and informs us that the Book of Mormon is silent thereon. This is the exact situation as I understood it last February while I was at Provo, and it is still my understanding. But the Lamb's champions in seeking to cover his retreat, and avert his ignoble defeat, now apologetically explain, that the wonderful critic on the Book of Mormon was innocently led into such an egregious blunder, by following the apostle F. D. Richard's compendium. Fudge! That is thinner than the mountain air. Mr. Richard's upon the subject of "Laying on hands," quotes the Book of Mormon, see Compendium pp 50 and 51, and on "Christ's Second Coming," p. 82, and on "Marriage," p. 121. It will now be necessary for Lamb's champions to invent some other subterfuge as an excuse for the untruthfulness of the Golden Bible. My experience has taught me, that every man who undertakes to overturn the truth, makes free use of misrepresentation and falsehood. The so-called Christian clergy and infidel lecturers use the same material in the conflict. I asked the Rev. Chas. J. Godsmen if he would affirm in debate that the Presbyterian Church was the true church of Christ. His reply was raspy, sharp and prompt. "No sir, I would not!" Whenever the time comes when I can not affirm from the stand in public, that the church for which I preach is the true church of Christ, I will seek other employment. At Provo, in Mr. Lamb's presence, I proved by the Book of Mormon, that six of his seven statements were untrue, and now I find three of them untrue by the witness, that it is claimed misled him. O, what tangled webs these Rev's. weave, while attempting to carry their point against the last revelation of the simple plan of salvation for the human race.

June 18th.—Bro. Davis and I came here on the evening of the 15th. We found Brn. R. J. Anthony, Peter Anderson, John H. and S. D. Condit, and a number of the local elders and Saints. Weather very warm and dusty. We had a quiet and pleasant conference, and I am of the opinion that all felt well, but for sickness and the conference of the Utah church at Portage, our attendance would have been much larger. I will remain here some two weeks in this vicinity if the interest will justify.

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

SOUTH ARM, Mich., June 20th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been here a few days trying to do good among men. Bro. William Davis, who united with the church in Ubyly, Huron county, is up here and has been faithfully holding forth for some time; almost every Sunday. He has baptized eight or nine here, and we had three more come forth and request him to baptize them last night, which he did. We look for eight or ten more soon. I have been in the company of Mr. Wingfield Watson all day. I lecture on Mormonism to-night. Interest is good here.

Yours,
J. J. CORNISH.

BOYNE FALLS, Mich., June 22d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Yesterday Bro. William Davis baptized three more in South Arm. Several others are believing the truth and will soon obey. I intended to remain longer and help Bro. Davis, as he has to labor for the bread that perisheth, but I was telegraphed for to go over two hundred miles to administer to the sick.

There are a few Strangites around this part of the State, through Charlevoix county. They have meetings occasionally. Mr. Wingfield Watson seems to still hold out that J. J. Strang was the proper successor of Joseph the Martyr, and that we should not oppose polygamy, etc. We talked up matters of difference between us freely for about one day and a half, and parted good friends; each agreeing to disagree in belief. I intended to go to Beaver Island before I left but having to leave in such haste I can not this time.

The weather has been very warm for the last eight or ten days, the mercury registering 108° and 110° in the shade. It is only about a month since the snow left the thickest part of the woods. The winters are long and severe; summers short and very warm with very sudden changes.

Our cause is onward where our elders are preaching, and there are more calls than we can fill. May the Lord guide and bless you and all his Saints.

Yours,

"EARTHQUAKES, VOLCANOES AND VOLCANIC ERUPTIONS.

BY ELDER F. R. TUBB.

ON the last occasion of addressing your readers through the medium of the Herald, I attempted to direct their earnest interest and admiration to the vast eternal handiwork of God, as displayed in the mighty revolving galaxy of worlds, suns, moons and comets observable from time to time in our solar system.

I now desire to divert their gaze inward, and downward, to a great depth beneath the surface of this planet on which we dwell, known to ourselves, (for want of a better name,) as the Earth; though in all probability designated by the inhabitants, (if any,) of those other planets to which we are visible, by a more euphonious designation; in the same way by which we are accustomed to confer upon those planets dignified and euphonious names.

During the course of our brief survey of the interior of this planetary sphere, we shall have to review quite as marvelous evidences of the displays of Divine power and wisdom, as we met with in our brief but, I trust, profitable survey of the "Heavens above."

Your readers are all, doubtless, aware of the oft-proved and scientifically authenticated fact, that the earth is a vast hollow globe, whose interior is occupied by combustible and inflammable gases, vapors, and various minerals, as iron, etc., mingled with granite and other rocks; but all in a highly incandescent state, owing to the powerful operation of the ever-raging and perpetual fires in the heart of this planet.

So great, indeed, is the proportion of fire and combustible matter in the earth's composition, that a very accurate idea of its proportion to the solid mass may be obtained by comparing the internal mass of fiery elements in a liquid state, to the edible interior of an orange, while the solid portion of the earth upon which we stand, may be very fairly represented by the rind or peel of the orange.

is greatly in excess of the solid portion, which nourishes and gives food and sustenance to both animal and vegetable life upon the earth's surface. For the benefit of any readers not hitherto acquainted with the fact of the earth's interior conformation being of a fiery and inflammable nature, I will adduce a few well-authenticated facts, which first attracted the learned world to the hypothesis which has since been developed into the now universally admitted doctrine of the combustible character of the earth's interior.

We all know that when we go into a cellar out of a summer sun, it feels cool; but when we go into it out of a wintry frost it is warm. The fact is, that a cellar or a well or any pit of moderate depth, has always, day and night, summer and winter, the same degree of warmth, the same temperature, as it is called; and that always and everywhere, is the same as the average warmth of the climate of the place. Forty or fifty feet deep in the ground, a thermometer, here in this spot* would always register the same degree, namely, 49° Fahrenheit, that is, seventeen degrees above the freezing point. Under the Equator, at the same depth, it always shades at 84°, which is our hot summer heat, but which there is the average heat of the whole year. And this is so everywhere. Just at the surface, or a few inches below it, the ground is warm in the daytime and cool at night; at two or three feet the difference between day and night is scarcely perceptible, but that of summer and winter is considerable. But at forty or fifty feet, this difference also disappears, and you find a perfectly fixed uniform degree of warmth, day and night; summer and winter; year after year.

But when we go deeper, as, for instance, down into mines, or coal pits, this one broad and general fact is always observed,—everywhere, in all countries, in all latitudes, in all climates, wherever there are mines, or deep subterranean caves,—the deeper you go the hotter the earth is invariably found to be. In one and the same mine, each particular depth has its own particular degree of heat, which never varies; but the lower always the hotter; and that not by a trifling but what may well be called an astonishingly rapid rate of increase;—about one degree of the thermometer additional warmth for every 90 feet of additional depth, which is about 58 degrees per mile,—so that, if we had a shaft sunk a mile deep, we should find in the solid rock a heat of 105° Fahrenheit; which is much hotter than the hottest summer day usually experienced in England.

It is not everywhere, however, that it is worth while to sink a shaft to any great depth; but borings for water, (in what are called Artesian wells), are often made to enormous depths, and the water always comes up hot; and the deeper the boring the hotter the water. There is a very famous well of this kind in Paris, (France), at La Grenelle. The water rises from a depth of 1794 feet, and its temperature is 82° of our scale, which is almost that of the

* Clapton, near London, England.

Equator. And again, at Salzwerth, in Oeynhausen, in Germany, is a boring for salt springs 2144 feet deep, the salt comes up with a still greater heat, namely 91°. Then, again, we have natural hot water springs which rise, it is true, from depths we have no means of ascertaining; but which, from the earliest recorded times, have always maintained the same heat. At Bath, (in England), for instance, the hottest well is 117° Fahr.

On the Arkansas River, (in the United States), is a spring of 180°; which is scalding hot; and that not in the vicinity of any volcano.

Now, only consider what sort a conclusion this lands us in. This globe of ours is nearly 8,000 miles in diameter; a mile deep on its surface is a mere scratch. If a man had twenty overcoats on, and I found under the first a warmth of 60° above the external air, I should expect to find 60° more under the second, and 60° more under the third, and so on; and within all, not a man, but a mass of red hot iron. Just so with the outside crust of the earth. Every mile thick is such an overcoat; and at 20 miles depth, according to this rate, the ground must be fully red hot; and at no very great depth beyond, either the whole must be melted; or only the most infusible and intractable kinds of material, such as our flints and fire-clay, would present any degree of solidity.

In short, what the icefloes and icebergs are to the polar seas, so shall we come to regard our continent and mountain ranges in relation to the vast ocean of melted matter beneath. I do not mean to say that there is no solid central masses. There may be one, or there may not; and, upon the whole, I think it likely enough that there is,—kept solid (in spite of the heat), by the enormous pressure, but that has nothing to do with our present argument and purpose. All I contend for is this:—Grant me a sea of liquid fire on which we are all floating,—land and sea; for the bottom of the sea anyhow, will not come nearly down to the level of the interior boiling lava. The sea is probably nowhere more than five or six miles deep, which is far enough above that level to keep its bed from becoming red hot.

Having now briefly introduced your readers to the organic constitution of the earth's interior, they will at once arrive at the conclusion that the terrific and appalling cataclams of nature to which we shall hereafter draw their attention, are but the perpetual efforts of the mighty imprisoned giants of fire, vapor and steam, to effect their escape from captivity within the bowels of the earth.

But it will be necessary first to describe another and a totally different—yet not less efficient—cause to which the violence and frequency of seismic convulsions of the earth are also largely referable. I may seem to be stating a paradox when I aver that earthquakes and volcanic eruptions are as much due to the ocean water above, as to the imprisoned fire beneath; but such, I assure you, is truly and literally the case, which I will now attempt to further elucidate.

But to make this clear, I must go a little out of my way, and say something about the first principles of Geology. Geology does not pretend to go back to the creation of the world, or concern itself about the earth's primeval state; but it does concern itself with the changes it sees going on in it now; and with the irrefragable evidence of a long series of such changes, it can produce in the most unmistakable features of the structure of our rocks and soil, and the way in which they lie one upon another.

1st. AS TO WHAT WE SEE GOING ON.

We see everywhere and along every coast line, the sea warring eternally against the land, and everywhere overcoming it; wearing and eating it down, and battering it to pieces; grinding those pieces to powder; carrying that powder away, and spreading it over its own bed or bottom by the continued and continual effects of the tides and currents. Look at our (English) chalk cliffs, which once, no doubt, extended across the channel to the similar cliffs on the French coast. What do we see? Precipices cut down to the sea beach, constantly hammered by the waves, and constantly crumbling; the beach itself made of the flints outstanding after the softer chalk has been ground down and washed away, themselves grinding one another under the same ceaseless discipline, first rounded into pebbles, then into sand, and then carried out farther and farther down the slope, to be replaced by fresh ones from the same source. Well the same thing is going on everywhere, round every coast of Europe, Asia, Africa and America. Foot by foot or inch by inch, month by month, or century by century, down everything must go. Time is as nothing in Geology. And what the great seas are doing, the rivers are helping them to do. Look at the sandbanks at the mouth of the Thames. What are they but the materials of our Island carried out to sea by the stream. The river Ganges carries away from the soil of India, and delivers into the sea twice as much solid substance weekly as is contained in the great pyramid of Egypt! The Irrawaddy sweeps off from Burmah sixty-two cubic feet of earth in every second of time, on an average, and there are 86,400 seconds in every day and 365 days in every year; and so on for the other rivers. What has become of all that great bed of chalk which once covered all the weald of Kent, (England), and formed a continuous mass from Ramsgate and Dover to Beechy Head, running inland to Madamocourt Hill and Seven Oaks? All clean gone and swept out into the bosom of the Atlantic, and there forming other chalk beds.

Well now, the land is thus perpetually wearing down and continually therefore weakening and thinning (so to speak) the earth-crust in the neighborhood of the seashore and in the vicinity of great and deep rivers.

With what result? Why, that the perpetual boiling matter and fiery gases confined beneath, will naturally find vent at places where the earth's crust is thus most worn, and like the mighty explosion of an immense steam boiler, will occur at the particular plate which is weakest or thinnest.

In this manner, therefore, I trust I have made clear to your readers the axiom that water is at least as active, though less rapid and violent an agent in the production of seismic and volcanic eruptions and earthquakes.

This circumstance will also account for the fact that volcanoes are seldom found at any great distance from the sea coast, also for the circumstance that earthquakes, as a rule, either confine themselves to the vicinity of sea coasts, or when by reason of extreme violence, that cause disruption far inland, it will usually, I believe, be ascertained that such earthquakes had their origin in that portion of the country nearest to the sea.

Since writing the foregoing, I have accidentally met with a proof of the truth of this theory, from the pen of the late celebrated Sir John W. Herschel, F. R. S., who says in his celebrated "Lectures on Scientific Subjects," (p. p. 13, 14.)—"It is a most remarkable fact that there is hardly an instance of an active volcano at any considerable distance from the sea coast. All the great volcanic chain of the Andes is in close proximity to the western coast-line of America. Etna is close to the sea; so is Mount Vesuvius; Teneriffe is near the African coast; Mount Erebus is on the edge of the great Antarctic continent. Out of two hundred and twenty-five volcanoes which are known to have been in actual eruption over the whole earth within the last one hundred and fifty years, I remember only a single instance of one more than three hundred and twenty miles from the sea; and even that is on the edge of the Caspian, the largest of all the inland seas,—I mean Moun Demawend, in Persia."

The Herald readers can now see how great and important a part, therefore, the Oceans play in this great tragedy of Nature's immense earthquake and volcanic forces; but I will just briefly call their minds to the still deeper and more powerful, though less obvious part, played by the perpetual action of the vast oceans upon the so-called solid land; as this will furnish a key to many of the vast terrestrial upheavals we are to consider later on. Geology assures us, on the most conclusive and undeniable evidence, that ALL our present land, all our continents and islands, have been formed in this way; (i. e., by the continual displacement of large masses of land owing to the Ocean's perpetual wearing and tearing of it away,)—out of the ruins of former ones. The old ones which existed at the beginning of things have all perished; and what we now stand upon has most assuredly been, at one time or other, perhaps many times, the bottom of the sea.

Well then, there is oceanic power enough at work, and it has been at work long enough, utterly to have cleared away and spread over the bed of the sea, all our present existing islands and continents, had they been placed where they now are, at the creation of the world; and from this it follows, as clear as demonstration can make it, that without some process of renovation or restoration to act in antagonism to this destructive work of old Neptune, there would not be now remaining a foot of dry land for living thing to stand upon.

Now what is this process of restoration? Let the volcano and the earthquake tell their tale. Let the earthquake declare how, within the memory of man,—under the eyesight of creditable witnesses, one of whom, (Mrs. Graham), has described the fact,—the whole coast-line of Chili for one hundred miles about Valparaiso, with the mighty chain of the Andes,—(compared with which the Alps shrink into insignificance),—was hoisted at one mighty volcanic blow* in a single night,* from two to seven feet above its former level; leaving the beach below the old low water-mark high and dry; leaving the shell-fish sticking on the rocks far out of reach of the water; leaving the sea-weeds rotting in the air, or rather drying up to dust under the burning sun of a coast where rain never falls. The ancients had a fable of Titan hurled from heaven and buried under Mount Etna, and by his struggles causing the earthquakes that desolated Sicily. But here we have an exhibition of Titanic (or as we now know, volcanic) forces on a vastly grander and mightier scale. One of the Andes mountains upheaved on this occasion was the gigantic mass of Aconcagua, which overlooks Valparaiso.

To bring home to the mind some conception of such a power, we must form a clear idea of what sort of mountain this is. It is nearly 24,000 feet in height. Chimborazo, the loftiest of the volcanic cones of the Andes, is lower by 2,500 feet; and yet Etna, with Mt. Vesuvius at the top of it, and another Vesuvius on the top of that, would little more than surpass the midway height of the snow-covered portion of that cone, which is one of the many volcanic chimneys by which the hidden fires of the Andes find vent. On the occasion of which I am speaking, at least 10,000 square miles of country were estimated as having been upheaved; and this upheaval was not confined to the land, but extended far out to sea; which was proved by the soundings off Valparaiso, and along the coast, having been found considerably shallower than they were before the earthquake shock!

REMITTING DEBTS.

I HAVE just been reading an article in the Expositor of August, 1887, signed by one T. F. Stafford. As I never expect to see that brother in this life, I would be glad to speak to him as he has to us, through the church organ. I ask this privilege for the public's benefit as well as for my own.

I have indeed been quite interested by his ideas, some of which were new to me. More than forty years ago my mind was moved to know how to obey practically that important lesson. This was just before I was born of the water, or had heard the new gospel by a living minister. But I had been a member of the M. E. Church from my youth. I knew what Mr. John Wesley had said about the "unrighteous mammon." But how to make friends of it, was to me a puzzle.

I could see how the "unjust steward" did it, so I asked the Lord to show me how I could do it. And he did so to my satisfaction. The answer came as the light of the sun that just came out from under a dark cloud. The substance of the whole is expressed by the two words whole and forgiveness.

Herein the guilty man acted wisely for himself. He went around pardoning other debtors.

Although he made use of his Lord's money in making to himself friends, still he knew he could do it and not sin; as the law would sanction the acts of his Master's steward, until after he was turned out.

But the grand object was to make a shelter for his own head. And now what is this lesson to us? To me it is a final cure—all of sectarianism. We are all debtors unto one Lord whether we be officers or not, therefore let us not boast one above another; for we know not when, nor how soon, we may need friends to help us, as Job did when he cried, "Pity me, O ye my friends, for the hand of the Lord hath touched me."

I had thought that the word "fail" here used by our Lord had reference to the end of life's journey, and not to the loss of spiritual lives. There will be different degrees of glory beyond this life; and when Paul loved his kinsmen so dearly that he could almost choose to go with them away from the higher to an inferior glory, he did not believe his brethren would find "everlasting habitations" in hell fire. Neither do I believe it. We may forgive all our debtors, or count them less guilty than they confess, and thus make friends.

No man knows how soon he may need the help of friends; so that if it be possible to make friends by the use of unrighteous mammon or worldly wealth, and such friends as will receive us into everlasting habitations when we may be unable to procure a shelter, save it be by their benevolence or friendly aid; would it not be acting wisely to do so? But it should be borne in mind that this officer was poor himself, and not only poor, but ashamed to beg and could not "dig." Yes, and that is now just about my fix; only I do not hold his office. Now how how can I profit by his example? I see no way for me but to remit the sins of my neighbors just as he did, and by doing so I make friends, and my Lord will forgive me because he said he would, if I did so. Herein lies the grand secret, for the Master has said, "If ye forgive not, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you."

"Forgive and ye shall be forgiven." The ministry of God are stewards. "Whosoever sins they remit shall be remitted" and the power to retain sins is also with the holy priesthood. Therefore the Master said that the children of this world were wiser in their generation than the children of light. His wisdom was manifested by the use of his power and not by his money. Have we no power? j. s. c.

CATHOLICISM.—No. V.

BY ELDER M. T. SHORT.

"THE principal marks, or characteristics of the true church are, her unity, sanctity, Catholicity, and Apostolicity, to which may be added the infallibility of her teachings and the perpetuity of her existence."

Heresy is to doubt, deny and reject one or more articles of faith, and schism is to spurn spiritual superiors. The visible body must be united under one visible head which must be obeyed. "Her Creed is now identical with what it was in ages past," "For the apostles received the whole deposit of God's word," "Which doctrines know neither variation nor decay."

The above and similar declarations are but an adroit bait to cover and hide a well barbed hook, as the history and rulings of the church, and the forthcoming sequel of this book will abundantly establish and prove. To decoy and detract, as a brooding quail would lead the unwary lad from the place of incubation, our psuedo guide takes a view of the minor, major and essential differences of some of the evangelical churches. The mother church with her apostate brood of heretical daughters persistently deny the necessity of "New Revelation;" but "Apostolic traditions," and solemn definitions of implied teaching throws wide open the flood gate for the wildest conjectures; the vaguest fanaticism, the most extravagant, and the most stupid, cringing, deplorable and debasing submission, and the very lowest ebb in intellectuality, or spirituality the mind of man could contemplate. The supreme power of Pope Peter, and all of his lawful successors, is implied, with a vengeance, as also the supereminence of the the ever Blessed Virgin Mary.

To talk about a never varying faith and church, and then admit that as heresies would arise, obscure passages would become luminous, is virtually to say there is one law in times of peace and prosperity, and another in seasons of cabal and adversity.

The sole custodian of God's word has "some articles now universally believed in regard to which doubts and controversies existed in former ages even within the bosom," &c.

If it were not for adverse and reverse rulings, new and often repeated departures, numerous abandonments, and hosts of superadded items, rites, ceremonies, observances, restrictions, doctrines, and laws, we might look with favor upon Albertus Magus' explanation: "It would be more correct to style this the progress of the believer in the faith, than of the faith in the believer."

To maintain and defend the holiness of a church requires more than the automatic confession; "I believe in the holy Catholic church." Its weakest and most imperfect members would not disprove the dogma, neither the most eminent and pious substantiate the fact. An array of texts enjoining purity when misapplied cuts no figure. Father Fabers' works, Butler's lives of the Saints, Fox's Martyrs, the Inquisitorial Budget, the judgments of God, the terrors of hell, or the sweets of heaven contemplated as such, do not, of necessity, even approximate holiness, but a full obedience to the gospel of all grace brings about a high state of blessedness.

On the 45th page of the "Faith of our Fathers," the most exalted prelate of the western hemisphere says: "The church, walking in the footsteps of her divine Spouse, never repudiates sinners, nor cuts them off from her fold, no matter how grievous, or notorious may be their moral delinquencies; not that she connives at their sin, but because she wishes to reclaim them."

On the 158th page, of the same book, we learn that "Pope Leo X., in the sixteenth century, anathematized Luther;" and Gregory, two hundred years earlier, condemned the heresy of Wycliffe.

Agaid, page 271, "People affect to be shocked at the sentence of excommunication occasionally inflicted by the church on evil doers."

Oh! thou false and fickle, thou ever changing and forever lying hierarchy, you are the embodiment of absurdity, the champion of guile, and the retreat of gross darkness.

"It can not be denied that corruption of morals prevailed in the sixteenth century to such an extent as to call for a sweeping reformation, and that laxity of discipline invaded even the sanctuary." But the Cardinal holds that all forms of vice could have been rebuked and corrected all within the pales of the church. If any one wishes to believe the above in the face of history that narrates the forfeiture of standing, chattles and lives for trying in times and places often to purify the ponderous body, all right. Schismatics and heretics fit only to be extirpated were the sure and certain doom of all opposers of a priesthood and church that needed a "sweeping reformation." When two parallel lines meet, or when a man can shoulder himself and load, I will think about beginning to believe the Catholic theologian.

His enemies think the church must be Catholic or universal to verify its identity. He then admits that sixty million Schismatics hold scepter and sway in Russia and the Turkish dominions. We know full well that the nations of Northern Europe are hostile to the spread, or even the existence of popery. He condemns his religious neighbors for being so local and limited, but the boomerang comes back with cruel vigor into the Cardinal's face. In the Episcopal prayer-book this leaven of vanity is stolen or borrowed from the original lump. St. Augustine says the sectarians of the fourth century attempted the "pious fraud" of the Catholicity claim; but who can blame them, for as the parent so the child.

The Ecumenical Council of the Vatican opened in 1869 and presided over by Pope Pius IX, is cited with hundreds of delegates from near and far, to fortify the boast of universal empire; but the forced admission that they come "from almost every nation and principality," is suicidal to the uncalled for untrue tenet. "They saw around them the paintings of familiar Saints whom they had been accustomed to reverence from their youth. They saw the baptismal font and the confessionals. They beheld the Priest at the altar in his sacred vestments;" and from the above, and similar considerations; and the number of her votaries and their wide dispersion; and their colossal private and public properties, the untenable dogma and decree is fulminated.

"Mother" begs the question of being Apostolical on the assumed ground that she teaches the "identical doctrines once delivered by them and that her ministers derived their powers from them in an uninterrupted succession." We, with the Rev. gentleman, deplore, abhor, condemn, and abominate "self-constituted preachers;" but what about this "unbroken chain." The doctrine of an uninterrupted line in legitimate succession, is contrary to the teachings of patriarchs and prophets; Christ and the apostles; ecclesiastical and secular historians, and common every day observation. It is antisciptural, arrogant, impious, and absurd; but withal, the persistent claim and proud boast of a false and fallen, base and corrupt church.

D' Aubigne, the chronicler of the Reformation, and Bishop Thomas V. Short, an Anglican historian, acknowledge the divorce of England from Roman rule; whereas, the Wesleys and Methodism were cradled and hatched in the Oxford University A. D. 1729. Our Ultramontane scribe gives us the name, date, founder, and place of origin of several of the leading Protestant sects, and quotes from their standard authorities, not even forgetting Roger Williams and the Baptists. He ridicules justly an invisible church, concealed away for a decade and a half of centuries, all to come forward with "doctrines diametrically opposed to one another," hence not "one in faith." The humblest priest is linked to the "Prince of the apostles."

The constancy, sanctity, unity, and perpetuity of the church, till the end of time, are sought to be established from the angelic annunciation,—"He shall rule over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end;" but the apostles desired to ascertain just before his ascension when the kingdom would be restored to Israel. He, Christ, first came in his sacrificial capacity; he now performs the office of mediator and advocate, and will come to judge and reign over the world; therefore, that text will hardly do them service. Their shield, refuge, and citadel is, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell can not prevail against it."

looked to either the church, or Peter the consequent would be "her" for the spouse, the bride, or the Lamb's wife, or "him" for the man Peter. The pronoun is the substantive for "Rock," which, in turn, stands for the fact that Jesus was the Christ, and the means of knowing the same, or continued and new revelation, "For no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." Peter vascillated and went the way of all the earth; the church was driven into the wilderness, and the Saints were prevailed against, but God hath never left himself without witness by enlightening through his spirit every man that cometh into the world.

Antiquity, and indefectibility, and indestructibility are triumphantly trumpeted abroad to "stamp divinity on her brow;" but oriental faiths were hoary before there was a Catholic born, and may survive till all are dead. Our Papal apologist thinks Pagan Rome, and the throne of the imperial Caesars, went to pieces; but, amid this wreck and ruin, the head of his church proclaimed laws to Christendom from the old historic seven hilled city. He also claims that the Goths, Vandals, Huns, Visigoths, and Lombards, swarmed down from the north, plundered cities, leveled churches, dismembered the empire; but were in turn conquered by the trophies of the cross, and the unity and sanctity of the holy Apostolic Catholic church. The Mohammedan invasions were repelled by Roman pontiffs, and hence the cross, instead of the crescent, floats over Christian Europe to-day.

The Arian heresy received the support of vast multitudes, and several successive emperors gave it their unqualified support. Catholic bishops were banished, and Arian intruders were installed; but internal sedition, and competing heresies swept Arianism away. The great revolution of the sixteenth century swept like a tornado throughout all northern Europe and threatened to engulf the bark of St. Peter, and voltairism beat wild and fruitful in the eighteenth century, but to no avail. It is declared that the temporal power is not essential to her success for for seven hundred years she was not thus invested, and of late she has been stripped of this patrimony. I do not see how the old bark floats uniformly; nor how she has "her breast as a wall of brass against the encroachment of rulers" without this, to her, formidable power.

They apply special promises, such as "Lo I am with you always;" "Go ye into all the world;" "You are no more strangers and foreigners;" and similar statements made to individual faithful disciples as such, to a changing church never for once contemplated.

Our theologian, of the Latin rite, says, "If she fell in error the gates of hell have certainly prevailed against her;" all of which we have no disposition to dispute.

He, in common with the whole communion, falsely assumes that the Savior predicted the preservation of the church from error; and then concludes that God can not lie; that Christianity is true, and that Jesus was no false prophet or impostor. They misinterpret; lay a false premise; beg the question; jump at a conclusion; assume the very thing to be proven, and exclaim,—"Thou hast commanded me, O Lord, to hear thy Church. If I am deceived by obeying her thou art the cause of my error." The apostolic supervision, and the ever renewing, all pervading, always abiding, infinite, eternal spirit are saddled on the church of his choice as though they really belonged there, and then he blandly remarks, "It is strange that the Catholic Church must apologise to the world for simply declaring that she speaks the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

Here is some of her "whole truth:"—Neither Mormons nor Millerites, nor the advocates of free love or of women's rights so called, find any recruits in the Catholic Church. She will never suffer her children to be ensnared by these impostures, how specious soever they may be." Then on the other side of the same leaf he observes, "Every teacher in the church, from the Pope down to the humblest priest, is liable at any moment, like any of the faithful, to fall from grace."

We aver that this liability became a painful, wholesale, universal reality, as shown in the entire apostasy from the faith, and worship; experience and blessings; doctrine and law, government and form of the true church as manifested by and through the intruding, presumptuous, arrogant church. This Archbishop admits that doctrinal decrees are irrevocable, and that their variation or cessation would be a "death blow of her claim to infallibility." "Pope Gelasius ordained that all should communicate under both kind. This law continued in force for several ages, but toward the thirteenth century, for various causes, it had gradually grown into disuse with the tacit approval of the church." It appears that this spiritual superior had no idea that any critic or person of ordinary comparison, would ever read his book.

Perhaps these multifarious anomalies can be accounted for under the following: "But when I became a Catholic all my doubts ended, my enquiries ceased." "The council of Constance, which convened in 1414, established a law requiring the faithful to communicate under the form of bread only." "Her creed is now identical with what it was in ages past," for the "holy apostles had the whole deposit of God's law;" and still the dogmas of the immaculate conception of Mary; and her perpetual verginity, and the infallibility of the "Pope, who is liable at any time to fall from grace," are much younger than the hand that pens these lines. I would be moved to laugh outright at this huge bundle of absurdities; this vague supercilious stuff, were it not for the gravity of all subjects bearing on our eternal interests.

He argues at length and quite properly, that Christ's divinity does not rest solely upon the testimony of scriptures, miracles, John the Baptist, or the Father. He concludes thus:—"We see that in the old and new Dispensations, the people were to be guided by a living authority; and not by their private interpretation of the Scripture." The facts in the case are that the whole plan, and all the means of grace; and the perpetual presence, shield and guide of the Holy Ghost, are each and all necessary to guarantee and secure full redemption. "We often hear the shibboleth: 'The Bible, and the Bible only must be our guide.'" "Do not tell me that the Bible is all-sufficient; or if you believe it is self-sufficient, cease your instructions." Again, "Stand not between the people and the Scriptures." And again: "Every one of these champions of modern creeds appeals to an unchanging Bible in support of his ever-changing doctrines." Once more again: "Very recently several hundred Mormon women presented a petition to the government at Washington, protesting against any interference with their abominable system of polygamy; and they insist that their cherished system is sustained by the word of God. Such is the legitimate fruits of private interpretation. Nothing short of infallible authority should satisfy you. A Pope's letter is the most weighty authority in the church."

The pontifical supremacy of St. Peter is labored in painful detail, acknowledging for him, miraculous agency, and the gift of inspiration, and then disclaiming these special endowments for the chair and the charge leaving all to the rule and action of "general laws."

Supreme jurisdiction is sought to be proven from tradition and the fathers, up to the great schism of the ninth century, and the European Reformation. This claim did not take in millions of the Orient and the Moslem hosts. The northern barbarians, and the African tribes for ages and centuries, knew nothing of the prerogative of the triple crowned father. The inspired apostle Paul with an abundance of revelations knew only in part; but the man-made vicar of Christ; ignoring in toto all supernatural intervention; owning up to implacability, or liability to sin, vociferates infallibility.

"The Popes with few exceptions, have been indeed men of virtuous lives." "Although Sovereign Pontiffs should lead vicious lives, the validity of their prerogatives would not be impaired for they are given, not to preserve their morals, but for the guidance of their judgment." From the Vatican, faith and morals are regulated, but within the heart of the chairman, the center of unity, it is not necessarily so. We repeat, "like priest like people," and stoutly maintain "The whole head is sick, and the heart is faint." I guess you had better feed the blind devotees on the poppy leaves of infallibility; and the glorious power of the confessional, and the spiritual treasuries of indulgences, and the pottage of decretals, rather than open Bibles, rigid research, and a liberal education. This, and all papal authorities do their best to bolster up and sustain this supreme jurisdiction, this powerful tribunal but their sophistry is as weak and worthless as the absurdity is false and pernicious. This miserable barnacle of uninspired inerrability once fastened on the mind the darkness and gullibility are all unbounded.

It has been an old Brighamite proverb that "Dead men tell no tales;" but it is left the imperial priesthood, and the late Archbishop of Baltimore, and the supreme prelate and only cardinal of America to put the following words as the express utterances of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ: "I, the supreme Architect of the Universe, will establish a Church which is to last till the end of time. I will lay the foundation of this church so deep and strong on the rock of truth that the winds and storms of error shall never prevail against it. Thou, O Peter, shall be the foundation of this church. It shall never fall because thou shalt never be shaken; and thou shalt never be shaken, because thou shalt rest on Me, the rock of truth."

From this worse than plagiarism, this manufacturer out of whole cloth, this unparalleled assumption, and heaven daring arrogance of the representative man, "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God," is originated in crookedness, fostered in fraud and perpetuated in shame the false and pernicious doctrine as above quoted. The flattering, fabulous myth is contrary to the clear cut, positive, direct enunciations of inspiration, the history of the world, and the multitudinous faiths of Christendom. To profess sound doctrine, holy orders, immaculate religion, and everlasting power and eternal authority, and only possess perverted principles, perfidy, priestcraft, pollution, and pernicious food, and rank poison heresies, is the position, and self-appointed work of the mother church. To bolster up papal infallibility St. Paul is made to say, in the present tense, the church is "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." Now, at best, the seed is sowing; the tares are growing; the mustard tree is sheltering the feathered hosts; the leaven is working; the pearl of great price is beginning to appear; the treasure of the field is located; the net is nearing the shore; but the wise and the foolish virgins mingle promiscuously, as yet, and the wicked and the just are in close proximity. It has always been a capital trick of Satan and his emissaries, false apostles and would-be successors, to either "catch away that which was sown in the heart," or make Scripture to suit the occasion, or pervert the word to carry out their ambitious and proud, false and wicked schemes. Hear Paul, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word. That he might present it to himself, a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish."

The holy child Jesus was born, and crucified, raised, and glorified, all during the existence of the far reaching monarchy of proud imperial Rome, that was shown, and symbolized in the legs of the metallic image, which God disclosed to Nebuchadnezzar, in the visions of the night; and revealed to Daniel the prophet. In chapter seven the captive seer beheld the same great event under the figure of "The fourth beast," "dreadful and terrible," warlike and vicious, attempting "to change times and laws." To apply language to the church militant, the bride as she is arranging her toilet, or preparing and making ready for the nuptial feast; that refers to the everlasting kingdom, where the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth and Christ is enthroned in might and in glory and in dominion, is not at all "rightly dividing the word of truth." Upon this false and far-fetched "private interpretation" the Right Reverend James Cardinal Gibbon triumphantly asks, "But how can you suppose an infallible body with a fallible head? How can an erring head conduct a body in the unerring ways of truth and justice." The Pope by council is declared to be the father and doctor of all Christians. This universal teacher must not give the "poisonous food of error but the sound aliment of pure doctrine."

The infallible dogma of the Vicar of Christ has not gained its majority, or is not old enough to vote till 1891. "The church enforces as a law" this solemn declaration, takes a theological somersault, then protests that it is no new doctrine, but "always existed as a matter of fact."

The pride of Paul of Venice called forth the tripled crown for himself, and each successive pontiff; but we presume a decree, or a decision could place the pontifical tiara upon the lowly head of St. Peter, and an express declaration would simply be a "new form of an old doctrine." The immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary and her perpetual virginity, are new dogmas, hence new coined items of faith, which took shape in the brain of Pope Pius IX, and were promulgated as a new form of an old, never varying faith. The "separated brethren," or the whole Protestant world claim an infallible Bible; but inharmonious, clashing and adverse renditions, paraphrases, commentaries, annotations, and even translations are many and are still multiplying; especially throughout the Anglo-Saxon abodes of mankind. The hoary mother professes to amply supply this long-felt want by authorizing and circumscribing the true word of God, and then giving an unerring interpretation of the same. She holds that dissenters be-foul and poison the channel through which the waters of life are thought to flow; but behold the aqueduct, never obstructed and ever open and clean! This avenue of communication is the infallible interpreter and expounder of the holy law.

This great hierarchy denies present inspiration, or continued revelation, and essays to determine, fix, and give bounds and conditions to the written word; and to fulminate, anathematize, and execrate those who would claim the ingrafted word, the abiding comforter, the divine presence. Without the indwelling Spirit, the unction from on high, the Holy Ghost, and the "fruit," "signs" and "manifestations thereof," we are dead in trespasses and sins, carnally minded, and as "natural brute beasts." "The natural man receiv-eth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. But the spiritual man judgeth all things yet he himself is judged of no man." When Rome was a pagan empire and deities were plentiful, the fallow fields, the adventurers of the high seas, their races and chases, their patriotic pride and their martial achievements characterized that hardy people. Augustus Cæsar found the eternal city in mud and adobe, and left it in brick and marble. As the seven hilled city ruled the nations as the imperial capital of the world, the Roman legions were swift, undaunted, courageous and valorous; and, forsooth, it was a greater honor to be a private soldier of the Roman empire than the king of a neighboring nation. Constantine embraced, of pressedly, a pseudo devotion, enriched the clergy, debased the laity and corrupted and enfeebled the whole jurisdiction of the "Iron Monarchy." Patriotism and loyalty waned. Ignorance, indolence, spiritual tyranny, and mean, cringing, miserable vassalage filled the overgrown dynasty with ruin. The northern barbarians turned their lance and steel against southern Europe, which in turn was an easy prey to the greedy hordes. Alaric, and the Goths; Genseric, and the Vandals; Attila, and the Huus, by turns, overran the fair fields, plundered the land, revolutionized dominions, became enamored of, and settled in many of the subjugated provinces of the sunny and genial realm. It is claimed that Popes have, as devoted spiritual fathers, protected Rome from pillage, fire and sword, but she fell a prey to the frigid invaders sure and certain. How our domestic cardinal can say of the Bishops of the Holy See that "they were firm and valiant civil governors;" and ere the ink gets fairly dry observe, "A civil ruler dabbling in religion is as reprehensible as a clergyman dabbling in politics; both render themselves odious," is a capital query for transalpine theologians. King Pepin, of France, conferred a temporal patrimony upon the chair of St. Peter in the middle of the eighth century, which was confirmed and enlarged by Charlemagne, or Charles, the Great, his dutiful son. Christ had not where to lay his weary limbs, or pillow his weeping head; Peter sheathed the broad-sword, and himself, and John, years after the church was organized had no "silver and gold."

ONE of the Fox sisters, with whom modern Spiritualism was revived in America, thus emphatically denounces it in the New York Herald. Her bitter words are no doubt born of bitter experience.

"Spiritualism is a curse. God has set his seal against it! I call it a curse, for it is made use of as a covering for heartless persons like the Diss De Bars, and the vilest miscreants make use of it to cloak their vile doings. . . . No matter in what form Spiritualism may be presented, it is, has been and always will be a curse and a snare to all who meddle with it. No right-minded man or woman can think otherwise."

MILLENNIUM.—No. 8.

EVERYTHING said in the Scriptures about the thousand years of Christ's reign on the earth, called by the Scriptures "that day" (as one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day) and that day in particular is noticed above all others as the day in which the Lord will do the greatest things for his people that ever were done for them since the world began, most clearly sets forth that it is to be a time of miracles, and a day of power, such as has not been since man was on the earth. Nor could it be possible for the Millennium to exist without; for in truth it is the "restitution of all things" which constitutes the glory of the latter "day" of which all the holy prophets have spoken since the world began. Take "the restitution of all things" from the latter day glory and what is left? Nothing, there would be nothing of any consequence to take place; no material change; nature would continue the same; the seasons the same; animals and vegetables the same; nothing immortal and all glorious to talk about nor to sing about; the curse would still rest on the earth and upon all things which are on it: the trees would never clap their hands; nor would the earth bring forth in her strength; nor the mountains drop down their wine; nor would the ploughman overtake the reaper, nor the treader of grapes him that soweth seed. Jerusalem would never be built so as never to be thrown down; nor would the tabernacle of David ever be built. In a word, where would the Millennium be? Nowhere but in the imagination of man. Those, then, who say that the days of miracles are past, literally say that there is to be no Millennium, and that Christ is not to reign a thousand years on earth; for if ever Christ reigns a thousand years on earth, there will be a time of miracles; and if ever there is a "restitution of all things" there will be a time of miracles; for what is a restitution but restoring or making good? that is, getting that which was lost, and possessing that which had been previously enjoyed. And when the Apostle Peter says that the heavens must receive the Savior until the times of the restitution of all things, he meant, we presume, what he said; and that when "all things" (not some things) which the Lord had at any time bestowed on the world by way of blessing should be restored to the earth, that the Savior also should return to be restored with the "all things." See Acts 3: 19, 21.

Let me ask, What will the Lord do when he restores all things? The answer is, that he will restore to the world every blessing which had ever been enjoyed among men from the first to the last: not even the Savior himself excepted. "And he shall send Jesus Christ who was before preached unto you." Acts 3: 20. And nothing short of this can be a restitution of "all things;" and it is this of which all the holy prophets have spoken since the world began. It has been the great burden of their teaching that there was to be a time of "restitution of all things" spoken of by the prophets. Surely, the vision of those prophets must have been peculiarly delightful to gaze upon the various scenes which took place before their day and which were passing before their eyes, and that should take place until the times of the restitution of all things. Those prophets who lived before the days of the Savior's humiliation beheld him first with his Father, before he was veiled in the flesh, and then in the flesh; after that, crucified; then beheld him rise from the dead and ascend into heaven and sit down on the right hand of power. And after that they looked through a lapse of nearly two thousand years and then beheld him descend to the earth again in all the glory of the heavens, "and all the Saints with" him, and reign with him a thousand years on the earth. Surely, a scene like this must have been astonishing beyond description. And not only to gaze upon this scene, but also to behold the dealings of God among men in connection with the series of events relating to the Savior. Behold all the spiritual gifts bestowed in the world, at one time and another, with all the powers and blessings ever enjoyed at any period of the world among men, while those possessing them were persecuted, reviled, hated, scourged, buffeted, smitten, put to death, chased from place to place, even to caves and dens of the earth, being afflicted and tormented, without any clothing but sheep skins and goat skins, until they were wasted and destroyed, and the whole church disappeared, and all the spiritual gifts ceased, and revelations were obtained no longer among men. And they looked until "darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people;" and until "the vision of all had become as the words of a book which was sealed;" and the people groped their way in darkness having no light; and party arose after party; sect after sect multiplied until the earth became a scene of confusion; sentiment warring with sentiment, and opinion lashing against opinion; and until the true light of heaven was lost. But in the midst of this confusion the prophets beheld the God of heaven "setting his hand the second time to recover his people," and to restore to the world what they had lost. Beginning as "a grain of mustard" planted in the earth, and from this small beginning the work to roll on; the spiritual gifts begin to return one after one, until the blind begin to see, the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and all manner of diseases and sickness pass away from among the people, and the power becomes so great that the waters are again smitten and the foundations of rivers and seas are discovered, and people go over dry shod, as they did in the day when the children of Israel came out of the land of Egypt; the very heavens themselves are shaken, and all things rebuked by their Creator; the spirit of God begins to be poured out as in days of old, until it falls upon all flesh; the lion becomes peaceable; the leopard and the bear cease to devour; the asp and the cockatrice lose their venom; and all the spiritual gifts that were ever enjoyed on earth among men at any period of the world return and are possessed by men again; even all that are numbered among the living; also revelation followed revelation; vision after vision; men and women become prophets and prophetesses, until the knowledge of God covers the earth as the waters covers the sea; the earth puts on a new aspect; the curse is taken away, and it yields in its strength, and all creation smiles. The trees clap their hands, while animal and vegetable life unite to praise their Maker, with the mountains, the floods, and the flames. The Savior also comes down from heaven "and all the Saints with him," who received their bodies glorified like "his glorious body." The people of God, they beheld gathered from all nations, tongues, languages and kindreds under heaven, unto "the mountain of the Lord" to rejoice before him. And when they beheld all this glory returning to the earth, they sang of the latter day glory, and of that which was to come. And from these visions come our ideas of a Millennium.

Miscellaneous.

PASTORAL.

Dear Herald:—Please say to the Saints in Wisconsin, and all concerned; that in accord with the council of the Presidency to divide our missionary fields placing competent men in charge of parts thereof, I hereby appoint Bro. M. T. Short, in charge of Wisconsin; and ask for him your cordial aid and support in all ministerial labor, hoping and praying that the quickening influence of the spirit of God may arouse such an interest that a mighty work may be done and many souls saved, thereby glorifying God's holy name. Requesting hearty co-operation of all local ministers with Bro. Short, I shall look for a rousing report at the General Conference next spring. Look alive, brethren, and let no sub-division of any mission in the church appointment make a better record. Amen. I shall make arrangements for other divisions as soon as I can practicably; hoping to so arrange the work that a good showing may be made in all parts of my vast mission. With a realizing sense of the burden resting on me I shall ever pray and labor for the establishment of Zion, no more to be thrown down nor scattered.

I remain, laboring for Christ,
ALEXANDER HALE SMITH.

TWO DAY MEETING.

There will be a two days' meeting at Echo, (or Caries Ferry), on Saturday and Sunday, July 14th and 15th, in Bro. Duncan's grove. Brethren Southerland and Bradley from Webb City will be present; they will leave Webb by wagon on the 12th. I would like if Bro. Warnky of Independence would come with them and remain at least one month.

STEPHEN MALONEY.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of the North-East Missouri district will be held at Bevier, on the 21st and 22d of July. All the officers of the district will please attend if possible. All the Saints are invited to be present. Business session will commence at three o'clock.

The Latter Day Saints who identify Joseph the martyr as a prophet, seer, revelator and translator, and all the revelations he gave the church, including the one he had on the hill of the Temple at Nauvoo, in which he appointed James J. Strang to be his successor, will hold a meeting at or near Horton, Kansas, on the 8th of July next. We contemplate holding the meeting in a grove, one mile south of Horton, on the farm of Elder Shays. A general invitation is given. Services at eleven a.m.

By order of the elders: John Wake president of the branch, Joseph Flanders clerk.

BORN.

PECK.—At Malad City, Idaho, January 26th, 1888, to Mr. Frederick and Sr. Elizabeth Peck, a daughter. Blessed June 17th, by Elders Robert M. Elvin and John T. Davies, and named Julia.

MARRIED.

NESBET—LOAR.—On Wednesday evening, June 13th, 1888, at the Saints' Church, Independence, Missouri, by Elder F. C. Warnky, Bro. John Nesbet and Sr. Rosa Loar. After the solemnization a reception was had at the residence of the bride's parents, to which many relatives and friends were invited, where a sumptuous repast was prepared. A joyful time was had until a late hour. The happy couple received many presents as tokens of affection and esteem.

Sweet their union, pure their pleasure,
Heart with hand to each they give,
Each one's heart the other's treasure,
May they thus forever live.

JONES—CHRISTOFFERSON.—At the Saints' Chapel, Deer Lodge City, Montana, June 21st, 1888, by Elder J. C. Clapp, Sr. Nettie Christofferson, of Deer Lodge, to Mr. William D. Jones, of Elliston, Montana. After the ceremony about fifty friends and relatives of the bride went to the residence of Bro. Andrew Christofferson, where there was an abundant supply of the good things of earth, and where the young couple received many good wishes and costly presents. "May the tide of love roll smoothly on."

DIED.

WHITE.—On the 22d of April, 1888, of consumption, brother William Henry White. Bro. White was born August 16th, 1863, at Middleton, Norfolk county, Ontario; was baptized November 1st, 1884, at Whittemore, Iosco county, Michigan, by W. J. Smith. He leaves a wife and one child, to whom he was devotedly attached, also a number of near relatives and friends, for whom we beseech the consoling, cheering and comforting smiles of our Master in this their sad hour of bereavement. A large congregation attested their devotion and respect for him at the M. E. Church, whose minister eulogized the sweet memory of him who has passed over the river.

Dear brother White has passed away
Across the stream of death;
Ne'er has a nobler soul than he E'er breathed a single breath.
His life throughout was pure and grand,
His character sublime;
Bright pattern of a Christian life;
His light did truly shine.
A husband true in every sense,—
A father and a friend;
He fell asleep; death had no sting,
His was a righteous end.
Oh! may we all prepare to meet
This faithful Saint again.
Where sorrow, tears, and parting cease,
With Christ to live and reign,

ROOT.—At Hollister, San Benito county, California, March 18th, 1888, Sr. Sophronia, wife of Jeremiah Root, aged about sixty-three years. Sr. Root was a kind and loving mother; all who knew her loved her for her many good qualities. She was attentive to the sick far and near, and lent a helping hand to all she found in need. She was an exemplary Christian, devoted to the cause she loved; and as she neared death's door her faith grew stronger in Him whose promise she relied on. During a part of her sickness she suffered intensely, but bore it patiently; as the time of her departure drew near she said: "I want to go home; they are beckoning me to come." She was entirely resigned to go.

"Dear mother, thou hast left us,
And the voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our house
That will ne'er again be filled."

AMES.—Martha S., beloved wife of Bro. Isaiah B. Ames, of Brockton, Massachusetts, after a long illness, June 17th, 1888, aged 66 years. She peacefully passed away in the hope of a better resurrection. Funeral services June 19th, by Elder John Smith. Many friends gathered to sympathize with the bereaved husband.

POTTS.—At Fall River, Massachusetts, June 3d, 1888, after a few days' illness, Margaret L., daughter of Bro. and Sr. John Potts, fell asleep in Christ. Bro. John, her father, preceded her a few months. Funeral discourse at the house on the 5th, delivered by A. H. Parsons.

"Thou art gone to meet thy father
In the paradise of God;
We will come and join the number,
When the Lord our God shall call."

HARTMAN.—Near Hearne, Robertson county, Texas, January 24th, 1888, Bro. H. L. Hartman, aged 14 years, 5 months and 19 days. His sufferings were intense for ten days; but he is now at rest, awaiting the call of the morning of the first resurrection. He was born near Hearne, Texas, August 5th, 1873; baptized September 19th, 1886, by Priest S. R. Hay. Funeral services in charge of Elders Nunley and Hay. Funeral sermon by Elder I. N. Roberts. Our young brother leaves a mother, two sisters and four brothers, with a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. May he rest in peace.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

A EUROPEAN tornado is approaching, according to the opinion of many journalists, as it is considered that the present overgrown armaments on the Continent can not be maintained much longer without hostilities breaking out. A contemporary remarks:—"It is exactly one hundred years since the French Revolution stormclouds were gathering for the mightiest hurricane that ever shook its wings over the Continent. Europe is drifting. Perplexity reigns everywhere. At this moment a horrible suspense broods over the peoples. They are straining every energy in preparation for a conflict which will engage hosts of which Napoleon never dreamed, with all his theories of "big battalions."

In a few months all Germany will be an army, only the women and children being not actual soldiers, and 6,000,000 of drilled and armed Teutons will be ready for attack or defence, for victory or death. The extraordinary tactics of Russian military forces are creating uneasiness and developing the watchfulness of both Germany and Austria. And now the new Russian State-paper on Bulgaria advances the Eastern question one more stage. And the advance is ominous. What will France do if Germany is determined to let Bulgaria go and so to pacify Russia? What will Austria do if, as the new manifesto from St. Petersburg seems to show, Russia intends that Prince Ferdinand shall follow in the wake of Prince Alexander? What will Turkey do with the Bear's paw stealing round Bulgaria on the one side and Armenia on the other? And what will poor Bulgaria do? What will Italy do? What is England going to say? Is not our country in some way, likely to be deliberately involved in the cataclysm which is certainly expected by other Powers? A suspicion is still troubling many minds that we are creeping on to a war with Russia."

THEY VOTED RIGHT.

We print elsewhere a ringing letter from Bro. Joseph Luff, dated at Independence, Missouri, June 28th. Please read it and see what a glow of satisfaction will pervade the hearts of wives, mothers, sisters and daughters to find that when the Saints in that central spot were permitted to stand face to face with their opportunity there was no hesitancy, no dallying, no weak giving way before public opinion; but there was action prompt and intense, and their votes fell like the blows of destiny upon the fateful evil under which the land has been groaning. They, and we all have been long praying for the redemption of Zion. Here was an opportunity to pray by strong action and example; and how they did pray. God bless them is our prayer, and it will be echoed everywhere by the Saints who know what the liberty of the gospel means.

It is idle, utterly idle, for men to assert that by voting to abolish the sale of intoxicating liquors from a community that it is voting away men's liberties. The fact is plain to every man who is not selfishly blind, that he who drinks of the evil cup puts into that cup the liberties of wife and family, often times against the remonstrances, pleadings, tears, cries and despairing prayers of those who suffer the degrading misery of being allied to a drunkard; besides which the same drinker puts into the same cup his manhood, his standing in society and his final standing in eternity. Yes, those who vote not to license saloons vote away the liberties of some to first make themselves obnoxious to good men, then burdens to their friends and society, then sots, then madmen, then demons fit only to be damned; of these liberties, such men should be deprived.

God and Christ pity the poor drunkard; but notwithstanding this pity, have authorized it to be written: "No drunkard can inherit the kingdom of heaven." Latter Day Saints who vote to refuse to sell the intoxicating cup vote only in harmony with their honestly, solemnly pledged faith in the word of God. It needs no red ribbon, no other badge to mark these voters in society; they are marked of God, if so be they have received his Spirit and can cry "Abba Father," "My Father, who art in Heaven."

We would have been pleased to have been at the jubilee of which Bro. Luff writes; but we rejoice in the thought that when next we sing:

"We want no cowards in our band Who will our colors fly,"

we can feel assurance that there were none in the fight at Independence, June 27th.

What an an assurance of "good will toward men," our brethren have given the the state of Missouri; what an assurance of good faith to their fellow Saints abroad. Brethren in the faith at Independence, accept our thanks for the good you have given us.

NO COMPROMISE.

ELSEWHERE in this issue there will be found a letter from Elder L. D. Hickey, dated June 16th, 1888, and an extract from one dated June 17th.

It will be seen by these letters that Elder Hickey and those with him, if he represents them correctly, are Strangites; that is, they identify themselves in the church under the claims of James J. Strang. It will be further seen that Mr. Hickey offers terms of "peace," and those terms are that we shall endorse the letter which Mr. Strang claimed to have received from Joseph Smith creating him his successor, and "endorse" the "administration" of James J. Strang. If those whom Mr. Hickey represents, those who met in conference near Horton according to the notice lately appearing in the HERALD, are really of this opinion it proves only this, so far as the Reorganization is concerned, that they accept identity with the Reorganization upon the demand that the Reorganization shall accept and endorse Mr. Strang and his administration; which would mean the acceptance of the "Book of the Law," published by Mr. Strang, a phase of polygamy, a kingdom with an earthly king, and those whom he ordained into office with the offices he bestowed upon them. All this, if we understand the force of the word "endorse" used by Elder Hickey.

On behalf of the Reorganization we state that we do not accept these terms.

The Reorganization does not endorse the so-called appointment of James J. Strang; does not endorse the administration of Mr. Strang; does not accept the Book of the Law published by him and does not accept the office of King nor Viceroy found in the administration of Mr. Strang, nor the men ordained by him in the offices unto which he ordained them by virtue of such ordination.

The Reorganization is not prepared to offer any terms of compromise in which the abandonment of the principles upon which we believe the Church of Christ was established and built, and as found in the books of the church, would be demanded, or would follow as a consequence. Neither will the Reorganized Church accept any man, or any number of men upon terms offered by them, which involves a like surrender of principle. We might have made terms of peace with some years before this, had we been willing to yield a principle here or a doctrine there; the Book of Covenants to one and the Book of Mormon to another; a point here and a point there; but this we could not do, and have not done.

We do not propose now to be compromised with these people in Kansas upon the terms proposed. The names sign to the notice are not on the church record of names of the Reorganization as members or as elders. Elder L. D. Hickey is not an accredited minister for the church, and known to the heads of the church as having been legally ordained, and has no authority to represent the Reorganization. He has not to our knowledge ever been received into the fellowship of the church; and if he has ever asked to be acknowledged upon his baptism of 1842, by the Reorganization we are not aware of it. He states specifically that he has identified the body over which Young Joseph presides as the church, and does so identify that body now; but does not endorse the "doctrine preached by many of the elders" of the church, and demands an acceptance of Mr. Strang and his administration. He does not say what the doctrine preached by many of the elders is that he does not endorse; but the very natural conclusion would be that whatever doctrine, or theory came in contact with Mr. Strang's philosophy and administration, would be rejected.

We do not mean in what we have here written to call Mr. Strang, or Elder Hickey bad names, or to say an ill word against them; we have dealt with the matter in plain words and without heat or anger. We do not call the right of these men to believe what they please in question, the privilege to do that is freely conceded. We do not in what we have stated call in question the honesty of the men in Kansas, including Elders Wake and Flanders. That has nothing to do with it. An attempt is made to force Mr.

Strang upon us, we refuse to be so compromised.

The Reorganized Church took up the work of the latter day dispensation where we understood that it was left at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and upon the platform of faith and organization stated in the books acknowledged by the church before and at such death. Since that time the church has made her progress untrammelled by any factional phase of Mormonism, so called; and always upon the same steadfast confession of faith. We have offered no compromise to any for the sake of influence, or numbers; have accepted no compromise when offered; have denounced polygamy in any form; have refused credence to the claim of any king but Christ; have no room or place for Spiritism as it has developed itself, and have never courted it nor feared it; have no Jesuitical orders known to the law of God demanding the fealty of the members of the church, neither within the pale of the church, nor out of it; and so far as we can now see owe no allegiance to any but Christ, no fealty to any faith only that found in the books acknowledged by the church, and no service but to God, Christ, the church and humanity. No matter what others may think, believe, or teach; no matter how strong the effort to compromise us with this or that order, or philosophy, we will not be so compromised; and the Saints everywhere will do well to bear this in mind; for we presume that now that the Lord's Spirit is prospering the preaching of the word everywhere, the crafty adversary of souls, and the ambitious among those who once have had connection with the faith will endeavor to disturb the faith of the Saints; and if possible by cunning craft to bring in vain and damaging doctrines and theories by which the weak among the Saints may be turned aside. If any one tells you or teaches you that Bro. Joseph believes this, or that, or endorses this theory, or that doctrine; or accepts this, or that new and strange thing, whether it be of a public, or of a private nature, an open or a secret order, do not accept such statement until you either see it published in statement from Bro. Joseph, or have it personally from himself. Bro. Joseph Smith is not responsible for any man's conduct and faith but his own; and he is not concluded; nor compromised by what another man may believe he believes, or seek to make him responsible for as a matter of teaching, or belief by implication; he reserves to himself the right to state his own faith and belief. Bro. Joseph is not a Spiritist, as the term is used; is not identified with any phase of Spiritualistic belief, or order; has no affiliation, nor membership in any league, band, lyceum, or order under any spiritual name, order, or belief; is not a member of any secret order, band, or association whatever; holds no title, or office, or membership in any society except the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is not compromised in any secret order, is not under the control or domination of spiritualistic influence, or departed spirits, and does not acknowledge allegi-ence or affiliation with any such powers; or of any spirit influence to his knowledge, only that warranted the believer in Christ, as shown in the teaching of the gospel. Should any make statements publicly, or privately, by which Bro. Joseph is made to endorse, or sanction anything contrary to the statements herein found and to the injury of the faith of the church, brethren, challenge the proof at once, no matter who makes the statement. When Bro. Joseph accepts any new philosophy, or receives anything that is to affect the faith, doctrines and policy of the church, he will put it before the brethren as provided for in the books and usages of the church. He has no secret and reserved policy to first entangle others in and then spring upon the church. Should he lose faith in the gospel of Christ and in the church, without transgression upon his part and by the processes of unbelief unto apostasy, he has sufficient regard for the rights of those now in the faith with him, to notify them of such change; and he will then step down and out without adding treachery to unbelief, disgrace and infamy to apostasy.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

"THE Saints of the Kewanee district held their quarterly conference on the 23d and 24th ult., at Millersburg, Illinois, and had an excellent time. Four were added to the church. Preaching by Elders John Chinnall, J. D. Jones and D. S. Holmes." So writes Bro. J. B. Larew in a late letter.

Bro. John T. Davis held his debate with Elder Wilson, of the Polygamic faith, at St. Johns, Tooele county, Utah, June 26th, and according to Bro. Anthony safely and creditably defended the faith. He returned to Crescent City, Iowa, July 2d., where he will remain a few days, and then be off for Wales, where he goes by appointment of April conference. He and his companion are in fine spirits.

Elder E. L. Kelley, who is vigorously carrying out the instruction of the last session of conference in having the church represented at the Cincinnati Exposition, which opened July 4th and closes in October, wrote from Kirtland, where he was securing representative views for the Exposition, June 25th, that the preaching prospects in northern Ohio, and Michigan, were never better. Bro. G. T. Griffiths was at work in northern Ohio, temporarily.

Bro. R. M. Elvin wrote from Samaria, Idaho, a few miles from Malad City, across the Malad Valley, west, June 27th, that the meetings closed at Malad, Sunday evening, the 24th. A sermon preached by him upon the occasion of the death of aged Sr. Thomas, June 26th, was well received. Bro. Elvin would remain at Samaria for a few days.

Bro. Heman C. Smith wrote from Carson City, Nevada, at a late date, where he was doing what he could to advance the cause.

By note from Bro. Alexander H. Smith, we learn that he and Bro. J. C. Foss are busy in Minnesota.

Bro. R. C. Elvin was called to the bedside of Sr. Eva Iantha, daughter of C. W. Bray, and wife of Charles N. Carpenter, of York, Nebraska. Her mother joined the church at Coldwater, Michigan. Sr. Carpenter had been sick some time and sent for Bro. Elvin, who went promptly. She desired to be baptized before she passed on to the other shore; so securing proper help she was carried to the water and baptized by Bro. Elvin. After this her mind was relieved of the fear of death. Bro. Elvin's kind and wise conversation greatly helped the dying Saint, for she answered the summons to go in four days, and Bro. Elvin was again called; this time to attend her obsequies. In this he was assisted by Rev. S. H. Alexander. A large concourse of the citizens attested the worth of this sister as one of the bright ones of earth. She was born September 27th, 1865, and was at her demise in her twenty-third year. She leaves a husband and two lovely children. Bro. Elvin's letter was not in the nature of an obituary, so we are pardoned for thus noticing it.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert reports a most excellent conference of the Decatur district, held at Davis City. The issue made by the departure of some by baptism to another claim for the latter day work, seems to have strengthened the cause rather than to have weakened it. Those who spoke in the preaching services were specially aided and blessed, and did excellent service for the Master and truth. At Pleasanton, also, Bro. Lambert found the cause in good condition. The brethren are much alive for the work, and prospects are fair for the future in that region.

Bro. Charles H. Jones, of High Point, Missouri, has so far recovered his health that he has filled the stand acceptably near his own home and at the conference at Davis City, where he had one of the preaching services; Bro. Lambert, O. B. Thomas, of Pleasanton, and Bro. Jones being the chief speakers at the session.

Bro. R. S. Salyards filled the stand at the Lott School-house, near Lamoni, Sunday, July 1st. Bro. M. H. Forscutt spoke in the church at Lamoni, in the morning and Bro. E. W. Tullidge, of Salt Lake City, Utah, in the evening of the same day. Bro. Tullidge is visiting Lamoni, Omaha, and other points east, in the interest of his magazine, The Western Galaxy, which he is publishing at Salt Lake City. He is staying at Lamoni a few days resting and getting acquainted with the Saints. He expresses himself well pleased with the progress being made. He will return to his home in Utah with added convictions that the redemption and building up of Zion, as designed of God, and shadowed forth by the prophets ancient and modern is practicable. Bro. Tullidge's magazine is designed to do for the west what the Century or Harper's Monthly is doing for the east. He has regained the ground lost in the darkness and despair of the "dark and cloudy day," and the hurtful influences surrounding him in the city in the Salt Lake Valley, and proposes to stand among them who will do valiant duty for God and humanity.

Brethren R. Winning and D. F. Nicholson have perfected their arrangements and have their bank located and doing business, temporarily, awaiting the erection of the building they propose to build, at Lamoni.

Bro. John Hopper, from Nebraska, visited Lamoni with his family to spend the 4th of July. So also did Bro. Robert Winning and family, of St. Joseph, Missouri.

By letter to Bro. Samuel V. Bailey, from a relative at Coldwater, Michigan, we learn that ten were baptized at their late conference. This is good news from a far country, "and we rejoice." One of those who yielded obedience had been quite opposed in the days gone by, but now sees light in the light of Christ.

Bro. J. C. Clapp, started from his home in Deer Lodge, Montana, June 25th for a short mission into Oregon. He may be addressed for a time at John Day, Grant county, Oregon. He says in his note: "I baptized one, an aged lady last week. It is thought more will follow." The father-in-law of Joseph Morris, Mr. Olsen, was found in his field dead, having fallen and expired without notice being taken of his illness. He was an old man.

Bro. H. C. Bronson had on the evening of the 25th of June, held the first night's discussion with Rev. Presson, at Wilber, Nebraska, heretofore noticed in HERALD; subject Infant Baptism.

Bro. J. C. Clapp, of Deer Lodge Montana, would like the address of John Livingston. Please send it to him, any one having it.

Letters are received from a number of the brethren which we are obliged to leave out; among them are one from Bro. J. T. Davis, Salt Lake City, June 14th; George M. Frey, Livonia, (Indiana we suppose), who bears testimony to the work; Bro. Wm. Thompson, Augus, Iowa, who had baptized two since he last wrote, (date of letter not given); James McArthur, Galt, Ontario, June 23d; Bro. W. P. Ivie, Jonesboro, Arkansas, June 24; J. S. Lee, Carbon, Wyoming; W. H. Kelley, Providence, R. I., June 25th; J. D. Howell, Swansea, England, June 9th; R. J. Anthony, Salt Lake City, June 21st.

Of the Latter Day Saints and their yearly Reunion the Shelby county Republican, published at Harlan, Iowa, the home of Brn. J. W. Chatburn, J. W. Swain and others, of our number, has this to say, in its issue for June 28th:

"When the annual conference and campmeeting of the Latter Day Saints adjourned at this place last year there was no permanent arrangement made for this year, but a committee was appointed to select a location for the meetings for the next five years. This committee, of which Hon. J. W. Chatburn, of this city, is a member, has received propositions from a number of Iowa towns offering grounds and certain privileges to the committee in behalf of the church if they will make those points their place of meeting. Now, we believe that this city can offer just as good if not better inducements than any other place and that it would be to the material interests of our people to have them select Harlan as a place of meeting for a period of at least five years. We believe it is a matter that could be properly considered by our business association, and that steps should at once be taken to communicate with the committee of the church. We understand that all who attended the meetings of last year expressed themselves as being highly pleased with the results, and we learn that the meeting was more largely attended than any other of a similar character in this district."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. W. P. Ivie, Jonesboro, Arkansas, June 24th, writes:

"Bro. Cato is not far off; and I think he would do well to come down and see what we could do. I am in one and one-half miles of Jonesboro, on Dr. Meek's farm. The K. C. & M. R. R., is one and the Cotton Belt, from St. Louis out in to Texas, is another road, forming a junction at Jonesboro. So come and see us."

Bro. A. J. Cato, from Nathan, Arkansas, June 21st:

"Alone as I am it does my soul good to hold aloft the banner of King Immanuel with the words emblazoned upon it in letters of gold: 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest,' and see it float so majestically over all others, sometimes I almost feel that I should be permitted to boast a little; but I had better stop and ask: 'Would he devote that sacred head for those so weak as I?' Prospects are flattering here just now, but the 'end is not yet.'"

Bro. R. Etzenhouser, from St. Louis, June 25th, writes:

"I reached here on the 15th, and am about my work."

Bishop George A. Blakeslee, of Galien, Michigan, wrote June 25th:

"I attended a conference yesterday (Sunday) in Chicago. It was well attended and a good Spirit seemed to prevail. That spirit of fault-finding which has been so prevalent does not exhibit itself. That element which caused so much eruption heretofore does not attend and seemed to have dropped out. Three were baptized, a young man and young lady, another man quite influential. There was a better spirit manifested there than I ever saw at any previous time."

Bro. E. C. Brand writing from Centralia, Kansas, June 29th, says:

"Had a good conference, one baptized. Preached the first Latter Day Saint sermon in Congregational Church last night; large and attentive meetings in this place and seven miles south every night."

Bro. Brand's address will be care Mrs. Henry Stawpert, 702, Q street, Centralia, Atchison county, Kansas.

Bro. R. J. Anthony wrote from Salt Lake City, Utah, July 20th:

I attended the discussion between Bro. J. T. Davis and a man by the name of Wilson, at St. Johns, in Tooele county on the 26th ult. Brother Davis made a splendid defense of the faith, and showed the polygamic revelation to be in direct opposition to the former revelation on marriage, and false and contradictory of itself. Elder Wilson of the polygamy faith, contented himself with reading affidavits gotten up by Joseph F. Smith to bolster up that "abomination." One man suggested to him that to read all these affidavits would occupy the hour. He never touched brother Davis' arguments, and to kill time he read the revelation in the appendix of Doctrine and Covenants, all of which was very good, but irrelevant to the question under discussion. Several got up and left the house during his reading. He did not try to make an argument; the talk was all knocked out of him, except a little bitterness. He had the gall to tell what you said in your Chicago speech, and tried to rehash G. Q. Cannon's villainous attack upon you in the Female Instructor, that you had never let an opportunity pass but you had done all you could to bring trouble on this people. All that were present realized Wilson had made a failure; several so stated and were outspoken in denouncing the theory if it could not be defended. Bro. Davis has done good in St. Johns."

Bro. J. C. Foss, Cormorant Minnesota, June 25th, writes:

"We hold another conference the 14th and 15th of July, in the town of Maine. We shall have our tent then, as it has arrived from Kansas City. I have been opening up a new place of late, in Camden. I baptized a promising young man yesterday. Bro. Alexander H. Smith is with us."

Bro. S. J. Reynolds wrote from Chase, Michigan, June 24th:

"We have a small branch in Chase, called the Chase branch. When organized it numbered twelve; at present it has sixteen. It is expected that there will be more gathered into the fold ere many months pass. Bro. J. J. Cornish is doing much good in Chase. I think it would be prudent if some elder could be sent to Lake county to preach the gospel; for there are many who do not know what the difference is between our people and the Salt Lake Mormons."

Bro. Nicholas Stamm, by card from Pella, Iowa, reports:

"I came here about the 20th, stood on the main corner of the streets and spoke to a large crowd of people. It made some of those Hollanders uneasy and restless, but I felt good. I have spoken here twice, the last time for one hour. I also distributed some tracts. I go now to Des Moines. My health is good again."

Bro. James Caffall, writes from Battle Creek, Nebraska, June 25th:

"We had an excellent attendance on Sunday 24th at Bro. J. H. Jackson's private grove, known as the Yellow Banks; within six miles of Battle Creek, Nebraska, the number present exceeding our expectations. Bro. W. M. Rumel and myself held two meetings on 23d, and three on the 25th. Yesterday we obtained permission to occupy a building formerly used as a Baptist church, situated in Battle Creek. We applied for the same place last year, but were denied, not being Evangelical. Openings in the north-west of Nebraska are increasing; but patience and persistence are needed to establish the truth in the west and north-west."

If Bishop Ryan is correctly quoted in the statement given below it is surely within reason to hope that the Catholic Church will never attain to the supreme power in the United States. The age is not prepared for a raid upon heretics.

CATHOLIC HONESTY.

The Roman Catholic Bishop, Ryan, speaking at Philadelphia quite recently, said:

"We maintain that the church of Rome is intolerant—that is, that she uses every means in her power to root out heresy. But her intolerance is the result of her infallibility. She alone has the right to be intolerant, because she alone has the truth. The church tolerates heretics where she is obliged to do so, but she hates them with a deadly hatred, and uses all her powers to annihilate them. If ever the Catholics should become a considerable majority, which in time will surely be the case, then will religious freedom in the republic of the United States come to an end. Our enemies know how she treated heretics in the middle ages, and how she treats them to-day where she has the power. We no more think of denying these historic facts than we do of blaming the Holy God and the princes of the church for what they have thought fit to do."—Christian Work, July, 1888.

And in the hereafter, angels may Roll the stone from its grave away!"

"MILLIONS OF BEATING HEARTS, STRANGE THAT WE HEAR THEM NOT."

BY EDITH M. FIFER.

All over our beautiful land,
In vale, on mountain and plain,
Dwell mortals whose lives day by day
Are filled with a ceaseless pain.
There are millions of beating hearts,
Downpressed by sorrow's sad lot,
That are pulsing with agonized throbs;
'Tis strange that we hear them not.

From the little hut by the hill,
Where poverty, toil and care
Are daily companions to those Who dwell in lowliness there,
To the mansions of wealth and rank,
Amidst the world's busy marts,
We may seek all vainly a home,
Which holds no sorrow-touched hearts.

Hearts mourning o'er hopes that are dead,
Hearts aching with vain regret,
Hearts struggling 'neath poverty's load
Of toil and grim want and debt;
Hearts grieving and heavy with care,
O'er dear ones whose feet have strayed
From paths of fair virtue and truth,
Into snares by the tempter laid.

Perhaps 'tis a parent's fond heart
That mourns o'er a wayward child
Who drowns the sweet teachings of Christ
In a whirlpool of pleasures wild;
Or it may be a husband or wife
Who waits with a wearying heart
Till their loved one's ways shall stray
No more from their own apart.

There are many sorrowful ones
By sad affliction bowed down,
That are patient cross-bearers here,
In heaven may theirs be the crown.
There are hearts that are lonely and sad,
By the reaper, Death, bereaved,
That long for the fair future home,
Where hearts no more shall be grieved.

There are millions of beating hearts;
We may find them in many a spot.
They're longing for comfort and help;
How strange that we hear them not!
We'll join heart and hand in this cause,
And strive by our prayers and love
To uphold these sorrowing hearts.
Lord send them peace from above!

CANTON, Mo., June 27th.

OSCODA, Mich., June 9th.

Dear Sister Frances, and Sisters in Christ:—It seems to me that sister Campbell's letter was written just for me. I read her letter over and over again, thinking then that I was not alone in my trials. I, like sister Campbell, have craved the company of the Saints when I was sick, knowing that if they would come to me and pray with me that I would get better. I love to go to God in secret prayer and tell him every trial. I, with the rest of you, dear Saints, can say I know this work is true. My mother passed away from earth when I was but two years of age, and when I grew old enough to read and think what I ought to do in order to be saved, I would try to serve God more from fear of being lost than because I really loved to serve him. I loved to go to church and Sunday School, but I was taught to believe that if I was not a Christian I would be banished to a place of torment. I left Scotland eight years ago and came to relatives in this country, where I met with more trials than I ever did at home; and I felt that I needed to pray more earnestly for God's guidance in a strange land; and when I look back I can see that my trust in him was not in vain. I thank him for the light of the glorious gospel; it has brought me joy and comfort. When I feel lonely or depressed I can find comfort again in the company of the Saints of God. I thank God for so many noble hearted sisters as I have met since I have known the truth. I love to hear all that the mothers have to say about the training of children. I have three dear little boys, and my greatest desire is to see them led in the ways of truth. I think what sister Eleanor has written concerning the prayer league is good, and will be a benefit to us all, both in the home and elsewhere; and some of the sisters here intend sending in their names. The sisters here have organized a prayer meeting of their own to be held on Friday afternoon. About two years ago there were but four or five of us here in this place to meet together for prayer and testimony, and we would be blessed inasmuch that we felt to rejoice in the midst of all the persecutions we received from the people of this place. Many are now investigating the doctrine; and in answer to our prayers over thirty have been added to our number. Is this not great encouragement for us to press onward? Remember the Saints of Oscoda in your prayers.

I remain your sister in the gospel,

MRS. AGNES SMITH.

SAND RUN, O., June 18th.

Sr. Frances:—It gives me heartfelt joy to be able to inform you that our little branch is prospering, and our Sunday School is doing well. The young men, especially, are very diligent; their interest is fully aroused, and they are not only obtaining all the church publications, but are making themselves familiar with their contents. Not only can our young men declare before the people their knowledge of the truth of this work, but as the members who united with us last winter all came out from other churches, they are able to testify understandingly to the difference between light and darkness, and they do so testify.

Brethren Beatty and Matthews are here at this time. Brother Beatty has been here for the past month. They are preaching in five different places (mining towns). They have plenty of opposition, as the preachers have determined their members shall not be captured as they were in Sand Run, if they can help it; and I am sorry to say that they do not hesitate to circulate falsehoods among the people. The brethren, however, have good attentive listeners; while some are believing and rejoicing therein, others hold back, not willing to accept the Book of Mormon. I trust there are those who will soon obey.

In regard to the Prayer League I wish to tell you that there are five of us sisters who meet every Monday at ten o'clock for a season of prayer, and we fast until the meeting is over. We lost no time after the proposition came out in the Herald, for we had all been thinking about it before it was proposed there. We have met now five times, and oh, what outpourings of the Spirit we have enjoyed. We would not miss them for any consideration, when possible to attend. Some of our prayers have been literally and quickly answered. We would like to know how to conduct these meetings; and as far as the sisters of this branch are concerned they do not desire to observe this season of prayer separately at their homes, for we believe that every faithful Saint in the church was doing that already. We are willing to do all in our power for the cause of truth, because each one of us is in earnest, sincerely desiring our soul's salvation. For myself I can say I never expected to have such blessings again upon this earth as I am now enjoying. My health was never better; and at times I feel as though I should live until the millennium, giving glory, praise and honor to God for all his loving kindness and mercy to me.

We all hope the sisters will not delay longer in starting the Prayer League, for we know that it will be the means of doing much good. In the new and everlasting covenant your sister,

FLORA HANNAH.

Dear Sister Frances:—In answer to Sr. Virginia's letter in last Herald I wish to say, that, to my mind, the idea that we can add to, or avoid, any responsibility resting upon us as Saints of God, consecrated to his service by baptism and the laying on of hands, is a mistaken position, though it is one often advanced. What is it that God demands of us in his service? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This is the very essence of the gospel, in which is fulfilled all the laws of God. When we covenant thus to serve him there can be no self-reservation; it is an entire, unconditional surrender of self, all that we are, all that we have. There can not be a consecration with a reservation of any part of heart, soul, or mind; and no greater demand can be made upon us than to yield all of these. How then can this covenant of prayer which we make with one another add anything to that which we have already made in our baptism to God? Our failure in its accomplishment can be no more of a condemnation than is our avoidance of its responsibilities, since it is no new covenant, only a reiteration of, or rededication of the one already made.

"The cost," dear sisters, should have been counted before we began to build, before we gave ourselves to him in baptismal covenant. Shall we stop our building now to count the cost? and what if we find it is very great, even all that we have, are we able to finish the work? "If thou wilt be perfect, sell that thou hast, . . . and come follow me," said Christ. That leaves us nothing to keep back, of time, or talent, of treasure, if we would become perfect in him. "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price."

The question at issue in this matter is, shall we be profitable, or unprofitable servants? "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey." Rom. 6:16. "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love." Why then should we shrink from the necessity of living up to the commandments? If we in the past have failed to do so, the very object of our league is to bring it about.

It is left to the sisters to decide how often we shall pray in unison. I would not object were it every day, believing that the heart that lives nearest to God is best prepared to approach him in faith. Can we be sure that once a month we will be more in harmony with him, less disturbed, and filled with worldly cares, than when we make it a point to have daily intercourse with him? I agree with the sister that prayer without faith is a mockery, but how are we to obtain faith before we pray? "If ye ask anything in my name it shall be given you;" then if I want faith shall I not ask for it? and do we not need it every day as well as once a month? It would fill me with horror and dread if I knew there was one hour in my existence when I dare not approach him in fullest faith that his ears are ever open to my cry.

We believe that our sins have been pardoned in the blood of Christ, and remitted to us individually in the waters of baptism; hear then what the apostle says to the Hebrews: "Now where remission is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus; by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say his flesh. And having such an high priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Heb. 10: 18-22 (Inspired Translation).

I have quoted this because I understand our sister to mean that she distrusts herself, not God. But why should she do so? If sin has been remitted to her, why has she not boldness to enter into the holiest, in full assurance of faith, praying always, without ceasing, lifting up holy hands to God?

The Spirit of God dwelling in us is ever interceding for us, whether we know aright what to ask for or not. Very often in my closet, in the posture of prayer, when I had only tears to bring, I have felt that intercession ascending for me, and knew that the most eloquent of prayers was being heard in heaven, though no thought of mine was framed into words; much less did it occur to me whether or not my faith was mixed with the petition in just the right proportion to produce the desired result. I knew before the result appeared that God had heard and answered the call of his Spirit.

Now, my dear sisters, I leave this subject to your own consciences—how often you shall use the privilege; only let me entreat you to bear in mind that you run no more risk in assuming these duties than in seeking to avoid them; for the covenant is only that which you are supposed to have already made in your baptism.

ELEANOR.

LAMONI, Iowa.

Sister Frances:—I see that some of the sisters are noticing with favor Sr. Eleanor's letters in the Home Column concerning the Prayer League; and I am really glad of it. I had thought to have written before, but the Spirit seemed to say, Wait; but it appears to me now that the time has come for me to write, and I will say first of all, that I believe the Prayer League will result in much good, if properly managed; for I do sincerely believe in prayer, and I know if I were sick, or in trouble, there is nothing that would do me so much good as the knowledge that there was a faithful band of Saints praying for me.

The sister has said well when she said we must be able to repeat the "Lord's Prayer" from the heart; for if we can not do that, our prayers would not avail much. How many of us are there who are able to say that we forgive all men their trespasses, as we hope to be forgiven? It is written, "If you forgive not men their trespasses your Father in Heaven will not forgive you your trespasses." "The fervent effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much;" then we who enter into the Prayer League must examine ourselves that our prayers may avail much; and one of the first subjects of prayer would be wisdom. We should all pray for wisdom to guide and direct us aright at all times, that we may not ask amiss.

There is great power in prayer, and it is being felt now all over the land in the cause of temperance. Since Christians have taken up the temperance cause and prayer circles have met and their united prayers have ascended to the Father, it is being felt that he does hear and is answering. Notice, and you will see that there is a curse following the rum-sellers, and sooner or later they will all be made to feel it. The Father has heard the fervent effectual prayers in behalf of suffering wives and mothers, whose agonizing cry has been, Pray for my husband, or Pray for my boy, that he may be reclaimed. "The fervent effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much;" then, dear sisters, let us strive to be righteous in very deed. That we may do much good, is the prayer of INDEPENDENCE, Mo., June 28th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Words fail me in attempting to express the rapturous feeling that pervades the hearts of the Saints in "Zion." By a clear majority of two hundred votes in a total casting of a little over 1,300, we carried our proud little town of Independence "Dry" yesterday. No more saloons after July 4th, as the licenses all expire on that day. The liquor men were out in full force, and every means resorted to to defeat us. Men were brought in and sworn who had no rights whatever as citizens—fourteen were arrested, and eleven of them, failing of bonds, were jailed; many others escaped; but the largest vote ever polled in the place was cast. Kansas City brewery and distillery men were present with their agents, and money was circulated freely. They put the "Wet" ticket into the hands of non-voters, then pinned the red badge of the "Drys" on the lapel of their coats, and led them forward to the ballot box, hoping that we would not challenge the vote of any man wearing our badge; but again they were foiled and the victims jailed. The Saints stand higher to-day in the estimation of the reputable portion of this community than ever before. Not one member of this branch voted "Wet" that we could learn of. We heard of one; but upon enquiry were left doubtful about it, and we hope it was not true. There were a couple of professed Saints and members of this branch who were not voters, who stormed and croaked about voting away men's liberties; but such Saints are and will ever remain on record as "weak in the faith." The idea of robbing hundreds of boys, girls and women, mothers and wives of their liberties, in order to give a few saloon-keepers license (not liberty) to sell liquid damnation, and a few men the privilege to gratify a purely selfish disposition to drink the accursed stuff! If ever the writer of this letter descends to such a use of the word liberty, he hopes that God will take him from earth, and plant some man in his place, who will consider himself but one of the great body of humanity, and who will teach that it is a prostitution of the holy word "liberty" to make it mean the enslaving of the many to indulge the few. How a Latter Day Saint can speak, or vote, in favor of open saloons, and then seek out some quiet place on this sacred spot and pray, "Lord hasten the redemption of Zion and the purification of the earth," is a puzzle to us. Ask God to cleanse the earth, and then vote to "pollute my holy land," by turning loose a stream of liquor upon our sons and daughters! Bah! I may be lacking in charity; but I have no place either in my head or heart for such imbecility or inconsistency. If God has any use or place for such Saints, let him have them, we don't need, nor want them here.

What a jollification we had in the great tent here. Colonel Jones literally hugged Captain Shields publicly on the platform, after the victory was declared; and such a hand-shaking and general fraternal feeling was never known in this place before. Mrs. Hoffman, the state lecturer, told us she would tell about the Latter Day Saints everywhere she lectured. I pledged, beforehand, ninety-seven per cent. of our voting membership, and we beat even that. On the day before election a grand parade of men, women and children was had on the streets, and notwithstanding the rain poured down in torrents, and the streets were muddy, they marched and marched, until our mothers and girls and wives had shamed many a blue ribbon off the coats of men formerly on the other side. They paraded again last night, with victory perched on their banner, and the air was rent by the tumultuous roars of gladness, then from those thousands of lips and hearts rang out the song unto Him who had given them victory, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." I reminded them that years ago I had told some of their people who were prejudiced against the Latter Day Saints, that the time would come in this town when they would be glad to find in our church the force upon which the citizens of Independence could rely with absolute safety as a factor in redeeming and elevating the country, and was now a thousand times glad that that word had been made good. I also pledged our church on the side of every moral reform.

The Negroes did us excellent service. A band of nearly forty of them formed at one of their churches and marched together from one to another polling place, until every man had cast his vote solid for the right. Thus they helped each other. Of course, that did not represent the majority of the negro vote; but the facts and the sight of that little parade broke the back-bone of the saloonist's hope, and gave us an encouragement that we vented in rounds of cheers as they passed along the streets. Of course the saloons will die hard. They are threatening injunctions, because of electioneering, &c., by women, who stood faithfully by the polling booths all day long, and others conducted lunch or free dinners close to every voting place, within thirty feet of the voting booths. Who will they enjoin? the Council—the majority of citizens? Their licenses expire July the 4th and on that day, a National holiday, they must close. No council or court would grant them a continuance in the face of such a majority, and no show is possible for renewal of license. But, lo! the poor Mormon, who, hitherto, has not been worth a saloonist's notice, is now becoming the most conspicuous biped in the town and is coming in for the most lavish cursings that ever were turned loose through the channels of hell.

Bro. Joseph, I wish you could have witnessed our jubilee last night. It would have scattered your neuralgia and made you feel twenty years younger. Cheers, songs, smiles and tears were blended, and all semblance of sectism and partyism were buried. The town was redeemed from saloons, and that seemed enough. Republicans forgot Harrison, and Democrats forgot Cleveland. A large sum was raised to purchase a beautiful gold watch and chain for Capt. Shields; also as large a sum for one for Mrs. Shields; and resolutions of admiration and commendation were adopted regarding them and the ladies. But of one thing I feel glad, and told them so last night. The opportunity has come when Latter Day Saints could prove what they had always professed, viz., that they were on the right side of every moral question, first, last, and all the time. We have made our mark, as it never was made in this place before. On every hand the congratulations of the people are coming in for our people.

Well, I may tire you with my long letter; but I have not told a tithe of what I feel, nor told it half so well as I feel it; yet I know that you will rejoice with us, in that God, in the kind order of his appointments, has provided us an opportunity and a place to crowd in at least one feature of our latter day doctrine and make it prominent before all the country; for the tidings regarding our church work are already being circulated through the leading papers of Kansas City.

Just take the tidings in to the boys in the office, and let them know that when the time came for action we were not a whit behind either Plano or Lamoni. In bonds, as ever,

JOSEPH LUFF.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo, July 3d.

Bro. Joseph:—The discussion at Wilbur Nebraska, with Rev. Mr. Presson closed last Friday night; it lasted five nights.

On the first proposition (Infant Baptism) Rev. Presson made a signal failure.

On the second, (The Mode of Baptism), he made some show of an argument, dwelling mostly on the writings of the Early Fathers although he utterly failed to produce one Lexicographer who rendered the Greek word Baptizo sprinkling, or pouring; while I produced over twenty authors who rendered it immerse, plunge, wash, or dip. Again; his great claim was that I could not show in the Bible where one person had been or was immersed; while I showed that they went down "into the water" and "came up out of the water;" and where they were "buried."

On the third proposition; Is Water Baptism essential unto the remission of sins; Rev. Presson made another utter failure.

Rev. Presson is a good Greek scholar, an educated man, but he knew more about Greek and Grammar, than he did about the Bible and the truth. I am happy to state that he was a gentleman in the debate. During the whole discussion of five nights, not once did he mention Joseph Smith, Book of Mormon, or Polygamy; neither did he at any time refer to the personal character of those I represent. For this I am bound to give him credit; and call him a gentleman in discussion.

Bro Hyrum O. Smith was with me and acted as my moderator; and will write up the debate more fully.

Yours for truth,

H. C. BRONSON.

MUSCOTAH, Kan., June 16th.

Editors of Herald:—There is a misunderstanding in relation to my views, faith, &c., and I would like to correct the public mind through the Herald. I was baptized and ordained in 1842. Since that time I have been a member of the Church of J. C. of L. D. Saints, and no other church. At the death of the martyr, Joseph, I examined the claims of different men for the Presidency of the Church; among them was the claims of James J. Strang. I found that he was the legally appointed and ordained man, and I accepted him, and stood by him, as I did Joseph, until he was martyred. I then took the revelations of Jesus Christ, and records of the church, to learn who stood at the head of the church, and by the same rules of law and logic I learned that young Joseph was the duly authorized man to preside over the church. This I learned shortly after the death of Mr. Strang. Since that time I have identified the body over which he presided as the body, or Church of Christ, and myself a member of that church, and no other.

The death of the Prophet does not change the relations of the members in the church any more than the death of a Mayor of a City, or Governor of a State. The death of any one municipal officer does not change the authority of any other officer. The vacancy is filled, and the city, state or nation, moves on in the same order as before—it does not destroy the citizenship of any member; so with church, but especially the Church of Latter Day Saints.

Then let it be understood that I have and do now identify Joseph Smith President of the Church of God, and I belong to that church and no other. And I have so preached, written and talked, from the time I met him at the Amboy conference, in Illinois. Yet let it be remembered that I did not and I do not now endorse the doctrine that has been preached by many of the elders of the church. Neither can I endorse all that has been written and sent out by many of the elders. God be praised that he led me from the ways of the world, to his way, as taught by angels, patriarchs and prophets. And I this day feel glad that I ever saw the fold, or Church of Christ, and was led to obey the gospel and was adopted into it. Since I accepted this gospel I have had offers if I would only secede from this body I might hold a position in a more popular body.

But I rather be a door keeper in the Church of God than hold a position in any other body the sun shines on.

P.S.—When I leave the church I was baptized into, in 1842, I will let all men know. As I have been (in the matter of membership) misrepresented, I think it only fair that I should be allowed this way to correct the public mind.

N. B.—I don't care to get into a quarrel over this matter, but our people know that I have for twenty years identified myself a member of the body over which Joseph presided and do to this day, and shall on, until I am by sin turned out, as any other member. I have been, and I am now abused by the Strangites just because I hold as I do, and I know how the Josephites hold me and talk. Yet all this does not help their case nor change the truth nor my faith.

Yours truly and sincerely.

The article that Elder Brand put in the Herald a few days ago is a mistake, and has done no good in these quarters, but harm. The Elders, Wake and Flanders are not fools, nor children, nor old cranks; they may bother him in a way he don't think. Let us have peace. Mr. Brand told what was not so, and can be proved to the contrary in the courts of equity. He better correct his statement; they are both elders in the church.

MUSCOTAH, Kan., June 17th.

Pres. Joseph Smith:—If you want to be at peace with us endorse the letter your father sent to J. J. Strang and his administration, and then we can walk in the road to Zion. But you never need think I shall adopt your notes and reject those of your father and Bro. Strang. No, sir; I have no such idea, nor did I ever have for a moment. And if that will lead you to publish me not as a credited minister you will have to do it—and by that time we will be ready to publish you as a credited and duly ordained and anointed prophet and patriarch, &c. I have held back on these matters for peace's sake. But if we are driven to do otherwise than we have, I think it will be all right. Some of the Strangites are fighting me for holding you as president. I will fight it out on principles of law. I have no fears of defeat. Now in this fight do not hurt yourself—you have kindly admonished—Apostle Hickey—and I will do the same to the prophet and patriarch—Smith.

Yours, truly,

To The Herald:—I did not go direct from Conference to my field of labor as I intended, because I could not get reduced rates over lines connecting with the Union Pacific. So I went via San Bernardino, remaining at home two days, the shortest days I ever spent. Then on to San Benito, where I remained for a short time, where for the first time I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. David Lander, fellow traveler and partner of my joys and sorrows, in this land of fogs and mists where it never misses to rain. In the Jefferson branch, (San Benito), I spent a very pleasant, and I hope profitable time. Peace, love, and an earnest desire to do something seems to prevail there. One reason for such a pleasant state of affairs is, that all are busily engaged trying to help along the work. From there we went to San Francisco, where I was taken sick on account of which I missed the boat. This detained us fifteen days. Our stay was made more pleasant by meeting our Australian ministers, brethren Butterworth and Wight, whose acquaintance I was much pleased to make. I highly approve of the selection of those brethren for that far off field. For once the pattern has been observed, "Two by two let them be sent." We will await developments with some curiosity.

At Oakland I had the pleasure of meeting my old friend, H. P. Brown, at whose house I was made welcome, and was kindly nursed by his wife while sick, for which I feel grateful. If there is one time more than another that we appreciate kindness, it is while away from home and sick. The San Francisco branch is apparently in a good condition. Enjoyed the Spirit while speaking to them. Would liked to have remained with them longer. I believe that George L. Lincoln and others are doing more good there than they are aware of. Had the pleasure of meeting an old acquaintance, Sister Knight, at whose house we were entertained.

May 31st set sail by steamer for Yaquina, Oregon, and as usual with me, when the wind blew I went below where I remained the most of the time on my back, letting Bro. Lander do the eating for us both, which he cheerfully did. Seasickness is said to be beneficial; there ought to be some benefit derived from it as all who have been seasick will testify. So far I can not say I am very much pleased with Oregon as a field. I am told that this is the worst part of it, which I hope is true. From Yaquina we took boat and wagon for thirty miles through the rain and mud here where there are fifteen Saints, poor in this world's goods, but I hope rich in faith and in the hope of riches to come. We assisted in organizing them into a branch, to be known as the Drift Creek branch. Have been here eighteen days holding meetings and doing what we could. Some are very much interested whom we dislike to leave until we see them in the fold which I think they are near. It rains about six days out of seven, which makes it disagreeable. But rain does not terrify the people here; it is about the same as sun-light to them. It is truly astonishing to see the hardships they will endure to get to meeting. A family came ten miles to our meeting; seven miles in a boat, walking the remaining three; then walked home six miles over a bad mountain trail and carried a child. Three of them were women. Trying to keep the faith and wishing it would quit raining,

I remain yours,

HIRAM L. HOLT.

No. 41 North St., STAFFORD, England, June 14th.

Dear Brethren of Herald Office:—I have been requested to forward you the minutes of our last district conference for publication. I now so send, and you will see that we are still alive and engaged heart and soul in the work of God. Brethren, readers of the Herald, I love the work of the Lord restored in these days by the power of our God as anciently. And I know that his power is in the church and dwelling amongst his faithful people.

Dear Herald, you are indeed a herald of peace and joy. Long may you live to cheer and comfort the people of God. I tell you, brethren dear, whoever read these lines, what is my opinion. My opinion of the Herald of our church is this: I believe that no Saint, man or woman, can fully keep pace with the progressive strides of this church who fail to read the Herald. How any member of the church can live without the valuable information it contains I can not understand. Why, we brethren out here in old England look out for its weekly visits as for the visits of the dearest friend, and feel very much disappointed if it should not come; though it is always a fortnight behind time by reason of the sea voyage it was to make before we can behold it. Now brethren, I don't wish my words to hurt any one, for I know some are too poor to take the Herald. Well, any good brother who is acquainted with that fact will be only too glad to loan you his.

We are moving along in this country as well and as fast as the dullness of the people and the hardness of the times will admit of. It is not an easy matter to get the people to see as we see, and believe as we believe; yet we try and ask God to help his servants. We do find the truth of the ancient prophet's words, namely, that the harvest of our toil is like the gleaning of the grapes when the vintage is done. When the vintage is past there are not many left; but we take courage from the gentle whisperings of the Spirit of God. Pray for us and truth will triumph.

Yours in love,

GEO. S. GREENWOOD.

BOLT'S FORK, Ky., June 29th.

Dear Herald:—On the 4th of this month I started for North Eastern Kentucky. I met Bro. James Moler at Jackson, on his way to Centerville, West Virginia, and accompanied him. We preached at Centerville one week and separated. We found the Saints still in the faith, but not working together as well as we desired. On Friday night Bro. Moler taught them the law of tithing. We shall ever remember the kindness received at their hands. When about to depart we were liberally supplied with that "mammon of unrighteousness" to make us friends among strangers in a strange land.

Arriving at the mouth of Bear Creek, I obtained the school-house and preached two discourses to a very prejudiced, though kind and courteous people. From here I wended my way about eight miles west to East Fork, where I began preaching at the house of Mr. Easthans. Our usual forerunner to prejudice the minds of the people, viz., Satan's ministering spirit, had preceded me, and the people were told that a Utah preacher was in their neighborhood. A few came to hear, for a few nights, but prejudice is now being laid aside and calls are made for preaching. The people are courteous, generous, social and kind. There has never been any of our elders in this part of Kentucky that I can hear of. Two Utah elders preached here though, which prejudiced people so much the more, and hence this must be removed.

I see that Bro. Gillen is Missionary in Charge, and if I knew his address I would write him of my whereabouts, and be directed by his wise counsel. I will try to spend about five months of this year in this mission. On returning from service after preaching at a place near here called Mud Lick, I was informed by a Mr. Geo. Runnels that I had better leave the neighborhood or he might do wonders. On the next night the door was locked and we were shut out.

A large audience,—more than could have been seated in the "holy (?) sanctuary,"—were gathered, and being seated on the lap of good old mother earth, and entwined in her embrace, we were permitted to speak for over an hour on the things spoken of in Matthew 24th. Several are believing the things of the kingdom, and calls are had for preaching on every side. I will remain in the neighborhood about a week.

I desire a copy of the Herald sent to Messrs Chas. Payne, W. W. Thompson, Clate Jackson, John Shepherd, and Mr. Lewis Easton, who have so generously provided for my wants and cared for me. May our Heavenly Father bless them in store, and lead them into the fold. Their address is Bolt's Fork, Boyd county, Kentucky. Please send me some tracts for distribution, send to me at Byer, Ohio. Since writing the above I have preached at Beech Grove, two miles from here, and extend my thanks to them for their kind and courteous treatment. I also went to Mount Zion, about three miles from here, but found the church locked, though the appointment had been given out. A small audience assembled and being seated again upon the lap of mother earth, I began a hymn, when the janitor said if we would go in the house he would open it. Of course we went in. On Sunday I went to Sunday School, and taking part with them was afterwards asked to make a statement of my faith, and after my trial and some questions as to whether I believed in Jesus Christ and Holy Ghost religion, &c., I was invited to occupy the stand at three o'clock p. m., which I did to a full house. After another examination I was told I could use the house upon the first and third Sundays and made appointments for the first after Sunday School. During the time intervening I will return to Mud Lick neighborhood, though about one and a half miles further west. I have preached every night since I reached Kentucky, except on Sunday night; having preached twice through the day, and one other night when it rained. Many are very near the kingdom; good, kind, generous, intelligent and well-to-do. I start for my home on Monday; my wife being sick and having sent for me. I will return again as soon as I can. There is more work here than I can do, and if Bro. Gillen could come or send some one to assist me awhile, I believe a strong branch could be built up, with shepherds to guide the flock.

Yours, in gospel bonds,

J. L. GOODRICH.

PERE CHENEY, Mich., Jun 25th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I came to this place the 13th inst., since which I have labored hard night and day for the establishment of the gospel. The fulness of the gospel taught by the Saints is entirely new here. After preaching about fifteen times here I attended prayer meeting last Thursday evening with the Methodist people. We all took part and everything was quiet and peaceful. At the close of the meeting the preacher got a little excited and said we were all bad and impure from starting to ending; and that I was breaking up his class, &c. He also said the first two evenings he heard me speak he could not sleep good, and that his nerves were all unstrung. I told him I was sorry, and hoped he would recover. We made three speeches each. The meeting closed about twelve. That evening he read a statement that he copied from the "Voice of Warning;" and he wanted to know what right Joe Smith had to correct parts in the Old and New Testament Scriptures. In answer, I told them that was a reasonable question and I would show them Joseph's reasons for doing so. And on Saturday evening I took up the subject. He came and we had a good attentive gathering. After I was through I invited him to speak, but he declined. So the good work rolls on. Every one seemed well pleased with Bro. Joseph's reasons for correcting portions of the Scriptures, and I never was more blessed in speaking on any subject than on Joseph's wonderful mission. The next day I baptized the telegraph operator and his excellent wife; the owner of the hotel and store and one young lady.

I have been here at the hotel about three weeks and have been very kindly cared for by the inmates, and am thankful. The interest is good. Sickness has prevented a number from attending meetings of late. I will leave for Bay City today; expect to return about the 20th of July and continue on the good work.

Yours in bonds,

E. DELONG.

WATERFORD, Ont., June 25th.

Bro. Joseph:—Since I last wrote you I have made hundreds of friends in this section of country. A temperance wave having passed over here, we were solicited by Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist preachers and their people to lecture in their churches throughout this township. To their solicitations I cheerfully complied. By this method we have lectured in numbers of churches, and got the ears, and won the respect of hundreds of people, who heretofore had been led to believe that we were some hydra-headed monster, whose aim and ambition were to wither every flower that grew in the garden of their religious faith. But now, thank heaven, the scene is changed, and the voices of kind friends in all these places are crying, "Come and preach to us." The voice of slander is seldom heard, and the cruel "Don't go to hear this wicked man," is buried, we hope never more to be resurrected.

We understand that Elder W. J. Smith has written to the Herald, giving an account of our debate here; therefore suffice it for me to say, I did the best I could to defend the truth I love as dear as life, and the Great Eternal stood by me; hence, the truth shone brilliantly, dazzling the eyes of our opponent until he suddenly passed away, and lo! he was not. We sought him, but he could not be found.

Elder Willard J. Smith has been with us since a few days before the debate. He is known to you and the church, hence it suffices me to say, he acted himself. His great store of knowledge was freely bestowed, and his counsel and advice proved him to be a brother indeed. He acted as moderator for me throughout the debate, and has since delivered four telling sermons that will long be remembered. He left me to-day for Cameron. He has left behind him naught but pleasant memories.

Bro. J. H. Lake arrived just in time to hear the opening speech of the debate, and occupied a place on the platform with several ministers of the town and vicinity. The amiableness of this great man has been presented to your readers in the past, hence needs no further comment from me. His genial smile and wise counsel gave the writer added strength during the conflict. He preached two good sermons while here, and on the 20th instant left for Cameron. May the sweet approbation of heaven ever shine upon him with all its radiant beams.

Poor Wilkinson tried to redeem himself in three lectures, delivered by him in the Methodist church, after the close of the debate. We fain would give you an epitome of his lectures, but out of respect for yourself and readers we forbear. He greeted his congregation each evening with the vilest kind of slander, calumny, innuendoes and vituperation, until they were entirely disgusted, then he left for home without one of his party going to the station to bid him adieu.

The weather is very warm here, but notwithstanding the intense heat, we have good congregations each evening. We look for an ingathering soon. Yours always,

R. C. EVANS.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., June 28th.

Mr. Joseph Smith, Dear Brother:—The work is done, and victory is won for the cause of the just and the good. One more step taken and gained toward redeeming the land for Zion. The prayers of the Saints are again realized—their efforts are crowned with victory and Satan has again been foiled; another great and favorite instrument of power has been wrested from his hands, for the dram shops of Independence must close and that forever.

Thank God for the united spirit of the Saints. Think of it, ye combinations of the whole world, whether of professed christianity, or otherwise. The branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Independence, Missouri, numbering six hundred strong, and not a vote known to be cast in favor of retaining the saloons in their midst, or granting license to any man to throw in the way of his fellow man temptations to lead them to evil doing.

What a victory for the land of Zion! Our brethren labored as only men labor when determined to succeed, and the sisters were with them in the front ranks, with the firm determination that the bulwarks of his Satanic majesty of the latter days must fall. Most of our boys and girls were as enthusiastic as the older ones and persisted in marching with their flags and banners in the parade on Tuesday notwithstanding it began to rain about one p.m. and continued until evening. Everything out doors was damp but the spirits of the local option people. One woman standing in the procession while the rain was drenching and the water running at her feet, with her skirts and shoes soiled from marching in the muddy streets and walks, said, (and I believe it an echo of many a one's thoughts), "Why is it that God allows such a state of weather just at this time?" I told her that if it interfered with the grand purposes of God that he would order it otherwise. She said she would try and think so.

All the churches united in the effort and they seemed thankful for our help. Bro. Luff was called to the stand several times during the campaign and his speeches were highly spoken of and had a good effect. Last evening at the jubilee meeting at which there were in attendance about 2,500 people Bro. Luff told them that in the future when occasion required, the people whom he represented were willing to assist in putting down every thing detrimental to the onward progress of Christianity or the promotion of happiness, and all Latter Day Saints said "Amen," in their hearts.

May God in every locality crown with victory the efforts of those who engage in a warfare against the ruinous evil that curses the choice land of His footstool. Our majority was two hundred.

Truly yours,

M. S. FRICK.

RAY, Ind., June 26th.

Bro. Joseph:—I am in good health and spirits and controlling all the controllable circumstances with reference to the best interests of things spiritual and temporal; so far as they relate to me individually. I have been detained here on account of being administrator of an Estate, to which I was appointed last September. At the time I had not the remotest idea of its duration beyond the last April term of Court, but it has dragged its slow length along till now and the end is not yet. The sale comes off July 7th, and I hope to be able to finish up the business soon thereafter. I am very anxious to get to my field of labor and have my mind abstracted from all else but the Master's cause. I do not intend hereafter to involve myself with temporal things at all, but keep myself in readiness to go wherever the Church pleases to send me on an hour's notice. I am laboring in the branch and working with my hands so that while I am not laboring in my appointed field I will not be a burden to any one. I will try to go to Ohio once more before I leave the country at the earnest solicitation of the hosts of friends that I have made there, (provided that the powers that be do not object). Patience, Bro. Gomer, I will come as soon as possible and help you, and with the Master's help work all the harder to make up for lost time.

Yours in hope,

B. V. SPRINGER.

DORCHESTER, Neb., June 25th.

Dear Herald:—During the present month I have been preaching the word as circumstances permitted, in Saline county. I find some interest manifested, but owing to the farming community being so busily employed it is hard to get as many out as we could wish. Have been preaching at this place since the 20th. Have small congregations, but did not expect large ones so am not disappointed. Sr. Coates, and also her father, Mr. Drew, have done all they could to make the meetings a success. When we were about to close our services, yesterday afternoon, a gentleman of venerable appearance arose and requested permission to ask a question. His request being granted he asked us concerning the authority by which we preached the gospel. We explained our position in regard to the authority as coming from God through Joseph Smith. He then asked us what branch of the Latter Day Saints' church we represented. Having answered him he thanked us courteously and took his seat. After service he approached us and said: "I used to be well acquainted with the Mormon faith. I was personally acquainted with Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Orson Hyde, and others, but that is the only sermon I have heard preached by a Latter Day Saint in forty years." I asked him if the gospel had the same sound that it had in those days. He said it had, and that was why he asked me in regard to the authority. He explained to us that he was a stranger in this part of the country visiting friends, and having heard that a Mormon was preaching in town he had come out to listen, not knowing what organization we represented. Sr. Coates invited him to go home with us so that we could have a talk. He accepted the invitation, and then informed us that his name was Aaron Roberts, and that he was baptized by Orson Hyde in the Delaware river in the year 1837 or 1838; that he was ordained an elder, and that after the death of Joseph he became lost in regard to the authority. He stated that he heard Sidney Rigdon say in Philadelphia that "any man that has been in the church three months and don't know that I am the legal head of the church ought not to be in the church." He said it all became dark to him and between the contending factions he became lost. He bore a strong testimony to the spiritual blessings enjoyed by the church in those early times, and expressed himself as being highly pleased at again hearing the gospel preached. He said he had always endeavored to keep the commandments of God, and that he hoped and expected to come forth with the church of the First-Born. In regard to his present condition he said he felt like a tool that had been left unused for a long time, and had become rusty and consequently could not be used like one that had been kept bright. He attended meeting last night and at the close bade us a very affectionate adieu, expressing himself as highly pleased with the privileges enjoyed during the day. The brother gave us his address, which is Hawkeye, Dixon county, Nebraska, and requested us to write to him, which we shall take an early opportunity of doing.

Ever striving for Zion's weal, your brother,
CHAS. H. PORTER.

"EARTHQUAKES, VOLCANOES AND VOLCANIC ERUPTIONS.

BY ELDER F. R. TUBE.

AGAIN, in the year 1819, in a most memorable earthquake in India, in the district of Kutch, (bordering on the river Indus), a tract of country more than fifty miles long by sixteen broad, (making 800 square miles), was suddenly raised ten feet above its former level. The raised portion still stands up above the unraised, like a long perpendicular wall, which is known among the natives by the name of "Ullah (or Allah) Bund."* And again, in 1538, in that convulsion which threw up the Monte Nuovo, † a cone of ashes 450 feet high, in a single night. The whole coast of Pozzuoli, near Naples, was raised at least 20 feet above its former level, and remains so permanently upheaved to this day. We could mention innumerable other instances of the same kind, ‡ but will describe some very remarkable instances at a later portion of our essay, when the present argument is concluded.

* Meaning "God's wall."

† Or "New Mountain."

This, then, is the manner in which the earthquake does its work; and it is always at work. Somewhere or other in the world, there is probably not a day, certainly not a month, without an earthquake.

In those districts of South and Central America, where the great chain of volcanic cones is situated,—Chimborazo, Cotopaxi, Popocateptl, and a long list with names unmentionable, or at least unpronounceable,—the inhabitants no more think of counting earthquakes than we do of counting showers of rain. Indeed, in some places along that coast, a shower is a greater rarity. Even in our own Island (of Britain), near Perth, (in Scotland), a year seldom passes without a shock, happily, within the records of history, never powerful enough to do any great mischief; for these, like the ones I have just alluded to, are mere baby earthquakes, so to speak. It is not everywhere that this process goes on by fits and starts. For instance, the northern gulfs of Europe and the borders of the Baltic Sea are steadily shallowing; and the whole mass of Scandinavia, including Norway, Sweden and Lapland, is rising out of the sea at the average rate of about two feet per century. But as this fact (which is perfectly well authenticated by reference to ancient high and low water marks), is not so evidently connected with the action of earthquakes. I shall not further allude to it just now. All I wish to show is, that there is a stupendous cycle of changes going on, in which the earthquake and volcano act a very conspicuous part, and that part a restorative and conservative one; in opposition to the steadily destructive and perpetually leveling action of the Oceanic waters.

How this can happen; what can be the origin of such an enormous power thus occasionally exerting itself, will no doubt appear exceedingly marvelous—little short, indeed, of miraculous intervention—but the mystery is, after all, not quite so great as it at first appears. We are permitted to look, though but a little way, into these great secrets of nature; not far enough, indeed, to elucidate every difficulty, but quite enough to fill us with admiration of Jehovah's wonderful system of counterbalances and compensations; that adjustment of causes and consequences, by which, throughout all nature, evils are made to work out their own cure; life to spring out of death; and renovation to tread in the footsteps and efface the vestiges of decay.

The key to the whole mystery is to be found in the central heat of the earth. This is no mere scientific dream, no theoretical notion or opinion, but a fact established, up to a certain point, by direct evidence; and standing out from plain facts as a matter of unavoidable conclusion in a hundred ways, some of which we have in a former portion of this essay communicated to your intelligent readers.

Owing, as before remarked, to the ceaseless action of the oceans upon the dry land, the latter is perpetually wearing down, and the materials being carried out to sea. The coat of heavier matter is thinning off towards the land, and thickening over all the bed of the sea. What, then, must happen? If a ship float even upon her keel, transfer weight from the starboard to the port side, will she continue to float even? No, certainly not. She will keel over to port. Many a good ship has gone to the bottom in this way.

If the continents be lightened, they will rise; if the bed of the ocean receive additional weight, it will sink. The bottom of the Pacific is sinking, in point of fact. Not that the Pacific Ocean is becoming deeper. This seems a paradox; but it is easily explained. The whole bed of the sea is in the act of being pressed down by the laying on of new solid substance over its bottom. The new bottom, then, is laid upon the old; and so the actual bed of the ocean remains at or nearly at the same distance from the surface water. But what becomes of the islands? They form part and parcel of the old bottom; and Dr. Darwin has shown, by the most curious and convincing proofs, that they are sinking, and have been sinking for ages, and are only kept above water—by what, think you? By the labors of the coral insects, which always build up to the surface!

It is impossible but that this increase of pressure in some places and of relief in others must be very unequal in their bearings. So that at some place or other this solid floating crust (of the earth) must be brought into a state of enormous strain, and if there be a weak or a soft part, a crack will at last take place. When this happens, down goes the land on the heavy side, and up on the light side. Now, this is exactly what took place in the great earthquake which raised the Ullah Bund in Kutch, (India), to which I alluded in a former part. I have told you of a great crack drawn across the country, not far from the coast-line; the inland country rose ten feet, but much of the sea-coast, and probably a large tract in the bed of the Indian Ocean, sank considerably below its former level. And, just as you see when a crack takes place in the ice, the water oozes up, so this kind of thing is always, or almost always, followed by an upburst of the subterranean matter, as is the case of earthquakes.

Now where, following out this idea, should we naturally expect to find that such cracks and outbreaks generally happen? Why of course along those lines where the relief of pressure on the land side is the greatest, and also its increase on the sea side; that is to say, along, or in the vicinity of the sea coasts, where the destruction of the land is going on with the greatest activity. Well, now, it is a remarkable fact in the world's history, that there is scarcely an instance of an active volcano at any great distance from the sea coast, as I before stated upon the authority of a most learned and erudite astronomer and geologist, Sir John Herschel, Suppose from this, or from any other cause, a crack takes place in the solid crust of the earth. Do not imagine that the melted matter below will simply ooze up quietly as water does under an ice crack. No such thing. There is an element in the case which we have not considered; steam and condensed gases. We all know what happens when a crack takes place in a high pressure steam-boiler, with what violence the contents escape, and what havoc takes place. Now, there is no doubt that among the minerals of the subterranean world, there is water in abundance, and sulphur, and bitumen, and many other vaporizable substances, all kept, subdued and repressed, by the enormous pressure. Let but this pressure be relieved, and forth they burst; and the nearer they approach the surface the more they expand, and the greater is the explosive force they acquire; till at length, after more or fewer preparatory shocks, each accompanied by a progressive weakening of the overlying strata, the surface finally breaks up, and forth rushes the imprisoned power, with all the awful violence and grandeur of a volcanic eruption.

Certainly a volcano does seem to be a very bad neighbor; and yet it affords a compensation in the extraordinary richness of the volcanic soil and the fertilizing quality of the ashes thrown out. The planks of Somma, (the exterior crater of Mt. Vesuvius), are covered with vineyards producing wonderful wine, and whoever has visited Naples, says Dr. Herschel will not fail to be astonished at the productiveness of the volcanized territory, as contrasted with the barrenness of the limestone rocks bordering on it. There you will behold the amazing sight, (as an English farmer would call it), of a triple crop growing at once on the same soil; a vineyard, an orchard, and a cornfield all in one. A magnificent wheat crop, five or six feet high, overhung with clustering grape-vines swinging from one apple or pear tree to another in the most luxuriant festoons. "When I visited Somma," (says the eminent geologist and astronomer above referred to), "to see the country where the celebrated wine, the 'Lacryma Christi,' is grown,—it was on the festival of the Madonna del Arco. Her church was crowded to suffocation with a hot and dusty assemblage of the peasantry. The fine impalpable volcanic dust, (from Vesuvius), was everywhere; in your eyes, in your ears, your mouth, begriming every pore; and there I witnessed what I shall never forget. Jammed in among the crowd, I felt something jostling my legs. Looking down, and the crowd making way, I beheld a long line of worshippers crawling on hands and knees from the door of the church to the altar, licking the dusty pavement all the way with their tongues, positively applied to the ground, and no mistake. No trifling dose of Lacryma would be required to wash down what they must have swallowed on that journey, and I have no doubt it was administered pretty copiously after the penance was over."

Now I come to consider the manner in which an earthquake is propagated from place to place; how it travels, in short. It runs along the earth precisely in the same manner, and subject to the same mechanical laws as a wave along the sea, or rather as the waves of sound run along the air, but quicker. The great earthquake which destroyed Lisbon ran out from thence as from a centre, in all directions, at a rate averaging about twenty miles per minute, as far as could be gathered from a comparison of the times of its occurrence at different places; but there is little doubt that it must have been retarded by having to traverse all sorts of ground; for a blow or a shock of any description is conveyed through the substance on which it is delivered with precisely the same rapidity as sound travels in that substance. Perhaps it may be new to many of your readers, that sound is conveyed by water, by iron, and indeed by everything and at a different rate for each. In air it travels at the rate of about 1,140 feet per second, (or about 13 miles in a minute). In water much faster, more than four times as fast, (4,700 feet). In iron ten times as fast; viz., 11,400 feet per second, or about 130 miles in a minute; so that a blow delivered endways at one end of an iron rod, 130 miles long would reach the other end after the lapse of only a moment. But the substance of the earth through which the shock is conveyed is not only far less elastic than iron, but it does not form a coherent connected body; it is full of interruption, cracks, loose materials and all these tend to deaden and retard the shock; and, putting together all the accounts of all the earthquakes that have been exactly observed, their rate of travel (or progression) may be taken to vary from as low as 12 or 13 miles a minute, to 70 or 80; but perhaps the low velocities arise from oblique waves.

The way, then, that we may conceive an earthquake to travel is this,—I shall take the case which is most common, when the motion of the ground to and fro is horizontal. How far each particular spot on the surface of the ground is actually pushed from its place there is no way of ascertaining, since all the surrounding objects receive the same impulse almost at the same instant of time; but there are indications that it is often several yards. In the earthquake of Kutch, to which allusion has already been made, trees were seen to flog the ground with their branches, which proves that their stems must have been suddenly jerked away for some considerable distance, and as suddenly pushed back; and the same conclusion follows from the sudden rise of the water of the lakes on the side where the shock reaches them, and its fall on the opposite side; the bed of the lake has been jerked away for a certain distance from under the water and pulled back.

Now, by way of illustration, suppose a row of sixty persons are standing a mile apart from each other, in a straight line in the direction in which an earthquake shock is travelling at a rate, we will suppose, of sixty miles per minute; and let the ground below the first person get a sudden and violent shove, carrying it a yard in the direction of the next person. Since this shock will not reach the next till after the lapse of one second of time, it is clear that the space between the two will be shortened by a yard, and the ground,—that is to say, not merely the loose soil on the surface but the whole mass of solid rock below, down to an unknown depth,—compressed or driven up into a smaller space. It is this compression that carries the shock forward. The elastic force of the rocky matter, like a coiled spring, acts both ways; it drives the first man back to his old place, and shoves the second a yard nearer the third; and so on.

Now, instead of men, place a row of tall buildings or marble columns, and they will tumble down in succession, the base flying forwards, and leaving the tops behind to drop on the ground on the side from which the shock came. This is just what was seen to happen in Messina during the great Calabrian earthquake. As the shock ran along the ground, the houses of the Faro were seen to topple down in succession, beginning at one end and running on to the other, just as if a succession of mines had been sprung. In the earthquake at Kutch a sentinel saw the long straight line of wall close to which he was standing, bow forward and recover itself; not all at once, but with a swell like a wave running all along it with immense rapidity.

In this case it is evident that the earthquake must have had its front oblique to the direction of the wall, (just as an obliquely held ruler runs along the edge of a paper while it advances like a wave of the sea, perpendicular to its own length). The late eminent and learned Dr. Herschel says: "In reference to extinct volcanoes, I may just mention, en passant, that any one who wishes to see some of the finest specimens in Europe may do so by making a couple of days railway travel* to Clermont, in the department of the Puy-du-Dome, in France. There he will find a magnificent series of volcanic cones, fields of ashes, streams of lavas, and basaltic terraces or platforms; proving the volcanic action to have been continued for countless ages before the present surface or crust of the earth was formed; and all so clear that 'he who runs may read' their lesson. There can be seen a configuration of surface quite resembling what our telescopes reveal to us in the most volcanic districts of the moon. Let not my readers be startled; half the moon's face is covered with unmistakable craters of extinct volcanoes; and one in particular, known to the Astronomers by the name of Aristarchus, has been distinctly noticed having a dense cloud of vaporized steam mingled with smoke resting upon its crest; proving that mountain, at least, to be in a condition of eruption even in our own times.

"Many of the lavas of Auvergne and of Puy-du-dome are basaltic; that is, consisting of columns placed close together; and some of the cones are quite complete, and covered with loose ashes and cinders, just as Vesuvius is at this present hour."

* I am now alluding merely to the journey from London, England.

In the study of these vast and awful phenomena, we are brought in contact with those immense and rugged powers of nature which seem to convey to the imagination the impress of brute force and lawless violence; but it is not so. Such an idea is not more derogatory to the supreme wisdom and benevolence that prevails throughout all the scheme of creation, than it is in itself erroneous. In their wildest paroxysms the rage of the volcano and the earthquake are subject to great and immutable laws; they feel the bridle and obey it. The volcano bellows forth its pent-up surplus of energy, and sinks into long and tranquil repose. The earthquake rolls away, and time, with its daughter, industry, shedding her balm over every wound, effaces its traces, and festoons its ruins with sweet and beautiful flowers. There is mighty and rough work to be accomplished, and it can not be done by gentle means. It seems no doubt terrible, awful, perhaps harsh, that twenty or thirty thousand lives should be swept away in a moment of time by such a sudden and unforeseen calamity; but we must remember that, sooner or later, every one of those lives must be called for, (except the Lord Christ should appear in the clouds first), and it is by no means the most sudden end that is the most afflictive. It is well, too, that we should contemplate occasionally, if it were only to teach us our utter helplessness, and weakness, the immense energies which are everywhere at work in maintaining the system of nature we see going on so smoothly and tranquilly around us; and of which these furious outbreaks are after all, but minute and for the moment unbalanced surpluses in the great account.

The energy requisite to overthrow a mountain is as a drop in the ocean compared with that which holds it in its place, and makes it a mountain. Chemistry informs us that the forces constantly in operation to maintain a single grain of water in its normal (habitual) state, when only partially and sparingly let loose in the form of electricity, would manifest themselves as a powerful flash of lightning.† And from optical science we learn that in even the smallest element of every material body, nay, even in what we call empty space, there are forces in perpetual action to which even such energies sink into positive insignificance. Yet amid all this, nature holds her even course, the flowers blossom, the animals enjoy their brief span of existence; and man has leisure to wonder and adore, secure of the ever watchful care which provides for his well-being at every instant that he is permitted to remain on earth.

Thus dear readers of the Herald, having arrived at the conclusion of the series of essays promised, it only remains for me to bid you farewell; and if in the present humble essay, or in any previous ones on Siderial Astronomy, on Planets, or on those still more mysterious celestial visitors to our solar system, the "Comets," there has been aught of interest, or wonder, or gratification in the perusal thereof, my highest aim will have been fulfilled my noblest end achieved. For my own part, I deeply regret that the essays have been hindered and delayed by a combination of circumstances of a fortuitous and most untoward character; nor can I divest myself of the heartfelt impression that nine-tenths of my readers could have accomplished the task I have thus humbly undertaken, in an infinitely more lucid and satisfactory manner.

Such as it is, however I trust we have not wandered thus together through the solemn and desolate traces of natures most rugged and awe-inspiring phases, dear reader, without either pleasure or profit.

For my own part, it has felt like a parting between myself and a dear and valued friend to lay down at last the wonderful treasures of learning and knowledge from which I have culled the vast majority of the facts and statistics contained in each essay.

Many thoughts have arisen, seeming to open up dim and shadowy, yet awful possibilities in the future, when nature overcharged and bursting with the augmented vials of the wrath of an offended Maker and Creator, shall overawe and terrify the wicked by such unlooked-for and unheard-of destructions and cataclysms, that the most terrific volcanic eruption, and the most devastating and devouring earthquake within the whole annals of recorded history shall be but as the gentle breeze of evening in comparison; or as the slightest touch wherewith the child in a heavy and fretful moment dashes down his toy house of cards to the ground.

These thoughts I have forborne to chronicle, lest the reader's patience should become exhausted in the perusal of them; but I will merely add, in conclusion, one reflection, (and one only), which has, so to speak, forced its presence upon my mind during the progress of the present brief and fragmentary sketch from beginning to end. The thought I allude to is this: Although many men of profound learning and of undoubted abilities labor arduously to delude themselves and their readers into a belief that volcanic and seismic disturbances are of purely natural origin, and in no manner whatever connected with the fiat of a (to them) imaginary being who regulates and controls the attributes and actions of nature, yet it is utterly impossible to divest the observant and thinking mind of the preponderating evidence tending to show most indubitably and incontrovertibly, that the most violent and terrific of earth's paroxysms are connected in a most marked manner with the awful presence and proximity of her all powerful Creator.

In pointing to various epochs in the world's existence signalized by the most awful and memorable eruptions on record in the Bible History; the reader will notice that in each case there is a sudden and portentous "drawing near" of one whom Milton designated, "The Almighty Power," and in each case the "drawing near" is for the sole and express purpose of expressing the divine wrath and fiery indignation upon the more than ordinarily iniquitous proceedings of the then living inhabitants of this planet.

Even the first recorded instance of divine visitation in judgment is pregnant with the deep import of this very hypothesis, for we learn that at an early period of human history, God "saw that the wickedness of man was great upon the earth; and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil, and that continually." (Gen. 6: 5). Then came the devastating ruin of the whole earth by water as recorded; true, but perhaps some will urge that in this case it was a destruction caused by the watery heavens rather than by any convulsion of the earth.

But we learn from Genesis 7: 11, that, "In the six hundredth year of Noah's life in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up; and the windows of heaven were opened."

Here the first and evidently most potent cause of that dire catastrophe is mentioned first; viz, that "all the fountains of the great deep were broken up." How? Doubtless by seismic and volcanic subterranean agency, as has unfortunately been the case many times since, though happily not attended by anything like such disastrous results.

Science indeed demonstrates that in the vast majority of volcanic eruptions or earthquakes of any magnitude, the "fountains of the great deep" are "broken up," and dry land becomes not infrequently the bed of a deep sea or ocean, while the former ocean bed is often elevated into, in some cases, a high mountain, while in others a new island is formed in the midst of the sea. Passing down the stream of sacred history, we alight upon two vast cities, memorable only for the wickedness and abomination of their inhabitants; to wit, Sodom and Gomorrah, upon whom after the miraculous removal of the few righteous among them (in Lot's family), the Lord "rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah fire and brimstone from the Lord out of heaven; and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground."—Gen. 19: 24, 25. The word "overthrew" especially as repeated several times in the same chapter, is strongly suggestive of powerful subterranean energy of seismic character. In fact the principal Geological explorers of these regions agree with wonderful unanimity in writing of the most undoubted proofs of ancient and wide-spread earthquake and volcanic agency there. Further down we arrive at the memorable episode in which, at Sinai, God's fearful presence was aptly symbolized and announced by the "thunders and lightnings, and thick cloud upon the mount and voice of the trumpet exceeding loud;" all of which phenomena, excepting the last, are highly compatible with the theory of puissant volcanic action, and prolonged seismic disturbance. The touching and graphic account of the occurrence by the sacred historian is highly suggestive of this hypothesis. (See Exodus, 19: 16-25).

Nor was the immediate presence of the Deity less obvious than the paroxysm of nature; for we learn that "when Moses spake, God answered him by the voice of the trumpet," and called him up to the summit of the dread mountain of Sinai.

The next instance of earth's mysterious sympathy in the purposes of her Creator, as testified by the upheaval of the earthquake, and the bursting forth of the volcano, is found in the eleventh chapter of the Book of Numbers; in the opening phrases of which we learn that the people "complained against the Lord, and the Lord heard it, and his anger was kindled, and the fire of the Lord burnt among them, and consumed even them that were in the uttermost part of the camp."

The next example of a similar character, is in the memorable and awful fate of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, and the whole of their company; for their presumption in aspiring to the leadership of the people of Israel, to the exclusion of the God-appointed leader (Moses), on account of his meek and retiring spirit.

The whole account testifies indubitably of earthquake, followed by fire:—"And it came to pass as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them. And the earth opened her mouth and swallowed them up and their houses and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods." (Gen. 16: 31, 32). "And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense." (Gen. 16: 35.)

But not to detain the reader with instances of a like character which will readily occur to his own mind, let me refer briefly to two of the most important events in which nature appears in harmony with nature's God. The first is that strange and awe inspiring transaction—the crucifixion of the Son of God; when the sun, as though blushing to behold so sad a scene covered his face with a mantle of the densest darkness "from the sixth hour even unto the ninth hour;" during the whole of which period (synchronizing with the duration of the crucifixion itself), the earth in both her Eastern and Western hemispheres (as we are assured by the book of Mormon, confirmed by the most accurate and conclusive scientific investigations), was rent and torn in throes of the most convulsive agony; "the earth quaked, the rocks rent, many cities were buried within the earthquake's mighty caverns; others sunk into the depths of the tempestuous ocean, other large cities were the victims of awful volcanic fires, and others burnt and destroyed without a solitary vestige left of form or architecture.

To readers so thoroughly versed in the Book of Mormon, I need hardly quote the eloquent and graphic description of these terrible cataclysms written by the prophet Nephi, in the fourth chapter of his book, and in the first, second and third paragraphs. (Book of Mormon, p. 437-8.)

There remains now but one event to notice in confirmation of the leading thought evolved from the present interesting subject; it is that event alluded to by the Apostle Peter, "when the earth and the works therein shall be burned up, and the elements, being dissolved, shall melt with fervent heat, and the heavens shall pass away with a great noise."—2 Peter 3: 10, 12.

John the Divine describes this wondrous event heralding the coming of the Lord Jesus, in the following impressive sentences: "And there were voices and thunders and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found."—Rev. 16: 18, 20.

Lastly, at the conclusion of the Millennial Rest,—for which the earth is so pathetically respresented in the "Revelation of Enoch," (D. C.) as longing and beseeching her Creator to hasten,—we find that Satan, being then, at the expiration of the thousand years Millennial rest, loosed out of his prison, will "gather together an innumerable host to besiege the camp of the Saints, and the beloved city—Zion—when fire will come down from God out of heaven and devour." Here, dear reader, at one of the most awful and important scenes of the future, we lay down both our subject and its analogy; not only because it is the last scene where the devouring and deadly element of fire—whether volcanic or otherwise—is introduced within the sacred pages, but because the utmost stretch of imagination would fail to depict one thousandth part of the awful grandeur of a scene in which a mighty, though fallen prince among angels, gathers untold legions to defy and destroy the camp of God's children, who, doubtless, remembering that he, Satan, has power to "call down fire from heaven in the sight of men," (Rev. 13: 13,) regard with the utmost apprehension and dismay, the elaborate preparations which Lucifer and his inveterate and diabolical hatred, to annihilate at once and forever the entire company of the Saints of God, and to overthrow that holy city endeared to them by a thousand years rest in the hallowed presence and intercommunion of God, their Father, their Savior and their friend. Suddenly, the awful silence is succeeded by the mighty roar and thunder of heaven's own artillery; while the blackness of the darkening sky becomes a blaze of fire and unsupportably glaring light; while the vast and fiery shafts of the thunderbolts of Jehovah's lightning-fire pours irremediable confusion and death into the gigantic hosts of the arch fiends, and the "opposers of the brethren," who at length find out, to their unutterable terror and dismay, that whether the Saints can fight for God or not, God can fight for his Saints, by lightning and by storm, by earthquake and by fire. Thus the scene closes, dear reader, upon the utter annihilation of Satan and all his hosts, by the last burst of either volcanic or electric fire; and introduces the tempest-tossed soul into the blissful regions of a "new heaven and a new earth," wholly undisturbed by the raging of a warlike and tumultuous human population; and forever free, doubtless, from those fiery and mysterious seismic eruptions and convulsions, in the contemplation of which I have humbly and, I trust, not unsuccessfully endeavored to please, to instruct and to interest the reader.

CATHOLICISM.—No. V.

BY ELDER M. T. SHORT.

"THERE are three titles which render the tenure of a prince honest and incontrovertible, namely, long possession, legitimate acquisition and a just use of the original grant confided to him. The Bishop of Rome possessed his temporalities by all these titles." As a temporal sovereign his rule and sway were of greater duration than any other monarchical house of Europe, or perhaps, the world; but it is a long lane indeed, that has neither turn nor end. Eleven hundred years and more of varying jurisdiction, of which papists hold, providence placed in his care, and lo! the good Victor Emmanuel wrested the last vestige of the ill gotten grant from the long dynasty, and behold! the full end has come. This reverting to the powers that be is called an "impious sacrilege," and an "unholy seizure," and a "royal outrage." "Our illustrious pontiff" is a "virtual prisoner," and hence "religion suffers," &c. "The sole end of the temporal power has been to secure for the Pope independence and freedom in the government of the church. The Holy Father must be either sovereign or a subject." "The Vicar of the Prince of Peace should possess one spot of territory which would be held inviolable." Roman logicians profess to believe that in seasons of universal strife and general combat and carnage, the dominion of the Vatican would be open to hear the voice of her world-wide membership, advise judicially, advert calamities, assuage grief, mitigate sorrow, prevent the desecration of home, and hinder the effusion of blood. They complain and lament that church rule should be under the sway and scepter of princes that are often ambitious, exacting and aggressive.

They advocate that the voice and vote of the Italians for annexation to the Piedmontese Government was a gigantic fraud, brought about through the suffrage of stragglers that fell in with the Italian army. "The Roman people, even had they so desired, had no right to transfer, by their suffrage, the patrimony of St. Peter to Victor Emmanuel."

Our author calumniate, and execrates the denizens of the sunny peninsula, the hotbed and home, the headquarters and official factory of the mother and mistress of churches, for simply growing weary of her yoke, and expressing their desire and determination to rule themselves, and plow the glebe without a spiritual lord at their elbow to wrest from them their hard earnings. The great chain cable has rusted for ages and gone down to dust and ashes under the corroding hand of time.

"Mother" may say of her doctrine it is "ever old and ever new;" but the above dogma was born in a degenerate time, trembled at the light of the great Reformation, waned under Napoleon Bonaparte, and died and was buried in A. D. 1870. In vain may the American oracle, the defender of the chair, maintain that Washington has no right to annex herself to Maryland without the advice, consent and concurrence of the nation, seek to make a parallel example, draw inferences and conclusions, enter solemn protests, belittle and berate and abominate his own church folks and loudly vociferate "thou shalt not steal" the contagion has done its work. "The eternal city" is not a great commercial metropolis, but "The centre of Christendom, the Queen of religion, the mistress of arts and sciences, the depository of sacred learning." The home of the Popes renders Rome conspicuous, swells the population and contributes to her material wealth; but, methinks, this is robbing Paul to pay Peter. The coffers of the church; the revenues of the chair; the pay of the Italian cardinals; the support of swarms of officials; the keeping of colleges, monasteries, monks, nuns, sisters, and numerous orders are from abroad; and it is high time this systematic robbery was abolished once and forever. I pit my wisdom and ideas of retributive justice against the successor of McCloskey who says, "Have not numbers of popes before Pius IX. been forcibly ejected from their sees, and have they not been reinstated in their temporal authority? What has happened so often before may and will happen again. For our part, we have every confidence that ere long the clouds that now overshadow the civil throne of the pope will be removed by the breath of a righteous God, and that his temporal power will be re-established on a more permanent basis than ever."

He expresses doubts, and well he may, for the temporalities, but seeks to solace himself and soothe the credulous and gullible "faithful," by supposing that civil power came from man but the "spiritual throne" is from Christ, the Lord; for "Thou art Peter and on this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." We think we have elsewhere shown the futility and groundless fallacy of the perverted interpretation of the quotation viewed in the light of many prophecies and pointed inspiration, the testimonies of authentic ecclesiastical historians, and the present condition of learning, morals and religion.

The fall and rise of the true church; or the universal apostasy, and the great restoration of the original gospel, are so self evident to one having access to the Holy Spirit that we assume the facts at this juncture. "The invocation of Saints," i. e., the long departed pious dead, is presented on the ground that Jacob prayed to an angel, and Dives, from hell, invoked Abraham, who was "detained in Limbo." This angel that good old Israel supplicated is the messenger of the covenant, the angel of the church, the Redeemer of the world, and not glorified humanity. The wicked man's petition changed not the condition of himself, or the fate of his five brethren on earth. Dead Saints, or angels are not to be adored, for Jesus is our sole and only mediator and intercessor. If John, the divine, while in the Spirit on the Lord's day, was not suffered to bow the knee to an inhabitant of heaven, what then shall we say to, and for the adorers of inferior beings, pictures, images, vestiges and relics? There is an infinite difference in praying for kings, rulers and all men, and praying to any, either living or dead; and my Catholic friends please mark the distinction well.

"The Catholic doctrine of the communion of Saints robs death of its terrors;" the denying of the which has "not only inflicted a deadly wound on the creed, but also severed the tenderest chords of the human heart."

This false claim, made tolerable, palatable and desirable with a touching appeal, appears as, and is only another type of Spiritualism, we verily believe. The argument is that Jesus in exile, and Paul in tribulation asked their friends to pray for them. You can request the pastor to pray for you, and the prayers of the righteous availeth much. "By invoking their intercession," i. e., the pious dead, is praying to them to pray for us, without any scriptural precedent, and in the face of the divine prohibition.

The sanctity, purity, holiness and blessedness of patriarchs, apostles, prophets, and prophetesses are lauded to the skies, all to form a stepping-stone for the honoring, venerating, reverencing and worshipping of "The Blessed Virgin Mary." "She is called a virgin in the Apostles' and the Nicene creed, and that epithet can not be restricted to the time of our Savior's birth, but must be referred to her whole life inasmuch as both creeds were compiled long after she had passed away."

"The canon of the mass, which is very probably of Apostolic antiquity, speaks of her as the 'glorious ever virgin.'" This most holy vessel, the receptacle of the Deity, the mother of God, he observes, should not be desecrated and profaned by human use, as she must remain chaste always. Here is a specimen of popish logic: "Jesus is called Mary's first-born Son, and does not a first-born always imply the subsequent birth of other children to the same mother? By no means; for the name of the first-born was given to the first son of every Jewish mother, whether other children followed or not. We find this epithet applied to Machir, for instance, who was the only son of Manasseh."

The reference is to Joshua 17:1, where the first-born son, Machir, is spoken of; but six more male children, to say nothing of female issue, are all likewise the sons of Manasseh, as shown in the very next verse. False and base propositions, hypothetical reasoning, musty and apostate tradition, Romish decretals, Jesuitical perfidy perverted Scripture; and a perpetual and heartless determination characterizes the history and doctrine of Holy Apostolic Catholic Church.

"We affirm that the second person of the blessed trinity, the word of God, who in his divine nature is from all eternity begotten of the Father, consubstantial with him, was in the fulness of time again begotten."

The Biblical phrase, "This day have I begotten thee," explodes this "all eternity begotten" invention, and the clear cut statement, "The only begotten of the Father," annihilates this mystical "again begotten" theory. Surely Mother's priesthood can make a better showing at the sacrifice of the mass where they get all the wine, than when interpreting God's sacred word and trying to preach the pure gospel of Christ. The formulated dogma of the immaculate conception of Mary is only a third of a century old, whereas the church that speaks ex cathedra, or officially to settle that point, claims to have existed more than fifty times that epoch.

Unlike the rest of the children of Adam, the soul of Mary was never subject to sin, even in the first moment of its infusion into the body. She alone was exempt from the original taint."

"The liturgies of the church being the established formularies of her public worship, are among the most authoritative documents that can be adduced in favor of any religious practice."

Original sin, and ancestral taint were atoned for and taken entirely away by, in, and through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. My Bible says: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin;" "Where no law is there is no transgression;" "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth the law," "for sin is the transgression of the law." "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" "Marrige is honorable and the bed is undefiled;" "Be fruitful and multiply;" "They shall be saved in childbearing."

To speak, or write about "the first moment of its infusion into the body" is neither witty nor wise. It is not a fair article of nonsense, and were it not for the religious garb thrown around such statements they would be branded as downright vulgarity. The traditions of a heretical eldership, and the "liturgies" of a polluted priesthood have wrought sad havoc and utter ruin from remotest antiquity, as also in modern times. One evil, like a dethroned demon, is not content to abide alone. St. John, the holy apostle, beheld "three unclean spirits," and Mother generates accompaniments as follows, viz: "The three prerogatives of Mary are her divine maternity, her perpetual virginity, and her immaculate conception." God's nature and power are divine. Mortals can but partake of it. If Mary was divine her first born was not the Son of Man, and no ransom was found to exalt poor fallen man. The handmaiden of "low estate" was "saved in childbearing," for she gave birth to at least four additional sons, and several daughters, but the theologians of the Latin rite try to faintly say, we suppose perhaps, these children are the offspring of Joseph and Mary Cleopas. The reputed father, and the legitimate mother of God's dear son were duly married, and the fiat of Jehovah is, "What the Lord hath joined together let not man tear asunder." Should either of the contracting parties break the sacred band by adultery, the union is null and void, and thereby once and forever dissolved. Worshipful Rome have defied Joseph ages ago; and long since canonized him as a patron Saint. We bless "the mother of my Lord," but the papacy have "worshipped and served the creatures more than the creator."

"Devoted children wear the relics of the ever Blessed Virgin" just about as much as I wear the cast off clothing of the "man in the moon." "Her image is photographed on the camera obscura of the brain, and reproduced in art galleries of the Holy See. This clairvoyant institution, by some legerdemain process, have unearthed, and brought to light, "Her natal day."

"Mother's" doctrine is "that the apostles had the whole deposit of the word of God;" and new and continued revelation they stoutly deny. "Other days of the year sacred to her memory are appropriately commemorated by processions, by participation in the banquet of the eucharist, and by sermons enlarging on her virtues and prerogatives." They call her "Queen of angels and Saints." "Mary's sanctity surpasses that of all other mortals." Why was she not translated then? answer echoes back, O why! Holmes, Wordsworth, Poe, and Longfellow can not speak her praise in verse, or rythm forth her motherly devotion, stainless purity, and tender love, but what it is made to do service for something approximating veneration, devotion and divine homage. St. Ambrose does not deal in the poet's fancy, or the license peculiar to the lyre, but, troth, the studied sentences and the rounded periods, when penning the biography of Mary. His panegyric is too lengthy to be reproduced, and too speculative to be interesting or amusing. Christ is "the express image of his Father;" but where is the original, from which to obtain duplicates? "The veneration" of this spurious trumpery "is a cherished devotion;" but "Christian images should not be confounded with Pagan idols." The iconoclasts have worked, more or less hitherto, and now the stone kingdom is rolling steadily along. The gifted apostle to the Gentiles, who had an "abundance of the revelations," and was taught the undefiled gospel only "by the revelation of Jesus Christ;" and declared in words of truth, and soberness, authority and power; "Though we, or an angel preach any other . . . let him be accursed." He admonishes and enjoins the "comparing of spiritual things with spiritual." He observes,—"We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." "For we walk by faith and by sight." Rome says, "Religious paintings are the catechisms for the ignorant;" the "silent, though eloquent profession of our faith." "Silent though eloquent!" "sacred pictures" and "portraits of Saints" are had to honor, to imitate, and "tell it not in Gath," "to invoke." Mr. Gibbons very justly denounces obscene representations.

He refers to the prevailing pride in regard to the likeness of heroes, statesmen, patriots and benefactors in a plea for "the sacred symbols of salvation." He desires "all Christians" to join in this veneration, and worship at the same altar. Christians and Christianity are good enough and cover the entire ground, without joining in any new departure, or hunting a strange and unique place to bow in devotion. The dignified prelate concludes his chapter on "sacred images" by observing, "I am happy to acknowledge that the outcry formerly raised against images has almost subsided of late. The epithet of idolater is seldom applied to us now. Even some of our dissenting brethren are already beginning to recognize the utility of religious symbols, and to regret that we have been permitted, by the intemperate zeal of the reformers, to have so long the monopoly of them. Crosses already surmount some of the Protestaut churches, and replace the weather-cock."

Catholics have an unending hell for incorrigible sinners, and depraved wretches, a heaven of beatific delight for the good and the pure, and purgatory for the intermediates. The praying for the dead is more sensible than invoking the departed, but neither practice has any warrant in holy writ. My author quotes from the apochryphal Maccabees, refers to the concurrent belief of ancient heretics, and draws much from the traditions of the fathers. The reclaimer of the "separated brethren" should not rail "they impiously threw overboard the books of Maccabees, like a man who assassinates a hostile witness," When the Hebrew people, who were the originators of the above, never proclaimed them canonical or divine. Neither did his church impose them till the holy council of Trent, and that, too, after the Reformation was on foot. "The canonicity of the Holy Scriptures rests solely on the authority of the Catholic Church, which proclaims them inspired." "Judah is my lawgiver," saith God, but lo and behold! nothing is genuine from Adam till "holy church" says it is correct.

Persons in Limbo can not help themselves out, hence relatives, friends and the priest pray for the repose of their souls, and their sure and speedy, full and complete release.

While Mr. G. boasts of religious liberty, as tolerated and enjoined by the mother and mistress of all Gentile churches, he talks glibly of "right conscience," and "a form of religion most in accordance with his duties to God." "The Catholic Church has always been the zealous promoter of religious and civil liberty." Again, "The ruler may enter into a compact which must absolutely be observed in every point." "American patriots without number the church has nursed in her bosom; a traitor never;" says the friendly pen, the national hue and cry of "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion" to the contrary, we suppose. He acknowledges that Catholic countries have civil sway, and obtain their revenues by a direct tax. He proclaims fealty, loyalty and homage to this government; and declares it to be the best of any on all the footstool of God. Political and ecclesiastical freedom have risen to a higher degree of perfection then, according to his own admission and logic, without "the defender of the people's rights" "against the encroachments of temporal sovereigns," than where these priestly gyves, these "defenders of civil and religious liberty" had a "finger in the political pie." "The common father of Christendom," "His Holiness," the "Venerable Pontiff" has closed, or opened ports at will, when he could; granted letters of marque, levied men and means under the banner of the cross, or held forth the olive branch of peace; but these freaks and fancies ceased with the fall and reversion of his temporalities. It is a damaging admission to own up that the United States of America is the champion of civil and religious liberty, whereas Catholic states, and countries under the shadow and spirit of the Vatican are a round century behind the wheel of progress. He reasons that it would be unjust and odious for this government to forbid "ecclesiastical authorities to remove or appoint clergymen without permission of the civil powers;" forgetting, perhaps, that such has been, is and will ever be where church and state are not united, and more so as the civil rule gains in the ascendancy.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Conference convened in the Saints' chapel, Stockton, California, March 23d, 1888, at ten a. m. The morning session was devoted to prayer and testimony. At two p. m., opened for business, J. H. Parr president of district in the chair. On suggestion of the president Elder H. P. Brown was chosen to preside. Minutes of last session read and approved. Reports of branches:—San Francisco 58; Sacramento 127; 1 removed; Eureka 21; Oakland 97; 3 died, 2 removed, 5 baptized, 10 received by letter, 2 married; Lower Lake 24; Stockton 64; 1 died, 1 removed by letter. District treasurer's report was read and accepted, as follows:—Cash last report $8.35, received since $1.00, paid to D. J. Philips $1.50, balance $7.85. Elders reports:—H. C. Smith, president of mission, G. S. Lincoln, C. A. Parkin and W. Potter (all by letter), J. H. Parr, Thomas Daley (baptized 9), A. Haws, G. W. Harlow, S. B. Robinson (baptized 1), J. Nightingale, H. P. Brown, C. W. Hawkins. Priests reports:—John Blake, Jsrael Davis, J. A. Stromberg. Teachers:—P. S. Cross reported. Bishop's agent's report:—Balance last report $331.47; received tithes $270.05, offerings 21.35, paid to poor $148.50, to missionaries 176.00, balance $298.37. On motion report received. H. P. Brown was elected president of the district for six months, G. S. Lincoln secretary, Leslie M. Darrow assistant secretary, and W. Hart treasurer. All the church authorities were sustained. Thomas Jollie was ordained a priest, and Leslie M. Darrow a teacher. Moved and adopted that we sustain the officers of this district with our faith, prayers, and means. A resolution was offered to send delegates to General Conference, but was tabled. A committee of six was appointed to consider the resolution. They reported that "we can do nothing in the way of delegates at present." The elders and priests were requested to labor in their respective localities as much as possible, subject to their branches and the president of the district. The following resolutions were adopted:—"Whereas, the Expositor has been and is now doing a good and noble work in defending the cause of Christ and his church, and Whereas, we should deeply regret its suppression, therefore be it Resolved, that we heartily endorse the Expositor and hereby urge upon the Saints everywhere the necessity of sustaining the same by their good wishes, prayers and means, and recommend that as far as possible the Saints subscribe and donate for its support, liberally, so that it may be placed before the public wherever our elders are called to labor." "Resolved, that we thank the editor of the Expositor for past labors in continuing the little defender of our faith, and pray for his success." Preaching during the session by H. P. Brown and J. H. Parr. Prayer meeting each morning at nine o'clock. Adjourned to meet at Sacramento, Friday, October 19th, at ten a. m.

BIRMINGHAM.

Birmingham district conference was held at the Saints' meeting room, 14 Temple Row, Birmingham, England, April 21st and 22d, C. H. Caton, presiding, Geo. S. Greenwood secretary. It was resolved that Elder Thos. Taylor be appointed vice president of the conference. The conference having been postponed for three weeks, the president asked if any objections were offered to said postponement. It was resolved that the action of the district authorities in postponing the conference be endorsed. The minutes of last conference were read, confirmed and, and ordered signed. The names of delegates to conference were read as follows: Birmingham, Temple Row branch, J. E. Meredith; Hanley branch, Henry Tabbiner; Stafford branch, James Richards; Clay Cross branch, none; Birmingham, Sommerfield branch, Charles Tyler; Burton-on-Trent branch, W. H. Saunders; Nottingham branch, none. The president then addressed the conference in an able manner on the duties of the brethren and the demands of the work. The financial report showed receipts £2, 3s, 4d; expended £1, 9s, 2d; balance 14s, 2d. An auditing committee was then appointed who reported it correct and it was adopted. Branch reports: Birmingham, Temple Row, 100, 2 baptized, 2 deaths. Hanley, 47, 2 deaths. Stafford, 19, 1 baptized. Clay Cross, 7, 1 baptized, 1 expelled. Burton-on-Trent, 16, no change. Summerfield 24, 1 removed. Nottingham, no report. A suspension of the rules was had to admit of new business, i. e., a recommendation for ordination from the Hanley branch. The recommendation was then considered when it was resolved that the request of the Hanley branch be granted, and that Bro. Thomas Travers be ordained to the office of deacon. Resolved that Elder G. S. Greenwood be appointed delegate from the Birmingham district to the English Mission conference. Reports of ministry of district. Elders' reports by letter: J. Hill, J. D. Davies, W. Potts, W. Shepherd and S. Holmes. In person, Thomas Taylor, G. S. Greenwood, J. R. Greenwood, E. A. Webb, J. Matthews, C. H. Caton. Priests' reports: J. Dyche, J. Healey, W. Ecclestone. In person, John Kirtland, J. E. Meredith and A. Crump. Teachers' reports: W. H. Saunders, James Brown, Henry Tabbiner, James Richards, T. Anderton, Chas. Walton. Deacons' reports: G. Ecclestone. In person, E. Matthews, Henry Tyler, and F. Edwards. Bro. Sylvester also spoke by request of the president. Resolved that this conference acknowledge the ordination of Bro. Simon Holmes, by the Clay Cross branch; but that they be informed of our usual order in reference to ordinations, namely, that they be presented to district conference before any ordination takes place. The following was also adopted: Whereas, Elders J. Siville and C. Tyler, not having reported to this conference through sickness and infirmity; therefore, be it resolved that their licenses be endorsed. Resolved that the licenses sent in to this conference be endorsed according to the rules of the district. It was resolved that the matter of endorsing the Nottingham brethren's licenses be left in the hands of the district authorities for enquiry, and if such enquiry be deemed satisfactory that they be empowered to endorse them. The same to also apply to Bro. C. Hickling Burton branch. The question of altering the resolution of last conference touching endorsement of licenses, was then taken up and discussed, when it was resolved that the following be added to the resolution of last conference, held at Hanly, September 4th, 1887: "Unless good reason be had for there being no report, such reason being given to the authorities of the district, that the authorities be empowered to retain such license until explanation be had." The district president was requested to write Bro. W. Ecclestone in reference to his report, wherein he charges a past conference with unfair dealing in not sustaining a recommendation from Nottingham branch that William Ecclestone be ordained an elder. The president promised to write him on the subject. Resolved that we do sustain by our faith and prayers the authorities of the church in America. Resolved that we sustain the authorities of the English Mission. Resolved that we sustain the authorities of the Birmingham district in all righteousness. Resolved that we do give a hearty vote of thanks to the brethren and sisters of Birmingham Temple Row branch for their kindness to those visiting this conference. Meetings: Saturday 3 p. m. preaching by Elder C. H. Caton. Sunday 3 p. m., prayer meeting in which the Holy Spirit was greatly enjoyed to the comfort of the Saints. Preaching at 6:30 p. m. by Elders J. R. and George S. Greenwood. Adjourned to meet at Stafford branch, September 1st and 2d, 1888. Thus closed a grand and peaceful conference.

KENT AND ELGIN.

Conference of the above district was held in the Lindsley chapel, June 9th and 10th, Arthur Leverton president, Richard Coburn clerk. Branch reports: Baddertown 17, 1 baptized, 5 removed by letter, 1 expelled, 1 died. Petrolia 33, 1 received, 1 removed. Tilbury 26, 3 baptized. Lindsley 37, 1 received, 1 removed, 1 died. Chatham 59, no changes. Blenheim 37, 1 received. Bishop's Agent, R. Coburn, reported as follows: Balance on hand last report $32.77; received since $446.06; expended $267.37; balance June 8th, 1888, $211.44. The Bishop's Agent's book was audited, and the report examined by C. W. Sifton, George Green and George F. Green. Found correct and adopted. Reports: Elders Arthur Leverton (baptized 6), Asa Vickery, Norman L. Blakely, Archibald McKenzie, and R. Coburn. Priests: Geo. H. Graves, Manuel Eaton, Edward Carlton, John Taylor, C. W. Sifton, Peter McBrayne, also teacher Phelan Shaw. The president stated that the Saints of the Wellington branch did not want their branch disorganized. "Resolved, That the Howard branch be disorganized, as the members have moved away, and that the district authorities grant the members letters of removal when called on to do so." "That Sr. Dum be granted another letter of removal, she having lost the first one." By separate motions Arthur Leverton was sustained as president of the district, J. A. McIntosh appointed vice president, and R. Coburn clerk, and Bishop's Agent. "Resolved, That any member leaving this district, going across the lines into the United States, or elsewhere, and leaving debts behind them, shall not receive a letter of removal until they make restitution to the party or parties aggrieved." [Conference sustained the president in silencing Bro. Thomas Badder for causes assigned, and ordered that all officers in the district who should do likewise be also silenced.—Ed.] A collection was taken to meet the expenses of the district secretary, amounting to $1.90. After arranging the meetings for to-morrow the conference adjourned till 7:30 p. m. Preaching in the evening by Arthur Leverton. Sunday morning the Saints met for prayer and testimony during which a good time was enjoyed. They were warned, through gifts of the gospel, to live faithfully. At ten o'clock the sacrament was administered. At 10:30 preaching by R. Coburn, assisted by N. L. Blakely. At 2:30 p. m. preaching by Arthur Leverton; and in the evening, preaching by G. H. Graves. A vote of thanks was tendered the Saints and friends for their hospitality in sustaining the conference. Adjourned to meet in the Zone branch, October 13th and 14th, 1888,

FAR WEST.

Conference convened with the Pleasant Grove branch Saturday and Sunday, May 26th, and 27th. President Kinneman being absent, Bro. Joseph R. Lambert was called to preside; Chas. P. Faul, clerk. Bro. Lambert made some appropriate remarks in regard to reporting our labors to the conference and our duties as ministers of Christ's Church. J. F. McDowell, A. W. Head and Chas. Duncan were appointed a committee on credentials. Branch reports were read from De Kalb, Kingston, Edgerton Junction, Pleasant Grove, Stewartsville and Stewartville (German) branch. Elders reports:—Joseph R. Lambert, Temme Hinderks, Wm. Summerfield, J. D. Flanders, L. L. Babbitt, (baptized 1, confirmed 2), James Wood, A. J. Seeley, J. M. Terry, J. F. McDowell and Wm. Lewis. Priests:—A. W. Head, (baptized 5), Fredrick Uphoff, Peter Peterson, D. R. Baldwin, John Peterson, Chas. P. Faul and Chas. Duncan. Teachers:—Thomas Mauzey, James Limb and Thomas McKee. Deacon Chas. Householder also reported. Bishops Agent Wm. Lewis reports for six months: Total receipts $418.19, expended $509.55, balance due agent $91.36. Brethren J. M. Terry, Temme Hinderks, and Charles Duncan were appointed to audit the books. They made examination, reporting the account to be correct and the report was accepted. The following resolution was adopted:—"In as much as the quorums of the Twelve and Seventy in conjoint council advised that, no minister of the church be recommended for missionary labor that is addicted to the use of tobacco or intoxicants, therefore, be it enacted as the sense of this body that, we as representatives and members of the Far West district, do hereby endorse the action of the General Conference in its reception and approval of the aforementioned recommendations. That we believe that all local ministers and members of this district should abide by the same as pleasing unto God." The following officers were chosen for three months: Wm. Lewis, president; Wm. Summerfield, vice president; Charles P. Faul, secretary. Wm. Lewis was sustained as bishop's agent. Moved that the president appoint two days meetings and appoint speakers for the same. Carried. Bro. Joseph R. Lambert preached Sunday at 11 a. m., and J. F. McDowell at 8 p. m. Social meeting at 2:30 p. m. Adjourned to meet with the Kingston branch at 2, p. m., Saturday, August 25th.

MONTANA.

Conference met at Reese Creek, Montana, Saturday, June 2d, at 10 o'clock a. m. Bro. R. J. Anthony was chosen to preside, and Wm. Nelson clerk. The feasibility of reorganizing the district was then considered and favored by all present. It was moved and seconded that we proceed to organize a district that shall comprise the Territory of Montana, and be known as the Montana district. Carried. Moved and seconded that Gomer Reese act as president of the district. Carried. Wm. Nelson was chosen secretary of the district. The authorities of the church were sustained by a unanimous vote. John E. Reese was sustained as bishop's agent for Montana. R. J. Anthony was sustained as president of the Rocky Mountain mission, and J. C. Clapp, and Gomer Reese as missionaries in Montana. Conference adjourned, the Saints feeling well repaid for their coming together. Time and place of holding next conference to be announced by the president. Officials present:—2 seventies, 4 elders, 4 priests, 1 teacher, and 1 deacon. Preaching Saturday evening by J. C. Clapp; Sunday morning prayer meeting. Preaching at 2:30 p. m. by J. C. Clapp, and at 7:30 p. m. by R. J. Anthony.

NOTICE.

During the last General Conference two groups were Photographed: one of the "Twelve," and one of the "Seventy." Learning that quite a number of the Saints want these Pictures, we will furnish them as follows: They are 5x8, but mounted on 8x10 cards. On plain white cards, 30 cts each; on gilt edge cream or maroon cards, 50 cts. Any number post paid. Address orders to WELLS, BROS., Box 92, Bozeman, Montana Territory.

Miscellaneous.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Southern Nebraska district conference will be held in Bro. James Ferguson's grove, three miles north of McCaig's Grove, (as we could not get McCaig's Grove), July 20th. Those wishing to camp will find everything in good order. Plenty of water and fuel.

J. W. HOLENBECK,
Clerk of Platt River Branch.

NOTICES.

I do hereby appoint Bro. Robert Oehring in charge of the Dakota division of my missionary field, and desire all to aid him in every legitimate way, that he may be able to prosecute the gospel work in that part of the Lord's vineyard, and gather a goodly harvest, that he with us and all Saints may rejoice in the golden reward of bountiful fruitage in the Lord. Onward and upward, be our motto in Jesus name; amen.

ALEXANDER HALE SMITH.

FIFTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Dear Brethren:—The fifth year of our existence as an organized body, one of the several organizations comprising the church, is fleeting by. Some progress has been made by us, but have we made what we could?

Considering all things appertaining thereto, we may and evidently do compare favorably to the four Quorums who preceded us in organization and who are therefore in advantage in several ways. Can we say that in so comparing we have answered the end of our existence thus far?

Have you ever noticed that about two-thirds of the members of these several quorums are heard from by way of reports?

That being the case what part of quorums are we in results. What benefit are these silent ones to their quorums, or the quorum to them?

If the Lord designed to reach certain ends by quorum organization, are not those ends being defeated by that percentage who are not heard from?

Shall those who move on and do their part be fettered by one-third of their number being silent? Or would it be better, after a fair effort to rouse the sleepers, to fill their places with others? Do you remember that, of the first enrollment, because they could not be heard from, a number were dropped from the quorum by an act of limitation of time extended to such?

By what law, human or divine, does one hold a position the responsibilities of which he does not perform?

It may be urged that labor is done even if not reported. How does the quorum know of it?

To know what is done is the first important factor of quorum organization as also the basis of its existence. Is it not?

Have you lost or forgotten your printed "Circular Letter" with its requirements?

Have you ever thought that it will be re-published soon? The live names and workers appearing in the new, and possibly the others appearing in the Herald as expiring by limitation, because of delinquency?

Sleepers now please wake up! and help us instead of compelling us to perform an unpleasant duty. Do what you can in the circumstances you are placed and in the station you are called upon to fill. Then without fear or shame, at reporting time, let us know what you have done and the future prospects.

The widow was not, nor had she cause to be ashamed of her mite, neither need you now, or at the judgment day be ashamed of the amount done if all opportunities have been improved and the work well done.

The following named brethren, Samuel Orton, V. D. Baggerly, John G. Smith, Albert Haws, B. A. Atwell, Wm. Sparling, Samuel Brown, Thomas Warrall, and Abner Lloyd were added to the quorum at the late conference. A license and circular has been sent to each of them by the secretary. If they have failed to reach any of them, they are requested to so inform Bro.

Loar and be supplied; also any others who have not carefully saved their circular letter.

The kindly offer of Bro. F. R. Tubb of a number of choice books as a nucleus for a library was accepted and the necessary provision will be made. If any others have books to donate let us hear from you.

This would have appeared earlier but we knew the Herald was crowded. Those reporting, so far, are doing well. The blank reports are developing order and we are cheered. Asking you to join us in an effort for thorough work in the remaining time of the year; calling your attention anew to the circular letter and its requirements, and fully expecting you to fulfill what is there asked of you and suggesting progress and ultimate victory as our motto, we are in bonds,

Your brethren,

DIED.

SMITH.—At Clear Lake, Indiana, June 14th, 1888, Edmund Ellsworth, second son of brother and sister George A and Nancy Smith; aged 12 years, 3 months and 7 days. Funeral services in presence of a large concourse of sympathizing Saints and friends.

There is no death. An angel from above Walks o'er the earth with silent tread,—
He bears our best loved ones away,
And then, we call them dead.

FOREMAN.—At Salt Lake City, Utah, May 9th, 1888, of paralysis, sister Margaret Jane, wife of Joseph Foreman; aged 68 years and 8 months.

"Farewell, dear mother, sweet thy rest;
Freed from all care, or pain;
Farewell, till in some happy place
We shall behold thy face again.
'Tis ours, to miss thee all our years,
And tender memories of thee keep;
Thine, in the Lord to rest, for so
'He giveth his beloved sleep."

SCOTT.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, on the morning of June 28th, 1888, of disease of the spine, Stephen C., child of Mr. Allen E. and Sr. Deborah Scott, aged 3 years, 5 months and 28 days. During the last two years he had periodical convulsions, from which he suffered much, until the final one caused the spirit to take its flight to the place of rest. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder H. A. Stebbins.

PEARCE.—At Little Compton, Rhode Island, June 15th, 1888, suddenly, Cynthia, beloved wife of Bro. Joseph Pearce; born at Little Compton, February 2d, 1840. Funeral services conducted by Elders C. A. Coombs and M. H. Bond. A large assembly testified by their presence and sympathy to the universal esteem in which our sister was held by the community in which she was born, and lived.

WIXOM.—At Dennisport, Massachusetts, June 23d, 1888, after a protracted sickness, Sr. Reliance Wixom, aged 68 years, 3 months, and 9 days. Funeral services by Elder John Smith. A large number of neighbors came together to take a last look of her whom they loved in life. She died with the consciousness of the better resurrection.

HOXIE.—At Boston, Massachusetts, June 12th, 1888, Maud Alena, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Albert Hoxie, aged 11 years, 1 month and 10 days. Death entering this home for the first time has taken away a choice treasure—a beautiful and most affectionate child. Funeral services conducted by Elders E. N. Webster and M. H. Bond.

ASTMAN.—At Omaha, Nebraska, June 20th, 1888, of old age, sister Ann Astman. She was born at Glostershire, England, February 10th, 1807; came to this country in 1862; became identified with the Church of Jesus Christ in 1848, and lived a consistent member until death removed her to a better world. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. "She rests in peace." Funeral services at the Saints' Chapel, Omaha, conducted by Elder H. C. Bronson.

JONES.—Sister Elizabeth H. Jones, daughter of brother and sister William Richards of Malad, Idaho, departed this life December 6th, 1887.

She was born February 27th, 1862, and was baptized June 18th, 1882, by Elder R. J. Anthony. She leaves a husband, two children, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn her death. She suffered long and greatly, but throughout her protracted illness she possessed her soul in peace and passed away in the triumphs of the faith. As the end drew near, strength was given, and in the sweetest strains she sang the joyful songs of Zion, and thus she passed away and entered into rest. Funeral service by Elder John Lewis.

COMPENSATION KEEPS COMING.

THE letters below explain themselves, and will be read with gladness by those who love the truth and the right.

"Truth, crushed to earth, will rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers."

The world has been filled with vile slanders against Joseph the Seer and his fellow ministers. The pulpit, the press and the platform have teemed with them till the timid, the gullible, the uninformed and unreasoning classes have been led to believe that Joseph Smith from the first was the very personification of craft and vice and villainy. But, in the providences of God, truth is springing up in various quarters among those who know the facts of which they testify, and the reputation of Joseph and his fellows is being nobly vindicated and their traducers put to merited shame.

The Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the authentic church history from 1827 to 1844, reveal the manner of man that Joseph was and prove him to have been one of the greatest and best of men, and we are gratified that the testimony of such men as Judge Bissell, and Esquire Burwell confirms that fact, and that such testimony is rapidly accumulating. Here are the letters:

SENECA, Illinois,

June 20th, 1888.

Brother Blair: I fell into a conversation here with Esquire Burwell, and he was very talkative about the church and the martyred prophed. I asked him if he knew him, and he said he did, well. So, he not being a member of any church, that I knew of, I asked him if he would give me a written statement of what he knew of him, and you will find in his statement I send you what he has to say. I think it is good, and will be good for some of our brothers and sisters to read.

Yours in Christ,

JOHN WALTERS.

SENECA, LaSalle County, Illinois,

June 20th, 1888.

To all Whom it May Concern: I, Samuel Burwell, eighty-two years of age, being of sound mind and memory, make the following statement in behalf of truth, to-wit, that about the years of 1833 and 1834, I lived near the village of Kirtland, Ohio. At that time it was the residence of Joseph Smith, and the headquarters of the Mormon, or Latter Day Saints' Church. I was well and intimately acquainted, not only with Joseph Smith, but with the then leading elders of the church; heard most of them preach; discussed with them their peculiar new doctrines and teachings in a free and friendly manner. The subject of Polygamy was never mentioned, either in private conversation or in the public congregation. As a religious sect, the morals of the leaders and members of the church would compare favorably with any other religious organization.

I left Kirtland in the spring of 1835 I think it was, and settled in Columbiana county, Ohio. In the winter of 1839-40, I was elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of Ohio; and while in Columbus, in the Senate Chamber, some Senators asked Judge Bissell, a State Senator, resident in Painesville, Ohio, if he knew "Jo Smith, the Mormon prophet." He answered promptly: "I know him well; I have been his counsel ever since he came to Kirtland, have defended him in the courts time and again when he has been prosecuted for almost every conceivable crime and always acquitted. I believe Joseph Smith as honest a man as the average men in our country, but persecuted by those who disbelieve in his religious theories."

This is the testimony of a State Senator of Painesville, Lake county, Ohio.

SAMUEL BURWELL,

Police Magistrate.

TRIP TO THE WEST.

DURING a recent seven weeks' trip to St. Joseph, Missouri, Nebraska City, Nebraska, Council Bluffs, Farm Creek, Henderson, Plum Hollow, Deloit, Dow City, Galland's Grove, Wheeler's Grove, and Persia, Iowa, we were pleased to note the general prosperity of our church and Sunday School work, and the excellent prospects for future progress. Where a few years ago the Saints had neither chapel nor congregation, there are now both with good promise for steady, solid increase in numbers, in Christian graces, and in spirituality. At Plum Hollow three were added to the church on former baptism; at Galland's Grove, and at Wheeler's Grove, four members were received by baptism, making eleven accessions in all. Besides this, there were scores of others investigating and some of them about ready to unite with the church, notably at Plum Hollow. We attended quarterly conferences at Farm Creek, Deloit, and Wheeler's Grove. The utmost unity prevailed, and the Spirit of the Lord, in a large degree, enlightened and gladdened the hearts of his sons and daughters, giving them a foretaste of "the powers of the world to come" and the "earnest" of the heavenly inheritance reserved for the Saints of the Most High. We were greatly comforted with what we saw and heard among the Saints, with but few exceptions.

On the Fourth, Bro. Charles Derry and the writer delivered addresses on national and temperance topics to the cheery, patriotic hundreds who gathered in Galland's Grove to celebrate the one hundredth and twelfth anniversary of our great nation's birth. We have seldom or never seen such a neat, orderly, social assemblage as greeted us on that occasion. The management of the affair was conducted chiefly by the young gentlemen and ladies of the vicinity, who won for themselves much credit, and we hope it will be but the first of a series of similar celebrations at that place.

Bro. E. C. Briggs and the writer, in the summer of 1859, when first visiting, as missionaries, Wheeler's Grove, Farm Creek, Council Bluffs, Union Grove, Galland's Grove, Bigler's Grove and Fisher's Grove, found the country very sparsely settled, and settlements made mostly in and near to the bodies of timber. There were a few families of the Saints at each of these places, most of whom, dissatisfied or disgusted with all the factions that sprang out of the church after the death of Joseph the Seer, were like sheep scattered upon the mountains, shy, fearful and suspicious of any and all who claimed to come in the name of the Lord with words of testimony and counsel; yet they generally received us hospitably and treated us with proverbial western generosity.

Many of these claimed to have been basely deceived and very badly treated by the "Twelve," or James J. Strang, or Charles B. Thompson, ("Baneemy"), or some other man-made leaders of the factions of the "rejected" and "scattered" church. But in due time some listened to our persistent testimony that God would soon call upon Joseph, the eldest son of Joseph the Martyr, to stand in his father's place at the head of the Church of Christ on the earth, also to our exhortations to return to "the old paths" laid down in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Nauvoo edition of Doctrine and Covenants. The Lord worked with the people; at Farm Creek the gifts of tongues, interpretations, and prophecy, revealed through James R. Badham and old father John Smith and father Calvin Beebe, that Bro. Briggs and the writer were "the servants of the Most High God," also that our mission was of the Lord, and that we would lay the foundation for a great work in all that "upper country." And now as we glance at all that "upper country," for a hundred and fifty miles and more in every direction from Farm Creek where the predictions were uttered, and see the numerous congregations of happy, prosperous Saints, with their neat, commodious churches in many places, and see further the excellent prospects for the future progress of our church work in all those regions, we perceive how truly the Spirit of God shows to the worthy Saints "things to come," thereby confirming their faith in the word and work they have received. We look for a wide, solid and rapid extension of the Lord's work all through western Iowa and eastern Nebraska from this time forward. Conditions within and outside the church are favorable for it. The branches are increasing in numbers; the most, if not all of them, are dwelling together in unity; the Saints are generally favorable to the financial order of the church, and are determined to support it faithfully and promptly; new fields are being opened up by the elders with success, and the outlook in the main is very encouraging. We hope to aid the work there again this summer and fall, so far as we may have ability and find opportunity—or make opportunity.

MINISTERIAL QUALIFICATIONS.

NO ONE can be a minister for Jesus Christ and teach the gospel with authority and power, except they be called and chosen and ordained of God, and taught and guided and sustained by the Holy Spirit. This is clearly set forth in Hebrews 5: 4; Acts 13: 2-4; 2 Cor. 5: 20; Rom. 10: 14, etc., etc.

This view is well sustained by revelation through Joseph the Seer to Hyrum Smith when the Lord said to him: "You need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called. . . . First seek to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed; then if you desire, you shall have my Spirit and my word, yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men. . . . Study my word."—D. C. 10: 8, 10.

This is further sustained by the following commandment to the elders given February 9th, 1831: "The elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them; and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith; and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."—D. C. 42: 5.

Well would it be for all if these divine conditions were always thoroughly complied with. Then would God be glorified, the church be edified, sinners convinced and converted, and the ministry be amply sustained and cheered. But when men attempt to preach who are not called and chosen and ordained of God, their work is worse than vain, not being authorized nor approved of the Lord. And when those who have been called of God and set apart to minister for him, are slothful and negligent to study and meditate upon the word of the Lord and other kindred works, and when they are prayerless and not watchful and diligent in duty, and therefore have not the Spirit of God, their preaching and teaching and exhortation and ministrations are weak and profitless, not being inspired and seasoned and sealed by the Spirit of God. How careful, then, should be the servant of God lest his works be rejected and he suffer condemnation.

THE SPIRIT NEEDED.

No one can be an acceptable minister, a wise and competent witness for Christ and his word and work, unless he has the Spirit of Christ to enlighten, empower and confirm his efforts. No minister should attempt to preach, teach, or in any way officiate in the name of Christ until he first, by study, meditation, prayer, and, if need be, by faithful fasting and prayer, attains to and receives the spirit of God in power—the Spirit of his office and calling.

HOLINESS REQUIRED.

Again; God requires of his servants that they be pure in thought, in speech, in manners and in methods, hence he says: "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." (Isa. 52: 11). "Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience." (1 Tim. 3: 9). And, "abstain from even the appearance of evil."

Purity of life and holiness of heart were requisite qualities among the faithful Nephites for all who ministered in the priesthood, for the great and good Alma instructed them, saying: "And also trusting no one to be your teacher nor your minister, except he be a man of God, walking in his ways and keeping his commandments. . . . And now Alma was their high priest, he being the founder of their church. And it came to pass that none received authority to preach or to teach, except it were by him from God. Therefore he consecrated all their priests, and all their teachers, and none were consecrated except they were just men."—Mosiah 11: 2. See also Alma 3: 8, and 12: 1.

The revelations of Jesus Christ which he gave to the church in these last days through Joseph the Seer, at the very beginning, are very plain and full upon this point as may be seen in the following:

"Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for behold the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work. Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence. Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Amen."—D. C. 3: 1, 2.

In May 1829, following, the Lord further said: "Behold I speak unto you, [Joseph Knight, Sen], also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work, and no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care."—D. C. 11: 4.

WISDOM ESSENTIAL.

The Lord requires that his ministers shall learn wisdom, and faithfully, carefully exercise it in all their ways and administrations: "Be wise servants, and harmless as doves." "Wisdom is profitable to direct." "Wisdom is the principal thing." "I, wisdom, dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions. . . . The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. . . . Then I was by him as one brought up with him; and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth; and my delights were with the sons of men."—Prov. 8: 12, 22, 31.

Wisdom should inspire and direct every thought and word and act of God's people, and especially those of his ministry, for they are called to be "the light of the world," and "ensamples of the flock."

LIKE BEGETS LIKE.

A minister's converts and congregation will partake largely of his characteristics and personal peculiarities. If he possesses but little of Christ in himself, they can receive but little of Christ from or through him. On the other hand, if he is richly endowed with the attributes and Spirit of Christ—if Christ is "in" him "the hope of glory," "dwelling in" him by faith and knowledge—then his congregations and converts will partake of the life and likeness of Christ through and by his ministrations, and will be "built up" in all truth and salvation.

GENTLENESS, PATIENCE.

The minister for Christ must be gentle and patient:—"But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children."—1 Thess. 2: 7. "Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds."—2 Cor. 12: 12. David said of God, "Thy gentleness hath made me great." No quality of our Savior was or is more prominent than his gentleness and patience. No minister for Christ can be successful without them. These, coupled with wisdom, are indispensable, and will go very far in qualifying the servant of Christ for the all important work of winning and saving souls. When the Lord's servants are guided by these, they, his "fishers," will not bang the bushes nor beat the waters when casting the gospel net; nor will they, when they are his "hunters," either impatiently, wilfully, or imprudently, offend, frighten, or drive away the game. The successful fisherman is wise and patient and cautious, careful and faithful. And this is equally true of the "hunter." The priesthood would do well always to consider these scriptural figures, learn their full import, and then profit by putting them into practice.

"GIVE NONE OFFENSE."

Nothing hinders the success of ministers to a greater degree, at home and abroad, than recklessness, or heedlessness, of both peoples opinions and views, sentiments and feelings. If they would pause, consider well, and then do by others as they wish others to do by them, they would never needlessly offend any mortal. Jesus has pronounced a "woe" upon those who are guilty of offending without justifiable cause. Jesus knew the weakness and blindness and sensitiveness of mankind, and hence he warned his disciples to beware and offend none: "Offenses must needs come, but woe unto them by whom they come;" and the Lord "is no respecter of persons."

Paul counselled the Saints to "Give none offense, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God; even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved."—1 Cor. 10: 32, 33. "Giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed."—2 Cor. 6: 3.

OF CONTENTION.

In keeping with this the Lord commanded David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery through Joseph the Seer in June, 1829, saying: "Contend against no church, save it be the church of the devil;" (D. C. 16: 4); and this we understand does not refer to "the churches of men," as such, but to all kinds of sin and iniquity, wherever found, sin being the transgression of God's revealed and known law. The Lord, when reproving "the church in Smyrna," calls certain wicked ones among them "the synagogue of Satan," and thus may all the wilfully wicked be called "the church of the Devil." When the minister for Christ reasons with mankind, in or out of the church, "of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," as did Paul before Felix, they, like Felix, will see the force and application thereof, and like him, conscience smitten, they will "tremble" without being personally pointed out and accused and condemned by the minister. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved;" (John 3: 17). And the wise, faithful minister will do nothing to in any way prevent or hinder the salvation of souls, but seek rather to win and save all mankind so far as lies in his power.

God has not sent his ministry to ridicule, contend against, nor tear down the churches and institutions of men, but to preach the gospel of salvation, build up the church and kingdom of God in its beauty, purity and saving power call the attention of all men to it, and invite, exhort, guide and persuade souls into it, neither to attempt to shame, scare, buy or drive them in; but, like the "Good Shepherd," go before and lead them into "green pastures, by the side of still waters."

THE MINISTER'S SPEECH

Should be sound and plain and pure, easy to be understood by all for whom he ministers; and it should be also attractive, engaging, and soul-winning. It should be from the heart as well as from the brain; in love as well as in knowledge; with grace and with wisdom. Ezekiel, sent of the Lord to minister for Israel, was "unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice." And when Christ appeared to the Nephites, (Book of Nephi 5: 2), his voice, which they heard, "was not a harsh voice, neither was it a loud voice; nevertheless, and notwithstanding it being a small voice, it did pierce them that did hear to the centre, insomuch that there was no part of their frame that it did not cause to quake; yea, it did pierce them to the very soul, and did cause their hearts to burn."

O, how much to be desired is that Christ like "voice!" What attractiveness; what conviction; what marvelous power lies therein! Shall not the Lord's servant earnestly seek that his voice be not "harsh," nor needlessly, unpleasantly "loud!"

The Lord has been careful and good to instruct, that in "the school of the prophets" the teacher shall so speak that "the congregation in the house may hear his words carefully and distinctly, not with loud speech."—D. C. 85: 39. Is it not wisdom, and essential, that the ministry profit by these facts, studiously putting these principles into thorough practice? And shall they not study and strive patiently to become most effective and acceptable in all their ministrations before God and all men?

Christ's ministers are his "ambassadors," his "shepherds," his "watchmen," and are called to be "saviors of men." How important their mission! How great and holy is the work entrusted to their care! How weighty the responsibility resting upon them! May heaven inspire their hearts and lives so that they can render a joyful account of their stewardship in time and in eternity.

BLOODY ASSAULT.

A STATEMENT has been going the rounds of the papers since June 27th to the effect that the "Latter Day Saints near Glen Easton, West Virginia, had a row in which some were killed and others wounded." In the Wheeling Daily Register of the 28th ult., we have an account stating that, "a man named Sam Chambers," also "Ab. and Harvey Courtright," assaulted Tom, Joe, Jasper and Leroy Waite with stones, knives, and pistols, that "Harvey Courtright and Tom and Leroy Waite were pronounced by the doctor who was summoned to be fatally injured;" "old man Harris, at whose house the fight occurred, . . . could not stand the shock, as he was very feeble, and he died on Saturday last from the effects of the excitement;" also that "the two Courtright boys suddenly disappeared, and their whereabouts are unknown." We await further information.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE are authorized by the Building Committee of the Independence, Missouri, branch, now erecting their church, to request the loan of six thousand dollars, to be used in the construction and finishing of their house. They prefer to secure this loan from members of the church if possible. Ample security will be given, and a rate not to exceed eight per cent will be paid for its use. They wish the loan for three years, or longer if desired, with privilege to pay as subscriptions are paid in on their lists in sums of sufficient amount. Who will respond? If one can not, several may join and do it.

Bro. J. A. Stromberg wishes the readers of the HERALD to know that he was lately at Rock Port, California, had sought to preach in a logging camp, but met with poor success in his efforts.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, of Deloit, Iowa, has two excellent articles defensive of the church, in the Register, a paper published by G. W. Baer, at Manilla, Iowa, in the issues for May 31st and June 14, in review of a Rev. L. Alfred, who had written and read before a missionary meeting in the Presbyterian church in Manilla, an article called "Religious History of the Mormons." Bro. Hunt writes clearly and makes a straight defense against Mr. Alfred's repetition of the "old, old Spaulding story," Howe and Hurlbut misrepresentations. It is comforting to know that wherever men now assail the faith, there is a faithful follower of Christ to offer a defense for the truth.

Among the many letters received, which want of space forbids publishing, we mention one from William Williams, of Argentine, Kansas, dated July 11th.

By recent letter from Bro. C. E. Aldrich, of Waldport, Benton county, Oregon, we learn that brethren Holt and Lander had labored in that region of late with good results. Two persons had been added to the Saints there by baptism, others were believing, a branch named Drift Creek had been organized, C. E. Aldrich president, and brethren Holt and Lander had gone on to Sweet Home to engage further in preaching the kingdom of God.

Letters are acknowledged from Brn. S. W. Wheaton, Chase, Michigan; George E. McConley, Sterling, Colorado, and Sr. Josephine Wood of Fremont, Nebraska, formerly of Dunlap, Iowa. The latter says: "There are eleven families of Saints here. We have a Sunday School and this is the first time I have had such privileges of our own church for twenty-two years. We have a church of our own, and rejoice in the society of the Saints. Our conference was held here, closing July 1st. We had a peaceful and joyous time."

President Joseph Smith left the sanctuary the 11th inst., for St. Joseph and Independence, Missouri; Bro. E. W. Tullidge preceding him on the 10th.

Bro. Elias N. Webster, of Boston, Massachusetts, wrote us very cheerily July 3d. He had been visiting different places and doing what he could to encourage those needing aid and sympathy in their spiritual welfare. Bro. Webster mentions the work of Bro. Kelly as being of excellent effect.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Hyrum O. Smith, writing from DeWitt, Nebraska, July 5th, sends us a digest of the debate at Wilber, between Rev. Pressen and Bro. H. C. Bronson, June 25th-29th, which for want of room and its partial character we omit, with the mention that Bro. Smith confirms Bro. Bronson's statement that the truth and the cause did not suffer in the discussion. Bro. Smith says at the close of the letter:

"I preached Saturday evening in the tent, to a small congregation of Saints; then came here and am now at Bro. John O. Savage's; preached at the school house here last Sunday, at 11 a. m., and 8:30 p. m.; also Monday night, at 8:30 p. m.; and will preach at the same place next Sunday, at 11 a. m. and 8:30 p. m.; then on to Fairbury, Jefferson county, and will probably stay there until the meeting at McKaig's Grove, July 20th. I feel well in the work and God is blessing me."

Bro. John R. Evans wrote from Brigham City, Utah, July 5th:

"I arrived here June 29th, and have visited all that I can at present. I have been treated very kindly by all; and have been talking every day since the first night, of the difference between us and the church here. The feeling is quite bitter with some against us. I think that by a continued effort many will see the true condition of things here. I have felt well in visiting and talking with them. I intend to go north from here as far as Malad."

A letter from Bro. S. C. Good, dated Chicago, July 10th, says:

"Our conference was a perfect success in every respect, much good being done. Three were baptized. Others are near the door."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Are we to understand under the present rule that the decision of an Elders' Court finding a member guilty of crime is to be voted upon by the branch, or is not the recommendation, if any is made by the court, to be voted upon only?

Ans.—The finding of the Court is not the matter put to vote; that, whatever it is, is a fact stated by competent authority, and is to be accepted by the branch. If the Court recommends any action, which they may do, the vote of the branch will be upon that recommendation. If they make no recommendation, then the branch will determine upon its own consideration and motion what their action shall be. For instance; if the verdict of the court is that the member who has been tried is guilty of the matter charged against him; and recommend that he should be suspended until restitution, or confession is made, or that he should be disfellowshipped, the vote of the branch would be "Shall he be so punished as recommended?" and not, "Is he guilty?" If the verdict is that the member is guilty, and no form of action is recommended, then the question before the branch is "What shall be the action of the branch in punishing this offender?" And not "Is he guilty?" "Shall the penalty be reprimand, public censure, suspension, or disfellowshipping?" In case the transgression is one for which the law prescribes but one penalty, expulsion from the church, then there is but one question; "Shall he be cast out?" "The law says he shall what say you?"

There is no reason why this question should not be understood; it is very plain in the Book of Rules.

The following hymn was sent to us by Sr. Mary E. Hulmes. It was sung in tongues to the tune of "Sweet Afton," at the Sacrament meeting of the Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, branch on July 1st, by Elder Ephraim Thomas:

"How great a salvation
The Lord has in store,
For them that will fear Him
And love him much more,
Their names are recorded
In heaven on high,
With Christ the Messiah
Whose coming is nigh.

The faithful shall flourish
Abounding in grace,
Uniting their forces
To welcome His face;
When peace like a river
Flows over the land,
Enabling the righteous
For ever to stand."

The City of Zion
By prophets foretold,
Must come to remembrance
With Zion of old;
No troubles nor trials,
No manner of sin
Committed by mortals,
Can enter therein.

The Saints of past ages
And latter days too,
Will rest a long season
When harvest is through;
For such of His children
That seek to abide,
The earth and its fulness
The Lord will provide.

The following clipping from the Chicago Mail of the 7th inst., explains itself:

"Yes, I'm a saint," said S. C. Good, a painter and paperhanger at 263 West Indiana street. Mr. Good is apparently quite an intelligent gentleman, and was very serious. He is a man of medium stature, bright-eyed, energetic, and has a comfortable home. He belongs to the sect of Latter Day Saints, and his solitary wife was standing over the steaming-hot vessels on a red-hot stove in a room behind the store when a reporter for the Mail put in an appearance.

It is not generally known, and indeed few outside of those directly concerned are aware that that there is a branch of the Mormon church, numbering about eighty members, in Chicago. They belong to the northern district of Illinois, which comprises all the northern counties, and are quite strong, in view of the disadvantages and prejudices under which they have labored. The churches are called "branches" by the Latter Day Saints. They are ministered to by what are termed elders, who receive no salary. According to the scriptures they are forbidden to have either "scrip or purse." The seat of the church is at Lamon, Iowa. They recognize no authority from Salt Lake City. * * * *

"I want you to make a special note right here," said Mr. Good. "We are not polygamists. We are the original Latter Day Saints, and it was never contemplated by Joseph Smith that a multiplicity of wives should obtain as one of the tenets of the faith. When the original Joseph Smith, the founder of the church, was killed at Carthage—a most deplorable circumstance for the saints—the church fell into the hands of Brigham Young. He it was who incorporated the polygamous idea. Young was one of the twelve apostles, and Smith had not a little trouble with him. He seemed to be desirous of authority, and did usurp authority after Smith's death. But not until eight years after that event was the polygamous idea put into practice, contrary to the church rulings. Assuming the reins of government, he gathered his followers round him and started from Nauvoo for Salt Lake. The Smith family did not accompany him. They continued in the original belief, which is literally according to the King James version of the scriptures. We desire to add nothing to and take nothing from them. Of course we have what we call the Book of Mormon. That was revealed to Joseph Smith by an angel. He was told that certain plates were hidden in a mountain near Elmira, N. Y. These he obtained and from them the book was written. This we claim is a history of the people who inhabited this country thousands of years ago, a remnant of which are the Indians. It does not differ in all salient points from the bible. In point of fact, it is more explicit in some particulars."

This was rather startling and provoked the reporter's inquiry.

"One point," said Mr. Good, "expressly bears upon the marital relation. 'A man shall have but one wife, and concubines he shall have none, for the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women.' The bible is not as clear upon this point, you will observe, as the much abused Book of Mormon. With this work we can completely down these polygamist Mormons, but with your bible you could not stand before them a minute. The Book of Mormon, however has been practically set aside by the Salt Lake alleged Saints since Brigham Young took charge of the church."

THE GERMAN EMPEROR.—The death of the German Emperor brings prominently before the public Crown Prince William, the present Emperor. He is nearly thirty years old, fairly educated, not particularly bright, but supposed to have some military aptitude. He is supposed to differ from his father in his political ideas, and lacks his father's Christian integrity. His left arm is withered, and he is troubled with abscesses in one of his ears, so that he will not bring to the throne a very stalwart body. I character he seems to be brusque, overbearing and selfish, untrue to his wife, and lacking in filial affection for his father. It is even thought that he would gladly have had his father debarred from the throne, on the ground of an incurable disease. William may be a better man than he is credited with being, but if he is not, the outlook for the German empire is not bright.

MADAME DISS DEBARR, the New York spiritualist that created a sensation by producing spirit pictures, is now on trial for fraud. The prosecution have demonstrated in court her process by also producing spirit pictures on canvass. It is a simple trick when it is understood.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Behind the cloud the starlight lurks,
Through showers the sunbeams fall;
For God who loveth all his works,
Has left his Hope with all!"

"A CUP OF COLD WATER."

The Lord of the harvest walked forth one day,
Where the fields were white with the ripening wheat,
Where those he had sent in the early morn
Were reaping the grain in the noonday heat.
He had chosen a place for each faithful one,
And bidden them work till the day was done.

Apart from the others, with troubled voice,
Spoke one who had gathered no golden grain:
"The Master has given no work to me,
And my coming hither has been in vain;
The reapers with gladness and song will come,
But no sheaves will be mine in the harvest home."

He heard the complaint, and he called her name:
"Dear child, why standest thou idle here?
Go fill thy cup from the hillside stream,
And bring to those who are toiling near;
I will bless thy labor, and it shall be Kept in remembrance as done for me."

'Twas a little service, but grateful hearts
Thanked God for the water so cold and clear;
And some who were fainting with thirst and heat
Went forth with new strength to the work so dear;
And many a weary soul looked up,
Received and cheered by the little cup.

Dear Lord, I have looked with an envious heart
On those who were reaping the golden grain;
I have thought in thy work I had no part,
And mourned that my life was lived in vain;
But now Thou hast opened my eyes to see
That Thou hast some little work for me.

If only this labor of love be mine—
To gladden the heart of some toiling Saint,
To whisper some words that shall cheer the weak,
Do something to comfort the worn and faint—
Though small be the service, I will not grieve, Content just a cup of cold water to give.

And when the Lord of the harvest shall come,
And the laborers home from the field shall call,
He will not look for my gathered sheaves,
But his loving words on my ear will fall:
"Thou gavest a cup of cold water to me,
A heavenly home thy reward shall be."

—The Christian Giver.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Kate M. Barnett, Taylor Ridge, Illinois, writes:—"Being greatly afflicted I desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints and I wish to say to the sisters that their letters have greatly cheered, encouraged and strengthened me. I am the mother of twelve living children, and two the Lord called home in infancy. Some of them are far separated from me, and as my affliction is of long standing and my strength fast failing me, I have little hope of ever seeing them again in this life, but I pray God to guide them into all truth. I thank God for the kind and faithful husband and children he has given me who never seem to tire or grow weary with serving me. May God help me to say at all times, Thy will be done.

Dear Sister:—The elder who baptized me requested me to write to the Home Column nearly six months ago, but I have deferred until I feel that I am doing wrong to put it off longer. I am only a child in the gospel; not yet two years since the Spirit witnessed with my spirit that I was God's and he was mine. Oh, the blessed assurance! I can not tell you what a happy little one I am; but Jesus knows, and owns me, and "my cup runneth over." I can repeat the 23d Psalm, and feel, as I believe, each word. May God help me to be always humble, is what I most desire. My birthday is past again since I sent an offering; but I must pay for my paper before I can send money for anything else. I intend to send one tenth of all the money I have to the Home Column, or spend it to buy publications to lend to others to read. I think if I had a few copies of the "Voice of Warning" I could lend them. I have one that is loaned, and another party is waiting for it. Pray for me, that I may always be faithful.

MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA, June 25th.

Sister Frances:—I am seated to express my thoughts upon the Prayer League, not having the privilege of hearing the gospel preached. The idea of the League pleases me. I feel my unworthiness. As Sister Eleanor says, "All must be able to pray from the heart the Lord's prayer in each particular." My heart's desire is to attain to this high state of perfection, so as to be able to forgive as I would be forgiven, to love my neighbor as myself, which means strict obedience of the golden rule; "do unto others as you would have others do unto you." In the temporal affairs of life we have to patiently and persistently keep trying to gain a degree of perfection. It is just so in the spiritual. We grow in grace and all feel our weakness. If "in unity there is strength," why not unitedly strive to overcome and conquer self?

Yours in hope of victory,

LOU BERRY.

July 3d.

Dear Sister Frances:—Virginia's letter in Herald for June 30th, surprised me. The admonitions, thoughts and suggestions are very good and timely,—only one idea strikes me singularly. She says she is not willing to promise to pray more than once a month in full spirit of faith, for general purposes. Does it require more faith than to pray for a particular purpose? Shall we not enter into our closet for secret devotion oftener than this? Shall we not pray in our family oftener? or in prayer and testimony meeting? How can we promise an effusion of faith even then? How are we to live close to the commandments without praying, and praying often. Daniel prayed three times a day. Amulek, in Book of Mormon, taught the people to pray at morn, noon and night; to pray over flocks, over crops, and constantly. Now I should think the more we prayed—if in the proper spirit—the more faith we would enjoy. "The just shall live by faith." Does this fit us for prayer only once a month? How are we to get a special degree of faith even then? I own I can not understand why we should not pray every day. I may be like the old axiom says: "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," but, before seeing the letter referred to, I had innocently and perhaps ignorantly, set apart a certain hour every forenoon and afternoon for secret prayer; and in my own mind became one of the proposed Prayer League. Herewith I send my name as one, if it succeeds. And I do wish sister Eleanor would write again, and more explicitly, on the subject about which there seems to be such a diversity of opinion. I may be mistaken in my conception of the idea—the fulfillment, and object of the Prayer League. I do hope she will write again, soon. I look upon the Prayer League, or the original thought of it, as a divine inspiration, and am anxious to gain a proper understanding of the subject. I hope we will hear from many more of the sisters, and get near a unity of thought in the matter.

Your sister, VIVE VALE.

KINGSLEY, IOWA, June 2d.

My Dear Sisters:—I have just been reading the letters in the Home Column, and feel so glad to say that I am working to be a "soldier in the army of the Lord." I am but fifteen years old, but feel that I have a work to do as well as the rest, for my blessed Redeemer. I love to go to Sunday School and prayer-meeting, to "read and sing of our heavenly King," and to try to do what is right. My prayer is that we may all overcome the trials and temptations of this life. Let us all "pray for one another." How I hope we will all prove faithful and meet on that beautiful shore where parting will be unknown. I have seen the day that I would rather dance than to serve God, but the Lord has changed my heart and brought me into that straight and narrow path that leads to "Life eternal." How I wish every one would come in the unity of the faith and be baptized before it is too late. Pray for me, dear sisters, that I may meet you all at Jesus' feet, then

"Let us all weave in the warp of our lives here below, Threads that are pure as the driven snow;
That when the last shuttle through the fabric is run,
The great Master Weaver will say, 'Well done.'"

DUTIE JORDAN.

GUILFORD, MO., May 31st.

Dear Sisters: The thought has been passing through my mind to-day, as it often has before, "Have I done all I can for the cause of Christ?" I can not spend my time preaching; but is that all there is to do? I believe not. We are required to give one-tenth part of all that we have, more than our living. I feel thankful that the Lord has given me faith enough to obey this law; but we are also given to understand that we should do much of our own free will; so let us not be afraid to trust the Lord with a little of our means, for what have we got of our own that the Lord has not given us; and when we leave this earth what can we take with us? I ask that you will pray for me, that I may have wisdom to raise my children aright before the Lord. There are a good many Saints around here, but we are much scattered, and have no church building of our own. There is a Union Church about eight miles from here, and we have meeting there every fourth Sabbath; the other Sabbaths we hold meetings from house to house.

Your sister in Christ,

MARTENA NELSON.

SIGEL, Mich., June 7th.

Sister Frances:—Taking up the Herald this morning I saw the piece on prayer. I am a true believer in prayer, for I have had my prayers answered many times, although I am one of the weakest of God's children. I have been in the church a little over two years, and I praise God for the light and knowledge it gives me of his ways. When I look back and see the way the Lord has led me I feel to praise his name. I was a member of the Baptist church for a few years. I told them they did not preach what the apostles did. I used to wonder why, but I now see. How could they preach without being sent? Often did I pray for the Lord to send some one to preach the gospel, and I often arose from my knees satisfied that he would, in his own time. Dear sister, though I never saw you in the flesh, yet we are one in spirit, and can rejoice together in the glorious gospel of the Son of God. Let us rejoice together that the Lord saw fit in his wisdom to give us hearing, ears and understanding hearts to obey his truth. We have our share of persecution here, but let us be glad and put on the whole armor of Christ, bearing the cross and doing our duty in the love and fear of God; watching and waiting till he comes.

Yours in the one faith,

JANE MORGAN.

BLLENHEIM, Ont., June 11th.

Dear Readers of the Home Column:—Our district conference has just closed, and a very enjoyable time was realized. The Lord was with us and blessed us with His Spirit, even with the gifts of the gospel, which is very encouraging. It makes my heart rejoice to know that our heavenly Father owns us as His people. I think it is our duty to do all we can for the furtherance of this work which we are engaged in. The saints in this part of the vineyard seem to be striving to live as becometh Saints. Though we are few in number still our meetings are kept up and enjoyed by all. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, your sister in Christ,

SARAH JANE BUCKE.

OXFORD, Kan., June 16th.

Dear Home Column:—My heart has been made to rejoice since I wrote last by my dear one's obeying the gospel. About thirteen in all have joined this branch since last fall. Some are quite young to take up the cross, but my prayers are that they will stand firm and may ever be found faithful. It stands us in hand to be watching and waiting with our lamps trimmed and burning. Sisters, pray for my dear mamma, that she may get well. She is in very poor health this summer. She has the heart disease.

Your sister,

MAMIE ZENOR.

A JEWISH rabbi from the Spanish and Portuguese congregation of New York, opened the Senate with prayer on Tuesday last, April 24th. He followed the Jewish custom, and wore his hat while praying. This is the second time in the history of the government that a Jew has offered prayer in the Senate.

NOTICE.

During the last General Conference two groups were photographed: one of the "Twelve," and one of the "Seventy." Learning that quite a number of the Saints want these Pictures, we will furnish them as follows; They are 5x8, but mounted on 8x10 cards. On plain white cards, 30 cts each; on gilt edge cream or maroon cards, 50 cts. Any number post paid. Address orders to WILKESVILLE, Ohio, June 24th.

Bro. Joseph and Blair:—The work is moving on in this part of the vineyard. Elder James Moler came and preached two discourses a short distance north of Wilkesville to a small but very attentive audience. Having to leave and attend to some other labor Elder Devore came and took charge and continued several nights, the congregations increasing in number. Bro. Devore had good liberty. He spared no pains in explaining the truth of the gospel as taught by Christ and his apostles, which Paul says is the power of God to all them that believe. They want preaching there as soon as convenient. The seed sown there will spring up and grow if properly cared for. An old gentleman said on his way home that now he was satisfied that there was something for a man to do before he departed this life. He was convinced of that in two sermons. He has heard many different faiths but he could not believe their teachings. I can still say that the work is true and I love it. I want to continue to the end and be more faithful. It is God's work and I know it.

Your brother,

R. H. ERVIN.

Editor Herald:—Will you please enter these few lines in your columns. We are taking the good old Herald and every brother and sister should take it.

GREENVILLE, Pa., June 23d.

Dear Herald: I crave a part of your space to correct an item of "Ye Editor" in your issue of June 23d, respecting the labors of the writer, who is made to say he is preaching every Sunday in the vicinity of Conneautville, Pennsylvania. I did not intend to convey that idea, as my appointments there are for the first Sunday in each month, at 10.30 a.m. and 7 p.m., for preaching, and 2 p.m. for Saints' meeting. There is a good interest at Tyler and Crocker school-houses, where some considerable labor has been done by Bro. R. S. Salyards, myself and others, and if some "good elder" could stay there for two or three weeks and preach every evening, there would soon be an ingathering. The Lord has said there are those who will unite with us and He will do a great work there; that the people shall be astonished at His power. Many comforting promises have been made the Saints if they are humble and faithful. I am glad to say they are striving to live consistently, and thus let their light shine, that others may be led to the truth. They are trying to carry out the law of the gospel in tithing, and do it gladly and cheerfully. They will surely reap the reward. Their great desire, prayers and earnest efforts are that others may obey the gospel and rejoice as they, in the hope and evidence of eternal life. Circumstances prevent my going there more than once a month at present. It is twenty-five miles from here, but I hope to be able to meet with the Saints there more frequently before next winter, through the completion of the railroad on which the writer is employed.

Bro. Leonard S. Holman, priest, and W. Del. Corey, teacher, are active in their efforts to spread the work, distributing tracts and other pamphlets. They are doing good.

I very much wish brethren Scott or Brown could reach that part soon. I wrote Bro. Brown at Beaver Falls, after receiving a postal from him, to go to Conneautville; but my letter was returned uncalled for. I am engaged about every Sunday except one each month, which I give to my family, as I consider their salvation as necessary and precious as that of other families. When I am away my wife takes up the work and tries to instruct them in their duties and obligations as Saints. When not at Conneautville my labors are divided between Sharon and Hubbard. There are nine Saints at the former place, and six or seven at the latter, all members of the Church Hill branch, to which place they go three Sundays in the month. The fourth Sunday meeting is held at Hubbard. They are all alive in the work and have good meetings.

Bro. David Jones, jun., at Sharon, Bro. Richardson at Hubbard, and Bro. David Strachan at Youngstown, Ohio, are especially active in talking up the gospel, and prospects are good for others obeying shortly.

I am acting the part of a general missionary in this section of the district, trying to fill an opening where I can do good. I am often blessed with all the liberty I could desire. Occasionally it is restrained, but I try not to murmur at such times, knowing the work is the Lord's, and that he is able to care for it, and if I do the best I can, he will not let it suffer through my honest efforts to magnify my calling, no matter how poor they may seem to me.

It was the great pleasure of self and wife to spend Saturday and Sunday, June 16th and 17th, with the Saints at Kirtland, as guests of brother and sister G. T. Griffiths. Sunday morning we met with the Saints in Sunday School at ten a.m.; Sr. W. H. Kelley in charge. Had a very pleasant and instructive session. The sisters there are worthy of all praise for their persistence in keeping up the school; often under discouraging circumstances. They are doing nobly, and will reap their reward in due time. They are said to have the largest attendance of any school around there. At eleven o'clock I was privileged to occupy the stand with excellent liberty, and I trust to the edification of the audience, which was quite good in numbers and attention. I am informed that the elders universally have good liberty in preaching in the Temple; thus the Lord witnesses to the consecration of that Sanctuary of the Most High. At three o'clock Saints' meeting was held. The Spirit was with us, and we were greatly refreshed. There should be an elder placed there in charge, at least during the summer months. I know of no place in the world where more good can be done, and is done when the elders happen to be there, than at the Temple. Visitors come there daily from all over the States, as the register will show, and are astonished at what they see and hear, going away with prejudice removed and straightway become witnesses to the worthiness of the Saints to recognition as a moral, upright people. Mr. J. R. Packard, one of the prominent and influential citizens of this place, was with his wife a visitor there last week. He is a personal friend of Editor Merrill of the Willoughby Independent, I think it is. He expressed himself as much pleased, and said the people all around that country spoke highly of our people, and that the Latter Day Saints were as moral, honest and industrious as any other people. He spoke very pleasantly of Brn. W. H. and E. L. Kelley whom he met there. The sisters Kelley and Sr. Griffiths are often called upon to conduct visitors through the Temple, when the brethren are away on their missions, sometimes having to leave their washtubs to do so. It seems to me this should not be required of them. Woman's organization is not suited for climbing up those stairs so often as is required. It is hard work for a strong young man to go up and down them four and six times per day as they often have to do, and it is too hard for the sisters to do, and have their house work to do besides; yet they will not neglect an opportunity to do good. These remarks are voluntary on my part, and suggested by what I saw and heard. I earnestly hope that the next General Conference will appoint some elder in charge there during the summer months especially, and have meetings held regularly. People will attend services for miles around and from all parts of the world, thus an incalculable amount of good can be done in removing prejudice and opening doors for the elders in every field through this work at Kirtland alone. I think we can promise to find the elder appointed there sufficient work to do in this district in the winter, or after the season closes at Kirtland, so that he will not get rusty or lonesome. Just try us in these matters.

We missed brother and sister Salyards, but we have plenty of sympathy in that feeling; others there and throughout the district share in it and regret the necessity for their removal.

Bro. James Brown, president of the district advised me by postal from Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, early in May, that he had not yet baptized any more there, and did not know whether those spoken of by Bro. Hodge would obey before he left or not. I have not heard from him since. Bro. David Strachan of Youngstown, Ohio, went to Washingtonville, Ohio, the last Sunday in May to baptize some there, they having sent for him for that purpose. I have not heard from him since and do not know how many there were. I believe the work is onward throughout the district, though much hindered by the removal of some of our most acceptable laborers. The missionaries appointed here have not yet reached this field so far as I am informed at present writing. They are much needed since Brn. Kelley Griffiths and Salyards are taken from us.

W. H. GARRETT.

Elders of Pittsburg and Kirtland district, please take notice. By reason of removal of Bro. R. S. Salyards the district records are now in my possession until another secretary is appointed. Please send me promptly notice of all additions and changes.

W. H. GARRETT, Ass't Sec'y.

MAYETTA, Kan., Jul. 9th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have preached here four times, and yesterday baptized five of those deceived by L. D. Hickey who led them to believe that he was an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I go to-day twelve miles to Avoca where I am informed there are several honest ones in the same condition. The Lord has blessed us greatly; praise his holy name.

In bonds,

E. C. BRAND.

BOSTON, Mass., July 5th.

Dear Saints:—We had Bro. Parsons with us (Sabbath) June 24th, who was greatly blessed while presenting the "peaceable things of the kingdom," and exhorting us to a diligent observance of that that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, and I feel sure his work was not in vain. The following Wednesday evening we enjoyed greatly the presence of brethren W. H. Kelley, E. C. Briggs, F. M. Sheehy, and Bro. Robinson, colaborer with Bro. Parsons, who have left the west with their companions for Nova Scotia. I fully believe these four are workers together with God for the building up of Zion, and the deliverance from sin, priestcraft, and man's traditions, those willing to accept light and truth through God's appointed means. They left with the prayers and sympathy of the Boston Saints; and as we bid them good-bye, on the steamer that was to take them to their field of labor, and watched its departure, we felt the force of the words of the poet, "Here we meet to part again." I am satisfied their dear companion will find work to do, and their willing hands will cheerfully respond to all demands made upon them.

Many things I could write of, but wisdom admonishes me to leave it to wiser heads and abler pens than mine. I greatly rejoiced to welcome Bro. E. C. Briggs back again. Although his stay here will not be of long duration, I feel satisfied it will be fraught with good. I, with many others, was very much taken aback when we saw his labors were not to be continued in this district this year; but we believe it will be the means of bringing about a better understanding of the right, authority, and specific work of an apostle in this the Church of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Bro. W. H. Kelley spoke twice last Sabbath, July 1st; and although it makes the heart sad to see so few out to hear the words of truth and wisdom in this large city, I believe they were appreciated by those who listened to them, and I pray we may treasure them up in our hearts and be enabled to impart them to others.

The work is onward, brethren, although Satan with all his legions is trying to stop its progress. It will roll forth in the face of all opposition, but shall I be able to keep up with its steady march? Shall I be able to stand the trials that every day grow thicker around me? Shall I be sufficiently wise to build my structure with such material that will stand the test that is to try every man's work of what sort it is? What am I working for? Is it for ambition, praise of man, or self gratification? God forbid; for all this will perish with the using. I with you, my dear brothers and sisters, have set out for a celestial salvation in the kingdom of my Father. Nothing short of this will ever satisfy me, or you, dear Saints. What is this reward? "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard; neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things God hath prepared for them that love him;" but thanks to his holy name He has revealed unto us by his Spirit glimpses of that glorious state, and although we look through a glass darkly now, we have received sufficient as an earnest of our expectation; eternal life with all that implies; the society of the pure and the good of all ages, with the acme of patient endurance, peaceful resignation under the bitterest trials and persecutions, triumphant and crowned as the Prince of Peace; and under his "glorious banner of peace," a thousand glad years reign. And after the final struggle of Satan, his host, and those he has deceived, the full and complete destruction of his armies and power; then comes the grand transformation scene, the Holy City descending from God out of heaven the home of the Great and Holy One and the Lamb, with the pure in heart, "And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth; neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Again, those who have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide and have not been deceived; and those who have followed the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. Then, dear Saints, we are to purify ourselves even as he is pure, before we can be clad with the robes clean and white, which is the "righteousness of the Saints," or enter those pearly gates, or be permitted to partake of the fruit of the tree of life, or abide the presence of Him who sitteth upon the throne.

R. BULLARD.

OLIVET, Dak., June 22d.

Editors Herald: I started for this field on the 8th of the month from Crescent, Iowa, where I left my family. Stopped awhile at Richland, the battle ground of Bro. Wight. My effort there was rather weak. My mind has been darkened, and it was almost impossible for me to throw it off; but with God's help the mist of darkness that Satan has thrown around my path is being removed. If he could only get me to falter and turn back, his purpose would be accomplished; but with God's help I will press on till the darkness turns to perfect day.

I arrived here the 19th, and am stopping with Bro. Patten, a nephew of Captain Patten of Missouri fame. Here I met Bro. Hogaboom, and I must say that my heart was filled with joy to meet many of the Saints. We are holding forth in a school-house, and also in Olivet in the Christian Church. They have been very kind to us, for which we feel thankful. The field is a new one. Inconveniences and difficulties will have to be met and endured, and the seed sown with a lavish hand before reaping can be done." "Sow ye beside all waters," is the injunction of Scripture, and is applicable to this as well as other fields. If God will give us strength we will sow and leave the result with him. Will probably go to Charles Mix county after I am through here. There is a branch of Saints in the Territory, but they are a long ways north of this. We are about one hundred miles north of Sioux City. The country is new and thinly settled. My address at present is Olivet, Dakota.

Your brother and fellow laborer,

EDWARD E. WHEELER.

CRAWFORD, Neb., June 30th.

Editors Herald:—It almost occurs to me that my thoughts are too insignificant to either appear in print, or to be delivered orally; but why should God demand of me what I am not capable of performing. Have I a legal excuse? Can I say, with Moses, I am slow of speech? Can I bury the talent given me of God, and he never demand it again? No. "O, then my soul stretch every nerve." I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me. Phil. 4:13. But O, that little grain of mustard seed; yes that little seed. O! ye rivers, mountains, vallies, nations, flames, things present and things to come, bow in humble submission to this seed. Ye will, ye must, for this is the decree of our eternal, unchangeable God. How our thoughts multiply and the field expands while the Spirit dictates. O, why can we not always enjoy that hallowed influence, so meek, so pure; the soul would fain say, Let us build here three tabernacles—but no, not yet; first drink of the cup that I (Jesus) drank of, and be baptized with the baptism wherewith I was baptized.

We are now twelve members, prospects for more; are unorganized as yet; preaching every Sunday, prayer meeting every Thursday eve; enjoy a degree of the Spirit. I have baptized five and confirmed them; blessed five children; administered to the sick with some good results; attended several funerals; united in marriage four couples among whom are Bro. Andrew Atwood, of Charter Oak, Iowa, to Mrs. Hattie McHenry.

In bonds,

D. W. SHIRK.

GALIEN, Michigan, June 28th.

Editors Herald:—A prospectus of the situation of the work in the mission comprising Michigan and Northern Indiana, indicates that one of our greatest needs is laborers. We are trying, however, to be reconciled to the circumstances governing, and conjointly with force appointed to the field, endeavoring to move forward in response to the urgent calls for labor. The cause is onward. We feel at a loss, to a degree, without the supervision of Bro. W. H. Kelley, whose counsels in the work we have been used to so long. We trust not to be forgotten in his prayers, with those of the Saints, for our success.

On the 2d and 3d instants I was in attendance at the conference of the Northern Michigan district, of which Bro. Cornish wrote briefly. It was well attended. The business was done considerably and with a degree of unanimity seldom excelled. The Saints seemed hopeful and the elders and other officer's reports indicated labor done, and were very encouraging. I do not now remember the names of all the officers attending, but there was quite a number, and I hope they continue as ardent and hopeful as when at conference. I preached six evenings in seven while at Hersey and Chase, during and after the conference; something I had not done before for over three years. I felt thankful for the ability to do so. I believe I preached the first sermon at Chase some five years ago, and now there is a branch of seventeen members including some old members; among them our aged brother and sister Silas Wheaton, Bro. Rufus Wheaton and wife, and brother and sister Burzeley, all of whom are standing for the cause with others who have lately embraced the gospel.

Northern Michigan is an open door for the promulgation of the gospel restored, and the laborers seem to be striving to be equal to the urgency of the demands for labor. A goodly number have been baptized in their district since the General Conference.

The conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district convened on the 16th instant, continuing till noon of the 18th, and notwithstanding the busy season with the farmers, a goodly number of the brethren and sisters made it convenient to attend. The weather was excessively warm throughout the session but all took hold with a vim and conference was a success. As in the conference above referred to, the business was done in unity and the Spirit's influence like a white winged messenger of peace hovered over all the meetings, imparting joy and gladness to the hearts of all present. At 9 a. m. on Sunday, the 17th, a large audience assembled at the beautiful little river where, in its pure waters, with the rays of the sun blazing down, they witnessed the immersion of ten precious souls into Jesus the Savior. Among them Bro. and sister Cannon, of Syracuse, Indiana, who had read and investigated themselves into the faith and are firm. Some of the Coldwater Saints seemed almost overjoyed when some of their children came forward for baptism, so like the little lambs of the flock pressing their way into the fold of the Good Shepherd. At 10:30 a well filled house listened to a remarkably able discourse belivered by Elder E. L. Kelley, on "Laying up treasures in heaven." It was flush with the Spirit's power, and the justice of the Lord's way of acceptance of alms, offerings and tithes for the sustaining of his work among men was presented in graphic and wonderful contrast with the evangelical arrangements of modern times, for getting money to push religious claims.

The illustrations were apt and the Saints and even the friends felt to rejoice to see that the justice of the principle attested its divinity.

Some men, not members of any church, have said to me: "Joseph Smith's financial system is the best system in the world;" evidently not realizing that it antedates Joseph's time as far back at least as Abraham, who obeyed the gospel, (Gal. 3:8), and traveled and preached it, (Ps. 105:13-16), and walked in the steps of gospel faith, (Gen. 14:18-20), giving "tithes of all;" obeying God's "laws" he became "heir of the world" to come, just as we "who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had," become heirs with him, of the world to come (Rom. 4:13). Strange! The rays of revealed light refuse to reflect light as it relates to his gospel system save through the mediums appointed of God—the prophets. But why wonder? it is not mists or clouds, or even dark waters, or earth, that reflect the light of the physical heavens, but their suns, moons and stars! But these thoughts, like the sermon, are carrying me away. I must leave the field of diversion, and hasten back to the conference. The preaching was done by brethren James A. Carpenter, E. L. Kelley and L. Scott, while I supplemented their efforts on Sunday p.m., by the appointment of Bishop Blakeslee, who presided, and offered timely suggestions at proper intervals. Brethren James Horton of Williams-ton, and H. Rathbun of Lansing, were present to aid in the work of the conference, and gave encouraging reports, and are deeply interested in the progress of the work. The power of God was manifested in the administering to a number of sick and afflicted, and words of cheering promise were indited by the Holy Ghost.

The Saints met at nine a. m. on Monday. The conference business concluded, those baptized were confirmed by Brn. Kelley and Rathbun, Carpenter and Scott, after which I, assisted by Bishop Blakeslee, ordained Bro. James A. Carpenter to the office of a Seventy, as provided by the General Conference. Should any one be inclined to question the propriety of our inviting the Bishop to aid in the ordination, let them consult section 117, paragraph 3, and 104:8-10, Doctrine and Covenants. After these administrations, the remainder of the meeting was occupied by the Saints, in hearing strong testimonies to the divinity of the work; offering spirited exhortations, and in the enjoyment of the gospel gifts. All felt thankful, refreshed, and renewed for the conflict. And now, following the conclusion of the conference, comes the news that on the 25th inst., five more were baptized by Brn. Bradford Corless and Rathbun, who remained at Coldwater, after the conference, to labor there for a season.

The Saints at Coldwater have concluded to build a house of worship. This a move in the right direction, we believe, and quite a number of their friends in that vicinity favor the movement, and are offering substantial encouragement. It may be that the Saints there have, like David of old, had thoughts on this topic, suggested, 2 Sam. 7:1-3, and, should any who may read these lines—Saints or friends—feel like offering encouragement to the enterprise, they will kindly forward the same to Bro. Dudley Lock, or Bro. Jacob Thomas, the authorized solicitors, who will gladly give credit for the same in a book kept by them for that purpose.

The general outlook for the work in our mission is encouraging, and we hope to move along unitedly, and trust to have the prayers of the Saints for the success of our efforts.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

C. SCOTT.

ST. PAUL, Neb., June 26th.

Dear Herald: I must send my love to you and thanks for the pay you bring me each week. May God bless those that help thee and fill thee with truth. The more I read it the closer it binds me to my God. You are all the elder we have. I have not heard a sermon for nearly six years. There are no Saints near here. I pray that the day may come when I can hear the word again in truth, for I know it to be the true and living work of God, and I live in hope of eternal life. May God give grace to withstand those trials of life. I do pray that the time may speedily come when all may know of its truth.

Pray for me.

ELIZA SHERWOOD.

REHOBOTH, Mass., June 25th.

Bro. Dancer: When I subscribed for the Herald last March, I spoke of having it sent to Georgiaville, Rhode Island, until further notice; and now I have felt for a long time that it was the Lord's will that I should move into the town of Rehoboth, where I was born and reared until married. The Lord saw fit to remove, for some purpose, a kind and affectionate husband from me. Shortly after his death I became acquainted with the Latter Day Saints, and about a year after that I joined the church. That was, I think, three years ago last January. Many have been the beautiful visions and dreams, and many have been the trials and persecution from my own dear friends, those that I love. But I have found the Lord to be a great helper in every time of need. In him will I put my trust, although at times I feel very weak and undeserving of his blessings. I feel lonely here with none of the Saints to speak to; but I know that it is the Lord's will that I should be placed here, that the gospel should be preached in this part of the vineyard. By his help I shall try to do all I can to have a way opened for his servants to come and speak to the people. The first night I slept in my house I was led to pray as I never was before, and in my dream I saw a beautiful, plain, snow-white meeting-house, with silver lights in all the windows. It was lifted above all others, and seemed to be in the air, and all others were beneath it. I felt to rejoice that the Lord had not forgotten his people, and that there would be a branch raised up here in his own good time. I desire an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may be faithful, and be worthy to be the means of bringing some into the kingdom.

ARDELIA M. CLARK.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 7th.

Dear Herald:—The Saints here are constantly striving to show to the world that to be a Saint is to be Christ-like in every particular, for we are aware that the eyes of all are upon us, watching us at every step. For this reason we have need to watch and pray at all times. We have a small church at 1914 Troost Avenue. I put this in because I have found several Saints that could not find our branch; so if there are any brethren in the city, or any that know of any in the city will confer a favor by letting them know, or write me giving me their address. We can get a little better hearing both in public and private than we could before. There seems to be a spirit of enquiry abroad. Some are reading the Voice of Warning, others have bought the Book of Mormon and are reading it. We trust it will be the means of an ingathering before long. The Kansas City Evening News, kindly sent us word that if we would send them items of our preaching, and subject and items of the sermon they would insert it free of charge. This a chance the Saints have not had the opportunity of before. So, any of the district authorities visiting this branch with the intention of speaking will please notify Bro. A. Allen, at the above address, in time to have it inserted in the Saturday evening paper.

Trusting this may be the means of some at least finding their way into the kingdom, I remain
Yours in gospel bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

HOEL Y' MYNVDD,

Southern Down, Wales,

June 24th, 1888.

Pres. Joseph Smith; Dear Brother:—Just a line, while sending the enclosed for Herald, to say that the prospects for Wales are brighter than ever. People are beginning to understand us. I am preaching to hundreds every Sunday here, in the open air, and better listeners I never had. I move from here next week, and am sorry for that, for the people are thirsting for the pure gospel. I have labored hard here; the result will be known when our Master counteth up his jewels. I ask an interest in your faith and prayers, that wherever I may sojourn here, in time, I may not only leave behind me an honorable name, but a work begun which will grow by the grace of God, to the salvation of many souls, the glory of God, and the advance of his cause and kingdom upon earth. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for I know it to be the power of God unto salvation. I am not ashamed of the name of Latter Day Saint; for I know the church is the Church of Jesus Christ, and the saints therein who are faithful are those who shall reign with him when he cometh with those dear ones who have gone before, washed in the blood of lamb.

God bless you, Bro. Joseph, in your work, is ever my humble prayer. With love, from GEORGE COPE.

LONE ROCK, Mo., June 28th.

Bro. Joseph and William:—I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint; and I give some of the reasons why I still hold to the doctrine, as taught by them. First, Because I know what they teach is true; for God has given me knowledge of the same. Second, Through obedience to the gospel I have been healed of a disease had from childhood. Third, By partaking of the oil which has been consecrated by them, I have been relieved of pain. Thus it has been done by the power of God; and to God be all the glory.

I love this glorious latter day work; for it brings me hours of comfort and relief. I may become a castaway and desert from this glorious truth which has been commissioned from heaven by an angel; but should I, yet my testimony will still remain with God. My desire is that I may so live that when He comes I may be ready to meet Him. I confess that I may do things which are contrary to His will; thanks be to God, we have an advocate with the Father.

Yours in the one faith,

EDWARD E. MARSHALL.

SANTA CLARA, Dak., June 4th.

Dear Herald:—We are not dead nor sleeping, but are trying to keep the gospel banner unfurled, and with the help of God we will continue the battle against sin and priestcraft until we hear the voice of our Master saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

We are gaining ground step by step. The Saints here are somewhat scattered, and for that reason we meet only every two weeks. We are holding meetings in the Mitchell school-house, about four miles west of Newark. Some of us have to go fourteen miles to meeting, or twenty-eight miles the round trip.

I am well pleased with the action of our late General Conference by their course in organizing other quorums. I wish to say to the brethren of the Second Quorum of Priests—not as an official member, but as a brother in the quorum—that inasmuch as we are now organized in a quorum, let us strive to gain a name that all the Saints may be proud of, and put our shoulder to the wheel and make a united effort for the advancement of God's truth. We have each a duty to perform and should stand as "valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord," not shrink from any duty, but improve every talent, and great will be our reward.

I am much pleased with all our church publications, and believe it the duty of all the Saints to do all in their power to secure for them a larger circulation. It seems to me that all the Saints who do not take, or at least read our church literature, are "way behind the times." I think it also the duty of all those interested in this great latter day work to help Bro. H. P. Brown in his effort to keep the Expositor alive. I believe it is doing a noble work for the advance of the "restored gospel." Help him, brothers and sisters, with your money as well as your prayers—the cost is only one dollar per year, and with this as with the rest of our publications, "you get the worth of your money," not only once but many times.

I hope Bro. Elvin will continue his articles on the "Nephite Records," for as Bro. Elvin says, "The burden of defense is fast falling upon the young men, inexperienced in the church history." Being one of these "young men" just about to cross over the twenty line, I desire to be an able defender of the truth, and just such articles as that of Bro. Elvin's will, with God's help, prepare me for the battle field. I have the promise of great things if I am faithful. Pray for me, brothers and sisters, that I may prove true to my covenant and work a great work for our Master.

If any of the traveling ministry come to this part of the Lord's vineyard, just drop me a line stating what day you will arrive, and we will meet you at any of the following stations: Britten, Burch, Claremont, or Hecla. We are just about the same distance from all the above named stations. My postoffice is Santa Clara, Brown county, Dakota. In regard to "Autumn Leaves," I believe the Saints, both old and young, appreciate Sr. Walker's efforts to give the church, especially the youth, a monthly magazine. One reason that leads me to this conclusion is the rapidity with which the reprinted edition was called for. Long may it live to feed hungry souls with nourishing food, even to leading many into the kingdom of God.

Yours in gospel bonds,

E. DAY BENNETT.

SANTA ANA, Cal, July 1st.

Bro. Joseph:—I am receiving letters from isolated Saints in different states and territories, all wanting information about Missouri, and wanting to know why some of the elders have not said something about going there before. As a rule all that have written to me are men worth from two to five thousand dollars; some of them living in cities and working by the day for some one who is getting the benefit of their labors. The elders have advised the Saints to go to the "regions round about," and buy them homes; those who are able to do so, and improve them, making a home and place they need not be ashamed of; but in going to Missouri we must remember that we must have a living; that it takes money to buy land; and work the same as elsewhere to build up good homes. If we believe that we are to go there some time to build up homes, why not now, as well as any other time? Why not go there when land can be bought cheap and work for ourselves on farms, as well as have our money in a house and lot and work for some one by the day; giving them the profit of our labors?

As for myself I am going, because I see that land in the best parts of Missouri will not stay as low as it now is. I will give my reason. I find that the moneyed men from the east are sending money to nearly all parts of that state, to loan on real estate security. Kansas is mortgaged heavily as a state, and many of the farmers are obliged to sell for what they can get, in order to get something more than what their places are mortgaged for. The same where we bought, in Vernon county; the land we bought was all under mortgage; so the parties were obliged to sell, and I find most of the land the same way. When this land goes into the hands of those eastern capitalists it can not be got as low as it can now. There are plenty of Saints who are able to buy large farms there that are waiting for what? Why not secure what land we can; it will pay interest on the money. Buy and lease it to others, and in that way there are many poor Saints who are struggling hard for a living that could be helped and we be keeping the commandments of God to "gather unto the regions round about." I know of one place close to where we bought of four thousand acres, all in one field, all fenced, plenty of timber, water, good buildings, mostly in crop, that can be bought for twelve and one half dollars an acre.

I have been acquainted with farming and farming lands all my life, and I never saw better than I found in Vernon county. It is also a good stock country.

We will have a branch of the Saints there this fall, if nothing happens more than we know of. Bro. Goff will go in July, in order to build; but I will not go till fall. We want the Saints who are ready to go there and that have the means to buy land, to come and settle with us. But don't come and grumble and say: "If it had not been for Bro. Thompson I would not have been here." Come on your own judgment.

I have written as I see this, and the best I can for the best interest of the Saints. I have no land to sell there, nor am I paid for giving my views. No one got me to go there, so if I am disappointed, I will blame myself. I expect to make a living there as well as here, and I do not look for any more blessing there than I would get here if equally deserving. If we go that way we will not be disappointed.

Your brother,
A. W. THOMPSON.

"THE LIGHT OF MESSIAH."

A BOOK bearing the above title has recently been placed in my hands. From an examination of its contents I learn that it purports to be the revealings of Spiritualism, but all the religions of the earth are in a sense recognized, and the Reorganized Church is placed in advance of all other churches, yet only as a link between other churches and a higher order called the "Order of Messiah," and after that comes the kingdom. So the church is all right in its place, but it is simply an ante-chamber to this higher order of things, as no one can enter "The Order of Messiah" without having first become a member of the church. "Joseph Smith, of Lamoni," is recognized as the rightful president of the church, and the church organization is all right, but in "The Order of Messiah," which is higher, and partakes of a military nature, are three Generals: 1st, "The General in Chief," to the world. 2d, "The General to the Jews." 3d, "The third General in rank is the Church General." "The General to the Jews" is to have his headquarters at Jerusalem, and "the Church General." "The General to the Jews" is to have his head quarters at Jerusalem, and "the Church General" will have headquarters at Independence, Missouri. After these follow other order of offices which I will not take space to mention.

The claim is made that Jesus Christ has "materialized" and revealed "The Order of Messiah" to this first General or messenger, and Joseph is called upon to accept it with the promise that it shall not interfere with the church. Here is the message:

"Therefore, Joseph, receive the Order of Messiah from God. It will not substitute the church, nor change the church nor annihilate the mission of the church. Have no prejudice against the Order, because Zion's counsellors shall be messengers of the Order. All are elders of the church organization, so nothing in the church will be interfered with, and they shall stand by the President's side and be messengers of the Order, and counsellors between the church and the Order, which shall have its own degrees given to it."—page 322.

Neither must the church direct the Order as will be seen by the following:—"Not any orders can be issued by the church to the Order of Messiah, but the Order receives it only by and through its own General, acting as church counsellor and third General of the Order."—p. 322.

The General in Chief over the whole world is said to be Dr. Poulson, a Spiritualistic Medium, of Oakland, California, through whom these manifestations come; but I have been unable to learn definitely from the book whether Dr. Poulson or some one else is this General. The second General, or General to the Jews, is to be David H. Smith, of whom it is said:—"David is in my hands and I will restore him unto health and strength to do my work, if he will listen to the voice of the Spirit, and receive him even as he shall receive this work. Amen."—p. 362.

Again: "The General for the Jews, my Messenger David, the second General of the Order, shall be represented by a vicar until he in person can arrive at his headquarters at Jerusalem."—p. 361.

The third General most interests us, as he is the General of the church, and as we have seen by quotation from p. 322 controls the "Order of Messiah." His name is John Parson, of Oakland, California. Of him it is said:—"The third General of the Order, the General to all the churches of Christianity, and the Church of Saints, my Messenger John, my apostle to the church at Utah, shall receive his endowment in the work by doing my will, and the power to conquer hindrances by, if he receives me in the Spirit in great meekness, as Moses did, then the spirit and power of Moses shall abide with him.

"He shall deliver the elect of my children from bondage, and into the gospel of freedom, and direct their way to Missouri, Iowa, Arkansas, Kansas, and Nebraska. This work which he shall superintend as the messenger in my Spirit and by my Father's blessing, shall he be assisted in by a host of faithful messengers called by the spirit of prophecy and revelation unto my work. . . . I will lead him into a new and happy future, as I wish to all my servants, that he may settle in peace and content at Independence, Missouri, and build himself a house and a home of rest and comfort, when he returns from his work and his mission to the scattered messengers and the Saints of the church."—p. 361.

He is to be an independent counsellor to the President of the church as we learn from the following: "The third general or church general has not necessarily to be a councillor, nor to be one of the two councillors to the President of the church, as he officiates independently as a counsellor from the Order to the President, if he should be in a hostile relation to the order from social disorder in the church."—p. 348.

Unless this relation exists the order or union is not perfect. "However in the true and intimate relation between the Order and the church, the spirit is one with the Order in the same unity of the Messiah, and can only be fully expressed in its true union by the third general of the Order being the counsellor to the president, and at times the right or left hand counsellor in the church."—p. 348.

This you see is the only way to bring unity, by the third general controlling the Order independently of the church, and at the same time counseling the president of the church in church affairs. This form of Spiritualism recognizes the church as being of God.

"Remain friendly to the Catholic and Protestant churches, because mine elect are to be found in all of them. The world shall condemn and persecute, but my Father's work shall go to the churches of Christianity, and to the Jews, and to mankind generally."

The Reorganized church is a link between the churches and the Order, upon the same principle as the Order is a link between the combined churches and the kingdom. Pages 7 and 8 of "Preface by the Messiah."

"Who is that youth you discover? He is the son, of the son, of the son, of the son of Joseph the Seer. The fourth link from Joseph, and the seventh of that family that shall preside in the church, or keep the priesthood in the direct line in the church."—p. 117.

"My servant Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, stands in his father's place by birthright as the president of the church," &c. p. 321.

IT ENDORSES MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

"The manifestations of Spiritualism gave to humanity a new influx and a new impulse of spiritual light and harmonial philosophy." (Page 3 of "Preface by the Messiah.") "The reality that materialized spirits appear is a fact given to man as the evidence of the resurrection from the dead."—p. 4.

"The movement of Spiritualism has met with the most hearty endorsement and cooperation of Jesus with the spiritual congress now presiding in the summer land." . . . "He visits Spiritual seances and controls and inspires mediums, and has materialized repeatedly at Terre Haute, Indiana, and other places known well to the history of Spiritualism, and his ancient aposles, Simon, Peter and John, and others have enlisted in the work of Spiritualism, by that means to convince man and spirits about the Spiritualism in the Scriptures."—pp. 231, 232.

"Love Spiritualism."—p. 375.

ENDORSES JOSEPH MORRIS.

"And in all I gave to Joseph Morris, I gave it him as he was able to receive it from me." "Let no corrections or comments be made on any revelation given to him, but in due time will I reflect more light on them all."—p. 113.

Numerous other men are endorsed, as well as the standard books of the church: "The same can be said about the Old and New Testaments, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations given to my servant Joseph, the Seer and to his son, my servant Joseph, of Lamoni, and in numerous other instances when revelations were given to Joseph Thompson, and my servants Lyman Wight, Sydney Rigdon, Strang and Hedrick, and the Whitmers, and others too numerous to mention; some of them very little known, as Gladden Bishop, Giles and John Livingston, and whoever they may be, down to Joseph, my servant, of Lamoni."—p. 113. I pause to ask who was Joseph Thompson, and in what age did he live?

MOHAMMEDAN RELIGION ENDORSED.

"Zion shall not stand deserted, but the King of Kings shall dwell in the holy mount, and shall be seen among Israel, for your people shall not forever be laid in dust and ashes, but when those who have slain you have filled their cup, shall Moriah again be redeemed and the temple foremost among temples in Canaan shall be seen near the Mosque of Omar."—p. 134.

SWEDENBORG ENDORSED.

"Joseph Smith was truly a prophet sent by my Father to give the infusion of a new light to humanity, as true as Emanuel Swedenborg was my messenger, and I revealed myself to him, and gave him light," &c.—p. 293.

BUDDHA RECEIVES RECOGNITION.

"Blessed be thou before all thy brethren, because the God of Brahma the meek has made thee meek, and caused thy soul to be ground in the dust that it might be polished in its own suffering to be a shining star in the firmament."—p. 295.

I had thought to pursue this subject further and to give some quotations in regard to the degrees and obligations of this Order, but I am admonished that this is enough. I will only say, there are three degrees provided for with ceremonies and obligations connected with each. They are the degrees of the "White Cross," the "Red Cross" and the "Golden Cross" or the "Royal Princes of Messiah."

I have given the above quotations without comment—they need none—they speak for themselves. But in conclusion allow me to say that I have investigated Spiritualism in many forms, and invariably turned from it disgusted with its workings. But this is the most dark, contemptible and deceptive phase of Spiritualism that I ever met. It is designed to entrap the Saints, and especially those whose testimony will not permit them to be deceived into renouncing the gospel as taught by the church. It teaches that the church is acknowledged of God, and will do its work, so you can accept this without diminishing your faith in that; you can not only be a good Latter Day Saint, but you can go farther. It cunningly claims that "nothing in the church will be interfered with," and yet seeks to fasten upon the church this "third General of the Order" as an independent counsellor to the president of the church; it makes him the General of the Saints as well as other churches, and says: "Now when the Order of Messiah is restored to earth and is in working order, the church will be taught its duty and will be kept strictly to it. The Order will be a schoolmaster to the church, and the division will be known between the church and the kingdom to come, which the Order will herald to the church, but the church has to go out into the world and convert the churches, and prepare the way for the Order and the kingdom to come."—pp. 327-8.

Nor is this all, it seeks to fasten upon the church an innumerable company of apostles possessing equal authority with the Twelve Apostles of the church. Here it is:—"Every brother and sister of the gospel of freedom is designated brother messenger or sister messenger. The words messenger and apostle are synonymous, and the Order of Messiah is an Apostolic Order; therefore is the priesthood, and the Spirit of the high priesthood of an apostle by ordination, bestowed on every member of the Order, with the power to officiate, equal in power with the Twelve Apostles of Messiah or the apostles in his church."—p. 352.

This, too, without the voice or consent of the church; for "not any orders can be issued by the church to the Order of Messiah." They act independently of the church, yet presume to officiate in the offices of the church. But "nothing in the church will be interfered with," oh no, it will only be "taught its duty," and "kept strictly to it," by this "schoolmaster," the First Presidency will be encumbered by a counsellor who will not be subject to the church and the apostolic office swarmed by a horde of Spiritualistic Mediums who, while they are beyond the control of the church, act in the same office with the apostles; that's all! No intrusion intended!

I feel called upon to say to the church, and especially the Saints under my charge who may have been contaminated by this influence: In the name of Jesus Christ denounce it as false and deceptive; accept only the pure principles of the gospel taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants as the law by which to govern your life. Beware of any man or spirit, which shall propose to teach you more or less than these, for they will lead you to destruction if you heed them. Should any man claiming to be a member of the church, undertake to introduce to you, for your acceptance, either this book, or the system of philosophy it teaches, set him down as an impostor and deceiver, for such indeed he is, and report him immediately to the authorities of the church. Be assured that the highest order, or organization ever delivered to man, by his Creator, is the Church of Christ with its organized quorums and priesthood.

May God preserve the Saints from deception and folly and keep them ever in the glorious light of his gospel.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

CATHOLICISM.—No. VI.

BY ELDER M. T. SHORT.

"THERE is no nation on the face of the earth where the church is less trammelled, and where she has more liberty to carry out her sublime destiny, than in the United States."

Our authoritative spokesman, who is the most dignified prelate between the two oceans, professes to disdain coercion for conversion, and avows that the voluntary murderer, or abetter, is disqualified to serve at the altar. Father McGuire, the Priest of Braidwood, Will county, Illinois, murdered the marshal of the place on Sunday, in the evening, after a three days' drunken debauch. He was not arrested, excommunicated, or reduced to the ranks, but simply given another charge. "She is indeed intolerant of error;" but should one of the faithful slay a man while famishing to obtain bread and meat, he could have the benefit of the clergy on the scaffold, and receive the rites of the church and "extreme unction;" unless he had inadvertently eaten of the meat during Lent, or on Good Friday.

"The Spanish Inquisition was not a purely ecclesiastical institution but a mixed tribunal." Its rigors were "inflicted by laymen, and subordinates, either without the knowledge or in spite of the protests of the Bishops of Rome."

Our scribe then goes to palliating, condoning, and mitigating the whole affair. He denies the enormity, extent, and atrocity of the movement. He thinks Florente, the ex-secretary of the board, was a degraded priest, who from interest and revenge, and to please his royal master, Joseph Bonaparte, the new king of Spain, gave a partial and inflated account of the inquisitorial proceedings. To divert, like an incubating fowl, all for the unwary, as she flutters, and flies away presently; so he judiciously withdraws from the many accusations and trial, the rack and torture, the fire and sword of the "mixed tribunal," and alights upon the intolerant Protestants.

Two negatives make the strongest affirmative in the Greek language; but two wrongs never make a right under the whole heavens.

When Henry the VIII threw off his allegiance he proscribed and persecuted his Catholic subjects. When he wrote against the claims of Martin Luther and the German Reformation, "the Vicar of Christ" called him a "legitimate prince," and titled him "Fide Defensor." The perfidy of the apostate king, or the barbarity of Elizabeth's reign could in no wise help the Moors and Israelites of Spain.

Those two peoples were branded as seditious heretics, even after they had been baptized.

"Islamism and Judaism were proscribed in Spain as criminal."

If the Papal world did not connive at this wholesale confiscation, extirpation and butchery, why did not "His Holiness" excommunicate Isabel and Ferdinand, as were Luther and Henry, by St. Peter's chair. The massacre of the French Hugonots, under the reign of Charles IX., was professedly on the grounds that they were a formidable power, a seditious element animated by treasonable designs against the throne, and the peace and welfare of the whole realm. The crowned head was a "legitimate prince," and a loyal, devoted son of the reigning pontiff and church. The night of St. Bartholomew's carnival of blood, when seventy thousand Protestants were brutally butchered, can not be forgotten, while memory and reason keep step with time and tide. When an envoy bore the news of the fatal episode to Pope Gregory XIII., he ordered a commemorative "Te Deum" to be sung; and, "in thanksgiving to God," a medal was ordered to be struck off for an ornament for the French monarch. This royal fiend, of Papal renown, laid the scheme, and ordered the heartless, bloodthirsty, blood-curdling deed that is not only a foul blotch upon the history of fair Europe, but an indelible stain upon the annals of fallen man. Evasions and apologies, absolutions, penances, expurgations, indulgences, pilgrimages, prayers, the sorrow of the laity, the administrations of the clergy; the benediction of the vatican, an ex-cathedra dispensation from "the center of unity," and the temporal and spiritual "treasuries of the church," may be lavished all in vain. No priestly incantation can undo the sad and gloomy night of woe. It would be a monstrosity indeed did not the dissenting children resemble, or possess some of the leading characteristics of their ferocious mother. From her they receive their ailment, animus, insignia, and equipments. This wayward parent is but advertising her own shame when she calumniates a refractory child as follows, viz: "It should not be forgotten that John Calvin burned Michael Servetus at the stake for heresy, and the arch-reformer not only avowed but justified the deed in his own writings, and established in Geneva an Inquisition for the punishment of refractory Christians."

Of the turn of affairs in England, and of the diverse policies of the two daughters of Henry VIII, deceased, our archbishop and cardinal says, "Mary's zeal was exercised in behalf of the religion of her forefathers, and of the faith established in England for nearly a thousand years. Elizabeth's zeal was employed in extending the new creed introduced by her father in a moment of passion, and modified by herself. Surely the coercive enforcement of a new creed is more odious than the rigorous maintenance of the time-honored faith of a nation.

Of D'Aubigne, the historian of the Reformation, he observes: "That veracious author has prudently suppressed or delicately touched Elizabeth's peccadillos." He should be loth to condemn others in the things he not only allows, but persistently practices in his own dear self.

In the ordinance of baptism, "which consists in the pouring of water," there is a plea for its essentiality to remit original sin; hence infant regeneration is asserted. Our first parents transmitted mortality to their offspring; but the second Adam atoned for original sin, and brought life and immortality to light after an infinite plan. Man's thoughts are not sinful from infancy, for "of such is the kingdom of heaven," but "from his youth the imagination of man's heart is evil."

Gospel is manufactured, and words are foisted upon Christ, to wit: Baptism is the essential means established for washing away original sins and the stain consequent thereto. To bolster up the pedo-baptism hobby, recourse is had and reference made to John 3: 3, 5. All sex, ages, and conditions; any one, and every one, or mankind in the most unlimited acceptation is vehemently claimed and persistently urged by our Roman informant. I wonder if he would place such a dogmatic and arbitrary interpretation upon the generic term, "man," as found in the goth Psalm, to wit: "Thou art God; thou turnest man to destruction and sayest 'Return ye children of men.'" Lydia and house are dragoon-ed into service; but Paul, the apostle, and Silas, the prophet, turned their attention, and address to "the women which resorted thither." "She was baptized and her household," of women, of course, which were doubtless female employees, or clerks. The brethren are thrown in prison and miraculously delivered. The jailor and family are enjoined to believe. The word of the Lord is propounded to them all. "He and all his" were baptized. He, with the little band, returned from without to within his house. All the new converts both rejoiced and believed, as well as the head and guardian of the happy home. "He rejoiced, believing in God with all his house."

But why follow these strained texts, these perverted scriptures, which can only furnish false premises for erroneous and disastrous conclusions.

Thus the mother church wrests the word of God, flies away on the wing of fancy and wanders through the dark and devious, the treacherous and dangerous morass of far-fetched and mythical tradition, as a Peg-a-lantern, a will-with-a-wisp, or a jack-with-the-lantern.

The ranking eminent prelate of fair Columbia, pretends to think that the Anabaptists of Germany, the immersionists of the sixteenth century, are ludicrous, fanatical and impudent for raising their feeble voices against the the thunder tones of all Christendom. He begs the question, the very livery of heaven, even "apostolic antiquity," to still the "feeble" voice of truth and right that came from over the sea. That "certain sound" has vibrated down the centuries, re-echoed round the world, and with age and travel, strength and power are developed. Read, brother Gibbon, of the trumpet's blast against the walls of Jericho, nor cavil, nor whine,— "What becomes of the Christian Church, if it has erred on so vital a point as baptism during the entire period of its existence?"

Why should you attempt to argue that little children have no inherent right, no natural claim to heaven? You admonish and urge Catholic parents to have their children baptized at the very earliest convenience. You touch the fond mother's heart in a skillful manner, as she seeks the well being of her progeny. "And yet the supernatural blessings of the child are often imperiled without remorse by the criminal postponement of Baptism." The reverend gentleman turns his importunings to the Baptists, begs and implores them to hear the old church and give their offspring the advantage of the doubt.

He censures the Episcopalians in convention assembled at Baltimore, for denying any moral change in regeneration, but he would find it difficult to tell when and how moral change comes in in infant regeneration.

In the Book of Mormon, Moroni, eighth chapter, the baptism of little children is called a "gross error;" "solemn mockery before God," etc; all because they are alive and whole in Christ, need no physician, neither repentance nor baptism, being neither accountable nor capable of committing sins. It is denying the mercy of God, the infinite atonement, the power of the good Lord, and trusting in dead works. "Behold, I say unto you, that he that supposeth that little children need baptism is in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity; for he hath neither faith, hope nor charity." Inspiration further saith to all that so believe and teach, practice and enjoin,— "Wo unto such, for they are in danger of death, hell and endless torment." The prophet was instructed from the true source and taught both pointedly and authoritatively.

Immersion is conceded to be a valid mode, but infusion and aspersion are held to be equally so, and the last named form is "the most convenient mode."

"For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity, baptism was usually conferred by immersion, but since the twelfth century the practice of baptism by infusion has prevailed in the Catholic Church, as this manner is attended with less inconvenience than baptism by immersion."

The more common practice in the Primitive Church is quite good enough for the people of God, this infusion and aspersion innovation and invention to the contrary notwithstanding. The three thousand at the first pentecost; the sick and the delicate; the imprisoned, the seafaring, and the Frigid Zone man, are all presumptuously booked for "the most convenient mode." "The successors of the apostles in the nineteenth century have precisely the same authority and obligation to confirm as they have to preach, to baptize, or to ordain;" "but the hands of the Episcopal bishops are spiritually paralyzed by the suicidal acts of the reformers." Palsy came to mother's hands a thousand years before the intrepid reformation of the sixteenth century. Hence, while she hopes to receive grace by the imposition of hands, she adroitly disclaims prophecy, gift of tongues, manifestation of miraculous powers, etc.

"Why do not these gifts accompany now the imposition of hands? I answer, because they are no longer needed."

Such daring blasphemers can not be the legitimate successors, therefore we confidently look for them in the restored gospel and accompanying church. The church doctors fain would tell us that tongues and miracles were "suited to the times," but "it is not now expected that they upon whom hands are laid" should be so wrought upon. He may know "he has received the Holy Spirit if he loves his brother;" but Pharisees and rascals, rogues and highwaymen have a bond of union.

Alma Mater calls the Scripture, "The infallible word," and says, "God created the heavens and the earth out of nothing." And the paralytic children and "separated brethren" acquiesce, and advertise the stupid falsehoods. The dissenting children allowed the superannuated maternal ancestor to dose them with Athanasius' views of three persons in the Godhead, but when she wishes them to open wide a gullible portal and swallow the sweet morsel of transubstantiation they will not do that even for relation's sake.

When the emblems for the Lord's supper are blessed by the consecrating priest, they are said to be no longer bread and wine, but only the "form" and "species" of these earthly substances. "The church teaches that Christ is received whole and entire under each species, so that whoever communicates under the form of bread, or of wine, receives not a mutilated sacrament, or a divided Savior." The element of bread is really "the living flesh of Jesus Christ, which is inseparable from his blood." Pope Gelasius was moved by Manichean sectaries to order "both kinds" for all. "This law continued in force for several ages, but towards the thirteenth century, for various causes it had gradually grown into disuse with the tacit approval of the church. The Council of Constance, which convened in 1414, established a law, the form of bread only "for the laity, or common herd."

On page 29 we are gravely assured,— "Her creed is now identical with what it was in past ages."

Again, 95th page,— "The doctrinal decrees of the church are irrevocable."

He avers that one single instance wherein the "Church ceased to teach a doctrine of faith which had been previously held, that would be the death blow to her infallibility." "No pope, or council ever revoked a decree." The church "enforced the use of the cup to expose and reprobate the errors of the manichees;" and, later, "withdrew the cup to condemn the novelties of the Calixtines." We will heartily join the Cardinal,— "What a strange spectacle to behold the same church teaching diametrically opposite doctrines." I do sincerely wish he would try his own medicine, and then he could behold himself as he is seen. Try it once, spiritual father. As immersion, although duly acknowledged to be the primitive mode of baptism, was supplanted by infusion or pouring, or aspersion or sprinkling for convenience, so the chalice, or cup is monopolized by the clergy, on the ground that it would be distasteful for so many, or all to communicate from the same vessel. "The convenience" plea is another protest against the use of the wine continually, and throughout all the zones of the earth. The careless and the unconcerned; the impious atheist and the lax libertine bring similar groundless objections against the law of duty and restraint; the rule of obedience and trust; the gospel of purity and salvation.

Gibbon makes Paul, the Apostle, say,— "The priesthood of the New Law was substituted for that of the Old Law."

The Levitical priesthood, called also the Aaronic, through Aaron and his grandson Phineas, &c., is called "an everlasting priesthood." See Exodus 40:15, and Numbers 25:13. When Jesus Christ, the messenger of the covenant will appear the second time without sin unto salvation "he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord as in days of old and as in former years."—Mal. 3:8.

Some have erroneously judged that the priesthood of Christ was for himself exclusively, and alone, whereas "after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest," even a "priest forever after the order of Melchisedec," with "unchangeable priesthood." The spirit and letter of the gospel, the external rites and ceremonies, and the internal graces and cooperative power of the Holy Ghost, were doubtless administered under the two grand divisions of the holy priesthood long before the birth of Melchisedec, or the anointing of Aaron, a descendant of Levi. In process of time, by divine permission, the people of God, to discriminate and characterize the prerogatives of the two callings, named the first in rank after Melchisedec, the illustrious king of Salem; and the latter in honor of Levi, the ancestor of the house of Aaron. The "able ministers of the New Testament" have "the ministration of the Spirit." They "ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you."

In Acts sixth, seven deacons are set apart, and ordained to "serve tables," or attend to "this business of a temporal character while the apostles were to pray, preach," &c.

A desperate and fruitless effort is made to fasten the Popish barnacle of "the sacrifice of the mass" upon precedent and authority of apostles. They dig up this living lie from moth-eaten rituals, and time-anchored liturgies. "Among others, we have the Liturgy of Jerusalem, ascribed to the Apostle St. James; the Liturgy of Alexandria, attributed to St. Mark, the Evangelist, and the Liturgy of Rome, referred to St. Peter." "There are various other Liturgies accredited to the apostles, or their immediate successors." "We account for this wonderful uniformity 'at the celebration of the mass' by supposing that the doctrine was received by the apostles from the common fountain of Christianity—Jesus Christ himself."

If there was one plain, "thus saith the Lord," "Holy Church would not have to ascribe, attribute, refer, or suppose anything about it; neither would she exhume these old creeds, or seek after the traditions of the fathers." "St. Paul says that Jesus Christ was offered once. How then can we offer him daily? I answer, that he was offered in a bloody manner and it is of this sacrifice that St. Paul speaks."

This is "private interpretation;" which the volume and the Catholic world denies and execrates. The deduction is at war with plain grammar, analogy, logic, reason or fact. Our exalted ecclesiastical dignitary wishes to learn "what better, or more efficacious way can we have of partaking of His merits than by assisting at the sacrifice of the altar?" I answer, through faith, and repentance; by baptism and confirmation; in obedience to God's commandments, and incessant perseverance is full salvation. "With what awe and grateful love should we assist at this sacrifice. The angels were present at Calvary. Angels are present at the mass." Prophecy, tongues, gifts, miraculous powers, and manifestations of the Spirit, by "the imposition of hands," are abrogated, or done away.

Mr. G. cuts the Gordian knot, as he proclaims, in the plenitude of his power, "I answer, they are no longer needed." Still, "angels are present at the mass;" which are "pure spirits without a body." How does he know when, or where the heavenly messengers appear if they are so very pure that they are wholly incorporeal and altogether immaterial!

"If the wounds of the martyrs plead so eloquently for us how much more the blood of Jesus shed daily upon our altars?" "Behold the Lamb of God," in every drop of consecrated wine, and each particle of the "blest bread," whole and entire, soul and divinity.

Our scribe wields the pen to defend "religious ceremonies," "which the church has ordained."

This "worthy celebration of divine service," even "the ceremonies now accompanying our public worship are, indeed, usually more gorgeous and elaborate than those recorded of our Savior; but it is quite natural that the majesty of ceremonial should keep pace with the growth and development of Christianity."

This "natural" appendage was purloined from Paganism; rigid, rank, and dark; reconstructed, embellished and enlarged to "keep pace" with the riches and despotism of the clergy, and the ignorance and superstition of the priest-ridden laity.

Christians can, and ought to grow, but the system of faith and worship was, is, and will ever abide perfect. The gospel of Paul is the perfect law of James.

The missal, or mass book, contains prayers so be said at mass, which varies not from year to year, and from age to age. These sentiments and forms have remained almost verbatim for a thousand years or more. In the service of the mass the priest advances from the sacristy, stands at the foot of the altar, confesses to God and his Saints, ascends the altar; nine times the divine elemency is invoked; intones the sublime doxology; sings the collects of the day; reads; chants; preaches; recites the Nicene creed; consecrates the eucharist; washes the tips of his fingers; changes the bread and wine into Christ's veritable body and bona fide blood; prays our Father et al, partakes, administers, blesses and concludes the whole dry mechanical farce with the opening words of John's record of the gospel.

The grounds for the use of the Latin language are that it was the language of the great empire that swayed the destiny of the world; the vehicle of thought for the early fathers, and thus became the depository of the treasures of sacred literature in the church. It is further urged that it became a dead and fixed tongue, while the doctrine and liturgy are uniform and unchangeable. The jewel of faith is set in a casket that changes not with time and decay, and the aim is to unify the Catholic world.

For lighted tapers upon the altar reference is made to the chandeliers of the old law. "Assuredly that can not be improper in the new dispensation which God sanctioned in the old." Their historical meaning connects with the Catacombs of the eternal city. The symbolic import represents "the light of the world;" as, also, "our light," with the bright and cheerful shining thereof.

To swing censers, burn incense, and adorn altars with brilliant candles, is journeying from "Jerusalem which is above," to "Mount Sinai in Arabia." With equal propriety and authority they could circumcise, keep the feast of the passover, and that of the unleavened bread, the whole ritual of the ceremonial law; every Jewish rite; and "crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame." The portions of the Decalogue, or ten commandments, that were not wholly abolished were so radically changed, and infinitely improved, that they are scarcely recognized any more.

Because the tribe of Levi, and especially the house of Aaron, were enjoined to wear distinctive apparel and peculiar attire, as shown in Exodus and Leviticus, "the church also, guided by heaven, prescribes sacred garments for her ministering priests."

Catholics imagine that this Popish regalia is eminently proper and becoming to impress the minister, "while engaged in the sacred mysteries," and remind the congregation of the "sublime functions he is performing." Outlandish inferences are drawn, as, for instance, the Magi presenting gifts to the infant Redeemer, to give credence and coloring to this forlorn priestcraft, this depraved superstition. The vestments are described in detail, but the color varies, as white for Christmas; red for Pentecost; green from Trinity Sunday to Advent; purple for Lent; and black, in masses for the dead.

Other feasts, and festivals not a few, are sandwiched in with the variegating fabric of the old church.

Conference Minutes.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Conference of the above district convened at Fall River, Massachusetts, June 16th, 1888. W. H. Kelley and J. Smith were chosen to preside, and Thomas Whiting and F. M. Sheehy clerks. W. Pucill and S. Smith appointed ushers. G. S. Yerrington, J. N. Ames, M. H. Bond and T. Whiting committee on branch reports, J. Halstead and G. H. Gates committee on auditing. The privileges of the conference were granted to all the visiting brethren. The minutes of the previous conference were then read and approved. Elders present and reported: M. H. Bond, U. W. Greene, E. N. Webster, G. H. Burnham, A. H. Parsons, A. N. Hoxie, G. S. Yerrington, H. H. Robinson, F. M. Sheehy, T. Whiting, J. Smith, W. H. Kelley, C. E. Brown, J. Holt, F. A. Potter and C. A. Combs. By letter: Joseph Woodward, R. Farnsworth, N. R. Nickerson. Priests present and reported: J. Halstead, A. O. Tripp, J. Hoxie, F. Steffe, T. Andrews and G. Fisher. By letter: A. W. Glover and F. L. Sears. Teachers: D. T. Shaw, S. Smith, G. Robly, R. Bullard, R. J. Searle. By letter: W. B. Leland. Deacons: M. Gondolph, T. Boyd, W. Pucill, A. B. Pierce, W. Fenner. J. Smith read his reports as district treasurer and Bishop's agent, which were referred to the auditing committee. The matter of abolishing the office of district president was taken from the table and largely discussed, after which it was indefinitely postponed. Communications were received as follows: Number 1, Attleboro, Massachusetts, June 16th, 1888. To the Saints of the Massachusetts district, Greeting: We the undersigned members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ respectfully request that your honorable body take some definite action relative to the organization of a branch of the church at Attleboro:—John M. Robbins, John Marchington, James T. Shellcross, Thomas B. Robbins, Arthur B. Pierce, Samuel G. Robbins, Lizzie Marchington, Nellie M. Buxton, Lydia A. Robbins, Harriet Bradshaw, and Maria Woolley. No. 2, From Western Maine District:—Whereas, the Massachusetts district conference in its late session indefinitely postponed action in regard to the proposed reunion meetings between Eastern and Western Maine and Massachusetts districts; Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the Western Maine district, in conference assembled, express our decided disapproval of said action as being detrimental to the interest of the work in this state, and respectfully urge a further consideration of said reunion meetings. No. 3, To the Massachusetts district conference: Whereas, action on the report of committee from Massachusetts and Western Maine, on the feasibility of reunion meetings to be held alternately between the districts was indefinitely postponed by the last Massachusetts conference; therefore be it resolved that we, the Saints of Eastern Maine, believing that said meetings will be a benefit to the cause, urge the consideration of said resolution by the next Massachusetts conference, and the practicability of appointing first for Eastern Maine. Adopted at Jonesport, May 13th, 1888, by the Saints of Eastern Maine district. No. 4, Resolved that we think the sustaining of notions that obtain by dreams or other manifestations, bad policy and dangerous precedent, when enforced as argument. These were all referred to a committee consisting of all the elders of the conference. Branch reports were received from Brockton, New Bedford, Providence, Cranston, Douglas, Dennisport, Little Compton, Fall River, Plainville, Boston. Adjourned until 9 a. m., Monday morning for business. Preaching Sunday morning at 10 a. m. by Elder Wm. H. Kelley; at 2 p. m. by H. H. Robinson and at 7 p. m. by A. H. Parsons. A praise meeting was held early in the morning. Monday morning, business meeting opened by singing and prayer. Minutes of Saturday's session were read. The elders committee reported; the report was acted upon by sections. Sec. 1, With regard to the request of the Attleboro Saints, we recommend that as the matter is already in the hands of the presidents of the mission and district, that we leave it to their wisdom and judgment. Adopted. In relation to communications, Sec's. 2 and 3, We recommend that the conference appoint a committee to act in harmony with the committees of Eastern and Western Maine districts, to bring about such reunion meetings. Adopted. Sec. 3, We recommend that the following substitute for communication (Sec. 4) be adopted by the conference: "That we think the sustaining of opinions by dreams or other manifestations, bad policy and dangerous precedent when enforced as argument." Adopted after a long discussion. A recommendation of the committee in relation to publications in the Herald, was laid on the table until the next district conference preceding the General Conference. Frank M. Sheehy, Thomas Whiting, M. H. Bond, Wm. H. Kelley and John Smith, were appointed committee to act with the Eastern and Western Maine committees in the matter of reunion meetings. The auditing committee reported having examined the documents referred to them and found them correct. Report adopted. John Smith was sustained as district president, and Thomas Whiting clerk. Wm. H. Kelley was sustained as missionary in charge. The general authorities of the church were sustained. The thanks of the conference were given to the Saints of the Fall River branch for their kindness and hospitality during conference. Music was rendered by Bro. O. E. Granger, organist, Bro. John Watts and Mr. William Booth, violinists, John Gilbert chorister. The statistical reports was as follows:—Boston 103, Plainville 63, Fall River 116, Little Compton 30, Dennisport 55, Douglas 16, Cranston 21, New Bedford 28, Brockton 30, Providence 172; total 634. District Treasurer's report:—Income with balance, $14 38; expenditure $5 28; balance 9.10. Bishop's Agent's report:—Income with balance, $1101.40; expenditures $812.32; balance $289.08. The committee on branch reports did not make any report, so the branch reports were referred to the district clerk. The next conference was ordered to be held in Boston the last Saturday and Sunday in January, 1889 at 2:30 p. m. A vote of thanks was given to Brn. A. H. Parsons and H. H. Robinson for their labors in the district.

KEWANEE.

This district conference was held at Millersburg, Illinois, Saturday and Sunday, June 23d and 24th. Elder J. W. Terry presiding. Minutes of former conference read and approved. Branch reports:—Henderson Grove 45, Buffalo Prairie 67, 4 added by vote; Millesburg 43; Kewanee 75, 3 baptized. M. T. Short reported by letter. John Chisnall, bishop's agent reported:—On hand last report $9 16, received since $53 25, total $62 41. Disbursements $58, balance $4 41. The following officers reported:—Priest, Dungee. Elders: D. S. Holmes, E. T. Bryant, John Chisnall, John D. Jones, J. W. Terry, and Teacher Hiram Williams. Of the seventy, Father Adams. The following was adopted:—Whereas, it has come to the knowledge of this conference that Bro. A. W. Strong was ordained to the office of deacon by the officers of the White Eagle branch, while said person was a member of the Buffalo Prairie branch, therefore be it resolved that such action was illegal, and is hereby declared null and void. Resolved that a two days meeting be held at Henderson Grove the 18th and 19th of August. From an attempt to "revive" the spiritual condition of the Canton Saints, the following passed the house:—Whereas the Canton branch has been for a long time in a semi-disorganized state to the detriment of the work, therefore be it resolved, that the president of this district be requested to go there and reorganize the branch; and if directed by the Spirit, to ordain such officers as may be needed for the welfare of the work in that vicinity, and that he be authorized to take with him such help as he may need. Services: Friday evening preaching by John D. Jones; Saturday evening by John Chisnall; Sunday 9 a. m. prayer meeting, and at 10:30 a. m. preaching by D. S. Holmes; at 2:30 p. m. Saint's meeting, and at 7:30 preaching by J. D. Jones. Four were baptized during the conference and throughout the session the Saints were blessed by the presence of the Holy Spirit. Adjourned to meet at Buffalo Prairie, September 15th and 16th.

WALES.

The quarterly conference of the Eastern district assembled June 10th in the Saints' meeting room, at Cardiff. Elder W. Morris president, Elder George Cope secretary pro tem. The conference was called to order at 10:45 a. m. Prayer by Elder D. Meredith. After singing hymn 861 (Saints' Harp) Elder J. R. Gibbs exhorted all present to be faithful ministers for Christ. He was sorry that Elder T. E. Jenkins, president of the mission, was detained at home, owing to the severe illness of his partner in life—his absence causing much regret to all assembled. Reports from branches were received as follows: Cardiff, Elders 2, Priests 2, Teachers 1, Deacon 1, removed by letter 3; total at present 14. Elder T. Gould president, Sr. Rhoda Bevan clerk. Aberaman, Heniriad 4, Offeriad 1, Deacon 1, Wediwarm 1, Aalodan 10, Cyfanswn 16, D. Davies, Llywrys, Rhondda, Heniriad 3, Offeriad 1, Aalodan 9, Cyfanswn 13. P. Price. Llywys. No reports were received from Merthyr, Ogmogre and Nantyglo. Moved by Elder G. Cope and seconded by Elder D. Meredith that the branch reports be accepted. Carried. The following elders reported their labors: Thomas Gould, J. Evans, D. Meredith, George Cope, W. Morris and J. R. Gibbs. Priests, T. S. Griffiths F. Bevan and R. Jenkins. Teacher Sydney Bevan. All expressed their determination to live for Christ, to spend and be spent in his service. Some of them had been serving him for thirty, forty and forty-five years, and still they desired to end their days in his service; for to whom should they look, or where should they go, Christ was eternal life to them. Elders D. Meredith and John Evans reported their labors at Ogmogre, they having been appointed to visit that place. Elder D. Meredith moved that the next conference be held at Merthyr, September 9th, 1888, which was adopted. Bro. T. S. Griffiths moved that the minutes of this conference be sent to the Saints' Herald, and that the next conference should be announced therein. Seconded by T. Gould and carried. The morning session was then brought to a close with prayer by G. Cope. At two p. m. divine service was held in a large room in Crockherbtown, and powerful sermons were preached by Elders D. Meredith, J. R. Gibbs and George Cope, to attentive audiences and again at half-past six p. m. in the same room. Preaching by Elders Thomas Gould and George Cope. Elder J. R. Gibbs at the close delivered an earnest appeal to those present to obey the gospel of the Lamb of God, and become united with his own recognized people on earth. Adjourned to meet at Merthyr, September 9th, 1888, to transact the business of the district. All persons holding office who are not able to attend in person should send their reports by letter, addressed to Elder T. E. Jenkins, 15 Broad street, Dowlais, on or before September 8th.

Welsh Hymn Book.

We have on hand about 100 copies of a book, entitled "Llyfr Hymnau at Wasanaeth Eglwys Iesu Grist, Ad-oleiddedig Sant y Dydd Diweddaf." There are 393 hymns in Welsh and 33 in English. It is published by the church in Wales, and sent here for sale. Sixty cents each, free of postage; bound in full leather, marbled edges.

Miscellaneous.

THIRD QUORUM OF ELDERS.

We make another appeal to you, and again ask that those whose names follow will please send on a postal card, or otherwise, their full address; we wish to hasten the completion of the circular letter. Through the kindness of Bro. H. A. Stebbins we have a complete list of the quorum. You need not send your reports until March 1st, 1889. We wish the address of the following members: William, Alden, Nathaniel Booth, Joseph Burnett, James Cazier, John Chapman, Christian Christianson, John R. Evans, Charles S. Frazier, Ruel Frost, Ira A. Goff, Edgar Harrington, William Hawkins, George Hawley, Reuben C. Hendricks, Reuben Hoyer, William R. Huscroft, Andrew Jacobson, Ralph Jenkins, Charles Kemish, Jonathan McKee, Ole Madison, J. E. Malcom, Z. S. Martin, Columbus Miller, Robert R. Montgomery, George Mottashed, George W. Nutall, Barton S. Parker, Madison Powlson, John Sayer, S. I. Smith, T. J. Smith J. Steel, John B. Swain, Garrett Walling, Benjamin G. Watson, James A. Wedlock, W. W. Whiting, Daniel M. Williams and Robert Young. Brethren please give this your attention by return mail; we are anxious to do the work assigned us. We are as ever, your servants for the truth.

BORN.

THOMAS.—At Samaria, Oneida county, Idaho, April 28th, 1888, to Mr. William R. and Ellen Thomas, a son. Blessed June 28th, 1888, by Elder R. M. Elvin, and named Edward.

DIED.

FLOWER.—At Independence, Missouri, June 15th, 1888, aged 44 years, Thomas Flower. He united with the church in 1873; was baptized by Bro. William Gittings. In 1874 he received an injury while laboring in a coal mine at Pinkneyville, Illinois, from which he never recovered. For over thirteen years he was helpless; both of his limbs being paralyzed. He was administered to at times and almost always felt blessed. He bore his misfortune patiently, and his faith was firm in the gospel. He passed away with a full assurance of a glorious resurrection of the just. Funeral sermon at the church by Elder F. C. Warnky from Rev. 14: 13. The following is an extract from a newspaper, the Democrat: "The devotion of Mrs. Flower and daughters to the husband and father during these long years of his affliction has been all that could be shown by a wife and daughters. They not only loved to supply him with the comforts of life, but did all in their power to keep him surrounded with an atmosphere of sunshine. His slightest wish was gratified as far as possible, and the family seemed to find more companionship in his company than in the most inviting pleasures of the world. Such devotion will not go without its reward."

HAY.—Near Hearne, Texas, February 15th, 1888, Oscar, youngest child of Bro. S. C. and Sr. Sally Hay, aged 2 years and six months. Almost without warning came the fell destroyer and laid icy hands upon this lovely budding plant, and bade its warm, young heart be still. He has gone; the little voice is hushed, the little hands are folded and the little feet are at rest.

THOMAS.—At Malad City, Oneida county, Idaho, June 25th, 1888, of old age, Sr. Mary Thomas; aged 81 years, 4 months and 12 days. She accepted the gospel in Wales, her native land, and came to Utah in 1853; was baptized into the Reorganization by Elder W. W. Thomas, May 26th, 1866. She leaves two brothers, seven children, forty-two grand-children and forty-two great-grand-children. There was a large attendance at the funeral; nearly every county officer was present at the service in the chapel. Sermon by Elder R. M. Elvin, from 2 Tim. 3: 10, assisted by John Lewis. The long cortege that followed the body to the last resting place on the lonely mountain side, was strong testimony to the esteem the people of Malad held for the departed. A mother in Israel has gone to the abode of the just.

FOSTER.—At Independence, Missouri, July 3d, 1888, of whooping cough, Emily C. daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Foster, grand-daughter of Elder George Hayward, aged 1 year, 7 months and 8 days. Funeral services by F. C. Warnky.

"Fold her, O Father, in thine arms,
And let her henceforth be A messenger of love between
Our human hearts and thee."

HARRIS.—At his residence near Glen Easton, West Virginia, June 17th, 1888, our much loved brother, Elder Aaron Harris, passed away, in his 68th year. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ for nearly twenty-two years, and has always been a faithful servant of the Lord. He was president of the Fairview branch. While we mourn his loss it is not as those that have no hope. His sickness was of only two days duration, yet his sufferings were great. He died in strong faith, and we feel that our loss is his great gain.

HAMPTON.—At Livermore, California, June 8th. Sr. Irena Hampton; aged 30 years, 5 months and 3 days. She leaves a husband and five little children to mourn their loss. She was a patient wife, a loving mother, and earned the respect of all her neighbors, who deeply feel her departure.

ROBERTSON.—At Independence, Missouri June 29th, 1888, of paralysis of the brain, Henry J. Robertson, husband of Sr. Lizzie Robertson; aged 45 years, 8 months and 29 days. For several weeks his sickness lasted, much of which time he was unconscious. He was buried from the the house of Elder Joseph Luff, his brother-in-law, on the 30th of June. Elder F. G. Pitt conducted the services.

PAYTON.—Near Decatur, Nebraska, June 20th, 1888, of puerperal fever, after an illness of fifteen days, Mary E., wife of Mr. G. W. Payton, aged 40 years, 7 months and 33 days. She was baptized at Preparation, Monona county, Iowa, March 26th, 1865, by Asa Walden. She leaves a husband and ten children, three brothers and two sisters, and a large circle of sympathizing friends to mourn their loss. Services at the grave, in charge of Rev. Queen, of the Baptist Church.

LIVINGSTON.—At Buffalo Prairie, Illinois, May 11th, 1888, of black diphtheria, Floyd, son of John W. and Maggie Livingston, aged 1 year, 1 month, and 11 days. May 13th, Mary Ellen, daughter of above, aged 5 years, 5 months and 22 days. May 16th, David O., son of above, aged 3 years and 7 months. Funeral sermon June 17th, at Latter Day Saints chapel by Elder D. S. Holmes. Text Isaiah 16: 26, 27. These were all the children our friends had, and all died in one short week of the same disease.

CLUTE.—At St. Louis, Missouri, July 4th, 1888, Mr. George F. Clute. He was born at Castle, Wyoming county, N. Y., December 12th, 1866. He was suddenly called away by heart disease. Mr. Clute had been sleeping a few moments, and was called by his mother to view the fire-works which he had expressed a desire to see. Passing out upon the roof from the upper rooms he fell twice in quick succession, stating that he had a strange feeling, and all was over. He was not connected with any church. His widowed mother said of him: "Not one hour of grief or pain did he cause me in life, aside from that occasioned by his sickness." The burial took place on the 5th. Mrs. Clute's sadness is sore, though surrounded by many friends. Funeral services and sermon by R. Etzenhouser.

"AN ADULTEROUS GENERATION."

"Domestic infelicity, divorces, marital irregularities and infidelities, elopements of married men with other men's wives, separations, and so-called affinities have become so common that they have almost ceased to attract observation, or at most only furnish material for a day's gossip and wonder. Now and then, however, one of these scandals appears so outrageous in its circumstances and so aggravated in its meanness, viciousness, and moral degradation that it becomes a matter of more than passing moment and calls for prompt and sweeping denunciation."

On reading the above which we take from the Chicago Tribune of late date, we are reminded that the late president William Marks, in 1859, stated that just prior to the death of Joseph Smith the Seer, he (Marks) heard a most striking and woeful prophecy delivered in Nauvoo, in which it was said that the time was near when "the spirit of adultery" would go forth like a flood, many in the church would be corrupted and fall thereby, that the world would receive it largely, and that its ruinous defilements would abound in all quarters.

That this had a shocking fulfillment in Nauvoo and elsewhere among some of those professing to be Saints, from about the time this prophecy was delivered, is too apparent to now need proof with those acquainted with the history of the church and since. And that it has had, and is having a terrible and sweeping fulfillment outside the Church of Christ is seen in the "free-love" agitations, and similar movements that have blinded and destroyed their millions in the past fifty years, and that are now engulfing their numberless victims from nearly all grades and departments of society.

Paul, in 2 Timothy 3:6-9, clearly fore-shadows how this great evil would ensnare some of the Saints "in the last days," for he says:

"For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts; ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was."—2 Tim. 3:6-9.

Moroni predicts this same state of things among professed Saints in the last days, when he says: "O ye pollutions, ye hypocrites, ye teachers, who sell yourselves for that which will canker, why have ye polluted the holy church of God?"—Book of Mormon 4:4.

Among the chief and most effective means for polluting the individual, and the Church of God, is this adulterous spirit. If permitted, it pollutes the heart in its desires, and then the very fountain is corrupt, the "chamber of imagery" is defiled, and evil deeds follow when convenient occasion is presented.

The grossness of this evil, and also the danger of it, is seen in the strong and sharp denunciation of it by the Almighty:

"And he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out."—D. C. 42:7.

This is further confirmed in these pertinent words:

"And verily I say unto you, as I have said before, he that looketh on a woman to lust after her, or if any shall commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith and shall fear; wherefore, I, the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whoremonger, and the sorcerer, shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Verily I say, that they shall not have part in the first resurrection."—D. C. 63:5.

That much, very much, of the blindness and vileness found among professed Saints have arisen from the withering, ruinous sin of adultery and its like, is beyond question. When the heart and soul is defiled by desire or deed in this direction, the Spirit of God is grieved, the powers of heaven withdraw from the individual, and unless he or she repents they go down to ruin and to woe. But when the heart is kept pure, the light of God will enter the soul and make it "all glorious within," its pathway will lie "beside the still waters," and "upon the high places of earth." "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

In this "adulterous generation" the strictest care should be taken to keep the innermost springs of the soul free and untainted from all impurity of flesh and spirit. "Abstain from all appearance of evil."

The clipping at the head of this article does not exaggerate in its statement of the evils it condemns. All who are conversant with the news of the day are aware that adulterous, lecherous, "fleshly lusts" are sweeping through the world like a deadly sirocco, and that vast numbers are falling beneath its polluting power. The Saints, and the young, should carefully, persistently cultivate the saving graces of genuine Christianity and enjoy that "beauty of holiness" found alone in the blessed gospel of Christ. Therein is safety; therein is joy and gladness, for they are "profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

HAND-BOOK ON PRIESTHOOD.

Who will compile for general church use a hand-book on the various and distinctive offices in the church, defining their respective grades, authority, privileges, powers and ministrations, taking their facts from the standard books of the church and church history? We have no hesitancy in predicting that a faithful work of the kind here indicated would go very far in imparting essential knowledge on that subject, promote unity largely among the ministry and membership, and aid greatly in securing needed uniformity in sentiment, teaching, and administration. That such a work would meet with ready sale goes without saying. Shall we soon have such a work? Who will undertake it?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Sarah Hannaman, recently baptized by Elder Beatty, wrote the 12th instant from Chauncey, Athens county, Ohio, and says:

"Brother Beatty is inspired by the Spirit of truth and seems to have no other purpose than to do good. He labored in the midst of prejudice, but I think that some seed has been sown that will take root in honest hearts."

Bro. J. C. Clapp wrote from John Day, Oregon, the 9th instant, saying he had baptized three estimable ladies there of late and had several more applications. He intends to organize a branch there soon. He says further:

"Weather hot. Satan turns his dogs loose occasionally, but they only growl a little and go back to their kennel. The Lord is with us."

Bro. C. G. Lanphear wrote us from Andover, Alleghany county, N. Y., the 12th instant, sending for publications, and says:

"I am doing what I can in giving the people a knowledge of the gospel and latter day work."

Bro. E. W. Nunley writes from Wheelock, Texas:

"Have been preaching in Hills county, near Peoria, and have baptized four, two heads of families and two ladies. Some opposition had been aroused and for this cause, with the fact that the people desire to hear our claims, I look for a further ingathering soon."

Writing from Senior, Texas, the 10th instant, Bro. I. N. Roberts says:

"I have baptized nine since the first of June. The work is moving on nicely in this mission."

Bro. J. C. Clapp writing from John Day, Oregon, where he has been preaching and baptizing, says in a letter dated July 12th:

"Plenty of work, prospects bright and the Lord is with me."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. N. P. Clawson wrote from Salina, Sevier county, Utah, the 7th inst., that Elder S. Borgquist, of Richfield, Utah, had spent considerable time during the past year in the surrounding settlements, talking with the people, distributing Heralds and Banners and tracts, and had succeeded well in reaching the judgment of many.

Elder S. F. Walker, author of "The Ruins Revisited," leaves to-day for Cincinnati, Ohio, to attend the Exposition. He will be in that city until the close of the Centennial Celebration, and after that will remain for some time in the state of Ohio, holding himself in readiness to respond to calls for ministerial labor. Saints in southern and central Ohio desiring the labors of Bro. Walker can communicate with him, care of the Post Office, Cincinnati, Ohio, until notified through the Herald of a change in his address.

In Herald of July 7th, page 439 in marriage notice, read "John," instead of "George" Nesbet.

HEALTH HINTS.

HERE are some of the chief rules for patients to observe who are seeking health and healing under that system called Christian Science. Many of them are good, but not new. They have been urged by the best instructors on health topics for centuries past—notably in the present and last centuries. Read and profit by them:

Stop thinking or talking of your own or any other person's beliefs of sickness; also do not listen to any such conversation, and if it can be avoided in no other way absent yourself from any company where it is carried on.

Have no doubts of your final restoration to health, even if the case should be slow to yield. Truth must be victorious, and a doubtful condition of mind on your part but retards your cure. Allow no one to talk to you in a discouraging way about your case, but be loyal to science whatever friends may say or think, and you are sure of reward.

Above all, stop gossiping about the truth or humbug of science or your scientist. Be firmly grounded in the faith that science is true, and do not be blown about by the opinion of others. If troubled by doubts express them to your scientist only, and you will be shown the way out of them, while other people will but add to your perplexity. You must have the witness in yourself that science is truth, and then the affirmations or denials of mankind will not disturb you; until you do have this witness there is little peace for you. Look within your own soul for answers to all questions in regard to spiritual things, and then act on those answers. Act on your own best thought and not look to others to be led.

Never think or speak slightly of science whether you understand it or not; it is dangerous to you to do so.

Not only never take any medicine, but have no desire to do so; it will hinder your recovery if you do. God is equal to your cure without these man made discoveries.

Be grateful for all improvement, whether it be much or little.

Do not try to conceal anything from your scientist, who holds all his patients' communications confidential. A concealed sin or trouble might be the very thing your scientist needs to cure you.

Keep your thoughts on pleasant things. Think as little as possible of your condition. Forget that troublesome self by lovingly doing for others.

Give no one any but good, kind thoughts. Any feeling of ill will or revenge might prevent your cure.

Have no anxiety about anything. It is a fruitful cause of sickness. Regard it as sinful, since it is doubting that your life is ruled by wisdom and love. "All that is not of faith is sin," and anxiety is far from being faith.

To sum it all up, the more loyal a patient is to science and the greater his faith in God (Good) the quicker will be his release from sin or sickness. Look alone to God for your cure and regard your scientist as but the instrument through which God works. Do not make too much of your scientist, for in that case you depend too much on him and too little on God. Make practical every bit of truth that you know. Help yourself all you can rather than rely on another's realization of truth.

By practicing these rules you will grow strong in truth, and that means to have the physical expression of strength.

Original Poetry.

AN EXHORTATION.

Up and away, thy Savior gone before,
Why dost thou stay, dull soul; behold the door
Is open, and his precepts bid thee rise,
Whose power hath vanquished all thine enemies.

In vain thou say'st, thou'rt buried with thy Savior,
If thou delayest to show by thy behavior
Thou art risen with him; till thou like him shine,
How canst thou say His light is thine?

Open thine eyes, sin-seized soul, and see
What cobweb ties they are that trammel thee;
Not profit, pleasure, honors as thou thinkest,
But loss, pain, shame, at which thou kindly winkest.

All that is good, thy Savior dearly bought
With his heart's blood, and it must then be sought
Where he keeps residence who rose that day;
Linger no longer then, up and away.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Duty makes as strong a claim
As if an angel called your name
And all men heard the call."

SISTERS, HAVE YOU HEARD.

WHILE waiting for the names to come in for enrollment in the Prayer League, we have more than once been led to wonder why they came so slowly, and at last have been led to question privately quite a number of the sisters to ascertain whether or not they approved of it. With two exceptions the answer has always been in the affirmative; but various causes have been assigned as the hindering one standing in the way of the names not having been sent before. There is a couplet ringing in our memory to-day, and we transcribe it here:

"Do at once what you're to do,
Time doth pass away."

How swiftly the hours glide by, and the days lengthen into weeks, months and years. The League is to be formed, and next week we will publish the readings and subject for concert of prayer. We have thirty-four names enrolled, and before the close of 1888 we expect to number them by hundreds. Are there no tried and tempted ones; none who are buffeted and sorely afflicted? If there is comfort, hope and strength in unity of purpose and heart, why not join us. Some have written, "We are so situated that it is not possible for us to meet together." To such we say, There is no request made that you should do so. Make your wants known to God just where you are. If He meets with you your prayer is heard; and if heard, then the apostle tells us it is answered. Others have written, "We would like to meet together at a stated time." To these we say, Meet, and may God meet with you.

We will give a report next week of the amount paid into the Home Column Missionary Fund since we last notified our readers just how it stood. We would like to tell you that it is being sustained mainly by persistent, self-sacrificing effort which can never be properly estimated by dollars and cents; and to such as have contributed in this way we wish to say, "Jesus is standing over against the treasury," and he is not estimating what is being done as man estimates it. Be faithful just a little longer over the few things, and he will make you ruler over many. Yes, even those who have not cast in a penny, will find that the will has been taken for the deed, and that which they had in their heart to do has in reality been done. Who would not serve such a Master with gladness!

Last week there came to us from a brother in Streator, Illinois, a beautifully wrought spool stand made by the sender, a man seventy-two years old. This he desired should be sold to the highest bidder for the benefit of the Home Column Fund. One party bid $1.50 for it before it came to our hand; but we expect to get more than that for it before we part with it, and will render our account through the column. God bless the aged hands which wrought the gift, and refresh the memories of the sisters, that when their birthdays come they may not forget their offering. One sister in Colorado, sending one dollar, says, "I have saved a long time to obtain this amount. As a band of Saints we hope for a glorious resurrection, and how can we express our desires better than by good deeds?" To each one of our Home Column Band we say, Press on!

"Keep doing good,
Keep helping needs,
Keep high thy aims,
Keep pure thy deeds."

INDEPENDENCE, MO., June 27th.

Dear Sisters:—The Herald is always a welcome visitor in our household, as it comes to us weekly, freighted with glad tidings of great joy, full of encouragement to the despairing and timely warnings to the tempted, while truth is the more made manifest as the opposing powers redouble their efforts to tear it down. For one, I am thankful that the Herald is an investigator, not only of our own faith, but of the belief of others and of the false doctrines which the Saints are sure to meet sooner or later, and which, from having seen both sides of the question in the Herald, we are in every case prepared to see the superiority of truth over error; and the Saints should be lovers of the truth. Neither need we be astonished if we ourselves are sometimes found in error, or offended if our mistakes are pointed out; for if we could know everything at once, there would be no need for the Lord to add "line upon line" or "precept upon precept," so that we might grow in the knowledge of truth. An investigation of our doctrine should not end with baptism; nor must we suppose that we have nothing more to learn after we have been duly confirmed a member of this latter day work. The very term, "latter day work," signifies something to do, something to be learned, a work to be accomplished; not merely for this life only, but for eternity. If it were only for this life, then we might make the requirements of fashion, or the dictates of those who follow after the pleasures of this life, an excuse for never attempting to do anything for the Master's cause; but "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," and "search the scriptures," are declarations more binding upon us than any of the world's requirements.

And, sisters, how much better opportunities we have of searching the scriptures that we may know the way of life, than many of our mothers and grandmothers had, if we avail ourselves of them. For instance, while they had to manufacture their own cloth and do the sewing for their families by hand, we have not only the cloth ready made for us, but our good sewing machines, which greatly lessens the labor of sewing, particularly if we are mindful of the requirement "Let all thy garments be plain."

I have read with interest what has been written in the Herald upon the subject of dress, and I find we do not see this matter alike; for while some think the above quotation has reference to the unnecessary adornment of our clothing, and that we should not so adorn them, and have brought forth, as they claim, abundant proof from the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenant, of the correctness of such belief, there are yet others who seem to think that if it has any reference to the adorning or trimming, it means that we should so adorn. But I believe the latter have failed to give us scriptural proof of their belief. Now, as unity of faith upon this question, as upon all others, is what we should desire, an exchange of our views on the subject, if given in the spirit of love, may be of advantage as it may point out the errors as well as the truths. Now upon the 144th page of Doctrine and Covenants we read: "And again, thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands; and let all things be done in cleanliness before me." Evidently the law-giver meant something when he gave this law, but what it is we must try to find out.

Now, if there can be no connection between the pride of our hearts and the manner of garments we wear, why are they both connected in the above quotation, as some think that if our hearts are right it is no matter how we are dressed; but if our hearts are right will we not comply with any requirement of the Lord as soon as possible after we understand it? And again, if he meant we were to wear only the cheapest kind of clothing, could he not have said so? I do not know that the Scriptures forbid any who are able to wear a silk dress or a suit of broad-cloth, but I do read that the suit or the dress shall be made plain. Well, says one, why don't you read the rest of it, "And their beauty, the beauty of the work of thine own hands." Now don't that mean you should beautify your clothes? You can not keep that part of this law unless you adorn them. Very well; as this is a law to the church, if the sisters can not keep it without putting on some kind of lace or ruffles or embroidery or fringe or jet ornaments, neither can the brethren. "Oh, how absurd," says some one. "No one thinks of trimming the gentlemen's clothes; it is not the fashion." But we were not discussing the fashion and the brethren. Elders especially, ought not to be slaves to fashion, but should set the example of keeping the law; so if "let their beauty" means to beautify by trimming, ought not our elders to put the law into practice? And then we must try to find out what is meant by making them plain. A good many, if you ask their opinion upon this question, will say, "Oh I don't think it means that we should not trim our clothes;" but if they see a dress made wholly without trimming, will say, "Why that dress is made perfectly plain," or, "How plain Mrs. so and so is dressed," or "I have made my new dress with a plain skirt." And if one asks how is that, the answer will be, "Without trimming of any kind." Some believe it has reference to adorning, but say we should not go to extremes, but trim your garments a little. Now, sisters, if the Lord says Thou shalt not lie, does he mean that we shall not lie at all, or that we may lie a little, just enough to make a good story? The good book says, "Be not deceived. God is not mocked;" also, "Why is it that ye receive not the preaching of him whom God hath sent? if ye receive not this in your hearts ye receive not me."

Now, sisters, or brethren either, if I am mistaken upon this question, I sincerely hope some one will be kind enough to point out the errors, and so far as my own personal taste and love for the beautiful is concerned, it would please me, if I knew that the Lord did not require us to make our garments without trimming; but if clothes that are so adorned are plain, then surely clothes that are not trimmed, are plain too, and I don't think the Lord would have said, "Let all thy garments be plain," if it was impossible to make them otherwise. It does not say there should be very much beauty about them, but as I understand it, that we should try to make them as nicely as we can, and still make them plain. I know this would require some sacrifice of our own natural minds and tastes, but some have even been required to sacrifice their lives for the work's sake; and I have wondered if in this day any of us would sacrifice the work for the sake of dress. The Lord forbid! There have been many quotations bearing upon this subject, made in the Herald within the last two years, and I remember reading a printed sermon of Bro. T. W. Smith's years ago, long before I united with this church, in which he said (as near as I can remember) that if the church was ever wrecked, the rock of fashion was one upon which it would be wrecked. And, sisters, if so be that this is a rock of evil, a stumbling-block, or hindrance of the progress of the good ship of Zion, may there not be something required of us to help remove this rock of offense; and, if we have not heeded this requirement of the Master as we ought, is it not time that we set ourselves to understand and to obey? Will it be any better to keep putting it off? If we are not strong enough to renounce the ways of the world in this respect, will our children in the future be likely to be any stronger than we are? And, as the wise and foolish are to grow up together until the coming of our Lord, it will hardly do for the wise to say, Well, when the whole church adopts such a mode of apparel, then we will, because the foolish may want to wait till all the world obeys that law; but we will each one have to stand or fall for ourselves. "What will the record be?" In all these things let us have charity one for another, and guard against a spirit of envy, jealousy, or hatred.

With prayers for the welfare of Zion and all the honest in heart, I close.

Your sister in the one faith,

E. L. ANDERSON.

FORSTER, Australia.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I feel it a duty to write a few lines to you. The Herald is a welcome visitor, both edifying and instructing us in the ways of wisdom. I am trying to serve the Lord to the best of my ability. If we ask the Lord for strength and are sincere in heart, he will aid us in all good things.

I can never doubt the great latter day work. I am sure it is of the Lord. When I read the testimony of the brothers and sisters, my heart overflows with gratitude to God that he thinks us worthy to send his servants here to show us the light of the gospel. My prayer is that we may hold fast the rod of iron that we may be heirs of his kingdom, and that if we live till Christ comes our lamps may be trimmed and burning.

Brother and sister Burton are in our branch at the present, for the last time. They will soon start for home, and it will be hard to say good-bye to them, as they have won the love of all the Saints here. May the Lord bless them in all their works of love; and if we never meet again on earth, may we meet in Zion with all the redeemed. We will soon be looking for brother and sister Smith; they can do a good work here.

Your sister in the gospel,

M. A.

Dear Sister Frances:—We are now in Forster, the "rest haven" of Australia. How glad we were to meet the dear Saints in this place again. I do not think I could have been much more pleased if it had been our own home we had got back to instead of here; and I do not know what more our own people could do to manifest their love and respect for us, and their joy at seeing us again, than these Saints here have done. And now as I look out from my window on the pleasant and familiar surroundings, and know that ere long I must bid it all adieu, and part from these kind loving friends who have been Saints indeed to us, the tears dim my eyes; but this I know, neither time nor distance can ever erase this bright spot of earth from my memory, and I thank my God that he gave us the privilege of coming to this distant land where we have made many friends. The sorrow it cost us was only for a season; but the memory of kind and loving friends will be with us the rest of our lives; and even if we have merited no reward in the great "beyond," the years have been well spent; for we have the love and the prayers of many more now than when we came here, and that will continually add to the joy of our lives here in this world, and is well worth a little suffering to obtain. I can now realize more fully that God has made of one blood all the families of the earth, and full as near akin to those who a few years ago I looked upon as "strangers and foreigners," as to those of my own native land. All over the world the great brotherhood extends, and Christ is the Savior of the world! All are alike to him, and all would be alike to us if we but knew as he knows; thanks be to his precious name, we are learning, and with increasing knowledge, comes with increasing force the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." Our experience does but strengthen the desire to help carry the glad tidings to every member of the one great family—yes, the glad tidings that our "elder brother" is soon to come to execute the Father's "will" concerning this portion of his great estate. Who will perform the legal part that is required of them as children, that they may claim their portion as heirs to the vast possession, that when the inheritance is divided they may have a dwelling place which will abide forever?

The Saints of Forster are seeking diligently to secure their portion in the great will and testament. They are united and happy. May God still continue to bless them, and help them to put forth every effort to obtain a rich inheritance that fadeth not away.

SISTER EMMA.

NOTICE.

GALENA, Indiana, July 14th.

Bro. Joseph and William:—I have just returned from Byrnsville, Harrison county. Our meetings closed there on the 11th inst., and two more were baptized on the 10th, making ten we have baptized at that place, and many more are near the kingdom. Two of their Reverends put in an appearance last Sunday. One was of the sanctified class who said he was saved and saved now. He was beyond the power of Satan to tempt him. He thanked God he prayed three times a day. Old Pharisaical doctrine revamped. While we believe that sanctification is a bible doctrine we deny their application of the term. Aaron was sanctified to the priest's office by command of the Lord through Moses, yet he was Aaron after his sanctification, as he was before, subject to the same general laws of nature that other men are. Therefore we are forced to the conclusion that it was not the material of the thing or person that was changed, but its use. Aaron was the same. So was the offering and the animals after sanctification as they were before in point of material substance. It was not the substance of the thing or person that was changed, it was its use. It follows as a logical consequence that the term sanctification means no more nor less than "to set apart from a common to a sacred use." Everything that could be said against us and the work, has been said, but old ship Zion is still out on the ocean sailing and her colors unfurled.

Yours in the conflict,

M. R. SCOTT.

SOUTH RAWDON, N. S., July 4th.

Brethren Joseph and Blair:—A great many of the Saints asked me to write them when I got through; it is impossible to do this otherwise at present than through the Herald. After the General Conference, having received this appointment, I set about arranging my affairs to come directly here. Passing through Kansas, I had the pleasure of preaching a number of times, and baptizing eight, and blessing a number of children, and administering to the sick. The power of God accompanied the administrations. Leaving Kansas I stopped four days at Independence, Missouri; a profitable call for me, and enjoyed very much. Thence to Chicago, where I met with the Saints once, and visited relatives seven days. While there I visited brother and sister Muetze, who are quite feeble in body, but strong in the faith of our Lord. May God's fostering hand be over them. Thence to Providence, Rhode Island, where I enjoyed the hospitality of brother and sister Bond. Met with the Saints in prayer service at 10:30 a.m., where comforting words were spoken to me concerning my labors here. Thank God for the gospel and its gifts. I spoke to the Saints twice, and on Wednesday went to Attleboro and spoke to the Saints and friends at 7:30 p.m. in Bro. Bradshaw's house with fair liberty. Bro. Coombs came up from Plainville and took me home with them after preaching. I preached for them in their chapel and enjoyed myself immensely at both places. Returned to Providence, thence to Fall River, Massachusetts, by boat, preaching for them two Sabbaths. Thence to Little Compton, Rhode Island, where we spent four evenings talking gospel to the Saints and friends. While there I made my home with Bro. Joseph Pierce, and my visit was made pleasant by himself and wife, who has since been called away by death. It was a shock to me when the news came; but our acquaintance with her, although short, gives us a full assurance that if we are faithful till death we will meet her again. May the fostering hand of a loving Father ever shadow the bereaved husband, our beloved brother, and give consolation and comfort. Thence we returned to Fall River for the district conference, which convened June 16th. We had a very pleasant session in some respect, and I trust it was profitable to all. We were detained after conference by Bro. Kelley, who had requested us at Independence to stop over until after this conference. We knew not why his request was so urgent until after conference when it began to dawn upon our benighted minds. We left Fall River for Boston, June 23d, Bro. and Sr. Robinson stopping at Brockton over Sabbath, he to preach for them. We arrived at Bro. Steffe's and preached twice on the Sabbath in their hall. Enjoyed our stay in Boston very much, as Bro. and Sr. Steffe did every thing to make us happy; God bless them. Bro. Briggs, Kelley and Sheehy came to Boston on Tuesday and saw us take shipping on the "New Brunswick" for this country, with smiles all over their faces and prayers for our safety in crossing the deep, and success in this field. We shook hands and bade them all good bye, with the assurance that if we met no more on this stage of action, we will meet where parting is not known, if faithful. It is cheering to know that you are remembered by your brethren while far away. After three hundred miles ride on the deep blue sea, we arrived at Annapolis, making one stop at Digby, sixteen miles west of Annapolis. We stopped in the river Annapolis opposite Digby, where a tug came out with a flat boat to take in the passengers and freight. This is called a river but it is an arm of the sea. Where we entered this river the mountains are on each side. The captain said they were nearly seven hundred feet high, covered with beach, pines, hemlock, fir, junipers, and other kinds too numerous to mention. At Annapolis we took train at 1:30 p.m., June 29th, for Hansport, Bro. and Sr. Robinson stopping off at Kentville, where Bro. Newcomb met them and took them over the hills and dales to his place ten miles. We arrived at Hansport at 7 p.m., and Bro. Holmes J. Davison met us at the depot with team and took us out to his place two miles away. We stopped one night, he having made arrangements for me to preach at this place, so we said good bye and took train for Elerhouse where we expected some one would meet us; but alas no one there only strangers and it raining as though everybody was at home, while we were in a strange country with but a few pennies and twelve miles from where we were wanted the next day and it 7 p.m. The cause was the lack of Bro. Dimock getting the mail to meet us. We squandered our pennies for a rig to carry us out through the rain. We took them by surprise at Bro. Dimock's as they knew nothing of our coming that day. Sabbath afternoon as it stopped raining Bro. Dimock called in a few of his neighbors, and as I was in the act of commencing meeting in stepped brother Wood and lady on the hunt of us. They had met at chapel at 11 a.m., expected hat I would be there sure. After preaching Bro. Dimock brought us to Chapel, where I spoke to thirty-three interested hearers. We are here and what we will accomplish the Lord only knows, but this we do know, we want to do what we do in harmony with his mind.

Some I suppose would like to know if we got sea-sick. Mattie, my wife, did not, but the rest of us felt rather queer. No one can understand it till they have been there. I was near enough sea-sick to satisfy me that it is a very unpleasant feeling. The above will be our address, as we expect to make this our headquarters. Say to the Saints who have been in the habit of writing us and sending stamps for reply, we can not use them; they are no good here. A two cent United States stamp will bring a letter here, but it takes a three cent Canadian stamp to carry a letter from here. Some have written us putting five cents United States stamp on their letter when there is no need of doing so on common letters. Greenbacks are good, but silver is only worth eighty cents on the dollar. We are stopping with brother Wood at present, and think we will locate in this place. We will start a Sabbath School and prayer-meetings along with our preaching. The brethren have been waiting for us to come before starting their prayer-meeting and Sabbath School again. More anon.

In everlasting bonds, we are yours,

A. H. PARSONS.

NATHAN, Ark., July 14th.

Brethren:—The "world do move," and so do the "preachers." I have got them warmed up to fever heat, and they have become very restive. Something must be done or their idols will tumble—they will tumble sure. I am "billed" for a debate with a Campbellite preacher on the 25th instant, and also one with a—well I know no name for him—on the 8th proximo. I am sowing the seed, and I hope that some falls on good ground. Prospects are good. In bonds,

A. J. CATO.

COURTLAND, Ill., July 7th.

Beloved Bro. Joseph:—To accommodate my brother and family, living ten miles distant, we hold our preaching services at half past one o'clock, then prayer and testimony meeting immediately after. After listening to a sermon from our worthy Bro. C. D. Carter, text, John 3: 5, where the Spirit of the Master was vividly present with the speaker during his discourse. After our usual fifteen minutes intermission we had our prayer and testimony meeting, also sacrament, of which all partook. We always, or nearly always have good meetings, especially in our prayer and testimony meetings and we think that God's Spirit is with us. But let me not forget to tell you of the great and in some respects strange manifestations of the power of God at our recent district conference held in Chicago. While Bro. T. Hougas was speaking in tongues, or rather interpreting the same, there was an audible voice heard just in front, and above, and a little to the right of Bro. Hougas, pronouncing the words of Bro. H., or rather Bro. Thomas pronouncing the words of this voice. For the voice seemed to lead in about the same degree as the voice that leads in singing leads others engaged in song service; yet the voice pronounced plainly and distinctly the words that Bro. H. did in his interpretation. The writer was not privileged to be there, and only knows this from the testimony of Bro. Carter, Bro. Louis Strack and his sister Fidelia. This voice was heard by Bro. Good, Bro. Vickery and others. Bro. H. told my sister that it was the voice of revelation.

In Acts, 2: 3, on the day of Pentecost, we are told that there were seen cloven tongues as of fire. Had the Saints at conference had their spiritual eyes opened might they not have seen what was seen on the day of Pentecost as well as being permitted to listen to a voice (or voices) uttered by such tongues? It has greatly strengthened the faith of those who went from here. Two more have given their names for baptism in our branch.

W. R. CALHOON.

DERBY, Mississippi, July 9th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—There are no Saints in this part that we know of but myself, wife and father and mother. We are still trying to hold the faith that was once delivered to the Saints. We have not heard the gospel since '84, then by Bro. R. J. Anthony. We go to hear other denominations but it does not satisfy those that are hungry for the pure milk of the word. At this place we have come together and built a neat little chapel 32 by 20 feet which will be free to all denominations that preach and believe in Christ Jesus. We have our Sunday School regularly every Sunday. A Methodist is to preach regularly for us and by chance a Baptist now and then. Are there any of our elders that could come this way and stay a few days? There has not been any preaching in this part by them. This place is handy, as we live within three hundred yards of the New Orleans and North-eastern Railroad at McClure switch. The people here are generally very good people, that investigate the truth as honest souls do everywhere. I wish to also state that I have sold all but one Voice of Warning that I received from Bro. Peters. I will remit to him in a short time.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN W. F. LIVINGS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 10th.

Brother Joseph:—For the last two months and a half I have been laboring in the Des Moines district as best I could, to advance the work so dear to every Saints' heart. My health has been very poor, as I have been suffering with the asthma. I am now satisfied that for some reason the climate here does not agree with my lungs. I have spoken in some nine or ten different places in the district. In some localities there is a very good interest, while in others I am sorry to say the hindering cause has been the unwise conduct of the Saints. I think, however, that a brighter day is now near for the district. There are many places presenting calls for labor that can not be supplied at present. Some of the local elders are doing all they can. Bro. Thompsen of Angus is alive and sounding the alarm. Although he is a day laborer, he has bought him a horse and goes out from there fifteen miles to preach the word, and is doing good. Are there not other elders in the district that can follow his noble example? Bro. W. C. Nirk spends most all of his time in laboring as president of the district. Brn. Shimel and Stam are also alive in the cause, and doing what they can. Bro. Roth has been spending most all his time this summer in the Eastern Iowa district.

I will say to the Saints of the Eastern Iowa district, that I will try to visit them at their next conference if possible, and assist them in whatever we shall find necessary to be done. I would say to the Saints of the Eastern Iowa district that the conference of the Des Moines district will meet September 1st at 10 a. m., and as this will be during the fair here and all can come on reduced rates, that we would be glad to see any of them at our conference. I especially request all the priesthood of the Des Moines district to be present at our conference that we may get a better understanding of the work and be prepared to carry it on. Any one desiring to write me can address me at Rhodes, Iowa.

As ever for the truth,

W. T. BOZARTH.

FRAZEE CITY, Minn., July 11th.

Brn. Joseph and Blair:—I came here last week to hold a few meetings, but on Sunday the Methodist preacher, Mr. Sharp, forbade any of his congregation going out to hear me. Two of the trustees of the M. E. Church were willing that I should preach in the church, but the third one, Mr. Rice, talked with the minister about it, and the preacher Sharp said as long as he had charge of the pulpit I should not have it. He told the people we had another book that took the place of the Bible. Sister Albertson, the only member of our faith in this city, asked permission to speak at the close of the speech of Mr. Sharp. He said, "No" The members of the M. E. Church felt very much hurt over Mr. Sharp's folly, because sister Albertson is dearly loved by the members of other churches in this place, and some have said that if there is a good christian in the world sister Albertson is one.

I leave on the morrow for Luce, and so on to the town of Maine to attend our conference. Brother Alexander H. Smith passed through here yesterday for Girard. I have been holding meetings here in the school house.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

WEIR, Kans., July 10th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Upon my return from Parsons where I last wrote you, I found a request from Bro. Joseph Luff awaiting me to visit Arcadia, thirty miles north-east. I did so, preaching in a hall a few times with small attendance. Then went on the street and preached two and three times a day. Hundreds in attendance at times, interest increasing daily. Many admitted their belief, some of them prominent citizens. Some of the ministers were sorely displeased; I offered to give way at any time for them to talk, but they did not. One "Christian" minister however invited me to affirm the "Laying on of hands" and spiritual gifts as necessary now as in apostolic times. He affirming "the Bible as an all sufficient means in the hands of God to save sinners." Arrangements are made for eight evenings upon the above, beginning August 13th.

I am to preach a few times there before that. A Baptist minister also told me publicly at the close that he wanted to get hold of me after that upon the respective claims of identity between our church and the New Testament church. I told him to be sure not to forget it when I returned. Have stirred up the Seventh-day friends south of me since that. They are told by their neighbors that they must either defend their cause or give it up. The prominent Spiritist Lecturer, Mr. B. Whitney, who held two debates with Bro. Evan Davis near here, this last spring, came with his buggy Saturday, June 30th, and took me to my appointment six miles away and brought me home. He has heard us a great deal, admits Joseph the Seer to have been one of the greatest prophets that ever lived, and says that he realizes the power of some of our elders, and that when the Saints gather to Zion he is going with them. He is far more reasonable than many of the "Orthodox." John Groves, an old man from Parsons, Kansas, brother of Sr. Kirkwood, of St. Louis, hearing the voice of the good shepherd on the streets of that city, (as taught by his unworthy servant), followed to this place last week and was baptized. I shall try and visit him soon, when others will follow the Master. This week I go twenty miles southwest to assist the brethren there; can not reach all the places where preaching is wanted, and never was more blessed in speaking, yet oh, how hard to get people to act!

Yours in the one faith,

D. S. CRAWLEY.

A. White of Independence, Missouri, and D. E. Tucker of Cedar Springs, Missouri, elders of the Church of Jesus Christ, are holding services at the Liberty school house, and also at the (Foster) Brown school house. We have just learned that on the evening of the 20th inst., while the good people of that neighborhood assembled at said house to hear from the word of God as delivered by the aforesaid elders, and as they were sowing the good seed of the Kingdom of God, and the people were receiving it in good, honest hearts, it so displeased Satan that he placed his imps and servants of sin on either side of the house, and armed them with rotten eggs, saying, "Fear not to cast them in through the windows from both sides of the building, for I have had many a battle with the servants of God to put down the truth, and have found rotten eggs to be the best weapon I could use, for I have tried lying and sophistry, cunning craftiness and vain philosophy and doctrines of men, yes I have used all such weapons in the hands of pious divines and wise men of the world, but have lost many a battle." Hearing this, these servants, being true to their father, the devil, at once commenced throwing the eggs, breaking window glasses and soiling clothing, floor, walls etc., and, true to their master's word, they ran as soon as the ammunition gave out. Now the good people beholding this became much affrighted and said unto the parsons, "From whence cometh the shower of eggs?" The Parsons said, "An enemy has done this." Then the people said, "Will ye that we go and bring the enemy up?" but they answered, "Nay, lest while ye gather up the egg sowers ye profane the neighborhood. Let all live together in peace until the harvest, when God will say to the reapers, gather ye together first the good people of the place into safety, then I will burn the egg sowers up."

CLINTON, Mo., July 11th.

Bro. Joseph:—I enclose the above slip from a paper giving some of the true inwardness of what eggs are good for "down south." The boys worked faithfully and were in keeping with the line of duty trying a new field, which made the devil mad. I spoke twice the Sunday before at same house and the "old fellow" showed his teeth and made us a promise of fight. I spiked two of their guns and left Brn. A. White and Tucker to hold the fort. The brethren will go there later in season when eggs are fresher.

It will take something more than ticks, bed-bugs, eggs, etc., to keep them from hunting up the honest in heart who are scattered all through this spacious field. The Herald said I baptized two at Rich Hill. I did not, but A. White did.

We have had to do battle at Taborville of late, and ten have been baptized, Bro. Curtis and I doing the labor mostly at that place. The Christian church sent for Elder Rutter who occupied near a week before our appointment telling the people what he called true Mormonism.

"Let them pitch into me! I have had nineteen public discussions and I am at home," was one of his outbursts. Well I didn't scare, but gave them the gospel of Christ on Saturday night. Bro. Curtis followed Sunday at eleven o'clock, when the elder could not stand it longer and called the house to order, announced services at three p. m., at which time he would annihilate the two gentlemen. He wanted it understood that he did not fear to let any man speak after him and would not do like these men! Good fortune was in our favor once. We met at the hour, and had wind and bombast been argument we would have been badly left. He spoke in tongues—yes four times—and dared us to interpret that. A good M. E. lady present gave me the interpretation of one of them, as she fully understood the situation, being present at his meetings during the week while he drummed for the dimes. And the poor fellow had to call for a new pair of pants—even if it was Sunday—and they had to be forthcoming! Well the interpretation: "Where the pot boils the strongest, there I will stay the longest." Gracious! It was as an electric shock when I gave her interpretation to the public that night while answering the elder. Foe and friend admitted it a center shot.

Bro Curtis and I, while in prayer before night service, pleaded to God for assistance, and I especially asked him that I might be able to examine the argument in a calm and mild way so the honest in heart might not be turned from the faith. I had the answer through the Spirit, "I will be with you."

Scarcely had I been on the floor five minutes when it seemed that a pillar of light burst in on me, and I rustled the old gentleman for an hour and one-half without gloves. He made a faint opposition for about five minutes and my answer carried conviction to the hearts of many. One married lady of their faith gave her name for baptism, and the second one expressed her hopeful desire. I announced baptism for the next meeting and both were baptized. When through speaking for the confirmation, another lady of the Christian church stepped in the stand giving me her hand, and while tears trickled down her cheeks asked that I would pray for her. It was a wonderful meeting to us. I yet feel to praise God for such a marvelous remembrance of his servant's needs.

Brethren Curtis, Lloyd, Tucker, A. White and Luff are all in the field. Bro. Luff was invited by the W. C. T. U., to speak on temperance on celebration of the Fourth at Lowry City. The day came—Luff very unwell, yet he made a rousing speech which was lauded by nearly every one present.

This speech, with the late victory at Independence fresh in their minds, placed the Saints in the front ranks (where every Saint should be), of the temperance movement. I visited Independence next day after election, and while moving among the crowd heard the following: "Had it not been for the d—d Mormons, we would have carried it." "You may say what you please about the Latter Day Saints, but had it not been for them, we would have been badly left." Colonel Jones in his speech, warmly commented upon the loyalty of the Saints at Independence. The minister of the south M. E. Church, (who spoke at the time of the laying of the corner stone of the Saints' chapel during General Conference), said when referring to the Saints as a temperance people, "Wish I could say as much of my people—but we are getting there."

We hope that sunshine may come to Zion's children, although we see dark spots and are sometimes disappointed in the lives of some.

I attended our quarterly conference at Independence, held on last of June and first of July. Business passed quietly, yet we did not see eye to eye in everything. The writer was sustained as district president for the next six months, and the laborers of district are requested to report to him for work, under direction of missionary in charge.

To-morrow I start for Eldorado Springs and Vernon county to hold grove meeting and to meet Elder Roberson of the Christian Church, who is reported hot for a debate. I have never met the gentleman although he has been very busy showing up what the Saints believe (?) and is reported of no small ability.

Fourth Sunday will be at Taberville; fifth Sunday at Brick [school-house? Ed.] north of Osceola; first Sunday in August at Bear Creek school-house. Saints in vicinity please notice. Elder Price, my old opponent of August 1886, is still on the travel with his canvas of hobgoblin pictures. Lately he covered one of Bro. Curtis' appointments and tried to force the people to hear him. He got there a few minutes before Brn. Curtis and Lloyd, and had his large canvas containing the profiles of the women of Utah whom he claimed were the wives of "old Joe Smith." Bro. Luff and I had heard of his intentions, and Luff put in an appearance unknown to Price and the congregation—taking a back seat while agreement was being made between Price and Curtis how the hours should be spent. Price was allowed one hour to say his piece, and when through Elder Luff arose and asked the privilege to answer the gentleman, as Elder Curtis was billed to preach there next day. It was granted provided Luff's character was vouched for, as Elder Price wanted a man of good character to meet him!! Character being established Luff let loose with his cannon and shot to the astonishment of both Price and congregation.

Luff was acquainted with the character of those women Price had so notably referred to on his canvas. Before the fight commenced Price said he was ready to stay there until next day at eleven o'clock, but alas! one hour had scarcely passed when he entered complaint of too hot weather. Luff told him he now was ready to stay till eleven o'clock to-morrow. Price said he had been sunstruck once. "So have I," said

Luff. At this juncture a new Campbellite minister took the stand and went off "half-cocked" on "Old Joe" and the Spaulding Romance. But Bro. Luff needed no hour's time to spike his gun of "know it all." Price and his friends were so discomfited that the meeting broke up in a kind of uproar. When will people learn that the truth will not down at "the refuge of lies," though breasted and hurled by some so-called Reverend Divine. By the help of the Lord we will try and move as the work demands.

Yours in bonds,

I. N. WHITE.

SOUTH ARM, Mich., July 13th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been here since the last of February, preaching Sundays, and the Lord has blessed my labors. There has been a great deal of prejudice against us here, but it is giving away some, and those that were so much against us are beginning to think that there is something in it, as I have baptized twenty-one, and some of those have been very rough with drinking and gambling but now they rejoice in the gospel of Christ, and there are more to be baptized soon. The preacher that came to my meeting and spoke against our cause and against your father has been taken with some disease in one of his feet and had to have it taken off. Bro. Cornish was here with me for a few days and done some good preaching for as which helped us. We hope he will come again soon. I hope the time will soon come when I can go out and labor for the Master all the time. One blessing I had since I came here was the pleasure of baptizing my sister and her husband. He was considered a very hard man because he was a gambler; but now is very firm in the cause we love. Desiring the prayers of the Saints, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

WM. DAVIS.

DELHAVEN, N. S., July 6th.

Bro. Joseph:—We left home May 9th for our fields of labor, stopping on our way at different places, casting in our mites, Met Bro. and Sr. Parsons at Providence, Rhode Island, and by request of Bro. W. H. Kelley we remained in the Massachusetts district until June 27th laboring at different places and was kindly received by all. Attended the Fall River conference and had a pleasant time while there. During conference three were baptized and the Saints were encouraged to continue in the good work. From there went to Boston, stopping at Brockton, and preached twice to the little band of faithful Saints. We met with brethren Briggs, Kelley and Sheehy at Boston. They came down with us to the vessel on the morning of the 28th, and we bade farewell to the Saints of America.

Landing in Nova Scotia the next day about 12 m., after riding fifty miles out in the country by rail, and ten miles by buggy, we were comfortably sheltered at the home of Bro. R. W. Newcomb about 7 p. m., while Bro. and Sr. Parsons went twenty-five miles further on to Bro. H. J. Davison's. We like the country very much so far. I think some good will be done. Last Monday I had the pleasure of baptizing the mother of Sr. Burton. She is now seventy years of age. Have commenced preaching and have made some friends.

In gospel bonds,

H. H. ROBINSON.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

In submitting the following we may assert that the history of the chosen people is calculated to teach us some important lessons. Prominent on its pages and written in characters so plain that he who runs may read, is the solemn truth that "man at his best estate is altogether vanity."

The utter inability of fallen man to stand before God in righteousness, is here depicted in lively colors; because if ever any people could have maintained a position of integrity, it must have been the seed of Abraham. Separated as they were to God in power and in mercy, and furnished with the law from His own mouth, "to them were committed the oracles of God;" yet we have seen, that so far from being better than neighboring nations, the name of God was "blasphemed through them among the Gentiles;" and notwithstanding long-suffering, entreaty, and warning, they sank lower and lower in guilt, until at length, Jehovah was compelled to interpose in wrath "for his Holy Name's sake, that it should not be polluted among the heathen." The fall and dispersion of Israel show us the "exceeding sinfulness of sin." (Rom. 7: 13). "The way of the transgressor is hard." All the dealings of God with the nation has been marked by the fullest grace and love, this His word repeatedly declares. Again and again is the backsliding nation reminded of the unmerited favor with which Jehovah had regarded them and their fathers; and many and tender are the yearnings with which, even in the days of their deep transgressions, He still looked upon them. God had truly loved Israel; and yet, such a tribulation, so intense and of so long continuance, had never before fallen upon them since the foundation of the world.

How are these facts consistent with each other? Is God changeable? Far be it from Him! He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." In Him there is "no variableness nor shadow of turning." Yea, the very preservation of the seed of Jacob is declared to be because He changeth not. How abominable then must sin be in the pure and holy eyes of Jehovah, when it has brought down so severe a visitation upon the people whom He had chosen; whom He had separated to Himself; whom He had distinguished with so wondrous tokens of his regard, and whom He declares that He had loved "with an everlasting love." But the history of the people of Israel is pregnant with solemn warning to us. The Holy Spirit himself uses it for our admonition: "Be not high-minded, but fear; for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee.

The Jewish nation was, in "severity," broken off from the manifested favor of God, that the Gentile nation might be, in goodness, "grafted in." Dare we say that we have "continued in his goodness;" that we have walked in faithfulness to the grace of God so as to magnify before the world that blessed name by which we are called? O, surely there is much need of that humbleness and fear that the inspired Apostle recommends, lest judgment should begin at the house of God. "O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord; or who hath first given to Him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things, to whom be honor, glory, and praise forever. Amen."

INTRODUCTION.

The people of Israel must ever be regarded with an interest unrivalled by that which attaches to any other of the nations of the earth.

Where else shall we look for a people who can not only trace back their lineage with certainty to a single ancestor, but, can also point to historical records of their fortunes, detailing with indubitable truth, with inimitable pathos, and with minute particularity, their lights and shadows, their glories and their sorrows, during a period which stretches away into an antiquity of nearly four thousand years.

What picture of national history could ever display lights so bright, or shadows so deep and dark as this? No people ever stood on such a pinnacle of moral elevation! None ever fell into such an abyss of crime! No nation ever possessed such true grandeur. None ever groaned in such depths of misery. But there is one feature that strongly distinguishes the Jewish history and throws it out in broad relief from every other, it is not so much the history of man's actions, as the history of God's dealings with man. Indeed this might truly be said of all earthly transactions, that the hand of God is in them all, permitting, overruling, guiding in His ever watchful providence: "The Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men;—He doeth according to His will . . . among the inhabitants of the earth."—Dan. 4: 32-35.

This providential acting is not what we prominently see in the records of the Hebrew nation, but, the direct interference of Jehovah in person. The history of the seed of Abraham is a history of miracle, and that not in the way of rare and startling exception, but, in its true and proper character. The absence of miracle was the deviation from the rule; the nation was cradled in miracle, their independent existence was effected amidst the most stupendous supernatural plagues upon their oppressors, and by mighty signs and wonders on their behalf. They marched through a divided sea; God himself descended in the darkness and thick cloud, "with the sound of a trumpet and a voice of words, to give them the fiery law;" the cleft rock assuaged their thirst.

When Egypt's King God's chosen tribe pursued,
In crystal walls, the admiring waters stood.
When through the desert wild they took their way,
The rocks relented and poured forth a sea.
What limit can Almighty goodness know,
When seas can harden and when rocks can flow?

They fed upon the bread of heaven, while their forty years wandering in the wilderness was guided by the Pillar of Cloud by day and of fire by night. Jordan rolled back his waters to give them entrance into the promised land, and the sun arrested his course to help them to subdue it. But, not to recall the numberless instances of Divine interposition scattered through the sacred records, we will mention but these two permanent ones, the oracular responses by Urim and Thummim in the High Priest's breast-plate; and above all, the constant indwelling of the Shechinah or Visible Glory, first in the tabernacle, and then in the temple until the Babylonish Captivity. It is true that in the latter periods of their history this intermingling of the Divine with the human was less marked than in the eras of their glory. Their incorrigible rebellion and idolatry, alienated more and more their gracious God and King, and compelled Him to hide His face from them. Yet this was slowly done: The glory of God lingered as loth to depart from the Holy House. (See Ezek. 4:18, 19; 11:23). Some of the darkest of their days witnessed glorious manifestations of divine power, and that in an oppressor's land. Even the guilt of princes and people afforded occasion for the exercise of a miraculous and extraordinary ministry; and the awful denunciations of inspired prophets were so many proofs of the omniscience as well as of the long suffering mercy of God.

The solemn warnings, the affectionate remonstrances, and the tender appeals of these divinely inspired addresses, while they showed the deep sin of Israel, most touchingly declared the grace of God, and his loving reluctance to break off his familiar communication with them. Nor was this light of prophecy a transient meteor-glare, but was protracted through many centuries at least and resembled the shining of the Morning Star, which increases in brightness when the other stars are waning, and fades only at the approach of the rising sun. For it does not certainly appear that the gift of prophecy was entirely taken from the Jewish nation until the coming of the Lord himself, (Luke 1:67; 2:26-36), when their mission merged into the superior mission of the Son of God.

Before we enter on that great tribulation it will be needful to briefly glance at the eventful history of Israel, from the beginning, that we may discern the causes that produced, and the circumstances that led to their awful fall. The discovery of the former is not a difficult one to be made if we search for it, not by the light of philosophy but by the light of the word of God, and in a humble and teachable spirit. "Now will I sing to my well beloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My well beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill. And he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a wine-press therein, and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes. And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard. What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it? Wherefore when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes. And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up, and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down. And I will lay it waste; it shall not be pruned nor digged, but there shall come up briars and thorns. I will also command the clouds that they rain no more upon it, for the vineyard of the Lord of Host is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant; and he looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry."—Isa 5: 1-7.

"There was a certain householder which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-press in it, and built a tower and let it out to husbandmen and went into a far country. And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen that they might receive the fruit of it. And the husbandmen took his servants and beat one and killed another, and stoned another. Again he sent other servants more than the first, and they did unto them likewise. But last of all he sent unto them his Son, saying, They will reverence my Son. But when the husbandmen saw the Son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance. And they caught him and cast him out of the vineyard and slew him. When the Lord, therefore, of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen? They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their season."—Matt. 22: 33-41.

From these beautiful parables, and many similar passages in the Holy Scriptures, we learn what was one prominent object. (See Deut. 7: 7, 8; Ezek. 20: 9). There are many other objects, such as the display of God's sovereignty in grace. A testimony to the nations. The preservation of true religion in the earth, and in particular, the selection through which the Messiah should come, together with the announcement of his person and work in types and prophecies.

In the purposes of God, in selecting one among the families of mankind, and separating it in so remarkable a manner from all others, was the proving of man's obedience to God under the best possible circumstances. He had dealt with an apostate world in righteous judgment, "bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly." But this visitation, terrible as it was, had failed to produce any fruit in the reformation of man, and we soon find the post-deluvian world rising up in haughty defiance of God, relapsing into gross idolatry and practicing the most abominable iniquity. The wisdom and mercy of God now adopts another mode of trial, instead of again sweeping off the guilty race as incorrigible, he passes by the bulk of mankind, leaving them to pursue their own course unchecked, (See Acts 14:16,) and selecting one man enters into high and solemn covenant with him and with his posterity in him.

Cradled in the severe school of Egyptian bondage the seed of Abraham are at length brought out by a signal deliverance; their Almighty Savior revealing himself to them as a friend in the destruction of their tyrants. Then bringing them into the solitude of the Arabian wilderness He puts a mighty barrier between them and all other people, by condescending to become Himself their Legislator, Leader and King; "hedging them round about" with a polity, a religion and a law most elaborate in its ordinances—moral and ceremonial—all eminently tending both to their well-being and to their national distinctness and isolation from all the families of mankind surrounding them. A land which was "the glory of all lands" had been given them by the covenant made with their great ancestor; and Jehovah engaged, by promise, to lead them to it, and to put them into peaceable possession of it, subduing and rooting out before them the tribes who then held it, by His own Almighty power, He further covenanted to maintain them in this their inheritance, to bless it with an abundant fertility, to protect them from every enemy, and to crown them with all imaginable prosperity, and all this in perpetuity—on condition of their holy obedience to the righteous and wholesome laws which he had set before them."—Lev. 26: 3-12: "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments and do them, then will I give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit. And your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time; and ye shall eat your bread to the full and dwell in your land safely; and I will give you peace in the land, and none shall make you afraid, and I will rid evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land, and ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword, and five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight: and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword, for I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you: and ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new, and I will set my tabernacle among you, my soul shall not abhor you, and I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people."—Deut. 28: 1-3, 18: "And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken dil igently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and to do all his commandments, which I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God, will set that on high above all nations of the earth, and all these blessings shalt come on thee and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God; blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field, blessed shalt be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep; blessed shalt be thy basket and thy store; blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out. The Lord shall cause thine enemies which shall rise up against thee to be smitten before thy face, they shall come out against thee one way, and flee before thee seven ways. The Lord shalt command the blessing upon thee in thy store-houses, and in all that thou setteth thine hand unto; and He shall bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. The Lord shall establish thee an holy people unto himself, as he has sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways, and all the people of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name of the Lord, and they shall be afraid of thee, and the Lord shall make thee plentiful in goods, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers to give thee, the Lord shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heavens to give thee rain unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thine hand, and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow, and the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if thou shalt hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God, which I command thee this day to observe and to do them."

Moreover, that nothing might be wanting to give a sanction to this solemn law and covenant, and that the utmost certainty might be secured to its promises and threatenings, the whole transaction was effected amidst the most awfully sublime and terrible manifestations of the divine presence in the sight of the whole people:—

"And it came to pass on the third day, in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that were in the camp trembled. And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God. And they stood at the nether part of the mount, and Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire. And the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly. And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake and God answered him by a voice, and the Lord came down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount; and the Lord called Moses up to the top of the mount, and Moses went up. And the Lord said unto Moses, Go down, charge the people, lest they break through unto the Lord to gaze, and many of them perish."—Ex. 19: 16-21.

Besides all this, Jehovah engaged to dwell among them, and to have a sanctuary in which He would take up His residence in the midst of them, in a personal and visible manner. Thus, then, did the trial of man proceed under the most favorable circumstances for eliciting his obedience; nor can we imagine any additional assistance which could have been afforded him, which would at the same time have left him the exercise of his free responsibility. The touching inquiry remains without an answer: "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it?" And how did this highly favored people stand in the probation? Did they show that man, if opportunity presented, and circumstances were propitious, could, "of his own natural strength, do good works, pleasant and acceptable to God?" and that there remained yet in him, notwithstanding the fall, a power and a will to render a faithful obedience? Alas! they utterly and miserably failed. All the wondrous exhibitions of grace and goodness with which they had been distinguished, only brought out into sterner prominence that solemn truth, "There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way; there is none that doeth good, no, not one, they are together become unprofitable."—Rom. 3: 10-12.

Even while Moses was yet on the mount receiving the details of the law from the mouth of God, and while, "in the sight of the children of Israel, the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount," they fell into the grossest idolatry, and made and worshipped a golden calf; and this transaction was but a fair type and sample of their whole subsequent history. The covenant indeed was annulled thereby, as far as it had been made contingent on their obedience; and God might justly have given them over at once to the penalties of the law which they had despised and broken. But his thoughts are not as our thoughts; he brought them into the promised land, and through the slow lapse of fifteen centuries his long-suffering mercy protracted the trial, with the same undeviating result: "Their heart was not right with Him, neither were steadfast in His covenant. But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not; yea, many a time turned He His anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath."—Ps. 78: 37, 38.

To enter into an examination of this long period, would be foreign to our purpose. It is, as we have said, a picture full of lights and shadows. The faithlessness and ingratitude of man are constantly contrasted with the mercy and goodness of God. Whenever national chastisements produced (though but in feeble measure and partial extent) a return to Him, they were exchanged for victory, peace, and prosperity. He hastened to show that judgment was his strange work, and that he delighted in mercy. But affront after affront was put upon the majesty of Jehovah. His Kingship was rejected; His ordinances were despised; His Sabbaths were profaned; the foul rites of Baal and the bloody worship of Moloch were openly adopted as the religion of the majority. Justice and judgment fled away; the land was defiled with blood; and abominable iniquities abounded. The defection of ten of the twelve tribes, to form a separate kingdom with a state idolatry, followed soon by their utter desolation and ruin by the Assyrians who took them away into a captivity from which they never returned, produced no permanent reformation or repentance in the remnant that was left. The tribes of Benjamin and Judah, that still adhered to the house of David, waxed worse and worse; nor could the reign of one pious king, the zealous Josiah, prevail to do more than defer, for a little while, the evil day that was hastening also upon them. 2 Chron. 36: 14-20:—"Moreover all the chief of the priests and the people transgressed very much after all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of the Lord which he had hallowed in Jerusalem. And the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers, rising up betimes and sending; because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place. But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy. Therefore he brought upon them the King of the Chaldees, who slew their young men by the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man or him that stooped for age; he gave them all into his hand; and all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king and his princes. All these he brought to Babylon, and they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof. And them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia."

Thus was fulfilled a part of the evil threatened in that memorable exhibition of the blessings of obedience, and the curse of disobedience, a portion of the promises of which we have already quoted. Deut. 23: 36:—"The Lord shall bring thee and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other Gods, wood and stone."

But darker predictions of the same prophecy yet remained to be accomplished: severe as was the chastisement of the Babylonish Captivity; it was light compared to what was future. The cup of Judah's iniquity as well as that of his misery, was not yet full. At the end of the predicted period of seventy years, free permission and protection were afforded to the captive Jews to return home and rebuild their metropolis and temple. A comparatively small number, probably not exceeding one hundred thousand in all availed themselves of the opportunity and became the nucleus of the Jewish nation in its now dependent condition. For a few centuries longer, a precarious political existence was to be granted to them; but with the exception of a brief and solitary interval, during which the valor of the Maccabees wrested a fitful independence from the Seleucidaen kings,—they sustained but the humble position of a provincial appendage, to one or another of the great Empires around them; tributary,—alternately to Persia, Macedonia, Egypt, Syria, and Rome.

The moral character of the nation, far from being improved by the chastisements of God, evidently proceeded from bad to worse. In one respect, indeed, there was an apparent change for the better; they never again fell into gross open idolatry; but the evidence of the prophet Malachi suffices to show Jehovah's righteous estimate of their moral condition: A haughty contempt of His ordinances had grown up, and horrible crimes were prevalent among them. Sorcery, adultery, false swearing, oppression and murder, afford the dark hues with which the portraiture of that guilty age is dyed; that the priests, who should have been fountains of knowledge, and examples of holiness to the people, were eminently selfish and covetous, and took the foremost place in apostasy from God, and in atheistic hostility to him. And thus all were fast preparing the way for that "curse," which already darkly brooded over the nation, and with the threatening of which the canon of Jewish Scripture so ominously closes. About this time two religious parties, or sects, sprang up, which gradually assuming more distinctness, at length came to embrace the great body of the people. The Sadducees, (the free-thinkers of their day), rejected the authority of the greater part of the word of God, avowing a bold scepticism on those subjects which sense could not discern, in particular any futurity of either happiness or misery, or of reward or punishment. This infidelity, so palatable to the sensual and the luxurious, was adopted chiefly by the wealthy and high born; while the doctrine and practice of the Pharisees carried captive the bulk of the common people. These affected the highest veneration for the law, insisting on a scrupulous observance of its minutest forms, to which indeed, they had added such a mountain of traditional rites and observances, for all of which they claimed an authority fully equal, if not superior to that of the written word, that their inculcations became an interminable succession of "heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne."

But this religion was wholly a thing of outside show. The assumption of extreme sanctity was a cloak of hypocrisy and iniquity. While they paid tithes upon mint, anise, and cummin, they had not the slightest regard to judgment, mercy or faith.

They made long prayers in the public streets, but devoured the inheritance of the widow and the fatherless. They suborned witnesses to take away innocent blood, but had conscientious scruples about putting the price of it into the treasury. They made clean the outside of the cup and platter, but within they were full of extortion and excess; they were like whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness; blind leaders of the blind, no marvel that both fell into the ditch; such was the once renowned Jewish nation; such the degenerate descendants of those to whom it was promised that the observance of their righteous statutes and judgments should be their wisdom and their understanding in the sight of the nations, and should elicit from them the admiring observation, "surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people."—Deut. 4: 6.

A few, indeed, were "weeping in secret places," for the overflowings of ungodliness around them, and these are known to God and precious in his sight; but their number was far too small and their influence too inconsiderable to throw any sensible light into the moral darkness that was thickening about them.

With all this besotted ignorance of true righteousness there existed the greatest pride and arrogance. They looked down on all other nations as dogs, unclean beasts, impure Gentiles; but had the greatest conceit of their own holiness. They boasted of the favor of God, and considered it as but their rightful due, on account of their descent from Abraham and their observance of the law. "The temple of the Lord, are we," was their favorite boast; but when He came, the blessed one who was the Lord of the temple, to whom the law with its priesthood and its sacrifices, its ordinances, festivals, and ceremonies pointed, whom kings and prophets had spoken of and desired to see—they could discern "no form or comeliness in Him, no beauty that they should desire Him." The rejection of the meek and lowly Son of Man filled up the iniquity of Israel. "Full of grace and truth," He came unto His own, but His own received Him not: "Full of grace and truth," the glorious Word was made flesh, dwelt among them, but the proud, bitter, and worldly spirit that reigned in them had no sympathy with Him. He went about doing good, healing their sicknesses and carrying their sorrows; but with the suicidal fury of a maniac they trampled upon His love and outraged His power, attributing both to the energy of Beelzebub. He would have healed the Daughter of Zion, but she would not be healed. "How often would He have gathered her children together, even as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, but she would not." And what remained, but that with weeping eyes and a bleeding heart, with a love that many waters could not quench, the rejected King and Lord should pronounce the ruin which He saw to be now inevitable; "And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes; for the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and hem thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children with thee, and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another, because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."—Luke 19: 41-44. But even yet there was long-suffering with God; the door of mercy was not immediately closed; the sin was consummated, that guilty deed at which the sun shrank back aghast, and the course of nature was convulsed, the crime of crimes was accomplished; man imbrued his hands in the blood of the Son of God, and killed the Prince of Life. The doom was self-pronounced, "His blood be upon us, and upon our children," but its execution yet lingered; a glorious exhibition was to be given of that truth, "Where sin abounded grace did not much more abound," and the risen Jesus, sending forth his disciples upon their blessed errand of preaching repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, in his name, expressly commanded them to begin at Jerusalem. Well did they perform their work!

Animated by the Holy Ghost, "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus;" and the burden of their testimony was this: "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree; Him hath God exalted with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins."

Amidst scorn, reproach, in stonings and deaths, in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness, did the disciples of the crucified and risen Lord pursue their untiring labor of love, preaching peace and forgiveness through that precious blood which Israel's guilty hands had shed. Nor was their mission without success; though they might complain that all day long they stretched out their hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people, and though the national desolation could not be averted, yet a goodly "election of grace" was found; many of the Jews believed the message of eternal life.

But the nation, with its rulers, was incorrigible; their zeal for the law took the form of the bitterest hostility to, and persecution of, their Christian brethren; and and the very last incident which the sacred historian has recorded of Jerusalem is strikingly and mournfully characteristic of the moral corruption of the time. More than forty of the Jews, with the full concurrence of the chief priests and elders bound themselves under a great curse, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had assassinated Paul. (Acts 3: 12). Thus, if we bring the light of the blessed word of God to bear upon the history of this people, we can not fail to discover what was the cause of their deplorable overthrow. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach of any people;" and in Israel we behold the deepest sin, accompanied by the highest aggravations, that had ever yet been witnessed in this world. The corruptions of the heathen vile as they were, could, by no means be compared with the criminality of Israel; "The times of [their] ignorance God winked at," but it is an established principle in His dealings with His creatures, and one which it behooves us to remember, that to whomsoever much is given, of the same shall much be required; "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities." (Amos 3:2.) The sceptre had not entirely departed from Judah when Shiloh came. Enfeebled it had long been; alternating with apparent extinctions, like the dying flame of a lamp, and had been waning ever since the Babylonish Captivity. With Herod the Great the independence of Judea may be said to have expired; and though his son Archelaus "did reign in the room of his father Herod," he was no more than a puppet in the hands of Rome. Soon the shadow of his authority was taken away, and Judea became ostensibly a Roman province. Caponius, the first procurator, entered upon his government in the very year that the Lord Jesus, coming to the temple when twelve years old may be said, in some sense to have begun "His Father's business," and manifested himself to Israel. The presence of a Roman governor and Roman soldiers, with their idolatrous standards, and their haughty contempt of the Jewish "superstition," as well as the exaction of tribute and taxes, could not but deeply wound a people no less haughty than their masters. Collisions were frequent as each party grew more and more intolerant of the other. Frequent insults to the temple worship provoked the wild resistance of the populace, and these tumults were made the occasions of wide and indiscriminating slaughter. The brutal Emperor Caligula blasphemously proclaimed himself a God, and issued orders for the erection of a colossal statue of him in the temple of Jerusalem. The Jews were in despair, and the prefect of Syria to whom the execution of the imperial order was assigned, ventured with unwonted humanity to incur the heavy responsibility of writing to Caligula, deprecating his purpose.

The Emperor was furious; but his timely death prevented the consummation of the blasphemy, and saved the considerate prefect.

A rapid succession of vile governors, each almost more flagitious than his predecessor, brought the Jewish people to the verge of despair. Their rule instead of being exercised for the well-being of the governed, had but one object—the enriching of themselves by all possible means. Early in the reign of Tiberius, Syria and Judea, worn out with their burdens, had prayed for a reduction of the taxes; "yet it was not the revenue that lay so heavy on the back, but the gratuities, confiscations, and plunder; the commander of troops could drive a whole town to contribution by a threat of billeting his men on the citizens. The unjust judge could condemn and execute one who refused a loan, or gifts, or if need were a thousand; the aid of the police or military must be bought, and no public transaction could advance without a bribe at every step." The bonds of society were loosed; hosts of robbers infested the whole country, plundering with impunity; and bands of professed murderers abounded in the city, chiefly at the festivals, where they mingled among the multitude, and, with daggers carried under their garments, slew their enemies. "The first man so slain was Jonathan, the High Priest, after whose death many were slain every day, while the fear men were in of the like fate, was more afflicting than the calamity itself. While everybody expected death every hour, as men do in war, so men were obliged to look before them, and to take notice of their enemies at a great distance; nor if their friends were coming to them durst they trust them any longer: yet in the midst of their suspicion and caution, they would be slain."—See Josephus, Wars, b. 2, c. 13. The Priesthood partook of the common lawlessness of the time. A quarrel arising between the chief priests and the principal of the common people, each party assembled a multitude of partisans, carrying on a civil war in the streets of Jerusalem. The High Priests also would forcibly seize in the threshing-floors the tithes that were by right due to the inferior priests and Levites, many of whom, having no other support, were starved to death. A remarkable sign of the times was the number of false Christs and impostors who, preaching the unlawfulness of acknowledging the heathen dominion, gathered great multitudes after them, only to fall by the Roman sword. Some of these are noticed in the Acts of the Apostles; and their appearance had been long before predicted by the Lord, in conference with the unbelieving Jews, and in that memorable discourse with His disciples on the Mount of Olives, to which we shall have much occasion to refer, he said:

"I am come in my Father's name and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive. (John 5:43). "Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many."—Matt. 24:5.

The last and vilest of the Roman procurators of Judea was Gessius Florus, an execrable wretch. The rapacities of former governors, great and severe as they were, seemed like the deeds of honest men when compared with the administration of this man. They had preserved some little regard to decency by cloaking over their extortions; as though he had been sent to punish condemned malefactors, he omitted no sort of rapine or of vexation. He, indeed, thought it a petty offence to exact money from individuals, so he spoiled whole cities and ruined entire corporations of men at once, and did almost publicly proclaim it all the country over, that they had liberty to turn robbers provided only that he might go shares with them in the booty. Under such government whole districts and towns were brought to speedy desolation, the people abandoning their country in despair to flee into foreign lands. Thus every aspect of public affairs presented omens of a terrible convulsion. Tyranny and license unchecked in the governors; exasperation and defiance in the governed; frightful crime pervading all; all the ties of social order loosened; sanguinary collisions between the people and the soldiery; all told but too surely of the approaching storm. The bolder and more turbulent spirits saw it coming, and hailed it with eager hope, as a deliverance from the hated yoke of the Gentiles. The timid and the helpless saw it too, and felt their hearts sink within them as they anticipated its desolations, and we doubt not that a few were found, who, while justifying the fierce anger of the Most High God, could yet say, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the daughter of my people."

CATHOLICISM.—No. VII.

BY ELDER M. T. SHORT.

THE venerable pontiff, like Isaac of old as he heard the voice of Jacob but thought he felt the hands of Esau, will say to the Ritualistic church,—“I feel the garments of the Priest, but I hear the voice of the parson.” Poor Episcopalianism!

The confessional, and the accompanying tribunal of penance, are taken up, labored at length, and exculpated from various standpoints.

Our eccentric, unique, mercurial cardinal commands the rare faculty of making “the worst enemies of the church admit that no spot or wrinkle had yet deformed her fair visage in this, the golden age of her existence.” Ancient heretics, oriental schismatics, Protestant apostates, doctors of morals and savants of faith are ransacked, and garbled to favor the glorious confessional and give credence and feasibility to the penitential tribunal and canon.

If auricular confession is of human origin, Mother submits that it would be a “monstrous exotic engrafted on the fruitful tree of the church.” The declaration is that Christendom could not retire to sleep without a knowledge of this tenet and awake believing the dogma, neither could the practice be introduced by degrees, while the church fathers, “those intrepid High Priests,” were “defending, with sleepless eye, the outskirts of the city of God.” “It is a doctrine, moreover, hard to flesh and blood, and which no human power, even if it had the will, could be able to impose on the human race.” The yoke of the meek and lowly one is easy “on flesh and blood,” but heathenism, whether found under a Hindoo idol, at the feet of Buaah, or within the pales of the church and at the foot of a cross, are alike reprehensible and detestible.

The book of Common Prayers, quotes largely from and borrows much of the Pontifical. The English bishops listen to and recommend the confession of the sick, but the same observance for those in good health is pernicious. They throw themselves open to every damaging criticism, and unjoint their harness to the Roman lance. Orthodoxy in a given diocese, or condition, is heterodoxy in another jurisdiction or state of the body. "Practical Catholics" are not enfeebled by the confessional, nor are they "chained, or starved in their consciences." "Has the absolution they received whetted their appetite for more sin? Are they monsters of immorality? I think that an enlightened Protestant public will render a contrary verdict."

Drunkenness, vulgarity, profanity, licentiousness and murder can all be confessed in secret, and shielded too often, and absolved too readily. That there are many devout and punctilious devotees of the Latin rite no fair minded person will call in question. That the institution is hoary with great age, interspersed amid the latitudes and longitudes of the groaning earth, interwoven and interlocked into a dominant puissant organization; always blending but never ending is not a subject for cavil or doubt.

Romanists believe, teach and practice baptism for the remission of original sin, and "penance for the forgiveness of sins committed after baptism." Through the mediation, intercession and advocacy of the priest, and the penitential obedience of the subject, any and all sins are duly canceled. They say, however, that "Jesus Christ is the only mediator of redemption." St. Paul, on the other hand, teaches,— "For there is one God and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."

Jesus gave himself "a ransom for all," therefore buying indulgences, paying for, or otherwise obtaining penance, and praying souls out of purgatory for hire, and all such is not admissible. The mediator of the new covenant ever liveth "to make intercession for us;" "to appear in the presence of God for us;" to stand at "the right hand of God," as "an advocate with the Father," for "he is the propitiation of our sins," so "God hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ."

The wine and milk of salvation are free, and the power of redemptive love is without money, or price.

"But if to love their priest, to reverence his sacred character, to obey his voice as the voice of God; if to be willing to make any sacrifice for their spiritual father; if, I say, you call this slavery, then our Catholic people are slaves indeed; and, what is more, they are content with their chains."

If I believed, for a moment, that the above was the universal, and willing sentiment of the body politic, instead of the base subterfuge of false teachers, blind guides, hireling priests, and avaricious pastors, I would say in the language of Isaiah, "The whole head is sick and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it, but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores; they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment."

"This, 'the GOLDEN AGE' of the church," is lucidly, graphically, and pointedly portrayed by Micah, the prophet, to wit: "The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money; yet will they lean upon the Lord and say, 'Is not the Lord among us?' none evil can come upon us."

"It pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe;" but, says Gibbon, "My experience is, that the confessional is the most powerful lever ever erected by a merciful God." "In sermons, we fire at random but the confession is a dead shot."

The longstanding sinner with guilt, shame, remorse and confusion, glides "into the little mercy seat," "no one ever learns what transpires there."

"The revelations of the confessional are a sealed book. But in a few moments spent there, a resurrection occurs more miraculous than raising Lazarus from the tomb, it is the resurrection of a soul, that had long laid worm-eaten from the grave of sin." "I was lost and am found, having been dead I am come to life again."

Lest the reader does not readily call to mind the Rev. John Spaulding's ideas of indulgences we will hear the advanced views of the most Rev. James Cardinal Gibbon upon the point. He thinks it originally signified favor, remission or forgiveness. It now means unbridled passion, or license to sin. "An indulgence is simply a remission in whole, or in part, through the superabundant merits of Jesus Christ and his Saints, of the temporal punishment due to God on account of sin after the guilt and eternal punishment had been remitted."

I have heard of "cheating the devil out of his due," but this bankrupt system seeks to rob the Almighty. God, through his dear Son, by the gospel, and according to the ordinances contained therein, can alone forgive and remit all sins.

"The church having power to remit the greater obstacle, which is sin. has power also to remove the smaller obstacle which is the temporal punishment due on account of it."

Public, private, or canonical penance is imposed, or inflicted; or mitigated, or withheld, and forgiven, according to the temper, disposition, notice, and judgment of the one behind the Papal throne. A perverted, usurping, polluted priesthood refers to, applies, and uses many beautiful texts of the true, to bolster the immense power, that is trembling, and sinking with ponderous rottenness. The modern publican, or Roman tax gatherer, takes "a mild and merciful payment of a temporal debt due to God."

"The General Council of Nice, and other synods authorized the bishops;" but holy Trent says, because Tetzal, the Dominican monk, got defeated by Luther, I decree "all wicked traffic should be abolished."

We append the learned prelate's quotations upon the qualification, jurisdiction, authority, prerogative, and power of the holy priesthood. Mankind would do well to study them carefully, and prayerfully, and let them have due weight and prominence where they belong. 11 Cor. 5:20; John 20:21; Matt. 28:19, 20; Mark 16:15; Matt. 10:14, 15; Luke 10:16; John 15:15; 1 Cor. 4:1; James 5:14; 1 Cor. 4:15; Rev. 21:2; Eph. 4:11, 12; Ps. 147:20; Matt. 19:27-29; Luke 10:18-20; 1 Peter 4:17; 1 Cor. 4:7; 3:6, 7; Mal. 2:7; Isa. 52:11; Matt. 16:19; 18:18; 1 Peter 2:5, 9; Heb. 5:7; 7:12; 1 Cor. 7:17.

He calls those undergoing a rigid theological training, "young Levites," howbeit Aaron and his sons, "the sons of Levi," are to minister before the Lord Most High forever. This brings us to consider, more especially, the celibacy of the clergy, to say nothing of monks and monasteries, nuns and nunneries, and "the sisters of charity," and similar orders.

Gibbon makes St. Paul say, in 1 Tim. 4:12; "Be thou an example to the faithful . . . in charity in faith in chastity." The word "chastity" is rendered "purity;" in our versions to guard, guide, and protect the faithful soldiers, and good gospel armor-bearers from the fate and folly of Rome; viz: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared as with a hot iron. Forbidding to marry and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth."

Again, "A bishop must be sober, just, holy, continent;" which last word is translated "temperate," to harmonize and agree with the right and privilege of being "the husband of one wife," as also elders, deacons, &c. See Titus and Timothy.

Romanists would have us to believe that St. Peter had no commerce with his wife after his call to the ministry, because he said, "Behold we have forsaken all and followed thee." His following after Christ was only a temporary suspension of their fishing and not a complete abandonment of all earthly things. Jesus entered into Peter's house where he beheld the wife and mother-in-law. When our blessed Master said to the holy apostles "he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me," there is not the most remote intention that he wished to alienate parental affection, or interfere with domestic tranquility, and conjugal love. There is only one Scriptural ground for separation, or divorce; and, unhappily, the call to the priesthood is not the cause. The gifted apostle to the Gentiles says, "to avoid fornication let every man have his own wife and every woman her own husband."

"Although celibacy is not enforced by our Savior, it is, however, commended so strongly by him and his apostles, both by word and example that the church felt it her duty to enforce it as a law."

Dear shades of the immaculate Lamb of God, what have and will they do in thy name! Without understanding "her thorough organization" and "the far-seeing wisdom of her chief pastors," "I believe, under God, the church has no tower of strength more potent than the celibacy of her clergy." Corrupt, and apostate Mormonism says "polygamy is the chain cable of the church," and essential to exalt into celestial and immortal glory. Our continent father Gibbon says, "Mormonism, unhappily so prevalent in the United States, is at variance with the plain teachings of the gospel, and is consequently condemned by the Catholic Church."

When embezzlers, defaulters, rogues, and rascals fall out honest men get their just dues. Mother says that the sacred holy institution of matrimony is an inviolable, irrevocable, indissoluble sacrament; but candidates to the episcopal office were not allowed, if widowers, to contract nuptials a second time, otherwise "they were obliged to live separate from their wives;" still "the highest degree of holiness is attainable in conjugal love;" but "of all the gems that adorned the priestly diadem none is so precious and indispensable as the jewels of chastity."

The criminal passion of Henry VIII, the licentious founder of the the English Church does not sanctify, ennoble and authorize celibacy. The Landgrave of Hesse, the bigamist, seated between his two wives, partaking of the sacrament from the hands of Martin Luther and Philip Melancthon, does not deify a virginal priesthood. The infidelity of Napoleon at the hymenial altar, cuts no figure with, nor has no bearing upon the vows of "poverty, chastity, and monastic obedience."

If God had ever enjoined anything of the kind we would have to submit to the inevitable; but, since "marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled" we "will not fear what man can do," remembering that all whoremongers, adulterers, and the lascivious will God judge.

A decade of centuries after or dear Lord was crucified, ignorance and superstition, indolence and vice, squalid poverty and priestly tyranny gained the ascendancy.

Multifarious and multiform evils settled down on a benighted age, and a gloomy, forlorn, God-forsaken people. While all branches of learning, science and arts, morality and religion sank to the very lowest level, the nadir of human misery and woe, Romanism arose to the acme, or zenith of her fame and glory. Licentiousness and debauchery took hold of the supreme pastors and co-ordinate bishops, exalted prelates and subordinate priests, the whole clergy and the entire laity, according to the Right Rev. Joseph Reeves, and other authoritative papal historians. The transalpine communicants held that the chair was infallible, while the cisalpines vested the great power in the council.

Others say popes and bishops alone have authority to interpret the sacred Scriptures. Her own annalists acknowledge that the church may err in discipline, and many of the reigning pontiffs have been sadly mistaken, and actually led wicked, vicious lives.

Bellarmino, according to the statement of Bishop Hugh in a written debate with Breckenridge, owns up that the mother church persecuted the Waldenses and heretics, and "Holy Trent" connived at the work.

To those who bled and died from the hands of the dominant church, odds is the difference whether their taking off was under the head of doctrine, discipline, or opinion, Jewish hypocrites claimed to sit in Moses' seat, but the tiara, or triple crown adorns the brow of the occupant of St. Peter's chair and would-be successor. Little lying and petty thieving can be expurgated through auricular confession and the mediation of the priest. Under such rulings, doctrines and laws, the levee is broken and flood is irresistible. God does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, and all liars have their part in the lake, the "mother of harlots" and all confederates to the contrary.

Indulgences were first given to the crusaders, then to recruiting officers, after to heretic extirpators, finally to the donors to St. Peter's Cathedral, and eventually to all the loyal and liberal, faithful and true. Like a revolving snow ball it has gathered weight and size with the rolling years, but as the former bursts and wastes away so will the latter come to naught. When the Right Rev. John Milner D. D. gets his lance between the harness of formidable sectarian dissenters, drives the poniard to the very hilt and sheathes the dagger in the quivering heart, it by no means sanctifies, identifies, and maintains the exalted claims of the holy apostolic Catholic Church. He ingeniously entitles his work, "The end of Religious Controversy."

Rev. Rice, of Cincinnati, Ohio, delivered a series of lectures on "Romanism and Christianity." These addresses were corrected, revised, and enlarged, and lo, they made quite a volume. The learned divine made many close and damaging criticisms, derived from the rulings of councils, the voice of the early fathers, the decrees of the papal throne, the creeds of the church and the annals of the civilian hierarchs, and the middle class, or plebeian laity. But when the Five Points of Calvinism, under the cognomen of Presbyterian, is substituted for the Kingdom of God, the "dissenting" brother is as deep in the mud as the venerable prelate is in the treacherous mire.

John Huss has been termed "The Morning Star of the Reformation;" and for his piety, zeal, energy, devotion, and activity he was burned at the stake, as also Jerome of Prague

The mother church has often maltreated and slaughtered her "dissenting brethren;" and the alienated insubordinate children have cruelly retaliated, as seen during the reign and under the penal code of Queen Elizabeth, as well as elsewhere and at other times. This domestic quarrel, this family wrangle, this Christian butchery is a fearful comment on the spirit of the "mother of harlots," with her degenerate, sanguinary, apostate brood.

To follow out every item of faith and doctrine, to chronicle all their adverse and reverse rulings, to note their fluctuating and ever varying laws and by-laws, in minute detail, to restate the enactments of councils, to probe "the dunghill of Roman decretals," to notice shrines, tombs, relics, vestiges; to recount their diversified, olden, elaborate, voluminous history; and to re-echo the stentorian bellowing of papal bulls would be an herculean task indeed, quite foreign to our aim and design.

Chrysostom, "the silver mouth," and other ancient fathers and church doctors extolled the miraculous power of the monks, while Boussett, Milner and others proclaim the miraculous attestation of the church in all ages. The consecrating priest, through prayer and blessing, turns the bread and wine into the veritable body and blood of Christ, and presto! that is a miracle (?) The sacrament is administered on an average of five hundred million times annually, all requiring the yearly benefit, while the devout partake almost daily. In each, or either specie, or kind, the Lamb of God is actually present, whole and entire, soul and divinity, body and blood; hence the miracle working church manufactures and receives a half a billion Christs per annum, and she could drive a better business still in that line if she could reclaim her "separated brethren," and evangelize the pagan world.

Our dear Lord said false prophets and pseudo Christs would appear; but this sacrifice of the mass and the elevation of the host is a hateful travesty on common sense and a burlesque on the gospel and doctrine of our crucified and risen Savior. Surely, the wholesale apostasy called loudly and aright for the great restitution.

If the Latter Day Saint's faith does not save mankind the race will sink into the night of skepticism, or the blackness of Atheism. Praying that this child of my mind may be directed by the Invisible and thereby many precious souls be reclaimed from error, delusion and death, to truth and salvation, I am still the humble co-laborer of the Just.

Bishop's agent's report read and a committee of three appointed by the president to audit same. Elders reports: C. Scott had labored in a number of places. There are more calls that can be filled by the few laborers in the district. Leonard Scott had labored almost continually since conference, baptized 3. H. Rathbun had labored all his circumstances would permit. Elder Horton is doing all he can, also E. L. Kelley, B. Corless, James Carpenter and Bro. Alcott, also priests George Corless, Jonathan Emerich, and Kiefer, and teacher D. B. Teeters. All gave encouraging reports of their respective localities. Prospects bright for the future. Bro. C. Scott was sustained president of the district, W. Lockerby bishop's agent, and D. B. Teeters secretary. Bro. Hiram Rathbun was sustained as missionary in the district. The general authorities of the church were sustained in righteousness. At 8 p. m., Bro. J. A. Carpenter preached to a large and attentive audience. June 17th, at 9 a. m., Bro. C. Scott baptized ten. At 10:30 a. m., preaching by E. L. Kelley to a packed congregation. At 2:30 p. m., preaching by C. Scott, and at 8 p. m. by Leonard Scott to large and attentive audiences. At 9 a. m., the 18th, the minutes of conference were read. Committee on Bishop's agent's report find his report correct, with a balance of 2.83 due agent. Committee on two-days' meeting report it advisable to hold meetings at Galien, Marcellus and Coldwater' Michigan, and Paulding, Ohio; the time to be arranged by the president and local authorities. A vote of thanks was tendered the Coldwater Saints for their hospitality, after which the ten persons baptized were confirmed by G. A. Blakeslee, E. L. Kelley, C. Scott, L. Scott, and J. A. Carpenter. One child was blessed by G. A. Blakeslee. J. A. Carpenter was ordained a Seventy by C. Scott and G. A. Blakeslee. Five were administered to for sickness. Conference adjourned to meet at Clear Lake, on call of president. The preaching throughout was good, the attendance large, the gifts of the Spirit were manifested in tongues and prophecy, and the Saints edified and strengthened in the faith of the gospel.

Miscellaneous.

NOTICES.

Having been appointed to labor in the Southern Nebraska district, I take this way of saying to all the scattered Saints in the district, and especially in the western part, that I would like to correspond with them, for by that means I can become better acquainted with the needs of the mission, and can perhaps do more good than I could otherwise. Therefore, I would like to have any one who feels an interest in the work, and thinks there is an opportunity in their vicinity for preaching, to address me or Bro. Levi Anthony, at Wilber, Saline county, Nebraska.

HYRUM O. SMITH.

FAIRBURY, Nebraska, July 13th.

To the Saints in the Rocky Mountain mission: For a better and more thorough prosecution of the work, I have appointed Elder J. C. Clapp to take charge of the work in Montana, Elder J. H. Condit in Idaho, Elder Peter Anderson to take special oversight of the Scandinavian interests of the mission, and Elder R. M. Elvin in charge of the work in Utah. Elder John R. Evans will labor under the direction of Bro. Elvin in Utah and the authorities in Idaho as the interests of the work may demand. I expect to return to the field early in September, and until that time let all the Saints in Utah pay their tithes and offerings to R. M. Elvin, who will receipt for all moneys paid in.

May peace and love prevail,

R. J. ANTHONY.

Some one has my Church History. I hope the one that has it will send it to me, for I need it. It is a bad thing for traveling elders to loan their books. Address, A. J. CATO, Nathan, Pike county, Arkansas.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

A conference of the Eastern Iowa district will be held at the Newcastle School-house, near Fulton, Jackson county, Iowa, commencing Saturday, September 22d, at ten o'clock. A general attendance on the part of members in the district is hoped for. Go by railway to Maquoketa on Friday 21st, where you will be met by Bro. John Heide. Should any wish to go before Friday they should write Bro. Heide, stating what day they will reach Maquoketa, and he will meet them. We expect Elder Roth, and perhaps, Elder Bozarth to be with us. All will be welcome. JEROME RUBY, Pres. of Dist.

The Southern California district conference will convene at Newport branch, near Santa Ana, California, Friday, October 19th, 1888, at ten a. m., holding over Monday, 22d. All Sunday Schools are expected to hold a reunion on Saturday, 20th, in tent adjoining the church. Recitations and instructions will be given for the benefit of the schools. Those having them in charge desire to raise them to a high standard of excellence, and claim the aid of old and young Saints for it. Come one and come all, bringing the Spirit and enjoy a feast. President Heman C. Smith and Elder J. F. Burton will be present. D. S. MILLS, Dist. Pres.

The conference of the Des Moines district will meet at Des Moines, Iowa, September 1st, at ten a. m. I hereby request all the priesthood to meet on Friday, August 31st, at the above named place at two p. m., to counsel together and thus reach a better understanding in the law and usages of the church; and also to discuss such other questions as shall be of interest to us. We hope that Bro. J. R. Lambert can be with us at that time.

W. T. BOZARTH,

Missionary in charge of Des Moines and Eastern Iowa Districts.

Conference of the South-east Ohio and West Virginia district will convene at Limerick, Jackson county, Ohio, beginning September 8th, 1888 at ten a. m. We expect a ten days' meeting by request of Bro. Griffiths who is expected to be present, also Brn. Briggs, Spinger, L. Scott, and as many more as can come are invited. We desire a general attendance of the Saints of this district. All that come on the C. W. and B. road, east or west, come to Byer; those coming on the Portsmouth branch come to Jackson. All coming on the O. S. road, come to Cove. All coming write to me a week or more ahead, stating where you will come to that we may know where to send teams. All come on Friday and come filled with the Spirit of God, that we may have a good time.

T. J. BEATTY, Dist. Pres.

CAMP MEETING.

The Fremont and adjoining districts will hold a camp meeting near the residence of John Leeka, at Plum Hollow, Fremont county, Iowa, commencing August 17th, and continues over Sunday, August 26th. President Joseph Smith and other prominent elders are expected to be in attendance. All who can are requested to come prepared to camp out. Those coming by rail will be met at the depot at McPaul on the K. C. St. J. & C. B. R. R., on the 16th, 17th and 18th, and taken to the camp ground free of charge. There will be hay on the ground at ten cents a feed for a span of horses, and corn and oats at lowest cash price. A cordial invitation is extended to all by order of committee.

WM. LEEKA.

BORN.

DAVISON.—At Lockhartville, Kings county, Nova Scotia, April 28th, 1888, to Holmes J. and Katie Davison, a daughter, named Nina Lawrence.

DIED.

GILMORE.—In St. Joseph, Missouri, June 30th, 1888, Albert Lloyd, child of Mr. Albert and Sr. Fannie Gilmore. The funeral services were held at the DeKalb branch church, two and one half miles north of Stewartville, Missouri, where the dear child was laid to rest. Little Lloyd was 1 year, 2 months and 14 days old. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," was the text used by J. M. Terry for the occasion.

WILSON.—On June 21st, 1888, at Washington, Missouri, Bro. Robert Wilson, of quick consumption, after an illness of some weeks. He was born December 23d, 1854, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. A lonely wife, and two small sons, with other relatives mourn his departure. Funeral services by R. Etzenhouser.

BURJES.—At Lakeland, Hants county, Nova Scotia, June 8th, 1888, Eliza A., wife of Elder John C. Burjes, aged 46 years. Sr. Burjes was one of the first to accept the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ in Nova Scotia, being baptized by Elder Joseph Burton, February 18th, 1833. She lived a faithful and consistent life, accepting the cold shoulder and persecution with meekness and Christian forbearance; also setting her sisters a noble example in performing her part in social matters. She suffered a long painful illness of about six months under difficult circumstances without murmuring, and passed to her reward strong in the faith. Funeral attended by a large number of the inhabitants of the country. Sermon by H. J. Davison. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most miserable."

REED.—At her home, Alamosa, Colorado, April 6th, 1886, of black vomit, sister Sarah J., wife of brother E. R. Reed, aged 33 years 6 months and six days. She was a most excellent woman, wife, mother and Christian. She leaves a husband and four children, one a nursing babe. She embraced the gospel about the year 1878-9 under the preaching of one Robert Edge, a very mysterious man to some, but not to us who met him. She afterwards with many others attached herself to the Utah Mormon Church and with others emigrated to Colorado, and there seeing the evils of Brighamism, she became disgusted therewith, and when Bro. W. W. Blair came there preaching the gospel in its fulness, she was baptized and confirmed by him January 14th, 1884, at Mannassa, Colorado. She lived and died a devoted Christian. Her sickness was severe but brief, and she died happy. Her last words were, "I am going home! I am going home!"

"Dearest Sarah, thou hast left us,
And thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.
Now she's gone, we'd not recall her
From a paradise of bliss;
Where no evil can befall her,
To a changing world like this.
Fare thee well, thou fond companion,
Dear, dear spirit, fare thee well;
He who lent thee hath recalled thee
Back with him and his to dwell."

STANDARD.—At Montrose, Iowa, June 2d, 1888, Ethel, infant daughter of James and Sr. Carlita Standard, aged 2 years and 3 months. Funeral services by Rev. William Lambert.

Oh! how early she is resting,
How soon tired her tender feet;
Oh! how soon we saw her drooping,
Like a flower 'neath noonday heat.
Jewel crushed in our home casket,
Rosebud severed from the stem,
Fair bright gem by angels gathered,
For the Savior's diadem.
Yet grieve not, we have not lost her,
She has only gone before,
Gone up to that brighter dwelling,
Where death ne'er can blight her more.
Ere she'd known one sin or sorrow,
Ere she'd learned that earth was cold,
Angels bore her o'er the river,
Safely to her Father's fold.
Now bereft, when we've done sailing
Life's dark stormy ocean o'er,
We shall have a joyous meeting
With our darling gone before;
Little Ethel's hands will lead us
O'er death's river safe to shore,
She shall open heaven's portals,
Darling Ethel gone before.

SHAW.—At New Bedford, Massachusetts, July 11th, 1888, Bro. Thomas W. B. Shaw, aged 36 years, 3 months and 23 days, after much suffering, which he bore with patience, being afflicted with Bright's disease of the kidneys. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn the loss of a loving husband and kind father. Services conducted by Elder John Smith. At the time of his death one of his children was taken sick with the scarlet fever. Services in respect to his memory were held by the branch Sunday evening, July 15th, at which a number of his friends gathered.

ADDRESSES.

Thomas W. Smith, Forster, New South Wales, Australia, till further notice.

THE PULSE IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

Every person should know how to ascertain the state of the pulse in health, then, by comparing it with what it is when he is ailing, so that he may have some idea of the urgency of his case. Parents should know the healthy pulse of each child, since now and then a person is born with a peculiarly slow or fast pulse, and the very case in hand may be of such peculiarity. An infant's pulse is 140, child of seven about 80, and from twenty to sixty years it is 70 beats a minute, declining to 60 at four-score. A healthful grown person beats 70 times a minute, declining to 60 at four-score. At sixty if the pulse always exceeds 70, there is disease; the machine working itself out; there is a fever or inflammation somewhere, and the body is feeding on itself, as in consumption, when the pulse is quick.—Sel.

GREAT MEN'S SONS AT A DIS- ADVANTAGE.

Sons of great men seem to remind us in these days chiefly that they can not climb to fame upon their fathers' greatness. It is a somewhat curious fact that outside of a few families, such as that of Adams, there is a sort of hereditary bar to public succession. Perhaps it is as well illustrated by the fortunes thus far of Robert Lincoln as by those of any other man. Mr. Lincoln is not only the son of his father, but he is a really able man. He has shown himself such in his profession. He showed himself such in the cabinet to which he was called. And yet the name of Robert Lincoln is one unfamiliar to the politics of the day, and his ability is neither properly measured nor appreciated.

The first reason, of course, is that such men have applied to them an altogether different standard from that in ordinary use. It is not asked if they are abler or wiser than their associates, but if they are wise and able as their fathers or uncles. To require of a young man that he should display the qualities of a Lincoln or Grant in maturity, and placed in the forcing atmosphere of a great crisis, is to depreciate him in advance. He is not a weakling because he can not carry the giant's armor, yet that is the test set for him.

It is one of the consolations of mediocrity to believe that the world is run by favoritism. To bear an illustrious name is, therefore, to become a target of a certain species of envy. And if any scion of a house still honored rises to greatness, he will have achieved it. He will not be born to it or find it thrust upon him, but he must be very great indeed to overcome the disadvantages of standing in the shadow of the colossal dead.—Sel.

DISCOURAGED FARMERS.

When crops are short, as they are in many sections of the country on account of drought, farmers are apt to become discouraged and feel that their business is subject to more contingencies than any other; that they are more exposed to losses than men in any other lines of business, and that these are in a great measure such as they can not prevent by skill and forethought.

While this may seem to be the case in some instances, they should remember that they have a great advantage over the man in mercantile pursuits, who sees his receipts curtailed by hard times, during which his stock depreciates in value by changes in styles, competition due to the constant improvements being made in all kinds of articles for use that render stock held some time less saleable, etc. These reduce the value of what he has, and at the same time he can not curtail his expenses correspondingly as the farmer can. He must pay cash for what he needs to support his family,—food, clothing and other necessary expenses.

The farmer raises so large a share of his living that he is enabled, when there is a year of poor crops, to live without spending much, and he can more readily bring his expenses within his income. Where diversified farming is followed, he can depend on having something to sell every year, and he is relieved from much of the care and anxiety that so often wear out men in other lines of business before they have reached the prime of life. A well-worked farm increases in value, and by careful management a farmer may depend on not only making a comfortable living, but accumulating something as the result of his labor.—Sel.

EDITOR.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, August 4, 1888.

EDITOR IN INDEPENDENCE.

WE have been on a flying visit to Independence, Missouri, where we found the Saints feeling excellently well regarding the result of the late election. We confess to a feeling of great relief from apprehension and distress when walking the streets of the city "beautiful for situation" during our visit, in the reflection that we were safe from the intrusions of drunkenness, that the streets were free from that noisy and noisome rabble which usually congregates around the places where intoxicants are guzzled; and we well remembered the places on the south side of the square, where at all our former visits, the senses of seeing, hearing and smelling were assailed by the noisome fumes from stale beer, bad whisky and worse tobacco in passing, and the sidewalk made slippery with filth from mouths made filthy by tobacco and drink, while oaths, dirty speech and ribald song, shocked the ear, and beer and slouch and drunken lurch offended the eye. Now the sidewalks were clean and the way unobstructed. True, the doors were closed, and the business which was once done in those now vacant rooms had sought more congenial climes. We heard that the Mormons and the Red Ribbon folks had "killed the town." That it was a "dead town." How had the Mormons and the Red Ribbon folks killed the town? It is true that they had by their ballots smothered the spirits out of the incorporated city—of course, when the spirits are out of a body it must be dead, and the spirits were out of Independence and—it was dead. But we assure the brethren abroad that it is a beautiful corpse, and if it be dead, it can be said in the language of a brother who helped to kill it with his vote: "If it does kill the town we will have the satisfaction of giving it a sober burial." It is true that the city has lost that particular business—drunkard making. The men who for years have been paying their money over the bar across which they received "Rum, Ruin and Rags," no longer congregate around and within those closed doors, but are elsewhere, and many of them are regaining the soberness which is the normal condition of man, as God created him. An instance or two: a man, the son of a member of the church, himself not a member, was heard to say a day or two after the election; "Well, there will be one astonished woman in the country to-night." "How's that?" remarked a bystander. "Why, when I go home to-night, I shall go home sober; a thing I have not done in ten years before; my wife will be astonished to see me come home sober." Another, a man living near the city, and whose habit was known to be to come to town and remain until drunk, and sometimes to be helped home, was noticed to come into the place, go to the store where he purchased his goods, make his purchases, load up his goods and go home without delay. So notorious was the habits of the man, so well was he known, that this incident was noticed and at once told.

What is the lesson? Here are two men who have helped materially to foster the sale of liquor in the city of Independence; who have been aided to sobriety and steady habits by voting the dram shop out of their way. What the saloon man has had of their earnings will now most likely go into the larder, the wardrobes, the parlors and sitting rooms of those homes to which these men used to go drunk, but now go sober. We venture the remark that if these two families could be heard they would thank God that the (Mormons) Latter Day Saints and Red Ribbon folks had killed the town.

The fight was clearly the home against the saloon, and as in most conflicts somebody gets worsted, we are righteously and tremendously glad that in the contest at Independence the home won.

While in the city we learned that among others baptized into the church was Sr. W. E. McLellen, the widow of the late Dr. W. E. McLellen, who, on request, renewed her covenant in baptism, Bro. F. G. Pitt officiating.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

MENTION has been made in HERALD concerning trouble and fighting among the Saints and outsiders near Glen Easton, West Virginia, in which some of the Saints were severely, and Bro. Harris, president of branch, an old man, died of the excitement and shock. A letter from Bro. Gomer T. Griffith in this issue will give all necessary particulars. It also appears from an article on the subject published in the Wheeling Register, June 28th, that our people were not in the fault.

Bro. T. A. Hougas furnished us the programme of the Commencement Exercises of the Western Normal College, located at Shenandoah, Fremont county, Iowa, beginning the 22d ult., and inviting us to attend on that occasion. Prominent among those taking an active part in the exercises we see with pleasure the names of a number of promising young Latter Day Saints. When will the members of our church own and operate Colleges and Universities of their own? There is no reason why they may not have one within the next year if they will unitedly, promptly work to that end. The Western Normal is said to be a fine institution, conducted on liberal principles, and having a rapidly increasing patronage. Its beginnings were small, but from the first it has grown steadily upward and outward, paying fair dividends on investments, and to accommodate growing demands the College is to be still further enlarged at an early time. Iowa is moving well to the front in furnishing good educational facilities for her rapidly increasing population, and the Saints should seek to keep fully abreast of the foremost in this goodly procession.

Bro. Edward W. Tullidge, author of "The Life of Joseph the Prophet," "History of Salt Lake City" and the publisher of the "Western Galaxy," of Salt Lake City, Utah, visited Lamoni for a few days, when with the senior editor he went to Independence, Missouri, whence after a week's sojourn among the dwellers there he would leave on Monday, July 24th for Denver and his home. He expressed himself pleased with his stay with the Saints.

Bro. J. R. Badham, of Los Angeles, California, suggests that it would be a wise and good thing if some one in every branch of the church would, by himself, or by the appointment of the branch, take notice of and keep a record of the notable spiritual manifestations, healings, providential interferences, special providences, dreams and other things worth saving, that they may from time to time be compiled and published, thus forming a handbook of reference for the use of the church and to preserve the evidences of our time in favor of the divinity of the work as vouchsafed by the Spirit. We think it a good suggestion, and in connection advise that care and wise discrimination should be used not to cumber the record with what is not pertinent to the plain relation of the event as it transpires. There is a world of worth in the statement of the man who was healed of his blindness:—"A man that is called Jesus made clay and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash; and I went and washed; and I received sight."

The Saints of Western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio, especially in and about Pittsburg are growing anxious to have Bro. E. C. Briggs' presence and labors among them. Will Bro. Briggs please correspond with Bro. Frank Criley, No. 116 Federal street, Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, as soon as convenient, and send his address, that matters appertaining to the mission may be sent him.

Bro. E. T. Atwell Jr., of St. Paul, Nebraska, writing under date of July 10th, mentions with satisfaction the reception he met from the people while endeavoring to call attention to the latter day work, in a series of lectures. He also mentions the wishes of the people of that vicinity to hear more of our doctrine, and earnestly desires some of the ministry to come over and preach to them.

"I go for universal liberty to every soul of man—civil, religious, and political."—Joseph Smith, in Times and Seasons, March 15th, 1842.

To show that we did not mistake the meaning of Elder Hickey's letters and the positions assumed by those to whom he and we had reference, we give the readers of the HERALD a letter received by us dated July—1888. All we have to say in regard to what he chooses to call "witnesses and testimony" to what Mr. Strang did is this. We had in a letter written to another, referred to persons accepting the Reorganization upon premises and evidences created by themselves. This we wrote in general terms, and may have referred to Mr. Hickey as one who accounted for his position in his own way. We certainly have disbelieved and do now disbelieve what these men allege, and place no faith in what they accept in regard to what Mr. Strang did, no matter whether they were created by these men, or by others, they are not evidences to us. It is an easy thing to "dare" another to assert this or that in the name of Jesus Christ, but such challenge is not proof, nor argument. Jesus Christ has not certified to us in favor of what is alleged to have given Mr. Strang his authority to succeed Joseph Smith and do what is claimed for him; but the Spirit has testified to us of that which makes it improper for us to accept such statements, claims and evidences, therefore we reject them as not being for us, or necessary to the existence and life of the church.

MUSCOTAH, July, 1888.

Editors Herald:—In publishing my letters I think you done well—as they appear about as we sent them. Your notes on Mr. Strang and myself will be questioned as to the propriety. But if you can stand it we can. When we left Nauvoo to preach the vision Joseph had on the hill of the Temple, we were then branded by Brighamites as not accredited, &c., &c. But we have lived and seen good in the land, and by the same rules of logic, purpose to move on and try and endure the rest of life's journey. Before I would renounce James—Joseph's letter; Book of the Law,—I would see every Josephite farther in hell than they are out. Yes, publish it, O ye elders, priests and deacons, that we do identify James J. Strang, and endorse his general teachings and intend to. Ye editors can publish us as not credited, forever. But I challenge you again to publish that the witnesses or testimony that have been given concerning Strang's setting you into the presidency and patriarchate, was all of my creation. Say it if you dare; in the name of Jesus Christ. Then will cries go up to God that he may remove the lying prophet, and send one—mighty, &c.—holding the sceptre as did James.

Truly and sincerely,

L. D. HICKEY.

UTAH CHURCH PROPERTY.

THE following will serve to explain the condition under which Marshal Dyer, Receiver, appointed by the government to take charge of the property of the Utah Mormon church, has taken possession of certain properties belonging to the polygamic church. The action of the government in a case of this kind can only be justified by the plea of great necessity, and is a very serious question whether there was in this particular case any necessity for so extremely harsh and doubtful remedy. It will hardly be enough to plead in the courts, that such action is justifiable "because the people are Mormons." Courts are cold blooded creatures and prejudices are as a rule excluded. Mormons, Latter Day Saints, Protestants, Catholics and Jews are, or should be alike, before the tribunals of justice.

"THE CHURCH PROPERTY.

There has been considerable interest recently in the church property suit. Some people have wrong ideas regarding what has been done in the temporary surrender that has been made. The following explanatory article from the Deseret News treats the matter clearly and in a manner that should satisfy the people generally.

"The surrender of property to the United States Marshal, acting as receiver in the suits instituted against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints under the Edmunds-Tucker act, has caused much comment and some inquiries. Many people wonder why this has been permitted, and there is some misunderstanding of the facts and the situation.

"We do not know any who candidly endorse the theory or the practice of the confiscation of property belonging to any ecclesiastical body in America. It is looked upon throughout the United States as a stretch of governmental authority, as harsh and unnecessary treatment of an unpopular people, and as a precedent dangerous to religious liberty. Even the most virulent anti-Mormons hesitate to approve of such high-handed proceedings.

"But the law, rushed through congress in excitement, is on the statute book of the nation and it is the duty of the Attorney General to proceed under it. The court here appointed a Receiver and it became his duty to take possession of such property as the Church held at and after the passage of the law, March 3d, 1887.

"Previous to that date considerable real and personal property which the Church had held at different times had been disposed of and conveyed to purchasers, or to the Stake and Ward corporations organized under the general territorial statute. The law of Congress providing for the institution of suits for the forfeiture of Church realty here, above the value of $50,000, especially exempted from escheat buildings used exclusively for the worship of God, and the grounds adjacent, also parsonages and burial grounds connected therewith; and the law of 1862 provided that property acquired by the Church before that date should not be interfered with.

"Further, the law did not provide for nor contemplate the forfeiture of any personal property of the Church. But it aimed to dissolve the Church corporation and authorize the winding up of its property affairs conformably to law. This has been construed into the right to take possession of personal property as well as real estate, pending the settlement of the affairs of the corporation in the Supreme Courts of the Territory.

"That the law, severe and unjust and as we view it, unconstitutional as it is, has been greatly exceeded in its administration, the people here do not doubt for a moment. But there has been no disposition to resist except in that legal manner which is the right of every citizen and every corporation. The officers appointed to proceed against the Church have considered it their duty to endeavor to gain possession, not only of the property held by the Church at the time of the passage of the Edmunds-Tucker Act, but of that which it had previously held and disposed of, and also personal property which they claim was conveyed improperly.

"There has been considerable litigation, and much more has been imminent. It became desirable that this should be curtailed and measures should be adopted to carry the case up to the Supreme Court of the United States as soon as possible. To stop vexatious litigation and expedite the appeal, the attorneys for the Church consented to a surrender for the time being of the property which has already been enumerated in the columns of this paper.

"The Latter Day Saints should understand that this is no surrender of any right, no admission that the government or its officers has any legal claim to any portion of the property involved, no actual forfeiture of a building, or a foot of land. The Receiver holds it until the matter is finally adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction. He is in custody of this property for the court, and, legally, as much for the interest of the Church as of the Government.

"The arrangement entered into will have the good effect of quieting the titles held to different portions of real estate by individuals who honestly acquired them, the Church having placed in the Receiver's hands the proceeds of the sale, instead of the property sold. We have no doubt that this arrangement will be approved by the Attorney General, and when the Government authorities at Washington have ratified the agreement the case will go on for trial and judicial decree, and then to the highest court of the country, where it is hoped and believed justice will be done and the validity of the law will be fully tested.

"Meanwhile the Saints need not take any trouble over this temporary surrender of property. Every right will be contended for, firmly and peaceably. Whatever may be the result, the Church itself will not be affected in principle, in doctrine, in power, in authority, or in spirit. And those who have faith in its divine origin and mission will continue to discharge every duty in relation to it, having confidence that He who organized and has sustained it, will cause all things to work together for its good and for the ultimate triumph of its righteous cause."

BRANCH MEMBERSHIP.

A BROTHER asks if persons baptized by a missionary are to be considered members of the nearest branch to them. No; unless he baptizes by the request or consent of the presiding officers of that branch.

All persons not baptized within the limits of a branch and by the authority of its presiding officers, should be received by vote of a branch on certificate of baptism or other competent, reliable testimony. The rule of the church is that scattered members, when residing convenient to any branch, should unite with it.

THE New Albany, Indiana, Ledger has the following concerning the efforts of the brethren at Byrnnville:

"Byrnnville, Harrison county, is stirred up from centre to circumference over the successful religious revival recently held there by the Church of the Latter Day Saints, an anti-polygamous branch of the Mormon church. A great many persons embraced the faith during the revival and the discussions that have followed the work of the revivalist keep the inhabitants of the village excited from early morn till dewy eve."

The Greenville Herald notes the effort thus:

"The Mormon or Latter Day Saints revival of religion which was recently held at Byrnnville was a very successful meeting and the members seem to be strong in their faith, as they are having regular meetings with several new accessions to the church. If the work increases in the future as it has in the past, Byrnnville will be a modern Salt Lake City."

GIVE ALL MEN THEIR DUE.

A STORY has been extensively circulated through the press of the country, beginning at Chicago, to the effect that Elizabeth T. Rutter, originally a native of England, had been badly treated on her way to Utah by Mormon elders, and that on her getting away from Utah to Chicago, on her way to England, again she was almost starved, and that a relative had been murdered in Utah; all told to injure the Utah Mormons. The story is evidently false, and like hundreds of a sinister character has been told with the similar motive, to injure the Mormons in Utah. We give below a repetition of the story as lately published by the Ogden, Utah, Standard, and from the Herald of August 12th, 1886:

"On Sunday afternoon a reporter of the Standard came across the true history of the Chicago story which was telegraphed all over the country in relation to Mrs. Rutter. The whole story, as we stated, is untrue from beginning to end, except that such a woman has been here. The following from the Ogden Herald, of August 12th, 1886, gives the story of her husband's death, which she now calls a Mormon murder.

"Thomas C. Rutter, of West Weber, went hunting cows last evening, taking with him a trusted horse. Time went rapidly by, the cows came home, but Rutter did not return. Becoming alarmed at his long absence, the neighbors went to seek for him, but all their efforts were of no avail, and after midnight they returned home. Early this morning they succeeded in finding his tracks. He had crossed the river with his horse, and in his search, followed the river some distance, when coming to a place where some willows overhung the banks, the horse was evidently crowded off the bank, and rider and horse both fell into the water. The anxious searchers found the dead body of the unfortunate man a short distance down the river, at a spot directly between West Weber and Plain City. The horse was not drowned. Mr. Rutter was a middle aged man, who has been in this country only two years. He has a wife and two children in West Weber and one in England. The news of the sad occurrence has nearly crazed his wife who is of a weak and nervous disposition."

From the Ogden Herald of the 14th of August, 1886, it is learned that Rutter was in the employ of J. B. Alvord, of West Weber. The body was recovered by Hyrum Hogge, William Telford and Wheatly Gibson. It was found in an upright position in a pool about seven feet deep and about twelve feet from the bank. It was conjectured that he was thrown off in riding through the willows as he was not an expert horseman.

The following is the verdict of the jury impaneled before the justice of the peace:

WEST WEBER PRECINCT,
Weber county, Utah,
August 12th, 1886.

The undersigned on their oaths do say that Thomas Rutter, whose body is now lying dead before them, came to his death accidentally by drowning in Weber River on the 11th day of August, 1886.

JURORS: { GEORGE JAMESON, WHEATLY GIBSON,
JAMES HOGGE.

J. B. ALVORD, Justice of the Peace.

At the express wish and earnest solicitation of his parents her son, John Thomas Rutter came to Utah in 1883 with Chas. H. Greenwell, of this city, with whom this young man staid perfectly content until 1883, when his father came to Utah. The father obtained work on the farm of J. B. Alvord where he was treated with all the courtesy that any one could ask for. Later on the young man came to Ogden and worked in Scovill's broom factory. In the fall of 1887 the young man's grandfather sent for him to come to England on a visit and he is now in England. Only a short time ago Mrs. Rutter was around trying to raise means to get him out here again as he is anxious to come. Shortly after the death of Mr. Rutter a daughter of his, who is now married and said to be living in this city, received a severe burning by the explosion of a lamp. She was tenderly cared for by Mrs. A. Greenwell, her expense being paid by Ogden City. Mrs. Rutter and her daughter came to Utah about two months before the death of Mr. Rutter.

Mrs. Rutter had no occasion to go to Chicago to faint for bread, as she had all she desired here. As far as can be learned from reliable witnesses she was treated with kindness and wanted nothing.

She expressed herself a few weeks ago to Mr. Greenwell that she wished to go back to England on a visit, but that she would soon return. She was also as anxious to get her son out here again as he is desirous to return. Her story of indignities by the elders, her being defrauded of her husband's means, the assertion that her son was prevented from returning, the substitution and retention of letters, are self-evident lies manufactured either by the Associate Press or stated by Mrs. Rutter when she knew they were untrue.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—When will the thirteenth chapter of Zechariah be fulfilled?

Ans.—At and after the second coming of Christ.

Q.—What is meant in "Letters of O. Cowdery," page 18, where it reads, "And the honest have been led by the designing till there are none to be found who are practicing the ordinances of the gospel as they were anciently delivered."

A.—It means that none administered baptism, laying on of hands for various purposes, the Lord's supper, washing the feet of the ministry, etc., as taught and practiced in the times of Christ and the apostles. While some sects administered them partly and imperfectly, none did fully and rightly.

Q.—Does God punish people for their sins by sending afflictions upon them?

A.—Yes; read Genesis 3:14, 19. Leviticus 26:14-43; Jer. 31:28; 2 Thess. 1:9; Heb. 10:29, etc., etc.

Q.—Is it wrong to use the word "Bless God," in bearing testimony or praying?

A.—No; if the intention is to thank, praise, or extol him. See Deut. 8:10; Ps. 103:12, 20, 21, 22; 135:19; James 3:9, etc., etc.

Q.—What sort of bread should the Saints use for Sacrament?

A.—Any kind that is clean, wholesome, and made by the Saints.

BRO. D. S. MILLS, in a breezy letter from Santa Ana, California, July 9th, says:

"The reaction of the land boom is being seriously felt, and is threatening the ruin of thousands; and will if it lasts a few months. Southern California is full of idle men, many of whom are destitute here in July, but what must be their condition next winter. Suffering and crime will follow. Our people are not of this class, though all will feel the damaging pressure. In the face of these facts the supervisors of this county have allowed the lying shyster crew to draw from the county funds two hundred and fifty dollars per month, to boom immigration from the east here. It is worse than highway robbery; but so things go; and the end is not yet, but by and by."

The inflated prices of real estate ruling at Kansas City and Independence, Missouri, the last two years, have had the effect to largely discourage the migration thither of a very desirable class of people, that of the fairly forehanded laboring man. It will be found impracticable to build a prosperous city of rich men alone. Laborers are necessary, and true wisdom would dictate that unless there are opportunities for settlement at reasonable prices for desirable locations, laboring men will not, can not come in. Some parts of California practically put out the placard "No poor wanted here," intending to build up settlements of wealthy people alone. Such policy could be but disastrous; and the fate of the boom in Southern California is the natural and inevitable result of the bursting of the bubble of inflation, and will befall all other places similarly boomed. It is a wonder that otherwise sensible men will permit themselves to be carried away by the breath of speculation. The wise man said, "He that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent."

The opportunities to become rich afforded to men by speculations in real estate, are frequently opportunities to legally rob the poor; and there is a way to steal which a man may employ and he be absolved of crime by the courts; but which will harden his heart, permit covetous desires to come in, and eventually make him defraud his fellow men with little compunction of conscience. We are not sure but what it was some such thought as this that led to the saying: "How hardly shall a rich man enter into heaven." "The love of money is the root of all evil," wrote the good man. How carefully then ought the Saint to guard the portals of his heart lest the love of money, the desire to be rich, lead him into the ways of doing evil and wrong to his fellow man.

DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

A BROTHER desires to know what are the chief lines of proof by which to sustain the divinity of Christ and his mission; and in reply we suggest the following as among the very best:

1.—His personal coming as to race, family, place, manner, time, parentage, priesthood, ministrations, manner of persecution, death, burial, resurrection and ascension, all in fulfilment of authentic prophecies, and of the expectations and desires of ancient nations.

2.—The matchless excellence of his moral code as delivered by Himself and his first ministers.

3.—The superior fitness and adaptability of His doctrines in respect to the moral, spiritual, intellectual, social, and physiological nature and needs of man, for both this life and that to come.

4.—The exact fulfilment of His numerous prophecies and promises according to their expressed or implied conditions.

5.—The strong and exalted impress His doctrines have made upon all departments of society.

6.—The spiritual, supernatural evidences given in confirmation of His doctrines.

7.—The intelligent, unselfish zeal of His first ministers and followers.

8.—The testimony of the Book of Mormon.

9.—The evidences furnished by the Doctrine and Covenants.

10.—The testimony of Christ's people in these latter days as based upon their personal experiences.

Whoever will studiously compare with the Bible prophecies the statements of history found in Maccabees, Josephus, Rollin, Gibbon, D' Aubigne, Mosheim, etc., etc., will find an abundant amount of evidence in support of those prophecies, and therefore proof of the divinity of Christ.

Horne's Introduction, Nelson on Infidelity, Barnes on the Prophecies, and Newton on the Prophecies, are good works for those who would thoroughly search the evidences of Christ's divinity.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. H. L. Holt wrote July 18th, from Scio, Oregon:

"I am holding meetings and have been using the Christian meeting house, (so called), until last evening they came and told me I could not speak there again, giving as their reason, that they did not believe as I did. I told them that was certainly a fact, for if they did they would be with me. There was an appointment out for the evening, which of course I could not fill, but some of the business men took the matter up and secured the City Hall, where I am to hold forth this evening. I think the "Fulness of the Gentiles" has about "come in" on this coast. The people have no use for the word of God as taught by us—or by any one else."

Bro. J. J. Cornish wrote from Bay Port, Michigan, the 23d ult.:

"We had a grand time here yesterday. We were greatly blessed by the Master. Our cause is onward all through these parts."

Bro. George T. Bullard, of Bowraville, recently wrote Bro. Stebbins:

"The work in Australia is progressing favorably. Bro. J. F. Burton paid us a short visit a few weeks ago, and added one more to the "fold." Others are much interested, are investigating, and I think will unite ere long. Bro. Burton intends sailing for California July 11th next. He has been faithful to his calling and mission here, and his amiable wife has been a great help, likewise sister Addie, their daughter. We have not yet seen Bro. T. W. Smith and Sr. Helen, but expect to before long. They are about leaving Victoria now for New South Wales, to attend a conference at Forster, June 30th."

Bro. Thomas Taylor wrote from Birmingham, England, the 12th ult., renewing for Heralds and ordering other church publications, and adds:

"The work is still moving steadily onward, and all are trying to do their best to help forward its progress. Peace and unity prevail among the Saints generally."

Bro. James Bannister wrote from Vanessa, Ontario, July 17th, ordering three copies of "Joseph the Seer," and said:

"Elder Evans is preaching to full congregations at Waterford, and is having a good time. Since Goliath was slain, he has baptized twelve, and we think he will be the means of bringing more to the knowledge of the truth and organize a branch there."

WE commend the following to such of our readers as are so foolish as to be in the habit of employing drugs, chloroform, chloral, morphine and opium. There can be but one end to the opium, or morphine habit; it ends in loss of self-control, self-respect and a miserable death.

DRUGS AND INSOMNIA.—I have recently met with several cases of insomnia due to over taxation of the American nervous system, and have been requested to prescribe some drug that should be effective to produce sleep and be at the same time harmless. No such drug exists! There is not one medicine capable of quieting to sleep voluntary life that has been working ten hours at high pressure, except it be more or less poisonous. Consumption of chloral, bromine in some form, or opium, has increased in this country to an incredible extent, is still growing, and a large number of Americans go to bed every night more or less under the influence of poison. Sleep thus produced is not restful nor restorative, and nature sternly exacts her penalties for violated law, more severe in these cases than in most others. Digestion suffers first—one is rarely hungry for breakfast, and loss of morning appetite is a certain sign of ill health. Increasing nervousness follows, until days become burdens and poisoned nights the only comfortable parts of life.—Dr. William F. Hutchinson, in American Magazine.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"In the selfishness that seeks rather to be waited upon than to wait, rather to take than to give, we lose that which would be the very crown of our life."

WHO WILL RESPOND?

LONG before this number of the Herald reaches its thousands of readers, many, we feel well assured, will be anxiously looking for its coming, and among this number will be some who will turn first of all to the Home Column; for their thoughts will be upon the Prayer League, and its final inauguration. It is with mingled feelings of love, joy and gratitude to God that we give place to the article of Sister Eleanor; and when we tell the sisters (as she told us in a private note) that the memory texts which accompany this issue were given to her in answer to prayer, she being directed to them without any previous knowledge of what they were, we feel sure that many for whose names we have been watching and waiting, will hesitate no longer to send them in. We would not have one send her name who has not duly weighed the matter and resolved to abide faithful; but we hope to have them come up by tens, fifties and hundreds, until they shall number thousands. It is for the young as well as for the middle aged and the old; and while we shall rejoice at every name, our joy will be greater when the young step forward to join our band.

We give below the full text of the memory verses for the first week in August, in order that all may see at a glance the harmony and beauty of the thoughts; and will also take occasion to say that it is intended these texts as they are designated from time to time, shall be committed to memory, as an aid in producing the frame of mind in which we would approach the Deity. A vacuum is abhorred by the mind as cordially as it is by all nature. Cultivate noble thoughts, and there will be no place for the ignoble. If the heart is pure it is utterly impossible for the actions to be bad; and if the Prayer League will obey the mind of the Spirit as designated to them in these memory texts, the blessing of God will be with them.

"They helped every one his neighbor; and ever one said to his brother, Be of good courage."—Isa. 41:6.

"These are the things that ye shall do: Speak every man the truth to his neighbor; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbor; and love no false oath; for all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord."—Zech. 8:16, 17.

We can not close without asking the careful and prayerful attention of the sisters to the first subject of prayer as given this week.

Since January 21st there has been sent to the Home Column Fund $349. This is well; but sisters, I am assured that we can do more, and when our Prayer League is fully active we shall see these offerings increase.

TO THE PRAYER LEAGUE.

Dear Sisters:—I will now try to explain, in answer to enquiries. Some of the sisters desire to have their meetings together at stated times. I see no objection to such a course being pursued; but think it better to have no rule about that, for the reason that there are many isolated and invalid members who would feel debarred, and we want all who desire to be a helper in Zion's cause to take part with us.

We subjoin a form and subjects, as a beginning. As woman's work extends, many things will suggest themselves, and changes can be effected at any time by the majority signifying assent. The sick, or those desiring special remembrance, should send requests to editor of the Column. We think that to make the time weekly will at present be more acceptable to the greater number. Of course the time indicated will vary in different localities. Each should use their own local time or the nearest convenient hour to the one appointed. The Scripture selections are intended as memory texts, to help us in our efforts for the better life.

We propose the appointment of ten o'clock, August 9th; and thereafter the same hour once a week.

Memory texts; 6 verses from 41st Isaiah; also Zech. 8:16, 17.

Subjects for prayer: This League; that we may be blessed with a spiritual endowment that will prepare our hearts and our minds for the proper accomplishment of woman's work in the home, the Sunday School, the press—wherever our help is needed in Zion's redemption and prepare us to enter when further doors of usefulness are opened to us.

Dear Sister Frances:—I want to write and tell you that I love this everlasting gospel, for I know it is true. I live away from the Saints, but Brn. Roth, Nirk, and Shimel have preached here several times. I want any elders who see this, and can come and preach, to come, and I will give them a home while they are here. I think much good could be done in this place.

EMERSON, Iowa, July 15th.

Mrs. M. Willeby, Dear Sister in the one Faith:—Will you come to the camp-meeting this fall? I will go, and I would like to see you there; as it has been many years since we saw each other, it would be a happy meeting for me.

MARY P. DAVIS.

FORSTER, Australia, June 6th.

Sister Frances:—I have just read your article, "That they all may be one," in the Home Column, together with the article treating on Mothers' Prayer-meetings, and am pleased that the subject has found its way into the Column. All suggestions on that subject by wise Christian mothers and sisters too, will, I am sure, be most gladly received by the mothers here in Forster, who have started just such a meeting, that they may be aided, and ultimately grow into a more perfect organization. As yet there is no real organization, only a few verbal rules. They meet in each others houses alternately; and the sister in whose house the meeting is, leads the meeting, selects the hymns and makes the opening prayer. Only on rare occasions are any testimonies given; the time is given wholly to prayer, with the exception of a hymn for opening and closing. As yet no chapter has been read, though they have often talked over the matter; but I hope by the aid of the sisters abroad they may engraft all that is necessary to make this method of helping one another both lasting and beneficial, and that she who leads may make a portion of the word of God her study and present it to the mothers for consideration and as a leading thought through the week. The meetings are only in their infancy, but the starting of them bespeaks the working of the Spirit in the heart and a willingness to do what they can.

Since I have been among them I have, by invitation, lead the meetings, and although I can not hear the prayers as I would desire, I can feel the spirit of the meetings and believe each one feels benefited by their coming together, and are brought nearer to God; that with a broken and contrite spirit they make known their desires and plead with the Father for help by the aid of his Holy Spirit, to train up their children in righteousness, and fit them for the duties of life.

The suggestions you made in that article were the same that I made here about two weeks ago to the mothers assembled in their meeting; and thus we see the same Spirit that is actuating the working mothers and sisters in the land of Zion, is also leading us in this far off land in the self-same line of thought and action. It is pleasing to us all to know that we are in the same line, though far behind; for by reason of the experimental knowledge in spiritual things and the degree of wisdom attained by many there—having had greater privileges than those here—they can comprehend the Spirit's workings more fully, not only to drink in its happifying influence that thrills the soul and fills the whole being with light, and with a power, sometimes, that scarcely can be repressed, but are able to set forth its teachings for a help and a strength to others, and to impart its power and so move others to action. The suggestions were: To be united in their prayers for definite objects. Not anything that they might choose to ask for, but whatever was their heart's desire before God, to make it a special request from time to time when they met, and if it was not contrary to the will of God, he would surely grant their request; and to note these answers to prayer, that their faith might thus be strengthened.

And let me here say to the dear sisters, everywhere, that I believe we often deprive ourselves of much faith and trust, and rob God, the Eternal Father, of much honor and glory that is due to him, by failing to watch when we pray, or to seek that we may find. Jesus said, "Ask and it shall be given, seek and ye shall find." Find what? Find what we ask for! For it will surely be given, when it is right in the Lord's time for us to receive. Do we not often ask our heavenly Father for the needful things or the blessings we desire, and not receiving them at once, let it slip from our minds. After a time we receive—in an indirect way perhaps—and fail to recognize the answer of our prayers; but in many instances accept it as a piece of good fortune. God often answers prayer direct, and often through the voice, or the pen of another. So let us seek that we may find the answer to our prayers in whatever way God may be pleased to send.

The mothers here have prayed for the Lord to instruct them in carrying on their meetings; and now comes an answer, through the medium they so much love—the Home Column. This not only testifies that the Lord has heard their prayers, but that he works by means, in his appointed ways.

The Home Column was, as Sister Eleanor says, instituted for a means of instructing mothers, and I feel grateful to her for reminding its patrons of that fact; and if the mothers and sisters keep this object in view, I can only repeat your words, Sister Frances, "No limit could be put to the good that could be done." Much desired knowledge would be received, and many would read in black and white the answers to their prayers. But O, how glad I am that such seekers are not depending on me only as a medium or messenger to convey the given intelligence, or I fear they might often seek in vain, or wait and pray much longer than did Daniel of old for the interpretation of his dream, while the "Prince of Persia" was hindering the angel from taking the message. How often I feel prompted to write, when some subject will come to me with almost as much force and distinctness as the breeze through the open window; but I allow other duties to hinder until the time passes or the interest dies out. Who shall say these influences are not sent of God in answer to some one's prayers? And if I fail to be an obedient messenger, what then? Shall the one who prayed fail to receive their answer? Oh, no! I may hinder for a time, but another will be chosen, who will respond, and I will lose the blessing of being the Lord's messenger. Are there any others like me in this respect? I fear there are many; and so the burden falls on the few. How different things might be if all the promptings of the good Spirit found a ready response. But, oh! the cares and duties of this life, that which pertains to the body only, how they crowd about us and for the time and attention that so many feel they would gladly devote to the benefit of the soul; but they are crowded on all sides—cumbered with many cares—and when the gentle Spirit pleads with them to "come forth for a little season into 'green pastures, by still waters' and refresh their souls," the answer too often is, "Go thy thy way for this time; at a more convenient season I will hearken;" and the grieved Spirit turns away. SISTER EMMA.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, July 18th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Inclosed you will find one dollar I send as an offering. Permit me to relate a dream, and the circumstances connected therewith. I have been laying aside pennies for some time for the Home Column Missionary Fund, but thought I would not send them until they became a dollar, but they grew so slowly I became almost discouraged. Saturday night of last week I was dreaming these waking thoughts. I seemed to be sitting by a table, when my mother, who died in September of 1884, stood by my side. She looked so natural, seemed so kind and pleasant, that it all appeared very real to me. I began telling her what I had thought about sending an offering, and said perhaps I had better send what I had and not wait any longer. She said she wanted to make an offering, but had nothing to do it with; could not I send something for her? I said I did not know but I could. I further said, "I can make it a dollar, and send half a dollar for you and half a dollar for me." She said, "I wish you would send a half dollar for me." I replied, "All right; guess I will." The next day I kept thinking I never heard of an offering being made for the dead, so I made it a subject of prayer, to know if the dream had any significance to teach me my duty, and if I sent an offering should I send it in her name. The following night I was disturbed, and on awaking an audible voice seemed to pronounce very plainly and distinctly the word, Spiritualism. That satisfied me instantly. I send the offering in my own name. I rejoice to know that my petitions are answered, that I am found worthy—and pray that I may continue so until the end. Yours in hope,
LOU BERRY.

CLEARWATER, Neb., July 5th.

Dear Sister Frances:—To-night as I sat reading the Herald, first "The Good Name of the Lamoni Saints," and then in our much loved Home Column, "Straight Paths," and "Stepping Stones and Stumbling Blocks," it stirred up afresh thoughts I so often have. Am I a stumbling block? How well I know that our deeds and words have an influence like the waves when "the pebble is dropped in the water," and yet how little thought I give it compared with its importance. How pure our every word or act should be; for it is like the downy seed of the thistle, when once it has gone out to the world it can never be gathered back, but will have a telling effect for good or for evil.

How often we ask the question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and try to excuse ourselves from responsibility when we know the influences of our every day lives are helping to mould other lives. And, right here has always been a hard problem for me to solve. To what extent can we show Christian charity to sinners outside the fold and not be a stumbling stone to some within? If our religion is the pure principles of the gospel of Christ, does it teach us to turn a cold shoulder to the poor sinner whom the world says to boycott, and grasp with warmth the proffered hand of the perhaps greater sinner, but whom custom says we must recognize? How will our record stand in the day when we are to be judged for the "deeds done in the body?"

We have been a constant reader of the Herald since 1870 (excepting about eighteen months), and it has become one of the family. Much as we have always prized it, it seems to grow better all the time, and the Home Column has been one of the notable improvements. How the eyes of the little ones sparkle when the Hope comes, and is it not nearly as eagerly watched for and coned by us older children. What more could we ask for Autumn Leaves? It would seem nothing, unless it was more original matter. We know there are brains enough in the church of Christ coupled with the Spirit promised, to cope with anything the world can produce; and what a depth those articles do have that come from the pens of our earnest workers! I am glad that our people, as a rule, are a temperance people, and that their record at the ballot box bears them witness; but our young need our careful watchcare, for it is a painful sight to see our young people being drawn into the giddy whirlpool of the pleasures of the world, of which tobacco and intoxicating drink form no small share.

I see Bro. Hyde's name is endearingly mentioned by a sister who never knew him, only as his earnest, encouraging words were borne by the Herald to her and others; and I am glad that his name is not buried with the poor emaciated body of the patient sufferer. Those of us who knew him for years, know that he was not a stumbling stone. He was one of God's noble men; and if it can truthfully be said of me, as it is of him wherever he was known, "The world is better for his having lived;" I think I can trust my heavenly Father for my reward; but the flesh is weak, and I feel the need of the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister,

EMMA X. GAMET.

Correspondence.

ELLINGTON, Minn., July 14th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been in this part of the State about two weeks, laboring for the spread of the truth. I have two appointments out for tomorrow at two different places. I am having good congregations and good attention, and the outlook is better than ever before for good to be done here. It does me good to read in the Herald how the Master is aiding his servants in other fields. I can say that the Lord is truly with us in Minnesota. So I have had far greater liberty and freedom in presenting the word than ever before. I never have felt as well in my life as when standing in defense of the truth. My faith is firm and unshaken in this work. I know that it is divine; therefore it must stand. Men and devils may assail it, but its foundation is sure, and it will stand when the systems of men shall have been uprooted and brought to naught. Yes, the gospel of the Son of God is true and will save all those that obey it who endure in faith to the end.

There is a blind man here investigating our faith, and he seems pleased with it so far. He says that he shall give it an honest investigation, and is willing to receive it if he finds it to be true. He is a member of the Disciple Church and has preached for them a year. He is quite well informed in the Scriptures; and seems to be honest in his search after truth. I think he will obey ere long.

I have been at Brownsdale where Bro. Graves lives, and preached two sermons. Those that came out to hear were pleased with what was said, and I think if a proper effort could be made there, some would receive the truth. If I can I shall try it again this fall when evenings are longer. Let me say here that if there are any Saints in southern Minnesota south of St. Paul that would like to have some preaching where they live, if they will write me, I will try and visit them. My address is, Lake Crystal, Blue Earth county, Minnesota. Ever praying for the spread of the truth; and that the shackles of sin may be broken from men, I remain for truth and right. E. A. STEDMAN.

HANLEY, Staffordshire Potteries, Eng.

Dear Herald:—I have often thought of bearing my testimony through the medium of your pages, which are always filled with good news from different parts of the globe, and with wise and pithy instructions from the editors which cause my soul to rejoice in the latter day work, which is a marvelous work and a wonder, and the more I meditate upon it the stronger becomes my faith. I am glad that I ever accepted the new faith, as some call it; it is new to all who receive it, but thank God it is nearly two thousand years old. This town in which I live was once a stronghold for our faith, so I am told, but the most of the older members have gone to different parts of the world, leaving but a few and some of them are spiritually dead. But thank God a few stick to the truth, and in spite of satanic power we have a room to worship in and a sixteen guinea harmonium. I often wonder how men who call themselves Saints, after seeing the power of God in the healing of the sick and seeing the lame made to walk, can remain idle. "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation," is a good motto, and may the Saints everywhere remember this because Satan always finds idle hands something to do, if its only stopping us from doing or taking part in the meetings because Bro. A. or Sr. C. has got a mote in their eye. May God help us to read and ponder the first verses of the seventh chapter of Matthew. If we do this we shall certainly rejoice through such a sublime principle being carried out to the letter and by the Spirit. I thank God that I ever heard a Latter Day Saint, for it has put new life in me, and although I am only twenty-six years old and but four in the work, I fear none of my own calibre, and some whose ability exceeds mine have to take second place on the principles of the gospel. I don't talk for victory, but for truth. This is a proof to me that God helps them that help themselves, and they that seek shall find. I married very young, and through sin and wickedness I got into debt, and as I am a Saint by name I am trying to be a Saint in principle and am, little by little, paying my honest debts. I have been told that I could get out of paying them, but I replied, "That is not paying them." I have a desire to do good both in public and in private, but how can I or anyone with the truth in their hearts, do good in public capacity when debts are unpaid.

The Herald being my school-master, I am trying to do as it tells me and am thankful for such teachings. I am going to follow it as long as it follows Christ, because it explains the principles of truth and justice to the satisfaction of all Saints, and I am trying to live so that my name may be in the Lamb's Book of Life, and that I may not bring reproach on the church. It has enough to do to battle for truth.

Trusting my humble effort to write to the Herald will find a small portion allotted to it, is the desire of your humble brother for truth,

THOMAS TREVOR.

PLATTE VALLEY, Neb., July 21st.

Editors Herald:—I closed the last of seven preaching meetings last night in the above named branch, beginning on the 15th instant, besides three confirmation meetings, being assisted by brethren N. Brown and E. Bolson. Nine adults were added by baptism and although everybody was crowded with work the meetings were well attended. The readiness of old members to welcome the newly adopted ones into Christ's fold was indeed inspiring; nor were they slow to reciprocate. The heavens were propitious, and all testify to having had a glorious time.

The gospel ties are strong indeed,
Those who possess from fear are freed.
That fear that does in bondage hold,
Joys thus produced can not be told.

By due perseverance and godly zeal the Saints here can make themselves a name for good, and bring honor to the cause. He whom we delight to sustain as our leader, under Christ, said years ago: "We want to make the name of Latter Day Saint honorable." Let us see to it, abiding by and in Christ's ways, patiently waiting for the salvation that such a procedure guarantees. We look for good gospel results the present conference year in Nebraska.

In bonds,

BROWN CITY, Michigan, July 14th.

Bro. Joseph:—I am laboring in my mission as best I can. On May 31st I left home to attend district conference at Hersey, Osceola county, June 2d. We had a good time, the Lord being with us. Met with brethren Blakeslee, Scott and Rathbun from Southern Michigan district.

From Hersey I returned to Lapeer county where I held some meetings with good interest manifested. June 14th I started for Coldwater to attend conference, by request of Bro. C. Scott, president of the mission. The good Spirit was with us and prevailed during our entire session. Ten were baptized on Sunday. On Monday we met to finish business and hold a social meeting. A good time was enjoyed in which the gifts were manifested; in fact it was the best conference I have attended for a long time. The preaching was good, especially the sermon delivered by E. L. Kelley. On the 20th I returned home, and on the 22d went to Deerfield, Lapeer county, where I held some meetings, a good interest being manifested; thence to Five Lakes, holding meetings there for a few days. From there I returned home and remained over Sunday, holding meetings in our branch. On July 4th I received a letter from C. Scott requesting me to go to Lansing to aid Bro. H. Rathbun in that city. He had hired a hall and announced the same in the papers of that place to commence July 6th. I arrived there on the 7th, and in the evening found Bro. Rathbun at work with a small but interested gathering of people. On Sunday I preached to them three times with good liberty. I remained there until the 10th and with Bro. Rathbun visited those that were interested and found a number that seemed to be very near the kingdom. Since I returned home I received a card from Bro. Rathbun stating that he had baptized two. I enjoyed myself very much while at Lansing. Bro. Rathbun has a nice family, a son and three daughters at home, and they did much to make it pleasant for me. Bro. Rathbun is a faithful worker in the cause. I returned to Five Lakes and held three meetings. The brethren there are building a church. I helped them some in getting out lumber. They intend to have it so they can hold conference there next October. From there I returned home where I am now. Expect to leave to-morrow for a new opening.

Yours in bonds,

J. A. CARPENTER.

We add the following clipping from the Republican of Lansing, Michigan, dated 17th, sent us by Bro. Rathbun.

"The recent meeting of the Latter Day Saints in this city was fairly attended and was quite successful. Two citizens of Lansing accepted the belief and were baptized by the Elder."

CORNWALLIS, W. Va., July 21st.

Bro. Dancer:—I am among the hills of West Virginia; have been since the 29th ult., and find plenty to do. I need help in order to fill the new openings. I am having a contest with a Rev. Disciple by the name of Varner. We have it night about. The assemblies are large and seem to be interested in the combat; how long it may continue is not known to me. I am challenged by another of the same order to discuss the Divinity of the Book of Mormon, debate to begin August 7th. The Saints here are doing well and are not daunted by the roarings of these little Goliaths of Ritchie county. Numbers are believing the doctrine as we present it. Have delivered fifty-seven discourses since General Conference. Am feeling well in the work.

In gospel bonds,

L. R. DEVORE.

GRANT, Michigan, July 16th.

Brother Joseph:—As officers in this district we are doing our best, so far as I can hear, and now and then we baptize some into the church. Last week four were baptized at Bay Port and to-day five were baptized in this part. Others are believing, who we think will soon obey.

I am now in that part of the country where the people live who attended the debate I held with Mr. Sims, of Bay City. And I rejoice to-day to know that although at that time (last winter) a large majority was against us—their voice and vote was against us—but now it is changing fast. Some of these now say: "Mr. Cornish proved his his points." "He acted like a gentleman, but we were not at that time men enough to give him his just dues." Others say, "the words, 'And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,' (Rev. 14:6), has rang in my ears ever since."

That quotation, with Isaiah chapter 29, and several others, were taken to the priest for an explanation, and he has had a hard time to make them see that the old "Mother Church" is the only one that is right. They now think there is more for them to receive. But I must give the priest (Father Cribbs, who was the chairman at the debate) credit for this saying: "Elder Cornish acted like a gentleman, and gave the Scripture for all he said, whilst Mr. Sims abused him shamefully and used words which, if he used in a barroom, he would be kicked out."

As soon as possible I shall preach around that part. They shall hear the story of the "angel flying," the prophet's mission, Book of Mormon, &c.

My experience has taught me that when those things are preached faithfully to the world, under the guidance of the Spirit of God, that there is indeed a ring with them, the sound of which lasts—and at death it follows them. The honest, hearing, will obey and be gathered.

We have a little trouble in Bay Port, otherwise the work is moving fairly on. Since the April Conference I have not baptized many; some others have, and we rejoice.

Yours,

J. J. CORNISH.

LOCKHARTVILLE, N. S., July 15th.

Dear Herald:—A realizing sense of the shortness of time that is allotted us here for usefulness, and the opportunities for doing good so frequently allowed to pass by unimproved, comes over me occasionally and causes me to wonder why I am not doing more to roll on this grand latter day work. There are many things though about the work that causes any one who thinks to wonder. "A marvelous work and a wonder," Isaiah called it, and not only is it wonderful in itself but it brings to light wonderful things; things that never would have been known otherwise, especially in human nature. Perhaps the most wonderful thing concerning its working is in the fact that the light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not. Strange that light should shine in darkness and not be comprehended by it; nevertheless true, inasmuch that the children of light may walk by its influence in plain straight paths that can not be discovered in darkness although the traveler may cross and recross them a hundred times in his meanderings. The "children" can also comprehend the benighted traveler's condition and see his position and explain things to him that would be worth his life to know. But being in darkness can not understand or comprehend that there can be light shining around him, consequently will not be guided. I live in a community where the inhabitants are professed Bible believers and mostly members of churches,—good, friendly, peaceable, and intelligent people,—yet in our daily conversation not a word of the hope which should be so precious to the Christian, is ever heard, unless it is adroitly brought out by myself and then dismissed as soon as possible. Now the Bible tells them that God's word will judge at the last day, and that the "books shall be opened" and men shall be judged according to that which is written therein. One would think that to be conversant with the word by which we are to be judged would be our chief aim, but strange to say, let me "open the book" and how quickly my sociable, offhanded friend will freeze over, and what a relief when it is closed up and laid away. Yet they can not see that we know their religion can not stand the test here, and how can they expect it to stand the test hereafter? We read in the book from first to last of Christ coming to reign upon the earth, and we call attention to the matter, read it, and explain it to them, and some will even accept it as "quite an idea," and go right on in their old way, without making any preparation for his coming, which is to take place so soon. It is sad to see our best friends, those we love most in a worldly point of view—treating the matter so carelessly and with so much indifference—when it seems of such vital importance to us. Some of your readers will be glad to learn that my mother after so many years of struggle between a sense of duty and the fear of the world has decided by being baptized by Bro. H. H. Robinson, who has been with us but a few days. I have had the pleasure of meeting Bro. and Sr. Parsons only as yet. I have not heard him preach or speak, but but if faces are any guide or index to the heart or mind, we are all right for help and from all accounts Bro. and Sr. Robinson are also "just what we want." (Thanks, Bro. Briggs, thanks). They have begun work already, and will no doubt have success. Many will believe, some will obey, and the work will go forward.

BUTTE CITY, Mont., July 18th.

Dear Herald:—Several months ago I was taken sick, and continued to grow worse and worse, until finally I became so weak I was of very little use to myself, and had given up that there was any relief for me this side of the tomb. Human aid had proved to be in vain. At length I concluded to call for the elders to pray for me; so I sent for Bro. John E. and Gomer Reese, who laid hands on me and prayed for me, and the Lord blessed me with health and strength and I have continued to grow stronger, and am now able to do my own work. All this the Lord did for me, and I thank him for it. Ever praying for the prosperity of his kingdom, I remain your sister in gospel bonds,

FRANCES P. REESE.

CLITHERALL, Minn., July 19th.

Bro. Joseph:—Our conference is over. We had a very good one. Much of the Spirit was present. Bro. Alonzo Whiting was called and ordained to the office of elder, under the hands of A. H. Smith, J. C. Foss and T. J. Martin. Several children were blessed; among them were two little buds presented by two ladies not of the church, who asked if we blessed children whose parents did not belong to the church. I answered, yes. If people had such faith in us as elders, to bring the little ones along and we would do as Jesus did, bless the little children. Bro. Alexander preached a powerful sermon in the evening, the rain was falling very heavy; and as I offered the closing prayer, I felt to ask God to stop the rain so the people could go home dry. One old man as he started to go out of the tent said, "We've got to go home in a rain storm to-night." We all left the tent, but not in rain, for it held up all at once. All the Saints went home feeling amply paid for attending that conference.

Our tent is a nice one, and is now pitched in Battle Lake. Last night Bro. Smith spoke on the existence of a living God the maker of all things, to sixty-five persons, most of whom seemed to be very interested. We hold over Sunday, may be longer, if the interest continues good. O how my heart rejoices to hear the good news from Independence, Missouri, that a grand victory has been won by the men and women of good, wise judgment. In voting to close the saloons—I wish I had been there to help them—they had my prayers all the while.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

SILVER HILL, Ark.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I came here last December and commenced labor under A. J. Cato. We labored at several points, opening up new places at Walnut Springs and Bog Springs. Bro. Cato taught me to great advantage and I learned many things concerning the work; but he left in the spring and went into Pike county. I continued to labor at several new places, at Wright Chapel, Africa, and Walnut Springs. The Campbellites made war on us. Bro. A. J. Cato and Rev. Bradley, a young Clark Braden, will commence a discussion before the fifth Sunday in July, at Walnut Springs. I am going to labor the rest of my days in the cause. I never received one dollar from the church funds; but God will not let his laborer suffer for anything. I ask the members everywhere to pray for me. Hoping that I will prove a workman that need not be ashamed and hold out faithful. Bro. A. J. Cato is a great helper in the cause. The branch is in tolerable good condition but could be better. Manchester branch is very cold in the cause. There is no one to labor in this field but Bro. Cato and Bro. Davis, and the latter does not do much, but does the best he can.

J. D. ERWIN.

WHEELING, W. Va., July 14th.

Bro. Joseph:—I presume that intelligence of the affray which occurred at Glen Easton, West Virginia, some few weeks since, has reached you ere this. The particulars of the affair so far as we have been able to glean them, are as follows: While the Saint's Sabbath School was in session, a young man by the name of Ab Courtwright and some of his associates were on the outside tossing stones through the window, hitting some inside the school-house, and creating confusion. At this juncture Bro. Joseph Wayt went out and reproved the young men for their bad demeanor. This so enraged young Courtwright, that while Bro. Wayt was locking the door, he threw a stone, striking Bro. Wayt on the back of the head. For this offense Bro. Wayt had him arrested the next day. No more depredations were committed until Wednesday night. The Saints met at Bro. Harris' house for prayer service, when two of the Courtwright's and some other roughs, gathered on the road near the house. A young man by the name of Frank Wayt (not a member of the church), and Ab. Courtwright engaged in fighting. During the progress of this combat, Harvey Courtwright rushed upon Thomas Wayt, (a brother in the church), and stabbed him with a shoe-knife in the side. Bro. Thomas did not precipitate the onslaught at all, but was entirely innocent. From this a general fight ensued, in which knives, stones and clubs were freely used. As a consequence a great many were beaten and bruised. For a long time it was thought that

Bro. Wayt would die, but we are pleased to note that he is recovering slowly. The unfortunate affair had such a fearful effect on Bro. Harris, that he took sick and died within three days. Bro. Harris had presided for upwards of twenty years over the branch at that place. He was a noble brother and a genuine Latter Day Saint. The encounter did not arise from a bitter or acrimonious spirit against the Saints, (for they are highly esteemed through that country), but partially from a discussion and a grudge existing between the Courtwright's and some of the Wayt's, of long time standing.

A DREAM.

Early this morning, (July 14th, 1888), I dreamed that General Conference was in session, and a goodly number of the leading men of the church were present. On the floor of a large room I saw a pair of shoes. I also saw a brother step into the shoes and attempt to walk with them on, but he could not make a success of it, as every time he moved, the shoes fell off, as they were much too large for him. Others stood near who seemed to be anxious to try them on. They were all given to understand that the shoes did not belong to them, but to Joseph Smith.

Your brother,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

LANSING, Michigan, July.

Dear Herald:—This is a hard place to work as yet. The wall of prejudice is so thick and high that nothing but the battering power of God overcomes, and that inch by inch, even after the truth has been declared again and again. We had a good turnout at Webberville. Baptists, Methodists, Free Methodists, Stand Alones, Salvation Armyists and the well behaved sinner. What the result will be the good Lord only knows. We hope for the better and so trust. We left the Saints this morning both cheerful and hopeful. We found our sick daughter who recently obeyed the gospel very weak but cheerful and buoyant in spirit. Please ask the Saints at Lamoni to remember her in their prayers. Hoping soon to be able to make a better report, I am your brother in the kingdom and the patience of the Saints,

HIRAM RATHBUN.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., July 24th.

Bro. Joseph:—I returned here last night from the conference of this district, held near Wabash, Cass county, in a beautiful grove. Had a good time. Met brethren Caffall and R. J. Anthony there. I expect to go to Bennett, Lancaster county, next Saturday, and remain perhaps all next week. Bro. Hyrum O. Smith will be here to-day and remain over Sunday.

Yours in bonds,

H. C. BRONSON.

FOUNTAIN GREEN, Ill., July 1st.

Brethren Joseph and Blair:—I have just returned from a visit to Burlington, Iowa, where I met with the Saints twice; heard two good discourses; they are firm in this latter day work. On my return I saw Solomon Myson, who told me that Bro. Thomas Wellington stayed about three weeks, and they took turn about preaching, and it had a good effect on the people, they have become very much interested in the gospel; one was baptized and there are several more he thinks will come forward soon. They are very anxious for Bro. Thomas to come back. Solomon is preaching every Sunday evening to large congregations of very interested listeners. The people turn out beyond his expectation and the house is crowded every night. They are surprised and wonder if "any good can come out of Nazareth."

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 2.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE REVOLT, A. D. 66.

Now was fast drawing on those "days of vengeance" when all things which were written must be fulfilled. The cruel oppressions of Florus, who seems to have been animated by a malice scarcely less than diabolical, were goading the Jews to madness. The presence of Cestius Gallus at Jerusalem at the Passover, enabled the assembled people, to the number of three millions, to appeal to him as the Prefect of Syria against the tyrant. But Cestius was a kindred spirit and gave them no redress; and Florus pursued his tyranny unchecked, omitting no opportunity to provoke the unhappy populace to revolt, that he might seize their treasures, without any fear of them accusing him to Cæsar.

It was in Caesarea that the long-smouldering fire burst out into a flame. Though a century had not elapsed since its foundation, it had already grown up a large and populous city, eminent for wealth and magnificence. The two races who inhabited it, the Jews and Syro-Greeks, continually contended for superiority. They were pretty equally balanced; the Jews were the more wealthy and numerous, but the Greeks had the sympathy of the Roman soldiery, who were mostly levied from the province. Feuds and tumults increased in frequency and virulence; the principal streets often ran with the blood of the citizens. An appeal to the Emperor, on the recall of Felix, had resulted in the pre-eminence being assigned to the Greeks, and the humiliation of the Jews. This decree obtained by bribery, did not heal the breach; and the Greeks grew daily more insolent, the Jews more desperate and revengeful.

About this time a Greek who owned the land on which the Jewish synagogue was built, wantonly began to erect workshops and other buildings against it, to annoy the worshipers. Certain leading men of the Jews, having no other resource, offered Florus a gratuity of eight talents (£3600 sterling) on condition of his interference. He received the bribe, and immediately removed to a distance, leaving the disputants to settle the matter as they thought proper. A coarse insult offered to the Jews on the following Sabbath brought on a battle, in which they were beaten; they then retired from the city with their sacred books. A deputation sent to complain to Florus, delicately hinted the obligation of the eight talents, when the shameless villain threw them into prison. Intelligence of this infamous transaction deeply stirred the city of Jerusalem, but the Governor, bent on driving the wretched people to rebellion, seized the occasion of their indignation to demand seventeen talents (£7650) from the temple treasury, on the pretense of the Emperor's necessities. The city was in an uproar; the people ran about with outcries, some calling wildly upon Cæsar for help against Florus, while others in bitter sarcasm ran about with a basket, loudly soliciting alms "for the poor beggar." Secretly gratified at the opportunity which the sedition afforded, Florus instantly led his whole force upon the city. The irritation, however, had subsided, and the poor oppressed people hoped by a submissive bearing and by a friendly salutation to the army, to disarm the tyrant's resentment. Vain hope! Having let loose his brutal soldiers upon a portion of the city called the upper market, with license for plunder and massacre, three thousand six hundred persons, including women and innocent babes, were slain on that day. Many of these were scourged and crucified. This tragical event, the sad prelude of bloodier days to come, which must be considered as the actual commencement of the Jewish war, happened on the 16th day of the month Iyar, answering to our April or May, in the year 66 of the christian era.

On the following day the pathetic lamentations for the dead were mingled with imprecations upon Florus, from the agonized multitude assembling on the scene of massacre; but the elders with the chief priests, dreading worse evil, besought the populace to refrain from provoking one who had the power to do them further injury; thus they quietly dispersed.

The wicked Governor's appetite for blood and plunder was, however, but whetted, not slaked, by the tragedy of the preceding day, and with fatal subtlety he laid another snare for the poor doomed sons of Israel. Two cohorts from Cesarea were advancing towards Jerusalem, and the people were commanded to go out of the city, and meet them with congratulations and shouts of welcome. It was a hard task, but the entreaties and persuasions of the priests succeeded in repressing the natural aversion of the people to so degrading an humiliation; and so, quietly and meekly, the injured Jews marched out to salute the approaching soldiers, little dreaming of the cruel snare that had been set for their feet, for Florus had sent out secret orders to the soldiers to meet their advances with contemptuous silence, and if this insult should provoke them to any expression of disapprobation, to fall upon them without mercy. All occurred as the plotter of so vile a scheme could have wished. Some of the fiery Jewish youth, stung by the cold contempt of the soldiery, broke out into audible murmurs against the oppressor. The troops instantly turned upon them and struck them down with their staves, and as they fled the cavalry dashed among them, trampling down the unresisting crowd with savage barbarity. Unarmed and unprepared for war the defenseless multitude thronged back into the city, but the tardy passage of the city gate ill-suited the eagerness of the flying hosts, and great numbers were crushed and suffocated to death, both there and in the narrow streets; the savage army all the while availing themselves of the panic to increase the slaughter. Through the suburb of Bezetha the living stream poured along, pursuers and pursued, till it became evident that the object of the former was to push on and obtain possession at the same time of the glorious Temple and the strong fortress of Antonia. To aid them in this attempt, Florus himself made a sally from the palace, but by this time the city was in arms. The people crowded into the streets, blocking up the way of his troops, while others mounting upon the tops of their houses cast down upon them showers of stones and darts. Thus baffled, the governor retreated to the palace; the objects of the desired possession of the Antonia being evidently the easy access to the Temple, to which the fortress was attached. The people sat upon the cloisters or porticoes which connected them, and by destroying these, cut off the communication. All hope of securing the sacred treasure by this means being destroyed Florus retired from the city, leaving only one cohort as a garrison.

Accounts of these transactions were sent to the prefect, Cestius, by both parties, colored, we may well suppose, according to the views and prejudices of each. The petition of the Jews, however, was supported by the intercession of Bernice, the patriotic sister of King Agrippa. The Roman Emperor sent one of his Tribunes to examine the affair on the spot, who meeting on his way with Agrippa, they entered the city together.

The peaceful and respectful demeanor of the Jews satisfied the Tribune that their exasperation was not against the Roman dominion, but against Florus, and having exhorted the people to maintain their loyalty, he offered up his devotions in the outer court of the Temple, as a Gentile might lawfully do, and returned to Cestius. But the keen discernment of Agrippa saw that disaffection deep and strong existed; and, therefore, calling the multitude together, he addressed them in an admirable specimen of argumentative oratory, filled with the most cogent appeals to their hopes, fears, and affections; beseeching them, even with tears, not to bring the desolations of war upon their families, their country, their beautiful city, and the Holy house. For awhile his efforts seemed crowned with success; moved by the tears of the King and his sister, the people began to rebuild the cloisters, and to collect the deficient tribute, but, in an evil hour, Agrippa passed the precarious limits of popular tolerance by advising them to submit again to the hateful Florus. The abhorred name roused the sleeping passions of the populace to fury, and with insane blindness the multitude turned against their kind and powerful friend, driving him out of the city with insulting language, and at length even with stones. In sorrow and anger, and not unreasonably so at such a return for his kindness, the King retired into his own kingdom of Chalcis, leaving the proud city to its irremediable doom.

As yet, however, the breach was not irreparable. The Jews had indeed drawn the sword, but they had not yet thrown away the scabbard. But about the time of the departure of Agrippa, some of the more impatient fiery spirits, proceeded to extremities which Rome could not forgive. On the summit of a precipitous hill near the Dead Sea stood the small but strong and important fortress of Masada, which had been greatly strengthened by Herod the Great. Into this stronghold a party of Jewish warriors obtained admission by stratagem, and put the Roman garrison to the sword; at the same time, the leaders of the war party in the metropolis hurled defiance at Rome, by refusing any longer to sacrifice for the Emperor, or to receive his customary offerings to the Temple. This was chiefly owing to the advice of Eleazar the son of the High Priest, and himself the governor of the Temple, a young man more intrepid in action than wise in counsel.

The pacific part of the inhabitants foresaw with alarm the consequences of this determination, and spared no efforts to prove that the practice of antiquity, as well as the law itself had permitted the sacrificial intercession for foreigners, and had freely received their votive offerings; indeed, they had reason and truth on their side, for the very existence of the Court of the Gentiles was a silent witness of such admission, while the dedicatory prayer of their great King, who had built the first Temple, distinctly avowed it. (See 2 Chron. 6:32, 33): "Moreover concerning the stranger, which is not of thy people Israel, but is come from a far country for thy great name's sake, and thy mighty hand, and thy stretched-out arm; if they come and pray in this house; then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger called to thee for; that all people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel, and may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name." It is not to be supposed that the Roman Emperors idolatrous heathen as they were, understood or appreciated the worship of Jehovah. With them the mention of the imperial name in the public sacrifices and liturgies would be regarded as merely a state compliment; and the presentation to him whom they would suppose to be one of the common herd of divinities, one of "the gods many and lords many," to whom the fertile fancy of man had attributed local patronage,—as a piece of state policy. Nor can we imagine that the turbulent priesthood of the degenerate Hebrew nation was actuated by any zeal for the holiness of Jehovah in denying to the unclean Gentiles a part in his worship. The one party would receive it as the other fully intended it, as a public affront to Rome, and a renunciation of its allegiance. So perfectly was this understood at Jerusalem, that even while the pacific party was arguing the loyalty of the acts now forbidden, its opponents, impatient of the argument, forsook the Temple and its service to prepare for war.

In all forms of public commotion, the people will be found to separate themselves into two parties; the one eager to push forward the contemplated changes, the other willing to maintain existing conditions. Hope is most prominent in the one, fear in the other. In the former party the young, the bold, the excitable, the dissolute, the needy; those who have little to lose, everything to gain by change, take their place. To the latter shrink the old, the timid, the sedate, the wealthy, who have everything to lose with no prospect of gain. Each party misunderstands the other, condemns it as selfish and destitute of patriotism, and exalts its own principles. The leaders of the considerate party saw that all was well nigh lost, and as a last resource, sent an embassy to Florus, and another to Agrippa, beseeching them to come at once with an overwhelming force and cut off the sedition in the germ, before it should spread and involve the whole province in common ruin. Right glad was Florus to hear how well his satanic plots were working. From his retirement he watched with grim delight his prey taken in the toils, and would not lift a finger to prevent a consummation which he so heartily desired. On the other hand the candid and noble-minded Agrippa, a firm believer of the prophets, (Acts. 26: 27), and therefore a true friend to Israel, forgetting the affront so lately put upon him, and earnestly desirous to preserve the city and the temple, despatched without delay three thousand cavalry with the master of his horse, and the general of his army, to maintain, if still possible, the peace of Jerusalem. But peace unhappy Jerusalem was to know no more for centuries. Forgetful of her ancient name (Heb. 7: 2) when he who was both King of Righteousness and King of Peace ruled over her, she rejected the Prince of Peace, and now the olive-bearing dove had left her for long, long ages; "not even yet passed away." And yet we know there was even then a goodly band of gentle ones, the true lovers of peace, within her devoted walls, who could with true hearts, while with boding fears, sing as their fathers had done, the beautiful song of degrees. * * *

"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem. Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together; whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord, unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the Lord. For there are set thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces. For my brethren and companion's sake, I will now say, Peace be within thee. Because of the Lord our God I will seek thy good."—Psalms 122.

It is sad to turn from these gentle breathings to the grim realities enacting in the streets of unhappy Salem. Civil war now raged. The principal inhabitants with the High Priest, encouraged by the addition of Agrippa's reinforcement, seized on the upper city, Zion, while the insurgents, under Eleazar took possession of the lower city and the temple. Each party strove to dislodge the other, mutually contending with sling-stones and javelins. For seven days the conflict was maintained in the streets with perpetual slaughter, without any decisive superiority. At length a great number of the assassins from the lower city and suburbs joining the insurgents, the increase of strength and daring was presently manifested. Assembling in great force, they made a vigorous assault upon the upper city, which they at length carried. The royal troops fled, and the victorious party with suicidal hands set fire to the house of the High Priest, the palaces of Agrippa and Bernice, and the office of the public archives. This last was burned to gain the countenance of that large portion of the needy population who were in debt, for in this place were kept the creditors bonds, with other records.

The principal men of the vanquished concealed themselves in cellars and vaults, including the High Priest, and many of the troops fled to the upper palace, within the strong gates of which they might still defy their enemies, or wearied with bloodshed, at length retired to their own quarters.

The strong fortress or Antonia was garrisoned by the single cohort left by Florus, the feebleness of which emboldened the insurgents to besiege it, which they did with such success that in two days they effected an entrance, slaying the soldiers, and setting fire to the citadel.

This important conquest occurred on the 16th of Ab, answering probably to the beginning of August. They immediately marched on the upper palace, where the remnant of Agrippa's army had intrenched themselves, and dividing themselves into four companies, attempted to take it by assault. However, being repulsed by the archers from the battlements, they contented themselves with a strict blockade.

While things were in this condition there suddenly appeared before the walls of Jerusalem a new adventurer, Judas of Galilee, who "in the days of the taxing had drawn much people away after him," had been slain long ago with his two sons, but his doctrine, that the Hebrew people should be subject to none but God, had become increasingly popular. One son named Menahem would yet recall the memory of a vigorous but cruel Israelitish king, himself a successful insurgent. This man gathered around him a band of desperate men at Masada, broke open the splendid armory of Herod, and thus accoutred his body-guard whom he led to Jerusalem.

The insurgents threw open the gates with rapture, and King Manahem, (for he had assumed the royal state and title) took the command of the city by acclamation.

He ordered the siege of the palace to be pressed with vigor, but the want of machines and implements of assault, and the showers of missiles from above, still delayed the capture. By means of a mine however, he fired a tower and overthrew it; and this led to a capitulation, by which the Jews and Agrippa's men were permitted to retire. As no terms were granted to the few Romans, they were compelled to flee for safety to the strong tower built by Herod on the wall that overlooked the Tyropean. But the popularity of Menahem was short-lived. The sanguinary tyranny which he began to practice turned the hearts of his new subjects against him; and Eleazar, who could ill brook the loss of the authority which he had hitherto wielded, artfully inflamed their resentment. They fell upon him as he was worshiping with royal pomp in the temple; and though he found a momentary refuge in an obscure part of the city, the populace dragged him forth and slew him and most of his subordinate chiefs with great barbarity.

The death of Menahem did not prevent or slacken the prosecution of the siege. The handful of Roman soldiers imprisoned in the tower saw that resistance was hopeless and agreed to surrender. The conditions, confirmed by solemn oath on the part of the Jews, were, that the lives of the garrison should be spared, but that they should deliver up their arms. On the faith of this treaty the Romans marched out. No affront was offered till they had laid down their arms; but as soon as this had been completed, the Jewish multitude fell upon them with an indiscriminate slaughter. They attempted no resistance nor asked for mercy, but reproached the perfidy of their murderers. They were slain to a man, with the exception of the general, Melitius, who agreed to submit to circumcision and was spared. As if to enhance the wickedness of this horrible deed, it was perpetrated on the Sabbath day. By an awfully retributive coincidence, on the same day that this tragedy was perpetrated at Jerusalem, one equally wicked was enacted at Cæsarea, where the Greeks, suddenly rising, slew in one hour about twenty thousand of the Jewish inhabitants, completely extirpating the devoted race from that city, for the few that fled were waylaid by the wicked Florus, and sent to the galleys.

This dreadful massacre roused the whole nation, and henceforward slaughter to the uttermost of their power was the object of each hostile party, and was executed wherever they met. The Jews felt that every man's hand was against them, and turned their hand against every man. In revenge for the barbarities at Cæsarea they fell without mercy upon the Syrian cities of Philadelphia, Sebonitis, Gerasa, Pella, Scythopolis, Gadara, and Hippos, which they laid waste; burned some cities of Gaulonitis; attacked the Tyrian city Kedasa, (or Samaria), and Ashkelon they burned to the ground. Anthedon and Gaza suffered a like fate. The demolition of these cities, more or less complete, with the devastation of the surrounding hamlets, was accompanied by tremendous slaughter. Nor were the Syrians idle or passive; every city was inhabited largely by Jews, and these were massacred, in self-defense as well as in revenge. Every city presented the appearance of two hostile camps, in which the security of one lay in the utter destruction of the other. Horror, fear, exasperation, and thirst for blood, inflamed more and more by its gratification, filled the whole province. The burning ulcer soon spread; more distant cities where Jews were found (for they were at this time widely scattered), partook of the raging madness. In Alexandria, the second city of the empire, no less than fifty thousand Jews perished in one dreadful tumult. As Judea was now at open war with Rome, the prefect of Syria, Cestius Gallus, who had the military command of the province, could no longer remain inactive. Indeed it is a proof of his incapacity that he allowed the revolt to attain such a head before attempting to quell it; unless like the base and implacable Florus, he too desired to see the nation irrevocably committed to a policy hostile to Rome. At length however he set out from Antioch, at the head of about twenty thousand troops, partly Romans, and partly auxiliaries; the latter supplied by King Agrippa, Antiochus, and the Tetrarch Sohemus, of whom the first and the last accompanied the Prefect on his march.

The troops were divided nearly as follows:—

ROMANS.	HORSE.	FOOT.
The twelfth Legion		4 200
Selected men		2,000
Six cohorts		2,500
Four troops	1,200
ALLIES.
From Antiochus	2,000	3,000
From Agrippa	2,000	2,000
Under Sohemus	1,300	2,700
Total	6,500	16,400

This army was swelled on its march by the accession of irregular bodies of volunteers out of the Syrian cities, whose hatred to the Jews and desire for plunder stood in the place of skill and discipline. Zebulon, a strong city on the southern border of Galilee, was the first to meet the Roman General's vengeance. The inhabitants had fled at his approach to the neighboring mountains, but abundance of plunder was left to the rapacity of the soldiery. Its numerous public edifices, which were built in a style of unusual magnificence, were burned to the ground; but the watchful Jews, observing that the greediness of the Syrians for pillage had induced them to fall behind the army, seized the opportunity of falling upon them, and cut them off to the number of two thousand.

Cestius continued his onward march to Cæsarea, whence he sent a portion of his army to the seaport town of Joppa and another detachment to the province of Galilee. Both parties were successful in accomplishing their missions with fire and sword, while a third troop ravaged the neighborhood of Cæsarea with unsparing ferocity. Thence again the stern Roman pursued his way. Antipatris and Lydda offered no resistance to his onward march, for all the males were assembled at Jerusalem to keep the fast of Tabernacles, which took place about the beginning of October. Ascending the long winding path of Beth-horon, where the rough rock had anciently been cut into steps to facilitate the ascent, the army at length pitched their camp at Gibeon, within sight of the "mountains" that were "round about Jerusalem," and here from his craggy eminence, the Roman eagle looked down upon the quarry at his feet, bleeding at every pore from self-inflicted wounds, and anticipating an easy prey, already gloating in the death struggle of his victim.

The spot on which the Roman army lay encamped was one of singularly romantic beauty. The town of Gibeon was situated about five miles north by west from Jerusalem on the summit of a single oblong hill which rose abruptly with steep precipitous sides, from the bosom of a large plain or basin, surrounded on the west and south by mountains. The smiling plains at the foot of this rocky eminence were of more than common fertility, as they are to this day, spread over with waving cornfields and orchards of pistachios, figs and pomegranates, and groves of the graceful olive.

The terraced sides of the hills were covered with trailing vines of great luxuriance from which the purple clusters had just been gathered; for Israel was keeping (sadly indeed), the feast of ingathering.

Behind, a little to the north of the setting sun, was the pass of Beth-horon, winding along the extremity of a sort of promontory that jutted out between two deep vallies issuing from the mountain. But this was not only a scene of ancient renown, for here it was that the signal victory was obtained over the confederate Amorite Kings, when Joshua led Israel's forefathers into the goodly land. And it was on yonder ascent that the invincible captain stood, when, looking back and seeing the sun's last ray about to leave the summit of Gibeon, he in mighty faith arrested the descending orb of day, and completed the destruction of his enemies.

But let us read the record from God's own word of inspiration (See Josh. 10: 1-14),—whether it was the memories of the glorious past that came thronging upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, when they heard that the Roman army was at Gibeon, or whether their mournful minds were intent upon the gloomy present,—they seized their arms, and, though it was the Sabbath day, (probably "the last day, that great day of the feast"), poured out by countless thousands from the gates, and fell with irresistible fury upon the hostile camp.

Horse and man gave way before that living tide; onward it rushed right through the host; and but for the timely charge of a troop of light cavalry, who had wheeled round to the rear, a good account would Israel have rendered that day of his proud foes. As it was, upwards of five hundred Romans were slain in this encounter, while the Jews effected their return to the city with a loss of only twenty-two men. But the valiant Simon, the son of Gioras, a leader of whom we shall hear much hereafter, with a little band still hung upon the Roman rear as the army retreated to Beth-horon, cutting off the stragglers and capturing the beasts of burden, many of which he brought into the city. Cestius, as if panic-stricken at the valor of the enemies whom he had come to besiege, remained inactive in this mountain camp for three whole days, while the Jews kept an unceasing watch upon him from the surrounding heights and from the towers of the city.

During this brief respite, Agrippa made one more effort to mediate between the conflicting parties. He sent two persons of note, entreating the Jews to lay down their arms, and, offering them in the name of Cestius, a full forgiveness for all the past. A large party among the citizens were very willing to accept these favorable terms. This the Insurgents were aware of, and at once cut short the matter by attacking the ambassadors, one of whom they instantly killed and wounded the other.

In the midst of the tumults and disturbances that rent the city on this fresh collision, the Roman general seized the opportunity to take up a position nearer to the walls, and encamped upon the hill Scopus, about three-quarters of a mile distant on the north.

Three days he remained there, as he had done at Beth-horon, apparently in hope that the peace-party might prevail, and a bloodless possession be given him of the city; but the daring and insolence of the turbulent faction gave them an advantage over superior numbers, and no embassy issued from the gates desiring conditions of peace.

On the last day of the month Tisri, (probably the middle of October), Cestius issued orders for the attack. The insurgents, looking down from the walls, beheld with consternation the strict discipline, compact order, and military array of the Roman army, as it marched sternly onwards; and abandoning the walls, which in this quarter were weaker than in any other, retired to better fortified positions in the interior of the city, and into the Temple, which was of itself a mighty fortress.

The large and loose-built suburb of Bezetha, thus undefended was easily taken. The army passing through it, set it on fire, and proceeded through the lower city, even to the walls of Zion, pitching their camp against the Royal Palace, without meeting any resistance.

Had the Roman General been a man of vigor and decision, he might by a rapid assault have easily forced his way into the upper city at this time, and thus finished the war at a blow. However feebler counsels prevailed in the camp: many of the chief officers, (if Josephus was rightly informed), having been bribed by Florus, gave their opinions against such a course, and Cestius, perhaps with little reluctance, gave up the attempt. We can discern, however, in this imbecility, the operation of one wiser than Florus. "There are many devices in a man's heart; but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand."

He at whose secret bidding the Princes of Zoan were fools, the wise counsellors of Pharaoh became brutish, who turned the counsel of Abithophel into foolishness, now manifestly curbed the military wisdom and energy of Rome. "The blast of the terrible ones" was turned aside for a little, that it might return with tenfold power and sweep away as with a tempest's violence, the doomed children of Judah from off the land.

Meanwhile a secret plot was laid by the pacific party to open the gates to Cestius, of which they apprised him by a messenger; but irresolute as usual, and distrustful, he hesitated, and lost the opportunity; for the scheme was at length discovered by the vigilant insurgents, and its principal abettors were thrown headlong from the battlements. For five days more the Romans made feeble and desultory attacks, which were easily repulsed from the battlements. At length Cestius drew off his force and attempted to take the Temple. From the Porticoes the Jews defended their Holy House with the most determined resolution; nor could all the efforts of the enemy bring them up to the Temple wall, and at last the showers of arrows and javelins which the Jews poured down incessantly upon them compelled them to retire. But they made another attempt under the protection of a testudo, a defence formed by each soldier holding his shield above his head, those of the second rank overlapping the edges of the first, and so on. Under the cover thus formed from which the darts fell harmless, they at length approached so nigh as to undermine the wall, and brought fire to the gate of the Temple. This seems to have been the very moment of time and this the identical action alluded to by the Lord Jesus, in those memorable words, (Matt. 24:15-21), "When ye therefore see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand), then let them that be in Judea flee into the mountains. Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take anything out of his house. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days! But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day. For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."

For at this moment, alone as yet, had the army with its idol-standards been brought into actual contact with the Holy House; and it is remarkable that this contact was only momentary; for at that very crisis, without any perceptible reason, when an hour or two might have made him undisputed lord of the city, Cestius suddenly drew off his army and retired without the walls.

This action of the Roman general was so utterly unaccountable, that the Jewish historian who records it is lost in admiration at it, and is constrained to acknowledge the immediate interference of God.

To us with the New Testament in our hands, the retreat of Cestius is not at all unaccountable; and if we feel lost in admiration, it is not at the folly of the Roman, but at the gracious and tender care of Him who had promised his disciples in immediate reference to these circumstances, that "there shall not a hair of your head perish." And at the divine prescience, which could foresee and predict, with minute accuracy the acts of men so long before. It is recorded by Eusebius, that the Christians residing in Jerusalem did avail themselves of the signal of which the Lord's prophecy had forewarned them, by retiring from the city on the retreat of Cestius, some of them to the mountains of Perea, beyond Jordan, and others to the fastnesses of Lebanon.

When we consider the large number of Christian Jews, whom we know from inspired testimony were resident in the city, amounting to many myriads, (Acts 21:20), and remember the jealousy of the insurgent party within the walls, it is difficult to imagine how they could have effected a retirement at any other time. So vast a host could not have stolen out unperceived by those within, and so isolated is the position of Jerusalem, so overlooked by a besieging army, that they could not have made good their retreat, in the face of the Romans, even if once outside the walls. But the retreat of Cestius towards the seas we shall presently narrate, followed by the whole multitude of the warriors in Jerusalem, most marvellously opened a sudden and brief way of escape in the opposite direction towards Jordan, such as in all probability never occurred before or afterwards. The necessity of an instant seizure of the opportunity is strongly enforced in the warning, and this implies that it would be as transient as sudden. And with respect to the other concurrent circumstances to be desired and prayed for, the season of the year and the day of the week, we would observe that the former was about the end of October, while the latter was Wednesday.

The day of the week I thus deduce from Josephus:—The day of the assault upon Cestius at Gibeon was the Sabbath. He was driven to Beth-horn, where he laid three days, that is (in current time, by which the Hebrews computed) till Tuesday morning. On Tuesday he pitched at Scopus, where he lay three days, that is till Friday morning; on this day, the 30th of Tisri, he took the lower city and besieged the palace, which siege lasted five days. This brings us to Tuesday evening. Wednesday was the day of the assault on the temple, and as I believe, the day foretold by the Lord. I may add that from Wednesday to the following Saturday, the 8th of Marchesvan, the Jews were in hot pursuit of the flying foe as far as Antipatris.

But let us pursue the fortunes of the panic stricken Romans. Their sudden retirement from the temple lighted up the waning courage of the Jews; the mouth of every street poured forth a motley host each animated with a single desire to kill a Gentile. The hindmost ranks of the retreating army were sensibly thinned before they could regain the encampment at Scopas, where they passed the night. The next day saw the proud Roman army still retreating before the elated and now innumerable Jews, who, perfectly acquainted with all the by-roads and short cuts, had an immense advantage in pursuit, falling upon the enemy in flank as well as behind. The crest-fallen Romans, unused to retreat, dared not turn upon their foes, for they knew that the multitude was immense, and being heavy armed, and knowing that their only safety consisted in keeping their ranks unbroken, continued their slow and sullen march. The assailants on the other hand, lightly armed, accustomed to the precipitous paths, and excited to the highest pitch, flew about the flanks and rear, making immense slaughter, almost with impunity. Multitudes of dead were strewn along the roads, including many officers of distinction, and it was not without great difficulty and the loss of many men, and a great part of the baggage, that the troops at length gained their former encampment at Gibeon. Here distressed but irresolute, Cestius spent two more inactive days; at length seeing the whole country roused, and the surrounding hills swarming with Jews in the greatest enthusiasm, he issued orders for full retreat. To reduce his incumbrances, he determined to sacrifice his beasts of burden, and to slay all except such as carried the missiles and machines of war which he hoped to preserve. Thus his army entered upon the defiles and gorges that led to Beth-horn, once more to be the scene of splendid victory to the Jews.

An army retreating through the mountain passes of a hostile country is always in imminent peril, and so were the Romans here. The precipices on each side of the narrow gorges were covered with Jews who hurled down great stones upon the ranks, while multitudes thronged around the mouths of the passes, discharging at the troops showers of arrows as they emerged. Where the narrow path wound round a steep and craggy cliff, multitudes were pushed down into the ravines below; and what added to the despair of the Romans, was the complete impunity of their assailants; they were quite out of the reach of their darts and unapproachable. Their distress was so great that the iron-clad and iron-hearted legions of Rome at length burst out into wild cries and groans. The retreat was a complete rout and but for the timely fall of night, under cover of which the broken remnants of the legions escaped to Beth-horon, the entire Roman army would have been cut to pieces on that eventful day.

When morning dawned the eager Jews who had snatched a hasty repose, saw with pleasure the Romans encamped on an eminence, strong indeed and well fortified, but environed with daring assailants. Several of the well known standards, the Imperial eagles, with a concourse of officers, on a still higher peak, intimated the position of the general's tent. The guard was mounted as usual in a camp, and everything indicated that there the Roman army were resolved to await the attack of their foes; but no sooner was the assault made than it was discovered that the camp contained but a single cohort, or four hundred men, so artfully arranged as to appear much more numerous. Cestius himself had determined to make use of the hours of darkness to obtain an advantage in his flight; and thus by travelling all night, his army was about thirty furlongs in advance of their pursuers. The four hundred heroes, however, by the sacrifice of whom he covered his degraded laurels, were slain to a man; swept off their rocky citadel by the arrows and sling-stones of the Jews.

The advantage which the general had gained saved him from being actually overtaken, though the Jews pursued him as far as Antipatris; but the whole military array including the valuable battering engines, catapults, scaling ladders, and other apparatus used in the sieges of those times were scattered on the road, and fell into the hands of the Jews. With these trophies, and with incalculable booty, the heroic and victorious defenders of the daughter of Zion returned to their beloved city, singing some of those noble hymns of praise with which victory had been wont to be celebrated in happier days:

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is mount Zion; on the sides of the north, the city of the great king. God is known in her palaces for a refuge, for lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together. They saw it, and so they marveled; they were troubled, and hasted away. Fear took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail. Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind. As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts; in the city of our God: God will establish it forever. Selah. We have thought of thy loving kindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple. According to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: thy right hand is full of righteousness. Let mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad, because of thy judgments. Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following. For this God is our God forever and ever; he will be our guide even unto death."—Psalm 48.

The elated Hebrews might well believe that the ancient glory had not yet departed; they might reasonably exult in the thought that God had again visited his people. For they had plucked the prey out of the very teeth of Rome, out of the "iron teeth" "of that beast," which was "dreadful and terrible and strong exceedingly; which devoured and break in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it." (See Daniel 7:7). The Roman object had not sustained so calamitous a reverse since the overthrow of Crassus, (more than a hundred years before), as had been inflicted upon it by a host of half armed citizens and peasants of Judea, without discipline, without military experience, without engines of war, without generals, but animated by an inextinguishable love for their country, and hatred to the enemy. Yet this little gleam of success, brilliant as it was, having accomplished a specific purpose, was but a phase of that irreversible decree of desolation, which had gone forth from the Lord of Hosts against his city, and people, and proved, indeed, by its effects upon them and their enemies, a tenfold aggravation of their inevitable ruin.

TWO VISIONS.

Dear Herald:—In writing this account, the following passage of Scripture comes to mind: "For what man knoweth the things of man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:11, 14. For some time I have thought to write of some visions for the readers of the Herald, which I had several months before being baptized, but have refrained through fear of being accused of gorging myself with unwholesome food before retiring; and that such was the cause of the visions. But when I call to mind the above passage of Scripture, I can safely compare my accusers with those whom Paul alluded to.

About the middle of November, 1885, the first one was seen. After retiring and meditating as is my custom, it did not seem to be over fifteen minutes until I opened my eyes and saw, suspended just above my face, what appeared to be a new pint cup filled and hanging over with the loveliest flowers of different shades and hues that my eyes ever beheld. As I looked it began to ascend towards heaven through a bright open space through the clouds, until it got so high that it lost its shape and then turned into a bright and shining star; very bright to behold. Then the vision passed from me, and I was gazing at the ceiling.

The next occurred on the evening of the 25th of November, 1885. After retiring and meditating as usual, I opened my eyes and arose in a sitting posture and saw the head and shoulders, or bust form of a personage whom I took to be Christ, suspended just above and at the foot of the bed, surrounded by clouds. I extended both my hands towards him and said, O, Christ, the Master, is it thou? And immediately he vanished and I beheld nothing but the ceiling.

Now, Saints, no tongue can tell the joy and consolation that these things give me. They strengthen and encourage me in the cause which I have espoused. These visions and a few spiritual dreams, and also the many testimonies of the Saints are as strengthening cordials to my hungry and weary soul. Paul says:—"There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit, the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.—Romans 8: 1-7. Therefore let us as Saints judge all things by the Spirit of hope that is in us.

WILSON L. GORTON.

MISTAKES OF INGERSOLL, AS SEEN BY A SKEPTIC.

THE Colonel's first great mistake is that he speaks much, having only "that little philosophy which inclineth a man's mind to atheism."—Bacon.

"Depth of philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion."—Bacon.

His second great mistake is, that he hopes to elevate mankind by destroying that which has elevated and sustains our estate.

His third mistake is, that he thinks the mistakes of Moses are much more hurtful to mankind than those of Ingersoll.

Let us for argument's sake admit that the Colonel is correct, and that "man has no preeminence above the beast; that as the one dieth, so dieth the other, all go to one place." Supposing no man had ever believed in God, and future rewards and punishments. Pray tell us what would have induced or impelled him to seek anything higher than the gratification of his beastly desires and appetites? Hence he could never have risen above the level of the beast.

I do not know that the estate of civilized man is, in the aggregate, any more happy than that of the savage; nevertheless I am heartily thankful that my few years have been allotted me in the very zenith of, perhaps, the greatest height of civilization any race upon this earth has ever known. And I feel truly grateful to God, or nature, for the means which have brought about this end, which I have no doubt has been, for the most part, "the foolishness of preaching" the mistakes of Moses and Christ.

I believe that "all is vanity;" but of all the vanities or shadows ever pursued by man, christianity appears to me to be the most elevating, and at the same time attractive. Although christianity has ceased to be a reality to me, I am very thankful that such is not the case with the masses of less thoughtful, innocent, confiding people who constitute the bone and sinew of our nation. I have experienced the greatest extremes that man can experience, both in religion and irreligion, in hope and in doubt, and as I closely scan the whole I don't see that I can give my fellow mortals any better advice than that they faithfully perform all things that Christ has commanded. I have no doubt civilization will again decline, nevertheless, I prize it too highly to see the propriety of rushing the hosts of heaven down to hell in the manner Col. Ingersoll is doing.

PHILOS.

Selections.

THE RISING TIDE OF CRIME.

UNDER the above caption the Atlanta Constitution publishes what appears to be a well-considered article upon the general moral condition of the country, principally made up of statements furnished by George R. Stetson, a statistical writer of some reputation.

The tendency of civilized society to turn children too exclusively over to the schools for their mental and moral education is reprobated, in view of the fact that undue attention is apt to be given to the intellect's development, to the loss of considerations of much higher moment. There are occasionally found schools where the home idea is sought to be maintained, and where religiously concerned committees strive to strengthen the hands of the teachers, and to mingle freely and interestedly with the scholars. Such institutions, however, are not common.

The diversity in the penal laws of the various States is looked upon as a serious misfortune, tending to keep a large floating population of criminals moving from State to State, and swarming where the administration of the laws is most lax or the penalties the least severe. A class of professional criminals is growing up amongst us, a vast brotherhood who delight in daring and dangerous enterprises which the sensational literature of crimes, abounding everywhere, does much to stimulate and to supply with recruits.

To the question whether crime is actually on the increase, an affirmative answer is given in adducing statements of a Boston publication, the International Record of Charities and Corrections. In no land, it is stated, is the increase so great as in the United States. In 1850 there were nearly 7,000 prisoners in the prisons of the United States, but in 1880 the number had risen to 59,000. How greatly this increase exceeded the increase of population will better appear when we state that while in the year 1850 one in every 3,000 people was in prison, in 1880 the proportion was as one to 837.

During the last seven years the ratio has certainly not receded. From statistics furnished by the Chicago Tribune the beginning of this year, it appears that the number of suicides in the United States for the past year was 1,387, while the number reported in 1886 was 914 and in 1881, 605. In other words, in six years the number had more than doubled. The number of murders is given as 2,335 in 1887, and 1,265 for 1881. On the other hand, the executions were less last year than they were six years ago, while the lynchings had increased from 90 in 1881 to 123 in 1887.

While the increase of crime in Europe is perhaps somewhat less than it is in this country, many of their criminals taking refuge over here, yet in Saxony, Bavaria and Wurtemberg there has been a rapid augmentation. Thus, in Saxony, the number of criminals has increased a hundred per cent. in seven years, while the growth of the population has been but seven per cent. In Bavaria and Wurtemberg there has been a large increase of offenses against chastity.

In seeking for the causes of these evil conditions, the article quoted says: "We have already mentioned the abolition of family government, and the imperfect training of the schools. To these must be added the spread of agnosticism, the increasing luxury and materialistic tendency of modern thought, the weakening of the marriage relation, intemperance, unjust laws and the unreasonable administration of the law." Back of some of these, however, is the overthrow of the Christian Sabbath, the evil of "Sunday papers," the spread of the literature of crime and of very unhealthy fiction, secret societies, the theatre. The conclusion of G. R. Stetson we may very well adopt, while it is gratifying to find it earnestly endorsed by the daily paper, mentioned at the beginning of this article, which publishes the essay:

"The great tide of materialism, skepticism and moral turpitude, rising in Germany, has swept over and nearly submerged France, invaded England, crossed the broad Atlantic, and is now surging at our doors, sapping our life-blood and threatening to engulf the continent. Its presence is felt in the enfeebled morality of the whole community. How to stem this advancing tide is not a question for ministers and moralists alone, but for every practical man and woman in the land. It is a question of moral life or death, of crime or honesty, of security or insecurity of property, of honor, of the virtue of our sons and daughters, of our wives and mothers, of the sanctity of the family and the home."—Josiah W. Leeds.

TO REBUILD JERUSALEM.

DR. SIVARTHA, a well-to-do resident of this city, left Chicago July 5th for England, where he expects to spend some months in organizing an extensive movement for a resettlement of Palestine. In both England and America this movement has already excited widespread interest. A number of families in this city are preparing to leave in the autumn, and Sivarta expects a large colony to leave England for Palestine next spring. These people are earnest, religious, and practical in their plans. They don't expect that the settlement and restoration of Palestine will be brought about by anything that looks outwardly like a miracle. It must be guided by political sagacity and business judgment, both pervaded by a deep religious impulse.

Captain Condor, who made the elaborate official survey of Palestine, says it may easily become the rival of the most fruitful parts of Southern Italy. With a territory as large as Great Britain, and with every variety of climate to choose from, it presents an inviting field to the emigrants. As soon as a sufficient number of Anglo-Saxon people are there to form a nucleus of a new nation, it is expected the European Powers will unite to declare Palestine an independent nation. The Jews proper, according to the expectation, will only form about one-sixth of the new population. The larger element will be English and Americans. Dr. Sivartha has already laid out extensive and careful plans for the rebuilding of Jerusalem and its temples, public buildings, gates and walls in harmony with the prophetic descriptions of the Bible. These plans and those for the works of external improvement throughout the country have been examined and approved by competent architects and civil engineers. The prophecies referred to by Dr. Sivartha are in the Old Testament, and others are in the New Testament—the 21st of Revelations. The doctor firmly believes these prophecies are to be literally fulfilled, saying that the language is such that it is impossible to attach any other than a literal meaning to it.

According to his idea the new Jerusalem is to be a center of learning, of political influence and a religious capital. It never was a commercial metropolis, he says, and he does not expect it to become one when rebuilt. The new city is to be walled entirely because Dr. Sivartha believes in setting a definite limit to the growth of the city. When asked if he thought guaranties could be secured from the nations in Europe that have acted in concert on the Eastern question, the doctor said: "The question is one that has already been discussed by European statesmen, and the disposal of Palestine so far has been a difficult problem because the population there now for eighteen hundred years has not been accustomed to self-government. The native population lay the blame of their misery on the shoulders of their rulers, and are only too anxious for some foreign occupation of the country. They express their preference for the English, who, they hope, will give them new institutions. Ten years ago, just before the Boylan [Berlin?] treaty, and at that time of course the question was up for discussion, the statesmen expressed themselves freely that Palestine ought to be made a neutral nation like Switzerland or Belgium, and therefore under the guaranty of the great Powers to secure its immunity from war. It is situated in such a place as to make this almost a political necessity. It really occupies the great triangle between Europe, Asia and Africa, and any final triumph of modern civilization in Western Asia must inevitably settle the question of the neutral independence of Palestine.

"In England and the United States a great many men and women of wealth have interested themselves in this enterprise, and the plans meet their approval.

I have made it a long study," said Dr. Sivartha, "not only to develop all Palestine, but all the great Euphrates valley which is capable of sustaining one hundred million people and of again being a great center of the world's activities."

"Don't you think that you will probably find in this a strong ally in Russia? That is, don't you believe that the tendency of religious thought and of political development, slow as it may be in Russia, is toward the restoration of what we may call the old Scriptural countries to their ancient glory?"

"Most certainly. That is the tendency of all the real growth in Russia, and that growth will eventually determine all the political movements of the empire. At first Russia may oppose us because she may not see the tendency of what we are doing there, which would certainly lead to the opening of the Bosphorous, giving Russia free access to the seas and commerce of the world. To secure the independence of Palestine and to rebuild Jerusalem is a great undertaking; but in ten years I hope to announce to my friends in Chicago that Palestine is independent and that work in Jerusalem has made great progress."

Conference Minutes.

DECATUR.

Conference convened at Davis City, Iowa, June 23d, 1888. As H. A. Stebbins, the president of the district, was absent, J. R. Lambert was chosen president pro tem. F. M. Weld, clerk. Branch reports: Lamoni, 600; 4 baptized, 15 received, 10 removed, 2 died. Lucas, 207; 3 baptized, 8 removed, 1 died, 1 marriage, 1 ordination. Little River, 105; 2 received, 2 removed, 2 died. Davis City, 60; no change. Greenville, 33; 2 removed. Centerville, 18; 1 baptized. Allendale, 55; 1 died. Lone Rock not reported. Elders Lambert, Bartlett, Shippy, Ackerley, Turpen, Abbott, McDuffett, Baggerly, Anderson, Reese, C. H. Jones, O. J. Bailey, and M. V. B. Smith reported; also Priests Lovell, Fowler, Sparks and J. M. Brown, and Teachers A. K. Anderson, John Harp and C. M. Hinkle. Elder Frank Izatt and Priest T. W. Williams reported by letter. A matter between Bro. Sparks and the Davis City branch was referred to Elders Anderson, Banta, Turpen, Shippy and Thomas for examination. Subsequently they recommended that the action of the branch be sustained, and it was done. By letter H. A. Stebbins stated that neither health nor time will any longer permit him to attend to his office duties, do the other work that is necessary for the support of his family, and attempt to do the ministry labor that is needed, especially as his health has failed much under these combined duties, therefore he asked to be released from his charge over the district, and that another be appointed. As only four months remain till the annual election, and as, in accordance with his prior election, he has an appointment from the First Presidency, ratified by the General Conference, it was unanimously resolved that we ask him to retain his place till the end of the year, performing only so much labor as he may be able to do. Saturday evening preaching by M. M. Turpen, Sunday morning by J. R. Lambert, afternoon by O. B. Thomas, and evening by C. H. Jones. They were assisted by brethren Baggerly, Shippy, Cochran and Campbell. Adjourned to meet at Pleasanton, the district president to appoint the day and date, and give notice in the Herald.

A. J. Moore, Elkhardt, Anderson Co., Texas.
J. W. Gillen, 3129 Caroline street, St Louis, Missouri.

Miscellaneous.

NOTICES.

There will be a reunion meeting lasting from seven to ten days at Limerick, Jackson county, Ohio, commencing Monday, September 11th. We have desired to confer with Bro. E. C. Briggs and solicit special co-operation in this matter, but so far have not been able to ascertain his whereabouts. Our reasons for selecting the above locality is that it is convenient to the Virginia and West Virginia missions, and that the missionaries and Saints can the more conveniently attend. We believe that an effort in this direction will give the work in those parts a new and increased interest, and also give us great prestige as we anticipate a large gathering. District officials and many Saints have been consulted in reference to the propriety of the above proceedings, and all heartily endorse the movement, and express themselves as being of the opinion that great good will thereby accrue to the cause. Bro. E. C. Briggs is expected and urged to be present, as three ordinations to the Seventy are now pending and wisdom suggests that these ordinations be attended to at the district conference preceeding these meetings. The Saints desire very much to have the Bishop or his counsellor, E. L. Kelley, present. Brethren B. V. Springer, Leonard Scott, L. R. Devore, James Moler, Thomas Matthews and Bro. Goodrich of the ministry are expected to be present. Come one, come all. Let us have a glorious time.

G. T. GRIFFITHS,
T. J. BEATTY, Pres. Dist.

The following members of the branch at Burlington, Iowa, are absent and their residence is unknown, namely, Johan G. Silzle, Anna M. Maddox (formerly Webster), Thaddeus Hasner, George S. Lewis and Esdras R. Wheatly. Unless they soon report themselves by letter their names will be dropped by the branch and placed upon the Scattering Record of the church by the General Church Secretary and Recorder. By order of the branch, H. D. ENNIS, Clerk.
BURLINGTON, Iowa, July 16th, 1888.

In addition to the appointments made some time ago, and published in the Herald, the Saints whom it may concern will please acquiesce in the following: Bro. Duncan Campbell, of Pleasanton, Iowa, has been duly appointed to take charge of the field known as the Decatur district. Whatever you wish to communicate to the missionary in charge, send to Elder Duncan Campbell, Pleasanton, Decatur county, Iowa, enclosing stamp for reply.

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT,
In charge of Iowa and Missouri mission.

BORN.

PEAK.—At Crescent, Iowa, June 20th, 1888, to Bro. Warren and Sr. Melle E. Peak, two daughters. Blessed July 16th, 1888, by Elders J. T. and E. A. Davis, and named Edna Malinda and Maudie Catharine.

MARRIED.

HUGHS—EBELING.—At Benwood, West Virginia, May 31st, 1888, by Elder G. T. Griffiths, Mr. John Hughs and Sr. Rachel Ebeling. After the ceremony a number of Saints and friends met at the house of the bride to celebrate the happy event, and a good time was had.

HARDY—EATON.—At Green's Landing, Maine, June 3d, 1888, by Elder U. W. Greene, Bro. George E. Hardy and Sr. Rose L. Eaton, both of Deer Isle.

DIED.

JOHNSON.—At Reese, Tuscola county, Michigan, July 1st, 1888, Bro. John C. Johnson. He was born July 2d, 1830. United with the church in 1877. He passed away peacefully. Having no relatives the branch laid him respectfully away in his resting place.

WOOD.—At Saco, Maine, June 27th, 1888, of neuralgia of the heart, Deacon John Wood, aged 65 years, 11 months, and 12 days. He was baptized by Elder J. C. Foss, November 13th, 1881. His wife and four children mourn his loss.

SMITH.—At Jonesport, Maine, April 17th, 1888, after a lingering illness, Sr. Sarah E. Smith, aged 44 years, 1 month and 16 days. She was baptized in 1877. A loving mother, and a faithful Saint, active in church duties and Sabbath School. Her loss is greatly felt by the branch. She died firm in the hope of a glorious resurrection, committing her two boys to the care of that Father who had always been her protection in life. Funeral sermon by Elder U. W. Greene.

ANDERSON.—At Nebraska City, Nebraska, July 11th, 1888, Bro. John Anderson. He was born in Sweden, May 12th, 1825, and emigrated to this country in 1862, and became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1876. Funeral services from the Saints Chapel conducted by Elder H. C. Bronson.

BURNS.—On May 30th, the infant son of Bro. John and Sr. Julia Burns, of Machias, Maine, aged 4 months and 15 days. Funeral services by Elder John Benner.

KELLEY.—At his residence, Jonesport, Maine, July 8th, 1888, Captain Darius Kelley, husband of Sr. Lydia Kelley, aged 55 years. Death followed a lingering illness which prevented him from obeying the gospel as he desired to do. Funeral services in the Congregational Church; services by Elder John Benner.

GREENE.—At Green's Landing, Maine, April 24th 1888, Sr. Kate Greene, aged 39 years. For six months she was a great sufferer, yet very patient, receiving much comfort through prayer. She fell asleep reconciled to the will of the Lord. Funeral sermon by Rev. Mr. Collins, of the Baptist Church.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of the Western Maine district will convene with the Brooksville branch at the Sargentville school-house, August 11th and 12th, commencing at two o'clock on the 11th, according to resolution at last conference. All officials in the district are expected to report.

WM. G. PERT, Pres. Dist.

TWO DAY MEETING.

A two days' meeting will be held in the Junata branch, Tuscola county, Michigan, August 25th and 26th. The Saints from the different branches are cordially invited to attend. A number of the traveling ministry are expected to be present, including Elder J. J. Cornish, J. A. Carpenter, Levi Phelps, E. Delong and others.

RICHARD HARTNELL,
Branch President.

WHY AMERICANS HAVE BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

AN Albany physician says Americans suffer more generally from Bright's disease and nervous complaints than any other people because they sit down so persistently at their work. While Englishmen, Germans, Frenchmen walk and exercise, an American business man will go to his office, take his seat in his chair, and sit there all day without giving any relief to the tension of the muscles of the back. The result is that these muscles surrounding the kidneys become soft and flabby. They lose their vitality. The kidneys themselves soon become weak and debilitated. If business men would walk more, and stand instead of sitting at their desks, their health would be much improved.

INTEMPERANCE—by which I mean the use of ardent spirits in any manner as a beverage, and tobacco in all its forms as a luxury, are evils of such enormity that they may be said to embrace all others; they are certainly unlike all others; they wound wherever man is vulnerable.

His Prophetic Mission Vindicated, and the Divine Origin of the Book of Mormon Defended and Maintained.

Paper covers, 200 pages 35

This is a reply by Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the church; and it is a most excellent one to be circulated both in the church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

PROPHETIC TRUTH:

Confirmed in the appearing of the Book of Mormon—an Israelitish Record of a Fallen People.

Paper covers, five for $1each 25

Being the subject of an Evening's Conversation respecting its origin. Its Divinity proved by the Scriptures and collateral evidence. Prefaced with a brief sketch of the Life of the Prophet, showing the way and manner of his becoming possessed of the record.

"MANUSCRIPT FOUND."

In cloth 25cts., ten or more, each..... 20
In paper 15 cts., ten or more, each..... 13

This is the notorious "Manuscript Found" written by Rev. Solomon Spaulding, about which so much has been said in connection with the theory that it furnished Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon the chief ground work and material from which to write the Book of Mormon.

"EARLY DAYS OF MORMONISM."

WE have just concluded a careful reading of this last work against the Latter Day Saints, and feel inclined to make thereon a few comments.

The book contains 275 pages, 16 mo., written by J. H. Kennedy, editor of the Magazine of Western History, Cleveland, Ohio.

Of course, Mr. Kennedy would have his readers think him thoroughly unbiased in judgment and eminently just and honest in his methods, statements and conclusions. Nevertheless, from the first he wheels squarely into the ruts left by Howe, Tucker, Hyde, Beadle, Ford, and others of their kind, giving occasional reference to or quotations from Hepworth Dixon, Smucker, Steinhouse, Burton, and others far more unprejudiced, honest and competent than the former class; yet throughout his book, from beginning to end, there runs a manifest vein of antipathy, spleen, and sectarian bias. This is seen in the readiness and relish with which he quotes and endorses the statements and arguments of open and avowed enemies of the Latter Day Saints, and in the shadows of doubt and distrust he struggles to cast over the statements and doings of the Saints and those who have treated them favorably, seeming to ignore the fact that the Saints and their immediate friends are the most competent witnesses in respect to their own affairs.

And yet we have to thank him for many valuable items which, with all fair-minded people, will go far to prove that Joseph Smith, his colleagues and the Saints, were and are a far different and a better people than their enemies have painted them.

Mr. Kennedy assumes that "Mormonism"—meaning the system of religion founded and builded by Joseph Smith and his fellows—was a fraud from first to last, and yet he does not explain how it happens that that system in its doctrines, ceremonies and organization is identical with the teachings of the Bible, that it came forth in the TIME, and in the manner predicted in the Bible, and that its hundreds of thousands of adherents, in all quarters of the world, assert and maintain that it is approved and confirmed of God to them by His Spirit and power as was the religion of the Bible anciently to those who obeyed it. Neither does he explain how that from the very first, where the Saints have had "an open field and a fair fight," they have not only maintained their system of religion against the combined talent of the learned world, but, amidst poverty and hosts of bitter enemies they have convinced and converted their tens and hundreds of thousands, and many of them from the ranks of the "orthodox" churches.

JOSEPH AN IDLER.

Mr. Kennedy, like almost all anti-Mormon writers, charges the Smith family when in the state of New York, with "lazy lounging * * * on the part of father and sons;" and, quoting another, says that "Joseph" [the Seer] was "unanimously voted the laziest and most worthless of the generation." And yet these same writers assert that the Smiths honey-combed the hills of New York and Pennsylvania digging for silver mines and hidden treasures! Besides this, Mr. Kennedy, on page 44 of his book, informs us that this same Joseph had a house, and a farm, on "the north bank of the Susquehanna, [river], two miles west of the Twin river. * * * The house is one story high, and with its kitchen, is about twenty-four by fourteen feet. At present [1833] it is occupied by ex-Sheriff McCune, who was born in the room in which the Book of Mormon was transcribed. Mr. McCune's father bought the house and farm from Joe Smith." Here, then, we find Joseph Smith owned in 1827-8, a "house" and "farm." This was when he was but twenty-two or twenty-three years of age. Does not Mr. Kennedy perceive that this one fact utterly disproves the charge that Joseph Smith, in his younger days, was an idle, indolent, thriftless man. We thank Mr. Kennedy for this item of testimony he furnishes, for with it we refute the charge he so often repeats, that Joseph, in his early manhood, was a lazy, shiftless idler; for no young man aged twenty-three, in those hard times, could have procured "a house and farm" unless industrious, frugal and persevering.

It was the good fortune of the writer to meet, in Galien, Michigan, in 1860, Mr. Ezra Thayer, who personally knew Joseph Smith (the father of Joseph the Seer) and his family. In a lengthy, searching conversation we learned that Mr. Joseph Smith, and his sons Hyrum and Joseph, worked a great deal for Mr. Thayer (who was a contractor, and builder of mills, dams, bridges, etc., etc.), prior to 1827, in the vicinity of where the Saints resided. He stated that father Smith was a steady, religious man, and that his sons were quite as orderly and industrious as the average young men of those times. To my inquiry as to whether father Joseph Smith was intemperate, he said he was not; but that, as was common among all classes in those times, he occasionally drank strong drink.

David Whitmer said to the writer, in September, 1885, that from his personal knowledge of Joseph Smith, the Seer, in the times when the Book of Mormon was being translated, and after, he knew him to be a steady, prayerful, exemplary young man.

But if we would have the most conclusive evidence against the false and foolish stories that Joseph Smith was lazy and thriftless, it is found in the marvelous activities, the ceaseless work he did from at least 1827 up to the time of his tragic death. He translated the Book of Mormon, a book of five hundred and fifty pages, (and made the chief support of his family), from September 1827 to June 1829; he preached the gospel, and on the 6th of April, 1830, he organized the church. He continued to support his family, to preach the word and administer its ordinances, preside over and discipline the church, and as early as December, 1830, he began the translation, correction and revision of the Bible. In January, 1831, he with his family moved a distance of over two hundred and fifty miles, to Kirtland, Ohio, where, and in its vicinity, he preached the gospel, sent ministers abroad to preach it, and in June, 1831, he and others started for Independence, Missouri, going by steamer to St. Louis, and thence, with others, walked about three hundred miles, to Independence. August 2d Sidney Rigdon dedicated the land of Zion for the gathering of the Saints; on the 3d, Joseph selected and dedicated the spot on which the temple of the Lord will be built in this generation; organized a conference of the church on the 4th; and on the 9th he "with ten elders left Independence landing, for Kirtland, going down the river in sixteen canoes." Leaving the river route the 14th, he with O. Cowdery and S. Rigdon went by land to St. Louis, and thence by stage to Kirtland, arriving there August 27th. September 12th he moved his family to the town of Hiram, thirty miles south-east of Kirtland, where he recommenced the translation of the Bible, Sidney Rigdon acting as his scribe. In November the Book of Commandments was compiled and dedicated, preparatory to its being sent to Independence to be printed. On the 25th of March, 1832, he and Sidney Rigdon were mobbed nigh unto death. April 2d, 1832, Joseph and others started for Missouri, via Steubenville, Ohio, and St. Louis, Missouri, reaching Independence the 24th instant. May 6th, he and Brn. Rigdon and Whitney started by stage for St. Louis, thence by steamer to New Albany, Indiana, and thence to Kirtland. He now again took up the work of translating the Bible, and in the fall made a trip to Albany, New York, and Boston, returning November 6th, 1832. The winter following he spent in translating the Bible, and in ministerial labors. The spring and summer of 1833 was spent in preaching the word, organizing and disciplining the priesthood more fully, and in taking preliminary steps to build a temple and houses of learning.

And now to sum up his future and rapidly increasing labors, we have but to remind the reader that all his time was thenceforward fully taken up in ceaseless toils, cares, perplexities and bitter persecutions, up to the time of his brutal assassination in Carthage jail, June 27th, 1844. His life was one of marvelous activities from the very first. One has but to read the history of the church to learn that Joseph Smith, from his earliest years, was one of earth's greatest workers, both with hand and brain. This is made patent in the accomplished facts of his life-work, and only prejudiced, splenetic, bigoted, or grossly blinded persons will say to the contrary. The press, the pulpit and the forum may for a time exaggerate, color and otherwise pervert the facts of history to suit their morbid tastes and biased judgments; but, thank God, they can not annihilate time nor its just records. These latter will speak, and they must be heard.

MORAL CHARACTER.

While Mr. Kennedy does not say as much against the personal character of Joseph as some others have done, yet he seems to regard that kind of argument as just and essential. There never has been a reformer and benefactor of society in any of its important departments, from the times of Christ till the present, but what his personal character has been slandered, his motives impugned, and his work misrepresented. Persecution under its various forms, has poured forth its blind and blinding floods to hinder and destroy these men, their reputation and their work. Of Jesus the bigoted Pharisees said, "He hath a devil and is mad;" "he casteth out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils;" "he is a gluttonous man and a wine bibber;" "he maketh himself a king;" "he hath spoken blasphemy;" "he is guilty of death;" and to degrade and insult him, "they spit in his face and buffeted him; and others smote him." These were their chief arguments in answer to the wonderful claims, the marvelous doctrines, the spotless life, and the beneficent works of Jesus of Nazareth. But considerate people then, and since, have learned to judge of men, their teachings and their works, on the authentic testimony furnished by the men themselves, or by their intimate friends and associates, and not on the incompetent and partial testimonies of their enemies, or of persons having no personal knowledge of the things they affirm. To assail the personal character of an individual in order to destroy his work as a teacher and reformer has ever been the dirty work of the devil and his emissaries. And to assail the dead in this manner, is viler than to assail the living, for the dead can not defend themselves here—except by the authentic record of their works.

RIGDON AND BOOK OF MORMON.

My Kennedy assumes that Sidney Rigdon secretly connived with Joseph Smith in getting up the Book of Mormon. All the facts furnished by Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, P. P. Pratt, O. Cowdery, David Whitmer, Emma Smith, Catherine Salisbury, and hosts of others who knew that Sidney Rigdon never met Joseph Smith till in December 1830, many months after the Book of Mormon was published to the world, are denied by Mr. Kennedy, and his kind, and the surmisings, theorizings and guess-work of rabid anti-Mormons are endorsed in their stead! What, in the court of justice, would the judgment and opinion of such men be worth? Nothing—simply nothing—for they set aside the testimony of competent witnesses, and accept in its stead the unsupported theories of those having no knowledge of facts vital to the case in question.

"MANUSCRIPT FOUND."

Mr. Kennedy adopts the oft-exploded theory, and the now self-evident falsehood, that the book of Mormon was based and builded on the "Manuscript Found" written by Rev. Spaulding in 1805-12. If he had examined that manuscript, which may now be found in the Library at Oberlin College, Ohio, or may be obtained in print at the Herald Office, Lamoni, Iowa, he might have seen that Mr. Spaulding had neither the brains, the scholarship, the general information, the religion, nor the morals requisite in writing the Book of Mormon, nor anything to at all compare with it. In the providence of God we have, in Spaulding's "Manuscript," the exact measure of the man who wrote it. We weigh him in his own balances and find him utterly wanting in those qualifications essential in writing the Book of Mormon.

MUNCHAUSENS.

Not to be behind others, Mr. Kennedy furnishes, among other self-evident yarns, the oft-repeated charge that Joseph Smith, in order to prove the divinity of his prophetic claims, attempted to walk on the water! He locates the scene of this attempt in New York, (many others locate it in Ohio, on the shores of Lake Erie, others locating it at Nauvoo, in Illinois, at Kirtland or elsewhere), and the time "in the twilight of a certain evening." This kind of definiteness (?) as to time, place, etc., marks the most of all anti-Mormon testimony, and is a fair index of its worthlessness. Mr. Kennedy states that "the unbelieving boys of the village kept close watch and saw one of his [Joseph Smith's] adherents construct a bridge of boards just beneath the surface of the pond. When the accomplice had gone, the urchins removed the outer plank; and when the time of the exhibition came and Smith went down, he swam ashore, and said to his followers, "Woe be unto ye of little faith! Your faith would not hold me up."

Here Joseph Smith is charged with such foolishness as would disgrace a natural-born idiot! A five-year-old child would foresee at once that such a clumsy fraud would deceive no one, for all persons anywhere near would discover the fraud on the merest glance. Joseph Smith, if not inspired of God as he and his adherents claim, was one of the keenest, shrewdest, craftiest, and most far-seeing men of this or any other age, judging him by the works he did as found in his authentic writings and the records of the church he founded, and yet his opposers and traducers peddle the yarn that he tried to walk on the water, putting planks under the water on which to accomplish it! Bah! Where is the sense of these would-be wise ones? And is this the kind of men who seek to criticise and crush Joseph the Seer and the work he did? Verily, "Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

JOSEPH'S GOOD CHARACTER.

But Mr. Kennedy's book is not wholly void of merit. Quoting from the Painesville (Ohio) Telegraph of February 1st, 1831, he informs us that Sidney Rigdon, on his return from visiting Joseph Smith down at his home near Palmyra, New York, in 1830, "commenced a long detail [to his, Rigdon's, inquirers] of his researches after the character of Joseph Smith," and "declared that even his enemies had nothing to say against his character;" and that where Joseph "had been tried as a disturber of the peace," "a transcript from the dockets of two magistrates," "testified that he was honorably acquitted." This agrees with the testimony of Joseph and the early Saints, also with that of Judge Reed, late of Burlington, Iowa, who was connected with the vexatious suits mentioned; and yet Mr. Kennedy will have it that Joseph in those days was a wicked, worthless fellow.

MIRACLES.

On page 121 of Mr. Kennedy's book, he says as follows:

"The chief claim for the possession of miraculous power put forward by Smith, and the one most often and effectually quoted by the Mormon missionaries in the days in which it occurred, is the remarkable cure of Mrs. Johnson, of Hiram. The case is well authenticated, and those who seek to explain it away will be compelled to base themselves upon mesmeric influence or the unconscious nervous co-operation of the lady affected, rather than in cunning upon the part of Smith. It seems to have been simply a case where his audacity was rewarded with an accident of fortune it by no means deserved.

When Ezra Booth and Symonds Ryder were investigating Mormonism, and the latter had not yet fully committed himself thereto, they determined to put Smith's claims to a crucial test. Their neighbor, Mrs. Johnson, had been unable to use her right arm for six years, because of a stroke of paralysis. Accompanied by this lady, and a physician, the two orthodox ministers set out for Kirtland, and made a call upon Smith. Nothing was said to him concerning the main purpose of their visit, but a discussion was opened as to the truth of the new doctrine that had created such turmoil in their midst. Smith held his own with unusual eloquence. In the course of the conversation Ryder asked him if it was true that he pretended to the performance of miracles.

'I can not work miracles,' was the response, 'but I believe that God, working through me, can do so.'

At a signal from one of the party, Mrs. Johnson stood before him. Said Mr. Ryder, 'Here is Mrs. Johnson with a lame arm; has God given any power to men now upon earth to cure her?'

Smith must have felt that it was the moment to try the soul of any man not grounded in a perfect knowledge as to the power at his command, but to the eyes of those present he betrayed no fear. A calm assurance upheld him. Moving backward a few steps he looked intently into the eyes of the lady, as if to get her under his mental control.

Then he moved to her side, and taking hold of her palsied hand, said in a deep and solemn tone, "Woman, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I command thee to be whole!" With no further word or look, he abruptly turned and left the room. The hand that he had lifted did not fall. The lady attempted to move it, and found that it was once more under her control. Upon her return home she discovered that she could use it equally with the other, and thus it remained until her death, fifteen years later."

To this Mr. Kennedy appends the following footnote:

"From a sermon preached in Hiram, Ohio, on August 3d, 1870, by B. A. Hinsdale, then President of Hiram College, after a narration of the above circumstance: 'The company were awestricken at the infinite presumption of the man, and the calm assurance with which he spoke. The sudden mental and moral shock—I know not how better to explain the well-attested fact—electrified the rheumatic arm. Mrs. Johnson at once lifted it up with ease, and on her return home the next day she was able to do her washing without difficulty or pain.'

Mr. Kennedy sees nothing in this but the "audacity" of Joseph Smith; . . . "an accident of fortune;" and refers the healing to "mesmeric influence or the unconscious, nervous co-operation of the lady affected"—anything but the power of God and "the name of the Lord Jesus Christ." Why not refer the healing of the lame man "at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful" to the same or similar causes?—"And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us. . . . Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." In both cases the healing was done in the name of Jesus Christ, and by men who claimed to be called and sent by him and to have the utmost confidence in him. All the apparent difference lies in the fact that one healing took place in Jerusalem, anciently, under the administration of Peter, a man claiming to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, while the other took place in Kirtland, in the present century, under the administration of Joseph, a man claiming to be an apostle of Jesus Christ. Peter's claims as a servant of God were questioned, scouted and resisted by unbelievers anciently; and Joseph's have been treated in a similar manner in these latter days.

If the healing of Mrs. Johnson was often cited in the days in which it occurred, as stated by Mr. Kennedy, which is probable, it nevertheless is not mentioned by Joseph Smith in his history of the church. For the facts are, the gifts and manifestations of the Holy Spirit, including miraculous healing, were so abundant in those times, and after, that such a case as that of Mrs. Johnson's would soon cease to be prominently mentioned because succeeded by others of a similar character.

President Hinsdale sees nothing in the forces healing Mrs. Johnson except "the infinite presumption" of Joseph Smith, and "the calm assurance with which he spoke," also "the sudden mental and moral shock" that, he claims, "electrified the rheumatic arm." That kind of "presumption," that "calm assurance," are what blesses the afflicted ones when administered to by men called and sent of God. Peter, and Paul, and John, and others of God's worthies in all times past, ministered with the same kind of "presumption"—the same "calm assurance"—causing the righteous to rejoice, while the people "imagine a vain thing" and deride and oppose. How Mr. Hinsdale's "mental and moral shock" could heal a paralytic we fail to perceive—especially the moral part of it. Paul "said to the spirit"—that actuated the damsel-medium at Philippi, (Acts 16: 16-19), "I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour." Was this cure the result of a "sudden mental and moral shock?" And yet the manner of procedure is identical, and in both cases those officiating claimed to act by divine authority.

PROPHECY.

Mr. Kennedy says another sign that helped to convert Ryder and Booth to believe in the prophetic mission of Joseph the Seer, was the fact that Mr. Ryder "saw in a public journal a description of the destruction of Pekin, China, which a Mormon girl had announced by prophecy six weeks before." Why should not this Mormon girl prophesy as well as the "four daughters of Philip?" Besides, God has declared by Joel and Peter that, "in the last days, . . . your sons and daughters shall prophesy."—Acts 2: 17.

This "Mormon girl's" prophecy was a most public, literal, and striking fulfillment of the Lord's promise by Joel and Peter, and all sensible people ought to rejoice therein, glorify God and exhibit a decent respect for those whom God has honored with such blessings.

UNRELIABLE WRITERS.

To show how utterly unreliable are many who seek to set the world right in regard to Mormonism, and to show also how untrustworthy are those whose writings Mr. Kennedy frequently quotes, we give the following samples:

"The caller was afterwards introduced to [Joseph] Smith, and his narration continues: Smith had a round face, and his hair was cut short down on his forehead. The color of his hair was between a deep brown and a dark red."

The facts are, Joseph Smith was a rather long and angular featured man, and his hair was light flaxen colored.

Mr. Kennedy's author further says: "A broad aisle ran through the middle of the temple, [in Kirtland], with a cross aisle in the centre." But the facts are, there was and is no aisle, broad or narrow, in "the middle of the temple;" neither was there nor is there now "a cross aisle in the centre." There were and are aisles at either end of the temple between the pulpits and pews, also two parallel aisles running through the temple, east and west, along side the pulpits, with pews on either side of them. Now, when writers go so wide of the truth as in these descriptions of Joseph and the temple, matters about which there need be no mistake with those who knew the facts, what can we expect of them when they write of matters they know far less about and concerning which they are unmistakably prejudiced and maliciously partial!

THE BLACK-SNAKE.

Mr. Kennedy's "yarn," charging Martin Harris with having offered his naked toes to "a black-snake some five feet in length," in order to demonstrate that he could work miracles, is too trifling to merit further notice. Like all that class of statements, it is made for the evident purpose of casting discredit on the character of Martin Harris and thus invalidate his testimony. Mr. Kennedy and his kind should know that huge black-snakes don't make a business of allowing people to get so near them as to stick their toes under their noses, for they are the most shy, wild, and active of all reptiles.

KIRTLAND BANK.

Mr. Kennedy urges that the founding, the conduct, and the failure of the Kirtland Bank in 1837, are evidences against the character and claims of Joseph Smith, and yet he says Joseph explained its failure, and "declared that the bank itself was victim rather than offender, and charged a defalcation of twenty-five thousand dollars upon Warren Parrish, a clerk of the institution, who had left Kirtland some time before."

Banks don't always prevent their employees from stealing their funds and causing their failure—at least it has been so throughout America up to the present—and the Kirtland Bank suffered as has hosts of others in this respect. The late Wm. Marks told the writer that Joseph Smith took active steps, intending to pay off all the indebtedness of the bank.

Parrish, after leaving Kirtland, united with the Baptists, became a preacher of that denomination, and locating at Rockford, Illinois, died there many years ago.

THE NAUVOO HOUSE.

Mr. Kennedy seeks to cast discredit on the prophetic claims of Joseph because the revelation of January 1841 provides that in the Nauvo House a suite of rooms were to be reserved for Joseph and his house "from generation to generation;" and he quotes what he thinks are the grounds on which this reservation was made from "An act to incorporate the Nauvoo House Association," which says: "And whereas Joseph Smith has furnished the said association with the ground whereon to erect said house, it is further declared that the said Smith and his heirs shall hold by perpetual succession a suite of rooms in the said house." This, it is true, was the moneyed consideration on which such provision was made; but a glance at the facts in respect to the pressing ministerial duties devolving upon Joseph Smith as the first president of the church, and the further fact that these same duties, including the presiding authority in and over the church, were designed of God to be placed upon "the head of his [Joseph's] posterity after him," and there will be readily seen the chief and first reasons for that suite of rooms being provided, perpetually, for Joseph and his posterity. Joseph's entire time was to be devoted to the interests of the church. He therefore needed to be centrally and conveniently located, and be free, so far as possible, from the cares hindrances, and expense of entertaining his very numerous callers and visitors, for in this way himself and his successor would be far less encumbered in their ministerial duties. The proposed building of that house exhibits the best wisdom when viewed from legitimate standpoints, and only ignorance of the facts, want of reflection, or cunning craftiness will make it appear otherwise. It was most suitable that the First President of the church should thus be provided for, as he thereby would be far less expense to the church, and at the same time could devote more of his attention directly to church work.

In conclusion we note that the most of Mr. Kennedy's information in regard to Nauvoo affairs is gleaned from pronounced anti-Mormon writers, prominent among whom are Dr. J. C. Bennett and Gov. Ford. For the information of all we state that John C. Bennett, notwithstanding his bitter, vile attacks on the character of Joseph Smith, after Joseph's death he sought to unite with various factions claiming to be the church founded by Joseph the Seer, and that in 1860, on learning that "Young Joseph" had taken the presidency of the Reorganized Church, he wrote him from Polk City, Iowa, (where he died many years ago), desiring to become identified with the church. These facts are all the refutation that is needed to show that the writings of said Bennett were utterly unreliable, for if what he wrote of Joseph was true, and Bennett were honest, then he would never seek to unite with the church founded by Joseph. And if Bennett was not honest in his last professions, it is strong presumptive evidence that he was not honest, (and therefore not to be believed), when he wrote against Joseph.

GOVERNOR FORD.

As for Governor Ford, and his history of Illinois, it is patent with those who are posted that he wrote his history largely for the purpose of vindicating his conduct toward Joseph and Hyrum Smith and the Saints in and about Nauvoo. Mr. Ford did what others similarly situated have done in the past,—seek to excuse, cover up, explain away or palliate their official blunders and badness, casting blame on others when themselves are chiefly at fault. Mr. Kennedy's book is a jumbled mass of truth and error, justness and unfairness, the latter far in excess of the first.

TO OUR PATRONS AND FRIENDS.

Now that the harvest and haying is nearly past, and now that the evenings are lengthening and will afford better opportunities for reading, we ask all to remember our church publications and do what they can to circulate them so far as lies in their power. For, first of all, this is a ready and efficient way to enlighten all classes as to the teachings and aims of the church, thereby removing in a large measure prejudice and a persecutive spirit wherever they exist, and it is also a cheap and potent means of spreading abroad the gospel and items of knowledge allied to it. We therefore hope our readers will use their influence and opportunities to procure subscribers for all our church works, and this at an early time, and thenceforward. The ministry, many of whom are great helpers in this direction, we specially request to help what they can in this work.

To those in arrears for papers, books and pamphlets, we make urgent request that they remit what they owe at their earliest convenience. Please do not delay. The Herald Office has sought and still seeks to furnish its printed matter in the best and cheapest manner practicable. Success has attended this effort in the past, and the outlook is favorable for the future.

We hope to soon issue a Hand-book on priesthood, a carefully prepared Concordance and Synopsis, also the Tune-book now being prepared by Bro. M. H. Forscutt.

BRO. WILLIAM CRICK, who has been one of the Herald Office force since his boyhood leaves the office August first, for Independence, Missouri, where he goes to engage in publishing; he and his brother-in-law, Bro. Joseph Luff, having purchased the plant, fixtures and good will of the Gazette. Bro. Crick assumes the control of the paper there, and proposes to make a success of the business, and run a live newspaper. The Gazette was founded as a Republican paper, and will be issued in that interest until the present campaign is over, when in the hands of the brethren it will be conducted as a journal independent in politics, and free from party domination, the intention being to conserve the inhabitants of the place, its people and the surrounding country, an advocate of what is worth advocacy, an exponent of the good in community and a foe to the evil.

Bro. Crick, of course, goes into the enterprise as a venture, but he carries with him pluck, good will, and a disposition to strive for recognition and distinction in his chosen field of endeavor. He takes with him the sympathy and extreme good will of all his Herald Office associates, who only lose their regret for his leaving them in their commendation of his "grip" in entering business for himself. If the knowledge of the good wishes for his success will add to his courage under the difficulties he is almost sure to meet in his efforts, he is assured of much good help, for they have known him long and will be made glad by his completest success, sad if he should fail.

Bro. Crick has been with the office fourteen years, has worked his way up faithfully and will go into his new field of effort with a fair knowledge of the practical printer's art, and will, we feel assured make his way; we extend to him the hand of encouragement.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By card from John T. Davis, dated New York, July 27th, we learn that himself and wife, and his son E. A. and wife would take steamer Aurania, of the Cunard line for Liverpool, England, the morning of the 28th. They ask the prayers of the Saints, for they are about entering upon a most important and lengthy mission in Great Britain, principally in Wales. We hope to hear excellent reports of the labors of these brethren in due time. They are ministers approved of God and the Saints who know them. We bespeak for them a hearty reception by the Saints in Europe, and feel assured they will have their ready co-operation.

Bro. R. M. Elvin arrived home the 26th ult. from Salt Lake City, owing to the severe illness of his wife. We are pleased to learn that she is now steadily improving, and it is probable Bro. Elvin will soon return to his mission field, in which he has become deeply interested.

Bro. E. W. Nunley, of Wheelock, Texas, writes us that he expects to visit the Indian Territory soon, and desires to call upon the Saints there and assist them in their efforts to advance the cause of truth, while in the territory. He requests that all the Saints located there will correspond with him at once, to the above address, that he may know where to find them and labor with them. Brethren please take notice.

Bro. Henry Kemp in a letter written at Shenandoah, Iowa, July 25th, reports having excellent audiences at Wheeler's Grove of late and at Keystone, and says the Saints in his district are feeling well. He intended going on to Mill Creek and Hamburg, and thence to Plum Hollow to attend the Camp-meeting commencing August 17th. It is probable there will be a large gathering of Saints and friends and investigators at that meeting, which is likely to continue eight or ten days, and we hope to hear good tidings from it in due time. The camp-grounds and surroundings are excellent, the tent arrangements good, the evenings will be getting cooler and longer, and a week or ten days devoted then to religious services will be abundant in good fruits many ways.

The Prohibition Congressional Convention for the First District of Nebraska met in Nebraska City, July 26th. Among the delegates from Otoe county, we notice the name of Bro. J. B. Gouldsmith.

Bro. Oscar H. Trescott, Sand Beach, states that the pictures of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, offered to the Saints by Bro. L. R. Devore are well worth the price charged.

Wanted, volume eighteen of Millennial Star. Will some one please loan, donate or sell the Herald Office a copy of the above. Our numbers of the Star lack volume eighteen to complete them, and we would like to procure said volume. Who will respond and oblige us?

Bro. James H. Tyrrell, writing from Wallaceburg, Ontario, July 29th, suggests that the Saints should endeavor to sell the HERALD among their neighbors, in a similar way that the Salvation Army sells the War Cry. It may be an excellent thing; and if Bro. Tyrrell will take the time to try the experiment and then give the Saints the benefit of his example and experience it may encourage many to adopt the methods he will suggest to make it a success. Bro. Tyrrell sends us two copies of the War Cry, published at Toronto, Canada, which contain some good things, but much that seems to us to be foreign to the real work of making disciples of the Christ. The Salvation Army is in some places doing good in recovering men from evil habits and companionship, but to us it is not the work of the Gospel of Christ. One of the reasons why their publications and those of some other of the different religious denominations are made cheap, is the great help their publishing houses receive from donations, and bequests left for that purpose.

Bro. John A. Currie, jr., of Bandera, Texas, is appointed to labor in the South-Western mission, within the jurisdiction of Bro. I. N. Roberts, the arrangements for this appointment having been made by request of Bro. Roberts and upon consultation with Bro. G. A. Blakeslee, bishop. The Saints of the mission are doing well and it is to be hoped the crops this year will permit them to do as much as they desire toward sustaining the missionary work in their country.

The Nebraska City, Nebraska News, thus notices the services of the Saints in that city. Services of July 29th: "There will be preaching at the Latter Day Saints' Church to-night at eight o'clock; also tomorrow at eleven a. m., and at eight p. m. by Elder H. O. Smith, of Logan, Iowa. All are invited to attend."

BRO. JOHN M. TERRY, long a resident of Stewartville, DeKalb county, Missouri, has removed to St. Joseph, Missouri, to engage in business with Bro. William Lewis, proprietor of the Stewartville creamery and general jobber in dairy products; and the Stewartville weekly News has this to say of such removal in its issue for July 26th:

"It was with much reluctance that the Latter Day Saints of this place, received the resignation of their beloved pastor, Elder J. M. Terry at the close of their regular social meeting last Sunday at two o'clock. Letters of removal were granted to him and his family, as they will move to St. Joseph this week. Stewartville loses some most excellent citizens. They moved to St. Joseph Monday."

HEALTHFUL LOCALITIES.

"EDITOR HERALD:—Can you give any information concerning the healthiest counties adjoining, or within one or two hundred miles of Jackson county, in Missouri? Is Vernon county, Missouri, a healthy locality? Please advise for the benefit of some who are looking that way with a view to locate."

Many parts of Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska, within two hundred miles of Jackson county, Missouri, are healthful and inviting, while within those regions are many places where agues and fevers are common, also where there is a lack of pure water for domestic purposes, while in some places the water is poisonous with mineral impregnation. Great care should be given by those who intend making homes in the regions indicated, to locate only where the surroundings are healthful, for good health is quite indispensable to success and happiness.

Everything that is said or written in praise of certain localities should be received with due caution, for the reason that what pleases one person may not please another. Tastes and opinions differ widely at times. What suits one displeases another. What may prove a healthful locality to some, may prove very unhealthful for others. Northern and eastern people, generally, should avoid malarial districts. People from the southern or the middle states may possibly succeed there.

We have heard from what we esteem reliable sources, that south-western Missouri, (including Vernon county), and also south-eastern Kansas, have localities in which agues, fevers, and unwholesome water abounds.

We repeat it, that great care should be taken by the Saints in making their locations lest they settle in the midst of surroundings unfavorable to good sound health.

We have believed, and still believe and advise, that Saints should counsel with the Bishopric rather than others when seeking information as to localities in which to settle. That quorum is composed of men whom the church has the right to suppose are well posted in all temporal concerns, that department having been committed of the Lord to their special care and administration; and it is presumable that God will thoroughly qualify them for their work and make them reliable, wise advisers in all that pertains to the material, temporal interests of the Saints. If they were thus counselled on all these matters touching location, unity would be promoted, mistakes and losses and disappointments avoided, and the work of the Lord be builded in its temporal concerns as God has ordained it should be.

The church, from 1831, had its temporal concerns managed, so far as its direct administrations were concerned, by the Bishops and their counsellors. And this is what the law of the Lord requires. Hence we have said—and we repeat it—that the Bishops and their counsellors should be, and are, the most competent advisers in the temporal affairs of the church, including locating the Saints. Try them. Whoever intends to locate in the regions heretofore indicated would do well to give the Bishopric a full and definite statement of their case as to occupation, family, means to locate with, physical temperament, and everything else that would inform the Bishopric on points essential in forming correct judgment in the case.

A LATE Sandwich, (Illinois), Argus has these friendly words for the Lamoni Saints:

"A writer for the Evening Post, Burlington, Iowa, writes of a visit to Lamoni, Iowa, and the Mormons there. He says they are a moral and intellectual people though holding particular views. Well, as many of these moved from Sandwich, we can testify to their being first class citizens, and as to 'particular views,' we have some people here now, not of that faith, who are in the same condition of mind."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. W. J. Graves, of Brownsdale, Minnesota, wrote the 24th ult., saying:

"The truth is being made known here, and I think some may accept it. The temperance cause is before the people here, and the saloon must go."

Bro. John A. Currie, Jr., wrote from Bandera, Texas, July 23d:

"We had a grand time at the Reunion. During it and since thirteen have been baptized, nine into the Medina City and four into the Bandera branch; Bro. Roberts baptized eight, Bro. Currie five. The Lord was surely with us. Our little branch has increased from ten to forty, in about nineteen months. Last Sunday Bro. L. L. Wight was ordained elder, Bro. T. J. Sheppard and Bro. E. B. Bennett teachers of the Medina City branch."

Bro. Alexander H. Smith, of his work in Minnesota, writes July 27th:

"Brethren Short, Pender, and Wildermuth all seem alive and to be doing a good work. Bro. J. C. Foss is also moving, all alive. I hold forth at Girard on the 28th two meetings."

The following clipping is from the Star-News, of Minneapolis, Minnesota:

GREAT VICTORY FOR PROHIBITION.

UNIQUE AND EXCITING SCENES AT INDEPENDENCE, MO.

After the most exciting local option fight ever known in Missouri the Prohibitionists of Independence, county seat of this county and the oldest town in Missouri, won a great victory yesterday, carrying the election by over two hundred majority and ending the sale of liquor for four years. Women were everywhere at the polls, at the lunch stands, and on street corners, wearing silk badges, and with "dry" ballots in their hands. Girls stood at the polls, and at every voting place was a banner on which was inscribed "Temperance Beaux or None At All." Free dinners were served at the balloting places. Hundreds of children carried banners through the streets and about the voting precincts. Some of these were inscribed: "Sow Whisky Ballots and Reap Drunken Boys"; "Young Men, Keep Your Record Clean—J. B. Gough"; "Rum, Revenue, and Rags"; "Rum Ruins the Reason"; "Vote as You Pray"; "For God, Home, and Native Land"; "We Can't Vote, But We Can Suffer," were carried by the women in a parade and occupied a prominent place at each ward. Many of the best people of the town were interested in the contest and it was no infrequent sight to see young girls with horse and phaeton covered with streamers bringing in young gentlemen to vote for local option. In the First ward, where there was a large colored population, it was expected there would be a large "wet" majority, but both sides worked hard and the "dry" gained a great victory. It was here the fight centered and where the women stood all day, even though the weather was unpleasant. The Mormon Church, which has over one hundred voters, voted unanimously in favor of Prohibition. The temperance people had a grand celebration at night.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Did those disobedient spirits to whom Christ preached (I Peter 3: 19, 20; 4: 6) hear the gospel preached by Noah, or was it a temporal salvation only that was preached to them by Noah?

Ans.—Peter, in his second epistle, 2: 5, says that God "spared not the old world, but saved Noah, the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness," and Paul tells us, (Rom. 1: 17), that the gospel "is the righteousness of God revealed," which makes it clear that Noah preached the gospel to the ante-diluvians. This matter is made plain also by the Inspired Translation, Gen. 8: 1-8. It follows, then, that persons hearing the gospel preached in this life and failing to obey it, may hear it preached again among "the spirits in prison."

Q.—Is it right for an elder to baptize a person, giving him or her, as the case may be, the privilege to join himself or herself to whatever religious body he or she may prefer?

A.—No. The ministry are sent forth to preach the gospel of Christ—and not the churches of men. When the ministers of Christ's church baptize, they baptize "into the one body"—the church of Christ—and can not authorize those baptized to unite with any other body.

Q.—Is it right for an elder to baptize where there is a small branch and humble place of worship, with the understanding that the persons baptized are under no obligations to join the branch unless they feel so inclined?

A.—The elder should instruct those he baptizes to unite with the nearest, most convenient branch to their fixed residence. If the minister baptizing is a presiding officer of the branch where the baptism occurs, then the person baptized becomes, by his or her baptism, a member of that branch. Such are the rules and usages of the church.

Q.—Is a member of the church, who has once been married and has obtained a divorce on the grounds of adultery, free in the eyes of the divine law? and is he at liberty to marry again?

A.—Yes.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave the law-vaulted past;
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

MRS. ROLF'S THEORY.

"NELLIE, when you have finished building your house, will you get mamma the spool of white thread on the machine?" said Mrs. Rolf to little four-year-old Nellie, who was just then very intent in building a wonderful house with her building blocks.

One corner of the large family sitting-room was sacred to Nellie's playthings, the only restrictions being order and a reasonable amount of noise. Mrs. Rolf, who, by the way, was often called "cranky" on the subject of training children, preferred this arrangement because it gave her closer scrutiny over her children, and often by her nearness she contributed to their happiness. "I want my children to think of me in their play," she said.

On this particular afternoon Mrs. Jewel, a new neighbor and dear friend, was present; their conversation had not been once interrupted by Nellie, who seemed entirely lost in her occupation. "Yes, mamma," was her answer, in a pre-occupied tone, to her mother's request, but not a moment's slacking of her work.

Five minutes—six minutes past; the house was still incomplete. "She'll need speaking to twice this time, I think," was Mrs. Jewel's mental comment, beginning already to relish the approaching victory in the failure, for once, of Mrs. Rolf's theory, even if it did involve the child a little. Eight minutes gone—"she has forgotten the thread by this time," thought Mrs. Jewel—but no, the house is done, without a word the thread is quickly brought.

"May I go and play with Ponto?" was the request proffered with the thread.

"Yes. Pick up your playthings first though."

"Can I leave the house till papa comes, mamma?"

"Yes," was the answer.

The "corner" in apple-pie order, the child ran for a gay time with Ponto, the large Newfoundland, who liked nothing better than a romp with baby Nell.

"Is that the way you teach your children prompt obedience?" was the question Mrs. Jewel put, with a "now I have you sort of way," as the ladies were left to themselves.

"What way? Have I been disobeyed?" asked Mrs. Rolf, rather surprised.

"No, not exactly disobeyed—Nellie brought you the thread—when she got ready."

"Please be a little more explicit. I see by the ill-concealed smile on your face, you think you have detected a flaw in my theory—just where I don't see."

"Well to be plain. Had it been I who made the request, I should have said, 'Nellie, go and get me the thread, and I should have expected her to get it at once, without waiting until she finished her house, or dressed her doll, or whatever she was doing."

"But I was not in a hurry for the thread," said Mrs. Rolf.

"I don't think that makes any difference. It seems to me the child should be taught to obey, at once without regard to other matters," persisted Mrs. Jewel.

"Precisely in the same way you would execute the favors asked of you by husband or friends, no matter what you happen to be doing when the request was made?" queried Mrs. Rolf.

"Why—no—not exactly," said Mrs. Jewel, hesitatingly, "but children are different from other people," she added.

"Yes, different in size, and greater sensibilities."

"Don't you think a child should be taught it is their duty to mind their elders, even if it does call them from play?"

"Certainly, just as I expect to wait on my aged grandparents. We all know how much pleasanter the duty becomes if our elders are considerate in their demands, and are not always choosing the most inopportune times to call us from our work."

"But a child has no work, it is only play, and they should not be led to think that important—there's where I think that your theory is weak."

"I see you believe a child should be almost an automaton. Right about face—march! the order of the day."

"Yes, if you must put it that way, if you give a child their own time once, I don't see as they should be blamed if they take it next time," consented Mrs. Jewel reluctantly, feeling the ground was being taken from under her.

"I think I understand now your point of argument. You think by allowing the liberty I did with regard to getting the thread, Nellie should not be blamed if the next time she is asked to run an errand, perhaps in a hurry, she loiters. I will give my view of this matter. I don't wish my child to mind me, simply because I can force her to, neither do I wish to make obedience more unpleasant than necessary, and as to training up to a 'sense of duty,' its the last thing I shall attempt—"

"You don't believe in teaching them obedience as a duty?" interrupted Mrs. Jewel, surprised.

"No, I don't," answered Mrs. Rolf.

"What in the name of common sense do you expect to do?"

"Teach them mutual help should be the chief aim of every one. Oh, I'm not crazy yet, Carrie, and I'm not intending to be governed by children, nor inculcate selfishness in them. I think parents and grown people generally are, as a rule, inconsiderate, not to say tyrannical, in their demands on children. Play, as we call it is of great importance to them oftentimes. The completion of that house was of as much moment to Nellie as the finishing of this dress is to us. The constant and needless interruption of a child's play is disastrous—it makes them uneasy. Too great continuity is seldom a marked fault in a child, they are prone to go from one project to another, finishing nothing. I would inconvenience myself a little before I would disturb a child contentedly playing. Nellie did not care to play in her corner after she once left her work.

The child whose mother is constantly calling it from play, soon learns to avoid being within ear shot of her—"

"That must be the trouble with Mr. South's boys," interrupted Mrs. Jewel.

"I'm not making any personal applications, only telling my views. Again, such a course teaches oppression and intolerance, the big boy will bully the smaller one, the younger sister is a slave to the older, and so on."

"You make a strong case. I never looked at the matter in that light," said Mrs. Jewel.

"Very few ever think of it. I should not have hesitated to have called Nellie from her play had I needed the thread at once. I think she would have obeyed immediately, but 'her house' would not have held any further charm for her."

"Your position seems tenable, but I don't attach so much importance to mere child's play; the other matters are, of course, important," Mrs. Jewel allowed.

"I don't attach much importance to that game of tennis, we were playing at your house yesterday, but I should have rebelled, if Uncle Daniel had insisted on my leaving it to hunt up a paper he would not need until next month, retorted Mrs. Rolf.

"Beaten! I give up," cried Mrs. Jewel.

"I feel deeply on this subject, and wish my children to be affectionate, obedient, to feel it a cross for me to interfere with their plans. If it becomes necessary, I insist on prompt, cheerful obedience. You remember how willingly Ralph left his ball game the other day, a cross to any boy?"

"Yes, and I remember thinking at the time, he was one out of a thousand to go so willingly," answered Mrs. Jewel.

"Ralph knew I disliked to call him from his game, but he realized the necessity, for I explained it to him when I called him, feeling that in that case he had a right to a reason. Consideration for a child's play, ought not, if rightly shown, to make them slow to obey."

"No, it ought not," admitted Mrs. Jewel. "I shall always make my requests more thoughtfully after this. That a child has an undeniable right to some time for its play, I acknowledge."

"The failure to acknowledge this and accord it its right has made many a child combative, and caused many needless punishments in some families I believe," said Mrs. Rolf.

"I think so too. Oh, for the wisdom of Solomon."

"And the loving kindness of Christ," added Mrs. Rolf.

"But here comes 'Nellie,' with papa to exhibit her house, and we must adjourn sine die," said Mrs. Jewel, gathering up her work preparing to leave.—Sel.

TO THE PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert of prayer for August 16th. Memory text, Doc. Cov. Sect 117, par. 12. Lest all may not have a copy at hand, I will here insert the text.

"Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith."

Subjects for prayer,—missions, missionaries and their families. ELEANOR.

HOPEVILLE, Proton, Ont., July 10th.

Dear Sisters:—I would like to tell you an incident that has taught me a lesson; and as the word of God teaches that he that is warned should warn his neighbor, I wish to give you the benefit of it also. It is about the "law of tithing." When I obeyed the first principles of the gospel I did not believe in tithing. I could not say it was false, but simply I did not know. At that time I intended that if ever I should have anything to tithe, I would lay the matter before God myself, and follow the instructions I received; for if it was an invention of man for a money grab, I was determined never to obey it. But after many doubts and much reading and controversy with both Saints and Sectarians about it, I became a firm believer in it, and I resolved that if ever God should bless me with a portion of this world's goods, however small it might be, I would faithfully obey his law governing such things. I would oft-times picture to myself how happy I would be if ever I was able to show the Lord my faith in this part of his gospel by my works. But for now, my wants were provided for by my parents; and all the money I ever had was a little pocket money now and then, and what I liked to save by the sacrifice of things they wished to give me.

On the second night of last April I dreamed the following dream, which convinced me of my duty in this matter. I dreamed that a man came into the room holding in his hand a long, keen-bladed knife, with which he rushed at me and wounded me so badly that I knew I must bleed to death. I had very little pain, but seemed to be sinking gradually through loss of blood. I then felt I must die; but I was neither glad nor sorry for I thought, "though my hopes for the future of this life must perish, so also shall my trials." And I was sure I would get into the Kingdom of heaven, for I had received the Holy Ghost through obedience to the gospel and I knew I had not sinned against it. But I thought I would like to know how much glory I would have when I got there. I therefore began to examine my past life, that I might form an idea of what I might expect. Three thoughts arose clearly before me; they were, 1st, "I had not been as faithful as I might have been, but there was no use regretting this now." 2nd, "I had not been so kind as I ought to have been, but it was too late now." 3d, "I had had a dollar; and though I had given it to an elder of the church yet I had not paid my tithing on it, and now must I enter into the presence of God with this law forever unobeyed." I almost shuddered at the thought, and arose quickly while my life seemed to be ebbing low, and borrowed ten cents from my brother, and paid my tithing on that dollar.

When I awoke I thought over that dream, and being convinced that it was from God, I obeyed the instruction and borrowed ten cents from my brother, who instead of lending gave it to me, which I laid away for tithing. And after all my good resolutions, I had a little struggle with pride over the matter, for I thought, "How can I send my name to the bishop's agent with ten cents tithing attached to it; it is so little." Then I said, "I can sign, A sister;" but why? Was it through humility? No! but a lack of it. For why should I be ashamed when it was all the Lord required of me?

Thank you, dear sister Jordan, for your words of cheer, and also for your testimony. It made me glad to know that the Spirit of God was not withheld from his Saints on that occasion. Since then I am feeling much better and have been blessed in many ways, but am still in need of the prayers of the faithful, for I am weak in active faith and my firmness in keeping the commands of Christ is not as great as it ought to be. And I have been shown twice that I shall only be spared through faithfulness and by overcoming in prayer.

With love and gratitude I am your sister, MAGGIE CAMPBELL.

WILTENBURG, Wis., July 23d.

Dear Sister Frances:—We live in Wisconsin, and are the only family of Saints living around. The Herald is all the preacher we have. I have three little children at home now, and it is my desire to raise them in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. We expect to sell our place and go where there is a branch of the church. We sent for and have just received the pictures of the two martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum. They are beautiful pictures and we are well pleased with them. Any one wishing to, can get them by sending to Bro. Devore, in Ohio. It is my desire to do unto others as I would have others do unto me. Just such measure as we meet out to others shall be measured to us again. Pray for us, that we may live right in the sight of the Lord.

Your sister in Christ,
ANN REW.

St. Louis, July 21st.

Sr. M. Walker:—I suggest that a "Sunday School Superintendents' and teachers' Union" would be a good thing. It would be composed of all the superintendents and teachers of Sunday Schools in the entire church. The officers of the "Union" would be a president, secretary and treasurer; also an executive committee to be composed of one member of the "Union" in each district of the church; or, if such a committee would be unwieldly because too large, then composed of one member of the "Union" in each state, and one member each in Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Australia, England and, perhaps, Wales. It might be found necessary to have two members of this committee in such a state as Iowa; and perhaps two in England. The duty of this committee would be to exercise general supervision over the schools in selection of approved books of all kinds; uniform exercises conformable to the teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon and Holy Scriptures, &c. Also to see that each school was supplied with competent teachers; and to encourage members of the church, who are qualified, to take hold of Sunday School work; and assist in teaching, etc.

The "Union" could have an annual meeting at the General Conference, where those members of it who attended conference could conduct the annual meeting, the others reporting by letter. This would bring all the teachers and superintendents of the church into communication. They would learn each others' modes of teaching and so render mutual aid.

This is a rough sketch. I merely mention it. It has happened that after a branch had elected a superintendent able to do his or her part in the school, not enough of the members of the branch took sufficient interest in the school to supply it with competent teachers, and I have known the infant class of a Sunday School of the church taught from a common spelling book. Here, again, is an opportunity for the sisters to aid the work of Christ.

Your brother in the gospel,

JOHN S. PARRISH.

GAGETOWN, July 9th.

Dear Sisters:—I think Sr. Eleanor's plan of forming a Prayer League is a good one. For some time I felt the need of having a set time to go in secret prayer to our heavenly Father for strength and guidance.

"Let us shake off the coals from our garments,
And arise in the strength of the Lord."

If we will do these things we will succeed.

I see a great responsibility resting upon me in the training of my children. I have three with me and two are laid away to rest. My oldest one is in the church, thanks to my heavenly Father; the other two are little ones. Dear sisters, I pray God may bless and strengthen each one of us, that we may walk uprightly before him, and not be a stumbling-block to our children or any one else. May he help us that we teach our own the way of truth and righteousness; and that as they grow in years, they may grow in wisdom and knowledge of our Lord and Savior, that they may not rise up in judgment and condemn us for not teaching them the way of truth. I pray the time may soon come when the Saints of the Most High God will all awake to a sense of their duty, and turn unto the Lord and serve him with full purpose of heart; for we will all be blessed in so doing. I rejoice in this glorious gospel, knowing it to be of God. Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion, I am your sister in Christ,

DELARIA BATES.

Correspondence.

PAWNEE, Mo, July 30th.

Editors Herald:—We are not making very rapid progress in the divine life, yet we are at peace with ourselves and our neighbors and the spirit of unity prevails in our counsels. The branch numbers about sixty members and meets every Sunday for worship. We also have a Sunday-school that is doing good work. I have been preaching this spring and summer in the townships of Hamilton, Union, and Colfax. As a rule have had fair congregations. At Mt. Gilead in Union Township I held four meetings in the Disciple church. I left one family there believing, but as soon as this was discovered the church operated against me, consequently I quit holding meetings. We still propose to look after those that are interested in the gospel in Colfax. A good interest was manifested and I promised to return the second Sunday in August. At other points we have received invitations to come and preach. At the Harrington school-house in Hamilton township I had quite a battle with a Campbellite elder, he getting so excited in the contest that he violated the law of the land. I do not see any good reason why a good work can not be accomplished throughout this country, but it will take a persistent effort on the part of the elders of Israel. Realizing the fact that I will have to answer to Christ for my stewardship, I will seek to advance his glory among men to the best of my ability, and for the spread of the everlasting gospel I shall ever work and pray.

In bonds,

I. P. BAGGERLY.

DEER LODGE, Mont., July 28th.

Elder W. W. Blair:—I have just returned from a short mission in eastern Oregon, where I had a pleasant, and I trust a profitable time with Saints and friends. I was pleased to find that my humble efforts of years ago at that place had not passed away from the minds of the people, and a slight fanning kindled anew the gospel fire in many hearts. I was called away from there rather hurriedly by learning that the small-pox was in Deer Lodge, and that my family had a good chance to get infected with it, and though I did not believe that my little ones would take it, nor do I yet believe they will, I knew their anxiety was very great and that it was very necessary for me to be with them. While in eastern Oregon I baptized five, most excellent people, and blessed seven children, and organized a branch with Bro. Newton Fields president.

I wrote for Bro. Holt to come over at once, for I felt that the work should be kept moving. There is a good work to be done there, and I feel now that brother Holt is the man to do it.

It was a source of great comfort to me to meet Bro. Fields and sister Shelly, and others that I had the honor to lead into the waters of baptism nearly a quarter of a century ago; and to find them firmly fixed, rooted and grounded in the truth. They have walked through much darkness, but in their souls has burned the lamp of Christ, "and they have been able to endure as seeing Him who is invisible." May the Lord continue to hold such that no power may pluck them out of His hand. Calls for preaching are multiplying all around us. O, that the Lord of the harvest would reinforce the laborers.

NORMAN, Neb., July 21st.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—We (few in number) are trying to do the best we can in spreading the gospel and impart thereof to our fellow citizens, as it is the dearest and grandest that we know of. Neither the riches nor pleasures of this world are to compare with it. We are having a good Sunday School, have kept it up for two years, and there seems to be more interest in it this year than before; hope some of the children will grow up in the gospel. The old folks seem to be too much prejudiced against us to accept the doctrine; still they can not deny but what it is Scriptural. Bro. Moldrop is trying to preach in our School-house every Sunday afternoon, to those that want to come and hear.

Yours,

S. K. SORENSEN.

PARIS, Tenn., July 24th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—The work is onward here and the cries for preaching more than Bro. Thomas and myself can fill at this time. Bro. J. H. Adair is doing what he can to help us spread the truth and we hope that Bro. W. H. Griffin will soon be released from his affliction that he may go forth and do valiant battle for the Master. We are expecting our missionary in charge, J. W. Gillen, to soon put in his appearance, and with this corps of officers and the efficient co-operation and prayers of the Saints to do acceptable and valiant battle for the Master in spreading the gospel and building up the kingdom in these last days, that when our glorious Captain shall appear that we also may appear with crowns of victory, and be permitted to receive an inheritance in that kingdom that he is preparing for all them that love his appearing. Our district conference closed the twenty-second. We are still having services, and one is to be baptized this evening. I remain your co-laborer in gospel bonds,

P. B. SEATON.

Reger Mineral Spring,

LINEVILLE, Iowa, July 27th.

Dear Herald:—After so long a time I am, thank God, once more able to be in the field and do something, though it may be but little, in the Master's cause. I left home last Saturday and spent Sunday with the Saints and friends of the Little River branch. At eleven a. m. I spoke to a small, tired, and rather sleepy congregation at the Moffett School-house. At eight p. m., I spoke with little liberty to a full house, in the Pleasanton School-house. Arrived here (three miles south-west of Lineville), on Tuesday evening, and have appointments out for next Sunday, at the New Zion and Hickory School-houses. One week from Sunday, (August 5th), I am to hold forth here, at the spring, and in the open air, in one of "God's first temples," if the weather will permit. I pray for sufficient strength to fill these appointments to the glory of God and the salvation of the honest in heart.

There are a number of guests here, most of them invalids, drinking the water for the purpose of regaining their health. Nearly all who have given it a fair trial, testify that they have been benefitted. It is interesting, and sometimes instructive, to listen to the conversation among these guests on the subjects of politics and religion. I will pen one or two items which may be of interest to the readers of the Herald.

1st. Mr. W. K. Johnson, of Princeton, Missouri, is a member of the "Christian Union" church. He is the man, so he says, who was instrumental in getting Mrs. Lake, who is well known throughout this region of country as a revivalist and holiness preacher, ordained into the ministry of the church to which he belongs. Mrs. Lake's father was a Baptist minister. Mr. Johnson knew him before Mrs. Lake was born, but coming in contact with the Latter Day Saints of the first organization, he changed his mind on the subject of religion, and not having the courage to avow his new convictions as a Latter Day Saint, he started a new Baptist church, in Schuyler county, Illinois, under the name of the "Separate Baptists."

2d. Yesterday evening they were talking on politics. Mr. McClanahan, from Corydon, Iowa, was apologizing for the new plank in the Republican party by informing us that it originated with the convention of the W. C. T. U. We suggested that the stated object of the W. C. T. U. was very different from that stated by the Republican party at their convention. To this he replied, "Yes; but the Republican party was in a position that it dare not commit itself against whiskey and tobacco as did the W. C. T. U!" He said history proved that political parties do not purify themselves when they become corrupt. "Then," I suggested, "a new party will have to bring about needed reform." "Yes." The conversation proceeded, but before we were through, Mr. M., who, by the way, seems to be a very nice and intelligent man, said he was strongly in favor of prohibition, but did not think he would vote that ticket yet. Did not want to waste his vote, nor allow the Democrats to elect their candidates! How does such logic as this strike the readers of the Herald? Let the Saints see the follies and sins of the age, and "come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins," etc. Strive in a quiet, humble, careful way, to find the right, and when you feel assured that you have found it, stand by it "though the heavens fall." In all our labors, we should strive to keep the spirit of the gospel, not the spirit of politics, and take an independent stand for God, our country, our homes, our wives, brothers and sisters and children.

Yours in the "one faith,"

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

CARTHAGE, Mo., July 26th.

Dear Herald:—After reading the letter of Bro. A. W. Thompson, in Herald number 19, I concluded to send abroad that which I know of Chariton county, having been a resident of this state for thirteen years, three of which I was in that county. I found it to be one of the best producing counties in the state. But for reasons not known to me the land has not advanced with her neighboring counties. There are a number of streams in the county, Grand river and Yellow creek, both having their sources in Iowa, Chariton river and Mussel fork that furnishes power for two good flouring mills. Each stream has a large bottom, from three to six miles wide, part of which is prairie. Besides these there is the Missouri river bottom which in this part is a sandy soil; so that the farmers can plow shortly after a rain. Some of these bottom lands can be bought very cheap, especially the gumbo, which, when tile-drained, is the best of land. The upland is prairie and timber, both of which are very productive.

Coal can be found in most parts of the country, it crops out at many places, and its thickness is from sixteen to eighteen inches, and has fire-clay under and soap-stone roof. There are two drain-tile factories in the south-west part of the county. There are splendid openings for drain-tile manufacturing in this and Carroll counties. Water, of good quality, can be found in most places, in from twenty to sixty feet.

Its railroad facilities are good. The Wabash, running to St. Louis, Kansas City, and Council Bluffs, makes only one change necessary to reach Lamoni. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe gives a direct line to Chicago, also the Burlington and Quincy. Since the last two roads were built the country is filling up fast.

Any one wishing to go to the west part of the county would do well to call on Mr. John Kreider, four and a half miles south of Mendon, five miles east of Triplett, and eight miles north of Brunswick, a gentleman who is willing to aid, and will counsel honestly.

This country has not suffered with droughts like its neighbors for its geographical location gives it advantage. And to me it has been a healthy place—more so than Jasper county.

Yours in Christ,

A. H. HERKE.

DAWSON, Iowa, July 28th.

Dear Herald:—My testimony to this work is that I know that it is of God, and that the Father does look after the saints as a parent looks after his children. I was baptized one year ago last April, and many are the blessings and testimonies that I have received. I also have had many dark hours, but I am led to say,

"Though dark my path and hard my lot,
May I be still and murmur not,
But breathe the prayer divinely taught,
Thy will be done."

I desire the prayers of all the saints that I may be able to overcome self. We have had a very hard time here with persecution, all from professing christians, but by the well aimed shots of Brn. Brand and Bozarth, and the tenacity with which Bro. Thompson sticks to the word and the testimony, it has in a great measure caused them to take a back seat, for which I thank our Heavenly Father, and praying that he may continue to bless, I remain,

Your Bro. in truth,

WM. JOHNSON.

EUREKA, Cal., July 24th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been here since the 6th of this month, doing all I can under the circumstances. The people in California do not rush after the gospel, as you can bear witness. I have no more calls than I can fill, nor do the people ask me to preach in their school-houses, or churches, as I see is the case in the east. Well, I am glad to hear of it, as we have always had to seek diligently for places to preach in on this coast, and pay for them in the bargain. We hardly ever fail to write our successes in glowing colors. Well, this is very natural, as we all like to see our names in print; but to write of our pulpit failures and see them in print over our names would not be very flattering, as there are but few of us but what like to be flattered. Yet flattery is and has been one of the most dangerous things our elders have had to deal with in the past, and will be in the future. It has caused the destruction of some of the ablest representatives of the latter day work. When I examine myself carefully and honestly, the verdict comes home to me, "Haws, you are a failure." I was made to realize it very vividly on last Wednesday evening, when I stood up to preach, and Haws was left to himself. I perspired freely, spoke loudly, quoted some scripture that I knew by heart, and tried to make the best showing I could, but it seemed that every word came back and hit me in the face. I was made to realize the command of God, "Two by two, let them be sent." I could not stop to pray, so I had to sweat it out, and this was not the first time; but it is the first time I have written to the Herald about my failures. I have thought sometimes that many of my fellow laborers in the ministry have made failures as well as myself. Come to the front, old war-rriors, and tell the youngsters of your failures, and by that means teach them that they must depend upon the Lord, and be humble, and that no man can preach the gospel by his own wisdom. Well, I have preached twice since with very good liberty, and I feel encouraged. We succeeded in getting the Seventh-day Advent church, for which I am very thankful. We pay them one dollar and twenty-five cents per night for it. I expect to remain here till about the first of August. There is very little interest, comparatively few coming out to hear. I got an article in the Humboldt Times, a defence of our position. My health is about as usual, and my faith has not failed in this latter day work. I want to continue faithful, "But he that thinketh he standeth, let him take heed lest he fall." If my faith should fail, I pray God that he will leave me wisdom enough to step down and out nam, and to not make a fool of myself by commencing to find fault with you, and with everybody but myself, who will be the only one to blame.

Your brother,

A. HAWS.

VICTOR, Montana, July 26th.

Dear Herald:—I must send you my love and thanks for the pleasure you bring me each week. You are the only preacher we have, and we could never do without you. We are still striving to do the will of the Master, and all we can for the upbuilding of this glorious and good work. I know it is the work of God, and it is my desire to do his will at all times. Dear Saints, we should strive to lay up treasures in heaven, and walk in that straight and narrow path that leadeth to life everlasting.

I don't think that there ever has been one of our Elders preaching in this valley. Should one pass this way, please stop and you will find a welcome home with us. There are about ten members here. We would like very much to have a branch organized. I should like to tell the Saints that I have received a photograph of the Two Martyrs, and I am well pleased with them. I think all who would send for them would be well satisfied. Send to Bro. Devore for them.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHRISTINA SEARS.

FAIRBURY, Neb., July 30th.

Bro. Dancer:—This beautiful morning brings to my mind a desire to write you some news from our town. Fairbury is getting to be quite a city. There are four churches, over thirty-five hundred inhabitants and but three Latter Day Saints. Bro. Hiram Smith came here on the 9th and departed on the 18th of July. He preached three nights in the Christian church, but only two members were present the first night. None came after that. There were few attended the church the rest of the time, so we had meeting in the park. Over a hundred were present most every night. He proved the Book of Mormon to be true, hence old Satan was aroused to the extent that, on the last night after we left the Park, a shower of eggs greeted us. Bro. Johnson was hit with one, and a lady was struck on the arm, but the rest of us escaped. Most every one condemned such actions. It was quite a treat to us to hear the truth preached. Bro. Smith, if you see this, remember we are holding the fort with none to molest or make us afraid. Those that threw those eggs said as long as you stuck to the Bible they would let you alone, but when you commend on the Book of Mormon, you deserve to be egged. So you know why you was egged. We want to have meetings again this fall, before it is too cold to use the Park. I think there are some that will join us after awhile, as several are interested. The Herald is our preacher. Only once in a great while do we get to hear preaching done of our own faith. I want Autumn Leaves for my children. I may write again. I have seven children, and it takes most of my time in caring for them.

MRS. ELLA MYERS.

WOODFORD, Cal., July 26th.

Editors Herald:—I have had the pleasure this day of leading five persons into the waters of baptism. A good work might be done here by a few months constant labor, but already fault-finders are pouring in complaints, because I am not elsewhere attending to that which their interpretation of duty places upon me. Oh that the Lord would send more laborers into his vineyard! How sad to see souls groping in darkness in want of a faithful adviser.

27th. One more baptized to-day.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

BANDERA, Texas, July 27th.

Dear Herald:—Our reunion, held near Medina City, was a success. The average attendance was about one hundred. The preaching was done by Brn. H. L. Thompson, J. A. Currie, Sen., and J. A. Currie, Jr., and the writer. Much prejudice was removed and all had a pleasant time. The good Lord blessed us with his Spirit in power. Such prayer-meetings were never enjoyed here before. Four were baptized during the meeting, L. L. Wight, son of apostle Lyman Wight, of old, also T. J. Sheppard. The other two were Nora Wight and Addie McWhorter. The meeting began on the 16th of June and lasted until the 24th. On Saturday, the 23d, we organized a district to be known as the Western district of Texas; J. A. Currie Jr., president, O. D. Johnson, secretary and Bishop's agent. A more correct account of this will be given in the near future. Nine have obeyed since the reunion, and more are near the kingdom. On July 3d Bro. L. L. Wight, his wife and myself, started enroute for the Oakwood branch, some fifteen miles south of San Antonio. We arrived there on the 7th inst., and began meetings the same day, and continued over the 15th. Had a joyful time, and all went on nicely. On the 10th I bade them good bye and came to San Antonio. Spoke several times there, leaving all feeling well, and some near the kingdom. I returned to Medina City on the 19th, and on the 22d, at 11 a. m., spoke to the Saints and friends on church government. At 2 p. m., administered the Lord's Supper, ordained L. L. Wight to the office of elder; and T. J. Sheppard, priest, the Spirit bearing witness. We had a good time. It makes my heart rejoice to see the good work moving on so well. Bro. Currie and I begin meetings to-night at Pipe Creek, some ten miles from here. May God bless us is my prayer. It is very dry and hot here. Vegetation is drying up fast. Crops are good; health fair. Measles have been raging here for some time, and some few have died. On the night of the 23d instant the town of Bandera was called to mourn the loss of their sheriff, Mr. Hamilton. He was a man loved by all. He kindly let me have the Court House to preach in when I wished it. He is now in the hands of a just God who will reward every man according to his work. With the greatest desire for the spread of truth, I am, as ever, yours in bonds.

I. N. ROBERTS.

McFALL, Mo., July 29th.

Dear Herald:—With pleasure I address you. You are faithful in making your weekly visits, which cheers and encourages us amidst the turmoils of life. I sometimes feel as though I'd like to give something in return, but alas! my thoughts are so scattered that it seems almost impossible to form them aright to be of any use to your readers. I do rejoice in the gospel of Jesus Christ and am thankful that it was made known to me while I was trusting in the great holiness movement, for this reason, that it enables me to sympathize and explain to that people the way of life more perfectly. I have given the tract on baptism to some to read, praying God to remove the blindness from their eyes.

A week ago we were visited by Elder J. A. Robinson. He delivered three rousing sermons which filled our starved souls to the brim, and left food to be digested. There were not very many out Sunday, at 11 o'clock, it being the first appointment and was not well circulated. Sunday evening a good audience was out, and on Monday evening he was constrained to stay and preach. The house was full. Words fail to express the grandeur of the sermon delivered. Men sat with riveted eyes upon him. Another sat bent forward over another's chair, with mouth expanded trying to grasp every word. A light flitted into the room, nearly causing my eyes to dance out of their sockets. Surely it was a foretaste of heaven to our hungry souls. Many remarks were made expressing a desire for him to stay longer. One said, "I could sit and listen a whole week;" others "That's what I believe." I do believe much good was done for the cause. Come again, Bro. Robinson.

Yours, in hope of eternal life

SISTER JENNIE.

CLAY CENTER, Kansas July 26th.

Bro. Dancer:—Enclosed find four dollars for the Herald and Autumn Leaves. . . . We are getting along first-rate. I am section foreman here and have been since last November. The corn crops are looking splendid, and small grain is all harvested. Plenty of rain. We are just as strong in the faith as we were in the beginning. I must have the Herald and can't get along without it.

Yours in the faith,

H. C. GARDNER.

WEIR, Neb., July 20th.

Bro. Blair:—Inasmuch as many of the Saints are setting forth their testimony of the gospel restored in these last times, I give part of mine, for I know it is true. I received this not of men, neither was I taught it but by the Holy Ghost, in visions and dreams and have been healed by the administration of the elders and the prayer of faith. I have had good evidences of the truth. To God be all the praise.

Yours in the one faith,

W. D. CLARK.

ANDOVER, N. Y., July 29th.

Editors Herald:—I left the young brethren Whitehead's in Oswego county where I last wrote you, in September. Called at Bro. Seelye's in Wayne county, done some carpenter work for him and remained with them about a month. He and sister Seelye, though both well advanced in years, still love the cause of Zion, and their hearts and interest are manifested in good deeds and cheer towards her progress and welfare. From Bro. Seelye's I went to Gaines, Orleans county, to the home of brethren Justus Minthorne and his son, George B. Minthorne, who was lately married to sister Alice Whitehead, heretofore mentioned in correspondence in Herald. They all love the Latter Day work and manifest a fervent desire for the advancement of the true gospel light to their surrounding neighbors and community.

They live in the noted apple and orchard region of York State where tens of thousands of barrels are shipped by way of canal and railroad yearly, to the various markets, both east and west. Truly Joseph's land is a choice land for the precious fruits of the earth.

I preached at the gathering of a few of the neighbors at the house of Bro. Minthorne upon two occasions in the evenings. I left there about the Middle of December and came to Obi, in Allegheny county, which is about a hundred miles or so south-west of Orleans county and near the borders of the line between Pennsylvania and York State. I passed the winter here, mostly at the house and home of Mr. Charles Childs and family. I found with them employment at labor sufficient to pay my way while with them, and found it quite an agreeable and genial place to stop. I worked at some job, and some by the day work at carpentering for some of the neighbors near by my place of stopping along this spring and summer, up to the 2nd of July when I left, and after stopping two nights at the home of sister Hyde, her son and family at Belmont, and one night at the home of Bro. Elba Childs at Wellsville, I arrived here on the fifth of the month.

Am now at the home of Mr. Freman Rogers, a son-in-law of our aged and worthy sister Dutcher, who lives with her grand-son and family, Mr. John Rogers, near by. Am doing some carpenter work for Mr. Rogers on his house. This is in the township of Greenwood, Steuben county, though only about four miles from Andover, Allegheny county, my postoffice address. Was at the home of Mr. Joseph and sister Dereemer, his wife, since out this way, a couple of weeks ago. Found her in quite feeble health. She was administered to while I was there, and was somewhat better when I came away. I try to hold up the gospel light in conversation with the people upon all suitable occasions, and quite a little interest is manifested by several to learn more concerning the work and true gospel plan. Autumn Leaves is taking well with the people and families of my acquaintance in this country. I have lent them out and have shown them to the folks and most all express a liking for its style, and its reading matter. I have obtained five subscribers for it since June. Two from members of the church, and three from non-members. I was back to Obi on the 21st and got one subscriber at Allentown, where I stopped with a family of my acquaintance over night on my way, by the name of Merritt. Also a subscription from Mr. Charles Childs of Obi, for the magazine, and one dollar from Mr. Brunell Childs for renewal on Zion's Hope. Mr. Wm. Merritt of Obi, who is a kind friend to the Saints brought me from his house to the station on my return from there the other day, and he told me he intended to make it so as to attend the next spring Annual Conference at St. Joseph, Missouri.

I loaned a young man at Obi the Voice of Warning in June, which he read with much interest. Then I lent him the Book of Mormon. When I was back there the other day, I called to get the book and he had it most read through and was well interested in its contents. His folks invited me to supper and were very kind. I will close for the present. I love the cause. May the Lord continue to bless all pertaining to the welfare of Zion and his Saints.

Yours in bonds,

C. G. LANPHEAR.

SYNOPSIS OF DEBATE.

A BRIEF outline of the McIntosh-Wilkinson debate, held at Grand Valley, Dufferin county, Ontario, February 16th to 24th, 1888, on the following propositions: 1. That the Bible teaches that a burial in water is the true and only mode of Christian Baptism. Mr. McIntosh affirms, Mr. Wilkinson denies. 2. That the infant children of believers are, by Divine appointment, proper subjects for Christian Baptism. Mr. Wilkinson affirms, Mr. McIntosh denies. 3. That Christian Baptism is for the remission of sins and ingrafting into Christ. Mr. McIntosh affirms, Mr. Wilkinson denies. Affirmative texts by McIntosh: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them."—Matt. 28: 18, 19. "He that believeth and is baptized."—Mark 16: 16. "Repent and be baptized."—Acts 2: 38. These and others were quoted to prove that baptism was to be administered, and that it was commanded; but these do not say how it was to be administered, nor what with. McIntosh then quoted: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." In the name, is by command of, or by the authority of, so that it was not with the Holy Ghost, therefore it must have been with something else. And as "fire," "water, and "the Holy Ghost," are the only elements mentioned in the Bible with which to baptize, it must have been either water or fire they were commanded to baptize with. He then showed that the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire were reserved for Jesus to give, and not for man, and this narrowed it down to water only. But as the command was to baptize, and nothing said as to how the water was to be applied, he referred to the idea that it must have been in some way with which the apostles were already familiar. And as McIntosh succeeded in getting the words "Christian baptism" into each proposition, he then went on to show that John's baptism was Christian baptism from the following texts: "There was a man sent from God;" "to prepare the way of the Lord;" "to make ready a people prepared for the Lord;" "the baptism of John; whence was it? of heaven or of men?" John's baptism was "the counsel of God;" by John's baptism Christ was manifest to Israel; John was "the porter;" he "opened the door;" Christ "entered by the door;" the door was not faith nor repentance; for Christ needed no repentance; and John only preached faith, repentance and baptism. Quoted several other passages to the same point. Then when Jesus said, "Go teach all nations baptizing them," the apostles knew that it referred to the baptism they had received by John, for he had prepared and made them ready for Christ. This limited their "baptizing" to water, and to John's kind of baptism.

But how was it administered? by sprinkling? pouring? or immersion? Elder McIntosh quoted Eph. 4: 5, as the "one baptism." This narrowed it down to either one of the three modes. Then he quoted Rom. 6: 4, Col. 2: 12, "buried in baptism," with texts to support, such as "planted in the likeness of his death;" "born of water;" the "flood" a figure; the "ark" a figure; (those in the ark were buried, or entirely concealed in it); the "earth" at creation was entirely "buried," and God said "let the dry land appear;" (first birth of the earth); then the "flood" "buried" the earth a second time, hence the second birth. McIntosh used figures, supported by circumstantial texts, such as "much water," went "down into the water," "came up out of water," &c. Wilkinson, seeing the position McIntosh had taken, left the question of water, totally, and set up the usual claim that the Holy Ghost was the one only baptism, and that it was not a burial, but "shed abroad," "sat upon," "poured out," "I will put my spirit upon you," "in you," "with-in you," "my spirit shall dwell among you," &c., &c. Finally he added, that the application of water was not baptism, but a symbol of the true baptism of the Spirit. He said that a symbol must represent in miniature the thing represented; therefore the water was to "sit upon," be "poured out," (not poured on) "poured upon," "put within." Finally Job says "the Spirit of God is in my nostrils," therefore the water should be applied in all these ways—and in the nostrils, too. This was too much.

McIntosh, used the Methodist "Discipline," and Presbyterian "shorter catechism" with great effect, for it was the combined effort of these two bodies which brought the great champion debater of Methodism in Ontario—a minute man—to demolish the Latter Day Saints. He thought it best to give it to both at the same time.

The disputants were not bound to standards, Wilkinson absolutely refusing to be bound to any translation, or interpretation of the Bible, and would not hear of other authorities being excluded. He begged another night on the two first propositions, which were granted cheerfully, and were made to tell against him by drawing the attention of the audience to the fact that he was perfectly satisfied in his own mind he had not made a point in the two nights and needed a third, which, however, failed to produce any new light, only repetitions, side issues, inferences, etc., thereby totally working against himself.

On the second proposition, his stronghold was that circumcision under the law was the type of baptism under the gospel, so far as the subjects were concerned. McIntosh argued against this, that circumcision was the seal of a covenant made between God and Abraham. But it could not be administered to females; but baptism can. Circumcision could be administered in one way only, but Wilkinson could administer water baptism in three ways, and the Holy Ghost in dozens of others. McIntosh held also that little children needed no baptism, for "of such is the kingdom of heaven;" they should be blessed by prayer and the laying on of hands, instead of sprinkling, pouring, &c; also that "where no law is, there is no transgression;" children know no law. Sin is the transgression of law; children transgress no law. Baptism was for remission of sins; children have none to remit, having been redeemed while in childhood by the blood of Christ, for the blood was for remission of sins, and that each of the three witnesses on earth agree in one. And his final argument was, that he who does one point of the law is debtor to do the whole law—sprinkling was a part of the law. But the ordinances of the law were "nailed to the cross," "taken out of the way," &c.; hence, away went sprinkling. Wilkinson argued that there were diverse baptisms under the law, (Mark 7, Heb. 9, &c.) McIntosh admitted that sprinkling, pouring, washing, immersion, &c., were all different modes of cleansing under the law, and then showed that, the priesthood being changed, the law also, was changed, (Heb. 7), and therefore the divers cleansings under the law were changed for the "one baptism," the same as the divers sheddings of blood were changed for the one blood of Jesus, so that instead of blood of bulls, blood of lambs, blood of goats, blood of doves, we have the one blood only. Hence, instead of divers baptisms by pouring, sprinkling, washing, or immersions, we now have the "one baptism" by being "buried in baptism." Col. 2: 12. This closed the second proposition.

On the third proposition, Wilkinson's prime text was 1 Cor. 12: 13: "By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body"—not by the water. McIntosh showed it was by the Spirit that we have faith; by the Spirit we repent; by the Spirit strengthening and enlightening us we come to baptism; hence, "by the Spirit we are all baptized into one body,"—not into hundreds of bodies—and that it does not say in the Spirit, nor with one Spirit, but by z. e., by the aid, light, assistance, of the one Spirit we are all baptized into "one body," and are ingrafted into Christ by baptism before we receive the Holy Ghost. Gal. 4:5, 6; here we are sons, adopted by baptism, (Gal. 3:27-29), and "because we are sons he hath sent forth the Spirit;" also in John 15, "I am the vine; ye are the branches. Abide in me;"—they were already in him, and he desired them to "abide." How did they get in him? The baptism of the Holy Ghost was "not yet given," (John 7:39, with chapter 11 to 16. Jesus had to "go away" and "pray for the Holy Ghost to come." But before he went, and before the Spirit came he said, "abide in me;" therefore they were already in him. But how did they get in? (See Rom. 6:4; Gal. 3:27; Col. 2:12), by baptism in burial.

Moses took Aaron (the High Priest) to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation and washed him, (not his head, hands, and feet only, but "him"), then anointed him with oil before he (the High Priest, Aaron) could enter the door of the tabernacle.—Exodus 29:4-7. So Christ, the great High Priest, came to the door of the true tabernacle, built without hands, to John, and had to be baptized before he could enter; then he (Christ) was "anointed with the Holy Ghost" (on "coming up out of the water.") Here then is our example: The head grafted to the body, the body being the ones whom John had already baptized in the preparatory work, as the porch before the temple, yet part of the temple, and only one door to it.—Lev. 14:1. The earthen vessel was filled with water into which the blood of a dove was shed, mingling blood and water.—John 19:34; 1 John 5:6-9. Then the living bird, dipped (immersed) in the blood and water in the vessel, is set free, signifying remission of sins. Thus the type and anti-type exactly agree.

McIntosh then identified the gospel as preached by Christ as "the everlasting covenant" made with Abraham, Noah, Enoch, Adam, etc., in the following way: The gospel is of faith; Noah, Abraham, etc., had faith; the law was not of faith.

Noah was a preacher of righteousness; the law was not righteousness. True faith implies repentance. No repentance (only confession) was demanded under the law.

Baptism is a gospel ordinance; it was before the law. 1 Cor. 10:2.

Laying on hands is a gospel ordinance, and was before the law. Gen. 48:14.

Bread and wine in sacrament is of the gospel, and was before the law Gen. 14:18, 19.

Washing feet is a gospel ordinance, and was before the law. Gen. chapter 18.

Resurrection is a gospel principle, and was before the law. Job. chapters 14, 19.

Eternal judgment is a gospel principle, and was before the law. Jude 14, 15.

Saints' inheritance (Matt. 5:6) is of the gospel, and was before the law. Gen. 17:8. This promise was not of the law. Gal. 3:18.

"Where no law, is there is no transgression." Cain killed Abel and was punished; here is a law, but not the law. Rachel stole, and must have previously coveted. This was long before "the law," yet all these evils were known to be such long before "the law" was given. Therefore it was the gospel which they had, by which these things were known to be wrong. The gospel was preached to Abraham. Gal., chapter 3. Also to the children of Israel before the law. Heb. 4:1. They transgressed it and changed the ordinance. Isa. 24:6.

The law was added till the seed should come. (Christ). Gal., chapter 3. The gospel was then restored by him the same as before the law, hence it is called "the everlasting covenant."

Finally, God has punished men by their own lusts, and by their own gods. The Egyptians worshiped the Nile, the locust, the sun, the bull, (made shrines of silver and gold to commemorate the bull), and God turned all their gods into abomination to them, the Nile became blood, and they hated that god; the locusts came in swarms and disgusted them with that god; the louse, the sacred ibis, etc., plagued them or they died; the sun (to whom they erected a magnificent temple) became dark—so dark they could not kindle a fire; the sacred ox died, and all the first-born of every beast, etc. The children of Israel lusted for meat; they vomited up the quail-meat, and were punished by the very things they lusted after (worshiped). The Israelites committed folly with the captive women, and for their adultery 42,000 were slain; they lusted and were punished by the thing they verily worshiped. So, in the days of Noah the people refused baptism for the remission of sins and were punished by water, the very thing they refused. And to prove that baptism was preached to them by Noah, we are told by Peter that Noah was a preacher of righteousness. 2 Peter 2:5. And the gospel is "the righteousness of God." Rom. 1:16, 17. Therefore Noah preached faith, repentance, and baptism by immersion for remission of sins, "which doth also now save us." 1 Pet. 3:21. "Now save us" conveys the idea that it would then have saved them. But as they refused it, they were punished by the very thing they refused. And now as men are again breaking the same everlasting covenant, God's work will go right on—no stop—no turning back. Therefore God promised Noah he would no more destroy (baptize by immersion) the world by a flood, (as there is only "one baptism"), so they who now refuse the gospel will be destroyed by "the spirit of burning," the very thing they are refusing, by refusing the means by which they might receive it, so as to enable them to endure it; for they who refuse must be consumed by the Spirit. But they who repent, believe, are baptized by burial to signify a burial to sins and a resurrection "to newness of life," becoming engrafted into Christ, (the visible body), and as members of that body receive of his Spirit, will be enabled to endure the day of burning, as the three Hebrew children (types) in the fiery furnace. And as the destruction by flood of water once (and the fire on Sodom etc.) after are set forth as examples, therefore "repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," which will enable all to abide the day of his coming.

This is a very brief outline of the ideas and arguments, by figures and positive proofs, against which were offered only bold assertions, inferences, eloquence, logic, etc., but not one text of Scripture; and a great victory resulted for the truth, prejudice gave way, souls saved, and many will be baptized in the near future.

J. A. McINTOSH.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 3.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE SIEGE OF JOTAPATA.

IT was the stern policy of Rome, never to yield a conquest, and never to forgive an affront. When the first rapture of victory in the minds of the heroic men of Jerusalem had given place to reflection, they felt that the whole power of the Empire would be concentrated, if needful, to avenge the unpardonable insult of a defeat. The war must henceforth be a contest for existence; a contest between a small and almost unknown province, and the giant power that sat on the throne of the civilized world. But the Jews did not quail; they knew that failure must be utter and hopeless ruin; but they had embarked in the desperate voyage, and nerved themselves for its vigorous prosecution; on both sides the sword was out, and the scabbard was cast aside. The whole country was at once put into martial order; officers were chosen for the government of Jerusalem, and for the repair of its walls. Eleazar, though not without the opposition of a party, retained as before, the supreme direction of public affairs. Skillful and valiant generals were appointed to the command of the army; military governors were set over the various districts, and the most important strongholds. The frontier province of Galilee, which would first meet the iron storm of Roman vengeance, as it advanced from Syria, the military centre of the east, was confided to the care of Josephus, who added to the abilities of a consummate warrior the learning and accuracy of a historian, and to whom the world is indebted for the only detailed record of the interesting events of the Jewish war. Descended from a long line of priests, and connected through his mother with the royal blood of the Asmonean House, and of irreproachable reputation for integrity, this man had qualified himself by early study, by habitual temperance, and finally by travel in Italy, for the arduous duties which were now to devolve upon him, and in which he so ably acquitted himself. In the dissensions at Jerusalem he had at first been an advocate for peace, as foreseeing the hopelessness of war with Rome, but when it had actually blazed forth, he seemed to have yielded to that faction which he saw it would be perilous to any longer resist, and to have entered upon his government with a determination to defend his country to the utmost.

Uniting moderation with firmness, he sought to repress the lawlessness which he found prevailing, to cement the various selfish parties in the common bond of patriotism, and organize a system of government as well as of military defence. His own conduct, which he describes as free from tyranny and above corruption, soon endeared him to the people, and won their confidence; though with a fickleness common to all ages and countries, they were too ready to listen to the accusations of ambitious demagogues who envied Josephus his popularity. The most remarkable of these was John, of Gischala, a man who afterwards took a prominent part in the last terrible days of Jerusalem. His character is drawn by one who spares no pains to blacken it, who evidently mingles personal animosity with virtuous indignation; and as we have no other authority we must take the portrait as it is drawn; but must venture to suppose that the historian's partiality has omitted to discern some redeeming traits in the character of his adversary, and perhaps overlooked some failures of his own. Be this as it may, we are not writing the biography of either Josephus or John, and may therefore be excused from entering into their personal contentions, and from detailing the various ingenious stratagems by which they sought respectively to destroy each other, or to defend themselves.

The breathing space that followed the expulsion of the Romans from Judea was vigorously employed by Josephus in fortifying the cities in his jurisdiction. Thus in Lower Galilee he placed in a state of defence the strong town of Jotapata, Itabyrium on Mount Tabor, Joppa, Taricheæ, and Tiberius; in Upper Galilee the rock of Achabari, Seph, Jamnith, and other places, were strengthened and in the Gaulonitis the strong city, Gamala. He levied a force of more than 100,000 men whom he provided with arms, instructed in the Roman discipline, and diligently exercised in all the maneuvers of war, appointing officers over the various divisions in full complement after the Roman manner. Out of these he chose an army of 60,000 foot, and 250 horse; and having hired a band of mercenary troops to the number of 4,500 and selected a body-guard of 600 men for his own person, he awaited the approach of the Romans.

While the affairs of Galilee were thus vigorously administered by Josephus, the city of Jerusalem was not indifferent to the coming crisis. The fortifications were restored and strengthened in every part, and the streets rang from morning to night with the din of weapons forged upon the anvils of the armories, while the youths crowded to the gymnasia, to be trained in military exercises. "Yet the moderate sort," says Josephus, "were exceedingly sad; and a great many there were, who, out of the prospect they had of the calamities that were coming upon them, made great lamentations. There were also such omens observed as were understood to be forerunners of evils by such as loved peace, but were by those who kindled the war, interpreted so as to suit their own inclinations; and the very state of the city even before the Romans came against it, was that of a place doomed to destruction." Nor was the elation of the Jews upon the signal defeat of Cestius long suffered to remain without a check. In the first heat of their victory a large body of men had set out from Jerusalem with the design of besieging Ascalon, a strongly walled city on the sea-coast, occupied by a small Roman garrison, consisting of no more than a single troop of horse and a cohort of foot. The commander of the fort, however, was aware of the approach of the Jews, and placing his forces with great skill had no difficulty in beating off the undisciplined multitude with immense slaughter, 10,000 being left dead upon the field, including two of their leaders, while the loss of the Romans was inconsiderable. The fierce anger of the Jews, unsupported as it was by military skill and discipline, increased the slaughter, as they would rather die than give way; and the nature of the ground an unincumbered plain, afforded the best possible circumstances for the cavalry and heavy armed legionaries to fight to advantage. Yet were not the Jews so dispirited with the ill-success of their adventure but that they soon essayed another attempt on the same city, but though reinforced by good numbers, the result was no less unfortunate, and scarcely less sanguinary than before, for the garrison having sallied forth and formed an ambush, the inexperienced multitude fell into the snare and lost 8,000 men, while the discomfited remnant were there besieged in their turn. At length the Romans, not choosing to spend much time on so insignificant a place, set the tower on fire and burnt it to the ground. In the mean time the displeasing intelligence of the defeat and expulsion of the Roman prefect and his army, was conveyed to the Emperor Nero, who was then in Achaia, by two brothers of the Herodian race who had escaped from Jerusalem. These persons were sent at their own desire by Cestius, who instructed them to lay the blame of kindling the war upon Florus, to whom indeed it was most justly due. The sinister intelligence was received by Nero with affected contempt, but with real consternation which he could ill conceal. His solicitude for the recovery of the rebellious province was manifested by his selection of Vespasian, the most distinguished military commander in the empire, to carry on the war. Vespasian had acquired honor in Germany in the reign of Claudius, and had afterwards conquered Britain, and obtained triumphal honors. Subsequently he received two priestly offices within a short time, and was then advanced to the consulship, after which he was made Proconsul of Africa. At the time of the Jewish revolt, however, he was in banishment for having had the bad taste to fall asleep while Nero was singing to the lyre his own poetical performances; and it is no small proof of the importance with which the Emperor viewed the rebellion, that he repressed his personal resentment so far as not only to appoint his offending captain to the command, but to load him with encomiums and flattering compliments.

The experienced warrior acted with characteristic vigor and decision. Without a moment's delay he despatched his son Titus to Alexandria to bring with him the fifth and tenth legions, while he passed through Thrace into Syria, where he gathered under his command the Roman forces with a considerable number of auxiliaries from the neighboring kings. At Antioch the Roman general was met by Agrippa, who joined him with all his available forces, and accompanied him to Ptolemais. Here a deputation from Sepharis, the largest city of Galilee, and a place of great strength, waited on Vespasian, offering the allegiance of its inhabitants to the Romans, for that city had revolted against Josephus, and had received from Cestius a Roman garrison, of which they now requested a reinforcement. Vespasian acceded to their desire; and in consideration of the importance of this provincial metropolis, he sent 6,000 foot to garrison it, and 1,000 horse to encamp beneath its walls. In hope to retake the city which he himself had fortified, Josephus marched against it; but failing both to force the walls, and to kindle the patriotism of the inhabitants, his attempt had no other effect than that of irritating the Roman troops, and provoking them to waste the whole surrounding country with fire and sword. This they did without mercy, burning and pillaging the villages, driving off the cattle, murdering the able-bodied peasantry, and leading the weaker into slavery. Thus was Galilee, to use the words of the Jewish historian, "all over filled with fire and blood; nor was it exempted from any kind of misery or calamity;" and it is a painful remembrance that recurs to the Christian's mind, that this district, which first felt the keenness of the Roman's avenging sword, and (with the exception of Jerusalem itself) felt it most terribly, was the one which had been above all others the witness of the teachings, the labors and the mighty works of the Lord Jesus, yet had rejected him. (Matt. 11: 20-24). "Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not. Woe unto the Chorazin; woe unto the Bethsaida; for if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell; for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom it would have remained unto this day. But I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee."

Early in the Spring Titus arrived at Ptolemais with the two legions from Egypt; for his diligence had prompted him to make the voyage from Achaia to Alexandria even before the winter was over. He was soon followed by eighteen cohorts; five cohorts and a troop of horse joined the army from Cæsarea, and five troops came from Syria. The kings, Antiochus, Agrippa, and Sohemus contributed each a thousand archers and a thousand horse; and Malchus, the king of Arabia, supplied five thousand foot and one thousand horse.

The fifteenth legion had been brought thither by Vespasian, and the whole force now united under his command amounted to sixty thousand men, besides an immense number of servants who had been trained to military exercises, but who were not counted as regular troops.

While this mighty army lay at Ptolemais, preparing to open the campaign, Placidus, the tribune who commanded the garrison at Sepphoris had been ravaging the country of Galilee. Desirous of performing some signal exploit before the arrival of his general, he determined to attack the fortress of Jotapata, the strongest city in the province, so celebrated afterwards for the heroic defense which it made under Josephus in person. Built upon the summit of a precipitous rock, approachable only on the north, its walls on three sides looked down into a ravine so steep and profound that the eye could not reach the bottom. Lofty mountains encompassed it on every hand, so as to hide its situation from view, till the observer was close to it. The part of the city which was naturally more exposed to assault, Josephus had encompassed with a wall of great strength; but the Roman tribune hoped to be able to get possession of it by sudden surprise. The inhabitants of the stronghold, however, were aware of his intention, and sallying out with resistless courage, fell upon the invaders with such fury as to repel them with loss. A few weeks sufficed to put the main body of the Roman army in marching order, when Vespasian set out from Ptolemais at its head, and fell upon Galilee. The progress of the accoutred and disciplined host is minutely described by Josephus as it advanced in stern and regular array, but eager for the conflict.

Its approach had a dispiriting effect upon the army of Josephus, which was encamped at Garis not far from Sepphoris, so that many of his soldiers fled before the enemy was within sight; and the Jewish commander, finding himself too weak to engage the Roman forces, retired to the fortified city of Tiberias. The city of Gadara, situated not far from the southern extremity of the beautiful city of Tiberias, was the first victim of the Roman vengeance. Being feebly garrisoned it offered no resistance; yet submission availed it as little as valor, for with merciless cruelty the inhabitants were put to the sword and the town burnt; while a similar fate befell the helpless villages and hamlets around it.

The ill success of the expedition which Placidus had undertaken against Jotapata only whetted the desire of Vespasian to attempt the reduction of so strong a fortress. The road that led thither was but a mountain track, absolutely impassible for cavalry and with difficulty traversed by any but the hardy peasantry accustomed to the steep ascents and narrow ledges of a rocky country. A band of pioneers was, therefore, sent forward to level and open the road; but no sooner was this accomplished, than, before the army could take advantage of their labors, Josephus, with characteristic vigor and resolution, hasted from Tiberias, and entered the besieged city to conduct the defense in person.

On being informed by a spy, of the arrival of the Jewish General, Vespasian greatly rejoiced, counting that the most eminent and able of his adversaries was safely shut up in a cage; for the town he already considered as within his power. His first thought was to prevent the escape of so important a personage; so sending forward Placidus, the tribune, and Ebutius, a Decurian of eminent ability, with a thousand horsemen, he commanded them to invest the fortress with the utmost despatch. He himself followed with his whole army on the next day, and commenced this important siege on the twenty-fourth of the month Iyar, answering probably to the beginning of May. Approaching the city on the north side, where alone the nature of the acclivity permitted the advance of an army, the Roman pitched his camp on a hill about a mile distant, in full sight of the inhabitants, whom he hoped to awe into surrender by displaying an overwhelming force. Such, for a moment, was the effect produced; but when the Jews saw that the enemy proceeded to environ them with a triple belt of troops, and that there was no possibility of egress, their native courage revived, and even desperation nerved their hearts with the fiercest valor.

The next morning the assault began; but, the Jews apparently no less eager for the fight than the Romans, had determined to give them battle without the walls, and were already awaiting the attack. Vespasian, arraying against this valiant band of archers and slingers, himself led a body of footmen up a steep acclivity, which afforded an easy entrance into the city. But Josephus, ever vigilant, saw his approach; and suddenly sallying out with the whole remaining garrison, met the Romans, and by the impetuosity of his attack repulsed them from their vantage-ground. The battle, however, was well contested; the Jews fought with the heroism of despair; the Romans with the stubborn perseverance of men unwont to be conquered; their skill and discipline, also, counterbalanced the fiery ardor of the former.

At length the veil of night put an end to the contest, and the Romans drew off with their dead and wounded. To have repelled the assault of the Roman army, commonly supposed to be irresistible, seemed to the Jewish soldiery a great achievement. Inspired and full of hope, the next morning saw them again the assailants, and a still more desperate battle was maintained on the slope of the hill. The Romans, incensed that an enemy so despised should be able to hold them in check for a single day, fought with scarcely less fury than the Jews, but again with no better success. And thus for five successive days did the valiant little mountain garrison dispute with the whole force of Vespasian's mighty army the approach to their fortress.

At length the Roman General having called a council of war, consulted as to the worst effective mode of prosecuting the siege. It was decided to raise an embankment against that part of the wall that could be approached, and the whole army was accordingly employed in collecting materials for its foundation. The forests of the embosoming mountains fell before the axe, and the earth and stones from the vicinity were soon accumulated in vast quantities. The Jews looked on from the walls with dismay as the work proceeded, and continually showered down arrows and javelins on the workmen, who to protect themselves, wore a sort of hurdles or wattles of basket work, which they spread over their heads in a sloping direction. Under this defence the soldiers could labor in safety; nor could the huge stones which the garrison hurled down upon them, do more than startle them by their noise; for the elasticity of the green and tough branches with which the hurdles were made, yielded to the weight of stones, without breaking, and, rebounding, threw them off. In order more effectually to prevent the annoyance of these missiles, Vespasian ordered up his military engines, of which he had one hundred and sixty, some of which hurled against the battlements stones of a hundred pounds weight, with great force; others threw lances or arrows, or combustibles set on fire, so that the defenders could no longer stand upon the wall. With indomitable courage, however, they were no sooner driven from one resource, than they adopted another; and now they rushed forth in bands, tore away the protecting hurdles, slew the workmen, scattered the earth, and set fire to the timber; until Vespasian perceiving that the isolated manner in which the laborers worked, afforded an impunity to these attacks, ordered the parties to be united, and bringing up a part of the army as a defense, put an end to this impediment. Nor was Josephus idle while this great embankment was erecting; he watched it growing higher and higher, until, when completed, it towered up nearly to the original height of the city wall; but in the meantime he had diligently been adding to the defenses, until he had raised the walls to the height of twenty cubits. In order to effect this, he had stretched the raw hides of oxen on stout poles in front of the workmen, to receive the missiles which the engines were constantly discharging; by this ingenious contrivance their force was broken, the soft and yielding hide receiving in its tough concavity the stones and darts, and its wetness quenching the fiery arrows. When the new structure was carried to its height, the Jewish commander added to it battlements, and further strengthened it with towers, to the no small mortification of the besiegers. The building of this wall no less elated the Jews than it annoyed the Romans; they made fresh sallies every day, creeping out in small parties, plundering the troops, cutting of stragglers, and especially setting fire to the works and engines. At length Vespasian, finding his army dispirited by this petty and irritating warfare, gave orders that they should avoid these conflicts, determining to blockade the city, since it seemed impracticable to take it by assault, and hoping soon to starve it into surrender. The garrison, however, was abundantly supplied with provisions; water alone was a scarcity. There was no spring in the city, the inhabitants being dependent on rain water, which, falling copiously in the winter, was collected in pools and tanks. In summer a shower is scarcely known, and as it was now the month of May, there was no hope of recruiting the supply, which, from the addition of the garrison to the ordinary inhabitants, already began to run short.

The prudence of Josephus, who found it needful to distribute so valuable a commodity by measure, reminding the people continually of their want, had the effect usual in such cases, of increasing their desire for it, so that they seemed as if already reduced to extremities. Nor were the Romans ignorant of their necessity, for, from the heights that surrounded the city, they could observe the inhabitants daily crowding to the place of supply with their vessels, and easily conjecture the cause. To disappoint the expectations of the enemy, Josephus had recourse to one of those expedients which never present themselves to any but master minds. He ordered that a great many garments be steeped in water, and hung over the battlements, till the walls ran down with the moisture that dripped from them. The Romans were astounded, and at once concluded that such a waste of water could not indicate a condition of scarcity. The thought of starving the garrison, therefore, by blockade, was relinquished, and the former mode of proceeding resumed, of endeavoring to storm the walls; thus the stratagem was successful, for the Jews preferred the chances of stern warfare to the slow but certain horrors of famine and thirst. Some supplies were obtained from without the walls. In the ravine on the western side there was a sort of track which led down its precipitous sides, so narrow, rough and broken that it could scarcely be traversed except by persons familiar with it, and by them only with difficulty and hazard, so that it had escaped the notice of the besiegers. By means of this path Josephus opened a communication with his friends in the mountains, and obtained a seasonable supply of many necessities, for his messengers were instructed to pass through the valley only by night and to cover themselves with the woolly skins of sheep, so that by creeping along by the sentinels on all fours they might escape detection. After some time, however, this artifice was discovered, and guards were posted at the place of exit.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

Convened with the First Chicago Branch, No. 213 West Madison Street, Chicago, June 23d and 24th, 1888, Thomas Hougas, president pro tem., W. Vickery, clerk. Minutes of last conference read and approved. Branch reports:—First Chicago 21, 2 received. Streator 33, 3 received 5 removed. Plano 207, 5 received. Brouton, Mission, Burlington, and Courtland, no changes. Braidwood 27, 6 removed. Bishop's Agent, T. Hougas, reported:—On hand $47, received $6.75, total $53.75, paid out $43, balance on hand $10.75. Officials reported:—F. M. Cooper, Oden Jacobs, T. Hougas, S. C. Good, W. Vickery, C. D. Carter, C. L. Muetze, and H. Southwick by letter. Also M. T. Short, and Priest Lars Lewis, and Teacher Hans Hayer. Bro. F. M. Cooper, district president then took the chair and presided over the remainder of the conference. T. Hougas and W. Vickery a committee to Braidwood, reported having visited Braidwood, but failed to accomplish anything more than to get the brethren to agree to try and adjust matters between themselves. On motion the Leland branch was declared disorganized on account of the removal of its members. Bro. Cooper was sustained as president and W. Vickery clerk of the district for the next four months. Services:—Preaching Saturday evening by C. D. Carter; Sunday morning by Bishop G. A. Blakeslee, after which a short intermission was had when fellowship meeting in charge of G. A. Blakeslee and T. Hougas was held, a good portion of the Spirit was given and enjoyed by those present. At the close of this meeting there was preaching by Bro. F. M. Cooper, when three were baptized in Lake Michigan by T. Hougas. At 7:45 p. m., those baptized were confirmed, followed by preaching by W. Vickery. A vote of thanks was tendered the Saints of Chicago for their hospitality. Adjourned to meet at Mission, Illinois, September 15th, and 16th.

Miscellaneous.

TWO DAY MEETING.

In pursuance of a resolution adopted at our late district conference, a series of two-days meetings are hereby announced to be held at the following times and places: Dimondale, Eaton county, Michigan, beginning August 17th, at 10:30 a. m.; Coldwater, August 25th; at Antwerp, Paulding county, Ohio, September 1st; Marcellus, Cass county, Michigan, September 15th; at Knox, Stark county, Indiana, September 22nd; and at Gallien, Michigan, October 6th.

The Saints of the different branches mentioned will advertise these meetings as extensively as necessary, and do all they can to give them success. Brethren H. Rathburn, J. A. Carpenter, and others of the ministry, are expected to hold forth the word of life to the attendants at these meetings. Let all unitedly seek for the divine blessings to crown these efforts.

TO ALL CONCERNED.

We, the undersigned, wish to announce that one Z. Mecham, now a resident of Lincoln, Nebraska, will not be recognized as a member of the Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, nor will men, women or children who are his proselytes, in any sense be considered members of the above church. Learning of unadjusted difficulties between the said Z. Mecham and others, we deemed it our duty to make him a friendly visit to assure him of our willingness to interpose to institute an investigation with a view to a proper adjustment; which overtures the gentleman refused; hence this procedure. James Caffall, missionary in charge; Levi Anthony, president of Southern Nebraska district.

DIED.

WINEGAR.—Bro. John Winegar was born in New York, March 2d, 1820. When only a few years old he moved with his parents to Pennsylvania, where he lived until the year 1830, when they moved to Henry county Indiana, where was born Miss Elizabeth Smith, whom he married May 16th, 1847, who proved a faithful wife till the end. He joined the Latter Day Saints before the death of Joseph Smith; and he and his relatives were among the Saints that were mobbed and driven from Missouri. There were born to him eleven children; ten are now living. He moved with his wife to Pottawattamia county, Iowa, where they resided till 1886, and where he was loved and respected by all. He was one of the first members of the Reorganized Church and was strong in the faith till death. In April, 1886 he went to Cheyenne county, Kansas to get a home, but which he did not enjoy long. He died of dropsy, Saturday, June 30th 1888, after suffering continually for four months. He bore his sufferings without a murmur until the last; he died very easy—just like one going to sleep. He leaves an aged wife and ten children, besides many relatives and friends. His funeral sermon was preached at his residence by Bro Levi Graybill. At his death he was 68 years, 3 months and 28 days old.

HOPKINS.—At Netawaka Jackson county, Kansas, Harvey, son of Daniel and Bettie Hopkins, on the 26th of July, 1888. He was born July 2d, 1888. Funeral sermon by Elder E. C. Brand, assisted by Rev. J. Woodburn.

Though to-day we're filled with mourning,
Mercy still is on the throne;
With thy smiles of love returning,
We can sing, "Thy will be done."

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

CORRECTION.—In the date of adjournment of the St. Louis district conference, as given in the Herald of July 28th, there is a mistake of mine; instead of October 4th it should be October 7th, or the first Sunday in October, 1888. Please make this correction in a future number of the Herald.

JOHN G. SMITH.

The conference of the London district of Ontario, will be held in the Saints' Church at London, Ontario, September the 29th and 30th. The Provincial Fair will be held there from the 20th to the 29th, during which time half-fare rates may be obtained, which will be good until the Monday following the conference. We hope to have a good representation, and a full report of all the branches.

J. H. LAKE, Pres. of Mission.

NOTICES.

Notice is hereby given to the scattered members of the Pleasant Ridge branch of the Southern Indiana district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to-wit: Nancy Scott, James A. Scott, Solomon Cash, M. T. Flemings, Elizabeth Flemings, Sarah A. Lewellen, and Keturah Thomas. As their whereabouts are not known, we request that they report to Bro. Charles Cook, presiding officer of the Pleasant Ridge branch within three months or their names will be dropped and reported as scattered members of said branch.

CAMP-MEETING AT WILBER.

There will be a camp-meeting held in Castor's Grove, one mile and a half south of Wilber Nebraska, beginning August 25th, and closing September 2d. The grove is a lovely one on the bank of the Blue river. The water supply will be of the very best, both for man and beast. Hay will be furnished on the ground at a nominal price, and grain can be procured readily, and at the lowest rates. Fuel free. Those coming by rail will have to get off at Wilber where teams will carry them to the grounds. All will be done that can possibly be done to make the meeting a success. By request of committee,

THE POWER TO PERPETUATE THE CHURCH.

"O, HARKEN, ye elders of my church, and give an ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: For behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

"But verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."—Doc. and Cov., Sec. 43, Pars. 1, 2, February, 1831.

We notice in the revelation the following points:

1. It is given to the elders of the Church.
2. The commandment was to be a law (rule of procedure) to the Church.
3. It came to the Church through him who had been appointed to give commandments to avoid confusion.
4. The Lord notified them that he would honor the one he had appointed, and if he had commandments or revelations to give them they would be given to the church through the one whom he had appointed and not through others.
5. That if revelations or commandments to the church were offered by others than the one known to the church as having been appointed, the Church would know that the Lord had not authorized them; for he would not send by others while the one appointed remained in him.

6. It was for the purpose that the Church might not be deceived and be destroyed.

7. That the Lord would continue to honor the one already appointed, until he was either taken away, (we suppose by death), or had ceased to abide in the Lord, (because unworthy by apostasy or transgression).

8. That no other one should be appointed unto "this gift," to receive revelations and commandments from the Lord to be given to the Church, only as such appointment should be made by the Lord through the one already appointed.

9. That if for any reason, transgression, misuse of the gift to the injury of the work, or apostasy, or any other thing that would render the one already appointed unworthy to receive revelations and commandments from the Lord to be by him transmitted to the Church, then that one so found to be unworthy should have no longer power, or privilege to speak for the Lord to the people, only to designate to the Church by the command of God the one who should act in that office in his stead.

10. This was a rule of law—to the Church,

11. That whosoever was ordained of God should "come in at the gate and be ordained as [according to rule already given] I have told you before."

12. This applied to him who was then exercising the gift, and whoever should be appointed in his stead, in case the gift was taken from him.

13. Whoever was, (or is), ordained of God to this office should teach the revelations already given to the Church; and, also, teach those that should subsequently be received by the Church through him who had been already appointed.

To the foregoing we add:

(a). That which had been told before is, "That as many as would believe and be baptized, in his holy name, and endure in faith to the end should be saved."—Doc. and Cov., Sec. 17, Par. 5. "All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the Church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into the Church."—Doc. and Cov. Sec. 17, Pars. 5, 7. 1830.

(b). Baptism is the "gate."—Doc. and Cov. Sec. 20.

(c). "And this commandment shall be given unto the elders of my Church, that every man which will embrace it with singleness of heart, may be ordained and sent forth, even as I have spoken."—Doc. and Cov. Sec. 35, Par. 3. 1830.

(d). The authority to ordain is given unto the Church.

(e). "Verily, I say unto you, the keys of this Kingdom shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come; nevertheless, through you shall the oracles be given to another; yea, even unto the church."—Doc. and Cov. Sec. 87, Par. 2. March 1833.

(f). This language was addressed to Joseph Smith, the one who had been appointed of God to hold and exercise the gift to receive commandments and revelations for the Church, two full years after it was said through him that if he fell away he should have power only to appoint one in his stead. The saying is preceded by the statement that the sins of Joseph Smith had been forgiven him, and he should bear the keys from thenceforth. Doc. and Cov. Sec. 87, Par. 1.

(g). Joseph Smith was taken away, dying a martyr, of which death he was conscious and made preparation before it occurred. He was not accused by the Lord of transgression and the gift that had been conferred upon him taken from him; nor was there a command given him to appoint another in his stead because he had been unworthy and the Lord proposed to depose him from his office. It was only in the event of the gift being taken from him that he was to so appoint another. This event did not occur.

There is a parallel to the action fore-shown in the revelation, in the action of Moses, who, at the command of God, took the garments of Aaron from him and put them on Eleazar his son; and this was done "in the sight of the congregation" of Israel. Aaron did not object, and he died in Mount Hor, and was not slain by a mob, nor was he a martyr for conscience sake. The cause of this was stated at the time and it was the rebellion at Meribah. If Joseph Smith had been adjudged unworthy to longer bear the "keys" and exercise the "gift," which had been conferred upon him, he was under obligation to declare it, at the command of God, and to designate who the Lord had ordained to act in his stead. The fact that no such declaration was made, is strong proof that no command came from God, and no one was so designated to act in his stead while he was still living. This proof is made stronger still by the declaration made by Joseph Smith just before his death: "I go as a lamb to the slaughter."

(h). If Joseph Smith continued to abide in Christ, which all must admit that he did, in that case the gift conferred was to continue with him; not only in the present world, the life of the flesh, but the keys were to remain with him in the world to come. But that no harm could come to the Church, and the elders be put in possession of a key to the situation in case Joseph Smith should be taken, they were told that there was no one other than he appointed until he was taken, and that when this should occur the oracles should be given to the Church.

(i). Oracles. Primarily the answer of a god. 2d, The communications, revelations, or messages delivered by God to prophets. 3d, The sanctuary, the holy place in the temple, in which was the ark of the covenant. 4th, One who communicates a divine command; a prophet, &c. 5th, a wise sentence, or decision of great authority.

(j). All officers of the church are called of God, and are ordained by virtue of the Holy Ghost which is in the one ordaining, and is done according to the gifts and calling of God unto the one ordained.

(k). The command, "Nevertheless through you shall the oracles be given unto the church," is equivalent to the saying, "Until Joseph Smith be taken he shall continue to act in the office unto which he is called, and shall continue to exercise the gifts conferred upon him; but when he is taken, then the oracles and the power conferred in them are lodged with, or in the church, to be exercised and observed in accordance with the revelations and commandments given to and accepted by the church, from God through him, up to the time he should be taken."

(l). Any one who should treat the oracles as a light thing should do so to their condemnation.

(m). "And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom."—Doc. & Cov. sec. 87, par. 5, 1833.

(n). This commandment was given to Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams. The latter died before Joseph Smith did; and whatever may have been the rights of Sidney Rigdon at the death of Joseph Smith, he was not permitted to stand in Joseph's stead nor act as his successor. This confirms the thought that Joseph was to continue in the exercise of the gift conferred upon him, during his life, and was not to be compelled to appoint another in his stead.

(o). There is a notable difference between the appointment of one to act in Joseph Smith's stead, and the appointment of one to succeed him; for in the one case, the gift would be taken from him; in the other, the gift would remain with him, but he would be taken by death from the place where the gift was exercised in behalf of the church, and the place being vacant would be filled by a successor at the pleasure of the Lord.

(p). This is also obvious from the statement: "I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not another will I plant in his stead."—D. & C. sec. 34, par. 4.

(q). "Then comes the high priesthood, which is the greatest of all; wherefore, it must needs be that one be appointed, of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood; and he shall be called president of the high priesthood of the church, or in other words, the presiding high priest over the high priesthood of the church."—D. & C. sec. 104, par. 31.

(r). There are, in the church, two priesthoods; the Melchisedek and the Aaronic. The latter includes the Levitical priesthood. D. & C. sec. 104, par. 1.

(s). All authorities or offices are appendages, attached to and appertain to the priesthood, but there are two divisions; one the Melchisedek, the other the Aaronic, or Levitical. Ibid sec. 104, par. 2.

(t). The office of Elder is of the Melchisedek priesthood.

(u). To this division of priesthood the right of presidency belongs.

(v). The presidency (those holding the office of), have a right to officiate in all the offices, those attaching to or belonging in either division. Ibid sec. 104, par. 4.

(w). A High priest is authorized to act, first as high priest, then as elder of the Melchisedek order; then as priest, teacher, or deacon, of the Aaronic division. Ibid sec. 104, par. 5.

(x). An elder may act instead of a high priest when occasion requires and the high priest is not present. D. & C. sec. 104, par. 6.

(y). High priests and elders may officiate when there are no others present who hold a higher office (not priesthood, for there is none higher than they hold).

(z). The Melchisedek priesthood holds the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church. This authorizes those who belong to it to act, when commanded of God, in any office, or the performance of any duty in the church necessary to the establishing, upbuilding and perpetuity of the church.

(1 a). The command of God is the authority of his servants:—"And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them." "Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants." "They who go forth, bearing these tidings unto the inhabitants of the earth, to them is power given to seal, both on earth and in heaven."—D. & C. sec. 1, par. 1, 2.

(2 a). No one should be ordained unto an office in the church, unless he is qualified by the gifts and callings of God unto him for the office unto which he is to be ordained; and the calling of God of the person ordained is to be recognized by the church by their common consent expressed by vote first obtained. D. & C. sec. 17, par. 12, 13, 16.

(3 a). The ordination of persons into offices in the church when determined upon is to be done by the power and authority of the Holy Ghost in the one who ordains. D. & C. sec. 17, par. 12.

(4 a). "An apostle is an elder, and it is his calling to ordain other elders, priests, teachers and deacons."—D. & C. sec. 17, par. 8. In this paragraph all the offices in the higher division of priesthood are called elders.

(5 a). When the church became organized so that there was a recognized body of Christ, no one was to go forth to bear gospel tidings and act in the name of the church unless it was known that he had been properly called, and had been regularly ordained by one having the authority to do so. D. & C. sec. 42, par. 4, Revelation February 9th, 1831.

(6 a). Before an organization was perfected, Oliver Cowdery was, by command of God, baptized by Joseph Smith, who was then baptized by Oliver Cowdery. This was done under the direction of John the Baptist, who had ordained these two men unto the Aaronic priesthood which held the authority to baptize. And John the Baptist was acting under the direction of Peter, James and John, of the Melchisedek, the presiding priesthood; and represented the Church of Jesus Christ as organized by him.

(7 a). This was accompanied by the declaration that the priesthood so conferred, should never be taken from the earth again until the sons of Levi should again offer an offering in righteousness. This is significant that the powers necessary to the perpetuation of the church were then and there conferred. History of Joseph Smith, Mill. Star, vol. 14, p. 15, May 1829.

(8 a). Subsequently to this the Melchisedek, the presiding priesthood, was conferred by command of God, in which Joseph and Oliver were ordained elders. This ordination did not take place until the voice and sanction of the members already baptized was obtained. This was had April 6th, 1830, the ordinations were then made, the priesthood conferred, the church organized, and the seal of God's approval set to the work by the reception of the Holy Ghost. Of it the historian says: "We dismissed with the pleasing knowledge that we were now individually members of, and acknowledged of God, 'The Church of Jesus Christ,' organized in accordance with commandments and revelations given by Him to ourselves in the last days, as well as according to the order of the church as recorded in the New Testament."—Hist. Joseph Smith, Mill. Star, vol. 14, p. 27.

At a conference composed of High Priests, Elders and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, January 25th, 1832, Joseph Smith was chosen and ordained to the office of president of the High Priesthood; and on April 26th of the same year, he was recognized and acknowledged as such president of the priesthood and of the church by a general council of the church, at Independence, Missouri, Bishop Edward Partridge extending to him the right hand of fellowship in that office on the behalf of the church.

(9 a). The covenant by which men are received into the church is an everlasting covenant, and is the last covenant, and men are commanded to "enter in at the gate."—Doc. and Cov., sec. 20, par. 1.

(9½ a). This covenant being "the last," there could not be another which took its place, rendered this void, or created a dispensation differing from the church order and organization in principles faith, or practices.

(10 a). The provisions for the perpetuation of the church in the conferring of the powers of the priesthood having been once given, no emergency could occur in which there would be a necessity for a new dispensation, or a reconfering the same priesthood. Hence there should have been and were those things given to the church by which the presidency could be continued.

(11 a). There was such a designation made by the Lord in revelation through Joseph Smith, that the elders of the presiding priesthood could, and many did know whom the Lord had ordained (destined, selected, or appointed) to be called and chosen to succeed Joseph Smith in case he was taken.

(12 a). "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, in thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindreds of the earth be blessed."—Doc. and Cov. Sec. 107, par. 18.

(13 a). In pursuance of the principle shown in the above statement, Joseph Smith prophetically blessed his son and stated what his calling was to be. 1st. In the jail at Liberty, Missouri. 2d. In the office, or council room in the brick store at Nauvoo, Illinois, sometime in 1842 or 43, at which a number of the then prominent men of the church were present, James Whitehead, N. K. Whitney and others among them. 3d. On the stand near the Temple at Nauvoo, where in the presence of hundreds, he stated that Joseph, his son, should be his successor should he be taken away. 4th. In the parlor of the Mansion House, in June, 1844, just prior to the last and fatal journey to Carthage, Illinois, whence he was brought to his burial, on which occasion he again blessed his son Joseph by the laying on of hands, and stated again that he it was who was to be his successor if he was taken. All this was done in the presence of witnesses casually assembled and not chosen by favoritism or in secrecy.

(14 a). This was well understood at, and after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and was commonly talked of among the members of the church and priesthood. It was also stated by Pres. Brigham Young, in reference to the seed of Joseph. It has been looked for by many who understood the law and traditions of the church. It has been shown to hundreds by the dreams, visions, tongues and prophecies given of God through the Spirit.

(15 a). After the death of Joseph Smith, in due time there was a movement among those who had "come in at the gate," had received the Holy Ghost unto the confirmation of their membership in the church and had been ordained unto the Aaronic and the Melchisedek, the ruling, presiding priesthood, and who were still in the faith, or "abiding" in Christ; which movement was for the continuation, or perpetuation of the church in accordance with the oracles of God as given unto the church through Joseph Smith. This movement culminated in the calling and holding a meeting of this priesthood July 12th, 1852, at which meeting the oracles were solemnly reaffirmed and the members pledged to their maintenance anew. To this movement God gave the sanction of his Spirit, and though prophecy promised that Joseph Smith, "the head" of the posterity of Joseph, the one foreshadowed in one of the oracles given the church, to whom the promise referred to in 12 a, of this article was made.

(16 a). This promise of prophecy as stated in one of the oracles, was fulfilled at Amboy, Illinois, in April 1860, when Joseph Smith, the oldest son of Joseph Smith was directed to connect himself with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, as it was the only one of all those claiming to be the church that was acknowledged of God. This direction the young man complied with.

(17 a). Joseph Smith the younger, had "come in at the gate," was baptized by his father in Nauvoo, about 1843, was duly confirmed a member of the church and received of the spirit of adoption, was prophesied of, and designated in an oracle. The body to which he was referred, and to which he was directed to unite himself, had in it men who had received of both priesthoods, among them High Priests who could officiate in all offices of the church, and elders who could act in the stead of High Priests when the latter were absent. He was called of God, the call was recognized by the high priests, elders, priests, teachers, deacons and members; and upon a vote of the church so taken, Joseph Smith was ordained to the office of high priest, and by reason of the things found in the oracles, the testimony of prophecy through many, the call of the Lord to himself, and the evidence of the Spirit to many at the time he was chosen, "appointed of, or from among those holding the Melchisedek priesthood" to be the president of the high priesthood, "chosen by the body," appointed and ordained to that office. It was directed of God and has received the divine sanction time and time again, in the prosecution of the work of the ministry unto which he was called.

(18 a). "Of necessity there are presidents, or presiding officers, growing out of, or appointed of or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in the two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedek priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church." Doc. and Cov., Sec. 104, par. 11.

(19 a). The necessity arose after the death of Joseph and Hyrum, and the scattering and evil work that ensued. The Lord had conferred the powers by which the organization of the church could be effectually kept up, or if broken, could be reorganized and perpetuated; and as at the beginning the work done was by command, and revelation, and was accompanied by visions, dreams, prophecies; so at the reorganization the divine Spirit gave command, directed the elders to the oracles which had been treated lightly, and the work done was by the command of God and according to that which had been given to the church through Joseph Smith, by revelation, command and promise of God; and in happy conformity to the precedents established in the organizing and establishing the church at the first as stated in the history of that event.

ELDER FORSCUTT ON THE "PRIESTHOOD."

THE Saints at Lamoni have been favored, of late, with a series of discourses by Elder Mark H. Forscutt, on the subject of the Priesthood. The presentation of this matter was timely and well received, as the large gatherings of Saints and friends from the town and surrounding country, and the close attention given, clearly showed an appreciation of the speaker's efforts. The subject was presented in five or six sermons, but as no notes of any consequence were taken, we can but briefly refer to the line of thought presented.

The texts chosen were Hebrews tenth and fifth chapters, from which the speaker reasoning from the statement of Paul in Hebrews 10: 1, viz: "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered continually, make the comers thereunto perfect," showed clearly that behind the shadow of the Mosaic economy, we must find the substance. Behind the figure we must seek the true. Behind the type must be found the antetype, as a shadow is not an exact duplicate of the real object, but a representation of the thing itself.

From this premise the speaker compared the various grades of priesthood existing in Mosaic times with those mentioned in the Bible and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, clearly outlining all the various grades of office in the church, from the Patriarchate and First Presidency down to and including the offices of Priest, Teacher, and Deacon; also proving conclusively the existence of the office of Patriarch and other leading lines of authority in the Melchisedek priesthood to have existed before the giving of the law of Moses.

In connection with the above quotations attention was especially directed to the statement of Peter as recorded in Acts 3: 21, concerning the dispensation, or "times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken [ordained or appointed], since the world began." Also that of Paul in Ephesians 1: 9, 10, "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself, that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

These texts with others were presented as evidence of the reappearance of and necessity for each and every office in the priesthood that have ever been appointed in the church in all past dispensations, this being the "fulness of times;" the "eleventh hour;" the period when God will "gather together all things in one in Christ Jesus;" before whose second coming the Master himself said: "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things;" which in this dispensation was accomplished almost completely, as far as refers to priesthood, through the instrumentality of Joseph the Seer.

The dispensation of the "Meridian of Time," when Christ appeared, was shown to be a scattering dispensation as indicated in the following statements: "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out." "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence and the violent take it by force," etc., etc. —Matt. 11: 10.

Hence this restoration of all things pertaining to the priesthood and government of God was to take place at a future time from the apostolic age, or in this the "dispensation of the fulness of times."

We wish that all interested in the subject of priesthood could have heard Bro. Forscutt's efforts.

THE following from the pen of Bro. Hiram Rathbun, of Lansing, Michigan, and published in the Journal, of that city, in its issue for July 25th, is timely and to the point. Bro. Rathbun was with the church in its early history, was with his father's family when the office at Independence was sacked, Bishop Partridge and Bro. Allen were tarred and feathered, and with them he was driven from Jackson county, and is entitled to speak whereof he affirms. If the Apostle could say, "Seeing we are encompassed about by so great a cloud of witnesses, . . . what manner of men ought we to be;" how much more can we not affirm seeing that the cloud of witnesses is increased unto us "like Alps on Alps piled mountains high."

I see in the Saturday's issue of your paper a short article under the caption, "The Mormon Bible Plates." This article states as follows: "A false impression prevails in many quarters that the Mormons pretend to still possess the golden plates found by Joseph Smith in the Hill Comorah. This is no such thing. They have only the testimony of three witnesses—the last of whom, David Whitmer, died recently—that they saw and handled the plates, and it is their testimony which has given such strong substantiation to the statements of Joseph Smith, etc." We believe that the author of the above has aimed to make an honest, candid statement as far as he knew, but he has not been well informed. Thousands of people, not having correctly informed themselves, have fallen into the most erroneous errors, and thereby made the grossest mistakes about this people. So, too, this writer has made a great mistake when he says: "They have only the testimony of three witnesses." Most certainly he never read the Book of Mormon, which he calls the Mormon Bible, for if he had, he never would have made the statement so very far short of the facts in the case. Invariably in every edition of the book next to the title-page is the testimony not only of the three witnesses, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, but also the testimony of eight other witnesses which reads as follows: "Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, jr., the translator of this work has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated, we did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world to witness unto the world that which we have seen; and we lie not, God bearing witness of it." This is signed by Christian Whitmer, Jacob Whitmer, Peter Whitmer, jr., John Whitmer, Hiram Page, Joseph Smith, sr., Hiram Smith, Samuel Smith.

I was personally acquainted with these eight witnesses as well as with the other three. They were all regarded as honest, candid, fair-minded, and truthful men. Their testimony would have been received in any court on any other subject in the world as first-class testimony. Besides their written testimony, I have heard them all bear testimony that their testimony was true in regard to the plates of the Book of Mormon. These eight witnesses, like the three, bore their testimony in their dying moments, and one of these eight, being killed by a mob like a martyr, sealed his testimony with his own life's blood. So I know from what I have seen and heard, as well as from what I have read, that there were not only three but eleven witnesses to the plates of the Book of Mormon, or, as called, "The Mormon Bible."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

IN the increased and increasing bestowal of the Lord's blessings upon the Saints throughout the world, that have of late been so apparent in all the assemblies of God's people, the Saints at Lamoni have not been overlooked. There has of late been a greater interest and an increasing manifestation of earnest desire to live faithfully and fully up to the standard marked out in the path of life, the results of which have been an increase in the presence and gifts of the Holy Spirit. At our social meeting last Sunday afternoon the calm and peaceful presence of the Spirit of the Lord was manifest in a great measure to the joy of all present. The hearts of all were made glad in the inward and outward manifestations of the Spirit, felt and heard upon that occasion. May the people of God everywhere be united to the reception of increased blessings that await the church as she prepares herself for them.

Any elder passing through Wyandotta, Michigan, will confer a favor by calling on Bro. S. Evison; who is very desirous of seeing an elder of the faith once delivered to the Saints.

By letter from Bro. J. C. Clapp, and a slip from the New North-West, published at Deer Lodge, Montana, July 27th, we learn of the departure from this life of one similarly called by nearly all who knew him father Neils R. Beck. Father Beck was a Scandinavian, and came from his native land in faith with the Utah Mormon church; but from this accepted Joseph Morris, and when Mr. Morris was killed he settled near Deer Lodge, adopting such religious views as pleased him, giving liberally of his ample means wherever his heart dictated, and devoting himself to agricultural and pastoral pursuits, in which he did well. He died July 21st after a tedious and painful illness, at St. Joseph's Hospital, Deer Lodge, and was buried from the Christian church the Sunday following. Thus passed a good though eccentric man. His age and place of birth are not given in the notice that reached us.

Bro. Albert Haws succeeded in getting a good defence of the faith in the Daily Humboldt Times, Eureka, California, for July 29th. The article is well written and closes with an epitome of the faith.

Bro. W. R. Calhoun, of Courtland, DeKalb county, Illinois, wrote us July 28th a long and eulogistic letter giving several reasons why he liked the HERALD best of any paper he reads; chief among those reasons are its great freedom from typographical errors, its clean and tidy mechanical appearance, its regularity of issue and the safety and certainty with which it may be relied on in dealing with the interests of the Saints and the welfare of the general work. Thank you, Bro. Calhoun.

Bro. James McLester, of Decatur, Wise county, Texas, desires to correspond with members in Montana, as he intends to locate there next spring, preferring to hear from those living near the land lately opened for settlement.

There is a field full of presidential candidates; look at them. Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, for President, Levi P. Morton, of New York, for Vice-President, on behalf of the Republican party; Grover Cleveland, of New York, for President, Allan G. Thurman, of Ohio, for Vice-President, on behalf of the Democratic party; Clinton B. Fisk, of New Jersey, for President, Dr. J. A. Brooks, of Missouri, for Vice-President, on behalf of the Prohibition party; A. J. Streeter, of Illinois, for President, C. E. Cunningham, of Arkansas, for Vice-President, on behalf of the Union Labor party; Belva A. Lockwood, of Washington, D. C., for President, A. H. Love, of Pennsylvania, for Vice-President, on behalf of the Woman's Suffrage party, and Robert H. Cowdery, of Illinois, for President, William H. T. Wakefield, of Kansas, for Vice-President, on behalf of the United Labor party. Take your choice—but be sure to vote so that the final decision may be clear and the expression of the full vote of the people of the United States.

Bro. Nicholas Rumel, of Omaha, Nebraska, writes of his faith in the principle of continued revelation, and holds that the Scriptures and right reason teach that man should, in every age, "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God;" and regards the promise of Jesus that those who do the will of God shall know the truth of Christ's doctrine, as the most effective safeguard against imposition and deception, and the most wise and loving provision of God for the comfort and enlightenment of man. Bro. Rumel expresses joy and unshaken hope in the gospel restored in these latter days.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. A. J. Moore wrote us from Elkhart, Texas, the 2d inst., saying:

"When I came here prospects were not good; but a great change has come, and for miles around where I have been holding meetings the excitement runs high. Some baptisms have occurred, more will to-day, and others will in two weeks. I am not able to tell you how the Lord has blessed me in preaching the word and administering to the sick. For as often as I have been called on, the Lord has raised up the sick, sometimes instantly."

Mr. John J. Allen, writing from Depauville, New York, says:

"Some person sent me a tract and a leaf of numbers 31 and 6 'The One Baptism,' which I have read with much interest and profit. The truths set forth in those tracts have awakened an interest to learn more in regard to sentiments and doctrines of the sect called Latter Day Saints, and having no connection with the Utah sect, so called. I am a Baptist minister of nearly fifty years experience in the ministry, and I never before heard of the Latter Day Saints without the name being linked with all the abominations of polygamy. I wish you would send me your tracts and a few copies of your paper."

Bro. F. M. Parsons, of Oenaville, Texas, writes:

"I rejoice to see God's truth master of the situation when wielded by his servants. Prospects for paying tithing tolerably good here. I wish we had some teaching on the subject."

Bro. B. Gaston, of Yuma, Colorado, writes:

"My wife and self are the only Saints that we know of here. We have managed to get the people interested in the work. We are trying to organize a Sabbath School in this place, and they requested me to send for the Hope on three months trial."

Bro. George S. Hicklin, of Kansas City, Missouri, writing under date of July 23d, says:

"I do hope to do better in the time to come than I have done in the past. I have forgiven all those that have spoken evil of me. I feel that the Lord has a work for me to do, and that ere long he will require it at my hands. I have been preaching some in Kansas City and Armstrong. In the latter place I hired a hall, but the weather was too warm to continue at present."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Through orient seas, o'er Afric's plain,
And Asian mountains borne,
The vigor of the northern brain
Shall nerve the world outworn.
From clime to clime, from shore to shore,
Shall thrill the magic thread;
The new Prometheus steals once more
The fire that wakes the dead."

TO MY IRRITABLE SISTER.

Yes, my dear fellow-housekeeper, I know all about it from experience. I know the eternal vigilance which is alone the price of decent cleanliness. I have fought the incessant battle with dust, and have envied those notable matrons whose windows are always brightly polished, whose floors never show speck or fluff, whose vestibules are immaculate, and whose tables are not only abundantly provided, but invariably daintily served. I know how beautiful, in the reading, is the story of this woman or that, whose affairs move with no audible jar, and no visible friction. And I am aware, too, that it is not easy, in actual practice, to go through an ordinary domestic week, with its multifarious activities, and feel neither jar nor friction. The ideal superlative transcends the positive actual with many of us, and the prettier our homes are, the harder it is, alas! to take the proper and exquisite care which our very luxuries and conveniences demand.

It came to me the other day, as I sat in my chamber, and thought of your annoyances and my own, that perhaps the most practical way of conquering the tendency to irritability of which you complain, and I deplore, is resolutely to refuse it expression. We are not always able to control the impetuous rush of emotion, but we can repress the hasty speech and the severe frown. We can be silent, in the first flush of injured feeling, and refrain from the sharp word, the querulous outcry, and the indignant burst, of which we are sure to repent. Have we not repented over and over of having spoken impatiently, when to do so did no good, in fact, did but confuse child or servant, or vex the heart of our friend?

Apart from the repression of resentment, in look or word, we may do much toward the cultivation of a gentle and not easily perturbed temper, by using habitually a gentle quietude of tone. Shall I ever forget my friend, the sweet mistress of a Virginia manse, her health fragile, her family large, her house overflowing with guests, and her hands with cares, while the best service at her command was both imperfect and uncertain? Her presence in the booklined study was a benediction as we gathered for family prayers, or evening chat, nor, under any provocation, was the sweet voice ever raised. So tranquil, so unhurried, when I am wearied the remembrance of her gentleness rests and soothes me still.

Very precious to my heart is Bonar's hymn,

"Calm me, my God, and keep me calm,
Soft resting on thy breast,
Soothe me with holy hymn and psalm,
And bid my spirit rest.

Calm in the hour of buoyant health,
Calm in my hour of pain;
Calm in my poverty or wealth,
Calm in my loss or gain."

When we have exhausted all our prescriptions and tried all our remedies, dear, easily irritated sister, the one unfailing panacea awaits us. The leaves of the tree of life are forever for the healing of the nations. But we are often so slow to avail ourselves of the peace we might have for the asking; we so often buy everything else before we go to Him who never fails us when we carry our wants to his feet.

I think we instinctively run to Him in the time of calamity or disaster. Then we can not help it. The impulse dominates us, and as the hurt child cries out for the mother-comfort, we fly to our heavenly Friend. But, the children are naughty, the chimney smokes, there are business worries, the servant leaves suddenly, the dinner is spoiled through somebody's carelessness, the baby is teething, and we are worn out, and we call all these little things; and think we must bear them alone. They are the very things in which the Lord is waiting to be our gracious helper, if we will only carry them straight to Him, to "drop the burden at his feet, and bear a song away."

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for August 23d.

Memory texts, Isa. 45:4, 5. John 17:3.

Subjects, The members of our families by their names.

For the families of each other, and for the youth of the church in general. I suggest that the fourth Thursday of each month be set apart for this subject.

ELEANOR.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Margaret Hoagland, River Sioux, Iowa, writes: "How dear the Savior is to us when we live humbly and draw near to him. I know that he both hears and answers prayer, for many a time have my own feeble ones been answered in a remarkable manner and I have at times been healed instantly in answer to prayer. I am old and many times lonely, as I live a mile from church and I ask to be remembered by the Saints in prayer. I think the Prayer League will be a great blessing to those joining it, if they prove faithful." Sister Sarah M. Sullivan, Biddeford, Maine, writes: "For over a year I have been with an old lady now eighty-seven years old. Her father was at one time private secretary to George Washington. She is almost blind and quite deaf. I am striving to make her days as pleasant as possible, for I feel that the Lord has appointed me this work. I have two sons of whose whereabouts I am ignorant, but my heart yearns over them and my prayer goes up to God constantly that he will watch over and guard them. I ask the Saints to pray for me and for the wanderers that God will bring them home."

Sister M. A. Christie, Akron, Iowa, writes: "Perhaps others feel as I have felt in regard to the Prayer League. A hesitancy in sending in their names through a feeling of unworthiness. I have from the first been in favor of it, but I felt a desire to humble myself, to get down in the depths of humility before the Lord, that I might be more worthy of his favor. That we may be prospered in this, our motives should be pure and our desires very earnest that God would unite our hearts even as the heart of one; to enter into closer communion with the Lord and through his help do a better work, our sole aim. May he strengthen and guide us and the glory be his."

SHE BUILDETH HER HOUSE.

MANY years ago, the man of wisdom said, "A wise woman buildeth her own house;" and if it was true then, it is true now, and will be through all time. "What; a woman build her own house!" says one, "I did not know that women understood architecture, although in modern days they follow many pursuits which were anciently withheld from them." Very true, but the above authority declares that a wise woman builds her own house. Dr. Talmage in one of his sermons carries the idea that God designed that she should provide a home for herself. Very good; if she can and will, we call her smart whether she has a larger half or not.

Every young lady, whether the daughter of a millionaire or a peasant, should be educated in one or more kinds of labor, as well as in books, and is not fully accomplished without it—is not qualified to fill her mission except she understands labor. Yet her physical organization shows that her Creator never designed her to wield the tools of architecture. Her abilities and development plainly show that she was designed to keep the house and bear the children as St. Paul said. Where would be the household if there were no women? And where are the women? Many human forms attired in female costume, but only a few women, consequently only a few well-built houses. "What do you mean?" says one. "There are many good housekeepers and many who bear children." Very good as far as it goes, but that is not all. A neat, economical housewife should be prized above rubies by her companion, and that before the sable pall has shown up the brightness of her worth. The majority of men are pleased with children and prize her who gave them birth, although that is but a small part of the work. God told the world, through the prophet Moses, that the father should not be punished for the sins of the son, nor the son for the sins of the father; and he also said that he would visit the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hated him, or disregarded his laws, and show mercy unto thousands who kept his commandments. To some minds these ideas seem to conflict; but parents neither then nor now were punished by the laws of the land for one another's crimes. But children and children's children were both then and now afflicted physically, in consequence of their parent's sins, or violation of the laws of health whether ignorantly or thoughtlessly. And they too, more or less imbibe the immoral and irreligious habits of the parents, which is another way that the iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children.

"A wise woman buildeth her own house." If she is fortunate in getting a companion whose blood, habits and morals are pure, her own being the same, and they knowing and regarding the laws of their being, the foundation of the house would be properly laid, except the material for their spiritual culture. O, what a mighty work to build a household. It is a structure that will be admired or disdained by the Almighty eye and the inhabitants of eternity for never ending ages. If there were as much care generally taken in regard to the physical being of the human offspring, as there is in regard to the poultry and stock of the farm, we should not see so many little mounds in the churchyard, so many frail youth, so many prematurely old, to say nothing about the doctor's bills and the vast amount of suffering.

O woman, woman, how great is thy mission, and how great should be thy knowledge, wisdom, patience and grace! To you is consigned the work of building the house, or doing your reasonable part of peopling the earth. With what? Mere human forms? O no; that is not all the Master requires, as you are well aware. The mind of a child absorbs or imbibes the influence thrown around it, even in infancy, and before its birth; then the easiest and best way to govern the offspring is for parents to first govern themselves.

Then in building a house which will meet the approval of the Great Architect, we draw the conclusion that one must first lay a good foundation for the physical structure; second, the moral; third, the mental; fourth, the industrial; fifth the spiritual, and then daily work thereon till the work is completed. "Such a structure would almost approach Divinity," says one, "and can never be attained in this sinful state of existence."

Neither do we expect that mortals will attain such a state of perfection till Jesus comes in his kingdom; but we do think and know that it is the reasonable duty of every saint to strive for perfection in all things, and especially in the household. God bless, guide and direct the young mothers and all contemplating marriage.

ALMIRA.

July 23d,

Dear Sister Frances:—Pardon my writing to the Home Column so soon again; I would not do it were it not that I feel that a great movement is about to take place among the sisters, and think with others, that it ought to start just right. I hope that what I may say or have said will not in any wise be construed as against unceasing prayer, or against union in prayer; for as you must know I have faith in both, and have experienced great benefits from both. Yet, as I said, I feel that we should start just right in this new movement, and I write that perchance I might help a little in opening the way.

I agree with sister Eleanor when she says that that in covenanting to serve God there should be no self reservation. We are to love (otherwise severe) God with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our mind. And yet this does not necessarily imply that each one has either the ability, time, or calling to take a part in every labor to be performed within the kingdom. Upon each one that enters into this covenant devolves the duty of praying for his own strength and guidance, as well as giving thanks for all blessings; also he is to pray in like manner for the church at large, and the officers thereof. This is to be done each day, as each feels led by the Spirit; and this I believe the sisters are doing already. But there may be a different kind of a prayer service, having a special time for holding it, and having a special object of knowledge or need as the end of supplication. This, I believe, comes in addition to the work already being done, and it must certainly rest with each one to determine whether or not he or she can participate in it, just as it rests with each individual as to how many of the meetings or organizations for good he can attend or take part in during each week at home.

When the Prayer League was first suggested, the plan was, "that we have a time set apart for concert of prayer for special objects;" "one hour of one day in each week for all who have an interest in this work to lay aside all other cares and pursuits, and let our united prayers ascend for the objects in view;" "the day and hour appointed to be the same every week." This plan at first seemed good to me, for all those who could set apart the hour that should be appointed. But without either distrust of God or their own desires, I could see that there would be some whom circumstances alone would prevent from living up to such a covenant. This was afterwards seen by the sisters themselves, if Sister Frances voiced their plans aright, for it was subsequently stated that not any certain time should be appointed for the work, but only that it be done during the week. This change in programme did not reach me however, until after I had sent my article to the Column.

Again; Sr. Eleanor's second letter narrowed down the work still more, though perhaps not intentionally, by restricting the number to take part in these prayers to those only who could answer to a certain test of fellowship. To my mind these two requirements did add to our responsibility, which I then felt; yet as I had no other plan to offer, I could only caution that we count the cost before pledging to fulfill them. But my chief object in writing at this time is, not to defend my last article, but to state the plans for the prayer union as they have already been voiced, and ask, Why make a restricted society out of our prayer union any way? At least why put in a test of fellowship that may debar some of the most honest, and at any rate some of the most needy, from participating in this strengthening work? As I now understand the plan, it is intended that each sister of the League shall take one hour (which may be any), during each week for reading from the standard books of the church, and for prayer to God upon certain subjects to be named in the Herald. Why not make it a full union, and exhort every mature sister in the church, that can, to do this work? And let those who are so led by the Spirit, report the strength or knowledge they have gained. There is also no objection to having those who participate send in their names to Sr. Frances, that it may be known how many are working. By studying the little letters in the Hope, to be written upon subjects therein named, the good of this plan can be seen; while on the other hand I am fearful that but a small portion of the sisters will feel like avowing even to Sr. Frances, that they are so pure as at all times to be able to pray the Lord's prayer righteously.

As Sr. Hannah has said, let us not delay longer in beginning this work, for we all need the results of it, and I feel that nearly all can take some hour of the week to participate in it. If the plan here presented meets the approval of the sisters starting the movement, let Sr. Frances put subjects in the Home Column at once, and let every mature sister in the church feel that she may have her part in the work, no matter what condition she may now be in. The exhortation might wisely go forth that each sister strive to arrive at and be always in a condition to pray the pattern prayer; but let it not be a necessary qualification for either participating or reporting.

If this plan does not meet the approval of the sisters, I trust that a better one may be given; for I know that even in discussing the proposition we are each gaining knowledge, and I believe the full understanding of the subject to be a matter of growth and experience. Sister Eleanor certainly has the heartfelt thanks of every live worker for her suggestion of a prayer union, and that it may speedily be doing its work is my prayer.

Yours in patience and hope,
VIRGINIA.

Correspondence.

BOSTON, Mass., July 25th.

Editors of the Herald:—We are moving along here in the light of the best wisdom given, finding ample room for thought and labor. It is not always quite clear as to the best way to direct labor so as to secure the best results, however, we are encouraged in the thought that some good is being done and the cause sustained. The conference held at Fall River last month, for this district, was well attended, and a deep interest manifested in what was done. All of the missionary appointees were present, including Brn. A. H. Parsons, H. H. Robinson and consorts, who were on their way to their mission field. The conference was rather an important one by reason of pending questions of prerogative, rights, rulings, policy, &c., that were being agitated in the district. All awaited patiently, and perhaps with some solicitude, the results, especially the action of the new appointee. On Saturday evening they put him under a storm of interrogatives, Yankee like, for, it seemed to him, sixty minutes, after which all settled down to business with excellent feeling, having become better acquainted. It became evident that a misunderstanding had been the fruitful source of a large share, if not all the divided sentiment and had caused the feeling of alarm that had overtaken some. A healthful atmosphere prevailed thereafter. The rapids were passed without loss of life, or any apparent injury to the boat. It is easy enough to remedy the most complicated matters when there is a sincere and earnest desire prevailing with each one that the right shall succeed.

There is a large share of good sense, honesty of purpose and sincere feeling about the Saints of this district, and they do not propose to throw away years of effort, labor and devotion to the cause, by fostering partisan feeling, or refusing to change, if found in the wrong, simply to gratify some prevailing whim, or to favor it. The conference was prolific of good and the Saints felt glad that they are Saints, and returned to their homes comforted, hopeful and happy.

Of course that momentous question "in charge," whether it means something or nothing, is but a complimentary appendage attached to certain General Conference appointees to decoy them into their missions, to be taken in charge by those in their respective fields of labor, or whether they themselves are really in charge, are responsible and should be heard, is being discussed here as well as elsewhere; and although it is so very self-evident to some as to where the propriety of the matter lies, it is of slower solution to others. How that sentiment ever obtained in the Reorganization that somebody else should be heard, believed and trusted before the chief authorities in the church is most singularly strange to the writer at least. If it is a fact that the untrustworthy liars, hypocrites and unbelievable have really got front seats, and "old honesty" is in the ranks or rear, then we are ready to move a reconsideration. Is there a second to the motion?

Organization and order is the method by which all great results have been achieved by any people, and it seems but in keeping with custom that the Saints adopt a similar means in their commendable efforts at sending the gospel to the great world, and the conversion of as many as will hear the message. It strikes us that in order to render that organization effectual, like all others, it must be given a chance to move in the order designed, straight forward; and not be impelled or thrown out of order by any reacting force or movement. The church giving light to the world, the city set on the hill, above all else should be consistent, fair, considerate and just. This district, however, has been paratively free from differences and controversies arising from the above mentioned questions and subjects, and bids fair to continue. May such be its good fortune!

After the conference Brn. Robinson and Parsons rendered us essential aid in unraveling some tangled matters affecting some in the district. May their shadows never grow less. I hardly think they will fish for any more like that. Their suspense was broken. Thanks.

The Saints at Fall River were doing quite well as a church, under the guidance and protection of Bro. F. M. Sheehy, and the members thought the right thing to do would be to continue him in that charge; so refused to release him, on motion, from that obligation. This was complimentary to Bro. Sheehy, and sensible upon their part in following the law of self-preservation, for they greatly need a constant laborer most of the time, but we exercised that wonderful prerogative lodged in the hands of the one in charge, as we understand it, and advised Bro. Sheehy to go up into Maine and strike out into new fields for the summer, he still remaining president of branch. I think this was admitted to be for the best, and was finally satisfactory to all, Brn. Halstead and Smith being in direct charge.

Sr. Hammer made me very comfortable at her house, and I was welcomed at Dr. John Gilbert's, of pleasant memory, Bro. Shaw and others, indeed the Saints all welcomed me kindly and with confidence.

At Providence a good interest is manifest in the work. Bro. M. H. Bond in charge. He had done a good work, under adverse circumstances, however, and was slightly chafing under the responsibility. At a called meeting he was released, or rather released himself, and something of a reorganization of the branch was affected for the term; Brn. S. Brown, E. O. Toombs, McKenny and Moore in charge. There is some unsavory leaven at work there that has been a means of retarding the work and disturbing the unity and confidence of the Saints; but we have faith to believe that the Saints will settle down upon the facts and justness of things as they are made to appear, and preserve the interest of the cause, as a first duty, however partisan or biased in their personal feelings towards individuals or measures. There is a body of most excellent Saints at Providence. Bro. E. C. Briggs is putting in ministerial work there at this writing with telling effect, if we are rightly informed; getting up a revival. May the good work go on. I am interested in a special manner to Bro. and Sr. Rumert, Bro. and Sr. Gondolf, Brn. Blood, Bond and Potter for good care while there. Gratitude is a commendable virtue.

I spent three days in New Bedford at Bro. John Smith's. Met with the Saints of that place twice, Bro. E. C. Briggs being present on one occasion. We tried to say something of benefit and comfort to the Saints, but the efforts were not very stirring. May the interest increase in New Bedford. Bro. Smith took an interest in us and gave us a drive about the city which proved to be one of the finest in New England, wealth being piled up immensely. I enjoyed it, for I was not well, and the fresh breeze from the ocean did me good. I improved on the kind care of Mrs. Smith and Ester and the climatic change. Bro. Smith is holding the fort.

At Boston a good spirit is manifest among the Saints, Bro. E. N. Webster in charge. Efficient and earnest work is greatly needed here, although there are no flattering prospects that the city will be captured just now. There are earnest and devoted Saints, however, doing what they can to sustain the cause, and we have been greatly helped in presenting the word. There is not even that ready willingness to hear the word or improve upon opportunities offered that is manifest in many places, but the indifference is much as that which is exhibited in all large cities; the popular current, fable, fun, sentiment and entertainment are sought after and followed, rather than fact, except by the few, and they wander about as in the dark, doubtful, creed-killed and without confidence or faith. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest," has been to them but in caricature. The glory of the world, the pride of life—the broad way are the enchanting themes. Better be out of the world than out of fashion and style. "Great is the Diana of the Ephesians," is as an effectual stay to inquiry into fact by the masses, as of old. What is worse, there is no town clerk possessing either disposition or influence to demand a halt, and a return to sober thought.

A man is scarcely a gentleman any more, let alone a Christian—any way is an evident bigot—who will be so coarse in his manners as to inform his neighbor that he is in religious error;—not "saved just now." What is the use of being contentious when one can't go amiss, in the popular esteem?

There is an encouraging side, however. Earnest Saints are scattered here and there, who fairly represent the work, and occasionally one is brought into the fold, though shy, suspicious, wary, torn and bleeding, as if just escaped from being chased by wolves. No wonder the Savior said, "I send you out as sheep among wolves." The flock needs care. All Saints are not experienced, prudent, confident, wise, or confirmed in the faith. A growth is essential in the truth to enable one to withstand the various gusts of wind blowing about in old Babylon. May God confirm the honest and truth-loving and stay the march of evil.

LATER.—Yesterday brought out our largest audiences in Boston. A good feeling prevailed. Bro. Briggs is still enchanting his hearers with sound doctrine in Providence. He is happy and smiling. Bro. Whiting is on the Cape, sustaining the work. Just now we are under the parental care of Bro. and Sr. Steffe who are entitled to great credit for their interest manifested in the ministry. May deserved blessings follow them. Sr. Julia Glover was near the verge of leaving us, but the Saints were made glad by her presence at meeting on Sunday. Bro. Greene and consort are in Maine. Reunion at Jonesport, Maine—Frank, why don't you fix the time?

Fraternally,
WM. H. KELLEY.

WHY I AM A SAINT.

KNOX, Indiana, July 30th.

Dear Herald:—I shall not try to give you all the reasons why I hold this position.

In the spring of 1887, while brother Leonard Scott was doing a great deal of preaching in this county and around in other parts, I became interested in my soul's salvation, but having a proud heart, and fearing that I could not live a Christian life, I fought the idea of obeying the gospel while I was in this condition. One night after retiring, I dreamed that I had a dress to cut and that brother Leonard Scott laid down the old pattern and was marking the way to cut it.

This impressed me strongly, and it was evidence to me that he was showing me the old pattern, and it was not long till he led me into the waters of baptism. I have no reason to regret the step, but I have all reasons to rejoice that the good Father spared my life until I could hear the gospel and yield obedience to it.

I have been blessed in dreams, in prayer, and in testimony, and have also been healed by administration. There are Saints that may read this that are witnesses to the same. My father was smitten with a severe illness the 24th instant. He was suffering great pain, and it seemed that death would be a relief to him. As there were no elders near that we could send for, we took the advice of the Apostle James, "If there any afflicted let them pray." Ma and myself being the only Saints at home, we knelt down by dear Pa's bed-side and prayed earnestly for the Lord to restore him to health. He did not get instant relief, but the next day he was better, and on the 27th was able to work. These are some of the reasons why I am a Saint. Outside of the Latter Day Saint's Church I would not know where to go.

Brother Leonard Scott has done a great work here in the past, and we hope that he may do a greater work in the future. He called on us on the 12th instant while on his way to his field of labor. While here he preached two splendid sermons to good crowds and there seems to be a good interest manifested. May God bless him and all the laborers. I had the pleasure of meeting many of the Saints at the conference the 16th to the 18th of June held near Coldwater. Each session was well attended and it was a grand success. There is a noble band of Saints at Coldwater, and around what is known as the Fowler School-house, where the conference was held. It was strengthening to me, and I came home a stronger Latter Day Saint than ever.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am your sister, MOLLY PRETTYMAN.

BARNARD, Mo., July 26th.

Bro. Blair:—In a meeting of the Historical Society, held in San Francisco, a paper was read by Theodore H. Hittel, a notice of which appeared in the Bulletin about the first of last April, a part of which we here quote:

"It was said that California possesses some of the oldest known relics on the continent. The first authenticated record of the original occupants was found on the Table Mountain region, in Tuolumne county, and is of an age prior to the great volcanic outburst. Fossil remains of the rhinoceros and an extinct horse are found under the lava layers forming the Table Mountains, which are 1400 feet thick, 1700 feet wide, and many hundreds of feet high."

"There have been found spear heads, a pipe of polished stone, two scoops of stielatic rock, (resembling a grocer's scoop), an implement of argonite, resembling an unbent bow, but the use of which is unknown and can not be conjectured, a stone needle, with notches at the larger end, and the finest charm stones that have ever been found."

"There have been brought to light the fossils of nine mastodons, twenty elephants, various pachyderms in the Table Mountains, numerous evidences of animal life in the calcareous formations of the Texas flats, obsidian spear heads, fossils of the elephant, horse and camel about Hornites; bones, and evidences of prehistoric human industry in Tulare, and in Trinity and Siskiyou many proofs of the contemporaneous existence of man and extinct animals."

Of the discovery in Oregon last spring of a petrified hog, the Maryville, (Mo.), Republican, of March 1st, says: "It has now been discovered that in all probability the prehistoric man in this country ate pork, and very likely had an occasional attack of trichiniasis. In the sedimentary rocks of the John Day river canyon, in southern Oregon, was recently discovered, eighty-five feet below the surface, a petrified hog's head of full size and perfect shape. It had been supposed that swine were introduced into this country at a comparatively recent date, but now it may be believed that American pork chops and sausages are really as venerable as they often taste."

But what is more singular and important, a Dr. Wharton, of Arizona, has a shell with "Egyptian characters" inscribed on it that was found in that country. The Arizona Gazette refers to it thus: "A Gazette man called at Dr. Wharton's yesterday and was shown a shell on which were inscribed some Egyptian characters. This article was picked up on a farm in this valley. It was probably used as a spoon by some ancient to eat his meals with."

And now comes Augustus Le Plongeon, the Central American explorer, in his new work on the "Sacred Mysteries among the Mayas," in which he asserts that ancient Egyptian inscriptions are found on the Maya structures. He gives the alphabet as he found it, and it is said to be a duplicate of the ancient Egyptian alphabet as shown on the Rosetta Stone found at one of the mouths of the Nile nearly a century ago.

"Time," says Aristotle, "is the discoverer." It is bringing resistless proofs of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon—of the ancient civilization of which it speaks, its language and domestic animals such as the horse. It seems that scoffers could not be silenced by human witnesses, but now the very earth opens its mouth, revealing its fossils, relics, and inscriptions. And we are led to enquire, What next?

As ever watching,
WM. WOODHEAD.

SOUTH RAWDON, N. S., Aug. 2d.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—We are enjoying fair health and have some prospects of adding some to our number in the near future. Prejudice is very high, and it is hard to reach the masses; they are so set in their ways, and from father to son they are alike in this respect, and desire nothing better than they have religiously. Hence they are about fifty years behind in the sciences of the United States. Their ministry have complete control over them, or at least of the majority. What the Lord may do to waken up this people I do not know, but I do know this, that we can not do much unless he works with us. It matters not where man may go to present the gospel, God must go with him and open the way. We are doing all we can.

Bro. Robinson is holding forth at Port Greenville, and has baptized two. He is preaching at four different places. I have organized a Sabbath School here. We also hold two preaching services and a prayer meeting every Sabbath. I preach at three other places with some interest. I think a few will join us soon, as they are investigating. This is a much harder field to labor in than Kansas, with but little or no means of conveyance from place to place, except the walking, which is quite good.

In everlasting bonds, yours,
A. H. PARSONS.

CLEARWATER, Neb., Aug. 1st.

Bro. Joseph:—The two days' meeting held in a grove about one half mile south of Bro. Levi Gamet's place, July 28th and 29th, passed off very pleasantly. We expected Bro. Caffall to be present, but he failed to get here; pressing calls from other points preventing. There were six meetings held, all in the grove; the weather was fine, so that there was a good turnout, there being about two hundred on an average in attendance. The preaching was done by Elders B. Kester, John Rogerson, who spoke once each, and the writer three times; good attention was given. There is a growing desire to hear the word in different parts of this district. The local brethren of Clearwater are filling appointments in the regions round about as best they can. I think the holding of grove meetings during the summer season should be encouraged, as there can be more people reached that way than by any other.

I would be glad to correspond with any living within the limits of the Central, or North Nebraska districts, which comprises all the territory north of the Platte river, where it is thought good could be done; as I have been placed in charge of the North Nebraska district, it is expected that part of my time will be devoted there. I hope that all the priesthood of the above district will endeavor to honor their calling if it is not more than scattering tracts wherever you can find people to read them. Tracts will be furnished by applying to the Herald Office. I am blessed in presenting the word. My address will be Clearwater, Antelope county, Nebraska; box 126.

Yours in the covenant of peace,

W. M. RUMEL.

WHEATVILLE, Wis., Aug. 2d.

Dear Herald:—Forty-four years ago even, in 1844, I took a furlough from my first estate, to pass through this probationary pilgrimage. In all human probability more than one half of mortal anniversaries are chronicled. I hope that a merciful death and a sweet repose, or a painless death, and a glorious rest, will fall to my lot before the span is doubled to August 2d, when I will be eighty-eight, or forty-four years hence. For the last fourteen years, and more, I have been enrolled with this people, and thirteen years ago, less a very few days, I was set apart to the ministry since which time I have labored uniformly, constantly and persistently, to add to, and maintain the cause. I am not arrogant to say, or self-righteous to think, that I have at all times done for the best.

I painfully deplore lightness, giddiness, slothfulness, carelessness, imprudence and the like, but let us indulge the thought that these are but abnormal fits and fancies, and not the general rules of action. Two months ago Bro. Wildermuth, Pender, and self, met the local authorities here in quarterly conference. The district is sparsely scattered; depleted from various causes, and financially at rather a low ebb, and with but few elders that can even spare a limited portion of their time to the ministration of the word. The missionary force have done well, considering the busy season, for thirteen have been added to this branch, and mountains of prejudice removed. Bro. Pender and I have stuck together like twins, and alternated while breaking the bread of life. He is an humble, studious and ardent young minister. He is pointed, plain, and logical; and, by times, eloquent, sweeping, overwhelming, and powerful. We found an aged gentleman, who, with his sister, thought they were immovably anchored in the Seventh Day Adventist faith, while his wife was firmly grounded in Presbyterianism. They heard us many times in the Christian, or New Light church, and entertained us quite cheerfully. When we had delivered about a score of discourses the orthodox equilibrium lost her equipoise, and some of the members, and many of the friends began to declare in favor of us and the good gospel. This hurt so that the church was closed against us. Our Adventist friend fitted up his house, and then his front yard, to accommodate us and the people. Those three people seemed as honest as the day was long, and lo and behold, they are now Bro. John and Srs. Mary and Lydia Booker.

Bro. and Sr. Anderson, who were prominent members of the New Light church, as also their grown son and adult daughter, were all baptized last Sunday. Sectarian churches, town halls, and even School-houses are denied us here on account largely of the Catholic element.

Education, morality, and religion are not flourishing greatly, though exceptions are in abundance, and the people are generally sociable, clever, and kind.

Bro. E. M. Wildermuth has labored in this vicinity of Crawford county, as also in Vernon, Webster, and, at recent word, was in Sauk county. He is liked by the brotherhood, is cheerful, and toils with commendable zeal and fortitude. He roughs it, often afoot, with luggage, and alone, amid woodland hills and rocky crags. A more willing soul than he to do what he can it has not been my good fortune to meet. We think to meet with him in North Freedom next month, unless he is near Madison, where some wish to be baptized.

I am fully aware that concert, and concentration; patient pounding; irresistible energy; indomitable courage; consuming fire, and immaculate devotion, will establish truth and move the cause of redeeming love. The Lord has never so signally co-operated with me as recently, for strange and adverse faiths have been abandoned for the gospel; and the suspicious and timid have been won over, and even cruel hatred and ostracising persecution have been turned into tender love and Sainly devotion. Bless the living and true God, O my soul, magnify his name in all parts of his dominion. Praise ye the Lord! Let me exhort the eldership, all through the state to faithfulness, diligence, sobriety and every good word and work. And may all arise, rejoice, and go forth, like the horse of the wilderness, with the strength of the Unicorn, even the ark of the Lord Jehovah.

M. T. SHORT.

LAMONI, IOWA, Aug. 6th.

Dear Herald:—When I attempted to write for your pages last, I was in Idaho, doing what I could to advance the cause of Christ among the people of the Malad valley. The five faithful over at Samaria, were made glad and rejoiced in having a goodly number of their friends and neighbors come out to hear the reason for their hope in the gospel as preached by the Reorganization. I was informed that the attendance and attention were both somewhat better than had heretofore been accorded to our elders. I was greatly blessed by the Spirit, in freedom of thought and expression. I spent Sabbath, July 1st, with the Saints at Malad and sought to clearly set before them the duties of the children of the kingdom, and what it will cost to neglect the commandments of God, and while the Allwise will vouchsafe unto all His children the right and privilege to freely and fully exercise their agency, with the positive understanding, that one and all will be held to a strict account for their opportunities of accomplishing for themselves and others good, as contemplated in the gospel, and as illustrated in the life, character, and examples of him that "spake as never man spake." The accepting of the condition of the plan of salvation, with the hope of exaltation and glory, concludes upon each one who enlists under the banner of Christ, a leaving of the world with all the gratification of a selfish nature, and receiving with a cheerful heart the responsibility of avoiding the very appearance of evil, otherwise while the initial steps may have been taken to obtain the highest glory, and through carelessness, self-will, neglect or a grasping after the sordid things of the world, a forfeiture may eventuate by reason that we are not "valiant in the testimony of Jesus." Truly, to discover our own eccentricity, weakness or besetting sin, is ten-fold more of a hardship than to perceive the like attachments in a fellow mortal, and it is still a much greater task to humbly confess and correct whatever of mistake we may have imbibed. This is not usually done in human wisdom or strength; but becomes a delightful work, when divine love, meekness and humiliation, are planted in the soul by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

I preached twice at Elkhorn to small congregations, as "ranch" work, and excitement of the approaching Fourth attracted much more attention than their eternal happiness and salvation did.

I celebrated at Malad, and to me the day brought more of sadness than joy, neither will I write all that remains in memory of what I saw and heard on that occasion. There was a large gathering of the people. I was invited to a seat on the platform, and called upon for a speech. It might not have been an appropriate time and place, but I devoted my time in the advocacy of Temperance, for I saw much to inspire urging the necessity. When that Mountain west shall have adopted prohibition principles, I am of the opinion that Hell will be clothed in "sack cloth and ashes." I heard more profane language, and saw more drunken boys, young men, men, and old men, than for the past ten years on such an occasion. But all of this was not so distressing as to see the professed followers of Christ engaging in the dance, and teaching their children the same folly. And be it understood, the Bishop, who is the chief minister and spiritual guide, as a usual thing both opens and closes the dance with prayer, which is held in their house of worship dedicated to the service of God. His voice could be heard above the din and noise of the fun-loving, drinking crowd that made midnight hideous, while he called off, for his membership to trip away the sultry hours.

While I think there is much that is quite reprehensible in the religious teaching of the Utah people, still I am inclined to believe that it will be a more easy and graceful labor to correct the religious errors, than to purify the channels of society, and bring them up to the standard as indicated in the moral teachings contained in the revelations of God, given for the guidance and perfection of His chosen people. No man or church, can follow after the pleasures and vanities of the worldly, and have the Spirit of Christ, and fulfill the commandments of God. And still more, he that worships and labors from a sinister and selfish motive will ultimately come to shame and disgrace. Our devotion must be pure and sincere to gain for us the blessings of heaven.

Returned to Salt Lake City July 6th, and found that true, faithful, and worthy servant of Christ at the post of duty. I continued doing what little I could for the cause. There are a few, or the many, who have their names upon the branch record in that city, who are faithful in attending the meetings, and in giving substantial aid to sustain the cause there; but true religion is at a low ebb, and not in much demand by the seekers after pleasure and money, which there seems to be the sole objects of life, of Jew, Gentile, and Mormon.

During my entire absence from home this time, there had been almost constantly with me an uneasy, restless feeling, a kind of premonition of something about to transpire; and when on the evening of the 20th ult., I read a letter from Pres. W. W. Blair, informing me of the critical condition of my wife's health, and that it was thought best that I should return at my earliest convenience, I will not attempt to describe my feelings, for my heart felt like lead, while my brain was on fire with anxiety, on the grave responsibility of my mission. I lost no time in preparing for my homeward journey; done what I conceived the best for the Master's cause, and sought to clothe my two sermons of the Sabbath with pulchritude in the grace of truth, in the earnest hope of accomplishing unto the Saints some good, and for one I received comfort by the Spirit.

Traveling at the rate of twenty-nine miles per hour seems a "slow coach" when the brain is burning with excitement and anxiety. I am now devoting my whole time as a nurse, hopeful and trusting, can not say when I will be permitted to enter actively upon my duties as a missionary again, but try to be active and wise under existing circumstances.

In gospel bonds,

ROB'T. M. ELVIN.

KENT, Illinois, August 1st.

Brother David Dancer:—I do not know how I could get along without the Herald, Hope, Autumn Leaves, and Expositor. I am sorry that the Expositor is not better sustained, I think is a good paper. I have every number of it; I prize them highly, and I intend to take it as long as it is printed. I have every number of the Herald except one, and I have taken the Hope from the first number, and I expect to take them as long as I can see to read them. The church publications are all the preachers I have. I am all the church member that I know of in this part of the country. I sent to brother L. R. Devore and got the photographs of brother Joseph and Hyrum, and they are just splendid. They are life-like and natural, and bring to mind the last time I saw them—the time they crossed the prairie when they went to Carthage, in June, 1844, and was assassinated.

LEVI CHENEY.

SPRY, Ontario, July 27th.

Bro. Joseph:—Eight months ago I was inquiring for the deep and hidden treasures of God's word which are promised to them that ask, seek, and obey. Thanks be to God, with the help of the tracts you sent me, and a prayerful study of the Scriptures, I am enabled to see that the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints is the same as Jesus and his apostles taught. I was not left to investigate the doctrine alone. I received help from the opposers of truth. W. P. Brown's tract (pages 85 and 59), and David Whitmer's address to all believers in Christ, Lamb's "Golden Bible" [or humbug] was sent me last week. I was soon disgusted with them. The latter on pages 208 and 209 says there is nothing in the Book of Mormon about laying on of hands. But it will be found on pages 291, 458, 472, 533, blessing of children 455; and ordaining 221, 479, 553, &c. All through his book there are false statements and plain contradictions. It is a pity Mr. L. will not use for his glory the talents the good Lord has endowed him with.

Elder McIntosh was with us teaching and preaching, some believed and obeyed, but the majority of the people are as stated by Bro. McIntosh in his letter to the Herald, June 9th, that if a forlorn looking country is any index to a forlorn people, then the gospel would (or should be) the greatest boon that could be sent them. Before he left he found many of them in a de-preaved and forlorn condition.

We are trying to keep up our prayer meetings, and sometimes quite a number comes, but generally they seem to keep aloof for fear of contamination. My husband and many others will not believe but what we are in some way connected with the Utah Mormons, because we acknowledge the Book of Mormon to be of divine origin. They say, Why not deny it? Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain your sister in gospel bonds, MRS. J. H. JOHNSON.

ANGOLA, Kansas, August 2d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I realize that this is the latter day work, and have been for some time teaching the law of tithing in the branches of this district. They are some distance apart, but I rode to some and walked to others, and I hope the members will pay particular attention to the law, as by so doing we may accomplish the will of God in that direction, then all other blessings will follow. I am very glad to see the people beginning to see the necessity of keeping that law. I hope that the Saints in Spring River district will see this. I ask them to address me at Angola, LaBette county, Kansas.

Your brother,

R. H. DAVIS.

COOKE'S POINT, Tex., Aug. 2d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I left home May 22d; have preached at Central branch; thence northwest of Cooke's Point, ten miles at two places; thence to Elmwood branch, Bell county; thence to Durango, Falls county; thence to Cyclone, Bell county; thence to Rogers, Bell county; thence to Lee county, at Smith Springs; thence to Texas Central branch where I met the Saints in conference and had a pleasant session. I am now at Bro. William Sherrills'. There is a good deal of sickness here. I have preached thirty-seven times; baptized four, administered to fifteen sick, some in the church and some out; have felt splendid when performing the duties of my office. I have promised my kindred to return to Lee county, August 12th. My brother, S. R. Ezzell, of the Christian faith, is expected there then, and they want to hear both of us from the same stand. My brother-in-law told me when I was there, that they recognized Bro. Samuel as a big preacher, and that he and other able men had preached there; "But," said he, "I tell you, Levi, you preached the ablest sermon that was ever preached at Smith Springs." This was on Sunday, July 15th. I will do my best by the help of the Master to get the gospel before the people. Pray the Lord to bless me in this great work; for it is grand to preach about. In love to all Saints. My address is Beaukiss, Williamson county, Texas. In bonds,

REST.

FROM time immemorial the world has been full of unrest, but there has probably never been a time more fully characterized by the spirit of unrest than the age or dispensation in which we live. All nations seem to be stirred to their very center with a spirit of uneasiness and dissatisfaction, both in political, scientific, religious, social, and individual matters.

The world is filled with the cries, "Lo here!" and "lo there!" and "men's hearts are [truly] failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."—Luke 21: 26.

That mankind might have rest, Jesus the Christ was born into the world, at which time the angel of the Lord in company with the heavenly host appeared and were heard to sing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke 2: 14.

Not that the world was to be at that time overwhelmed with the reign of universal peace, for "this same Jesus" emphatically declared a few years later, "I am not come to send peace, but a sword."—Matt. 10: 34. But he came with the message of peace which was to be universal only so far as it should be received, believed in, and obeyed, until he comes "in all his glory," to usher in the reign of universal peace, of a thousand years, when everything must be in harmony with his divine will.

That no one need be without this peace to a very large degree, is quite evident from the following language of the Savior:

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."—Matt. 11: 28-30.

How comforting the words, "all who labor and are heavy laden." The poor and way-worn, the over-burdened mother, the needy and helpless, the lame and blind, the deaf and dumb, and the spiritually sick of every nation and clime may, if they will, come to him and find that rest, even in this life, which excels all the joys of earth beside:

"And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."—Phil. 4: 7.

Not that you will never meet with any trials or sorrow; for you most assuredly will; but that when these trials and sorrows come, you will be able "to lay hold upon the hope set before us," "which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."—Heb. 6: 18, 19.

Rest does not always mean a cessation from labor; therefore we may see how the Savior rested and could give rest to others, in the gospel, while he toiled for the salvation of men.

This rest comes to the child of God because he is reconciled to God and feels that through his faith and obedience to the gospel, God for Christ's sake has forgiven all his sins.

The consciousness that God approves of our daily walk and conversation; the knowledge that is imparted of the Spirit by which we know that we are the children of God; and the assurance given of a future life of joy and peace in the presence of God and his Christ, where there shall be no more sorrow or death; where all the good and true of earth, including fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, husbands, wives and children, shall meet to part no more, gives us that rest and unspeakable joy of the soul that words can not express.

It is true that we sorrow in this life when the cruel monster, death, lays his icy hand upon relatives and friends who have made life so pleasant. And so we should, for the "sympathizing Jesus" wept with Martha and Mary at the grave of his friend Lazarus. But when we are enabled to fully realize the glorious rest that awaits those dear ones, even in the intermediate state; that is, the rest that is prepared for the spirits or souls of the righteous between death and the resurrection, we are enabled to cry out in the language of the Apostle Paul: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."—Phil. 1: 21.

Yes gain; passing from a lower into a higher sphere or state of being, where the rest of the soul is more complete and full than in this, although it is not the highest glory or most perfect rest that is prepared for the people of God.

To prove that the rest prepared for the children of God in this intermediate state is grand and glorious, allow me to call your attention to the following passages of Scripture bearing upon the point.

"Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whether I go ye know, and the way ye know."—John 14: 1-4.

"Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord: We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."—2 Cor. 5: 6, 8.

From the foregoing language of the apostle Paul it is very plain that he believed not only that the spirits of men were conscious between death and the resurrection, but that the souls of the righteous were received into the presence of Christ, into a state of happiness, rest, joy and peace, until they received their part in the first resurrection. Should there be any doubts in your minds with reference to the subject, please read the following: "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better: Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you."—Phil. 1: 23, 24.

"And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke 23: 42, 43.

Least some one should object to this last quotation and say that it proved too much, for it not only proves that the righteous entered into rest in the presence of Christ, but also that the wicked enjoyed the same blessing, we would say: There is no proof that the thief was not a baptized believer in Christ, who had in an evil hour been overtaken in a fault, but the evidence goes to show that he was; but suppose he had not been; will any one presume to say that Christ had not the right to forgive him, and that he did not? I think not, nor will thus justify any one in believing that the Lord Jesus will forgive them without their compliance with his holy law, for all should remember that they are not expiring with Christ on the cross as he was.

The prophet Alma in his testimony in the Book of Mormon on this subject, seems to be in perfect harmony with Christ and Paul as quoted above; it reads:

"And now I would enquire what becometh of the souls of men, from this time of death to the time appointed for the resurrection? Now whether there is more than one time appointed for men to rise, it mattereth not: for all do not die at once: and this mattereth not; all this is as one day with God; and time only is measured unto men; therefore there is a time appointed unto men, that they shall rise from the dead: and there is a space between the time of death and the resurrection.

"And now concerning this space of time. What becometh of the souls of men, is the thing which I have enquired diligently of the Lord to know; and this is the thing which I do know. And when the time cometh when all shall rise, then shall they know that God knoweth all the times which are appointed unto man.

"Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all their care, and sorrow, &c. And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil; for behold, they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord: for behold they choose evil works, rather than good: therefore the spirit of the devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house [body]: and these shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth; and this because of their iniquity: being led captive by the will of the devil. Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked: yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection."—Book of Alma, 19: 5, 6.

Besides this there remaineth a more perfect rest for the people of God, when the spirit, and the element which formed the body shall again be united in the likeness of Christ's most glorious body, thus enabling them to enjoy the fulness of bliss: "The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fulness of joy; and when separated man can not receive a fulness of joy. The elements are the tabernacle of God; yea, man is the tabernacle of God, even temples; and whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple."—D. & C. sec. 90: 5. See also 1 Cor. 3: 16, 17; 6: 19, 20.

The element referred to above is the fleshly tabernacle, or body; therefore it was created that it might be perfected, sanctified, and "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," through obedience to Christ, and by the power of his resurrection, as may be seen by the following:

"Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we [the believers in Christ] shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15: 51-53.

That there is to be a resurrection of the dead, both of good and bad, please see the following: 1 Cor. 15: 21-23; Acts 24: 14, 15, 20, 21; Job 19: 23-27; Isaiah 26: 19-21; Hosea 13: 14.

To show that in the resurrection the righteous are justified and the wicked condemned, read the following: Dan. 12: 2, 3; John 5: 25-29; 1 Cor. 15: 40-44; Rev. 20: 4, 5, 6.

The resurrection,—the re-uniting of the spirits and bodies of those who die in Christ,—will take place when he comes "the second time without sin unto salvation," as shown below:

"So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—(Heb. 9: 28.) "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

"For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 13-17.

The glory of the resurrected body and the means by which we are prepared for that glory is very beautifully shown in the following: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world [the wicked] knoweth us [the church] not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he [Christ] shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him [of meeting Christ when he appeareth and being like him, and entering into his rest] purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John 3: 1, 2, 3.

The great rest for which the children of God are watching and waiting is to take place when they reign with Christ upon the earth a thousand years; and, as they are prepared for this glory and rest by obedience to divine law and a cleansing from sin by water, fire, and the Holy Ghost (See Matt. 3: 11; Acts 1: 5; John 3: 5), so likewise shall the earth not only be subject to divine law (as it ever has been from the beginning) but shall also be cleansed from the curse and from the sins of her children, by water, fire and the Holy Ghost, thus becoming a fit abode for Christ and the redeemed, and shall with them participate in that invigorating, life-giving and wonderful rest, prepared for all the creation of God.

As a great number of those who believe the Bible will admit that the earth was cleansed from sin by water in the days of Noah, we will call attention to her second cleansing, as shown in the following: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall shake, and the earth also shall tremble, and the mountains shall melt, and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat; the earth also shall be filled, and the corruptible works which are therein shall be burned up. If, then, all these things shall be destroyed, what manner of persons ought ye to be to be in holy conduct and godliness? looking unto, and preparing for the day of the coming of the Lord wherein the corruptible things of the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the mountains shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless, if we shall endure, we shall be kept according to his promise. And we look for a new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Peter 3: 10-13, (Inspired Translation). See also Luke 3: 5; Isa. 40: 4, 5; 11: 1-9.

That the righteous shall reign upon the earth see Rev. 5: 9, 10; also the following: "And again Enoch wept, and cried unto the Lord, saying, When shall the earth rest?"

And Enoch beheld the Son of Man ascend up unto the Father; and he called unto the Lord, saying, Wilt thou not come again upon the earth? for inasmuch as thou art God, and I know thee, and thou hast sworn unto me, and commanded me that I should ask in the name of thine Only Begotten; thou hast made me, and given me a right to thy throne, and not of myself, but through thine own grace; wherefore I ask thee if thou wilt not come again on the earth?

"And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days, in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfil the oath which I made unto you concerning the children of Noah.

"And the day shall come that the earth shall rest. But before that day the heavens shall be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake and also the earth. And great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven, and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of mine Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men.

"And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep earth as with a flood, to gather out mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which I shall prepare; an holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion; a New Jerusalem. And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shalt thou and all thy city meet them there; and we will receive them into our bosom; and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they shall fall upon our necks, and we will kiss each other; and there shall be mine abode, and it shall be Zion, which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest."—Inspired Translation, Gen. 7: 65-72.

In connection with the foregoing please read Heb. 11: 5, and Jude 14, 15, Common version.

What beautiful harmony there is between the testimony of the Lord through Enoch and the following from Revelations 21: 1-4:

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; [cleansed by the spirit of burning, and molded anew]; and there was no more sea.

"And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

"And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

In connection with this read Rev. 19: 7, 8. What a blessed assurance! what a glorious hope! what a wonderful reality! No wonder the poet was inspired to sing:

"How glorious will be the morning,
When Christ will come to earth again;
The Saints of God are ever waiting,
A thousand years with Him to reign."

It makes no difference to us whether all this shall be fulfilled during the mellenium, or but a part of it, after the close of, or immediately following, the general judgment; for it is written for the consolation of those who shall have made themselves ready:—"So shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 17.

Therefore we know that when Christ shall have "gathered together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth," when the church militant, and the church triumphant shall have been brought together at the marriage of the Lamb, we shall have on the wedding garment and be partakers of the feast.

Then with all the redeemed from Adam to Christ on one side; and from Christ to the end of time on the other, with the Lord Jesus in the center, we shall assist to form that grand phalanx who shall take up that march of triumph, when Christ shall "deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father;" "that God may be all in all."

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 4.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

ABOUT this time Josephus began to think about providing for his own safety by escaping from the beleaguered city; but induced by the entreaties of the people who besought him with tears not to desert their failing fortunes, and fearful also lest if he refused, they might detain him by force, he relinquished his design, and endeavored to raise their sinking valor by exciting oratory, and by the influence of his own example. He at once devised and headed the most desperate sallies; rushed with irresistible fury on the outguards, penetrated even to the Roman camp; tore down the tents that were upon the embankment, and set fire to the works. For several days in succession these intrepid attacks were continued, the active and half armed Jews having greatly the advantage over the legionaries, burdened with the weight of complete armor; until Vespasian, seeing his troops distressed with this unequal warfare, determined to bring up his last resource—the terrible battering-ram. This he was able to do now, for he had at length carried the bank nearly up to the city wall.

The battering-ram was the most formidable implement of ancient artillery, and was the grand means of taking a city by storm. It consisted of an immense beam of timber, armed at one end with a solid mass of iron, commonly shaped like a ram's head; the other end was furnished with ropes by which it was worked. The beam when prepared for use, was slung in the middle, by a stout rope or chain, from another beam overhead supported by tall upright posts at each end. This mighty engine was put in motion by the united force of many men, who by means of the ropes drew back the beam; then letting it go, the iron rams-head swung against the wall with such a shock, that the most solid and compact edifice could rarely resist its repeated blows. The vibration soon shook and loosened the structure, and perseverance was sure to be rewarded by success. The first blow of the mighty ram falling upon the doomed wall of Jotapata caused the whole city to tremble; and the garrison, who had little appreciated the power of the engine at once set up a terrible cry, as if the towers and battlements were already falling about them. Nor could any ordinary device avail to repel or prevent its attacks, for the whole framework was encased in hurdles, and roofed with raw hides, so as to render the projection of missiles and even fire darts of no avail, had they been used; but the Catapults and the Ballistæ were sweeping the walls, so that the Jews could not get upon the battlements to throw them. The inventive genius of Josephus, however, was not yet exhausted. As the ram continued incessantly battering at the same spot, the Jewish commander perceived that the solidity of the wall could not much longer resist the repeated blows; in order, therefore, to break their force, he filled large sacks with chaff, and suspending them by ropes from the battlements, hung them in front of the iron head of the engine. The violence of the blows was much lessened by the passive resistance of this half-yielding substance; nor could the Romans readily elude this stratagem; for though they removed their machine to another part of the wall, the sacks could be removed much more easily, and be beforehand with it. At length, the army, fastening scythes to the end of long poles, managed to cut the ropes that held the sacks, and so got rid of this ingenious impediment.

Incited again to rage and despair by the renewed blows of the heavy battering-ram, and perceiving that the newly built wall was beginning to yield, the Jews rushed forth from the gates in three parties, carrying fire and combustibles, and so vigorously attacked the works and machines as to do a great deal of damage before the army could prevent it; for the dryness of the materials, aided by the pitch and sulphur which were among them, readily caught fire, and burned with a fierce flame not easily extinguished. Such was the impetuosity of these desperate assaults, that they sometimes bore all before them; so that in one of the conflicts even the renowned fifth and tenth legions were simultaneously put to flight, and the machines and other works belonging to these divisions were burned and the materials that resisted the fire were buried. While these furious contests were raging without, a daring exploit was performed, which received universal applause. A Jew, named Eleazar, standing upon the wall, threw from him a stone of vast weight upon the ram, with so true an aim that the iron head was broken from the beam. Seeing his success he instantly leaped down, and catching up the head from the midst of the astonished Romans, bore it back to the top of the wall. A shower of darts fell around his unprotected body as he was climbing up, but, though transfixed by five javelins, he gained the battlements, displayed his prize in triumph and then fell dead. But such exploits as these could not avert the ultimate issue of the conflict. Another head was fitted to the beam, and before a day had elapsed the terrible machine was dealing its blows with the same regularity as before; while the catapults and ballistæ hurled their huge stones and showers of darts with incessant activity, sweeping off the groups of Jews who showed themselves upon the battlements. Some of these engines were truly terrible; stones of a hundred weight were hurled with immense force to a great distance; the noise that accompanied their discharge, and the crash that announced their fall, increased the terror with which they were regarded. Some horrible instances are given by the ancient historians of the effect of these missiles, of which, (omitting others more dreadful), we will mention one that occurred in this very siege: A man who was standing on the wall close to Josephus was struck on the neck by a stone from a catapult, and the severed head was hurled by the impetus to the distance of three furlongs.

And now the dreadful night was come when the strength of the solid wall could no longer resist the thundering strokes of the mighty ram. On the previous evening a slight wound received by Vespasian, had increased the exasperation of the army; and with a deeper determination to wipe out the disgrace of delay, and with loud shouts and cries of rage, they rushed impetuously onward to the foot of the walls. The engines were plied with double vigor; the hurling storm of stones and darts filled the air; the latter piercing the bodies of whole groups of men, and the former crushing all before them, and sweeping a passage for themselves through the living ranks; the pinnacles and battlements of the wall, and the angular projections of the towers were torn off by the forceful masses, and occasionally a turret would fall with a frightful crash. But still Josephus and those with him, although they were struck dead one upon another by the darts and stones which the engines threw upon them, did not yet desert the wall, but fell upon those who worked the ram, under the protection of the hurdles, with fire, and iron weapons and stones; and these could do little or nothing, but fell themselves one after another, while they were seen by those whom they could not see, for the light of their own flame shone about them, and made them a most visible mark to the enemy, while the engines could not be seen at a great distance.

The noise of the instruments themselves was very terrible, the sound of the darts and stones was likewise appalling. Of the same sort was the noise the dead bodies made, when dashed against the wall; and dreadful indeed was the clamor which these things raised among the women within the city, and which was echoed back at the same time, by the cries of such as were dying; while the whole space of ground whereon they fought ran with blood, and the wall might have been ascended over the bodies of the dead. The mountains also contributed to the noise by their echoes; nor was there anything on that night of terror wanting that could either affect the hearing or the sight; yet did a great part of those that fought so hard for Jotapata fall manfully, as were a great part of them wounded. (Josephus Wars III vii., 23). Towards the morning watch, the massive stones of the wall, which had been loosening the whole night, gave way, and a great breach yawned in the solid structure. The Romans shouted at the sight, but the poor Jews felt that all was lost for them, and that nothing remained but to sell their lives as dearly as possible. And who shall paint the agony of the timid women and helpless children, when they saw that no barrier lay between them and the brutal and infuriated Roman soldiers, and knew that nothing awaited them but a horrible death, or a captivity which would be even more intolerable.

In the morning, after a brief interval of repose, Vespasian prepared for the assault in the following order. A body of men selected from the bravest of the cavalry, were made to dismount, and stationed in triple rank in front of the breach; they were encased in complete armor, and held long poles in their hands, that they might mount the breach as soon as the bridges were laid. Behind these were placed the flower of the infantry. The remainder of the horsemen were extended around the city, upon the adjacent hills, to cut off such of the garrison as should attempt to escape in the assault, and outside all were placed the archers, who were mostly mercenaries.

Several feint attacks were directed to be made at various parts of the walls, to call off the attention of the garrison from the defense of the breach, but the generalship of Josephus was not inferior to that of his experienced antagonist. The defence of the sound parts of the wall he entrusted to such as were infirm from age, sickness, or fatigue; while he mustered his whole force where he well knew the assault would really be made. Nor did he shrink from taking his own share in the imminent peril. Having ranged his most vigorous soldiers in the breach, he selected six of tried valor, whom he placed in the foremost rank, to bear the first brunt of the onslaught; and of these six he himself was one. He warned his men of the terrific shout with which the legionaries would rush to the combat, that they might not be paralyzed by it, and of the shower of arrows with which their attack would be covered. Against the effect of the former he recommended them to stop their ears, and the latter he instructed them to avoid, by suddenly bending themselves forward at the moment of discharge and covering their heads with their uplifted shields; and as soon as they saw the planks laid for the enemy to ascend the breach, they were ordered to rush out in a body, not with any hope to save the city,—for that was now impossible,—but to revenge their calamities as much as they could.

To incite their fury, the commander in brief but burning words, set before their imagination their aged parents massacred, their tender babes dashed to pieces, and their wives and daughters abused, by the brutal and implacable foe before them.

That the courage of his troops might not be impaired by the cries of the women and children, Josephus had commanded that these should be confined to their houses, not without threats of immediate punishment, if they did not restrain their grief; for when these helpless and hopeless creatures had looked around, and seen not only the walls thrown down, but the city encompassed with a three-fold army, the glittering swords in the hands of the soldiery, the sun gleaming at every point from the steel-clad hosts on the surrounding hills, and the darts in the hands of the Arabian archers, and marked the fierce and ruthless countenances that glared upon the devoted city, such a wailing shriek had suddenly arisen and been echoed from the mountains, as if the full tide of their misery had already overwhelmed them.

And now the trumpets of the legions sounded for the assault, and the army sent forth such a shout, that the hills rang again, at the same moment the air was filled with a cloud of arrows that intercepted the light of the sun. But the Jews, acting according to their instructions, suffered little from either; but as soon as the bridges were laid, they rushed out upon them, before they were occupied by the besiegers, and a furious fight took place in front of the breach. The legions, kept at bay for awhile, at length uniting into a compact mass, with their shields interlocked above their heads, forced back the valiant defenders, and had already reached the wall, when another maneuver of the fertile mind of Josephus once more turned for a moment, the tide of conquest.

A brief space of time sufficed to heat the oil, which in that country was found in abundance in every house, it was soon brought in large quantities to the breach, and at once poured down in a boiling state on the heads of the crowding hosts that were pressing upwards. Neither their compact array, nor their interlocked shields, nor their iron armor, could protect them from this terrible enemy; it trickled down within their coats of mail, spreading over their bodies like living flame and eating the flesh from their bones. The armor in which the unhappy men were enveloped only rendered the torture more intolerable; the ranks fell down and writhed in anguish, many plunged headlong from the bridges, and others rushed back upon the weapons of their friends pressing on from behind. The advantage thus gained was at once improved by the indefatigable Jews; for they immediately poured upon the sloping planks of which the bridges were formed, a quantity of boiled herbs, by which they were rendered so slippery that the Romans found it impossible to maintain their footing. All their attempts to ascend were unavailing; they continually fell down or slid back upon the bank; while the Jews, now freed from the necessity of fighting hand-to-hand, threw missiles upon them with great execution.

At length on the approach of night, Vespasian called off his baffled soldiers, having sustained a heavy loss of men, both killed and wounded, while that of the Jews was not inconsiderable. Thus once more repulsed, the Roman general despaired of entering the city by the breach while it was thus vigorously defended. He then commanded the banks to be raised still higher, and three towers to be erected in them, each fifty feet in height, which he overlaid with plates of iron, that they might not be easily set on fire, and that they might acquire stability from their weight. On the summits of these towers were stationed slingers and archers, with the lightest of the engines for throwing stones and darts; and these, being now in height far above the city wall, were able to pour down their missiles with great advantage; while the Jews found it impossible to maintain the unequal conflict with an enemy to whose attacks they were fully exposed, but who was wholly beyond the reach of their weapons. All they could do was to make occasional sallies, which though attended with much loss to themselves did little damage to the foe. Still the Romans were kept without the walls, notwithstanding that every day the advance of their works was more and more perceptible; and still the poor beleaguered city bore up manfully under its misfortunes, though from the most sanguine of its inhabitants hope had long departed. At last on the forty-seventh day of the siege, and ten days after the breach had been made in the walls, the gigantic embankment of the Romans overtopped the battlements of Jotapata, but this unhappy city was destined to fall by treachery, not by force. On this fatal day a renegade Hebrew stole from the devoted place, and crawling to the Roman commander, purchased his own base life by a betrayal of his city and people. This treacherous miscreant represented that now few men were left in the garrison, and those so worn with fatigue, with watching, and with wounds, that even the sentinels could not perform their duty; but that in the last watches of the night they were sure to be asleep. The deserter, therefore, advised that a body of soldiers should steal silently up to the breach just before daybreak, kill the sentinels, and take the city gates before the alarm could be given. The caution of the Roman veteran made him receive this information with reserve. He strongly suspected another of those stratagems which had already effectively told upon his troops. The devotion of the Jews to their cause, and their incorruptibility, had been extraordinary; the prisoners taken in the siege had alike despised the promises of reward, and the infliction of torments. One of these, after having been horribly tortured with fire, was at length crucified; yet he not only steadfastly refused to communicate anything of the state of the garrison, but smiled in scorn upon his murderers when in the agonies of death.

As the story told by the renegade, however, bore evidence of extreme probability, and as, in case of its falsehood, little damage seemed likely to accrue from the experiment proposed, Vespasian, ordering the man to be kept in strict custody till the event should be known, appointed the next night for the silent assault. On the morning of the first day of the month Tammuz—the last morning that unhappy Jotapata was destined to see—a dense and blinding mist brooded over the city. The light of the stars, “the burning stars of that pure sky,” that commonly sparkled radiantly upon the mountain fortress was now eclipsed; and it was in deep darkness that the Roman soldiers selected for the assault set out upon the enterprise.

Slowly and noiselessly they mounted the machines, and climbed the breach. Titus, the illustrious son of Vespasian, was the first to set foot upon the wall; after him came Domitius Sabinus, the tribune, and a few men of the fifteenth legion. They found the watch sunk in a slumber deep as death, as the deserter had reported; and these they instantly slew without noise. The way being thus clear, the tribunes, Cerealis and Placidus, led on the troops under them, and the prize so long desired was theirs at last; Jotapata was in the possession of the Romans. Overpowered with fatigue, the people slept soundly, unconscious of their danger, though now it was broad day-light, and the Roman army was now crowding the streets; and when the keen edge of the sword at length aroused them from their slumbers, so dense was the fog that it was some time before they perceived the full extent of their misery, or knew that the city was taken. Yet the merciless conquerors left them not long in doubt; pity was unknown to their breasts; and now they were exasperated to the highest degree by the recollection of the brave defense which had so long baffled them of their prey. The sword, therefore, fell without compassion; old and young, man and maiden, infant and suckling, were hewn to pieces, and horrors undecipherable reigned without control. The portraiture of the cruel one who now reigned rampant in Judah's cities had long before been drawn by the pen of Him that can not err, and that can not lie. “A beast dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth; it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it.” The righteous Lord of Hosts had let loose the Roman “beast,” upon the sinful people of His heritage, and fearfully he did his work. Down the deep and narrow streets the iron-clad legions poured, slaying and trampling under their mailed feet the poor helpless throngs that now made no resistance; and many of the men seeing that all was lost, preferred to die by their own hands. A few of the boldest took refuge in a tower, and for a while made a show of defense; but seeing themselves encompassed by the enemy, they at length submitted their necks quietly to the sword. Josephus reports, what indeed is scarcely credible, that in that day of horrible carnage, the Romans lost but a single man, a centurian, who was slain by a Jew to whom he had offered quarter. The whole of that long day was spent in massacre; and when night at length fell, none of the people of Jotapata remained alive, but the few that had concealed themselves in wells and caverns and other secret hiding places. The next day these were carefully searched for; the men were butchered, and the women and children to the number of twelve hundred, were reserved for a horrible captivity. Forty thousand Jews slain during the siege offered the first sacrifice to Roman vengeance. And now the city was razed to the ground, the fortifications were demolished, and but a heap of blackened ruins remained to tell where the gallant mountain-fortress had once stood proudly rearing its beautiful head to the sky. . . . "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by; behold, see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. From above hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevailed against them, he hath spread a net for my feet, he hath turned me back, he hath made me desolate and faint all the day. The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand, they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck; he hath made my strength to fail, the Lord hath delivered me into their hands, from whom I am not able to rise up. The Lord hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me; he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men; the Lord hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a winepress. For these things I weep; mine eye, mine eye, runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me; my children are desolate because the enemy prevailed."—Lam. 1: 12-16.

Bishop's agent's report:—Cash on hand March first $30, received since $383.25, total $413.25, paid out $205.60, balance $207.65, Jno. Pett, agent. Preaching in the evening by Bro. C. Derry. Saturday, 16th, Bro. J. Baker presented a request made by the Boyer Valley branch, that a District Sabbath School Association be organized by consent and authority of this conference. On motion a committee of three, Wm. McKim, J. M. Baker, and C. Derry were appointed by the chair to take the matter into consideration and report to this conference. A committee, viz, G. Myers, W. Bullard and N. H. Brogden were appointed to examine the Bishop's agent's books. A two days' meeting was appointed to be held at the Salem branch, Chas. E. Butterworth and Joseph Seddon in charge, and a two days' meeting at Auburn, Sac county, brethren W. Whiting and J. T. Turner in charge. A request was made by the president of the North Coon branch that two elders be sent to labor there, and in the adjoining county, (Green), from one to ten days. Brn. C. E. Butterworth and J. Pett were, on motion, appointed. The committee appointed to examine the bishop's agent's books reported having found them correct. The report was accepted and adopted and committee discharged. The committee on District Sabbath School Association reported as follows:—"We your committee do hereby recommend that the request of the Boyer Valley branch, respecting the organization of a Sabbath School Association be carried out, and that such an organization be formed in the Galland's Grove district, by and with the consent of this district conference, and that all Sabbath Schools belonging to the several branches of the church in said district, be invited to unite with the said association. The officers of such organization to consist of a general superintendent, assistant superintendent, and a secretary. And that such superintendent be authorized to organize new schools wherever and whenever called upon within the limits of said district." The report was accepted and adopted and the committee discharged. Bro. James Baker was appointed general superintendent of the Sabbath School Association, Charles J. Hunt, assistant superintendent, and Sr. Fanny Pett, secretary. Bro. Charles J. Hunt made a statement in regard to courtesy shown and privilege granted him by the editor of the Manilla Register in publishing a reply to a slanderous lecture delivered by Rev. L. Alford, against the Latter Day Saints, and also of publishing the epitome of the faith and doctrine of the church, whereupon the following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted: "Whereas Rev. L. Alford delivered a slanderous lecture against the Latter Day Saints, which appeared in the Manilla Register under dates of March 29th and April 5th, last; and whereas the editor of that journal printed a reply thereto by Bro. Charles J. Hunt, and also published the epitome of the faith and doctrine of the Saints in issues, of later date. Therefore be it resolved that this conference tender the said editor a vote of thanks for his just and gentlemanly course in affording a misunderstood and persecuted people the privilege of defending their faith and reputation through the columns of his paper." A copy of the foregoing was ordered sent to the editor. Resolved that we thankfully accept of the appointment by Bro. J. R. Lambert, missionary in charge, of Bro. Chas. Derry to labor a portion of his time and have charge in the Galland's Grove district. Bro. W. W. Whiting was appointed to preside over the district until after the close of the next conference; he to have the privilege of choosing an assistant. Bro. C. E. Butterworth was his choice, and on motion was sustained as assistant president. Bro. Ira A. Goff was appointed to labor in Guthrie county. The spiritual and temporal authorities of the church were sustained in their office and calling. In the evening preaching by Pres. W. W. Blair. Sunday forenoon a good spiritual prayer meeting was had, after which Bro. Blair read Rev. 22, and spoke of the joys and happiness, and glory that will be given as rewards to the faithful ones. Bro. C. Derry was appointed to preach in the afternoon, but a heavy rain prevented the people from assembling. In the evening Bro. Blair preached from the text, "I am the way," etc. A good interest was manifest in all the meetings, and the spirit of quietness and joy and peace prevailed throughout. Adjourned to meet at Galland's Grove, Friday, November 16th, at 2:30 p. m.

THOMAS DAY ON MORMONISM.

IN April of this year, 3d, 4th, and 5th, there met in convention in Salt Lake City, Utah, a number of ministers from, and belonging to the different Christian denomination represented in the territory, there being more than a hundred delegates of them. The object of the convention was to secure a better understanding among these gentlemen from differing organizations as to the subject of Mormonism and the best way to work for its overthrow. The result is published in a pamphlet issued by Frank H. Nelden & Co., Salt Lake City, 1888, and is entitled "Christian Progress in Utah. The Discussions of the Christian Convention held in Salt Lake City." One of the delegates to this convention was Thomas F. Day, pastor of the Presbyterian church, at American Fork, Utah, who read a paper upon the theme: "Mormonism as an obstacle to Christianity." This essay we give entire, and offer thereon the comment that we deem necessary.

"It is not my purpose to set forth in detail the numerous perversions of the truth which underlay the Mormon system. That has in part been done in the excellent paper to which we have listened. I am to consider these perversions as practical hindrances to Christian success. Mormonism as an obstacle to Christianity, is my theme.

"1. We may as well admit the fact that the Mormon system is an obstacle. The Christian system, as you and I receive it, finds in Mormonism a stalwart and determined foe. The antagonism appears at many points. For the sake of clearness, let us proceed along the familiar lines traversed by Christian theology, touching on points where the opposition is most pronounced. Time would fail me were I to try to enumerate them all. I shall confine myself to these five topics, viz.: Revelation, God, Man, Salvation, the Church.

"(1.) And first, take Revelation. It is one of the glories of Christianity, that it successfully challenges belief on the ground of an authenticated revelation of God's will. It carries a book by which it will stand or fall. It asks no favor. It demands credence on the score of worth. It deprecates credulity. It invites research. It claims the homage of the intellect without resort to mummery or special pleading. The conflicts that have raged about the Bible are part of the record of its permanence. Christianity would be a weakling, indeed, if it divorced from that splendid line of evidences which is its historic dower. The sources of its credibility are the indisputable facts of history. Its course has been a perennial triumph. Its achievements are the marvels of the centuries. Its power to silence cavil, and rebuke the shallow sneer, is overwhelming. Its hold upon the world's intelligence is due, not to mere reverence for its antiquity, but to the cumulative evidence of its divine origin.

"Let us pass now within the confines of this new system. Explain it as we may we feel that we are in an entirely different atmosphere. Things have a dubious and capricious look. Mormonism plays fast and loose with revelation. It claims to believe the Bible, but it discredits the sources on which the authenticity of the Bible rests. It takes what it likes, and what it does not like it attributes to mistranslation. It claims infallibility for books of its own, and these books, whatever else may be said of them, are certainly a "revelation" of the essential difference between Christianity and Mormonism. Mormon revelation is a thing of its own kind. Taken as a whole it is a mere jumble. It is wanting in perspective. It lacks the Biblical caution and reserve; the stately advance toward an ultimate goal; the sharp delineation of heart-searching truths; the supremacy of the eternal over the temporal, of the lofty over the trivial and mean. All that is good in it is borrowed, and all that is original is inane.

"Is it not plain that this low ideal of revelation constitutes a real obstacle to the progress of Christianity?

"(2) Take again its idea of God. Brigham Young summarily voiced it, when, addressing a congregation of children, he said, 'Children, the Christian world believes that God is a spirit, without body, parts or passions. But that is a mistake. God is a great big man like me!' There you have it. Bishop O. F. Whitney, in a recent tabernacle sermon, said, 'God is a perfect man.' Mormonism prepares the way for the deification of man by humanizing God. The pride of the natural man is at the bottom of it. Bring no railing accusation against the Mormon devotee. Naturely you would like to be a God yourself, if the way were clear; and sometimes pride has driven you to wish that the one Supreme were blotted out, that you might be independent. The Christian doctrine concerning God, all argument aside, has this meritorious feature: It rebukes man's vaulting ambition, saying: 'Be still and know that I am God alone.' In a word, it humbles man by exalting God. It tends to keep us in our true place, as dependent creatures of one 'God over all, blessed forever.' This is what we need; at the same time it is what the rebellious heart most dislikes. Hence the Christian doctrine meets with instant protest on the part of those whose minds are steeped in the delusive doctrines of Latter Day theology.

"(3) Look at its doctrine respecting man. The anthropology of Mormonism is the converse of its theology. God and man are interchangeable terms. God was like us once; we shall be like Him by and by. Literally so. If faithful here, we shall achieve Godhood in the world to come. All divine prerogatives are attainable by man. We are deities in embryo. What an abyss of pernicious error is this! The opposition to Christianity along this line is outspoken and bitter. Take, for example, the Bible doctrine of man's native depravity. You and I, sir, were taught that doctrine by those who instructed us in the great truths of religion. Personal experience has convinced us of its truth. We hear a great deal in these days about 'bearing one's testimony.' For one, I believe in it. I have no objection to hearing a man say that he 'knows' a thing; it is the thing that he says he knows that may sometimes be open to question. I am moved to 'bear my testimony.' 'I know' that I am a sinner, through and through; that no shred of native merit cleaves to me; that every imagination of the thoughts of my natural heart is evil, only evil, and that continually. Furthermore, I believe this is true of every individual of our race. Now how does Mormonism receive such testimony? It was remarked by one who heard Dr. Archibald Alexander preach a searching sermon, that flashed unearthly light upon the sinner's heart, that 'Dr. A. must have been a very wicked person in his youth, for how else could he describe so well the thoughts of wicked men.' Perhaps the average man would say, 'Well, from your own testimony, you must be a great sinner, but you ought not to judge the rest of us by yourself.' This unwillingness to plead guilty to God's tremendous charge is characteristic of human nature everywhere. It is not strange that Mormonism should side with fallen man, and oppose Christianity at this vital point. Agreement is impossible. The two systems are antipodal.

"(4) In direct line with this is the Mormon idea of salvation. Do not make the mistake of supposing that the Mormon ignores atonement. He preaches it; he believes in it. But according to his view it avails for original sin only. Christ atoned for Adam's sin, but not for our personal transgressions. In other words, the atonement set the race on its feet once more, gave each of us a new start, making it possible for us to work out our own salvation by actual obedience to the divine commands. It is salvation by works, pure and simple. It is flattering unction to lay to one's soul, but Christianity will have none of it. 'For by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.' (Gal. 2, 16.) 'For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast.' (Eph. 2:8, 9.) We must iterate this teaching. Many a twist and turn will the soul make to evade the truth, but we must hold fast to it as our clue if we would lead the blind out of the labyrinth.

"(5) Lastly, consider its doctrine respecting the church. How fascinating is the idea of an infallible church into which one may run and be safe! We are not able to compete with the Mormon church in this matter. Did any of the reformers claim to be inspired? Did Luther receive heavenly 'keys'? Was Calvin ordained to the priesthood by apostolic hands? No; but Joseph Smith laid claim to all these things, and therefore the church which he founded is the only legitimate church of God on earth. These are large assumptions. They captivate many minds and offer serious hindrance to our work. Regarded in any light, it is a dangerous error. How easy to say: 'I am in the true church, and therefore I am safe.' The last sermon I preached in my own field was on this subject. No matter whether the Mormon church or the Presbyterian church be the true one, the proposition is that multitudes may sincerely seek shelter in either and yet be finally lost. And so long as I have voice to speak for God, I must oppose the churchism that is rife amongst us. Adding souls to the church is one thing; adding souls unto the Lord is quite another. Churchism leads men to think that God will deal with them by proxy and in the mass. That will not do.

Priestly mediation is obsolete. We must come forth from churchly hiding and meet God in our own person, and settle the controversy. Force that issue upon men! It is our business as Christian teachers. The brunt of battle is on us; and in this sign we must conquer or ignominiously fall.

"(2.) My second point is that this obstacle is one that is by no means small. I need not tarry long here, for this is implied in what has already been said. It is not wisdom to ignore the strength of an opponent. I do not care to conceal my own belief that Mormonism, in itself considered, is one of the greatest obstacles that modern Christianity is called to face. I appeal to you who have been longest on the field. Are you not more and more convinced the longer you live here, that this system of error is one of vast proportion, subtle, intricate, a very mystery of iniquity? I say nothing against our neighbors who sincerely embrace this system as their hope of life and death. I speak only of the system itself. You imagined you knew all about it the first six months of your sojourn here; you have never known so much since. You went into the fray with the air of one who says: "Go to; let me show you how to smite this thing." You tried it. You soon began to think it hard work. You longed for easier worlds to conquer. You were afraid you would die before any shining victories were won. After a few more spurts, you settled down to steady work, a wiser if not a sadder man.

"We must face the facts, my friends, without flinching and without despair. Let us acknowledge that Christian truth has a hard struggle before it in this region; that it is no child's play to convert a sinner from the error of his way, when once he has run for shelter to a false religion. Let us remember, too, that this state of things is not exceptional. Christianity has similar experiences the world over. Compact systems of error resist its progress. Spiritual darkness, that may be felt, claims "squatter's right" to large fortunes of the broad domain. It is enough that Christianity murmurs not against these hard conditions. Its militant cry is "Onward" It thrives best in face of foes, and shrinks not from the tug of war.

"(3.) And this suggests my last remark. These very obstacles that lie in the path of spiritual Christianity will redound to its glory. A dam thrown across a mountain stream may stop its flow for a time, but ever from above the reinforcing springs and melting snows pour down their waters until the flood overleaps the barrier and sweeps onward to the valley. So shall it be here Mormonism itself, battle-fronted and menacing, will serve a useful purpose in affording an opportunity to spiritual religion to attest its superiority and conquering energy. Error is Christianity's foil. Heresy provokes the truth to use greater plainness of speech, and thereby sharpen the contrast between them. We have a wonderful illustration of this in the first Christian century. Sometimes we wonder why the fourth gospel was so long delayed. In due time, after the ascension, the synoptists leaped into the arena, each with his mighty argument. But John was silent. Heresies swarmed on every hand. Here, the Ebonites, denying the Lord's divinity; there, the Docetans, denying his proper humanity. But still the beloved disciple, who knew his Master best, said nothing. He heard as one who heard not. He went aside and mused: and while he was musing the fire burned. At last he poured forth that glowing and resplendent gospel which shone upon the world like the Sun of Righteousness itself. Late in coming, its majestic affirmations were the final tests of truth. John's answer to Ebonitism was this: "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God;" and to Docetism: "The word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." The budding heresies were struck with blight before they had time to bloom; while the glorious truth which their rise evoked has filled two millenniums with its light, and remains in undiminished lustre with us still.

"New times bring new phases of error. But though fresh heresies arise and "compass us about like bees," even then will we be confident.

They shall perish before that mighty word which came among men conquering and to conquer."

The announcement made by Joseph Smith, that the answer to his earnest prayer, "Which of these churches, O Lord, is the right one?" was "None of them is right. They have all gone out of the way," was in itself calculated to array the active representatives of the different existent church organizations against him, and with him whatever he had to present to the world in the form of religion, or church organization; nor can we, looking back over the years that have passed since the announcement was made, wonder that warfare was made upon the proposed new creed; our only wonder has been, not that the opposition was made, but that it should have taken on the form that it did. Were it not that Rev. Day, like the great majority of those who have preceded him in contesting the debatable ground of belief with Mormonism, has assumed that Mormonism as a system from its inception is an error, and hence that it is all bad, we should not have ventured an examination of his effort. But, as the subjects discussed at this convention seem to show a studied unity of effort, we choose to presume that Mr. Day has by agreement presented the strong positions of the convention against Mormonism as a system, purposefully involving the whole in the paper read, and striking at its existence root and branch; for this reason, being interested in the perpetuation of what we believe is good in the system, we essay to review what is presented in that paper.

1. The title chosen by Dr. Day assumes that Mormonism is an obstacle to Christianity, and this assumption is alleged as a fact in the opening sentence of the article and admits it.

2. This was intended to be taken as starting; and it would be, were it not that Mr. Day very carefully lays down what he means by the Christianity to which he states Mormonism is an obstacle; and it is that particular phase of religious belief which he and his fellow denominational delegates have received, and to this system, that which these gentlemen were the advocates and representatives of, Mormonism is a "stalwart and determined foe." When it is remembered that Mr. Day is a Presbyterian, and his fellow delegates were of that denomination, the Methodist, Episcopal, Congregational, Baptist, Lutheran, and Church of England, all of them church organizations in existence when Joseph Smith states that he was told none of them was accepted of God, for all had gone out of the way, it will not be thought strange that Mormonism should be rated as opposed, strongly opposed to them, or the phase of so called Christianity represented by them.

Admitting that Mr. Day is honest in his religious convictions, we must also believe that his allegiance to the Presbyterian church organization and his adherence to the faith of that church are founded in his belief that they more nearly represent true Christianity, and therefore, that the church organization to which he belongs is "pre-eminently the Church of Christ." His choice of church relationship and continuance in such connection can not be reasonably explained upon any other grounds. In proceeding to demonstrate why he considers Mormonism to be an obstacle in the way of and a foe to the Christianity of himself and his fellow ministers, he proposes to traverse the familiar lines of the theology received by him as Christian, and deal with those things in the Mormon system which appear to him most formidable; enumerating them under five heads, Revelation, God, Man, Salvation and the Church.

3. In all that Mr. Day writes in reference to the Christianity of the Bible and the cumulative evidences of the divinity of that record we agree; and in his eulogium of the triumphant progress of the Christ idea we share; but to the implied assumption that the revelation found in the Bible is alone all that there is, has been, or is to be of revealed Christianity we can not agree, and whether that phase of religious belief more especially represented by Mr. Day, to-wit: Presbyterianism, could afford to stand the challenge of belief, which he so broadly utters for Christianity, we are in grave doubt; nor do we believe that he would consent to "stand or fall" by the "book" which he "carries," the Bible. Notwithstanding what Mr. Day asserts touching the hold which the Bible has upon man, we are quite satisfied that much of the reverence in which the book is held is due to its antiquity and the awe with which the sayings of the fathers are invested by reason of their ancient character. The Bible itself is still the subject of cavil, even among intelligent men, chief of whom in America at present is Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, than whom no more intellectual, brainy man sat in the convention at Salt Lake City; and much of the argument used by some of the apologists for some of the things complained of in the book are met, not by a "shallow sneer," but with grave wonder that men can be so inconsistent, to say that they believe and then evade or deny what the book states.

4. When Mr. Day passes into an examination of the philosophy of revelation, principle or fact, as it is in Mormonism, he finds himself in a new atmosphere. In this atmosphere things assume to him a dubious and capricious look. This is not to be wondered at. The Christianity of Presbyterianism, with which Mr. Day is familiar, denies both the principle and fact of revelation from God, Christ, or the heavens to man in the times which now are; confining the will and fact of communication of intelligence from God to man to the times past, as taught by that system of Christianity received by Mr. Day and his school; and how other than strange could that man feel who is suddenly transported from the darkness of the world unlighted by the candle of the Lord into the light of God's day of power. Mr. Day errs widely when he asserts that Mormonism "discredits the sources on which the authenticity of the Bible rests." He simply resorts to assertion in this, and offers no particle of proof in support of the statement. No such discredit is thrown upon the Bible. The revelation of Mormonism clearly states to those who would teach Christ; "the elders shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel." "My laws concerning these things are given in my Scriptures." "Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my Scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues." "Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church." In this there is nothing "dubious," nothing "capricious." It is clear, crisp and emphatic. John, to whom Mr. Day appeals against the Ebionites and Docetans, stated that the "Light had come into the world but the darkness comprehended it not." And need any one be surprised that he who denies present revelation from the Lord should fail to comprehend or appreciate it.

If Mormonism takes what it likes of the Bible and discards what it does not like, it does nothing more than Mr. Day does; and why should he condemn it? Mr. Day writes: "The Christian System as you and I receive it," showing that there is in the Christian system something which they had not received; and that some others had. He might, if questioned, say that the Unitarians, the Disciples, Christians, Universalists and Catholics, all of them as much parts of Christian organizations as are the Presbyterians, Church of England, Methodist and Baptist churches, received the Christian system differently from what he and his hearers did, and that they were not to be taken as proper exponents of Christianity. If he should so say, we have nothing to offer other than this, when you get these slight differences in your theology adjusted so to be at unity among yourselves, and reconcile them to the word of God, the Bible which you say Mormonism in its revelation disavows, then may you call upon those whom you are seeking to deliver from their errors with some show of consistency—get the beam out of your own denominational eye; and possibly your sight will be the clearer. When Mr. Day states that the revelation of Mormonism "lacks the caution and reserve" of the Bible, what does he say less than that Bible revelation is uncertain. If Mormon revelation is positive, uncautious and without reserve, he pays to it the tribute of being true. Were it fraudulent, doubtful and uncertain of its source, it would then be wavering and vague. The ultimate goal to which Mormon revelation points the believer is the "Life and immortality" brought "to light" by Jesus Christ "through the gospel." There is no good reason why that in the gospel restored, as Mormonism claims that it has been, there should be a "stately advance" toward an ultimate but hidden goal. In the light of present revelation the dim perspective is passed, and what is revealed direct is made tangible; and if the revelation be but a restatement of what was once delivered but has been lost sight of, there would be the same characteristics attaching to the revelation that were found in its anti type; hence, the books which Mormonism accepts as its own, but supplement the "heart-searching truths" of the good book. Mormonism admits that whatever of good it has is borrowed. Just as the light of all lesser suns is borrowed from the great central orb, so are all truths held by men but borrowed from Him who is the author of all truth. The light of revelation is but borrowed, being lent of God to men who sincerely pray, Lord, give us light.

5. Mr. Day shows but a partial knowledge of the God whom Mormonism declares, when he takes a statement of Pres. Brigham Young, made to a company of children, as the declarative formula of belief of the church on this point.

"We believe in God, the Father; Jesus Christ, His Son, and in the Holy Ghost." This is the statement of belief. This Father is a personage of Spirit, glory and power, possessing all perfection and fullness. The Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, is a personage of tabernacle; and who was like his Father, possessing the fullness of the Father. The Holy Spirit is the mind and will of God, the Father, and Christ the Son, the principle of intelligence and power by which the Father and Christ work their sovereign will in the earth, if not in the entire universe. Man was formed in the image of God.

It is this last statement that Mr. Day crystalizes into his objection, from a Sunday School statement of Pres. B. Young. He fortifies his misconception by quoting an isolated statement from a sermon of O. F. Whitney, a bishop of the Utah church. But what will this ardent devotee of the system of Christianity found in the creed of Presbyterianism do with the words of the "book" which he "carries."

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." "So God created man in his own image."—Gen. 1: 26, 27.

Here the History first states that God said to somebody, "Let us make man," and afterwards that God did make him as he proposed in his own image and "likeness." Here is a chance for Mr. Day, or some other of his denominational colleagues, to enlighten the Mormon who may stand with the King James' translation of the Book in his hand and ask him the troublesome question, "Am I permitted to believe this record as it reads?"

Besides this, that wondrous revelation of God's goodness and will, the New Testament, which advances in such a "stately" manner to "an ultimate goal" states that Jesus Christ was the Son of Man." John, whom Mr. Day quotes to destroy the force of a part of Mormonism, says, "The word was made flesh." He further said: "After me cometh a man."—John 1: 30. Jesus himself affirmed: "And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man."—John 5: 27. Will Mr. Day please tell us who the father of Jesus Christ was? But Paul, who probably understood the Christian system as well as Mr. Day, states what should be conclusive in regard to the question of the image of man and of God.

"Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person."—Heb. 1: 3.

Can Mr. Day, or any of his colleagues reasonably object to the intelligent man accepting this testimony of Paul in regard to the image and personality of God? If he can not, how, and upon what ground can he charge Mormonism with having humanized God. The theology of the Presbyterian doctrine may meet with protest from minds that have read the Word, but if so, who is to blame? Is the Word, or the theory in fault?

6. To prove that his conception of the Mormon idea of man is an erroneous one, Mr. Day cites the doctrine of man's native depravity, and calls it a "Bible doctrine." What proof is there in the Bible of man's "native depravity," if by that Mr. Day would have us to understand that man is by nature, (creation), a depraved being. God saw his work, including man whom he had created in his own image; "and behold it was very good."—Gen. 1: 31. If man was then good, that was his normal, or natural condition. That he afterwards became carnal, sensual, devilish; does not prove natural, or native depravity.

7. Salvation. Mr. Day admits that Mormonism believes in the atonement; but takes shelter from the teaching of the New Testament concerning baptism, under the statement of Paul respecting the law of works. This is a common mistake and needs only a text or two to show where the mistake lies. Paul had reference to the Mosaic law, of which he otherwheres said they were "statutes that were not good;" that the "comers thereunto could not be made perfect." The Lord said, "Repent and believe the gospel."—Mark. 1: 15. He also said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Mark 16: 16. It was not the works of the New Testament economy that Paul had in view when he said, "Not of works lest any man should boast;" for immediately after this it is written: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath ordained that we should walk in them."—Eph. 2: 10.

To walk in good works is to be found in the performance of them, and the "righteousness which is by faith," is the righteousness of the gospel, which Paul certified to the Romans was the righteousness of God. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for therein is the righteousness of God revealed."—Rom. 1: 16.

Of these boasters of salvation by faith alone, James clearly wrote: "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works."—James 2: 18. "But be ye doers of the word." "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1: 22, 25.

In this philosophy of doing what is commanded in the "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," as it is called by Paul in his letter to the Romans, James must have been taught of Christ, for the same Lord stated to "those which believed on Him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed."—John 8:31. The same disciple, loved of the Master, wrote concerning the love that was to characterize those who were to be "found walking in truth;" "and this is love, that we walk after his commandments."—2 John 6.

Men do not stand still, or sit still when walking; and the grave mistake Mr. Day and his co-workers who believe and teach that men are saved by faith alone are making, is in causing those to whom they preach to disregard the nature of Christ's requirements. Men are not saved by works without faith, nor faith without works. Both are commanded in the system taught by Christ; both were essential in the day of James and his fellow teachers and apostles; and if needed then to complete the full plan of redemption and salvation, they are now, by parity of reasoning, necessary to the accomplishment of the same end.

"What doth it profit my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him?"—James 2:14. Presbyterianism says yes; the Bible says, No.

"Faith worketh by love."—Gal. 5:6. Faith without works will not save a man. "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."—James 2:14, 17. "Was not Abraham, our father, justified by works, when he had offered Isaac, his son, upon the altar?" "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?" "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."—James 2:21, 22, 26.

The distinction is clearly made in Romans: "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all that believe."—Rom. 3:20-22.

Mormonism admits that it is by the grace of God that men are saved. Grace means favor, and by the favor of God, not the works of the law of Moses, men are saved. This does not absolve men from obeying the command: "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ." Acts 2:38. For all men are to be judged and rewarded according to their works. See Math. 25:31-46; Rom. 14:10-12; 2 Cor. 5:10; Rev. 20:12.

8. Of the Church as a body Jesus said: "Upon this rock will I build my Church." Math. 16:18, and in Acts 2:47, it is stated that "there were added to the church daily such as should be saved." One of the objects had in view by Jesus Christ in the work he did, was "that he might present it (the church) unto himself a glorious church, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." Eph. 5:27.

It can not be that Mr. Day would have men believe that men can be saved in any other way than by "actual obedience to the divine commands." If men can be saved while in a state of disobedience to God's commands, why is obedience to Christ enjoined. If obedience is not to be an actual one, but a constructive, or mental acquiescence only, what objection can be raised to the idea of proxy punishment as well as salvation.

Mormonism does not teach an infallible church; but it does teach the Church of Jesus Christ as a means ordained of God unto salvation of them who in faith in God and Christ "press into it." The church on earth is a part of the "family of God in heaven." The church is also the arena, instituted of God, in which the believing disciple may by divine aid "fight the good fight of faith," and wage successful conflict against the "world, the flesh and the devil," and win the crown, eternal life. And it is a strong argument against the reformers, including the originators of the church to which Mr. Day belongs, that none of them could, or can say "I am in the true church, and therefore am safe." The true believer in Christ does not say this, but he may safely say: "I am in the Church of Christ," and if I "endure unto the end I shall be saved." He may even quote the words of the apostle and from them take comfort unto a renewal of spiritual diligence. "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved." 1 Cor. 15:1, 2.

Can any one say that Paul was not at this time a messenger in the Church of Christ, and referred to that which he had taught the Corinthians, the gospel of the church, which they had obeyed?

It is true that many may enter either the Mormon, or the Presbyterian Church and be lost after all; so, also, many were received into the Church in Christ and the apostles' time who fell away and were lost. So may men now accept Christ, be reckoned among the faithful, then fall away and be lost. We believe with Mr. Day that it is to be a face to face with God's judgment, every man to answer for himself rather than the church for him; but it is certainly within the bounds of reason and human belief that God through Jesus Christ intended and established the church as the fold of the Good Shepherd in which the sheep who hear His voice may find shelter and be safe. The Jews had a cloak for their sins until Jesus came, but when he came they had none. So it is now, they who worship God, must worship him in spirit and in truth. It must not be "the Christian system as" Mr. Day or Joseph Smith may "receive it;" but it must be the Christian System as it is in Christ and as revealed in God's word that men must receive, without putting denominational church construction upon it; that and that alone, including the church, is given of God for salvation unto man.

9. Mr. Day believes that "Mormonism is one of the greatest obstacles that modern Christianity is called to face." He speaks of the "system itself." It is in the light of this statement that we answer. It is modern Christianity that Mormonism opposes. It is not primitive Christianity, the New Testament Christianity, that Mormonism as a whole opposes. The declaration made by the angel was that it was a restoration of "the everlasting gospel," the true doctrine of Christ that was conferred upon the elders to preach fifty years ago. And this was the proclamation that Mormonism made at the outset. If the statement was true, and we believe it was, then Mormonism as a system, being in accord with Christ's teaching and the doctrine and church organization of the New Testament, can well afford to bear the charge of being an obstacle to that modern claim to christianity "having the form, but denying the power thereof."

The statement made by Mr. Day that it is no "child's play to convert a sinner from the error of his way, when once he has run for shelter to a false religion," is two-edged; it applies equally as well to those devotees of sectarianism who are banded together under the shelter of differing creeds, in modern guises of thought and teaching, and asking men to believe that, whereas, there was originally only one church, one faith and one baptism, there are now many churches, many faiths, many baptisms into many bodies; differing in their confession of faith, organization, doctrines, names and forms of government; and yet acknowledged of God as one body. It is as difficult to convert one of these would be teachers as to convert the sinner, as Mr. Day terms the adherent to Mormonism, from the error of his way.

10. Mr. Day soothes his brethren with the thought that Mormonism presents a formidable front, only to enhance the glory to be won by himself and them in hurling themselves against the ramparts of its entrenchments. Did it ever occur to Mr. Day that if perchance Mormonism "in itself considered," as a system, should be the nearer the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, the fate of those who should hurl themselves against it is named in prophecy, "Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."—Matt. 21:44; Luke 20:18. Mormonism does not, like the Ebionites, "deny the Lord's divinity," nor deny "his proper humanity;" it confesses both. When, however, modern Christianity with its long line of creed-steeped doctors of the divine law assumes to mystify the one and avoid the plain reading of the word of God upon the other, Mormonism with that word, the book which these ecclesiastics carry, in the hands of its devotees rises up in the spirit of original Christianity and opposes the iconoclasts who would deprive fallen humanity of "the faith once delivered to the Saints."

We have not written in defence of the errors of Utah Mormons; to condone the evil there may be there, nor to deprecate the just censure that men who have departed from the original faith may deserve; but we have written in defence of the truth as revealed to Joseph Smith by an angel of God, and as it is contained in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the book of revelations given to the church, and as testified to by the Spirit to hundreds of those who, out of a pure desire to be saved have obeyed the command, "repent and be baptized and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Heman C. Smith wrote from Sheridan, Nevada, July 29th, and says:

"I think my stop in Nevada has been beneficial. Of one thing I am especially grateful, that while Brighamism, and another ism are a moral stench in the nostrils of people here, I have not heard a breath of suspicion against the moral conduct of a single one of my brethren of the Reorganization who have preceded me in this missionary field. If it is a sin to be proud of this, then I am sinful."

We are glad to welcome brother and sister Burton and daughter, who landed August 4th. In a letter written from Oakland, California, August 6th, Bro. Burton says:

"We arrived Saturday, August 4th, all well. I will stay for a few days in Oakland with Bro. Heman C. Smith, who arrived yesterday."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE news from New South Wales, by letters, from brethren T. W. Smith, J. W. Wight, and Edward McGurk, is most cheering. A new district has been formed, and good officers chosen to preside over the district.

Of the public domain belonging to the United States there remains to be surveyed and put upon the market for settlement the following amounts: In Colorado 6,000,000, acres; in Arizona 12,000,000; in California 30,000,000; in Dakota 49,000,000; in Minnesota 7,000,000; in Nevada 39,000,000; in Montana 64,000,000; in Utah 41,000,000; in Washington Territory 20,000,000; in Idaho 44,000,000; and in Florida 7,000,000, a total of 332,000,000 of acres of land still open to the adventurous settler.

We can not any longer fill orders for Bro. Josiah Ells' work in defense of the the Book of Mormon, "Prophetic Truth." The edition is exhausted, and it is out of print.

Bro. George A. Culbertson, writing from Chelsea, Nebraska, June 30th, mentions two cases of healing, both the parties who were members of the church being instantly restored to health in answer to prayer and administration by the elders. Bro. Culbertson rejoices in the blessings of the gospel. Want of space prevents the insertion of his entire letter.

Bro. George H. Graves in a letter dated at Ypsilanti, Michigan, the 7th inst., speaks of his trip to St. Thomas, Brantford, London, Chatham, and Buckhorn, Ontario, and of his being shut out of the Colored Methodist Church at Brantford, and states that three persons at that place gave their names for baptism.

We have received from brother W.

Gerrard, Jr., the secretary of Zion's Hope branch of London, England, a report of the quarterly business meeting of that branch. Our space forbids the publication of the minutes of branch conferences as they are reported in the published minutes of the districts. However we are glad to hear of the zeal manifested by the London Saints and to learn that they are united in their efforts to advance the cause of truth in that great city. The brethren there are filling appointments on the Sabbath and during the week, endeavoring to improve every opportunity offered. They have a prosperous Sunday School, and are not neglecting the important work of that department.

WE are informed by Bro. Joseph Dew-snip, who writes from No. 42 York street, Cheetham, Manchester, England, July 30th, that the sermon published in HERALD No. 26, said to have been delivered by the Bishop of London, in renunciation of his office and its emoluments is an error; he says of it:

"The whole thing is a gross fabrication, from beginning to end; and personally, I regret very much that it has found its way into the pages of the Herald."

We also regret that anything so erroneous should have been published by us. We had some doubt of its genuineness at the time; but thought it hardly possible that any public print would publish so gross an imposition, and we credited the article to the paper whence we took it.

WE clip the following from the Wilber, Nebraska, Republican, of the 9th instant:

"CAMP MEETING NOTICE.

"The Latter Day Saints will hold a camp meeting in Tobias Castor's grove one and one-half mile south of Wilber, commencing August 25th and continuing nine days. The grove is situated near the main road where a good foot-bridge crosses the old river bed just east of Mr. Castor's house. There is a good ford at the same place. Hay and grain will be furnished on the ground at a nominal price. Due care will be taken to preserve order and make the services profitable and attractive. Ministers from abroad will be in attendance and present the way of life as understood and believed by them. All who feel interested in the salvation of the human family should attend these services. Many good citizens are identified with us, in faith, who teach a closer walk with God. All who attend this meeting will learn much concerning their salvation."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right for a Latter Day Saint to keep a stand on a race ground on the Sabbath?

Ans.—No. The laws and usages of the church utterly forbid anything and everything of the kind. The law says: "And that thou mayest keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and pay thy devotions unto the Most High. Remember that on this, the Lord's Day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy Sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full." D. C. 59: 2, 3.

THE Guide Rock, Nebraska, Signal, for August 4th, has the following kindly notice of the effort of Bro. John D. Bennett, of Cuba, Kansas:

"The citizens of Guide Rock have for several evenings past been entertained, and we trust profited by addresses in the Congregational Chapel and in the open air, by Elder J. D. Bennett, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, presided over by Joseph Smith, son of the founder of the so-called Mormon sect. Mr. Bennett will address the people this evening and to-morrow (Sunday) evening at some suitable place on the west side of Main Street. His Sunday evening service will commence about seven o'clock but no day service will be held, as he does not wish to interfere with the worship of any of the other churches. Inasmuch as considerable misapprehension exists in regard to the doctrines advocated by Joseph Smith and his followers, this will afford our people an opportunity to inform themselves on the subject. Mr. Bennett declares what he understands to be Bible teachings with an earnestness that seems born of conviction. He denies that the founder of the church was a polygamist in theory or practice, and holds that the plural wife system of the law-evading, "blood-atoning," "Adam" worshiping Mormons of Utah, are heresies, the outgrowth of corrupted morals under the fatherhood of Brigham Young and his lecherous associates, who sought to shield their criminal practices under the garb of a doctrine false in origin, theory and practice."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Rocked on her breast these pines and I,
Alike on nature's love rely;
And equal seems to live or die.
Assured that he whose presence fills
With light the spaces of these hills,
No evil to his creatures wills."

HOW MANY of us as Christian parents are looking after our children as we ought. We call these perilous times. How many of us stop to think that these are perilous times for them? Do we know what kind of companions they associate with, and where they spend their evenings? Do we mothers teach our daughters and sons to confide in mother, and that if there is anything they are not willing to tell mother there must be something wrong? Especially in cities where there is every allurements to entice them away from everything that is true and good, how careful we ought to be, for little by little they get drawn away. Not anything very bad at first, perhaps, does Satan tempt to, but they are led on and on from one little step of sin to another, if we do not guard and keep them by the grace of God, until they get hardened and do not care for the result.

O, may God help any of us that have been careless of any of these things, to be more faithful to our children in the future, and to take them by the hand and both kindly and seriously warn them of the snares and temptations that may be put in their way, and ask them for their own sakes, for our sakes and especially for the Lord's and eternity's sake, to be cautious of the company they keep, and to be true and good, and not go to any place or do anything they would not want father or mother to know. In the great judgment day we would not any of us want our children to rise up in judgment against us, and say, "Father, mother, you knew about all these things, why did not you warn us? Why did not you keep us from them?" Let us on the other hand be careful of our example to them, and not leave anything undone that is our duty to do, and God will do his part.—Sel.

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for August 30th.

Memory texts from Inspired Translation.

"For in that day, before the Son of Man shall come, he shall send forth his angels and messengers of heaven. And they shall gather out of his kingdom, all things which offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them out among the wicked, and there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."—Matt. 13:42, 43.

Subjects: For the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom, and for the growth of unity, spirituality, and purity of life and purpose among His people. For many afflicted ones who have asked our prayers.

LAMONI, IOWA, August 16th.

CHATHAM, Ont., July 23d.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have been much strengthened and blest by the messages of love and the influence of the Spirit which I have felt while reading the Column. I have often felt it to be my duty to express my gratitude to God in writing to you, but whenever I would take my pen, the fear of appearing in print and of occupying space which should be given to others better qualified to express their ideas, would hinder me from writing.

I feel that the proposition of the Prayer League is the result of the promptings of the Spirit of God, and if engaged in in the right way will be well pleasing to Him. If those who engage in it, neglect not to watch as well as pray, it will prove effectual in accomplishing much good. Having enlisted in the army of the Lord, there must be no sleeping soldiers, neither can furlough be granted. I feel that Saints have much to learn, and daily experience teaches the grave responsibilities resting on those who have obeyed the gospel. I often feel unworthy the name of Saint, and have much to overcome; am often much discouraged, but I always find that the more I try to watch and pray, the better am I able to bear the burdens of life. Let the Prayer League be established and devoutly entered into with the determination to give ourselves unreservedly to God and his cause, and eternity will reveal the result. May our faith be united and firm. I shall watch the Column for further items in regard to it.

Your sister,

MARY A. VINCE.

CHARTER OAK, July 27th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—Desiring to cast in my mite with the rest of the sisters, I will send a few lines also. Oh, if I could write some words of encouragement that would help some one as much as some of the letters in the Column do me. I oftentimes think of what a trial it is for some of the sisters who have husbands that are not in the true church. To such I would say, Pray without ceasing; fast and pray. There is a great deal in fasting and prayer; it has done much, very much for me; and, dear sisters, it will for you if you are humble and trust in Him who is the giver of all good. Sisters, send in your names to the Prayer League. I feel that it will accomplish much good if we work unitedly, in the strength of the Lord, praying Him to bless us. As we are deprived of the precious privilege of meeting and communing with Saints, we ask them to pray for us, that we may live faithful until Jesus comes, that we may receive a crown that is for the righteous.

Your sister in the true faith,

MAY BUTTERWORTH.

VICTORIA, Ills., July 27th.

Sister Frances:—You wonder why the names come in so slowly? Judging the experience of others by my own, I will say, I think many times they are hindered by a multiplicity of cares, which so completely fill every moment of time that they can with difficulty appropriate to themselves even the few moments required to write, as they would like, to the Herald they so much prize. I for one, felt, while reading the first letter of Sister Eleanor, that it was a heaven-born thought. The Prayer League, to bind together in close unity, the isolated ones who, like myself have not the privileges of meeting with the Saints, and who have to depend in a good degree upon the church papers for their spiritual food.

And now let me exhort every dear Saint that has felt the need of a loving Savior, in times when no earthly friend could be relied on, and who has found Him near when they sought Him, to let no trifling matter keep them from sending in their names, that we may, by our numbers and faithfulness build a wall of prayer around our weak and careless ones whom we can reach in no other way. Oh, sister, I feel we need to be faithful; we need to be strong. If called the weaker vessels, I think sometimes we have the heaviest burdens to bear.

DEFIANCE, IOWA, August 1st.

Dear Sisters:—That God who has watched over me for eighty-eight years seems to be willing to let me stay yet awhile, but I can't help thinking my race is nearly run. I often think while gliding down "Life's River," of the happy meetings which I shall have with the loved ones who have gone before. Not only them, but the hundreds with whom I have traveled during the days of our greatest persecution. "But the Lord is good, a present help in time of trouble, and he knoweth them that put their trust in Him."

It is almost fifty-five years since I embraced the glorious latter day work. It is as precious to me now as it ever was, and I have this to cheer me in my last days. I would say to the sisters and friends, Let us put on the whole armor, keep our lamps trimmed and burning, for the Kingdom is ours and the hour of redemption is near.

Yours in the faith,

SARAH HAWLEY.

RHODES, IOWA, July 27th.

Sister Frances:—Our branch here is scattered, still there are a few faithful ones that assemble themselves together often, and are blessed by the Spirit. We have read a good deal about the Prayer League, and think it will be the means of doing much good. We are hoping and praying that all Saints may try and let their light so shine before the world that many may see the beauty of the gospel plan. We rejoice in the work, knowing that it is of God.

Praying for the welfare of Zion, we remain your sisters in Christ,

PHEBA DUMBOULD,
ELLA ROBERTS.

AMBOY, Nebraska, August 7th.

Sister Frances:—Though one of the scattered ones, I feel to rejoice in this glorious latter day work. I am thankful for the privilege of being numbered with the sisters in the Prayer League, and may the Father help me to be faithful. I have much faith in prayer. I asked the Lord that my husband might be brought to see the light and obey the truth, and my prayer was answered, for which I praise his holy name. My family are outside the kingdom, but I have faith in God that they will come to a knowledge of the truth. Your sister in the one faith,

JANE SALADEN.

GREENVILLE, Pa., August 7th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Having read sister Eleanor's and also sister Ackerly's letters, speaking on the subject of the Prayer League, and thinking a great deal about the matter, I have come to the conclusion that we, as mothers of the Hopes of Zion, will be very remiss in our duty, if we neglect to take this matter into serious consideration and also act upon it.

Do not let us be behind those who are only obedient to a perverted gospel, while we have obeyed the truth even as it is in Christ Jesus; but of what will this avail us, if we do not bring forth fruit, so that our children, seeing our good works, may be led to follow in our footsteps.

Fathers and mothers showing to their children that they have a faith that is as real as life itself and showing it in their daily life, the truth will so impress itself on the hearts of their children that it will be as natural for them to be Latter Day Saints, as it is for them to call you mother or father. The thought has come to my mind very forcibly of late of the great importance of the home influence.

Suppose there are one thousand families in the church who average five children, under twelve years; and that these are trained up in the true faith for the next fifteen years, so that they will become members at the proper time, the church will have five thousand new members, without sending one elder out to preach.

Now, all that is needed to bring about this grand result, is for the fathers and mothers to live prayerful and careful lives before their children, letting them be partakers in all their spiritual enjoyments and blessings, as far as their minds can grasp; let us teach them the principles of the gospel as regularly as we give them their meals. "As the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined." There is a true saying that "Like begets like;" therefore let us try every day of our lives to be as we would have our children be—good Saints.

When reading a sermon by the Rev. Talmage on the training of children, I was struck by the aptness of his comparison between the mind of a child and a bushel measure. He said, "Fill a bushel measure full of corn and there will not be any room left for husks."

Words can not express my thankfulness that such a magazine as the Autumn Leaves has been printed for the good of our young people, and I think the older ones love to read it about as well as the young. This morning I prayed earnestly that the life of our dear sister Frances might be long and her spiritual strength continued, according to her every want and that other of the able ones may help her in so important a work for the young of the flock. Ever your sister in the faith, EMMA H. GARRETT.

LYNN, Mass., August 1st.

Dear Sister Frances:—Though young in years and in the gospel, I feel that it is my duty to write to the Home Column. I have enjoyed reading it very much and can say it encourages me to go on. I am glad that I ever obeyed this gospel, and it is the desire of my heart to do all I can for Jesus. Pray for me that I may be faithful to the end.
Your sister in Christ,
SADIE CROMPTON.

Correspondence.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Aug.

Bro. R. S. Salyards:—All are well at Kirtland and are getting along fairly. The summer has been a fine one there and the best crops in that section of any for five years past. The place you left is now occupied by Sr. Hannah and daughter from Cleveland. She is a good and zealous lady, so we have a good helper in her in church matters. Last Saturday and Sunday I was at the new field near Warren, Ohio, and held three meetings and attended one held by the United Brethren preacher. He had been pitching into us at his fortnightly visits and had tried to turn us out of the church, and had even at their district conference put in two new trustees to effect his object, and then the new trustees went back on them and said they could find no fault in us, and would not do it. They fear the people, —and truly they are on our side and manifest great interest. On Sunday evening I had the largest turnout we have ever had there and attentive enough to please a speaker. W. H. Kelley opened up this field in June with Bro. E. C. Cady from Pittsburg, and since then Brn. Griffiths, W. H. Garret, Leonard Scott, and I have supplied the pulpit. The people there have been greatly pleased with these brethren's efforts, and although Satan through his old time pious aids has lied about and slandered them, yet we expect a triumph and an ingathering and permanent abiding place for the true disciple at Warren. I have never been more pushed in trying to meet calls and demands and in overseeing business at Kirtland than this summer. Had expected to have given the Herald readers a view of the Cincinnati Exposition ere this, but could not find the time. I now expect some aid in local work at Kirtland, which will be permanent, about the first of September, when Bro. M. B. Williams will move there and be ready to do what he can. Now I am down in hot fields for a time, at the urgent request of Brn. Griffiths and Devore to defend the faith against the attacks of certain Campbellite fellows out near Cornwallis, West Virginia. I am notified that we begin on the morning of the 7th inst., and discuss forenoon and afternoon for three days. Likely this will be in the open air too; so you may infer my prospective enjoyment. Enough to kill a first class auctioneer. I shall trust in the Lord. Expect to return north as soon as I can. Remember me to all the friends. Hastily and faithfully for Zion's cause,

CUBA, Kansas, Aug. 2d.

Dear Herald:—I write from Guide Rock, Nebraska, where chance has thrown me, and where the Spirit bids me remain from day to day. I desire that Bro. L. Anthony and the district authorities at Wilber will make a note hereof as my report, in part, at least. I reached this point on the 20th ult., intending to only remain over night, but the citizens offered us a church building and requested preaching. I could not decline, and spoke the evening of the 21st. I then went to Bro. Beebe's at Superior, where I spoke Sunday morning and evening, returning to this place July 25th and obtaining the privilege of the house of worship from Friday until Sunday evening. I stepped into the printing office and was granted permission to set up my bills, paying for stock and press-work. On these bills I stated:—"We have no affiliation with the polygamous, law-defying heresies of Utah Mormonism. In view of the many misstatements, and misconceptions concerning the purpose and doctrines by us believed, taught and practiced, we only desire to correctly present our case that the public may know whereof we affirm." We scattered them through the town, (five hundred inhabitants), mostly in private dwellings and dooryards. The first night my congregation was small, the second night smaller, besides Bro. and Sr. Fisk, three ladies and one gentleman were present. But we had the assurance that there were many listeners outside the chapel walls. Sunday morning a respectable gathering greeted us,—the elite of the city—and in the evening the audience was greatly increased. I have been thus particular to show that trifling discouragements should not be allowed to step between the elder and his duty.

On Monday morning as I sauntered along the street, I observed a gathering in front of the hotel. Joining the throng I found they were listening to a dispute between two individuals, one of them opposed to Christianity and Bible teaching; the other as I afterwards learned was a Mr. Mason, a nurseryman of Shenandoah, Iowa. Mr. Mason assumed that Christianity was suffering from divisions and splits. After the smoke of the contest had cleared up I inquired of Mr. Mason if he could suggest a remedy for those ruptures. He thought all were good, and should be accepted and endorsed as one. I asked:

"Would you include Brighamite Mormonism?"

"No, only established orthodoxy. It is true there is a split off from that church which professes to denounce the noxious features of that people, but it is a question whether the claim is based on bona fide honor, as they are constantly sending men there, and Smith himself goes there frequently, and it is just as probable that they are one in their theory and practices in the valley as that they are not. In the states the law and public sentiment will not suffer it, and the experiences of the past and surrounding influences are not lost on the shrewdness of these people. Both accept Joe Smith as the founder, and the Book of Mormon as the groundwork of their faith. The book is assumed to be the transcript from golden plates, dug up, as claimed by Smith, but in reality are the transcripts of a novel written by a Mr. Spaulding."

"Have you read the Book of Mormon?"

"Yes sir."

"Did you find anything in it that taught or justified polygamy in any sense?"

"I do not recollect."

"Do you recollect reading Jacob's reprimanding the people for their pride, arrogance and oppressing the poor? (Book of Mormon page 116), and that 'grosser crime' against God, by seeking to justify themselves in committing the 'abominable whoredoms' practiced by David and Solomon of olden time by marrying more than one wife, and the curse pronounced for doing such a wicked deed?"

"I do not remember it; it has been a long time since I read the book."

"Did you ever see the Spaulding Romance?"

"No sir."

"I am the possessor of a verbatim copy of that manuscript, and you can obtain a like copy by writing to the Saints' publishing house, at Lamoni, Iowa, enclosing fifteen cents."

"Is it anything like the Book of Mormon?"

"About as much as the Koran is like the Methodist discipline."

"But how shall I know the work is not a fraud?"

"By the statements and affidavits therein contained concerning its authenticity, and if still in doubt, your mind may be set at rest by seeing the original copy now in the library of Oberlin College, in Ohio. Have you any personal acquaintance with any of that party whom you claim were split off from the Mormon Church?"

"Yes, sir; at Shenandoah, Iowa."

"Did you ever hear any of their preaching?"

"Yes sir; I have heard Joseph Smith, the president of the church, preach."

"What is the character of that people and their doctrines?"

"Blameless, so far as I know. But I do know from the correspondence of near relatives who went to Utah that the doctrine of polygamy was taught and practiced by the church as far back as 1850, and was talked of in 1848."

"Are you aware that Mr. Smith deceased in 1844?"

"Yes sir."

"And do you know whether that principle was taught or practiced by him, or the church during his lifetime?"

"No sir. I think it was not taught nor practiced until after his death."

"Now, sir, you speak favorably of this people, and exonerate Mr. Smith from complicity with the Utah heresy. Why not represent them as you know them to be, rather than pander to the prejudices of an uninformed public?" Just then a bystander suggested that as I seemed posted on these questions, that I tell them what the Book of Mormon is, and how obtained. After answering, I turned to Mr. Mason but found only the empty chair which he had occupied. It was then suggested that in the evening I should address the citizens on the street, to which I promptly agreed. The place was designated, and at eventide I was on hand. While waiting, and contemplating the cadences of music that floated on the air from some musical instrument, the proprietor of the hotel approaching me asked if I would object to the organette being used as a precursor of the exercises of the evening. I said certainly not. He then directed me to where the instrument was doing service, and I found Mr. Mason manipulating the crank. I stated to him that the people were assembling to hear a religious discourse, and that there was a desire to have him discourse some music for the occasion to which he consented, and as the notes of "Sweet hour of prayer," with other heaven-born strains floated out on the gentle air a large company gathered, and for one hour and a half I talked to them of justice and judgment. Thinking that I had already tried their patience I rested on Tuesday night, and was met with many regrets that I did not speak again. But I made it up to them on last night, and as they are still thirsting they cried out for more, and tonight, with God's help I will be with them again. When I first came here the people seemed invulnerable with their armor of prejudice buckled up to the throat, but now, thank God, I hear little else than praise of the gospel plan.

JOHN D. BENNETT.

BALM, Mo., August 7th.

Dear Herald:—Last evening about eight, it rained and hailed here. The hail, some of them as large as goose eggs, broke windows and split weather boarding, going through roofs of houses, also killing chickens, geese and rabbits, breaking crockery ware, smashing tin vessels, and laying waste corn crops. I began to think of the hail that is to come spoken of in Rev. 16:21. The storm did a great deal of damage. Yours,

D. E. TUCKER.

DOW CITY, Iowa, Aug. 7th.

Dear Herald:—We have a branch of about seventy members which is in fair condition. We also have a society called "The Gospel Research Society," which meets each Sabbath evening. This society is sometimes like the "Theological Class," spoken of through your columns by the Sunday School Association of the Southern California district. We believe it to be a great benefit to all who take part therein, as it will prepare them to meet the opposition which may be brought against the church. In these meetings, those who are to lead in speaking take their places in the stand and begin as one would in preaching, bringing forth argument in favor of the subject in hand. We have had many a happy meeting of this kind, and to those who have not such a good work begun, we would say, Begin at once, with the intention of learning more about the work, and you will never regret the time thus spent. The General Conference called our president to labor in the district, leaving us without an active and experienced minister.

But those to whom the duty falls, realizing that as time rolls on the aged must give way to the ones now growing up, or as it is in this case, those who are more experienced will be called to more responsible positions, have taken hold of the work as they realize that duty calls, and are trying to "fight the good fight."

Your brother in Christ,

LEONARD BUTTERWORTH.

PARIS, Tenn., Aug 5th.

Bro. Joseph:—The Herald still comes to us as a welcome visitor. We always find something in it that gives us strength and courage. I have been a member of the church over seven years, and have never seen the time when I felt more like pressing on and helping to advance the cause we have espoused than now seeing that God is blessing his people as in days of old, with signs following. Soon after I became a member of the church I was taken very sick. A good brother (G. S. Hyde), was near, whom I called to administer to me, which he did. I was healed then and there, and at other times too numerous to mention. I am glad to be associated with such men as have been sent into this part of the field. The fatherly advice they gave has always been good. Bro. John Thomas is here. He landed at Fulton, Kentucky, about May 15th. He can not hear from Bro. Gillen, but he has kept up constant work in this section and is zealous in the cause. He seems, if possible, stronger in the faith than he was seven years ago when he organized this branch. He wont take a nod for howdy, but shakes hands. Four have obeyed since he came, and others are almost persuaded. Bro. Thomas and Seaton have gone some sixty miles away to Bro. S. Read's. The latter is working in that region. He is a worthy brother. We look for Bro. Thomas in a few days. Bro. W. H. Griffin is still in bad health. Hope he will be out in the field soon, as he makes a full hand.

Yours, in the one faith,

W. J. SEATON.

PER CHENEY, Mich., August 2d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I arrived at Cheney the 28th of last month and commenced preaching on Sunday evening, the congregation being rather small. Since then our meetings are increasing. Last Tuesday we went to a school-house in the neighborhood to preach. On the steps was a notice:—"I hereby forbid E. Delong or any other Latter Day Saint or Mormom to enter these premises." and on the blackboard a picture of a tree bearing fruit (apples I suppose) and the devil reaching after them. The school officers present unlocked the door and rang the bell, and our meeting went on nicely.

I showed the people that such treatment always followed the true followers of Christ, and Christ himself. When will people learn to desist from such a course? Perhaps not until the judgment day. Well, I am glad of one thing; they are striving for information. "They that murmur shall learn doctrine." The other day a gentleman, a school master wrote to Washington and asked for an explanation of the difference between us and the Mormons. The answer was, "We keep no record of any church," and told them to "write to Joseph Smith, the president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and gave them your address with the answer. I have not heard anything more about writing to find out the difference. I expect to remain here a few days. Next Sunday I think one or two will be baptized.

With kind regards, and in gospel bonds,

E. DELONG.

DE WITT, Nebraska, August 7th.

Bro. Blair:—Since writing before, I have preached ten times at Fairbury, Nebraska, and created a good interest. I spoke in the public park, and at the close got a dose of eggs for my pains. Am on my way back there now from our quarterly conference, held at Wabash. Since conference I have spoken four times in Nebraska City, and baptized one, a son of Bro. James Ferguson. Spoke twice at Bennett, where I left Bro. Bronson and came on to this place to-day, but can do nothing here on account of Free Methodist camp meeting. Will go to Beatrice to-morrow and endeavor to get an opening there; then on to Fairbury again.

Yours in bonds,

HYRUM O. SMITH.

GOOD INTENT, Kans., Aug. 10th.

Bro. Blair:—Bro. E. C. Brand has been with us, and has been laboring in this part of Kansas to the best of his ability what little help we were able to give, and has been the means of settling some of the little difficulties in this district, and stirring us up to the sense of our duty, we hope we will be encouraged to go on with renewed energy. He has preached about forty sermons in our district, baptized one person at the Centralia conference. Those who were baptized by Mr. Hickey some time ago, sent for Bro. Brand to go and baptize them—like those at Ephesus—and when he had reasoned with them, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, knowing now that they had been deceived. There were six in number, and one more came forward and was baptized. The work in this part of the field is a little on the increase. Last Sunday, August 4th, we went to Fanning station. Bro. Brand is still there preaching.

Yours in bonds,

DANIEL MUNNS.

OLIVET, Dakota, August 4th.

Dear Herald:—When I wrote last I was laboring at Olivet. We commenced in the Christian Church and held three meetings. Some of their members were opposed to us having the church, and it was closed against us. The minister was in favor of us having the church, but he was overruled. He formerly lived in Galien, Michigan, and is well acquainted with Bro. Blakeslee. He speaks very highly of him. We got the use of the school house and held three more meetings and believe good was accomplished. Have spoken at three points in the county and will go to a new place to-morrow. I feel well in the work and will press forward and do all that is in my power. I realize that blind zeal is not what is needed, but a faithful, persistent effort. All our deliberations should be tempered with wisdom. In company with brother Hogaboom, I went to a place about eleven miles from his home in Charles Mix county, and held forth there. We had good liberty and left some that wanted to hear more. Also made an effort in Springfield, Bon Homme county, but prejudice was strong, and but few out to hear.

My health is improving, God is blessing me with his Holy Spirit, and my way is onward until the victory is won, or we sleep in the silent land. Bro. Alexander H. Smith wrote me to keep my powder dry. I faintly understood him and it encouraged me to strive all the harder. Two of the biggest lies that the devil ever told, have been told here as well as elsewhere. That is, "If you are only honest and sincere in your belief, you are sure of salvation."

The elders and the men of the church that labor in the affairs of business are to labor together. By this I understand that the elders are to give their time, and the powers of body and mind that God has given them, and go whenever and wherever God calls them, without consulting their own interest, although it may be away from home and family and friends, all that is near and dear to them, and that the men of the church are to provide for the wants of himself and family by giving that part of their increase that God has commanded them to impart. I think it would be a good move for all the missionaries, and all the elders to observe this law; and thus by their example as well as precept to stimulate others to action. I am for one going to do so and then I will have a right to preach it as loud and long as I want to.

Praying ever for the triumph of the work and welfare of God's chosen reapers, and of all of God's Israel everywhere, I remain your brother,
E. E. WHEELER.

Dear Herald:—Eagerly have I scanned your bright pages for weeks in hope of seeing some word from those among whom, I, in company with Bro. J. S. Roth labored lately, but in vain. I cannot think the flame of love so brightly burning only a short while ago, has waned, flickered, coldly died; no! no! I believe it to have been lit by the torch of Divine love which never dies. I rather look for a reason in their desire to learn from others older, in the good cause, and a self disparagement of their own abilities to entertain or benefit; but let them be assured a message now and again will not subject them to the charge of presumption for the grand old organ has a snug family letter box in its kindly keeping labelled "Correspondence," open ever to missives of love, intelligence and goodly counsel or cheer. So "Write Saints write, all good tidings write. Yea write in all good cheeriness."

There are some of you sisters whose contributions would find a kindly eager welcome in "Mother's Home Column," or "Autumn Leaves." Let a desire to do good, and not a fear of criticism actuate you and may the heavenly altar fire be your pen's motor.

Since leaving you I have had several interesting experiences in company with strangers to our doctrine, who seemed to honestly desire to learn the truth, and were not averse to hearing good of us as a people. One man from Galien Michigan, who knew Bro. G. A. Blakeslee, made eager inquiries concerning our faith. The gentleman was an adventist, liberal, reasonable, and apparently honest in heart. Bro. Roth took him in hand and supplied him with tracts and facts, while I locked horns with an elderly Scotch Presbyterian minister who made some amusing and of course, ineffectual efforts to make Hebrew sense out of the English nonsense in the King James' translation, and finally admitted in desperation that King James' translation was "no very gude," nor perfect, and on the question of future probation said he hoped we were right. When I asked him if man's conception of justice Divine was a higher one than the reality, he said certainly not; God's thoughts being infinitely higher than man's. Bro. Roth directly asked him why he did not preach them then instead of man's conceptions. He said, "I can't go outside of my commission." Then Bro. Roth told him he had better burn his commission and quit preaching a lie.

This conversation was in a freight caboose; some twenty listeners who became deeply interested as their brightened, animated appreciative countenances betokened. We left the car with many a hand shake and kindly spoken good bye; even the old Scotchman taking our addresses and that of the publishing house at Lamoni. Being delayed for over an hour at one place, we availed ourselves of the opportunity to canvass the doctrine, and history quite thoroughly. I bade good-bye to Bro. Roth at Amber.

On my way home I met a gentleman in another caboose, who was at one time correspondent for a British paper, and was sent by his principals to Plano, Illinois, to learn what he could of the sect called Mormons, and write it up. He volunteered to say he was treated in a courteous, Christian manner, read our books, talked with our President and other leaders, and after upwards of three weeks' investigation, he came to "the conclusion that the Latter Day Saints were a branch of the Church of Christ, with some erroneous views." Said that he should be sorry to know any of his brethren to be discourteous, or to speak slightly of so good a people. The gentleman's name is Mr. Manning, at present pastor of the Presbyterian church in Clarence, Iowa, fourteen miles from this place. What a different verdict from that of Mr. Henry Cullen's, rendered in his public assault at Fulton, in which he falsely said "the doctrine is not founded on Christ."

I have been doing the best I could to keep the good counsel of the Bishop, to free myself from encumbrance, so I may be at liberty to take up the sickle once more—a work I most dearly love. I hope to open a recruiting office of the Celestial Army in Tipton e'er long.

May Zion arise and shine.

W. T. MAITLAND.

BURNSIDE, Ills., August 10th.

Dear Herald:—I am holding forth at present in Burnside. The weather was fine and bid fair to be for some time, so the brethren thought it best to hold meetings in the park, which is indeed a nice place. The people came to hear, and judging from the interest manifested, there will be an ingathering soon. I am glad that the Spirit of God is working in the hearts of the people. The Spirit is with me in power; the Father is blessing my labor and many are believing our report. I have been invited to preach at the McGuffy School-house, where a few years ago Bro. S. J. Salisbury tried to get the house and could not. The time has come when they want to hear from us.

I have been preaching at the Oak Grove School-house, and notwithstanding the busy time, the people turned out well. While some would say, What meaneth this? Others would rage and try to get the people to "imagine a vain thing." We go from here to Rock Creek. Bro. S. J. Salisbury is working with me. The prospects are good in this mission; the only thing I have to complain of is that I can not get around fast enough; there are so many places where they want preaching, and I can only preach in one place at a time; but "all is well that ends well."

In bonds,

McFALL, Mo., August 9th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have just returned from a pleasant trip to Allendale, Missouri. I also got up into Iowa, so brother Stebbins must look out as I may be getting on his grounds, although a brother at Allendale said that where I went was no man's land; so if that is the case I feel safe. I tried to do all the good I could while there and left some almost ready to come in. I left the Saints feeling quite well. In bonds,

WHAT LAWS ARE WE UNDER?

WHILE I do not advance the following thoughts as the views of the church, nor of any class of officials in it, yet I think they will not be found contrary to the doctrine of the church, nor to the facts in the case. I dislike controversy in the church papers; and yet freedom of thought must be allowed where opinions differ, particularly when the object of those who write is to reach the truth. Debate for the mere sake of the mastery, I despise with my whole soul. And I have a very poor opinion of the person who will contend on that ground alone. Without direct reference to what may have been said by others in the way of reply, I would say, however, that what has appeared in the columns of the Herald, prompts me to present my view of the case. The laws that I refer to in the caption of this article are the temporal laws, and the question is, "What laws are we under to-day?" That I am justified in speaking of laws in the plural, will appear farther on in our investigation.

Suppose we view this matter in an historical line of argument. The first law on temporalities was given in February 1831, and reads thus:—"If thou lovest me, thou shall serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold, thou will remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishops of my church, and his counsellors, two of the elders of high priests, such as he shall, or has appointed and set apart for that purpose. And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, and after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they can not be taken from the church, agreeably to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family."

Now a word of comment on this. It appears that this law requires that persons having property shall have an understanding with the bishop and his counsellors, and that they retain so much of their property as is needful to support their families. This would of course demand that a man should be allowed to retain a homestead, and sufficient live stock, horses, etc., etc., needful for the carrying on of his business, if a farmer, or his shop and tools if a carpenter, or a blacksmith or other artisan, a store-house and a stock of goods if a store-keeper; and office, type, press, etc., if a printer; a mill with its machinery if he earns his living in that way; his boats and nets and other gear, if he is a fisherman. Men follow various pursuits, and they are all necessary; and all could not follow any one business. All could not be store-keepers, nor all farmers, nor all carpenters. If all the church should sell all they possessed, and would bring the money and lay it all down at the apostle's feet, and distribution was made as every man had need, all would need houses to live in, sufficiently large for the use of their respective families, and the store-keeper would need a building and a stock of goods; and the mill-owner or the manufacturer of broom and fork handles, or shingles, etc., would need to have a mill-house, machinery, etc., or else these men would be thrown out of their accustomed business and be compelled to follow some pursuit that they were not qualified for, or had no taste for. The carpenter, blacksmith, painter, printer, etc., would have to have shops tools, etc., and the fisherman his boats, nets etc., and if these men sold out in order to turn their property and tools, etc., into money, they would have to receive enough back to buy other similar property, tools, etc. It certainly then would be wise that they should retain all that they have now, that is necessary for the carrying on of their accustomed business. And if so, what then is demanded of them by the law in question? Simply that which may be called a surplus, or that which is over and above what is needed for their support and their families, after their debts are paid. And when this surplus is paid for the benefit of the poor and needy, the law says that what remains is a man's own property, over which he is made a steward. The Lord gives him this and makes no farther claim to it. Of course the Lord will hold him accountable for its care and use, as He will for all other talents or gifts bestowed on His servants. But it is his "own," and is not held in "common" by any body else. Now what is the rule after this consecration of properties has taken place? The following, viz: "And again, if there be properties in the hands of the church; or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support after this first consecration, which is a residue to be consecrated unto the bishop; it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore the residue shall be kept in my store-house to administer to the poor and the needy as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people."—D. and C., sec. 42: par. 8, 9, 10.

What does this mean? Simply, that after the surplus property is given into the hands of the bishop and his counsellors, not to bishop's agents, or to the Twelve, or any body else, but to the bishopric only; that after this "first consecration" of all the surplus, then after this, all that accumulates in the hands of the church, or any individual member of it, which is not needed for the support of that individual member and his family, that this residue or surplus is to be paid into the hands of the bishop, to be kept in the Lord's store-house for the uses or purposes named.

Is this the law of tithing? I think not, but the law of "consecration." Consecration is not tithing in the full sense of the term, while tithing is consecration. The word "tithing" signifies the tenth, the tenth part of anything. And the law of consecration requires all beyond a man's necessities, and there is no tenth stated in the case at all.

Is this law of consecration in whole or in part in force now? If it is, then why should the Lord give the revelation of July 8th, 1838? Why should the question be asked by a people, through their prophet, of the Lord. "O Lord show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing?"

Had not God spoken seven years before and given the law which we have been considering? and was it not sufficiently clear and comprehensive? If the prophet understood that the law of 1831, was binding on the church in its then scattered, or unsettled condition in 1838, why ask the Lord, what he required at their hands in this matter of giving of their properties? The simple fact of their asking anything on the subject at all, shows that they did not understand the previous law to be binding on them when being driven from the land of their inheritances, but that it applied to the church in its gathered state, in Zion. But does the answer show that the law of 1831 was entirely laid aside for the time being? No, for "all their surplus" is demanded, as in the "first consecration," in 1831, and for some of the same purposes as named in the command or law of 1831.

And not only this, but the surplus is to be demanded of all who shall gather unto the land of Zion, for it says, "Verily I say unto you, it shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties." It is evident that at that time or in July 1838 it was understood that the beginning of this matter of tithing was their giving into the hands of the Bishop all the "surplus," the remainder being as before shown, "their own property." They were still in the land of Zion at that time, which is declared to be "Jackson county and the counties round about." It reads that all those who gather to the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties. This would imply that the surplus would not be demanded of any who are not gathered. Not but that it will be required of all who do gather there, and that it is required of all who have gathered there at the present time. If not, then there is no meaning in the words quoted by us in section 106, paragraph 2. Do the words "And after that, those who have been thus tithed (i. e. of their surplus properties) shall pay one tenth of their interest annually" mean that only those who have given their surplus are subject to the law of one tenth of their interest annually? I think not, for the reason that both then and now there are many who have no surplus, or that which is more than is needful for their support and their dependent families. All who have any interest, or increase, as it has been explained by the Bishopric and the Twelve, are subject to the law of tithing, or the paying of a tenth of their interest or increase annually.

If the law of consecration of giving all the surplus, and afterward all the increase, or all above our necessities that we accumulate "from time to time" is binding now, what is the meaning of these words: "And let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law be executed and fulfilled after her redemption." Section 103, paragraph 10. Now what are the commandments concerning Zion and her law, which are to be "executed and fulfilled after her redemption?" Evidently the "Celestial law" or the principles of the "Order of Enoch," and which will embrace the principle of consecration or giving of the surplus properties and all above what is needed for a man's support and that of his family, given "from time to time." If this law of consecration, or Celestial law is in force now, then what is the law to govern in Zion "after her redemption?"

What is the law then that we are under now? Simply "the law of tithing?" And what is tithing? A tenth of what a person possesses. If I understand the Bishopric's teachings, it is that all that a man has is an increase from the Lord, and if this is their idea, and it is a correct one if it is; then the first thing is, for those who wish to observe the law of tithing, to make a fair inventory of all that they are bona fide owners of. If a man has a piece of land worth one or ten thousand dollars, or two hundred to two thousand pounds, and is owing a fourth or a third or an half or two thirds of that valuation, on the land, he is not the owner of the land only in part. But I mean what would be a fair, square valuation of what the man really owns free of incumbrances, such as liens of mortgages. And then when that is ascertained, let him consider that one tenth belongs to the Lord.

But if a man will not admit that this is fair, or just, and that he has not received all that he has as an increase from the Lord, he must commence to count his interest from some period or other; and to say the very least, he should count it from the day that he became subject to the laws of God, by his obedience to the gospel in baptism. I do not say that God will accept this as all that a man owes him, but I mean that the most unwilling subject of tithing ought to consent to the proposition that of all his increase since he joined the church, he should give one tenth to the Lord; he surely could do no less than this.

Are tithes and offerings the same thing? I think not. Tithes may be called offerings, because they are given and consecrated to the Lord, but offerings are not tithes unless they are a tenth of what we own, or raise, or accumulate, or earn. The offerings under the Jewish or Mosaic economy were oftentimes called the "first-fruits." And with us they are called "oblations." What the Corinthians were called upon to give or lay aside on the first day of the week, as were also the churches in Galatia, was not tithing, but offerings or oblations. These are called free-will offerings, because they are given as we will or choose or elect; we determine the amount as we may consider ourselves able to give. In the matter of tithing it is definitely settled by the Lord to be at least a tenth of our interest annually. This is a debt that we owe the Lord, but when we are freed from that debt, we can give of our "own property," as much as we please. In some pursuits it is not practicable for some people to tell except annually or once a year what their gain, or increase is; while in other cases some can tell what their gains are every month or even every week. My opinion is that a man has no right to give what the Lord can justly claim as tithing in the shape of free will offerings in contributions of small sums from time to time, but that these free will offerings should come of his "own property," or out of his nine tenths that the Lord allows him to keep for himself. How can a man call a sum of money that he owes the Lord, a free will offering or a gift? It would be like as if a man should go to his grocer, or shoemaker, or tailor, and say, "See here, I will make you a free gift of fifty dollars," when he owes the man the same fifty dollars for value received from him.

If a man gives, let him give his own money and not the Lord's. Suppose a man gives five or ten dollars a year in oblations or offerings, and his tithing would amount to that, and he considers that he has paid tithing by so doing, yet it could not be acceptable to God, for two reasons; first, it is a debt that he owes the Lord, and it is not his own. Second, the person who gives free will offerings gives to A. B. and C., both to the poor and needy, and to various charitable and worthy objects, directly, while the tithing is to be placed in the hands of the Bishop, or those who have the right under certain circumstances to receive the tithing; so if these free will offerings are to be given to various objects, no matter what they are, they must come out of the giver's own purse or property, while if the giver insists that it is tithing it must be paid to those only who are authorized to receive it.

It does not make tithing a free will offering because it ought to be paid willingly. The tithing is a debt that we owe God, and which if we do not pay we must suffer for it, if not in this life surely in the world to come. But if there is any meaning in the words, "There is a withholding, and it tendeth to poverty," or "He that soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly," it would seem to indicate that men and women will be punished in this life for robbing God of his due. And if God is an unchangeable God, and cursed Israel in the days of Malachi for withholding their tithes and offerings or their first fruits, he will surely curse those who claim to be spiritual Israel to-day, inasmuch as they are under obligation to pay tithing likewise.

Believing the gospel; repenting of sin; being baptized; partaking of the sacrament, &c., are all to be done willingly, or at least should be so done, but does not God say, that "he that believeth not shall be damned." And that "the Pharisees rejected the counsel of God against themselves" by not being baptized of John. And Jesus said, "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood, ye have no life in you." So of tithing, it should be given or paid willingly, yet if not paid at all, the disobedient must take the consequences whether here or hereafter, or both. What law are we under now? Not the celestial law, or Order of Enoch, or the law of consecration, but the law of tithing, and to this end did God speak in October, 1861, to the Bishop and the Twelve. If the law of consecration is in force now and the law of tithing, likewise this would be the condition of things.

First. The giving of all a man possessed above what he needed for the support of his family.

Second. The giving of all his surplus or increase from time to time after his family has been supported.

Third. The giving of a tenth of all he possessed, which would be of course a tenth of what under one law is "his own property."

Fourth. A tenth of his interest or increase annually. But this last rule could not possibly work, (and yet it is the very one that is required now or to-day), for the reason that under the law of consecration the man must give "from time to time" all that he gathers above supplying the necessities of his family. And if he gives all "from time to time," where will he find a tenth of the same increase "annually?" Or if he is required to pay a tenth of his increase annually only, he can not at the same time be required to pay all of his increase "from time to time."

But as the Lord says that his "commandments concerning Zion and her law," are to "be executed and fulfilled after her redemption," and that law is evidently the celestial law, or law of consecration, so in conclusion, I would suggest that the law that we are under now is the law of tithing, and that law is, one tenth of what we possess first, and then one tenth of our annual increase. If the Bishopric considers that the Lord does not demand one tenth of what we possess as a first tithing, I trust they will plainly say so, and I shall not insist on that, but I certainly have gathered that thought from their writings and speeches. If they agree to the principle I trust that they will not hesitate to say so in unmistakable terms. God does require that, or he does not. As the surplus is not required now then it is either one tenth of all we possess, i. e., one tenth of the valuation of all we possess, or it is simply and only one tenth of our interest, or increase annually. If what we have, is an increase, even all that we have, and we have not been giving to the Lord his one tenth every year as we ought to have done, we are simply in debt to him for one tenth of what we have; and if we are to "owe no man anything," we surely ought not owe the Lord anything that is his. "Pay that thou owest."

For truth and right,

T. W. SMITH.

REPLY TO H. C. SMITH.

IN the Herald for July 21st, I see Bro. Heman C. Smith tells us that a book has been put into his hands called the "Light of Messiah." He, like most of us, has in his time seen many books—many bad books; but he says this one is the worst of all—the most dark, most contemptible and most deceptive of any. Had he said simply that it was a bad book, it would not have excited much curiosity; but, when he tells us that it is the worst of all books, human curiosity is excited, and people want to see the book. The very idea that this book is something more wicked than has ever appeared before, is something to break the monotony of human life, and people begin to ask questions. As he read it, this is what he saw in it: It was a trap to catch Saints, not particularly the weak ones, "but those whose testimony will not permit them to be deceived into renouncing the gospel as taught by the church; for it teaches that the church is acknowledged of God, and will do its work; so that you can read and accept the book, and be a good Latter Day Saint all the same."

We have always been afraid of things that would divert us from, or destroy our faith in the church or the gospel, but Bro. Smith says, that the book says that the gospel is all right, and that the church is all right, and will do its work. So if our testimony is strong—if we have plenty of the testimony of the Saints which is the spirit of prophecy, those are the ones this book is liable to catch. The testimony of the Saints is in opposition to, and never becomes one with the spirit of the world, or of the devil. Is he in earnest when he says that this is the reason why the book is bad?

Many would reason the very reverse, and say: "If the best of the Saints, and the gospel, and the church, are going into any place—call it a trap if you like—let us go in too, because where they go let us go, where the church may go, let us go, where the gospel is, there let us be—that will be heaven to us anyway. This is the first reason for denouncing the book. Is it a good one?"

His next is, he says, that it seeks to fasten on the church a counsellor, and that, too, without the knowledge or consent of the church. If this were true, it would not suggest so much that the book was wicked, as that it was extremely foolish, and we should not need Bro. Smith or any one else to warn us of such foolishness. If Bro. Smith had asked himself, could anybody "fasten on" to me a counsellor without my knowledge or consent, he would have seen the absurdity of the idea at once. Bro. Smith was, perhaps, in a hurry, and so he went on to prove what he had imagined by quoting from the book that the counsellor spoken of "has not necessarily to be a counsellor to the President of the church." Bro. Smith quotes this, but omits the following, which renders the quotation still more clear: "He officiates as counsellor to the President of the church, if he is accepted;" and then will only represent the Order in its relation to the President, and not to the church, as the President will always represent the church. So far the quotation proves the opposite to what Bro. Smith quoted it to prove. Again, could he suppose himself, or did he think that any of the Saints took our President, Joseph Smith, to be a man that would permit a counsellor to be "fastened" upon him and the church that he and the church did not "accept?" There can be no mistake as to what the book says in this regard. (Page 348, par. 14). The President of the church can receive from the Lord such revelation to the church that can appoint any general of the Order to be one of the counsellors to the President of the church. Page 349, par. 16 reads: "Either of the twenty-three generals, whoever the mind of Messiah by revelation shall appoint, and upon whom He shall bestow the spirit of the calling to officiate in office, will be mentioned by revelation to the President of the church as his counsellor." Page 347, par. 10 says: "The church general can be a counsellor to the President if called by Messiah through the authority in the church."

When we understand that the counsellor must be appointed by revelation, and that, too, from the Lord to the President of the church, and that he, also, must be "accepted" there is little to be feared that a counsellor can be fastened onto the church by outside influence, and therefore we may all rest in peace and contentment as far as the church is concerned, and go on our way, avoiding evil spirits and seductive traps, proving all things, and holding fast to that which is good.

Messrs. Editors, Brethren: I by no means wish to enter into a discussion like the Gurley and Briggs discussion, which was very disagreeable to me. Indeed I shall not do so, but I have sent this much in defence of Dr. Poulson's book, because it fully endorses the church organization, and the President and the doctrine of the church. Why therefore should it be attacked?

Your brother in Christ,
JOHN PARSON.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 5.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE SUBJUGATION OF GALILEE A. D. 67.

IMMEDIATELY after the fall of Jotapata, the Roman general removed to Cæsarea, carrying with him Josephus, who had been found secreted in a cavern after the destruction of the city. With consummate address, the crafty Jew assumed the oracular tone of a prophet, and confidently foretold to Vespasian his accession to the imperial throne; one of those shrewd guesses which might well occur to a speculative mind under the circumstances, and of which the promulgation naturally tended to the fulfillment. His bold prediction had the effect of securing the favor of Vespasian, which was the object he doubtless had in view; and his youth, handsome figure, and chivalrous bravery recommended him strongly to the generous Titus. Henceforward we find Josephus in the Roman camp till the end of the campaign; having turned his back upon the fallen fortunes of his country, he was content to remain the pliant, sycophant, first of Vespasian, and then of Titus; to smile and flatter and play the courtier among the idolatrous heathen, while he witnessed the last throes and pangs of his dying nation. How unlike Moses, and other of the ancient worthies of this illustrious race, who in times of national sorrow nobly relinquished their own individual ease, "choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." The little flourishing town of Joppa, the principal seaport in Palestine, had been burned to the ground by Cestius, and its inhabitants put to the sword. Since then it had been partially rebuilt by refugees from the desolated country around, who had engaged in a sort of indiscriminate piracy in the neighboring seas, and made this their resort. So annoying had the depredations of these buccaneers grown that marine commerce began to suffer sensibly; and one of the first expeditions of Vespasian after his arrival at Cæsarea, was to dislodge and destroy the nest of pirates of Joppa. This little ancient place was built on the slope of a steep rocky hill, rising from the shore, the projections of which enclose a shallow harbor, exposed to the north. A narrow ledge of rocks forms a sort of channel in which small vessels can ride at anchor but not without danger, which becomes imminent when the wind blows heavily from the northward; hence a gale from this quarter is much dreaded, and is known as "the black north wind."

On the approach of the Roman troops the inhabitants fled to their galleys, and moored beyond the reach of their arrows, hoping to put to sea in the morning; but with the day came on a terrible storm, with heavy sea. Cooped up in the narrow channel, with no sea-room, with an iron-bound shore behind them, the poor creatures looked out upon the blackening north sky to seaward, and felt the straining of the cables, which alone kept them from destruction, as the howling gusts swept more fiercely by, and the crested billows dashed more and more furiously upon the rocks. No hope of safety lay in slipping their moorings, and running before the wind upon the shore, for the beach and rocks were covered with the ferocious soldiers, who could ill brook being disappointed of their prey. At length as the tempest increased, one by one the strong ropes yielded to the strain, and the ships, driving before the gale, and striking one against another, were all dashed in fragments among the ragged and bristling rocks that lined the shore.

The unfortunate mariners all met a violent death; many were drowned; many more were beaten and torn to pieces by the force with which the boiling surf whirled them among the sharp pointed rocks; and the few that reached the shore alive were instantly slain by the merciless Romans.

A fearful and horrible sight was presented along the dismal shore; four thousand human bodies, mangled and bleeding were tossing in its waves, and the surf that rolled heavily up and curled over in long cataracts, was red with the blood of the dead. Such a scene, it might be thought, would have melted a heart of stone; but pity was unknown to the Roman soldiers, and angered because the work of destruction had been so largely taken out of their hands, they fell upon the helpless women and children that remained and destroyed them all. The ill-fated city was then, a second time, leveled with the ground.

After a few days spent at Cæsarea by the sea, Vespasian accepted an invitation to visit king Agrippa, at Cæsarea Philippi. Here the king entertained his illustrious guest for twenty days; after which the latter thought it well to subdue some manifestations of hostility in some of the cities of Galilee, which were in the government of Agrippa; but first, he sent a peaceful embassy to them, to exhort them to submission, and to show them the futility of resistance, while his army encamped at a few miles distance. On the arrival of the fifty horsemen, with the Decurion at their head, before the walls of Tiberias, the whole body alighted to testify that their errand was pacific; but a fierce band of what Josephus calls "robbers," but what they themselves designated "patriots," under the conduct of one Jesus, the son of Shaphat, suddenly rushed out upon the deputation, put it to flight, and led some of the horses back in triumph to the city. The majority of the inhabitants were disposed to submit to the Roman yoke; the rather as their own king Agrippa, had openly espoused the Roman cause; but the fiercer and more impetuous spirits had hitherto so cowed the more peaceable, that the latter had found no opportunity of following their inclinations. Alarmed, however, by the daring act of the "patriot" leader, the chief of the rulers and elders of the city went to Vespasian's camp, and entreated him not to visit upon the peaceable the madness of a few turbulent men, from whom they earnestly desired to be delivered. By such intercessions, accompanied by the good offices of Agrippa, the General was softened, and engaged to send another deputation to receive the fealty of the people of Tiberias. Before this was accomplished, the insurgent leader and his party judged it prudent to provide for their own safety by retiring to the neighboring city of Taricheæ. A fearful doom awaited the unhappy city which the insurgent chief had chosen for his refuge. It was more turbulent than Tiberias, and its haughty spirit of resistance was now increased by the accession of many of that party who were thronging from all parts into it, relying on its strength and its maritime situation. Taricheæ, like Tiberias, had been fortified by Josephus, during his administration of the affairs of Galilee; but the latter had been, in this respect, more highly favored than the former. Both were situated on the shores of the beautiful Lake of Gennesaret, or Sea of Tiberias, mentioned in the gospels; Tiberias being on the western shore; Taricheæ near the southern extremity, close to the spot where the river Jordan emerges from the Lake. The beautiful expanse of water, whose ripples kissed the white walls of three and twenty other cities that lay on its smiling banks, is known by many names. In the Holy Scriptures it is called the Sea of Cinnereth and Cenneroth, the Lake of Gennesaret, the Sea of Tiberias, and the Sea of Galilee. The Jewish Rabbis use the terms, "Sea of Gennesar," "The Sea of Tabaria," which last name it still bears.

Ancient and modern writers are eloquent in praise of its waters and of the country which surrounds it. The very name of Gennesaret is said to be derived from the delightful gardens and paradises which abound there; the word signifying "Princely gardens." The Talmud asserts that "of the seven seas which God created, He chose none for Himself but the Sea of Gennesareth." Josephus is more diffuse in his eulogium. He tells us that the sweetness of its waters and their agreeable qualities for drinking are so great, as to make the water of other lakes seem as if drawn from a marsh, in comparison; that they are clear and sparkling; not bound by a morass, but rippling up to the sandy shores, or pebbly beaches; that though temperate when drawn, and milder than the waters of a river or fountain, yet they are always colder than one would expect in so exposed a situation; and that if kept in the shade in the open air, they become as cold as snow.

Of the vicinity, he declares that the soil is so fertile that all sorts of trees grow, or are planted there, and that the temperature of the air is so balanced as to suit the productions of various climates. Thus walnuts, the fruit of a cold region, grow there in abundance; Palm-trees, natives of the sunny tropics, also flourish; and the Fig-tree and the Olive, which require an intermediate air, likewise comes to perfection in this delightful region. "It is a kindly contention of the seasons, as if each one laid claim to this country; for it not only nourishes different sorts of autumnal beyond men's expectation, but preserves them a great while; it supplies men with the principal fruits, with grapes and figs continually, during ten months in the year, and the rest of the fruits as they become ripe together through the whole year; for besides the good temperature of the air, it is also watered from a most abundant fountain."

Here a few years before the time of which we are speaking, the Lord Jesus had spent the greater part of his life, when tabernacling in the flesh. A few miles to the westward of the lower extremity of the lake, lay Nazareth, "where he had been brought up," and the mountain-brow, from which on the opening of his gracious ministry, the benighted people of Nazareth had attempted to throw him headlong. Within sight of his own city rose the beautiful Mount Tabor, believed to be "the high mountain apart," where the glory of the veiled Deity for a moment beamed forth on his wandering disciples; where "his face did shine like as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." The little town of Nain lay at the foot of this hill, in which the desolate heart of the bereaved widow was gladdened by the restoration of her only son to life.

At about the same short distance from Nazareth, but on the opposite side, was Cana of Galilee, the scene of the first miracle which the Blessed Lord performed, the change of the water into wine. Nearer to the borders of the blue lake was Capernaum, the chief place of his residence during his ministry, which witnessed so many of his mighty works; and Chorazin and Bethsaida, too, whose obdurate unbelief constrained his meek and gentle lips to pronounce on them a woeful doom. Here on the grassy banks, washed by the pellucid tide, he often stood telling the message of life, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom to the multitudes who listened to his words; here he walked to and fro from city to city, and from village to village, "healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." Here He fed the hungering thousands with a few small loaves and fishes, multiplied by his own creative energy. On the placid waters, reflecting with mirror-like perfection the sweet blue sky, he had sat in the little fishing boats of Andrew and Peter, or the sons of Zebedee, "thrust out a little from the land," and taught the crowds that stood on the shore, or had rested from his toils, while his disciples let down their nets for a draught. When furious blasts had come down upon the lake, lashing its waves till they threatened to engulf the feeble bark, he had risen up in the majesty of his power, and stilled the tempest with his word. And once, when in a dark and stormy night, the disciples were alone, toiling with rowing against a contrary wind, and tossed with waves in the midst of the sea, Jesus had suddenly appeared, mysteriously walking over the crested billows, at first to their terror, but soon to the removal of their anxieties and the relief of their toils. Nor must we forget that it was on the verdant shores of this lake that one of the most important of those interviews took place, in which "Jesus showed himself to his disciples after that he was risen from the dead."

But now very different were the scenes that were acting around the Lake of Gennesaret, and very different was the character of that Jesus the son of Shaphat, who was one of the leaders in the bloody tragedy that was soon to redden its peaceful waters, for in pursuit of this daring chief, Vespasian had now advanced upon Taricheæ, and, having pitched his camp a few miles from the city, was beginning to fortify his position, and to prepare for a vigorous siege. The Jewish chief, however, waited not for the attack, but rushed out fearlessly upon the Roman camp, tore to pieces their outworks and entrenchments, and retreated in good order, without loss. The advance of the legions compelled the Jews to resort to the galleys, of which they had prepared a great number; these they drew up at anchor, in line of battle, sufficiently near to the shore to maintain a fight of missiles with the enemy on land, while they were secure against the danger of being boarded. In the meantime a large body of the inhabitants had marched out into the plain that was before the walls, and were forming for battle.

Vespasian sent Titus with six hundred cavalry to disperse them; but the latter, finding the array more formidable than he had anticipated, sent for reinforcements. Four hundred more horsemen, under the command of Trajan, were accordingly forwarded to his aid; and at the same time a body of two thousand archers were stationed on the brow of a hill that overlooked the wall, that they might sweep off the opposition from the battlements. The onslaught was now commenced by the Roman horse. Titus distinguished himself by many acts of daring valor; the Jews manfully maintained their ground for some time; but the impetus of the cavalry was irresistible, and the long lances that they carried gave them an advantage in the charge, which the half armed multitude could not withstand; they were everborne, pierced through and trampled under foot by the iron hoofs of the horses; at length they fled in confusion back to the gates, leaving many of their number dead upon the plain. And now ensued a tumult within the city, caused by the contention of those who were determined to resist to the last extremity. The uproar reached the ears of the enemy without, and Titus, taking occasion to encourage his troops, led a few of the boldest down to the margin of the lake, and found means to enter the city. The panic which the presence of the enemy within the walls produced, disarmed opposition; many of the insurgents, with Jesus their leader, escaped by the outer gates, and dispersed over the country. Some strove to get on board their ships by rushing down to the shore in the very teeth of the Roman hosts, in which attempt many were slain; and even the pacific inclinations of those whose counsels had been overborne in the city did not prevent their being indiscriminately put to the sword; until Titus, at length finding the place in his possession, commanded the carnage to cease.

The next day Vespasian gave orders to pursue the fugitives, who when they perceived that their city was taken had pushed out towards the middle of the lake. He siezed a number of the vessels which he found upon the shore, and having fitted them up with expedition, and manned them with his troops, despatched them after the Taricheans. Probably the wind would not permit them to escape into the country around the north of the lake, or they were too few and unskilful to work the ships; the shore behind and around them was in the possession of the Roman troops, so that, though unarmed, they had nothing to do but await the onset of their enemies. Their vessels were small, weak, and ill-manned; but those which Vespasian had fitted out, were strong and filled with armed men. The only mode of annoying the Romans was by throwing stones at them from a distance, but these fell harmless from the helmets and coats of mail of the legionaries; whereas, if they ventured nearer the Roman javelins transfixed them. The pursuers endeavored to come into close contact with the fugitives, aiming to run them down, or striking them in the middle to break them through, or if that failed, leaping on board, sword in hand, slaying them; if the fugitives evaded the contact, so as to baffle the boarders, they were run through with the long pikes which the legionaries carried. No mercy was shown to the wounded or drowning; they were pierced as they struggled with the waves, or if they swam to the Roman ships, and supplicated for help, their heads were cleft or their lifted hands chopped off in reply. At length after most were destroyed, the shattered remnant were driven back to the shore they had left, environed by the pursuing squadron. Here they were hemmed in by land and sea; enemies, relentless as tigers, were around them on every side; and thus the poor Galileans were all slaughtered at leisure, like helpless sheep. The number of the slain in the siege and in this sea fight (if fight it could be called) amounted to six thousand five hundred. The waters of the lake seemed as if turned to blood, and the whole surface was strewn with fragments of wreck, and with swollen and discolored corpses; while the numbers that were washed up on the the shore, and lay festering in the sun, so corrupted the air as to produce alarm in the minds of the Romans themselves. But sickening as is the account of this dreadful slaughter, a more horrible transaction remains to be narrated, one which affixes a lasting blot upon the memory of the Roman general. The inhabitants proper, of the city, had all along been friendly to the imperial authority, the war party having consisted mainly of fugitives from other places, who had resorted to Taricheæ, especially after the reduction of Tiberias on account of its naval position and means of defense. Vespasian called a council of war to deliberate on the fate of these inhabitants who had really done nothing offensive to the Roman majesty. He seemed at first inclined to spare them; but others advised that they should be slain; asserting that, though indeed, the pledge of his right hand had been given for their safety, he needed not to keep faith with Jews. Accordingly the general, acting with the most diabolical treachery, affected to give them their liberty, but commanded that they should leave the city only by the road that led to Tiberias.

The poor unsuspecting people readily obeyed, and went along securely with their effects by the way which was permitted them, while the Romans took care to guard the outlets of the road on each side, and shut them up in the city. Then came Vespasian and having assembled them in the stadium, ordered all the aged, together with others who were "useless" to be slaughtered in his presence to the number of twelve hundred. Six thousand of the able bodied youths he sent to Nero, to be employed in a labor which he was then projecting—the digging of a canal through the Isthmus of Corinth. Some he presented to Agrippa, and the remainder, amounting to thirty thousand four hundred, he sold for slaves.

Thus was unhappy Israel beginning to feel the bitterness of the wrath which came upon them in consequence of having rejected the meek and lowly One who would have gathered them together and sheltered them with his love. The very doom was befalling them in consequence of their denial of their King and Lord, which they had feared as the result of believing on Him. The Romans were come and were taking away their place and nation; nor was the pitiless character of their stern policy unpredicted. Long ago had Israel been warned of the fruits of disobedience; the picture of this very desolation in all its minute reality of horror, had been drawn by the finger of God, and exhibited for their admonition and fear, fifteen hundred years before. (Deut. 28: 49-52). "The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favor to the young, and he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine, or flocks of thy sheep; until he have destroyed thee. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustest, throughout all thy land. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy lands which the Lord thy God hath given thee."

The Roman progress in conquest had yet proceeded but slowly, for it was now about the beginning of September, and yet Galilee was not subdued. Three fortresses, undismayed by the fate of Jotapata and Taricheæ, still held out against the invader, Gamala, Gischala, and Mount Tabor.

The first of these was a mountain fortress, situate not far from Taracheæ, but on the opposite side of the extremity of the lake. In natural strength it far exceeded Jotapata, and was believed to be impregnable; being built on a lofty ridge, shaped somewhat like the back of a camel whence its name was derived. On each side and in front, abrupt precipitous valleys of great depth divided it from the surrounding hills; but behind it was connected with the mountain ranges by a sort of neck or isthmus, and this was fortified by means of oblique trenches, which cut off all approach. The summit of the ridge was very steep, so that the houses, with which it was entirely covered, seemed to be built over one another, and appeared as if about to fall. The city faced the south, where it was of immense height; and here the precipice was a perpendicular cliff, so abruptly rising from the deep ravine beneath, that it needed no wall or other defence.

The presence of a fountain within the city was a circumstance of inestimable value to a garrison. The natural strength of this place had been increased during the administration of Josephus by the erection of a strong wall, where defence was needful, as well as by the excavation of moats and subterranean passages. The garrison was not so strong as that of Jotapata had been, but their confidence in their impregnable position was unbounded; and indeed the city had already successfully held out against the forces with which Agrippa had besieged it for seven months.

Conference Minutes.

VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA.

Conference convened at Hastings, June 16th and 17th, 1888, and Elder Thomas W. Smith was chosen to preside; Elders E. McGurk and Wm. G. Trembath, secretaries; sister Lizzie Stewart leader of singing. Minutes of last conference read, corrected and adopted. Reports of Branches:—Hastings, last report, John Grayden ordained teacher. Queensferry, 1 baptized. Report referred to branch for correction. Leopold, 2 baptized. Officials present and reporting:—T. W. Smith, of the twelve, Elders E. McGurk, Wm. J. Trembath, (baptized 1), and David McIntosh (baptized 1). Priests A. Woolley (baptized 1), E. Jones, jr., J. C. F. Rennie, and James Craig. Teacher, John Grayden. Financial report of J. C. F. Rennie read and approved. Bishop's agent, E. McGurk, read certificate of appointment from Bishop Blakeslee, and reported what he had received since receiving his credentials. Bro. G. W. Hailey was ordained a priest. E. G. Jones, Sr., was sustained as president of the district for ensuing term; also J. A. Reed as district secretary, E. McGurk as Bishop's agent, and T. W. Smith as president of the mission; also the church authorities in general. Preaching on Saturday evening by D. McIntosh. Prayer meeting Sunday morning in charge of T. W. Smith and J. C. F. Rennie. The Holy Spirit was present in a goodly measure, manifesting itself in various spiritual gifts. Preaching at 2:30 p. m. by W. G. Trembath, assisted by E. McGurk. Preaching at 7:30 p. m. by T. W. Smith. Conference adjourned to meet October 20th, 1888, at Queensferry. President of the district, Evan Jones, was unable to attend through sickness. Conference sessions harmonious and peaceful.

CENTRAL MISSOURI.

The above conference met with Alma branch, June 9th, W. L. Booker presiding, M. A. Trotter secretary. The Missouri river and Alma branches reported. No report from Wakanda. The following elders were present: E. W. Cato, Robert L. Ware, of Kingston, Geo. W. Carter, J. B. Belcher, W. L. Booker and M. A. Trotter. Wm. Nuckles and John Dravenstott, present, reported; also Thos. Curtis and M. H. Stone, deacons, and R. Hockings, teacher. R. L. Ware, J. B. Belcher, and E. W. Cato were appointed an adjudicating committee, which reported the case of F. M. Miller to the body. Report was read and committee discharged. Bishop's agent made the following report: Received since last report, $6.00. None paid out. A motion was adopted that the president of the district in connection with branch officers hold a two days' meeting in each branch during the next quarter. The present officers were sustained. Adjourned to meet with the Missouri River branch, Saturday, September 8th.

TENNESSEE AND KENTUCKY.

Conference convened Saturday, July 28th, John Thomas presiding, S. L. Cooper secretary. Elders reported: P. B. Seaton, baptized 1, held regular meetings over the district; John Thomas, baptized 1, and had labored with Bro. Seaton and J. H. Adair. Teacher: S. L. Cooper; Deacons: Frank Stephens and G. P. Snow. Reports of branches: Eagle Creek 27; 2 received. Foundry 15. Farmington no change. John Thomas was chosen Bishop's agent for the district during his stay here. It was resolved, That the district sustain P. B. Seaton with temporal means that he may devote all of his time in the ministry. He was continued as president of the district for the ensuing six months. Adjourned to the call of the president.

Miscellaneous.

FORSTER.

The Saints of New South Wales met at the chapel in Forster, June 30th, 1888, and organized by choosing T. W. Smith and Joseph F. Burton to preside, and C. S. McLaren and J. W. Wight secretaries. After remarks by the president the following business was transacted: Branch reports: Nambucca 42, Wallsend 38, Hamilton 17, Forster 52. All reported spiritual condition good. Elder J. F. Burton reported having baptized one hundred and twenty eight since coming to Australia, and felt glad that he had been sent to this mission; had never had cause to ask for financial aid but once.

T. W. Smith, of the Twelve, endorsed Bro. Burton's remarks, and felt that he came to this land just when the Lord wanted him to, as fully attested by the Spirit in 1884; Brn. Joseph Smith, Ellis, Briggs, Lake and others witnessing thereto. Elders C. A. Butterworth and J. W. Wight testified to their belief as having been "called" to this field.

The following motions prevailed: That we organize a district to be known as Forster, comprising the northern portion of New South Wales as far south as Newcastle. Bro. Geo. Ballard was chosen president, Bro. John Dickenson vice-president, Geo. Lewis secretary, and C. S. McLaren assistant secretary. Bro. John Wright was chosen and recommended to the Bishop as Bishop's agent for this district. The authorities of the church, the president and missionaries of the mission were sustained in righteousness. A motion to adopt the Book of Rules, and purchase a district record from the Herald Office, prevailed. Also to adopt minutes and send synopsis of same to the Herald for publication.

Vote of thanks to Bro. Burton and family for their efficient labor in the mission, and to the Saints of Forster for their hospitality to visiting Saints during conference, prevailed.

The preaching was by Brn. Smith, Burton, and Wight, and was greatly marked by the inspiration of God's Spirit. The sacrament and social meetings were grand spiritual feasts, the Spirit being present in tongues, prophecy, etc.

At the 2 p. m. meeting, of Sunday, Bro. Sidney Wright, a young man of promise, was ordained a priest.

Officials present: Of the Twelve, T. W. Smith; of the Seventy, J. F. Burton and J. W. Wight; Elders, C. A. Butterworth, Geo. Ballard, Jno. Dickenson, Jno. Wright, Luther Ballard, Richard Ellis, Thos. Gregory and W. Clark; Priests, T. Dickenson, Sidney Wright, A. Mills, A. Seaburg; Teacher, Geo. Lewis and Deacon, William Taylor.

Adjourned to meet at Forster, subject to call of missionary in charge and district authorities.

REUNION MEETING.

Missouri Valley, Harrison county, Iowa, has been selected as the place at which the next Reunion will be held, to convene October 6th and continue over two Sundays.

The grounds are about one mile from the depot, near the banks of the Willow Creek. Arrangements have been made by which persons attending will be conveyed from the depot to the grounds for ten cents, or the round trip for fifteen cents. The usual reduction in railway fare is also expected, of which due notice will be given.

Four car-loads of cobs will be furnished free by the town, bass cord-wood at three dollars per cord, and hay at four dollars per ton, on the ground. All other conveniences as usual.

We have the option of keeping the grounds for any length of time from one to five years; so let all come, and if you don't like the location you can change to suit.

Further particulars will be given in time.

THE COMMITTEE.

BISHOP'S NOTICES.

At a late district conference held in South-Western Texas, Bro. O. D. Johnson, of Bandera, Texas, has been recommended for my Agent in the said district. I hereby appoint him as my Agent for said district, and recommend him to the Saints that they may sustain him with their prayers and means.

Having received the resignation of Bro. Richard Ellis, as my agent in Australia, and the recommendation by conference held in Forster, of Bro. John Wright as Bishop's Agent, I therefore appoint him as such over all the territory of Australia; except that part comprising the district of Victoria; and do recommend him as such to the Saints, asking them to uphold him by their prayers and sustain him by their means.

G. A. BLAKESLEE,
Presiding Bishop.

GALLEN, Mich., August 10th, 1888.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The next quarterly conference of the Little Sioux district will meet at Persia, Iowa, at 10:30 o'clock, a. m., Saturday, September 1st, 1888, and continue till business is disposed of. Reports should be sent to Wm. C. Cadwell, Woodbine, several days before. All are invited. All church officials in the district should especially try and attend this conference.

The conference of the Central Kansas district will be held in the Saints' Chapel at Scranton, Osage county, Kansas, September 15th and 16th. We trust there will be a good representation of all of the officers present. Please send your reports, and all the Saints that can attend do so, that we may have a time of rejoicing once more together, and receive the promise that is given us through obedience of the gospel of Christ.

DANIEL MUNNS, Dist. Pres.

Conference of the Nodaway district will be held at Sweet Home, Nodaway county, Missouri, the third Saturday and Sunday in September, 15th and 16th, 1888. Come all who can.

JAMES THOMAS, Dest. Pres.

APPOINTMENT.

Elder G. R. Scogin is hereby appointed to labor in the South-Eastern Mission, appointment to continue until and subject to the approval of the Conference of April, 1889. Saints in Georgia, Florida and Alabama, will please give Bro. Scogin their confidence and support, agreeably to his mission appointment.

JOSEPH SMITH, Pres.

August 13th, 1888.

DIED.

BRINDLEY. — At Columbus, Nebraska, July 29th, 1888, aged 68 years, Bro. Charles Brindley. He was born in Marsdon, Derbyshire, England, April 11th, 1820; united with the church in an early day, came to America in 1849, to Nebraska in 1857, locating at Genoa; afterwards in 1863, at Columbus, where he has since resided. Like many others of those who started for Utah, he was confronted with wrong doing and unchaste practices; and leaving that church, he stood aloof till 1865, when he united with the Reorganization, to which he remained faithful to the end, when he faintly uttered, "All is well." An immense concourse of carriages followed the remains to the cemetery, where he for twenty-three years had reverently and tenderly prepared the last resting place of many of our beloved dead. Funeral sermon from the text, "Well done, good and faithful servant," by Elder H. J. Hudson. The following is an extract from the Journal newspaper, published at Columbus: "Mr. Brindley had many good qualities, among them being a genuine good-will which was always considerate of other's wishes; a kindly humor, sparkling and bright, among his friends; and honest purpose to do right by everybody and withal a faithful, conscientious discharge of his duty. Let us hope that in that land whither he has gone, we may greet him some day, with the old familiar smile. Peace to his memory here."

VANCLEEF. — At Wilber, Nebraska, August 3d, of spinal meningitis, little May, daughter of George and Lizzie Vancleef. Her earthly pilgrimage was about eighteen months. She leaves a twin sister, like a rose among thorns, while she has been transplanted in the better land, where the spirits of the just are perfect. May the Lord be good to the bereaved. Funeral sermon by R. J. Anthony.

POPE. — At Slack Canon, California, May 31st, 1888, of whooping cough, infant daughter of George and Edith Pope, aged 7 weeks.

Gone, is our little sun-beam,
Gone from our clinging arms,
Our wee pet is free from suffering,
She is safe from death's alarms.
Our home is dark and cheerless,
Black clouds obscure the sun,
But may God give us courage
To say, "Thy will be done."

LARSON. — At Omaha, Nebraska, August 10th, 1888, Sr. Meeth Johanna Larson, wife of Bro. Lars Larson, aged 55 years, 3 months and 3 days. Funeral service by E. Rannie, Jr.

AYERS. — Bro. James Ayers was born October 11th, 1805, in Mercer county, Kentucky. He united with the church in Wayne county, Illinois, sometime in the forties, (exact date not known). He died July 16th, 1888, aged 82 years, 9 months and 5 days. Bro. Ayers was remarkably stout and active for one of his age; his mind also retained its vigor and activity with wonderful tenacity; his kind and charitable disposition made him well liked by all who knew him. He leaves a wife, several children and many friends. Funeral services conducted by Elder Isaac A. Morris and John F. Henson. May he rest in peace.

HOT WATER REMEDIES.

There is no remedy of such general application, and none so easily attainable, as water, and yet nine persons out of ten will pass by it in an emergency to seek for something of far less efficiency. There are few cases of illness where water should not occupy the highest place as a remedial agent. A strip of flannel or napkin folded lengthwise and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has the croup, will usually bring relief in ten minutes. A towel folded several times and dipped in hot water and quickly wrung and applied over the toothache or neuralgia will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works like magic. I have seen cases that have resisted all other treatment for hours yield to this in ten minutes. There is nothing that so promptly cuts short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat or rheumatism as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly. Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic, and hot water taken freely half an hour before bed time is the best cathartic possible in the case of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect upon the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued a few months with proper attention to diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia. Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck.—Sel.

MARRIAGE OF DIVORCED PERSONS.

The law of the Episcopal church, governing the solemnizing of marriages by ministers is as follows:

"No minister knowingly, after due inquiry, shall solemnize the marriage of any person who has a divorced husband or wife still living, if such husband or wife has been put away for any cause arising after marriage; but this canon shall not be held to apply to the innocent party in a divorce for the cause of adultery, or to parties once divorced seeking to be united again."

This seems to accord exactly with the teachings of Christ on the subject. The civil law in this country does not reach this standard. Persons separated for "incompatibility of disposition," have not the right of marriage. They may separate but they cannot marry again. If this law were enforced it would break up the divorce business. Many persons are led to seek a divorce in order to try again. If divorce meant that they must remain unmarried they would hesitate to avail themselves of it.

CHURCH AND PARTY DOMINATION.

THIS is an age of thinkers. Whatever may be said of the profound thinkers of any of the ages preceding ours, it must be said of this, that it has a long list of thinkers, astute and learned, and possibly as profound as any of the passed ones, all anxious and willing, not only to avail themselves of the wisdom of the wise men gone before; but also desirous to work out new lines of research, and to leave abiding landmarks where they have been to guide other thinkers who may wish to profit by their discoveries. It should not be, nor is it strange that the age should be wiser than some of the former ones; for it has the benefit of all that has been recorded in history and much that has come down in legendary teaching, upon which to build the bases and superstructures of theory and philosophy now, and the experience and recorded observation of men who have delved deep into the arcana inviting them to search after the hidden treasures of knowledge. Men now should be, and we believe as a race are wiser than their predecessors in the things of man.

It was said by one wise man that "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of the kingdom." And this must mean that in the things of the generation, the current affairs of the race, the men engaged in them are moved upon and guided by a better comprehension and appreciation of their surroundings and capabilities than are the children of the kingdom in similar things.

Of course this is true of political affairs as of other things. There is then some reason to believe that the politics of the American government may have been devised for the real best good of those men who by choice, or the force of factitious circumstances were made participators in the scenes incidental to their inception, and those who should come after them; however widely different opinions might be held concerning the details attending the carrying into effect the general features of the institutions upon which the government was based.

There was at the founding of the government two parties, differing in their views concerning the basis, powers and general policy of governing, or being governed; agreeing, however, on the common ground that governmental powers were to be used for the benefit of all, not a part only of those consenting to be governed. There are now two parties, two great divisions into which the opinions of the citizens of America are grouped, still preserving the common understanding above referred to, and still differing upon some points of governmental policy.

There are, besides these two grand divisions, many who differ from both in regard to the issues that separate the two, and who hold views that neither party accedes to, or has embodied in its declaration of essential features in polity. Some of these views have received so much of support that from time to time, new parties have been created, so that there have been not only the two but sometimes the third and fourth parties all urging themselves forward upon the attention of the citizen. At present there are six, four other than the two principal parties, the existence of which is by politicians considered to be necessary to the purity and well being of the nation; the idea being that a party being in power and having no check by an opposing party would soon become corrupt and crystalize into a tyrannous rule,—just as waters unmoved by currents within and unstirred by winds without would stagnate and become foul; so agitation from reformers within the ranks, and watching and opposition from without are needful to keep political party atmospheres healthful to the nation's good.

Each of the two now dominant parties asserts its own policies to be best. This is but fair, if the men composing each party so believe. However, each is not content with so asserting the superiority of its own principles, but assails the others, alleging that its policies are bad and its party following corrupt and inimical to the perpetuity and success of the nation. Neither is content with an affirmative declaration and argument in support of its views and policies; but enters the fields of controversy apparently relying as much upon the weakness and corruptness of its opponent as upon its own strength and purity of principles and purpose. This is unfortunately true of each of the new parties clammering for reform and struggling for national power. Each one of the several new parties now existing, of which there are already six in the field with the American and the Greenback parties to be heard from, making eight in all, presents to the American voters an arraignment of the two dominant parties charging corruption in both as one of the potent reasons for the formation of a new party; and urging that the particular one destined to be the salvation of the people, politically, is this, or that, as the speaker, or writer may be identified in the political field. Reforms are promised by each of the new parties, some in one direction, some in another; all more or less attractive to the average mind, and seeming to offer a panacea for political woes. Each urges also against the two dominant parties that they are controlled by "rings," "cliques," "bosses," and run by those who manage the affairs of the party by a system of clackers, or whippers in, while the balance meekly bow to the party lash and vote the party ticket, being led by partyism.

Every party, and every politician of every party, has an undoubted right to be heard by the people who wish to hear. Every advocate of every theory of government and every political measure, has the right to present his theory for consideration, and to do it in his own way; but there are men, and we believe that they are not few, who would much prefer that these politicians of every class would content themselves with an affirmative declaration of party principles, and the argument why these principle and policies should be considered as the best, rather than to arraign other parties for being corrupt, and to charge partyism as an evidence of such corruption. The Republican partizan does not see how an American citizen can be a Democrat; the Democratic partizan thinks that an honest man can not be a Republican; the Prohibitionist partizan asserts that men of honesty and principle will not remain with either of the old corrupt parties; the Union Labor, and United Labor partizan, denounces the dominant parties as being run in the interests of capital to grind the poor laboring man into the dust; the Woman's suffrage partizan, charges that the old parties are exponents of crystalized oppression of woman; and so it goes, each claiming excellence in itself and denying worth to the rest. It occurs, however, to the looker on, that while parties are being so loudly berated by those holding diverse political opinions; and the charges of corruption, bossism, partyism and party denomination are being so furiously hurled at the ones attacked, those who are using these epithets are showing that they are living in houses of glass. Each man who vociferously cries up his own, and decries the old, or the new parties with which his own is not in harmony, is a partizan, and as a rule has come out of one or the other of the dominant parties. He now claims to be honest in his views and convictions; but was he any less so when he was Republican or Democrat? He now claims to be free from the rule of political bosses and party domination; was he subject to these before? If he is honestly devoted to the good of the country and the people now, was he not so in his former party allegiance? When he came out from the party to which he formerly belonged did he leave only dishonest politicians and their dupes behind him? Was he a blind devotee to partyism when in connection with his former party? It seems to us that these questions must occur to those who will stop to think; and the answers to them should be pertinent. All these charges; especially the allegation that the mass of the parties vote at the dictation of their party bosses and from a spirit of partyism, come with bad grace from any adherent to any form of political faith as against any other; for the charge itself and the vehemence with which it is made are partizan, and the charge is made in the interest of and with a view to build up the party to which the one making the charge belongs, to the hurt and injury of the others so charged. It is a token of partyism in itself, and blinds nobody who chooses to see through the thin veil of duplicity behind which it attempts to hide. This charge of partyism is the last charge that political aspirants should resort to, and should never be used by men who desire to be clean in statement and decent in argument. The political parties of America are made up largely of men who are more or less conversant with the various beliefs and policies concerning government, and who think and act independently of personal domination; and to charge these men with being the tools and dupes of corrupt political tricksters, or of purposely standing by party against principle or conviction of right, is an insult so coarse and low that no decent-minded man should ever allow himself to give it to his fellow voter, no matter what his political creed. Honesty of conviction, loyalty of purpose, the good of the people must be conceded to the American citizen, whatever his party following may be. That there may be demagogues is conceded; but they are not the habitues of one region only; nor are they found in only one political organization. They dwell wherever parties are found, and none are entirely free from their presence. Men may differ politically as well as in religion; and the man who is conscious of his own integrity of political opinion should not charge his fellow with partyism, with the intention to say that he votes as he does for party's sake and not from personal preference and conviction.

What has been written in regard to party domination is upon the hypothesis that the parties referred to are composed of American free men interested in the perpetuation of the now successful experiment of a government by the people; and it is certain that to such, dictation in politics is as distasteful as it would be in religion; and hence, there is not and can not be what is so termed as dictatorship in either of the old or any of the new parties; however clamorously it is charged.

Nor is it practicable to believe that men of the character to refuse to submit to domination in politics, would in any sense submit to similar domination in church; hence, while it has never been made to appear that an effort has been tried by the present leading men in the Reorganization to dictate to members of the church in personal affairs, in either politics, or religion, it has been unkindly hinted by some that there were some who watched leading men and shaped their actions by what these men did, thus being dominated by their leaders. It is but fair to these men thus accused of being led without independence on their part, to protest for them against such charge; for if not permissible in politics it is not in the church. This charge is usually made by the same class of men who charge partyism upon men who vote with the party to which they have allied themselves, and comes with no better grace from them in the case of their fellow church-men than against their fellow voters in politics; and ought not to be indulged in.

It will be seen that we have not written in the interest of any party, but upon a principle of fair and manly treatment of man toward his brother man. The HERALD is not a political paper, nor its editors politicians. We, however, urge all voters to examine the field and obey the injunction "Seek to put good men in office;" using the best judgment of which each may be in possession as to the men, and the policies to be pursued to secure the greatest good to all; and avoid thinking or charging that your brother or your neighbor as honest and conscientious as you, who thinks and votes differently from you, does so because of partyism, or party domination.

THE CONVINCING OF MAN.

THIS is a power that should be possessed by all who are called to preach the gospel of life and salvation. It should therefore be sought for in every proper way, that the minister may fully answer the ends for which the Lord has called him to the work of saving souls.

Some preach with such precision and statistical nicety, such fine spun theorizing and skillful hair-splitting, that none but the learned, the acute and worldly wise, can perceive their subject nor understand their arguments. That kind of preaching not only fails to convince the general hearer, but, on the other hand, it disappoints the hearer, and defeats the mission of the preacher by making his efforts harmful rather than helpful.

Others, there are, who preach on topics that have no clear, direct gospel light in them, and have no immediate, vital connection with the worship of God and the plan of salvation. Sermons of this kind, lacking the vital force of saving truth, fall powerless and worthless, like the false bloom of the barren fruit tree.

Another class preach themselves their own personal theories, views, opinions, tastes, and dogmas—and fail to preach Christ as set forth plainly in the accepted word of God, seemingly heedless of the fact that they are called to be "Ambassadors for Christ," and that, therefore, they should faithfully represent Christ and not themselves.

Ministers of the kinds here indicated may "adorn the pulpit" with shrewdness, smartness, worldly learning, polished manners, high-sounding words and stylish raiment, but they are powerless in teaching the soul and "convincing" the heart of the "the one thing needful"—that which pertains directly to the peace and salvation of the soul. Well would it be if all the ministry could say with Paul, "Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

At the very "beginning of the rising up, and coming forth of Christ's Church out of the wilderness, clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," the Lord said thus of the ministry: "Behold, this is your work, to keep my commandments; yea, with all your might, mind and strength. Seek not to declare my word, [until qualified and authorized.—Ed.], but first seek to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed; then, if you desire, you shall have my Spirit and my word; yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men."—Doc. Cov. 10: 10.

Herein is revealed what are essential elements in the "power" by which God wills that men shall be "convinced" of the gospel—the "Spirit" and the "word" of God. This was afterwards enjoined of the Lord forcefully, in these words: "And again, the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them; and these shall be their teachings as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith; and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."—Doc. and Cov. 42: 5.

Here is displayed in few words, the way in which the ministry may attain unto "the power of God unto the convincing of men." This is God's way, and it is the only way ordained of him. In harmony with this plan Paul says: "Christ sent me to preach the gospel, . . . not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect."—1 Cor. 1: 17. He further says on this point:—"And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."—1 Cor. 2: 1-5.

This is the kind of preaching the world and the church need to-day. It is this kind that is "the power of God unto the convincing of men," and it is the only kind by which salvation can be proclaimed of God to sinner and saint. No minister should attempt to preach unless thus divinely qualified and endowed. The Lord has graciously promised to empower his ministry if they will abide the conditions of their call and ordination, and they should spare no proper effort to fulfill these conditions faithfully, that souls may be convinced by the wisdom and power of God and be saved in his kingdom.

THE Lamoni Gazette comes to our table this week in an enlarged form, and in a changed name. It is now in the hands of Brethren Joseph R. and Daniel F. Lambert, Bro. John H. Hansen having sold his interest in it some time ago to Bro. J. R. Lambert who has placed his oldest son, Richard, in it to represent his interest and learn the trade and art of journalism. This paper as the Gazette, has under the management and charge of Bro. D. F. Lambert, taken high journalistic ground and has been newsy and devoted to Lamoni and the county interests; fair in its journalistic intercourse with other local papers, so far as we have known; and has independently had its say in all topics which it has chosen to discuss. We presume that as the Independent Patriot it will continue to deserve to retain its present patrons and to secure many more who may wish a Decatur county paper, which for upright and fair dealing may be relied upon.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert's connection with the paper does not interfere with his ministerial duties, his interest being really the interest of his son Richard, who with Brn. Alma Hanson and Alexander D. Greer, of Pleasanton, form the operating printing force, Bro. Daniel F. Lambert doing the editorial work. We wish the Independent Patriot great success, as we have always been anxious for the Gazette, both at its founding by Bro. S. F. Walker and S. E. King, during the occupancy of brethren Hansen and Walker, and Lambert and Hansen—it should survive being among the fittest.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Duncan Campbell wrote August 17th from Reger, Sullivan county, Missouri:

"Bro. Grim and myself are meeting with considerable success here. We have baptized six. Two others have given their names for baptism, and many others are believing. The preachers are doing what they can to stir up the people against us and to keep them from hearing us. We are blessed with good liberty in speaking and in bearing testimony."

Bro. John J. Cornish wrote from Farwell, Michigan, August 20th:

"I am in the 'battle field' and having a big time, and there is a lot at it. This whole community (from one to seven miles south of Farwell and around) is in an uproar. One Baptist minister is fighting this work, but the scale is turning in our favor; he is losing ground fast and we are gaining. Two or three will be baptized to-day. I look for another (so called) 'Bay Port row.' Infidels and leading men of this place are looking on, and favoring this work. I am in splendid health and blessed with the spirit of the Master. May God bless you and all his people."

THE item below going the rounds of the press, is illustrative of the passive philosophy there is in the churches—possibly ours as others. We once heard a distinguished citizen of Keokuk, Iowa, make a remark similar to the one attributed to General Phillip Sheridan. He said: "I would consent to give all that I have of this world's goods, and at my present age begin life over again as I did at the start, empty handed, if I could feel as confident concerning the next world as you gentlemen seem to be." He was talking to Bro. Israel L. Rogers and the Editor, on a railway train, where we all chanced to meet. Think of it good people, make that choice that gives you to "know the truth" that you may be "free indeed."

"Gen. Sheridan is reported as saying about a year ago: 'If I only had the simple faith of my wife, but I have not. To me the future seems oblivion. If we have a future beyond the grave, then we must have had an existence before this life. These are mysteries which I have often thought over, but I can not fathom them. How much comfort the great mass of mankind get out of that little and yet potent instinct summed up in the word faith. I was born into the Catholic Church and can not get out of it. But I have my own views. We must do our duty in life. We are here and must make the best of it.'"

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE call attention to the relic of the times when the Saints were driven from the state of Missouri, a receipt showing that the state of Missouri paid the militia for expelling citizens from her borders, whose chief crime was their love of American freedom and dislike to slavery.

Bro. J. M. Wait wrote from Aniwa, Wisconsin, August 14th, that he was preaching some in that vicinity. He finds it difficult to contend against the influence of the saloons which flourish there, but was trying to do what he could to raise the standard to the people.

Bro. R. R. Gaither, of Ottawa, Kansas, writes of his interest in the cause and desires some of the elders to hold preaching services at that place.

We have received letters from Bro. Thomas Dixon, Islington, New South Wales, July 7th; Bro. Wm. Thompson, Angus, Iowa, August 8th; Bro. Thomas W. Smith, from Newcastle, New South Wales, July 3d and 4th; Bro. Wm. McGurk, Somerville, Victoria, Australia, June 22d, and Bro. T. J. Martin, Detroit, Minnesota, August 13th.

The Salt Lake, Utah, Deseret News, Herald, Tribune and Times, the first two Mormon, the last two Gentile, or secular, come to us in exchange from the "City of the Saints," and show in their aggregate of news, literature, editorials and advertising, the peculiar and thriving energy and industry of the middle west. From Provo we get the Enquirer, from Logan the Utah Journal, from Beaver the Times, and from Idaho City, the Idaho World. To-day, August 23d, the Western Tree Planter, printed at St. Paul, Minnesota, and devoted to the tree culture, farm, orchard, landscape and forest, is laid on our table, a spicy journal of its kind and ably edited for the object of its pursuit.

THE following is from the New Albany, Indiana Ledger of a late date, sent by Bro. M. R. Scott, in note dated August 15th:

"Elder Moses R. Scott, who with Elder Gillen, was warned out of the city by a lot of outlaws, was in the city Saturday on his way to his home at Galena from Jefferson county, where he has been holding meetings in the interest of the Latter Day Saints. The fellows who visited the church at Byrnaville and played White Cap are known and will be presented to the grand jury at the next term of the Harrison circuit court."

SR. MARTHA SALISBURY, of Glidden, Iowa, has sent us a copy of the Robertson county Democrat, published at Mt. Olivet, Kentucky, for December 15th, 1887, with the purpose that we give a rhapsody by Ingersoll and a reply to it.

Bob Ingersoll's now famous sour mash prose poem has evoked a spicy retort from an Evanston friend, which was published in the New York Sun:

My Dear Colonel:—You remember, I presume, once sending your friend a jug of chronic whiskey bearing this label of praise to his enemy:

"I send you some of the most wonderful whiskey that ever drove a skeleton from the feast or painted landscapes in the brain of man. It is the mingled souls of wheat and corn. In it you will find the sunshine and the shadow that chased each other over the billowy fields, the breath of June, the carol of the lark, the dews of night, the wealth of summer, and autumn's rich content all golden with imprisoned light. Drink it, and you will hear the voice of men and maidens singing the 'Harvest Home,' mingled with the laughter of children. Drink it, and you will feel within your blood the startled dawns, the dreamy tawny dusks of many perfect days. For forty years this liquid joy has been within the happy staves of oak, longing to touch the lips of man."

Of course, Colonel, you will be glad to learn how it and he took to each other.

Well, believing you, he drank of that jug "till the skeleton it prove from the feast," came and sat in ugly profile on his hearthstone—drank till the landscapes in blossom on the walls of his home he pilfered and pawned to paint your arid "landscapes in his brain." It was the "mingled souls of wheat and corn," you told him; but ere he half finished it stole away the last reluctant kernel garnered for growing children, and it conjured "the mingled souls" of evil-doing and pauper living to drive out the radiant spirits of manhood and plenteous life.

Still he hoped, for you told him he'd find in it sunshine; yet in it he found only raven shadows, each flapping wings blacker than its elder fellow—shadows that chased each other with buzzard greed, for both carcass and the immortal, and chased their victim out of the great armchair of rich content up to the rough pine stool in the dismal garret, while close beside him they chased into that mangy shelter the last of one loving woman with the broken soul, her liver-pinchd young John and little starvng Mary. In it, too, he found, not your pansy breath of June, the carol of the lark, and the dews of night that kiss the coming corn, but the stark-mad blast of December, the bark of the wolf at his door, and the moulding damp of the night of despair.

Then you sang to him of the wealth of summer and autumn's rich content that should twine the neck of your Bourbon chalice, but it twined for him a barren summer to an angry winter and rags that knit themselves together in "imprisoned" darkness.

Yet the friend of your fascinating enmity drank on till down in the festering cellar and the crawling sawdust, he loafed and listened for your "Harvest home," but heard only your brutal men and maidens vendible utter maudlin blasphemy of the Master, and caught the melody of their shame in brace of unclean song. Why, sir, he drank till the heavenly laughter of little children round his knee died away into restless moaning—died into the dying child's whispered asking for bread!

Drank? Yea, fast and deep he drank your dreamy potion off, till deep and fast within his blood he felt, never one star-led dawn, but forever a life eclipsed, the sun of the future always setting, sinking through the tawny dusks of the clouded mind toward that midnight which foretells no day, into the final gloom of the drunkard—the damnation that's endless in its desolation!

There, declining foe, you'll find your friend, and the days of his homage to your deformed genius being spent, he'll gather courage to say: "Colonel Ingersoll, if from out thy earthen cask had crept unto me one liquid joy, it is that here I look upon its giver eternally kennelled beside the offspring of his gift, thy soul a weary, scorched and quenchless messmate at the feast of thy betrayed—the host that worshipped thee and the 'feast' whence the 'skeleton' shall never depart!"

Sir Robert, in ungrateful beguilement of many unstable souls and the crash of sweet homes only soberness can build, none—no, not one—hath so measured up to the warped, unwashable Crosby as hast thou in thy stanza of prose accrediting with life the death begetting sweet of the still.

If any of us feel secure, and sure of salvation whether or no, should we not beware lest we depart from the truth? or should we not carefully and prayerfully guard our thoughts, and watch our steps? Is not suicide, murder, turning away from the priesthood and blasphemy against the Holy Ghost all the one sin which can not be forgiven in this world, (mortal life), and the world to come (Millennial Reign)? Ye who read, hear, understand and believe, but have not yet obeyed, don't you think it would be better and safer for you to obey now, for you may do better than some others who have?

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"The blue sky is the temple's arch,
Its transept, earth and air,
The music of its stary march
The chorus of a prayer.
So nature keeps the reverent frame
With which her years began,
And all her signs and voices shame
The prayerless heart of man."

Concert for September 6th.

Memory Texts, Gal. 6:2. John 13:5.

Subjects for prayer Luke 10:2.

"And he said unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the laborers few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest."

For sister L. E. T. That if consistent with His holy will, the Lord would grant to remove from her the terrible calamity which threatens her and would give repentance to those who are persecuting her.

THREE IN HEAVEN.

"Three little heads laid low,
With the death line on their faces,
Three little child forms missed
From their happy household places;
Three little voices hushed,
Whose music was thy gladness;
Three little hearts grown cold,—
This is thy cause for sadness.

"Three little crowned heads,
In their Father's kingdom shining,—
Three little angel forms,
Safe from all ills combining;
Three little voices raised
In heaven's triumphant measure,—
This is thy cause for joy—
There is thine earth lost treasure."

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., July 26th.

The Prayer League held its first meeting since its organization on July 26th, at three o'clock at Sr. Potter's, meeting opened by singing Hymn thirty, Saints' Harp. Prayer by Sr. Burr. The president, Sr. Gardner, spoke of her feeling in regard to the Prayer League; that she had felt blest in observing the hour set apart for prayer and reading the Scripture lesson; believed it would prove a blessing to us, to our children and the church if we continue faithful; gave good counsel to the League. The Spirit was with us from the opening to the close of the meeting. Then followed a season of prayer and all felt encouraged. One after another expressed their feelings in regard to this new movement. All felt assured it would prove a great blessing, if continued faithfully, and that if we would be humble, great good would come of it, and all felt the witness of the Spirit to this effect. Sister Burr felt we should remember the priesthood in our prayers. Sr. Holden made us glad with her experience in keeping the hour yesterday. She was alone in her room, opened her bible to read the lesson, the 8th of Romans, and the power of darkness tried to destroy her peace and hinder her. She bade it be gone, and read the whole chapter. She says that chapter never seemed so clear to her. She was so blessed that she felt it would be good to depart then. Her testimony was followed by a season of prayer for the sick and afflicted ones. We have the lesson selected by Sr. Eleanor, the subjects for prayer, the priesthood, the sick, the work here. Benediction by Sr. Gardner.

Names of members: Sisters Gardner, Eldredge, Burr, Whitehead, Golden, McDowell, Bacus, Best, Graham, L. Smith, Bronson, Neldorp, Holden, Bourguoine, Ramsdel, G. Smith, Potter, and Lewis.

Hope to send more names soon.

Dear Sisters:—I, like a great many others, have not written to our Home Column, leaving the space others, but it seems as though the sisters do not take hold as we ought to in so great a cause. I am in favor of the Prayer League, but am not so situated so that I can meet with the sisters. I believe those that can meet together ought to do so; for the more unity the more faith, and when we meet once a week, we do not have the time to foster any hard feelings that may have arisen. When we meet often in prayer, we feel more humble and forgiving, but I do not think we ought to leave off praying for a day. I often lay my sewing aside and kneel in prayer. I do not believe it necessary to always have a set time to pray. I think God will hear our humble petitions at any and all times when we pray in sincerity. At midnight when we awake, when we are preparing our meals, if we offer up a few words in praise to our merciful Father, I have felt that they were accepted of Him, and the case would be lifted from my mind and I would feel happy and contented to still plod along. Many times I have been so tired and worried I have fallen asleep while trying to say my prayers, but I think God has taken my will for my deeds. What a glorious thought! To have a God so merciful and just that he will reward us for our good desires, but of course our desires are only accepted when we can not perform the deeds. It is of no use to any one for another to say, "Be ye warmed and filled," and not try to supply these comforts when they can. And again to say, "I hope they will have plenty of company tonight to sit up with the sick," yet never go near to be sure there is. Dear sisters, if you can do nothing more, go and visit the afflicted. It is a great comfort sometimes to the sick ones to know they are not forgotten in their afflictions. I speak from experience, as I have had a great deal of sickness and am a cripple an have poor health yet, but as I can not do those good things, I had better not say too much about it, and leave it to those who do perform those works of love. I desire an interest in your prayers as I am in great need of them.

Your sister in the covenant,
T. E. C.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., Aug. 9th.

Sister Walker:—We were disappointed when Bro. Anthony went east that he did not stop. We want him to stop when he goes back if possible. There is another beside Evan Adams to be baptized here. A man who has been preaching twenty years; was educated in Germany for the ministry and was to be sent out on a mission by the Adventists this fall. He stopped at our house at noon and I asked him to have dinner with us. He asked me what church I belonged to and I told him. Before the conversation was finished I persuaded him to examine the gospel as presented by the Latter Day Saints. He disputed with me for four hours and a half to commence with, but after that the light began to break in upon him. He read the tracts, Voice of Warning, Book of Mormon and took the Doctrine and Covenants with him. He lives seventy miles from here, but if he preaches now it will be for the church of Jesus Christ. He says he saw the Lord in vision twenty years ago in Germany. He told him to look at the church. It was empty and if he wanted to do anything for him to go and work. He showed him the wounds in his hands, his feet, and his side and said, "This shall be your wisdom." We are glad of these souls for Christ and know you will rejoice with us.

Yours in the gospel covenant,
MRS L. M. RICHARDS.

Dear Sister:—I have just read your editorial on the prayer League, also Sr. Eleanor's letter to the same; and, feeling that my time had come, to have my name enrolled, I hasten now to write; before the worrying cares of life come in between me and this religious duty: I have wanted to become one of the League ever since it was first proposed; but did not fully understand what was required of its members. I am a firm advocate of united strength in prayer, and can testify to the blessings which our little branch has received when we have covenanted to pray at some certain hour for certain blessings, and we generally fast on Friday during the time.

These covenants have generally been to pray until our meeting, when we were expecting an elder to come. We prayed every day at sundown for three weeks last year. We were expecting Bro. Roberts to come and preach in our branch, and the Spirit warned us that when the elder came God had blessings in store for us; but we must prepare ourselves, for before the elder should come, we would be called to pass through a severe trial, and this warning did not fail; for we were sorely tried by the death of one of our little ones, our little Sunday School scholar, who died one week before Bro. Roberts came. We continued to pray at sundown until the blessing came, for at the close of our meeting, my own three daughters presented themselves for baptism and were baptized the next day, and thus were the warning and promise both fulfilled. Since then the same Spirit that directed Sr. Eleanor to Zech. 16th verse has been calling to me "Let every one warn his neighbor," and many times have I have called upon to defend the cause among the people here, especially among my own relations, and the Lord has blessed me and put words into my mouth. I feel the Spirit of the Lord upon me now. The Lord is pleased with the efforts that Sr. Eleanor is making, to do good to her neighbor and will give her grace and strength in every hour of need. Oh, how great and wonderful are thy ways, Oh! King of Kings! Thy love to us has been great. By the tender cords of thy love are we drawn together, we are made as one in the Spirit. May we all be faithful and endure to the end.

Yours in gospel bonds,
NANNIE A. GIFFORD.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Aug. 7th.

Sister Frances:—I send my name to the Prayer League with the desire and hope that I may be ever ready at the appointed time, yet with some fear that it may be forgotten, or that circumstances may interfere at times; still I mean to try to be with my sisters in the Spirit at the hour appointed. One subject of prayer has often suggested itself to me and I presume to many others, and that is the youth of the church. They are brought up in the belief of the church, and do not believe the doctrines—but very often they seek their pleasures among the world's people, and it seems hard for parents to induce them to take much interest in the church—especially the prayer meetings. It seems almost wrong for parents to attend meetings when their children are away. They often do not know where they are or who they are with—and yet it seems so irksome for the children to have to go, that parents scarcely feel it right to force them. It seems hard to know one's duty, does it not?—or it almost seems as if duties conflict.

I think children who are always taken to church from their babyhood, and know nothing else, are more apt to take hold, and be interested than those who are allowed to choose whether they will go or not.

I have often felt impressed to pray for the young, who must ere many years stand in the place of those who are near their journey's end. It makes me sad to think that many will be illy prepared, unless their minds and hearts are so worked upon, that they may more fully realize where they stand. I hope and trust that the united prayers of the mothers may prevail for them and that ere long there may be a wonderful change, and a much greater interest in the work of the Lord be awakened among the youth of the church.

Your sister,
ALMA.

LUCAS, Iowa, August 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I can say that I love this work, and that I have no desire to turn back. It is over twenty years since I obeyed the gospel and still I want to go on to the end. I know that I do not live as faithfully as I should live. I often think if I could talk as some of the brothers or sisters that I would always have something to say in the meeting that would benefit some one. I ask all of the sisters to pray for me that I may continue faithful to the end, and that I may receive strength and wisdom from God to guide me that I may bring up my children to love and honor Him. Well, I will close.

Your sister in the gospel,
CHARLOTTE PHILLIPS.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

From some of the following extracts names are withheld, from the fact that they were sent to the Prayer League and not for publication.

"From the first I have thought the Prayer League a good movement and that, if only faithfully persevered in, would result in great spiritual benefit. While reading the memory texts this was clearly witnessed to me, and I feel that after having such evidence of the Spirit that the work is approved of the Lord, that to longer delay sending in my name will bring spiritual darkness upon my mind and rob me of what the Father intends I should enjoy. This morning, though not yet a legal member, I observed the hour in reading and prayer and the Spirit was with me." J.

INDIAN RIVER, Maine.

Sister Willis, Benton, Tennessee, writes:—"I first learned of the latter day work through books loaned me by a neighbor. I was convinced of its truth before ever hearing a sermon preached by one of the same faith and was baptized in 1887 by Bro. Seaton. I had been a member of the Christian church about twenty years. There are no Saints here except Bro. and Sr. Roson and myself. I desire your prayers that I may hold out faithful. I have a large family and, like many others my trials are often heavy. 'Come unto me all ye who are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest.' The Scriptures seem so much plainer than they used to, that I wonder that I did not understand them sooner than I did. When the Bridegroom comes may we be ready to go out and meet him."

Sister S. S. Butler, Long Island, Kans., writes:—"I belonged to the Deer Creek branch, but we are scattered now. A few of us meet together for prayer and testimony meeting. The Herald is our only preacher. I am convinced that this Reorganized Church is engaged in doing a good work. The gospel preached by the sectarian world is not that everlasting gospel spoken of in Rev. 14:6. Let us, therefore, dear sisters, contend earnestly for that faith which was once delivered to the Saints."

Correspondence.

ANSWER TO A LETTER FROM A FRIEND IN UTAH.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., August 5th.

Dear Friend:—Yours of July 25th is received. I am anxious to tell you the same news I wrote to sister Lois, in Kamas, Utah. I heard E. W. Tullidge preach in our church lately; He gave an interesting account of the rise of the church through Joseph the Martyr, announcing his belief in his son as being the president of the church at the present time. He finished by uttering a prophecy concerning the church in Utah. It ran thus: "There shall thousands of that people throw away their evil doctrines and join the true church, and preach the gospel in purity to the nations of the earth." The same prophecy was declared by John E. Page, my husband, I think in 1854, in Dekalb, Illinois, to a large school-house full of attentive hearers. He spoke with sadness of the evils that people had been led into by blind shepherds, but said with great earnestness: "Thus saith the Spirit of the Lord: He will turn and overturn that church until He shakes out the evil doctrines from them, and very many shall come out from them and teach the gospel in purity to the nations."

Now mark these two witnesses on the tablet of your memory. I have told you beforehand, for with a sane mind and much rejoicing I heard them both, being present when these things were uttered. I doubt not the Lord or his goodness, ability, and power to fulfill them. You say you have replied to my arguments on polygamy. True; but you can not refute them and believe the Book of Mormon. You say it is plain that the Nephites were not allowed to practice that principle; but wherein that was a standing law to all ages, you fail to see. "Herein is a marvelous thing," that you do not see that the law given by an angel of the Lord to Jacob to teach his people was not correct in that age of revelation. Jacob says it was given before in the age of Lehi. The Lord says the disobedience of it in the age of David and Solomon, was abominable before Him. Again in the same chapter the Lord says he will visit all the lands of his people who disobey it, with a sore curse, even unto destruction. Jacob says that the Lamanites have not forgotten the command given to our fathers, (plural). In that age the same pure law was in force, and for keeping this command the Lamanites shall become a blessed people. This is an age yet to come. If they shall be blessed for keeping this law, the church in Utah will be cursed for disobeying it, as in lands where the same sin prevailed, for God is no respecter of persons. Read Mosiah, chapter seven, and you will find that in another age the same crime brought destruction upon those who practiced it in the age in which King Noah lived. Read Ether, fourth chapter, concerning those not of the Nephites, but of a people led to this land by the Lord, who always gives pure laws to His people. The Prophet Ether says that King Rip-lakish did not do right in the sight of the Lord, for he had many wives. Is it possible for the Lord to call a thing good that He has by so many witnesses called evil? Can he declare any practice abominable that is (defined by Webster) "hateful, detestable, loathsome;" and afterwards when importuned, call it the celestial law, and righteousness? The prophet Mormon says, "He changeth not, if so He would cease to be God."—Book of Mormon 4: 7.

Now I think you are convinced by so many witnesses. When the angel told Jacob the Lord's law for his people, it was a standing law to all ages. What would you think of a people who dared to say, "The gospel brought to us by an angel was not a law to all ages?" In conclusion we refer to chapter ten of the second book of Nephi, 4th and 5th. The nations that possess the Lord's words in the Book of Mormon shall be judged by them at the last day.

Yours for truth,

MARY PAGE EATON.

MERRIMAN, Neb., August 18th,

Bro. Dancer:—Will you please request the elders in charge of the Southern Indiana district to visit Mitchell, Lawrence county, Indiana. We had a relative from that place visiting us this summer and she said she had never heard of the Latter Day Saints until she came out here; said she would like to hear them preach. I told her what I could about our faith, and gave her a Voice of Warning. I feel anxious that she should hear one of our elders. She is pretty much disgusted with sectarianism.

Your sister,

SARAH S. WEED.

MOBERLY, Mo., Aug. 13th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—At the request of Bro. and Sr. Evan Griffiths, I send you the enclosed relic, a reminder of the troubles of other days. It was found in the house they now reside in, three miles west of Moberly. The house was formerly owned and occupied by Mr. Horner. In repairing the house an old coat was pulled out from between the siding and plastering where no doubt it had remained forgotten for years; in one of the pockets was found this paper, but not before the mice had appropriated a small portion of it as a tribute to their realm:

On What Account	By Whom Purchased	Rec'd. Bk'g.	Div.	Doll'rs Cents	Pay per Pound.	Total Due.

This paper shows that Missouri promptly assumed payment of the expenses of the Mormon war. We wonder whether in eternity they will as readily take the consequences! Of course we do not suppose that any particular value attaches to this paper, but thought it could be preserved as a relic with others of like character and be interesting may be to some. If not, it will not be much trouble to throw into the waste basket.

Bro. Holt and I have been in this part for some time preaching, but no apparent results yet. Hope the Lord will bless the labors done that they may result in good. We go from here to Salt River branch.

Yours for the truth,

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Aug. 14th.

Editors Herald:—Elder Hyrum O. Smith was here a few weeks ago and preached four good, plain, gospel sermons. At the close of his sermon Sunday evening, a young man came to him and requested baptism before he left Monday morning. It was the first time Bro. Smith preached in Nebraska City, and the longer he kept on the better was he appreciated; because of his stableness of mind and soundness of speech. He left a good impression. I wish that the same could be said of every preacher that occupies the pulpit here. It requires a careful study to preach the genuine gospel of Jesus Christ, so that people may be convinced of its power to obey the same. Rambling or empty talk will not be noticed by thinking people; as they will soon observe that the teachers are duller than the scholars, therefore a prayerful life and constant study of the word of God will help the preacher in the pulpit wonderfully. No false theories will be presented then, for the spirit of God will speak through them and that will be genuine and no guess work, or men's opinions. The work here is at the lowest ebb that I ever knew it spiritually. No visiting is done; so we flounder along the best we can; but my faith is in God, and him I rely upon for a full salvation.

ALMA NIELSEN.

NATHAN, Ark., August 17th.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—I continued to labor in this county and Howard, until the 16th ult; I then started to Sevier to meet the great "Moses" of Campbellism in that part of the state. His name is A. S. Bradley. We went to Center Point the first day. There we met with Bro. Stinnett and Clinton, who were there attending court. From Center Point we went to Bro. Clinton's in his wagon. Thence to Bro. Stinnett's. After we got to Sevier county, "Dame Rumor" was very busy, and came very near keeping me away from the place of debate, so near did she come, I had to travel about twenty miles on Wednesday morning (the 25th) before ten o'clock, but I was there in good time, and met the man of "two patent corn sheller capacity." He had sent me word that he would make me think he had a patent cornsheller in each hand before he got through with me. We met and he would not agree for any thing to be used but the Bible. The debate lasted four days, and a more complete victory it has never been my privilege to witness than was gained for the Church of Christ during those four days. The propositions discussed were the claims of our respective churches. Could we have remained in that vicinity for a few days after the debate, I think several would have obeyed the gospel, but I must hasten back here to meet Mr. Kelley, the independent preacher. And of all the tricksters I ever met, he is trickiest. He did not want me to read our epitome, but the moderators decided against him—just what any sensible person would have done. On the morning of the second day, he withdrew his proposition and in the afternoon he says, "I challenge! the gentleman to meet me on the second proposition, i. e., that the doctrine taught by Samuel Kelley is the doctrine of Christ. In this debate also the doctrine of Christ was maintained and the friendship of many was increased, and new friends made. I never feel better in my life than I do when trying to set forth the plan of salvation to benighted souls.

We go to new fields next Sunday. There are more calls in this country now than a dozen elders could fill. I will fill all the places I can, but when I go into a new field I want to remain there long enough to tell the people what the doctrine is.

Yours in bonds,

A. J. CATO.

FORSTER, N. S. W., July 3d.

Dear Herald:—We left San Francisco two p. m. the 3d ult., and were soon—for the first time in life—out upon the "mighty deep." Some two hours out, and I noticed that "Neeley" was very white, but he held out like a sailor. As to myself, I felt no inconvenience until night, when I turned suddenly sick; and from that till Tuesday, five p. m., I never went into the dining room. After, I was sick on three occasions, but not so bad. Those who have never known what it is to be sick on the ocean, let them turn to the 18th verse, 107th Psalm, and they will there get a full idea of what it is. The voyage was said to be one of the most pleasant they had ever made.

We landed in Sydney on the 28th ult., and started next day by boat for this place. Arriving at Newcastle at two a. m. of the 30th, we found brother and sister T. W. Smith with others of the Saints awaiting us; and from there we had the pleasure of their company to this place, where we landed about noon.

At two p. m. we met at the chapel, a neat structure built at the expense of Bro. John Wright alone—and proceeded to organize a conference. The first district ever organized in New South Wales was created, to be known as Forster.

Brother George Ballard was chosen district president for the ensuing year, and Bro. John Dickinson as his assistant. Brethren George Lewis and C. S. McLaren were chosen as secretaries, and Bro. John Wright as Bishop's agent. There were three preaching and three social services during the conference. The business transacted seemed in harmony with God's Spirit; and thus closed one of the grandest conferences of the kind ever attended by me. In fact a greater unity of feeling and brotherly love, it were hard to find.

We have still continued the meetings, and had a glorious social service this evening. It is the last evening brother Burton and family are to remain with us, and while I shall regret their departure, I only wish that the church had five hundred such ministers as Bro. Burton has proved himself, for this field. Sister Burton and daughter have proved themselves efficient workers, as shown by the warm-hearted friends they are leaving behind.

When I think about following up such men as Brethren Rodger, Wandell, Gillen, Burton and Smith, it makes my heart almost almost stand still yet I am pleased to say that since coming into Australia we have been wonderfully blessed. To follow such men as brethren Smith and Burton for reputation, as to integrity and sterling worth, is a pleasure. It is only when considering the ability that I am fearful.

The branch here numbers fifty-two, brother Burton having baptized almost the entire number. We will continue the meetings yet longer here. Some are to be baptized Sunday.

Bro. Smith anticipates going north, and I expect will send us to the Victoria district about August. From present indications I am very hopeful of this field, and from recent manifestations am more than ever convinced of our being "sent" to this field, as witnessed by one of the Twelve at Independence.

J. W. WIGHT.

GALENA, Ind., Aug. 10th.

Brethren Joseph and William:—Doubtless ere this reaches you, you have seen and heard much in relation to driving out Mormon preachers from Byrnaville by the White Caps. There is scarcely any truth in what has been going the rounds in the papers. On the night of the 25th ultimo Bro. Gillen and I were holding a meeting in Byrnaville, and while the meeting was in progress four masked men rode down town. One of them rode to the door and threw in a notice for us to stop our services immediately, without any hesitation, by order of the community. In the first place the community of Byrnaville never ordered any such thing; and, secondly, it did not break up the meeting as reported. The meetings continued from the 25th to the 29th. Nor is it believed that those men that tried to break up the meetings were White Caps, from the fact that White Caps have never been known to meddle in matters of religion. It is believed that these men are at the bidding of Sectarianism, using their only means of salvation. Of course we will admit that it is the best argument they have. Had they any better they would undoubtedly use it. What is it that can not be said and published about God's people? My trials are about all that I can endure. O, I would to God that the people could see the truth and be saved by it. It is said that four of the White Caps who rode into Byrnaville and notified the Latter Day Saints to stop their meetings have been tracked to their homes, and that "an effort will be made to indict them before the Grand Jury."—Louisville Times, August 8th.

Yours in bonds,

MOEL, Mo., Aug 8th.

Dear Herald:—We feel sorry because we are so circumstanced that we can not purchase the church publications and needed books, but it is not because we do not work, but because we have not the favor in our work, as we never have had such failures as of late. Since then I have tried to make pictures, with much hard work in trying to make a crop of corn, and never got a bushel, and it has been too dry for some weeks to come and go, and it will be cut short, but thank the good kind Father it looks more like rain. I was much built up by attending the two days' meeting at Carrus Ferry, Indian Territory, July 14th and 15th, where we had some able exhortations and admonitions from Stephen Maloney and preaching by Elders John A. Davis and Orson Sutherland. There was a goodly number of the Saints there, and there would have been more but for so short a notice. We got the Herald late on Friday and went some twenty odd miles over the mountains and river and taking the old pony from the plow. They will have monthly meetings which we hope to attend, as we have no meetings of interest here now, and the Saints take the least interest in the Sunday School.

Yours, in the faith,

C. M. FULKS.

WOODBINE, Iowa, August 15th.

Bro. Blair:—With pleasure I enclose a few lines to say that we are at work here for the Master. We have a good Sunday School and it is well attended. We have our prayer meetings every Tuesday night. Our little band is five brothers and eight sisters; how many young I do not know. We hold our meetings at brother W. Cadwell's, brother Kibler's and brother Hull's till we get our new church built. We have preaching once in a week. We will have brother John Hawley tonight.

I see in the Herald of a concert of prayer for August 16th and its subject. I have often thought of that step and prayed to God for its forthcoming. We ought to have a set time on a certain date and hour to tender thanks to God for whatever is set before us. Let us dwell with one accord. We have been blessed since we met with you at Deloit.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

THOMAS LUMLEY.

STUART, Nebraska, July 13th.

Bro. D. Dancer:—I would like to learn through the Herald if there is a branch of the church near Tacoma City, Washington Territory, or anywhere else in Western Washington Territory, where there is good government land? I would also like to hear from sister S. A. Fulk, of Harper, McDonald county, Missouri. Will she please state through the Herald if there is still vacant land there? Your sister, MARY DAWSON.

HAMILTON, N. S. W., July 6th.

Dear Herald:—I think it my duty to write that I may bear my testimony, and also relate the good times we had at the conference in Forster, under the presidency of T. W. Smith, in company with brethren Burton, Wight, and Butterworth, the two latter arriving just in time to meet with us. The district was organized and called the Forster district. Brother George Ballard was chosen president, John Dickinson vice president, George Lewis secretary, and John Wright was by all the branches selected to act as Bishop's agent, with the approval of Bishop Blakeslee.

There was great power of the Spirit of God in all the meetings. The gifts were manifested in various ways, and all things were done in the spirit of oneness, more so than I ever experienced before. Going from Hamilton where there are but few Saints, and meeting with so many, I was made to rejoice by the Spirit of God to see and hear their testimonies and their thanks to God for sending brother Burton there, that they might hear the gospel and have the privilege to obey, and after obedience the witness they have that it is as it was with the Saints of old. This is the same testimony that I received. We are all very sorry to have brother Burton leave Australia, for he has the confidence of all the Saints and we think that he has not staid with us long enough. It is so hard for us to part with him and his wife and daughter; they truly are Saints of God. It is my prayer that God will send him back to Australia again, for he is just the man for this mission. Although he has been afflicted through much out door preaching by losing his voice, yet there is plenty of time for him to be restored and return again. May the peace and blessing of God rest and abide with him wherever he goes.

I am glad that Bro. T. W. Smith has come to Australia, for he is putting us aright in many things, and we are enjoying the Spirit of God under teachings. All who will listen to him will receive a blessing, for truly he has the Spirit of God. Sister Smith wins the love of all the Saints wherever she goes, and the gifts of the gospel are with her in much power.

The work is in good condition and we expect that brethren Wight and Butterworth will gather in much of the seed sown by brother Burton. There are many enquiring for the way of salvation. We are so pleased to have such good elders sent here to preach to us and to the world. We feel that although far away from the promised land, we are not forgotten, and it makes us rejoice when we have the elders sent from America to teach us the perfect law of Christ. May the peace and blessing of God abide with all the Saints.

JOHN G. DICKINSON.

MAINE, Minn., August 14th.

Bro. Blair:—July 29th I baptized three and August 12th two more. Brn. Alexander H. Smith and H. N. Hanson are at Cormorant, doing much good; so I learn. Alexander gave us a powerful sermon on Thursday night last, before he left us for Becker county. I will be at Friburg on Sunday, 19th; at Maine Sunday, 26th; at Girard, Sunday, September 2d, and then I go on to Becker county.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

WEBB CITY, Mo., Aug. 11.

Dear Herald:—There is a branch here known as the Webb City branch of nine families. Webb is principally a mining town, but not as many may imagine, "there is not much civility among miners," for this is as quiet and orderly a town of its size as can be found. The population is three thousand, and Carterville, an adjoining town of about two thousand, Carthage, the County Seat, is nine miles north-east and Joplin five miles west. There are three railroads to this place; the St. Louis and San Francisco, Missouri Pacific, and Gulf. Wages in the mines are from one to two dollars per day. Building lots are from fifty to five hundred dollars. Houses rent from five to twenty-five dollars per month. This is a very healthy location, and any one that is not afraid of work can make a good living. Water is good, but hard. The Saints have a house to hold meeting and Sunday School in. We have a very good Sunday School. We can buy the house and make a very nice church house out of it if we can pay for it. There are five dry goods stores, and two drug stores, eight or ten groceries, two livery stables, one School-house, and four churches. It is only thirteen years since Webb City was laid out for a town. The people are not afraid of the Saints, although they are not exempt from prejudice.

Dear Saints, it has been ten years this month since I became a Latter Day Day Saint. I was the first one to join in this place and my greatest desire is and has been to see others come to a knowledge of the truth. I have had one heart's desire gratified, and that was to be able to circulate tracts and books to those who desired to know the truth. I have never been ashamed to be called a Mormon. There are many honest in this place who are only waiting and watching to see if we are really what we claim to be. O, that the Spirit of the Lord may move on the heart of those and cause them to obey the truth and help to roll on this glorious cause! I would say to the elders in Pennsylvania and New York, if any should go near Sherman, Wayne county, Pennsylvania, I have a brother-in-law living in Sherman who never heard the gospel. He does not belong to any church. His name is Elijah Crosley and he is well known in Sherman. I can assure you that an elder will be made welcome at his house, and and I greatly desire that they should hear the gospel.

I desire the prayers of all Saints that, if it is the Lord's will, that I may have better health, and be able to do more for the advancement of Zion's redemption.

Your sister in Christ,

R. M. BRADLEY.

KINGSLEY, Iowa, August 9th.

Dear Herald:—I wish to testify through your columns that I am kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, and on my way to see the King of Kings, who reigns over that blessed land, where parting shall be no more.

I ever thank God for letting the blessed morning of July 28th, 1887, dawn upon me; which day I united with the Latter Day Saints Church, to begin (after over nineteen years, roaming in the roads of sin) to travel heavenward and gain a home where all is "perfect peace." I was, previous to that time, one of the most rebellious boy's against God, that could have been found anywhere; but when Bro. J. W. White came into this vicinity to preach the pospel of Christ, I went to hear him preach; but went through mere curiosity to hear what I termed "a Brighamite" Mormon preach; but after hearing two sermons, I became interested and began to pay attention to what he was saying; and after listening to three more sermons, became fully convinced that he was telling the truth and was teaching the true doctrine of Christ; as a result of his preaching, I was baptized on the 28th of July, which day I shall never forget; for my soul was filled with his love and I felt altogether like a new being and his love has never died out of my heart, but is still increasing and making me feel stronger and more like doing all I can to push on and try to lead others with me from time into eternity.

I know that this work is of God. The reason I know it is because Jesus blesses me in everything I do for the cause, and because He draws me nearer and holds me dearer to him, when he sees me doing his will. My prayers are that the Saints will all work hard, work together for the advancement of God's high and holy cause. I ask the prayers of the Saints to be ever for the few of God's band who reside at and near Kingsley.

Yours for the truth,

LAWRENCE DAVIS.

REGER, Mo., August 20th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—In compliance with yours of the 30th ult., and advising with Bro. J. R. Lambert I came to this place in the interest of the work. On arrival I found that Elder Henry Grim had aroused an extensive interest in the doctrine by scattering tracts and preaching as health and opportunity permitted. He had baptized some and more have since followed the divine command, and still others have given us their names, and quite a number are earnestly seeking the way.

Since the work of baptism has begun, those who are feeling their craft to be in danger have begun the usual process of making and telling lies, seeking thus to turn away the ears of the people from the truth. There are also attempts made to have the school-houses shut against us; nevertheless we have many friends who strenuously oppose such proceedings.

While some of the preachers oppose us, others of them take our part and publicly endorse the doctrine. The prospect that earnest, persistent labor will produce a large ingathering is good. I have persuaded Bro. Grim to remain here during the fall and winter if he can stand the climate. He has hosts of relatives in this country whom he can reach better than a stranger; but of course he has to bear the persecution incident to the preaching of the gospel. I will continue here for some time yet. Six have been baptized. Pray for us. In bonds,

DUNCAN CAMPBELL.

ELKHART, Texas, August 11th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I left home early in May for the field assigned me. Called at Long Branch, Missouri, and spent a pleasant week with the Saints, where I have spent many a happy hour preaching to the people, but now must leave them to find a home in Texas, with the promise that I will try and spend the month of March with you. It seemed like leaving home again. O, that love that binds the Saints together! It can only come from God.

I reached Hearne, Texas, and finding my way to the branch, I spent two weeks with them. I found Bro. Ezzell waiting to meet Bro. I. N. Roberts, and in due time he arrived. We had a pleasant chat and he and Bro Ezzell went west and I came east, and I see no prospects for leaving. I have not scattered my labors as much as I would like to have done, but I don't like to sow the seed and then let the evil one pick it up before it takes root.

There has been talk of a discussion. The Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists have united their forces, fortified themselves, and crept in behind their strong reasoning, "Don't go to hear the Mormons; they will deceive you." Then the people say they want to hear for themselves, the self-made divines say, "We will close the doors and keep them out." We do not think it is boasting to say the good Lord has opened the way, and blessed the people. The sick are healed and the Spirit of God accompanies the word. Some partake and say, "I want to be baptized." Others say: "I will wait until he comes back; I am a little afraid he is from Utah." May the Lord direct them to obey. I have witnessed the manifestations of God's power here, and I am hopeful of good. Will organize a branch at Evergreen the next time time I go there; some have united with us and others will do so soon. Brethren Bryan, Roberts and the writer have labored there with good success.

I wish to relate one incident: A sister wished to be baptized but her husband refused her. The next day he and his little boy were taken sick. I went to see them but the husband had but little to say. I left that day for another place and the child died in the meantime. When I returned the woman wanted to be baptized and have the boy's funeral sermon preached. The answer was, "I don't want the Mormons to preach the funeral sermon." The next day I called in to see them and found the husband and another little child very sick. Says the husband, "My wife wants to join the church, and she may." And it was but a few moments until the child was playing and the father forgot his sickness and soon got up. The sister was baptized and we went on our way rejoicing,

In bonds,

AMOS J. MOORE.

PLUM HOLLOW, Iowa, Aug. 20.

Bro. Joseph:—The Camp-meeting began here on the 17th inst., and fair attendance from the first. Yesterday (Sunday), there were about three thousand in attendance, and excellent attention was paid to the exercises throughout. Elders J. R. Lambert, R. J. Anthony, John Hawley, Mortimore, Henry and George Kemp, and Wm. Leeka are good and efficient workers in the meetings. We look for Brn. Luff, Derry, Wilcox, Hougas, Hansen, and others, to come and increase the ministerial force after to-day. The weather has been all that could be desired, though we had a heavy rain at four o'clock this morning, wetting the ground thoroughly, and prospects are now good for bright skies again at an early time.

Many are disappointed in not seeing you, for they remember with pleasure and interest your ministrations during the Camp-meeting here last year.

It is probable that our largest meetings will occur next Sunday, the 26th, for we hear from many quarters that the people in the surrounding country are desirous of learning what the faith and doctrines of the Saints are. Prejudice is giving place to the spirit of inquiry in all these parts, and prospects for future church work and progress are very encouraging. The Saints are cheerful, united and happy.

Yours ever,

W. W. BLAIR.

PERE CHENEY, Mich, Aug. 10th.

Bro. Joseph:—Bro. Edward DeLong was with us from July 28th to August 7th, laboring hard for the cause against bitter opposition. We expected several for baptism before Bro. DeLong left us. They believe, but for some reason they can not say, "I care not for the scoffs nor the frowns of the world." But we know that they, with all the honest in heart everywhere, will, sooner or later come into the fold of Christ. Last Sunday night we gathered at the Slaght School-house for services; we were met at the gate by Martin Johnston, who forbade us entering the grounds, but the school-officers opened the house and invited us in. We found the bell rope fastened to the top of the house, but it was soon liberated and the bell pealed forth the call to worship. On the black board was a drawing of a large tree. On the body was written, "Latter Day Saint or Mormon," and on the seven branches, "Blood atonement, Endowment, Lust, Grief, Murder, Shame, and Polygamy." In the lower left hand corner was a drawing of tombstones and on which was written, "Mountain Meadow Massacre;" "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord. I will repay." Over the whole was written, "Explain Mormonism on this devil's chart."

This is evidence to my mind that the devil sees that there are some believers and he is mad in consequence, and is stirring up his own to action. But it only serves to make the honest ones more determined to a thorough investigation of the doctrine. We had an excellent sermon and a pleasant and profitable meeting. We desire the prayers of the Saints everywhere.

Ever your brother in Christ,

F. D. HASTINGS.

FULTON, Iowa, Aug. 14th.

Bro. Joseph:—I add my testimony to this latter day work. I know that it is of God. The tempter often comes to me, and tells me it is a fraud. I have great trials at times, but I am led to say,

"Prayers will your burdens lighten,
However great they be;
God will your pathway brighten,
And Satan made to flee."

We have a branch of twenty-two, with one priest, and one teacher. It has been a long time since we had any preaching; but we expect Elder Roth to labor in these parts soon. The dark cloud of prejudice which had settled upon this vicinity is slowly clearing away. O, may the time soon come, when the knowledge of this gospel will cover the earth as doth the water the foundations of the sea.

Your brother in the one faith,

JACOB HEIDE.

SANTA ANA, Cal., Aug. 15th.

Bro. Joseph:—I see in Herald August 11th a question asked about southern Missouri, that is, the question was asked in such a way as to call in question what I have been writing about Vernon county; and the answer would carry the idea that there was certain ones in the church that we could depend on their judgment, and if we followed their advice we would be all right. Now by the answer it is left so that every one reading it would think that I had written without even saying one word to the quorums referred to. I believe as firmly as any in the church that the Bishop should know where the Saints should settle; also the quorum of the Twelve; and while we were at conference we talked nearly every day with the Bishop about where he thought would be the best part of the state for us to settle in, and his advice was for us to go south of Independence. He intended to go with us but was so busy getting the elders off on their missions he could not get the time. We also talked with Bro. Alexander Smith and others that we thought should know, and their advice was the same. But as I said in my first letter, we were advised to go here and there, but we thought it better to follow the advice of those that should know.

As for ague in Vernon county, that was what I was afraid of. Missouri is adapted to that kind of disease; I know that, and have been afraid to take my family there on that account.

While I was in Vernon county I tried in every way to find out. I saw nothing of the kind and was told that it was as free as any other county, and since I have been home I have seen men, both in the church and out, that have lived in that county for years, and that are well acquainted with the state, that say that Vernon county is as healthy as any in the state. There is no part of the state that is free from fever and ague; neither is Independence; for while I was there Bro. Goff and myself were called to administer to one that had that disease in its worst form. In fact all of those south-western states are troubled that way in some parts. I do not think one hundred miles in a well settled country is going to make any difference as far as sickness is concerned. If a person settles on bottom land, on every one of the streams, he must expect fevers, but on the high lands it is different. While in Vernon county I found good water, and as healthy people as I saw while I was east.

I write this in justice to myself; so that those who have been writing to me may see I am not writing just because of my own opinion; but that I have tried to move right in the matter, and according to the best counsel of the church.

Your brother,

A. W. THOMPSON.

CRAWFORD, Nebraska, Aug. 15th.

Editors Herald:—Greeting to you and all. A few weeks ago a Rev. C. E. Luce, of the M. E. persuasion, (or claimed to be), and myself commenced a series of meetings; continued about a week. After a lapse of several days Bro. Charles Derry commenced sowing the seed of eternal life; delivering in all, I think, ten discourses; also organized a branch on the 11th inst., known as the Evergreen branch, with ten members; officers as follows: D. W. Shirk, Pres.; H. A. Rudd, priest; Andrew Atwood, teacher; Richard Mengel, deacon. In connection herewith we say to the scattered Saints in this region of country, come and be joined with us. Do not be afraid, nor ashamed; remember God knows who you are and where. We live about twelve miles south-east from Crawford, Nebraska. The efforts of Bro. Derry are highly appreciated; and although no additions have yet been made, we think much good has been done by way of removing prejudice. We hope he and others may visit us time and again. Come! come! come!

I herewith send you what I consider an excellent poem, asking you to reprint it; feeling it will do much good. I know not the author.

In bonds,

"TOBACCO impairs digestion, poisons the blood, depresses the vital powers, causes the limbs to tremble, and weakens and otherwise disorders the heart. It robs the poor man's family; it is averse to personal neatness and cleanliness; it promotes disregard for the rights and comforts of others; it cherishes indolence of body and mind; it diminishes the vigor of the intellect; it destroys self control by establishing the slavery of habit; it develops the lower and animal nature at the expense of the higher; it leads into bad associations, and throws its influence into the scale of evil in all the relations of life."—*Dr. H. "LET ALL THY GARMENTS BE PLAIN."

SEE page 144, of Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 12, and you will find what has been, what is, what will be, "a stone of stumbling," a "rock of offense" to many dear, honest, faithful souls who desire to serve God in the "beauty of holiness," rather than the garb of austerity or ugliness, and whose love of the beautiful, taste for draping the human form divine, and artistic handicraft in the myteries of woman's dress, seem to them to be in antagonism with the above quotation.

Hardly a Herald reaches me without some dolorous plaint from a woman on the hackneyed theme; some using specious arguments and transparent sophisms, which they do not manifestly hold to be seaworthy themselves, winding up with the expressed hope that the subject may be cleared up in the vague "bye and bye," when it is presumed Saints "will see eye to eye." I do not know of any contribution upon this subject by any of the ministry, and at the risk of the charge of presumption, I undertake to canvass it.

Why the sisters should feel that this command puts a veto upon trimming a skirt, I fail to see; nor why their sex is any more interested than mine, for they do not wear all the garments in the church, and until they do, let the revelation be applied where it should be, to all the members of the body, of both sexes. It has always been deemed good practice in the church to compare one revelation with another, to discard the latest if it be found in conflict with a former one, or ones. Let us do so with this one, and perchance we may discover a panacea for the horrible fear that "I must wear a plain skirt," "Let all your garments be plain," says one revelation. Let your garments be of a sober character says the latest. Do they agree? Is there any antagonism between the terms "plain" and "sober" in character? Both these revelations have been accepted by the "body," the latest being unanimously adopted in the midst of many evidences of divine power, favor, and upon historic ground.

It is manifest that the above term plain is synonymus with the latter term "sober" as distinguished from flashy, gaudy, showy, garish, and so on; which features are reprehensible in both sexes, as instance the command in the Kirtland revelation to the elders, cautioning them to avoid an excess of ornamentation, just the feature to be eliminated from all the garments of the Saints to make them fill the requirement of acceptable and modest "plainness." The term "plain skirt," "plain waist" or any of its ilk is filched from the vocabulary of the "modiste," or village dressmaker, and hardly the criterion by which to measure the revelations of Jesus Christ, and in any case are irrelevant to this subject, as however eagerly the above personage pants to make, she does not make pants, coat and vest either trimmed or otherwise, and without these articles the "all your garments" would be (as applied generally) but partial.

Again, as in the word of wisdom it is now apparent the Lord was speaking for the future protection from "evil designs," in adulterated articles of drink and food, it is, in the command on dress, apparent the Lord spoke for the purpose of protection of his people from the health injury so manifest in the extremes of fashionable attire, male and female, to say nothing of some nondescript monstrosities and addenda to the human form divine.

The effeminate, dudish, rakish and vulgar in masculine attire, with the wanton, immodest, lascivious, and voluptuous in feminine, the Saints are to eschew, and are provided with a remedy, and shown a way to be independent of in the words, "let their beauty be the beauty of the work of thine own hands." Is there not taste, talent, constructive, creative and inventive genius enough in the church to do its own designing, fashioning and making in the departments of masculine and feminine attire? Is there beauty only in the Babylonish government? Can you criticize the angels' attire? "Let thine eye be single and thy whole body will be full of light." Where the church is gathered this is possible; where scattered the remedy is to "gather." So mote it be.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE SUBJUGATION OF GALILEE A. D. 67.

Continued.

UNWILLING to leave behind him an enemy unsubdued, Vespasian sat down against this proud citadel of strength. It was impossible to encompass it with his army; he therefore disposed his forces in three divisions, the fifth Legion being posted opposite the middle of the city, the fifteenth on the mountain which overlooked it on the east, and the tenth being employed in filling up the trenches and levelling the approaches. The usual accompaniments of a siege followed; embankments were erected; the catapults cleared the battlements, and the battering-ram opened a breach in the wall. Thus ingress was with comparatively little difficulty afforded to the besiegers notwithstanding the overweening confidence of the garrison. But now a singular reverse befel them. The inhabitants with furious valor fell upon the Romans in the narrow streets, and not only repelled the assault but compelled the invaders to flee into the higher parts of the city. Here, however, they were quickly surrounded by the exasperated multitude, acquainted with every local advantage; being unable to fight in the steep and narrow lanes, with eager antagonists above them and around them, they became greatly distressed; others of the army came forcing their way in at the breach, who rather impeded than helped their confused and depressed comrades. To escape, the legionaries began to take refuge in the houses of the citizens; but these, becoming full of armed men, were unable to bear the weight, and fell with a crash upon others beneath them. The manner in which they were built caused the fall of one house to be the ruin of many others, and thus caused a vast number of the Romans to be destroyed, being crushed in the ruins, or suffocated in the clouds of dust that arose. At the same time they were so hemmed in and pressed, that although they saw the houses subsiding, they were compelled to leap upon the tops of them; while the inhabitants observing this, became more strenuous in their exertions to force their enemies into the falling buildings. The very ruins themselves afforded ready weapons, in the stones and bricks of which they were composed, wherewith an active and elated populace might crush an enemy, bewildered and pent in amidst narrow streets, more especially as these streets were steep and rocky, and the enraged assailants had the higher position; the dust also blinded and choked the Romans, so that not knowing where to tread, they perpetually stumbled and fell, while their opposers were familiar with every crag and corner, and being above were more out of the sphere of the dust. Vespasian himself had well nigh finished his career amidst the ruins of Gamala, for he had gradually groped his way to the higher parts of the city, when at length he found himself almost alone, surrounded by perils. With great address however, his little party slowly retreated, still keeping their faces toward their enemies, and made good their escape without the walls. But a great multitude of the soldiers perished in the city, comparatively few of those that had entered the breach being permitted to return, and the dejection that fell on the army in consequence of so unprecedented a misfortune, was a still more serious evil than the actual loss of men. It was some time before the Romans ventured again to the breach; and in the meanwhile Vespasian, to encourage their spirits, sent a body of troops, under the command of Placidus, to attempt the reduction of Mount Tabor. This is the highest mountain in that part of Galilee, and is the most singular and romantic in all Palestine. It is of a somewhat conical form, flat at the top, and stands alone, rising in solitary grandeur from the plain of Jezreel. A winding path leads to the summit, the magnificent view from which amply repays the traveler's labor in ascending it. The plain at the top is still surrounded by an ancient wall, which is probably the very same with which it was fortified at the period of which we are writing. Josephus himself had erected this wall, and strengthened the little city that it encompassed in other ways, and furnished it with water and other necessaries for maintaining a siege. The Roman Tribune perceived that it was hopeless to attempt the capture of this stronghold by assault; he therefore attempted the milder arts of persuasion, with the design of drawing the garrison down into the plain. The Jews affected to yield to his solicitations, but were equally intent upon treachery. The Romans, however, outwitted the Jews, and by practicing the old maneuver of pretending to flee, drew them out in pursuit over the plain, till there was good vantage ground for the use of his cavalry; then suddenly turning upon them, he intercepted their retreat, and cut them to pieces. The remnant left in the fortress then came to terms, and submitted to the Romans.

Meanwhile the garrison of Gamala, maintained the siege, nor was it until the Roman army had encompassed it a whole month that it was taken. But at length three soldiers working by night, contrived to undermine a high tower without discovery. Having dislodged five of its largest stones, they secured their own safety by a sudden flight, while the tower fell with a tremendous crash, burying its guards and many of the inhabitants in its ruins, causing consternation through the city. A day elapsed, however, before the legions, rendered cautious by their former misfortunes, ventured to enter the walls; but on the 24th of Tisra, (near the middle of October), Titus led his troops to the assault. A vigorous resistance awaited him, and a great number of the Romans were slain; but a terrific storm beating in their faces, prevented the Jews from standing securely on their craggy heights, and annulled the effects of their arrows and darts, but assisted those of their enemies. The valor of the unhappy Gammalites availed them nothing, but increased the fury and rage of their conquerors, already excited to savage fury by the recollection of their former defeat. They spared none. Neither sex nor age moved their iron hearts to compassion. With pitiless ferocity they dashed down the tender infants from the citadel upon the crags and points of the ravines. Multitudes threw their own children and wives from the rocks, and then leaped after them, to avoid falling into the hands of those who knew not how to show mercy. Four thousand perished by the edge of the sword; but the number of mangled bodies found at the bottom of the precipices was even greater than this; nor was a single individual saved of the inhabitants of that ill fated town but one man and his two daughters, who secreted themselves so as to avoid discovery. The small town of Gischala was now the only fortress in Galilee that had not submitted to the Romans. Its resistance was not owing to the martial spirit of its proper inhabitants, for they were chiefly quiet husbandmen, but to the intrigues of John, the Son of Levi; the rival and opponent of Josephus, who, with a band of resolute men, had thrown himself into the town, and defied the advancing army. Vespasian, however, thought a thousand horse, under the conduct of Titus a sufficient force for the reduction of this place, and sent the army into winter quarters; the tenth legion at Scythopolis, and the other two with himself at Casarea. Nor was he deceived; for no sooner was Titus before the walls, than the redoubted John seized the cover of night to escape from the gates and flee to Jerusalem, which he managed to reach before the troops sent to pursue him could come up with him. The city now opened its gates to Titus, who stained his laurels by the slaughter, in cold blood, of six thousand helpless women and children; who had endeavored to flee with John, but were unable to proceed. A whole campaign had passed since the arrival of the Roman army and its veteran commander, and Galilee alone was subdued. That so small a province could have withstood the whole force of Rome so long, shows as well the indomitable valor of the Jewish people, as the natural strength of the country they defended with their lives. For it is to be observed that the war was mainly a war of posts; no battle of any importance took place in the plains; the country was full of precipitous mountain ranges, the summits of which were studded with fortresses, rendered both by nature and art impregnable to any power short of the military skill, experience, and perseverance of the iron legions of Rome. And it is interesting to notice that this peculiar character is assigned to this war in that prophetic description of it to which we have already referred and shall again refer: (Deut. 28: 52). "And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustest, throughout all thy land; and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land, which the Lord thy God hath given thee."

But now, at length, the work was done, and the silence of death reigned over that fair province, so lately alive with the hum of busy men. History dwells upon the subjugation of those cities whose strength, importance and pertinacious resistance impart interest to its narrative, and passes lightly over the desolation of rural districts, and the depopulation of unwalled villages. The trampling down of cultivated fields, the abduction of cattle, the sacking of mansions and villas, with unimaginable horrors of rapine and massacre, which accompany the marches and counter marches of an enraged soldiery, are but little noticed by the historian, though not less really a part of the sufferings of an invaded people than the siege of cities and the slaughter of garrisons.

He who could have trod the shores of the beautiful sea of Galilee at this time, would have found himself a solitary wanderer through a region that was lately full of inhabitants. The calm face of the lake was yet scarcely purged from the crimson stain that had recently died its waters, and the white sands of its shores were strewn with the whiter bones of men, from which the flesh and sinews had been picked by the beak of the vulture. The many fair towns whose white turrets had recently gleamed in their beauty from the dark green groves that embowered them, or had been reflected in the mirror-like sea, were now heaps of blackened ruins, in which the embers were scarcely cold. The chambers, where lately had sparkled the glancing lights of the peaceful eventide, now at the same hour sent back only the green gleams of the hyena's eye; and for the merry laugh of childhoods happy circle, resounded now only with the shriek of the jackal.

Capernaum, Chorazin, Bethsaida; where were they? Lately the sound of mirth and jollity, the ringing of tabret and harp, the voice of the bridegroom and the bride had filled their halls; the songs of the fishers, as they drew their sweeping nets to shore, had enlivened the beach; and from their wharves has shot many a white-sailed pleasure boat, filled with youths and maidens, in whose light hearts remained no memory of Him, who a little while before had dwelt among them, "full of grace and truth." His accents of mercy, His tender and touching appeals, and even His mighty signs and wonders, had long been forgotten, and no wonder that His solemn warnings of sure and certain judgments had been forgotten too. But they were uttered by a tongue that could not lie; and they were written in the book of Him whose "word is truth," and they yet remain for our admonition and instruction, "upon whom the ends of the world are come." "Woe unto thee, Chorazin; woe unto thee, Bethsaida, for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes, but it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment than for you. And thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shall be thrust down to hell"— Luke 10: 13-15.

And now the doom was fallen; the judgment was come upon the guilty cities, and they had despised the mercies of the Son of God when brought to their very doors, they had now sought it and found it not. Surely some among them must have thought of the awful words in their own Scriptures, when the inevitable desolation fell upon them, smiting root and branch. (Prov. 1: 24, 31). "Because I have called and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded, but ye have set at naught all my counsel and would none of my reproof; I will laugh at your calamity; I will mock you when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me; for that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord. They would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof; therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way and be filled with their own devices."

It is interesting to enquire what is the present condition of the scenes which witnessed so terrible a calamity. From that stroke they have never recovered. Nature puts forth all her beauty there as before; the lake is as lovely, the banks as verdant as ever they were; the beams of as bright a sun still play on waters as blue and sparkling; but silence and desolation reign over all. One of the best descriptions by modern travelers of the Lake of Gennesaret is that of Dr. Clark, who saw it, indeed from the most favorable point of view for discerning its loveliness, the summit of the hill commonly called the Mount of Beatitudes. "From this point," says the doctor, "a view was presented which for its grandeur independent of the interest excited by the different objects contained in it, has nothing equal to it in the Holy Land." From this situation we perceived that the plain over which we had been riding (from the west) was itself very elevated. Far beneath appeared other plains, one lower than the other in a regular gradation, reaching eastward as far as the Sea of Tiberias. This immense lake, almost equal in the grandeur of its appearance to that of Geneva, spreads its waters over all the lower territory. Its eastern shores exhibit a sublime scene of mountains toward the north and south, and they seem to close in at either extremity, both towards Chorazin where the Jordan enters, and the Aulon or Campus Magnus, through which this river flows into the Dead Sea. The cultivated plains reaching to its borders, which we beheld at an amazing depth below our view, resembled by the different hues their various produce presented, the motley pattern of a vast carpet. To the north appeared many snowy summits, towering beyond a series of intervening mountains. We considered them as the summit of Libanus; but the Arabs belonging to our caravan, called the principal eminence Jabet-el-Sieh. The summit was so lofty that the snow entirely covered the upper part of it, investing all the higher part with that perfect white and smooth velvet-like appearance which snow only exhibits when very deep." Continuing his way over the plain, before reaching the edge of the steep declivity which conducts down to the shore, the same traveler writes: "The lake continued in view to our left; the wind rendered its surface rough, and called to mind the situation of our Savior's disciples, when in one of the small vessels which traversed these waters, they were tossed in a storm, and saw Jesus, in the fourth watch of the night, walking to them upon the waves."

"Often as the subject has been painted, which combines a number of circumstances favorable to a sublime representation, no artist has been aware of the uncommon grandeur of the scenery memorable for the transaction. The Lake of Gennesareth is surrounded by objects well calculated to heighten the solemn impression made by such a picture; and independent of the feelings likely to be excited in its contemplation, it affords one of the most striking prospects in the Holy Land. It is by comparison alone that any due conception of its appearance can be communicated to the minds of those who have not seen it. Speaking of it comparatively, it may be described as longer than our Cumberland and Westmoreland lakes, although it is perhaps inferior to Loch Lomond in Scotland. It does not possess the vastness of the Lake of Geneva, although it much resembles it in certain points of view. In picturesque beauty it perhaps comes nearest to the Lake of Lacarno in Italy, although it is destitute of anything similar to the islands by which that majestic piece of water is adorned. It is inferior in magnitude, and perhaps, in the height of the neighboring mountains, to the Lake Asphaltites: but its broad and extended surface, covering the bottom of a profound valley, surrounded by lofty and precipitous eminences, when added to the impression under which every Christian pilgrim approaches it, gives it a character of unparalleled dignity."

"The feathered tribes seem to make the lake a favorite resort. Multitudes of song birds harbor in the neighboring groves, and their innumerable happy voices mingle with the rush of waters where the river hastens to the lake. The margin and surface of the lake itself present large flocks of storks, wild ducks, and diving birds. Pelicans are not wanting; while here and there vultures are assiduously engaged with their carrion prey; or eagles, flapping their broad wings, rise to their aeries in the mountains, but when the heat of the summer sun intensely concentrated on the borders of this deep basin has absorbed all the moisture which the earth contained, and utterly dried up the green herbage which gave a cheerful aspect to the scene, the effect of the whole in the entire absence of trees, is very different, more dull, heavy, sad, but not less, perhaps, in unison with the general tone of feeling with which the Christian pilgrim is prepared to regard this memorable lake. Its surface is usually in a state of dead calm; and in the universal stillness, the gentle splash of the waters upon the pebbles of the shore is distinctly heard, and is indeed, almost the only sound that strikes the ear.

Not a single boat of any kind is seen upon the lake; and now that the Arab has removed his tent to the higher country, the eye may wander around its borders in vain, seeking for any other sign of habitation than the mean town of Taberia, and one or two miserable villages. The saddened traveler may gaze for hours over the scene without observing a single human being, or indeed any living creature, save the large water-fowl, whose sole presence tends rather to increase than to diminish the desolation of the view."—See Physical History of Palestine.

THE LAW OF THE LORD.

"THE law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul."—Psalms 19:7. What is law? Webster says it is a rule of action, &c. Blackstone gives a better definition of the word than either Webster or Worcester; because he made it a study. His ideas are sound, and are based upon eternal truths. They have stood the test of nearly a century and a half, and are still standard authority all over the civilized world. In his remarks upon laws in general, he says: "Every man finds that his reason is corrupt, and his understanding full of ignorance and error. This has given manifold occasion for the benign interposition of divine providence, which, in comparison to the frailty, the imperfections, and the blindness of human reason, hath been pleased at sundry times and in divers manners, to discover and enforce its laws by an immediate and direct revelation. The doctrines thus delivered we call the revealed or divine law, and they are to be found only in the holy Scriptures. . . . Upon these two foundations the law of nature and the law of revelation defend all human laws; that is, no human laws should be allowed to contradict these. . . . Those human laws that affix a penalty do not at all increase moral guilt, or add any fresh obligation to abstain from its perpetration." He also says that laws are either mandatory, prohibitory, or permissive. The first commandment is mandatory: Thou shalt, &c. The sixth is prohibitory: Thou shalt not, &c. The fifth is permissive, as there is no "thou shalt," or "shalt not" to it; but "thy days may be long in the land," &c. Mandatory and prohibitory laws invariably have a penalty attached to them to enforce obedience and to punish violations thereof. Permissive laws have neither rewards nor penalties attached to them outside of that particular privilege or thing granted by the law itself. For instance: A citizen of the United States may acquire title to a hundred and sixty acres of land by complying with a certain law, but is not rewarded for complying with the law beyond acquiring title to the property, nor can an individual be punished for failure to observe that law.

The law of the Lord being perfect, it follows that a man who observes that law will be perfect. A man can render himself imperfect by failure to comply with some permissive law. Some may say that there are no permissive laws in the Kingdom of God; but there are many. A man in possession of revelation and knowledge in connection with the mysteries of the kingdom is far more perfect than one without them. It is the privilege of each individual to have these things, but in case he has not he can not be punished; for that law which grants them is permissive. The question then arises can an imperfect being be saved? I answer yes, as far as permissive laws are concerned. A citizen of the United States does not lose his citizenship because he fails to acquire title to a quarter section of land, nor because he fails to vote on election day. In each case he is a loser, but the law is permissive and does not affect his citizenship. So, likewise, the law of God says we can ask and receive revelation and knowledge, that we may know the mysteries and peaceable things. (D. C., Sec. 42:17, q. v.) Again, to the ministry is given a privilege that by complying with a certain law "the veil shall be rent and ye shall see me and know that I am." (D. C., Sec. 67, Par. 3.) Now if we fail to enjoy these things do we lose our citizenship? No. Can a general assembly of the church refuse to sustain an elder who failed to enjoy this privilege? Yes; they might pass a resolution not to sustain any elder not up to their idea, but the law of the Lord would remain the same: perfect. There is a vast difference between the laws of God and the interpretation placed upon his law by men. The law of God was perfect when the different confessions of faith were formulated by King Edward and John Knox. The different church councils and ecclesiastical conventions have busied themselves for centuries in passing resolutions, and framing laws; but they have utterly failed to better their condition, for the very good reason that they have ignored the law of the Lord.

I agree with Sir William Blackstone when he says: "Those human laws that affix a penalty do not at all increase moral guilt or add any fresh obligation to abstain from its perpetration." If the law of the Lord declares it wrong to steal, it adds no fresh obligation for a general assembly of his church to adopt a resolution to hang a man that steals. They may even hang him; but he is no more guilty after their resolution than he was before it. But if the law of God defines theft as a sin, and then attaches a death penalty, it would still add no fresh obligation for a church or other organization to pass a similar law. But, says one, do you mean to say that the church has no right to enact laws and then enforce them? My answer is that the church has a right to govern its own affairs, but I insist on its being done in accordance with the law of the Lord. Moses gave the Israelites a precept to write a bill of divorcement. Was it right? The perfect law says not. Moses nor any other man had any right to give such a law, simply because it was contrary to the law of the Lord.

Authority to administer our law is not a license to enact others. If the church has any authority to enact laws, its limits are not as wide as some imagine. The question of the validity of the acts of a general assembly of the church is one for which there has been no provision made. In most forms of government the legislative and judicial departments are distinct and separate; but in the church the validity, or constitutionality of the acts of the legislative branch of the government can not be tested, simply because there is no judiciary to try their acts except themselves. *Now fancy the Congress of the United States passing a certain act, and then to test the constitutionality of that act you take your case right back before the very body that enacted it. Do you suppose Congress would decide that its own acts were illegal? It is very improbable. To test the constitutionality of any of the acts of a general assembly of the church is an impossibility; for it is not a test to try a case before a body in which a law originated. This form of government by the people and for the people may be very Democratic, but it is positively dangerous. The church in the past has been repeatedly wrecked on this rock; and there is nothing short of the power of God that could now save it from the designs of wicked men. Some may claim that the church does not presume to exercise legislative power. I have but to refer you to the minutes of any general assembly or conference to prove that the church exercises both legislative and judicial at one and the same. But my consolation is that "the law of the Lord is perfect" whatever the laws of men may be.

DAVID E. LANDER.

THE SAINTS REST.

THE Lord has promised rest to the souls of all who follow him in the path of meekness and lowliness of heart. The heavens were to receive Jesus Christ until the times of the restitution of all things, which God has spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, since the world began. When we scan the declarations of those prophets we find many comforting promises concerning that happy period of time, that we are evidenced is not far off, from the fact that the times of restitution, or restoration, has already commenced. For the gospel is restored, the Holy Priesthood is restored, apostles are restored, prophets are restored, spiritual gifts are restored, faith, healing, prophecy, miracles, tongues, interpretation of tongues, discerning of spirits, wisdom, knowledge, visions, angelic ministrations and revelation are all restored in these latter days, even as was enjoyed in former days. Again we are evidenced that the great time of the restoration of all things has not only commenced, but considerably advanced, from the facts that the fertility of the land of Palestine is restored, and the rights of the Jews likewise to possess their land. For they have been steadily gathering and settling there for a number of years, and building their loved city of Jerusalem, again in the same place as of old.

Satan also has restored his former energies, knowing that he hath but a very short time. He is mustering all his forces, cunning, and power, to hinder the ways of truth. He torments and tempts the righteous in heart and causes evil and distress generally, for crime of every kind is rapidly increasing and preparations for war are greater than ever before.

Wonders have been seen in the heavens above, and on, and in the earth; blood and fire, and vapors of smoke. Fearful sights have been seen in the heavens. Signs also have been seen in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars. The sun has been darkened at noon-day, the moon has appeared as blood, and stars have fallen from heaven as ripe figs do fall when the tree is shaken. Great tempests are on the increase, the waves of the sea have roared and been heaved beyond their bounds. Earthquakes and famine, pestilences and disaster, wars and commotions, men's hearts failing them for fear, waxing cold because of iniquity, till the earth now (with its division into continents, unnumbered islands; its deserts and barren places, stagnant swamps, rough, rugged hills, vast mountains covered with eternal snow), is filled with mourning, poverty, distress, rashness, suicide, rapine, murder, theft, swindling, oppression, infidelity, atheism, anarchy, despair and death. It is strange how any, (with these facts before them), can doubt that we are truly living in the midst, if not near, the end of the times of the restoration of all things which God through all of his ancient prophets has foretold; and which the Saints of all former ages looked forward to with much joy and satisfaction. "Their minds once fastened upon it, they could not be shaken from their purpose. Their faith was firm, their joy constant, and their hope like an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, reaching within the vail. It was this that enabled them to rejoice in the midst of tribulation, persecution, sword and flame; and in view of this they took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and gladly wandered as strangers, and pilgrims on the earth; for they sought a country, a city, and an inheritance, that none but a Saint ever thought of, understood, or even hoped for."—Voice of Warning, page 90.

At the beginning of time "the whole earth was probably one vast plain, or interspersed with gently rising hills, and sloping vales, well calculated for cultivation, while its climate was delightfully varied, without any extremely hot, cold, wet, or dry weather, which only tended to crown the varied year with a greater variety of productions; all for the good of man, or animals, fowls or creeping things; while, from the flowery plain, or spicy grove, sweet odors were wafted on every breeze; and all the vast creation breathed nought but health, and peace, and joy.

. . . The earth yielded no nauseous weeds, no poisonous plants, no thorns or thistles; indeed, everything that grew was just calculated for the food of man or beast, fowl or creeping thing; and their food was all vegetable. Flesh and blood were never sacrificed to glut their souls, or gratify their appetites; the beasts of the earth were all in perfect harmony with each other; the Lion ate straw like the Ox, the Wolf dwelt with the Lamb, the Leopard laid down with the Kid, the Cow and Bear fed together in the same pasture, while their young ones reposed in perfect security, under the shade of the same trees; all was peace and harmony, and nothing to hurt nor disturb in all the holy mountain. And, to crown the whole, man was created in the image of God, and exalted in dignity and power, having dominion over all the vast number of animated beings that covered the earth, while at the same time he inhabited a beautiful and well watered garden, in the midst of which stood the tree of life, to which he had free access; while he stood in the presence of his Maker, conversed with Him face to face, and gazed upon His glory without a dimming veil between. . . . Contemplate for a moment this beautiful creation, clothed with peace and plenty; the earth teeming with harmless animals, rejoicing over all the plain; the air swarming with delightful birds, whose never ceasing notes filled the air with varied melody, and all in subjection to their rightful sovereign, who rejoiced over them; while a delightful garden stood as the capital of creation, and man seated on the throne of this vast empire, swaying his scepter over all the earth with undisputed right; while legions of angels encamped round about him, and joined their glad voices in grateful songs of praise and shouts of joy; while not a sigh nor groan was heard throughout the earth; no death, no sorrow, no tears, no weeping, no pain nor sickness; no contentions, wars nor bloodshed; but peace crowned the seasons as they rolled; and life, joy, and love reigned over all his works."—Voice of Warning pages 91, 92.

The tempter entered, man fell, was driven from the garden, the earth was cursed with weeds, thorns and thistles and become filled with violence and continued till God in His wrath destroyed the world by water. As soon as they began to multiply again after the flood, sin and violence began again and steadily increased till in these days, the world is nearly full of iniquity, or nearly ready for its second destruction by fire instead of water, which is to cleanse the earth, destroy all uncleanness and the ungodly generally, and make it again a pleasant abode for the righteous Saints, the meek of all ages who are to inherit it.

Through Abraham all nations of the earth were to be blessed. Through the suffering and death of Jesus Christ all were to be saved and have a part in the resurrection of the just, and an inheritance on earth during the Millennial reign of peace; but all on condition of righteousness, and obedience. The new or Inspired Translation of the Bible informs us that the gospel was preached to Adam, and Enoch, and Noah, and Moses and to all the prophets till Christ. And it has been again restored in these last days, and the gospel promises to all who believe and obey it, by repentance and baptism, they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, the spirit power of God that will enable them by living for the same, to be upright and just, meek and lowly in heart. All who are willing to so believe and obey, and so strive and endure to the end, shall have an inheritance on the earth when the Lord shall be its King.

When all mankind, who have been willing and able to gain such inheritance, shall be exalted to dignity and power and have dominion over all animated beings that cover the earth. The meek of all ages will then inherit the land and delight themselves in the abundance of peace, for the wicked will then be destroyed, the earth cleansed from all impurity, the curse removed, Satan bound to have no more power over the nations, the mountains made low, the valleys exalted, the continents united again as it was in Eden before it was divided. "In the days of Peleg, (after the flood), the earth was divided." Search Genesis. The earth will be as a beautiful plain, blooming with flowers, teeming with harmless animals, the fragrant groves swarming with birds whose never ceasing notes will fill the air with melody, and all be in subjection to their rightful sovereign who rejoices over them.

The beautiful cities of Zion and Jerusalem, standing as the capitals of creation with their splendid palaces and magnificent temples and the celestial worthies of former and latter days, seated on thrones under Christ, swaying their scepters over all the nations of terrestrial and teletial beings with undisputed right, legions of angels encamping round about them, joining their glad voices in songs of praise, and shouts of joy, while not a sigh nor groan will be heard throughout the vast expanse. No death, no sorrow, no tears, no weeping, no pain nor sickness, no contention nor war, nothing to mar the peace by day, nor disturb the rest by night. God's spirit enjoyed by all who have knowledge of the Lord from the least to the greatest. Every one will have a happy home to call their own, whether king or priest, judge or exactor, hewer of wood, or carrier of water, vinedresser, or door-keeper. Heirs of celestial, terrestrial or teletial glory. Heathens who know no law; all inclined to live peaceably, respect one another and serve the Lord and delight to keep his law.

Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and all the worthy prophets, and apostles, and Saints, will be there as kings, priests, teachers, to preserve peace and instruct in righteousness; to prepare the nations for greater glory, and bliss eternal at the end of time, when all shall have been punished for their deeds and rewarded for their good works.

WHEN DID HE PREACH?

"DID Jesus go and preach to the spirits in prison while his body lay in the tomb?"

Mr. Editor:—Not agreeing with the answer given to the above question in Herald, June 16th, we herewith submit our reasons for believing that he did not go to the prison in the time intervening between his death and resurrection. Shortly before he expired on the cross He said addressing the thief: "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." The question arises how long did He stop there? It is answered by Alma, in Book of Mormon, page 217, where he says that the spirits of the righteous when they die go to Paradise, where they abide until they are resurrected. We feel safe then in believing that Jesus complied with the rule applicable to all other righteous spirits and rested in Paradise, while His body lay in the tomb; until there is some proof presented that He did not. The thought that Jesus could have gone on his mission to those who were disobedient in the days of Noah as soon as He showed Himself in paradise with the thief, is not evidence that He did. To assume such an idea proves nothing. If we accept the theory that Jesus went to prison while His body lay in the tomb, what are we going to do with his prophecy that "as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." If his mission to the spirits in prison took place while his body lay in the tomb, then the prophecy was a false one; (which we do not admit); for there were only two nights and one whole day intervening between his death and resurrection.

The statement in 1 Peter, 3:18, 19, shows that his body was put to death but quickened by the Spirit in order to bring us to God. This means to us that Jesus had to conquer death himself, before He could fully redeem others. It surely can not be said that Jesus was in possession of the fruits of victory while his own body was in the embrace of death. We conclude from Rev. 1:18, that it was after his body was quickened before He obtained the keys in order to let Himself in, or others out; and that his mission to the spirits in prison took place after He was resurrected and not before.

Selections.

WE publish the following by request of Bro. William Hart, of Oakland, California:

A PROPHECY BY JOSEPH SMITH,
While in Liberty jail, Clay county, Missouri, March 20th, 1839.

"THE rights of the Priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and the powers of heaven can not be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness. That they may be conferred upon us is true, but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion, or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold the heavens withdraw themselves, the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, amen to the Priesthood, or the authority of that man. Behold ere he is aware, he is left to himself to kick against the pricks, to persecute the Saints, and to fight against God.

"We have learned by sad experience, that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, they will immediately begin to exercise unrighteous dominion. Hence many are called but few are chosen. No power or influence can, or ought to be maintained by virtue of the Priesthood, only to persuade by long suffering, by gentleness, and meekness and by love in feigned, by kindness and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy and without guile. Reproving betimes with sharpness when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love towards him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy, that he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death.

"Let the soul also be full of charity towards all men, and the household of faith, and let virtue guard thy thoughts unceasingly, then shalt thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrines of the Priesthood shall distill upon thy soul as the dews of heaven. The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy sceptre an unchanging sceptre of righteousness and truth, and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee for ever and ever."

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.

The conference of the above district was held in Wabash Park, Cass county, Nebraska, July 22d and 23d, 1888, J. B. Gouldsmith, secretary. Sunday morning services opened by singing No. 1075; prayer was offered by Bro. L. Anthony, followed by singing, "Hearts and hands together." Brethren Robert White, Samuel Broliar and Horace Tyson were appointed police. Preaching by Bro. H. C. Bronson. Officials present; of the Twelve, Jas. Caffall; of the Seventy, R. J. Anthony; elders, L. Anthony, H. C. Bronson, H. O. Smith, J. W. Waldsmith, H. Fields, J. Armstrong, and C. H. Porter; priests, R. White, A. Buchanan, J. Everett, W. Self, and J. B. Gouldsmith; teachers, Dan Broliar, N. Trook, James Ferguson and J. Young. Preaching at 2:30 by Bro. J. Caffall, and at 8 p. m. by R. J. Anthony. Monday morning conference met at 9 with President L. Anthony in the chair. By instruction of General Conference Bro. J. Caffall ordained Bro. H. O. Smith to the office of seventy, after which he addressed the Saints in regard to the financial part of the gospel; showing the necessity of a compliance with the law of tithing. He was followed by brethren J. W. Waldsmith and R. J. Anthony, on the same subject. Business was taken up. Brethren Robert White, A. Buchanan and H. O. Smith were appointed a committee on credentials. Visiting brethren were granted the privileges of the conference. The president and secretary of district reported report of Bishop's Agent for the month ending June 30th, 1888. Tithing due the church April 1st, $1 73; tithing collected during the quarter, $43 10; amount paid out during the quarter, 52 50; free will offering on hand April 1st, $13 60; received during the quarter, $81; paid out during the quarter, $52 50. Elders Caffall, Bronson, Smith, Waldsmith, R. J. and Levi Anthony, Porter, Armstrong, Thompson, R. C. Elvin; Priests Buchanan, W. M. Self, White, J. B. Gouldsmith, and Teachers D. Broliar and Young, reported. Committee on credentials reported and were discharged. Auditing committee reported and were discharged. Bro. Chas. Porter presented a petition to the conference was given twenty minutes to state his grievances, after which the following was moved by brethren R. J. Anthony and J. Armstrong: Resolved that a committee consisting of brethren Bronson, Porter and Caffall, be appointed to take the matter of representation under advisement and recommend such measures as will tend to the settlement of the matter and report to the next session of this body. The president of the district and secretary were instructed to pay out of the collection taken up, the incidental expenses of this meeting for notices $3 25 to J. W. Waldsmith; rail road fare to brethren Bronson, L. Anthony, and Gouldsmith, the sums of 95 cents, $1.15 and $1.15 respectively; total $6.50. The present district officers were sustained for the next three months. Adjourned to meet at Bennett, Nebraska, October 14th, 1888, at eleven o'clock.

Miscellaneous.

CAMP MEETING AT GEORGEVILLE, MISSOURI.

Bro. E. B. Mullin, writing from the above place says: "Our camp-meeting will commence Saturday, September 8th and will last ten days. Much interest is manifested by the people in this section to hear our claims ever since brethren Bronson and Warnky labored here, and we are anxious to make this meeting a success.

We expect brethren W. W. Blair, J. R. Lambert, Joseph Luff, J. F. McDowell, J. T. Kinnaman, F. Warnky and others to be present; also many Saints from Independence, Missouri, and the surrounding country. All are invited. Part of the choir from the Independence branch are also expected. We want to make all feel at home, and want a sufficient number present to make this the grandest reunion ever held in Ray county.

Those coming by rail should come to Cowgill Station, on the C. M. & St. P. R. R., where they will be met with teams. Trains pass that station as follows: Going east, 10:17 a. m. and 7:40 p. m. Going west, 8:37 a. m. and 5:55 p. m. Those coming with teams will be furnished with pasture for them."

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

A conference of the Nauvoo and String Prairie district will be held at the Rock Creek church, Hancock county, Illinois, (near Adrian), September 1st and 2d, 1888. All are invited to attend. JAMES MCKIERNAN, Pres.

The Little Sioux district conference will convene at Persia, Iowa, the first Saturday and Sunday in September, 1888. The brethren and sisters of Spring Creek branch extend a cordial invitation to all that may come. Hoping and trusting that we may have a glorious time and that much good may be done.

D. CHAMBERS.

TWO DAY MEETING.

There will be a two days' meeting held with the Platte Valley branch, of the North Nebraska district; two miles south of Valley station, on the Union Pacific Rail Road; September 15th and 16th, beginning at 11 a. m. of the 15th. It is hoped that brethren Caffall and Bronson will be present.

Let the Saints try to be there at the first meeting, and on time, that we may have a two days' meeting in fact. The Saints there will gladly provide for all who come.

WM. RUMEL, Dist. Pres.

DIED.

ELDRIDGE.—Drowned at Dennisport, Massachusetts, Wednesday, July 15th, 1888, by falling from a vessel, Lewis C., son of Bro. Nehemiah and Betsey Eldridge; born at Falmouth, Massachusetts; aged at death 42 years and 4 days. Funeral services held in Saints' Chapel, July 16th, before a large and sympathizing audience. Preaching by Elder M. H. Bond.

WILES.—At Bro. William Parsons', Jewel county, Kansas, August 11th, 1888, of cancer, Sr. Louisa Wiles; aged 55 years, 9 months and 12 days, when death ended her suffering which was beyond description. She was sister to Bro. Alma Kent, and was baptized by Elder A. H. Parsons, August 30th, 1885. She died in full faith. Funeral services by Elder G. W. Beebe.

COOK.—In Garner township, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, July 12th, 1888, sister Sarah Cook, at the age of 31 years, 1 month and 20 days. She leaves an aged husband and five children to mourn their loss; three sons and two daughters. Deceased was born at Graveby, Cambridgeshire, England, May 22d, 1807; was baptized at an early day in the old organization; emigrated to Ohio, near Kirtland in the fall of 1849; then moved to Council Bluffs, Iowa, in the fall of 1851, and was rebaptized in the Reorganized Church, August 12th 1861, by Elder E. C. Briggs. The funeral discourse was preached by Elder D. K. Dodson, July 15th, at the family residence, to a large congregation; after which the remains were followed by a long line of carriages to the Walnut Hill Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

DOANE.—At Dennisport, Massachusetts, Monday, August 13th, 1888, of dropsy of the brain, Merton, infant son of Bro. Hiram C. and Sr. Lereena W. Doane; born at Brockton, Massachusetts, December 14th, 1885, aged at death, 2 years and 8 months. Funeral services August 15th, conducted by Elder M. H. Bond, assisted by Rev. Mr. Snow, of the Baptist church. "Death loves a shining mark." A sad affliction has befallen our brother and sister and their friends in the loss of a most interesting and beautiful child. May the power of our glorious gospel sustain them in this sad bereavement.

GARDNER.—At Los Angeles, California, July 16th, 1888, of typhoid fever, Sr. Maggie B. Gardner. She was born July 10th, 1873, in Sonoma county California, and was baptized August 18th, 1887, by Elder A. W. Thompson. The large assemblage of Saints and friends witnessed by their presence how much our young sister was beloved. She was a regular attendant at church and Sabbath School; was in the writer's class, and was much esteemed. Funeral sermon was preached on August 12th, at the Saints' regular place of meeting, by Elder J. R. Badham.

She's gone! She's gone! to her long home,
Too ripe a plant for this,
A wicked world, to own;
This tender lily's gone
To share eternal bliss;
And all her friends she's left behind
Be true to God and always kind
You know not when the Son of God
Will call you to his blessed abode.

DODD.—Near Centralia, Nemaha county, Kansas, August 3d, 1888, Bro Joseph Arthur, son of Alma and Elizabeth Dodd; aged 20 years, 1 month, 19 days. This young man suffered severe affliction for about two years, yet he was never known to murmur or complain. He possessed that beautiful spirit of meekness and resignation under affliction. He was an obedient, dutiful and truthful child. He was universally loved and respected by his young companions. He died as a christian dieth, leaving bright evidence that he had a divine friend to go with him through the valley of the shadow of death. His last words to a weeping mother were: "Mother, don't cry, it is well with your boy." Funeral services by Rev. P. K. Shoemaker, from Isaiah 64:6. "We all do fade as a leaf."

PLUM HOLLOW CAMP-MEETING.

This gathering, beginning August 17th and ending Sunday the 26th, was large and pleasant from the start, and proved very fruitful of good results.

On Sunday, the 19th instant, the assemblies were estimated at from three thousand to four thousand people, and on the last Sunday, the 26th, there were nearly or quite as many present in the afternoon. The threatening clouds kept many away, especially from the afternoon meeting, and the evening found many on their way home because of unsettled weather or a prolonged stay on the camp-ground.

The word was ministered with wisdom and power by humble, zealous men, and was received with good attention and interest at all the meetings. The best of order prevailed throughout, not a break nor jar occurring in any of the exercises. The morning social meetings were well attended, and were made profitable by the gifts of the Spirit and numerous timely testimonies and exhortations. The Saints were united and joyful, and friends and investigators were encouraged and edified. Rain lessened the attendance on Monday, the 20th, but with the exception of that and of the morning of the 26th, the weather was perfect.

On Saturday the 25th, Bro. Joseph Luff baptized nineteen, and the next day he baptized six more. All of these but two were adults. Others gave their names, but for reasons, deferred their baptism to some later time. Scores more went away believing, and some of them came forward and expressed as much.

At the close of the service, the afternoon of the last Sunday, a gentleman said to us and others that his mind had been entirely disabused as to the views held and taught by the Saints. He said he had read various books and newspaper accounts as to the faith and practices of Latter Day Saints, which prejudiced him greatly against them; but that now, having heard and seen in regard to these matters under the ministrations of their representative men, he discovered his mistake when he heeded the statements touching their faith and doctrines made by their enemies, and hoped from this time forward to learn of the facts by competent authorized friends of the church, rather than from either ignorant, meddlesome, or malicious opposers. We commend both his discovery and his resolution, and would to God that all men would do likewise.

Rev. McClure, a minister of the Campbellite church, and henchman of Rev. Clark Braden, busied himself distributing dodgers throughout the camp the last Sunday, in which Mr. Braden stated that he had challenged the Saints to meet him in discussion on theological questions of late without avail, and that he now was ready for a contest if some of their leading men would write him on certain propositions, set forth in the dodgers. Himself and co-workers were diligent in fomenting controversy on the camp ground; but we took good care that the meetings were not disturbed in any way by their efforts at wrangling and contention. When Elder Joseph R. Lambert read, at the close of his discourse Sunday night from the HERALD, the challenge he publicly made to Mr. Braden about three years ago to discuss the relative merits of the doctrines of the Saints and those of the Campbellite church, also the prophetic calling of Joseph the Seer and the divinity of the Book of Mormon, it came like a new revelation to many, including some of the Campbellites, that Mr. Braden had falsified the facts in the case and that he was not hankering for anything like a fair and full discussion with representative men of the Reorganized Church. This exhibition of the case put the matter in its proper light and we look for good results.

Father Leeka, who for months past, till recently, has laid at the very gate-way of death, was enabled to attend services on the last Sunday morning and listen to a memorial sermon on the life and death of the late sisters Leeka and Ettleman. He also attended the afternoon service. We now hope he may recover and live many happy, useful years, though he is well along in the eighties.

The committee on arrangements for the camp-meeting did their work well all the way through. Bro. William Leeka, on whose ground the camp was located spared no effort to make the occasion successful in every way. Bro. Henry Kemp, president of the district, labored cheerfully and incessantly to promote the interests and well-being of everything connected with the session. Indeed, the same may be said of many others, both Saints and friends.

This meeting is another reminder of the promise the Lord made to his church in June, 1834, when he said, "Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people; and behold I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, that you might rest in peace and safety, while you are saying unto the people, execute judgment and justice for us according to law, and redress us of our wrongs. Now, behold, I say unto you, my friends, in this way you may find favor in the eyes of the people, until the armies of Israel become very great; and I will soften the hearts of the people, as I did the heart of Pharaoh, from time to time." Thank heaven this promise has come and is still coming to the faithful children of God, and the outlook is glorious.

Long will the remembrance of the late Plum Hollow Camp-Meeting be cherished by the many hundreds of the Saints and others who attended it, and long will its blessed influence be felt in all that region of country. The Lord is moving the cause of Zion in mighty power for good, and the Saints are joyful in his manifold mercies and testimonies.

NON SECTARIAN TEACHING IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

THE question of sectarian or non sectarian teaching in the public schools of the country is a fruitful source of agitation at times in many places. Just now it is Boston, and the nature of the controversy is seen from the following statement from the Irish World, of August 4th. The editor states a great truth when he claims that in questions of religious belief each denomination is the best and proper exponent of its own doctrines. If the enemies and opposers of any religious association are allowed to state the beliefs of that denomination to the exclusion of the statements of its devotees, there are but few that would survive the fires of criticism and misrepresentation. The readers of the HERALD are too familiar with that sort of misguided representation and opinion to need much explanation of the defence made by the Irish World to the attack of the teacher in the public school in Boston, one of the places of all places in America, where one ought to expect fair and impartial statement and treatment in religious and intellectual matters.

There are some statements made in the histories of the Catholic Church that seem to warrant the belief that the catechism adopted by the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, and the editor's explanation of it do not fairly represent the faith of the Catholic Church in the days of Luther, Melancthon and others; and as has been popularly understood by those who have read the history of the reformation.

We think it possible that the Pope of whom Luther complained, and possibly others, in the exercise of the power with which they fancied themselves endowed, went beyond the articles of faith in the granting of indulgences, and made them cover grounds not intended by the good fathers who formulated the confession; and had the World have so stated the matter, or that the church did once hold the theory as stated by teacher Travis, but had modified the creed and did not now so hold, it would have been received equally to the credit of the Catholic Church which the World defends. We append the comment of the Hebrew American, but hardly think it a disinterested observer, for the ostracism that belies the Catholic does the same for the Jew.

THE BOSTON SCHOOL CONTROVERSY.

The question as to what constitutes "non-sectarian" teaching in the public schools has been raised in Boston by a controversy between a High School teacher and the School Board and has created much excitement of anything but a non-sectarian character amongst some zealous people who seem to love their own anti-Catholic prejudices more than they do the truth.

The cause of the controversy was a complaint made by a Catholic clergyman that the non-sectarian character of the school was violated by a certain teacher. The School Board sustained the complaint, transferred the teacher to another school, and excluded the text-book complained of. For this the School Board was denounced in public meetings by fiery anti-Catholic orators as being under the influence of Rome, and the issue was declared to be not a question of accuracy or inaccuracy of "Swinton's History," nor of the character of the comments made by the teacher, but whether Catholics should be permitted to decide what books shall be used and what teachers employed in the public schools, or, as the Rev. Dr. Miner put it, "it was a question of Romanism against Protestantism."

Now, it is well known that there is no subject of discussion in which men can engage in which mere appeals to prejudice play a more prominent part than in sectarian controversy, and its obscuring vapors are only intensified by the reckless recriminations of bigotry. The American people, however, are peculiarly free from this narrow sectarian spirit. They recognize the rights of all denominations as equally secured by the Constitution. In declaring that the Public School system should be non-sectarian they intended to enforce that constitutional guarantee. When complaint is made by parents or guardians that a certain text-book contains inaccurate statements prejudicial to religious belief, and that certain teachers persist in giving those inaccurate statements an interpretation which they consider calculated to create an entirely false impression in the minds of their children, to the effect that the church to which they belong is engaged in a deliberate attempt to deceive them as to its own doctrines, the natural impulse of every fair-minded American would be to investigate the complaint impartially and discover whether it was well founded, and if so, to make such corrections as shall preserve the non-sectarian character of the schools.

What were the specific statements of the Boston High-School teacher to which the School Board took exception? Simply this—he taught amongst other things that an Indulgence in the Catholic Church was "a license to commit sin," illustrating the same by adding:—"Should a murderer be brought before a judge he would only have to put his hand in his pocket and produce his indulgence papers to be pardoned." Again, an Indulgence, he said, is "a permission to commit sin." "You pay so much money in advance for leave to commit certain sins." That when this definition and these illustrations were objected to by Catholic pupils Mr. Travis replied:—"There are two opinions on that subject, the Protestant as well as the Catholic. I have taught thirty years, and don't talk of what I don't know."

The Irish World implies no disrespect to non-Catholics in saying that there is outside of the Church a very general misapprehension of the doctrine of indulgences as held by Catholics, nor have we any desire to assume the part of theologian. We do believe, however, that all fair-minded Americans, of whatever denomination, will agree with us that in questions of religious belief each church or denomination should be recognized as the only proper expounder of its own doctrines, and no child attending a non-sectarian public school should be required to listen to the teacher attributing to his denomination the holding of doctrines which his parents and pastor have taught him to regard as infamous and sacrilegious. Now, it is a fact that not even Dr. Miner nor any of his anti-Catholic crusaders regard as more monstrous and damnable the doctrine of indulgences attributed to the Catholic Church by Teacher Travis than do the two hundred millions and more of the world's Catholics, pastors and people, without exception.

To prove this it is only necessary to glance at the Catechism which is enjoined by the Church to be taught to all Catholic children, and which is universally recognized by Catholics as the true statement of Catholic doctrine. The following is the Catholic doctrine of Indulgences as given in the catechism prepared and approved by the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore:—

"Ques.—What is an indulgence?

"Ans.—An indulgence is the remission of the temporal punishment due to sin.

"Q. Is an indulgence a pardon of sin or a license to commit sin?

"A. An indulgence is not a pardon of sin nor a license to commit sin, and one who is in a state of mortal sin can not gain an indulgence.

"Q. Does not the sacrament of Penance remit all punishment due to sin?

"A. The Sacrament of Penance remits the eternal punishment due to sin, but it does not always remit the temporal punishment which God requires as satisfaction for our sins.

"Q. Why does God require a temporal punishment as a satisfaction for sin?

"A. God requires a temporal punishment as a satisfaction for sin to teach us the great evil of sin and to prevent us from falling again."

This has been the doctrine of the Catholic Church since the beginning, and it is the very opposite of what Teacher Travis asserted was Catholic doctrine. We leave it with perfect confidence to the American people to decide whether the non-sectarian principle was not violated, either intentionally or otherwise, and whether the School Board did any more than their prescribed duty in correcting the abuse complained of.

The following comments by the American Hebrew, will serve to show how disinterested observers regard the action of the Faneuil Hall meetings. That paper says:

"To our mind there should be an agitation for the condemnation of the Boston Protestants who have again introduced into the arena of American thought the horrible nightmare of sectarian controversy. Waiving aside all their sophistries and frothy rhetoric, the fact remains that their indignation is aroused not because any Catholics have introduced, or have proposed to introduce, any catholic teachings, but because the Catholics prevented the Protestants from introducing anti-Catholic or Protestant teachings.

"If the dismissed teacher thought that he had a call to dispense light upon the subject of 'indulgences' and their relation to Luther and the Reformation, he should have made arrangements with some lecture bureau. His vocation as a public school teacher was, however, incompatible with that of special pleader for Martin Luther. He was paid by the Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish people of Boston to teach their children the rudiments of knowledge without touching upon any subject in a manner to hurt the political, radical, or religious sentiments of any,

"The crack-brained cry of, 'No Popery' is in this connection a wanton calumny. It is not simply a case of the pot calling the kettle black, for the kettle is quite free from spot while the pot is fairly ebony. You will cry, 'Wolf! wolf!' so often without cause that finally the wolf will really get into the fold and the people will not heed your cry."

PROHIBITION AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

WE have lately received from Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender, who is the attorney for the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, a copy of the report from the Senate Committee on education and labor, upon the subject of submitting to the vote of the States the question of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

The text of the amendment proposed is from the joint resolution as reported by the Forty-ninth Congress, and is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, as provided in the Constitution:

ARTICLE.—SECTION 1. From and after the year of our Lord nineteen hundred the manufacture and sale of distilled alcoholic intoxicating liquors, or alcoholic liquors any part of which is obtained by distillation or process equivalent thereto, or any intoxicating liquors mixed or adulterated with ardent spirits or with any poison whatever, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, and scientific purposes, and for use in the arts, anywhere within the United States and the Territories thereof, shall cease; and the importation of such liquors from foreign states and countries to the United States and Territories, and the exportation thereof from and the transportation thereof within and through any part of this country, except for the use and purposes aforesaid, shall be, and hereby are, forever thereafter prohibited.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this article shall be construed to wave or abridge any existing power of Congress, nor the right, which is hereby recognized, of the people of any State or Territory to enact laws to prevent the increase and for the suppression or regulation of the manufacture, sale, and use of liquors, and the ingredients thereof, any part of which is alcoholic, intoxicating, or poisonous, within their own limits, and for the exclusion of such liquors and ingredients therefrom at any time, as well before as after the close of the year of our Lord nineteen hundred; but until then, and until ten years after the ratification hereof as provided in the next section, no State or Territory shall interfere with the transportation of said liquor or ingredients, in packages safely secured, over the usual lines of traffic, to other States and Territories wherein the manufacture, sale, and use thereof for other purposes and use than those excepted in the first section shall be lawful: Provided, That the true destination of such packages be plainly marked thereon.

SEC. 3. Should this article not be ratified by three-fourths of the States on or before the last day of December, eighteen hundred and ninety, then the first section hereof shall take effect and be in force at the expiration of ten years from such ratification; and the assent of any State to this article shall not be rescinded nor reversed.

SEC. 4. Congress shall enforce this article by all needful legislation.

American statute laws are practically crystalized public opinion. The opposition to the liquor traffic began many years ago in efforts made by individuals and organized societies to reclaim and reform the victims of the drink habit. This habit was strong and wide spread, and its evils always attendant. It was impossible to approach the victims of the habit with any hope of reformation, without making war upon the traffic in that which made drunkards and filled the land with the evils resulting from it.

The agitation has been going on in almost all parts of the country; public attention has been directed to the liquor traffic and what it was costing the nation in moral and social destruction; until there is none so hardy as to seriously deny the terrible indictment under which alcoholic poison has been placed; and now it is high time that public opinion wrought by so much and so long continued labor of "moral suasion," should become crystalized into law, and the community, state and nation, be relieved of the huge burden of desolation, destruction and death, which has been imposed upon it by perverted human appetite. The question how shall this crystalization of public opinion into law be accomplished, is pressing upon the people for answer. Shall it by legislative enactment in the state general assemblies; by amendment to state constitutions; by Congressional legislation, or amendment to the Constitution of the United States?

Already in several of the States legislative prohibition is had, and is accomplishing much. It is argued, however, and with some show of propriety, that if prohibitive legislation does so much, Congressional enactments would do more; but that the sweeping stroke of propriety, policy and self-protection against the evil would be dealt by the concurrence of all the states in an amendment to the Constitution, thus dealing with the questions of the evil and its remedy as a Nation, (with a big N), and putting it out of the power of smaller and isolated portions of the common realm to force larger and more conservative parts to carry the burden entailed upon them by bad neighbors. Let the amendment be submitted to the legislatures of the various States for an action of the people and let the bright, broad axe of beneficent reform fall upon the evil of drink to its utter extirpation. What a revolution that will be!

THE Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, Missouri, in a late issue sets the Saints right before its readers in regard to one thing, for which we thank that paper.

"A false impression prevails in many quarters that the Mormons pretend to still possess the golden plates found by Joseph Smith in the Hill at Cumorah. This is no such thing. They have only the testimony of the three witnesses—the last of whom, David Whitmer, died recently in this State—that they saw and handled the plates, and it is their testimony which has given such strong substantiation to the statements of Joseph Smith. The first prophet held the plates only long enough to transcribe their contents, reading them as he did by means of the Urim and Thummim. After that the plates disappeared as mysteriously as they had come into existence, and no living prophet or follower of Joseph Smith now knows anything about them."

RELIGION FOR THE HEATHEN.

A few months ago there was a conference of notables at the capital of Japan to consider the propriety of adopting a new religion. The various religious systems of the world were freely discussed in their relation to commerce and industrial progress. As it was admitted that the best showing was made by Christian nations, the feeling was general that it would be best for the empire to adopt the Christian religion as part of a plan to bring the country into closer relations with the rest of the world. As soon as this report was circulated, representatives of some twenty sects hastened to Tokio, each anxious to introduce the peculiar form of Christianity he believed and practiced. This alarmed the natives to such an extent that most of them concluded that they had better let the old religion alone.

At the Pan-Presbyterian council at London the leading topic discussed is how to harmonize missionary efforts in India. The committee on co-operation with other churches, appointed at a previous council, made a report in which the difficulties in the case were presented. They had not attempted to form any union with the Catholic missionaries, as they had experienced trouble enough with the missionaries of the various Protestant sects. The Baptists insisted that immersion was the only door into the church, so the Presbyterians could not effect a union with them. Co-operation with the Episcopalians was equally difficult. Even the Congregationalists would not unite in supporting missions in common, and the Methodists would not as much as listen to the proposal.

Several who had spent years in the missionary field in India declared that the great obstacle in the way of converting the heathen was lack of unity among teachers and preachers. The natives found that they differed greatly in their faith and practices, and they were in doubt as to which to believe. One earnest man stated that it was the plain duty of all the evangelical sects to unite in preparing a simple creed that all could endorse, and try and induce the natives of India to adopt it. This proposition met with favor till Dr. Chambers suggested that the experiment had better be made at home first. When all the Christians in Great Britain would unite in one faith and one form of worship it would be very easy to harmonize matters in India. His hearers declared that this could never be done. It therefore seems likely that the heathen will continue "in his blindness to bow down to stocks and stones."—Chicago Times, July 18th.

Were it not for the gravity of the subject and the sacredness in which the salvation of men is held by all true minded men, the foregoing would be highly amusing. Think of it, a band of teachers of religion, every one of whom is authorized by the schools of men to write D. D., (Doctor of Divinity), after his name, sitting down together in solemn conclave to "doctor" a religion to "save the poor heathen;" which heathen are by the theology of these same doctors doomed to die and be damned "forever and forever, and ever and ever, and ever," ad infinitum. What a spectacle. Well might good Dr. Chambers suggest the trial of their newly concocted philosophy of salvation upon the Christians (are they?) of Great Britain, as an experiment for unifying them in a common and effective confession of faith, before exposing it to the shrewd but distracting examination and inquiry of heathen (Indian) thinkers. It was a South African Caffre thinker that puzzled the good English Bishop Colenso, down at Natal, and drove him to close quarters on the religion of his forefathers; and it might be that Dr. Chambers remembered this, and was desirous that his compeers might not be placed at such a disadvantage in presenting this new religion over in India. Chunder Sen, before his death sent the religionists of the world fair warning that when they came to him with Christ, it must be an Oriental, Jewish and universal Christ whom they must bring to him and not a western, Gentile, and Sectarian Christ. The latter he, nor they could understand or appreciate, the first they could. Now while the native Indian inquirers after something better than that they seem to have, are stopped at the very doors of their inquiry by the marked and irreconcilable differences and contradictions of theories, plans, and practices among Christians; and the latter balk at the outset in agreeing upon the philosophy, methods, and practices essential to salvation for the heathen, it is a convenient time to ask these assembled wise men; Why not let the Christ tell his own story of salvation, as it is found in the Christian's Bible? That story, if left to the interpretation given by itself conveys no uncertain intelligence. It states the plan, names the conditions, enumerates the promises and provides the evidences by which the believer may be assured of his ways. What a splendid thing it would be if these Doctors of Divinity would but admit in fact, as they sometimes do in rhetoric, that God and Christ alone have the right to declare the way of life, and that man's duty was to obey the word. Would that they had the courage now to say and follow it by act, "Let God be true, though every man be found a liar."

When the Orient shall be willing to welcome the "swift messengers" sent unto all peoples by land and by sea, from the dispensation of God's providences newly ushered in the Occident, then shall the heathen know that God hath given them unto the son of David for an inheritance, and they may have "part in the first resurrection."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

IN a note from McPaul, Iowa, on the way to Nebraska City and Wilber, Nebraska, dated August 27th, Bro. Blair says: "Am enroute to Nebraska City. All goes well. Baptized twenty-five. Weather fine. Go to Wilber to-morrow, to remain one week."

Bro. Henry Grim, now laboring in Sullivan county, Missouri, in company with Bro. Duncan Campbell, is hereby requested and appointed to labor in Northern Missouri and Southern Iowa as wisdom may direct, during the fall and winter, reporting to Bro. Campbell from time to time as they may agree. Bro. Campbell reports that Bro. Grim has been doing a good work in Sullivan county, and that it is desired that he continue. This is in harmony with the wish of Bro. Joseph R. Lambert, in charge, and is suggested by him also.

"We are having good times here. I have baptized eighteen since July 12th, and more are to follow this week." So writes Bro. R. C. Evans, of Waterford, Ontario, in a late letter.

WE give a letter this week sent to Bro. H. A. Stebbins by Bro. Benjamine Case, from Hartman, Arkansas, to which we call the attention of the brethren of the Spring River district, and the missionary in charge. Letter was sent by Bro. Case in August just past.

BEN CASE, Dear Sir:—If I were in your place I would certainly lose no time in recommending this field to the heads of the church. No finer field could be found for missionary work—the harvest is ripe and just ready to be reaped. If you will move in this matter I will cheerfully do all I can to forward the thing. I am anxious to hear the subject fully discussed from your standpoint.

From. C. C. Rabards, Hartman, Arkansas.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Was Jesus baptized for the remission of sins? If not, what was he baptized for?

Ans.—The taking "away of the sins of the world," was accomplished by Jesus through baptism and the shedding of blood; and in this sense he was baptized "for the remission of sins." Besides this, Jesus' body was of the nature of the body of Abraham's seed, and his baptism was a part of the means by which that body was redeemed from the grasp of death and the grave, just as by baptism we are now saved. We may not be able to make it plain; but we believe that as baptism "is for the remission of sins," Jesus was baptized for the remission of sins. To him "was sin imputed who knew no sin."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Not noblest is he who sees Shadows of God's realities;
And knows beyond this masquerade
Of shape and color, light and shade,
And dawn and set and wax and wane,
Eternal verities remain."

MAKE THE BEST OF IT.

"It is more easily said than done, sisters, mine, I know it is; but we can bear our burdens bravely. I shall always believe, that much as all of God's creatures need His assistance and guidance, mothers need him most of all. Only those who have passed through the ordeal of motherhood can fully understand my meaning.

"The necessity of leaning on this Friend, who is ever present and all-sustaining. It sometimes seems very hard, yes, well nigh impossible to be patient and brave; but it can be done, and God will help us every day.

"The well-being of children is decided by their parents; their dispositions, their characters, their weal or woe for time and, perhaps, eternity is decided before their birth.

"Are you living, mothers, so that the little ones, so soon to be in your loving embrace, shall have for an inheritance a gentle disposition, trustful and hopeful, a gift from you? Although you are, perhaps, passing through trials the severest, and requiring almost superhuman strength to be cheerful and trustful to the end; but how sweet, at these dark times, to know that the everlasting Arms are beneath you to uphold and sustain and bless.

"He knows what mothers endure, and is near, so near, to help and to strengthen if you will but let Him.

"Our burdens must be borne, but one day at a time, all will soon be brighter, and when all seems the darkest and most hopeless, cheer up, joy and rest are a little beyond. Only live now, that by and by you may be enabled to look back to these days of pain and trial with the cheering thought that with God's assistance you did the best you could.

"One thought more. So many wives dread, yes evade motherhood. Of course it implies care, pain and anxiety, but if the Lord of Paradise would entrust to your keeping, one 'a little lower than the angels,' would you refuse the gift?

"Women unwilling to assume the responsibility and blessing that motherhood brings, should never become wives. We must one day give an account for this matter, and it seems to me to be of the most vital importance.

"May the dear Father help all to be faithful."

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for September 13th.

Memory texts, 1 Peter 1: 15, 16.

Subjects: Sunday Schools, teachers and scholars; Zion's Hope, Temperance Union, and the temperance cause in the nation.

ELEANOR.

We respectfully request the sisters of the League to pray for Sr. A— that God may move upon the heart of one who is unjustly withholding from the widow and her fatherless child money which she has earned by severe toil and which she greatly needs.—ED.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Lizzie Winn, Kansas City, Missouri, writes:—"The Home Column is both strengthening and instructive to me. The chief object of a mother's life should be the training up of her family in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. I feel that great strength and comfort will be derived from the Prayer League if those who have engaged in it prove faithful. It seems to me that some hour in the afternoon would suit busy housewives better. It is hard especially for farmers wives to lay aside work in the morning hours, but in the afternoon many could do so.

Sister Annie, of J—, Michigan, writes:—

"What from the first I esteemed a pleasure, I now regard as a duty, namely, the sending in of my name to the Prayer League. I do not know what I could do without the Herald. My little boy takes the Hope. I would like the Autumn Leaves but can not afford it at present. My husband is most of the time in the field as a missionary and I often feel that I would like to be with him, helping in the good work, but I have my family to care for and I know my first duty is at home, therefore I strive to be content and do the best I can.

Sister Julia Needham, Wheeler's Grove, Iowa, writes:—"I am striving to do the will of my heavenly Father. I have been sorely afflicted for several years, but have the promise, if I am faithful, that I shall be healed. I ask your prayers that I may have patience to endure and faith to be healed."

TAWAS CITY, Mich., Aug. 18th.

Dear Sisters:—I see letters from almost every part, but very few from here. If you think anything about it, you may think we are idle, but we have not been idle, only a little neglectful. I would often like to write; but being cumbered with many cares, it is so much easier to say wait a while than to go right at once before the inclination to write leaves us. I am glad the Prayer League has been started for I think it will be a great help to us mothers. I think that some of the sisters here will send in their names before long. We have a sisters' prayer meeting here. I will tell you how it is conducted. We have no church so we sisters thought we would try to do something to aid in building one. We meet together every Thursday afternoon at two o'clock, and one of the sisters opens the meeting. We have singing and prayer; then a chapter is read from the Scriptures and we have prayer and testimony. Afterwards we sew or knit until five o'clock, when we close by prayer. We have been blessed in meeting together, and we intend to sell whatever is made and give the proceeds to help build a church. Please tell us what the Home Column Missionary Fund is for. Praying that God will bless all his Saints with wisdom, that we may do all things right and in accordance with his will.

Your sister in the one faith,

LIZZA COOK.

Sister Walker:—Thinking perhaps I am not doing right in keeping my information to myself, I wish to relate two visions I had last spring. Sunday, February 19th, it rained all day and, as I could not attend service, I went to see a sick brother. After coming home, when about to retire, my husband called my attention to some mail matter that had been brought in during the day, and as some of it concerned the Autumn Leaves, I became quite interested in the work of the church. My husband not feeling inclined to talk, I went to sleep. After sleeping a short time, I awoke and realized that I was at home and in my own room, when suddenly my spirit was taken from me and I found myself in Bro. Stebbins' sitting room. Just in front of me, in a large arm chair, sat a strange looking personage, dressed in gray clothes. His hair long and cut straight around, was jet black. His complexion a brown color of a copper. I asked what did this mean? when I was told this is one of the South Sea Islanders, who will be called and set apart by the church as a missionary to his own people. I knew he was not a bad man as soon as I saw him, and his countenance showed a remarkable degree of intelligence; yet I knew he was from some foreign nation.

I was then taken to a building (yet all the time I knew my body was at home and in bed) such a building for size, I never saw. I went on a wall and looked in. I saw men and women of almost every nation on earth, sitting in groups in this building. I was told these had obeyed the gospel and were joint heirs with Christ, the same as I was, independent of their color and nationality, and I felt the Spirit of God burn within me to such a degree that I wanted to manifest my love to them by going and grasping their hands. I never felt the love of God to such a degree before.

A strange looking personage (he seemed to be an Italian) came to me and said for me to come in, when I said, "No; I am not worthy to come in there." He said, "yes you are." I then went in and told him I wanted to manifest my love for them in some way. He said "don't be partial to any of them, for you can not shake hands with them all; but I will take you to walk among them," and so he did. There were Indians, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Germans, Italians, Turks, Arabs, South Sea Islanders, Africans, and people from various parts of Asia. It seemed I saw people from almost every part of the earth, and it may seem strange but I could tell the elders from the lay members. Oh, I felt so thankful God had not forgotten these poor people! I could hardly control my feelings.

In the south-west corner of the room I saw my own intelligent white class of people. Some of them had long papers in their hands with names on them; some were sitting at small tables writing; some were standing in groups talking. But I paid no attention to them whatever, not even enough to see if there were any I knew there, my whole attention being taken with these poor illiterate people who had received a knowledge of the truth and rejoiced as I did.

The Bible says the gospel shall be preached to all the nations and then shall the end come. I am now satisfied the gospel will be preached in His own due time and some few will obey. Some of them will be called to preach to their race of people the glad tidings of salvation.

After seeing the above I found myself at home again and I wondered why I was permitted to see these things. I asked God if this was his work in showing me this now to make plain to my mind some things that had been a stumbling-block and a burden to my mind these many years. Not saying what it was but left it to God to reveal in his own way, so I could not feel I was deceived. [This time my spirit did not leave my body].

When before my eyes was spread a yard square of white velvet and on it placed an iron stand and on this stand was placed the three books, Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. On these books was placed a silver skiff about twelve inches long and about five inches in width. In this skiff were two paddles, a spear, and a pair of scissors, curved at the point, a pen and pen holder, all of these silver and so bright and clean looking. I was not sure what the skiff and tools meant when I was told it meant that the gospel should be preached by land and sea and by the pen; the spear was to fish with; the scissors to trim and cut off our false ideas and notions of Christianity. I have always doubted the divinity of the Book of Covenants and when driven to it would fight it and oppose it. Now I have made up my mind to fight it no more and what I don't understand to lay aside and wait God's own due time to make all things plain.

ELIZA.

Dear Sister Eleanor:—May I add a few suggestions in connection with the Prayer League? I write in behalf of the scattered and isolated sisters. If my idea is correct, it would be best for the Prayer League to take the form of a weekly prayer meeting, so far as practicable among the scattered sisters at present. Let them feel no more hesitancy in sending in their names than they would to enroll upon a branch record. Let their responsibilities and preparations be the same as though belonging to any branch. Let us have one day, and one hour, every Thursday, from two until three o'clock, p. m., for reading and prayer. Dear sisters, will it not increase our faith to feel that at one particular hour dozens, perhaps hundreds of weary mothers are lifting their thoughts heavenward to a God that hears and answers prayer? I think so. Oh, what a blessing this ought to prove to the scattered ones! how much strength and comfort we may gain through this mothers' home prayer meeting. Praying for the mothers of Israel, I remain,

LUCY LLOYD.

Steamship Alameda, Aug. 1st.

Dear Sister Frances:—We have taken our final leave of Australia and the warm-hearted Saints there, and are now speeding homeward.

Before leaving Forster, we had the privilege of meeting with Brn. Wight and Butterworth. They arrived just in time to attend the conference held in Forster. After hearing that they were to leave San Francisco on the June boat we all looked forward with anticipated pleasure to the coming conference, feeling sure they would bring with them the good spirit of the General Conference from which they had been sent forth; nor were we disappointed. Our conference at Forster was truly a feast to the soul: all enjoyed it. And as I listened to Bro. Wight preaching in the demonstration and power of the Spirit, I felt as if I would rather gird on my armor, and go forth to a fresh conflict than to be retreating homeward. Had it not been that Mr. Burton's affliction of his throat made our return necessary, we would willingly have remained another year or two, and foregone the pleasure that we now anticipate of meeting with friends and family.

There has not been any bad weather during the voyage so far, though there has been a strong wind all the way—with the exception of the last two days—there has been no heavy sea. I have sometimes wondered how it was that the wind blew so hard and so steady without getting up a sea. Only forty-eight hours remain now until our expected arrival at San Francisco.

To-day is beautiful; the clear sky and pure air make us feel that we are getting into the atmosphere of California. The day we were at Auckland was very cold and stormy; so we did not enjoy our visit there very much. The weather was beautiful when we were at Honolulu and the passengers all went ashore, and all but ourselves took carriages and drove about the place. We felt as if we would liked to have done the same, and have seen some of the beautiful sights of that delightful little place; but it required money that we could not well afford, and remembering Him whose feet were often travel-worn and weary, we lifted up our hearts and were glad. We walked about a little, passed the king's palace, and went through the courthouse grounds; saw some very peculiar looking trees—one might think they were made with cunning device, rather than that they grew naturally. It is very much out of fashion to walk, on that island, and attracts attention; so we soon returned to the ship. The ship was not to sail till ten a. m. the next day. At six in the morning the other passengers all took carriages again and went for a drive over a portion of the island to the cliffs, at a cost of two dollars each, and were back again at eight for breakfast. We did not go, and have since been avoided more than we were before. People who try to travel economically are soon made to feel their standing in society, especially if they bear the name of Latter Day Saints. Do not such declare plainly that "They seek a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God?" The native Band's men of Honolulu honored the ship and passengers by bringing their instruments down to the landing and giving us some good music. They looked well too, all dressed in white with black caps; but they were soon hidden from our view by the crowd of people that gathered to see the departure of their friends.

About thirty passengers came on board at Honolulu, making nearly a full number of saloon passengers, and nearly all appeared at table most of the time; and at meal-time one might suppose they had entered into a large eating establishment in some city, by the clatter of dishes and hurrying to and fro of waiters and popping of champagne and beer bottles.

I have not enjoyed the passage myself nearly as well as I did going, albeit we are homeward bound; my bodily health has been rather out of tone, which is quite unusual for me; but I am beginning to feel more like myself these last few days, and am recovering my appetite.

The passengers have been entertained several evenings by concerts and lectures; have had the pleasure of listening to the singing of Miss Lawrence, one of the Fisk Jubilee Singers. Among those who lectured were, first, Mr. Booth, the great temperance lecturer, who gave an interesting account of his life as a private soldier in the American war. Next was Professor Royce, on mesmerism. Following these, on Sunday evening, Mr. Burton was invited by the Purser to lecture on religion. He took for the ground-work of his discourse the conversation of our Lord with the woman of Samaria, and briefly showed that "all worshippers, worship in spirit, but the true worshippers must worship in spirit and in truth." He then spoke concerning what is truth, the sum of which was, "thy word, O God, is truth;" then the true worshippers must worship according to the word; and farther, that the question of the religious world to-day was not so much to know what was believed and taught for doctrine eighteen hundred years ago, but how much of it was to be believed and practiced to-day."

Last Tuesday evening Mr. Harris, an evangelist, who joined us at Honolulu, lectured concerning the Japanese; He has been a missionary in Japan. From his point of view Japan is a very promising field of labor, and bids fair to become entirely Christianized, and that not in the very far distant future. One thing he spoke of their being remarkable for, was their universal kindness and hospitality to strangers, as well as to their own countrymen, that they illtreated no one. So much for lectures.

Last Tuesday there being the smoothest sea we have had, the usual games were gone though with; first, the foot-race, then the potato race, walking match, the three-legged race, and the tug of war. The winners had prizes awarded them. In the evening there was a concert. Sir Saul Samuel being master of ceremonies, delivered the prizes. That ends the concerts for this trip.

The next point of interest will be our arrival in San Francisco. My heart goes out in thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for all his mercies and the kind care He has vouchsafed towards us, that we have been protected in all our travellings, and now we are about to join our children again, and that all have been spared to each other. Thanks and praise to His holy name!

NORMAN, Nebraska.

Editors Herald:—Sister Anderson, wife of P. Anderson, living in Kearney county, Nebraska, was taken sick July 22d, 1888, with a sickness common to the female sex. Assuming dangerous aspects, kind neighbors were soon by her bedside; also a mid-wife of more than ordinary ability and experience, who lost no time in a procedure that the exigencies of the case demanded, as the current of life was fast flowing out. But this benefactress soon found her skill baffled and very candidly said that she could do no more, and called the attention of the friends to the (to her) sure symptoms of death. The afflicted one could not now speak beyond a whisper, and nothing seemed more certain to those present than that her last breath would soon be drawn, and she that was, would be no more. A decision was reached to send for Elder Larsen who lives six miles distant, after which (for she was conscious) Sr. Anderson felt an inward assurance of the continuance of life. Then it was that an unseen power qualified her to bear testimony to God's saving method with a power, clearness of thought and remembrance of Scripture that she had never before realized. Friends were astonished and the few members were confirmed in the faith; for to all it was as a voice from the dead.

It was now about six o'clock Monday morning, the 23d, and her two children, a girl of eight, and a boy of six years of age, were brought to her bedside to receive her last earthly embrace, for her recovery was thought quite improbable. On approaching the bedside she interrogated the little daughter; if she could pray, that the Lord would save her ma. Without hesitating, she put her tiny hands together and down on her knees she went, and to God a prayer she sent. There were no signs of a choking, tremulous voice, or quivering lips, but a plain, audible pleading with a childlike simplicity, (its grandeur), requesting the Lord to save her dear mother.

Think of a girl eight years old under such distressing circumstances, offering a prayer, audible, sensible and pointed; and who will then dare to say there are no God-fearing wives and mothers among the Latter Day Saints!

Bro. Larsen at length arrived, and after administration she was much revived, which was visible to all. The writer arrived on the 4th instant, and as per request administered as the Scriptures direct. She is still improving, and her strength is returning as rapidly as can be expected. Sr. Anderson wishes to say to the church and to the world, or as many that shall read, that her restoration is, to her, a wonderful manifestation; and that while brought down so near to the valley and shadow of death that neighbors, husband, brethren and sisters could scarcely discern signs of life; and herself felt conscious that her natural life was well nigh extinct; that by a God-given power she bore her testimony to the gospel with a readiness, a flow of language and thoughts which she many times desired, but never before experienced. And that the gospel taught by the Latter Day Saints brings joy to the soul in life, which joy is greatly augmented when signs of death are seen, and its power felt. That though she felt a great anxiety for her husband and children with a corresponding desire for their comfort, to have her days prolonged, yet she felt resigned to God's will, knowing that it would, though distressing it might seem at present, prove best in the ultimate. But as it now appears, she is hopeful and ardently desires that all might know what a Savior is, and the dazzling prospects that the gospel restored through Joseph Smith, and preached by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints brings to the souls of those hungering for righteousness.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., August 22d.

Dear Herald:—Your bright pages are always welcome and of good cheer to us. The health of our town is good at this time. A good many of our people are attending camp meeting at brother Leeka's, near Plum Hollow, Iowa, this week. Our pontoon wagon bridge across the Missouri River is now completed and seems to be well patronized. The rail road bridge across the river has been in active service ever since the twelfth of this month. Our citizens, and also those of neighboring towns contemplate a grand time on the thirtieth, as they intend to celebrate the event of the opening of these two great structures.

Our crop prospects for Nebraska were never better; the corn is very good all over the country as far as I can learn. Our town is awake to improvements; electric lights, water-works, and the two bridges have all been placed in position within the last year. And there is a force of men to work now paving the streets.

As for our church and our spiritual standing, we are trying to hold our own. Brethren Bronson, Blair and H. O. Smith have all done us good service this summer, and I understand that some are now ready to be baptized. We would be pleased to see many more unite with us in this great work of salvation.

Your brother,

J. W. WALDSMITH.

ANTWERP, Ohio, Aug. 23d.

Bro. David Dancer:—The work is still winning its way here. Bro. Springer left on the 21st with the expectation of never seeing us again, as he expects to go to Virginia in a short time. He baptized three while here the last time, and blessed four children. He has done a noble work, and we were sorry to have to part with him. We expect Bro. C. Scott next week to attend a two days meeting the 1st and 2d of September. Prejudice is giving way and some are investigating, and are near the kingdom. We hope they may come in during the two days meeting.

Yours,

JOHN ERTER.

LIMERICK, Ohio, August 23d.

Bro. Joseph:—Having just returned home from a tour in West Virginia where I have been laboring since the 29th of June, I essay to speak through the Herald relative to the work in the localities visited. I have never known of so many opportunities for presenting our claims as are now offered us in this district.

The debate to which I referred in my last, began on the 7th and continued three days. Bro. E. L. Kelley was on hand promptly and relieved me from the task of meeting Rev. Archibold of the Disciple order, who requested me to bring the ablest man we had, to meet him. Bro. Kelley did not assume to be the ablest, but would venture to meet the conceited egotist. It was apparent in a short time that the boastful Disciple had more on hand than he could handle.

The proposition was, "Is the Book of Mormon of Divine origin and worthy the belief of all men?" Our opponent had Beadle, which he attempted to use as a witness, but the bottom was knocked out of his garbled statements as often as they were offered, and every point of opposition answered with ease and clearness by the affirmative. It was plain to be seen that our opponent failed to establish a point, unless slurs and anecdotes would establish them. At the close Bro. Kelley proposed that they continue the discussion another day, and that Mr. Archibold affirm that "the Disciple Church is the Church of God in fact," but he said "he was too nearly worn out; it was too hot," etc.; a polite way to refuse. Bro. Kelley preached three times before the discussion began, and once afterward to an interested people. He left with the good wishes of the people in general. I have this to say: He is a tower of strength, and may he long live to use his influence in behalf of the great latter day work.

I continued meetings Friday and Saturday nights, Sunday morning and afternoon, baptized the wife of Bro. Albert Scott on Sunday afternoon, confirmed her, administered the sacrament and blessed their four children.

On the following Wednesday, Bro. W. W. Cross took me over on Indian Creek, some fourteen miles, where I spoke on Thursday evening, after which I baptized Mrs. Sarah Hoffmam. She has long been a Disciple, but she knew the "joyful sound" add obeyed the call. She was born in 1812.

I left for Ohio on the 17th inst., and on the night of the 18th, in company with Elder A. W. Kriebel, of Wellston, Ohio, we began services at Irwin Station in this county, where we were permitted to speak four times, to interested assemblies. A private house would not hold the people, and we could not get a public one just now, but think we will by and by. I shall remain at home till after our conference. We expect a number of leading officials here and anticipate a good time.

Yours in hope,

L. R. DEVORE.

SHERIDAN, Nevada, August 12th.

Dear Herald:—The church in this part has been slumbering like the foolish virgins until Bro. Heman C. Smith came with the word of life, the gospel of salvation. His preaching awakened some out of slumber in this valley. He spoke with much power insomuch that many marvelled and said, "This is indeed the truth." Brother Smith is a mighty man to set forth the Bible and to prove the divinity of the word of God to the most skeptical of men. He held his audience in profound attention while he expounded the word to them. Some remarked, "I will give fifty dollars a year to have a man of this kind preach for us." Another said, "I have but a short time to live and I must consider and examine my condition."

A minister of another denomination was much pleased and remarked that he could stand on that platform; an old time Latter Day Saint was also considerably awakened and may unite with us. The Spirit of the Master was with His servant, and it brought the witness, power, and renewal of the love of God in our hearts as we stood on the banks of the river where brother Smith inducted some into the Fathers kingdom; the same place where twenty years previously, the wise men of the east performed the same ordinance. Brother Smith has baptized several here.

In bonds,

D. R. JONES.

Brethren Smith and Blair:—In the past two years (since 1886) but little space in the Herald has been claimed by me, possibly in the main because of not being in active service.

The occasional examination from what standpoint contributors write has occasioned much thought, which oft suggested the query, How much would be written if the superabundance of self were kept out? Which seems not the easiest thing that mortal may achieve. That some good contributors have gone to the extreme of not writing, while the spontaneity of others has been too fruitful, is an unpleasant but certain fact, and the work in the sections where they may move, possibly does not have that representation that it is entitled to and if such is the case, some loss is sustained.

The "judgment" lately rendered by Bro. Albert Haws with himself was suggestive. Could I lay just claim to similar courage? While the sons of men have long sung, "Crown him Lord of all," in the very marrow of their bones (but not by any means always kept there) there has been, and is a slight chain of "Crown me Lord of all," or in a crude form, "We killed the bear." That written by us may put us into the "crucible," but if a certain amount of polish must issue therefrom what difference is it? To ask at the hand of another that which we would not perform is certainly ignoble; while to fail to concede when concession falls to us must be tantamount. Who ever saw that sky so fair that it could not be, and was not at length beclouded to some extent? And while sunshine and shadow last, must it not remain so?

That the fortune and fate of God's work has been alternate sunshine and darkness from the time of the garden of Eden, all may know. And who is it that does not know, especially of the Saints, that it is mankind that has made the colors, whethether they have been the slightest tints in departure from sunlight; the sombre hue of decay, or the blackness of those climes where the sun shines not.

While men may have felt disappointment because wind, clouds and rain were not at their command to be controlled, is it not clear that the formation of the spiritual firmament is grander, more sublime and an eminently more fitting work! Think of it, to wreath the very crowns we shall wear, and by influence, contribute to others aid.

O, for the day when truth and right, good will toward men and honor to God will satiate the desires and be the ambition of all! Why can it not be now among Saints? Who is so blind as to not see that falsification, slander and the like, must, in their results, come home to roost; and that while it may gratify a sensual desire; reach for a time and degree the end aimed at, it must most deplorably fail? Of the work as a whole, and of the church as an institution, it is written: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." Why not? It must be because it is founded in "truth and right."

The meritorious efforts of the Saints of St. Louis to build a house of worship, are so far crowned with success that the first coat of plaster is on, and in from four to six weeks the entire completion, furnishing and all, will be accomplished.

Upon the principle of honor to whom honor is due, the Saints desire that Bro. J. W. Gillen shall be on hand for the opening of the church, to direct the exercises and perform such part himself as shall, to him, seem fitting. In this we cheerfully acquiesce. Will Bro. Gillen apprise us as to this? Since taking up the work here five have been added by baptism. Five have also passed over the river; two of them not of the membership.

If all would attend to their own affairs the future would be very bright with promise. The arch-enemy of the work is not going to let the church building pass in silence or without an effort to destroy. Those who choose can enter his employ, "sow to the wind," and to the "whirlwind reap destruction;" for so "it is written." Idle gossip and meddling are splendid tools to accomplish such work.

We have been shown some of our work and have been assisted thus far. Will receive suggestions from any; commands from none save the missionary in charge. Those having complaints will have a patient hearing by either him or us, but no one else is authorized to receive for us, and any who are complained to, will please refer the one complaining direct to one of us.

To the Saints at adjacent points we simply say, You and the needs of the work there are not lost sight of, and will be reached as fast as opportunity allows. Communicate to us your needs.

Rejoicing in the work, and laboring for its triumph, I am yours,
R. ETZENHOUSER.

SMILEY, Texas, August 5th.

Brother Editor:—I feel it to be my duty to write again to the Herald. I am still a lover of Christ and the gospel. The Lord blesses me continually and gives me health and of his Spirit to help me to bear up under my many trials. Much as I love to be with the Saints, yet my lot is cast among those of other denominations, evidently for some purpose. In the absence of any of our ministers I doubly appreciate the Herald and Autumn Leaves. Camp-meetings are being held here by the Methodists and Baptists, each converting members from the ranks of the other. I do long to see some of our able ministers come here and preach to these poor inquiring souls. I believe that they are earnestly seeking the kingdom and I have long prayed that the restored gospel might be declared unto them in this land.

Your sister,

N. V. PEARSON.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., August 20th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—The work of the Lord is still precious to my soul, as it ever has been during the past twenty-two years. As a progressive work it is simply grand. Its history is free from any retrograding steps upon the part of its general and special doctrinal features. Fifty-eight years have not instanced a time when a true council met to modify or enlarge upon any of its cardinal principles. This, to my mind, is an evidence of its divine planting. So perfect in its every part that amendment is impracticable. The church resting upon this broad platform has every security needful, every liberty lawful or expedient.

The spiritual phase is excellent, but not so fully understood as it should be. The work calls for a higher and purer moral and spiritual atmosphere; and the closer the people of God bring themselves in relation thereto, the more power will they have with Him. God exists and moves in great spirituality of life, that is His element; it is replete with purity, truth and love; this, then, should be the atmosphere in which His people should live. We are taught that we "should not mind earthly things," that we seek the "things eternal;" the "things that are seen are temporal; the unseen are eternal." We are also admonished to "let that mind be in you that was in Christ."

We are too prone to move in a worldly, fleshly sort of life. I am fully persuaded the more our minds are heavenward, upon heavenly things; the more prayerful and spiritual we are, the more power we have with God, because then we move in a spiritual element that can only be the one proper element in which God's children can safely move! Out of that, and we perish! The rapport of mind with mind is necessary. If God "be in you all, and through all," then we have the divine in the human. And if we truly recognize the presence of the supreme in the finite, we have laid hold upon a fact potent in its use and purpose. The realization of God's supremacy abandons the idea of any subordination to any power less than himself. There can be no place for doubt, if we lay hold upon this one idea of his omnipotence and omniscience. If we "sanctify the Lord God in our hearts," what room is there for any one else? None. Can Satan possess a heart in which the Lord God is set apart? The hope and potent promise of immortality and eternal life, given of God unto us who believe, "set apart in earthen vessels" is "an anchor" that should be "sure and steadfast, entering within the veil." Many have placed themselves in subjection unto unwarranted fears; and "fear hath torment." Torment is not of God; hence we should renounce it, and bring to mind God's supremacy. In that thought alone we behold how "all things in heaven, on earth, and beneath the earth are subject unto Him." If subject unto Him, and we are with others, then by our observance of His law we are subject to no power not of Him. James understood this when he wrote, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." "God dwelling in us" casts the opposite out. And I believe it is required of us to so learn these truths; and for the church to rise higher and higher in the scale of real spirituality! In it is life, and light, and power, in and with God and Christ. An apostle wrote: "Love not the world nor the things (sinful) of the world; he that loveth the world has not the love of God." This is his idea of the matter. And as "the world" produces carnality, and "the carnal mind is enmity against God," how then can worldly minded saints and sinners please God, or be subject to the spirituality of God? There is no evading this.

This condition of spirituality is obtainable by prayer, fasting and earnest devotion unto God's law.

Again, I notice an increasing desire on the part of many to become so, realizing its importance.

We are fully persuaded that an uncompromising stand against all evil is what the church needs. Such an utter divestment of all partisanship, and investment of true patriotism that we may see things as they are, and see them without the shadow of interceptions calculated to blur the keen visual sense required to discern modern trickery, deception, and unscrupulous imposition! "Come out of her," is the cry of God! It may, and undoubtedly shall demand of some considerable of moral stamina to move them out. There is but one way to squarely face the issue of honorable right against dishonorable wrong, and that is to lay aside all national pretexts of "native claims;" all preconceived ideas of party zeal, and as Latter Day Saints look at the divine requirements of heaven made upon us as a people respecting the product of the "caldrion" and the "still." We can not partake of the "table of the Lord, and the table of devils." Of that which savors of godliness and ungodliness. Of that which undermines all Christian claims, pretensions, aspirations; and deadens all divine inspiration! That which blinds the reason, perverts the judgment, and stultifies the conscience. If people of all nationalities, and all faiths, all "parties," "are baptized by one spirit into one body and one hope of our calling," it really appears that there must needs be a grand surrendering of differences of opinion; a reversing of ideas; and abandoning of past unsavory claims; a modification of general aspects of past living, in order to the accomplishment of this unequalled unification of human lives, tastes, thoughts, inclinations; and purposes, motives, deeds and words! And amongst all these any one thing that savors of Anti-Christ, shutting out the Holy Ghost from the human life; robbing it of its safest monitor must not not be left within. That was a grand victory at Independence! I should like to have been there. Now, if there is any "secret" selling, any smuggling, the consciences of the Saints are free; their voice and vote were unqualifiedly against the traffic. Secret work shall not have their consent. Think of a dramshop; look at its unhallowed products; see the drunkard, look into his unhappy, cheerless homeplace; end then let a Latter Day Saint point out these to a friend and say: "I voted to have it so!" By our vote, in what direction do we cast our influence? Can we preach Christ to sinners, and vote for a traffic's existence that aids in turning out the worst class of sinners?

The latter part of June several sisters met at our home and a Prayer League was organized—a local one. Sr. Gardner was chosen president, Sr. Potter secretary. A very good time was enjoyed, the Spirit's presence appearing. The last Thursday in July thirteen sisters met at the home of the secretary and a most enjoyable time was had, in relating their several "experiences" while at private devotion. Their day is Wednesday—and they are now adopting the "lesson" named in Home Column each week. The League is doing good here, and we seek God's continued blessing upon it, not only here but everywhere. The hours will become hallowed in the memories of thousands if the sisters everywhere will unite. Come, sisters, and prevail with God! When I thought of the sisters in St. Joseph scattered over the city—all at one hour reading the same Scripture, praying for one object, it seemed blessed to me—and a good thing.

Let the church develop her spiritual powers. There are reserved, holy forces yet to be brought out that shall make Zion a great power in the world. Young men, and young women, stand fast in the Lord; ye are the hope of the church as the elder ones pass away. Yours, for progress in all good works. Success should attend all our efforts as a church when the church seeks to make advancement. The newspapers published by our brethren need a hearty lift; members should not be afraid to take hold of them and make them successful for great good. The Herald, Expositor, Autumn Leaves, etc., can not consistently deal with questions of importance not strictly religious or moral; these other papers can treat of issues of another type—and coming from the Latter Day Saint people it will give us prestige. We have been slow but sure in our work as a church, and now, seeing we are gaining prominence by righteous conduct let us be heard on all questions, civil, social, moral, religious; and so branch out maintaining independence, but not obstinacy, nor backboneless neutrality. We are not a neutral people, can not be. We are a people justly concerned for the good of all, and so should our publications be; fearless, yet truthful; bold, yet accessible; and by an unflinching integrity on the side of God, humanity and right, the papers of our church, religious and civil, shall be unawed by any one's adverse opinion; nor yet "crawfish" for policy's sake. No policy but an honest one, weighed in God's balance can be safely employed by the Latter Day Saints. These papers are, I presume, rather a "venture," but should be successful. We need them; the world is in need of them. Too much sentimentality exists. Let us have facts, truths, and straightforward literature. Many Saints can "leave off" other papers of a "news" sort and take "our own" instead; not exclusively, but "give a lift;" they will be readable; good material; and as prestige rightly sought and won is good to possess, let us reach out and get it. The world has too long looked upon us as an exclusive, illiterate, know-little class—let us seek by legitimate methods to prove to the contrary, and do it in an honorable though not menial way.

Yours, hopefully,

J. F. McDOWELL.

CAMERON, Mo., Aug. 24th.

Bro. Dancer:—I have been preaching lately in DeKalb county, Missouri. Baptized one the 11th, and two the 19th of this month. Calls for preaching more than I can fill. My health is poor but will return to Iowa next week.

Yours in gospel bonds,

W. T. BOZARTH.

THE FUTURE STATE.

The following article was, by request, written as a review of a sermon preached by a minister in Creston, Iowa. It was published in the Advertiser there, and is clipped by us from that paper:

Both in accordance with Scripture and reason are the views expressed that the future life will be one of intellectual activity as well as of holiness and worship. It is well said that while there will be a fulness of rest it will not be a rest in idleness, nor simply a place for the singing of hymns. It is evident from the Scripture that for those who attain the paradise of the intermediate state, and afterwards the condition of blessedness known as the first resurrection, there will be a glorious opportunity for a growth in knowledge, and in every good way, such as can not be found in this life, and as never will be here in mortality. In fact this life will be looked back upon as rudimentary, as having been only a beginning, like the A, B and C of childhood; that is, so it will seem to those who attain that blessed condition through learning and obeying to the best of their ability while here, and thus preparing for the advanced state.

But on other points the speaker seemed to be very undecided as to what he should teach and what he should believe. For instance he says:

"Mothers frequently ask, Will my child always remain a child? Will it still be a babe or a little one when I meet it in the heavenly home?" To this he answers: "We know not. Children may be children forever. . . . And yet I scarcely think that you will find them as when they left you. The probable laws of the spiritual realm are such that from the first they will begin to grow and develop in all graces of mind and heart. Your children still—recognized and loved, but richer, riper, maturer than when they left you. As your child would have grown in mind and body if it had lived on earth, so in the heavenly land it has gone forward, and as Longfellow beautifully expresses it, it is no longer a child, but a "beauteous maiden," or a "fair, noble youth."

Immediately after he says, "A babe may be a babe forever," just as he says above, "Children may be children forever." But if so then they could neither become "beauteous maidens" nor "fair, noble youths," by reason of growth in the spiritual world. Hence there is no consolation to the mourning mother whose question is still unanswered. For, according to the speaker, he is in the dark as much as the inquirer is, and he can give no assurance as to which hypothesis is correct. He does not appear to be aware of the fact that when the resurrection day shall come the dead, "small and great," shall arise, and that it is the body that grows in stature. Between the time of death and the time of resurrection the spirits of men are either in the paradise of God or in the prison house, and in either place they are awaiting their re-union with the bodies they were severed from, or with the literal bodies that God shall give them, in accordance with the saying of Paul, 1 Corinthians 15: 38, namely that God will give "to every seed his own body." That is the body of form and size that was laid down. And being resurrected they are then judged according to their earth-life of probation (hence according to their age and experience), and will there be seen and recognized by all who knew them as the ones who lived in mortal state.

From that time will children attain their full growth, not remain dwarfed forever because sin and disease intercepted their growth in the previous mortal condition. And added to the instruction that they have received in the spirit state, they will be instructed still more, and continue on therein. And those parents who shall have obeyed God's word and gospel, and lived righteously; those who shall be fitted to again have charge of the pure spirits that were once committed to them, will be with them again. Of children the Savior said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and that in heaven their spirits did always behold the face of his Father; in fact that they were and are, in their innocency, the emblems of that kingdom that is full of purity and peace. Therefore they must, necessarily, have part in the first resurrection, and only those parents (and others who have lived in mortal life to an accountable age) who make themselves worthy and ready, can enter where the children are, or dwell with them either in the spirit or in the resurrection state.

That there will be children in that time when the earth shall be glorified, shall be redeemed from sin and from every curse, shall become the dwelling place of God's people in the light of his eternal love, is certified by the prophet Isaiah, chapter 66, verse 20, where he says: "For the child shall not die but shall live to be an hundred years old;" and in the 22d verse he writes that the people of the Lord shall not bring forth for trouble, for he says, "they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them." Then the curse of death being taken away the righteous at the age of an hundred years will be changed to immortality, as they would have been at the beginning of the world had man kept the commandments of God. Paul says of the righteous who will be alive at the coming of the Lord, that they will be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" from mortality to immortality; not lose their bodies but have them made glorious like the Master's, even by the power of God.

Again, Mr. VanWagner says that the phrases of the Bible which portray the future life "are not to be taken literally," and that, "while God has given us the best conception possible of a spiritual world, we must not interpret them literally." Again he says: "All that the Bible states regarding heaven will be found there, but not as we conceive of these things; they are spiritual, eternal, invisible to mental eye." But if God has given us the best description that he could of the conditions and surroundings of the future life, and if all that the Bible states will be found there, then it is trifling with man to say that after all this information we do not really know anything about it; that, after God has done the best he could to inform us as to its situation, and blessedness, we should not have any confidence that it will be as he has stated it will be, otherwise that we can not conceive of it as he intends. For, though they be "spiritual, eternal," and at present invisible to the physical eye, yet to those who understand the promises of God, they are not invisible to the mental eye. Indeed the whole word of God declares that the ancients saw what was before them, and were persuaded of them, and that they looked for a city "which hath foundations;" that is something substantial and actual. Because a thing is spiritual and eternal it is not therefore unsubstantial, but all the more certain is it to be enduring, or, as the apostle expresses it, "that which fadeth not away."

The speaker said further that heaven is rather a state or condition; but wisely adds, "Still the words of Jesus seem to indicate that it also has locality," and he quotes the words of Christ, where he says, "I go to prepare a place for you." The words show that the place for his disciples was not that already prepared from the foundation of the world, but that it will be a place, a locality, to prepare which was to be part of Christ's work after his having obtained power through his overcoming death and thus far winning the victory over Satan. Mr. V. is also logical and sound in his views that the very demand of man's being is for a home, an abiding place; that such is necessary for his happiness and comfort. And if so here then we have no reason to suppose that it will be any the less the case hereafter. This very demand of the heart, yes, of the whole soul of man, is evidence that man is not only now a substantial being and his wants real, but that so he always will be, at least after his body is restored to him in the resurrection. His wants will be real, both as to his need of a home and of everything else that God made and intended for him when he created him and called him good, as a part of his work. For man was created not with spirit alone but as a dual being, body and spirit; and as such we gather from the word of God that when the body and spirit are reunited he will again be a real man, as substantial as he was before, though no longer mortal but immortal. Christ is preparing and will prepare for redeemed man all things necessary for his happiness, according to his loving wisdom and mighty power, whereby, as Paul says, "he is able to subdue all things unto himself."

The speaker asked the question, "Shall we recognize those that we loved and associated with on earth?" and he replies that we shall, but not as we do here. Well, why not? This calls to mind the fact that the great trouble with most of the modern faiths is that they make the future life unreal, unsubstantial, composed of such stuff as dreams are made of. Or even more phantomlike than some of them are. Yet did not God make man a real man, a living soul, one composed of elements that constitute body and spirit? And has not Christ proposed to redeem all mankind, even everything that was lost in the fall, so far as man will submit himself? Did not the Spirit of Christ take upon him the tabernacle, as is written in Hebrews 10: 5, "Wherefore when he cometh into the world he saith, A body hast thou prepared me." And what for? I answer that he did so, first that he might himself, "for the suffering of death be crowned with glory and honor," as Paul says in Hebrews 2: 9; but second, that he might also bring up from every power of death "All who are in their graves," as is written in John 5: 28, even with bodies of substance like his own after he was resurrected. Of him it is written that he told Thomas to touch him, and see that he was a veritable body, that he was not merely a spirit, for a spirit had not flesh and bones as he said that he had. He also ate the fish and honeycomb before them, and I do not believe that he did this as a show but to present the fact that he was again a whole man, or as God had created him at the beginning. That eating will be one of the enjoyments of created man after the resurrection is plainly shown in Revelations 22: 2, where it says that by the side of the river that flows or will flow from out the throne of God, there will be trees bearing twelve kinds of fruit, yielding their fruit every month (evidently for God's people,) while the leaves "are for the healing of the nations." In Ezekiel 47: 12 we find a like statement. To say that it does not mean anything in fact but is simply spiritual, that it is intangible, unreal, is to do violence to God's word, as much as to say that Christ did not eat of the fish and honeycomb, but that he only appeared to do so, as a deception or trick on his disciples. In fact he thereby demonstrated that he was present, with all the functions and powers that he had while a mortal body, such as he had not while he was a spirit only. And Paul wrote (Philippians 3: 21) that Christ will "change" (not destroy) "our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." If so, then our bodies will be substantial and our wants real.

We also read that in the wilderness the Israelites did eat angels' food. We shall see and feel and hear and talk and eat, after the resurrection, and we shall know each other by the same senses that we do now. But the body will be refined, and its senses and pleasures will be more acute, more pure, more holy, and our happiness will be intensely beyond what it is in this life; and we will have great joy in doing the righteous will of God, as we increase in knowledge and in understanding.

Thus it is a great error to teach, as this sermon does, that "we drop the body at death forever." Paul, as one of the inspired teachers does not say that this mortal becomes laid aside forever, but instead he wrote: "This mortal must put on immortality."—1 Corinthians 15: 53. People, Christian people, affect to despise the body that God gave, and misuse and curse it, as if it were the cause of all their woes, whereas it was given to be a source of increased happiness, and all the ancients looked forward in hope to the day of the redemption of the outer man, the tabernacle in which the spirit was placed to dwell. Job said, "In my flesh shall I see God," and that the Redeemer should stand in the latter days upon the earth, and his own eyes should behold him, evidently referring to the day of Christ's coming when the "dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thessalonians 4: 16. Paul wrote that instead of desiring to be unclothed (as seems to be the wish of many in these days) he and the saints desired "to be clothed upon," (2 Corinthians 5: 4), and in Romans 8: 23 he says: "Even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our bodies." He does not leave us in any doubt about what kind of an adoption they expected, but shows that it was not a spiritual adoption merely, but that the redemption of their bodies was the grand ultimatum that they hoped for in Christ. Therefore Paul kept his body "in subjection" to the will of God, that, when it should be redeemed, it (as well as his spirit) might be in the best condition possible, fitted to receive the crown as the whole man that God had created, not one part of it missing or left out.

Paul knew that Christ came for the express purpose of abolishing death (2 Timothy 1: 10), and of destroying him that had, and still has, the power of death, "that is the devil" (Hebrews 2: 14), so that whoso would might return back and possess the inheritance that God covenanted at the beginning to give to the race. For, it is written in Psalms 115: 16, that the "heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men," undoubtedly as an inheritance forever, not merely as a temporary abiding place. For, in Numbers 14: 21, he says, "As truly as I live all the earth shall be full of the glory of the Lord." So, through Christ, the earth will become the everlasting inheritance of the righteous, even a sure dwelling place, and a place of glory and of the kingdom of God in power. The covenant that God made with Christ (Psalms 2: 8) was: "I shall give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." We also read (Revelations 21: 1-3) that the tabernacle of God will come down, even the holy city, and be upon the earth in its renewed state, and that Christ will be with his people. Then indeed will the earth be full of his glory, even so that it will have no need of the light of the sun nor of the moon, for "the glory of God" will lighten it, as said in the 23d verse.

Some seem to think that there can be no body for man except it be a mortal or perishable one. But we read of the glorious body of the Master after he obtained it from the tomb, and that he said to John (Rev 2: 18) that he had been dead, but that the same that had been dead was now "alive for ever more." He could not have meant his spirit, but must have referred to his body; and in the preceding verses the glory, majesty, and beauty of that resurrected body are described, so that one is thrilled with joy in reading the description of it. And in 1 John 3: 2 it is written: "When he shall appear (that is at his coming to possess the earth as his inheritance) we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." And Peter said: (1 Pet. 5: 4): "When the chief shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." And looking forward to the same great day, Paul wrote, (2 Tim. 4: 9), "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give to me at that day, and not to me only but to all who love his appearing." Consequently man does not enter upon his final state, does not receive his reward, till Christ has fully prepared the inheritance which God covenanted to give him for what he should pass through. Then he and the faithful ones, those who serve for the same inheritance, those "who look for a city which hath foundations," for that which "is real and substantial, will enter in and possess, as "heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, an inheritance that fadeth not away." It is not a visionary one, one that we can not conceive of with the mind, but one which the word of God plainly sets forth so that we may know what it is and where it is, and one for which we shall willingly "endure all things" in order to gain it. That was the secret of the undying hope and untiring zeal of all the ancients. As said of Moses in Hebrews 11: 26 they "had respect unto the recompense of the reward," because they realized its worth, its glory and of what it consisted, and where it was located and when it should be given unto them.

We read in Daniel 7: 27: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Hence being under the heaven, it will not be beyond the heaven nor "beyond the bounds of time and space," as the uninspired poet wrote. Therefore the earth, redeemed and glorified, will be the dwelling place of man. The song of the redeemed, as found in Revelations 5: 10, was and still is: "And we shall reign on the earth." So that to despise this body of ours, or this earth that God has created and which he will make glorious, is to despise those things for which Christ died, and without which man can neither have eternal life nor eternal happiness.

Yes, the heaven of the saints will be a locality, a place, a home, and we shall see those we love, if worthy and they are worthy to see us, and we shall discern each other as we do now. We shall be real as we are now, and with the same senses and faculties that God endowed man with at the beginning. Otherwise the redemption which Christ wrought out for man would be no redemption whatever. As Paul asked, what advantage was it to him that he had fought with the wild beasts at Ephesus if the dead were not to rise, so we ask if we are to gain nothing by or through all that this body endures, if all is lost but the spirit, what is the object of this life-long fight against such terrible odds as are arrayed against us? Well did Paul say (1 Cor. 15: 13, 14), "If there be no resurrection of the dead then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." He knew that his hope was, that, as the whole being of man has shared in the contest, so when the whole man conquered its foes it must be the whole man that will share in the benefits of the victory.

As for the material of the body, we learn that man has discovered fifty-seven, or more, elementary substances of this earth, numbers of which were not known till the present century. And if the race is still discovering, may we not well suppose that God has in his great universe, outside this little ball that we call earth, such substances that are eternal and of such beauty and fineness that they are as yet beyond both our ken and comprehension. Evidently he has, and having made man in his own likeness he is able to redeem him and to give him a tabernacle of such beauty, glory, and excellent workmanship, as is yet unknown to mortal eyes. And being to us yet unseen and unknown it may be called spiritual, but nevertheless it is not without substance. Man does not know what electricity is, and he can not even see it. But he sees the evidences of its power, and he has given it a name, but farther than that he knows not. Neither does he know what fire is, or the wind, or gravitation, or what some other things are, or their mysteries, yet they are around him and necessary for his comfort and well being. Why then should any scout at the doctrine of Christ, that in the future state man will have a substantial body of a glorious nature, one that will exceed the sun in its splendor of appearance, even as the body of Christ did? Or that it will be indestructible, and not limited to material things?

In Matthew 13:45, Jesus said:—"Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of my Father." And in 1 Corinthians 15:45, Paul wrote that in the resurrection there will be some who will have the glory of the sun, while others will be as the moon, and still others will have only the glory of the stars, and in this latter they shall vary in glory as the stars. So the children of men will only obtain what they are living for; "every man in his own order," being the statement of Paul in 1 Corinthians 15:23.

As Mr. V. has well said, God will not destroy individuality nor take away from him anything that is good, and as he also remarks, man will then "have no mental or spiritual power which shall not be brought into useful exercise, enlarged and made more ample by an ever increasing knowledge." So as a perfect man he will have bodily powers and physical abilities that will be rightly used; and such as will be of the greatest value for his own happiness and usefulness and to conduce to that of those around him.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 7.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE ZEALOTS A. D. 67, 68.

THE arrival of John of Gischala at Jerusalem had a depressing influence on the hopes of the insurgent citizens. That subtle chief would fain have persuaded them that he and his adherents came voluntarily to devote their talents and blood to the defense of their city and temple; but the appearance of his breathless host and the tales of terror which escaped, soon revealed the sad truth that they had fled before a victorious enemy, and that the strong frontier province lay bleeding and bound beneath the foot of the Roman.

The spirit of faction had been long brooding in Jerusalem; but the presence of this unprincipled but able man caused it to break out into that dreadful strife which continued to rage with suicidal pertinacity until the end, and marked the last days of this unhappy city with horrors unexampled in history.

Influenced by his exhortations, the young and bold became more vehement than ever, while the old and timorous saw, in the fate of Galilee, the utter hopelessness of the Jewish cause. Thus party strife growing daily more stern and deadly, divided not only the national councils, but entered into every house; and bursting all the bonds of kindred and friendship, made every family a scene of bitter, and often bloody contention. Nor was this spirit confined to the metropolis; every city and village yet unsubdued was rent in the same manner; and the brand of mutual animosity seemed more cruel than the sword of the Roman. Bands of desperate villains spread themselves over the country, wasting it with fire and sword, and committing the greatest enormities, under pretense of chastising those who favored the invaders. At length a great multitude of these banditti crept by stealth, into Jerusalem, and formed a powerful and daring faction which proceeded from one enormity to another, until they began to murder, in open day, the most eminent persons in the city. But as if this tyranny were not enough, the Zealots, as these robbers were called, proceeded to trample upon the dearest and most sacred of the national institutions—that of the priesthood.

None but the sons of Aaron were eligible to this holy office; but these wretches took upon themselves to appoint the High Priests out of the meanest and most degraded families, and to depose them at pleasure; until at length they placed in this high dignity a poor rustic, so ignorant and clownish that his rude awkwardness in his habiliments made his appearance the signal for jeers and laughter. Such an affront upon public decency roused the indignation of the populace, which was inflamed also by harangues from Ananus, the chief of the Aaronic priests; and they eagerly demanded to be led on against the formidable faction which was so tyrannizing over them.

Ananus accordingly endeavored to bring the vast and tumultuous body of the people into some sort of organization; for the Zealots were numerous, daring, well armed, and accustomed to fighting. And now began a terrific civil war, which furiously raged in the lanes and streets of the city, regardless of the common enemy that was approaching from without. After awhile the Zealots, overpowered by superior numbers, retreated into the Temple, whose sacred floors were deluged with blood. The party of the High Priests did not think proper to press their victory beyond the court of the Gentiles, but contented themselves with setting a strong and well armed guard over the enemy, who had entrenched themselves in the inner court. The wily John of Gischala openly favored the popular cause, and, being forward in counsel, was deputed to treat with the Zealots; but with the deepest treachery, he had been holding secret communications with the latter, and now exhorted them to call in aid from an external source. A hasty message was accordingly sent to the Idumeans, who now occupied the southern part of Judea, appealing to them for deliverance against Ananus, whom it charged with a design to betray the liberties of the city and nation to the Romans. The warlike temper of the Idumeans made this application very agreeable to them, and an army of twenty thousand, raised in an incredibly short time, proceeded by forced marches, to the walls of Jerusalem. There, however, they found the gates shut against them; nor could they obtain entrance till the Zealots, taking advantage of a dreadful storm of thunder and rain by night, opened the doors of the Temple unperceived, and, stealing down to the city gates, admitted their allies. The besieging party now suddenly found themselves besieged, and being between two hostile armies began to despair of life. The habitual ferocity of the Idumeans was increased to fury by the delay and exposure to which they had been subjected beneath the walls, and they showed no mercy. The howls of furious men, and the shrieks of terrified women mingled with the fierce blasts of the wind and the roaring of the thunder on that fearful night. The battle swayed to and fro around and within the Temple; and the break of day revealed eight thousand five hundred corpses bathed in their own blood on the sacred pavement. Ananus himself lay among the slain; and his body, after being subjected to the utmost indignity, was cast out, unburied to the dogs and vultures. Thus fell a man who might, humanly speaking, have restored peace to the nation by the wisdom and moderation of his counsels. The grandeur of his rank and office, and the nobility of his descent, were illustrated by his personal character. He had maintained a spotless reputation for justice and honor in those degenerate times; he was affable and benignant in his manners, and disinterested in his policy, preferring the welfare of the people to his own advantage. He was a strenuous advocate for peace and submission to the Romans; and having already, by his influence with the people, acquired a decided superiority over the war party, he might but for the treachery of John, have yet obtained honorable terms of peace from Vespasian. But the irrevocable doom had gone forth from the Most High, and who could disannul it? An unresisted massacre followed this night of blood; the populace being hewn down in the streets, and those of higher rank, after cruel scourgings and tortures to induce them to change their politics, being slain in the prisons; twelve thousand of the better sort perished in this manner. There was one person whose murder calls for particular notice: Zacharias, son of Baruch, one of the most eminent of the citizens for wealth and honors, had made himself obnoxious to the Zealots by his probity and his testimony against their wickedness. Him they determined to get rid of; so summoning a sort of sanhedrin, consisting of seventy of their own creatures, they accused him of partiality to the Romans. Not a shadow of proof could be adduced of his criminality; but instead of defending himself, or appealing for mercy, the righteous man pressed home upon the consciences of his accusers their transgression of the law of God, and the miseries they had brought upon the nation. His faithful testimony, as in the case of Stephen before, so infuriated them that, in a tumultuous manner, they clamored for a verdict; but, so clear was the innocence of the prisoner, that the pseudo judges brought him in guiltless, when two of the most daring of the Zealots rushed upon him with their swords, and slew him, with insult in the middle of the Temple, after which they cast his body out into the valley of Jehoshaphat.

From the names of this worthy man and his father, the place and circumstance of his death, and his virtuous character, some have supposed, not without reason, that this may have been the Zacharias, the son of Barachias, whose death was alluded to by the Lord, as closing the list of martyrs whose blood should be avenged upon Jerusalem. And there certainly seems more probability that the martyr so spoken of should be one slain in the last days of the city, than one who lived so long before as the prophet of the same name, of whose death we have no record, especially as we know that there was a deluge of righteous blood shed in Jerusalem after our blessed Lord's utterance of those solemn words, (Matt. 23: 34-36,) "Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shalt kill and crucify; and some of them ye shalt scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city; that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, when ye slew between the Temple and the altar, verily I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation."

At length the Idumeans grew weary of slaughter and began to feel indignant at the position into which they had been betrayed; for having been artfully induced to come as national deliverers, they found themselves mere butchers of citizens. Having therefore first opened the goals, and liberated about two thousand prisoners, they returned to their own provinces, leaving the province and the Zealots alike in joy at their departure; the former congratulating themselves on being freed from powerful persecutors, the latter that they should now be able to prosecute their iniquitous designs without any check from these their less abandoned associates. A sevenfold spirit of demoniacal madness now reigned in the doomed city; and the picture drawn of Jerusalem by the Jewish historian forms a vivid comment on the awful words in which the Lord Jesus had predicted the abandonment of the city of Holiness to "the unclean spirit." "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest and finding none, then he saith: 'I will return into my house from whence I came out;' and when he is come he findeth it empty, swept and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be unto this wicked generation."—Matt. 12: 43-45.

The Zealots now threw off all restraint. The eminence of any man, whether for virtue, station, or wealth, was the signal for his destruction. The good they murdered from hatred; the noble, from fear; the rich, for covetousness. No wariness of conduct was a security; if one did not come near them at all, he fell under suspicion as a proud man; if any one came confidently, he was esteemed a despiser of their power; and if any professed a wish to serve or oblige them, he was suspected of treachery; accusation was equivalent to condemnation, and there was but one punishment for all sorts of crime,—death. Multitudes fled from the city, though to be detected in desertion was fatal, and the gates were strictly guarded; but many of those who escaped, returned to die within the precincts of the Holy City, from the horror of remaining unburied. But their hopes were vain; for the ceremony of interment was now denied even to those dying within the city; and as if the last feelings of nature were to be violated by these wretches, it was made a capital crime to give the shelter of a grave to a departed friend. The high roads, the fields, and the villages were strewn with dead bodies in vast numbers, corrupting in the sun. The flocks of obscene vultures that sat lazily on the fences and housetops were utterly insufficient to consume the corpses; while the heaps of unburied slain that lay in the streets of Jerusalem already threatened a pestilence.

The demons in human form who ruled with a rod of iron this ill-fated city, trampled under foot the laws of man, and laughed at the law of God. They affected to ridicule, as jangling impostures, the solemn predictions of the prophets, which they were madly accomplishing.

Without the city desolation was working its way no less surely. The band of robbers that had taken possession of the strong fortress of Masada, known by the name of Sicarii, or men of the Poniard, were engaged in wasting the country by fire and sword, massacring the population of the villages, and carrying their plunder into the fortress. The impunity of these wretches emboldened others to band together for a like purpose; and thus was the face of the whole country infested with increasing hordes of these desperate men; and the daughter of Zion was stabbed to the heart, not only by the sword of the Roman, but by the daggers of her own unnatural children, far more cruel than the idolatrous Gentiles themselves. "How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and casts down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger."—Lamentations 11: 1.

THE RESPITE, A. D. 68, 69.

The winter and spring of the year sixty-eight were occupied by the Romans in the subjugation of Perea, and Idumea. The former known in Scripture as "the country beyond Jordan," was soon reduced by the tribune, Placidus; who having advanced against Gadara, the chief city, and taken it by capitulation, overran the whole region with his troops.

A strenuous resistance was made at Bethanabris, a walled town near the Jordan, perhaps the same with "Bethabara, where John was baptizing." A number of fugitives from Gadara had reinforced the garrison of this place, who on the approach of Placidus, sallied forth to give him battle. The old stratagem of a feigned flight drew the Jews from the walls into the plains, when their retreat being cut off by the cavalry, they were overborne and put to the sword, with the exception of a few, who fought their way through, and regained the walls. But here a dire necessity prohibited the garrison within from admitting them, for the Roman troops were close upon their heels, and to admit the one would be to admit the other. They were therefore abandoned to their fate. But the closing of the gates was of little avail; for after a severe assault the walls were forced, and the inhabitants as usual, were slaughtered without mercy. The fate of this place so terrified the surrounding country that the inhabitants of the villages attempted to flee for their lives, and getting together in large numbers, fled towards the Jordan, hoping to reach Jericho, a strong city on the other side. Placidus followed in the rear hewing them down with his cavalry as they fled; and when they came to the river they found to their utter dismay that it could not be forded, for the rains had augmented the stream, and the current was both deep and rapid. It was the very spot where, of old, their fathers had passed over dryshod, the water dividing before the divinely guided tribes: "And it came to pass, when the people removed from their tents, to pass over Jordan, and the priests bearing the ark of the covenant before the people; and as they that bore the ark were come unto Jordan, and the feet of the priests that bore the ark were dipped in the brim of the water, (for Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harvest), that the waters which came down from above stood and rose up upon an heap very far from the city Adam, that is beside Zaretan; and those that came down towards the sea of the plain, even the Salt sea, failed, and were cut off; and the people passed over right against Jericho. And the priests that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan. And all the Israelites passed over on dry ground, until all the people were passed clean over Jordan."—Josh. 3: 14-17. But now no miraculous interposition saved the trembling crowds, who, like frightened sheep, flocked to the banks. Behind them pressed the Roman horse, and the shrieks and groans of the dying told that the Roman sword was doing its bloody work, fast and fatally. Before them was the Jordan, rolling on his swollen and turbid waters in many a whirling eddy to the dead sea. There was but a choice of death. Fifteen thousand gave their blood to the sword, while the number of those forced into the current was prodigious. The Dead Sea was covered (to use the words of the historian) with the floating corpses.

After this dreadful calamity the rest of Perea soon submitted to the conquerors. While Placidus was thus engaged in reducing the country to the east of Jordan, Vespasian himself had turned his attention to the south of Judea. Intelligence of a revolt in Gaul, which threatened serious consequences to the Empire, induced him to hasten his operations, and to begin the campaign even before winter was over. Marching from Cæsarea to Antipatris, and thence to Thamnos, Lidda, and Jamnia, laying waste every town and village that offered resistance, and garrisoning the walled cities, he came to Emmaus. Here was an important pass that led to Jerusalem, to guard which the Roman commander thought proper to leave the fifth legion, while he continued his march southward into the very midst of Idumea. Having subdued this warlike province with much slaughter, and having overrun and laid waste the whole of "the hill country" and re-garrisoned the fortresses, he returned to Emmaus. Thence without delay, he traversed Samaria, and pitched his camp near the city of Sychar, or Shechem, on the second day of the month Sivan, probably near the middle of May. Thence again turning southward Vespasian proceeded to Jericho, being joined on the way by the troops which had been occupied in reducing Perea. The city was found deserted; the inhabitants having fled at the approach of the Roman army, to seek a precarious refuge in the rocky mountains that surround Jerusalem. The beautiful and ancient city of Jericho was situated in the midst of a vast plain, from the bosom of which rose a solitary fountain, whose waters, after having been healed by the prophet Elisha, were a source of abundant fertility to this magnificent plain. It was one of the most delightful tracts in the whole land of Judea. Josephus speaks of it with rapture, as possessing a loveliness almost divine; as abounding in productive gardens, embowered in shady groves; as ornamented with clumps of waving palm-trees of various species, prized both for beauty and for fruit; as singularly rich in other vegetable productions, valuable balms and balsams; and as abounding in the honey of bees. The common fruits and grains of the country were here in profusion, for the soil was of uncommon fertility, and the climate was delightful, particularly in winter. In this beautiful and well-watered plain Vespasian seems to have remained some months regaling his soldiers after the toils of their devastating course, and recruiting their strength for the approaching assault upon Jerusalem.

At length he returned to Cæsarea; but scarcely had he arrived there, and began his preparations for the final march upon the capital, when intelligence of the death of Nero caused him to pause, and suspended the fatal blow for nearly two years. But Jerusalem knew not how to profit by this respite. The horrors of civil war raged there without any abatement of violence, and without any intermission. The subtle John of Gischala had succeed in dividing the faction of the Zealots into two hostile parties, of one of which he made himself the head; and these were perpetually engaged in mutual conflict, or rivalled each other in the perpetration of all enormities upon the wretched inhabitants. But now there arose another faction, as violent and cruel as either. Simon, the son of Giorus, who had distinguished himself in the rout of Cestius, a man of ferocious courage and determined spirit, had gathered a party of robbers, with whom he had wasted the country between Jerusalem and the Dead Sea. Gradually gaining strength and wealth by the reputation of his deeds, he at length found himself at the head of forty thousand daring men, well armed, besides twice as many followers.

Having conquered and ravaged Idumea, he made no secret of his intentions to assault Jerusalem; and, though the warlike Zealots sent forth bands to form ambushes for him in the passes, they could not offer any serious obstacle to his triumphant progress, and at length he encompassed the city with his army. Here he raged like a wild beast, killing with horrible tortures all the unhappy individuals that ventured from the gates, and scarcely abstaining from tearing their flesh with his teeth. And thus was Jerusalem wasted by two armies within and one without her walls, of her own children; so that the Romans could well afford to remain passive spectators of those, who with blind infatuation were performing the work which they had come to do.

Meanwhile the dreadful tyranny of John's faction had arrived at such a pitch, and so enormous was the unmentionable wickedness daily perpetrated by them in the city, that the people were driven to madness. At a consultation in which the high priests took part, as to what remedy could be devised, a resolution was adopted to admit Simon into the city to chastize John. Insane determination, as if they, who found the burden of one tyrant a burden too grievous to be borne, should be relieved by the addition of another. Even the half heathen Josephus can not avoid the reflection, "That surely God in anger had turned their counsels into foolishness." It was about the time of the vernal equinox in the year sixty-nine that Simon, with no little ostentation and arrogance, took up his quarters in the city. The superiority of his forces enabled him to besiege John, who, with his Zealots, had entrenched himself in the Temple, from the cloisters and battlements of which, as from a strong fortress, the missile weapons of the besieged faction did great execution upon their enemies; the advantage of situation in some degree equalizing the conditions of the combatants. About this time Vespasian was raised to the Imperial throne by the suffrages of the army; and having disposed of such business as was urgent in Cæsarea, he proceeded with his son Titus to Antioch in the course of the autumn, and thence, by way of Alexandria, to Rome, where he assumed the purple amidst the most extravagant manifestations of popular joy.

POLITICS.

THE Herald refrains from taking any part in politics, not but what its editors and the management feel a deep interest in the welfare of the country, but no doubt experience has shown them that should they permit the discussion of political differences that exist, it would not be long ere its spiritual influence would be impaired, and its mission work perverted; for surely its mission work is to teach the world God's law and purposes, and to better our condition socially, morally, commercially, politically, spiritually and religiously. To do this I know of no better course than the Herald is pursuing and has with but few exceptions pursued. For should it become a party paper in politics, its influence would soon be reduced so that it would rank in common with other papers of its kind, and jealousy and contention come into the church like a flood, and what a sad condition of things we would have. But as it is going right along, presenting the gospel of Christ, and telling all men to repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and that it will not be long ere He will come to reign whose right it is; that he will come as "King of King's and Lord of Lord's;" and that "of the increase of his government there will be no end," etc., we may expect good results, for the kingdom that we are looking for is a kingdom wherein dwelleth righteousness; and in order for us to be worthy of admission into it we must work righteousness.

Now while I think it unsafe for the Herald to have anything to do with political issues, it is but reasonable for us to expect that the brethren will take part in discussing those different political problems and policies that form the boundary lines for the different parties. To ask them to desist, is to my mind, puerility; for how can any man be a good citizen and feel indifferent to the political welfare of his country, and to the condition of society? How can he vote with safety without first informing his mind as to the policy and platform of the different parties and their record? Unless we talk matters over with those who differ with us, and view matters from other standpoints, how are we to learn and increase in knowledge? If I have an enemy I want to know what are his weapons for warfare; and if a man differs with me, I want to know his reasons for so doing.

We ask the world to reason on religious questions, and tell them that reason and truth make us men; and that to refuse to reason shows a weakness. So I think in regard to the discussing of political questions; but the trouble is the way in which it is done. We are so prone to get into the wrong spirit and vie with each other for the mastery in the argument, and often resort to sophistry and villification of the character of the candidates of the other, or opposing party; also to lying and repeating lies after unscrupulous editors, and aspiring politicians, instead of appealing to authenticated documents and statistics, such as we have reason to believe are issued without party prejudice, and reasoning from them, calmly and honestly.

While we expect others to listen to us when giving our reasons for our political faith, we should be equally patient and hear what they have to say, and submit to reason, and not imagine that arrogance, egotism, and the defamation of others is argument; for thereby you provoke your brother or neighbor to anger, and if you get beaten it is hardly gentlemanly to say, "Its not so because you say so; remember that." By so doing, you are guilty of two wrongs. You should acknowledge manfully, or quietly withdraw; the better way is to acknowledge or concede.

If we are dishonest when talking politics, it will create distrust and suspicion in the minds of others that we are not strictly honest with spiritual things, as Jesus says: "If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?"—Luke 16:11. We can not expect good results from wrong doing. The presidential election is drawing nigh, and party feeling will grow stronger and stronger until after election, and of course, we will partake more or less of it; but, for conscience sake, do not let it interfere with your standing in the church, nor with the standing of others. I think that what interest you may have in politics, you had better let it rest on the Sabbath, and try during the week to keep your conscience void of offence. Does it not seem unseemingly in men professing to be men of God, to bring their political hats and badges to church, and thereby arouse thought, hence feelings, that may prevent the spiritual enjoyment that otherwise would be received. When you see a brother with two or three badges upon his breast when teaching or administering the sacrament, and at the same time neglecting his duty in the church, does it not destroy confidence? I think we should divest ourselves of those things when going to the house of prayer. If you are bound to have them, then go ahead, but try and regard the church as too sacred a place for such adornments. We read that Moses was told, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."—Exodus 3:5. After the church is dedicated it surely is holy ground if accepted of God. Whatever may be thought, or whatever may be assigned as a reason why God commanded Moses to remove his shoes, one thing is certain, it teaches us that we may have that about us that the Lord may object to, or that is not fit to take into a holy place.

Again: When talking of the different candidates for office, pray remember that it is quite possible for two good men to run for the same office, and that they may be equally worthy, as far as their integrity is concerned. So let us be cautious lest we may do injustice to any. A man that takes the statements of a party newspaper as facts is in danger in making a decision until he has heard the other side of the question. One thing should be admitted, that there is a great amount of deception and corruption in all parties; so, as Saints, let us vote for good men or what appears to us to be the best men; for it is no matter how good a party's platform may be, if the men elected are corrupt, there is danger. "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn."

It is possible that grave questions may come up after a while that will cause us Latter Day Saints to drift into the same channel; but let it come about naturally, under the existing condition of things. I am glad that we are divided in politics as in other matters, so that our influence for good will not be lessened, nor the church's progress impeded. If we will prove ourselves good loyal citizens, we may yet be a power in the hand of God for good, and by our labors, bring about a reformation in society, locally at least, if not universally. Without this hope I would become discouraged. The word says: "The day speedily cometh; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world."—D. C. 1:6.

It is our duty to strive to bring about, or make that preparation on earth, so that Christ will come to be glorified in his Saints. "The hour is not yet." Bear in mind that an hour is but one part in twelve of the day. This revelation was given a half a century ago, and of course we are just that much nearer his advent; but just how far away in the future it will be we are not able to say; still the Spirit says that "it is much nearer than many suppose." That we may be ready when he appears, and that we will learn the politics of His government, or kingdom, I shall ever pray. METIS.

Selected Poetry.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

The church and the world walked far apart,
On the changing shore of time;
The world was singing a giddy song,
And the church a hymn sublime.
"Come give me your hand," cried the merry world,
"And walk with me this way;"
But the good church hid her snowy hand,
And solemnly answered; "Nay,
I will not give you my hand at all,
And I will not walk with you;
Your way is the way to endless death,
And your words are all untrue."

"Nay, walk with me but a little space,"
Said the world with a kindly air;
The road I walk is a pleasant road,
And the sun shines always there;
Your path is thorny and rough and rude,
While mine is flow'ry and smooth;
Your lot is sad with reproach and toil,
But in circles of joy I move:
My path you can see is a broad, fair one,
And my gate is high and wide;
There is room enough for you and for me,
To travel side by side."

Half shyly the church approached the world,
And gave him her hand of snow;
And the old world grasped it and walked along,
Saying in accents low,
"Your dress is too simple to please my taste,
I have gold and pearls to wear;
Rich velvets and silks for your graceful form,
And diamonds to deck your hair;"

The church looked down at her plain, white robes,
And then at the dazzling world.

And blushed as she saw his handsome lips,
With a smile contemptuous curled.
"I will change my dress for a costlier one,"
Said the church with a smile of grace;
Then her pure white garments drifted away,
And the world gave in their place
Beautiful satins and shining silks,
And roses and gems and pearls,
And over her forehead her bright hair fell,
Crisped in a thousand curls.

"Your house is too plain," said the proud old world,
"I'll build you one like mine;
With carpets of Brussels and curtains of lace,
And furniture ever so fine."
So he built her a costly and beautiful house,
Splendid it was to behold;
Her sons and her beautiful daughters met there,
Gleaming in purple and gold.
And fairs and shows in the halls were held,
And the world and his children were there,
And laughter and music and feasts were heard
In the place that was meant for prayer.
She had cushioned pews for the rich and the great,
To sit in their pomp and pride;
While the poor folks, clad in their shabby suits,
Sat meekly down outside.

The angel of mercy flew over the church,
And whispered "I know thy sin,"
Then the church looked back with a sigh, and longed
To gather the children in;
But some were off at the midnight ball,
And some were off at the play;
And some were drinking in gay saloons,
As she quietly went her way.
Then the stiv world gallantly said to her—
"Your children mean no harm, Merely indulging in innocent sports."
So she leaned on his proffered arm,
And smiled and chatted and gathered flowers,
As she walked along with the world;
While millions and millions of precious souls,
To the horrible gulf were hurled.

"Your preachers are all too old and plain,"
Said the gay world with a sneer,
"They frighten my children with dreadful tales,
Which I do not like them to hear.
They talk of judgment, fire and pain,
And the horrors of starless nights;
They talk of a place that should not be Mentioned to ears polite.
I will send you some of a better stamp,
Brilliant and gay and fast;
Who will show how people may live as they list,
And go to heaven at last.
The Father is merciful, great and good,
Loving and tender and kind;
Do you think he would take one child to heaven,
And leave the rest behind?"
So she filled her house with gay divines,
Gifted and great and learned;
And the plain old men that preached the cross,
Were out of her pulpits turned.

"You give too much to the poor," said the world,
"Far more than you ought to do;
Though the poor need shelter and food and clothes,
Why need it trouble you?
Go take your money and buy rich robes,
And horses and carriages fine;
And pearls and jewels and dainty food,
And the rarest and costliest wine.
My children they detest on all such things,
And if you their love would win,
You must do as they do, and walk in the ways
That they are walking in."
Then the church held tightly the strings of her purse,
And gracefully lowered her head;
And simpered: "I've given too much away;
I will do, sir, as you have said."

So the poor were turned from her door in scorn,
And she heard not the orphans' cry;
And she drew her beautiful robes aside,
As the widows went weeping by;
And they of the church and they of the world,
Walked closely, hand and heart;
And only the Master who knoweth all,
Could tell the two apart.
Then the church sat down at her ease and said—
"I am rich and in goods increased;

I have need of nothing and naught to do,
But to laugh and dance and feast.
And the sly world heard her and laughed in his sleeve,
And mockingly said aside—
"The church has fallen, the beautiful church,
And her shame is her boast and pride."
Then the angel drew near the mercy seat,
And whispered in sighs her name;
And the saints their anthems of rapture hushed,
And covered their heads with shame;
And a voice came down through the hush of heaven,
From him who sat on the throne;
"I know thy work and what thou hast said,
And how thou hast not known
That thou art poor and naked and blind,
With pride and ruin enthralled;
The expectant bride of a heavenly groom,
Now the harlot of the world.
Thou hast ceased to watch for that blessed hope,
And hast fallen from zeal and grace;
So now, alas, I must cast thee out,
And blot thy name from its place."

Miscellaneous.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of the Kewanee, Illinois, district will convene at the Buffalo Prairie branch, September 15th and 16th, at ten a. m., for business. Saints coming by rail road will please notify us by letter or card, so you can be conveyed from Aledo or Joy. All come and bring the Spirit with you, that we may have a good time.

E. T. BRYANT,
President of Buffalo Prairie branch.

The Central California district conference will convene at San Benito, September 21st, 1888, at half-past ten o'clock a. m., instead of October 13th as passed by April Conference. Brethren H. C. Smith and J. F. Burton will be with us. Come all, and let the Spirit of the Master come with you that all may be blessed.

J. B. CARMICHAEL, Dist. Pres.

APPOINTMENTS.

To whom it may concern:—Notice is hereby given that arrangements have been made with the Bishop and in accordance with provision made by Annual Conference of 1888 Elder J. H. Lawn has been appointed to labor as a missionary in Central California, and Elder Joseph F. Burton appointed to labor as a missionary in California and Arizona.

I also hereby appoint Elder Joseph F. Burton in charge of the field of labor comprising Southern California and Arizona. Missionaries within that field will please report to him. Applications for labor may be made to him; and all other matters properly coming before the missionary in charge should be referred to him.

HEMAN C. SMITH,
President of Pacific Slope Mission.

NOTICE.

To the brethren of the Northern Michigan district: There is a call in Herald for August 11th to those who are in arrears for church books and papers to pay up as soon as convenient. Will the brethren in this district who are in arrears to me for church books please pay up by not later than our next October conference. There is about thirty dollars due me, and I am owing over that amount to the office. I would also say to the brethren throughout that I have yet about four hundred "Bible Synopses" yet on hand at $1.25 each. Much less to agents.

J. J. CORNISH.

ATTENTION.

Please notice the colored label of your Hope, as it shows the date to which you have paid, and if you are in arrears please renew at once. A large number are in arrears and it will be necessary to discontinue them if we do not hear from them soon.

BORN.

CHENEY.—Near Riverton, Fremont county, Iowa, July 8 h, 1888, to Mr. Byron and Sr. Lizzie Cheney, a son. Blessed by Elder Henry Kemp and named Jesse Lorenzo.

MARRIED.

ADAMS—NELSON.—At Petersville, Mercer county, Illinois, August 16th, by Elder J. W. Terry, Bro. Stephen N. Adams and Miss Amanda E. Nelson.

DIED.

TOLLE.—At Los Angeles, California, August 1st, 1888, Sr. Nettie Tolle. She was born November 11th, 1865, and united with the church February 14th, 1884, at Green Meadows, being baptized by Elder W. W. Blair. She left a loving husband and a little babe to mourn their loss.

She's gone to meet her God and Maker,
To give account for deeds she's done;
She's left on earth a little daughter,
May God protect the little one.

LEWIS.—At Osceola, Iosco county, Michigan, August 13th, 1888, infant child of Bro. and Sr. Lewis; aged four weeks lacking one day. Funeral sermon by Elder E. DeLong.

BURCH.—At 2207, Howard street, St. Louis, Missouri, August 18th, 1888, of consumption, Henry Brockwood Burch, beloved husband of Sr. Mary Burch. He was born at London, England January 27th, 1853; was a dutiful son, a kind, indulgent husband, parent, and was held in esteem by a large circle of friends. He was reared amidst the church, accepted the faith as true and necessary to salvation, promised his mother prior to her decease to obey, yet allowed the days to go by till he thought it too late; as he expressed to us, "He did not believe in death-bed repentance," and preferred to go before his Maker upon the record of life rather than after years of wasted opportunity to act in the matter. His entreaties to others to accept and live the faith were of no uncertain sound. He passed peacefully away after a long period of suffering which he endured in patience, arranged matters for his death, among other things that the funeral services should be at the house, by the church and by Knights of Pythias Lodge, and church at the grave; all of which was complied with. A large and respectful cortege followed the remains to the Bellefontaine Cemetery. The grief of Sr. Burch and son of ten summers, as also Bro. Kyte is deep, and is their second bereavement in a few months. The funeral sermon of Mr. Burch to a crowded house of many faiths, was preached by R. Etzenhouser; from Psalms 17: 15.

DAVIS.—At 1006 Tyler street, St. Louis, Missouri, July 25th, 1888, Sr. Hannah, beloved wife of Bro. Edward Davis, of old age and debility. She was born at Amlyn, Carmarthenshire, Wales, April 6th, 1803. Was married to Bro. Davis July 4th, 1825; baptized into the church in 1842, by Joseph Matthews, in Wales, and some ten or twelve years ago into the Reorganization at Beaver, Missouri, by T. W. Smith. She seems to have merged peacefully from the sleep of a night into the "rest of Saints" without a tremor, mental or physical. For at morn she was found dead by Bro. Davis, at his side, one hand pillowed beneath her head, the other folded gently across her breast. Death cut her short of but one desire only, and that was to care for the aged cripple, maimed, and almost deaf companion, who can not read nor write. By the weight of years upon both and the sadly crippled condition of Bro. Davis they have been dependent for years. Through the Bishop, the Mite Society of St. Louis and other societies and philanthropic individuals they were cared for. Though death was so sudden, yet as if by magic, friends out and in the church raised forty five dollars in a few hours. Mr. and Mrs. J. Gauger, of No. 2204-2206 North Broadway, furnished a burial spot in their lot in the Bethel cemetery (the lot of beautiful location). Mrs. Gauger Protzman, and others of the "Daughters of Rebecca," of Schiller Lodge No. 89, I. O. O. F., did valuable service in both the life and death of Sr. Davis. Sr. Davis had marvelous faith. When sight had far waned at the time of Bro. Davis being crippled by the cars, in immediate answer to prayer that she might see to care for her mangled companion, her sight was restored and remained to her death, so that though 85 years old, she read any print without glasses. Though bereft of earthly possessions and adhering to a faith not popular, her friends were very many indeed and included many representative lives. After days of weary toil and anxiety upon the part of the sisters of the Mite Society, a comfortable home for Bro. Davis has been secured with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Foster, of No. 2422 North Broadway, who proffered Bro. Davis a home, the church to aid as they felt able. All of these several parties who with kindly heart and liberal hand thus aided were voted a "vote of thanks" at the regular service of the congregation. The funeral service was from the house, and the sermon on Sunday, the 29th, at the Hall, by R. Etzenhouser from 2 Tim. 4: 7.

TOBACCO.

A brief review of the history of tobacco, and the important events connected with its career since the discovery of America, is contained in the following epitome. In 1570 tobacco was smoked in Holland in hollow tubes composed of palm leaves plaited together. In 1575 a figure of the plant first appeared in Andre Therat's "Cosmographic." In 1585 the English first saw pipes made of clay among the natives of Virginia, which had just been discovered by Sir Richard Grenville. It appears, likewise, that the English soon fabricated the first clay pipes in Europe. In 1590 Shah Abbas, of Persia, prohibited the use of tobacco in his empire, but the practice had become so deep rooted among the subjects that many often fled to the mountains and abandoned everything else to enjoy the luxury of smoking. In the beginning of the seventeenth century they began to cultivate tobacco in the East Indies. In 1604 James I, of England, endeavored by means of heavy imports to abolish the use of tobacco, which he held to be a noxious weed. In 1610 the smoking of tobacco was known at Constantinople. To render the custom ridiculous a Turk who had been found smoking was conducted about the streets with a pipe transfixed through his nose. In 1610 tobacco began to be planted about Amersfort in Holland, which afterward became famous for its cultivation. In 1616 the colonists began to cultivate tobacco in Virginia and it seems to have been in use among the Indians at the time they were visited by the English, and was called by them "Retum" or "Return." In 1619, James, the First, wrote his "counterblast of tobacco," and ordered that no planter in Virginia should cultivate more than 100 pounds per year. He also prohibited its sale in England or Ireland until the custom should be paid and the royal seal affixed. Twenty thousand pounds were exported this year from Virginia to England. In 1622 the annual import of tobacco into England from America for the preceding seven years was 142,085 pounds. In 1634 a tribunal, called the Chamber of Tobacco, was formed at Moscow, which prohibited smoking under pain of having the nose slit. In 1639 the grand assembly of Virginia passed a law that all tobacco planted in that and the succeeding years should be destroyed except such a portion to each planter as should make in the whole 120,000 pounds, and that the cuaitars of the planters should receive forty pounds for every 100 pounds due them.—En

JOSEPH SMITH EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, Sept. 15, 1888.

STEADILY FORWARD.

IN a late letter from a sister in the field of workers, she wrote that the most predominant feeling resulting to her from reading the Herald, is most aptly expressed by the words "steadily forward." One of the apostolic injunctions was, "Let us go on unto perfection." Another, equally as suggestive is, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The object of the HERALD is to serve the cause in the best way that the wisdom of those having charge can devise. And if it can so present and maintain the "faith once delivered to the Saints," in such a spirit that it inspires its readers with the desire and confidence to press "steadily forward," it is doing the work for which it was established.

We have received no word of praise, or encouragement that has been more grateful to us than this sister's expression that the feeling with which the HERALD most inspired her, was to go "steadily forward." The prize lies yonder, at the end of the race; the care, anxiety and toil are here; he that "endureth to the end" is the one who will be crowned. The poor and the improvident, the well to-do, careful and prudent, the rich, careless and gay; the tried and tempted, the oppressed and dejected, the contented and happy, the restless and uneasy, the restful and satisfied, the sad, the joyous, the easy going and the energetic—all start; some will make the journey; some fall out by the way overcome with the burden and the heat, some by reason of being overtaken in error and foolishness, or crime; sadness for these, joy for those. If we can so conduct the HERALD that it will cheer and strengthen the Saints, as well as enlighten those seeking the way, making them feel assured and confident of the pathways under their feet and inspire them to press "steadily forward," we shall feel greatly compensated for the la-bers we are striving to perform. The very thought that some has received a renewal of courage, has enjoyed an hour's restful assurance of the things "believed among us," has been given an uplifting of the soul in recovered strength of purpose and determination is in itself an influence of encouragement, an impetus to renewed diligence, a help, a support and a comfort.

If we can but feel that the Saints rise up from a perusal of the HERALD, with spiritual strength and courage revived and renewed, it will be to us as the approval of the Lord upon the work, and we too will arise and "press STEADILY FORWARD."

"Press forward and upward, ye hosts of the Lord;
The prizes are waiting where the goal is won,
Pause not till the Master has spoken the word,
'Your trials are ended, and your labor is done.'
Wait not for the laggards who halt by the way;
The steeds are before you, hie upward and on.
The way may be rough, but there's loss in delay—Rouse ye from lethargy—Press steadily on."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. MARK H. FORSCUTT preached an excellent discourse on the subject of "Man's Agency," in the church at Lamoni, Sunday, August 2d; and Bro. J. R. Lambert followed in the evening with a good one on the means given of God for the development of the good in man, to prepare him for eternal life and an abode with the Father.

Six had been baptized at Wilber, Nebraska, during the late meetings there up to August 30th.

Bro. Blair would be at Nebraska City, Monday, September 3d. Thence he would go to Scranton, Kansas, or to Clarksdale, Missouri.

The Holiness people have been holding a camp meeting some seven miles west of Lamoni, in what is known as the Patrick neighborhood. Rev. George More is conducting it. He is reported to be an earnest, hardworking preacher. A good number of the Saints of Lamoni attended his services September 2d. He complained with some feeling that though he had never worked harder in his life, not a soul had been saved at the meeting to that date. What is there at work in the neighborhood to prevent revival work? We are sure that the Saints are quite willing everybody shall be converted and saved.

Bro. John Cornish wrote from Juniata, Michigan, August 27th, that he had attended a Two Days' meeting at that place. He reports that an excellent session was had. Three young men addressed the meeting with most striking liberty. Three were baptized. One gentleman who had been much opposed to the work was convinced of his error, openly asked pardon of the Saints and requested baptism; and was with one other to be baptized the morning Bro. Cornish wrote. At the close of his letter Bro. John says:—"Our meetings were good, the Saints were greatly encouraged, prejudice is falling, and God's work is rolling on."

Bro. William Newton writes from Broadcliff, England, August 18th, that he has baptized five more, making ten in all baptized by him since his arrival, seven of whom are heads of families.

Bro. W. W. Cross writes from Goose Creek, West Virginia, giving an account of the labors of Brn. Devore and E. L. Kelley in that vicinity. He gives a summary of the discussion between the latter and a Campbellite, an account of which has already been furnished the Herald readers. Bro. Cross reports the Saints as strong in the faith and the outsiders as anxious for the reappearance of Brn. Devore and Kelley.

Bro. R. J. Anthony and daughter "B," would leave Wilber, Nebraska, Tuesday, September 4th, for Salt Lake City, Utah. Bro. Anthony goes to his field of labor and Sr. "B" goes to teach a school at Malta, Idaho.

Bro. Charles Derry, in attendance at the Wilber meeting would leave for Persia, Iowa, August 30th to attend district conference. Bro. Derry was in fine spirits.

Bro. F. Peterson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, sent us two clippings from the Omaha Bee, of late dates. One is a newspaper reporter's digest of a sermon by Rev. Dr. Cooper, in the Broadway Methodist Church, (of Council Bluffs, we presume), upon "The Strength of Romanism;" and is to be followed by one on "The Weakness of Romanism." It is an evident attack upon the Catholic Church, in view of its supposed progress in the United States. The other clipping is a note concerning the organization of an "Anti-Romanist" society, having for its object the checking and neutralizing of the influence of the Catholic Church in the politics of the country. This society, it is reported, is making considerable progress in different places, Minneapolis alone having eight thousand of them. It is designed to be a national organization.

Bro. John J. Cornish writes September 3d, from Farwell, Michigan, that his discussion with Mr. Conant, a representative of the Adventists, had just closed amid much interest and excitement among the people; some of whom came twelve miles to attend. At the close of the subject of the Book of Mormon Mr. Conant was very anxious for a vote by the audience, which was taken, standing seventy-six to thirty-seven in favor of Bro. Cornish. Following the close of the soul sleeping question, however, Mr. Conant objected to a vote being taken, amidst loud calls of, "Vote," "vote," from the assembly. Two more were baptized, others are believing, and the congregations of the Methodist and Baptist Churches refused to be governed by the advice of the clergy to stay away from the meetings.

Bro. William Anderson and Thomas Burch with their wives, and Srs. Roberts and Greer were at Lamoni September 2d in attendance at service in the new church. Sr. Birchell, of Lucas, Iowa, was also present.

Sr. Minnie Wickes and children and her mother, Sr. Newman, of Lamoni, left the latter place for Rogers, Arkansas, the home of Sr. Wickes, on Friday, August 31st. Sr. Wickes has been visiting at Lamoni some three weeks.

We are still waiting to receive a donation of volume eighteen of the Millennial Star, or will purchase one if offered.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it wrong for the Saints to get up a supper and entertainment and charge for the same, the money to be used to help build the church?

Ans.—No; if properly conducted.

LYDIA'S CONVERSION.

[Our readers will find much in the sermon below that is highly commendable and edifying, and some things not in harmony with gospel truth and order, notably where Mr. Spurgeon says to his hearers, "there is nothing for you to do," thus contradicting the teachings of Christ and all his faithful servants.—ED.]

PHILIPPI is famous in classic story as the spot where the world's future trembled in the balance when Octavius met Brutus and Cassius in terrible conflict. The two republican generals here ended their stormy career, and universal empire crouched at the feet of Cæsar. As long as time endures, or human slaughter is thought worthy of a record, Philippi will be remembered as one of the greatest names in martial history. But when time shall have passed away, and the records of human guilt shall have been cast into oblivion, Philippi will still have a name as the place where the first herald of the cross cried, "Europe for Jesus," struck the first blow at the demon of evil, and won his first victory in our quarter of the world. More fraught with blessings to the human race was that conquest of a woman's heart, than all the laurels which Octavius had reaped upon the bloody field. Angels looked on while Paul threw down the gauntlet of defiance to all the powers of darkness, and invaded our fair continent in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. We may well look back with admiration to the gallant advance of the little band, the apostle Paul and his few companions, who were the pioneers of the Lord's elect army in the western world. Philippi is enrolled for ever in the record of the battles of peace.

The introduction of Christianity into Europe is a very humble affair. There is nothing very stately in the architecture of the house where Jesus is first preached; in fact, we have no evidence that there was any building at all—probably it was an open-air service by the river-side. Happy augury of the results of open-air preaching in after times! There were not enough Jews in the merely military city of Philippi to admit of the erection of a synagogue, and, therefore, a few women met in a quiet spot by the river's bank. A stranger might walk through Philippi a hundred times and never know of the existence of the Jews' meeting-place, it was a nook so retired and frequented by so few. Heathendom might seem to the ordinary observer to be universal in its reign: for who would care to notice the feeble company who met in retirement to offer prayers unto the Most High God of Israel?

We will go to the meeting-place this morning, and in spirit mingle with the few women, and listen to that strange man who in burning accents is addressing them, and mark the result produced in the heart of yonder seller of purple, and who has come with her wares from the city of Thyatira.

In Lydia's conversion there are many points of interest. Observe that it was brought about by providential circumstances. She was a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira. That city was famous for its dyeing trade, which had flourished there ever since the days of Homer. The mode of producing a peculiarly delicate and valuable purple seems to have been known to the women of Thyatira. The communication between Philippi and Thyatira was very easy, and Lydia may have frequently made the journey; at any rate, providence brings her there when the hour of her conversion is come. You will remember that Thyatira was situated in that part of the country into which Paul was forbidden by the spirit to go and preach: therefore, had Lydia been at home, she could not have heard the truth; and as "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God," she must have remained unconverted. But providence brings her to Philippi at the right time. You plainly see then that here is the first link of the chain. But how is Paul to be brought there? He must first of all be shut out of Bithynia; and he must be silenced in his journey through Mysia; he must be brought to Troas, close by the margin of the sea; he must look across the blue waters, and muse upon Europe's needs; he must fall asleep, and in the vision of the night he must be prompted to cross to Macedonia; he shall ask for a ship—that ship shall be bound for Samothracia, and for no other place; he must land at Neapolis, and make his way to Philippi; he can not go in any other direction; he must be brought there at the very time when Lydia is present; he must find out the little oratory by the river's brink, for God ordains that Lydia shall be saved. Now, how many different threads were all woven here, to make up the fabric of her providential conversion! In this case, God rules and overrules all things to bring that woman and that apostle to the same spot.

Observe next, that in Lydia's case there was also grace in a certain manner preparing the soul. The woman did not know the Savior; she did not understand things which make for her peace, yet she knew many truths which were excellent stepping-stones to a knowledge of Jesus. If not a Jewess by birth, she was a proselyte of the gate and well acquainted with the oracles of God; she was one who worshipped God; nay, she was one of the most devout of God's worshippers among the Jews. Though she was far away from the synagogue—some forget the Sabbath when they travel in foreign lands—yet when the day came round, she was found with that little handful at the river-side oratory. I doubt not that she had read Esaias the prophet, that she could carry in her heart and remember such words as these, "He is despised and rejected of men: a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. . . . He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth."

As in the case of the Ethiopian eunuch, the Scriptures she had read, though they were not understood for want of some man to guide her, had prepared her mind: the ground had been ploughed ready for the good seed; it was not a hard rock as in the gaoler's case. She worshipped God; worshipped Him in sincerity: worshipped Him looking for the coming of the Messiah, Israel's consolation; and so her mind was prepared for the reception of the Gospel. Doubtless, dear friends, in many of us, also, there was a preparation for Christ before he came to us in quickening grace. I know that in some of our cases the pious example of a godly father, and the loving instruction of a tender mother, had softened us somewhat, so that though still we were unsaved, and still out of Christ, yet we were like the man who lay at the pool of Bethesda, we were close by the edge of the healing stream, and there was not in our case that sudden, that astounding change which we have seen in others. Still, dear friends, we ought to ascribe all this preparatory work to sovereign grace, setting the mind in activity, clearing us from prejudice, ridding us of a thousand infidel and sceptical thoughts, and so raising a platform from which Divine grace conducts us into the region of the new life. Such was the case of Lydia, such is the case of many; providence and grace co-work before the time is come that we believe in Christ.

Note, concerning her conversion, in the third place, that it took place in the use of the means. On the Sabbath she went to the gathering of her people. Although God works wonders and calls men when they are not hearing the Word, yet usually we must expect that being in the way, God will meet with them. It is somewhat extraordinary that the first convert in Europe was converted at a very small prayer-meeting. There were only a few women there; we have no reason to think that there were any more males than just Paul and his friend Luke; and these, you see, had called in, as we say accidentally, and had been moved to give an address at the prayer-meeting, and that address it was which was the means in God's hands of opening her heart.

Oh! what a joy it is to see so many constantly thronging our house of prayer, because we have good hope that the God of salvation will meet with them. Nay, it is not mere hope, but a confident expectation, for I suppose there never is a sermon preached in this house which is not the means of the conversion of some. We have abundant testimony that so often as Christ is lifted up here, the wounded in the camp forbear to die. May it ever be the case, and may you ever have, even if as yet you are unconverted, a love to the courts of the Lord's house, and to the place where His people meet together. God loves to put honor upon prayer, upon the assembly of His people directly for His worship; and you may hope, dear friends, that even if the sermon shall not have been useful, and if the common Sabbath-day service may not have been blessed, yet, perhaps, on the Monday evening, perhaps, too, in that little cottage, when there are only a few women present, you may meet with God, who did not appear to you in the great assembly on Sunday. Be diligent in the use of the means; be constantly in God's house, as often as the doors are open and your engagements will permit, for Lydia's conversion takes place in the use of means.

Note again, for we will only hint at these things rather than dwell upon them, that it was assuredly a work of grace, for we are expressly told, "whose heart the Lord opened." She did not open her own heart. Her prayers did not do it; Paul did not do it; the Lord Himself must open the heart, to receive the things which make for our peace. To operate savingly upon human hearts belongs to God alone. We can get at human brains, but God alone can arouse human affections. We may reach them, we grant you, in the natural and common way, but so to reach them as that the enemy of God shall become His friend, and that the stony heart shall be turned into flesh, is the work of grace, and nothing short of Divine power can accomplish it. We pray you, brethren, never forget this. We think it meet, according to Scriptural warrant and example, to speak to you, and exhort you to arise from the dead that Christ may give you life; but we remind you, and trust you never may forget it, that all the work must always be of the Holy Spirit, and of Him alone. He alone can cut the bands which fasten the heart; He alone can put the key into the hole of the door and open it, and get admittance for Himself. He is the heart's master as He is the heart's maker, and conversion is the Lord's work alone.

Yet—for one truth must always march arm in arm with another, and no man gets at correct ideas by merely grasping one truth; he has two eyes and two hands, and let him be content to use them both—although the Lord opened the heart, Paul's words were the instrument of her conversion. The heart may be opened, and willing to receive, but then if truth enter not, what would be the use of an open door? But God always takes care to open the heart at a time when the messenger of mercy shall be going by, that the heart may give Him admittance. Paul speaks the word as surely as God opens the heart. Do not decry the ministry. It is a temptation of modern times to do so. God has worked and always will work by means, by men upon whom He puts the anointing of His Spirit.

Now, Lydia's conversion was distinctly perceptible by the signs which followed. She was baptized. As soon as she had believed in Jesus, she put on, together with her household, the profession of her faith in Christ Jesus! Happy Lydia, to have a household which believed in Jesus, and to see them all baptized with her! Lydia was baptized, but her good works did not end at the water; she then would have the apostle come to her house. She will bear the shame of being thought a follower of the crucified Jew, a friend of the despised Jewish apostle, the renegade, the turncoat,—she will have him in her house; and though he saith, "Nay," out of his bashfulness to receive aught, yet she constrains him, for love is in her heart, and she has a generous spirit; and while she has a crust it shall be broken with the man who brought her to Christ.

Brethren, I do not think much of a conversion where it does not touch a man's substance; and those people who pretend to be Christ's people, and yet live only for themselves, and do nothing for Him or for His Church, give but sorry evidence of having been born again. A love to the people of God has ever been a distinguishing mark of the true convert to Christ. Look, then, at Lydia, and remembering that she is but a specimen of many, let her case rest before you, and let the prayer go up, "Lord, bring in many Lydias this morning, according to Thy mighty grace."

Faith in Christ being given to Lydia, all the graces followed. Now she hated her sins, she repented. Now she loved righteousness, she sought after holiness. Now she had a bright hope of the many mansions in the Father's house on high. Now she began to run with holy and happy feeling in the way of obedience to Christ's commands, and she became, not merely a believer in the elements of Christianity, but she went on towards perfection, adding to her faith courage, and to her courage experience, and to experience brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love. Onward she went in the way of her God. All this the Master did by opening her heart to attend to the things that were spoken of by Paul.

And now, my dear hearers, the practical lesson is, let us pray for those who are round about us, and the many hopeful ones, that God would make them like Lydia. Let us put up this petition for our sons and daughters, that the God who has put them in the way of the means, and has prepared their minds for the reception of truth, would be pleased to bring them to accept the Savior.

As for those in whom God is thus working, O that the word I speak this morning might lead them to lay hold on Jesus. Recollect, there is nothing for you to do: you have but to trust Jesus, and you are saved; and to do this, as your warrant, there are no good works required, nor good feelings, nor deep experiences either. You have, just as you are, to believe that Christ can save you, and trust yourself to Him as the Savior, and He will save you, save you now with a great, present, and complete salvation. The Lord help you to do it, and He shall have the praise. Amen.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. R. Scogin wrote from Activity, Alabama, August 28th:

"On June 4th I came into this state. I have visited all the branches in the district and preached in them all; and on July 21st baptized a man and his wife; on August 9th I baptized three, and on the 11th one more, was added. The church is in a prospering condition at this time here. More calls for preaching than ever before in this country, and the people are investigating. Our claims have been challenged by a Methodist, and I agreed to meet him on the following proposition:—That the Saints and the Brighamites are the same in faith and practice. He affirms, and I deny. 2d. He affirms that a Methodist Church is the Church of Christ, in faith and practice; with all the officials. I deny. He affirms that the Book of Mormon is the Golden Mormon Bible, and was dug out of the hills of Tennessee. I deny. 4th. I affirm that the Latter Day Saints Church is the Church of Christ in faith and practice with all the officers, gifts and blessings. He denies. This comes off the 12th of November, 1888, at the Methodist Church, known as Sardis, in Conecuh county, Alabama."

Bro. Joseph F. McDowell wrote from St. Joseph, August 30th:

"Last Saturday and Sunday we had a good quarterly conference, where the Holy Spirit blessed the people assembled. I go to Hamilton the coming Saturday."

Bro. Duncan Campbell writes from Milan, Missouri, September 2d as follows:

"The young Saints here are firm in the faith notwithstanding all the talk and fire against us. Bro. Grim and myself are about starting for a new place about three miles south of Humphreys. We are leaving some believers here that have not yet been baptized, but I think they soon will be."

Selected Poetry.

THERE'S MUSIC IN A MOTHER'S VOICE.

There's music in a mother's voice,
More sweet than breezes sighing;
There's kindness in a mother's glance,
Too pure for ever dying.

There's love within a mother's breast,
So deep, 'tis still o'erflowing,
And care for those she calls her own,
That's ever, ever growing.

There's anguish in a mother's tear,
When farewell fondly taking,
That so the heart of pity moves,
It scarcely keeps from breaking.

And when a mother kneels to heaven,
And for her child is praying,
O, who shall half the fervor tell,
That burns in all she's saying.

A mother, how her tender arts
Can soothe the breast of sadness!
And through the gloom of life once more
Bid shine the sun of gladness.

A mother! when, like evening's star,
Her course hath ceas'd before us,
From brighter worlds regards us still,
And watches fondly o'er us.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Art builds on sand; the works of pride
And human passion change and fall;
But that which shares the life of God,
With him surviveth all."

EXPLANATORY.

WE wish to say to the sisters of the Prayer League of St. Joseph, Missouri, that the publication of the names in the Herald was by a mistake, and we hope they will pardon us. We deem the suggestion made by sister Eleanor a wise one, and trust the sisters will take prompt action with reference thereto. The widely scattered condition of those who wished to enter into this covenant of prayer, rendering it impossible for them to meet and by joint deliberation and concert of action act unitedly and in harmony, rendered it from the first apparent that modifications and changes would have to be made as time and suggestions should develop the necessity for them. There existed, however, a necessity for some one to take the initiative, which was done. We have striven to the best of our ability to make plain the object of The League, which is simply a unity of faith for the obtaining of grace and strength to help in time of need.

Bro. McDowell, in his recent letter says, "There are reserved holy forces, yet to be brought out, that shall make Zion a great power in the world." The thought embodied in this sentiment has long been borne in upon our mind with solemn power, and conviction of its truthfulness. When man fell, the hope of the world was centered in the seed of the woman. When He came, he restored to woman her rightful place and position in the world. "They twain shall be one flesh." When the restored gospel was sounded by the heavenly messenger, then Satan again in his wrath, put into the heart of man the devilish scheme of bringing woman again into bondage—reducing her to the position of a living, breathing machine, dependent upon man for even her eternal salvation; and when he had accomplished this, he smiled at the rest to be done, for his victory was sure.

Mothers and daughters of Zion, to-day your husbands, your sons, are calling upon you to the rescue. They are asking that you bring into the conflict those "holy reserved forces," and strengthen you for the warfare of Zion! They are demanding of you that you gird yourselves, put on the beautiful garments of faith, hope and charity, and stand by their sides in the very forefront—in the thickest of the fray; aye, where shot and shell rattle thickest and cannon balls plow the ground at your feet, and side by side in your sphere, the very equal of man in his, fight together the battles of Zion, one in your fall one in your triumph.

The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual; and the reserve force must be holy. Some slight misapprehension has existed in regard to the clause of the League referring to the Lord's prayer. It was purely a misapprehension of terms, and we are glad to say that an explanation upon our part has resulted in bringing about a perfect understanding; and so far as we now know, the sisters see eye to eye. The League now numbers one hundred and twenty-five, and still the names are coming in. What a power this organization is destined to become in Zion, none but the attending angels of God can know!

It is desirable that each branch in which members of the League are living, should send up to the Home Column such subject or subjects of prayer as the sisters belonging to the League shall by consulting together, and after praying for guidance, select; and also the memory texts to be used with the subject. These will be used in the exact order in which they are received; and if two come by the same mail, the one opened first will be recorded first. The last concert of each month to be set apart for prayer for the elders of the church, their families, and our own families, by name.

Sisters we want your prayers, and we invite you to join us. The young, the youth of the church, the middle aged, and the aged, are cordially invited to come and join with us. Until such time as the sisters from different places are heard from, sister Eleanor will furnish the subjects and memory texts. If any object to this change, let them so write; but if not, let those in each branch who belong, decide what they desire to send in, and send soon. As the branches at Lucas and St. Joseph are quite near, we will probably hear from them first.

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for September 20th.

Memory Texts, D. and C., sec. 83, par. 8th, ending at the words, "Father's kingdom." Book of Mormon, page 499 "Doubt not but be believing, and begin as in times of old, and come unto the Lord with all your heart, and work out your own salvation with fear and trembling before him. Be wise in the days of your probation; strip yourselves of all uncleanness; ask not that ye may consume it upon your lusts, but ask with a firmness unshaken, that ye will yield to no temptation, but that ye will serve the true and living God. See that ye are not baptized unworthily; see that ye partake not of the sacrament of Christ unworthily; but see that ye do all things in worthiness and do it in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God."

Subjects: The nation of the Jews; that the time may hasten and the way be opened to carry to them the fulness of the gospel and Book of Mormon. ELEANOR.

TO THE PRAYER LEAGUE.

Dear Sisters:—I have so far taken it upon myself to furnish the subjects and memory texts for our concert, in order that the nature and bearing of the work might be understood. I must thank you for the heartiness with which you have entered into the spirit of it, and the cheering encouragement given me. But it has not been my design, nor do I think it for the best interest of the League, that I continue to do this alone. I will therefore submit a proposition that you will please consider. It is that those in each branch represented in our League select the subject by turns. One week one branch, and then the next, and the appropriate memory texts to accompany the subject. Those who are isolated from branches can send subjects as directed by the Spirit or their need, and will receive attention. By this I think all will feel a greater unity and interest in the work.

Taking the texts given for the first week of August as the motto and rule of conduct governing the League, and working in the Spirit of unity and love for the general good, remembering that whatsoever is not of love is not of God, the blessing of the Holy Spirit is sure to follow. Even now the testimony is coming in to that effect. Understand that I do not withdraw from the League, but will work just as earnestly, and meet with you in spirit as ever; but it seems best to me that some other arrangement be made. I suggest, therefore, that the members of the League in each branch take a vote of their number on the subject, and send result to the editor of the Home Column; or offer a substitute for this proposition. It is also desired by many to change the hour from ten a. m. to three p. m.

ELEANOR.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Alice, Nebraska City, writes:—"I have been in the church about twelve years, and can say that I have never yet been weary of trying to serve the Lord. At times it is hard to withstand the trials and temptations, but with God's help we are enabled to conquer. We have in this place a good Sunday School of about sixty members. My husband is superintendent of the school and I am teaching the primary class. I love the dear Hopes of Zion, and wish to see them ever striving for the right. My earnest prayer is for Zion's weal."

Sister V. Jordan, Kingsley, Ia., writes:—"I desire to be faithful and to overcome evil with good. I rejoice that God has a people in these latter days, who believe Him the same yesterday, today and forever; therefore just as willing to reveal himself in latter as in former days. The more I study the word of God, the firmer do I find the foundation of our faith, and my prayer is that we may all endure unto the end. Let us not fear persecution. The Savior endured it before us, and Paul says, 'All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.' I love this work, and hope to be faithful to the end."

Sr. Maila Whitcomb, Davison, Mich., writes:—"I have been in the church but a few months, yet in that time have received many blessings for which I thank the Lord, feeling regret that I have not been more faithful. I had been very sick for a long time before I was baptized, and thought I would never be any better; but I gave up the doctor and sent for the elders who administered to me, and I was helped; helped immediately, and soon able to be around. I desire the prayers of the sisters in my behalf."

Sr. Lettie A. Dunn, writes:—"Though I make many uneven, crooked steps, I am striving to overcome. I am truly glad of the Prayer League, for I have many times felt that if I could only know that others were joining me at the time of prayer, it would be a great help to me. This place is large, and I question why there is not more preaching here. I wish an elder would come and preach for the few who are hungry to hear the word of life."

Sr. Martha Whitehouse, Kewanee, Ills., writes:—"To me it seems the greatest blessing ever bestowed upon fallen man, to be able to know our prayers are heard and answered. I thank the Lord that he has given me so many testimonies of this latter day work; and I can bear testimony that the Spirit of God has been striving with and prompting the sisters of the Home Column, and that the Prayer League has been organized by the directing influence of the Spirit of God."

Sr. L. A. Hutchins, Lichfield, Mich., writes:—"I have not had the privilege of meeting with the Saints to day. How I would love to meet in testimony meeting and tell of the goodness of God to me. I am trying to serve the Lord and praise his name, that ever he showed me the way of righteousness and truth."

WEBB CITY, Mo., Aug. 31st.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have been interested in reading the views of each one in regard to our Prayer Union. I think it should be a united effort, for there is much in prayer, if we are only watchful as well as prayerful. I would suggest that in connection with the hour already set, we set an hour in the afternoon of the same day, say from three until four; and if any one should not have an opportunity to keep the hour in the forenoon they could in the afternoon which would give all an equal chance in the same day to watch and pray. Twice since the day has been set, I have been reminded of the time by the Spirit's influence, but yesterday being away from home I forgot until after the hour passed.

About seven years ago I was sewing and it was impressed on my mind to pray. I laid aside my work and went into my room and prayed. I asked the Lord to protect my husband, who was working in the mines. About that same time, the same day, there was a blast went off accidentally, and he was in danger of losing his life; but was only slightly hurt, and soon recovered. Had I not obeyed the monition of the Spirit it might have been worse. I think the united prayers of the sisters and all Saints will help to strengthen the cause; and believe the elders will give us their faith and prayer at the set hours. I shall try to remember the time and do the best I can, as circumstances may permit. With love to all I bid you good-night.

Your sister,
R. M. BRADLEY.

SENIOR, Texas, Aug. 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have been thinking for some time that I would write and send up my name for the Prayer League; but kept putting off, letting first one excuse and then another hinder me. I approved of it at the start, as I do not think we can pray any too often.

I derive much benefit from the Home Column, and often in my heart feel to say Amen to the many good lessons taught therein. There was a letter from a sister Baldwin, several Heralds back on the subject of the evils of gum-chewing. It was strange that for some time my mind had been disturbed on that subject. It had grown to be quite a habit among the young, and some of the older ones too, myself not being exempt. I noticed that I could not be as prayerfully minded, and so I mentioned it to another sister, and she said I was growing fanatical. I think it was the very next Herald that this letter came from Sr.

Baldwin. I have never put any chewing gum in my mouth since. As Sr. Emma says, how often our prayers are answered, and even through the press.

The Autumn Leaves are just splendid. Maud and Elma say, Tell Sr. Frances we are saving our nickles for the Christmas offering. May God bless and prosper you in the great and good work in which you are engaged, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

JULIA V. NEAL.

Correspondence.

CANEY, Kansas, Aug. 27th.

Dear Herald:—It is nearly four years since I enlisted in the army of the Lord; and in that time I have received many blessings, and have never had cause to regret the step taken in this direction. I can truly say that I am not ashamed of this gospel, for I do know that it is the power of God unto salvation to all those who believe and obey it. I am the only one at this place that I know of, that is a believer in this doctrine. I have distributed quite a number of tracts to those around me. Some are favorably impressed, while others will not lay prejudice aside for a moment and give our claim a fair investigation. I think much good could be done if an elder could spare a little time here. An effectual door might be opened, and this whole region of country be aroused from their deep slumber. This place is three-fourths of a mile from the Cherokee (Indian nation) line. Some preaching could also be done among the Lamanites.

I feel that God is begining to pour out His Spirit more abundantly upon that people, and not many years hence a mighty work will be among them. God will remember the covenant he made with their forefathers. I rejoice to know this, and that they will rejoice greatly and become very firm in the faith. Crops are good in this country. Farmers seem cheered and business of every kind is no the increase.

Your brother,
L. F. JOHNSON.

CLINTON Mo., Sept. 3d.

Editors Herald:—I notice by letters in Herald from A. W. Thompson that a few of the Saints are interested in south-western Missouri. Vernon county, of which Bro. Thompson has written, is a beautiful country; so is Henry, Johnson, and a good portion of Bates, St. Clair, Cedar and Cass counties. I moved from central Iowa to this place almost four years ago. Bro. I. N. White and myself opened up in the mercantile business here, also a branch store in St. Clair county, about twenty miles south of this, and in my business acquaintances I think I know something of the above mentioned counties; of their advantages and disadvantages. But space will not admit of me to detail here. Many people have formed an erroneous opinion of Missouri, and especially that of the south-western part. Our city and village schools are excellent, as are also a large portion of the country schools; yet some districts need improvement in way of buildings, &c. Most all church societies are represented with a good membership. There is an abundance of fine farming land, and much of it at reasonable prices. As regards health, none need fear if cleanly and industrious. Ague bothers those who sleep too much and who are slaves to fat pork and tobacco,—a diet pestiferous enough to "kill a mule."

My brother and I represent sixteen children in our families, and not one of us have had any sickness since arriving here, except what is common to all. Many are seeking homes here from the east and north, and some go from here to the golden west looking for a "life of ease." But I am proud to say that a large portion of them return, better satisfied to remain. We have plenty of coal, wood, stone and water. Wood in the tree is worth about fifty cents a cord; delivered about $2 to $3 a cord. Coal, delivered, is worth eight to ten cents per bushel. We have an abundance of fruit; blackberries, raspberries, strawberries, cherries, apples, quinces, pears, and grapes, and occasionally a fine crop of peaches. There are a few fine openings for the following line of business:—tiling factory, vegetable canning factory and a number of potteries shops. We have one tiling factory about eight miles from here, with a capital of about one hundred thousand dollars, and are doing a fine business. One paint shop just opening up, three large coal fields being opened up (but with plenty of men to do the work). Corn, oats, wheat, millet, Timothy, clover, rye, and early potatoes do well. Some farmers have from two hundred to one thousand bushels of sweet potatoes each year,—always a good crop of them. We are located about seventy-five miles south-east of Kansas City and Independence, thus giving us a good market.

If any one wishing further information will send me their address I will mail them a handbook, giving a complete discription of south-western Missouri. I am aware that there are many delusive and glowing discriptions sent out by interested parties, and that thousands are deceived by them. But the royal climate, healthfulness and productiveness of south west Missouri, with the cheapness of the land, are recommendations enough without magnifying a single item.

Yours for truth,

D. C. WHITE.

P. S.—Remember that people die here; but who would want to live in a country where they don't? It would have been a blessing to the state of Missouri if the old "mossbacks" had gone up "salt-creek" long ago.

BROADCLIST, near Exeter,

England, August 13th.

Bro. Joseph:—I started for Canada on the evening of May 31st and it was hard to part with my dear children and friends and Saints that came to see me off. But I with them saw that it was for the best, and made the sacrifices. It was very warm when I left home; but by the time I reached Chicago it was cool and I caught a very bad cold. When I arrived at London, Canada, it was very cold and I took another cold, and I can not get rid of it. My friends at London were very glad to see me, and so were the dear Saints. I stopped with them a month, and had a great deal of talk with them. I think that I did lots of good, for they seemed to be very much discouraged when I first went there, but I visited them from house to house and done all I could to encourage them. We had meetings most every night and before I left we had glorious times, and the gifts of the gospel were made manifest, so that part of the Saints renewed their covenants and I was made to rejoice. I felt that it was hard to leave them. They were very kind to me, and I hope God will bless them, and that we shall meet where parting shall be no more, even in Zion when the meek shall inherit the earth. Taking the train at London at 11:20 p. m., we started for New York, stopping at the Falls from 3 to 9 p. m., which gave us a good chance to see the Falls, and we enjoyed ourselves well and were very tired. Arrived at New York July 1st about 1:30 p. m., and on the 3d of July went on board the Alaska. She is a fine boat, five hundred and thirty feet long, five stories high, and fifty-three feet wide, of eleven thousand horse power. At 1:30 p. m., we left the dock. It was a very touching sight to see the multitude standing on the dock to bid their friends good bye, and to witness the sobbing and crying, and the cheering and waving of handkerchiefs, when I thought that there was no one there to bid me good bye. I then turned my heart to my heavenly Father and his Holy Spirit rested upon me, and I felt that I was not alone; that one would accompany me across the mighty deep, and it cheered me up. On the 11th we arrived at Liverpool. None could have had a more pleasant passage than we had. I had the pleasure of preaching once while on board and I hope that good was done. But it seemed to be too much for some of the pious and some of the ministers on board, as they would keep their meetings on till after dark. But I had a great deal of private talk, and put all gainsayers to silence so that they had not one word to say. I asked them if they had any more questions to ask and they looked at each other and shook their heads; so I thank God that he gave me His Spirit that enabled me to give a reason of the hope that is in me. I stopped one night at Liverpool, and then I came on to Bristol, and stopped one night with my father's sister, and on the 13th I came on to Broadcliff, and made my home with my brother James. He is living in a cottage adjoining the Baptist Chapel and takes care of the same. I have been trying to get it to preach in, so I have been waiting to get an answer, and they are to let me know next week. But I seem to know that they will not. I have been preaching from house to house, and they seem to like it. I have good liberty in presenting the truth, but I want to do some visiting before I do much, but it appears that I can not get away. I have not seen the president of this mission yet; neither do I know his address. I have seen no Saint since I came to this country, so please write and let me have it. I had the pleasure yesterday week, after preaching, to be called on by my nephew to bless his little child, which I gladly did, it being the first in England by me. And there are eight that have given their names for baptism. They are all heads of families, and on last Friday evening I had the pleasure of baptizing five precious souls in the waters of baptism; the other I shall attend to this week if all goes well. One one them is very heavy and I shall have to get help. Most of them belonged to the Baptist church and the latter do not feel good over it, so I expect to have some trouble. I also am in hopes of gathering many from this part. I have the assurances of the Spirit to that, and that I shall do lots of good here. I confirmed those baptized yesterday and had a prayer meeting and preached twice. I have not been feeling well since I came to England on account of the bad cold that I have taken. Please to pray for me that I may accomplish much good while on this mission, for the desire is that I may win souls for the Master. Please to remember me to all the Saints, and ask them to pray for me. I have been informed (last evening) that I can not get the Baptist Chapel, and there is not a house here that I can get, so I shall have to do the best I can.

Your brother,
WM. NEWTON.

SYRACUSE, Indiana, August.

Dear Herald:—Your weekly pages are perused with the greatest anxiety and pleasure, for with out them we feel that we should be lost to the interest of the cause we so much love. Bro. C. Scott gave us a short but profitable call the 9th. His stay here was enjoyed by all who met him. We especially were greatly strengthened and feel to say, How beautiful are the feet of those that bring glad tidings of good things. We all desire to have Bro. Scott back soon, as some good might be accomplished in the future. A few are investigating, and we hope they will be gathered with many more. We feel to say with many others that we know this work is true, God's promises having been verified. How can we doubt it. Mysteries have been removed, and we rejoice that our eyes have been opened, and that we have been permitted to see and hear God's truths made manifest. Ever striving to live in accordance with God's holy word, I remain,

Yours for the truth,
ALLIE CANNON.

FARWELL, Mich., August 22d.

Bro. Joseph:—Things are moving on lively here. Two men traveled about eighteen miles after another minister, of the Adventist faith, to come and upset Mormonism as it is called. One of the men went because he was opposed to us, and was determined to root us out; the other (a neighbor of his) went with him to see that he did not misrepresent us to the elder. The elder came and listened to what I had to say; the next day we met and talked matters up a little and found out where we differed and drew up two propositions as follows:

1st. Resolved that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and that its teachings are in harmony with the Bible. J. J. Cornish affirms.

2d. Resolved that the Bible teaches that man is all mortal, and is entirely unconscious from death to the resurrection. W. C. Conant affirms.

Each speaker is to have two half hour sessions each night for four nights. Two nights on each proposition. My preaching in this place has created a great excitement among the people. Some come, and after meeting say, "Why, he might just as well tell us we are all going to hell but the Latter Day Saints." And, "Is it possible I have been deceived all these many years?" With, "Well, I never heard the gospel preached before." Some said, "I'll never go to hear that man again; but the next evening I find them there again. Some leave the place mad, and some glad. I baptized two, a man and wife. Of him the people say: "It is surprising to see how Dick Campbell is taken up with this new religion." Others: "There must be something in it; Dick Campbell has downed every minister that came around, and now he has got downed himself," etc.

The people come for miles around in wagons and on foot, etc. We have from two hundred to two hundred and fifty people at a meeting as a rule. We had to leave the school-house and go to the (larger) hall, to accommodate all who came.

This just suits me! I ask the ministers to come up on the stand with me, have them open with prayer, etc., and when I am through I invite them to speak. As long as they don't say anything very bad against us I say nothing. But when they speak against us, and of Joseph and the Book of Mormon, etc. I get up when they are through and make it right if I can. So when the Methodist minister went up with me, I asked him to speak after I was through. He arose and said that he had listened with interest to the speaker, that he had nothing to say against it, I preached the truth, and thought there would be no one deceived with that kind of doctrine. I was preaching to them about apostles, prophets, and the blessings that should be in the Church of Christ, etc.

I am your brother in Christ,
J. J. CORNISH.

MALTA, Idaho, August.

Editors Herald:—By request of the mission authorities I accompanied Bro. John Condit on a mission to the Fayette and Weiser valleys. We traveled over six hundred miles by cart. Bro. John administered the word in the following places: Emmett and vicinity, Ada county, ten meetings. Middle Valley and Crane Creek, Washington county, two meetings each. The Spirit was abundantly granted, so that Infidel and Orthodox were alike confounded and marveled at the strange doctrine. Much prejudice was removed and some are investigating.

We found six faithful Saints at Emmett, who most cheerfully administered to our temporal wants. Bro. Jacob Clingback and his sons, also Sr. Hanson gave us pleasant homes while there. At Middle Valley we found three Saints, Brn. William B. and Benjamin Shaw, and their aged mother, who are striving to live down the prejudice against the name of Mormon. At Crane Creek, Bro. Woodland and wife, and a daughter-in-law are the only ones bearing the name of Christ, but as in the other places the prospects are flattering for an increase. The Saints in these places are anxious to have elders visit them, as they are all hopeful of good results from the preaching of the word in their neighborhoods. It being a very busy season, (having time) at their earnest request, Bro. John promised them another visit later in the fall.

A Caldwell Tribune reporter has the following comment on the effort at Emmett, in the issue for July 21st:

"During the last week we have been entertaining a Mormon Bishop, or more properly speaking, a Josephite, who has propounded the views and doctrines of his church, for the benefit of the heathen, in our little city of the Butte. Really he is one of the most powerful as well as entertaining speakers we have heard since Putnam converted the town last fall; and last night when he warmed to his subject, and in his earnestness and excitement shed his coat, we had to either become converted, or fight him to the rub, so you need not be at all surprised to hear that Emmett has gone in a solid body over to Mormonism."

The Putnam referred to is a free thinker, who has made quite a stir through that region, almost causing modern religion to become unpopular. We are still striving to hold high the gospel banner here at Malta. Our Sabbath School is doing a good work, and the Spirit is aiding the preaching.

May Zion prosper is our prayer.

S. D. CONDIT.

CHACE, Mich., August 24th.

Dear Herald:—We were organized into a branch here last November by Brn. J. J. Cornish and John Shippy. There has been quite an interest stirred up by Bro. Cornish and three have been added by baptism and more are near the door awaiting his return. But the calls are so many that we can not attend to them all at once, but we will wait and keep up our waiting and do the best we can until he comes. We have organized a Sabbath School for our little ones.

Yours in truth,

S. C. REYNOLDS.

BYRNVILLE, Ind., Aug. 29th.

Dear Herald:—I was at Derby, Indiana, when I received my appointment to labor, and continued there until May 1st; baptized one; and labored with very good success. The Christians, Catholics, Missionary Baptists, and even the Iron Sides Baptists, all commenced operations to counteract the effort we made. There had been no preaching by the sects for three or four years; so the people told me. The pith of their argument was to put down Mormonism, so called. Their attack was mild. I was glad they came, for the people could see the contrast. The work has improved there under the management of Bro. Gruver. They have their meetings every Sunday, and a Sunday School at 9 o'clock a. m. Brn. Kelley C. Scott and B. V. Springer live in the memory of the Saints there.

May 17th I was at Wright School-house, near Bird Eye found the Saints all well and rejoicing in the faith. Bro. and Sr. Barmore are rejoicing and letting their light shine. The brethren have all treated us kindly, especially Brn. McMahal's and Chamberlain's people.

I was at Derby again June 1st. Held meetings till the 7th. Two were baptized. The 8th and 9th was at Badger School-house; spoke to packed houses. Here are many kind friends to the cause, seemingly. I was at the Lilly Dale, or Pleasant Ridge branch. There are noble Saints standing for the right. Notable among them are Bro. W. F. York and Brn. Cook and Sutcliff. They have been neglected here. We led four into baptism. May their life be ever pure. Brn. Kelley and C. Scott, B. V. Springer and I. P. Baggerly are remembered with pleasure here. Remained in Perry and Crawford counties till the 24th of August. The 26th was at Byrnnville; and found Bro. Gillen holding the fort; notwithstanding he was warned to leave or he would get a whipping by the White Caps. We remained over Sunday and were not molested. We found Bro. Gillen to be an able defender of the faith, and the right man in the right place. Bro. Moses Scott has done good work here. The 1st of August Bro. Gillen and I arrived at Union branch, found all well there but Sr. Eva Lord; may she find in Christ a present helper in her affliction. We met Brn. J. G. and M. R. Scott here, holding forth to the faithful few. Remained there one week, then all separated; Bro. Gillen to go to New Trenton, to look after the work there; Brn. M. R. and J. G. Scott going to Eden, I to the Caanan branch, where I remained one week. Brn. Porter and Winscott are trying to hold on, and doing all they can for the work. We opened one new point in Racker Ridge, got the Colored School-house, spoke with good crowd in attendance and had good attention. We thank the brethren at Union and Caanan branches for aid substantial. We attended conference at Eden on the 25th, found Bro. Gillen all right. Had a good conference considering everything. It rained on Sunday and Monday, both of which kept some away. I left Bro. Gillen and Brn. Scott at Eden; will hold over here till Sunday.

Yours in bonds,

V. D. BAGGERLY.

CRESCENT, CITY, Iowa, Aug. 8th.

Dear Herald:—I see new grandeur in the cause every day; and learn that man is more and more dependent in every place you put him, in the Lord. I am glad for that, because there is no danger of the good work being carried away by aspiring men. This is a good field to work in and I hope that we may do the work justice. There are doors opening for us everywhere we go. At the little town of Loveland, about eight miles from here, they fitted a hall especially for us, by filling with chairs and seats we could have it day or night. Bro. Peak held a discussion at Streetsville, Council Bluffs, with a Baptist minister, and did good work and gave satisfaction. The work gained prestige.

Yours in Christ,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

MILANO JUNCTION, Texas, Aug. 28th.

Bro. D. Dancer:—I am holding meetings and have been since the eighteenth. Have baptized eight and more are near the kingdom. Have eighteen members here now and will organize a branch on Saturday before the third Sunday in September. The members here wish you to send them a full assortment of Sabbath School literature. The number of scholars will be about eighteen, ranging from eight to thirty years of age.

Texas is waking up to a sense of duty, and our numbers are increasing fast. Thank God for it.

I. N. ROBERTS.

BUCHANAN, Tenn., August 28th.

Bro. Joseph:—I landed in Fulton, Kentucky, the 15th of May; visited Bro. Turnbow and family. From there went to visit Bro. W. H. Griffin, about five miles south-west of Fulton; found him in poor health. I was called upon to administer to him which I did. I cheered and comforted them all I could. Preached there on Sunday afternoon to a small but attentive congregation. A Baptist preacher opened meeting for me. I gave liberty, but he had nothing to say.

Took the train for Haris, Tennessee, reaching there at half past four, p. m., and walked out to Bro. Seaton's, reaching there about dusk. There was joy with the parents and children that nobody but Latter Day Saints could appreciate.

Bro. Peter Seaton took his buggy and we went up to Farminton, Kentucky, on Saturday. We both preached at Farmington on Sunday morning and evening.

I staid and visited with Brn. Adair, and Riley Turnbow; found them strong in the faith. Bro. M. A. Snow came after me in his buggy; preached four times at his house; had good congregations and attentive listeners. I think some will obey there. Bro. Prichard is alive in the work. I was treated kindly by all in that neighborhood and was invited to go to many places that I could not.

Conference convened at Foundry Hill, July 28th; had a peaceful session; all in perfect harmony. I was chosen agent to collect means for Bro. Seaton, so that he might spend more of his time in the ministry. I have collected some and I believe the brethren will respond heartily for we can't afford to do without him, for he is well respected everywhere, and is improving rapidly. Bro. Griffin also is a useful man and we want the prayers of the church that he may entirely recover. He is doing all he can and would spend all his time if he had the health and strength. I need him very much. Bro. J. H. Adair is a good solid man and is doing all he can and I believe will make a useful man. Bro. Riley Turnbow was called by the Spirit for the ministry at the quarterly conference.

Bro. Seaton and myself preached in Graves county, near Wingo Station, at a new place, a church and school house, had good congregations and they seemed to be interested. We both had good liberty in speaking and won many friends. After we came back to Foundry Hill, we received two letters from Bro. Reed, living in Henderson county, near Lexington. We were puzzled, did not know what to do, so we made it a subject of prayer, and decided to go. We had to call in our appointments and then we struck out and landed at Bro. Reed's the second day, just at night, and commenced work at once. Bro. Seaton returned to Tennessee and Kentucky, and I was left alone.

The result of our labor is too tedious to give the details; eight were baptized and we organized a branch of eleven members. They kept me going day and night. I could not fill the calls. Brethren Blair and Caffall will remember Brn. Reed and Scott in Montana. Bro. Blair will remember that Bro. Scott was the first man he met at the platform when he got to Montana. They have done a noble work in Henderson county, talking and distributing tracts. I baptized Bro. Scott and his wife and ordained him an elder; baptized Bro. Jones and ordained him a teacher, and he is well qualified. He was called the Bell Wether of the Baptist Church, and is rightly called, for all the Baptist ministers are afraid to meet him. The result of it has been, he is well posted in our works. His brother has been class leader in the Methodist Church for a number of years. They have not had much love and respect for each other on account of their zeal and religion; now they are united as brethren indeed, because they have accepted the doctrine of Christ. I left a number there thoroughly convinced. I expect to baptize them when I return.

I shall remain here until Bro. Gillen returns. I received a letter from him stating that he would be here by the middle of September. I expect to be busily engaged until he comes. Expect to go up to Foundry Hill, Friday, and go to Kentucky to fill the regular appointment. Am to preach here at Eagle Creek to-night.

The older I get the more I become interested in the work. Have had perfect health ever since I arrived here. I want the Saints to remember us in this mission. I do not want to be idle a day. I've consecrated my all and my life to preaching the gospel for I know it is true.

How glad I feel when I get to where the Herald and Autumn Leaves are. I've got a number to promise to subscribe for the church papers as soon as they can raise the money.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

"AND the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High."—Daniel 7:27. In Daniel 2:44 it is said that this "kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these other kingdoms, and shall stand forever."

As John taught his disciples to pray, so Jesus answering his disciples petition said, "After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come," etc.—Thus has the world been praying for centuries—and still we pray and teach our children to pray,—and with as little understanding perhaps, I have sometimes thought,—as they, "Thy kingdom come." I have come to understand that the worship of God, if acceptable of him, must be an intelligent service. Jesus stated to the Samaritan woman that, the hour was coming, and even then was, that the true worshippers should worship in spirit and in truth, "For," said he, "the Father seeketh such to worship him."

To-day, while we as a people are rejoicing in the great fact that we are not only living in the day of the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecies, but that we have been individually called to bear our part in the development and growth of that kingdom, that God in "seeking" after those who had the courage, spirit, and wisdom to worship him in His way—"in spirit and in truth"—resolutely refusing to bow to Baal, called out of Babylon;—away from her altars and from Pharisaical insincerity, form and fashion, from the darkness of skepticism, the seductive ways of spiritualism, the awful deceitfulness of sin, has called after us, and we have listened to those whom God has sent to call us to repentance; to the forsaking of sin; to the washing of regeneration by water, and the renewing of the Holy Spirit which testifies of our sonship and consequent heirship.

And now while we receive joy and peace from God which passeth all understanding, giving to us that heavenly assurance which is indeed to us amidst the storms and trials of this life, as "an anchor to the soul;" let us ask, Is there nothing farther for us to do? And if there is, what is that duty to which God has called us each to perform, in order that we may present to the Lord at his coming, the "Bride"—suitably "prepared" that we may not by our slothfulness "delay" his coming—and our final rest and reward; nor be found among those who have used their talents unwisely, slothfully, or not at all.

"For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country who called his own servants, and unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability."—Matt. 25:14, 15. The inference from all the contexts is that, this parable was intended by the Savior for us and for our time." See 1st and 31st verses, also last verses of preceding chapter.

Now when we pray for the Lord's kingdom to come, we pray for its coming in power, and that his will may be done. Do we realize that that coming, and power and will, may affirm sentence against, instead of for us? Shall our works be burned—through slothfulness or unwise zeal? Shall we be counted foolish at that day?

Before Jesus ascended up on high he led captivity captive and gave gifts to men, "for the perfecting of the Saints; for the work of the ministry," etc., officers of a government called the kingdom of God, as well as the order of government itself. And one of the greatest evidences to my mind of the calling of Joseph Smith is, that the revelations coming from, or through him, throw light upon the Old and New Testament Scriptures in such a peculiar, and yet wonderful way as to dispel the shadow and darkness which has obscured them, bringing together the disconnected testimonies concerning the order of government and priesthood service, whenever God has had a people, a church, a priesthood, and a service that could and did minister to men his word, his law, and his spirit.

That the gifts referred to, Apostles, &c., "helps" and order of the government of God, foreseen by Daniel, have been actually restored in our day through Joseph the Seer, is not in argument with us. But from the day of the beginning of this latter day work God has permitted Satan to test man's ability to become a worker together with him, and it appears in evidence that from the beginning even until now, that many, very many, have not been able to walk as Enoch did, because of ambition, pride, self-exaltation, &c. No sooner had God blessed and exalted the men he had honored by his call than they undertook to run things in their own way and by their own, or some other spirit, than that which led them to obedience to the first commandments. The great apostasy of these latter days referred to by Paul when "some should depart from the faith," became a fact of history; a stone of stumbling for thousands in one day; and the all potent argument of the devil and his emissaries against the attempts to reorganize and establish that kingdom, which as it grows, must cause his to recede.

The spirit of religious toleration and the reaction of public sentiment from the darkness of the days of the inquisition forbade continued wholesale persecution against the Saints, save through offenses for which they themselves were more or less responsible, and nothing but internal strife for mastery, and lust for place, power, sensual gain and ignorance, could overthrow or retard the influence or growth of the church and kingdom of God. The Lord was continually warning them against those who had lustful and covetous desires; against the enemy who "in secret chambers" was seeking their overthrow and destruction. To seek for the causes and remedy for the evils of the past, and the hindrances of the reorganization and growth of the church toward the consummation foreseen by Daniel, and the self-preparation of the "Bride," the "Lamb's wife," for the coming of her Lord, and the era of glory and gracious government of our God, should be our earnest aim and constant wise endeavor.

"And God hath set some in the church first apostles" What for? "For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry." This is the statement of one to whom is generally conceded the truth of his claim of being a "wise master builder." In Romans 13 he tells us, That every soul should be subject to the higher powers, for there is no power in the church but that is "ordained of God." (I. T.) Whosoever, therefore, resisteth this power resisteth the ordinance and appointment of God, "and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation," "For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. For he is the minister of God to thee for good; but if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain, for he is the minister of God to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. For, for this cause pay ye tribute (Tithing, offering), also, for they are God's ministers attending continually upon this very thing. Render, therefore, to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; honor to whom honor," etc. He stated also to Timothy that "the elders who rule well should be counted worthy of double honor."

And if apostles who are called by the Lord the first elders of his church, are ministers of God to us for good, and if doing that which is evil he beareth not the sword in vain toward us, let us not be frightened by sanguinary visions of oppression; "one man power;" priestcraft, etc., because apostles in the past have gone wrong, as if they were the only ones capable of mistakes.

"For he beareth not the sword in vain." Let not visions of Mountain Meadows rise because of Paul's use of words, "for his weapons of warfare like ours, were not carnal, but spiritual, and mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan," and alone with "the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God," can and will he be able as a "minister of God," to "execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."

"Let a man so account of us," said he in 1 Corinthians 4: 1, "as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God." "Moreover it is required (of God) that a man be found faithful," in his ministry and appointments. Paul claims that it was a small thing, a very small thing, that he as an apostle should be judged of them, or of "a man's judgment." "Yea," said he, "I judge not mine own self." Who then, is to judge him? "But he that judgeth me is the Lord." The devil, and as many as by their ignorance and cupidity he could persuade through his subtlety and sophistry, in all dispensations when God has undertaken to establish his work, his government and his law, have sought by rebellion (which in Moses' time was as the sin of witchcraft), against the constituted authorities of the government of God, to overthrow the same, and by specious reference to the results of an apostasy in our day, of his own device, furnishes argument for unlawful ambition, unwise zeal, and foolish fear of the ignorant. Resistance to tyrants is said to be, "obedience to God." But resistance to tyrants, and resistance to the "ordinance," "order," and "authority," which God and Christ themselves have "set in the church," for its government and perfection, are altogether two different things.

As ministers of Christ we can not separate ourselves from the common people. "The common people," in Paul's day "heard them gladly," but unfortunately sometimes they hear some one else, as in the case of Paul and Barnabas at Lystra, so sometimes in the church. These Lycaonians ready to do sacrifice and place the title of Gods upon them because of the healing of the impotent cripple, were ready the next day when Jews from Antioch poured tales of falsehood into their ears, to stone Paul unto death as they supposed, and drag him out of the city.—Acts 14: 8-19.

What we want is an intelligent, reliable constituency. Paul's church experience was the same in kind if not degree. "All they in Asia are turned away from me." "At my first answer no man stood with me, all men forsook me, but the Lord stood by me." Who was right then? "Am I become your enemy because I tell you the truth?" said he.

We must have leaders then; "But leaders have led us wrong in the past have they not?" Yes, but they would not have been able to do so if you had not followed. "But they were apostles, were they not?" Yes, but they were not acting in their office and calling unto which they were called of God. When they led a people as ignorant as they were wicked into the "salt land," against the warnings of Joseph the Seer, and the commands of Jesus, (Matt. 24: 26), they had apostatized, and Satan, knowing that in the attempt at reorganization of his eternal enemy,—the church of God,—all eyes would remember and be turned upon the past, has sought to push the unwary into the other extreme of defiance of all authority and leadership. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles," and among those apostles was a mouth-piece of God, also called to be president of the office of the high priesthood, (D. and C., sec 104: 35), to preside over the whole church and to be like Moses, yea to be a Seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church," (Par. 24:), with two counsellors, under whose direction the Twelve, who form a quorum equal in authority and power to the presidency and quorum of the three first counsellors to the church, and who are called of God to be a traveling, presiding high council agreeable to the institution of heaven, whether always agreeable to men or not, "to build up the church and regulate" (where regulation is needed, and of which they are to be the proper judges) "in all nations."

"The Seventy are to act in the name of the Lord under the direction of the Twelve or the traveling high council in building up the church and in regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations." "It is the duty of the traveling high council to call upon the seventy when they need assistance to fill the several calls for preaching and administering the gospel, instead of any others."

"It is the duty of the twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers as they shall be designated unto them by revelation."—Par's. 12, 13, 16, 17.

"And again I say unto you, hearken and hear and obey the law which I shall give unto you," etc. "And again I say unto you that it shall not be given to any one to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church except he be ordained by some one who hath authority, and it is known to the (whole) church that he has authority, and has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church."—Sec. 42: 1, 4. Not only is an indiscriminate calling and ordination by those who may ordain (Sec. 17: 10) (but only under the direction, consent or advice of those who are called to preside, regulate, and counsel and build up the church in all the world), wrong, but baptism and confirmation especially should be under their supervision as much as possible, for while elders and priests whose duty is principally to preach and teach locally, may ordain and confirm, it is the duty and calling of an apostle to baptize, and to ordain other elders, priests, teachers and deacons; to confirm those who are baptized into the church, to teach, expound, exhort, baptize, and watch over the (whole) church and to confirm the (whole) church by the laying on of hands."—Sec. 104: 30. "It is the duty of the twelve also to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church agreeably to the revelation which says, I say unto you says the Lord of hosts, there must needs be presiding elders to preside over those who are of the office of an elder, etc."—Par. 31.

"Let a man so account of us as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God."—1 Cor. 4: 1.

I apprehend there may have been more than we have argued before the world, in the minds of the apostles which were at Jerusalem when they sent Peter and John down to Samaria to confirm those whom Philip had baptized. I know that confirmation by an "able minister of the Spirit," and a "steward of the mysteries of God" is or may be, a glorious and at many times wondrous revelation to the properly converted and baptized believer, and the baptism by fire and the wondrous revelation of the Holy Ghost will not be so infrequent or the blessing so vague as it often is with us now when the time shall come to us that every man shall have learned his duty and to act in the office in which he is or shall be appointed, in all diligence, and is given to understand that the time is come when he that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand; and that he that learns not his duty, by study of and conformity to the law of the church, but trusts to luck, the patience and endurance of the Saints, and the Holy Ghost to reveal to him that which is already written, which he refuses to read, "shall not be counted worthy to stand," (in his office).—Sec. 104: 44.

In the following section one hundred and five, the word of the Lord given to Thomas B. Marsh, paragraph seven says: "Verily I say unto you, my servant Thomas thou art the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom (as pertaining to the twelve) abroad among all the nations, that thou mayst be my servant to unlock the door of the kingdom in all places where my servant Joseph and my servant Sydney, and my servant Hyrum can not come, for on them (the presidency) have I laid the burden of the churches for a little season."

When Joseph afterward said that he rolled off this burden again upon the shoulders of the Twelve where it belonged in the order of God, it did not justify the twelve in their hegira to the "salt land" in carrying with them the office of the presidency of the high priesthood, the prophetic office and seership which God bestows upon the head of the church only.

"Wherefore whosoever they (the presidency) shall send you, go ye—the Twelve—and I will be with you," etc. "And again I say unto you, that whosoever ye shall send in my name by the voice of your brethren the Twelve, duly recommended and authorized by you shall have power to open the door of my kingdom unto any nation whithersoever ye shall send them."—Par. 8.

Section sixteen contains revelations to Joseph Smith, Jr., Oliver Cowdery and D. Whitmer "making known the calling of twelve apostles in these last days." "And now I speak unto the twelve: "Behold my grace is sufficient for you. And behold you are they who are ordained of me to ordain priests and teachers to declare my gospel."—Par. 5.

We quote again Sec. 42:4: "Again I say unto you that it shall not be given to any one to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church except he be ordained by some one who hath authority and it is known to the (whole) church that he hath authority and has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church."

And while others may ordain, confirm and aid in building up the church, we assert that the counsels of God and the experience of the past affirm that it should be under the direction and with the experience of those who are called to watch the interests of the church of God and wisely detect, as watchmen set upon the walls of Zion, the approach of the stealthy and subtle enemy of the kingdom of God.

"An apostle is an elder;" (Sec. 17:8); but all elders are not apostles, and can not dictate to nor assume his prerogatives. They can not like them, confirm the (whole) church; nor will their calling permit their watchcare over the (whole) church, nor can they take the lead of all meetings.

In a revelation given September 28th, 1832 (Sec. 119) the Lord said: "It is my will that ye more fully honor and pay heed to the voice and counsel of the traveling ministry in spiritual things, which if ye do not the office which they hold is not honored in my service, and the good they should do is made void." No man, I apprehend, is more afraid of the "one man power" or detests the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope, Brigham Young, or any other man than the writer, nor of anything that would tend to destroy that Magna Charta of our liberties the right of "common consent" with which God designed all things should be done in his church and kingdom on earth. But I have observed, I think, that many times the "one man power" is not really the thing that is objected to so much as to who the man is. The advice of those who agree with us is easily accepted sometimes as authority. A branch of the church isolated from the watchcare of those whom God has appointed as general officers of the church may be led unconsciously and unwittingly, through a spirit of unlawful emulation and aspiration on the part of ambitious would be leaders to fail to see the dangers that beset them, and without a knowledge of the law themselves to submit by "common consent" to measures that may prove disastrous and seriously retard and impede the work of God and the progress of the gospel. Branches have inherent rights under the law that can not be ignored. States have rights as integral parts of the Union but it was not one of their rights to fire on the American flag, nor rebel and set up an order contrary to general law and government. Jefferson Davis only wanted to be "let alone." Branch consent is not "common consent" where a principle of law governing the whole church is involved, and it is made the duty of the branch presidents in the Book of Rules to see that the revelations of God contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants are not treated with contempt. Page 103.

The "common consent" referred to in the revelation is not the assent of one branch, but of the consent first of God, the Almighty dictator in human affairs generally, and of his church especially through his chosen Mouth-piece—the head of the church on earth, ratified and consented to, by the twelve apostles, the quorum of Seventy, the general quorums, and lastly the whole body of the whole church represented by a delegate system in General Conference assembled. That, in the opinion of the writer, is "common consent." The causes for difference of opinion, lack of harmony, and consequent hindrance in some localities to the progress of our work, are various and can not be here mentioned in detail, but one or two may be noticed.

A brother or sister moved upon in prayer meeting, testifies and prophesies to certain ones that they are called to a certain work for the Lord, to preach the gospel, etc. Haste to ordain has followed instances of this kind and men have gone out to preach a gospel, although they have not been in the church long enough to learn of and build up a kingdom they probably never saw. Latterly when these whom God has called and sent forth by those who have the authority, endorsed by the body and "common consent" of the whole church in conference assembled, and for whose official acts they are responsible; when these servants of God who are supposed to have the spirit and office of their calling by reason of faithfulness—humility, and perception of the needs of—and love for the work of God, and for the welfare of human souls; when they suggest to certain of those who have been thus "called" as referred to—that there is a difference between calling and choosing, they should not be met with insult or opposition.

That "calling" means preparation by study, by diligence, by faithfulness to family duties, by moral conduct and ministerial department, by a vital interest in the welfare and progress of the church and branch of which he is a member, whether he is at the head of affairs or not—by financial support as God prospers him—in short by a life of spiritual activities, by intelligent testimony and manifestation of an appreciation of the awful responsibility of assuming to stand between the Almighty God and man his creature, to successfully wield the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God, as against all the opposition of men or of devils, to excite respect at least if not admiration—instead of contempt or just ridicule—to build up, and not tear down, that glorious church and kingdom of God which by its inherent worth shall be able to subdue and break in pieces all other kingdoms and to stand forever.

With a desire to learn my duty, to stand in my place—to be obedient to God and his Christ who has redeemed me from the thralldom of sin and ignorance of his divine and purposes—I have written these thoughts as they have come to me through observation, experience, and as I believe the teachings of the Holy Spirit; desiring correction if found in error. For who so foolish as to expect success by pursuing the path of ignorance and error? With gratitude toward God and love to all of his Saints, fervent desire for their welfare and growth in the knowledge of God and of his will, praying for the time to hasten when Zion's Watchmen shall see eye to eye and because of her redemption from the evils that beset her—they shall lift up their voice together and sing the song of her deliverance—that she may begin to arise even soon, and put on her beautiful garments of reason, spiritual intelligence, and power with God, that the nations may begin to behold her glory and "Zion the perfection of beauty," the idea of God may be unfolded to the astonished gaze of the nations of earth is the prayer of your fellow laborer in the kingdom of God.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 8.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE LAST WINTER IN JERUSALEM, A. D. 70.

"How is the faithful city become a harlot? It was full of judgment; righteousness lodged in it, but now murderers." The holy and beautiful house which had been designed to be a house of prayer for all nations, was now full of armed men raging for each other's blood, and shedding it like water upon the sacred pavements of polished marble. The doomed city, once "the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth," was approaching the last agonies; and like a patient whose fevered blood has produced a horrible delirium, or rather like one of those unhappy beings whose body was possessed by a legion of unclean and malignant demons, lay tearing and devouring her own flesh.

Eleazar, with a small but determined band of Zealots, had seized the inner court of the temple, where he fortified himself against John, who, with a larger body possessed the outer court of the same sacred edifice. He in his turn was beset by Simon who had taken possession of the whole of the upper city and a great part of the lower. The stores of provisions which were laid up in the temple were freely used by Eleazar and his party, who were imprisoned in the sacred fortress, while John and Simon alike supported themselves upon the plunder of the city.

Granaries full of corn and warehouses of other necessities, were wantonly burned by both parties, so that a provision which would have supplied the wants of the garrison and the inhabitants for several years, was madly destroyed, as if on purpose to please the besiegers.

Fierce and bloody were the conflicts which every day raged in the sacred precincts; the battlements of the inner courts poured down their darts and arrows upon John, and the occupants rushed out in furious sallies; but the latter were sure to be repulsed by superior numbers, while the former were answered by the ballistæ, catapults, and scorpions, which John had erected to hurl stones and darts against the battlements, and which made up for the inferiority of his position. But Simon was pressing him in like manner behind; where, however, the circumstances of position were so much in his favor, as on Eleazar's side they were against him. The ascents of the temple were steep and difficult, and a large number of assailants could easily be kept at bay by a few above their heads.

Amidst this furious warfare the ministrations of religion went on as usual; and it was a strange thing to behold the priest and Levites engaged in offering the daily sacrifice in the very midst of the din of battle, and the people crowding in to worship in the Holy Courts, while the arrows were hurtling around their heads; and ever and anon the roaring stones from the powerful engines would rush in among the worshippers, crushing them at the foot of the altar, and mingling their blood with that of the sacrifice. Priests and Zealots, worshippers and soldiers, citizens and strangers, fell in mingled heaps around the altar, and pools of blood lay curdling in the midst of the sacred courts.

The frequent sallies, and vehement conflicts with flame and sword, had cleared a large space around the temple walls, and reduced it to a blackend and desert area, in which the rival factions could fight the more furiously, because more unimpeded. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killeth the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not; behold your house is left left unto you desolate,"—Matt, 23: 37-38.

Such was the condition of "the City of the Great King" when there came against her the "nation of fierce countenance," and around her gathered in grim array the beleaguering hosts of Rome. Early in the spring of the year seventy, Titus had returned from Egypt to Cæsarea, and now led on his army to the siege of Jerusalem.

The twelfth legion, which had been defeated under Cestius, was now commanded by Vespasian; and there arrived large reinforcements from the allied kingdoms. Through Samaria the mighty and glittering host wended its stately way, and at length encamped at Gibeah of Saul, about four miles to the north of Jerusalem. Here leaving the army to pitch their temporary camp, the Roman General, with six hundred chosen horsemen, pushed forward to reconnoitre the city, perhaps saying like the heathen of old, "Let our eye look upon Zion."

Across the elevated plain, which alone gave military access to this mountain girt city, and from which every enemy, from Nebuchadnezzar downwards had attacked her, he leisurely advanced, gazing on the majestic towers and walls, and on the glorious temple towering above all. All was quiet and still; not a soul appeared at the gates; it might have been a deserted city or a city of the dead. And now the troops had crossed the little depression in which the valley of Jehoshaphat is gradually lost, and had ascended the gentle slope that brought them almost beneath the wall. Titus led the band, and had already turned out of the direct road, and was diverging towards the tower of Porsephinus, which flanked the right hand corner of the wall, when suddenly one of the gates was flung open, and out rushed a host of armed men. The impetus of their sally broke in an instant the line of march, and the Roman commander found himself, with a few followers, isolated from his troop, and hemmed in by a host of infuriated adversaries on one side, and on the other by the trenches and hedges which enclosed the suburban gardens. Though destitute of both helmet and breast-plate, for he had not anticipated such a greeting, the native valor of the Roman did not forsake him. The javelins and arrows flew harmless around his unarmed person, for he was "immortal till his work was done." He was the unconscious servant of the Most High God, who had given him a commission against his own city and people, and who might have said to him as to Cyrus before, "I guided thee, though thou hast not known me."

Till Jerusalem had fallen, Titus bore a charmed life. Drawing his sword he cut a way for himself through his daring foes, and regained the cohort from whom he had been separated. A rapid retreat was made to the camp, while the Jews returned to the city, elated with the knowledge that they had slain some, wounded many more, and repulsed all of the heathen foes, with Cæsar at their head, who had ventured set their feet upon the holy mountain of Jerusalem. On the next day Titus removed the Roman camp, reinforced by the legion which had been left at Emmaus, to the hill Scopus, where Cestius had encamped before. From this point a noble view of the whole city is presented, at less than a mile's distance, which is indicated in the name of the hill, signifying prospect.

Another legion encamped about half a mile behind this, and a third on the Mount of Olives, to the east of Jerusalem. Glorious was the sight that met the eye of Titus as he gazed on the city before him. In the foreground was the gently-undulating slope, covered with clumps of the graceful olive, intercepted with ancient mulberry-trees. In the bottom flowed the brook Kedron, brawling over its wide and shallow bed, till it was lost to view in the dark valley of Gethsemane, that wound round the steep side of Mount Moriah on the left. Up the acclivity in front stretched the road along which the troops had lately approached the city, and been driven back in undignified rout, bounded on either side by the gardens of flowers and fruit trees, which were abundant in that quarter, divided by hedges, low stone walls and trenches. The summit of the hill was crowned by the lovely city enclosed in its walls, which bound it round with a threefold girdle of massive stones. The morning rays of the sun gleamed from the ramparts and battlements, and towers of the nearest wall, and from the palaces, spires, and turrets that rose up street beyond street within, till the eye rested on Zion in the distance, the highest point of the whole; its rocky elevation covered with the castellated mansions and gorgeous palaces of the City of David. A Jew, on looking over this scene of grandeur and loveliness, would have involuntarily broken out into that glorious anthem of his shepherd king, which had so often resounded in swelling chorus from those sacred halls:

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion. On the sides of the north, the city of the great King, God is known in her palaces for a refuge."

But there was one object which must have filled the eye of every observer, and cast all others into the shade. Fairer than the white-walled city, fairer than the palaced heights of Zion, rose the glorious Temple. Titus, heathen as he was, would have no sympathy with the holy associations which would crowd on the mind of a son of Abraham, as he looked on the surpassing edifice; but even Titus must have been enraptured with the gorgeous magnificence of that Holy House, whose architectural glory knew no rival in the whole world.

Fair Jerusalem.
The Holy City lifted high her towers,
And higher yet the glorious temple reared
Her pile, far off appearing like a mountain
Of alabaster topped with golden spires.

He saw "the Court of the Gentiles circling the whole; a fortress of the whitest marble, with its wall rising six hundred feet from the valley; its kingly entrance worthy of Solomon; its innumerable and stately dwellings for priests and officers of the temple; and above them, glittering like a succession of diadems, those alabaster porticoes and colonnades, in which the chiefs and sages of Jerusalem had sat teaching the people, or walked, breathing the pure air and gazing on the grandeur of a landscape which swept the whole amphitheatre of the mountains." He saw rising above this stupendous boundary, the court of the Jewish women, separated by its porphyry pillars and richly sculptured wall; above this, the separated court of the men; still higher, the court of the priests; and highest, the crowning splendor of all, the central temple, the place of the Sanctuary, and of the Holy of Holies, covered with plates of gold, its roof planted with lofty spear heads of gold, the most precious marbles and metals everywhere flashing back the day, till Mount Moriah stood forth to the eye of the stranger approaching Jerusalem, what it had been so often described by its bards and people, "a mountain of snow studded with jewels."

Before we enter into the details of the siege, which swept as with the besom of destruction, the city and temple, it will be needful to give a brief description of its walls: Jerusalem at this time consisted of three distinct portions, each enclosed by its own wall. The southern portion was the most ancient the rocky height of Zion. A deep ravine, called the Tyropœon crossed by a bridge, separated it from Acra, or the lower city, which was built on another hill to the northward, the highest peak of which, Mount Moriah, was crowned by the temple. Northward still spread the town of Bezetha, originally a suburb, and called the New Town, but fortified with a wall by King Agrippa. This was the weakest, as well as the least populous portion of the city. Everywhere, except at this quarter, the walls looked down into precipitous ravines of great depth, which defied the approach of an enemy. To the west lay the valley of Gihon, to the south the valley of Hinnom, and to the east the valley of Jehoshaphat. The innermost wall was of great strength; it had been begun by David, and further strengthened by Solomon and his successors, down to Herod the Great. Beginning at the south-west corner of the temple, where a bridge crossed the Tyropœon, it separated Zion from Acra by a line running nearly due west, which was strengthened by three towers of massive proportions, Mariamne, Phasaelis, and Hippicus. Thence sweeping round the hill of Zion, and following the edge of the precipice, it appears to have terminated at the south-eastern corner of the temple, inclosing a small space on the west side of the Tyropœon, called Ophel.

The second wall, which defended the lower city began at the Tower Antonia, which formed the north-western corner of the temple and curving in a quadrant joined the first wall at the gate Gennath, a little within the tower Hippicus. The third, which was never completed in the strength originally designed, ran along from the south-eastern angle of the temple, overlooking the valley of the Kedron for nearly half a mile; thence turning sharply to the westward, it swept round in a curve to the tower Psephinus, the extreme north-west point of the city; and thence proceeded in a south-east line to the tower Hippicus, where it joined the wall of Zion. These walls were fortified by square towers of massive masonry, strong and solid, to the height of about thirty-five feet; above which they were furnished with chambers, and cisterns for receiving rain water. Of these towers the first wall had sixty, the second forty and the outermost ninety. "The beauty of these bulwarks was no less remarkable than their size and strength. They were built of white stone, hewn from the rock in blocks of enormous size, and so exactly fitted one upon another, as to present the appearance rather of an unbroken mass of marble than that of ordinary architecture. They rose to a great height above the walls; and these again being built on three sides, upon the edge of a deep precipice, looked still loftier than they really were."

One of these towers, believed to be the renewed Hippicus, is still standing, a solitary memorial of what once were the stately bulwarks of Zion, and abundantly justifying the proud appeal of the national anthem:

"Walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following."—Psalms 48: 12, 13. It is described as a "grand and striking object;" the lower part entirely solid, as far as is known, no passage into it having been yet discovered. The dimensions of the east side are fifty-six feet, four inches, of the south side seventy feet three inches; the large hewn stones of which it is composed average from nine to twelve feet in length.

Josephus thus speaks of this tower, and of its two fellows, Phasaelis and Mariamne: "These were for largeness, beauty, and strength, beyond all that were in the habitable earth; for besides the magnanimity of his (Herod's) nature and his magnificence towards the city on other occasions, he built these after such an extraordinary manner, to gratify his own private affections, and dedicated these towers to the memory of those three persons who had been the dearest to him, and from whom he named them. They were his brothers, his friends, and his wife. . . . Hippicus, so named from his friend, was square, its length and breadth was each twenty-five cubits; its height thirty; and it had no vacuity in it. Over this solid building, which was composed of great stones united together, there was a reservoir, twenty cubits deep, over which there was a house of two stories, whose height was twenty-five cubits, and divided into several parts, over which were battlements of two cubits, and turrets all round of three cubits high, insomuch that the entire height added together amounted to four score cubits."—Josephus' Wars v. iv, 3.

The glory of the city was the Temple, which seemed to be no less a mighty fortress and tower of defense than a holy house of worship. The original edifice, erected by King Solomon on the spot where Abraham had offered up Isaac, had been razed to the ground by the King of Babylon; but on the return from the captivity a new structure had risen from the ruins, which had been enlarged and beautified with extraordinary magnificence by Herod the great, who had spared neither wealth, labor, nor time, in making it worthy of its name, as the only Temple of the true God in the world. Forty and six years was this Temple in building; but now, though its visible splendor remained, its true glory had long departed, and it was about to become the prey of the spoiler.

Of these great buildings, which elicited the wondering praise of every beholder, the foundations were not the least. "Great and strong walls had been built upwards on the sides of the hill, forming at their summits a square platform perfectly level, which was enclosed by adding to the tower walls a range of cloisters that surrounded the Outer Court, communicating at one angle with Fort Antonia. This Court was paved with a variety of stones; and beyond it, inclosed by a second partition of peculiarly elegant workmanship, but only three cubits in height, surmounted by pillars, and ascended to by fourteen steps, was the Court of the Israelites, into which no Gentile might enter. On the eastern side of this quadrangle was the women's court, where the daughters of Zion assembled to worship, and here also stood another range of buildings, the height of which was not easily discernible from without. Four gates on the north, four on the south, and two on the east side, led to this court. The western wall was unbroken.

Of these gates, nine were overlaid with silver and gold; but the tenth, which opened eastward, was far more magnificent, being of Corinthian brass, of considerably larger proportions than the rest, and adorned with double splendor, having the precious metals more profusely spread upon it, and with more elaborate ornament.

These gateways were of such depth as to resemble towers, admitting of a room on either side within between the outer and the inner door. Some idea may be formed of the grandeur of these approaches when it is stated, that each door was in height thirty cubits, and its breadth fifteen; while the pillars that supported the chambers within the gateway were twelve cubits in circumference. The doors of the eastern, or "Beautiful Gate," which stood over against the entrance of the Temple itself, were forty cubits high. But the principal feature of the whole pile of sacred edifices was the snowy whiteness of the polished stones that formed it, their enormous size, and the unbroken surface presented to the eye by means of such exquisite fitting of one to another as scarcely allowed any junction to be perceptible. Accustomed as they were to worship on that spot, and familiarized with the magnificence that there surrounded them, the disciples could not refrain from exclaiming, "Master see what manner of stones and what buildings are here."—Judea Capta 120.

Within the quadrangle thus formed there was yet another enclosure separated by a low wall. This was the court of the priests, and contained the great altar of burnt offering. Beyond appeared the great gate of the Temple itself, a magnificent archway without any doors, leading into the holy place. Its front was sheeted with plates of burnished gold, which seemed to flame upon the beholders. Above and around it hung a vine of gold, (the sacred symbol of Israel), the clusters of which stood as high as a man. By the votive offerings of the worshippers, this golden vine was continually growing, for some presenting gold to make a leaf, some a bunch, and some a grape, these were added to the branches in proper form and position, and ever increased the magnificent tree.

Within stood the Seven-branched Candlestick; the Table of Shew-bread and the Altar of Incense. The vine was terminated by a magnificent veil, which hid from view the holiest of all, whose wall was encased with gold, but which contained nothing, for the ark seems never to have been replaced after the Babylonish captivity. Here in former days, the Shechinah of Glory indicated the indwelling presence of Jehovah; but this also had long departed; and the Temple could now only boast of its material magnificence, which yet was so great as to dazzle and astonish the eyes of the beholder. Even the external surface of the Temple was covered with plates of solid gold, which, reflecting back the beams of the morning sun when he first arose over the Mount of Olives, seemed to burst into an immense mountain of flame.

The tenth legion, stationed on this hallowed mount, would look with awe and wonder on the glories before them; and as the sun climbed higher in the sky, and the blaze of reflected light faded so as to reveal the beautiful details, they would gaze into the sacred courts through the stately colonnades of white marble, and catch many a gleam of the splendid foliage and tracery that ornamented the noble walls.

At the north-west angle of the outer court stood Fort Antonia, the citadel of the city. It was built upon a precipitous rock, the steep sides of which were faced with smooth stone to prevent approach.
It was a noble pile, combining the magnificence of a palace with the strength of a fortress, and was connected by galleries with the cloisters of the Temple. Formerly it had been the dwelling of the Roman garrison; but this had been long since ejected, and it seems to have now fallen into the possession of Simon. But alas! alas! soon was that lamentation to be taken up;—"Our holy and beautiful house where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire; and all our pleasant things are laid waste."

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

DUTIES OF ADULTS.

SABBATH SCHOOL work is one of more than passing importance. It can not be insignificant because of its actual worth to the church. It is not a "baby institution," but should receive the careful attention of all adult persons, and especially of parents.
When children and "young folk" are asked and often urged to attend the school, and the parents who thus require of their children do not themselves attend, it can not be but that the force of example shall have an unsavory effect. If the school is good enough for the young it is equally good for the elder ones. The same truth is to be taught and learned, and there is no one whose age has or can outgrow the importance of their attendance upon school work. The Sabbath School is truly the nursery of the church, and should be attentively cared for.

Parents who so engross themselves as to neglect attendance both to church and school services, and whose children scarcely ever, if at all, appear therein, are doing themselves and family an eternal injustice, demoralizing in its effects, and casting an influence of disregard for church and school work, and bring these holy institutions to some degree into family disrepute.
It can not be otherwise. Parents who wilfully, thoughtlessly, or inadvertently cause these neglects, or lack of responsible duties can not estimate the amount of harm accruing therefrom.

Sabbath School work in the Church of Jesus Christ should receive no less attention than actual mature church work. Neglect the school and the very basis of the church's life and hope is attacked. Some may not so view the matter. But let us propound this question: If the church is expected to be the place wherein salvation from the thralldom of sin is taught and had, does this salvation power extend only to the adults, or children and youth as well?

If unto all, and knowing that children can not always understand what may be proclaimed from the pulpit, and as these services are not especially adapted to child minds, and the children's and young folk' spiritual and moral training is not, under divine penalty, to be neglected, then where and by whom are these youths to be especially taught? Shall not the varied departments of God's word be given them in language best suited to their youthful minds? And, further, Whereas the public services for adults can not be monopolized for the other, while the latter can not be ignored with any degree of allowance, then must we have Sabbath Schools wherein the young may be seriously and prudently taught. Parents should be there so far as practicable, and no trivial excuse should delay them. All may not be in attendance every Sunday but the parental presence of several households should be found each Sabbath.

Children have said:—"I don't see why pa and ma don't or can't go; they always wish me to go." Certainly! And the writer has seen children go sullenly; but where parents attended as often as possible, cheerfulness was seen, and willingness manifested. Don't shove the children off to get rid of them. Have their eternal interest at heart, and you will exert an holy influence upon them. Your absence is poor excuse for their presence.

But, to an extent we are encouraged;
Many more Latter Day Saint parents are now interested than some years back. The increase of interest is required, and further increase of interest ought to be had.
"Boom" the Sabbath School work! Make it an unmistakable power in the church.
Hot weather, cold weather, dry weather, wet weather, should by no means figure so lamentably conspicuously as in some localities it is seen.

People work arduously for "the things that perish with the using," while regard for eternal and enduring matters of concern is found sometimes at a sadly low ebb. Neither humane nor Christlike.
God understands all about our "housework," and "shop-work;" He knew it all when He asked of mankind to "serve Him with all their might, mind and strength."
Where a good, hearty will exists, work is manifest. We can't accomplish everything by "home praying." That has its place, but it can not fill or supply other work of vast importance. If there is any part of church work of any more importance than Sunday School work will some one tell what it is? One person can not accomplish all in any one locality, there should be hearty responsive co-operation; and where effort is made by one or more to accomplish good, and adverse criticisms come flocking in, it is bound to retard needed progress. "Cold water is thrown on," and warm, fervent enthusiasm and desire is thereby quenched. This is a happy (?) satanic resort to a blighting method by which hindrances are cast out into the good work, and children note it, for "little mice have big ears" and eyes too. The conduct of the older ones is not unheeded by them.

ORGANIZATION.

Our schools have long time needed an organized system that harmony of action might be more readily attained. Without such it appears that actual success will not be had. The schools have been conducted upon a plan of "every man for himself."
This is not conducive of proper progress or development. As the church is not congregational in its system of government, neither should the schools be isolated concerns. An especial interest is required, and no better method may be had or introduced than that of organization of all the schools under one grand head.

The plan introduced in California as seen in the Saint's Herald of May 26th, 1888, is a good one, and evidently forms a basis for general and special action in this work of our schools throughout the world.
It seems that it must give impetus to the school work. There are many schools in working order, some good, others fair.
By the appointment of certain persons whose duty and pleasure it shall be to have a close, general oversight of school work in a given district, good order and system may be had. Without some good methodical course of action all effort is futile.
Men, young, active men, who have a due regard for the development of this grand work are the ones who should be placed in power. Drones, go-easy's will effect nothing practical; they are some times fair theorizers and that is all. Will, push, energy are necessary to the successful accomplishment of a good work.

I notice the Galland's Grove district conference adopted an association plan. The Far West district did the same at its last quarterly conference. After association has been formed it should be without the intermeddling of branch or district officious-ness. Harmony is more likely to exist where the associations exist independtly directly, but dependent indirectly. Independent so far as their own respective work is concerned, and in the election of their officers after first formed by district approval.
Dependent, in that the associated schools shall expect aid by way of approval, means, and prayers, faith and presence of members of the church wherever they shall have existence.

Let these several "associations" found in church districts be brought into a union, known as "The United Sabbath School Association," of the church. Let there, by this formation, be a "grand" or "presiding" general superintendent, who may have an associate worker; also a secretary, etc. Let it be the duty of their chief one to be recordedly informed from all general superintendents as to the general and special status of the school work throughout the world, the general superintendent to be informed from the several superintendents of individual schools. By this means system can be had. These things are what we have long needed. It is the sincere desire that the church schools will give this matter their hearty response, and awaken a general and widespread interest in the good cause. No one who has an actual interest of the good of children and youth at heart can reasonably dissent from this cause.

The "Far West Association's" officers propose taking active measures in interest of the schools and desire an hearty response by way of co-operation on the part of all superintendents and secretaries in the district. "The United Sabbath School Association," I presume, could be ordered or authorized by General Conference, and upon its endorsement the union could be well effected.

MONEY MATTERS.

This new movement will require a little money for necessary expenses. It may be readily obtained if the idea of "doing something" good be properly presented to the scholars. All children are willing to be doing, especially if they think or can see that their doing counts, and that older folks are pleased therewith. Oftentimes there is too much long faced dryness exhibited towards and among children in schools. They are generally smiling and on the alert; their tongues prattling, and they look for sunshine on the officers faces, and on those of the teachers as well. A little word kindly spoken, a caress, and of some little ones, a kiss wont hurt, all these win their little-big hearts—"we've tried it," and talk to them about what their pennies and nickles are doing, etc., and money will come right along. Averse-ness never can be successful among children and the "youth;" they look and expect something different and should have it in all unselfishness, and kindness. As the needs of school work demand an economical and expedient outlay of money it should freely be had. The old idea of "the gospel without money and without price" has been strangely applied, and has wrought harm. Jesus truly said unto His ministry: "Freely ye have received, freely give." No salary, no auctioneering, no peddling of gospel truths; no money in exchange for it; but at the same time, books, papers, tracts, records, time, labor, all must be had, and every member and scholar should be caused to properly understand that these necessities are not forthcoming upon "thank ye's." If the thought can once be made apparent to a child that its pennies, nickles, etc., have aided in the purchase of a book, card, or other expedients, it has a tendency to create the idea that its own little personal efforts are recognized by older ones as of importance and that it has materially to do with the effectual carrying on of Sunday School work. If a child's efforts are not duly recognized by words of encouragement and the noting of what the child efforts are actually accomplishing, the little one feels embarrassed, as though it could do nothing and upon discouragement, lack of interest follows and pennies are not forthcoming. They are to be taught the truth as their minds may be capacitated to receive, and so shall they be profited. The Sabbath School is their church service. Give it them as you wish to have yours.

Our church has no systematic Sabbath

School record books of its own. Such should be had. If an offer on the part of the writer might be not out of place, he would state his willingness to devise a system of complete record for schools, and for the district associations. That such is and will be in demand can not be disputed. Many records that we have seen or have attempted to use are either deficient or are too cumbersome. Laxity of duty toward proper systematic recording is prejudicial, and unchurchlike and unbusinesslike. There is too much of this in our church record work in various localities. The church universal should be so much interested that no branch however small should be without a school. Many isolated families have home schools and some that we know of have had their little records. By this means being generally adopted the church will know what is being done among our youth; and it ought to know. The young and children should be so interested as to make the records loom up beautifully everywhere. How can we be indifferent in this great work of the young? The introduction of records, orderly, should be, we think, from classes to the secretary; he should inform the superintendent, the latter should have the general superintendent apprised; the local secretaries informing the general secretary; the general superintendent supervising in all this with other work as named in the "article" from California. This will be the course pursued in the Far West Association. Nothing will be able to so thoroughly effect this as well kept records. These schools can have association conventions, whereat the general features and progress of the work can be discussed and new interest awakened, and record report be made. Record of attendance, local school supplies, number of teachers, active or otherwise, operation of local officers, monies, received and disbursed, what for; new accessions, interest, good or otherwise. Report method of operation, success, &c.

All this may sound like work, labor, time, talent, money; let it mean it, that is what it ought to imply. No one thing is accomplished without work. Our knowledge of the truth, its power to save, and God being in the work, should be sufficient cause for interest and impetus to be given this. If there are those who hold adverse opinions to this good work, don't throw a clog in the way of the wheel of progress. Just stand aside and let the blessed cause move on while you may stand aside and murmur! No one has the "big head" on the matters, but I pray Almighty God that many of His people may become at this late date very much interested. Let no one cast a shadow. Give us sunshine or nothing. The Holy Spirit is moving in this good work, catch on and follow in the line of this onward march of truth and organized effort.

"The Lord will surely go before us,
Our way he surely will prepare;
Then let us sing to him a chorus,
Until it sweetly fills the air;
Then see the prophets marching onward, onward;
And twelve apostles marching onward, onward,
With all God's children marching onward,
The Holy city enter in."

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN MAINE.

This conference convened at Sargentsville, Maine, August —. Bro. W. H. Kelley was chosen to preside, Bro. W. G. Pert to assist, and F. M. Sheehy clerk. After some appropriate remarks by Bro. Kelley the minutes of last conference were read, corrected and adopted. Reports of branches from Green's Landing, Brooksville, and Bray's Mountain were received and referred to Brn. Pert and Green as committee on branch reports. Reports: Elders W. G. Pert, U. W. Greene, S. Eaton, F. M. Sheehy and W. H. Kelley. Priest: Levi Gray. Teachers J. H. Robbins, U. G. Cunningham, J. Eaton and J. B. Eaton by proxy. Report of Bishop's agent was read and referred to Brn. Kelley and Sheehy as auditors. Report of committee appointed at last conference to visit delinquent members reported progress. The committee was continued. Report of the district treasurer was read and motion made to take up a collection during conference to defray incidental expenses. Auditing committee reported having found correct all that had been referred to them. Resolved that Bro. W. G. Pert be sustained as president of the district and E. Pert as clerk. Resolved to sustain Brn. Kelley, Sheehy and Greene as General Conference appointees. Resolved that the next conference be held at West Surrey on the first Saturday in November. Met at 7:30 for preaching by Elder F. M. Sheehy. Sunday a. m., preaching by Elder W. H. Kelley. At 1 p. m., a social meeting, after which adjourned to the water and one young man was baptized by Bro. Kelley. At 7 p. m., confirmation service, after which preaching by Elder F. M. Sheehy. Bishop's agent reported having received $220.74; expended $128.50.

FAR WEST.

Conference convened at Kingston, Missouri, Saturday, August 25th, 1888, J. T. Kinneman in the chair, assisted by Wm. Summerfield; Charles P. Faul secretary. Brn. Ware, Babbit and Worrall were appointed a committee on branch reports; and Brn. Elvert, Booker and Seely, a committee on credentials. Elders reported:—Wm. Lewis and J. M. Terry by letter; J. T. Kinneman, Wm. Summerfield, W. T. Bozarth, (baptized 3), J. D. Cravins, James Drown, (solemnized one marriage), Jacob Snider, A. J. Seely, R. Ware, L. Booker, J. D. Flander, L. L. Babbitt, Thomas Worrall, and J. F. McDowell. Priests reported:—Frank Manzey, Charles Duncan, —Byrant, Charles P. Faul, J. C. Elvert, (solemnized one marriage), Deacon, Charles Householder. Branch reports were read from Pleasant Grove, Kingston, Delano and St. Joseph. Bishop's Agent reported:—Received during the quarter $220.25, expended $305.30, church in debt on the 26th of May last $91.36, church in debt to Bishop's Agent to date $177.41. Committee on credentials reported, report received and adopted. Resolved that we organize a Sabbath School Association to be known as the Far West Sabbath School Association, the same to have a general superintendent, assistant general superintendent, and a general secretary. The duty of the general superintendent to be a supervision of all Sabbath School work of the Association, and to organize new schools where none now exist. The secretaries of all Sabbath Schools to be in correspondence with the general secretary, and vice-versa; the latter under instructions of the general superintendent. Once every three months the general superintendent shall present a quarterly report of all the school work of the Association furnished by the general secretary for presentation to district conference. Carried. Bro. J. F. McDowell was elected general superintendent of the Sunday School Association, Charles P. Faul assistant general superintendent, Charles Duncan general secretary. The following brethren were sustained as officers of the district for the quarter:—J. T. Kinneman president, Wm. Summerfield, vice president, Charles P. Faul Secretary.

Bro. Wm. Lewis was sustained as Bishop's Agent. Resolved that all elders and priests of the district who desire to labor be requested to confer with the district authorities and branch representatives here present. Carried. Bro. Wm. Summerfield preached on Saturday, 8. p. m., J. F. McDowell on Sunday, 11 a. m. Social meeting in charge of James Drown and L. L. Babbitt at 2:30 p. m. Sunday evening Bro. Kinneman preached to a large congregation. Adjourned to meet with the Delano branch, Saturday, November 17th.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

This district conference convened at Wheeler's Grove, Iowa, Saturday, June 30th, Elder N. N. Hansen presiding, Thomas Scott clerk. The usual opening exercises introduced the session, after which the following branches reported: Hazel Dell, Council Bluffs, North Star, Crescent City and Wheeler's Grove. Elders reported: J. P. Carlisle, Joshua Carlisle, L. Smith, — Fields, J. A. Davis, W. W. Blair, J. W. Chaburn, H. Kemp and E. Davis; Brn. W. E. Peak and D. K. Dodson by letter. The Bishop's agent also reported. Report accepted. A Grove Meeting was appointed at the Hazel Dell branch under the arrangement of the district president. The elders of the district were sustained to labor as their circumstances permit. Andrew Hall was sustained as Bishop's agent, H. N. Hansen as district president, and Thomas Scott as secretary. The authorities of the church were sustained. Preaching during the session by Elders Blair, Chaburn and Davis. Adjourned to meet at Hazel Dell at the call of the president.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.

This district conference met with the Eden branch in Floyd county, Indiana, August 25th, James W. Gillen presiding, M. R. Scott secretary, V. D. Baggerly assistant secretary. Branch reports: Olive 14; Hope 28; Eden 20; 3 baptized, 1 removed, 1 died; Riceville 6; Union 27; Byrnsville 7. Bishop's agent's report: Balance last report $7.95, received since from the district $9.00, from the Bishop $125.00, expenditures $141.84, balance due church 11 cents. Report examined and found correct. Elders reports: J. G. Scott, V. D. Baggerly (baptized 19, blessed 8 children, ordained 1 teacher and solemnized one marriage, and administered to the sick with good results), James M. Scott, M. R. Scott (baptized 15, organized 2 branches and attended to the general duties of a missionary). Priest S. C. Gruver reported, also teacher James Porter, and deacon John Fewell. The committee appointed to investigate matters pertaining to the Olive branch was continued. M. R. Scott was elected district president until the next conference, and V. D. Baggerly secretary. A vote of thanks was tendered to Bro. J. G. Scott for his faithful services as president of the district. J. W. Gillen as missionary in charge, J. M. Scott as Bishop's agent, and all the general authorities of the church were sustained. Preaching by V. D. Baggerly and J. W. Gillen. Adjourned to meet with the Olive branch, Ripley county, Indiana, Saturday, December 15th, at 10:30 a. m.

Miscellaneous.

DIED.

POLSON.—At Rockville, Bates county, Missouri, July 31st, 1888, Johanna Polson, aged 69 years, 10 months, and 25 days. She was born in Sweden, September 6th, 1818; was baptized by Elder E. Curtis, May 28th, 1887. She leaves an aged husband, one son, and three daughters to lament the loss of a true wife and fond and loving mother.

LEEKA.—Sarah Carter Leeka was born in Green county, Tennessee, December 7th, 1805; was married to John Leeka January 17th, 1828, in Clinton county, Ohio, where they resided until March, 1839, when they moved to Van Buren county, Iowa, where she united with the Latter Day Saints church in 1842. They came to Fremont county, Iowa, in 1848, where she remained with her family until her death June 30th, 1888. During the dark and cloudy days of the church she stood aloof from all the factions that claimed to be the church proper, until the year 1863, when she united with the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Elder Silas W. Condit, July 1st, 1863. She was stricken with heart disease May 31st, 1888, and died June following. A few days after she was taken sick she stated to a number of persons that she would never recover, but requested the friends not to mourn for her, that she was too old and feeble to be of any service to others, could do no more for herself in this life, and felt that she was ready for the change. She often expressed a firm belief in the efficacy of the gospel in its application for the redemption of the human family according to the pattern given by the Savior of the world, and tried to live by its precepts so far as she knew how. She often testified of testimonies she received that God was the author of the Reorganized Church.

MATTHEWS.—Mr. Benjamin Matthews was killed by the fall of a tree. The above named and family went to spend a few weeks on the mountains of San Bernardino, and while there he was cutting a tree which fell upon him, killing him instantly. This happened August 17th, 1888. He was brought to his residence. Mr. Matthews was 69 years of age; was born in Alabama and came into the Old Church in early times and was ordained an elder under the hands of Benjamin Clapp, in 1844. He went to Utah in 1847; then to California in 1853 and remained there until his death. He lost faith in the old church and never joined any faith. He was a good Christian and was well respected. He filled the office of Sheriff of San Bernardino county. He left a large family to mourn their loss. His wife and some of his children are members of the Church of Christ. His wife is an excellent Saint, and is respected by all that know her. Funeral sermon by William J. Gibson.

ETTLEMAN.—Sr. Catherine Ettleman was born in 1796, in the state of Maryland, and died of old age near Plum Hollow, Iowa, July 10th, 1888, being 92 years of age. She was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1835, when in Maryland, by Elder David Evans, removed to Missouri and passed through the terrible persecutions of 1838-9, removed with the church to Illinois, and after the murder of Joseph the Seer and the bitter persecution of the Saints, removed to the west, and finally located with many of her family and relatives in this neighborhood where she remained up to the time of her death. She united with the Reorganized Church in June last, and died in the faith of the gospel of Christ, and in the hope of a glorious resurrection with the children of God. Having kept the faith, and having finished her course, obeying and trusting the Lord, her spirit now rests in the paradise of God, awaiting her resurrection with the Saints of God.

CHUTE.—At Johnston, Providence county, Rhode Island, January 4th, 1888, of dropsy, Sr. Lucy Chute. Sr. Chute was born November 22d, 1812, at Clarence, Annapolis county, Nova Scotia. She was baptized August 31st, 1884, by Elder C. E. Brown. She came to this country in 1883 and embraced the latter day work the year following. She was a member of the Baptist church for forty years, and after coming to this country and hearing the latter day work she, after searching for more light, embraced the gospel as taught by the Church of Christ. She was indeed a mother in Israel. She died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral sermon by Elder M. H. Bond.

THORP.—At Pleasanton, Decatur county, Iowa, August 16th, 1888, Bro. George Thorp, aged 74 years, 4 months and 1 day. He was born at Macclesfield, Cheshire, England, April 15th, 1814, and came from his native land to Nauvoo, Illinois, in May 1842, and in June of the same year he married Mrs. Sarah Roberts, who has been his faithful companion, sharing with him the shadows as well as the sunshine of life. Incident to the raising and educating a large and respectable family until his decease.

Bro. Thorp was identified with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as early as 1842, how much earlier we are not informed. But in that year, or in the following one, he left Nauvoo and moved to Alton, Illinois, where he became successful in business and held several honored positions as a citizen of that place, he having become a citizen of the United States in 1848. In 1863 having heard of the Reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints he immediately united with the same and was ordained an elder and according to his circumstances labored to promote the interests of that church. He died as he had lived, with an abiding faith that the latter day work was of God. He was buried by the Masonic fraternity of which he had long been a member.

CALKINS.—Charlotta Ann Calkins, born April 5th, 1887, died August 14th, 1888. Funeral services by Bro. A. T. Mortimore.

MARSLAND.—At Cranston, Rhode Island, August 22d, 1888, of cholera infantum, Charlotte Mahala, only child of Bro. W. H. W. and Sr. S. E. Marsland, aged 3 weeks and 6 days. The Lord has given and the Lord has taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. Funeral services at the Saints' meeting house in Cranston. Remarks by Priest George Lovell and Teacher Ransom Searle.

MORMON PROPAGANDISM.

The Mormons of Utah have never depended upon the merely natural growth by birth of their own people as their chief means of increase. They have supplemented such growth by a system of propagandism, which consists in sending out missionaries to other parts of the United States, and especially to foreign countries, not for the purpose of establishing Mormonism there, but rather to make individual converts, and then induce them to become immigrants to the Territory of Utah. It is hence true that the majority of Mormons in that territory are foreign-born persons, and that in this way the system has been greatly strengthened far beyond what would have been secured by natural growth. The Mormon leaders have, in this respect, shown not a little sagacity in respect to the purpose had in view. Indeed, their whole history in Utah proves them to have been a cunning and farseeing set of men. Any one who takes them to be fools, is much mistaken in his judgment. They know what they are about, and have sought the end aimed at with a shrewdness seldom exceeded. And while we cannot look upon them otherwise than as impostors, we do not deny their right of religious propagandism in their own way, so long as they keep themselves within the limits of the laws of the land, and so long as religion, as practiced among them and by them, does not violate these laws. It is not with Mormonism simply as a religious system, but with Mormonism as a polygamous system, that the American people are contending. Detach the polygamous element therefrom, and there is not a law in the land, whether enacted by Congress or by state legislatures, that will in any way operate upon their religion, except to protect Mormons in their just rights. The issue, so far as law is concerned, is distinctly and only with polygamy as a practice. Let this fact never be forgotten. If the Mormons insist upon making immortality and crime a part of their religion, they must take the consequences. —Independent.

PREHISTORIC MINERS.

In the mica mines in the western part of North Carolina, notably in Mitchell County, there are from time to time found traces of a people who antedate the Indians, and who were apparently highly civilized, says a letter from Raleigh. There have not been lacking those who believe that the Spaniards under Cortez visited this section and worked these mines. Gentlemen who are veracious and well informed tell me that spurs, lance-heads and even a part of a helmet have been found in these mines when the latter were re-opened. The search for mica is very thorough, this State being the chief producer of it and yielding the finest in the world. The theory about the discovery of mica and the opening of these mines by Spaniards has opponents, who have many grounds for their belief.

A discovery just made at Cronly, not far from Wilmington, tends to prove a state of something like civilization ages ago. In making an excavation for the walls of a factory workmen struck a wall, carefully built and of a well-burned brick. Portions of it are many feet below the present ground-level. Luckily the excavation was made by a man of wealth and love of research. He has had the wall exposed. It is one hundred by sixty feet, laid in a fashion unknown in this part of the country, and differing from that of buildings over a century and a half old, at Wilmington. It may be assumed as a fact that it was not the work of white men of this race, and not the work of Indians. In 1780 a similar wall was discovered in Rowan County, near Salisbury, and the records of that date give full accounts of it. Parts of this wall yet remain, and it can be traced for hundreds of feet. Not far away a wall of stone was also discovered, and this extended for a distance of some miles. In 1867 a wall was discovered, in Halifax County, near Weldon, and last year one was found in Buncombe County, near Asheville. All of these walls are underground. The foundation of the Hope mills, near the old town of Fayetteville, were laid mainly with sandstone which once formed part of what were known as the "Indian walls," a massive structure laid in a sort of cement. The "Indian walls" were there when Flora McDonald came to Fayetteville after "the 45."

There are people who believe that a race which had many of the characteristics of that strange people who once inhabited Yucatan dwelt here also and built these structures whose foundations yet remain. The discovery at Cronly has caused a great deal of comment and will be thoroughly investigated.

WILL BE TESTED.

"The Act passed by the last Legislature requiring electors to take an oath that they do not 'belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called the Mormon Church,' is creating considerable dissatisfaction in this county among the members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and very justly, too, for there is not a more law-abiding class of citizens anywhere. They do not practice or believe in polygamy, and are always quiet and peaceable. While it is claimed by some that it will not interfere in the least with their right to register, the law is none the less noxious, in our estimation, and we hope it will meet with the fate at the hands of our Supreme Court that other acts of the same ilk have met. We understand that a test case is now under way from this county."

The foregoing is from the Genoa, Nevada, Courier, of August 24th and was sent us by Bro. D. R. Jones, of Sheridan, Nevada. Bro. Jones says of it:

"The act was passed against some Utah Mormons, so called, in the eastern part of the state; not on account of their disloyalty particularly, as no complaint has been made against them; only it is supposed that they are Democrats, and this bill was introduced by a Republican senator, and carried by two majority, a sort of gouge against the Mormons."

The Legislature of the state of Nevada, in its anxiety to answer to the drift of public opinion which has been setting so heavily against polygamy, and the Mormons of Utah because of it, passed an act which is very severe and sweeping, the evident purpose of which was to disfranchise citizens of the state who believed in, or practiced plural marriage. This was done because it was believed that the citizen who was a polygamist in practice or belief, whether the belief was religious, or secular, is not in harmony with the institutions of American civilization which obtained in Nevada, and would, if occasion occurred obey his religious teaching rather than observe and keep the laws of the state, and thus prove himself to be alien, rather than a loyal citizen. Obeying one of the principles underlying all law making among men, the act was framed in general terms, rather than in the form of special reference to the persons to whose practice of plural marriage as a part of their religion it was really intended to apply, and in view of the existence of which the legislation upon the subject was had.

The act can not with any degree of consistency be made to apply to members of any religious body who neither believe, nor practice plural marriage, whether they were called Latter Day Saints, or Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

There would be no particle of justice in the courts holding that the act should be construed against members of the Reorganized Church, and they be thus debarred from voting as citizens. We see no reason why the members of the Reorganized Church should in any wise consider that the act was intended to apply to them; and to us it would be unwise to so conclude, until upon trial it should be so decided in the courts. Our advice to the brethren is, that those who are otherwise citizens and entitled to vote, go to the places of registration, register their names, and vote as their judgment directs them. If challenged upon the question, they may safely take the oath that they do not belong to a church which believes, teaches, or practices any sort of polygamy, or plural marriage, or any other form of marriage contrary to the jurisdiction and laws of the state, or not in harmony with the genius and institutions of the American government. If any of us are to be debarred the free exercise of the rights of citizenship, including the right to vote, the denial of that exercise must come from the constituted authorities having jurisdiction; and we can not be deprived of our rights under the act of the Legislature of the state of Nevada, referred to herein; except upon the construction of that act by the courts as shall definitely say that we come within the meaning of the letter and spirit of the act. It is not wise for any to take it for granted that the act means the Reorganized Church. We do not believe that such was the intention of those who framed it, or those who passed it.

We have nothing to say as to the justice or injustice of the act as applied to the Mormon, or Utah Church, those believing in plural marriage, or practicing polygamy. They have been made aware of what was impending upon a continuance of the apparent opposition to the law of the land, and must conform to the law or take the consequences. Their practice has been decided to be contrary to the law, the court so affirming has sanctioned the laws enacted against that practice, and it is at the peril of punishment and outlawry that they will persist in it. No such consequences lie before the members of the Reorganized Church. Their faith and practice are within the pale of God's declared law to the church, in accord with the genius of American civilization and obedient to the laws of the state; being thus free men in Christ Jesus our Lord.

We shall await the issue of the test case now before the court with some curiosity but no fear.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE address of Bro. J. H. Peters, is changed from East Lake to Coleman, Michigan, he having removed to that place. All having business with Bro. Peters on account of Voice of Warning work, please take special notice of this change of address.

Bro. D. S. Crawley held his debate with Elder Lucas, Christian, at Arcadia; four evenings on the proposition, "Laying on of hands, and signs following, to be in harmony with God's will to-day;" Bro. Crawley affirming; and four on, "The Bible is an all sufficient means in the hands of God to save sinners." Rev. Lucas affirming. Bro. Crawley was to be at Arcadia to hold a six evenings' debate with a Baptist minister on church identity, September 17th; he says: "Would like to have some of the preaching brethren present, as I feel it is better that there should be two at least."

Bro. W. H. Barrett wrote from Hill City, Kansas, that he could not fill the calls for preaching in his neighborhood. He had held four services, besides doing considerable fireside preaching. Bro. Joseph Luff is asked to send some one in there to help them. Brn. Boyd and Barrett have distributed tracts, circulated Voice of Warning to quite an extent, paving the way for the preachers.

Sr. R. L. Gorehan writes from Arkoe, Missouri, testifying of her joy in the latter day work, the divinity of which has been attested to her by manifestations of the Spirit. She asks the prayers of the Saints in her behalf that she may be relieved from bodily afflictions: and also in behalf of her children whom she has tried to teach the way of life, that the good work begun in them may continue.

Bro. W. W. Blair would leave Nebraska City, to hold a series of meetings, beginning Tuesday evening, September 11th, in the tent at Plum Hollow, at the request of Brn. William Leeka and others.

Bro. P. B. Seaton wrote from Paris, Tennessee, September 4th, reporting the baptism of eight and the organization of a branch, already reported by Bro. Thomas. He also spoke at Eagle Creek, baptizing two.

Bro. Arsemus Hackett, of Newark, Marshall county, Dakota, wishes the prayers of the Saints. He is suffering illness and depression and much desires to live for the good he wishes to do.

Bro. J. B. Belcher wrote from Rayville, Ray county, Missouri: "I am preaching every Sunday; have good liberty and good attention; have worked up quite an interest in two neighborhoods."

Letters are received from a number of brethren and sisters which we should like to insert, but there is not room. Among them are the following:—Evan G. Jones, Jr., Hastings, Victoria, July, a young and growing Saint. Jasper M. Tousley, Wilsonburgh, Illinois, September 7th. Bro. J. W. Keefer, Marcellus, Michigan, August 31st. Sr. Jennie Booker, Monett, Missouri, August. Sr. Anna Neilsen, Nebraska City, Nebraska, September 7th.

Bro. John B. Roush, Fulton, Iowa, September 5th.

Bro. A. J. Mapes, of Westport, Missouri, has written a most interesting little work, entitled "Key to the Chronology of the Bible," which Bro. H. R. Mills, bookseller and stationer, at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, has on sale in his store at thirty-five cents per copy. It is well worth the money. The book is written in the form of a colloquy, and treats the question of the Chronology of the Bible in a novel and instructive way; well worth perusing and examination. Send for a copy and set your wits to work on an old, but ever new subject.

Sr. Agnes W. Durrett, of Rosston, Cook county, Texas, sends us a good letter under date of February 20th for which we have not space; being obliged to leave out many letters.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE MINUTES.

IF the secretaries of the several districts would notice the minutes of said conferences as they appear in the Herald, and follow out the general plan therein adopted in preparing their minutes for publication, it would save them as well as us much unnecessary labor. All that is necessary to be stated in the making up of such minutes are the names of the president and secretary, the reports of branches, briefly naming the changes by baptism, removal, death, or expulsion. The names of officers reporting and the number they have baptized, the Bishop's agent's report; the actual resolutions adopted; the time, place and date of adjournment, and the services during the session. A terse synopsis of the proceedings is all that should be sent for publication, while necessary particulars, in which the district alone is interested, should be recorded on the district records. No necessary item should be omitted, but outlines of elders reports, condition of branches, remarks of the president, etc., etc., unless of a very special nature requiring the attention of the general church, should be avoided in preparing the minutes for the Herald. Our space is limited and we hope that district secretaries will favor us as above.

SR. MARY EATON, of Independence, Missouri, has sent us the Kansas City Star, for August 16th, 1888, from which we clip the following. It shows, if true, (and it seems to be quite like human nature), a peculiar side to plural marriage not often remarked on in newspaper articles concerning it:

POLYGAMY.

HOW THE SYSTEM WORKS IN UTAH TERRITORY.

Mormon plural marriage is both overrated and underrated as a part of the Mormon polity. It is overrated as the whole of the system, and without which it will dissolve or will be unobjectionable. It is underrated as a practice not essentially belonging to their system, and which they will easily abandon. In the first place, if polygamy were to cease, all the objections would remain to the Mormon system as a theocratic dominion of absolute powers, hostile to all other people, and by its very nature in antagonism to the national government. In the second place, plurality of wives has been given to the Saints by revelation through the prophet and founder of their church, corroborated by the Jewish Scriptures, exemplified by the patriarchs of the chosen race, whose daily walk was close with God, made a Mormon duty by giving a higher being in heaven to the Saint and his wives in proportion to their number, elevated by the suffering of persecution, and strongly worked into the social life.

If they would give up polygamy, all objections to a Mormon state would remain. But they will not give it up. It is so much a part of their revealed religion that the first wife can not refuse consent to another without renouncing the church. The system makes her give the second and the following to her husband in the secret rites of the endowment house. And she finds it good to bring in a third to take down the airs of the second, and so on. Having had her turn in the man's love, she takes her turn in intrigue of spite and revenge. And the man, obliged by religious duty, watched over by the church authorities in case he can support another wife and does not gather her, and promised a higher being in the next world, where his wives are counted to his glory, finds also more social pleasures in plurality of wives in this world than is generally thought.

The common Gentile idea of the state of polygamous marriage is of the Bible patriarchs, and it is elevated above the social part. It thinks not of the difference between the monogamous marriage, by which the man "settles down," and the polygamous marriage in which the man still continues a marrying man—is still in the matrimonial market—is more in the market than a single man, and is soon looking for new loves, instead of patriarchally presiding over his household. Thus it is that the married Mormon is a society buck, and that he continues a buck in society as long as he lives. The society customs are formed to promote this. The theatre and the "social hall" for balls and other parties are regular means. Dancing is a means of polygamous grace. Etiquette requires the Saint to dance once with each wife, and then he is free to go for the maidens, leaving the wives to befellow the wall.

It is difficult to conceive the social difference made by a system in which the married man continues to be a married man and is always on the lookout for another. Without any compunction he goes about as a gallant or lover. He runs a courtship to any length and heat, while his wives are "enjoying themselves" at home. This liberty has evolved the custom of long courtships. How pleasant to the wives when the man dresses in his best and goes abroad seeking to devour. They can not ask him where he has spent the evening. He is doing a Saint's regular duty, and is therefore exalting their state of being in the next world. And the good man makes religious duty a carnal pleasure. This works a great deal of courting and many marrying chances to the girls. The old bucks and the young bachelors compete for them. And they accept the situation with alacrity, each thinking she will be the favorite wife and enjoy her triumph over the rest.

This is of polygamy at Salt Lake City and among the rich and well-to-do. But it has all degrees and phases according to human conditions and human nature, down to that in which the taking of another wife is the addition of another servant to support the man. Nor is this limited to the poor. Naturally it hardens the heart of the man towards his wives, makes him insensible to their feelings and puts them into a lower sphere. But besides being made a religious duty, it engages the pride, pleasure, passion and interest of the man. And they have no doubt of its righteousness. In conversation with one of the pioneers on their religion, the remark that polygamy did not seem essential, and the dropping of it might promote peace and their welfare, brought forth the impregnable answer: "Do you believe the Bible?" They are a fearfully biblical people. Mormonism is a bigger problem than is thought. It has come to stay.

THIS item is cut from the Chicago Tribune for September 6th:

"Salt Lake, Utah, Sep. 5th.—At a late hour last night Apostle Moses Thatcher was arrested at Logan, Utah, for unlawful cohabitation. He is one of the Twelve Apostles of the Mormon Church, and has two wives. He has avoided the officers for several years, having spent the greater part of his time in Mexico. He is wealthy.

Since the above was put in type the news is received by us that Mr. Thatcher has been discharged from custody, and released from the prosecution.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Henry Grim, wrote from Milan, Missouri, August 28th:

"I am still laboring in the gospel of Christ under many persecutions; notwithstanding all of these difficulties, Christ's sheep keep coming in. I baptized one man last Sunday, and one man and his wife yesterday; others say they will come in, two more have given their names for baptism. I look for Bro. Campbell next Sunday.

Bro. Robert Oehring wrote from Newark, Dakota, September 3d:

"I received a letter from Bro. Levi Phelps. He has baptized some of my German converts, near Forestville, Michigan. I thank God my labor has not been in vain; I would like to sell my farm and enter the field as long as I live; for I love to bring souls to Christ."

THE following will be interesting to the readers of the HERALD, not on account of the political faith of our respected step-father, but as an item of news respecting him, and his age:

"Nauvoo, Ills., Sep 3d.—By permission I send you the name of Maj. Lewis C. Bidamon of this city for registration on the Harrison and Morton roll of honor for 1888. The Major voted for Old Tippecanoe in 1836 and 1840, and is now enthusiastic in his praises of the grandson, Gen. Ben Harrison, and will vote for him this year.

"During the campaign of 1840 the Major lived at Canton, Fulton county, Illinois. He says he knew Gen. Palmer when Palmer peddled clocks, but that he can't vote for him. He says he had one knockdown in defense of Old Tippecanoe in 1840, and that he wouldn't stand back from another now if necessary for Gen. Ben. He was Major and Colonel of one of Illinois' State militia regiments in the old times.

"After the death of Joseph Smith, the prophet, Mr. Bidamon moved to this city and married the wife of the deceased prophet, and after her death, in 1879, remarried, and is still to be found at the old home. He will be eighty-three years old January 16th, 1889.

"BROOKS R. HAMILTON."

SR. MARY EATON, in a card from Independence, Missouri, September 3d, says:

"I notice a grave and blinding mistake in the letter I sent you, and which is published in Herald for September 1st. My last quotation from the Book of Mormon is given as 2d Book of Nephi, chapter 10, paragraphs four and five; whereas it should have read 2 Book of Nephi, chapter 11, paragraphs four and six. I do not remember of making such a mistake in the quotation; if I did it is a sad one; and I hope that it can be corrected."

We do not know how the mistake occurred. The copy of Sr. Eaton's letter has gone the way of other "dead copy," and helped to kindle the fire under the boiler that drives the engine and the presses, so that we can not compare with the proofs. We are as careful as we can be that proof shall follow the copy; but mistakes will occur. We do all we can to correct the error by publishing Sr. Eaton's card.

LITTLE CAPS.

We are not very frequently abroad upon the street, neither very observing when there—a bad habit we are free to confess for we think men and women should go through the world with open eyes—but one custom has become so common in the past months that it forces itself upon our attention and has become suggestive of serious thoughts. Some weeks ago, a bright little boy, a particular friend of ours, called, with his papa to see us. Drawing the little one towards us as usual for a kiss, our eyes rested upon his cap, upon the front of which was printed "CLEVELAND AND THURMAN," in clear, bold letters.

"What is this, Willie, you have on your cap?" we asked the little man, and he with lisping accent undertook to pronounce the names, hard for him, and a flush spread over his face showing that in his little heart emotions were stirred which lit his face with pride as he answered me. This seems all right and proper in its place. The father of our little friend is a conscientious democrat, believing firmly that his party is right, and he intends to make a democrat of his boy so far at least as any influence which early training may have, can be brought to bear. We do not propose to discuss the probabilities that in a few years the father may be constrained to denounce this same democratic party, as in times past other parties have been repudiated, but to ask the thoughtful, consideration of parents, fathers and mothers, to the lesson here taught.

Another little boy, not yet so old nor as active as our little Willie, but pale from the effects of recent illness, we saw in his father's arms, and we read upon the little cap, "HARRISON." That was all. There was no light in the sad, weary eyes, nor flush of pride upon the pale cheek; but the little cap rested upon a brow where the shadow of death had lately lain, and over which the angel of mercy had bent with healing balm.

As we sit here this morning thinking about the little boys and their campaign caps, other scenes and other thoughts crowd rapidly upon us; and we must confess that they are not all bright, happy ones. How many little boys born in the church are wearing them? How many are being taught their first lessons in party strife, even before their lips can frame to speak the name of party leaders?

"The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Are the children of the kingdom as wise in things pertaining to the kingdom, as in things pertaining to the world? There is a fierce contest awaiting these young soldiers, a campaign before the importance of which all earthly ones sink into insignificance. Those tender feet are destined for long and weary marches through an enemy's land. The roads are rough and uneven; the way many times is beset with temptation and snares. Are they being taught the name of their leader? Is it a household word, so familiar that their faces light up with pleasure when it is spoken? Are we expending as much energy and zeal to teach them lessons of the lowly Nazarene, as we are to thus early instil into their young minds lessons of party pride and zeal? Would God that fathers might be as earnestly, as zealously, as early awake to the interest of their little ones in things pertaining to spiritual life, as in things pertaining to this life, which perish with the using. Then would they bind upon the young brows of their sons, helmets of salvation, and early equip them to fight the battles of King Emanuel.

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for September 27th.
Memory texts, Luke 11: 13; Acts 2: 39. This begins the fourth Thursday of the month; the subject will be for the members of our families by name. For the families of each other; and for the ministry and for the youths of the church in general.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Slocumb, Nebraska City, Nebraska, writes:—"Since I last wrote you I have been very near to death's door, but God has mercifully spared my life, although it was my desire to depart, for

I longed to meet my companion who has gone before and who is waiting for me. The will of the Lord be done, but I pray for help and strength to enable me to endure in the time of trouble. I still attend Sunday School and am in the Book of Mormon class, taught by Bro. Goldsmith. I have never grown tired of serving my Master."

[Dear sister, may you be enabled to realize that God has a purpose in lengthening out your days and though he may never reveal it to you on earth, he will beyond the veil. May he bless you and give you grace and patience, even as your day demands is our earnest prayer.—ED.]

WELLMONVILLE, Kans., Aug. 15th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I feel impressed to say a few words to those situated like myself, far away from the companionship of Saints, and among the world. Be of good cheer, the Lord watches over us and knows our every trial. How many like myself often think, Oh if I could only express my thoughts like such a one can, I would write and try to encourage others. How can we expect to do so if we do not try? Remember we receive just what we live for. Let us all strive and pray for wisdom, that we may obtain knowledge in the gospel of Christ.

I would like to tell you just how I am situated. Our neighborhood is composed mostly of Methodists and Free Methodists, who are very bitter against our cause; and some have even gone so far as to tell us in plain terms that we are of the devil and are going to h—, but thank God, we know better, and also know that if we remain faithful, to the end, eternal life will be our reward. We scarcely have any company, and for a while we kept to ourselves; but we begin to see differently. We now attend the M. E. Sabbath School; and in the future we mean to let our light shine, as becomes Saints, and try at all times to return good for evil, and by kindness, love and meekness, to win souls for Christ. Last Sunday they appointed me leader of the choir, and I mean to strive to do my best. I ask an interest in your faith and prayers that I may be kept faithful; and if I can be the means of bringing any one to see the light of Christ, how great will be my reward. I can say ever since I made this resolve I feel happier and more contented with my lot. What matters it where our lot is cast in this life? It is only for a short time at best. Let us each and every one live so that when we are called away, we will be ready to go and dwell in the home prepared for the faithful, is the prayer of your sister in the bonds of love.
CLARA M. EBERT.

Dear Sister Ebert:—We can not refrain from expressing our sincere pleasure at the course adopted by you; and we believe it to be the only one calculated to break down prejudice, and by the contrast of light against darkness, show to the world whose hand is holding the lamp replenished with oil, kept trimmed and burning, and they themselves as those awaiting the coming of the Bridegroom. May the Lord bless you with wisdom, and give you words of answer at all times, which no man shall be able to gain-say. We would entreat you, pray much for the gift of wisdom, and answer in meekness when asked a reason for the hope of eternal life. If we do not mingle with people, how shall we win them? If you find anything better than we have, take it at their hands; but if your light only reveals their darkness (as the true light ever must do), then gird up your loins anew; thank God for light, and walk as becomes a child of God. Peace and the blessing of God be with you.—Ed.

In connection with Sr. Ebert's letter, we cannot refrain from making a brief extract from the letter of a friend who recently returned to her home after a visit in Lamoni, remarking that she, like sister Ebert, is living where no others (except her mother) of the same faith resides. "It seemed at first that I could hardly endure it to live here, and Sunday when the bell rung for Sunday School, I went with the feeling one has when he goes to perform a duty because it lies before him, and the Thursday-night prayer-meeting seemed so lifeless—but then I must be on hand and strive to drop the word in season when the opportunity does come. Sr. Walker, I know we are told not to let the right hand know what the left hand does, but whenever I find any one ready to listen to our teachings I feel so glad that I want to speak of it. When I reached Bethany Junction a woman poorly dressed, came and sat down beside me. She was making some enquiries concerning the train, and with the motive of aiding her, I spoke to her. From that we continued talking and I learned from her remarks that she was a religious person. She remarked that she was from a place formerly settled by Mormons. I said, "I suppose then you have heard some great Mormon stories." She said, "No, I have never seen a Mormon nor read a Mormon book, but have often wished I could." She made some further remarks, and when she had finished I said, "Well, just look at me and you'll see a Mormon, and if you want a book on the subject, I will give you that little pink book in my shawl strap. Her face showed her surprise but I quickly explained our position as a people and she travelled with me to Humeston—we talked all the way. She was unmarried, poor and sick, afflicted with a tumor, and in my heart I pitied her. I know she believed me, and when she left she said she had much enjoyed our conversation. When she rose to go she turned back and kissed me; the acquaintance of an hour but I understood the feeling that prompted the act, and I prayed God to so lead her that she might know her Redeemer and "rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." I looked all the way home but though the trains were crowded all the way and I had several companions, they came and went in their fashion and pride, blessed with health and strength, and not another could I find to whom I might speak as to that poor lonely creature."

GLIDDEN, Iowa, July 29th.

Dear Sister Frances:—We wish our names enrolled with the other sisters of the Prayer League. We have been afflicted and still are suffering from the effects of disease. I am a victim of consumption, and my pain is great. I have been administered to and received temporary relief. I wish your prayers in my behalf that I may be patient and wait the good time of the Lord.

Sister Thompson wishes the prayers of the sisters in behalf of her daughter, who is afflicted with saint vitus dance. The promise through the Spirit was that she should be healed; and we want your prayers that we may have the faith that will take no denial. Sister Thompson is almost alone in the work. She seldom has the privilege of meeting with the Saints, but we have meeting here almost every Sunday.

This is my first attempt to write to the Home Column. Make whatever use of this you may deem proper.

With hope of the rest bye and bye, we remain your sisters in bonds of love.

PLANO, Illinois, August 31st.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I am thankful for such a good paper as the Herald. I love to read it, and especially the Home Column. Many times I have shed tears of joy reading the sister's letters. The Prayer League will do much good if entered into with pure hearts. I know this work is of God; I have been healed when I have been sick; and he has heard my prayers many times when I have asked Him to restore my children to health. Once, when in Chicago, I was taken sick and sent for a doctor (although I never had any faith in them) I wanted to know what was the matter, so I could write to my husband. The doctor said it was typhoid fever, and he could perhaps cure me in three weeks. As soon as he had left I told mother to send for the elders. They came and administered to me, and as soon as they were through, I sat up. The next day I was up and out of the house; and I thank God for his goodness to me. I have been tried severely; but it has done me good. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." I want to go on in this good cause. I want to do good at all times; the heart is willing but the flesh is weak. My husband does not belong to the church; but my prayers are that his eyes may be opened, that he may repent before it is too late.

May God help us to overcome all evil with good, and help us bring our children up right, is my prayer.

HULDAH O. FOGG.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—As I am often comforted and refreshed by your welcome letters in the Herald, I thought I would add my testimony to the "cloud of witnesses" that are coming forth from time to time, bearing witness to the truth of the latter day work. Although I am alone in the faith, afflicted, and sometimes sorrowful, yet I can rejoice in the knowledge of the restored gospel; and in the Lord's marvelous mercies to me, one of the least of his children. I might tell you of some of the benefits I have received in obeying the law of tithing. Although believing it for years, I never obeyed it as I ought till last year. I paid $8.00 for tithing, and have received many blessings for it. Apple trees on one place that had not borne for years, are loaded now with fruit, and in other ways the Lord has fulfilled his promises to me that he makes to those who obey that law.

I am earnestly hoping and praying that some good elder will come this way soon to break the bread of life to my neighbors. Early in the summer I had $4.00 paid me on a debt, $2.00 of which was sent to the Bishop for tithing; the other two I kept by me, hoping some of the elders would come this way, and then I would have some means by me to help them with. But weeks passed by and no elder came to preach the true gospel, to feed my hungry soul. But I am not discouraged. I still hope for the true gospel to be preached here, for I believe, dear sisters, that the Lord has duly promised me that he will do a work of his Spirit in this place.

I have two little ones given me to train for eternity, and daily I feel the need of help from on high, to train them aright. I was thankful to hear from Bro. Lanphear once more, as he was my father in the gospel. I believe the Prayer League will be productive of much good, for much good comes through prayer.

Before I sent the two dollars for tithing, I thought to myself I could get some of my hard washings done with that two dollars; but finally made up my mind it should go for tithing, even if I did suffer from washing for four with a lame back, lame side, etc. But mark the goodness of the Lord; my washing, that gave me much suffering before, since that time has not tried me any more than machine sewing, or any common housework. I mention this as only one instance of the Lord's marvelous goodness to me in my afflictions.

Can not Bro. Roth, or some elder in eastern Iowa, come here this fall to preach the gospel? I am confident they would gain souls for their hire. I can truly say I hunger and thirst for more righteousness.

My letter is longer than I intended. Pray for me, dear Saints, that my faith fail not, and that I may come off conqueror, yea more than conqueror, through him that hath loved us. The Lord bless you.

Your sister,

ELLA M. FUHR.

BEATTIE, Kans.

Dear Sisters:—The Herald is all the preacher I have to cheer and encourage me. I have not heard any preaching for six years until this summer Bro. Short came to my house. How much I prize the sisters' Prayer League, and I pray to the Lord to bless you all; and may we all be one in Christ Jesus, and hold out faithful and do a lasting work. I desire to do all I can, for I love this latter day work, and I feel that I have not done anything compared to what I should have done. It has always been my lot to be separated from the Saints, and be deprived of church privileges. Let us try to keep our lamps trimmed and burning, and oil enough to replenish them.

Ever praying the Lord will bless his people, I remain your sister in Christ,

E. HIGHTOWER.

NOT IN VAIN.

Not a prayer that hath ascended,
Has been offered up in vain;
Not a seed thy hand hath scattered
But shall bring you golden grain.

Not a cup of cooling water,
Offered in the name of love;
Not one little act of kindness
But is registered above.

When the Reaper comes to gather
Up thy lost and scattered sheaves,
Thou shalt hear the benediction
Which the faithful one receives.

Reaping through the countless ages,
Where thy busy hands have strewn;
Thou shalt find abundant harvest
From the good seed thou hast sown.

DISCUSSION AT STREETS-VILLE, IOWA.

On the first of March, 1887, I was converted to Methodism and was as faithful to that belief as the pastor, proving honesty, charity, and sincerity in every effort which I believe to have supposed by most members of that church to be considerable for a person only on probation; so much so that after some time had passed I was appointed class leader of the Methodist Mission, and discharged that duty faithfully until two or three months had elapsed, during the latter part of which time a new gospel had presented itself to me for careful investigation through Elder D. K. Dodson of the Latter Day Saints.

After establishing its claims and giving myself ample time for reflection, I concluded that a treasure had surely become disclosed to me and to be liberal with my class, believing at the same time that it was not unreasonable, nor unscriptural to bring glad tidings of great joy to the people, so at each meeting I would share with them what I had recently learned. Later I concluded at the voluntary request of many of the members of the mission to procure the services of Bro. Dodson to deliver an address. This being done it was announced that Bro. Dodson would preach on the following Sunday. The evening came and the house was filled with anxious hearers, and the first principles of the gospel were expounded and listened to with the closest attention. The preaching was appreciated by all who had never been prejudiced, but as it happened there were a few to ridicule, who would not listen to the truth, nor let others hear it, but carried the news to the pastor that Mormonism, delusion, imposture, fanaticism, etc., were being preached at the mission, and that if it occurred a second time that they would withdraw their names from the church record.

Shortly after this I was notified that I had been excluded from the church and a successor appointed. This did not discourage me but gave me additional courage, and after some time had passed and appeals were made almost daily for more orthodox preaching, I secured the Streetsville School house, located in the vicinity of the Mission, and consulted Bro. Dodson concerning preaching, and he consented at once. I gave out the appointment that meeting would be held at the above place, setting time etc. The class leader on hearing this gave out meeting for the same evening in order to conflict with us; and at their meeting there were eight, and we were blessed with the presence of one hundred and six. I still continued searching the sacred volume till I was absolutely satisfied that the work was divine, and on the 7th of August, 1887, I was baptized in Crescent City by Elder D. K. Dodson and confirmed by him and Bro. Woodhead of Maryville, Missouri. After considerable time I was again persuaded by many petitioners for a series of meetings, and remembering that if bread is required a stone ought not be substituted, I made applications for the Tipton building which is in the same vicinity, which was gladly granted us free of charge as long as we wanted it. I then published it extensively that there would be a series of meetings held in the above building for eight successive evenings, to be conducted by Elder D. K. Dodson. At the close of those meetings Rev. James Napier, a representative of the Baptist church, disputed the correctness of such teaching, and also published in the Council Bluffs Herald that the doctrine was false.

After Bro. Dodson had heard it he at once issued a challenge and published it through the Herald, that if Rev. Napier thought himself able to overthrow the doctrine that he could choose the subjects, name the time and place, and that he would be there ready to defend his teachings. The Rev. Napier published an acceptance, and myself and Bro. Dodson visited him for the purpose of drawing up the propositions, and deciding on the time and place. But when he saw Bro. Dodson meant business he declined, declaring his inability; but that he would get a gentleman by the name of N. M. Allen from Fremont county, this state, a college student, one whose time is almost wholly devoted to discussions upon various doctrines. It was agreed that Bro. Dodson be allowed the same privilege to choose a man.

Bro. Dodson knowing that Elder Peak, of Crescent City, had been appointed by General Conference to labor in this district, at once went to Crescent City to engage his services. After Bro. Peak had read the following propositions he at once consented. Subjects: First, Ancient apostasy of the church organized by Jesus Christ and his apostles. Second, The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints the only true church of Christ on earth. Disputed by N. M. Allen, Baptist. W. E. Peak affirms. Shortly after this it was made known that Rev. Thomas P. Jones, of the Baptist church, was chosen as moderator by the negative and myself by the affirmative. Mr. Jones and myself soon decided on Mr. J. M. Holliday, a newspaper reporter of this city, to act as a third. The School-house was secured for the evenings of August 21st, 22d and 23d, 1888, and the news was at once published, which spread over a vast territory in a very limited time. The disputants were punctual, not forgetting to note the punctuality of a vast attendance also. After some preliminary business it was agreed that each disputant should be entitled to two half hour speeches each evening, after which the chairman, J. M. Holliday, opened the meeting in proper order and introduced the speakers, calling Bro. Peak to take the stand.

I can not go into details and give the remarkable points and minute description of the arguments on account of insufficient space, but each disputant occupied his time to the minute. The debate was orderly, positive, definite, and to the point. Just prior to the conclusion of the last speeches it was agreed that Rev. Allen might have opportunity to show that the church he represented was the only true church on earth, and that it never apostatized, but continued to exist with all its ordinances, signs, blessings and complete organization, etc. At the conclusion of the first two propositions and after Rev. Allen had graduated us all in Greek and Latin, he said in his closing remark that he could prove from the history of Joseph Smith written by Tullidge and indorsed by the church that his opponent represented that Joseph Smith instituted polygamy. Bro. Peak at once challenged him for a two weeks' discussion on that, for said he, "The more you rub truth the brighter it shines;" but he declined. At the close of the last proposition Rev. Allen said he could not stay any longer, that he had to attend a basket picnic, and bade the congregation good-bye after thanking everybody for their presence and attention saying that that was the tenth discussion for him.

The six sessions were attended by as many as could conveniently get into the building, and the congregation was composed of sectarians, non-conformists, and Saints from miles around.

After this discussion had been concluded I learned the opinions of a great many of those who were present. They gave Bro. Peak the credit of being absolutely victorious in every point, and that he endeavored to submit truth in its purity and simplicity. In conclusion I must add that the Baptists will never get a convert if he or she attended the discussion; this can not be successfully contradicted. But I am able to give the names of six or eight who will soon be baptized into the Latter Day Saints' Church, and many others that are investigating.

AMASA A. RICHARDSON.

The following newspaper clippings are appended:

A VERY interesting religious discussion will be commenced in Streetsville this evening. A Baptist and a Mormon preacher will take part in the debate. One is from McPaul and the other from Crescent City. Four addresses of one-half hour each will be delivered at a meeting and three moderators to preside. The meetings will be held in the School-house. All are invited.

THE discussion under progress at Streetsville last evening was witnessed by a vast multitude whose closest attention was held until 10:25 o'clock. The members of the choir are as follows: Misses Bertha Schickatanz, Elsie Rockwell, Cora Jones, Cora Mikesell, Della Mikesell and Messrs James Draper and Jack Umble.

THIS evening at eight o'clock sharp there will be a discussion commenced between Elder Peak, of Crescent City, a representative of the Latter Day Saints' church, and Rev. Allen, of McPaul, who represents the Baptist denomination. Subjects:

Firstly: "Ancient apostasy of the church organized by Jesus Christ and His apostles."

Secondly: "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints the only true church of Christ on earth."

Three moderators will preside over the meeting, namely, J. M. Holiday, T. P. Jones and A. A. Richardson. This debate will be held in the Streetsville School-house for three successive evenings, each disputant entitled to two half hour speeches. Everybody invited.

CUBA, Kans., Aug. 27th.

Dear Herald:—Home again, since the 11th instant, and confined closely to the house most of the time with neuralgia and a severe cold. During my western trip I spoke eighteen times, besides a number of talks with men of prominence, in places more or less public. Prejudice was unbounded, and for a time stood boldly to the front, but before I left, all opposition ceased; and men were heard to say, "That man preaches a logical doctrine;" "A sensible religion;" and "its all Bible." There is a field to be opened in southern Nebraska that is ripening for the harvest; and if the presidency so elect, I will gladly take that as my field of labor until the spring conference, (desiring the privilege of visiting Lamoni, Iowa, via Allendale, Missouri). I have got to go into the ministry or go to the wall; and I prefer the ministry, for therein I find a bleasing. Pursuant to this idea I am arranging my secular affairs to devote my whole time to the work. I am now so far restored to health as to begin preparations for a renewal of labor. I am thinking of visiting Barnes and Blue Rapids, the latter part of this week; after which I shall turn my face westward to meet the Saints in quarterly conference.

Until September 17th my address will be Guide Rock, Webster county, Nebraska.

JOHN D. BENNETT.

NORTH FORSTER, N. S. W., Aug. 4th.

Bro. Joseph:—The brethren sent by the April Conference arrived in Australia on the Alameda, the latter part of June. By arrangements with them, they met us at Newcastle, on the way to this place, where the elders and other representatives of the four branches in New South Wales were requested to meet and form a district. The branches were well represented and the representatives were duly instructed how to act upon different matters that were expected to come before the conference. It seemed that they were all led to see alike both in branch and district capacity, so that everything was done decently and in order. Indeed, all seemed to think that the work of a conference should be done for the greatest good of the greatest number; that is with one exception.

As this colony is so much larger than Victoria, it was thought best to form the district of the northern half of New South Wales, Newcastle being the southern line. There are a few members of the church in Sydney—not enough to form a branch, and they do not choose to unite with the nearest branch, which is at Hamilton, north of Newcastle. Having organized the branches of Australia into districts, and got them in as good working order as possible, I believe that my work here is about done, at least so I feel. There is some little trouble in one or two branches that I may succeed in settling at least as long as I stay in the branches. The majority of the Saints in Australia, are an excellent people, and in intelligence, faith, and zeal, will compare well with the church anywhere. But there are a few of the strangest, most incomprehensible spirits here that I ever met with. They had almost vexed the soul out of Bro. Burton, and they have tried me to the utmost. As usual they are the most self-righteous souls to be found anywhere. Everybody is ignorant, erring, and unworthy the favor of God but themselves.

The brethren who have come here have given much satisfaction thus far; and the intimations of the Spirit to me have been that they will have their troubles also. I am quite well satisfied with them, and can leave the work in their hands. They have been holding a series of meetings some ten miles farther up the Woolambra River, which I will request them to write concerning. Bro. Burton and family leave here with the confidence and esteem of all whose good opinion is worth having. They have made many friends and but few foes. Our loss will be California's gain I suppose.

I am somewhat inclined to think lately that I may be let to return home by next spring and if so it is necessary that I should spend several months in the South Sea Islands before I return. I do not desire to return to America yet. I am well pleased with the Saints here, but I do not like this field. I never wanted to come here, and only came because I had something to do here that seemed not to be required at the hands of others and that work is nearly done. I do not consider this to be my field of labor. As far as personal comfort, convenience, and pleasant associations are concerned this would be a far more preferable field than the South Sea Islands, but with all the vexations, inconveniences, and continual care, anxiety and labor there, I prefer that field, because my heart is in that field, and it is not in this. Brethren Wight and Butterworth will feel just the opposite and will like this mission—not that they can like the Saints any more than I do, for that is not possible, but because the Lord has selected this field for them to work in, and He has only had a specific work for me to do here beside holding a supervision of the field for awhile. According to a vision that I had before I left America, I should have come here first for a little while, and then have gone to Tahiti again. But it was thought best for me to go to Tahiti first, so I can only fulfil the remainder of the vision, and to Tahiti I must return.

I am not idle here, although but few are baptized. I am doing all that seems to be my duty. I am pleased with your editorial of June 2d, on "The Right of Membership," which I have just read—it is solid and sensible. I like your views on "In Righteousness," in Herald of June 23d. I remember how I felt and what I thought the first time I heard the motion made in 1866. The thought that struck me then and often since, was that those who made such a motion and those who voted for it, thought that they were standing on sure footing, and could not fall, while the authorities of the church were liable at any time to "err from the way," and follow in the footsteps of Brigham Young and company. It smacks a little of self-righteousness to say the least. I think, however, that in many cases, it has become a stereotyped expression, and that those who offer the motion and those who sustain it by vote, do not consider how it really sounds. The Reorganization has demonstrated in divers ways, and time and again, that it will not sustain or uphold any one in unrighteousness and that being clearly understood, that hereafter the motion should be to sustain the authorities, and when they act unrighteously to deal with them according to the law.

I learn from a letter from Bro. W. H. Kelley that some are troubled about my position on the Sabbath question. If any one can tell what my position is they will certainly enlighten me. I was trying to find a definite, and certain, and satisfactory position, but before I had said half I wanted to say, I was shut off by the revelation of 1887, and believing that to be the word of the Lord, I have endeavored to let the matter rest; yet others, or those who seem to have a definite position on Sunday side of the question have not heeded the mind of the Lord it seems. If I reached any position at all, it would be something like this, that the seventh and the first day ought to be kept. I have as yet not felt condemned for observing the first day as does the church, nor do I feel condemned for not observing the seventh day as do some others. On all and every subject which the church holds as a matter of positive faith—and which is essentially the gospel—and is necessary to salvation I am as firm and as surely settled as any one in the church. On matters that are purely speculative, as, for instance, who the woman and man child of Revelations twelfth chapter is, I hold the right to have and express my opinion, and that opinion does not agree to the theory that the man child is the priesthood. I simply do not and can not believe it, for reasons that I conceive to be unanswerable. I am somewhat unsettled in my mind as to whether the events illustrated by the woman and her experiences are all accomplished yet or not—in fact I think not. And now I will state why I have written on some of these matters. You will remember that about a year ago, you suggested the idea of something being written, that would be original—fresh, that would suggest thought, etc.—so much having been written on "the first principles" as they are called. (I do not give your exact words of course). So I write something that would set some to thinking, when lo, I am accused of writing "without thought," &c. The trouble is, I think too freely and too deeply for some. If I did not think, but force my mind to run in the groove that Parley P. Pratt, or Orson Pratt, or somebody else who wrote their opinions of certain prophecies—visions, &c., in the "old church"—were accustomed to run in, why I would be orthodox of course. Now the fact is, I do not accept any man's opinion, unless it comports with reason and common sense, and there are some opinions that are expressed both by elders in the "old church" and in this one, that I do not swallow, nor do I expect to find any church on earth able to make me endorse them. I never have submitted to gag law nor do I ever expect to. After twenty-two years of defence of the doctrine of the church, as expressly taught in the books of the church, I am informed that my influence is hurt in some quarters, because forsooth, I do not agree with somebody's opinions on matters that God has never chosen to give clear light upon. I have long ago learned to distinguish between faith and opinion. Upon the former we have no right to differ, upon the latter we have. I think it is nearly time, that a convention of the leading authorities should be held, and every question of importance upon which difference of opinions arise, should be thoroughly examined; or if the subjects are not of sufficient importance for that labor to be expended upon them, let it be understood that the individual who expresses an opinion expresses it for himself, and himself alone. No one need blame the Quorum of the Twelve for any views that I may express that may be conceived heresy. I have not asked their endorsement of anything that I have written, because I write in my own individual name, and not in theirs. I think that I know what the church has declared authoritatively in General Conference to be the law and order, and doctrine of the church. It has not decided as yet, that the Seventh Day Sabbath, has been by command of God superseded by the First Day and that the latter is to be observed in the place of the other. The Lord has said, "that until further revelation is received, or the quorums of the church are assembled to decide concerning the law in the church articles and covenants, the Saints are to observe the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's day as a day of rest, as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments." This I fully and heartily endorse, and beyond that no one has any business to interfere. The church has never decided that the "wheat and tares" apply to the state of the church only, nor has it said, that the "woman" of Revelations twelfth chapter means the church of Jesus Christ, and the "man child" is the "priesthood," and I doubt if it ever will take such ground by the direction of God's Spirit. But I have made up my mind that if any subjects that might spur thought, and would savor of progressive or advanced thought are ventilated through the Herald that some one else may try their hand, and as my brain is not moulded as all others are, that it had better remain quiet and let others do the thinking, who have nothing new or fresh to present, or who fear to disturb the equanimity of those who do not want to think different to their grandfathers.

Your brother in Christ,

THOS. W. SMITH.

ADELPHI, Iowa, September 2d.

Editor Herald:—Allow me to enquire through the Herald of one Wm. H. Armor, whose name appeared in the "Roll of Honer." He served in the same company I did, which was Company A., 1st Infantry Missouri State Militia. Please state that I wish his address, and greatly oblige an enquiring brother.

JOHN BOYER.

LONE ELM, Tenn., Aug. 24th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I rejoice in the gospel of Jesus Christ and am thankful that it was made known to me while I was nearly in despair in Brighamite bondage through you being an instrument in the hands of God. I do not think I shall ever forget the day when those chains were made loose and I was made free in the fulness of the everlasting gospel. Soon after you baptized me I returned home to my native land where I have succeeded in working up an opening at last, but I had a hard time to do it, and old Bro. John Thomas being sent down on a mission to Tennessee and Kentucky, I sent for him and Bro. P. B. Seaton from off the same mission. They arrived here the first of August, got a Northern Methodist house to commence in, though the turnout is generally small but very attentive, with Satan raging on the other hand, which is nothing new to us, especially in new fields like this. So onward with the work in spite of all the combined powers against us. We have not got into Lexington, our county seat, as yet, but we have fired close all around the place with several additions, and them of good material. One excellent man, a leader in the Methodist denomination, also one man, a leader from the Baptist ranks, a very useful man for the advancement of this work. Seven have been added to our ranks, and the outlook is very good for others soon. August 15th, 1888, Bro. John Thomas organized a branch of seven members which will be known as the Haley's Creek branch. It is located on the Lexington and Perryville road six miles due east of Lexington. If any of you are passing we would be very much pleased if you would stop with us, especially Bro. Gillen; we hope to see him soon. Since our organization three more have been added, making our number ten, also Bro. James H. Scott, the man that met you in the depot at Antonio, Colorado, who took care of you. He was baptized the other day by Bro. Thomas and ordained an elder; a good and useful man too to help forward this work. Bro. Seaton had to return to his work nearer home. Bro. Thomas is yet with us, but will leave us soon. We do regret to give him up. He is a good man and a good worker, but he has to return to other fields of labor according to appointment, but I hope for his early return, and I pray that great success may attend him as an instrument in the hands of God. We had another addition since I commenced to write this, making our new branch number eleven. May our God speed the work in this poor old country, but they have closed most all public houses against us, but this is nothing more than we expected, for this gospel always draws the line of distinction wherever it is preached. As most of us are young in this cause we desire the prayers of the whole church in our behalf.

S. REID.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Sep. 10th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Bro. H. C. Bronson and myself held meetings here nightly, last week, beginning Monday, and on Thursday Bro. Bronson baptized seven. On Friday he went to Omaha, to labor there, and in that region, while I continued evening services here, and concluded my work here yesterday, preaching at 11 a. m., speaking on temperance at 4 p. m., in the Opera Hall, under the auspices of the Red Ribbon Club, and preaching to a full congregation in the Saints' Chapel in the evening. Our week's labor in this city has been pleasant to us, and we hope it may prove profitable to the people. I go from here to labor for a week in the "Gospel Tent" at Bro. William Leeka's, near Plum Hollow, Iowa, and then seek to put in my time in gospel work where I can do the most good, whether that shall be at Lamoni or elsewhere. In every direction there are inviting fields, and from many of these come pressing, urgent calls for faithful, humble, earnest workers. All who can should work with their might, "the Lord working with them, confirming the word."

Yours,

W. W. BLAIR.

LLANELLY, Wales, August 18th.

Bro. Joseph and Blair:—We left New York on the 28th ult., and arrived at Liverpool on the 5th instant, and at Morriston, Wales, on the 6th; all in good health. We had some good meetings with the Saints at Morriston, and came to this place on the 15th.

E. A. Davis left for Cardiff with a view to settle there for the time being. From what I can learn the work has suffered loss by deaths, emigration and in other ways since I was here before. I am not able as yet to inform you of the true condition of the work here, but expect to soon. It is as hard now as ever to find places to preach so as to reach the people. School houses are not open to anybody to preach in, and the different denominations have their own meeting houses, but they will not permit any but their own kind to enter. I hope the Lord will open up some way to overcome this difficulty in the near future so we can reach the people. This has always been a great drawback in this country, and for that reason a great deal of out door preaching has been done here in the past during the summer months. But even this does not seem to bring the gospel near enough to the people, for their pride will not permit them to stop to hear on the streets. We will endeavor to do the best we can under the circumstances to revive and establish the work in this once favored nation.

The Utah faction has about fourteen missionaries in Wales; and they do all they can to gather in every shape conceivable. Their policy is is not to maintain branch organizations here but to emigrate the individuals as soon as they possibly can. And I presume that some of their surplus church property in Utah is applied in this way. We have to cope with the old delusive idea that we "are all the same," as in America. Hope to conquer this by fair means as we did there; but we have a hard task before us. Pray for the work here. Kindest regards for all.

Address for the present, J. T. DAVIS,
No. 23 Wychtree-st., Morriston, Wales.

BLENHEIM, Ont., Aug. 27th.

Bro. Blair:—I left home about May 12th, went to Egremont township, in the county of Grey, where I was billed to meet a Mr. Prosser, of the "Christian Church of Ontario," in debate, (as heretofore noticed in Herald). That over, and no bones broken, I went to the north peninsula of Bruce county and made an opening among some of my friends. I remained there till the last of June, baptized seven, met with eggs, etc., at the instigation of professed Christians. Came to Bothwell, via London, where I remained a few days, preaching by the way as I came. From Bothwell to Chatham, coming by way of Lindsley branch where we preached; found Saints all well and doing well on the whole in each place; except Bro. A. Leverton and Bro. Porter, of Bothwell. They are, however, improving in health. At Lindsley we were made to rejoice with the good news that Bro. George Green had come back into the fold of the Master, having by the sad experience of years gone by, learned much that will make him better for the service in days to come; and from the manifestations of the Spirit to me he may yet if he will, do a work for his Master. At Chatham some things have occurred which were rather of a hurtful nature to the parties.

The brethren C. W. and Isaac Sifton, and Louis May, (wife of C. W. Sifton), have left the faith they once professed to love; and to which they each bore a strong testimony. They say they have found a man by the name of George G. Schweinfurth, of Rockford, Illinois, who claims to be Jesus Christ, the Son of God. The Sifton brethren, especially C. W., now testifies that this "Christ" recognizes the fact that Joseph Smith was a prophet sent of God to organize his church, and to make ready his way; and that the latter day work is a preparatory work to enable those who are really true Saints to receive him. This "Christ" was converted by a woman in Alpena, Michigan. She was a Congregational minister's wife who became dissatisfied with the churches and commenced a series of services peculiar to her own conception of holiness, and this Mr. Schweinfurth became her disciple. She claimed to be immortal and to be Christ; but she died of consumption, which lost many of her followers. They saw the fraud, however. To deceive the few who remained a new plea was set up. It is now claimed that she was the woman of Revelations, twelfth chapter; "who was to bring forth a man child who was to rule all nations," etc.; therefore this Mr. Schweinfurth is the man child, or according to their interpretation, he is "Jesus Christ;" as they claim that the man child of Revelations, twelfth chapter, represents a literal man. She is gone, dead, she has not fled into the wilderness.

So far as the Saints are concerned in the Chatham branch, they called the branch together, asked for a court of elders; after due labor court assembled, tried the case on the charge of heresy and apostasy which was fully proved by the testimony of the accused and witnesses; the finding of the court was that as C. W. Sifton had been ordained a priest in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, that he remain silent for three months, his license being in the hands of the district president during the three months. Such means as are lawful will be taken to try to restore them, which if not successful, and they still remain obdurate, and maintain their views they will be excommunicated. This has been adopted by the branch.

There is some interest manifested in the Chatham branch, with the prospect of some additions in the future. A good many felt interested in the late investigation, which called for some doctrinal discourses on the signs of Christ's second coming; which were delivered to the satisfaction of all, in and out of the church. I have lately come to Blenheim where I am to preach for a few days then go to Pardo's, Baddertown, and possibly to Tilbury Centre, &c. Then return to Chatham and as the fall conferences will be on about that time I may attend both; unless being in a new place it would not be wise for me to leave at the time. There is not so great an interest in the Kent and Elgin district as at this time last year; still the calls for preaching in new parts as well as in branches are about the same, and cannot be filled without more men to do it.

My health this summer is better than for years, and I feel splendid in the work. I hear several, myself included, express appreciation of Bro. T. W. Smith's late article, "What laws are we under?" Will Bro. J. H. Lake please note that I do not know his address. Mine is always at Alliston, Ontario. Box 30.

Your co-laborer and brother,

J. A. McINTOSH.

GUERNEVILLE, Cal., Sept. 6th.

Dear Herald:—Left Bro. Burton at Santa Rosa to rest on the third, and came up here in the Redwood camps. Baptized two here last night,—brother and sister Apple—so this trip bore fruit sure enough.
HEMAN C. SMITH.

Would it not be wisdom to avoid, as much as possible, speaking disrespectfully of Lucifer, Satan, the enemy of God, and his Saints, considering that one in authority and great dared not bring a railing accusation against him? If we endeavor to live as perfect in our sphere as God is in His sphere can we do any better? Though we may fail in many respects, would it not be good for us to cultivate and practice a meek and quiet spirit, if, in the sight of God such a spirit is esteemed of great price, and to such is inheritance on the earth promised.

W. C. LANYON.

THE MISSION OF CHRIST.

"WHAT think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David." Matt. 22:42.

It is taught by orthodoxy that the knowledge of the Savior did not extend beyond the Jews; that all nations were heathen except the Jews; that only those who have lived since Christ are to have the benefits of the gospel; and that all who have died, and shall die without hearing of Christ will be lost; and also those who lived before Christ. This doctrine serves to hinder, in a great measure, the importance and grandeur of the mission of Christ from shining before the honest in heart, thereby lessening their admiration and love toward him, who is to be "the desire of all nations," and causing the infidel to become bold in proclaiming against him, as being the Savior of the world.

If it was a fact that his mission was to affect none but those who have the privilege of believing on him since he came, and all others are to be lost, then his mission will be a failure, for he was to be the Savior of the world.

Away back in the beginning when sin first entered into the world, when there were but two human beings upon the earth, the decree went forth that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. This seed of the woman pointed to the Lord Jesus Christ, who is finally to destroy sin. The redeeming power of Christ has been manifested unto man from the time that this promise was made, and will be, until every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess, to the glory of God, the Father.

As man migrated upon the face of the earth, the knowledge of the Savior went with them; although they rebelled against the law of God from time to time. Prophets were raised up among them, testifying of these things. Hear the apostle: "Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth and their words unto the ends of the world." (Rom. 10:18). Again: The gospel "was preached to every creature which is under heaven." (Col. 1:23). See also Luke 24:27; Acts 3:24. Why should it be otherwise, when it is written that, God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation. . . . For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring." (Acts 17:26-28.)

In a work entitled "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," it is said that, "in the history of the heathen nations, dating far back before Christ, we find evidence of Saviors among them who were born the same as Jesus was, and crucified, rose the third day, etc., as Jesus did. Therefore they were Gods, just as much as Jesus was, so that Jesus is not the Savior of the world, but was the God of the Jews only." The idea that each one of these sixteen supposed Saviors was born by a virgin, as was Jesus; taught the same, was crucified the same, died, arose the third day, and disappeared, all just the same as did Jesus, which is claimed by this writer, is the most wonderful thing that ever happened; too wonderful to be true. It seems easier for the author of the work mentioned to believe there were sixteen saviors than it is to believe there was one. But instead of this being evidence against the claims of Jesus, it is a glorious testimony in his favor, for it shows that the knowledge of a Savior extended among all nations, attesting the testimony of Paul wherein he states that "their words [the Prophets], went unto the ends of the world," and "was preached to every creature which is under heaven."

We also find evidence that these nations had a knowledge of the cross, using it as a religious symbol, and also that some of the principles of the gospel, if not all, were, at one time or another, known to them, as they were to the Jews. In view of these facts, why should it be thought a thing strange that the same knowledge that the Jews had of a Savior, so many hundred years before he came, should extend to all other nations in like manner? But Orthodoxy, (so-called) says that there was no salvation in those remote periods, that Christ was unknown to the world until he came and died upon the cross.

It is just such doctrine as this that has made infidelity cry aloud against the claims of the christian religion, and spread itself as the Green Bay tree. If there were any means in the world by which men could be saved before Christ, it must have been in and through his name. (Acts 4:12; Rev. 13:8). Some had their names written in the Book of Life from the beginning, and if they are not saved, what hope can we have?

The knowledge of Christ brought with it all the benefits of the gospel; if not, what benefit was it to them to be told, thousands of years beforehand, that he was coming with great blessings etc.? If that was the case, it was unjust for God to cause them to come into the world so long before those blessings could be given, and they be damned because they had no chance to be saved. Yet Orthodoxy so-called says, "God is just," and "God is love." Alas for Orthodoxy! "Ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; ye neither go in yourselves, and they that would go in ye hinder."

The gospel shall enlighten every son and daughter of Adam's race, and death will not prevent it at all. The mission of Christ is not to be confined to the living, but extends also to the dead. Paul gives us to understand that the gospel which he preached had been preached to every creature under heaven. (Col. 1: 23.) Jesus commissioned the disciples to preach the same gospel to every creature, in all the world, and said that he would be with them unto the end of the world, upon conditions, namely, "teach all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Now he knew that those disciples would not live until the end of the world, but this promise was to hold good as long as men should observe these things. Again, Jesus says: "This gospel of the kingdom (which he and his disciples were preaching), shall be preached in all the world for a witness, unto all nations, and then shall the end come." (Matt. 24: 14). Are not the so-called heathen nations included in the term, 'all nations?' We think so. Again: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." (Rev. 14: 6. Does this simply mean those who were and are alive when the gospel is preached, and that all who were so unfortunate as to die before they hear it are forever lost? So says Orthodoxy. If the wicked are to have the gospel offered to them, will not those who are not so wicked have the same chance? Dare we, in the light of justice say no? The work of Christ extended into the spirit world, as well as here. Why? Because some of God's creatures are there, and they needed to have the "glad tidings," the good news, as well as those in the flesh. Jesus came not only to deliver those who were in the body from bondage, but to break the bands of death and hell; obtain the keys thereof, and say to the captives "Go free," and thus destroy the works of the devil. Isaiah speaking of Christ's mission says: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn." (Isa. 61: 1, 2). Do not those in the prison house, in the spirit world, mourn? He is to comfort all that mourn. Zechariah speaking of the same work of Christ says: "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee." (Zech. 9: 11, 12). Is not Christ the stronghold? Why should this be said to them if there was no deliverance for them? Peter says that Christ was "put to death in the flesh but quickened by the spirit; by which he went and preached to the spirits in prison;" (1st Peter 3: 18, 19), which is just what the prophets said he would do. The point is therefore made clear that the gospel is to be preached to every creature, both the living and the dead, that a just and righteous judgment might be rendered to all by the law of the gospel (see chapter 4: 6). After he had done this he appeared unto John and said: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of death and hell." (Rev. 1: 18). What did he obtain the keys for? Was it to go in and stir up the fire and brimstone, and rejoice with his holy angels at seeing the poor souls burn? Oh no. But it was to open the doors, as he was to lead the way in all things, and as his servants were to preach the gospel to every creature it shows that they were to enter, following him, and preach peace and deliverance, to comfort them just as they were to do to those in the flesh.

When the prophet of the latter days proclaimed "Probation after death," he was scoffed at, and ridiculed by all; but now it is becoming a popular doctrine. He was therefore in advance of orthodoxy in this, as well as many other points by at least fifty years. It is a humiliating thing that after teaching so many years that the heathen, and all others who have died without a knowledge of Christ are damned, to now have to teach that they are not damned; but, that there will be a chance for them. In view of this how can people have confidence in any of her teachings? This shows that she has not been in possession of the "perfect law."

The heathen are to be redeemed. (See Ps. 2: 8; Zech. 9: 10; Zeph. 2: 11). There is also a set time in the economy of God for this to be done. It is to be when the Jews are gathered back to their land; when Jesus appears to them as testified to by Zechariah, chapter fourteen. That is to the time when the Jews will be converted, and at that time the heathen are to be redeemed. (See Doc. and Cov., Sec. 45: 9, 10).

Orthodoxy might as well save her time and money in trying to convert them. They should try to get a more perfect idea of the gospel of Jesus Christ themselves, and let the heathen alone; God will take care of them.

There are one or two more points in the redemption of man that we wish to notice: It is thought that all who hear the gospel in this life and reject it, will never have another chance, and that the Jews committed the sin against the Holy Ghost, when they said that Jesus cast out devils by the Prince of Devils, etc. Now Jesus said, "All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemers wherewith soever they shall blaspheme: But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness."—Matt. 3: 28, 29. A man must have the Holy Ghost before he can sin against it. The Jews did not have it, for it was not yet given. (John 7: 39). The Jews only spoke against the Son of Man and that was to be forgiven. (Luke 12: 10).

It is plain that at some time, every sin will be forgiven unto man except this one referred to, and if we can find out what this sin is, with this key in our mind, namely, that no one can commit this sin until he has received the Holy Ghost, by which he can understandingly say that,

Jesus is the Christ, etc., (which no one can truly say without the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 12: 3), we think that it will help us out of the difficulty.

Christ proposes to redeem all men once through the gospel and if after they have been redeemed they sin against the light and knowledge they have received, to the extent that they are cut off from the terms of mercy, then they are lost, and are in the same condition as though there was no redemption made.

Paul says, "If our gospel be hid it is hid to them that are lost." (2 Cor. 4: 3). Nothing can be lost that was not once possessed. Thus it is that those who are and shall be lost are they who have once been saved. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they fall away, to renew them again to repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." (Heb. 6: 4-6). "If we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" (10: 26, 28, 29. See also 2 Peter 2: 20, 21).

This plainly shows who these characters are and as a further proof that there is no forgiveness for them, and that they are those who will have once been saved, (See Doc. and Cov. page 212).

Jude speaks of some who are twice dead and plucked up by the roots; to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever. A man can not be twice dead, until he has been once alive. In Revelations, twentieth chapter, there are some spoken of who are to die the second time. Now if we can learn what the first death was, it will enable us to determine what is the second death; and when we learn that, it will destroy the idea of a literal fire and brimstone, which is taught by orthodoxy.

Remember that John says that this punishment is as a lake of fire, etc. This death must be a spiritual death, because none could die twice as to temporal things, and from this temporal death, Christ, by the atonement, proposes to redeem all men, without any obedience to the law upon their part whatever. Jesus says:—"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." (John 12: 32). This will be done through the resurrection. Again: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Cor. 15: 22). "And have hope towards God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." (Acts 24: 15).

We see by these, with many other quotations which might be cited, that there will be a general resurrection of all men, which is the common salvation referred to by Jude third.

As to what the spiritual death is: In the beginning God made man with intelligence and placed him in the garden where everything was beautiful. Commandments were given unto him. He was to have the privilege of eating of all, the fruit, except that of one tree and was told that in the day that he ate of that he should surely die. He did so eat, however, and thereby transgressed the law, and on the same day he was driven from the garden, away from that which was lovely and perfect; shut out from the presence of God, to work for his bread, etc. And through his transgression that which seemed desirable to him before, was now not pleasing to him, for he left the sacred spot where he had oftentimes communed with his Maker, face to face, and hid himself among the trees, (Gen. 3:8). Choosing darkness instead of light, he was therefore banished from the presence of God, and a veil was placed between them. This we understand to be the first death, which is spiritual. "Wherefore, it came to pass, that the devil tempted Adam and he partook of the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment, wherein he became subject to the will of the devil because he yielded unto temptation; wherefore, I the Lord God caused that he should be cast out of the garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression; wherein he became spiritually dead; which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed." (D. C. 28:11).

All except these will inherit one of the three glories referred to by the Apostle Paul, in the due time of the Lord. And those who hear the gospel here and reject it, not seeing the benefit of the same, will be punished; which punishment will be for the purpose of reforming them; for this is the character of God's punishments, and when they have learned obedience by the things which they suffer, and ask for mercy, it will be extended to them. Then they will receive that which they once rejected; then the prison will no longer hold them. Jesus says concerning those who are cast into prison that "thou shalt by no means come out thence until thou hast paid the uttermost farthing. (Matt. 5:26).

From this we learn that there is a limit to the punishment; and also that they can pay their way out. This must be done by they themselves reforming their lives, and this can only be done by the gospel. Noah preached the gospel in his day and they rejected it, for which they were punished, and it was preached the second time to them by Jesus. (1 Peter 3:18, 19, 20).

So all will receive redemption and inherit a kingdom of light, except those Sons of Perdition, and all will say at the last, "Thy judgments are just O God." All of this and nothing less is comprehended in the mission of Christ. Thus he is the Savior of the world, and not of a favored few only. Blessed be his holy name forever more.

SOME THINGS I WOULD LIKE TO KNOW.

I AM not one of those that delight in contentions, yet I do like to learn the truth of all things, and having heard much said about the time that Jesus Christ went to prison, I should like to ask, in a friendly way, through the Herald for some information from those who know more about spiritual things than I do. What do the righteous do in paradise? Simply rest with folded hands? I have always had an idea that the rest of the righteous was a relief from the cares and troubles of a world of toil where the wicked bear rule, and that they could work for good in all things whatsoever they would desire, and that they were really and truly happy.

Jesus said, "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up again." What did he mean? He also said, "The Son of Man shall be betrayed into the hands of men and they shall kill him, and the third day he shall rise again." He was laid in the grave the day he was killed and arose on the morn of the third day. Was that not three days, and is not this what he meant when he made an illustration of the sign of the prophet Jonah? I have always so understood it. If I have been mistaken please explain.

Our bodies are bodies of flesh, bones, and blood. Can we in the flesh hold conversation with disembodied spirits? I have oftentimes seen disembodied spirits and knew that they were such, but a fear or dread always came over me so that I had no desire to speak, though they sometimes seemed anxious to communicate. I have talked with others who have had the same experience, and unless there has been an agreement in the flesh, before death, I have never learned of a disembodied spirit speaking to mortals. And even where there has been an agreement the spirit communication was most brief—just a word or two.

Now there seems to be a barrier of some kind that does hinder a communication between those who have passed beyond the veil and those who remain; for where speech or information has been had, it has always been spirit to spirit, the spirit of the mortal speaking unto the spirit disembodied. A resurrected body, as I understand, is a body of flesh, bones and spirit, clothed in a mantle of glory. Now what I should like to learn is this: Can a body of this kind communicate or speak to a disembodied spirit? If this can be answered the problem would be solved at once.

It does seem, with all the information that can be gleaned, that it is the most reasonable to think that Jesus did visit the spirits that were in the prison while his body lay in the grave, as he could then talk to them in a disembodied state, as they were, and his mission was such that he cared but little for rest while there was a work yet to be done.

Was it really needful for Him to be resurrected before he could preach to spirits, seeing that the judgment of the quick and the dead has not yet come. And please tell who holds the keys of the prison where the spirits are imprisoned.

We learn from 1 Peter 4:6, that because of this is the gospel preached unto them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live in spirit according to the will of God. Was there none but Jesus that ever preached unto the spirits who are in prison? Are and were there not other spirits in prison who were not disobedient in the days of Noah, but who had been disobedient while here in the days of their probation? Jesus visited the Nephites and established the gospel among them and ordained twelve men to continue to minister unto the people. He told the Nephites that he had also received a command from the Father to visit the Lost Tribes, and we feel assured that he established the gospel among them. Now when he went to paradise could he not have rested and chatted a while among the good spirits there, then chosen twelve good spirits and gone to the prison, established the gospel there and gave power to these twelve to minister unto all those spirits who would receive the gospel and live in spirit according to the will of God?

In referring to Revelations 1:18, Jesus hath indeed all power and the keys of hell and of death, but as we understand, will he not exercise or use that power in the day when that written in Revelations 20:12, shall be fulfilled? For if he and all the Saints who were worthy arose from the dead, is there not much work yet to be done ere all the dead shall arise and come to judgment?

WILLIAM CAIRNS.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 9.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM, A. D. 70.

THE sight of the Roman legions encamping around the city for a moment awakened the factions to a sense of their madness; they formed a hasty agreement, and many of the Zealots rushing out fell suddenly on the tenth legion as it was encamping, and put it into disorder and rout. Titus sent aid to his panic-stricken troops, and in some degree repelled the furious assault; but having drawn off his forces to the summit of the mountain, the watchmen on the city walls supposed the movement to be a flight. Instantly they gave a signal to those within by violently shaking their garments; on which there poured forth from the gates a fresh host of Jews, "with such mighty violence that one might compare it to the running of the most terrible wild beasts." Down into the Kedron poured the living torrent, and swelled up the sides of Olivet with an impetuosity that nothing could resist; the historian likens the shock of that host upon the Roman legion to the violence of a mighty stone shot from a catapult; the armed and disciplined ranks were broken before it; and ran like deer up the mountain. Once more Titus was left almost alone in the midst of his enraged enemies, where, according to his flattering encomiast, Josephus, he performed prodigies of valor, sustaining his position till shame brought back the panic-stricken legion, and turned the fortune of the day.

The Jews at length retired to their walls; but retired as a lion retires when pressed by superior foes, slowly and sullenly, often turning at bay, and dealing destruction on the foremost of his foes. It was now the feast of the passover, in the year seventy, and the city was filled with the tribes whom the presence of the Roman army and the prospect of the coming siege did not prevent from flocking thither to keep this the greatest and most august solemnity of the year. There seems to have been an awful retribution in the providence that, as it was at the passover, when the whole Jewish nation was representatively assembled, that "the Heir" was cast out of the vineyard and slain, so it should be at the same grand national gathering, that "the Lord of the vineyard" should "send forth his armies and destroy those murderers, and burn up their city."

Upwards of a million of people seem to have been shut up in this devoted city, nearly the whole of whom were "miserably destroyed," either by the fratricidal contentions and massacres of the factions, by famine, or by the Roman sword. So truly was the imprecation accomplished: "His blood be upon us, and upon our children."

The league which had been hastily concluded between the rival parties was of very brief duration; for, immediately after, John obtaining entrance into the inner courts of the temple by stratagem, conquered the opposition of Eleazar's faction, and reunited it to his own. By this coalition he obtained the command of eight thousand four hundred men, who held possession of the temple, the quarter called Ophel, and the valley of the Kedron: The faction of Simon, on the other hand, that tyrannized over the Upper and the Lower City, and a good part of the suburb of Bezetha, amounting to ten thousand Jews and five thousand Idumeans. The flame of party contention now burned all the more fiercely for the brief interruption of its fury.

Meanwhile the foe without was sternly and vigorously carrying on his preparations for the siege. The space that lay between Scopus and the northern wall was levelled, to admit a nearer encampment. This part was occupied by delightful gardens, whither the inhabitants had been wont to resort in the evenings of happier days to inhale the balmy air, to smell the perfume of fragrant flowers or sit under the vine and the fig tree, and to pluck the delicious fruit. These paradises were now in the flush of vernal loveliness; the spring rains had covered the shrubs with foliage, and the parterres were gay with a profusion of brilliant flowers. The shrubs and trees were, some of them, loaded with grateful fruit, and others covered with blossoms. All this beauty was ruthlessly destroyed by the iron hand of the spoiler; the hedges and walls were thrown down, the trees of beauty and fruitfulness rooted up, the trenches filled, and the very surface of the rock broken up and levelled with crows and axes of iron. Four days were occupied in this work; and then the ground, where nature had smiled in her sweetest beauty, bristled with the grim array of war. For the army was now brought up before the northern and western wall, seven deep, with the footmen placed in front and the horsemen behind them, in their ranks, while the archers stood in the midst in seven ranks. The encampment reached as far as the tower Hippicus on the west, and Titus seems to have occupied a central position, pitching his tent opposite the tower Porsephinus, at the distance of a quarter of a mile from it.

Having made a circuit of the city, that he might personally survey the walls, Titus set fire to the suburbs, and began to build an embankment for the use of his engines of war, so ordering his slingers and archers, that the builders might be protected against the impetuous sallies of the Jews. But the latter did not despair. Simon bravely manned the wall and placed on it the military engines which had been captured from Cestius; but these could effect little in opposition to those of superior power; which were the pride of the besieging army. "The method pursued by Titus against Jerusalem, was the very same that was used by the Romans and other cultivated nations in all similar cases. It consisted in forming a bank (such as a railway exemplifies) approaching the wall by degrees as it tended to completion; and of such a height that, when finished, the besiegers might stand nearly on a level with the besieged. The materials of which the bank was formed varied according to convenience; earth was somewhat scanty in the rocky neighborhood of Jerusalem, and timber was made available for the purpose. The workmen, that is the soldiery, employed in the construction of this embankment, would necessarily be much exposed to missiles from the besieged; and for their protection, screens of every kind, pent houses and hurdles were carried forward, preserved from the enemy's application of fire by coatings of iron, hides or anything else that seemed best. For the same purpose of defending the workmen, the arts of the engineers were taxed to the utmost in the construction of machines which should prevent the besieged from manning the walls at all.

Towers in several stories, of an amazing height, were rolled on wheels towards the point of conflict, and in these were stationed companies of bowmen, slingers and javelineers, assisted, perhaps, by small catapults, and the energies of all were directed to prevent a single hostile band being raised against the bankmen or others. Machines for casting missiles with the greatest force were invented in vast variety. In the principle of their construction they were of two kinds, catapults and ballistae. Catapults were enormous crossbows for the discharge of arrows; and from them the arrow parted with a flight so rapid as to fetch sparks of fire from the groove by which it was directed. The ballistae were essentially composed of a spring of tough wood, which was drawn by main force to a horizontal position, and when thus at full stretch, was suddenly liberated by the blow of an hammer, so that, being checked when vertical, it hurled the stones with which it was charged not without considerable effect. Josephus, in the siege of Jotapata, saw a stone ball thus propelled strike off the head of a man by his side to the distance of three stadia (six hundred yards) like a bullet from a sling. "In the fields about Ptolemais," says Mr. Maundrell, "we saw scattered up and down several large balls of stone, of at least thirteen or fourteen inches in diameter." At Beer on the Euphrates, he saw others of twenty inches diameter.

When by the superiority of the besieging army the mound had been driven up to the face of the wall, then the battering ram was brought into play. It shook the walls with the efficiency of cannon; and we shall see that the heavy fortifications of Jerusalem were unequal to resist it. Against these arts of the besiegers, the business of the besieged was to lay hold, one way or other, of the towers, pent-houses, and machines with fire; by covering them with pitch, by throwing fire-balls, or burning combustibles attached to arrows and javelins upon them; to ply their own catapults and ballistae; to destroy the enemy's works by sallies; to catch them at favorable moments, and pour in showers of arrows; to sink their embankments by mines; to parry the blows of the ram by intercepting them with sacks of sand or wool, or by halting its head sideways by ropes; indeed every method which their ingenuity could devise was gladly tried." (See Cockayne's Civil History of Jews, 244).

Some of the engines were of extraordinary size and power, hurling stones of a hundred weight to the distance of more than two furlongs. The Jews watched the discharge; and as the shock of the engine produced a loud noise, and the whiteness of the stone made its headlong course very visible, they were able generally to avoid the blow by falling on their faces, on the cry of the watchman, "the son cometh." This term of "the son," by which the stone was distinguished, has given rise to much speculation; yet it was probably but an abbreviation of "the son of destruction," a common Hebraism. At length the Romans, perceiving that the whiteness of the stones betrayed their approach, blackened them and thus caused great havoc. The pressure of the danger once more impelled the factions to unite in the common defense; and both parties joined in fierce sallies upon the besiegers, who fell upon the works, tearing up the protecting hurdles, and pulling the embankment to pieces whenever they could. In one of these irruptions an immense host rushed out from a gate near Hippicus with burning torches, and falling on the Romans with irresistible impetuosity put them to flight and set fire to their works. The engines as well as the embankments, were in imminent peril of destruction; but Titus, having hastily led a troop of cavalry to the spot, succeeded in saving his works and repelling the heroic Jews. To the disgrace of the Roman commander he ordered one of the brave defenders of their city, whom he had taken prisoner, to be crucified in front of the wall, for no other offense than valiantly fighting for his home and his Temple.

About this time a singular panic fell upon the Roman Host, Titus had erected three of those enormous towers, which were then used in sieges, for the purpose of bringing his archers, slingers, and even the lighter engines, to a level with the battlements. About midnight it happened that one of these towers fifty cubits high, suddenly fell down with a tremendous crash, probably owing to the settling of the embankment. Awakened out of their sleep by the noise, the army was greatly affrighted; their first thought was, that it was another of those daring sallies of the Jews, which they by this time knew how to appreciate. The darkness increased the alarm and though the historian does not say so, we may well imagine that their arms were used against each other before order and confidence were restored. These lofty towers gave a great advantage to the besieging army. Being higher than the walls, the soldiers from the summit could throw darts and shoot arrows upon the Jews with great precision and effect, while the latter had little power in directing their missiles to adversaries above their heads. The Catapults and Ballistæ, too, though smaller than those on the ground, yet, from the advantage of situation, were able to sweep the walls of the defenders. The size and weight of the towers were such as to defy any efforts to overturn them in sudden sallies; and to guard against the action of fire, which had already been fatally used against the works, they were sheathed with plates of iron. Thus the poor imprisoned Jews were compelled to abandon the defense of this part of the bulwarks, and to listen, in agonizing, because powerless, suspense, to the hollow blows of the rams, as they fell heavily in measured succession upon the quaking wall.

"What heart can conceive the terrors of this season, as experienced by those who were surrounded, seeing no way of escape. We speak not of Jewish men so much as the poor, weak, tender women and little ones, and of the very aged, some of whom had heard the thrilling words of compassionate warning, when, melted into sorrow, they followed the steps of the holy sufferer, who bore his cross along the proud and stately streets of the city and bewailed the cruel death to which he was ignorantly doomed." "Daughters of Jerusalem," he said, "weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and for your children. For behold the days are coming in the which they shalt say, 'Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bear, and the paps which never gave suck.' Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, fall on, us and to the hills cover us." Surely such must have been the language, secret if not uttered, of the terrified females, as they stole a glance at the tremendous array of those camps, swarming with a horde of fierce, brutal, sanguinary, licentious, devil-worshippers, who never knew what pity meant, and who were lured to the enterprise by nothing but the prospect of fully satiating all their vilest and ferocious passions. Surely such must have been the mother's moan, as she looked on her beauteous children, and pictured to herself the horrors of a life-long slavery, with all its hideous accompaniments, including the torturing deaths reserved for multitudes in the gladiatorial and other murderous spectacles of Rome. Imagination faint beneath the effort to realize for one moment what those endured who were now pent up in the tottering walls and towers of Jerusalem. (See Judea Capta, 138).

The siege had now proceeded during fifteen days, when, on the seventh of Iyar (about the end of April) the great battering ram, to which the Jews had given the name of Nico, or the Conqueror, made a breach in the outer wall. This gave the Romans admission into Bezetha, which they partly demolished, as they did also the wall through which they had entered; but the ancient city, both the upper and the lower, as well as the Temple, were still uninjured, and presented to the besiegers walls of greater strength than that which they had stormed. Titus now pitched his camp at a point called in memory of a glorious deliverance "the camp of the Assyrians," which seems to have been at the foot of Calvary. Here stood Rabshakeh and his host, when his insulting taunt was cast at "the virgin daughter of Jerusalem;" and here lay the proud Assyrian king himself, when he was made to hear the rebuke of Jehovah of Hosts whom he had defiled, and to feel his vengeance: "And the King of Assyria sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem unto King Hezekiah with a great army. And he stood by the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field. Then came forth unto him Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and Shebua the Scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder. And Rabshakeh said unto them, say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great King, the King of Assyria. What confidence is this wherein thou trustest; I say, sayest thou, (but they are but vain works) I have counsel and strength for war; now on whom dost thou trust, thou who rebellest against me? . . . Thus saith the King. Let not Hezekiah deceive you, for he shall not be able to deliver you. Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the Lord, saying, The Lord will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the King of Assyria. Harken not to Hezekiah: For thus saith the King of Assyria. Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern, until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

Beware lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The Lord will deliver us. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the King of Assyria? Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? Where are the gods of Sepharvaim; and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand? Who are they among all the gods of these lands that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the Lord should deliver Jerusalem out of my hands?" . . . And Hezekiah prayed unto the Lord. Then Isaiah, the son of Amoz, sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib, King of Assyria, this is the word which the Lord hath spoken concerning him: The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee. Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed; and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice; and lifted up thine eyes on high, even against the Holy One of Israel? Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the King of Assyria, He shall not come into the city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it. By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the Lord. For I will defend this city to save it, for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake. Then the angel of the Lore went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred and four score and five thousand; and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.—Isa. 36, 37.

But now no miraculous interposition appeared; no angel of death smote the beleaguering host; for Israel's "Rock had sold them and the Lord had shut them up." From the Tower Hippicus to the valley of the Kedron the second wall was now exposed to the attacks of the Roman army; but it was as vigorously defended. John and Simon, forgetting their mutual animosities, strove to outvie each other in valor and energy; the former defending the Temple and Antonia, the latter manning the wall from the monument of John the high priest to Hippicus. The fighting men were animated with the strongest devotion to these their leaders, so that danger and death were defied in the execution of their commands. Sallies became more and more frequent, and prodigies of valor were performed on both sides; the day seemed too short for the zeal of the combatants, and the night was passed in armor. At length, after five days had been occupied in the assault of the second wall, one of the towers fell before the mighty battering ram, and Jerusalem lay open to the Romans. The part of the city which was now exposed was traversed by close and narrow streets, obliquely leading from the wall, and densely peopled by the clothiers, woolstaplers, and braziers. This quarter Titus proceeded to occupy with a thousand choice troops, but abstained from breaking down the wall or dismantling the fortifications, while he prohibited his soldiers from pillage and massacre. There was doubtless as much of policy as of mercy in this moderation; he was desirous of preserving the magnificent Temple for his own glory, and was therefore reluctant to push the inhabitants to desperation; he knew moreover, that there was a large party in the city not averse to submission, but overawed by the powers of the factions. His leniency, however, injured himself; for the exasperated populace burned with indignation at the presence of the Romans and fell on them with fury in the narrow streets.

As usual in street fighting, the populace had the best of it; for they fought with the immense advantage of numbers; and of situation, knowing the turns, concealments, and shifts, and being able from the roofs and windows of the houses to pour down darts, stones, and all sorts of viler missiles upon their heavy armed and pent up adversaries. In vain the humbled and affrighted Romans rushed up and down the endless lanes, with lamentable cries to find the breach by which they had entered; and when they did find it, it was so narrow that but a few could pass at a time. Many were slain, and the whole would doubtless have left their bleeding corpses in the streets of Acra, had not Titus obtained succors, and secured to the survivors an ignominious retreat. For three days afterwards the Romans vainly strove to enter the breach; for the valiant Jews, with a noble contempt for danger, and animated, too, by their recent victory, presented their armed bodies at the openings, as an impregnable wall; nor was it till the fourth day that the vehement assaults of Titus with his whole available force, broke through that living barrier, and gave him a second time possession of the city. Improving by his late experience, he now razed a large part of that wall, and garrisoned those towers of it that were nearest to Zion.

The periodical pay day of the Roman troops had now arrived, and Titus determined to use the occasion for a grand pageant, with the double purpose of gratifying the pride and elating the spirits of his soldiers, and of infusing terror into the hearts of the besieged. The legions defiled before their commander in battle array, with all the glittering pomp of a review. The accoutrements of a Roman legion were not made for superfluous ornament, but those who conceived the system knew the value of show. The helmets and cuirasses of the common soldier were of glittering brightness, and on parade days, when these were divested of their ordinary leather cases, the flash and play of light was a splendid spectacle. The arms of the officers were frequently inlaid with the precious metals, and they rode gorgeously caparisoned chargers, purchased at enormous prices from the finest studs of Europe and Asia. The splendor was greatly heightened by the multitude of banners that danced in the air. "Every emblem that mythology could feign, every mom-orial connected with the history of soldier-ship and Rome, glittered above the forest of spears; gilded serpents, wolves, lions, gods, genii, stars, diadems, imperial busts, and the eagle above all, were mingled with vanes of purple and embroidery. The most showy pageant of civil life was dull and colorless to the crowded magnificence of the Roman line." (See Salathiel ii, 281).

For four days this gorgeous sight was displayed in front of the walls, before the whole of the legionaries had received their pay. The Jews thronged to behold it, the whole of the northern cloisters of the Temple, and the wall of Zion, were full of crowded spectators, and roofs and windows of the houses were occupied with anxious faces, gazing on the spectacle with mingled expressions of wonder and consternation. But it passed away, and no sign of submission, no appeal for mercy, came from the forlorn city; its inhabitants had taken their determination and were sternly resolved to keep it. Yet the sunken eyes and gaunt features of those gazers told that famine was in the city, adding its horrors to those that before prevailed. Titus now pressed the siege with vigor, ordering the erection of new embankments; one against the Antonia, with a view to take the Temple, and another opposite the High Priest's monument, against the wall of Zion. But the former was greatly impeded by John, and the latter by Simon; for these leaders still made frequent and impetuous sallies, besides harassing the troops by a vigorous fire from the walls. The Jews, by practice, had now attained skill in the use of military engines; and as they had no less than three hundred Catapults and forty Ballistæ, which continually hurled stones and darts from the walls, the embankments proceeded but slowly. Josephus was therefore commissioned to speak to his countrymen on the wall, and to try his art of persuasion; but they paid little respect to the exhortations of one whom they well knew as a worthless renegade. Individuals, however, endeavored to flee from the miseries that were encompassing them; and that they might not be wholly destitute, swallowed pieces of gold before they crept out. Some of these contrived to escape into the country, though the slightest suspicion of such an intent was enough to insure the death of any one.

The scarcity of provisions was now so great, that the armed bands continually searched for it, breaking into private houses, and torturing the inmates to induce them to discover their stores. Those who were plump and in good case were marked as possessing food, and compelled to give it up; old men who held their food fast were beaten, and if the women hid what they had within their hands, their hair was torn for so doing; children were lifted up and dashed upon the floor, to make them forego the morsels which they were eating, and to which they clung with the pertinacity of famine. Some who crept out into the valleys to pick up wild herbs and roots, or to glean garbage from the verge of the camp, were watched as they came back, and robbed of the sordid spoil. Many sold all their property for a single measure of corn, then shutting themselves into a closet would eat the whole at a meal, and die. Every kind feeling—love, respect, natural affection,—was extinct, through the whole all-absorbing want. Wives would snatch the best morsel from their husbands, children from parents, mothers from children; they would intercept their own milk from the lips of their pining babes. Those who were in the enjoyment of any degree of opulence or dignity were the prey of Simon and John. It was enough to accuse them of intending to desert, when they were instantly slain and their property confiscated. The factious captains effected a sort of courtesy in their abominations; he who had been plundered by John being handed over to Simon, and the contrary. They emulated each other in wickedness, and the one would think himself aggrieved if the other surpassed him in any act of barbarity. The historian delivers it as his solemn verdict, "that neither did any other city ever suffer such miseries; nor did any age ever breed a generation more fruitful in wickedness than this was, from the beginning of the world." The circumstances of the poor starved wretches creeping forth to gather food, having been reported to Titus, he set ambushes to capture them. Five hundred in a day and sometimes more, were thus taken, who with horrible cruelty, were scourged and otherwise tortured, and then crucified in front of the walls. The merciless soldiers even amused themselves by nailing these miserable beings to the crosses in various distorted postures. At length the multitude of those so treated became so great, that, "room was wanting for the crosses, and crosses wanting for the persons." How awful a retribution on that sinful Jerusalem, whose mad-dened multitudes, only seven and thirty years before, had been "instant with loud voices, requiring that the holy one of God should be crucified." Perhaps among the number thus treated, were some of the very individuals who had thus headed the crowds; from whose furious lips had burst forth the cry, "Away with him." "Away with him." "Crucify him." "Crucify him." . . . "A voice of wailing is heard out of Zion. How are we spoiled; we are greatly confounded. . . . for death is come up into our windows, and has entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets."—Jer. 9: 19-21.

It was about the end of the month Iyar, when, after seventeen days of hard labor, the Roman embankments were completed.

Four enormous banks now frowned upon the city, two near the Antonia, and two others near the High Priest's monument, facing the wall of Zion. But meanwhile another work had been going on from within, of which the assailants little dreamed. For John had excavated a mine beneath the walls of the Antonia, extending it under the banks of that quarter. As his work proceeded, he had supported the ground with beams and uprights, and filled the cavity with faggots besmeared with pitch and sulphur; and now, when the Romans were congratulating themselves on the success of their labors, and trusting that as soon as the engines were brought up, the wall must give way, the Jewish chieftan set fire to his mine. The beams were soon burnt through and the whole embankments suddenly fell in with a prodigious noise. The volumes of smoke and dust that arose, for a few minutes concealed the character as well as the extent of the mischief; but the huge mass of flame that presently broke out, as the new materials descended into the fiery cavity, seemed to the astonished Romans the funeral pyre of their fond hopes. The other two banks were protected by the peculiarities of their situation from a similar stratagem, and on these the military engines were planted and already began to shake the wall with their heavy blows. But three heroic Jews, each bearing a torch, suddenly rushed out, and breaking through the midst of the enemy, regardless of the javelins that were hurled at them in showers, set fire to these machines. The Romans came thronging to save their engines, but were met by fresh bodies of elated antagonists from the walls. The battle raged fiercely around the flaming engines; the Romans endeavoring to drag them out of the fire, while gallant Jews held them fast, nor would the heroic three relinquish their hold on the great battering ram, though it was now encompassed with flame, and though the iron had become red hot. Meanwhile the fire had caught hold of the embankments themselves, and was raging with a fury that soon decided the fate of these no less certainly than that of their fellows. The Romans saw the mighty works, which they had constructed with weeks of weary labor, demolished by three famished Jews in an hour; and, depressed and crestfallen, retired sullenly to their camp. But the Jews, rejoicing in their glorious success, came pouring down from the heights of Zion with an impetuosity that nothing could resist, and actually proceeded so far as to attack the fortifications of the enemy's camp, slaying the guards, who dared not desert their post, and spreading panic through the host. Titus, who had been at the Antonia, seeking a place for the erection of a new embankment, arrived at this crisis, and found his army besieged, and almost taken. Not a moment was to be lost; wheeling round with some chosen troops, he fell upon the flank of the Jews, and prevented the arrival of fresh multitudes from the city. The latter, however, did not flinch, but facing round continued the battle, both in front and rear, with unabated valor and constancy. Having fully succeeded in demolishing the threatening works of the enemy, and spreading terror through his camp, they at length made good their retreat within their walls.

Disappointed and baffled, Titus called a council of war to debate on measures now to be adopted, when it was determined to build a wall around the whole city, thus cutting off the possibility of its obtaining even the smallest succor from without, and rendering comparatively powerless the impetuous sallies of the garrison from within. To determine was to act; and so energetically did the legions labor at this work, that in three days it was completed, and Jerusalem saw herself enclosed by a wall of five miles in length, bristling with fortress towers, like a huge serpent that had wound its fatal coil around her, and whose mortal embrace would never be relaxed until she lay a shapeless and smoking ruin. Then began to be fulfilled the great and dreadful day of vengeance, the foresight of which had wrung from the pitying heart of the Lord Jesus, tears of sorrow.

"And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying: If thou hast known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee around, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knowest not the time of thy visitation."—Luke 19: 41-44.

"Then did the famine widen its progress, and devoured the people by whole houses and families; the upper rooms were full of women and children who were dying by famine, and the lanes of the city were full of the dead bodies of the aged; the children also and the young men wandered about the market places like shadows, all swelled with famine, and fell down dead wheresoever their misery seized them, as for burying them, those who were sick themselves were not able to do it; and those who were hearty and well were deterred from doing it by the great multitude of the dead bodies, and and by the uncertainty there was how soon they should die themselves; for many died while burying others, and many went to their coffins before that fatal hour was come. Nor was there any lamentation made under these calamities, nor was heard any mournful complaints, but the famine confounded all natural passions, for those who were just going to die looked upon those who were gone to their rest, before them with dry eyes and open mouths. A deep silence also, and a kind of deadly night had seized upon the city."—Josephus, wars, 5: 12, 3.

"The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion; he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying; therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together. Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles; the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the Lord. The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence; they have cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth; the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground. Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucklings swoon in the streets of the city. They say to their mothers, where is corn and wine, when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers bosom. What thing shall I take to witness for thee? What thing should I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? What shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? For thy breach is great like the sea; who can heal thee?"—Lam. 2: 8-13.

The dread of pestilence had induced the factious chiefs to rescind their former tyrannical edict against the burial of the dead, and for some time the bodies had been interred at the expense of the public treasury. But the rapidly increasing progress of death rendered this now impracticable, and the only resource was to throw the corpses over the wall into the valleys that lay beneath.

It is reported that Titus, in going his rounds through these valleys, when he saw them full of dead bodies festering in the sun, with the thick putrefaction running about them, could not help groaning at the sight, and appealed to God that he was not a willing occasion of such horrors. But still no signal of submission was hung out upon the wall; no gate was opened to admit the besiegers; no band of deputed elders came forth with terms of capitulation. Jerusalem still maintained her stern resolve to die, if need be, beneath the ruins of her temple and palaces, but not to yield.

Many of the more timorous sort, however, contrived to desert to the Romans, notwithstanding the vigilance and severity of the garrison; but now a dreadful fate befel these. The artifice of swallowing pieces of gold before leaving the city having become known in the camp, the avidity of the soldiers, particularly of the Arabian and Syrian mercenaries, became excited, and with horrible barbarity they cut open the bellies of all such as they intercepted, searching for gold. Josephus narrates the shocking fact that in one night, above two thousand of these deserters were thus massacred. Titus expressed great indignation when this practice was made known to him; but, though he uttered severe threats of instant death if any should afterwards be found guilty of such barbarity, the love of money was stronger than the fear of punishment, and the practice was still pursued, though with more secrecy than before.

CONVICTIONS FOR POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

In response to a resolution recently introduced in the House of Representatives by Rogers, of Arkansas, calling on Attorney General Garland for information as to the number of convictions made for the offenses of polygamy, adultery, and unlawful cohabitation in Utah under the various laws passed by Congress, United States District Attorney Peers has just forwarded to Washington a transcript of the records of his office showing the following figures: Total convictions for polygamy under the laws of 1862 and 1882, 16; total convictions for unlawful cohabitation under the laws of 1882, 497; total convictions for adultery under the laws of 1887, 8; total convictions for fornication under the laws of 1887, 8. The total fines and costs collected to date for violations of these laws amount to $44 000.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

Central Nebraska district conference will convene at Clear water, September 22d, at eleven o'clock. All of the Saints and friends are invited to attend. It is hoped a profitable time will be had.
LEVI GAMET, Dist. Pres.

The conference of Western Tennessee and Kentucky district will convene at Eagle Creek branch, Henry county, Tennessee, November 3d and 4th.
P. B. SEATON, Dist. Pres.

The conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district, will be held with the Saints of the Clear Lake branch, Steuben county, Indiana, commencing at ten o'clock, Saturday, October 13th. A large attendance is expected, and arrangements made accordingly. Saints, be there for the social meeting on Friday evening previous. The work in the district is moving. Come, praying the Lord to still work with and for us. Branch officers, have your branch reports properly made out, on blanks for that purpose, on sale cheap, at the Saints' Herald Office, Lamoni, Iowa. Also have them approved by the branch, and at conference on time. Elders H. Rathbun, J. J. Cornish, J. A. Carpenter, and James Horton are expected to be present. Others of the ministry, in adjacent fields, are hereby cordially invited to come over and help us, Bishop Blakeslee is expected to be present, of course. Should Elder B. V. Springer be in the mission at the time, we hope he will be at conference at Clear Lake. Asking the prayers of all Saints in behalf of the district.

C. SCOTT.

The St. Louis district quarterly conference will convene in the Saints' new meeting-house, No. 2600, Elliot Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri, Saturday, October 6th, at two o'clock, for the transaction of business, and on the following Sunday at ten a. m. for worship.

C. J. PEAT, President,
JOHN G. SMITH, Sec'y.

CAMP-MEETING.

The Camp-meeting convened at Wilber, Nebraska, on Saturday, August 25th, at eight p. m., and organized by choosing James Caffall president, Hyrum O. Smith Secretary, H. C. Bronson chorister, and Isaac Anthony, Oscar Savage and Andrew Wood, police. The programme for each day was prayer meeting at nine a. m., and preaching forenoon, afternoon and evening. The speakers were C. Derry, W. W. Blair, R. J. Anthony, James Caffall, H. C. Bronson, C. H. Porter and H. O. Smith.

The grove in which the meeting was held was far enough away from town to insure against interruption and yet near enough to be handy to the depot, and quiet and order reigned throughout. The attendance was small but a most excellent feeling prevailed among the Saints. A very noticeable feature was the excellent prayer meetings, the Spirit often bringing tears of joy to the eyes of the participants. The preached word was in most instances attended with the power of God and nine precious souls were buried with Christ in the liquid wave. There were twenty-five preaching services and eight prayer-meetings. The closing sermon by Bro. R. J. Anthony was most excellent and at its close a lady came forward and with tears running down her cheeks requested baptism at his hands which was attended to at nine a. m. Monday morning, making nine in all baptized. Several sick were administered to with good results and two children blessed and the Saints parted feeling that it was good to meet together and that this would not be their last camp-meeting at Wilber. They have an excellent grove and a fine band of earnest working Saints. The seed was sown in many hearts and prejudice removed and a prospect for an ingathering in the future. The only sad feature of the meeting was the parting at its close, not knowing that we would ever meet again but we felt strengthened and encouraged and went out with renewed determination to work for the Master more earnestly than ever and with a heartfelt wish for many happy returns.

HYRUM O. SMITH, Sec'y.

PROCREATION IN THE MILLENNIUM.

A BROTHER asks:—"Will the Saints in the Millennium propagate their species? How can they when they 'neither marry nor are given in marriage?'"

To this we reply, that the last quotation refers to resurrected Saints, as may be seen by the following:

"And Jesus answering, said unto them, The children of this world marry and are given in marriage; But those who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, through the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—St. Luke 20: 34, 35, 36, Inspired Translation.

This text defines who, in the Millennium, "neither marry nor are given in marriage," and implies that those not then resurrected from the dead, will not be restricted from "marrying and giving in marriage," even though "accounted worthy to obtain that world."

We can see no reason why the Saints living at the time of Christ's second coming and the ushering in of the Millennium may not propagate their species, but we see many Scripture texts which prove they will; "for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore, it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end [object, purpose,] of the creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doc. Cov., 19: 3.

That the earth will "be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made," at the coming of Christ and the Millennium age, is neither reasonable nor Scriptural, as we see further on. And why may not Saints who are still living at the second advent of Christ marry and rear families of children?

Of these times the Lord has this to say:

"For behold I create a new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that has not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old: but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed. And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat; for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and the dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."—Isaiah 17-25.

These, the Lord says, are his people—"my people," "mine elect," "the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them."

So great will be the age to which these will live who are born in the Millennium that "there shall be no more than an infant of days," as now, but of years instead, so much greater will be the appointed life of man. For up to the age of "an hundred years" the person may be reckoned still a "child" and in his childhood. The 23d verse is clear and to the point, for it says:—"They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them." And all this is in furtherance of the fact already stated, that, "marriage is ordained of God unto man; therefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end [purpose] of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure [number] of man according to his creation before the world was made."

In harmony with the foregoing we have this:

"And it shall come to pass that he that feareth me shall be looking forth for the great day of the Lord to come, even for the signs of the coming of the Son of Man; and they shall see signs and wonders, for they shall be shown forth in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; and and they shall behold blood and fire, and vapors of smoke, and before the day of the Lord shall come, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon be turned into blood, and stars fall from heaven; and the remnant shall be gathered unto this place; and then they shall look for me, and behold I will come; and they shall see me in the clouds of heaven, clothed with power and great glory, with all the holy angels, and he that watches not for me shall be cut off.

"But before the arm of the Lord shall fall, an angel shall sound his trumpet, and the saints that have slept, shall come forth to meet me in the cloud; wherefore if ye have slept in peace, blessed are you, for as you now behold me and know that I am so shall ye come unto me and your souls shall live, and your redemption shall be perfected, and the saints shall come forth from the four quarters of the earth.

"Then shall the arm of the Lord fall upon all nations, and then shall the Lord set his foot upon this mount, and it shall cleave in twain, and the earth shall tremble and reel to and fro; and the heavens shall shake, and the Lord shall utter his voice and all the ends of the earth shall hear it, and the nations of the earth shall mourn, and they that have laughed shall see their folly, and calamity shall cover the mocker, and the scorner shall be consumed, and they that have watched for iniquity, shall be hewn down and cast into the fire.

"And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them, these wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their King.

"And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them; and Satan shall be bound that he shall have no place in the hearts of the children of men. And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, they shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver."—Doc. Cov., Sec. 45: 6-10.

Paragraph 10 makes it clear that the worthy Saints living at Christ's glorious coming "shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver." To this agrees the revelation, which says:—"And he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to them to die at the age of man; [but the resurrected Saints can not "die any more."—E.D.]; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye."—Doc. and C., 63: 13.

And in Doctrine and Covenants, 98: 5, we find this corroborative testimony:

"Behold it is my will, that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to my everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, and prepare for the revelation which is to come when the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together. And every corruptible thing, both of man, or of the beasts of the field, or of the fowls of the heavens, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon all the face of the earth, shall be consumed; and also that of element shall melt with fervent heat; and all things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. And in that day the enmity of man, and the enmity of beasts; yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face. And in that day whatsoever any man shall ask it shall be given unto him. And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious."

And in further proof we cite Isa. 66: 15-22; Jer. 31: 27-40; Ezek. 36: 24-38; 37: 21-26, etc., etc.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—DELINQUENT SUBSCRIBERS.

By request of the Business Manager we again call attention to the list of outstanding balances due the Herald Office, on account of books purchased and subscriptions for the HERALD, HOPE and other publications.

The business interests of the publishing department are suffering on account of the long lists of delinquents who fail to give even ordinary attention to the payment of these obligations.

The Board of Publication in their endeavors to supply the Saints with church literature containing the good news of the spread of the work and the manifestations of divine favor upon the Lord's people need to be promptly and properly sustained in order to continue this good work, and to publish it to the world. In this they should be heartily and faithfully sustained. Promptness in payment insures success in this work; while long and continued failure so to do greatly retards and hinders it; often making the undertaking very burdensome, for means must be had to continue it.

The publishing department has lost, and is still losing large amounts by being compelled to drop long lists of accounts which have never been paid.

Some who are in arrears notify us from time to time of their intentions to pay, sending part of the amount as it comes to them, thus showing that they remember their obligations. With such the Board is willing to be, and has been, lenient.

But a long list of others is carried who seemingly fail to consider that money due the Herald Office should be paid as fully and as promptly as any other debt; or that it is a sacred obligation.

The publishing department is an important branch of the Master's service, and all should see that in their stewardship they deal justly with it. Thus all may become helpers in the good work. None need be a hindrance, nor should they be such. No offense is intended in this, and none should be taken. All can see that the subject requires "plainness of speech."

"PAY THAT THOU OWEST" the Herald Office.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. James Steel, of Oakland, California, wrote September 12th:

"Once when out in the country, away from the city's noise and confusion, in the afternoon while yet the day was strong, alone and feeling lonely as one will sometimes away from home, I was startled by the sound of music above me in the air. It was the sweetest music, so delighting that I was enraptured by it. It charmed me to such a degree that I could but listen to it. I am quite sure it was much from the heavenly spheres. It continued for some time. My soul was moved to peace while my eyes suffused with tears of joy as I experienced the foretaste of the music which the dwellers in the heavenly land are permitted to enjoy; and the like of which this world can not produce."

Bro. Steel also states that at his baptism in San Pete county, Utah, by Bro. Thomas Job, a special witness was vouchsafed to him of the work.

Bro. Blair wrote from Plum Hollow, Iowa, Sept. 17th:

"All goes fairly well. Forty-five have been baptized here, at Wilber and Nebraska City, since I came here thirty days ago, and many more are "almost persuaded." The outlook is cheering indeed. Hope to be home by next Monday or Tuesday."

Bro. R. C. Evans wrote from Waterford, Ontario:

"We are having good gospel times here. I am well and preaching nearly every night. Have baptized twenty-four here since July 12th."

WE clip the following friendly notice from a recent issue of the Wilber, Nebraska, Opposition:

"The camp-meeting of the Latter Day Saints in Castor's grove closed on Monday. It gave much satisfaction to the church and the visitors and was a success in every particular, to which success the activity of Elder Levi Anthony contributed largely. Nine persons were baptized during the meeting. Besides the resident elders there were in attendance Elder W. W. Blair, of the First Presidency, Elder James Caffall of the Twelve, Elder Charles Derry of the High Priests' Quorum, and Elders R. J. Anthony, H. O. Smith, H. C. Bronson, and C. H. Porter, of the Seventy."

Also the following from the Blue Rapids, Kansas, Times, of September 6th:

REV. WILLIAMS, PASTOR OF BAPTIST CHURCH OF BLUE RAPIDS CHALLENGED.

Reverend Sir, I am informed that at a mission concert recently held in your church, you attempted to instruct the children and members of your Sunday School and congregation in such manner as to misrepresent historical facts and bias their minds unfavorably toward the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, some times called Mormon. Among which statements you are said to have taught that the conception and faith originated with Sidney Rigdon, who induced Joseph Smith, as a person more unscrupulous and bold than himself, to aid in laying the foundation of said Mormon church; and that the Book of Mormon had its origin in the writings of the Rev. Solomon Spaulding, &c., which statements I unhesitatingly pronounce to be mischievously, if not maliciously false, and hereby demand a retraction, or that you defend your assertion in open debate in Blue Rapids not earlier than the first day of October, nor later than the 30th of said month; or rest under the charge of having slanderously assailed the origin and character of an innocent people.

JOHN D. BENNETT,

Secretary of the Northwest Kansas district of the church hereinfore named.

P. S.—Any communication, if made in writing, left in the care of Z. Decker and Wm. Scott, will meet prompt attention. B.

Dated at Blue Rapids this 4th day of September, 1888.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. JOHN HAWLEY, of Dow city, Iowa, writes from Sheridan, Worth county, Missouri, September 12th, on his way to Texas field, and preaching by the way; that by request of brethren and officers of the Nodaway district, he has spent some time in labor there and in Worth county. Bro. Hawley had baptized five in the Galland's Grove district, by request; and had been in Missouri some two months preaching from place to place and from house to house; feeling happy in the work, confident in the Lord and satisfied that a good work will follow. We assure Bro. Hawley that no one will scold, for the service he has been rendering in that field, unless it should be his co-workers in Texas, who may be anxious for their own field. May God give grace to the believer, and permit the fruitage of good sowing to follow the teaching of Bro. Hawley and all who like him labor cruselishly for Christ's cause.

Bro. E. W. Nunley, writing from Wheelock, Texas, September 3d, mentions that he may have to move from his present locality. Some are believing "our report," and other some are disturbed by that, and altogether it is unpleasant in situation. Bro. Nunley desires the isolated and scattered Saints to write him concerning their respective locations.

Bro. John D. Bennett has the consent of the presidency to labor as indicated in his letter, under the jurisdiction of the one in charge of the mission, who we feel assured will have no objection to good labor being done his field.

Original Poetry.

TO M. E. L.

While journeying on the upward road
Toward Zion's gates with lighter load,
Still look to Christ! in Him confide.
Lo! He will be thy Rock, thy Stay
To keep thee in the narrow way,
And all thy footsteps He will guide.

All bright the path and straight the way
That leads to Heaven's unending day,
And they who walk in it are blest.
No thorns nor briars there are found,
And peace and joy in it abound;
There's love forever and sweet rest.

Be this thy portion, whilst thou stay
On earth, to walk in wisdom's way,
For she doth cheer life's cloudiest hour;
Since thou hast heard "Come unto me"
As is thy day, thy strength shall be 'Till thou art saved by Faith's own power.

LAMONI, Iowa, Sept. 20th.

Dear Sisters:—I feel as though I ought to write a few lines; but while there are so many that are more competent I shrink from the task. I wish to say to the sisters that to my mind the Prayer League is just right; and as to the time of meeting, sister Eleanor has said as near 10 o'clock as convenient, so if afternoon suits some better they have the privilege of so doing. To me it seems if the Lord's Prayer were taken out of the requirements, the League would be worthless. I may be wrong but this is my way of thinking, for I can not pray from the heart when I have any ill will towards any one. I have tried it. I can not ask the Lord for favors until I feel that he has pardoned all my short comings; and I am sure he will not forgive me while I hold hardness against my brother or sister. Dear sisters, examine yourselves just one moment. Have you ever received a blessing in answer to prayer while you held hardness, or ill-will, or malice in your heart towards any one? When I consider my own nothingness I can but exclaim, What am I that I must be offended so easily and so deeply that I can not forgive.

There is another subject that has been discussed a great deal, and perhaps enough without my adding my say; but still, I believe I will say a word or two. This is the subject of dress. I believe we ought to dress plain. The quaker dress always looked neat to me, except the bonnet. If we could dress so that when we go to church we would have no cause to think of our dress or cause any one else to think of it, I believe we would be in the right way. One says, let the beauty of our garments be the work of our own hands, and that means we can make them just as beautiful as we please if we do it ourselves. Now I will tell you how I look at that. I saw a girl of ten summers showing a garment to some friends, and her mother spoke up and said, "The beauty of the garment is, she made it herself;" and it brought to my mind the saying, "Let the beauty of your garments be the work of your own hands." For my part I believe the material for our clothes should be plain, and that they should be made plain and neat. I believe that it is just as much sin to dress unbecomingly ugly as it is to dress unbecomingly fashionable. I am very much in favor of the Directoire suits now worn so much. They are both neat and plain, also comfortable, and are recommended by physicians on account of the weight of the dress's resting on the shoulders instead of the waist. I hope to hear from others on this subject, for a dress reform is greatly needed.

Ever praying that we may walk in a pleasing manner before our Father in heaven, I remain your loving sister, AUNT P.

ROSSVILLE, Texas, Sept., 6th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I come this evening knocking at the door of the Home Column, for a little chat with my sisters, and if I can by so doing offer a word of comfort, or a thought by which even one may be benefitted, I shall feel most happy; but, and if I benefit no one, I feel it will be a relief to me to communicate my feelings and thoughts to you, as I am living mostly among the world, away from any branch of the church [and only privileged to meet with our branch once in four or five months. Only those who are situated like this can realize the benefits of the Home Column to us who have so few to talk to of our hopes and desires, and in hours of darkness and gloom to go to for comfort or instruction. How eagerly we grasp the dear Herald, and first scan the letters of our sisters, often finding a letter just suited to our case, offering comfort and relief in our present trials and perplexities. Then again, some one has written upon a subject that has been occupying our mind, and thoroughly coincides with our views. This strengthens us, and we are more confident that our ideas were properly directed. But, my dear sisters, while we have not the privilege of enjoying the society of each other, let us at all times remember and be thankful that we have One to go to who is dearer than a sister, and on whose counsel we can fully rely. Though he sometimes hides his face from us for a season, yet it is in mercy that he hides us, for it were all bright and joyous we would soon forget from whence came the light and to whom we are indebted for all the blessings we enjoy. I feel that the dear Savior sometimes withdraws himself from his children to show them how utterly miserable and forlorn they would become if left to themselves. He sometimes permits us to struggle and wrestle alone in our darkness to show us how weak we are in ourselves, and that we may more highly appreciate his divine guidance, and thereby keep ourselves humble and in a prosper condition to receive his blessings. Are we not taught in the Scriptures that the Spirit of God dwelleth not in unholy temples. The question then is How are we to prepare our hearts for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit? Is it not by a strict compliance with all the requirements of our blessed Lord; to cultivate all the Christian graces; to be meek, gentle, patient, truthful, loving, honest and upright, in all of our dealings with our fellow men? Can we have his Spirit if we are unkind or bitter towards any, even those who are not of the household of faith? Our blessed Lord when he was reviled, reviled not again, but prayed for his enemies. What a great responsibility rests upon us as children of God! Do our children and friends see that our daily walk and example is consistent with our profession? Are our actions so guarded that those whom we associate with may be benefitted, and be constrained to acknowledge that the Lord is with us. I sometimes fear that we are not zealous enough, not as anxious as we should be for the conversion of others. Oh! how terribly disconsolate must be the life of one who is without God in the world, and no one to look to but themselves, or weak humanity! I do not think I would care to live, if I aimed at no higher life. How we pity such ones! For what are they striving? What will be their reward for a lifetime of toil and disappointments? How different the Christian's consolation. With what joy he looks forward to a life beyond. Should we not be especially kind to such unfortunate creatures? Some may say it is their own fault. This may be partly so, but not altogether. Some one else may be in a measure to blame. It is not all who have had the proper training. How carefully then ought we to be in the raising up of our dear little ones that a charge may not be laid at our door.

I do not feel like closing without speaking a word in behalf of the Prayer League. I, like many of my sisters, have been tardy in sending my name, but not through lack of interest, for indeed I have been much interested from the first, but thought to wait for further developments, though I felt sure the move was directed by the Holy Spirit. For some weeks before I saw the notice of it, I had been observing a day in the week for fasting and prayer, and had felt greatly benefitted by it. During this time I was impressed to make a proposal to the sisters of our branch the next time I had an opportunity for meeting with them, that we select some particular subject for prayer, and enter into a covenant to pray for it until the next meeting, at which time there could be another subject appointed. For instance, select some particular friend or relative and pray for their conversion, and I think it would be a means for bringing many into the fold of Christ; and select other subjects, such as for the upbuilding of the cause and spread of the truth, and whatsoever we felt we were most in need of. But when I saw sister Eleanor's proposal I felt to wait and see how it would terminate, feeling sure it was a move in the right direction and that the sisters would unite with her. Though I have not as yet legally joined the League, yet I have already been benefitted by observing its appointments. I sometimes feel a hesitancy in joining, on account of my unworthiness, and for fear that I may through manifold cares fail to be as punctual as I should be, or that our Herald may not always reach me in time. I have felt that I could observe the appointments, without joining the League, but I fear that these thoughts are only a trick of the adversary to cheat me, and as I desire to do all I can for the work of the Master, I now feel anxious to have my name enrolled. May God graciously bless each one of his band of workers, and lead them on to victory, as I feel that he will, for Jesus is our guide and he will conquer sin. Pray for me that I may be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the works of the Lord, and that my efforts to bring up my little ones for God may not be in vain. I believe that the Lord will give me my family. Ever praying for the good of the cause, I am your sister, MARY DELL KUYKENDALL.

OENAVILLE, Texas, Aug. 18th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I believe there will be much good, yes, very much good done by our united prayers to God, who heareth the ravens when they cry, and if not even a sparrow can fall to the ground without his notice, will he not hear his children when they come, uniting their supplications for the same thing? Surely he will; and not fail to answer us, if we ask, doubting nothing. We must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. He says in his word, "Ask, and it shall be given you." Does it mean may be so, or does it mean will be done? I surely believe the word. He also says where two or three are met together in his name, he will bless them. Paul says, "I exhort therefore that first of all supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving thanks be made for all men; for this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior." If it was good for the saints to pray in Paul's day, for anything, it surely will apply to us; for we are taught the same gospel that Paul taught.

Sisters, I hope we will all be more united on the same thing. I have an afflicted family, and I hope that when the time comes for my husband and little daughter to be prayed for, that our prayers may go up as one voice. The 13th of last month, we were made sad by the death of our beloved sister, Isabelle Holcomb, whom we loved dearly; but she is now in peace.

Your sister in the one faith,

FLORENCE JENKINS.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—When I read Bro. Joseph's reply to those men representing the Strangite faction, and his statement in regard to his position relating to societies organized by men, I was so pleased with his coolness, decision and courage that I thanked the Lord sincerely for placing just such a man at the head of his church. When occasion calls for a man to fill a place of trust in God's house, He knows where to find him. He knew it did not require strength of character to be a witness to the Book of Mormon, but honesty, and that was sufficient for the purposes of the Almighty.

The work of God is onward; there are many noble souls responding to the call of the Master, and the ripened grain is being gathered to the garner of the Lord. While some are laboring faithfully for the Master, there remains much to be done; and duty calls loudly at our doors to be up and doing, as there remains but an hour of sunlight in which to labor. There is a sister weighed down by sorrow and grief. See! She she has sunk beneath her load. Let us help her to arise and start again on her journey. There is a brother who has laid down his sickle, and joined a group of idlers who seem lost to everything but the pleasures of the hour; let us try to win him back to duty. It is painful to think that some will have to say, "The harvest is over and the summer is ended, and we are not saved."

Let us be among the wise; let us work in the living present, that when the Master comes, He may present us each with a crown of life. So let us do that each one may wear that crown gracefully, and feel that it is rightfully his. Let us remember that with God, merit is the test of favor; and that the Lord has no favorites, but that in every nation he that fears God and works righteousness the same is accepted of him. Sisters, let us unite as much as it is possible, that when the evil power goes forth in persecution against God's people, we may be prepared to act. "Union is strength." The time we have in which to labor, compared to the cycles of eternity that will revolve their ceaseless round, is as a drop in the bucket; "then let the little while between, in its golden light be seen."

CANDACE.

Correspondence.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, Sept. 14th.

Dear Brethren:—Since General Conference my labors have been in Galland's Grove, and Little Sioux districts, also in north-western Nebraska, returning from which I attended by request, the Plum Hollow and Wilber Reunions; the former in Fremont county, Iowa, and the other in Saline county, Nebraska. These Reunions have been duly reported by another pen. The work in Galland's Grove and Little Sioux districts is going forward and improving in prospect and actual progress, with some exceptions; and I trust that by the wise and persistent efforts of district and local ministry every obstacle will be removed.

By reports from Bro. Charles E. Butterworth I learn that he is being enabled to do a good work in Galland's Grove district. He is a faithful, persistent and safe laborer; does not seek to labor in pastures rich and green, but strikes out into the world, and among the weaker branches where they need help. His labors are always acceptable, and are wisely given. He has been successful in leading quite a number into the church, and awakening others to look after their spiritual interests. Elder Warren E. Peak has been laboring very acceptably in the Little Sioux district, and Magnolia has been favored with his efforts in six able discourses during this week. He has baptized one, and thrown much light into the minds of others; his efforts are well received. He has gone to Logan to preach to-night. I learn that Elder Davis is preaching in this district, but as I have not heard from him direct, I can say nothing of his labors; but I trust he is doing good.

Our quarterly conference in Persia was well attended throughout, and a good interest manifested. I am pleased to note that some of the local ministry are waking up to a sense of their duties, and are occupying school-houses around the country. I trust that every man upon whom God has laid the duty to preach the gospel, will arise in the dignity of his calling, and in meekness and humility discharge his duties, seeking divine aid, and using every God-given power to qualify themselves for the work, that they may be workmen approved of God and his Saints. And I would urge that the Saints, both officers and members, encourage these local ministers in their efforts to fill their callings, by their willing attention and earnest prayers; and thus let these ministers see and feel that their efforts, however feeble, are appreciated, instead of absenting themselves from the meeting when "only a local elder or priest" is going to preach, thus frowning down their efforts. The traveling ministry are called chiefly to go out into the world where the local ministry can not go, and if we will not honor the least of the brethren of Christ, we do not honor Christ; hence he will not honor us, and we will be barren and dead, only fit to be plucked off from the True Vine. I am satisfied that the attention of the Saints needs to be called to this matter. The local ministry have been set at naught, and their efforts frowned upon. Such things ought not to be in God's kingdom. "Offenses must needs come, but woe unto them by whom the offense cometh." Let us be one, and do our feeble part, and encourage others to do their part, in this work of the restoration of all things in these last days. Let us honor every man in his calling.

While in Dawes county, Nebraska, I was blessed in preaching the word on the Bordeaux, and at Shepherd School-house, near Hay Spring; also at Hurford School-house. I would have been pleased to have found more spiritual life among the scattered Saints there. I can not doubt that they have a degree of love for the work, but a greater degree of holy zeal, would have set off that love to greater advantage; for then the world would see it, and who can tell how many hearts they might have led towards the kingdom of God? The Spirit of God has no fellowship with the spirit of the world; hence both can not dwell in the same heart at the same time. I love those Saints, and I want to see them full of spiritual life, and leading their children and neighbors therein. I visited "Evergreen" on the Pine Ridge, some forty miles west of Chadron, at the request of Elder Daniel W. Shirk. He had on the gospel armor, his sword was unsheathed, keen and bright. Whatever his name may be, he is no shirker of duty. He is not ashamed of the cause of truth, but with arm bared for the fight he plunges right into the thickest of the conflict, and is doing a good work. He has his peculiarities, but he is overcoming his traditions and keeps the truth in view. He had baptized five before I got there; they were father, mother, daughter and two sons of a noble family, who will be ornaments in the kingdom of God, or I did not read their spiritual horoscope aright; (pardon that hard word). I preached ten discourses and organized a branch, as has been reported. There was a splendid interest, and I trust Bro. Shirk will gather in the sheaves. One stranger, with tears in his eyes, handed a dollar to Bro. Shirk, telling him to give it to the preacher. Could I help but feel that that a son of Israel was there? I left that part with the "God bless you" of the people on my head, and my prayers for their spiritual growth will continue to ascend.

I tried to open the doors in Chadron but the elements were against me. I was kindly given the use of the Congregational Church, at the request of my son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and sister VanEaton. But every night but one storms arose and prevented meetings, although I was on hand. One night I preached; only a few were present, and the result I have not learned, as my appointments necessitated my leaving. The minister visited me at Mr. VanEaton's. We had a long and pleasant talk. I presented our view of Christianity. He acknowledged every point, and I am satisfied he did it cordially. He is one of the most liberal ministers I ever met outside of Christ's Church. I hope he may yet find his way into the kingdom. There was one soul in that town that I especially desired to lead into the kingdom of God; but my desire was not granted; yet I have hope that he will take his stand, and yet be valiant in the ranks for truth, as he is now valiant for it outside of the ranks. When he shall "put off the old man," and put on the "new man, which is Christ Jesus," then will the peace of God flow unto him as a river, and the still small voice of the Spirit of God, shall bear witness of his sonship in the redeemed family, as an heir of God, and joint heir with Jesus Christ.

Asking pardon for this lengthy epistle, I subscribe myself, your brother in the gospel of peace and love, CHARLES DERRY.

COOKS POINT, Texas, Sep. 7th.

Dear Herald:—Since writing you from Bandera, I have labored at Pipe Creek and Crocket School-houses; assisted by Bro. J. A. Currie, Jr. A good interest is manifested at both places. Being notified by Bro. Renfroe that the sect known as Christians had made an attack on us near Milano Junction, I make ready to meet the issue; and on the 10th of August went to San-Antonio; held meetings there until the 15th. Thence to Milano Junction; Bro. Renfroe met me at the depot with conveyance to his house. The man whom the Christians were going to have meet me and demolish Mormonism, would not come. His name is Lincoln. I think the reason he would not come was this: Bro. H. C. Smith pulled him too hard five or six years ago, at Paige, Bastrop county, this state. We had an arbor built and began a series of meetings on the night of the 18th of August. Bro. Ezzell arriving on the evening of the 17th, we began our meeting as above stated, being glad to have the assistance of Bro. Ezzell, and entered upon our duties feeling well.

On the 21st of August Bro. Ezzell was taken with chills and fever, leaving the work on me alone. The good Lord being the guide, the meeting went on until the 24th, when I had the pleasure of baptizing seven. On Sunday the 26th we began meetings about eight miles further east, in the neighborhood of brother Skinner's. One more was baptized on Monday, making eight in all. The meeting continued until Sunday night, September 2d. On Friday night during services I was speaking on the divine mission of brother Joseph, the martyr, and the Book of Mormon. I quoted Isaiah 29th and 12th verse; just as I got through with the quotation one of the baser sort yelled out, "That's a d—d lie;" then stuck spurs to his pony and fled for other parts. The people are very much disgusted with such conduct and will use every means possible to catch the chap. I came home on Monday the third instant with my wife, son and two daughters. Will preach some here and rest a week, and return to the same place and organize a branch on the 15th of this month with 18 members.

On the 7th instant brother E. W. Nunley called and spent the day with me, which was a pleasure to me, the day being spent in conversing on the gospel of the latter days. Letter from Bro. Moore, just received, is also encouraging; God bless him I pray. With kind regards to all,
I am yours in bonds,

I. N. ROBERTS.

FLAGLER, Iowa, Sept. 15th.

Editor Herald:—Elders Bozarth and Roth of the Latter Day Saints have just closed a short series of meetings here. These gentlemen preach gospel truth just as all people should be taught. While here we had the pleasure of hearing them and on our return home we compared notes and find them correct in all quotations. Their explanation of baptism is enough to cause the world to say, "I will go and be baptized according to John's baptism, as we are told, 'Except ye be born of the water and the Spirit ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven.'" There seems to be a great deal of prejudice in the minds of many in regard to your church, which is decidedly wrong, and we are satisfied that if we had more such men as Messers Bozarth and Roth to travel and preach the true gospel that prejudicial feelings would be out of existence before long. At first when they commenced their meetings the attendance was small, but at the close the house was crowded; which shows that our citizens are becoming more enlightened; and showed their appreciation of gospel truth, that was being preached. The immersed three converts which we learn were added to the Church. We are satisfied that they closed their meetings just as there was a good spirit manifest. We would be pleased to have them return and renew the work.

Yours,

RICHARD WILLIAMS.

P.S.—We send these few lines for your columns in order to try and break up prejudice that is now existing. Hoping that I am not intrusive, I remain, yours, BROWN CITY, Michigan, Sep. 16th.

Dear Herald:—I am still trying to help roll on the great latter day work. On August 16th I left home to attend a two days' meeting at Dimondale, in the southern part of this state. Met with brethren C. Scott and H. Rathbun. At our first meeting on Friday night the attendance was rather small; but kept increasing until Sunday night when several hundred were present, and a good interest manifested. One was baptized.

From there I returned to Five Lakes, where they are building a church; and as I am chairman of the building committee, I remained there ten days and helped them on with their church; preaching at nights. A good work is being done there. Many are believing and I think that about conference time there will be an ingathering. Our district conference will convene there some time in October.

From there I went to Juniata to attend a two days' meeting. Large gathering, many believing, and some baptized. They have a nice branch of about forty good faithful Saints. From there I went to Five Lakes again, preaching a few sermons and looking after church matters. I then returned home, a letter requiring me to come to Juniata to look after matters there for a week, and made a new opening about six miles from there; baptized one. I left the people investigating. Some said if any church is right that ours is the one. From there I had to return home, but expect to go back in a few days.

The great latter day work is onward in this part of the vineyard and the stone is rolling. I must say that since I came into the church I never before saw how greatly we as a people, or church, are gaining favor with the people of the world, as we are at present. Many places where a year ago they would not let us have their school houses, or churches, now are opening them and requesting us to come and preach. Truly the promise that we should have favor has come to pass. I never felt more determined to push on the work than now, and my daily prayer is for wisdom.

Yours in bonds,

J. A. CARPENTER.

RHODES, Iowa, Sept. 10th.

Beloved Saints:—There is still a little band of the old Edenville branch left, who neglect not the assembling of themselves together from time to time to worship God; striving to keep the camp-fires blazing, and keep their post with sleepless eye; realizing that there are glorious victories coming for the army of the Lord. But those victories can only be won by the persistent, united efforts of the Saints. God uses human agencies to accomplish his grand purposes. There is work, not only for the ministry, but for every one who has taken upon them the name of Christ; for every one who has been buried with Him in baptism, and arisen to a newness of life.

"Fields are white the harvest waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?
Let none hear you idly saying
'There is nothing I can do,'
While the souls of men are dying
And the Master calls for you.
Take the task He gives you gladly,
Let His work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when He calleth,
'Here am I! Send me; send me.'"

O, that we might all have this spirit of willingness to perform whatever task falls to our lot in meekness and humility, knowing well that God will not require more of us than we are able to perform! Let us be actively engaged in the service of God, lest the Master come in an hour when we think not, and find us as the foolish virgins, having no oil in our lamps. Satan understands that he has but a short time to work, and he is marshaling all his forces to try to overcome the people of God.

God was pleased to show me in a dream, some months ago, something of the shortness of the time before the coming of our Savior to reign on the earth. I saw in my dream the sealed portion of the Book of Mormon, (or that part retained by the angel), come forth. The leaves were a little larger than the common sheet of letter paper, and were fastened together at the end. The person who had the book allowed me to take it in my hands and examine it. The leaves were of polished whiteness in appearance, and were closely written in letters of gold, in the most beautiful Spencerian hand. I said, as I glanced hastily over the shining pages, "It would hardly seem necessary to put this in print it is so plain."

The person who gave me the book replied: "Some will wish to read the book who can not read writing." But, although it was so plain, I was not permitted to read anything except two dates; though I was very anxious to do so. On the first page I distinctly saw a date, and as I turned over the leaves I saw another, ten years later; after which the writing faded away, and there appeared before me a beautiful country scene. Everything had the appearance of early summer, so fresh and beautiful to look upon. There were men returning home from their occupations; some driving teams and some on horse back; the finest horses I ever saw. But what seemed very peculiar to me was that the horses all had bells on; and upon everything there seemed to reign a perfect peace and quiet. As I gazed upon the beautiful scene the thought occurred to me, This is the Millennium! And with this thought I awoke.

Dear Saints, if this dream has any significance, (and I firmly believe it has), the time is short. That we may all be ready to meet our Lord with joy and gladness when he comes, is the prayer of my heart.

M. A. HUGHES.

HARDIN, Mo., Sept. 15th.

Bro. Joseph:—I attended the conference at Kingston, met with Bro. McDowell for the first time; I think he is a noble worker. I have just attended the Central District conference; had Bro. Luff with us; I love to meet with such men. I am opening new places to preach. I am now in the south-east part of Ray county, where I have been before. There is so much sickness here we can not do much just now. The local ministry some of them are doing labor. Bro. Joseph B. Belcher preaches twice a month in his locality. I hope to see the work revive in this district. I have been usually blessed in preaching; have been well used by the people. May God bless his Saints everywhere is my prayer.

ROBERT L. WARE.

POMONA, Cal., Sept. 11th.

Bro. Joseph:—The question, "Was Jesus baptized for sin?" In the winter of sixty-three and four, a Methodist preacher was holding a protracted meeting in the Stone School-house, at what was called the Gravel Store in the town of Albion, Wisconsin. I criticised some of his remarks one evening; and the next day he sent for me to come across the street to Mr. Freeborn Sweet's, as he wished to have a talk with me on religion. As I had some doubts in entering into a controversy with a college bred clergyman, I first called on the Father to assist me in wisdom pertaining to light concerning his word.

The man's name was Willard. We met, and after passing the time of day, he said that he had sent for me, not for controversy, but to learn what our views were on the salvation of the soul. After some few remarks, he says, "Your people put much stress on baptism, for remission of sin. Why was Christ baptized, as he had no sin?" Just then was when the Father helped me out, as I think. The answer was, that Christ was a second Adam. "As in Adam all die, so in Christ should all be made alive." As Adam's transgression brought sin into the world, and that rested on all till Christ came, he was baptized in proxy for the sin of the world, corresponding with what John said, when he saw Jesus coming to his baptism; "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." And as he was baptized for the sin of the world, he could say, "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The above would leave us as agents of our own salvation; to commit sin and be lost, or when we come to the years of understanding, repent and be baptized for the sins we committed, and be saved in the kingdom.

The above is my view. Elder Willard said that was the prettiest thing he ever heard; and that he should always teach it so. He said that it gave him great joy, as now he could preach a funeral sermon for an infant child, and tell the mourners that their little one was at the throne of Jesus. Every parent ought to realize that in order to meet with their departed infants, they themselves must "become as a little child," by being adopted into the kingdom, by a new birth.

Truly in the faith of adoption,

E. C. BROWN.

MONMOUTH, Ontario, Sept. 10th.

Brn. Smith, and Blair:—It is now eleven months since I embraced the gospel, I being among the first to join the church here, under the influence of Elder W. J. Smith, he being the first I ever heard preach the gospel in its fullness. I now realize that it is the work of God. Our branch was organized on August 12th, now consists of fifty-five members; Elders J. H. Lake, and W. J. Smith being present at the organization. Elder J. H. Lake spoke by the Spirit, in the gift of tongues. The interpretation being given, it was to the effect that I be ordained an elder, R. H. Hales a priest, and T. Dack a teacher; also other instructions and words of encouragement. By resolution we were ordained and I was elected presiding elder of this the Monmouth branch. Elder Lake preached the evenings of the 12th and 13th of August in our School-house, to a large audience. On the night of the 14th Rev. A. E. Whatham of the Church of England delivered a lecture in said school-house, claiming six objections to the Voice of Warning. He was unwilling to accept any propositions, being only willing to allow Elder W. J. Smith a short time to reply to his lecture, which he had written for publication and which he has had published since. Elder Smith soon proved his objections to be false. Whatham, finding that his arguments were being upset in such a short time, would jump up every few moments and disturb elder Smith as much as any man possibly could and publicly confessed himself an unbeliever and then afterwards denied his own words. Elder Smith then and there proved him to be a positive falsifier, much to the annoyance of said Rev. Gentleman and his followers but to the satisfaction of the Saints.

The Rev. Gentleman's lecture has done no harm here; in fact, since then 23 more have been baptized by elder Smith. Bro. and Sr. Smith have been visiting in our neighborhood and have made many new friends. Sr. Smith is highly esteemed and loved by the saints, likewise her amiable husband. We were sorry to part with them, and hear his farewell sermon. The work is progressing favorably and we feel to thank the Lord for blessing this part of his moral vineyard.

Your Brother in the gospel,

ANSON W. BURTON.

PLUM HOLLOW, Ia, Sept. 15th.

Bro. Joseph:—We are still holding meetings in the tent. Bro. Blair is with us this week doing excellent service in presenting the word of life to the people; he will stay over Sunday. We have good attentive audiences, among whom are some of the brightest and most intellectual, who are deeply interested in our work. We have baptized one since the Camp-meeting; one other has given in her name and I think others also will come. The Saints have done nobly at a sacrifice of time and means to keep up these meetings. Bro. William Leeka's house has been full all the time. The untiring zeal and never falling labors of sister Rachel Leeka are spoken of by Saints and friends far and near.

17th.—Last evening closed our services here in the tent. Three more, adults, were to be baptized, and many more are believing. Several are deeply moved with love for the truth, and express themselves highly satisfied with our position, and stated to me that they realize it to be their duty to obey, but have thought it possibly might be wisdom to wait a little season for friends and relatives. May God's holy Spirit move them forward to duty is our prayer. Twenty-nine in all, have been baptized since our Camp-meeting commenced. The efficient and well accepted labors of Bro. Blair of late were highly appreciated and fully endorsed by all the Saints, and by almost the entire congregation. There were but few exceptions; and it certainly would be something new under the sun for all to believe. Yesterday was a day long to be remembered by us. Congregations of over two hundred listened to the truths of heaven declared under the inspiration of God's Spirit. Our hearts swelled within us with gratitude to him who is the Giver of all good.

This week we intend to hold meetings in the church of the Saints, near Father Goode's. Father Leeka's health is much better. He feels buoyant in spirits' and rejoices greatly in the work. Elder Blair leaves for St. Joseph and Clarksdale, tomorrow. Yours in bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

SANTA ANA, Cal., Sep. 6th.

Bro. Dancer:—I enclose an order for church publications. Although not large, yet every little helps, and if we waited until they became large I fear we would not have very much to send. The Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard are just holding their own. There are no flattering prospects discernible as yet. Some are striving to keep the commandments of God, while others are more or less indifferent, seeking the pleasures of the world for enjoyments, instead of the Lord for glories hereafter. We have come to the conclusion that to serve God aright it is a daily warfare, and that there is no time for sleeping soldiers in the army of the Lord. We are preparing for our district conference which will convene October 19th; and we anticipate a good time, and pray the Lord may meet with and bless us in our deliberations. We expect to have Brn. Smith, Burton and Mills with us and with this able body of men, armed with truth and filled with the Spirit of God, we expect to have a time of rejoicing such as only the Saints of God know of. I would also make mention of the name of Bro. Badham with the others, who has the work at heart and is working both for old and young alike. We propose having a day set apart during conference for a session of Sunday Schools, as through this channel there seems to be an opportunity of doing much good. Praying for unity of the brethren; for perfect love in Christ, and a restoration to the land of the pure in heart.

Your brother in the gospel,
DAVID GARNER.

HOLDEN, Mo., September 13th.

Bro. Joseph.—I have been here two weeks preaching every night: have baptized two and blessed three children; expect to trouble the water again next Sunday. I am having good attention and good liberty. Last night I spoke on the Book of Mormon and to-night I consider the necessity of such a book and the time in which it should come forth; as it is now too late for such a work to be introduced, as it must come just before the former and latter rain come unto Palestine, and when the wild, or sour grape was ripening in the flower; and when the Children of Israel, or this branch of the seed of Abraham should be in the ascendancy. So far I have proved my points to satisfaction, I think, as my opponents seem to see the drift of events. Pray for me. I shall stay here until Oct. 1st if the Lord permit. The faith of the Saints is being strengthened, wonderfully, here. Bro. I. N. White will be here on the 22d of this month to hold over two Sundays.

In the one faith and hope of triumph,
CLARENCE STCLAIR.

IRONDALE, Ont., Sep. 10th.

Brother Joseph.—In company with brother John H. Lake, I came here on the 16th of last July; both of us having previously visited this section, baptizing quite a number. Prospects being favorable for another ingathering it is therefore hardly necessary to state that his Satanic Majesty was terribly enraged at our return. And when we came every effort was made by those in league with him to delude the honest seeker after truth from the path that leads to eternal life. Among those efforts the most despicable were those of a certain party sending for one St. George, of Fenelon Falls; a poor, silly Whitmerite dupe, who came to Irondale, and for three successive evenings doled out his silly twaddle, consisting mostly of readings from W. P. Brown's pamphlets belittling the martyred Seer with innuendoes and charges of polygamy, and in fine, a rehash of Whitmerite objections so completely punctured by you in the Herald. I never felt so demeaned in meeting any man, as I did in meeting this contemptible fraud of Fenelon Falls. He has neither common sense nor shame: but a little smattering of education seems to make him think that what he don't know, is hardly worth knowing. In meeting him, I realized more fully than ever before that what Professor Nelson says: "Learned ignorance is the worst kind of ignorance I ever met." As a specimen of his intellectual ability, I herewith send you one of his epistles, written to one of our brethren.

I wish just here to say that I baptized an intelligent lady yesterday, who had been investigating our work for some time, but who, for want of a proper understanding of our claims, had drifted over near the shores of Whitmerism. But the debate settled the matter for her, and yesterday she obeyed. I have also been informed that others who were favorably impressed with Whitmerism prior to St. George's efforts, now repudiate it. Some of those also who were baptized by W. P. Brown at Cameron, in 1886, now claim the Book of Mormon to be a fraud, and the idea of the gospel being restored by an angel to Joseph the Seer, a humbug. Thus we see what Whitmerism is doing for some.

On the 14th ult. I met a Rev A. E. Whatham, of the Established Church. He came in the township of Monmoth and delivered a lecture against the Voice of Warning; making the claim that Ephraim became a "multitude of nations" on the Eastern continent. That the patriarchal blessings referring to Ephraim and Mannassah, and Joseph's land, in no wise referred to America; that America was not referred to in any sense in the Bible. That the ten tribes were called Ephraim, and the great things of God's law written to them, was the Mosaic economy, as originally delivered to the twelve tribes. That the Bible nowhere mentioned the coming forth of a "sealed book;" and finally, "The Bible is a mystery, and the common people must take the spiritualized construction that the ministry place upon it.

I replied to this, and my reply seemed to turn him topsy turvy; and he therefore took refuge under "old Joe Smith." "He was a polygamist and you ought to hound this man out of the country," etc. And when we drove him from this position, he hung up on "Show us a sign?" "Let us hear you speak in tongues?" etc. Well, the result is that twenty-three have been baptized there since, and a number have told me that the debate decided the matter for them.

There is one thing I have noticed here, perhaps more than I ever noticed before, that there is a certain class of people that will lock arms with the most detested if they will only arm themselves against the Latter Day Saints. And I verily believe that if Satan himself, with his burning chains jingling around his cloven feet, should step up on the platform to antagonize the doctrine of the Saints, that some professing Christians would stand at his back, until the last effort was made, and then applaud him for his success (?)

On the 12th ult. brother Lake and I organized a branch in Monmouth of thirty-one members, to be known as the Monmouth branch. Brother Anson W. Burton, an intelligent young man, was ordained an elder, and is in charge. We are led to believe that he will make his mark if he is only humble. Brother Burton will be ably assisted by Brn. Richard N. Hales, priest, Thomas Dack, teacher, and John Braden, deacon. These are all good men, and we pray God's blessings to rest upon them. Their branch now numbers fifty-five. Brother Henry Dell has also been ordained a priest in this branch. He is an intelligent young man, and will, if faithful, render valuable aid to the work in this part.

Yesterday I organized a branch consisting of fourteen members at Irondale, to be known as the Irondale branch. Brother Abraham Lake was ordained an elder and is in charge. Charles H. Lake was ordained a priest. He is a young man who is respected by all. May the kind Master smile upon these men, giving them wisdom and grace that they may become efficient laborers in the vineyard of the Lord.

One thing occurred here yesterday which made us feel sad. A lady, who is a wife and a mother who last fall embraced the gospel, was forbidden by her brutal husband to attend our meetings. He threatened to kill her if she went near the meetings. Many times he has cuffed and whipped her because she would not recant her religion. Finding that this was doing no good, he tried to allure her from the path of holiness by promising to buy silk dresses for her, etc., but she was unwavering. The gospel of the Son of God is precious to her soul. The gold and glitter of this life, is not to be compared with the riches in store for those who endure affliction. May heaven help this sister! I often think that it is hard to suffer persecution when coming from the world; but when a partner in life turns the icy hand of persecution, it must be terrible in the extreme. Many times this sister, while upon her knees, has been misused by this brute whom she calls husband. Husband! What a disgrace to the name! He is no more fit for her holy companionship than is a filthy crow for the association of a golden oriole. But there is one consolation: Such conditions will not always last; deliverance will come by and bye. Though we may be bowed down with troubles and cares, and be ill-treated or slain, yet the reaping time is coming; and he who hears the raven's cry, will not be forgetful of the afflictions that we endure for the gospel's sake. Though it may be hard to endure the crosses and trials here, yet they are only for a moment, comparatively speaking, and will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

May the peace of our Master be with his children.
WILLARD J. SMITH.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, Sept., 12th.

Dear Herald.—Elder Warren Peak has been with us ever since last Sunday, and to-day there is one to be baptized. His sermons are listened to with much interest, and we look for good to result in the lives of the membership of the body of Christ from his labor. The branch at Magnolia still moves along, keeping up regular meetings twice on Sunday; prayer meeting on Wednesday evenings, Sabbath School Sunday forenoon, and we believe that while we have had no especial manifestations, yet we have had many evidences of divine favor, and we yet desire to remain with the church in belief and practice. But we can not present as encouraging a report as to the practice of many of the church here as we would like, but hope to see the power of God manifested in keeping all within the fold, with lives worthy of divine approval at the judgment day.

Crops are good in this and adjoining counties, considering the lateness of planting time; and while the small grains are not extra, yet we believe that we will have enough and to spare. I am enjoying the word of God as much as I ever did, and my desire increases daily to be able to do more for the salvation of souls. I am so situated as to be able to do but little, owing to the past, but as it has been said, and probably very wisely applied in my case, to let the past bury the past, and labor for the future. I shall bow to the inevitable, and see the moving hand of God concerning the future. I am acting as Sunday School superintendent here, and preaching on the Sabbath to the Saints and friends here, and occasionally at Little Sioux and Logan. The quarterly conference held September first and second was exceptionally good, with large attendance and good interest; preaching by Peak, Derry, Crabbe and Mintun. Arrangements were made to hold a series of meetings throughout the district, and some of the local elders are already out, expecting to spend some time in the ministry this winter. We expect to have better reports to send to your precious columns in the near future, and we hope to hear of increasing interest in all parts of the world where the ministry may labor. May your power for good increase, and the ability be given me to keep pace with the work you represent—

Yours in the faith,

J. F. MINTUN.

THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

JESUS of Nazareth is indeed the Son of God and the Savior of the world. The Christian religion is the true religion, seeing that Christ is the very person so evidently pointed out, in all the great dispensations of divine providence from the fall of man, and was undoubtedly in so many instances foretold from age to age, and shadowed forth in a great variety of types and figures. If we seriously consider the course of things from the beginning, and observe the motions of all the great wheels of providence, we discern that they all tend thither. They are all as so many lines, whose course, if it be observed and accurately followed, will be found to center here. It is so very plain in many things, that it would suggest stupidity to deny it. This person sent from God, came into the world with his commission and authority to do his work, and to declare God's will. The governor of the world in all his great works towards Jews and Gentiles to the time of Christ's birth has declared it. It is a plain and evident truth that he who was born at Bethlehem, who dwelt at Nazareth and Capernaum, and who was crucified without the gates of Jerusalem must be the Messiah. Blessed are all they that believe and obey him, and miserable will be all that deny him. This shows the unreasonableness of deists who deny revealed religion and the Jews who deny that this Jesus is the Messiah, foretold and promised to their fathers. Should any object that it may be some cunning man that contrived this history and those prophecies in order to prove that he is the Messiah; it may be replied, How could such a thing be contrived by cunning man to point to Jesus Christ long before he was born? How could they know that any such person would be born, and how could their subtlety help them to foresee and point out an event that was to come to pass many ages afterwards? No fact can be more evident than that the Jews had these writings long before Christ was born, as they still have them in great veneration.

In all their dispersions through the world they would never have received such a contrivance from Christians to prove Jesus to be the Messiah, whom they always denied; much less would they have been made to believe that. They always had their books in their hands. If there had been an imposition, what has been said, affords a strong argument for the divine authority of the books of the Old Testament, from the admirable harmony whereby they all point to the same thing. We may see by what has been said how that all parts of the Old Testament, though written by so many different penmen, and in ages so distant, harmonize one with another, all agreeing in one, and centre in the same event which it was impossible for any one of them to foreknow, but by divine revelation?

Now, if the Old Testament was not inspired of God, what account can be given of such an agreement? If these books were written without divine direction then none of their penmen knew that such a person as Jesus Christ would come into the world. His coming was a mere figment of their own brain; and if so, how happened it that this imagination of theirs, which they foretold without any manner of ground for their prediction, was exactly fulfilled? How did they all come to agree in it, all pointing exactly to the same thing, though they lived so many hundred years distant from one another? This admirable consent and agreement in a future event is therefore a clear and certain evidence of the divine authority and authenticity of those writings. Hence we may learn how weak and ignorant the objections are against the Old Testament.

Another objection is that it consists so much of warlike histories and evil transactions. Say some, "We have histories of their kings and rulers, their wars with neighboring nations, and the changes that happened in their state and government. Other nations used to keep histories of their public affairs, as well as the Jews. Why then should we think that these histories are the word of God any more than those of other people?" This shows the folly and vanity of such an objection. The care of their history is very different from that of all others. Their history alone gives us a creditable account of the origin of all things.

The same book gives a view of the whole series of the great events of divine providence, from the origin to the consummation of all things, exhibiting an excellent and glorious account of the wise and holy designs of the Supreme Governor in it all. No common history has had such penmen. This was all written by men who came with evident signs and testimonies of being prophets of the Most High. Immediately inspired, and though a history, yet the Bible contains those great events of providence by which it appears how God has been carrying on the glorious work of redemption from age to age. They are no less full of divine instruction, and of those things that show forth Christ and his glorious gospel, than the other parts of the holy Scriptures. To object to a book being divine merely because it is historical, is a poor fancy. As if that could not be the word of God which gives an account of what is past; or as though it were not reasonable to suppose that God, in a revelation to mankind, would give us any revelation of the dispensation of his own providence. If so, it must be because his works are not worthy to be related, or else because the scheme of his government and the series of his dispensations towards his church and the world are not worthy of record or of preservation. The objection that it is a common thing for nations and kingdoms to keep record of their wars, and the revolutions that come to pass in their territories is so far from being a weighty objection against the historical part of the Scripture, as though it were not the word of God, that it is a strong argument in favor of it; for if the light of nature teaches all governments and their administrations to publish histories for the information of others, how much more may we expect that God would give the world a record of the dispensations of his government, which doubtless is infinitely more worthy of a history for our information? If wise kings have taken care that there should be good histories written of the nations over which they have reigned, shall we think it incredible that Jesus Christ should take care that his church, which is his kingdom, his peculiar people, should have in their hands a certain infallible history of their nation and of his government of them? But for the history of the Old Testament how woefully ignorant would we have been of many things which the church of God needs to know. How ignorant of God's dealings toward mankind, and toward his church from the beginning of the creation of the world. The fall of man and the rise and progress of the dispensations of grace towards mankind. We should have known nothing how God at first set up a church in the world, and how it was preserved. After what manner he governed it from the beginning. How the light of the gospel first began to dawn in the world, and how it increased, and how things were preparing for the coming of Christ. If we are Christians we belong to this great building of God, and but for the history of the Old Testament we should never have known what was the first occasion of God's going about this work. How the foundation of it was laid, and how it has gone on from the beginning. The times of the Old Testament history are mostly such as no other history includes, and therefore if God had not preserved an account of these things in his word we should have been wholly without them.

Those that object against the authority of the Old Testament history, may as well object against Moses' account of the creation, for in the former we have a history of a work no less important, viz, the work of redemption. Nay, this is a far greater and more glorious work. If it be inquired which of the two works, that of creation, or that of providence is the greatest? It must be answered, The work of providence. But the work of redemption is the greatest of all the works of providence, and let all those who make this objection consider what part of the Old Testament history can be spared, without making a great breach in that thread or series of events by which this glorious work has been carried on. This leads me to observe that from what has been said, we may see much of the wisdom of God, in the structure of the Scriptures of the Old Testament.

Let us briefly take a view of the several parts of it and of the need there was of them. It was necessary; for instance, that we should have some account of the creation of the world; of our first parents and their primitive state; of the fall of the old world and its degeneracy; of the universal deluge, and the origin of the nations after this destruction of mankind. It seems necessary, moreover, that there should be some account of the succession of the Church of God from the beginning. God suffered all the world to degenerate, and took one nation only to be his people, to preserve the true worship and religion until the Savior should come. In them the world was gradually prepared for that great light, and those wonderful things of which he was to be the author. Thus they were a typical nation, that in them God might shadow forth and teach as under a veil, all the future glories of the gospel. It was therefore necessary that we should have some account of this, how it was first effected by the call of Abraham, and by their being bond-slaves in Egypt, and how they were brought to Canaan. It was necessary that we should have some account of the revelation which God made of himself to that people in giving their law, in the appointment of their typical worship, wherein the gospel is veiled, and of the formation of their civil and ecclesiastical state. It seems necessary that we should have some account of their being actually brought to Canaan, the country promised them, and where they always dwelt, that we should have a history of the successions of the church of Israel, and of those providences towards them which were most considerable and fullest of gospel mystery. That we should have some account of the promised external glory of that nation under David and Solomon, and a very particular account of David, whose history is so full of the gospel, and that we should have some account of the building of the temple which was also full of gospel mystery, and it is of consequence, that we should have some account of Israel's separation from Judah, and of the Ten Tribes captivity and utter rejection, and therefore a brief history of them until that time. That we should have an account of the succession of the kings of Judah and of the church, until their captivity into Babylon. Of their return from captivity and resettlement in their own land, with the origin of the last state of the church before Christ came.

A little consideration will convince any one that all these things were necessary, and that none of them could be spared, and in the general, that it was necessary that we should have a history of God's Church until the time reached by human histories. It was important that we should have an inspired history of those times of the Jewish church wherein there existed a more extraordinary intercourse between God and them, while he used to dwell among them as it were visibly, revealing himself by the Shechinah, by Urim and Thummim, and by prophecy, and so more immediately to order their affairs. It was necessary that we should have in prophecy some account of the great dispensations of God after the finishing of inspired history, for which it was needful that there should be raised up a number of prophets who should foretell the coming of the Son of God and the nature and the glory of his kingdom, as so many harbingers to make way for him, and that these prophecies should remain in the church. It was also desirable that the church should have a book of divine songs given by inspiration from God wherein there should be a lively representation of the true spirit of devotion; of faith, hope, and divine love; of joy, resignation, humility, obedience, repentance, etc., as in the Psalms. Also that we should have from God such of moral instruction as that in Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, relating to the affairs and state of mankind, and the concerns of human life, containing rules of true wisdom and prudence for our conduct in all circumstances. It is important that we should have a book to teach us how to conduct ourselves under affliction, seeing the Church of God here is in a militant state; and God's people through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of heaven. The church is for a long time under trouble, meets with fiery trials and extreme suffering, before her time of peace and rest in the later ages of the world. Therefore God has given us a book most proper in these circumstances; the book of Job. And though written on occasion of the afflictions of a particular Saint, it was probably at first given to the church in Egypt under her afflictions there, and is made use of by the apostle to comfort Christians under persecution. (James 5: 11). Ye have heard of the patience of Job and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy. God was also pleased in his book of Job to give some view of the ancient divinity before the beginning of the law. The whole book both Old Testament and New, is filled up with the gospel; only with this difference, that the Old Testament contains the gospel under a veil; but the New contains it unveiled, so that we may see the glory of the Lord with open face. Some are ready to look on it as being out of date and as if we in these days of the gospel have but little to do with it; but this is a very great mistake, arising from a want of observing the nature and design of the Old Testament; which, if it were observed would appear full of the gospel of Christ, and would in an excellent manner illustrate and confirm the glorious doctrines and promises of the New Testament. Those parts of the Old Testament which are commonly looked upon as containing the least divine instruction are mines and treasures of gospel knowledge. The reason why they are thought to contain so little is that persons do but superficially read them. The treasures which are hid underneath are not observed. They only look on the top of the ground and suddenly pass judgment that there is nothing there; but they never dig into the mine. If they did, they would find it richly stored with what is more valuable than silver and gold, and would be abundantly requited for their pains. What has been said may show us what a precious treasure God has committed into our hands, in that he has given us the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Covenants. How little do most persons consider what a privilege they enjoy in the possession of these books which they have in their hands and may converse with as they please. What excellent books are these, and how far exceeding all human writings. They reveal God to us and give us a view of the grand design and glorious scheme of providence from the beginning of the world. In history or prophecy they reveal the great Redeemer; his glorious redemption, and the various steps by which God accomplishes it from the beginning to the end. Shall we prize a history which gives us a clear account of some great earthly prince or mighty warrior, as an Alexander, a Cæsar, or Marlborough, and fail to prize the history that God gives us of the Prince and Savior and of the great transactions of the King of kings and Lord of armies and what he has wrought for the redemption of his chosen people? But what will this avail us if we read it without observing what is the drift of the Holy Ghost in it? The Psalmist in Psalm 119: 18 begs of God that he would enlighten his eyes, that he might behold wondrous things out of his law. The Scriptures are full of wondrous things. Those histories which are too commonly read as if they were only private concerns of particular persons, such as of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, of Ruth, Joshua, the Judges, David and the Israelitish princes are accounts of vastly greater things, and of far more extensive concern. The history of Scripture is but too commonly read as if it was written only to entertain mens fancies, and the infinitely great things contained in them are passed over without notice. Whatever treasures the Scriptures contain we shall be never the better for them if we do not observe them. He who has a Bible and does not observe what it contains, is like a man who has a box of silver and gold and does not know it. He will never be the better for his treasure and so might as well be without it.

What has been said may show us how great a person is Jesus Christ, and how great his errand into the world, seeing there was so much done to prepare the way for him through all ages of the world, from the very beginning. If we had notice of a stranger being about to come into a country, and should observe that great preparation was made for him, alterations made in the state of the whole country, persons of great note engaged in the preparation and all the affairs and concerns of the country so ordered as to be subservient to the design of entertaining him, it would be natural for us to think that some extraordinary person is coming and it is some very great business for which he is to appear. How great a person then must he be for whose coming the great God of heaven and earth, and governor of all things, employed four thousand years in preparing the way? Soon after the world was created and from age to age he has been doing great things, bringing mighty events to pass, accomplishing wonders without number; often overturning the world in order to do it. He has been causing everything in the state of mankind and all revolutions and changes in the habitable world from generation to generation to be subservient to this great design. Surely this must be some great and extraordinary person and a great work it must needs be for which he came. We read when Christ was coming into Jerusalem and multitudes ran before him, having cut down the branches of palm trees and strewed their garments in the way, crying, "Hosanna to the Son of David," that the whole city was moved, saying, "Who is this?" They wondered who that extraordinary person should be, that such preparation should be made for him. But if we consider what great things were done in all ages to prepare for Christ's coming; how that the world was often overturned for it, much more may we cry out, "Who is this? What great person is this?" and say as in Psalms 24: 8-10, "Who is this king of glory, that God should show him such respect and confer on him such honor? Surely he is honorable in God's eyes and greatly beloved;" and surely it is a grand errand upon which he is sent.

THE MAINE REUNION.

Editors Herald:—By request of the president of the New England mission, and as we do not want the church to understand that the west are having a monopoly of the good things that belong to the kingdom of God, I essay the task of giving the readers of the Herald something in regard to the late Reunion of the Maine and Massachusetts districts at Jonesport, Maine.

Owing to the insufficient notice and advertisement, the short time for preparation, etc., it also being the first experiment of the kind in the east, there was not so large a representation of delegates and visitors from abroad, or in the vicinity, as there would have been. But we trust and have the best reasons for believing that it is the beginning of much larger things in this direction.

August 14th the writer received a telegram while at his home in Providence, to go to Dennisport to conduct the funeral of Bro. Doane's child. Just before the commencement of this service word came of the drowning of Lewis Eldredge, son of Bro. Nehemiah Eldredge, whose funeral we were detained to attend, preaching also in Saints' Chapel that evening. Arriving in Boston on Thursday evening, where we were met by our companions, Sr. Blood, Sr. Lusie Gates, Bro. E. C. Briggs and Sr. Bucknam, from Brockton, and were entertained by the kindness of Saints. The following morning we were joined at Commercial Wharf, the place of our embarkation, by Bro. Perthell, his wife, mother and sister, and last, though not least, the president of the Massachusetts district, Bro. John Smith, of New Bedford, and his companion. The ocean sail to Portland was a pleasant day voyage, especially to the novice, and one in which we wish all the uninitiated western Saints might indulge. Arriving at Portland about five o'clock in the afternoon, and having until eleven o'clock at night, all started out, not with a view of coloring the town, but of seeing Portland as it was and is, a beautiful thriving city. Encountering nothing more serious than "clams" and "chowder," whose mysteries forbid us to know how much damage was really inflicted upon our person until the day of final reckoning with boarding-house and restaurant keepers; with the deeds and mysteries that belong to their occupation.

A quiet and restful night upon the sea would have followed had the weather allowed that fog horn to rest; but as it was, that terror of "the men who go down in ships" upon this eastern coast, the impenetrable fog, called forth that dismal music of safety and guard against collision all night. The morning found us safe in Rockland, Maine, however, and with the sun shining brightly.

The middle of the forenoon we were joined at Little Deer Isle by Brn. W. H. Kelley, U. Greene and wife, Bro. George Gates, of Providence, Rhode Island, and Saints of the Western Maine district. From there until our arrival at Jonesport at eleven in the evening the scenery of the coast of Maine was one panorama of sublimity and grandeur, the lofty summits of Mt. Desert range towering above the mist and clouds like the thoughts of God; the majesty of His power and the eternal years of his existence were lessoned to me in the majestic outward sweep and ceasurers return, to beat and voice its beauty in the dashing and uplifted wave and spray as they ceaselessly beat against this rock-ribbed shore.

At Jonesport we found Bro. F. M. Sheehy who had preceded us, with a host of Saints and friends to make us glad by their open-handed hospitality. Sunday morning, refreshed by rest, we gathered to the chapel and after organization with proper committees, etc., we listened to a sermon by Bro. E. C. Briggs. A funeral service was held in the afternoon, W. H. Kelley officiating. Preaching in the evening by the writer; a full attendance all day and house crowded in the evening; the Spirit being present from the very beginning.

Monday, 10 a. m. prayer and testimony meeting, Elder Kelley in charge, in which the Spirit in wisdom and power, flowed uninterruptedly through God's covenant children, as they testified with tears of joy and gladness to the message of the angel, and the efficacy of the work of God's chosen ministry in these last days.

Afternoon at 2: 30, preaching by E. C. Briggs to an attentive audience, including the Congregational minister; and in the evening by Elder John Smith to a good congregation.

Tuesday: Prayer meeting at 10 a. m., M. H. Bond in charge, and a universal good time was enjoyed amid great satisfaction at the manifestations of God's approval. Preaching in the afternoon by Wm. H. Kelley and in the evening by E. C. Briggs.

Wednesday morning: Raining hard; but those who braved the storm were well repaid by a most profitable and instructive talk upon the law of the church by Bro. Briggs.

Preaching in the afternoon by Bro. Kelley and in the evening by Bro. Briggs; at the close of which services the congregation repaired to the water side where nine were baptized by Bro. Briggs.

Thursday morning we had to say a sad good-bye to Bro. E. C. Briggs who left with some of the Providence Saints and brother and sister Smith of New Bedford, the latter for their homes, and Bro. Briggs for his appointed new field in Ohio. How much a friend to the church of God and its permanent interests is this man, those alone who know him best and deepest are aware.

Met in the chapel at 10 a. m. for prayer and confirmation service. No diminution of the Spirit's power and encouragement; after which baptism was administered to two candidates by Bro. F. M. Sheehy. Preaching at 2: 30 by W. H. Kelley followed by confirmation service. In the evening preaching by F. M. Sheehy.

Friday morning: Excellent prayer and testimony services again. Preaching in the afternoon by M. H. Bond; evening by Elder U. Green.

Saturday: Prayer and testimony meeting morning and afternoon. Preaching in the evening by W. H. Kelley.

Sunday morning: Bro. Kelley spoke again; afternoon F. Sheehy and Bro. Kelley again in the evening to packed houses, many being turned away.

The Reunion proper being closed with this service and thanks voted to friends who had stood ready with Saints to entertain five times the number of visitors who had come; also to the choir, etc., and the continuance of the committee for another year's Reunion, (in Maine probably), it was with mingled feelings of gladness and sadness that the time for separation came. Many leaving for home; a few remaining to visit with friends on Monday morning.

A sail on Monday and a picnic at Sand River Beach, four miles from Jonesport on Tuesday was enjoyed by Saints and friends. Preaching Monday and Wednesday evenings by Elders Bond and Kelley.

Thursday morning we had to take the parting hand of Bro. Kelley and the rest of the Saints of the Massachusetts district, Bro. Kelley being called to Ohio by sickness in his family, Brn. F. M. Sheehy and U. W. Green going to Jonesboro to hold meetings, and the writer, by advice of Bro. Kelley, remaining to hold the fort in Jonesport, where I held meetings every night with exceptions of two, when big political demonstrations occurred; preaching with excellent liberty, alternately at the chapel and the "Reach" until September 7th, when Bro. Sheehy and Green returned from Jonesboro, where good interest and audiences were had.

Bro. Frank and myself went to Indian River to attend to business by the appointment of the president of the mission, and on Saturday I went with Bro. and Sr. Green to Jonesboro; a bad storm overtaking us and consequently no meeting at Mason's Bay, en-route, as appointed. Sunday at Jonesboro; few out in the morning, owing to uncertain notice; afternoon, thirty or forty, and in the evening a full house and excellent liberty by the writer. Monday, election day; division in regard to propriety of meeting, but we thought, as we now and have thought, that if we wait until all differences of opinion amongst everybody are harmonized, then will Satan always find opportunity to persuade that nothing detrimental to his interests ought to be done. The result of the meeting satisfied us in this regard. Tuesday, by appointment we met brother Sheehy at Indian River to attend to a little of a great deal of work that ought to be done and that remains to be done, in order to remove stumbling blocks in the way of the success of our work. Accompanied Bro. Sheehy that evening to the "Reach" at Jonesport, where Frank preached an excellent sermon.

Wednesday, two more men of excellent report, Mr. Johnson, husband of our faithful and most esteemed Sr. of Indian River, and Mr. Dobbins of the "Reach" were baptized by Bro. Sheehy. Preaching that evening by the writer, Bro. Green being sick through exposure in coming from Kennebec through a storm, by sail boat, where had gone from Jonesboro to conduct funeral service. On Thursday morning we left the ripening and excellent field of Eastern Maine for this Western district, landing at Sedgwick, Maine, yesterday afternoon at three o'clock. Came to Bro. Pert's and found him absent from home and away for a week or more. Hall prepared and short notice brought out about twenty last night, Bro. Sheehy holding forth. Prospects better for to-night; expect to be there. One of us will go to Blue Hill to-morrow with Bro. Carter, one remaining here, and two will go to Orland, twenty miles north. We have Tennant's Harbor, New Harbor, Lisbon Falls, Western Maine generally, and all of New Hampshire and Connecticut to convert before we get around home; and also other worlds to conquer. Send in your orders, Bro. Kelley, we may get out of a job. In the faith,

M. H. BOND.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 10.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM, A. D. 70.

SOME idea may be formed of the horrors of the siege from the statement made to Titus about this time by a deserter, who had been appointed to pay the public stipend for carrying out dead bodies. He affirmed that between the 14th of Nisan and the first of Tamuz, a period of two months and a half, there had been carried out at that one gate, which had been in his care, 115,880 corpses. This did not include those dead bodies which were interred privately. Others endeavored to estimate the total number of the poor who had died, and they asserted that no fewer than 600,000 had been thrown out of the gates: that, when they could no longer carry them out, they laid the corpses in vast heaps in large empty houses, and shut them up. These reported, also, that a medimnus (about thirteen gallons), of wheat sold in the city for a talent (which was equal to about £133 sterling per bushel); and that, when it was not possible to gather herbs, on account of the Roman wall of circumvallation, "some persons were driven to that terrible distress as to search the common sewers and old dunghills of cattle, and to eat the ordure which they found there." But far worse than all this remains to be told. There was a lady eminent for rank and opulence, named Mary, the daughter of Eleazar, who had fled from Perea to take refuge in the city of Jerusalem. Her property had been plundered by the rapacious Zealots, who had continually broken open her house till they had robbed her of even the last morsel of food, and of everything that might have procured it. The famine pierced,—to use the historian's expression—"through her very bowels and marrow," and steeled her heart against the strongest of natural affections. She had an infant sucking at her breast; him she slew and roasted; and having eaten part of her horrible repast, concealed the remainder. The odor of food attracted the famishing Zealots prowling in the neighborhood, who, bursting in, threatened her with instant death if she did not give up what she had prepared. She replied that she had saved it for them, and, uncovering the dish, displayed the remains of her infant. Even these hardened ruffians were horrified and amazed, and went out trembling, without a word, while the sad intelligence soon spread through the city, and even to the Roman camp filling both with consternation. "The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children: they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people." (Lam. 4: 10) And now let us turn from this narrative, with its sad minutia of detail, and read the solemn word of prophecy in which the very act had been predicted by God, with equal minuteness, fifteen hundred years before; and comparing the prophecy with the narrative, let us adore the inscrutable knowledge of Him "who seeth the end from the beginning:"—"The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flie; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favor to the young; and he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land, which the Lord thy God hath given thee. And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and thy daughters, which the Lord thy God hath given thee, in the siege and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee: So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eye shall be evil towards his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and towards the remnant of his children which he shall leave: So that he will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children whom he shall eat: because he hath nothing left him in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee in all thy gates. The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil towards the husband of her bosom, and toward her son, and toward her daughter, and toward her young one that cometh out from between her feet, and towards her children which she shall bear: for she shall eat them for want of all things secretly in the siege and straitness, wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in thy gates." (Deut. 28: 49-57.)

As soon as the wall of circumvallation was complete, Titus turned his attention to the replacing of those banks which the Jews had destroyed, but without which the siege could not be prosecuted, for on them the military engines must be raised to attack the walls. To erect them, however, was no easy task, for the whole of the timber-trees that had been growing in the neighborhood of the city had been cut down for the construction of the former. But it was indispensable to procure more; and though the legions had to seek for materials at a distance of eleven to twelve miles from the city, their indomitable perseverance succeeded in raising against the tower of Antonia four banks larger than before, in the space of twenty-one days.

The effect, however, was the entire desolation of the surrounding country; and the beautiful suburbs and environs of the city, which had formerly been adorned with trees and pleasant gardens, now lay a desert-waste, wholly deprived of its loveliness; so changed that "one who had known the place before, coming suddenly to it now would not have recognized it."

On the banks thus raised both the Romans and the Jews looked with peculiar interest; the latter, because they knew that, unless they could destroy them as they had their predecessors, the wall must speedily yield; the former, because, if these were demolished, they could not hope to erect any more, and must despair of storming the city. Hence both parties were more than usually concerned about them; and while, on the one hand, they were assailed with the utmost vehemence, they were defended on the other with the most determinate pertinacity.

The engines, however, were at length elevated, and the blows of the heavy rams fell upon the solid masonry of the Antonia. For a while it seemed to resist; but the legionaries, having made a sort of defense with their shields, began to work at the foundation of the wall. With immense labor they succeeded in loosening some of its stones; and during the night that part of the wall which had been undermined before by John gave way before the ram, and fell in ruins. When morning dawned the elation of the Romans was somewhat dampened by the discovery of another wall, which the providence of John had erected within the one now fallen; and their hopes of entering the city were to be still longer delayed. To attack this new wall was an exploit which needed no common daring, for it was most valiantly defended. None for a time would venture on the hazardous enterprise; and when, stimulated by the exhortations and promises of Titus, one and another offered themselves, and a gallant little band of twelve mounted the breach, they were all slain, or driven back desperately wounded. But two days afterwards another little band of daring men, about sixteen in all, assembled an hour or two before day, and clambering up among the ruins of the fallen wall, got up to the Antonia. Here they found the sentinels asleep, and having cut their throats, they found themselves in possession of the wall, they sounded a trumpet. The shrill blast, awakening the Jewish garrison out of their deep sleep, gave them the impression that the whole Roman host was upon them; and they fled panic-struck from the little band, whom they might with ease have thrown over the battlements. But on Titus and his army that trumpet-note awakened far different emotions, for it was the signal of success. Hastily gathering his principal officers and chosen men, he led them up to the breach, and joined the gallant band who had won for him the citadel of the city, the fortress Antonia. And now commenced a most desperate contest, maintained on both sides with inflexible pertinacity, for the prize for which they contested was the glorious Temple.

The Jews had already rallied, and fought with the indomitable valor which had from the earliest times been characteristic of their lion-like tribe. "Judah is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he crouched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?" (Gen. 49:9.) "Behold the people shall rise up as a great lion, and lift up himself as a young lion; he shall not lie down until he eat of the prey, and drink the blood of the slain. . . . He hath as it were the strength of the unicorn; he shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows. He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion; who shall stir him up?" (Num. 23: 24; 24: 8, 9.)

Not with javelins, nor spears, nor engines or war, but hand to hand, sword to sword, was this battle fought. The combatants were intermingled without order in the narrow galleries that led from the Antonia to the Temple courts. The Jews came crowding in from the city, each willing to sacrifice his life for the Holy House; the Roman legions also, as they slowly mounted the breach and scaled the tower, continually reinforced the combatants. Immense slaughter was made, and the dead and wounded were crushed into an indistinguishable gory mass by the mailed feet of the fighters. Ten hours had the battle now lasted; for it had begun at the ninth hour of the night, and it was now afternoon. Jewish heroism once more proved itself superior to Roman prowess; and at length Titus, baffled and disappointed, sullenly relinquished the contest, and drew away his forces into the Antonia. Such was Judah in the day of his despair, haggard with famine, weakened by intestine discord, and, more than all, forsaken by God: What was he in ancient days, when "the Lord his God was with him, and the shout of a king was among them?" What will he be yet again, when "the Lord of hosts shall visit his flock, the house of Judah, and make them as His goodly horse in the battle?" When "they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle; and they shall fight because the Lord is with them, and the riders on horses shall be confounded?" (Zech 10: 3-5.) For "the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth to pieces, and none can deliver." (Micah 5: 8.)

That sad day was now come, the seventeenth of Tamuz, which the Jews in their sorrowful dispersions have ever since observed as a mournful fast; since which "the children of Israel have abode many days without a king, and without a priest, and without a sacrifice." (Hos. 3: 4.) A bitter cry rose up from the Temple, and was echoed from the desolate city: the daily sacrifice was no more. The mighty famine, ever stalking on like a giant, had exhausted the supply of beasts for the offering; and death, in various forms, the sword, the dearth, the pestilence, had thinned the company of priests till there were no more men to offer it. Titus heard the intelligence, and took occasion to exhort the garrison to save the temple from spoil by submitting to him, but Josephus, who bore the message was assailed from the walls with reproaches and imprecations.

The near view of the magnificence of the Temple, which the possession of the Antonia afforded, would no doubt inflame the desire of the Roman commander to preserve it uninjured for himself as a splendid trophy of his victory; but the Holy House of God, though now deserted by him for whose honor it was built, and though given over to destruction, was not to become the pride and glory of a pagan, nor could the earnest and constant endeavors of Titus preserve it from destruction. Unwillingly, therefore, he gave orders to renew the assault upon the sacred courts; and having selected a body of his bravest troops, committed the command of these to Cerealis, while he himself took up his station on the summit of the tower, to cheer his soldiers by his own witness of their valor. The ninth hour of the night was again chosen for the attack, as it was hoped that the guards of the Temple might be sleeping, and the gates taken by surprise. The Jews, however, were found vigilant and alert, and, on the approach of the assailants, rushed forth to the battle with loud shouts; and another desperate affray began. The darkness, the narrowness of the place, and the impetuosity of the antagonists, rendered it soon impossible to distinguish friend from foe; and the battle became an indiscriminate slaughter, each man striking blindly at the one before him. But by and by the day broke, and then the combatants were more easily distinguished by their armor and physiognomy. Each party contended with inflexible valor, alternately encouraged and exhorted by their respective friends above and around them; for the combat seemed, as it were, on the arena of a theatre; overlooked on the one side by Titus himself from the turrets of the Antonia, and on the other by John from the cloisters of the Temple. Eight hours the conflict was maintained; but the Romans, though aware that the eyes of Cæsar were upon them, had not gained an inch of ground, and were at length compelled to relinquish their purpose.

These contests had proved, as Titus had foreseen, that, owing to the narrowness of the space between the Antonia and the Temple, a sufficiently large body of men could not be brought up to effect the storming of the sacred fortress. He had therefore ordered the demolition of a portion of the Antonia, and at length after seven days had elapsed from its capture, this was accomplished and a broad level area formed in front of the Holy House. On this the legions proceeded to erect embankments, though with immense labor, for the material had to be procured at a distance of a hundred furlongs from the city. These banks, as on the former occasions, were four in number; and, notwithstanding the furious sallies of the Jews, they proceeded to their completion. In the meantime as if to cut off those members of the body which were infected, to prevent the distemper from spreading, the Jews themselves set fire to the cloisters that connected the Antonia with the Temple, and thus completely isolated the latter. At the same time another beautiful portion of the sacred edifice was sacrificed to a successful stratagem. One of the embankments had been erected opposite the cloisters which ran along the western front. The space that was between the roof and the beams of this colonnade having been filled with pitch and other combustibles, the Jewish garrison affected to retire from the top, as if abandoning in despair its further defence. On this multitudes of the Romans, as had been anticipated, eagerly applying their scaling-ladders, climbed upon the roof, till the surface was covered with them. The crafty Jews then fired the mass, and instantly on every side burst forth the flames, curving around and enclosing the deluded assailants as with a wall of fire. The hissing of the many tongued flame that leaped and curled and writhed about them, and the cracking of the timbers, drowned the groans and cries of the dying and as they rushed helplessly to and fro and vainly held out their hands to their comrades below. Many cast themselves headlong through the blaze and were dashed to pieces; others stabbed themselves with their own swords; while some escaped from the fire to the wall of the cloister, where they were surrounded and slain by the exasperated Jews. All perished; and that in the sight of Titus, who could afford them no relief, but the solace of his pity.

By this desperate maneuver the whole of the western cloisters were destroyed, as far as the gate that led to Xystus, and the remainder was immediately afterwards separated from the Temple. On the next day the Romans set fire to the north cloister and this was destroyed through its whole length; even to the angle, where it was joined to the east cloister that looked down into the profundity of the valley of Jehoshaphat. Thus the Romans became masters of the court or chambers of Israel; but so mighty were the stones and so compactly fixed, that the incessant blows had not produced the slightest effect upon them. By manual labor the foundations of the northern gate had been loosened, after herculean efforts; but the inner masonry was still so massive, that the stability of the gate was in no wise affected.

Despairing of success by these means, the Romans again attempted to scale the inner cloisters. The ladders were planted and mounted without opposition, but no sooner did an assailant show his head at the summit than he was hurled headlong; sometimes a ladder covered with armed men was seized at the top, and by main strength thrown down on those beneath. Sallies were made from below with the usual Jewish valor. In some of these the military engines were captured, and even the eagle standards were with difficulty preserved. There remained, therefore, no resource to the besiegers but the application of fire; and this at length was reluctantly ordered by the Roman General. The legionaries at once piled faggots at the gates and set them on fire; the silver with which the doors were covered soon becoming red hot, and igniting the wood the flames spread with rapidity and caught hold of the cloisters. The Jews were overwhelmed with astonishment, and made no effort to quench the fire, but gazed on it in mute despair.

The whole of that day and part of the next did the conflagration go on; not, however, in one mass of spreading fire, but piecemeal, as the soldiers were able to perform the work of destruction. On the day following, Titus held a council with his principal commanders as to what should be done with the Holy House. Some advised that it should be utterly demolished; but Titus himself was still disposed to preserve it if possible for its magnificence, which "would be a perpetual ornament to the Roman dominion." Of course his opinion prevailed, and he commanded that the cohorts should at once make their way through the ruins and quench the fire.

With some difficulty this was done, and the remainder of that day was passed in inaction, as if by mutual consent; a brief and sudden lull in the fiery tempest. But early the next morning the Jews made another furious assault upon the troops that were occupying the court of the Gentiles. The Romans were overborne by the fiery valor of their opponents; but Cæsar, seeing their distress from the Antonia, sent succors of cavalry, which turned the scale. The battle raged with shifting success for three hours, when the Jews retired into the Inner Courts, and the Romans into the Antonia; Titus resolving to storm the Temple with his whole force early the next morning. His purpose, however, was forestalled. It was now the tenth day of the month Ab; by a wondrous coincidence, the same fatal day as that on which the glorious first Temple, the edifice raised by the piety and power of Solomon, had been burned to the ground by the King of Babylon. The Jews again attacked the soldiers who were engaged in quenching the fires, but being repulsed, the Romans pursued them into the interior, and reached the doors of the holy place. A soldier acting upon his own impulse, being lifted in the arms of one of his comrades, suddenly threw a torch into a small golden window and the house was in flames. A shriek of rage, despair, and consternation rent the heavens, as the devouring blaze enwrapped the holy house. Titus heard it, and being informed of the cause, he rushed from his tent, where he had retired to rest, and ran to the spot. He issued orders, by shouts and signs, to quench the fire; but none regarded him. The wildest confusion and tumult prevailed. The legions came thronging on, each intent upon gratifying his own revenge or avarice. There was no command, no obedience.

In their mad and furious zeal multitudes were trampled under foot by their comrades, or fell among the hot and smoky ruins, or perished by each other's hands.

The flames spread fast, for the wild and excited soldiers encouraged each other to the work of destruction. The poor Jews seemed overwhelmed with despair; to the last they had trusted that there would be some miraculous interposition, by which the holy house would be saved from the impending desolation; but now it was come, and their hopes withered before it. The sword dropped from their powerless hands, and they were slain by thousands, an unresisting multitude. The steps of the altar and the surrounding area were covered, nay heaped, with dead bodies, while their blood ran in purple floods from the marble pavements.

The Roman General lifted the veil, and with his commanders stood within the holy of holies. He was astonished at the splendor around him, which far exceeded all his expectations. The precious gold of Ophir, the rarest and most radiant gems, costly and fragrant woods, were there in richest profusion, shaped into beauteous forms of exquisite workmanship, and consummate taste. The flames had not yet penetrated the sanctuary, and Titus hastened out with the hope that the glorious shrine, "the Perfection of Beauty," might still be saved. Again he entreated those around him to second his endeavors; he gave orders to his centurions to beat off the rebellious soldiers; but all was of no avail. A decree higher than Cæsar's had gone forth, and who could disannul it? The sight of the massy gold and glittering stones that reflected the light of the flickering flames, more and more excited the tumultuous legions; and while Titus was anxiously beseeching them to spare the edifice, a soldier, unperceived, thrust a fire brand between the hinges of the golden door, and threw it into the dark interior. Immediately the whole was filled with flame, which burst forth so impetuously, that the commanders were compelled to flee before it, and abandon the house to its destruction. Immense was the multitude of the slain; the whole summit of Mount Moriah was seething hot, yet the blood was more than the fire, and the slain more numerous than the slayers; the ground was nowhere visible because of the bodies that lay on it, and the slaughter was prosecuted over heaps of corpses. Of the mighty and magnificent Temple there remained only two gates and a portion of the outer cloisters, on which six thousand trembling fugitives had taken refuge, chiefly women and children. These were wantonly murdered in cold blood, the soldiers setting fire to their refuge. Not one escaped.

And now for the "holy and beautiful house," the "joy of the whole earth," that had covered, as with a crown, the glory of the summit of Moriah, there lay only a shapeless and blackened ruin, from whose heaps sullen clouds of smoke and ashes ever and anon ascended, telling of the demon of destruction that had done its fatal work. And as if to perfect the desecration of the once hallowed spot, and to show how utterly Jehovah had forsaken it, the legions paraded their idol-ensigns over the desolate surface, and setting them up against what had been the eastern gate, "the beautiful gate of the temple," offered sacrifice and burnt incense to the devils, whom they represented. (1 Cor. 10: 20). The words of the Psalmist are fulfilled here: "O God, why hast thou cast us off for ever? Why doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture? Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this Mount Zion wherein thou hast dwelt. Lift up thy feet unto the perpetual desolations; even all that the enemy hath done wickedly in the sanctuary. Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations; they set up their ensigns for signs. A man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees, but now they break down the carved work thereof at once with axes and hammers. They have cast fire into thy sanctuary, they have defiled by casting down the dwelling place of thy name to the ground."—Psalms 74: 1-7.

Bezetha had fallen, Acra had fallen, the Antonia had fallen, the temple had fallen; but the strong city of David still remained. The daughter of Zion was left, indeed, "as a cottage in the vineyard, or a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a besieged city." But her towers were mighty, her walls massive, and her heights scarcely accessible; and if her God and King had been still in the midst of her, as of old, she might have looked down from her impregnable position on the beleaguering army, and laughed it to scorn.

Simon and John with many of their adherents, had retired into the Upper City on the burning of the temple, and now demanded a parley with Titus across the bridge that spanned the Tyropæon. He required, however, an unconditional surrender, to which they would not accede; whereon he in anger, determined to give no further quarter, but to put to death without mercy, all who fell into his hands. The next day he delivered up the lower city to be burned and plundered by his soldiers. Acra, with the archives, the council House, and the Palace of Helena, was at once set on fire, as well as the quarter called Ophel.

The sides of the Tyropæon, which is now, owing to the accumulation of ruins and the debris of ages, but an unimportant depression, were then so abrupt and deep, that Titus had no hope of storming the wall of Zion without the slow and painful process of raising embankments for the support of the engines of war. But the extreme scarcity of timber, as before, presented a great difficulty; as it had to be conveyed from a long distance. About four weeks was occupied in the construction of these banks, which at length were reared, one opposite the Royal Palace, near the west angle of the wall, the other opposite the Xystus, near the Temple bridge. At that time the Idumeans entered into secret negotiations with Titus for surrendering themselves to him. The terms were agreed upon, and that important body of valiant men were on the point of marching out, when the vigilant Simon, obtaining intelligence of it, arrested the leaders, and placed the multitude under strict surveillance. Great numbers however deserted every day; the unarmed populace were spared; but all the rest were sold as slaves, the number of whom was immense.

At length some of the towers gave way before the blows of the battering ram, and the Romans prepared to mount the breach. Experience had well taught them how to estimate the peril of storming a Jewish wall; and they were expecting now as before, to be met with the sternest valor and the most heroic resolution. But the courage of the Zealot leaders had utterly forsaken them; the rumor that the Romans were approaching, scattered them like frightened sheep. Some fell upon their faces with wailing and lamentation, others sought refuge in wells and subterranean passages, while Simon and John, instead of remaining in the towers, which no engines could have overthrown, fled towards the pool of Siloam, and endeavored to burst through the Roman trenches. But their unwonted timidity rendered them powerless; they were easily repulsed by the guards, and fled to the caverns that lay beneath the city.

The Romans finding themselves unopposed where they expected a strenuous resistance, joyfully took possession of the city; and thus Jerusalem was at length wholly subdued. But the cessation of resistance moved not their iron hearts to mercy. They poured through the streets and lanes, sword in hand, slaying man, woman and child. The houses where many poor fugitives had crowded together, were fired and every soul was burned to death. They were horrified by finding large buildings full of the dead; but this sight did not produce any commiseration for the living. Every one they met they ran through, and made the steep streets so to run down with blood, that, as is gravely asserted, the fire of some of the burning houses was actually quenched by it. "How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street. The precious sons of Zion comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter! Even the sea monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones; the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness. The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth, for thirst; the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them. They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets; they that were brought up in scarlet, embrace dunghills. For the punishment of the iniquity of the daughters of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her. Her Nazarites were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire. Their visage is blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets; their skin cleaveth to their bones; it is withered, it is become like a stick. They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger; for these pine away, stricken through for want of the fruit of the field. The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children, they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people. The Lord hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof. The Kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem. For the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her, they have wandered as blind men in the streets, they have polluted themselves with blood, so that men could not touch their garments."—Lam. 4: 1-14.

On hand last report $4.38, collected $1.44, paid out $1, balance $4.82. Verses recited 117, references given 87. D. Chambers superintendent, Mamie Seddon secretary. Priesthood meetings: Magnolia branch by D. Maule (by letter) had held such meetings each month. Meetings for preaching had been appointed in three country School-houses. Spring Creek had held one meeting. As a result had appointed and furnished preachers for two appointments. Willow Valley had held one priesthood meeting and as a result had held several preaching meetings. Unionburg had held one priesthood meeting but no meetings had been appointed. Little Sioux had held one priesthood meeting resulting in some trying to preach. President Crabb called attention to the fact that lessons in Hope were copied from Inspired Translation; thought the proper officers should so inform their schools. Also that a book was soon to be issued that would in a measure take the place of the lessons in the Hope. A written request was read from the Unionburg branch for this conference to ordain Bro. John A. Beckman to the office of a priest. On motion the request was granted and Bro. Beckman was ordained under the hands of C. Derry and T. Thomas. Missions: A letter was read from Bro. A. Z. Rudd requesting that some one be sent to Kingsley. Brn. J. C. Crabb and D. Chambers volunteered to fill this mission. Bro. J. Seddon was, by motion, requested to labor in the Little Sioux district as much as convenient. President advised ministry where laboring within limits of branch that they should do so by agreement with branch authorities. W. C. Cadwell, district secretary, offered his resignation as such officer. Action on same was deferred till next conference. Committee on old resolutions submitted a report, action on which was, by motion, deferred till next conference. A communication was read from Bro. E. R. Lanpher with reference to certain alleged troubles between him and the Willow Valley branch. On motion the communication was ordered spread upon the minutes and accepted by the conference as satisfactory for any wrong done the district. Preaching during conference as follows: Saturday evening by W. E. Peak; Sunday morning by C. Derry; Sunday afternoon by J. F. Mintun, and Sunday evening by J. C. Crabb. On motion adjourned to meet at Woodbine, December 7th, at 2 p. m.

NORTHERN MINNESOTA.

A conference of the Northern Minnesota district was held at Pelican Lake, Becker Co., Minn., June 14th and 15th, 1888, Bro. T. J. Martin president; J. C. Foss in the chair. Brother Alexander Smith arrived in time to do some preaching to us. North Pollanoders one baptized, and we trust that more are investigating at that place. Much of God's spirit was felt during conference. Wm. Barnhard, Dist. Secretary.

WESTERN WISCONSIN.

Conference convened at the Wheatville branch, Crawford county, Wisconsin, June 2d and 3d, A. L. Whiteaker, president; W. A. McDowell, clerk. Elders reported: A. L. Whiteaker, J. W. Whiteaker, J. S. Whiteaker, W. A. McDowell, M. T. Short, E. C. Wildermuth; C. W. Lange by letter. Branch reports: Wheatville, 14 members. C. W. Lange, Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report $28.80, received $2.50, total $31.30, paid out $20.00, balance $11.30. Resolved, That we hold two day's meetings at the following places: Webster, Willow, North Freedom and Excelsior branches, and that the president appoint the time and the brethren to hold those meetings. Moved that we sustain A. L. Whiteaker president, W. A. McDowell clerk, and C. W. Lange Bishop's agent together with all the authorities of the Church, At 8, p. m., preaching by M. T. DIED.

CONOLLY:—At Hartford, Michigan, September 7th, 1888, of paralysis, Bro. George Conolly, aged 76 years, 7 months, and 10 days. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, and emigrated to America in 1832. Was a soldier in the Union Army during the late civil war; was a member of the United Brethren Church for some time after, but after investigation of the Gospel as preached by the Latter Day Saints, was baptized and confirmed by the writer, July 27th, 1879. He was of very quiet disposition, but always firm, and strove by his daily life to adorn the doctrine of his profession; was highly esteemed by all who knew him, was a member of Ellsworth Post, No. 20 of the Grand Army of the Republic who to the number of about eighty, attended his funeral in a body, and had general supervision of arrangements. The services were held in the Baptist Church, at Hartford, which was filled to overflowing; on Sunday Sep. 9th. The remarks on the nature of the judgment, based on Matt. 25: 31-41, were listened to with great interest. Thus another soldier has gone to join the ranks of the triumphant ones, leaving his three sons, and three daughters to deplore his absence.

WILLIAMS:—At Felinfoel, Llanelly, Wales, April 5th, 1888, Sister Rachel Williams, aged 77 years, 4 months and 3 days. She was baptized June 8th, 1865. Every Josephite missionary to Wales had reason to remember her kindness. She was true and faithful.

JOSEPH SMITH
W. W. BLAIR

EDITOR.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, Oct. 6, 1888.

THE Utah Herald, of Salt Lake, in its issue for September 19th, has the following editorial concerning the action of Judge Sanford in the case of Apostle George Q. Cannon, arraigned before him for violating the law of the land. We can not help the thought that if this apostle of the Utah church had been moved by the spirit of fealty to the laws of the land there would have no such humiliating spectacle as that of an assumed apostle of Jesus Christ being arraigned for a crime against the law of which he is obliged to say, "I am guilty," and await the sentence of the Judge:

A CHANGE.

Chief Justice Sanford, as Judge of the Third District Court, first sat in the trial of unlawful cohabitation cases on Monday, and pronounced his first sentences upon those who appeared before him to receive the punishment which the law has provided for their offense. It is hardly necessary to remark that His Honor's course on the bench caused something of a sensation in the community; nor to say that the sensation was a pleasing one with all save the few who are filled with hate towards this fair Territory and her people. It has been a long time since there was an absence of apparent malice and vindictiveness in the class of cases referred to, hence the sensation mentioned above. It was refreshing to hear a judge pass sentence on men who stood before him with a confession of their offenses on their lips, without adding to those sentences some thing that would sting worse than the penalty itself, and without indicating that the court was sorry and chagrined that the law limited and restricted him in severity. There was no goading of men, no exacting from them humiliating promises, no display of vindictiveness if they declined to make promises which a court had no business and no right to extort.

It is hardly necessary for the Herald to remark that it regards Judge Sanford's as the better way. It is the way that we hoped would have been pursued from the first. If it had been followed, the problem which the anti-polygamy laws were expected to solve would have been quite as near solution as it is to-day; years of excitement and commotion in the community would have been avoided, many cruelties and inhumanities been escaped, and there would have been deeper popular love and respect for the law and its administration than have existed for some time. The course pursued has been one calculated to antagonize and infuriate the community, to arouse its opposition and drive it into a condition of desperation rather than lead and encourage it into obedience to the law and right-doing. The enforcement of the law is necessary and proper, but there is a difference in the way of enforcement, if a man violates a law he must be punished, but there is a humane and an inhumane mode of inflicting the punishment. One has a tendency to arouse respect for the law and its administration, the other has the directly opposite effect.

The government intends and expects that its laws shall be obeyed in Utah as elsewhere, but it should not and does not desire that the laws shall be applied in such a manner as to give a community the impression that the government is its enemy, bent on its destruction. Vindictiveness and hate should be unknown passions in government, while paternal love and fatherly care ought always to be apparent.

In his actions on the bench yesterday, Judge Sanford said plainly enough that violators of the law must be punished in reason for their offenses, and that being done and the offenders acknowledging the supremacy of the law, they should not be hounded and persecuted. If Monday's work marks the inauguration of a new policy in this territory, we predict for it the most gratifying success. There will be quite as general obedience to the law, and a good deal more respect for those whose business it is to interpret and apply the statutes; and there will also be a better feeling through the community which has been so long terrorized. Unless we are mistaken in our estimate, confidence and prosperity will soon succeed the distrust and business prostration which have been with us.

WE do not know whether what follows in the article below, correctly represents the condition of the agricultural portions of Utah, or not; but if it does, the land "flowing with milk and honey," the land "blessed to be the abode of the Saints," as the elders sent out from Utah have so often claimed and asserted, is sadly degenerated, and needs rejuvenating by rest.

The "late legislature" referred to in the article, which we cut from the Enquirer, published at Provo, Utah, for September 14th, was Mormon, with one or two Gentile exceptions; so are the City Councils referred to, all under Mormon control. How city progression affects the granger in the country away from the control of the city, we do not plainly see; although we can see how the market for all that the granger raises afforded by the proximity of a large and rapidly growing city affects the prices of what the granger may have to sell. The wail about having to support two families is a bad one, and should have been considered before the man was wheedled into so obvious a burden on his resources. Will Israel turn back from his errors? That is the question, indeed.

THE INCREASE IN TAXES.

A UTAH FARMER CRIES OUT AGAINST THE OUTRAGE.

THE following communication, signed by "Old Foggy," appeared in the Tuesday evening's issue of the Deseret News:

I am a farmer. I own a farm of twenty acres and a water right of fourteen and a half acres. A so-called water right is two hours use of a certain portion of water per acre every fourteen days.

Just now it would take me three days, at the present low stage of water, to water one acre of lucerne. I hold the water on my farm three hours less than two days; so you can see it would take me one day and three hours more to water the acre of lucerne than the time I hold the water.

This year I had eight acres of small grain in—six in wheat and two in oats. I paid for cutting and binding, fifteen dollars in cash, besides feeding team and men the time they were cutting it, not counting anything for the use of a horse on the binder that belonged to me. The grain is not threshed yet, but I will take sixty bushels of wheat and fifty bushels oats for my two stacks of grain.

I have four acres of lucerne. I have paid, or will have to pay about twelve dollars for cutting and raking, three dollars for help in hauling, and I will take eleven tons of lucern for my stack that holds all this years' cutting.

I have two small orchards on the place that will cover one and a half acres. Two-fifths of the trees have died for want of water. The fruit that is left anybody can have for $30.

I have about two acres of potatoes that may average one-third of a "stand" that I will take one hundred and twenty-five bushels for now, but by the time I dig them may take seventy-five bushels and not a very big measure at that.

This is a correct statement as far as my knowledge and belief goes in regard to my farm for this season.

Let us see what we have got—sixty bushels of wheat, fifty bushels of oats, that has yet the expense of threshing to come out, and every farmer knows what that is; $30 in fruit, and as we can not sell it green, we will have to be at the expense of drying it; eleven tons of lucern and 125 bushels of potatoes in the ground. Now you have one farmer's increase for this season.

I will tell you what I must do with what I have made on my farm this year: I must support two families of my own, for I am a polygamist. (Of course the "law" will not permit me to live with my own family, but I must support them all the same). I have an invalid mother to support and take care of. But all that to me is only a pleasure and a double pleasure at that, but now comes the "tug of war," and that is the front and the offense of this long preface, I must pay my taxes! Oh, dear! let me just rest for a moment while I take a breath! $37 92 to be paid in taxes; territorial, county, city, school, water and other taxes, beside 40 per cent that I hear some board of equalization has added to the county and territorial taxes.

It seems to me that the "Mormon" question is about to be solved at last. Taxes will do it. The "Gentiles" must take our possessions. We can't keep our homes—they are too expensive. The "progressive ideas" of our late legislature and our present city councils will evidently settle the "Mormon" question as far as Utah is concerned.

I have lived and struggled with this people a great many years. I expect to live and struggle with them a great many more, but I can not do it long under my own vine and fig-tree. The taxes will do it. The "progressive idea" has done it. Bonds and sewers and buncomb have done it. The homes of Saints will have to pass away, for lo, the sheriff selleth them in front of the courthouse, for the granger is too poor to pay taxes on extravagance; and he is without a home and his children crieth in the street! That is the road we are going; can we, will we turn back, O Israel?

THE Missouri Valley Times, published at Missouri Valley, for September 20th, contains the following:

"Our business men and citizens generally are perfecting arrangements looking to the comfort of those attending the conference of the Latter Day Saints, which will be held in the Valley on Saturday, October 6th."

"Elder P. Cadwell and J. K. Davison, of Logan, and William Cadwell, of Woodbine, were in the Valley on Tuesday making arrangements for the conference of the Latter Day Saints, which will meet in the Valley on October 6th."

THE sequel of the arrest, flight, forfeiture of bail and long hiding from re-arrest of George Q. Cannon, one of the leading polygamic apostles of Utah will be seen from the following despatch taken from the Chicago Tribune of a late date:

"SALT LAKE, Utah, Sept. 17.—Shortly before ten o'clock this morning Apostle George Q. Cannon, who has evaded the officers of the law for over two years, surrendered himself to Marshal Dyer. There were two indictments against Cannon—one found March 20, 1880, and the other found last Saturday. The former charged him with unlawful cohabitation with two wives; the latter with cohabitation with five wives. He was brought into court at ten o'clock this morning and pleaded guilty to both indictments. Judge Sanford in passing sentence said that, inasmuch as the prisoner had pleaded guilty and saved the Government the expense and labor of trial, he would make the sentence light, and accordingly gave the prisoner seventy-five days' imprisonment and a fine of $200 on the first indictment and one hundred days and $250 on the second. Cannon was at once taken to the penitentiary. The indignation here among the Gentiles against the court's action is intense, because they believe a deal has been consummated between the Democratic Administration and the Mormon Church. The belief here almost assumes the shape of positive conviction that the Mormon Church is about to issue an edict abandoning polygamy, and that Statehood will soon follow. In view of Cannon's having evaded justice so long, having counseled his flock to practice polygamy, having after his arrest forfeited his $45,000 bonds, the Gentiles are of the opinion that he should have received the full penalty of the law. Cannon gives as a reason for evading the officers so long the fact that he was afraid of appearing before Judge Zane. He is the first Mormon sentenced by Judge Sandford, whom Cleveland recently appointed Chief Justice of Utah.

A LATE issue of the Osage county Times, published at Scranton, Kansas, gives the following account of the Central Kansas district conference.

Following the account of the conference we publish an editorial from the same issue of the Times. The notice is a friendly one, and the editorial places a just estimate upon the influence and work of our people. We are gratified to see the good example of the Saints is bringing such commendations, and we thank the editor of the Times for the fairness of spirit he manifests in thus expressing a just estimate of their worth.

LATTER DAY SAINTS.
CONFERENCE AND DAILY SERVICES IN SCRANTON.

The quarterly conference of the Central Kansas district, Latter Day Saints, was opened on Saturday, Elder D. Munns, president of district, of Good Intent, presiding. Among other visitors and delegates were Elder E. C. Brand, of Tabor, Iowa, missionary in charge of district; Elder H. Parker and lady, and Elder W. Hopkins of Netawaka; Elders F. Lofty, P. Devlin, and Mrs. C. Love of Osage City; Elder Alma Dodd and lady of Centralia; Mrs. J. A. Twist of North Topeka. Branch reports received as follows: Fanning, last quarter 34, present membership, 33; Netawaka, 34 and 41; Scranton, 30 and 34 including six elders, one priest, one deacon; six baptisms; Good Intent, 25 and 25.

Elder Brand reported 8 baptisms, Jarvis 1 and Adamson 5. Elder William Gurwell reported by letter. At the afternoon session a resolution was passed respectfully requesting Elder Joseph Luff of Independence, Missouri, to respond at his earliest convenience to the invitation of the Scranton Good Templars to lecture here, and to preach for the benefit of the church. In the evening there was preaching by Elder Brand.

On Sunday morning there was preaching, in the afternoon administration of the sacrament; prayer and testimony and blessing of children. At the evening service votes of thanks were passed to the choir for kind assistance in singing. The choir consisted of Mrs. Ross, Mrs. Bickerdike, Mrs. Davies, Miss Khoda Briddick, Miss Lillie Isaacs, R. Barlow, D. M. Bunten and G. J. Kelly; E. Thomas presided at the organ. At the conclusion of the business of the conference, it was resolved to adjourn to meet at Good Intent at 10 a. m. on December 15th.

The following are the subjects ably treated on during the special services by Elder Brand:

Saturday evening. Resurrection of the Body.
Sunday morning. Name of Church and Foundation the Rock of Revelation.

Evening. First Principles of the Gospel and its Antiquity.

Monday. Apostasy.

Tuesday. Lineage of Priesthood.

Wednesday. Evidence of the Divine Authority of Joseph Smith.

Thursday. Bible, Historical, and Archeological Evidences of the Divinity of the Book of Mormon.

The Latter Day Saints conference was quite a success, people flocking in from far and near to hear Elder Brand, one of the most fluent speakers we have heard. He is from England and at one time managed a large book establishment near the Barbican. He is a most pleasing talker both in and out of the pulpit, and an earnest opponent and denouncer of polygamy. The "Saints" are a very unassuming body of men and are the best of citizens. Their code of morals is very strict, and what is more to the point they live closely up to it. Their order is gaining ground while the Brighamite section of Latter Day Saints is rapidly dying out.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Charles W. Lamb sends us a copy of the Harrison county Democrat, Logan, Iowa, for September 8th, in which is a letter from Bro. Lamb to a "leading Brighamite Mormon," in the form of a long poem, in which their departure from right ways is quite graphically shown.

Bro. E. F. Shupe has taken an abode in Denver, Colorado, and is at work in the Denver and RioGrande Railway shops. He has so far failed to find any of the Saints in Denver and will be pleased to learn of their whereabouts; if they will either call on him or address him by card in care of the shops. He is formerly from the Union branch, Nebraska. He requests that Bro. Caffall will notify him when he is about to visit Denver, that he may meet him.

WE are pleased to note the following characteristic defense of the work made by Bro. John D. Bennett, of Cuba, Kansas. It Marysville, Kansas, September 13th, 1888: is from the Marshall county Democrat,

AN OPEN LETTER TO DR. FISHER, MARYSVILLE, KANSAS.

Dear Sir:—I am informed through what I believe to be good authority that you are more or less actively engaged in representing that Joseph Smith, the founder of so-called Mormonism, was a polygamist in theory and practice, and that the pernicious doctrine and practices of the Utah Mormons are more or less attributable to his sentiments and teachings. Now sir I am not ignorant of the opportunities which have enabled you to gather up and post yourself relative to the charges (grave or formidable as they appear to be) as made by the enemies, or the pretended adherents of the slain founder of the Mormon faith, neither would I underestimate your ability and shrewdness as a debater; but this I know that the position held by you, as regards the purity othe original doctrine, teachings and practices of the early founders of the church are both slanderous and false, and your method of attack un-courteous as it is cowardly; and in behalf of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, I hereby notify you that we will not silently submit to such indignity without a protest against the insult. Whatever may have been your observation or experience with Utah Mormonism, you nor any other party have not the right to charge its unchristian, criminal prac-tion on the founders of the church prior to the year 1844, nor in any manner to blend my twenty-two thousand friends as the associates of the Utah Mormons.

To this end we are ready to meet you in open and honorable discussion at any time mutually agreed upon, in Marysville, between the 1st and 30th of Novembr, 1888, on the following ques-tions with such modifications as may be agreed upon:

First—Was Joseph Smith a polygamist in theory or practice?

Second—Do the doctrines of the church, as taught by Joseph Smith, conflict in any manner with the teachings of Jesus Christ and his apos-tles?

Respectfully,

JOHN D. BENNETT,
Secretary of N. W. Kansas Dist.

CUBA, KANSAS, September 4th, 1888.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—DELIN- QUENT SUBSCRIBERS.

By request of the Business Manager we again call attention to the list of outstanding balances due the Herald Office, on account of books pur-chased and subscriptions for the HERALD, HOPE and other publications.

The business interests of the publishing de-partment are suffering on account of the long lists of delinquents who fail to give even ordina-ry attention to the payment of these obligations.

The Board of Publication in their endeavors to supply the Saints with church literature contain-ing the good news of the spread of the work and the manifestations of divine favor upon the Lord's people need to be promptly and properly sustained in order to continue this good work, and to publish it to the world. In this they should be heartily and faithfully sustained. Promptness in payment insures success in this work; while long and continued failure so to do greatly retards and hinders it; often making the undertaking very burdensome, for means must be had to continue it.

The publishing department has lost, and is still losing large amounts by being compelled to drop long lists of accounts which have never been paid.

Some who are in arrears notify us from time to time of their intentions to pay, sending part of the amount as it comes to them, thus showing that they remember their obligations. With such the Board is willing to be, and has been, lenient.

But a long list of others is carried who seem-ingly fail to consider that money due the Herald Office should be paid as fully and as promptly as any other debt; or that it is a sacred obligation.

The publishing department is an important branch of the Master's service, and all should see that in their stewardship they deal justly with it. Thus all may become helpers in the good work.

None need be a hindrance, nor should they be such. No offense is intended in this, and none should be taken. All can see that the subject re-quires "plainness of speech."

"PAY THAT THOU OWEST" the Herald Office.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

WANT of space compels us at times to make extracts from the many letters sent us, while at other times when a lesser number are on hand, we publish them en-tire after necessary corrections are made. All interested can understand why their letters do not at times appear in full.

Bro. F. C. Smith writes from Farwell, Michigan, that he rejoices in the soul sat-isfying blessings of the gospel. Although but eighteen months old as a man in Christ Jesus, yet he is enabled by the Di-vine Spirit to declare the word with liber-ty to his fellows. He and Bro. J. J. Cornish have been preaching and baptizing in that section and hope to raise up a branch there.

Bro. Cornish, writing from the same place, September 17th, gives encouraging details of events there. The usual oppo-sition is brought to bear against the work, indicating the success that usually follows such. The prediction made by the angel to Joseph Smith is being verified "It will increase the more opposed."

Bro. Richard Hartnell writes a good letter containing an account of "the grand-est time ever experienced by the Saints" of that place at their late two days' meet-ing. He says: "It was truly a spiritual feast and one never to be forgotten. Our preaching services were spiritual, impress-ive, and well attended, and the testimony meetings all that could be desired. Three were baptized during the meetings and five since; others are almost persuaded." He also mentions the visit and labors of Bro. Robert Brown of St. Mary's, Ontario, which were greatly appreciated by the Juniata Saints.

Bro. W. W. McLeod writes from Cor-morant, Minnesota, September 13th: "Bro. J. C. Foss has been pounding away in Otter Tail county, and has been doing much good. Bro. H. N. Hansen is trav-eling around on foot and preaching every time he has opportunity. The Scandina-vians say that he is a good speaker and preaches in harmony with God's word. Bro. Alexander H. Smith has done a noble work. I had the pleasure of seeing eight noble ones baptized; all heads of families except one. Bro. Smith's meet-ings were bringing out an increasing num-ber and were creating a growing interest, but we were made sorry by his being called home on account of sickness in his family. Many interested ones regret the departure of Bro. Smith."

Bro. M. P. Madison writes from Val-entine, Missouri, that the late conference of the Nodaway district was the best ever held by that district. The Holy Spirit was present during the session to the de-gree that all feel like pressing onward.

Bro. J. Reader of Baldwin county, Ala-bama, writes that during a recent two months' visit to the state of Georgia he had preached forty-two times to large congregations in Jefferson and Emanuel counties; and had also administered to six persons and blessed one child. He en-joyed good liberty, and at one time had an audience of fifteen hundred people. Brother Reader sends for some tracts for use in the places where he has been preaching and states that he would like some able minister to labor there. The people were calling for preaching all through that section, and he had promised to write them if some one could be found to continue the work.

Mrs. S. J. Kennedy, writing from Eureka Springs, Carroll county, Arkansas, says: "I have been reading the Herald loaned me by a friend, and find in it the essence of what my soul has been yearning for for years. I have been a member of the Methodist Church for thirty-five years, but there was an inspiration in my heart that told me there was something wrong. My heart has been grieved by seeing so much wickedness and to see men and wo-men seemingly asleep in pulpit and pew, and I have prayed that God would let me live to see a people that was doing his will. I am a widow woman living with my youngest daughter at Eureka Springs, Carroll county, Arkansas. We wash for our living, and having twenty dollars, we want to do something for God's holy work, so we send you two dollars to be used in the latter day cause. I hope that the Lord will send some elder to preach for us, for I do feel that it is God's cause and I want to know more about it. I want to send for the Saints' Herald soon so that my children may see the true light. I will write again."

Bro. W. J. Graves of Brownsdale, Min-nesota, in a late letter also writes of his appreciation of the good things being con-ferred upon the Lord's people. He thinks much good could be done at Brownsdale if preaching was done there by some of the traveling ministry. He is distributing tracts among the people.

AGAINST THE CIGARETTE.

We are glad to note that there is more than one man in the Senate that is mindful of the effects of the cigarette habit upon the youth of the District. Senator Chase has presented a bill prohibiting their sale to minors; and Senator Stewart has also spoken in favor of legislation upon the subject. Mr. Chase presented petitions last week in favor of his bill, signed by 86 pastors of our city churches, 554 superintendents, officers and teachers of the public schools, 257 physicians, and others. The signers are all persons situated where they can see something of the effects of tobacco upon children. The bill called for would prohibit the sale of cigars, cigarettes or tobacco, to minors under 16 years of age. There ought also to be a clause making it an offense for a boy to be found smoking at all. It is our deliberate opinion that cigarettes are doing more harm to the boys of the District than rum, for outside of the effects of the arsenic, they lay the foundation for the drink habit.—Sel.

WASTE OF WAR.

Since January 1st, 1800, the nations of Christ-endom have indulged in forty-seven great wars, and leaving minor squabbles and indirect expense out of view, our sacrifices on the altar of wars since that day may be roughly estimated at 130,000,000,000 dollars, or just about 500,000,000 pounds of gold—sums which may be pronounced in two seconds, though a freight train transporting the gold in American box cars of the average size and running at the usual rate of speed, would be two hours in passing any given point for such a train would be twenty-two miles long.—Sel.

Selected Poetry.

BUILD WELL.

High on the granite wall the builders, toiling,
Heaved up the massive blocks and slabs to place,
With swart and streaming brows and straining sinews,
Under the summer's blaze.

And higher yet, amid the chills of autumn,
Tier upon tier and arch on arch arose:
And still crept upward,—coldly, wearily,
Mid winter's sifting snows.

From stage to stage upsprings the master builder,
Instructing, cheering, chiding here and there;
Scanning, with scrutiny severe and rigid,
Each lusty laborer's share.

Anon his voice to those most distant shouting
Through his hoarse trumpet makes his orders swell;
Or utters words like these to rouse and hearten:
"Build well, my men, build well!

"The ropes are strong, and new and sound the pulleys;
The derrick's beams are equal to the strain;
Unerring are the level, line and plummet;
Let nought be done in vain!

"Build that these walls to coming generations
Your skill, your strength, your faithfulness shall tell,
That all may say, as storms and centuries test them;
THE MEN OF OLD BUILT WELL!"

And ever thus speaks the great Master Builder
To us, where'er our 'journey-work' may be:
"Whate'er the toil, the season, or the structure, Build well—build worthily!"

The tawny Incas for their gardens wrought,
Heavy with sunshine droops the golden-rod,
And the red pennons of the cardinal flowers
Hang motionless upon their upright staves."

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for Thursday, October 11th, 1888.

Memory texts Isa. 54:78, John 11:52.

Subjects: The Indians. That the mission to them may be blessed, and that the time may hasten when God will fulfill his promise to them. Also for the scattered ones of the church.

Sister L— requests the prayers of the "League" that if it is God's will her lungs may be healed and body strengthened.

LAMONI, Iowa, Sept. 27th.

CARTHAGE, Mo.

Dear Sister Walker:—We are the only Saints here except an elder who is stopping here. I have just passed through the trying ordeal of giving up my baby boy—George Roy—who was born near Parrish, Illinois, April 27th, 1887, blessed by Elders Hilliard and Smith, September 20th, 1887, died September 12th, 1888.

I find comfort in the Mothers' Home Column, and often in my heart I say amen, to the many good lessons taught therein. I think the united prayers of the League will help to strengthen the cause.

I ask all the sisters to pray for me, that I may live faithful to the end, and that I may receive wisdom from God to guide me.

Your sister in the one faith,

EMMA PUCKETT.

RHODES, Iowa, Sept. 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have not withheld my name from the Prayer League thus far because I did not fully endorse it; for I believe it was a heaven-born thought, and will be conducive to much good. I shall not always be able to devote the hour appointed to prayer and meditation, as I work at dress making; but at some time during the day I shall offer prayer in behalf of the subjects selected. The first day set apart for the sisters to offer prayer, when the hour arrived for them to meet, I laid aside my work, entered my room and closed the door, and after reading the Scripture designated, I bowed before God in prayer; I felt the hallowed influence of the Holy Spirit, witnessing to me that He was pleased with this effort to serve Him.

That the cause of Zion may prosper and that we sisters may not be backward in doing what we can to help move forward this great work—and hasten the day when our Savior shall come to reign on the earth, is the prayer of your sister in Christ,

M. A. HUGHES.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, August 24th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I for one am pleased with the Prayer League. I was once associated with a few sisters in little prayer meetings in which we were greatly blessed. I have been sick most of the summer and I ask the prayers of the Saints and the Prayer League, especially that I may be healed.

The Home Column and Autumn Leaves are a great comfort to me. I lie on the bed and read them over and over, and wish they were four times as large. I would like to write more but am too tired, and fear you will be troubled to read this.

Your sister in Christ,

EMMA SHUPE.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Ann Walker, Lamoni, Iowa, writes:—"I was baptized when quite young and married somewhat against the wishes of my parents as the man I married was not in the church. As the result of this step I have passed through much sorrow and trouble. After his death I married again, and have raised a family of nine children. I have always prayed to God for his guiding care, and especially that he would watch over the children he had given me, and lead them in the way of righteousness. Let none be discouraged or cease to pray, for God is true to his promise. I know that he has heard my prayers and answered them in behalf of my family many times. My prayers shall always be joined with yours that the work of God may roll on and our children be blessed of God and take their places in the ranks of King Emmanuel's army."

Sister Sarah Downey, Star, Nebraska writes:

—"I have been in the church over forty years. The prospects of the church never looked brighter than at the present time. I believe that God is with his people, both to will and to do of his good pleasure. The Herald is our preacher. I thank God for the spiritual food we are daily receiving from the shepherds of His flock."

BUFFALO, Iowa, Sep, 18th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel that we should remember it is no small matter that we enter the covenant of prayer; because it is a holy covenant; and let us bear in mind the great responsibility that rests upon members in this union. Let us strive to be zealous; and manifest a sober, consistent earnestness in our determinations to serve our Master in fervent prayer, supplication and intercession.

He, from His high throne in heaven, will accept the offering we bring; and will answer us here upon this His foot-stool. Yea, my sisters; the testimony of the Spirit even now is, that our Father in heaven is well pleased with our organization, and His special blessing will abide with it if we keep humble and act in righteousness before Him. Let the number increase; yea, let it swell, and we will see the hundreds marching onward to join this covenant band, until, as sister Frances observes, it will become a power for good in Zion. The reserved "holy forces" will be brought out; yes, there are reserved holy forces—latent powers—that has been too long concealed; and even while I write there comes before my mind's eye a mighty host—sisters in Christ—who have all been, we trust, baptized into one Spirit. Then how ready we ought to be to join this covenant of prayer.

Let us be wise, dear sisters, and as we are all aware that "iniquity abounds," let us come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Ever hoping and believing in the triumph of this latter day work, I remain yours in Christ,

MARY R. BALDWIN.

MEDINA CITY, Texas, Aug. 16th.

Sr. Frances:—I have weighed the matter of the Prayer League well, and as it is my heart's desire to do all I can for the cause we so much love, I bid it God speed. When I went into the water of baptism I gave all to the Master, desiring him to mold me as the potter does the clay. What less can I do than to work and let my light shine, and offer up my prayers in behalf of the needy, the perishing, and the down cast; help to lift up the fallen, and be ever ready to do good. I trust that when the race is ended I will not be found wanting. I have had to stand as it were alone, except my oldest daughter and two nieces, until our Reunion, which came off in June, when the Lord by his mighty power called my dear companion into the fold; and now my heart is made to rejoice in hearing him testify to the truth of the gospel in these last days. Also our youngest daughter took up her cross; and so the good work goes on. We have a dear Sr. Watson, young in the faith, and very feeble—her disease, we think, is consumption—who has asked an interest in the prayers of the Saints. I would be glad to have her remembered, for the sake of her dear helpless family, and that the name of the Lord may be glorified; also a dear niece, living in Nebraska, Mrs. Rosina Crandle, who is afflicted. She seems to live in a dream, and is not able to take care of her loved ones. She ha written asking an interest in our prayers. I have felt impressed to send these two names, trusting that all will be right. With a trusting heart I am,

Your sister,
SOPHIA WIGHT.

HOLDEN, Mo., Aug. 13th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Feeling that each one within the fold can do something for the advancement of this work, though sorely afflicted I feel that I would like to be among the helpers. I am young in the cause and feel much need of being taught. I have not been in the church two years until the 27th of next March. Bro. I. N. White was the first elder I ever heard preach. I told my husband that it was the right church and I was going to join it, and I have never regretted it for God has blessed me many times, and I thank him that he spared my life until I did hear and obey. It is my desire to keep the commandments of God as far as my wisdom and knowledge direct me. Dear Saints, I wish to be remembered in your prayers that I may recover my health, and that I may have more of God's Spirit to be with me, helping me overcome all evil, and have patience to bear my afflictions.

Your sister,
SARAH E. FARR.

NORTH CANYONVILLE, Oregon,
Aug. 10th.

Sister Frances:—May I enter the Home Column? The Herald is our only preacher. There are no Saints near here. I have not heard an elder preach for over four years. I feel very lonely without the society of the Saints. The people in this part of Oregon are very much prejudiced. My husband has scattered tracts, but very few are interested enough to read them. The Expositor is doing a noble work on the coast. We feel grieved to think at the close of the present volume it must stop for want of support.

Dear sisters, can we not do something to prevent it from stopping? Will not some sister in each branch solicit each member to give ten cents for the support of the Expositor? By that means it might be continued. I feel that the Lord would bless us in so doing.

If an elder should come to Canyonville, he would be made welcome at our house,
SARAH HANSON.

BEAUMONT, September 16th.

Dear Sister Frances:—After I got through with my washing and my dinner, I took the Autumn Leaves, and went out in the orchard to have a good rest and a good read. It seemed as though that number of Autumn Leaves, (August) was printed especially for me.

The first I read was the piece of poetry that I sent for the Leaves, entitled the Bottom Drawer; that brought back last winter's sad days, when we laid away to rest our two lovely boys; then I turned over the Leaves, to Autumn Leaves from the tree of Poetry. There I read Mothers Work, Endurance, A Mother's Thought at Dawn; then I turned the leaves again till I came to Under the Lamp Light, where I read My Pupil. How many thoughts that brought to my mind. On the next page was the Missionary's Grave, written by H. C. Smith. I was acquainted with both parties, the missionary and the writer. Many pleasant hours has Bro. Rodger spent at our house in Santa Ana, and many sad hours Bro.

Smith has passed at our home in Beaumont. Bro. Smith preached the funeral sermons of both our boys, Arthur's in January, and baby Joe's in February. I felt as if that number of Autumn Leaves was as full of sadness as I was; so I laid it down and took up a magazine that lay beside me and the first piece I read was entitled One of Three.

"ONE OF THREE.

"I am not quite alone," she said;
"I have fair daughters three:
And one is dead, and one is wed,
And one remains, with me.

"Awhile I watch, with tenderest care,
Her growth from child to maid,
And plait her fair and shining hair—
A long and golden braid—

"(Ah! sweet the bloom upon the grape Before it leaves the vine)—
And deck and drape her dainty shape
With garments soft and fine,

"And keep her sacred and apart
Until some stranger's plea,
With flattering art, shall win her heart
Away from home and me,

"Leaving her childhood's home and me
Forgotten and bereft;
Then there will be, of all my three,
Only the dead one left.

"Why count the dead as lost? Ah me!
I keep my dead alone;
For only she, of all the three,
Will always be my own.

"She will not slight, at morn or eve,
The old love for the new:
The living leave our hearts to grieve—
The dead are always true."

Perhaps it will comfort some sad heart, as it has mine; I have thought of it so often since the children died. If the rest of my family should live to grow up to be men and women, I would always feel as though I had one little boy and one baby. They never can grow old to me.

I am not much of a letter writer, but I often think I ought to contribute something to the Mother's Column. If all the sisters were as backward about writing as I have been we would not have many letters in the Column. I always read that part of the Herald first. I like the idea of the Prayer League. I think it would be a help to me, as my faith is weak, and I feel the need of wisdom. I agree with Sr. Winn about having the League meet on Thursday afternoon, as it would be hard for us farmer's wives to spare the morning hours. I am a scattered member, so I will have to keep the hour by myself.

Yours in bonds,
SISTER ANNIE.

MEDINA CITY, Tex., Sep. 10th.

Dear Saints:—The work it seems is moving onward. Prejudice is giving way, and we are gaining many friends to the good cause.

My husband gave several lectures on the Book of Mormon last month, at Pipe Creek. I think much good was done. He is to hold a discussion at the same place commencing Sep. 15th with an Elder of the Christian faith.

We came here on Monday. My husband on Sunday morning at Lexton Creek; in the evening we had prayer meeting. Most all the Saints seemed to enjoy themselves splendidly. We expect to start for Bexar and Wilson counties soon after the debate.

Pray for us, that the Lord may ever guide us aright. Yours in bonds of truth, JENNIE CURRIE.

Correspondence.

JONESPORT, Maine, Aug. 27th.

Editors of the Herald:—The present writing finds me pleasantly situated by the sea side, not dwelling with Simon the Tanner, however, but with the Mansfield brethren and friends to whom I am indebted particularly and to the Saints in general of this place for care and home comforts for the last ten days. A shower of rain has just fallen, the lightnings cleared up and purified the atmosphere and the morning air is rendered healthful and bracing. The day has set in bright and beautiful. Thus circumstanced, favorably impressed and in a happy mood we strike out to write, mindful that we cannot give a full pen picture of incidents as we would like.

On Friday, August 3d, in company with Bro. George Gates, of Providence, Rhode Island, I left Boston, Massachusetts, for Maine. The following day we arrived at Lisbon Falls and were kindly received at the home of Bro. F. M. Sheehy. We remained there over Sunday, holding one meeting that seemed to be comforting and convincing to those who were present, but the day being exceedingly warm there was not a large number in attendance. Bro. F. M. Sheehy and his brother reside there and have many friends, and with a favorable opportunity a good work for the cause can be done. If the faith and devotion of the tried and true sisters Sheehy prevails, it will evidently be done ere long. They are worthy Saints.

On the 7th, joined by Bro. Sheehy we went to Rockwell and stopped at Sr. M. Murry's for the night, she being away on the Christian errand of caring for the sick. Our Yankee tact suggested a remedy for the emergency, so we assumed possession by right of discovery and directed the kitchen and sleeping apartments according to taste and inclination. Was refreshed. Thanks, Sr. Murry.

The 8th we arrived by boat at Sargentsville and soon received a warm welcome at Bro. W. G. Pert's and Levi Gray's, where we had a pleasant stay. They with Bro. Brown are valiantly sustaining the cause in that vicinity, the sisters being of great aid.

On the 11th we met the Saints of the Western Maine district in conference at Brooksville. There is not a large number of Saints in this section, but some very excellent ones. Withall there is a kind of blind and stupid prejudice existing in the place against the faith. They do not believe Paul's doctrine of safety,—"Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good." The business of the conference was transacted with unity of sentiment and a good spirit. Sunday brought out a very desirable audience at our preaching services. The Saints took a lively part in the prayer service and the Spirit gave comfort and encouragement. Bro. F. M. Sheehy's effort on the angel message was a good one. We were pleased to learn of the high esteem that our young brother U. W. Greene was held in by the Saints. He had been laboring there a portion of the time during the past year. Now reinforced with the aid of a young and beautiful wife, doubtless his usefulness has just begun.

One was baptized on Sunday by the writer, comrades insisting that he should begin here to baptize in the great Atlantic. It was a most desirable place. The gentle waves came sporting in with the tide over a stony bed of the sea with waters so lucid that one could see all the way to the bottom. A gentle rain was falling and a band of Saints stood on the shore singing; the usual formula of words, an immersion and one more soul was set face Zionward in the straight and narrow way. May he overcome his besetting sins and run with patience to the end of the race.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker Billings made us welcome at their house, also cheerfully entertained many of the Saints who were in attendance at the conference. May they be richly rewarded for their kindness. It was duly appreciated by the Saints.

On the morning of the 13th nine of us crossed Eggremoggen Reach (not so sure about this name) to Deer Island in a peapod and dory manned by Captains Eaton and Billings. To see these little boats sink down until the water was so near the rims was calculated to fill a "clodhopper" with something bordering on consternation, but all passed over safely to the landing, where they boarded the inevitable buckboard, donned all the extra clothing on hand and spread umbrellas for a twelve miles' ride through the rain, mud and chilly air, all merry enough. About noon we were delivered safely at Greene's Landing, where Bro. F. M. Sheehy and the writer were assigned to Bro. Thomas Eaton's, where we received a welcome and a home. Thanks to Bro. and Sr. Eaton.

It was rather an unpropitious time for holding meetings at the Landing, there being a show on hand in full blast. Four meetings were held, however, which were quite well attended and with interest by the Saints. The brethren are making some progress there.

On Saturday morning the 18th in company with Brn. Gates, Greene and wife, we crossed the Island again in a private conveyance. It was one of those rare occasions that one meets with now and then, when sunshine and air, morning dew, vegetation, flowers, songs of birds and picturesque scenery unite to give beauty and attractiveness to the surroundings making life a pleasure and inspiring one with thoughts that this grand old world is not such a bad place to live in after all.

At the head of the Island about eleven o'clock a. m. we boarded the steamer Richmond, and joined the Saints from Massachusetts on their way to Jonesport to attend the Reunion of the Saints, the first one to be held in New England. There were John Smith and wife, Irvin E. Perthel and wife, Olga Perthel and mother, sister Bucknam of Brockton, M. H. Bond and wife, Susa Gates, Kate E. Blood, E. C. Briggs, Stillman Hendricks, Mark Billings, and Rose and Jennie Holland of Blue Hill. Conversation, song and scenery was the order of the day as the Richmond moved along the coast of Maine amid one of the most beautiful, variegated and attractive sceneries, of islands, diversified hills, bold bluffs, huge granite rocks all covered with a varied growth of evergreens that can be found on Joseph's land. Old Ocean had put on her placid and smiling face, a gentle breeze came in from seaward, and once in a lifetime we enjoyed a ride on the great waters off Bar Harbor, the popular summer resort of the opulent of the east, where the Goulds, Vanderbilts, Fields, etc., retire during the warm season.

We had an hour to see the city. It is elaborately built, especially the hotels, situated on a fine harbor, a semicircle of high hills, some of which approach to mountain heights, all covered with evergreens, forms a background to the west, while to the east and south lies the harbor, studded with boats of traffic and pleasure, from the birch canoe to the finely equipped yacht and sturdy ocean steamer that plows the ocean from shore to shore. Altogether it presents an enchanting view.

At evening twilight while the Saints were singing a selection of hymns from the Harp, which sounded beautifully out on the evening air, the Richmond steamed along side the Jonesport wharf. Here we were met by brethren and friends who gave us a cordial reception and we were soon hied away to the church where separation and assignment to quarters were made. Some disappointment was felt, however, when it was found that there was not enough to go around, a larger number being expected and ample preparations having been made to accommodate them. But there is nothing like being ready. Sunday morning the 19th, a large audience met at the Union Church, at Jonesport, at ten o'clock a. m. and organized the meeting by selecting the writer as chairman, Bro. F. M. Sheehy secretary, Clementine Hinkley and Irvin E. Perthel as ushers, and Miss Cora Sawyer chorister and organist. Bro. Edmund C. Briggs was introduced with a well selected subject and ably delivered discourse which was listened to with interest. In the afternoon the writer, by request, preached the funeral discourse of a young man of the neighborhood, just deceased; the management being under the direction of Bro. F. M. Sheehy. We were pleasantly impressed with the beautiful music chanted by the choir at the interment at Indian River. At evening Bro. M. H. Bond was greatly aided while he delivered a very excellent discourse to a crowded house. A prayer and testimony meeting was appointed for Monday, at ten a. m., which was well attended; all who could taking an active part. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon the audience in rather a surprising manner, rendering it one of the pleasantest and happiest sessions in our whole experience. One spoke in tongues; a brother gave what was supposed to be the interpretation, presenting good and encouragement to the meeting and to the Saints of that place. Bro. Briggs occupied the time in the afternoon in a telling manner, and in the evening Bro. John Smith of New Bedford, Massachusetts, delivered an excellent discourse which was listened to with interest by a large audience. Three meetings a day was now the established order, all of which were well attended, and in the evenings the house was crowded.

On Wednesday afternoon Bro. John Smith occupied the time in discoursing upon "temporal duties," and his remarks were listened to with close attention. At the close of the evening meeting Bro. E. C. Briggs baptized nine in the incoming tide. A large body of people witnessed the baptisms from the shore; and the queen of night, with her pale face, shone down as if approving.

Thursday morning, Brn. Briggs and Smith, with others, returned, leaving Brn. Green, Bond, Sheehy and self to carry on the meetings. The interest continued and the audiences increased, each of us speaking alternately as wisdom directed and occasion required. A number came in from the adjacent places. We note father and mother Steel, Bro. and Sr. Otis Foss and brother and wife, sister Hall, Bro. J. Benner of Jonesborough, Sr. Gray of Brookville, sister Sadie Dobbins of Machias, with too many in and about Jonesport to mention names here, however worthy. Three more were baptized during the week by Bro. F. M. Sheehy, making twelve in all. Sunday following was announced as the last day of the reunion. It came in most beautiful with a cool breeze blowing. All faces seemed bent towards the place of gathering. The house was filled early. The evening brought out the orchestra, Eugene L. Kelley playing the clarinet, Levi Mansfield the cornet, Charles Hinkley the violin, and Miss Edna Beal the organ, Enos Rogers and wife, Nettie Richardson, M. S. Craig, Laura Drisko, Cora Sawyer, Lewis Hinkley, Ed Wilson, Nettie Smith and Ed Hinkley, vocalists. They were aided also by other singers attendant at the meetings. The music was charming and did credit to the young people of Jonesport. May their usefulness have just begun. Large numbers returned to their homes unable to find room within the house in the evening. Bro. Sheehy preached in the afternoon with fine effect on the hearers, and the writer, aided by Brn. Green and Bond, in the morning and evening, with what seemed to be interest to the hearers. There were representative men from far and near who will carry the good news of a restored gospel abroad, and the good effect will go on. Providence seemed to favor us from the beginning; and time, and place, and circumstance could not have well been better. A good Spirit and feeling pervaded throughout and the Saints separated with increased confidence in each other and confirmed in the great cause. Numbers of others expressed their convictions of the truth and consistency of our work and will unite with the church ere long. The Jonesport Saints, many of whom have stood long and well for the faith, feel comforted and encouraged at the prospect ahead.

A vote of thanks was extended to the citizens for their splendid entertainment, and the committee on arrangements was continued for another year, to prepare for another meeting; and amid great cheer and congratulations the reunion adjourned. Thus closed one of the pleasantest and most impressive series of meetings that it has been our fortune to attend.

As a change, on Monday following, Bro. Bryant gave a number of us a ride in the private schooner of the Messrs. Mansfield which was enjoyed, only we grew just a little nervous at times when the waters come so near the top of the vessel as to dash into it occasionally.

Bro. Bond preached in the evening again to an attentive audience. Tuesday was set apart as a holiday and picnic down on the beach, and the day was favorable. The inhabitants were early on the move, as many as could spare the time and find a way to go. Balky horses, that occasionally showed their natural bent, rendering it a little doubtful, as well as amusing, as to which way they were going, and those of steady habits, with vehicles to match, were pressed into service for the occasion. Old and young, the middle aged of both sexes, came with lunch baskets and pleasant faces and filled the vehicles to overflowing, and still they came. One way and another the larger number got there, to turn themselves loose in the open air and literally go wild, as nearly as was consistent, in order to improve the physical and social man. Plays, games, boat-rides, strolls, conversation, songs, picking berries and flowers, gathering shells, pebbles, etc. was the order; all of which was crowned with a rich repast furnished by the sisters of Jonesport, and spread out upon clean cloths on the ground. With sharpened appetite each set to work in good earnest to test both quality and quantity, soon to find that there was an abundance and to spare, and of the best. All became much better acquainted, and the day was spent merrily, each returning to the city in the evening full of life, cheerful and happy.

At present Brn. Green, Sheehy and Bond are pushing the work in eastern and western Maine; and later on Brn. Sheehy and Bond will plant the gospel standard in New Hampshire and Vermont, if present programme is followed, while the writer goes to points where most needed. May the Lord bless the workers at home and abroad.

At this meeting was gathered the largest delegation of General Conference appointees that ever assembled in New England, of the Reorganization. May our members and unions increase.

In the faith,

Brother Joseph:—The work is onward here. The two days' meeting held here on the 15th and 16th, was a perfect success although we were somewhat disappointed when we found that none but Elder Levi Phelps and a few of the lesser priesthood would be with us. But on Friday evening before going to meeting brethren Phelps, J. A. Grant and myself went in secret prayer to God, and we can truly say that we were rewarded openly, for there it was made known to us that the God of heaven would be with us in mighty power; and from that time on every Saint was made to feel glad that they had enlisted in this great work. Every one seemed to take an interest in the work and looked to God, asking him to strengthen his servants, and I must say that Elder Phelps preached four as powerful sermons as I have ever heard. The elder says he never before enjoyed such liberty. On Sunday evening the Saints felt led to meet on Monday morning for prayer meeting at my house; and while assembled there we witnessed such blessings as never before was witnessed by any in that assembly. Saints of twelve years standing said they never felt the power of God so strong before; and in that meeting God called me to take part in his work, telling me that if I would be faithful I would be made strong in helping to build up his cause and kingdom. The Saints also received many instructions concerning his great work. Therefore we can truly say that the work is onward. My intentions now are to do all in my power to establish the gospel and get it before my fellow men. I desire the prayers of all God's people that I may ever live a humble servant waiting for the spirit of wisdom and truth to guide me in all the ways of life.

Your brother in Christ,

Dear Herald:—Thirteen years ago this summer I was baptized by Apostle T. W. Smith, and became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ. For years there was not a Latter Day Saint in the town (Lake Eunice). This summer brother Alexander H. Smith held a series of meetings and the result of his labor is that there are now twelve Saints in the town besides myself, and they are the best citizens of the town. One of the members is my oldest son who will someday preach this gospel. Through the labor of brethren Alexander, Foss, and others, twenty-two have been added to the church since our last general conference. Truly God is blessing us and giving us of His Spirit. Bro. Alexander was wonderfully blessed in preaching, being filled with the Spirit and the people sat open-mouthed, drinking in the truth. There are more to come in before long. Bro. Hansen is nobly battling for the truth, but it is hard to get the Scandinavians out of the old ruts; but the Spirit says he shall be blessed and we must all sustain him by our faith and prayers. Bro. Foss is with me this week, anxious for Sunday to come that he may do his work for the Master. He baptized two at Frazee City last Monday.

The Saints of this Northern Minnesota district are, as a general thing, alive, and trying to do their duty. The Oak Lake branch has been especially blessed of late in the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit. The officers of the branch are active, and look after the members as the law directs and good results follow. But the Saints must be watchful and prayerful. The enemy is on the alert. For the first time since I came here the local paper came out against us; throwing out an insinuation that brother Alexander was an imposter. But the Spirit said, "Keep silent," and we have said nothing. I rejoice that we are counted worthy of persecution.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

Dear Herald:—

"The Lord will surely go before us,
Our way he surely will prepare."

So runs the lines of the beautiful verse chosen by brother J. F. McDowell to close his soul-stirring and convincing appeal in the Herald of September 15th, in behalf of "Our Sunday Schools."

My heart was stirred within me as I read it, and I am going to make haste to assure the readers of the Herald that I am not on the side of the grumblers or big heads; on the contrary I feel to second the brother's wise suggestions which truly seem to be the unselfish utterances of a "big heart." Of how much importance is the subject mentioned? Let every parent ask themselves who have children growing up around them for whose welfare and a thorough understanding of the true plan of salvation they are anxious. I hailed with joy the letter, being very hopeful in my heart that it may even be a forerunner of other educational plans for our young people. We may even hope and pray for schools to be carried on under the auspices of our own beloved church. "For with God all things are possible."

The subject of schools of this kind has been occupying my mind much of late, and the plan of organizing and co-operating the Sunday Schools seems such a God-given inspiration in the right direction that I feel it my duty to at least give what little assistance an encouraging word of approval will afford. This is all I can do at present under existing circumstances. There is no branch of the church in the city where we live, but we will save up our pennies and nickles for the Christmas Offering mentioned in the Home Column. And who can suggest a better use for that same offering than to provide the means to carry on the Sunday School work as brother McDowell has so wisely pointed a way to do provided the means are forthcoming?

May God bless and continue to move upon the hearts of His Saints to "lay hold" of the blessings He has in store for them, is the prayer of sister

WHEN DID CHRIST PREACH.

DEAR HERALD:—Your pages are dear to me because of the glad tidings you bring and for the freedom you allow to your correspondents in expressing their views; so that by friendly exchange all may be profited by reading the arguments, (when such are used), logic, reasoning, and proofs, that may be adduced; thus getting both sides of any controverted theme or idea that we can decide according to the evidence.

In your visit of September appears an article, "When did he preach?"—p. 566. The writer takes the ground that Christ went, after his resurrection, to preach to the prisoners. But the writer hereof believes and always has believed, that He preached to the spirits in prison by His Spirit. The ground usually taken by the other side is that He would have to show a resurrected body to the prisoners in order to prove to them the resurrection. If that was the case he was very partial, and a great respecter of persons; for the Jews wanted to see some sign of his Messiahship, and he said that no sign should be given them, but the sign of Jonah.

"Ah!" says one, "There is just where you put your foot into the trap! Because Jesus did show himself unto —." Yes; unto who? Not unto those who wanted to see a proof or sign, but unto chosen witnesses. Not unto the sign seeking world; nor did he to a sign seeking prisoner. But let us look at the case of Jonah: Was Jonah twice in the whale? No. Yet you would make Christ go twice to some place; once to paradise, (in the spirit), and then to hell (the prison) in spirit and body.

Look at a few Scriptures: Job says 42: 5, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eyes seeth thee." Could Job believe in him without seeing his resurrected body? Yes; and saw and believed that Christ would come into the world, die and rise again; and so could the prisoners. "Abraham rejoiced to see my day." And yet Abraham was dead nearly two thousand years before Christ's resurrection. He could believe, however, in Christ's resurrection, without having a resurrected body shown to him, and so could the prisoner. But how was the preaching to be done? Can spirits preach or talk? Read Luke 23: 43, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Then read Luke 16: 19-31, the case of the rich man and Lazarus. You will find that father Abraham preached a very nice sermon to the rich man, and a very intelligent conversation was carried on relating to salvation. But Abraham did not hold the keys of opening the prison, although he could, and did on this occasion, preach to the prisoner; yet there was a great gulf between them, paradise on one side and hell (the prison) on the other. Jesus while in paradise could preach to those in prison as well as Abraham could; but Abraham could not pass the intervening gulf; but Jesus could, and hence did. David speaks of Christ in Psalms 88: 5-10, as being "free among the dead;" hence not a prisoner when he went to preach to them. This fact would be sufficient proof to them without seeing him resurrected. The fact of themselves being all prisoners, not free, (and no free one had ever come among them), then to see the spirit of Christ free, was proof enough that he would rise from the dead, especially as he went to preach the gospel, of which the resurrection was a part. The proof of his being the Christ and the earnest of the resurrection lay right in the very message he came with, and from the fact that he was free to enter and to leave. Read 1 Peter 3: 18, 19, . . . "Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison."

Notice carefully how this reads and you will find that he went previous to being quickened. Jesus was raised from the dead by the Spirit; by which Spirit also he went (past tense), previous to being quickened. Why use the word "also?" Because the resurrection (quickening) of his body is first spoken of as being accomplished by the Spirit; but he went by the Spirit and preached. By what Spirit? The same that raised his body; so that "also went," shows conclusively that he went before he was quickened.

Again. Acts 1: 3, "Seen of them forty days," after his resurrection. If he was seen for forty days by men and women who previously believed in him, and at the end of these forty days he went to heaven, then when did he preach to prisoners in the body?

"O," says one, "during these forty days!" Well then he was not seen forty days if he was away any part of them. If a sectarian preacher dared to make that statement in debate how would the Elder hold him to the testimony as it is, Isaiah 8: 20? But the stumbling-block lies in the fact that many believe as the Roman Church has handed it down, that Christ died on Friday noon, and laid the half day, (Friday), all of Saturday, (one and a half days), Friday night, and Saturday night, (two whole nights). Therefore he was not three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. But read 2 Nephi 11: 2, page 94, where Nephi, speaking of Christ says: "Behold they will crucify him, and after he is laid in the sepulchre for the space of three days, he shall rise from the dead," etc. Isaiah 29: 24: "They who erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmur shall learn doctrine" from the book which was to come out of the ground. See also Helaman 5: 5, page 414, concerning his birth. There was a sign given of one night being turned into day, thus making three days with no night. Also Nephi 1: 5, page 422. This sign of three days light was of his birth, while page 437 Nephi 4: 1, tells of three days of darkness at his death. To save space I do not quote them.

Next refer to 2 Nephi 6: 4, 5, page 71, where we are told of a temporal death, and a spiritual death. The grave receives the body, the temporal, and hell receives the spirits, the spiritual. And that hell (the prison of the spirit) must deliver up its captive spirits. After explaining the difference between the grave and hell, (the prison), Nephi next shows in paragraph 5 the paradise of God which he says "must deliver up the spirits of the righteous and the grave will deliver up the bodies of the righteous." We refer to Mosiah 8: 6, page 173, to show that they who have part in the first resurrection are they who have kept the commandments, (not the disobedient in the days of Noah), and all who died in their ignorance before he came, not having salvation declared to them, are entitled to the first resurrection. But those are not the ones that Christ preached to in prison. The ones he preached to had not kept the commands; had not died in ignorance; for Noah preached to them and they were disobedient, not ignorant.

We do not refer to this to show preaching in either the body or the spirit, but simply to show the intelligent existence of the spirit; whether in or out of the body. Inasmuch, then, as the spirit is conscious and intelligent, capable of using the faculties of reason, and of weighing evidence, what need was there to present a resurrected body to them any more than a spirit to men in the flesh in order to convince men that there is a spirit in man? Alma 19: 5-7 tells us of a "space" between death and the resurrection. By the declaration "there is a space," etc., he conveys the idea that there is something to do in that space; and as the righteous die, as well as the wicked, what are the spirits of the righteous doing or what are the spirits of apostles, prophets, elders, etc., doing during that space? There must be something for them to do as well as for the disobedient.

John 13: 33-36: "Ye shall seek me; and as I said unto the Jews, whither I go ye can not come." (John 7: 34 and 8: 21) . . . "Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, Whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go thou canst not follow me now, but thou shalt follow me afterwards."

Now notice that the Jews could not go where Jesus went on any terms (but obedience to the gospel), but his disciples, especially his ministry, could go where he went, but "not now." What is it to follow another? To go the same way and do the same things. Then as he distinctly told his apostles they would follow him, where did he go? To paradise, (Luke 23: 43); then to the prison, (1 Peter 3: 19). When did he go to paradise? "To-day;" the day he was crucified. Did he take a resurrected body to-day to show to the spirits in paradise? He did not have a resurrected body for three days later. When he went to the prison, did he respect and favor the disobedient rebels so much more than the obedient by showing the rebels a resurrected body, and not showing himself to the obedient ones? But this is not all; John 13: 36: "Thou shalt follow me afterwards," not now, (then). Did the spirit of Peter or the spirits of all the priesthood first go to paradise, then go through a resurrection and take resurrected bodies to go to the prison and preach to the disobedient? If not, then they (Peter in particular) did not follow him, but went some other way. To me it is very evident from the commission—"preach the gospel to every creature"—that all the priesthood continue their work of ministry in the spirit. Millions of creatures never heard those men; millions more died between the time of their receiving the commission and the possibility of getting to them; countless millions more never heard the gospel during the apostasy, yet the command was, "go ye into all the world, preach the gospel to every creature." As we said before, millions died before they could get to them, or before they ever got into one tenth part of the world. Some died just at the minute they were receiving their authority. Who preached to them? Could they go to paradise, not having been the spirits of the righteous, inasmuch as none but the spirits of the righteous do go to paradise? (Alma 19: 5, 6).

I am satisfied that all the controversy between brethren on this point is based on the erroneous supposition that Christ's body was not three days and three nights in the grave; yet 2d Nephi 11: 2, p. 94 and Helaman 5: 7, p. 416, says: "Behold they will crucify him, and after he is laid in the sepulchre for the space of three days, he shall rise from the dead." Helaman says concerning the sign of his death: "Behold, in that day that he shall suffer death, the sun shall be darkened . . . also the moon and stars, and there shall be no light upon the face of the land (America) even from the time that he shall suffer death, for the space of three days, to the time that he shall rise again from the dead." Hosea 6: 2: "After two days will he revive us; in the third day will he raise us up and we shall live in his sight." (use the pronoun him instead of us and you have a clear prediction that after two days will he (God) revive him (Christ); in the third day will he (God) raise him up, and we shall dwell in his sight. After two days would certainly be three days, not one and a half days, and two nights, and as he rose early in the morning of the first day while it was yet dark. (Matt. 28: 1; Mark 16: 2-9; Luke 24: 1; John 20: 1-18.) By counting back three days we would have Thursday instead of Friday as the day on which he died. Paul says in 1st Corinthians 15:4: "And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." Now the Scriptures does not say rise again in a day and a half, but rise again "the third day." Where is the Scripture that says it? (Hos. 6:2). There is no use of going to the New Testament to look for the Scripture that Paul quoted from, for there was none but the Old in his day, but we go to the New to prove that he was crucified on Thursday instead of Friday. Matt. 27:62: "Now the next day that followed (the crucifixion) was the day of the preparation." . . . What is meant by the day of the preparation? We answer, the day before the Sabbath, (Saturday), which would be Friday, the day of the preparation. (See Exodus 16:5, 23.) The Jews were commanded to bake and seethe; in fact to do all their work in six days, and especially on Friday, the sixth day, they were to have all manner of work done so that no work would be done on the Sabbath (Saturday). Exodus 16:5 " . . . On the sixth day ye shall prepare," etc. Then the sixth day was the day of preparation. So as to not be deceived we call attention again to Matt. 27:62, where a very wrong rendering is given. It says: "Now the next day that followed the day of the preparation the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate." This is certainly wrong, for the next day that followed the day of preparation was the Sabbath, and the priests and Pharisees would not dare break the Sabbath by going to Pilate on a social, or a state question; for, according to their law, questions of punishment, death, &c., were not executed on the Sabbath, but the guilty were put in ward till the Sabbath was over, and on the next days they were punished. (See Num. 15:32-36; Lev. 24:12.) The Sabbath was a very sacred day to the Jews, and they were very tenacious in keeping it. So that by reading Matt. 27:62 in this way: "Now the next day that followed was the day of the preparation," &c., this is clearly proven by the facts of the verses before. Joseph took the body, wrapped it in linen, laid it in the tomb, &c., &c. "Now the next day was the day of the preparation," makes good sense and is in perfect keeping with their law. And so the priests and Pharisees could go on the preparation day to Pilate, but they could not go on any such a question if it was the Sabbath. See Mark 16:42: "Now when the even (of his crucifixion, Thursday) was come, because it was the preparation, that is the day before the Sabbath. . . . Joseph of Aramathea went in unto Pilate and craved the body of Jesus." Now do not be mistaken and think that it was the even of Friday that Joseph went to Pilate because the even of the preparation had only come on, for according to Jewish time the evening and the morning were the sixth day, (Gen. 1:31). Therefore it took Thursday evening and Friday morning to make the day, but as the going down of the sun on Thursday night closed that day, then the even of the preparation day began and that day lasted till sundown, Friday, and at the setting of the sun on Friday the Sabbath began. Neh. 13:19; Lev. 23:32, &c., &c.; see Luke 23:33-56.

Verse 33, "There they crucified him;" 44, "And it was about the sixth hour, (noon), and there was darkness over all the earth (land in margin) until the ninth hour," (three o'clock), Thursday afternoon; 50, "And behold, . . . Joseph, a counselor;" 52, "went to Pilate and begged the body;" 53, "took it down, wrapped it in linen, laid it in a sepulchre;" 54, "And that day (the day that Joseph did all this) was the preparation and the Sabbath drew on." Can any one not see that, if Joseph went at even (Mark 16:42; Matt. 27:57) to Pilate to beg the body that it was Thursday even, or the even that began the day of the preparation? Then he was crucified on Thursday; taken down Thursday night; wrapped in linen &c., on Friday, and laid in a tomb. After laying him in the tomb the women returned and prepared spices, &c., and rested on the Sabbath. Luke 23:56. Then we would have Thursday, Friday and Saturday, three days; Thursday night, Friday night and Saturday night, three nights. Then as Jonah was three days and nights in the belly of the whale, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. The other theory has him a day and a half and two nights at one time, and three days and three nights again; making four days and a half and five nights, or five days and five nights at two times.

For the convenience of any who may want to hunt up the Book of Mormon on paradise, and that Christ was three days in the grave, see pages 71:4, 5; 173:6; 311:5, 7; 414:5; 416:7; 439:4-6; 440:7-11; 545:2.

If any of the above is not up to the light that some others have on the subject, I for one would be glad to hear from them, so that we may come to a unity of faith. In the meantime praying and ever working for the redemption of Zion, I remain your brother and co-laborer in the gospel,

CORRECTION.

In Herald for September 1st, No. 351, the last quotation in my letter is said to be in second Nephi, chapter ten. It should read chapter eleventh, fourth and sixth verses, as the above named verses in the Book of Mormon prove that the nations that have the book shall be judged by its teachings; so we must read and understand it correctly. Unfortunately we have no concordance to this important book.

We must read the book through to learn the confirming statements of each prophet on doctrine or history. They harmonize clearly on every subject. The church can make them more useful with a reference to the principles of truth plainly taught in them when they can attain to a concordance. Many have lived to see prophecies in the book fulfilled. Our elders can now prove the divinity of the book by its many verified prophecies. MARY P. EATON.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. II.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

THE DESOLATION, A. D. 70.

"WALK about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof; mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following." Ps. 48:12, 13.

Titus was now undisputed master of Jerusalem, and as he walked through the magnificent streets of the upper city, and gazed upon the solid walls, and massive towers, with which it was defended, and noticed the enormous magnitude of the stones, and the strength of the masonry, he is said to have been lost in admiration. "Of a surety," said he, "God has been our assistant in this siege; none but God has ejected the Jews from these fortifications; for of what avail could all the strength of man, or of machines have been, in overthrowing such towers as these." And when the city was demolished, three of these towers were left standing, "to tell generations following," what a city that was that he had besieged and taken. The army was now glutted and wearied with slaughter; and yet there remained a vast multitude of wretched creatures of whom it was difficult to dispose. Of these, however, the aged and infirm were ordered to be slain, as well as all those who were taken in arms; the rest were driven, a helpless throng, within the bare and blackened walls of the Temple courts, where one Fronto was deputed to adjudicate upon their fate.

All who were accused by one another of having been factious were slain; the tallest and most beautiful young men were reserved to grace the triumph of the conqueror; an immense number were distributed into the provinces, to be destroyed in the theatres and public shows, by sword combats, or by wild beasts. All who were under seventeen years old were sold for slaves; and all above that age were chained and sent to work in the Egyptian mines. To enhance the misery of their condition, it is recorded that during the few days that this adjudication was proceeding, there died of the number no less than eleven thousand from want of food. The Jews who perished in this terrible visitation of Jerusalem alone, without including those who perished before the siege began, or in the sanguinary progress of the Roman army in Galilee, Samaria, Perea, and in other parts of Judea, are said to have amounted to the almost incredible number of one million one hundred thousand; while ninety-seven thousand were carried into captivity. These were from Jerusalem alone.

The whole multitude destroyed in the seven years' war is computed, from Josephus' numbers, at one million three hundred and fifty-six thousand four hundred and sixty. Thus terrible in its beginnings was the "vengeance," and the "tribulation" which then fell upon the Jewish people, in conformity with the memorable prediction of their rejected Messiah. It then began, and has been pursuing and crushing them ever since through near two thousand years, though with merciful mitigations or shortenings, nor are these days of vengeance yet come to an end. "And as he spoke of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said, As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down. Then said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee into the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter therein. For these be the days of vengeance, that all things that are written may be fulfilled. But woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days; for there shall be great distress in the land, and and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except these days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." (Matt. 24, and Luke 21.)

There is one prediction in this passage which deserves especial notice: the "fearful sights and great signs from heaven," which should accompany the fall of the guilty city. When we remember the character of Him who foretold these signs, we are sure that no jot or tittle of His words could fail; nor will we so dishonor our blessed Lord as to attempt, as some have done, to explain away the marvelous prodigies which fulfilled His word, or to insinuate that they were natural phenomena; but rather rejoice that they have been recorded by one whom we can not suspect of any design to corroborate this divine prophecy. Thus there were many false prophets, who deluded the people with assurances of miraculous help, even to the very extremity.

On the very day that the temple was burned, one of these visionaries had made public proclamation, as if from God, that deliverance should be granted by a miracle, commanding the populace to assemble at the Holy House; multitudes believing the assurance congregated there, and were slain by the Romans. A star, or comet, in the form of a sword, is said to have hung over the city through a whole year. Before the breaking out of the war, when the people were assembled at the Passover, on the eighth day of Nisan, there suddenly appeared a light, shining round the altar, and was as bright as day, though it was the ninth hour of the night; and this light continued for half an hour. At the same festival a heifer as she was led forth to be sacrificed, brought forth a lamb in the midst of the temple. At another time "the eastern gate of the inner court, which was of brass, and vastly heavy, and had been with difficulty shut by twenty men, and rested on a base armed with iron, and was furnished with bolts, fastened very deep into the firm floor, which was there made of one entire stone, was seen to open of its own accord about midnight. The populace thought this a happy omen, but the scribe expounded it to prognosticate that the sacredness and security of the Holy House was about to be dissolved." And still more significant were the voices heard by the Priests at the feast of Pentecost. Going in at night to perform the accustomed service, they felt a great quaking, and heard a noise, followed by the sound of a multitude of footsteps, and voices saying, "Let us depart hence." Again, on the twenty-first day of the month Iyar, there appeared in the sky "a prodigious and incredible phenomenon;" for in the afternoon a little before sunset, there were seen in the clouds, chariots and horsemen performing military maneuvers and the visionary storming of a city. Nor was there wanting more distinct and oral monition of the coming desolation. At the feast of Tabernacles, seven years before the overthrow, a rustic named Jesus, the Son of Ananus, began to cry against the city and the Temple: and through the whole of her remaining existence the streets of Jerusalem never ceased to echo his boding voice. Day and night he passed on his solitary way, noticing none, neither those that beat him nor those that gave him food; but ever uttered his melancholy "Woe to Jerusalem! A voice from the east, a voice from the west, a voice from the four winds, a voice against Jerusalem and the Holy House, a voice against the bridegroom and the bride, a voice against the whole people."

He was arrested and severely punished by the elders, but he did not intermit his prophetic cry. He was brought before the procurator, and scourged till his bones were exposed, yet he made no supplication, nor shed a tear, but cried at every stroke "Woe to Jerusalem."

At length the Romans came, and the city was shut up, still the son of Ananus strode through the death-struck streets, and flung forth his ceaseless "Woe." But now his message approached its end; and as he went his rounds upon the walls, he stopped, and with more than usual energy gave utterance to his last denunciation; "Woe to the city, and to the people, and to the Holy House. And now woe to myself." At the instant the word left his lips a huge stone from the mighty catapult smote him with a thundering sound, and dashing him to pieces, put an end to his life and his prophecy.

It appears unaccountable that a resistance so hopeless should have been prolonged to the very last extremity; but the people seemed utterly incapable of entertaining the idea of Jehovah's desertion of His city and Temple. The solemn threatenings of His prophets they had either despised or neglected, and trusted in the favor of God through their natural relationship to Abraham, though His holy name through their iniquities was blasphemed among the Gentiles. Nor were there wanting (as we have already intimated), prophets, who confirmed them in their presumptuous confidence; "false prophets who prophesied lies" in the name of Jehovah; and caused the judicially blinded people to trust in "a refuge of lies;" to the very last these were numerous in Jerusalem, who, in the lofty language and burning imagery of the inspired Scriptures, continually flung out proud denunciations of wrath about to fall upon the invader, and announced the miraculous interposition of God to save His Temple in the very moment of extremity. Alas! Alas! The builders had proudly rejected the "Chief corner-stone, Elect, Precious," on whose sure foundation they might have been established and preserved for evermore; and now the overflowing scourge was come, and was sweeping away their refuge of lies, and destroying their deceitful hiding-place, even as they had been warned long before:—"Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men that rule the people which is in Jerusalem: Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves: Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. From the time that it goeth forth it shall take you; for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night; and it shall be a vexation only to understand the report. For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it. For the Lord shall rise up as in Mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now, therefore, be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: For I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth." Isa. 28: 14-22.

In conformity with the prediction of the Lord Jesus that, of the magnificent buildings of the Temple, "not one stone should be left upon another," but should be demolished, all were destroyed with the exception of three towers in Zion, and part of the western wall, which was spared to afford a shelter to the garrison whom he intended to leave. So well did the soldiers perform their work that the city was "dug up to its foundations, so that there was left nothing to make those who came thither believe it had ever been inhabited." "Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field; and Jerusalem shall become heaps: and the mountain of the House as the high places of the forest." Micah 3: 12.

Thus fell Jerusalem, the city of the great King; and Titus having sacrificed to his senseless idols, and ascribed to them the success for which he had been raised up by the living God, and having distributed rewards and spoils in profusion to his army, departed from the desolate scene to Cæsarea, leaving the tenth legion as a garrison over the ruins. Thence he made a triumphal progress through the cities of Syria, his steps everywhere marked by the blood of the poor captive Jews, "poured out like water." For wherever the imperial savage came, thousands of prisoners were tortured in a thousand different ways; slain in cold blood; made to fight as gladiators with each other, or thrown to lions and tigers in the amphitheatres for the amusement of the populace. Such was the mercy of one, whom it had been the fashion to call Clement, the delight of the human race, etc. His apostate flatterer has done his best to hide the darker features of his character; but the facts that even he has recorded enable us to discover that, whatever he might be to others, in the fold of Judah he raved as wolf; in the heritage of God, given over into his hand, he was indeed "a beast dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly, that devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet."

We naturally feel an interest in the fate of the renowned leaders, John of Gischala, and Simon the son of Gioras. The former pressed by famine in the caverns to which he had retired, surrendered to the Romans, and was condemned to perpetual imprisonment. The latter struggled more fiercely with his fate. He took with him implements for mining, and a stock of provisions, into the caverns with his adherents, hoping to be able to excavate a passage for himself through the base of the mountain. He found this, however a hopeless task; and after the departure of Titus he suddenly appeared like a spectre rising out of the ground, clothed in a white robe over which was thrown a purple cloak. The Roman soldiery were at first awed at the apparition, but soon apprehended him, when he demanded to see their commander. On being brought before Terentius Rufus, the captain of the legion, he declared his name and quality; and was then conveyed to Cæsarea to await the pleasure of Titus. We shall not describe the pompous pageant which accompanied Vespasian and Titus on their triumphal entry into Rome. All that could aggrandize Rome and its idol demons, all that could dishonor the broken people of Israel and Jehovah, were here accumulated in a gorgeous show, which Josephus, apostate as he was, could describe without an expression of sympathy for his bleeding country, without a tear of sorrow for his trampled people, or a word of disapprobation at the insults offered to his God. Among the spoils were the golden table of the shewbread, and the seven-branched candlestick of gold that had been snatched from the sanctuary of God; and after these was carried the copy of the law, wrapped in its splendid coverings; a trophy whose preciousness, greater than that of gold or silver, they who carried it little knew how to appreciate. The unhappy son of Gioras was led in chains at the chariot wheels of the victors; he was led to the Forum, inhumanly tortured as he was dragged along, and then at length slain. Thus fell one who, whatever his crimes (and we must remember that they are warranted by one whose interest it was to blacken the portrait), at least identified the fate of Jerusalem with his own, devoted his utmost energies to her defence, and died for her sake; scorning to purchase, like his renegade biographer, his own ease and safety at the price of his national faith.

On the very spot where this cruel execution was perpetrated, a triumphal arch was erected, which has survived to this day. Among the sculptured bas-reliefs with which this "arch of Titus" is adorned, we may still trace with peculiar interest the record of the gorgeous ovation. There is the candlestick with its seven sconces, the table, the silver trumpets, and other furniture of the temple; and then marches the procession of melancholy captives, bearing aloft upon their shoulders their own most precious things. The reduction of two or three strong, but unimportant mountain fortresses in Judea, where the Jews sternly maintained their resistance to Rome, occupied two or three years more. At length all was over; and the now desolate land, once the Lord's heritage, was let out to hire as the private property of the emperor. And now let us take our stand among the deserted ruins of Jerusalem, and view the scene where the Lord "hath thrown down in his wrath the strongholds of the daughter of Judah." And in bringing before us the melancholy picture, we can not refrain from using the words of Jeremiah:

"How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary! She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks; among all her lovers she has none to comfort her; all her friends have dealt treacherously with her; they are become her enemies. Judah is gone into captivity because of affliction, and because of great servitude; she dwelleth among the heathen; she findeth no rest; all her persecutors overtook her between the straits. The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts; all her gates are desolate; her priests sigh; her virgins are afflicted; and she is in bitterness. Her adversaries are the chief; her enemies prosper; for the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions; her children are gone into captivity before the enemy, and from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed; her princes are become like harts that find no pasture, and they are gone without strength before the pursuer. How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger! The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied; he hath thrown down in his wrath the strongholds of the daughters of Judah; he hath brought them down to the ground; he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof. He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel; he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about. He hath bent his bow like an enemy; he stood with his right hand as an adversary and slew all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion; he poured out his fury like fire. The Lord was as an enemy; he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces, he hath destroyed his strongholds and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentations. And he hath valiently taken away his tabernacle as if it were of a garden; he hath destroyed his places of the assembly; the Lord hath caused the solemn feasts and Sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion and hath despised, in the indignation of his anger, the king and the priest. The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord as in the day of a solemn feast. The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion; he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying; therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together. Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars; her king and her princes are among the Gentiles; the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the Lord. The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground and keep silence; they have cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth; the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground. Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the suckling swooned in the street of the city. They say to their mothers, where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers bosom. What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, oh daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, oh virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea; who can heal thee? Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee; and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of banishment. All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their heads at the daughter of Jerusalem; saying, Is this the city that men call the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth? All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee; they hiss and gnash the teeth; they say, we have swallowed her up; certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it. The Lord hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old; he hath thrown and hath not pitied; and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee; he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries."—Lam. 1:2.
