Lamoni, Iowa, Jan. 7, 1888.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH'S MISSION TO UTAH.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH started December 27th for Utah, Idaho and California, via St. Joseph, Council Bluffs and Omaha, hoping to reach Salt Lake City before January 1st. His address while in Utah will be in care of Joseph W. Wilson, 52 South Fourth street west, Salt Lake City.

He has had many urgent calls from the west of late, but until now has not found it practicable to respond to them, and it is not at all probable he will be able during this trip to visit but a small portion of the places to which he has been invited. Of course, he may spend some time in Utah and Idaho, seeking opportunities to help the bewildered and afflicted Mormons to perceive the errors and evils into which they have fallen and point out the pathway—the only prosperous pathway—in which they may walk up and out of their difficulties. This he has sought to do for the past twenty-eight years, thousands have profited by it, and we fondly hope many thousands more may soon avail themselves of his counsels and free themselves from the tribulations which environ them.

The Lord inspired Joseph the Seer to predict in his letter to J. C. Calhoun, January 2d, 1844, (see Times and Seasons vol. 5, page 395), that his "posterity" would minister aid to the Saints in the same capacity and calling as did the Seer in his life time, for he says: "While water runs and grass grows; while virtue is lovely, and vice hateful; and while a stone points out a sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was; I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence," etc. Do the Utah Mormons know of this prediction and believe it?

In the revelation explaining the parable of the wheat and the tares, December 6th, 1832, Doctrine and Covenants 84:3, the Lord said to Joseph the Seer: "Thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God:—therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began." Do the Utah Mormons believe what God has here decreed, viz, that the priesthood of Joseph Smith the Seer "must needs remain" in the Seer and his "lineage" "according to the flesh!" If so, why do they not honor and uphold that "lineage" as they profess to honor and uphold the Seer? In harmony with these decrees the Lord commanded a "boarding house" to be built at Nauvoo "for the boarding of strangers," so that the entire time and attention of the Seer and his "seed" could be devoted to presiding ministerial duties in the church instead of spending time entertaining travelers and callers at their own home and at their own expense; and that this might be made effectual it was appointed that Joseph and his "seed" should "have place in that house from generation to generation, forever and ever," and gives reasons for this in these words,—"for this anointing have I put upon his [Joseph's] head, that his blessing [President and Prophet of the church] shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, in thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed."—Doc. Cov., revelation January 19th, 1841, sec. 107:18. These being the decrees and promises of God concerning the "lineage," "seed," and "posterity" of Joseph the Seer, why will Latter Day Saints ignore, reject, or resist the counsel and promise of God, and the ministrations of that "seed," and still follow those who have not a promise, or a permissive clause in "the law and the testimony" of God, authorizing their leadership of the church as First Presidents!

The sons of Jacob were envious and jealous of Joseph their brother, and they refused and rejected him; but God ordained that he should be their friend and deliverer. Israel refused and rejected Moses; nevertheless God made him their deliverer and presiding ruler. The Lord's ways are not man's ways, and it is very surprising that his latter day Israel have not all learned that fact ere this. But some have.

Joseph has not sought in any way to obtrude or force himself or his work on the Utah people. He has neither despised, abused, ridiculed nor in any way contemned them. Nor has he flattered or in any wise endeavored to entice or bribe them. But from the first he has sought to reach their judgment and their affections and win them away from polygamy, priestly dictation in domestic, financial and political matters, and have them return to the doctrine of Christ and his laws and usages of the Church contained in the sacred books publicly used and sanctioned by the Church in the days of Joseph the Seer. And though he has had the various factions of the Church craftily and persistently contending against him and his work, and has also had mountains of prejudice, misrepresentation and falsehood to live down and overcome, he has pressed steadily forward and won respect and favor, honor and esteem, position and prestige, at home and abroad, wherever himself and his work is known, so that he has, and has had, the confidence of all honorable well informed people as a just, sincere and honorable citizen. His work is becoming widely known abroad and is commanding the attention of the better classes of society, especially of civil rulers and progressive minds, and the outlook is full of excellent promise.

President Smith goes to Utah and the west asking only a fair and candid hearing for the cause he represents. The Utah Mormons, professing to believe in and honor his father as a man sent of God, should be the very first to seek to hear what the "seed," the "head" of Joseph's posterity has to say in these critical times. They ought to see in the steady and rapid progress of the Reorganization over and in spite of all hindrances and opposition, that there is at least a possibility if not a high probability that the hand of the Almighty is leading and shielding it and its presiding officer. And they ought also to see in their own failures, disappointments and bondage, that there is something radically wrong in their policy and work, and that such a change needs to be made as will bring them into perfect accord with the original and publicly proclaimed doctrines of the Church prior to 1844, that bringing them into harmony with the genius and laws of our nation.

Pres. Joseph Smith has the right to be heard patiently and fairly by the Utah Mormons, for the reason that he is the eldest son of Joseph Smith, the founder, organizer and first President of the church. He has the right to be heard by them for the reason that he asks them to honor and practically observe the teachings of the sacred books of the church taught by the Seer and then publicly endorsed by the General Assemblies of the church. He has the right to be heard by them because he claims to have been appointed of God through Joseph the Seer, his father, to have been anointed and set apart by prophecy and blessing under the hands of his father to be his successor in the prophetic office and presidency of the church, also to have been called of God by revelation directly to himself, and to have been received and ordained to his official station in the church upon the vote and by the direction of a General Conference held at Amboy, Illinois, April 6th, 1860. He has the right to be heard by them for the reason that he is the honored president of a large and rapidly increasing body of Latter Day Saints who, by faithful observance of the teachings of the sacred books of the church, have won "grace and favor" from the people among whom they dwell, and especially from "those in authority as civil rulers." He should be heard by them for the reason that the church under his presidency has not only been permitted, but invited, to locate permanently in those very places and vicinities where they once were persecuted and driven. He should be heard by them for the further reason that under his presidency the church has published abroad the Inspired Translation of the Bible, that which was revised, corrected and translated by his father, the Seer; and because he has been largely instrumental in bringing into safe keeping the original "Manuscript Found" of Solomon Spaulding; and because he has demonstrated to our nation and all people that genuine Mormonism could not, did not, and can not originate nor authorize, polygamy, revenge, retaliation, disloyalty, priestly domination nor priestcraft. He should be heard for the reason that under his presidency the causes which led to the persecution and mobbings of the Saints in New York, Ohio, Missouri and Illinois are being unearthed and brought to the notice of lecturers, bookmakers, newspaper men and legislators, so that "injured innocence" will be publicly vindicated, and legally redressed by and by.

For these reasons, and many more of a cognate kind, the Utah Mormons should gladly give to President Joseph Smith their pulpits, their platforms and their hearing ears, so that they may wisely "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good." And if they refuse or fail to give him such a hearing, that of itself will be good evidence that they have a "craft" and dare not have it tested by the word of God, the facts of history, and the principles of sound reason. We have only the best of wishes for the Utah Mormons; but they should not forget that "God governs among the nations" and that He rules and guides his people.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. C. J. HUNT writes us that when returning from Council Bluffs of late, the "news agent" on the train was selling books professedly exposing "Mormonism," and it occurred to Bro. Hunt that both sides of the matter ought to be heard, so he talked to the "agent" about the Book of Mormon, told him what it claimed for itself, and what those who believed in it taught. The "agent" became interested, and Bro. Hunt suggested that he procure and sell the book; to which he replied that he would and that he would send and get terms and rates.

We shall be glad indeed if such a move should become popular—and it may.

Bro. Hunt further wrote:

"All goes well with us here. The gifts of the gospel were manifest with us in prayer meeting Sunday, and the words of life were presented in power at preaching service last night."

Bro. Alex. Hale Smith wrote us from Clitherall, Minnesota, and says:

"I arrived here Saturday morning after a dreary ride all night on the cars. Yesterday, Sunday, we had a blessed good meeting at the residence of Bro. Alonzo Whiting. The Spirit was with us. At night I spoke in the School-house at Old Clitherall, the home of the Cutler faction. Am informed none of the old members attended the meeting. I am to speak to-night in the "School-house here."

IDLE MINISTERS.

COMPLAINT is made that some ministers having appointments from the last General Conference are either idle or measurably inactive, and also that some of that class are drawing support from the general church treasury while thus idle. We are not prepared to say whether this is true or not, or to what extent it may be, but we hope on further showing it will be found that there are few if any grounds for such complaints. For if there be one class above another who should be just and honorable in such matters, it is that one which undertakes to minister as ambassadors for the Lord Jesus Christ. The law of the Lord condemns all forms of idleness, and none is so reprehensible as that of ministers, for they are called to be "ensamples to the flock." Paul, speaking of the ministry in 2 Thessalonians 3: 10, says: "This we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat." In harmony with this is the law given to the Saints, Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12: "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." Again: "Let every man be diligent in all things. And the idler shall not have place in the church, except he mends his ways."—Doc. Cov. 75: 5. This applies first of all to the ministry; and no minister should be tolerated in idleness in respect to any duty devolving on him, whether in temporal or spiritual matters. All nature is full of activities, and it thereby condemns idleness. Heaven hates idleness. The church forbids it. All sensible people despise it; and all these, whether in the church or out of it, should seek to make it odious and intolerable.

No idler is fit for membership in the Church of God, and it is a shame and an outrage to permit such an one in its ministry, at home or abroad. When a man accepts ordination to the priesthood, he should consider that he does so for active duty, to work just as wisely, honestly and faithfully as though he were receiving a large and competent salary in some department of industrial life. If he does not desire to do this, he should quit the ministry; and if he will not do either, then the church should repudiate and reject him. The minister for Christ should be diligent, vigilant, faithful, seeking and striving to advance the work of the Master and his church in every proper way; and he should do this joyfully, lovingly, honorably, prayerfully, ever "looking unto Jesus" as his "Captain" and "Commander." Let the church "prove" its ministry.

"A NOTED archæologist who has been exploring the ruins of Uxmal, Yucatan, claims to have discovered the remains of three dead cities, the vestiges of the first being many feet down, on the same site. The relics indicate civilization much superior to that of the present day, and that the city must have flourished twenty thousand years ago."

The Book of Mormon explains that there were two classes of superior civilization in ancient America, the first under the Jaredites and the next under the Nephites, the latter succeeding the first by many years, building in many instances upon the ruins of the former. The wonderful statements of the Book of Mormon are being confirmed, most notably, by the oft recurring discoveries of the traveller and the antiquarian. We shall give our readers, at no distant time many most valuable extracts from the writings of eminent archeologists who treat learnedly of the antiquities of Peru, Central America, Mexico and portions of North America lying north of Mexico, all of which go to confirm the marvelous claims of the Book of Mormon and the teachings of Joseph the Seer.

[FOR the benefit of those who may feel troubled over a statement made of late by some that the church was not organized April 6th, 1830, but months before, we present the article below taken from the Evening and Morning Star, vol. 1, page 167; dated April, 1833, only three years after its organization as set forth in all the church records from the first. It is probable that the article was written by Oliver Cowdery. If not, it is evident it was written by some one who knew of the facts as stated, for no incompetent person would have been suffered to write editorials for the organ of the church.—Ed.]

RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

Having promised in our last number, something on the rise and progress of the Church of Christ, we commence with the intention of giving a relation of a few facts, as they have occurred since the church was organized in eighteen hundred and thirty. We shall be brief in this article, as we design to give from time to time the progress of this church, for the benefit of inquirers as well as the satisfaction of those who believe.

Soon after the Book of Mormon came forth, containing the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the church was organized on the sixth of April, in Manchester; soon after, a branch was established in Fayette, and the June following, another in Colesville, New York.

We shall not give, at this time, the particulars attending the organization of these branches of the church; neither shall we publish in this, the account of the persecution of those who were then called and authorized to preach the everlasting gospel. Twenty more were added to the church in Manchester and Fayette, in the month of April; and on the 28th of June, thirteen were baptized in Colesville: and of these we can say as Paul said of the five hundred who saw the Savior after he had risen from the dead: The greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. In October, (1830) the number of disciples had increased to between seventy and eighty, when four of the elders started for the west, and founded a branch of the church at Kirtland, Ohio, around which many have since arisen.

These first four, having added one to their number, proceeded to the west, after having baptized one hundred and thirty disciples in less than four weeks and ordained four of them elders, and finally stopped in the western bounds of the state of Missouri, having been preserved by the hand of the Lord, and directed by his Spirit.

In the winter, (1831) the church in the state of New York, after a commandment had been received from the Lord, began to prepare to remove to the state of Ohio. The following is a part of the revelation referred to above: "And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people without spot and blameless: wherefore for this cause I gave unto you the commandment that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law, and there you shall be endowed with power from on high, and from thence, whomsoever I will shall go forth unto all nations, and it shall be told them what they shall do, for I have a great work laid up in store: for Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them whithersoever I will, and no power shall stay my hand."

In the spring the greater part of the disciples who were in New York, removed to the Ohio. In June, the word having been preached in many places and hundreds having been baptized, a number of the elders, by the commandment of the Lord, journeyed west, proclaiming the gospel and bearing testimony of the work of the Lord in these last days; saying none other things than that which the prophets and apostle had written, and that which was taught them by the Comforter, by the prayer of faith, as the Lord had said. Many gladly received the word and were baptized, so that branches of the church were built up in many places, notwithstanding the opposition with which the elders were often met.

Indeed we have the testimony before our eyes of the faithfulness with which they discharged their duty in publishing salvation to their fellow men.—Many have already come up to the land of Zion who were fruits of their labors; and by what we can learn from time to time, we are re-mindful of the parable of the seed, for we are certain that much of it has fallen on good ground: and we are sure, having the testimony in our hearts, that those faithful elders, although often fatigued and wearied with the length of their journey, will at the last day receive a crown of eternal life, and joy unspeakable in the everlasting kingdom of God and the Lamb, with those that they were the means of turning from darkness to light. And while reflecting on this subject, a few words from Daniel seems to be applicable: "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." For the word of the Lord to them has thus far been verified, which says: "Let them go two by two, and thus let them preach by the way in every congregation, baptizing by water, and the laying on of the hands by the water's edge: for thus saith the Lord, I will cut my work short in righteousness: for the days cometh that I will send forth judgment unto victory."

In July they began to arrive in the western boundaries of Missouri, and shortly after a branch of the church from Colesville, New York, came on by water, and thus the gathering commenced.

From this time, the progress of the church though gradual, has been more than many of great faith had anticipated. Many churches have been built up in different states, and some hundreds of members have come up to this land, and are striving to keep the commandments of the Lord, that they may be prepared, whether in life or in death, to meet him when he comes in his glory with all his holy angels.

It may be proper to say, as we have often said before, and this church is taught by the revelations of the Lord, in all things, as they have been received from time to time from the days of Adam, until now. And it is really a matter of joy to see how fast the work of the gathering is continuing amid the discouragements, persecutions, and false statements of the world.

It has been reported that the church had settled in this country, and were living as one family. This is not so.

The faith of the church has greatly increased in these first three years of its existence, in these last days. Much is said at home and abroad about Mormonites, as the world has seen fit to call the disciples of Jesus Christ, but wherever the gospel has been truly set forth; wherever the Book of Mormon has been fully explained and understood, and wherever men have listened with unprejudiced minds to learn the truth for the purpose of escaping the desolations and calamities which are already abroad in the earth, there the Lord has borne record of his own work by his Spirit.

While the gifts in many instances have been manifested beyond doubt, in healing the sick, &c., some have doubted and some have believed, as in the days of the apostles; and even from the beginning this has been the case more or less, and will be till Satan is bound.

We promised to correct as many falsehoods as we could, that were in circulation. In this article we have commenced, but upon looking at some of the late misrepresentations that have found their way to the public, we think the best method will be for us to continue an account of the rise and progress of the church, and publish the truth as we have done; for, of all the statements that have been published in the newspapers of the day concerning this church, not one has reached us but what in a greater or less degree was untrue; and what adds more to our astonishment is, that these publications came from those who profess the religion of Christ. By this however we do not intend to cast any reflections, for we remember the example of our Lord, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again.

The progress of the church has been great, and while we witness the spread of the work, knowing it is of God, we are willing to give the world all the light we can that will lead them to salvation.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

AUTUMN LEAVES for January, 1888, has been kindly placed upon our table, and we greet it cordially, with best wishes, bidding it good speed, long life and wide circulation. We discover that one mistake has been made already, and that is, that five hundred or one thousand more copies of the first number had not been issued, for we feel confident all would have been called for before the close of the first volume. We learn that orders are coming in now so rapidly as to make it next to certain that all of the January number will be exhausted within the next few weeks. The magazine starts out finely, and we have no doubt it will steadily grow in favor and value. The editor, Sr. M. Walker, requests us to say that, because some parties living in cities have failed to send their street numbers—though having their names—copies have not been sent them; and further, that none have been withheld because of non-payment, and that the second number will not be withheld, provided parties write the editor that they will remit soon, but that in case of neither remittance or notification coming, the second number will not be sent.

Pres. Joseph Smith intended to leave Omaha, December 29th, for Salt Lake City.

By letters received from Bro. T. W. Smith (and others), we learn that himself and Sr. Smith left Tahiti for Hastings, Victoria, Australia, November 4th. This will be their address until further notice.

In the "Home Column," this issue, will be found a letter from a Mrs. Lizzie Emery, of Sutton, Nebraska, who is a believer; but not baptized yet. She desires a faithful minister to come there and labor. Those in charge of that field will please take notice and supply the call.

Bro. Charles Sheen, of Highmore, Hyde county, Dakota, sends us the Hyde county Bulletin, published at Highmore, in which is a flattering notice of Pres. Smith's Temperance effort at Des Moines. Thank you, Bro. Sheen.

Bro. John Hawley wrote us from Columbus, Kansas, December 19th, that he was preaching seven miles south of there, had found three openings already for gospel labor, and at one place had encountered some prejudice, which he hoped to overcome.

Bro. J. C. Foss has "crowded houses" at Underwood, near Council Bluffs, Iowa; and says further in his letter of December 19th: "I baptized four more yesterday, making nine in all at this place."

Bro. Abednego Johns wrote us December 13th from Carson City, Nevada, and said: "I baptized a young lady a few days ago, at this place. I had previously baptized her mother, grandmother, and also her two aunts."

Bro. Thomas M. Parr writes that he now intends to remain in the city till next spring. His address is 1417 Twentieth Avenue, North Minneapolis, Minnesota.

We are in receipt of a very pleasant letter from Bro. A. McKenzie, of Merlin, Ontario, but like many others it is crowded out. He is in fine spirits, says "the work is onward" in that region, and that he hopes to engage in preaching the word as opportunity shall offer. A gentleman had assured him of late that the Book of Mormon "was written by a lawyer down east." Well—What next?

By a letter from Bro. R. M. Elvin dated Salt Lake City, December 19th, we learn he arrived there the 16th, met Bro. R. J. Anthony the 17th, preached twice the 18th to attentive but not large congregations, and intends to be on the alert to tell the good news and built up the cause of Christ.

Pres. Joseph Smith will receive and receipt for moneys on subscription for all the church papers, books, and other publications. This may prove a matter of convenience to many of our patrons during his trip west.

Bro. Duncan Campbell wrote December 26th: "I am feeling splendid over the prospects of the work in my field." [Decatur county, Iowa, and Mercer county, Missouri.—ED.]

Bro. S. Evison wrote us from Wyandotte, Michigan, of late that, if possible he would have a place for the elders to preach there, though he is alone in the place.

Bro. V. D. Baggerly writes that the late conference at Derby, Perry county, Indiana, was a very good one, and that the meetings there and in its vicinity were largely attended with attentive hearers. He fully endorses the sensible idea that the ministry should preach the gospel and that which is immediately connected with it, and have nothing to do with speculation and vain theorizing, but study the written word and all good books and strive to become workmen approved of God. On the 10th of December they organized the Hope branch, and he thinks many are near the Kingdom there. On the 17th of December he reached Birds Eye, began meetings, and on the 19th baptized four. He was to visit a new place the Saturday afterwards, having for a traveling companion Bro. C. Barmore.

BRO. A. N. HOXIE of Boston, Massachusetts, sends us the following clipping which serves to show how advanced and independent thinkers are drifting away from the creeds of iron-clad Orthodoxy and are feeling their way after what is rational and Godlike:

"ORTHODOXY THEN AND NOW.

"Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost of Newark, N. J., appears to possess the courage of his convictions. This is a virtue none too common in these times.

"Mr. Pentecost was pastor of what is sometimes called a 'fashionable church.' He became an ardent disciple of Henry George. He was the labor candidate for mayor of Newark. He even said some things which seemed very like a defence of the Chicago Anarchists. All this caused some dissatisfaction in his church. Although on a vote the church sustained the pastor, he resigned, not merely from that particular parish, but from the whole Christian religion as taught by the evangelical churches. He gave up a comfortable situation and salary, and is entitled to whatever credit attaches to the sacrifice. If he has ceased, as he says, to believe in "Orthodox Christianity," then his resignation was eminently proper; and unless his congregation has become a congregation of unbelievers, it would seem proper for them to accept it. But they have not accepted it. By a membership vote of 60 to 32, and by a society vote of 109 to 26, Mr. Pentecost is now invited to remain as pastor of this "orthodox church," even after he had declared his disbelief in "Orthodox Christianity!" To his credit be it said that he has declined to serve on any terms.

"How strange all this seems when viewed from the standpoint of old New England orthodoxy! How Calvin would groan if he could know of it! How those shining lamps of orthodoxy of the last century—Jonathan Edwards and the elder Aaron Burr—would have been shocked at the action of the Newark church! Why, it was almost on that very spot in Newark that both President Burr and President Edwards preached Calvinistic orthodoxy straight, and taught it to the youth of the land! What would they say could they know that in their own Newark an "orthodox church" insists upon retaining a minister who flatly repudiates the orthodox theology!

"All of which leads to the reflection that some things in this world are not as they used to be."—Boston Globe.

THE letter below will be read with interest and, we trust, with profit.

"CARSON CITY, Nevada, Dec. 13th.

"Editors Herald.—Last winter when our legislature was in session here, an elder was called there, and they had us as a people before the legislature with a view to prevent us from voting. They gave him several questions to answer, but he failed to give them satisfaction. When he left the Capitol they were very dissatisfied with him. Lawyer Coffin was present, and he said he knew a man who was not a crank, and that he would state the truth. When he named the man others said they knew him, and that he would tell the truth, and they requested Mr. Coffin to hire a livery team and go and see that man and bring his statements before the legislature on the morrow. He came to my house and asked me several questions. I answered them, informed them of the first organization of the church and how it was disorganized, and that when it was in a disorganized state Brigham Young and others took the responsibility upon themselves of leading the people to the Rocky mountains, where, it is charged, they committed gross crimes, such as robbery, polygamy, and whoredom, and that affairs remained in that situation until the church was reorganized under the presidency of Joseph Smith the son of the Martyr, who sent ministers there to show the Brighamites their abominations and gross evils; and I showed them further that we of the Reorganization were everywhere accepted as lawful citizens of the United States.

"ABEDNEGO JOHNS."

There are not a few Utah Mormons in eastern Nevada—especially in the south-east corner of the state—and we have been aware that the people of Nevada, generally, have regarded them with disfavor because—mainly—that they either practiced or advocated polygamy, and other evils, or aided, abetted and upheld those who did. And the movement in the Nevada legislature of which Bro. Johns writes was probably to deprive that class of the rights of American citizens. This the Idaho legislature did to a large degree two years ago, and it is only a question of time when similar treatment will be given to that class in other localities. We are pleased to learn that Bro. Johns gave the Nevada lawmakers needed information in respect to the good citizenship of the members of the Reorganization. The latter have suffered reproach, shame and loss by being classed with the Utah Mormons; but many people, including Federal authorities, are now aware that Brighamism is no more like the Reorganization than was the church in the dark ages like that of the times of Christ and his apostles.

THE following we take from the Salt Lake Tribune of December 21st and 22d. We trust brethren Anthony and Elvin may have a fair hearing; and if they do, good results will follow, for they are excellent, faithful and spiritual ministers of the word:

"ELDER ANTHONY AT THE JOSEPHITE CHAPEL.

Elder R. J. Anthony, in his sermon Tuesday evening, in a very comprehensive and logical manner presented the work done, and now being done by the Reorganization. From Zeph. 3:19, was presented the scattering of the church from Nauvoo, and that shame had covered the fair name of the Latter-Day-Saints, and that it was there the church lost its prophet and president, and that God withdrew His Spirit from the people, and that confusion and separation ensued, followed by sin, shame and crime, until the name of Saint or Mormon was a reproach in the land. But right at Nauvoo, Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet, took up the work of his father, and that with fealty to the laws of the Government and the doctrine of original Mormonism, as taught during the first fourteen years of the church, the name was now made honorable, and hundreds of the old-time Saints, who had halted on the way, as the major part of the church fled to the fastnesses of the mountains, had, and were taking up anew their work in the church, and wherever they lived up to the doctrine and principles of the Reorganization, God kept good the promise: 'I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame.' There is no reason why the people of Utah should not be in possession of all the rights, privileges and blessings of American citizens, if they will but conform to the laws of the Nation, and nothing in original Mormonism prevents such a condition."

"WEDNESDAY EVENING'S JOSEPHITE SERVICE.

"Wednesday evening Elder R. M. Elvin, in an impressive and emphatic appeal to the words of Scripture, urged that the truth set forth in his text, Isaiah 55: 11, was true in all ages and climes, and would ever remain true. He quoted from the revelations of July, 1829, 'The works and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths.' If men are in hiding, it is not on account of keeping the law of God, but it is those who 'set at naught the counsels of God, and follow after the dictates of his own will and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him.' These being the words of God they must be fulfilled, and there can be no escape for the transgressor. The speaker cited the revelation of September, 1832, 'And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do, according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, nay.' The above is as true as Bible, and the people of Utah have to blame no one but their own neglect of God's word for all their suffering and shame, and there will be no rest or let up, until they comply with the law and repent. The next nail drove in a sure place was the revelation of December, 1832, to Joseph Smith: 'Thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God:—Therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.'

"This forever shuts out all possibility of Brigham Young, John Taylor, or Wilford Woodruff standing as the President or Prophet to the church; all such claims are mere assumption, and without the color of authority in the revelations to the church. Proofs were also adduced from Times and Seasons. There is a growing interest at these meetings, and evidently method in presenting the arguments for the truth as against wrong; still, there is kindness and love united with firmness.

It is said that "brevity is the soul of wit;" and it may be, also, the soul of some other thing; the prayer in the following clipping from the Council Bluffs, Iowa, Nonpareil, for instance:

"Hon. Frank Shinn, who was republican nominee for state senator in this district, is the son of Rev. Shinn, who made the famous prayer in the Iowa legislature in the early days when that body convened at Iowa City. At that time the issues of this state were federal money against wild cat banks and prohibition. Rev. Shinn was called upon to open the house with prayer one morning, and did so in the following words: 'O God bless the young and growing state of Iowa. Bless her representatives, senators and chief officers. Give us a sound currency, pure water and an undefiled religion, for Christ's sake, amen.' It has been many years since the prayer was offered, and yet for its conciseness, pungency and power it has never been equalled by a public prayer since."

And no man measures in advance
His strength with untried circumstance."

THE PASSING YEAR.

SUMMING up briefly the Christianity which had an existence at the time when the gospel was restored, we find it thus: Prophets, apostles and lastly the Son of his bosom, had declared to the world that God was a God of love, justice, mercy, truth and power; but while they declared him thus, Christianity (?) was holding up to the world a being receiving honors and glory through the writhing tortures of babes—babes whom the Master had taken in his arms and blessed, declaring, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven"—babes not knowing good from evil, neither the right hand from the left—babes in helpless infancy—babes unborn, whose pure eyes never yet had opened upon a sin-blighted world, much less been defiled by the voluntary choice of evil or the rejection of good. To the same torture it was representing all men as being alike condemned who bowed not the knee to this sovereign God; this God demanding of his creatures to honor justice while he himself was represented as a very fiend of remorseless cruelty, compared with whom the crocodiles of the Nile were angels of mercy.

Christianity! O, thou Lamb of God who takest away the sins of the world, how didst thou in thy patient, long suffering love endure to hear thy Father so represented! We wonder that the tongue uttering such blasphemies did not cleave to the roof of the mouth, or canker and burn with the falsehoods to which it gave utterance!

Thus much for the justice, mercy and love of God as held up to the world by teachers who had taken upon themselves to declare the words of life and salvation—teachers whom God had never sent; nor do we find their teachings of his truth and power one whit behind in gross misrepresentation.

God in his word declares that he will not be mocked; that whatsoever a man sows that also shall he reap. Truth, virtue, honor, uprightness, and integrity, according to these gospel teachers possess no intrinsic virtue in themselves, but those who practice them will share the same fate as those who riot in wickedness and wallow in every sensual filth which bad men and devils have been able to invent. Even the thief on the cross is a standing rebuke to such doctrine as this, for he recognized the fact that they were receiving their punishment justly, but Jesus had done nothing worthy of so terrible a fate. Infidels!—the only wonder is that the whole world did not turn to infidelity in seeking relief from a picture like this; and, but that God in his tender mercy had not left himself without witnesses in the world—reserved to himself, as in days of old, some thousands who had never bowed the knee to this worse than Baal—who can say what results would have followed such wholesale corruption of the word of God by the self-appointed guardians thereof?

Jesus commanded his disciples to go into all the world and promised to confirm his gospel with signs following the believers, but we hear nothing of this from the "Christianity" with the steps of which Mormonism is not keeping pace; and when infidelity charges upon Christ that he promised to his disciples power which he could not or did not confer upon them, these self-constituted teachers, wise in their resources of evasion, would persuade the people that they were only a temporary arrangement, not intended to continue; but Christ said he would be with them even unto the end of the world.

"Not keeping pace with the steps of Christianity!" Three hundred years from the beginning of the reformation and the Christianity referred to above was what we have represented it. Not only this, but the creeds of man had multiplied to almost infinite numbers, and much time of both ministry and membership was occupied in contending one with the other for the prominence of these man-made creeds. Into the midst of this darkness and chaos came the angel of the Apocalypse, the angel Moroni, "having the everlasting gospel to preach." Then God sent to earth yet other messengers to confer the authority of his kingdom upon those men whom he had chosen to bear the glad tidings of salvation to the ends of the earth; and now mark well the change. One half a century has rolled away since that time, and where do we find the Christianity with the steps of which Mormonism is not keeping pace?

When God restored his gospel there was not needed as at the beginning a council in heaven to devise ways and means, for it was the same everlasting gospel, the plan ordained in the beginning for the salvation of man, the same contained in the law and witnessed of by the testimony; and, as of old, the commandment was, "Go ye and preach my gospel and I will confirm your words with signs following." Endowed with power from on high men went forth; men who never had heard the name theology, much less had learned it as a system; and these, taking the word of God as the man of their counsel and the testimony of his Holy Spirit as their teacher, declared to the world in such plainness and power, that not one of the self-constituted teachers of Christianity were able to stand before them; but God verified his promise in every instance, and confirmed the word spoken by signs following. With giant strides what you are pleased to call Mormonism came forth and broke upon the world with a flood of light and truth so vast, so grand, that modern Christianity could do nothing but shut her eyes and stop her ears and cry, "Delusion! delusion!" And not until nearly half a century had passed did she dare open them, when, lo, she finds the world fast outstripping her, pressing her upon every side, and one after one compelling her to renounce her doctrines of men—her creeds which are an abomination in the sight of God—and flee for defense and protection to the doctrines boldly enunciated by the man inspired of God, when but a young and ignorant boy, over fifty years ago.

"Not keeping pace with the steps of modern Christianity?" Truly not; for so far did she outstrip her in the race, that, had she been true to her trust, there would not to-day have been left of man-made creeds a shred flimsy as the web of a spider for their poor deluded followers to hang a hope upon. To the pure gospel of the Son of God, called by you "Mormonism," the world has yet to come for the solution of these problems which are now undermining the social fabric of governments, and shaking the tottering thrones of Europe.

One other retrospective glance, and turn we to the new year with hope renewed, with faith increased, and a trust firm as the rock of ages in the final outcome of this great work. Where is there to be found upon the pages of modern history such a triumph of the power of the gospel as in the history of Mormonism? Called into existence in a day when, in order that the scriptures might be fulfilled, an apostacy must take place, how brief was her career before the leaven of evil began to work and the depths of darkness into which the church was led could only be measured by the glory of the light she had before received. For a time dismay and grief filled every heart, and the church was scattered as sheep without a shepherd while the chastening hand of God lay heavily upon them. The very air vibrated with the odium attached to the name, and under this, covered with the rubbish of men's wrong actions, was the oft wounded truth of heaven. Forsake it I can not, forsake it I will not, was the cry of every honest heart who loved the truth of God; and from that hour began the herculean task of undoing slowly, hour by hour, day by day, oft in pain and weariness, in trial and temptation, surrounded by discouragements upon every hand, the great evil which had been done. If ever a people have realized how hard a matter it is to live down the evil wrought by sin, then the Reorganized Church are to day that people. Whenever her elders have gone, they have been compelled to first live down the prejudices of the people before a hearing could be obtained. Not discouraged, but putting their trust in God they have labored on. Step by step they have contested every inch of ground, until prejudice has been compelled to yield; and to day an army of faithful elders twice the size of the one we have, could not fill half the calls for preaching the word. In the midst of our enemies' country, this shattered and broken army of the Lord has never turned a back upon the foe, but faithful to her trust has steadily gathered up her scattered troops, put them in battle array, and, though opposed by foes without and within, now presents an unbroken line of veteran warriors whose lights are shining and their faces turned Zionward! Her waste places are being built up, and from the willows her children have taken their harps, for the Lord is comforting his people.

The year opens gladly before us, and again we say, Press close to the reapers, gather up your sheaves, for soon will fall upon our ears the glad cry of "Harvest Home." God has so ordered it that the very men who to-day stand before the eyes of an admiring world, honored for their broad liberality, looked upon as reformers, and who count their followers by the thousands and hundreds of thousands, imbibed from the teachings of Joseph Smith their best lessons of the character and attributes of God. Challenged by us they probably would not admit the fact; but it is none the less true, and we ourselves are knowing to the fact of more than one minister teaching in his congregation what he had learned from the fireside chat of Latter Day Saints, and in one instance were knowing to a minister being dismissed by his congregation, because he preached too much bible and at the time we (better than the congregation) knew where, "the too much bible" had come from.

Whence come the conventions now assembling to consider the second coming of our blessed Lord and Master? We answer, boldly, from the restored gospel of the Son of God as taught by the people the world are pleased to call Mormons. Whence comes the wide spread interest in God's ancient, covenant people, the house of Israel? Again we answer, from the restored gospel. Whence comes this wide spread indignation arising from a sense of outraged justice in regard to that soul-degrading, heaven-falsifying doctrine of election and reprobation? Once again we answer, from the same source. Men taught in secret by what you term Mormonism, are publicly declaring her teachings from the pulpit, and thus the leaven is working and will work until the whole lump is leavened; and when this is so, the world, to their utter astonishment, will find that in the race for eternal life they have just caught up with Mormonism, or with the pure unadulterated gospel of the Son of God. "O, blind and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have written!"

Sisters, let us come bravely up to the help of our noble, valiant band of reapers! Let us by self-denial strengthen their hands, that our hearts too may throb for joy when the cry of "Harvest Home" shall be heard."

ERRATA.—In Herald of December 17th, Abbie Truman, Gilmore, Iowa, should read, Abbie Freeman.

LAMONT, IOWA, December 28th.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Mary A. Light, Woodbine, Nebraska, writes:—"There are no Latter Day Saints in this part of Nebraska that I know of; but should this meet the eye of any near here, I should be glad to hear from them, as it is lonely having none of my own faith. Should any of the elders pass this way they will find a warm welcome."

Sister Mary J. Price, Beattie, Kansas, writes:—"I feel much pleased to hear of the Lord blessing his people, and I can testify that this is the only true Church of Christ. There are no Saints living near here but my sister and myself. We would be much pleased to have an elder come here; and believe that good could be done, as the gospel has never been preached here."

Sister Hannah, of Riverside, California, writes: "I feel impressed to say a little more upon the subject of training children. Do not let it seem like an old story to you, mothers, when I entreat you to establish the habit of obedience in your children from the very beginning. I have had six children. Three have passed over the flood; the last to go was a promising boy, our only son and one around whom our heart strings twined in tender love. My father told me that he was taken from me because I had the Book of Mormon in my house, for it was a very wicked book. I have had many trials and much opposition, but my faith is firm in God and his work, and I can safely trust my little ones to his keeping. There was a young man who once lived with us, who was addicted to strong drink, and when striving to break away from its influence he would curse his parents for not having taught him obedience when a boy. He struggled hard but became a wreck and finally tried to commit suicide. What a volume of instruction to parents on the wrong they do their children when failing to require obedience at their hands!"

Sister Amanda C. Rigsby, Dow City, Iowa, writes:—"My husband and myself both belong to the church. We have one little boy almost three years old, who can neither walk nor talk. We have had the promise that if we are faithful he shall be healed; and we ask the Saints to pray for him, that he may be made whole, and become a blessing to us and to the church."

Sister S. E. Church, Lamoni, Iowa, in sending in her birthday offering writes:—"If every sister in the church, both old and young, would send in their offering, even if it be at a sacrifice of some useless ornament, I feel that they would receive a blessing by helping to bless others."

"Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean
And the beautiful land."

Sister S. J. Butler, Luctor, Kansas, wishing to add her testimony to the work says:—"I need only use the words of Christ to his disciples, 'It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of the Father which speaketh in you', and by this Spirit I can bear testimony to the work."

Sister Mary Deil Kuykendall, Brossville, Texas, writes:—"Though living fifteen miles from the branch to which I belong, I can testify that God's Spirit is not confined to branches or to places where large numbers of his Saints enjoy the privilege of meeting together, but his gifts are for all the faithful. The Herald brings solid comfort to our hungry souls. Seven have been baptized into the Oakwood branch, in the last few weeks; others have united by letter, and we feel that more are to follow. Where are 'Aunt Patience' and Sister M. J. Head? We would be glad to hear from them again. We so much enjoyed sister Burton's last; was very comforting."

SUTTON, Neb., Nov. 18th.

Dear Mrs. Walker:—I am not a member of the Latter Day Saints, but my mother, Nancy P. K. Penick, was a true Saint until her death, which occurred November 11th, 1878. She was first baptized into the church in 1835; endured all of the persecutions of Missouri, and was rebaptized in 1861. She had many testimonies which proved to her that hers was the true Church of Christ. One of her many good traits of character was that she always did good for evil. I am in hopes that some of the elders will come here soon, for if true repentance and sincere belief prepares one for baptism I am prepared.

I close by asking the prayers of all of the sisters in behalf of my family, that they may enter the kingdom before it is too late.

Yours in the faith,

LIZZIE EMERY.

Correspondence.

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 26th.

Dear Herald:—When I last wrote I was at home, where I remained for a little more than two weeks, including three Sunday's. The first Sunday I spoke at Lamoni; the second commenced a series of meetings three miles from Lamoni, at the Lott School-house which lasted a little more than a week. The Saints of Lamoni kindly assisted me in these meetings, and good was done. Left home again November 23d, and was gone just a month. Attended the Far West District Conference at St. Joseph, Missouri, where we had an excellent time. Elder L. D. Hickey was present, affording us another opportunity to learn. "Knowledge is power." May the good Lord give to him, as well as to all others, the blessing he most needs.

I spoke December 2d, at Stewartsville to a small congregation; and December 4th, spoke twice in St. Joseph. Truly, the Spirit of the Lord was with us.

Monday, December 5th, went to Kingston, Caldwell county, Missouri, where I joined Brn. Kinnaman and Bronson who had preceded me. I remained there over two weeks, speaking thirteen times. Bro. Bronson was not with us the last week, as he had other demands to meet. Bro. Kinnaman remained to the last, laboring for the good of the cause. Through the labors of Brn. Bronson and Kinnaman an excellent impression had been made at this place. Our meetings were good and well attended, considering the weather, roads, etc. Bro. John Wright and wife were received on their original baptism. They had been connected with the Christian Church for some fourteen years, but were not satisfied with the faith and teachings of that people. According to their own testimony, (and no one who knows them can doubt their word), they never gave up any part of their original faith. They were baptized in England, in 1842. Bro. Wright has served two terms, I believe, as Probate Judge in Caldwell county, and he has made a record of which he is justly proud. The Christian Church hated to lose him. Why is it, if the Latter Day Saints are such bad people, that other churches are so glad to get them, when they can, and so loth to let them go?

The old Far West and Center prairie branches were dissolved and organized into one new branch at Kingston. We hope that a number will yet come into the church at that place.

Yours in hope,

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

UNDERWOOD, Iowa, Dec. 20th.

Brn. Joseph and William:—We are having crowded houses. On Sunday, the 18th, I baptized four, making nine since I came. Others are talking about obeying. There is a good class of people around here. Sister Bradfield is much encouraged, as she looks for a fulfillment of a statement made by Bro. Blair, once, that "many in this country would obey the gospel." The branch met last night and voted to hold regular meetings in Underwood every Sunday; and that they organize a Sunday school on Sunday next. Some are talking about building a church in this place. Mr. Fisher, a merchant, told me last night that every person about here would give something. We hope for a building.

J. C. FOSS.

FIVE LAKES, Dec. 22d.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have been laboring here in Five Lakes, Lapeer county, for the last two weeks; have baptized two and several more are ready for the water. I start to-morrow for Genesee county to make a new opening. There are more places where they want preaching than can be filled. Hope to be able to reach all if I can. The Lord has blessed me well in my labors; have baptized upwards of sixty since last April conference. Hope to be faithful unto the end.

Yours truly,

J. A. CARPENTER.

Brown City, Michigan.

No. 99 Hinsdale St., East New York, BROOKLYN, Dec. 21st.

Dear Brother:—The work is on the improve in this place. Brother Potts has been putting forth an effort to spread the gospel. Some few came to hear, and I expect by and by that some will obey. We have been very much cheered and strengthened by a visit from Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths. We are hoping for a good time in the near future in Brooklyn. We should like to see Bro. E. C. Briggs and Bro. Bond, from the east; and hope they will call on us as they go west to the General Conference. Our district conference will be held in the latter part of February, 1888. We will give due notice in the Herald, when and where it will be held.

If there should be any of the traveling ministry passing this way, and they will call on us we shall be pleased to see them. We have been very much cheered with the good news in the Herald of late; it is truly encouraging to all of us; and we have no doubt as to its final triumph for truth.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JOSEPH SQUIRE, Sen.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Dec. 26th.

Editors Herald:—As a closing of the work of the year it may be of interest to briefly refer to a few things that have claimed my attention since last writing. August 27th, 28th, and 29th, I was in conference with the Saints of the South-Eastern Ohio district, held at Vale's Mills. There was a good representation of the district in attendance, with a large number of outsiders. The Bishop was present, also, and although feeling quite unwell, he stood to his post. Close and respectful attention was paid by the large number of outsiders who were present at the preaching services, to what was said. Sunday's services were held in the grove, the weather was fine and vast numbers improved the opportunity, out of interest and pleasure, to attend the meetings. A good many are impressed with the consistency and truthfulness of the position occupied by the Saints, but that old sectarian "black death" of opinion which prevails, that somehow or other anything and everything will do for a religious faith, and a church, that it is difficult to educate the people out of this monstrous absurdity which has been infused into them by blind guides from their infancy. It is literally painful, and distressing at times, to note the slow and tardy movement of the people out of this dense wilderness of blindness into which sectarianism, with its methods, drill, infidelity and constant impressions has precipitated them. With them there is but little difference between God's church and man's church; and that a lie, if it is only believed and stuck to, will have the same effect in the end as the truth. No wonder the devil laughs, and the truth moves slowly. Some progress is being made, however, and there are witnesses for the truth. There is an outside fusillading going on in order to dampen the ardor of the faithful, and to hold fast and keep control of their old supporters upon whom they depend for their "bread and butter;" but they are very shy about coming into close quarters with the defenders of the faith. The old tactics succeeds best—"don't go and hear!"

The ministry, whose names are now familiar, are doing well in supporting the cause. Brn. Devore, Beattie and Matthews being constant laborers. Bro. Kirkendall was ordained to the office of an elder, and is standing for the cause, together with his father, mother, and wife, at Creola. They with Bro. Perry and family, Mr. Vales' with others, manifested an appreciable interest in our welfare. Thanks.

Sept. 10th and 11th, I was with the Clear Lake and Cold Water Saints, at a two-days meeting in Quincy, Michigan. Brn. B. V. Springer, Columbus and Leonard Scott was also present. We appreciated the warm welcome extended to us by the Saints and friends of that place on our return. May God bless and cheer them in their labors. We noted with pleasure the growing interest in the faith there, and that the old standard-bearers are still proud of the flag of truth. "Hold the fort!" Bro. C. Scott was aided to make some very fine, not to say matchless efforts from the stand; and Bro. Leonard captured the crowd in the afternoon.

Sunday the 18th, I was pleasantly cared for at Bro. and Sr. Spafford's, at Dimondale, Michigan. I met a number of Saints there during the day. Some very unsavory leaven has been at work here for some time, and it was necessary to put the forces in operation to ferret it out. I visited Bro. Horton at Williamston, and the Saints at Webberville. Sister Billinsky, Moon, and others, are doing what they can in the cause at the latter place. Bro. H. Rathbun, of Lansing, had been very busy at home during the summer. His wife was ailing and Sister Laura was cheerfully engaged in the part chosen by "Martha." I baptized two very worthy ladies, advanced in years, at Dimondale. It was through the labors of sister Supry more than any others, however, that these were brought in. Sister Supry zealously advocates the cause wherever she goes. Sisters, if they will, can do much good, even if they are not ordained ministers. Might just as well say they may preach, for they will do it any way, if it is not enjoined upon them by authority and commandment.

October the 22d I met in conference the Saints of Northern Indiana and Michigan district. A good representation of the district was present. Everything seemed to conspire to make this a most profitable and enjoyable meeting. It was a general feast for both Saints and many outsiders. The weather was fine, every face cheerful and heart glad. The good Spirit was present to animate, enlighten, confirm and direct. It was pleasant to pray, pleasant to converse, pleasant to be together, and everything went well. The devil has made Galien a main attack for a year or more, but the Saints and the right prevail, and the fort is ours. We had the pleasure of boarding with the Bishop during the session; he and his seemed to be happy; and if it was on that account, or had the least to do with it, then we are glad. Thanks.

Bro. Francis Earl, B. V. Springer and self did the preaching, and who is going to say that it was not straight! Bro. John Shook is up on Mount Pisgah at Buchanan, viewing the Amalekites in the valley. He is an army in himself, and is perseveringly preaching the truth. When sound doctrine and verbal speech fails to convince, he administers "tracts," or "extracts," either or both to suit, and goes on his way,—any way to do the most good and create an interest for the right.

Saturday the 29th, I attended the conference of the Northern Michigan district, held at Bay Port. Their new church building, 30x50, under way to completion, was crowded with interested workers and enquirers. The "cold snap" of weather that came on just then rendered the room uncomfortable, but with yankee tact, a purse was raised, a new stove was bought, which met the present needs. It was a pleasure to see so many young people becoming interested and taking hold of the faith, as well as the old and worthy people. Bay Port is taken. The Methodist and Baptist ministers have left. A Baptist lady is sad. She is afraid the great change of sentiment in the community will produce a depression in real estate and she will be compelled to sell her farm at a sacrifice! But the work goes on, and the interest widens. There was a large number of familiar faces present at the conference, and a still larger number that were strange. The early prayer meeting was in charge of Bro. John Shippy and Robert Davis. At eleven a. m., Bro. J. J. Cornish arrived in fine trim and looking his best. The writer occupied an hour before noon. The afternoon was devoted to business. Good order and a proper interest prevailed throughout. Bro. E. Delong and L. Phelps occupied the stand in the evening. Sunday was a grand ovation of social life, song, prayer and preaching. Bro. Cornish made a fine effort in the afternoon. He is experienced and at home on the rostrum.

At the close of the afternoon service he baptized ten in the lake. Eleven were confirmed at the evening meeting, and Bro. W. Davis was ordained an elder. He is well recommended, is zealous and promising. A number of young men and ladies there bid fair to become useful in the cause.

Among the old associates was Brn. Sirbrook, Pearson, Barr, Brintnell, Birch, Martindale, Hines, Joseph Shippy and others, whose names I do not now recall. The only mistake in the programme was that the meeting closed one day too early. Bro. Phelps remained to carry on the meetings. The writer is under obligations to Bro. and Sr. Taylor and others there for special care. Thanks. Altogether the outlook is a promising one for the cause in that vicinity, and elsewhere in the district. A more thorough acquaintance with the facts of the faith is one thing needful; but if faithful and diligent all who apply themselves will gain in this respect.

On my return I met with Brn. C. Scott and B. V. Springer at Dimondale. We labored together pleasantly for a few days. Bro. Springer then returned, Bro. Scott went on to Webberville and engaged in an ecclesiastical combat with an Adventist on the Sabbath question, and the writer returned to Coldwater and preached to the Saints on Sunday. While stopping with Bro. C. Corless in the city, he, father Stroh, Samuel and self attended the "Evangelist meeting" and a "reading" held by them. Each attendant possessed a Bible, and their new minister, from New York City, preached, prayed, read and commented flippantly. He shot so wide of the mark that we undertook to correct him, but after some two hours comparing views, they held together, and so did we. He was presumptuous and saucy, but did not possess the Christian grace and courage to defend his positions. Some of his members and Sr. Corless had been playing "hide and seek" for some time, to see which would win the other, but they do not know Sr. Ann as well as we. They will not catch her with their chaff. But won't it be too bad if our little cannonading breaks up their sweet communion on the account of circumstances forcing each to rally under his own banner! We extend our sympathy.

But of all the faiths and beliefs that it has been my misfortune to meet with, this is among the poorest make-shifts. It is all grace and faith and no works; give your heart to God; get sealed, and that ends it. No such thing as being lost after this! God "justifieth the ungodly," (Rom. 4: 5);—that fixes it. "For if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to boast," verse 2. "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God."—Eph. 2: 8, 9. This mystifier and advocate of myths makes no distinction between works under the law and works under the gospel. He even went so far as to state that "the," used in the Galatian letter to designate the law of Moses, should not be in the text. "It is not in the original," said he. "Instead of reading 'works of the law,' it should read work of law. That is, all law both in the Old and New Testaments, is abolished—'nailed to the cross.'"

What is "stranger than fiction," some of his hearers were blind enough to believe him. But with us this was so self-evidently wilful upon his part, that toleration even, ceased to be a virtue, for it was so much like downright hypocrisy. But they thrive, and seemingly are full of zeal.

Good reports come from various points in Ohio. Some deaths have occurred among the old inhabitants in Kirtland; among the number is father Ira Bond. I conducted his funeral service, at his residence, on the 4th instant. He was the oldest man in the town. Bro. M. H. Bond, his son, was in attendance at the funeral, and preached an excellent discourse in the Hall on the Sunday following. He reports favorably of the work East. Brn. G. T. Griffiths and R. S. Salyards are away on their mission work. E. L. Kelley is yet in California. A letter just received from Bro. B. V. Springer leaves him on the housetop. Some two miles from here, one whole family of six children died a few days ago from the effects of diphtheria. None others anywhere in this community have it. It is as strange to the inhabitants here as it is startling. Don't drink any impure water, out of wells near barns, etc. See that there is no sour corners about the house, cellar, and places where you frequent. Sweep clean, and use plenty of water at the right time and place, and the diphtheria will find no place in your home, except by contagion. The Saints are well here. A snow storm rages while I close this. A Happy New Year to "ye editors"—co-workers, and all Saints.

Respectfully,

WM. H. KELLEY.

Bro. Joseph:—All things goes well here. Bro. J. A. Grant, a young priest, is laboring with me, and intends to all winter. He is a great help, and speaks pretty well. Another young priest, F. Smith, is doing pretty well. I baptized two more yesterday near Deckerville. Am to commence a debate near Canboro, Huron county, next Friday night.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 24th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Yes, the world will, in time, do your father the justice he deserves. I send you a slip from the Boston Daily Globe that will no doubt interest you. I have mailed the Rev. Pentecost a copy of the Voice of Warning. I do it thinking he may, like a drowning man, grasp at a straw. I will warrant him to float, gain the right port, and an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of God, if he will heed and obey its precious teachings.

Truly the props are dropping out from the orthodox churches of the day; and we are sure they will, for that which can be shaken will be shaken, and I find honest men and women in all denominations inquiring for the truth, and willing to hear and read our claims. Truly "the harvest is great." Jesus says "My sheep hear my voice, and another they will not follow." The Spirit of the Lord will call after his sheep, no matter whether they are in the world or in the churches of the day. The servants of God that are honest in heart will fish and hunt them out of towns, hamlets and cities, and in time to come more rapidly than in the past. My whole aim and desire is to spread the news of a restored gospel and of a crucified Redeemer. The "Voice of Warning" is the praise of every honest heart that reads it. My business brings me in contact with the merchants of New England and my goods have a household name. I have a chance to spread the work and raise up friends for the Church. The "Voice of Warning" is just the book to give to those who are seekers for the truth, who say they have in their hearts an aching void and want it filled. The Lord has said to me, I will surely make you a fisher of men; and it is proving literally true. I praise his name for the high honor that he has pladed upon me.

TARONA, (Sharon,) 8th Nov. 1887.

Dear Beloved Brother, Joseph Smith:—

May blessings abound upon you in the name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

We have now to inform you how very much pleased we have been, in consequence of the visit paid to us by our dearly beloved brother, Thomas W. Smith, and our no less beloved Sister Ellen, who arrived here on the 6th November, 1884. On the 21st of December he commenced to preach the gospel, to baptize, and to arrange every thing that was necessary respecting the laws of the church. It was then we turned towards him with full confidence and heartfelt gratitude, we saw that he was the right man, and many good things were performed by him in our midst.

In consequence of all these things, we perceived that he was a true servant of God, so that we at once delivered up the charge of all our religious affairs in the different Islands into his hands. He established branches, and appointed presidents, priests and teachers over them. We followed him everywhere he went, and were fully conformed into all the doctrines he preached during the term of nearly three years. He then occupied himself with the construction of a church, in the place called Sharon (Tarona). It was completed on the 31st of September, and on the 23d of October it was solemnly dedicated to the worship of the Almighty God, at eleven o'clock in the morning. M. Smith preached a good sermon in his own language, and all that heard him were very much pleased and edified.

At seven o'clock in the evening, persons of all nationalities were congregated together for the purpose of again listening to the words of truth. There were present: Americans, English, French and Germans, and in fact people of all nationalities and those from the surrounding islands.

All men were astonished and marvelled at what had been performed, and from that day all opposition and disbelief in our doctrines were done away with. Several members from most of the Paumotu Islands were present, many of whom brought money to help pay off the debt on the church.

On the 4th of November we all assembled, we and the people from the different Paumotu Islands, in the house of Qaruru the president, and at two o'clock we commenced a service, singing and prayer. It was impossible to restrain our tears, our feelings overcame us. We followed them to the ship, and we now inform you that our brother and sister have left for New South Wales.

Dear beloved brother in the Lord, we again bid you "God speed," we members of the church of Jesus Christ of "Latter Day Saints" in this part of the world.

We were infinitely pleased with our beloved brother, Thomas W. Smith, in directing us in the right way respecting the doctrines of our religion. He has performed a great work among us, and we beseech you, most sincerely, to send him back here, if possible. We trust that at the General Conference in America it may be decided that he is to return here.

We sincerely trust that our heart-felt desires may be acceded to, and that it may be the will of God that he return here as soon as possible, seeing that a great and a good work has been performed by him here. We sincerely wish him God speed! in every way.

HASTINGS, Victoria, Aus., Nov. 25th.

*Bro. Joseph:—*I am just through a short mission to Geelong and vicinity; held two services in the city—only a few out to hear us. I there met a Utah elder, and after some talk, he said he never had been to America, and did not believe much in the polygamy business. Since I left Geelong he visited Bro. Trembath, and seems to be considerably exercised in his mind, as he had baptized forty or fifty persons in New South Wales, and sent them to Utah, and now he is afraid that he has done wrong. He is coming to visit me, to find out if he can the relative merits of the claim of authority of the Utah and the Josephites as he called us; and he says if he sees that the Reorganized Church is right, he will go to Utah and undeceive those whom he caused to go there. He is a Jew; is in business in Geelong, and intends to visit America, so you probably will have the pleasure of his company during his visit to Lamoni. He seems to be very sincere and conscientious.

The Leopold branch was organized last Sunday afternoon; we had an excellent meeting at the time. The Holy Spirit in its calm, earnest, peaceful manifestations, were present in great degree; we all were blest and strengthened in our endeavors to do our Master's will. Bro. Trembath was ordained an elder, and is the presiding officer of the branch. Bro. James D. Craig, priest; and John Craig, teacher; with R. Trembath, clerk. The harvesting just commencing, we could not hold meetings during the week evenings, so we wait awhile and will labor in other places until the busy season is over somewhat. The hot weather is now commencing, and for a few months we must stew and perspire with heat as we for months past have shivered with chilly winds and rains.

Last mail brought us Bro. S. F. Walker's "Ruins Revisited." I have not yet read it, but in looking over it, see that it will be very interesting and instructive—especially to every one interested in the unfolding and, to-day, development of ancient prophecies; therefore it will prove a boon to the ministry, for judging, by what I have seen of it, it is a compendium of ethnological and historical facts. I am glad we have such a work and workman among us. When I read Wilford Hall's works I was filled with gladness and indignation, and now I always feel indignant when I think of his work, for did not the Seer and revelator in 1833 give the key of the principles which he (Hall) used to confound the wisdom of the worlds' wise men, especially in Doctrine and Covenants, section ninety, paragraphs four to six inclusive, which knowledge having been given them, the wise ones of the church should have developed instead of grovelling in evil desires for power or position, or debasing lust, and thus lowering the ensign which the prophet endeavored to elevate, and now my soul rejoices that in the Reorganization all the wasted places of Zion are being rebuilt. The church is getting back to where she was, in some things, and is already far ahead in many things, and I sincerely hope the Saints will fully appreciate the arduous task brother Walker has so gladly performed, as to place the record of the teachings of the church in its proper niche in the temple of the world's scientific history.

No word yet of Bro. T. W. Smith. A letter came to-day for him from Apia, Samoa Islands, forwarded by the United States Consul, from which I judge he was there and is probably visiting in the Samoan Islands, and may come on in the San Francisco steamer from "Tutuila," one of the Samoan group. We hope to see him by Christmas, but he may not get here until after we have left for America; but we will still hope to see him. I am glad to see that in America, as well as elsewhere, God is hastening His work, and that all that are in Christ are being gathered unto him. Love to all Saints. May peace abide with you and all the Israel of God.

Yours in Christ,

JOS. F. BURTON.

CARNEIRO, Kansas, Dec. 24th.

*Bro. Joseph and William:—*I wish you with all Saints a happy Christmas. I came to this place the 20th; fair interest is manifested. This country is like the hill country of Judea—very rough. The work is gaining ground slowly in this district. Laborers are few and calls are many.

Ever yours,

A. H. PARSONS.

Box 120, GARDNER, Ill., Dec. 19th.

*Bro. Dancer:—*I want the Herald. There are three Saints in this place, and we held a meeting on the 18th. One person gave his name for baptism. We shall have a meeting next Sunday. We came from Clay Cross, Birmingham District, England. Yours in the gospel,

JOHN WALTERS.

GOOD ADVICE FOR THE GIRLS.

Now, girls, consider the fact. The day of usefulness is nearly past. Young men are not going to take you for wives on the strength of any looks or manners you may possess. Some of them are fools enough to do it, but they can not afford it. The pressure of the time is inexorable. Use, use, use is its constant demand. The last generation of women are simply wives and mothers. The demand upon the present generation is that they shall be helpmates, partners, and intellectual equals, and brave, struggling, independent and jovial companions.

THEORY WITHOTH PRACTICE IS ABORTIVE!

Editors Herald:—The truth of the above caption may be conceded by thinking minds, and such may wonder why the writer has chosen to discuss that which needs no proof. Do not be hasty in your judgment, kind reader, but plod patiently with us to the end. Our desire is that you may be benefitted by the thoughts suggested. While a theory not put in practice is like an untimely birth, the practical workings of any theory, of whatever nature, is a test as to its worth. If Robert Fulton's theory of propelling boats by machinery set in motion by the force of steam had never been put in practice, the great benefits accruing from the use of steamboats would not have been obtained. But its practical workings have demonstrated the theory to be of great worth. The same process of reasoning applied to railroads, electro-magnetic telegraphy, &c., &c., would produce the same results, only to an immensely greater degree as they increase the benefits received by man from their operations. Such may be termed beneficial physical theories.

The government of the United States, in its theory and practice, has, in the writer's opinion, proved to be the best ever devised; though those who believed in what they call the "divine right of kings" prognosticated a failure for the theory in its infancy; but its practical workings have demonstrated beyond a peradventure that it has within it the seeds of perpetuity, and bids fair to exist when the tottering thrones of despotism are crumbled in the dust. One proof of its worth seen in the fact that thousands yearly land upon its shores from the different nations of the earth, seeking to make the country over which the flag of freedom floats, their home. It is true and has been proved of late, that not all who come to our shores have peaceable designs, but that some come with the purpose to sow the seeds of dissension, advocating a theory which, if put in practice, would certainly produce what their name indicates anarchy and confusion; and the direst consequences would ensue should they be allowed to trample the laws under their feet. There have been theories of a social nature sought to be established, purporting to be improvements upon the usages and customs of society which would produce greater beneficial results, such as "Free-loveism," and "Socialism;" but when put in practice have proved to be pernicious in their effects, and destructive of good morals, and having in them the seeds of their own dissolution.

There is a theory, assuming somewhat of a religious or spiritual nature, that is becoming very popular throughout the world, numbering among its votaries, emperors, kings, queens, and other titled dignitaries of the earth, entitled the spiritistic theory—commonly called Spiritualism. The practical workings of this is a perfect test as to who is the author of it, and as to what are its results in this life, and what it will be in the world to come. In a select article in the Herald for November 26th, 1887 entitled "Spiritualism—Its Modern Development; by the Rev. John Storie," we find recorded some of the immoral practices of its mediums who claim to be controlled by angels. Quoting from Dr. Hatch, once a medium, but who renounced the system with horror and indignation he says:

"Spiritualism, and prostitution, with a rejection of Christianity, are twin sisters, which everywhere go hand in hand. * * * Like all destructive pestilential miasma, which almost imperceptibly poisons the soul, it has made victims tens of thousands of its votaries, and secretly crept into many other avenues of society, until it is almost popularizing those social conditions which every good citizen must most deeply deplore. Iniquities which have justly received the condemnation of centuries are openly upheld, vices which would destroy every wholesome regulation of society are crowned as virtues; prostitution is believed to be fidelity to self; marriage an outrage on freedom. Bastards are claimed to be "spiritually begotten," &c. Do these practices prove the theory that leads them to be from that righteous, Holy Being, who can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance? Does it commend itself to the pure and the good, the virtuous of Adam's posterity?

Still quoting from the same article we find that out of their own mouths they stand condemned as being the servants of Satan, for they especially style themselves the servants of the devil, and pray to him for help. We extract only enough to prove our position, for to us the whole of the prayer as quoted (and that only claimed to be a portion) is too horrible to put on paper: "O Devil; Prince of Demons in the Christian's hell! O thou Monarch of the Bottomless pit. * * * Bless thy servant in his labors before thee. Fill his mouth with words of wisdom, * * * that his audience may realize that thou art a prayer hearing and a prayer answering devil"—"World's Crisis."

In the same article it is recorded that the proceedings of a meeting held in Lyceum Hall, Boston, were opened by prayer to his Satanic Majesty. Out of their own mouths then, they are condemned as servants of the devil, that and the practice of such a theory proves that it emanated from that evil one who seeketh not the good of the human family, but is an enemy of God and man, an enemy to all righteousness, whose wages to those who serve him, is death, an eternal separation from God, and from all that is lovely, pure and good, and misery is their doom.

The only theory established on the earth for the benefit of man in this life, and his eternal welfare in the world to come, is the gospel. Emanating from a perfect being, it is perfect in all its parts, and therefore calculated in its practice, to perfect the sons of men in their sphere, as God is perfect in His; and hence we hear the Savior commanding: "Be ye perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect." God in his sphere is infinitely perfect—infinite in wisdom, knowledge, truth, glorious in holiness and all goodness, having all power to do whatsoever seemeth him good.

Man in his sphere on earth may attain to that state of perfection in righteousness, that is made possible for mortals, by practicing the precepts of the gospel of Christ. There is a great difference between man in his natural state and this "perfect" state on earth, even as there is between infancy and hoary age; and hence, as the natural man is "born again," he is spiritually, in his infancy, and has to grow in every good word and work in all holiness, until he becomes a "perfect man" in Christ Jesus. It is written: "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then, they that are after the flesh can not please God."—Rom. 8: 7. It follows then, that the carnal mind being at enmity against God, must be in the service of him who is the enemy of all righteousness, who beguiled our first parents from their rightful allegiance to the Creator; and they, falling from their lofty condition as children of God, became servants of Satan, were estranged from God, and entailed upon their posterity the consequences of that fall whereby, by nature, they are at enmity against God. By the apostle they are said to be "after the flesh;" and while in that condition they can not please God. The same apostle, in Galatians, chapter five, states what the works of the flesh are: "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like."

We do not understand that the apostle accuses all who are in the natural state as being guilty of all of these charges, but that they are all guilty of some of them, some being much worse than others. Although many who are styled the honorable men of the earth, would not commit the crimes of adultery, fornication or murder, yet they may be guilty of idolatry, or hatred, or wrath, or strife, etc. Now the apostle says that they who do these things "shall never inherit the kingdom of God." And well might he say so, for they are works which are displeasing in the sight of God, being subversive of the welfare of the children of men in this life, and, if not repented of, will unfit them to dwell with the pure and the good in the resurrection of the just. Can any one point out one of those works of the flesh that is conducive of the well being of society? But the apostle did not enumerate all the works of the flesh, for he says, "and all such." When we think of all these evil works being indulged in, what an amount of wretchedness and misery, degradation and woe, are consequent thereupon in this life? And their consequences follow over in the next, if not repented of,

To deliver mankind from this state of things, God sent forth the plan of salvation, the gospel, requiring obedience to the same, giving man his agency, leaving him at liberty to choose or refuse: but according to the conditions, they who obey receive the reward of eternal life; and those who refuse to receive punishment for so-doing. The theory of the gospel, when practiced, will cause men and women to cease all evil practices, and in this respect society will be made better, and also the government under which they dwell. One of the first principles of the gospel is repentance, which is a forsaking of sin, of whatever nature, which if people do, they then may be adopted as sons and daughters of God; and that mode of adoption is baptism (being baptized into Christ) for the remission of sins repented of; and then "the spirit of adoption" is promised (Rom. 8: 13) whereby they can know of their acceptance with God as his children; and if the Spirit which is given is obeyed, the fruits of it will be, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law."—Gal. 5: 22, 23.

It seems to the writer that the most obtuse intellect can see that persons possessed of "the fruits of the Spirit" must be better men and women than when engaged in the works of the flesh, and that this proves that the practical working of this gospel theory is for the well-being of mankind in this life, and causing them to become more God-like, fits them to dwell with Him in eternity. The first principle enumerated in "the fruits of the Spirit," is love. The Savior declares that upon loving God with all our heart, might, mind, and strength, and upon loving our neighbor as ourselves, hangs the whole law. Paul affirms the same when he says, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." He also says, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor."

It is right, and reasonable, that God should be first in our affection—in our heart's love—for "in Him we live and move," and from him we derive every blessing, whether of a temporal or spiritual nature; also from Him, who alone is able to bestow it, we have the promise of eternal life, which He declares "is the greatest gift" He can bestow upon man. The Savior gives the test of that love in this language: "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me. And he that loveth me, shall be loved of my father. And I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him." We know, then, that those who love God are those who keep His commandments.

The next great command, after love to God, is, that we love our neighbor as ourselves, which, reduced to practice, is tantamount to the Savior's saying: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them, for this is the law and the prophets."

We would not that men should hate us; we then must not hate them. We would that men might love us, therefore we must love them. The test of love to our neighbor is, "Love worketh no ill [nothing bad or evil] to his neighbor." If we do any ill to our neighbor, whatever, then it is a sure sign we do not love him. And as we would not do ourselves any ill, it is certain we do not love him whom we do harm to. If I love my neighbor as myself, I will do him all the good I can; for I would desire to do so to myself. If this principle of love was carried out by all the inhabitants of the earth, what would hinder millennial peace from existing in our midst? There would be no necessity for bolts or locks to our houses, for none would be inclined to steal from their neighbor. There would be no necessity for prisons, for there would be no law breakers; every one would be living above the law, love to God and love to man being the ruling principle. There would be no drunkards, and no necessity for a law prohibiting the manufacturing or vending of alcoholic drinks, for if a man loved his fellow man as himself he would not manufacture or sell to his brother-man that which robs him of his reason, making him a disturber of the peace of society, causing him to neglect providing for his family and bringing them down into the depths of poverty and wretchedness, changing him from the loving father and tender husband into a demon ready to imbrue his hands in the blood of innocence; he would not make or sell that which is the cause of nine-tenths of the crimes perpetrated against the laws of the good government, against the laws of his Creator. And thus by the practice of this principle of love inculcated in the gospel of God to man, His creature, the traffic in this soul and body destroyer, this bane of the human family would be forever swept from the face of the earth. Let this principle of love be exercised by man to his fellow man to his fellowman, and there would be no anarchist, nihilist, communist, or socialist; no strife between capital and labor, therefore no societies for the protection of labor; in short, all the strife and contention existing among the children of men through lack of it would be done away, and peace would extend o'er all the earth, and "every man, in every place, would meet a brother and a friend."

The Lord has made known through his prophets, that a reign of peace and righteousness shall extend over all the earth. Isaiah in chapter 11 of his book, speaking of Christ, says, "But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked; and righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. The cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. The sucking child shall play upon the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand upon the cocatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Micah, chapter 4, predicts that when the Lord shall reign in Mount Zion, the nations shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." This looks like a reign of peace, surely; for the wild beasts will become docile and graze with the domesticated animals; nothing hurts nor destroys in all the earth; the Lord is known throughout the entire earth as the righteous king, reproving with equity for the meek of the earth; no nation upon the earth will learn war any more, every man, without fear of molestation, enjoying the fruit of his own vine and fig tree in peace.

Paul, in 2 Thess. 1: 7-9, says: "When the Lord Jesus Christ shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with destruction from the presence of the Lord," &c. We perceive by this that those "who obey not the gospel" will be deprived of dwelling with the Lord in this reign of blessedness and peace; and the inference is that those who do obey will have that blessed privilege. The gospel, it appears, was given as the means of preparation for this reign of peace; for it follows as a logical sequence that, if "the works of the flesh" as before enumerated are done away through obedience to the gospel, and that through obedience the fruits of the Spirit—"love, joy, peace,"—are established in the hearts of the obedient ones, the gospel, then, is the means of preparation for dwelling with their Lord, and that He will then accept them. The gospel, then, is the best theory ever advanced upon the earth for the perpetual well being of man; and, like all other good theories, to reap the full benefits of it, its principles must be fully practiced.

It appears from the record that the Savior foretold, that at the time of His second coming to reign on the earth about half of those who had had a name in the kingdom of God on earth would be shut out from the marriage of the Lamb. They were styled by Him, "foolish virgins." They had the name of "virgins;" had a membership in the kingdom; but they had not put in practice all of the gospel precepts, therefore had not the Spirit and were shut out from His presence.

It appears to the writer, that to be destroyed "from the presence of the Lord" for not obeying the gospel does not apply alone to those who, when they hear it, refuse to receive and obey it, but also to those who may lay the foundation principles spoken of in Hebrews, 6: 12—"faith towards God, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands"—and may run well for a season, but who stop in the race, cease striving to "go on into perfection," do not put in practice all of the precepts of the gospel, become careless, lukewarm, lose the indispensable oil, do not seek to replenish till too late, when darkness as a consequence ensues, and depending upon getting the "oil" from others, when they find, alas! that each has no more than enough for themselves to secure the light necessary to have in order to be received of the Master when He comes.

The parable of the ten virgins agrees with that of the sower, whose seed, some of it, fell by the wayside, and the fowls devoured it; some fell upon the stony ground, sprang up immediately, but not having much root the mid-day sun scorched it, and it withered and died; some fell among thorns, and when it sprang up it was choked by the thorns, and did not bear fruit; but some fell upon good ground, and brought forth thirty, sixty, and a hundred fold. So we perceive that the theory of the gospel must be put in practice if we expect to receive any benefits from it. If men will not have anything to do with it, but will go on sowing to "the flesh," they "shall of the flesh reap corruption," having willfully disobeyed the commands of their God against all such works; and refusing to forsake them and obey the gospel, they must come under condemnation and suffer the consequences of that disobedience. If they sow plentifully to "the works of the flesh," they will reap a plentiful crop of evil now and in the world to come, for every one will be rewarded "according to their deeds." On the contrary, if men "sow to the Spirit," plentifully, and cultivate its fruits with care and assiduity, they will reap a plentiful crop here, and in the world to come, life everlasting. But if men sow sparingly, and are careless and negligent in cultivating good, they can not expect to reap a full crop, neither in quality or quantity, so that they will have to be content with a less reward. If the whole gospel theory is not obeyed, the whole benefits of that theory can not be obtained. The Savior's declaration is that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

God being perfect in knowledge, in wisdom and understanding, knowing the end from the beginning, knew just exactly what it would take to redeem and bring back fallen man into His presence, and He consequently established the scheme, or conditions of that salvation; and infinite wisdom conceiving that it would take all of those conditions to accomplish that object, then nothing more, and nothing less will accomplish it.

If men and women consider well their best interests, they will seek the salvation of their souls in preference to seeking to lay up treasures on earth; for the Savior asks, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" "Or what will a man give in exchange for his soul?" If a man had the whole world under his control, he could not effect an exchange with the Almighty for the salvation of his soul! No, it must be obtained by his observing the conditions of the gospel. Men may establish banks of exchange; they may exchange with each other the different commodities and productions of the earth, but he can not effect any exchange with the God of heaven, only by obedience to his law. A man may exchange his state of rebellion for the state of obedience; he may be "translated from the kingdom of darkness into that of God's dear Son;" and by being a faithful, law abiding citizen, continuing so to the end, growing in the grace and knowledge of God, he may become a "perfect man in Christ Jesus," prepared to dwell with perfect beings, and by such an exchange secure his soul's salvation.

That you, and I, dear reader, having become acquainted with the theory of the gospel, may put it in practice thoroughly, so that we may secure all of its benefits in this life, and in that which is to come, it not proving abortive in our case, is the prayer of

WHO ARE THE CHILDREN OF THE KINGDOM

SPOKEN OF AS THE GOOD SEED IN THE PARABLE OF THE WHEAT AND TARES?
MATTHEW 13: 36-45.

CHRIST'S interpretation is as follows:

"He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man. The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked. The enemy that sowed them is the devil. The harvest is the end of the world." The reapers are the angels or messengers sent of heaven. As therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world, or the destruction of the wicked. "For in that day, before the Son of Man shall come, he shall send forth his angels and messengers of heaven, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things which offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them out among the wicked; and there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. For the world shall be burned with fire. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

The following points are settled, First: "Christ sowed the good seed." Second: "The field is the world. Third: "The good seed are the children of the kingdom." Fourth: "The tares are the children of the wicked." Fifth: "The enemy that sowed them is the devil." Sixth: "The harvest is the end of the world." Seventh: "The reapers are the angels, or messengers sent of heaven."

Some claim that the "honest in heart" found in the various churches, or Babylon, are the children of the kingdom of God, and that too while in those churches. It is also claimed that they are in possession of the Spirit of God, which is taken as unmistakable evidence that such are indeed the children of God.

The fall of man is an accepted fact, by all Bible believers. By the fall all men became aliens from the family of God; or in Bible language, "Strangers and foreigners."—Eph. 2: 19. "By nature the children of wrath."—Eph. 2: 3. "Were afore off."—Eph. 2: 17. "For we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; as it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one."—Rom. 3: 9, 10. "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God."—Rom. 3: 23. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. 5: 12.

Thus the doctrine of the fall is established as a Bible doctrine. The doctrine of redemption through Christ Jesus stands upon as sure a basis. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. "But God commendeth his love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."—Rom. 5: 8. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. 15: 22.

Isaiah represents Jesus thus: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek, he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."—Isa 61: 1, Luke 4: 18.

Here then is his mission as the sower of the good seed. "Now after that John was put into prison Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand."—Mark 1: 12, 13. Math. 4: 16, 22. Malachi speaks of him as "the messenger of the covenant," and Latter Day Saints understand the gospel to be "The new and everlasting covenant" that God through Christ makes with man. It was then by the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom that he sowed the good seed, and it must be remembered he was sowing it then, for in his interpretation of the parable he uses the present tense of the verb to sow. "He that soweth the good seed."

It will not be disputed by the believer, that since the race had become aliens through the fall, the gospel was to be the plan of restoration to the favor of God through Christ; and consequently the rule by which they were to be adopted into the Kingdom of God; hence, we can not claim to be citizens or children of that kingdom only by this rule of adoption. If the fact of some being good moral men, according to our judgment of goodness, makes them children, then to such Christ needed not to have preached, and for such he needed not to have died; for undoubtedly such men as Zechariah, Joseph and Simeon; and such women as Elizabeth, Mary and Anna were truly moral, God-fearing and truth-loving souls; and were looking for redemption at his hands, and of such it is said, "As many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God; only to them who believe on his name."—John 1: 12. If this class were children of God, in the gospel sense, prior to that, they would not at that time have needed power to become such; hence, it is evident that the best efforts of men in a moral sense, outside of obedience to the gospel, does not qualify them to become sons of God. There is a covenant to enter into with the Father through the Son, a law of adoption for all to obey before we can become members of the heavenly family. That covenant, that law of adoption, is "the gospel of the Kingdom" which Christ preached. That covenant and law were well defined by him, when he cried, "He who believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."—John 3:30. "Repent ye and believe the gospel."—Mark 1:13. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned," etc.—Mark 16:15, 19. Peter also as one holding the keys of the Kingdom, defines it as follows: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."—Acts 2:38. It is well understood that the Jews were all under the law prior to Christ's coming. "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4:4, 5. If Israel, in that day, could not receive the adoption of sons without obedience to the gospel, can any other people? "God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all."—Rom. 11:32. Hence all being in the same condition, all must find redemption in the same way, namely, through the gospel.

But we are told, "If meekness, humility, prayerfulness, gentleness, faith, charity, and a manifestation of a Christ-like spirit, is any indication that the possessor is a child of God, then there are plenty of children of God in other churches." The possession of these excellent qualities is not all that constitutes a man a child of God. The preaching of the gospel was a necessity, or Christ would not have done it; nor would he have commissioned his disciples to preach it. Consequently obedience to it was necessary; for if it was not necessary to obey it, it was certainly unnecessary to preach it. But Christ was ordained and sent of God for that express purpose, as also to die for the sins of the world. And while praying to his Father for his disciples, he says, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world."—John 17:18. Obedience, then, is absolutely essential, in order that we may be enrolled in the heavenly kingdom. That obedience is absolutely demanded is evident from the following: "Verily, I say unto you, it is not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 7:30. The qualities named are all praiseworthy, but not sufficient of themselves. Nor are they confined to professors of religion. Such qualities have been found in all ages and among all peoples. The crowning excellence is obedience; it embodies all the rest; for to be obedient in the full sense of the term is to cultivate and manifest all these graces; but it is possible to possess many of the above named graces, and yet lack a pure faith and consequently yield implicit obedience. The fact that Christ commissioned his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature is proof that whatever of worth men possessed without the gospel, they were sinners and aliens, and were in need of the gospel to make them children and heirs of God. Such was and is the condition of the world; hence, Christ truly said, "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." This language does not convey the idea that there was nothing good in man, (I mean in a comparative sense), but it does mean that all men had sinned. Good as found in man is at the best only comparative; but whatever good there is in man is "Christ-like" since the difference of identity in the two beings can not change the nature or quality of characteristics possessed by both, but whatever excellence there is in man is in degree, or may be measured; but the same qualities in deity are infinite, immeasurable. But we repeat that no excellence that man can attain unto without obedience to the gospel, can never fit him for, or make him a citizen of the kingdom of God; for it is written, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

Men may claim to be in possession of the Spirit of God, and hence conclude that they are children of God without undergoing the birth of water. But if Jesus properly defined the nature of the new birth, in the above language, and certainly this was the answer to the importunate question of Nicodemus, "How can a man be born when he is old?" then those who make the above claim are unregenerate, and hence incompetent judges, not being able to discern between the true Spirit and the false, and they may rest assured that if any spirit teaches them to ignore or treat lightly the teachings and ordinances of Christ, that spirit is not of God; and if they are governed by it, they are in danger of condemnation.

John tells us of "The true light which lighteth every man who cometh into the world," and declares it is the Son of God. John 1. And Paul tells us "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."—1 Cor. 12:7. If this term, "every man," means all mankind whether in the church or out, then professor and non-professor, atheist, or believer, receives the manifestation of the Spirit, whether he profits by it or not; and this is the means by which Christ "lighteth every man that comes into the world." This light, this Spirit, was not to supercede the gospel, or render it, or any of its precepts or ordinances unnecessary; for in that case, Christ and his Spirit would be divided, the work of preaching the gospel would be useless; and the great commission have been given in vain; but rather, the light or Spirit is given to enable us to discern truth from error, good from evil, and to cheer us on in the good that we know, and prepare our hearts for the greater truths revealed in the gospel of God's dear Son, bearing witness to us of its truth, and divinity; and thus leading us to become the sons of God, through the only means ordained of God to make us such by obedience thereunto.

By the revelations of the last days, we learn that the light or Spirit, mentioned by John and Paul "proceedeth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space."—Doc. Cov. sec. 85. From this we learn that its operations are not confined to witness bearing, but are also guiding, influencing, instructing, and approving the good in us, and reproofing the evil; while it is life-giving, and sustaining, not only to man but to all the creation. But it is also to bear witness with our spirits that we are the sons of God, when we have become such by obedience to the laws of adoption. Undoubtedly many have felt the blessed influence of this Spirit; and in proportion as they have followed its guidance they have been led nearer to God, and have received its approval for the good they have done. This approval must not be confounded with the testimony that we are the sons of God, prior to our free and full compliance with the terms of sonship; for the Spirit of truth will never conflict with itself, nor with the teachings of Christ. There were Jews who manifested faith in Christ, but who were not adopted into the kingdom. To these, Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32. From this it is evident that merely believing on him did not make them free, or children of God. They had not complied with the gospel, consequently were in bondage, for God could not be justified in giving them deliverance until they had complied with the terms thereof. Here is a case illustrative of this point: "And all the people who heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him."—Luke 7:29, 30.

John baptized for remission of sins. The common people believed his preaching and obeyed, consequently God was justified in forgiving their sins, washing them free from their sins; but the pious Pharisees and expounders of the law would not submit to the order of heaven, and must continue in their bondage. Paul says to the Romans, "God be thanked that ye are not the servants of sin, for ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being made free from sin, and become servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."—Rom. 6:17, 22. If the members of other churches are free from sin, children of God, why baptize them, seeing that ordinance is for the remission of sins, and for adoption into the Kingdom of God? I would not seek to appear wise above that which is revealed; hence, I shall not claim that the spirit of adoption is given to those who have not complied with the law governing it. I know of no other means than that revealed in Holy Writ. Why should I flatter my vanity by assuming that, because I belonged to and was blest in another church, therefore I was then a child of God? The portion of the Spirit I enjoyed was given to help me discern the truth, and to show the divine approval of my acceptance of the truths I had heard, but it was not the seal of my adoption; for although I had been immersed I was not adopted, for he who immersed me had not divine authority; but when I heard the truth in its fullness and obeyed it under the hands of those who were divinely appointed, then I was entitled to the seal of adoption, and then I realized the difference between a servant and a son. Then I could realize the force of the language of Paul: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.—Rom. 8:14, 15.

It is no argument against the foregoing truth to say that "If the sincere among the churches, or in Babylon, are not the children of God in a gospel sense, then false doctrines, corrupt practices, and Satan's children are found in the church of Christ." False doctrines crept into the former day church, and Christ and his Apostles warned the Saints against them. Corrupt practices were found in it, against which God through his servants uttered fulminations of his wrath. Satan's children had crept in, but neither they, nor their doctrines or practices were of the church. They were, as Christ says, "Thieves and robbers," and of their father the devil." These led the church into apostasy. Such have been and may yet be in the Church of Christ in these days, or the Reorganized Church is fighting shadows; but as there can be no shadow without a substance, it is a recognized fact; but that fact will not prevent it from being the Church of Christ. It simply proves the continued hatred of Satan against God and humanity, this wily and hellish assiduity to frustrate the purposes of the one, and destroy the hope of the other. It also manifests the weakness of man in this as in all ages of the world. But although the wheat and tares are found growing in the same field, the infinite wisdom of the sower of the good seed will cause the coming of the arch enemy to aid instead of frustrating the divine purpose, and when that purpose has been accomplished, the tares will be burned, and with him who sowed them will reap for their reward eternal shame and confusion.

In conclusion, I believe that there is comparative good in all churches throughout Babylon. If not so, Babylon would have fallen long ago of her own rottenness. There are many both in and out of the churches, from the church of Rome to the latest form of apostasy, as well as in the heathen world, who are sincere and truth loving souls, whom God in his love has blest for their integrity, and will reward them according to their works. I believe, too, as the Book of Mormon teaches,

"Wherefore, all things which are good cometh of God." But the prophet is speaking of good in its intrinsic purity, unmingled with evil, not distorted and perverted as we find it in the creeds of the day. Whatever truths there are in those creeds came from God, but Satan has taught them to mar and distort them, as he did in the garden of Eden, and they are used to lead mankind farther from God, while if found in their original purity, then, "Behold that which is of God inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore every thing which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God and to serve him is inspired of God."—Book of Mormon, page 536.

As an instance of the cunning of Satan, let me refer to one fact. In the days of Christ and the apostles it was more than a man's life was worth to confess that Jesus was the Christ; but to-day it is the most popular act that can be performed, and that sacred name is used as a covering for the most consummate hypocrisy and unblushing avarice; but to confess the truths that he taught, as a whole, would be a sure method of calling down the scorn and contempt of professed Christian, or avowed infidel. Thus the wiles of Satan are exerted to counteract the glorious work of the gospel and frustrate the plan of redemption, for he knows that without obedience to the gospel salvation can not come unto man. But, God be praised, the cunning of the evil one will be thwarted. The gospel is restored and is being proclaimed and will be preached in power unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people; and to all the generations of men who are, and have been upon the earth; until the great and glorious offer of salvation is made unto all, and man as a race have been redeemed unto God, through the blood of the Lamb and the sanctifying power of his gospel. And it shall be realized that "As many as believe in Christ, to them shall be given power to become the sons of God," "and if sons then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ." ON SCIENCE AND MIRACLES.

At the Second Presbyterian church, Kansas City, Missouri, Rev. C. L. Thompson delivered the last of his series of Sunday evening lectures on "Science and Religion." The subject of last evening's lecture was "Science and Miracles." The following is an abstract:

Strauss says that the belief in miracles is the chief offense of religion. Skeptical science necessarily denies the supernatural. Christianity is the religion of miracles, hence the conflict. What is a miracle? We used to say it was a suspension of natural law. We are not so sure now; they may be only a mere subtle action of law. The denial of miracles comes from three sources.

First—Atheistic, there is no God, no miracles,

Second—Pantheistic, a false conception of God, which also excludes miracles.

Third—Deism, a mechanical conception of the world.

If we believe in a free personal God, miracles are possible. So Huxley and other scientists confess. The interference of God is not excluded by the laws of nature. Again, it is said, that if not inconsistent with the power of God, they must be with His omniscience. Why should His works need regulating? This view ignores the moral cause of miracles. It is not God's order, but man's disorder that requires their aid. Hume anticipated scientific objections to miracles when he said they violated natural law and universal experience is against them. But that begs the question; what looks like violation may be only a higher physical law, but undiscovered. Our Lord's resurrection may be no miracle, in a scientific sense. For ought we can say, germs of life may exist in our present bodies, which, under right conditions may spring up into an immortal body. Strauss says Bible miracles have not been cross-examined. Indeed! There have been eighteen centuries of cross-examination. The following three points may be considered fixed:

First—Admit God and a miracle is possible.

Second—If wrought for a sufficiently great reason, it is probable.

Third—Bible miracles have been so testified as to remain unshaken.

Now, in general conclusion of this course of lectures:

First—Let the man of revelation value the physical sciences. They help interpret the Bible. What light the sciences have thrown on the first chapter of Genesis!

Second—Let the man of science remember that there is a spiritual as well as a physical. The forgetting that is the chief source of the trouble.

Third—Let both work for harmony. All truth is one. The time is coming when the sciences and the theologies will both bring their best jewels of thought for the crown of that God, who made both nature and the soul, and who rules equally in both.

NEATNESS IN DRESS AT HOME.

The importance of neat and tasteful house dressing can not be over-estimated. The matron who appears before the members of her family in a shabby, soiled wrapper, and makes the excuse—if, indeed she takes the trouble to make one at all—"that it is so much more comfortable," has little idea of the possible consequences of such a course. Could she but realize that her dress is an evil example to her daughters, and one productive of consequences that will reach far beyond her own span of life; that her husband and sons can not fail to draw comparisons between her dress and that of the ladies they meet in other homes, and that these comparisons can not fail to decrease their respect for her, she might be induced to give more attention to her personal appearance. Not even the burden of care and constant employment can furnish a sufficient excuse for careless personal habits, for few things are more important to the well being of a family. There is an old saying to the effect that an untidy mother has disobedient children; and while neither parents nor children may realize the why or wherefore of it, yet there is always a lack of respect and an indifference to the authority of a mother who takes no pride in her personal appearance. And it is not the mother alone upon whose shoulders rests the burden of responsibility for home neatness and order in dress; the father has its duties to look after as well, and should never fail to insist upon the younger members of the family presenting themselves with well-kept hands, clean faces, neatly brushed hair, and orderly dress, at least at every meal where the family assemble.—Brooklyn Magazine.

Conference Minutes.

SPRING RIVER.

Conference convened with Columbus branch, Kansas, September 2d, 3d and 4th, 1887, in the Richland Valley School-house. John A. Davis, Jr., preached Friday evening, followed by D. S. Crawley. September 3d, E. A. Davis in the chair. W. Pender secretary. The following elders reported: S. Maloney, C. Severeen, W. E. Westervelt, B. Davis, R. H. Davis, O. P. Sutherland, E. E. Bradley, W. S. Taylor, J. Hawley, J. T. Davis (had visited the Bickertonites, of whom he spoke interestingly and favorably), E. Depue, (baptized 7), E. A. Davis, W. S. Pender, D. S. Crawley, J. A. Davis, Jr., J. A. Davis, Sr., Moses Turpen, James Hart, J. M. Richards reported. Priests Havy, Cantrell, W. Lees, and Curtis Randall, (baptized 4), reported. Teachers Llewellyn and Hobart; and Deacons H. Smarts and Bradford reported. The spiritual authorities of the church were sustained in righteous. G. A. Blakeslee was sustained as gishop bishop of the church, and R. H. Davis as his agent. Bishop's agent's report read and adopted. The former auditing committee having been released—C. K. Ryan and O. Olson. E. A. Davis having resigned as president of the district, John Alfred Davis was elected to succeed him, and W. S. Pender was elected secretary. It was decided by vote to have next conference at Pleasant View Branch. Brn. Hawley and Maloney was invited to take part in conference. Moved that we sustain the above brethren in their mission here as appointed by First Presidency. Agreeably to recommendation from Pleasant View branch it was ordered that E. Keeler be ordained to the office of elder, and C. P. Jones to the office of teacher. Elder's license was granted to C. M. Fulks. Moved that the secretary be instructed to send priest's license to W. T. Duncan. The Webb City case was by vote given a reconsideration. The house resolved itself into committee of the whole, and after reconsideration, decided, that the decision of the committee at the Mound Valley conference was legal. Report was read from Wm. France. Preaching Saturday night by John Hawley assisted by S. Maloney. Sunday morning, preaching by D. S. Crawley. Prayer and sacrament meeting in the afternoon. Peaching in the evening by E. A. Davis. A good time was had. Adjourned to meet at Pleasant View, Kansas, Friday, January 27th, 1888.

SOUTH-EASTERN ILLINOIS.

Conference convened at Springerton, White county, Illinois, December, 17th, 1887. G. H. Hilliard in the chair, I. M. Smith, secretary. Branch reports:—Brush Creek 134; Dry Fork 29, 2 removed; Tunnell Hill 77, 1 received by letter; Alma 10; Springerton 58, 1 died; Parish, no report. Elders T. P. Green, I. A. Morris, I. M. Smith (baptized 1) and G. H. Hilliard (baptized 4) reported in person; E. Webb, T. C. Kelley, and John F. Thomas, by letter. The elders were all continued in their former missions. The authorities of the church were sustained in righteousness; A. H. Smith as missionary in charge. G. H. Hilliard, bishop's agent, reported: Balance on hand last report $3.10, received since $21.40, total on hand $24.50. G. H. Hilliard was elected president of district, and I. M. Smith secretary for the next six months. Preaching on Saturday evening by I. A. Morris and T. P. Green; Sunday morning by I. M. Smith; and Sunday evening by G. H. Hilliard. Sacrament meeting on Sunday afternoon in charge of I. A. Morris and B. F. Taylor. Adjourned to meet at Brush Creek branch, June 9th, 1888, at ten o'clock.

Miscellaneous.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Des Moines district conference will convene at Rhodes, Marshall county, Iowa, March 16th, 1888, at two p. m. All the branches composing the district will please bring their reports, and also their offerings, as the Lord has prospered them. It is well known to you, brethren, that our bishop's agent's labor was mostly in the Eastern Iowa district. But he will be with us at our conference. All other brethren traveling through are cordially invited.

RHODES, IOWA, Dec. 23d, 1887.

The North-Western Kansas district conference will convene February 25th, 1888, at ten o'clock, with the Elmira Saints, in Mitchell county, at Bro. Andees' School-house. This being our last session before the General Conference, let each branch make a complete and correct report, so that the district clerk can make a report to the General Conference. Let each one take an interest in this conference. Come one, come all! Let the Elders and Saints read minutes of September conference in Herald of October 29th, 1887, and note what will come before our next session for its action. Send all reports by mail, so that none will fail reaching S. C. Andes, Elmira, Mitchell county, Kansas. Don't fail to send on time—be a week or two ahead.

A. H. HARROWS, Dist. Pres.

A conference of the Southern Nebraska district will convene at Nebraska City, January 22d, 1888, at eleven o'clock, and it being chiefly for the last quarter in the year 1887, I earnestly request all branch presidents to see that their branches are reported, so that I can have the numerical strength in order to make a correct annual report to the General Conference.

J. B. GOULDSMITH, Dist. Sec.

NOTICES.

Wanted—To know the address of Ole Madison, who used to live at Omaha, Nebraska, Address Martin Lundwall, Bozeman, Montana.

Below we give the aggregate number of Heralds and Hopes printed at this office in 1887: Heralds 211,295; Hopes 234,963.

Desiring the address of each member of the first quorum of priests, I hereby ask all and each one of them to send me their address, enclosing a stamp, and in return I will send them a blank and inform them what to do with it.

DIED.

DICE.—Bro. Jacob Dice and Sr. Drusilla Dice were laid away, side by side, at the German Latter Day Saints' Church on December 22d, 1887. Thus by one fell stroke the destroyer rendered a fond wife and an indulgent mother a childless widow. Bro. Jacob Dice, after long months and years of great suffering which was patiently borne, passed away at five minutes passed seven p. m., December 19th, at the age of 39 years, 7 months and 17 days. Sr. Drusilla Dice passed away at ten minutes before six o'clock a. m. December 20th, after an illness of near four months, with consumption, at the age of 19 years, 4 months and twenty days. She bore her afflictions with fortitude; wishing to live but not afraid to die.

In her last moments she bore a strong testimony to the gospel work, saying, "It is God's eternal truth, and is founded on a rock." With many other words she exhorted to faithfulness. Before death they both selected the same place to rest their bodies, and the same person to preach the sermon. Services were held at the German Church by Elder J. M. Terry, assisted by Elder Wm. Lewis. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

JENSEN.—On December 13th, 1887, Nels. Christian, son of Bro. and Sr. Jensen, of Pleasant Grove, Utah, aged 9 years, 11 months and 15 days. He was a member of the church, and a constant attendant at the Sabbath School. As the grass and the flowers are cut down and fade, so Christian in his youth was taken from kindred and friends, and the once lovely form will pass away; but his spirit lives in the paradise of God, with the pure and the good. Funeral services by R. J. Anthony and Andrew Jensen, at Pleasant Grove, Utah.

BOND.—At Kirtland, Ohio, November 30th, 1887, Ira Bond, aged 89 years, 10 months and 11 days. Deceased embraced the faith of the Saints in 1833; was baptized by Joseph Young, in the town of Mendon, Monroe county, New York. He removed to Kirtland the following year, where he resided until his death. Funeral services at his home, conducted by Elder W. H. Kelly.

"A look of peace and calm content
Came with his latest breath;
The trace of a life well spent
Could not be robbed by death.
His life was long and also true,
So free from sin and guile,
That he could bid this world adieu,
And e'en in death could smile.

And if "death loves a shining mark,"
As we have oft been told,
His shaft has surely entered here
A heart as bright as gold.
His many friends will sadly miss
His true and pleasant face,
His halting step and kindly voice,
In each familiar place.

But there is one, Oh! who can know
The sorrow of her heart,
Caused by that desolating blow
That did their two lives part.
Yet may this tho't comfort be Amid her grief and pain,
Though her beloved she can not see,
Her loss is but his gain."

HOFFMAN.—In Harrison county, Iowa, November 21st, 1887, near 6:30 in the afternoon, Andrew, only and beloved son of Sr. Mary B. Hoffman. He was born in Jasper county, Missouri, May 16th, 1867, and was at his death, aged 20 years, 5 months and 26 days. Of him his mother says: "He was a kind, loving son and an affectionate brother."

MILLOTTE.—At Armourdale, Kansas, October 6th, 1887, Sr. Caroline Millotte. She was born July 23d, 1833, at Cincinnati, Ohio, was baptized June 15th, 1880, at Wyandotte, Kansas, by elder Wm. Newton, and confirmed by Elder George Hayward. Our dear sister lived and died firm in the faith of the latter day work; and just before she departed she called her husband and children to her bedside and told them she was going to Jesus, and bore as her last testimony, that the work was true, exhorting her husband to be faithful and her children to come into the church. Funeral sermon by Elder George Hicklin.

MILLOTTE.—At Armourdale, Kansas, August 29th, 1886, John Henry Millotte. He was born June 29th, 1869, at Lanark, Ontario; was baptized and confirmed August 5th, 1886, at Armstrong, Kansas, by Willard J. Smith. Funeral sermon by Elder George Hicklin.

A GENTLEMAN.

WHAT is it to be a gentleman? It is to have lofty aims, to lead a pure life, to keep your honor virgin, to have the esteem of your fellow citizens and the love of your fireside, to bear good fortune meekly, to suffer evil with constancy, and through evil and good to maintain the truth always. Show me the happy man whose life exhibits these qualities and him we will salute as a gentleman, whatever his rank in life may be. Show me the prince who possesses them and he may be sure of our love and loyalty.

TWO ABUSED CLASSES OF WOMEN.

THERE is the much abused mother-in-law. Why will not some one champion her cause? The most amiable of women become mothers-in-law, and certainly do not change their nature because of that relation. If young couples would adopt the sensible plan of forming independent homes, however humble, there would be very little trouble on that score. But under any circumstances, there is no basis for one-tenth of the cheap wit about the mothers of our wives. Turn a little light on the conduct of sons-in-law for a change.

Then there are the old maids, the best abused members of the community. They fill a unique place of usefulness. And lots of them are handsome, too. We could not get along without them. Many a man is ready to give three hurrahs for the old maids.

MINISTERIAL NEEDS OF CITY AND COUNTRY.

In this issue will be found an excellent practical article from the pen of Bro. W. R. Sellon, on the ministerial needs of city and country—in contrast. It is a matter noted by all intelligent persons of experience that ministers well fitted for the country and small towns and having first class success there are failures in large towns and cities—failing to attract and hold attention to the message they bear, and, as a consequence failing in making conversions and building up the church. These are stubborn facts and as such demand that the church see to it that its ministry are put to work in such fields as they are fitted for. All may find fields adapted to their capacities and qualifications, but when assigned to what they are not qualified for, they become disappointed and disheartened, the people to whom they are sent form unfavorable opinions of them and their message, become disgusted and hardened, the church suffers and the work of Christ is unhonored if not dishonored. When the minister is every way qualified to serve those for whom he ministers, then it is that "the right man is in the right place;" the minister is suited to the people and the people to the minister.

It should excite neither pride nor self-conceit on the one hand; nor envy nor jealousy on the other, where these differences exist in respect to ministerial qualifications. If Bro. "A." is educated, gifted, spiritual and attractive, in the name of heaven, humanity and good common sense, put him where he will do the most good with his "ten talents," and let every child of God say "Amen!" And if Bro. "B." has far less qualifications, put him where he can use his "one talent" to good advantage, and then let the minister of "ten talents," with all the Israel of God, shout "Amen!" and lovingly uphold, encourage and sustain him in his worthy labors. This is honoring every man in his place—his work—and rejoicing with love in his success. This, too, is honoring the Master. But if we fail to honor those whom Christ chooses, however humble their mission field, we thereby dishonor God and cast contempt on Christ.

The hand is not the head; the ear is not the eye; the foot is not the tongue; the belly is not the brain. Each of these are essential in their own place; and in their own place they can and should afford aid and give harmony and success to all other parts of the body. But when we demand of them what they are not ordained and qualified for, failure and disappointment follow, the entire body suffers and all that is in any way connected with it.

Put ministers to labor in the cities who are well fitted therefore; send those to the country who are qualified for it; and when this is done, let ministerial pride and vanity, envy and jealousy be kept from the heart of all, and great success will follow, with joy and gladness.

MORMONS IN MISSOURI.

HEREWITH we present our readers with another article from the pen of "Burr Joyce" in respect to the Mormon troubles and persecutions in Missouri, published in the St. Louis, (Mo.) Globe-Democrat for December 25th, 1887; and while we admire the thoroughness and honesty with which he treats these matters, we shall take occasion to correct him on some points, explain others, and give further light on still others; for now that the subject is being so fully treated in one of the best and most popular papers in America, we think the opportunity should be used in setting forth the exact facts in the case so far as we can. We recognize the overruling hand of God in the discussion of this subject just now when so many important changes for good are transpiring in our church affairs, and in respect to matters of religion throughout the wide world; and we hail all this with delight and as being prophetic of good to the Zion of God and to all who love truth and righteousness. These times are travailing with wonderful events touching the designs and purposes of God, and we should seek to read them aright.

"THE EARLY FIGHTS FOLLOWING THE GALLATIN ELECTION.

"USELESS APPEALS TO STATE AUTHORITY.

"INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Dec. 23d, 1887.—The hostility of the people of Jackson county toward the Mormons and Mormonism has been noted and described in previous numbers of the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT. In time this hostility existed in every county wherein the "Saints" had settled, save in Clay. Ray county hated them, Carroll detested them, Daviess declared war against them, and the few Caldwell county Gentiles shared the common sentiment of detestation, and condemned the "reservation," arrangement which permitted their permanent occupation of the county.

"It may not be generally known, but it is nevertheless a fact, as can be shown, that the ill-feeling against the Mormons on the part of the Missourians was largely due to religious prejudice. At that date the religionists of the country were very conservative. Indeed toward any new doctrine that radically controverted their own ideas they were proscriptive and intolerant. Alexander Campbell and his followers, who were then called "New Lights," were regarded by many church members with about as much disfavor as Joe Smith and the Mormons, and because Sidney Rigdon had originally been Campbell's chief lieutenant in certain campaigns against the Baptists, it was charged and believed that 'Mormonism, is but Campbellism gone to seed.' Many respectable Protestant ministers regarded Mormonism and Catholicism with equal abhorrence, and did not hesitate to denounce from their pulpits the one doctrine as Antichrist and the other as the "Scarlet Woman of Babylon," and both as abominations in the sight of the Lord.

"WHY THE MORMONS WERE OBNOXIOUS.

"Very many of the Mormon elders had formerly been ministers in various Protestant denominations, and were well informed in the current theology, and besides were experienced speakers, and skilled and accomplished debaters and controversialists. Their favorite pastime was to challenge to a debate the pioneer ministers of the country, who, as a rule, were illiterate, and who were athletic and powerful rather than argumentative and persuasive, and sought to accomplish by volume of voice and violence of gesture what ought to be attained by reason and logic. In every debate the pioneer preachers were badly worsted, so badly at times that they retired from the contest, not with grace, but in great irritation and exasperation and vowing revenge. They then went about the country claiming that Mormonism was of the devil, and that its advocates ought not to be given a hearing.

"The Mormon preachers, too, were successful in making converts and proselytes among the pioneers, and this gave great offense. When a member of a Gentile family became a 'Mormonite' there was a row in the household. And there was many a row so occasioned. Fathers left their families, wives abandoned their husbands, sons and daughters ran away from their parents, to become Mormons and follow the fortunes of the new Prophet. Ofttimes, it is quite probable, the Mormon emissaries used unfair means to effect their purposes, and some of them, like the Lothario, Parley P. Pratt, were guilty of actual crime in the division of families and the disturbance of households.

"Stories came to be told of the conduct and faith of the Mormons calculated to increase the ill-feeling against them. Some of their speakers had declared from time to time that 'the earth is the Lord's' and that he had set apart certain portions of it in Missouri for his 'Saints,' and that in time he would deliver over to them the whole world. These declarations were misquoted and distorted to the effect that the Mormons claimed all of the country then, and regarded the Gentile settlers only as so many intruders and trespassers whom they ment to dispossess of their property at the earliest opportunity, peaceably if they could, forcibly if necessary. Even to this day the preposterous assertion is made that the Mormons claimed a right to seize upon all the property in the world as lawful spoil. Another charge made against the Mormons had more or less truth in it. As they had come mostly from the free States, and as in all their ranks not one of them owned a slave, it was alleged that they were Abolitionists, and at that day in Missouri to stigmatize a man as an Abolitionist was to heap upon him the sum of opprobrious epithets.

"COMPLAINTS AGAINST THE GENTILES.

"On the part of the Mormons it was claimed that the only cause of complaint against them was that they had come into a new country, subdued the wilderness, and opened up to cultivation fine fertile farms which their Gentile neighbors coveted and desired to obtain at low prices, or at no price at all; that certain charges of theft and robbery against them were wholly false; that the Gentiles themselves were the thieves and robbers, and had frequently taken and converted to their own use the property of their Mormon neighbors, alleging that, in cases of certain horses and cattle seized, the animals had trespassed upon them; that in a few instances the Mormons had taken, by way of reprisal, some horses and cattle and held them until certain other Mormon property taken by the Gentiles had been restored, but that even these latter proceedings had been condemned by the authorities of the Church and would not be repeated; that the Gentiles were intolerant, insulting, and brutal in their conduct, and frequently assaulted and beat the Mormons without any provocation, and let no occasion pass without mistreating them, and that they even grossly insulted and abused the women and girls."

That there were ample grounds for many of the foregoing complaints against the Anti-Mormons is seen in the fact that, as a body, the latter were driven by mob violence from their homes and property in Jackson county in November, 1833, the officers of the law not only failing to protect or redress the Mormons, but actually aiding and abetting the mobbers. Besides this, after the location of the Saints in Caldwell county, the spirit of speculation prevailed largely, followed by envy and jealousy, lust for place, wealth, and official power, resulting in the disfellowshipping of a number of the leading men of the church in that region, on regular charge and trial, among whom were David and John Whitmer, W. W. Phelps, O. Cowdery, Doctor McCord and Wm. E. McLellin, etc. The latter, in the Bishop's Court where he was tried, alleged that "the heads of the church. . . had transgressed." But when interrogated by President Joseph Smith on that point, he said, "he had seen nothing out of the way himself, but he judged from hearsay," (Millennial Star 16: 151), forgetting that "hearsay" had filled the world with falsehood, bitterness, wrath and violence from time immemorial.

How far those who left the church may have incited persecution intentionally, or unintentionally, we can not well decide at this time; but very grievous things have been charged against some of them, especially Wm. E. McLellin, W. W. Phelps and Orson Hyde. One thing is certain, however, that from this time forward persecution raged as never before, until 15,000 men women and children were driven from Missouri, in great destitution, in the winter of 1839, to the state of Illinois.

"THE FIRST COLLISION.

"The first collision on the north side of the river occurred in Daviess county. At the August election, 1838, a riot occurred at Gallatin, then a hamlet of half a dozen log houses. There was something of a contest for Representative. One of the candidates had contrived to catch the Mormon vote, and his opponents saw that if he received this, their man would be defeated. Whereupon it was asserted that the Mormons should not vote, and this inhibition and virtual disfranchisement was subsequently extended to 'Mormon sympathizers.' At that day (and until 1863) voting in Missouri was the viva voce method. The voters formed in line and approached the polls by turns and announced their preferences 'by word of mouth.' On this occasion Gallatin was a polling-place. The Mormons came in force and the Gentiles were present in considerable strength. It was plain that there would be trouble before the day was over. By and by it came. A Gentile said:

"No d—d Mormon ought to be allowed to vote."

"A Mormon responded:

"No man ought to be allowed to vote that can't read and write."

"Whereupon the Gentile, with a blow from the butt end of a heavy wagon whip, knocked the Mormon down."

"It was worse than the most successful fair ever held at Donnybrook. A citizen had piled upon the ground near by a lot of rough palings for a fence about his garden. The Mormons seized these and made vigorous use of them. Several shots were fired, and in the end two Gentiles were killed and half a dozen badly wounded. No Mormons were seriously injured. Each side claimed that the other was the aggressor, and both parties armed themselves. A sort of guerrilla warfare was kept up in the county for some weeks. The Gentile people of Daviess and Livingston sent messengers to Gov. Boggs with petitions for the removal of the Mormons from the State. A number of the Gentiles citizens assembled at Millport, on Grand River, early in September and perfected a semi-military organization. From time to time they raided the Mormons, seized some of their property, tied up and whipped some of the men and threatened many others with death."

Who would not have resisted under these circumstances! The right of suffrage is dear to every true American! And when these anti-Mormons sought to wrest this right from the Saints, who were chiefly native born Americans, and largely from the eastern and middle states, it is not at all surprising that the latter indignantly resisted. And, measured by the standards of patriotism and good citizenship, they could not have done less than resisted, though we may not fully justify them by the gospel of Christ.

Of this wretched affair the church historian give us the following:

"Judge Morin, who lived at Mill Port, informed John D. Lee and Levi Stewart, that it was determined by 'the mob' to prevent the 'Mormons' from voting at the election on the sixth day of August, and thereby elect Colonel William P. Peniston, who led the mob in Clay county. He also advised them to go prepared for an attack, to stand their ground, and have their rights.

"The brethren, hoping better things, gave little heed to Judge Morin's friendly counsel, and repaired to the polls at Gallatin, the shire town of Daviess county, without weapons.

"About eleven o'clock a. m., William P. Peniston ascended the head of a barrel, and harangued the electors for the purpose of exciting them against the 'Mormons,' saying that the 'Mormon' leaders were a set of horse thieves, liars, counterfeiters, &c.; 'and you know they profess to heal the sick, cast out devils, &c.; and you know that is a d—d lie;' that the members of the church were dupes, and not too good to take a false oath on any common occasion; that they would steal, and he did not conceive property safe where they were; that he was opposed to their settling there; and if they suffered the 'Mormons' to vote, the people would soon lose their suffrage; 'and,' said he, addressing the Saints, 'I headed a mob to drive you out of Clay county, and would not prevent your being mobbed now;' when Richard (called Dick) Welding, the mob bully, just drunk enough for the occasion, began a discussion with brother Samuel Brown, by saying 'the Mormons were not allowed to vote in Clay county, no more than the d—d negroes,' and attempted to strike Brown, who gradually retreated, parrying the blow with his umbrella, while Welding continued to press upon him, calling him a d—d liar, &c., and attempting to repeat the blow on Brown.

"Perry Durphy attempted to suppress the difficulty by holding Dick's arm, when five or six of the mobbers seized Durphy and commenced beating him with clubs, boards, &c., and crying, 'Kill him, kill him, G—d d—n him, kill him,' when a general scuffle commenced with fists and clubs, the mobbers being about ten to one of the Saints. Abraham Nelson was knocked down, and had his clothes torn off, and while trying to get up was attacked again, when his brother, Hiram Nelson, ran in amongst them, and knocked the mobbers down with the butt of his whip. Riley Stewart struck Dick Welding on the head, which brought him to the ground. The mob cried out, 'Dick Weldin's dead, by G—d; who killed Dick?' And they fell upon Riley, knocked him down, kicked him, and hallooed, 'Kill him, G—d d—n him, kill him; shoot him, by G—d,' and would have killed him; had not John L. Butler sprung in amongst them and knocked them down. During about five minutes it was one continued knock down, when the mob dispersed to get fire arms.

"Very few of the brethren voted. Riley, escaping across the river, had his wounds dressed, and returned home.

"Butler called the brethren together and made a speech, saying, 'We are American citizens; our fathers fought for their liberty, and we will maintain the same principles,' &c.; when the authorities of the county came to them, and requested them to withdraw, stating that it was a premeditated thing to prevent the 'Mormons' voting.

"The brethren held a Council about one-fourth of a mile out of town, where they saw mobbing recruits coming in, in small parties, from five and ten, to twenty-five in number, armed with clubs, pistols, dirks, knives, and some guns, cursing and swearing.

"The brethren not having arms, thought it wisdom to return to their farms, collect their families, and hide them in a thicket of hazel brush, which they did, and stood sentry around them through the night, while the women and children lay on the ground in the rain.

"Tuesday morning, 7th.—A report came to Far West, by way of those not belonging to the church, that at the election at Gallatin, yesterday, two or three of our brethren were killed by the Missourians, and left upon the ground, and not suffered to be interred; that the brethren were prevented from voting, and a majority of the inhabitants of Daviess county were determined to drive the Saints from the county.

"On hearing this report, I started for Gallatin, to assist the brethren, accompanied by President Rigdon, brother Hyrum Smith, and fifteen or twenty others, who were armed for their own protection; and the command was given to George W. Robinson.

"On our way we were joined by the brethren from different parts of the country, some of whom were attacked by the mob, but we all reached Colonel Wight's that night in safety, where we found some of the brethren who had been mobbed at Gallatin, with others, waiting for our counsel. Here we received the cheering intelligence that none of the brethren were killed, although several were badly wounded.

"From the best information, about one hundred and fifty Missourians warred against from six to twelve of our brethren, who fought like lions. Several Missourians had their skulls cracked. Blessed be the memory of those few brethren who contended so strenuously for their constitutional rights and religious freedom, against such an overwhelming force of desperadoes."—Mill. Star, vol. 16, p. 222, 229.

"GEN. ATCHISON'S UNWILLING PROTECTION.

"The Mormons now complained. Dispatching messages to Gen. D. R. Atchison, at Liberty, the General of the militia district, and to Hon. Austin A. King, at Richmond, the Judge of the Court for that judicial circuit, they invoked both civil and military assistance and protection. Gen. Atchison returned with the messengers to Daviess county. He first visited the Mormons at Adam-ondi-Ahmon, and then the Gentiles at Millport. He found and reported the facts substantially as they had been narrated—that the Gentile citizens of Daviess county, to the number of 250 or 300, were assembled in a hostile attitude and threatening the Mormons with 'utter extermination;' that many outrages had already been perpetrated; and that the Mormons had settled in the county with the full assent of the resident citizens at the time, and had purchased and paid for thousands of acres of lands on which they had established their homes.

"Gen. Atchison hastily returned to Clay and ordered out detachments of the militia of his division to proceed to Daviess county to protect the Mormons and to preserve the peace generally. Perhaps 500 militia marched to Adam-ondi-Ahmon. Among these were some companies from Carroll and Saline, who did not belong to Atchison's division, and who marched up Grand river, encamping the first night in Daviess near the old block house on Splawn's ridge, east of Gallatin, near Millport, and the next night at 'Diamon.' Although the troops were sent out to protect the Mormons, they were largely in sympathy with their enemies, and had there been a fight would most certainly have taken sides with the latter. Gen. Atchison saw this and determined to march his men away as soon as a fair semblance of peace could be observed. He remained in camp a few days near 'Diamon,' and then marched his troops away, fearing every hour that they would break from his control and unite with those they had come to put down. The discipline was very imperfect, and Gen. Atchison was compelled to practice deception upon his men to get them away. They clamored to be led against the Mormons, and an attack on Diamon had been arranged between some of them and the Gentile citizens. Gen. Atchison broke camp after dark and caused it to be reported that he was moving by a circuitous route upon the Mormon position. Not until the militia had marched some miles in the direction of their homes did they discover that they were being marched away instead of toward the Mormons. Atchison wrote to Col. Lyman Wight, commanding the Mormons, a brief note of explanation.

"'You are better off without me than with me,' said the General. 'I have no advice to give you,' he added. 'I may suggest, however, that self-preservation is the first law of nature, and self-defense is a good defense in cases of homicide.'

"A GUERRILLA WARFARE.

"Even before Gen. Atchison had fairly left the country the troubles in Daviess broke out afresh. Numbers of the Mormons in that county were from Kentucky and Tennessee, and would fight. Lyman Wight called out every Mormon man and boy capable of carrying and handling a gun. The 'Prophet' sent up a re-enforcement of fifty men under Capt. Seymour Bronson. One of the armed Mormons here was the notorious John D. Lee, executed a few years since for the leading part he took in the Mountain Meadows massacre.

"Both Mormons and Gentiles flew to arms, and armed bands roamed about over Daviess, Caldwell and a portion of Livingston counties. The burning of houses, barns and stacks was indulged in by both parties. The village of Gallatin, containing half a dozen houses and two stores, was sacked and burned by the Mormons, who finally chased out the hostile Gentiles and became masters of the county. In his 'Confession' John D. Lee says:

'Joseph Smith declared on this occasion that it was a civil war, and that by the rules of war each party was justified in spoiling his enemy. * * * We took what property we could find, especially provisions, fat cattle, arms and ammunition. The Mormons brought in every article that could be used, and much that was of no use or value was hauled to Adam-ondi-Ahmon.'

"An exploit of the Mormons about this time was rather notable. The Gentiles had brought up from DeWitt, in Carroll county, a 9-pound cannon, which had been employed against the Mormons at that place, and this was to be taken to Millport for use against the Mormons at 'Diamon.' But the cannon had reached only the 'forks' of Grand River, near Chillicothe, when the escort were informed that the Gentiles had been driven out of Daviess, and that they had come too late to be of service. Accordingly the cannon was dismounted and buried at Marcus White's, near Utica, to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy. But in a few days a company of Mormons came down from Daviess, found the cannon, dug it up and remounted it, took nine Gentiles prisoners, and returned in triumph to 'Diamon.' The ammunition was secured and some of the balls thrown into a wagon. One of the cannoniers, Ira Glaize, a Carroll county man, was made to bestride the piece and ride it into Diamon. At the crossing of Grand River one of the prisoners threw a number of the cannon balls into the water. All the prisoners were released on parole not to serve against the Mormons during the 'war.'

Intelligent, fair-minded people who read this will readily see how it was possible for John D. Lee and others to take part in the horrible Mountain Meadow massacre. Human nature, unaided by the grace of God, will not forever endure repeated insults and injuries to themselves and families and friends, and that, too, when ignored, insulted or aided by civil officers, and not resist and retaliate. In the repeated fiery persecutions heaped upon the Saints, and in the repeated failures of civil rulers to protect them in their rights and redress their wrongs when earnestly and patiently sought for, may be seen the procuring causes that led to the development of such characters as John D. Lee, Bill Hickman, Porter Rockwell, etc, etc, and also to the un-Christian, un-American spirit that has marked many of those called to be Saints since those trying times. We can not, and do not wish to justify any un-Christian, un-American deed done by any Latter Day Saint; but we would not have the people, either in or out of the church, ignorant of the real causes that led the Saints to resist evil and perpetrate wrongs. It was not the doctrines taught in their sacred books, but the violation of those doctrines when placed under trying temptations that caused them to resist.

"Burr Joyce," by his series of articles on the Mormon troubles in Missouri, is conferring a vast amount of good upon the Saints, and upon humanity at large by faithfully hunting out facts and bravely presenting them for public consideration. Very few persons, in view of what is presented from the first by "Burr Joyce" will condemn Joseph Smith and the Saints for standing in defense of themselves and families and property, seeing there was no aid given them by those holding civil authority. Goaded to desperation from time to time without any just cause, the civil and military authorities either unwilling or impotent to protect or redress them, the Saints had either to quietly submit to insult and outrage, or resist and take the consequences. And while we do not claim that in this they rose up to the exalted plane of pure Christianity, certain it is they exhibited a great degree of lofty manhood and American patriotism; and the centuries to come will look with compassion upon the Mormons of those times and cheerfully extenuate their faults and shortcomings.¶

"WARLIKE PREPARATIONS.

"Meantime the Mormons in Caldwell county had been preparing for the conflict. The regiment of militia mustered, and Lyman Wight came down and assumed command. A company of 'Danites,' or 'Destroying Angels,' was formed of the bravest and best men for special service. Some good arms were secured for this company, but by far the majority of the Mormons were armed only with their ordinary hunting rifles and fowling pieces. The Mormon regiment in Caldwell numbered 600 or 700 men. Fanciful titles were given the leaders, Capt. David Patton, of the Danites, was called 'Capt. Fear-Naught,' Col. Geo. W. Hinkle was designated 'The Thunderbolt,' and Lyman Wight 'The Intrepid.' The Mormons paraded and drilled frequently. There was a pretense that all this mustering was but to assist the Sheriff of Caldwell county, as a sort of posse in the preservation of the public peace, pursuant to law.

"Troubles thickened and multiplied. Down in Carroll county, the citizens, under Col. W. W. Austin, attempted the expulsion of the 600 Mormons at DeWitt, under Hinkle. At the August election a vote was taken to decide whether or not they should be allowed to remain, and it was practically unanimous that they should not. In time, the citizens were re-enforced by their neighbors from Ray, Clay, Jackson, Saline, Howard and Chariton, and DeWitt was regularly besieged for two or three days. Congreve Jackson was elected a Brigadier General commanding the forces. September 21st, the Mormons (who, in the meantime, had been re-enforced by a company from Far West, led by Col. Lyman Wight), surrendered and agreed to leave the county. The citizens paid them back the money they had given for the town site, allowing nothing for buildings or other improvements, and the Mormons, wretched and miserable, and stripped of nearly all their earthly possessions, left for Caldwell county, many families, even women and children, making the journey on foot.

"Capt. Samuel Bogart, with his company of Ray county 'Patrols,' had been scouting through the country, occasionally encountering a few Mormons, whom he invariably drove from his county into Caldwell. He sent word to the Mormon militia at Far West that he was coming up in a few days to 'clean them out.' News came a few days later that Bogart was on his way into Caldwell at the head of a strong, well-armed company, and Capt. David Patton was sent down from Far West with his company of fifty men to repel the invaders. Capt. Patton was a 'Danite,' and was known among his brethren as Capt. 'Fear Not.' Arriving at the southern boundary of the county, he learned that Bogart and his company were encamped on Crooked River, in the north-western part of Ray county, two miles south-east of the present village of Lisbonville, and he resolved to attack them suddenly, and if possible, surprise them.

"THE BATTLE OF CROOKED RIVER.

"Creeping silently down the Crooked River Valley, keeping in the timber and under cover, the Mormons made a night march and arrived at the Gentile position before daylight, on the morning of October 25th. Just as the dawn appeared, or rather just before it appeared, the Mormons sprang suddenly upon the Gentile camp. Capt. Patton, in front of his company, and wearing a white blanket overcoat, was the first enemy seen. Calling out in trumpet tones the old Jewish battle cry, 'The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!' and then shouting, 'Charge, Danites! Charge!' he bravely rushed forward upon his enemy. So conspicuous a target was soon hit. A ball entered his body, passing through the hips and cutting the bladder. But he kept on his feet and continued to lead his men for some time before yielding to the effects of his wound, calling out almost with every breath, 'Charge, Danites!'

"The Gentiles, who numbered but thirty-six men, were completely routed and driven from the field in a few minutes. They fought bravely and effectively, but could not withstand the sudden and impetuous attack which was made upon them, and Capt. Bogart led them off in the direction of Elkhorn, but finally fell back to the southern part of the county. The Mormons did not pursue, owing chiefly to the fall of their leader, whose death had a demoralizing effect upon them chiefly because they had deemed him invincible, as he had repeatedly declared that he could not be killed.

"In this engagement the Mormons lost Capt. Patton and two men named Patrick O'Bannon and Gideon Carter, killed, and James Holbrook and another man wounded. In the dark the latter fought by mistake, and cut up one another with their corn knives, or 'swords,' as they called them, very severely. Capt. Bogart's Gentiles lost Moses Rowland, killed, and Thomas H. Loyd, Edwin Odell, James Lockard, Martin Dunnaway, Samuel Tarwater and Wyatt Craven, wounded.

"MISSOURI'S PENSIONER.

"Two Mormons attacked Tarwater with corn knives and nearly cut him to pieces. He received a terrible gash in the skull, through which his brain was plainly visible; one terrible blow across the face severed the jaw bone and destroyed all the upper teeth, and there was an ugly gash made in his neck. He kept his bed six months, and his wounds considerably affected his speech and his memory. Mr. Tarwater is yet alive, and resides near Orrick, Ray county. Since 1840 he has drawn a pension from the State of Missouri of $100 per year for the wounds and disability he received in the Crooked River fight. He is the only pensioner paid by the State. Wyatt Craven was living a year or two ago near Crab Orchard, Ray county. He was taken prisoner early in the fight, but released after the Mormons had started on their return to the Far West, and told to go home. He was walking away when he was fired on by Parley P. Pratt, prominent among the Twelve Apostles, and wounded and left for dead.

"The Danites carried Capt. Patton back to Far West with them the day of the fight. That night he died. His death cast a gloom over the entire community. It robbed many of the fond belief that the Saints were invincible and supernaturally protected. 'If Capt. Fear Not can be killed,' asked some in consternation, 'who can claim immunity from the Gentile weapons of death?' Joseph Smith reassured them. He preached the funeral sermon of Patton in the hall of Far West and told his people, to the astonishment of many, that the Mormons fell by the missiles of death the same as other men! He also declared that the Lord was angry with the people, for they had been unbelieving and faithless, and had denied his servants the free use of their earthly treasures.

"BURR JOYCE."

The "Danites" were organized to aid in defending the Saints against the mobbers, but afterwards their leader, Dr. Avard, sought to make of them a marauding band, and succeeded in doing so in a measure.

Col. Geo. M. Hinkle was an officer in the Militia of Missouri, and so also was Lyman Wight, and others, for they had organized under the laws of the State and so reported to their superior officers from time to time.

Capt. Samuel Bogart was a Methodist minister. The late Jacob Wirick, of East Paw Paw, Dekalb county, Illinois, stated to the writer in 1856, that this same Bogart just before the battle of Crooked River came to his house and ordered him to join his band and go against the Mormons. This Mr. Wirick refused to do, when Bogart threatened to annihilate him and his family. It is said on good authority that this same Bogart was hanged in Texas, for murder, prior to 1860.

That the Mormons caused some of their persecutions none may deny; but that the Missourian's had no just grounds for persecuting them, "Burr Joyce" has made conclusive.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. John Pett, of Dow City, Iowa, in a letter dated December 30th, says:

"As the years roll by and time is fast waning we see the word of the Lord fulfilling. This increases our faith and hope and gives us encouragement, and we sometimes wonder that the world of mankind does not see and understand the signs of the times as we see them, after being so repeatedly and clearly warned in regard to them. But as a snare shall it come upon all that dwell upon the face of the whole earth.' So says the Savior of the time when he shall come. May we all be ready."

Bro. I. P. Titus, of Alpena, Michigan, renews for the HERALD, and says:

"I am well pleased with the Herald and do not wish to do without it; for as the cooling brook is to the thirsty roe, so is good news from a far country."

Bro. E. Keeler wrote from Twin Falls, Kansas, January 3d, and says:

"I am preaching every Sunday, and am opening some new places; am having good audiences and good attention, the Spirit working with me; a number are investigating and some, I think, will obey."

THE Colfax Clipper and the Newton Journal, both of Iowa, speak in high terms of Bro. W. E. Coiner. The latter has this to say:

"W. E. Coiner, Esq. the prominent and enterprising prescription clerk, at Skiff's Pharmacy, severs his connection with that firm about January 1st, to accept a similar position in a drug establishment at Pasadena, California. Mr. Coiner during his five years as a business man in our midst has gained the confidence and esteem of the entire community, and we can cheerfully recommend him to the people of his new home as a first class pharmacist and an exemplary young man."

IGNORING POLYGAMY.

BRO. FRANK HACKETT, of North Freedom, Wisconsin, in a letter dated December 31st, says:

"My uncle is here from Utah. . . . I see the Utah elders are calculated to deceive the people, for they say they are only to preach the gospel of Christ, and that that is enough to save any one. That being so, then what do they want of polygamy?"

Bro. Frank, please don't forget that the Utah Mormons have been educated, largely, by "that fox"—the cunning, crafty Brigham Young, and his like. There is no telling what artful dodges they may take in order to elude detection and mislead the unwary and confiding. While we are well aware that there are many noble people among the Utah Mormons, we are also aware that from 1844 some of their leaders, and some of the rank and file of that people, have done as much "twisting and turning" as they were capable of. It is not at all astonishing that some of these who have said that a belief in and practice of plural marriage was so essential that, to disbelieve in it and reject it, "damned" all those who did so, and that they now say nothing in favor of that "abomination," but teach that "any one can be saved by the gospel of Christ." The Almighty is rebuking such deceivers, and their end is destruction except they repent.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ELDER JOHN SHIPPY wrote us from Chase, Lake county, Michigan, December 30th, that he had been actively engaged preaching there at Hersey, Bay Port, and other points, has had full congregations, good liberty, good attention, many are investigating, some are believing, and a few have offered for baptism soon. He speaks in high terms of the conference of late at Bay Port and of the ministrations of Brn. W. H. Kelley, J. J. Cornish and others. Having a pressing invitation to return to his former home in Canada and labor there, he will probably spend some time in that field. He requests the Saints to pray for the recovery of Bro. George Cleveland, who has been prostrated with sickness. Bro. Shippy says his mind was never stronger nor his memory clearer than now, and that he is fully resolved to ever present himself a living sacrifice to God. His address for the next week or two will be Hersey, Michigan.

Father John Landers, nearly ninety-four years of age, both delighted and instructed his congregation in the Saints' Church at this place last Sunday with a timely, logical, and very spiritual sermon. He spoke extempore, for nearly forty minutes, and his mind seemed as clear and his voice as strong at the close as when he began. The chief points of his sermon were the need of humble hearts and faithful lives in order to prevail with God and with man. Father Landers and wife have been members of the church about fifty years and passed through the persecutions heaped upon the Saints in Missouri in 1838-9, and at Nauvoo in 1844 and after. We hope they may live yet many years.

President Joseph Smith wrote January 1st and 2d that he preached twice in the Saints' chapel in Salt Lake City on Sunday, the 1st instant. The congregation at two p. m. was not large, but attentive and interested. At night the congregation was full, the attention and interest excellent.

President Smith states that he was greeted most cordially by the members of the church and some non-members, also that some of the prominent members of the Utah Church met him kindly, both in Ogden and Salt Lake City, some of whom listened to his sermons with due attention.

Bro. E. M. Beach informs the readers of the HERALD that in his immediate neighborhood (Flora Vista, New Mexico,) there are vast beds of gypsum of superior quality. Of this Plaster Paris is made. He thinks enterprising parties can develop it with profit. His address is Aztec, New Mexico.

We are requested to say that the first edition of Autumn Leaves has been exhausted for some days. Number two will be mailed about the 15th. Parties sending in new names are requested to keep a list of all new ones sent until called for by the editor in order to award the prizes offered in number one. The February number will be sent to all whose names have been sent in requesting a copy.

Persons sending for the Cowdery letters, bound, will need to be patient, for the first issue was exhausted some days ago. A new issue will be ready in a day or two and orders for them will be filled in due time. There is a great demand for these letters, and we are pleased to know that people both in and out of the church are eager to get the facts in respect to the rise, organization and progress of the church as given by one both competent and authorized to give them. Tradition, and "hearsay," must give place to recorded facts when given by qualified, reliable parties.

Bro. Adam Best, in a letter dated at Holyoke, Massachusetts, January 1st, sends some aid for the ministry, and expresses excellent wishes and hopes for the progress and triumph of the church of God, and desires the prayers of the Saints.

Bro. John S. Lawton, of Independence, Missouri, writes feelingly and encouragingly in a late letter as to his faith and knowledge and hopes in Christ.

We are pleased to note that the Lamoni Gazette now comes to us enlarged, improved, brimfull of pluck and energy, and giving good promise of continuing a clean, newsy paper, and of growing in size, excellence and importance. Its editors are competent, reliable gentlemen, full of enterprise, and we confidently expect them to keep their journal fully up to the demands of the times.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"The more solitary, the more friendless, the more unsustained I am, the more I will respect and rely upon myself."—Charlotte Bronte

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Amelia Morgan of Sigel, writes:—"I know that this gospel is true and I rejoice that I was ever led to obey it, and I can from my own experience testify that the gifts and blessings do follow the believer therein. I want to honor the Master's cause. I am only fifteen year old."

Grandma Holden of St. Joseph, Missouri, writes:—"When I look back on the past I am lost in wonder. The Lord has been my protector through dangers seen and unseen. My life was spared from the flames of a burning ship on the mighty deep; from the hands of the cruel savage on the lonesome plains, and from a watery grave. Even in my old age his loving kindness is still about me and he raises up kind friends to comfort me. Time is passing away. Days, months and years drop from us like the leaves from the trees. The rose fades from the cheek and thy eye grows dim, but His loving kindness and mercy knows no end."

Sister Jane A. Way, of Audobon, Minnesota, writes:—"My family is large and like Martha of old I am cumbered with many cares. The Herald is our only preacher, and I always try to get time enough to read the sisters letters myself as I enjoy it much more than when they are read for me. The rest of the Herald my husband reads to me when I am busy about my work. My mother was a valiant soldier in this latter day work, and though it was always her lot to labor hard, she was never too tired to stand as a witness for our blessed Savior and testify of the truth of this work. Dear sisters, I have proven that God is willing to help us in bearing the every day wearying cares of life if we only ask him. Often when the cares of life have pressed me sorely and I have almost despaired, these blessed words would flash through my mind, 'Do not be discouraged, take it to the Lord in prayer,' and when I have done this I have always found help and strength and relief from the care-worn feeling, and be able to perform my duties cheerfully. We have to go fifteen miles to meeting, but never go without being richly repaid and feeling to sing on our way home,

"We must never cease the conflict
Till the summons home be heard;
We have all for life enlisted
In the army of the Lord."

We have just returned from the conference which convened at Girard and was one of the best I ever attended."

Sister M. J. Murphy of Kit Carson, Colorado, writes:—"We are living three miles west of the little town of Carson on the U. P. Railroad, and if any of the Saints should chance to come this way we will welcome them most cordially. We are trying to hold fast to the rod of iron and follow on to victory. We have six small children and pray for God's help to be enabled to bring them up in the knowledge of the gospel of the Son of God. I know that the work is his and he will lead on from victory to victory; but only those who persevere to the end shall wear the crown."

Sr. R. Stephens of Paris, Tennessee, writes:—"I was baptized and confirmed a member of the church by Elder John H. Hansen on the 25th of October, 1874, and am stronger in the faith now than then, and my prayer is that I may grow stronger and stronger until that which is perfect is come."

Sr. Martha Nelson of Shiocton, Wisconsin, writes:—"It has been a long while since we have seen a Saint as none have been here since Bro. Wait left. We have a pamphlet that was written in a dungeon by P. P. Pratt, telling how they were driven out of Missouri. There is no church here now, not even a Sunday School, and if the elders were only here they would have it all their own way. My mother was a good Christian and Saint. She died the 27th day of September, 1886. We will try and send for the Herald soon again, as it is all the comfort we have."

[Will some of the Saints who have offered back numbers of the Herald please notice this?—Ed.]

EAST DENNIS, Mass., Nov. 29th.

Dear Sister Frances:—At the age of sixteen I was led to feel that I was a sinner and in need of a change by which I might be accepted of Jesus my Savior at his coming. I was always taught to fear God. I went forward for prayers at a revival meeting and at the close felt, as many others do, that I had done all I could, and that my sins were forgiven (by obeying the doctrines of men) and as I was honest at heart, was blessed by my heavenly Father; so I followed on (some times almost giving up and sometimes feeling a portion of his Holy Spirit) for ten long years. I feel while writing, Oh that those ten years had been spent faithfully in the service of the gospel of Christ, how far advanced I might have been. I lived in a place at that time with two of the Saints about my own age; (sisters now); they often spoke of their belief and their desire for me to hear and obey it; but as I was taught so differently by my parents, I thought their belief was good enough, so I did not heed; but many times I desired to ask questions, as they gave me light and knowledge on the word of God. But such was the prejudice in my heart, I strove to resist God's holy Spirit. They often invited me to meetings. Finally brother M. H. Bond came to our place and held a meeting at my father's house (as my mother was not able at the time to go out and the sisters wished her to hear the preaching). The first time I heard him I thought I did not like his preaching at all; but through the mercies of God I was led to hear and to receive the gospel of the kingdom and I could say as Paul, I was touched to the heart. Then came the struggle to take up my cross and go down into the waters of baptism, and to have my name cast out as evil for the Son of Man's sake. But through earnest prayer to God for help and strength, I was humbled to obey; and on the sixth day of February last I took upon me the worthy name of Saint of God, for which I have never been sorry, but have been sorry that I did not know of and obey this gospel before. And God has verified his promise unto me, "If any one will do the will of the Father he shall know of the doctrine." And to-day I praise His holy name that he ever called me in the way and manner that he did; for dear Saints, I have a sure testimony that the gospel that I have obeyed is the gospel of His Son.

Desiring your prayers that I may ever walk in the light as He is in the light, and that I may have oil in my lamp ready to go out when he calls to the marriage supper of the Lamb, I remain sincerely your sister in the gospel, ABBIE W. CHASE.

P. S.—I wish to add that both of my parents have obeyed the gospel since I did, and we meet often together with the few Saints at my father's house and we have many pleasant seasons together; we are being blessed together by the gifts and blessings of the gospel. A. W. C.

BRAIDWOOD, Ill., Nov. 6th.

Dear Sisters:—I have been thinking for a long time to write to the Herald, but timidity has kept me back. How much good your weekly visits do me. When reading the testimonies of my sisters the Spirit would come upon me and witness that their testimonies were recorded in heaven; and I have shed tears of joy and praised the Lord for the testimonies they were capable of bearing to the truthfulness of the work. I feel to thank God that he ever saw fit to give me a knowledge of his work, for I know it is from God. Oh! that I might be worthy of the name I bear.

It is just five years to-day since my companion was called away by death, leaving me with three little ones to care for; but God has said he would be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless, and I can truly say he has verified his promise to me; and to-day I feel like saying,

"Lord, if thou wouldst call me to resign,
What most I prize, it ne'er was mine;
I only yielded what was thine,
Thy will be done, thy will be done."

I want to live with an eye single to the honor and glory of God; and with God's help bear the trials of this life with more patience, looking forward to the day of which the poet has said,

"What a joy will be there
At the great resurrection,
When the Saints meet in air
In their robes of perfection."

I would love to be one of those who will be worthy to meet all the pure and holy ones who have gone beyond the veil, who have borne the heat and burden of the day, as many are doing in our day. But I realize to enjoy these great blessings, I will have to live near to God; so that the evil one will not have power over me. This is a trying day, for it seems that the evil one is doing all he can to overthrow the children of God.

May the Lord look down on his covenant people every where, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

JENNIE KEIR.

OENAVILLE, Texas, Nov. 28th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I can say I am a firm believer in the restored gospel. I have received many testimonies of the truthfulness of this glorious work. I have seen many manifestations of God's power since I obeyed the gospel. I saw one man who had lain helpless for four days, and one evening when he was taken much worse and looked like a dying man he sent for the elders. Some one of the family had sent for a doctor and the doctor got there first; he told the man he would not be able to be about soon. The elders came pretty soon and administered to him, and in a few minutes he was up putting on his clothes. The result was, that himself, wife, two daughters, and two sons are in the church. None of them belonged before this. Others who were not in the church were there at the time, and will testify to the same. I have seen my children healed and have been healed myself. One time while testifying to the truthfulness of this work, the two martyrs Joseph and Hyrum Smith appeared before me so plainly that it seemed that all in the house must have seen them. Who can doubt that has received such testimonies?

We have some noble Saints here, but we have the same evil power to contend with here that the Saints have elsewhere. We receive much, yes very much encouragement from the Home Column. Your sister in the one faith

FLORENCE.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa, Dec. 7th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I now have the Hope of December 3d before me, in which is a letter from Aunt Emma. It is so full of sweet advice. I trust the mothers will not fail to impress it on their own minds and their children's also.

O, that we all may have on the robe of righteousness when the messenger bids us come. How many think they have done all that is essential to salvation when they have been baptized, and there stop their work, (and faith without works is dead), instead of adorning themselves with these lesser garments, "patience, meekness, gentleness, willingness to be taught," etc., which constitute the robe of righteousness! How eagerly all her letters are read by myself! What a valuable little paper the Hope is! I read it as earnestly as the Herald, for I am but a child in the church and need the instruction of the same, and in these two papers I find much to encourage me to toil on. What great feelings of pity go forth from my heart to those who labor in darkness; yes, it is darkness, indeed, for I have experienced it; also feelings of regret that I dare not mention the subject which is uppermost in my mind at all times, to friends whom I come in contact with, for fear of offending them, or that it will not interest them. This calls to mind the 13th and 14th verses of the seventh chapter of Matthew.

I have been told by some that they were surprised at me for taking the view of the scripture as I do, as regards to needing the "gospel gifts" in the present age; and I am equally surprised and "pricked in my heart" because of the view they take, and I feel my inability to impart to them the light that has been given me, but it does not weaken my faith in the least.

I have attended many meetings of different denominations, but never heard the gospel so understandingly, however hard I tried, as I did when I commenced to investigate "Mormonism;" and that I found to be as Jesus Christ and his apostles taught it, and it seemed altogether brighter, clearer and more comforting in every way. This is one great evidence to me. I have received two blessed testimonies, by the Spirit; the first in the afternoon of the 22d of October while reading the Herald and Bible together, which caused unspeakable joy and happiness. I felt so light and free the rest of the day that pen can not describe those feelings. O, how I yearned for every soul to "Come to the light, 'tis shining for thee." The second I received was the night of the same date, which caused as much happiness to my soul. I have had others but not so plainly manifested. I am not "deluded," kind reader. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." It was sufficient to "confirm my faith," and how earnestly do I pray to him to "keep me near the cross!"

 ELLA A. MILLER.

ARMSTRONG, Kansas, Nov. 8th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have received many great blessings since I came into this church. My trials have been great, but the blessings greater. Before I was baptized, after praying to God to know whether the church was true or not, I was shown in a dream or vision of the night, that it was true. After I was baptized, it was a long time before I received the testimony of the Spirit; but I kept praying to God that I might receive it, and when I did, it thrilled through my whole being, and filled me with so much joy that I could scarcely contain myself. And that night—whether I was asleep or awake I can not tell, but I seemed to be standing on the floor of my room, when all at once I saw a large book, like a family bible, suspended in the air above me. It was open, and there was no writing on its white pages. The book was encircled by a white cloud, and while I gazed I said to myself aloud, "This must be the Lamb's Book of Life." When I had spoken, a hand holding a pen reached out of the cloud and wrote my name in the book. I was given time to read my name twice, then the book and the cloud disappeared. I felt then that I was born of the Spirit as well as of the water, and that God owned me as his child.

While reading the sisters' letters on "How shall we dress?" I have felt it was not in how we dress, but in how much our minds are taken up with the dress; we should be neat and clean, but not worry how plain we will make it, or how fashionable, for when our hearts are filled with love to God we won't trouble much about our dress. May God bless you all, dear sisters, and enable each of us to bring up our children in God's fear, so that at last we can say, Here am I, Lord, and the children thou hast given me.

Pray for me,

ELSIE McLAREN.

Correspondence.

FORESTVILLE, Mich., Dec. 29th.

Dear Herald:—Since I wrote you in September I have baptized five, and have administered to more sick persons in the last nine months than in any year of my ministry. In some cases the results were remarkable. I have also enjoyed good liberty in presenting the gospel. On November 4th I came here from Bay Port in answer to a telegram to administer to Bro. Joseph Wismer, but on arriving found he had passed away, and on the 6th I preached his funeral sermon in the Saints' church. His parents have lived here for many years, and are highly respected by both old and young. The surrounding community was so well represented at the funeral that all were not able to get into the church, although it is quite a large building. I was blessed with liberty, and the result is that a good field for labor has opened up for me here. One place where the interest was good is closed on account of the diphtheria. I opened a new place near Cato, the Evangelical Society giving me the free use of their church. That would be a good place for a German elder, for the people are mostly Germans near the church, and many of them not able to well understand the English language. I have been assisted in my labor here by two priests—E. Martindale and C. K. Green—who are zealous workers. I am happy to say that we have several able young priests in our district; and yet we need more laborers, as there are many openings that we are not able to occupy. The greatest desire I have is to continue in the field, for I know this is the Lord's work.

PITTSFIELD, Ill., Dec. 19th.

Evo. Joseph:—I wish to renew my subscription for the Herald, for I can not do without it. It makes my heart rejoice to know that the gospel is preached far and near, for my heart and soul and mind is in the work. I would not exchange what I know of the truth of the gospel for the whole world. I have had many testimonies of its truth. I am trying to keep the law of the Lord the best I can, and hope I may live worthy to ever have my name enrolled with the Saints. I have stood firm in the faith for forty-three years, and grow stronger every day.

In gospel bonds,

SARAH P. CARREL.

LAKE CITY, Ark., Dec. 28th.

Evo. Joseph Smith:—I came here one week ago as requested, and got the Court-house to preach in. It is controlled by the clerk, (who is a Disciple preacher). The second discourse, when I showed our belief in a divine call to the ministry, it was more than he could bear, for as soon as I ceased speaking he put in and proposed to "expose the fraud." We then agreed to take one hour each, every evening, till I was willing to quit. But the third session he did not fill his time by ten minutes, the fourth he stopped fifteen minutes short, and the next day he locked the door and said the people wanted the debate to close, and the door, too! But I have heard of none but him that wished the door shut.

There is a great deal of prejudice here against us. I am holding meetings now in a private house. I don't think there can be much accomplished here at present. I do not know just how long I will remain. The man not of the church who agreed to pay ten dollars on expenses died before I got here. I have had fair liberty in speaking, and I think the cause has lost nothing in the controversy. I think in warm weather would be the best time to preach here, so the preaching could be in the grove, as there is no public house accessible.

G. H. HILLIARD.

CROSSLAND, Tenn., Dec. 27th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have been trying to do my duty since I came into this mission, although I have been hindered some by cold on my lungs. In the last two days I spoke four times at the Foundry, and I think that the people, as a rule, were well satisfied. If I could stand it I might preach every night, for there are calls from every quarter. I find the footprints of elders R. J. Anthony, Joseph Lambert, John H. Hanson, G. S. Hyde, John Thomas, and others whose names I can not call to mind, and I am proud that I can look upon the work of those noble men and say, "Twas well done." I pray I may leave this mission as they have done, with a clean record, so that if people will speak evil of me, it may be for righteousness' sake. I thank God that I am accounted worthy of fellowship with such chaste, virtuous, God-fearing men as have borne the gospel armor in the South. I get letters from different parts of the mission, all of them urging me to come and preach. Truly, the harvest is great. I have written to some that I will get around to them as soon as I can. Bro. P. B. Seaton is alive in the work, and is doing good. Bro. Griffin has made good proof of his ministry, and is greatly beloved, but at present he is very sick, and has been ailing for some time. We wish the Saints everywhere to remember him at the throne of mercy, for he is much needed in this mission. "The Herald gets better all the time"—this is the verdict of all. So mote it be.

J. C. CLAPP.

SWEET HOME, Mo., Dec. 29th.

Bro. Blair:—On the 12th of November Bro. A. J. Moore and myself commenced holding meetings at Sweet Home; held twelve services, with interest good from first to last. From there we went to Long Branch and held forth in the new church for about twelve evenings. The people turned out well. We next went to the Fox School-house, but our meetings there proved a failure, for it stormed. Bro. John went to Barnard, and I went down to Avenue City, held six meetings and baptized seven. Bro. Rose got a poor start in this great latter day work, for the night after he was baptized his house burned down and all he had was burned up. But the few Saints there did nobly, for they went to work at once and did all they could for him and his family. May the good Lord that tempers the winds to the shorn lambs bless them. I then came back to the new church on Long Branch and held two meetings last Sunday; in the evening we had a large turn out, and the meeting was highly spiritual. Bro. Ole Madison was moved by the Spirit to bless the entire congregation. The calls for preaching are many and pressing. I will say to all our friends and brethren that I will get around as fast as I can. Bro. Charles Williams will go with me the first of the new year.

JAMES THOMAS.

LAKE CITY, Arkansas, Jan. 1st.

Bro. Joseph:—Bro. G. H. Hilliard has been here to preach and stayed over a week. I think he did good for he made friends to the latter day work. If some elder would come here about next spring or summer they could do good, and might get several members if they would stay awhile and preach. Some here have told me that the gospel which Bro. Hilliard preached was the only one they ever heard that suited them.

Yours in Christ,

HENRY DANIEL.

BELL, Iowa, Dec. 29th.

Bro. Blair:—To my mind it is indeed "marvelous" how God enabled Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and many others, in the early days of the church to comprehend and outline the entire work of restoration, in so short a time. How much wisdom is manifested in the positions taken, both with reference to doctrine and organization, and that, too, without any previous theological training. One naturally reaches the conclusion, after a careful examination of the subject, that their theology was given them by divine inspiration.

The position taken that the gospel was preached and understood by the ancient Saints, from Adam to Moses, giving them a knowledge of a coming Messiah, revealing to them how he should come, his life-work, and how he should make the last great sacrifice for sin, and through his suffering and resurrection triumph over death, hell and the grave, is glorious and God-like! Not only is the thought glorious, but it can be so fully sustained by the word of God that it fairly makes the soul rejoice in the love of God.

While reading the works of Kersey Graves and other infidel writers, designed to destroy the last spark of faith in the Bible and the divine Messiahship of Christ, and observing that one of their strongest (if not the strongest), reasons urged against Jesus Christ and the Bible is, that many even of the heathen nations have had their Bibles and Saviors, I have wondered if these men ever read the works of Joseph and Oliver; and have been forced to conclude that they never did. For if they had, they must have seen that, instead of their position being a strong one against Christianity, it is in fact, when carefully compared with the word of God, one of the very strongest in its favor. For the Bible teaches that all mankind sprang from one common parentage, that these first parents had a knowledge of Christ and his work of redemption, and that they imparted the same to their children; therefore it is reasonable to believe that, after they were "scattered upon all the face of the earth" they carried with them a knowledge of God and Jesus Christ—by tradition at least. And this when we understand what the word teaches, that "there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding;" (Job 32: 8), and that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us; for in him we live, and move, and have our being;" (Acts 17: 26, 27, 28). Then it is no wonder that God in his goodness and mercy reached down by the spirit of inspiration and gave them as much knowledge of Jesus Christ and his work, including good and wholesome principles, as they would receive, and thus led them nearer to him, although they held this truth in a somewhat corrupted form, and therefore only partially understood it.

Peter said, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons," (Acts 10: 34), and so we ought to be able to say, How beautiful also is the grand truths taught in the writings of these early elders of the church, and sustained by the Scriptures, that Jesus Christ has made ample provisions in his gospel for the redemption of all mankind, either in this world, or in the beyond, if they will but receive and obey it.

If I were inclined to be an infidel, I believe that a careful reading of the writings of these first elders and a close comparison of them with the Bible, especially the Inspired Translation, would literally shake all the infidelity out of me.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

WHEELLOCK, Texas, Dec. 17th.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—I was sustained president of the Central district of Texas at the conference held at Cook's Point. Since that time I have been preaching at Peoria, in Hill county. I have preached five discourses to small congregations at a private house, and baptized and confirmed one. I left the people enquiring after and investigating our claims. I was opposed there, but was not disturbed much. When I taught the people that, when Christ said to Peter, "upon this rock I will build my church," he meant that the gates of hell should not prevail against the foundation upon which the church was built. A Baptist said he meant the Church, and that therefore, if the gates of hell has prevailed against the Church, Christ has lied. But he soon stopped his talk at the meeting. I don't know what he now thinks, for he would not say one word to me after services were over.

I expect to go back to Peoria at some time and preach to the people again, and think they will give me a better hearing. When they find out that we are not Utah Mormons, and that we are sure enough, Anti-polygamists, contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints.

Yours in gospel bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

CHOUTEAU, Indian Ter., C. N.,
January 2d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—We are well and feel well. Our Father has been kind to us, for we have been favored much by the citizens, those of Indian blood. A few white renters tried to raise an influence against us, but they amount to nothing. The way has opened up so that I have obtained a good farm, sixty acres in cultivation, sixty acres pasture, plenty of open range for cattle and hogs, and twenty cows on shares; get half the increase, also all the milk and butter, and if I could take care of forty more I could get them. I also have what hogs I can take care of. I expect the boys to attend the farm and stock, so I can devote my time to the ministry. Mr. Whitiker, who owns the farm, is of Cherokee blood. He came ten miles last Saturday to talk about the gospel principles. He is very favorable, and would like for me to get more of our people to come in here. He talks of going with me to conference in the spring. There are prospects for a great work to be done among the Lamanites; many are believing, and some have given their names for baptism.

Next Saturday night and Sunday I am to preach in Chief May's settlement. I have some friends among the leading men; this will be of benefit to the work. The political strife being over, when Bro. Hawley returns from Kansas, I expect to go to Talequah. I am located one mile north-east of Chouteau, on M. K. & T. R. R.. in a very healthy, beautiful country.

Hoping to conquer, I remain, laboring for the Master, STEPHEN MALONEY.

A VISION.

About thirteen years ago, as myself, wife and oldest daughter were returning from a meeting one Sabbath evening in the fall of the year, and were going west toward home near Cherokee, Kansas, the sun was about two hours high, and a kind of a wind-cloud was over the sun, so that it looked a dark red color. About that year I was reading in the papers concerning spots on the sun, and I and daughter were looking very close to see if we could see the spots, which we could, plainly. All at once there appeared two figures—22—as bright as the sun at noon-day, while the remainder of the sun was of a dark color. They remained only for an instant. My daughter and I saw them, but my wife was not looking, and did not see them.

Editors Herald:—I am here in Five Lakes, laboring; have been for two weeks past; have baptized four. The interest is good here; several more are ready for the water; hope to gather them in soon.
J. A. CARPENTER.

VON ORMAY, Texas, Dec. 30th.

Dear Brother:—The work is progressing here. We have prayer and testimony meetings and Sunday School every Sabbath. Nearly all the Saints attend. We have had no preaching since Bro. Currie left, and he does not expect to be back until February; but we live in hopes. We had a very pleasant day for Christmas, and there was a full attendance at our church, so we had a pleasant time.
Yours fraternally,
JNO. BARBER.

SPRY, Ont., Dec. 12th.

Mr. Joseph Smith:—I have read the Voice of Warning, and last summer I visited at elder McIntosh's (he was not at home) and read some more about the doctrine of the Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints. I am anxious to learn all I can concerning the doctrine. I never heard a sermon, nor talked with any only Mrs. McIntosh. We are living on the Indian Peninsula, Eastnor township. We have a mill, and the men are taking a great interest in the doctrine. My eldest daughter, her husband, and my eldest son, are about convinced that it is the true way. I am not willing to rest satisfied until I prove it thoroughly. I've been a member of the Methodist church for more than thirty years, but that does not seem to be the real Apostolic way. Will you be so kind as to send me a catalogue of your books, that we may send for some. We expected Mr. McIntosh last fall, but he can't come for some time. We hope to soon have him come here, for we are sure there will be some added to the church.

Inclosed find money for the Saints' Herald, and be there is more due I hope to have it introduced that perhaps there will be more who will subscribe.

Yours in Christ,

MRS. J. H. JOHNSTON.

TABOR, Iowa, January 4th.

Bro. Blair.—I have labored incessantly since the Reunion held at Harlan; have averaged about seven sermons a week, and put in time to the best advantage possible under the circumstances. Have labored in Bartlett, Hamburg, Mill Creek, Shenandoah, and some little at Key Stone and preached once in Emerson.

For the last two or three weeks I have been trying to present the gospel to those who attended our Camp Meeting held last August. As many were very much interested through the preaching of the word during that meeting, we thought it advisable to stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance of the glorious truths they then heard. I am satisfied our labors then were not altogether in vain, as many express themselves satisfied with our humble effort, and claim that it is the doctrine of Christ. We have sown the seed and shall continue to sow, trusting God to give the increase. Our congregations are fair. In Dutch Hollow we had splendid attendance, good behavior, attentive listeners, and several express full faith in the work. I think that at our next Camp Meeting, if not before, many souls will be added to the church, and we trust such as shall be eternally saved. I must speak to the credit of my brethren and sisters who have attended these meetings with some sacrifice on their part, and so ably aided in the song service with those who were non-members of the church. God bless them all, is my prayer.

There has been a vast amount of prejudice removed through our Camp Meeting, that nothing less would have effected. The spirit of bitterness seems to have entirely disappeared, and a pacific, Christian spirit taken its place. Tomorrow I leave for the Richard's settlement, three miles below Sidney, where I preached last February to a crowded house, also this past summer. The brethren are willing and anxious to take me from place to place as circumstances require. To the officers and members of the district let me say, Be of good cheer. Press on in the good cause, and the "victory is ours through him that has given" himself for us. All should do what they can, and to this end "let every man learn his duty," whether it be to preach, teach, exhort, pay tithing, or any other duty involved in the gospel of life.

I am more than pleased with Autumn Leaves. God bless sister Walker in her arduous task and her labors of love. May the God of peace be with you, brother Blair, and with all others who labor in the love of the truth.

HENRY KEMP.

CONCERNING the platform of our next National Prohibition Convention, I am content to leave it substantially where it is, save that it should declare Christ and His law to be the true basis of government and the supreme authority in national as well as individual life. I greatly desire and hope that we may use our influence to secure this end. Such a declaration must be clearly divested of anything that looks towards a union of Church and State, to which all enlightened Christians are thoroughly opposed, but must as explicitly recognize Christ as the great world-force for righteousness and purity, and enthrone him King of nations in faith, as he will one day be in fact through Christian politics and laws, no less than Christian living.—Frances E. Willard.

CHURCH

NEEDS OF CITY AND COUNTRY CONTRASTED.

UNDOUBTEDLY all members of our church long resident in cities have been unpleasantly impressed with the fact that city branches are almost invariably weaker and congregations smaller, and that it is more difficult to create and maintain an interest, than in the country, or even in smaller towns. To many this has been a source of regret and even of discouragement; and yet a little observation and thought lead to correct conclusions as to the cause and indicate the proper remedy.

People congregated in cities present phases of character somewhat different from those exhibited by persons who live in the country. The former are more likely than the latter, to be neat and tasteful and fastidious. City people are no better and no worse than country people; yet they live in finer houses, dress better and handle more money, and by the force of residence and social relations become accustomed to a style of ideas and order of things somewhat peculiar to themselves. The surroundings of city life are different from those of country life, and this difference is likely to reveal itself as the natural and even necessary effect of these surrounding influences. This is a mere incident of locality and has nothing to do with the moral qualities of the people.

Now when these people attend religious service, or when they become interested in religious matters, or even when connected with churches and are endeavoring to lead Christian lives, these influences still surround them. They have, for the most part, been in the habit of attending religious services in edifices erected for that especial purpose, of hearing good music and (most important of all) listening to men of rather more than ordinary education and of at least fair ability as speakers, and who devote all their time and energy to their work, and who not only have time to prepare themselves for the delivery of their public discourses, but who can and do attend to those pastoral duties, the faithful and intelligent discharge of which is so essential to the prosperity of any religious organization.

And this is the case with city people irrespective of intellectual ability or educational acquirements. Rich and poor, educated and uneducated, share equally in these advantages and equally appreciate them.

It will be conceded that there are in the cities a larger proportion than in the country, of educated people; and as has been well said, "when scholars, thinkers and readers bring their powers to the Christian altar and dedicate them to God, they come as they are and just what they are—as persons of learning and understanding, adding the graces of ripe intelligence to those of the spirit. Rude, ignorant and uncultivated men, when they come to the same altar and make the same dedication, conform to the same law, often imparting to the Christian life a roughness which belongs not to the life itself but rather to the men. The two classes may be equally sincere and zealous in their piety, yet their intellectual disparity will appear in everything they say or do. It is not the province of religion to fill empty brains or to empty those which are well filled. It takes men as they are, and uses them as they are. The truth is, all persons do not enter the Christian service with the same amount of educated power; and, hence, it need be no matter of surprise if their anterior diversity should strongly stamp itself upon their religious history. He who can neither speak nor write his mother tongue correctly, will not become an artist in the use of graceful words simply because he has learned to pray. We must not look for the qualities of scholarship in the exhibitions of his piety. They are not in the man and they will not be in his religion."

It is also true that in our cities there is a much larger proportion than in the country or in the smaller towns, of the poor and uneducated—those who "have not where to lay their heads;" and who are sadly in need of religious teaching.

And so, from whatever point of view we examine the subject, it can not but be acknowledged that the city affords a wide field, capable of producing much precious fruit, but that it is like the fruit farm or the market garden as compared with the ordinary farm, requiring both persistent effort and skillful labor.

Now it can not be denied that the leadership of our branches in the cities and larger towns has of necessity been entrusted to men who, however great their natural ability, are, in most cases, inferior in acquired attainments to the ministers of other churches, and that they are, almost invariably, compelled to spend the greater part of their time, and devote their energy and thought almost exclusively to some secular pursuit for the support of themselves and their families, and that they have little leisure either for study and preparation for the acceptable presentation of the great truths of the gospel, or for acquiring that intimate acquaintance with the spiritual and social condition of their people which is so needful to the prosperity of the branch. And the same remarks will apply with equal force to all the other officers of the city branch, as to want of leisure for the proper and effective discharge of their several duties. So that while our system of church organization is, we are bound to believe, better than any that man alone can devise, yet in its application in cities it often falls short of satisfactory results, not because of any defect in the system, nor because the people in cities are less willing than others to receive the truth, but because of the instrumentalities used in its presentation.

If the foregoing statements are correct, it follows that the means best adapted to the end in view should be used.

What is this end? What is the purpose we seek to accomplish? Partly it is to strengthen the Saints in their desire and ability to serve God acceptably. For this, in the absence of other means, the prayer and testimony meeting may be sufficient. Partly it is to bring others to a knowledge of the truth. How is this to be effected? We are, or should be, anxious to have those unacquainted with our belief, and those who as yet have but little interest in religion in any form, attend our meetings, confident that if they can be induced to do so, the honest, conscientious, thinking portion will, sooner or later, unite with us, or at least throw their influence in our favor.

But these classes in our cities (and they are many) have been accustomed to listen to religious teaching which, if not in our opinion correct, is at least attractive, and correct in language and delivery. They have been educated to this, and, at least until convinced that the path we point out to them is the "more excellent way," they will be content with nothing less. They are no better and no worse than the people of other communities; and while it is true that the poor, and the ignorant (who are not always poor), shall have the gospel preached to them, it by no means follows that those who by the accident of birth and surroundings, or by their own energy, have acquired a little more of intellectual or material wealth, should be debarred this privilege; and when compelled to listen to that which education or habit has rendered distasteful, they are often as effectually repelled as though denied admission to the house.

It follows, then, that in cities (often containing more inhabitants than several adjoining counties), there should when practicable, be some person placed in charge of the branch whose whole time can be devoted to the work of the ministry, and who, while not necessarily eloquent or talented, will compare favorably in ministerial and pastoral qualifications with the ministry of other churches. And this is all the more necessary because of the fact that we, as a people, are too poor to compete with them, even if we wished, in the matter of church accommodations. We must rely wholly upon the sacredness of our cause and the manner of its presentation.

That this course, persistently pursued, will be effective, the writer is a witness. He has seen the average attendance of both Saints and non-members materially increased by only a few weeks of this kind of service—and he has seen the attendance dwindle to its accustomed proportions within a week or two after its unavoidable discontinuance. Had this service been continued it would, beyond reasonable doubt, have resulted in much permanent good.

Of course, in many cities, in the present financial condition of the church, all this may be impracticable, although with a reasonable degree of self-denial much might be accomplished, and with the right kind of a man, each year of continuous effort would lessen the individual pecuniary burden.

In some cities, however, there is no lack of material, and it only remains that the presiding officer possess the requisite qualifications, or that he make judicious selection when not himself occupying the pulpit, not forgetting to allow the appointee ample time for preparation, and giving the usual notice in the public prints of the time and place, and name of speaker.

It may be safely assumed that each person properly called and ordained to the office of elder possesses special qualifications for some part of the work of the promulgation of the gospel; but it does not follow that he must be equally fitted for all positions. Just as there is "one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars," so is there a difference in the ability of elders to "rightly divide the word." Or, to use an illustration suggested by one of the "lesser lights," referring to himself as a candle compared with an electric light, when but one light can be used at a time the candle may be sufficient and may answer every purpose in a small room; in a larger room the brighter light of the lamp may be required; in a still larger apartment the gas jet will be necessary; while in the large, well filled public hall nothing less than the electric light will afford sufficient illuminating power; and if in any case the brighter and more powerful light is or may be equally available, it would seem, to put it mildly, injudicious to substitute one of a lower grade, and especially so if the occasion demanded the greatest possible light.

While the foregoing suggestions are applicable to all cities, in view of the fact that the city of Independence, Missouri, is one of the most important places, if not the most important point, in connection with our church work, in the United States, if not in the whole world, it would seem especially desirable that every possible effort should there be made to present the grand truths of the gospel not only earnestly, but forcibly and attractively. The proximity of Independence to Kansas City, (of which it may be called the most important suburb), with its large and rapidly increasing population, its vast stream of transient visitors, the large number of these as well as of residents who do or might be induced to attend the services of our church, and who will carry away with them, and disseminate throughout the length and breadth of the land, the impressions, favorable or unfavorable, which they may receive, the size of the branch, the widespread reputation of the place both in and out of the church, the memories clustering around its early history, and the consequent interest of all who visit it, all combine to render the Independence branch an instrumentality for the dissemination of the principles of our faith, the importance of which can hardly be over-estimated; and hence it is peculiarly important that these grand truths should be presented with the greatest possible force and attractiveness. None but the most able representative men of our church who can be obtained should be selected to fill the pulpit or preside at its meetings. In our church there is room for an innumerable army of laborers of every degree of capacity, and there is a place for each. The light of the candle need not be hid under a bushel; but here the light should be like one "set on a hill," or like that of the light-house, shining brilliantly far and wide and guiding the weary traveller or the storm-tossed mariner to a haven of rest.

LEAVES FROM THE TREE OF LIFE—No. VII.

THE AIDS PROMISED IN THE GOSPEL TO ENABLE THE BELIEVER TO SECURE ETERNAL LIFE.

THE experience of God's children in all ages demonstrates the fact that the pathway of the Saint is beset with great and many snares, trials, difficulties and temptations, which they would be unable to cope with were there not some divine means provided to strengthen and encourage them in the life-long struggle. Jesus said: "In the world ye shall have tribulations."—John 16:33. "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15:19. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."—Matt. 16:24. John saw in vision that the blood-washed throng must gain their white robes and victorious palms through great tribulation. (Rev. 7:9, 17.) "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."—Eph. 6:12.

Who, among the frail creatures of the dust can hope to prevail, unassisted by divine power, against such terrible odds? Even the Captain of our salvation needed divine aid. His prayers were no empty, unmeaning utterances, offered for mere example's sake; they were the earnest, pleading desires of his heart, evidencing the urgent necessity for aid, and that aid came. "And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him."—Luke 22:43.

But to the question. What aid has been promised to the children of God?

First.—He has promised to hear our prayers. "Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you."—Matt. 7:7. "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matt. 21:22. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he will give it you."—John 16:23.

Second.—He has promised to give the Holy Ghost. "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth."—John 14:16, 19. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14:26.

"He shall testify of me."—John 15: 26. "He will guide you unto all truth, * * he will shew you things to come."—John 16: 13, 15.

This Comforter was not promised to the apostles alone, nor was the promises confined to that age, for it is written:—"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."—Luke 11: 13. Moreover, John the Baptist predicted of Jesus to the believing multitude:—"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."—Luke 3: 16. And when the apostles and brethren had received this precious Comforter, and under its influence were preaching Christ and him crucified, the inspired Peter, in answer to the convicted multitude then assembled, said unto them, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2: 38, 39. The apostles declare the Holy Ghost was given to them that obey him. (Acts 5: 32). Furthermore, its effects on the multitude made them of one heart and soul. (Acts 4: 31, 32).

Third.—The Holy Ghost dispenses gifts. Paul, in Ephesians, says of Christ:—"When he ascended on high he led captivity captive and gave gifts to men."—Eph. 4: 8. This was in fulfillment of the promise found in Mark 16: 17, 18. "These signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." These gifts are more fully described in the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians, and called "spiritual gifts." "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all." He then describes the gifts as: "The word of wisdom;" "The word of knowledge;" "Faith," "Gifts of healing;" "Working of miracles;" "Prophecy;" "Discerning of spirits;" "Divers kinds of tongues;" "Interpretation of tongues;" "But all these worketh that one and the self same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." In addition to these, "He gave some, apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers."

Fourth.—These gifts were absolutely essential to bring men and women up to the standard of perfection as it is found in Christ Jesus. Paul defines their purpose in the following language:—"For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and the cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things which is the head even Christ."—Eph. 4: 12-15.

Reader; if this perfection could be reached without these gifts, would they have been given? If the church in that day could not attain to it without them, can we? It is a fact that they were given then, and the promise remains unrepealed upon the Divine Statute Book, and since that book is given for our guide, learning and comfort, the truth remains that this promise belongs to the children of God today. Ecclesiastical writers assure us they were in the church for the first four centuries, and John Wesley tells us the only reason they were taken away was "because Christians had turned heathens again." There is not a word of holy writ that intimates that these blessings shall be withdrawn from the church until the purpose for which they were given is accomplished, unless the church shall depart from the faith, in which case she would forfeit her right to them, since they were only promised to "them that believe."—Mark 16: 17. It can not be denied that the gospel was intended for all ages, and for all classes and conditions of men; nor can it be denied that these were some of the fruits of that gospel. This being the case, the gospel being like its author, unchangeable, its fruits must remain unto all true believers in every age. If the gospel fails to bear the same fruits in this life, what surety can we have that it will not fail us in the gift of eternal life? If the word of the Eternal has ever failed, it may fail us again, and in all things. If it does not mean what it says, we can not be justly judged by its teachings; but Jesus says, speaking of him who rejects his testimony, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."—John 12: 48. For the judgment to be just, the Testator must be true; and since the Bible is claimed to be the word of God, and the only record bearing the divine seal for fourteen hundred years, at least; that has been the only witness of his love for man, and the only acknowledged chart for the guidance of the professedly Christian world; and had not their minds been darkened by the spirit of apostacy and the vain traditions of men, they would have been able to have seen their privileges, and undoubtedly would have enjoyed them, and thus have been brought nearer to the "Unity of the faith" and the standard of perfection as found in Christ Jesus.

As further, and conclusive proof that those supernatural gifts were not to be confined to that age alone, the Master has said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father."—John 14: 12. As the scriptures furnishes no evidence of the Apostles, or any of the Saints, in that age, doing greater works than Christ did, and as God's word can not fail, it follows that it was intended that this power should continue to others besides the Apostles. And as the pronoun he is used in this text in the general sense as referring to the true believers, this promise must be good to all true believers in every age, whenever necessity should require such exhibition of power; and since the promise is made in the most emphatic manner known in the Holy Scriptures, it follows that Christ knew such necessity would arise, and therefore the power for the emergency was promised.

It is vain to try to limit this promise to the Apostles, such claim would do violence to Christ's language. We can no more limit this language as applying only to the Apostles, or to that age even, than we can limit the following to them: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me."—John 14: 21. Or, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."—John 3: 36; and a hundred other instances. It you limit the one you must limit them all, and then the whole plan of salvation must be limited to the Apostolic age, and the hope of humanity perishes.

The Latter Day Saints accept all the promises of God in the sense in which they are given, and thus sustain the infinitely loving, generous and unchangeable character which God has been pleased to reveal of himself, and which has been testified to by the good and pure of all ages. And to this view of the divine promises, the heavens have given their sanction, by the removal of these blessings, and the presence and power of the Holy Spirit bears abundant record to the truthfulness of the promises in a thousand different ways to the believers in Christ Jesus. There is, therefore, no room left for doubt. The promises of God are yea and amen.

Having established the scripturalness and reasonableness of the claims to these divine aids, let us try to understand their operation on the human mind and heart. To do this we will take the inspired Paul as our guide, (1). "To one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom." If given by the Spirit, it must be heavenly wisdom—that statement is a truism, but let it stand. Heavenly wisdom is that which will make us "wise unto salvation;" hence it is one of the choicest gifts of God. Can we obtain that wisdom without the aid of the Holy Spirit? "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man except he has the Spirit of God."—First Cor. 2: 9-12. Solomon understood the value of wisdom, and declared that, "Wisdom is the principle thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding," etc.—Prov. 4: 7. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding."—Prov. 3: 13. "Wisdom is better than rubies, and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it."—Prov. 8:11. "The way of life is above to the wise, that he may depart from hell beneath."—Prov. 15:24. Wisdom is that light by which our conduct in all things should be governed. It enlarges the mind, enlightens the soul, and fills the heart with gladness because it gives just conceptions of the Deity. It reveals the relation we bear to him and to our fellow men, guiding our conduct toward each, that our harmony with the good and the true, both in heaven and on earth, may be complete. Truly doth wisdom say: "My fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold; and my revenue than choice silver" * * * "For whosoever findeth me findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord."—Prov. 8:19, 35. Who can despise the precious gift?

(2). "To another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit." This gift is closely allied to the former one, and they intermingle so beautifully that it is difficult to define where the first ends and the other begins—in truth, they are both parts of the same whole and their embodiment is God. "This is eternal life that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17:3. This knowledge is not to be acquired in schools. Human learning does not embrace it. Science has never discovered it. It is alone the gift of the Holy Ghost. "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."—Math. 11:27. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Cor. 12:3. As evidence that the Holy Spirit did give this knowledge to the former day Saints, I again refer you to 1 Cor. 2:10, and Matt. 13:11. John in his first Epistle, 2:27, says to them, "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." This anointing is the "Unction from the Holy One," spoken of in verse twenty, and "the Comforter" promised by Jesus. This knowledge not only embraces a knowledge of the truth of the gospel, but it is perfected in the realization of the nature and character of the divine being through obedience; and by its operations in us the divine nature is infused into our souls and we are made partakers of his love and the riches of his grace; and by this realization God and his Christ stand revealed to us so plainly that our whole being is lit up with the knowledge that God is, and the fact that he is all that he has represented himself to be: and that Jesus Christ is his Son and the Redeemer of the world. This knowledge is the beginning of eternal life in our hearts here, and will be the consummation of that greatest of all gifts in the eternal hereafter. For, as we have seen, "This is life eternal to know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." Surely, as we need eternal life we need the means by which it is given; and the "gift" or "word of knowledge," like wisdom, is as precious to the soul now as it was in Paul's day.

(3). "To another, faith by the same Spirit." This third gift is not to be confounded with the "belief" demanded from all who hear the gospel where Christ says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16:16. The "belief" demanded from us implies our acceptance of the divine message, and is perfectly voluntary on our part; but the gift of faith to be given by the Spirit, is an infusion of heavenly power by the exercise of which we, like Elias, may prevail with God, and receive blessings at his hand, which could not be obtained without this gift. It serves as a key by which we may unlock the treasure-house of wisdom, knowledge and power, and accomplish all things compatible with infinite wisdom and the well-being of those to whom it is given, always to be exercised in harmony with the law governing spiritual gifts, which law will be known through the gifts of wisdom and knowledge in the hour of need. This gift differs in its operations, for "To some it is given to have faith to be healed, and to others it is given to have faith to heal," etc.—Doc. Cov. Sect. 46:7. It is one of the divine factors in molding our natures into the likeness of the divine nature, leading us on step by step, to become perfect men and women, "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," while it is a bond of union between us and our great Redeemer and Creator. It is indeed of the same nature as the belief demanded of, and exercised by, the penitent seeker after Christ; but it is an enlarged degree, given by the Spirit of God that those who received may endure the trials, or accomplish the work, specially given them to do. The experience of all Saints teaches us that it requires, at least, as great a degree of faith to enable us to endure the terrible ordeals through which many are called to pass, as it does to perform some mighty work. What gift could be better fitted to strengthen us in our resolves for the right, our struggles to overcome, "our work of faith and labor and love," than faith in him who has promised to be our help in times of trouble, our strength in the hour of trial and temptation, and our "exceeding great reward?" Faith is, indeed, the parent of love in the human heart, rendering it perfect and "casting out all fear." Precious gift! Worthy bestowal of the Infinite God!! It was by the exercise of this "gift" that "Elias prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit."—James 5:17, 18. This is the faith that Christ had reference to when he said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed ye shall say unto this mountain, remove to yonder place, and it shall move; and nothing shall be impossible unto you."—Math. 17:20. This faith knows no fear, smiles at the dread frowns of the enemy, closes the mouths of lions, fills the prison's gloom with a halo of light, and makes the prison a mansion of love.

(4). "To another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit." Jesus said, "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." The gospel is intended not only to bless and happy the mind here, and give eternal life hereafter; but as the body was also partaker of the curse which came upon man for disobedience, it is in keeping with the divine character that the same gospel which blesses the mind should contain within it means for relieving the body of its ills until it shall have filled the measure of its creation in this life. Here is the remedy, and the Almighty is true to his eternal character of love; but men shun this gift as the dream of fanatics, and while they are compelled to acknowledge that it was once enjoined, or entirely repudiate the Bible, they pretend that "it was not intended for any other age than the Apostolic." This claim would have some show of reason, if sickness had ceased with that age; but the fact is that diseases have increased and become more complicated as men have deviated from the law of their being. Moreover, this promise was made by an infinitely wise, and unchangeable Being, who is the embodiment of love. He had considered our condition, for "he knoweth our frame," and he has partaken of our sufferings; and the promise was made to "them that believe," without any limits as to time or age. And so long as the gospel is preached and believed, the promise must remain. His covenant standeth sure. There has been no repeal, nor can there be, for saith he, "I am the Lord, I change not."

In the absence of faith in the gospel, men have ceased to trust in God, and have cast about for other means by which their physical woes may be removed; and relying on what is called "Medical Science," they claim "that that is the antidote for the ills of the body," and hence "the gifts of healing as given by Christ are useless." "Medical Science" drains the purse, drugs the system, and fills the graveyards by premature deaths; but it does not remove our maladies, yet men will cling to it upon the principle that "drowning men catch at straws." Another class, with no more faith in God, will deride "Medical Science" while they introduce other means, such as "Faith Cure," "Mind Cure," "Christian Science," and "Spiritism." All these put forth their claims pretending to be panaceas for the ills of life. The so-called "Faith Cure" ignores the fullness of the gospel, and yet pretends to bless in the name of Jesus. "Mind Cure on a material basis," claims no higher source for its power than that of the power of one mind over another. And "Christian Science," as it boastingly calls itself, is a perversion of the divine word, for it ignores the gospel and scoffs at the plan of redemption wrought out by the Son of God; hence if there is any power attending it, it is from beneath, and is no better than Spiritism, but is simply one of the webs being woven by the arch-enemy of souls to entangle and destroy the human family. Yet the masses avail themselves of these ruinous frauds because they have no faith in God, but are willing to seek relief by any means other than that which he has provided, rather than become the prey of the dread monster, and thus be compelled to face the "dreadful what's to come" and reap the full reward of their folly. But the believer in Christ Jesus avails himself of the divine promise and thus resigns himself to the will and wisdom of God, knowing that "living or dying, he is the Lord."

The Apostle James has recorded the ordinance in full by which the divine blessing of health is to be received: "Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the Church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—James 5:14, 15. The conditions upon which this blessing is to be received is "faith" in God—"These signs shall follow them that believe." Hence, where faith is not, there is no promise of the blessing. The grand key to it is the name of the Lord Jesus.—John 14:12, 13; 16:23, 26; Acts 4:8, 12; Mark 16:17. Thus our Father has provided a means whereby the lives of his children may be perpetuated until they shall have filled the measure of their creation, whether the period required be long or short, and thus his boundless love is manifest. This blessing was not intended to conflict with the eternal purpose in giving us a probationary state, but to bless and sustain us until our probation is ended.

"It is appointed unto men once to die."—Heb. 9:27. What an incentive to a righteous life! By such a life we may call for divine aid in the hour of need and claim, through Christ, every blessing essential to our physical and spiritual nature, both for ourselves and those dependent upon us. But it must be remembered that unless we so seek to live, we have no claim upon the blessing.

(5). "To another the working of miracles." A miracle in the gospel sense, is something which is beyond the power of man to perform, not necessarily contrary to the laws of nature, but in perfect harmony therewith. Yet man knows but little of the law of his being, and of the principles which control the elements, he is apt to conclude that that which is beyond his power, such as a miracle, is contrary to the law of nature. It is simply above our knowledge, and consequently beyond our power; hence if man is ever used as an instrument to do such a work, it must be by the aid of a power greater than his own. There have been times in the economy of God when miracles have been necessary, (I speak of miracles now, apart from the other gifts mentioned which are also really miraculous), as in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, the passage of Israel over Jordan during which the waters of that turbulent stream were divided,—"the miraculous draft of fishes," the feeding of the multitude with "five barley loaves and two small fishes," and other instances too numerous to mention. Instances of such necessity will again occur before all the purposes and promises of God are fulfilled, or Christ's words were meaningless when he said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my Father."—John 14:12. Isaiah speaking of the return of Israel to their own land from the various lands of their exile, in the last days, says: "And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt."—Isa 11:15, 16. Also Zech. 10:8, 12. And Jeremian speaking of that stupendous miracle says: "It shall no more be said, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers."—Jer. 16:14, 15, also 23:7, 8. As God used human instruments in the working of many of the former day miracles, it is but reasonable that he would use such instrumentalities in the latter days, and especially so since Christ has given the foregoing assurance of what the true believer shall do, and that "the working of miracles" is among the promised blessings.

One of the purposes served by miracles is the perpetuation of the knowledge of the fact that there is a God, and that he beareth rule over all the earth. This knowledge or evidence was not to be confined to literal Israel, but also "That all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty; that ye might fear the Lord your God forever."—Josh. 4:24, and 1 Sam. 17:46. The fact that miracles were not confined to the patriarchal and prophetic ages, is evidence that the mere record of them does not suffice to keep the knowledge of the power of God before every generation. They had to be repeated in every dispensation of God's economy as one of the confirmatory evidences that the work he was doing among men was divine. This was to be a source of strength to the child of God, while it was a witness against the unbeliever.—Math. 11:22, 26. Dare we say in the face of the universal scepticism of the Nineteenth Century, that this wonder-working power of God is not needed to-day as a source of comfort and strength to the struggling, believing soul, especially when we see the power of Satan manifest on every hand, and "going forth to the kings of the earth, and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty?"—Rev. 16:13, 14; Matt. 24:23; 2 Thes. 2:8, 12.

Again; as the subtle wrath of the adversary was always exerted to destroy the servants of the Lord, and nothing less than divine miraculous power could shield or rescue them, will he not also in the last days seek to destroy? And will not God's children require the same divine means of preservation? And shall they call in vain?" Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he will give it you."—John 16:23. By such means as these God will answer in his own due time the scoffs of a Tyndal, and the jeers of an Ingersoll; in fact he is doing it now in many ways to the comfort of his children. But as they shall increase in faith and in all the qualities of the divine nature, they shall also increase in power until scepticism shall be ashamed and confounded; for God has declared, "I will proceed to do a marvelous work, even a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent men shall be hid."—Isa. 29:26, Insp. Trans. Then shall all the earth know there is a God in Israel; "And the heathen [Gentile] shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore."—Ezek. 37:28.

C. DERRY.

LOST ISRAEL NOT FOUND.

CLAIM has been made by some of the elders that the people of the island of Great Britain are the lost tribes of Israel, and that the theory is so self evident that it can not be upset. We offer the following objections from the Book of Mormon: 2 Nephi 12:8, 9; "For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the Nephites, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth, and they shall write it. And, it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews; and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews."

To a believer in the Book of Mormon this is enough to condemn the theory that the British or Anglo-Saxons are the lost tribes, for the simple reason that those people never have laid claim to having any revelation from God; and that what little of the religion of Christ they have is founded on the writings of the Jews. They deny all claim of God's revelation to-day and say that the Bible is all the law of God that they now have, ever had, or ever will need.

Book of Nephi, 7:3, reads:—"And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land, neither of the land of Jerusalem, neither in any parts of the land round about whither I have been to minister. For they of whom I speak are they who have not as yet heard my voice, neither have I at any time manifested myself unto them. But I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice, and shall be numbered among my sheep, that there may be one fold, and one shepherd; therefore I go to show myself unto them." Mark the words, "Therefore I go to show myself unto them." He appeared in person unto the Nephites, and that is the only way he could show himself unto the tribes of Israel. This is so plain and easy to be understood that there need be little said or written, and he who cares to read all of that seventh chapter will receive much light on God's dealings with mankind. It is very evident that some of the elders of the church have need to brush the dust off their Book of Mormon and study up a little therein, and then they will not need to study the traditions of men, however fine they may be written, as to where those lost tribes are. There have been many conjectures, and some of the Saints have believed they were in the north, beyond the ice-fields. The writer has yet to learn of those who take the books for their guide who do not so believe, and some have knowledge of the time when they shall come forth as it is written in the Book of Covenants:

"And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice and shall no longer stay themselves; and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep." It is evident to them who care to read all of this section in the light of truth, that the time of this prophecy is yet future; and it is of no use to tell us to uphold those three books and then attempt to teach us something else as facts, for the church has told us in conference that they have to be taken as a rule of action by the Saints. Let the scoffer scoff, and the scorner scorn, and let them try and give us something better or prove them false, and then they will learn wisdom to their own confusion as many have already done.

TESTIMONY OF ELDER JOHN LANDERS.

Editors of the Herald:—I write this article hoping that all those who exchange papers with you will give it an insertion in their several papers, that all honest people who may read it may know that the Book of Mormon is a sacred book and no deception, but is exactly what it claims to be. Inasmuch as all sensible people know it is not in the power of man to foretell future events correctly, I will select some plain predictions from the Book of Mormon which has been fulfilled since the coming forth of that book which no human sagacity could possibly foresee or foretell. The first quotation is found in 2d Nephi, chapter 11 last paragraph, page 72 of Huntley's edition. "But behold, saith the Lord of hosts, I will show unto the children of men that it is not yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest. And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness." The land of Palestine, for twelve hundred years before the coming forth of the Book of Mormon was an unproductive land, and mostly uninhabited. Read the 36th chapter of Ezekiel, from the 33d to the 37th verses inclusive. The very remarkable change that has taken place in that land since 1830 is an unmistakable fulfillment. So far as the fertility of the land of Palestine is concerned, that land was cursed to the Jews because of their wickedness, and the balance of the world was blessed to the Gentiles because they obeyed the gospel when preached to them. And in this dispensation, as fast as Palestine becomes a fertile land, so fast the balance of the world becomes barren and fruitless. Any of us who lived back of 1830 know that to be a fact which can not be successfully contradicted.

"The deaf shall hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness." These facts have occurred frequently, before many witnesses. I will give my testimony. I have just entered my 94th year. I have feared the Lord from my youth. I love the truth and abhor lying. I have seen the deaf made to hear, and the blind to see, by the prayer of faith and the power of God. It is widely known in all the world wherever this gospel of the Kingdom has been preached, that the signs do follow them that believe and obey the gospel.

In the 2d Nephi, chapter 12, it says: "Yea, and there shall be many which shall teach after this manner, false, and vain, and foolish doctrines, and shall be puffed up in their hearts, and shall seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord; and their works shall be in the dark; and the blood of the Saints shall cry from the ground against them." When the Book of Mormon came forth there was not nor had been any persecution against any people, for many years; the law of the land protected all in the worship of God according to the dictates of their own conscience.

The foregoing prediction has been remarkably fulfilled since then. The blood of the Saints has been shed in fulfillment of this prediction. In the 3d chapter of the book of Ether, and the last paragraph, there can be found a prediction concerning the secret societies—bound by oaths of secrecy—of these times. It would be beneficial to all to read the prediction. In the tenth chapter of the book of Moroni, and first paragraph, it reads:

"Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, if it be wisdom in God that ye should read them,*that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men, from the creation of Adam even down until the time that we shall receive these things. . . . I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you by the power of the Holy Ghost; . . . and by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things."

Thousands have obeyed the counsel of Moroni, and have asked the Lord, and have received the promised testimony of the authenticity of the work we are engaged in.

As ever, your brother in the Lord,
JOHN LANDERS.

BURIED CITIES.

THE Hemenway expedition, under the direction of Frank Cushing, has been at work for several months, and has excavated the ruins of a city three miles long and two miles wide. The excavations are not continuous, but have been made at various points along the main street and at the limits of the town. Mr. Cushing acquired from the Zuni Indians, among whom he has lived for some years, the knowledge of customs and traditions which enabled him to find the buried cities of the Salt river valley. The first one excavated is called Los Muertos, the city of the dead. Others that have been partially excavated are El Pueblo de los Hornos, the city of ovens; El Ciudad de los Puebitos and El Pueblo de los Pedros. But these are only a part of the chain of cities that once covered the desert. There are nineteen buried cities in the valley alone, and Los Muertos, which had a population of 10,000, is one of the smallest.

The entire valley was once a system of cities, with adjacent farms, and up in the mountains are sacrificial caves and pueblos of stone, many of which never have been explored, and are entirely unknown to the wandering tourist and sightseer. The people who lived in these were not Aztecs, as has been supposed. They were of the race that preceded the Aztecs, and had upon this continent a civilization older than the pyramids. This is proved by the human remains and relics found. Ethnological research, prosecuted by Mr. Cushing by the comparative method, demonstrates that the dwellers of the plain were Toltecs, and that they reached a high state of civilization many centuries before the Aztecs appeared. They were probably of Asiatic origin, but not Mongoloid. The Indian of the Pacific coast appears to be Mongoloid and a later immigrant from Asia. The age of the Toltec ruins is reckoned in thousands of years. The Toltecs were agricultural people and had the plain of Tempe under a high state of cultivation. The climate and character of the soil were, apparently, the same as now, and a vast system of irrigation was required to make the land productive. The maps made by the surveyor of the Hemenway party show at least three hundred lines of ditch work.

The Toltecs were better irrigators than the farmers of to-day. They were satisfied with a very slight flow, and consequently, were able to conduct water to every part of the plain. The higher ground, which is now a desert, was reached by levees upon which the water flowed. The bottom of these ditches and levees, hardened by the water flowing over them, have resisted the levelling power of the elements. The banks have disappeared, leaving the bottoms elevated slightly above the plain, and these hardened surfaces are now used as roads all over the valley. In some places the irrigating canal was cut through the solid rock with stone implements. The cost of making that cut today with improved implements would be $20,000.

The manner of building the ditches and keeping them in repair is indicated by two parallel rows of stones along the sides of the ditches. These stones are of diorite, and were used as chipping stones to sharpen the stone implements with which the digging was done. Most of them seem to have been worn out and thrown aside, and probably they were covered up with the earth and thrown out as the work advanced. The washing away of the banks by the rains of centuries has left them exposed. Many, no doubt were used in repairing the banks. The natural inference is that the ditches were maintained during a long period. The modern canal system of the valley is only forty-one miles in extent and cost $1,500,000. The Toltec ditches were of great size and extent, no less than 300 miles of canal alone, and could not be built to-day for less than $2,500,000. No less than 450,000 acres were cultivated in the Salt Lake Valley by means of these ancient ditches.

The Toltecs had no occasion to raise more corn than they could consume, and, therefore, the population of the plain may be calculated on the basis of cultivated acreage. The 4000 Pyma Indians on the 1000 acres support themselves and sell 9,000,000 pounds of wheat yearly. It is within bounds to place the ancient population at 250,000.

The ruins still uncovered, but traced by unmistakable surface indications, extend through the foot of the hills into the mountains. The ruins of Los Muertos are being thoroughly examined because they are typical, and, also, because they have been buried, and therefore, protected from the ravages of time, tourists and ranches. Twenty-two large blocks of buildings have been uncovered, and three carloads of relics have been sent to Boston. These relics consist of pottery, implements and skeletons.

One of the ruined buildings is 400 by 375 feet, another is 480 feet long, and many of the buildings are 300 feet square. The abode walls are sometimes seven feet thick and two stories high. Connected with each building is a pyral mound, around the base of which are the funeral urns containing the ashes of cremated Toltecs. Entrance to the buildings are sometimes through doorways and sometimes through holes in the roof. Each building was divided into a great number of small rooms, indicating a large population to each block. The roofs were of concrete, supported by timber, and most of them have fallen in. Here and there the concrete remains in position. It is evident that these cities were destroyed by earthquakes. In most cases the roofs have fallen in and the side walls have fallen outward. Time has disintegrated the adobe blocks, and the rains have spread the material so evenly that the buildings are indicated only by slight irregularities in the surface. The work of excavation is simply to clear away the surface material. That the cities were suddenly overthrown is proved by the finding of skeletons under the fallen roofs and walls indicating violent death. One photographed as found shows that the man was caught under the falling roof and thrown upon his face. His chest is crushed forward by the weight, and his right hand stretched out as he fell. A large number of bodies found proves that the calamity was widespread and complete.

In one of the sacrificial caves of the Superstition mountains was a skeleton that eloquently tells the story of the earthquake and the terror of the inhabitants. It is that of a maiden sacrificed, as the vessels and offering on the altar show the ethnologist, to appease the wrath of the earthquake demon. There had been several shocks, and the people had offered up ordinary sacrifices in vain. At last the priest went up to the sacrificial cave and made the supreme offering of a maiden of the tribe. The people returned to their homes, assured that their danger had been averted. Then came the greatest quake of all. Those not caught in the ruins fled in terror to the fields. The gods had abandoned them to the malignant wrath of the powers of evil that even to-day are believed by the Indians to dwell in the Superstition mountains. They fled in panic, the Toltec people were scattered through the country, the wild tribes of the hills and forests made war upon them and drove them to the south, and a splendid civilization of prehistoric times was obliterated from the face of the earth.—Boston Herald.

Miscellaneous.

SILENCED.

This will notify all whom it may concern, that for cause I have silenced Elder John Parson from acting in any official capacity in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that any and all acts which he performs for and in behalf of said church, after December 6th, 1887, will be held to be invalid and without the authority of said church. I have demanded his credentials, but he has refused to deliver them to me, and has notified me that he will appeal his case to the First Presidency of the church. Therefore, esteeming the said First Presidency fully competent to look after the matter, I suggest that all can afford to be quiet and wait, no matter where our sympathies may be, and not disturb the Saints by keeping up a discussion of the case, lest strife and hard feelings be engendered.

HEMAN C. SMITH,
Pres. Pacific Slope Mission.

CORRECTION.

The extract from Bro. Richard Coburn's letter found on page 814 of the last volume of the Herald shows some "crookedness" in pen, brain or eye of editor, typo or proof-reader—one or all—for which we now make amends by saying that Bro. Coburn is not a "Dr.," nor anything implied thereby; also that fifty were baptized in the Kent and Elgin district between the 11th of June and the 8th of October last, 22 of them by J. A. McIntosh, and 10 by Bro. J. H. Merriam, of the traveling ministry—this by request of Bro. Coburn of late.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

A conference will be held at the Union Church, near Long Branch, Nodaway county, Missouri, on the 26th and 27th of February, 1888. We trust all that can will attend, as we wish to send delegates to General Conference.

JAMES THOMAS, Dist. Pres.

Conference of the Fremont district will convene at Shenandoah, Iowa, February 25th, 1888, at ten a. m. We hope the presidents and secretaries of branches will be on hand with their reports in good shape. All come.

HENRY KEMP, Pres.

CHURCH SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

All Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, who have not yet sent in their names for the purpose of being placed in quorums are again notified that the order of the General Conference has been that none shall be so enrolled except by their own request. There are vacancies in the five quorums of Elders and the one quorum of Priests that are organized, and if one or more are present at the coming General Conference to organize other quorums, it is probable that it will be done. Therefore all who desire to be thus enrolled are hereby requested to send or authorize the sending of their names at an early date.

DIED.

DANKS.—At Bay Port, Huron county, Michigan, on September 28th, 1887, Bro. Henry R. Danks, aged 30 years, 9 months and 24 days. His last words were an exhortation for the Saints to live faithfully to the covenant they had made, for he knew that they and he were in the true Church of Christ.

HARDER.—At Bay Port, Michigan, December 3d, 1887, Bro. John Harder, aged 61 years, 4 months and 8 days. His faith endured as the change came, and he passed over the river in the glorious hope of life eternal. Funeral sermon by Elder J. J. Cornish.

LARSON.—Bro. John Larson was born January 19th, 1817, in Lundoe county, Denmark; was baptized July 4th, 1880, in Nodaway county, Missouri, by C. Christensen; died firm in the faith, August 12th, 1887, with heart disease. Funeral sermon was preached by Elder A. J. Moore in the Presbyterian Church at Barnard.

KEARNS.—At the home of her parents, Ingvert and Keterina Hansen, Galland's Grove, Iowa, November 30th, 1887, Sr. Mary Kearns, wife of Mr. George Kearns, aged 24 years, 9 months and 9 days. She leaves a babe six weeks old. She was beloved by all who knew her. A sorrowing husband, relatives, and many friends mourn her death. Funeral services at the Saints' Church, by Elders C. E. Butterworth and John Pett.

BAZAR.

For the benefit of the friends who have so kindly assisted us in our work for the new church at Independence, Missouri, the Sister's Aid Society make the following statement through the Herald: Our Bazar was not quite so much of a success as we had hoped owing, we thought, to our being obliged to hold it in a third-story room; but we have been so successful in disposing of our goods since it was over, that we have realized about $300 from it. We had for sale two hundred and forty articles; of these sixty-five were made in the Society, and consisted chiefly of quilts, comforts, socks, mittens and aprons; seventy-nine were donated by sisters in Independence, and the other ninety-six were sent us by friends abroad, to whom we now extend our sincere thanks. We have also received in cash donations $17.70. All articles and moneys received have been accounted for to the sender by private correspondence, except three—name of the donor of which we never received. We hope everything is satisfactory.

MRS. B. C. SMITH,
Sec. for Bazar.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

Presidents and clerks of districts who have branch reports in their hands which should come to me for record are hereby asked to kindly forward the same without unnecessary delay. Also I hope to hear from the Mission Secretary of England, and from the branches in Australia. Among the hundreds of letters sent to various parts of the United States are some which have not yet been answered, therefore I ask those written to for corrections that they reply as soon as possible. It will save a rush of business the last of March if many others would be prompt besides those that now are so.

H. A. STEBBINS, Church Recorder.

WOMEN'S WORK IN SYRIA.

THERE are grand women in Arabia: women of ability, keen insight and wonderful capabilities. The duties of a wife of a Syrian to-day are as follows: Some brings all the water for family use from a distant well; this is accomplished by filling immense jars, and bringing them upon her head. She rises early and goes to the hand-mill of the village, carrying corn, enough of which for the day's bread she grinds by a slow, laborious process. This she carries home and cooks in an oven which is made in the earth. It is a round hole, lined with oval and flat stones, and heated by a fire built in it. When the bread is mixed with water and a little salt she removes the ashes and plasters little pats of dough against the hot stones to cook. Could anything be more crude?

She cares for her children—usually a large family—and does all the rough work at intervals, while the devoted (?) husband calmly smokes his "argelie," or sits cross legged upon his divan or house-top, in conversation with some equally hard working member of Syrian society. The houses are made of a coarse stone, roughly hewn. The housetops are of clay, covered with coarse gravel. In hot weather the sun bakes this mud-formed roof, and large cracks appear. The rain comes, and, as a natural consequence, the roof leaks.

WE thought best to stop writing on the subject we have in hand till our readers had seen what "Burr Joyce" had to say in the Globe-Democrat, concerning the Mormon troubles in Missouri, his last article of the series so far appearing in the last issue of the HERALD. And for reasons that will appear we now introduce the testimony of the late General A. W. Doniphan on the same subject as he gave it to the Kansas City Journal in July, (we think), 1881, and published in the HERALD August 1st.

It seems that General Doniphan never knew or had forgotten the causes "which culminated in the Mormons burning and sacking the Gentile towns of Millport and Gallatin, then very small villages." But "Burr Joyce," as will be seen on page 18 of HERALD for January, 1888, has found that they consisted in the groundless prejudices of the Missourians against the Mormons, and in the determination of the former that the latter should not enjoy the rights of American freemen and vote at public elections, using threats and personal violence to prevent it. Again; General Doniphan says the Saints "continued to live prosperously and tranquilly until the summer of 1838, when Joseph Smith came out from Ohio, and soon after they commenced forming a settlement in Daviess county, which, under their agreement, they had no right to do." To this we reply that (1), the Missourians had neither legal nor moral right to exact such an "agreement" from American citizens! For by the laws of the land and by the equal, inalienable laws of God, the citizens of our nation were and are guaranteed the right of migration and settlement wherever they may choose, when not interfering with the rights of others. And, (2), "Burr Joyce" assures us that, "In the spring of 1837 a detachment went up into Daviess, and, by written permission, of the few Gentile settlers there, made a permanent settlement in that county."—HERALD for 1887, page 837. In this we see that the last shadow of excuse for oppressing and mobbing the Mormons had no foundation neither in right or in fact. But what a damning commentary on those times it is, to admit that the Missourians then extorted an "agreement" from the Mormons that they would not settle in the state outside Caldwell county! This reads like the blackness of barbarism even now; and how will it appear a few years hence?

Here is what General Doniphan, in 1881, stated to the Kansas City Journal. Please read it with care:

MORMON HISTORY.

GEN. DONIPHAN'S RECOLLECTIONS OF THE TROUBLES OF THAT EARLY TIME.

There is probably no man in Western Missouri who is better acquainted with the various causes of the difficulties between the citizens of Jackson and Caldwell counties and the Mormons during the years of 1833 and 1838, than Gen. Alexander W. Doniphan, then a resident of Clay county, but now of Richmond, Ray county, Missouri, and there is, perhaps, no one who took such an active part in the events of those years who can now look back and relate the history of these troubles as dispassionately as he can. In view of these facts a representative of the Journal called upon Gen. Doniphan at his rooms at the Hudgin's House at Richmond, for the purpose of interviewing him upon the subject. The general, after learning the object of the visit, seemed very willing to communicate all he knew in regard to the history of the Mormon troubles, and after a few introductory remarks, related the following:

"I came to Missouri in 1830, and located in Lexington, where I lived until April, 1833, when I removed to Liberty, Clay county. The Mormons came to Jackson county in 1830, and I met Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer and Christian Whitmer, three of the elders, in Independence, during the Spring of 1831. Peter Whitmer was a tailor, and I employed him to make me a suit of clothes."

"What kind of people were the Mormons?"

"They were northern people, who, on account of their declining to own slaves and their denunciation of the system of slavery, were termed 'free soilers.' The majority of them were intelligent, industrious, and law abiding citizens; but there were some ignorant, simple-minded fanatics among them, whom that people said would steal. Soon after they came to Jackson county, they established a newspaper at Independence, called the Morning and Evening Star, edited by W. W. Phelps, in which they published their peculiar tenets and pretended revelations, in which they set forth that they had been sent to Jackson county by divine Providence, and that they, as a church were to possess the whole of the county, which then embraced what is now Jackson, Cass and Bates counties. These assumptions were evidently made use of for the purpose of exciting the jealousy of persons of other religious denominations and the more ignorant portions of the community. This of course caused hard feelings between them and the people of the county; but I think the real objections to the Mormons were their denunciation of slavery, and the objections slave holders had to having so large a settlement of anti-slavery people in their midst, and also to their acquiring such a large amount of land, which then belonged to the government, and subject to pre-emption. From these and other causes a very bitter feeling was engendered between the Mormons and citizens, which culminated in the month of July, 1833, when a public meeting was held at the court house in Independence, at which it was resolved to tear down the Mormon printing establishment, which resolve was immediately carried out. The mob also committed numerous other outrages, the most brutal of which was the tarring and feathering of Bishop Partridge. I can't positively state who were the leaders of the mob, but it was participated in by a large number of the leading citizens of the county. The Mormons made but little if any resistance, but submitted to the inevitable, and agreed not to establish another paper, and there was an apparent tranquilly existing until about the first of the following November, when, from imprudent conduct on both sides, both Mormons and Gentiles—as the citizens were then called by the Mormons—seemed to arm themselves as if expecting a collision. The first clash of arms took place at Wilson's store on the Big Blue, about four miles east of Westport, about the third or fourth of November, which resulted in several persons being killed upon both sides and several others wounded.

"In a few days after this the citizens organized and determined upon ejecting the Mormons from the county, which soon after was done. During the ejection a great many outrages were perpetrated and the Mormons were compelled to leave almost everything they possessed behind them, and it was only by a hurried flight that they saved their lives. As it was quite a number were killed upon both sides. The majority of the Mormons, after being driven from Jackson county, went to Clay county, where they were received and provided for as well as it was possible by the citizens. The Mormons remained in Clay county until 1836, in an unorganized community, when it was agreed between them and the citizens of Clay and Ray counties that if they (the Mormons) would buy out a few inhabitants then inhabiting what is now Caldwell county, then a part of Ray county, the balance of the land being public, they could enter it at their leisure, and we would urge the Legislature to create a county for them, which was done at the session of the Legislature of 1836-7.

"I was a member of the legislature and drew the bill organizing Caldwell county for the Mormons exclusively, and the offices of the county were given to their people. The new county filled up very rapidly, and they made great progress in agricultural and other improvements. They continued to live prosperously and tranquilly until the Summer of 1838, when Joseph Smith came out from Ohio, and soon after they commenced forming a settlement in Daviess county, which under their agreement they had no right to do. This occasioned difficulties with the citizens of Daviess county, and in September, 1838, a large number of citizens of Daviess and adjoining counties, collected with arms in the Mormon settlement called 'Adamondiahman,' in Daviess county. The Mormons also gathered at the same point, and I, being at the same time brigadier-general of the western division of Missouri, was sent out by Gov. Boggs with a regiment of Clay county militia to prevent a collision, which after being there one week, I was able to do, and left them apparently harmonious, the Mormons agreeing they would return to Caldwell county as soon as they could take care of their crops, etc.

"About one month after this, new difficulties arose between the citizens and Mormons, from what causes I never knew, which culminated in the Mormons burning and sacking the Gentile towns of Millport and Gallatin, then very small villages. A few days after this a battle took place on the line between Caldwell and Ray counties between the Mormons, under the command of Capt. Patten and citizens of Ray county, under command of Capt. Bogard, in which two Ray county citizens and several Mormons, including Capt. Patten, were killed. The place where the battle occurred is still known as 'Bogard's Battle Ground.'

"Gen. Atchison, who was afterwards United States Senator, was then major general of Northwest Missouri, and ordered me to raise a regiment of militia from Clay, Clinton and Platte counties. I did so, and proceeded at once to the battle ground, and the next day I received an order from Gov. Boggs to take command of all the forces and remain in Ray county until the arrival of Gen. Clark with the state troops. Being satisfied that the Governor had over-estimated the number of Mormons, I went to Far West, the county seat of Caldwell county, where all the Mormon forces were assembled. I sent for Judge King, of the circuit court, to come to my camp, and at that juncture Gen. S. D. Lucas, of Jackson county, arrived with a small number of men sent out by the Governor. I opened negotiations with the Mormons, by going up to their lines in person, and when Judge King came out I consulted with him, and upon his advice the Mormons gave up their arms and turned over to me such men as had violated the laws of the land, and those upon the other side who had done the same, were arrested upon warrants issued by Judge King. It has been said that in the treaty I made with the Mormons I stipulated that they must leave the State, under penalty of annihilation if they refused to do so. This is entirely untrue, as I made no stipulation. It is true, however, that in an order to me and other officers, Governor Boggs used the expression 'that the Mormons leave the State or be exterminated,' whereas this order was entirely illegal. I paid no attention to it. In my report to Gov. Boggs I stated to him that I had disregarded that part of his order, as the age of extermination was over, and if I attempted to remove them to some other State it would cause additional trouble. The Mormons commenced immediately after this to move to Nauvoo, Illinois, and I know nothing further about them. While the Mormons resided in Clay county, they were a peaceable, sober, industrious and law-abiding people, and during their stay with us not one was ever accused of a crime of any kind."

Gen. Doniphan is now in his seventy-third year, but is still hale and hearty. He is a man of fine appearance and intellect, and is well known and highly respected all over the State. He has resided in Richmond during the past several years. His statements as given above may be relied upon as strictly the truth in every particular. There are a few old citizens still living near Independence who were in this county during the troubles of 1833, whose statements will be given in the near future."

MURPHY ON MORMONISM.

FOR future use we print the following from the Kingston, (Mo.) Times, for Dec. 16th, 1887, as a specimen of the base unblushing falsehoods perpetrated against "Mormonism"—so-called. This "Irishman" is evidently just spoiling "to be heard of men," and in order to attain this, his loftiest ambition, he fires a shot at old father David Whitmer to destroy his testimony to the Book of Mormon:

"MURPHY ON MORMONISM.

"I have for some time past been waiting for an opportunity to report a conversation which took place between myself and Mr. David Whitmer, one of the surviving witnesses to the Book of Mormon. I had hoped to have a talk with his brother John, but death intervened. I had business in Richmond last June, and thought I would interview Mr. David Whitmer. I met him in the street near the court-house and told him my business, and he invited me to walk to the livery stable conducted by himself and son. After we were seated in the office room the following conversation occurred:

"I am an Irishman, and live in Caldwell county. I have seen the Book of Mormon, with your name and that of your brother John as testamentary to the Book of Mormon. John is now dead, and you alone are left to satisfy my desire of knowledge concerning these matters."

"It is warm here; come down to the office at the livery stable."

When seated he asked me for the points concerning which I wanted information.

"First of all, I have heard that you saw an angel. I never saw one; I want your description of its shape, voice and brogue, and the construction of his language. I mean as to his style of speaking. You know we can often determine the class a man belongs to by his language."

"It had no appearance or shape."

"Then you neither saw nor heard anything?"

"Nothing in the way you understand it."

"How, then, could you bear testimony that you saw and heard an angel?"

"Have you never had impressions?"

"Then you had impressions, such as a Quaker has when the spirit moves him, or as a good Methodist in giving a happy experience—a mere feeling?"

"Just so."

"I think I understand you respecting the angel; but what about the reformed Egyptian writing on the plate discovered by Joseph Smith in the cave in New York? How did you know the writing was Egyptian, and that the Book of Mormon is a correct translation?"

"Being impressed with the truth and reality of it."

"In the same way in which you were impressed with the presence of the angel which interpreted the writing?"

"Yes."

"Do you know any other language than English?"

"No."

"Do you know anything of mesmerism or ventriloquism? Is it not possible you were imposed upon? You look to be honest."

"I do not know anything of these arts."

"You have perhaps read the history of Egypt: how the Carthaginians were descendants of Phenicia, and how the Israelites sojourned in Egypt and the probabilities of the old Egyptian being akin to the languages or idioms of Palestine: how the Persians ruled for a time in Egypt; how Alexander and the Greeks ruled afterwards, the Romans next and last of all the Arabs? Now, all these languages are known to linguists in the great universities of Europe, and what need was there of a miracle to decipher? The hieroglyphics are more ancient and the way to read them is discovered; consequently I do not see the need of an angelic visitor to teach us how to read them now-a-days. You thought doubtless you were impressed for good, but have you considered the precedents for murdering taught in the first chapter of the book of Nephi?" I stated the circumstances of Nephi being commanded by God to murder his uncle at night in the streets outside the walls of his house in Jerusalem. When he said that that looked bad his tone seemed to indicate that he had never before observed this wickedness in his book, witnessed by himself and recommended by his angel to the world. He had an honest, simple look, and my impression, which I think to be as good as his or his angel, is, that he ought to reconsider and contradict his former testimony to an illusion, or perhaps cunning scheme being a fact, which has resulted in so much woe to many; and as he seems to be nearly eighty years old, he ought not to delay.

JOHN MURPHY.

The editor of the Times endorses the writer, apologizes and explains for him, and seeks to give him character and credibility—qualities which "Mr. John Murphy, of Polo," evidently needs. The editor says:

"We reprint on the first page of this edition an interview between Mr. John Murphy, of Polo, and Elder David Whitmer, of Richmond, respecting the angel who translated the strange language in which the Book of Mormon was written. The interview was published in the Hamiltonian, January 21st, 1881. April 18th, the same year, a denial from elder Whitmer, under the caption of "A Proclamation," was published in the same paper, in which this language occurred: "It has been represented by one, John Murphy of Polo, that I in conversation with him last summer, denied my testimony of one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. * * * I wish now, in the very sunset of life, and in the fear of God, once for all to make this public statement, That I have never at any time denied that testimony or any part thereof, which has so long been published with that book, as one of the three witnesses." Mr. Whitmer also furnishes the names of many prominent citizens of Richmond who attest his high character for truth and veracity. The studious reader will fail to see wherein Mr. Murphy alleges that Elder Whitmer denies being a witness. He states in the interview that Elder Whitmer acknowledged that while in the presence of the angelic visitor he 'neither saw nor heard anything as you understand it,' but had an impression. Now this impression may satisfy some persons in search for spiritual consolation and light, but it will not suffice in matters of a practical nature. Suppose, for example, Elder Whitmer were to go into court with such evidence, what would his impression be worth? Who would enjoy hanging or even ten year's imprisonment on impression evidence? Mr. Murphy's report is of great value. Had he interviewed Elder Whitmer in the capacity of a newspaper reporter the matter would be open to a suspicion of coloring, embellishment or exaggeration. He went with a desire for knowledge. Being a student of the Bible and well versed in languages, his purpose was quite unlike that of a reporter on the hunt for a sensational topic. He approached the Mormon elder with a burning desire to ascertain definite statements respecting the angel, and after reading carefully the result of his efforts, the wonder is that there should be any other than doubting Thomas' on the point of Elder Whitmer's impression."

In the next issue of the Times, December 27th, Elder Joseph R. Lambert, in an effective, pungent manner, lays bare the deception and falsity of Mr. Murphy, as follows:

THE OTHER SIDE.

In the last issue of the Kingston Times appears what purports to be an interview between John Murphy and Elder Whitmer, with an editorial comment thereon. The interview is said to have taken place in June, 1880, and was published in the Hamiltonian January 21st, 1881. The Times admits that David Whitmer published a denial of Murphy's representation of said interview, in the same paper, in April, 1881; but, after reproducing part of the denial, says "the studious reader will fail to see wherein Mr. Murphy alleges that Elder Whitmer denies being a witness."

"The studious reader" who is acquainted with the published testimony of Elder Whitmer, which has been before the world for more than fifty years, will not "fail to see" that Mr. Murphy represents him as denying that testimony—which is precisely what Elder Whitmer now claims. In that testimony, over the signatures of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris, we find the following words: "And we declare with words of solemnness, [soberness.—Ed.] that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates and the engravings thereon," etc.

In Elder Whitmer's denial he says: "It having been represented by one John Murphy, of Polo, that I, in my conversation with him last summer, denied my testimony as one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon: To the end, therefore, that he may understand me now, if he did not then; and that the world may know the truth, I wish now, standing as it were in the very sunset of life, and in the fear of God, once for all to make this public statement; That I have never at any time denied that testimony or any part thereof, which has so long since been published with that book, as one of the three witnesses." Thus the "studious reader" can not fail to see that so far as Elder Whitmer's testimony to seeing an angel and hearing the voice of God is concerned, his statements, when found over his own signature, are plain and harmonious. Next, we proceed to show the character of the statements Elder Whitmer has been represented as having made to others. Fortunately this man Murphy is only one of scores who have gone to Whitmer "with a desire for knowledge," some of whom are students of the Bible. If, then, Mr. Murphy's report is of great value, each one of these is equally so.

James Caffall, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, interviewed Elder Whitmer in August, 1874. Among other things, the Elder said to him: "As my testimony stands, so it is. I have not, nor will I deny it." To E. C. Brand, of Tabor, Iowa, Feb. 8th, 1885, Elder Whitmer said: "I did see the angel of God, and was commanded to testify of these things, and they are true." J. W. Chaburn, of Harlan, Iowa, his son, wife and daughter-in-law, called on David Whitmer at Richmond, in April, 1882. In answer to the question, "Is your testimony the same now as when first given, concerning the plates?" Elder Whitmer replied: "These hands handled the plates, these eyes saw the angel, and these ears heard his voice, and I know it is of God." In the Kansas City Journal for June 5th, 1881, (one year after Mr. Murphy's interview with Whitmer) we have a lengthy account of an interview with Elder Whitmer, from which we extract the following statement:

"Mr. Whitmer, knowing that you are the only living witness to the translation of the Book of Mormon and also that you were a resident of Jackson county during the troubles in 1833, I have been sent to you by the Journal to get from your lips the true statement of facts in regard to these matters. For nearly half a century the world has had but one side only, and it is now our desire to present to our readers for the first time the other side."

The object of the foregoing quotation is to show the apparent fairness of the Journal. Surely, after publishing one side only for nearly fifty years, it is not out of place to give the other. I quote again:

"When did you see the plates?"

"It was in the latter part of June, 1829. Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and myself were together, and the angel showed them to us. We not only saw the plates of the Book of Mormon, but he also showed us the brass plates of the Book of Ether, and many others. They were shown to us in this way: Joseph, Oliver and I were sitting on a log when we were overshadowed by a light more glorious than that of the sun. In the midst of this light, but a few feet from us, appeared a table, upon which were many golden plates, also the sword of Laban and the directors. I saw them as plain as I see you now, and distinctly heard the voice of the Lord declaiming that the records of the plates of the Book of Mormon were translated by the gift of the power of God."

"Did you see the angel?"

"Yes; he stood before us. Our testimony as recorded in the Book of Mormon is absolutely true, just as it is written there."

The above witnesses are just as competent to report what Elder Whitmer has said as Mr. Murphy is; and when we consider, (1) the number of witnesses, and (2) that they represent Elder Whitmer in harmony with his first testimony, and also in harmony with his late reaffirmation of it, both of which are over his own signature, it certainly places Mr. John Murphy in an unenviable position, and it will require more than a carefully and ingeniously worded sentence to relieve him. In the light of the above testimony, is it probable that Elder Whitmer ever represented his testimony as being no more than a mere impression? Mr. Murphy's improbable statements brought to bear against Elder Whitmer's original testimony, is something like a strong man trying to battle down a stone wall with a small bunch of feathers! Really, what would such evidence be worth, before a court, against what we have presented on the other side? Does the Times think that any one would "enjoy hanging or even ten years imprisonment" on such evidence as that which Murphy says of Whitmer?

It has never been claimed that the "angel translated the Book of Mormon."

Where did Mr. Murphy learn that Laban was Neph's "uncle?" His statements about "reformed Egyptian," glaring misrepresentation of the first chapter of Nephi, and his supposition that Elder Whitmer had not considered what he is pleased to call "precedents for murder," all give him away badly.

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, Ia., Dec. 19th.

LAMONI has flattered herself hitherto in not having fires of any note within her limits and seemed to promise herself immunity therefrom forever; but on Wednesday, January 11th, at about 8:30 a. m., the cry of fire was heard, when it was seen that the hardware store of Thomas Teale and the drug store of Hansen, Weld & Co., were on fire in the upper stories, and that the devouring element was making rapid and irresistible headway. In a few moments every available citizen, including many ladies and school children, were on hand aiding as best they could in saving goods, fixtures, and furniture, and were so successful that a large amount, much of it in a damaged condition, was rescued from the ravages of the flames. The fire swept south on the street consuming the store-building of Elihu Dobson, the grocery store and repair shop of Olsen & Johnson, also the shoe shop of Mr. Chas. Cook, burning all the buildings fronting east on the street, threatening those to the west, also those across the streets both north and east. It is hoped the losses were largely covered by insurance except on the building occupied by Hansen, Weld & Co., owned by Miss L. L. Lyons, and that owned by Elihu Dobson, the insurance on both of which having expired.

Regrets are profitless; but it remains for us to hope that all our citizens will profit by this visitation, guard their interests effectively, make it far less possible for fires to occur, and be better prepared to extinguish them readily when they do come. Besides this we hope that western pluck and enterprise will soon erect on the ruins of this burnt district far better and safer structures than the former ones. If this is done, present losses may result in solid future gain.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH wrote from Salt Lake City, January 7th: "The weather has been damp, snowy, cold, and severe; the walking slushy and very slippery, and it has been as much as one's legs were worth to walk on the sidewalks." His congregations have been rather small, but "earnestly attentive," he writes.

Sr. Mary L. Gilhey, of Liberal, Missouri, desires preaching there when any elders pass that way.

Bro. Z. Winn of Kansas City, Missouri, sends us a clipping from the Star of that city, giving facts, it alleges, relative to "Christian Science" as taught and practiced there, by its "five hundred followers" who it claims are badly deceived and humbugged. Bro. Winn says: "I know some of those scientists, and they tell me the system is a fraud, and that it cost each of them near one hundred dollars to 'possess the art.'" Brother Foss, he writes, preached twice in Kansas City of late, and that the Saints there are feeling well.

We find in a late Scott county Blade, published at Buffalo, Iowa, a lengthy obituary of Sr. Eliza, wife of Bro. E. Ladner who resides near that village. The dates of her death and burial are not given. Sr. Ladner was a most excellent woman and a steadfast, devoted Saint. Herself and husband delighted in entertaining the servants of Christ, and they aided liberally in forwarding the interests of the Church of Christ by exemplary living, wise and kindly words, and also by their temporal means. The church and neighbors will miss Sr. Eliza Ladner.

Sr. J. Tilden, of Beattie, Kansas, in a late letter asks the Saints to pray for the conversion of her husband. She thinks if a capable, spiritual elder would preach there good would result.

Bro. Wm. Davis was preaching Sunday's at Echo, Michigan, and having large congregations. So he wrote the 7th instant.

Bro. J. D. Erwin, writes from Silver Hill, Arkansas, that he had preached at Walnut Springs, and was blessed in presenting the word.

Bro. Robert Oehring was at Saginaw City, Michigan, January 7th, and he wishes to know of any members there or near there. He says: "I have a good number of Germans almost persuaded. Prospects are very good, thank God."

Bro. Philo Avery writes from Snicarte, Mason county, Illinois, and asks that a worthy, capable elder call there and preach. He says also that his wife desires baptism.

Bro. A. L. Whiteaker in a late letter explains that sickness prevented holding conference in the Western Wisconsin district last fall, and says times are very hard.

Bro. E. W. Depue in his letter of the 6th inst., says that at Tiff City, Missouri, where he resides, the Saints now have a branch of nineteen members, are looking for more soon, and are using fifteen copies of the Voice of Warning sent him by Bro. J. H. Peters.

Sr. Eunice See, of Adams Center, Wisconsin, asks that an elder call and labor there. She says Bro. Adam See, her husband, has been afflicted much of the time for the past six years, also that the drouth nearly ruined crops there last year, and therefore times are hard and money scarce.

Bro. E. L. Kelley wrote of late from Los Angeles, California, that he intends to visit Kansas and Missouri in February and March. He says the rainy season had set in and that the chilly, damp, rainy weather and bad roads hinders church work just now very much.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it lawful for a teacher, or one of the laity, to pass the sacramental bread and wine?

Ans.—No; the law says: "The elders or priests are to have a sufficient time to expound all things concerning the Church of Christ to their [members] understanding, previous to their partaking of the sacrament. . . . And the members shall manifest before the church, and also before the elders, by a godly walk and conversation, that they are worthy of it, that there may be works and faith agreeable to the holy scriptures, walking in holiness before the Lord. . . . And the elder or priest shall administer it."—Doc. Cov. 17: 18, 22.

Q.—Is it legal for elders to sit in judgment on a case where they are the accusers?

A.—It is not proper, for the reason that "In no case, whatever, should a branch or district president appoint a court to try a case in which he is to be a party, either as complainant or defendant; or in the issue of which he is directly a party in interest."—Rules of Order, section 153. If these, when either complainant or defendant, may not appoint a court of elders, it follows that they should not be a part of that court. And further, if these, when complainants or defendants, or parties "in interest," may neither appoint a court nor be one of its members, then no other officer, when complainant or defendant, should either appoint the members of a court or sit as one of its members. This should be observed in order that the court may be entirely free from bias, prejudice and self-interest, and that its decisions be not liable to the charge of personal or partisan motives.

Q.—Is it proper for the sisters to engage in sewing or knitting in and during business meetings of the church?

A.—No. All who attend such meetings should give strict attention to the business thereof, and should do nothing to interrupt, disturb or distract either themselves or others.

Q.—Is it proper for an officer to arise in a prayer and testimony meeting and rebuke a person for a supposed wrong as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants, 42: 23?

A.—No person should rebuke others for "supposed" wrongs; and for real and clearly demonstrated public wrongs, persons should be rebuked only by those having presiding authority at the time, and this to be done in meekness and without railing, and that, too, not in a prayer and testimony meeting if it can be avoided.

Q.—Are the one hundred and forty-four thousand of Revelations 7: 4, identical with those in Revelations 14: 1?

A.—We think so. Joseph the Seer said of those mentioned in 7: 3, 4, "We are to understand that those who are sealed are High Priests, ordained unto the Holy Order of God to administer the everlasting gospel; for they are they who are ordained out of every Nation, Kindred, Tongue and People, by the Angels to whom is given power over the nations of the earth, to bring as many as will come, to the Church of the First Born."—Concordance to Doctrine and Covenants, page 31. That God designed and promised that the priesthood should be with His true and faithful Israel, in all ages, and even in the ages to come, may be seen in Exodus 19: 5, 6; 1 Peter 2: 9; Isa. 61: 6; 66: 21; Rev. 1: 6; 5: 9, 10; 20: 6, etc., etc. And that the Lord intended to ever continue the tribal distinction of His Israel may be seen in Exodus 28: 21; 1 Sam. 10: 19; Ps. 122: 4; Isa. 49: 6; Ezek. 45: 8; Acts 26: 7; James 1: 1; Rom. 11: 23-29; Rev. 7: 4; 21: 12; Ezek. 48: 31-35, etc., etc. In conclusion; it should be borne in mind that this promised priesthood of necessity had, has, and must ever have a variety of officers; and that the office of High Priest or Chief Priest, was, is, and is to be one of them. Priest, be it remembered, is said by both Webster, Buck, and others, to be a contraction of the word "presbyter" and is "of the same import with elder;" and "is referred by Gesenius to the idea of prophecy," and also that "the primary meaning of the word is equivalent to minister."—Wm. Smith's Bible Dictionary. Reflection upon these facts will enable all to see the propriety of the Seer's explanation of Revelations 7: 3, 4, as given before.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. W. A. Bennett wrote from Graham, Texas, January 3d, and says:

"I am satisfied great good could be done here if we had an elder to labor here. But we are too poor, I guess. We had two failures—or nearly so—in crops."

Bro. J. J. Cornish wrote from Juniata, Michigan, January 9th, that his proposed debate "did not come off," that for some unexplained reason his opponent "did not appear." He says further:

"There was a large crowd out, and I occupied the time giving the people the history of the rise of the church, &c. Good was done. The Saints here, as well as elsewhere, are alive to the work. We baptize some occasionally."

CHURCH SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

All Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, who have not yet sent in their names for the purpose of being placed in quorums are again notified that the order of the General Conference has been that none shall be so enrolled except by their own request. There are vacancies in the five quorums of Elders and the one quorum of Priests that are organized, and if enough are present at the coming General Conference to organize other quorums, it is probable that it will be done. Therefore all who desire to be thus enrolled are hereby requested to send or authorize the sending of their names at an early date.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Cheerfulness charms us with a spell that reaches into eternity, and we would not exchange it for all the soulless beauty that ever graced the fairest form on earth.—
Anna Cleaves.

THE BREAKING WAVES DASHED HIGH.

The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,
And the woods against a stormy sky
Their giant branches toss'd;
And the heavy night hung dark
The hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles moored their bark
On the wild New England shore.
Not as the conqueror comes,
They, the true-hearted, came;
Not with the roll of the stirring drums,
And the trumpet that sings of fame;
Not as the flying come,
In silence and in fear:—
They shook the depths of the desert gloom
With their hymns of lofty cheer.
Amidst the storm they sang,
And the stars heard and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rang
To the anthem of the free!
The ocean eagle soared
From his nest by the white waves' foam;
And the rocking pines of the forest roared—
This was their welcome home!
There were men with hoary hair
Amidst that pilgrim band;—
Why had they come to wither there,
Away from their childhood's land?
There was woman's fearless eye,
Lit by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth.
What sought they thus afar?—
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?—
They sought a faith's pure shrine!
Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod—
They have left unstained what there they found;—
Freedom to worship God. Selected.

44 Greenhill St., Greenhey's Lane,
MANCHESTER, Eng., Dec. 19th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have written the following to the "Home Column" believing that the review of a life's experience increases our love and sympathy for the work and encourages others to "press forward" with renewed diligence in the "Battle of Life." My kind and affectionate parents were Methodists, and from infancy they taught me to love and pray to God. My father died while I was young and with his last words exhorted me to follow in his footsteps. I did so for a few years, until one day I was invited to a Saint's meeting in Manchester. I attended their services chiefly through curiosity, but soon found their teachings were scriptural and in perfect harmony with my feelings. The result was that my mother, brother, sister and self were baptized. Our joy was great in the new light, and we were blessed with the gifts of the Spirit, which greatly strengthened us. A sister Perkins now came to live with us. She had been to Nauvoo to seek a blessing, being a cripple, and was there administered to by Joseph and Hyrum, when by the Spirit she was promised eternal life through her great suffering here.

She was summoned home to see her mother, who was seriously ill, and whilst she was making the passage between New Orleans and Liverpool our beloved prophet and his brother were martyred. Their death affected her deeply and cast a gloom over all.

Soon after entering the Kingdom the following dream was given me: A city of considerable size lay before me, the buildings of which were very irregular. On the top of the largest one was a tree, with spreading branches and thick foliage. The whole city lay in the deepest gloom, was deserted, and an unearthly stillness reigned. While I was gazing on this singular scene a sheet of fire descended from heaven and consumed the leaves and branches of the tree, leaving the blackened trunk. My attention was then turned to the distant horizon where a small but brilliant light appeared. It advanced towards me, increasing in size and brightness, until at length the former scene entirely disappeared from view. The glorious rays were around me when the dream closed. I related the circumstance in a testimony meeting, when a brother warned me to give heed to the small light or I would be thrown out of the church. (The dream was literally fulfilled when I joined the Reorganization about twenty-six years afterwards.) A number of prominent elders now came to this country, among whom was the late John Taylor. He stood high in the estimation of many here, especially after his discussion at Boulogne. I questioned him about certain rumors that had oozed out with reference to polygamy, but he evaded the point by asking me if I was not afraid to talk to big folks like him upon those matters. Many offers were made to induce me to go to Utah, but my suspicions of something wrong having been aroused, I declined to go until I learned more. I soon after married a sergeant of Her Majesty's army, but not before he obeyed the gospel. A branch of eleven persons was soon formed in our regiment, all of whom, with my husband and self, left the service, thinking to unite with the main body of the true church in America. We prayed earnestly to God, asking him to show us whether it was his will that we should go to Utah. In answer to our prayers I received the following dream: I was looking out of the front window of our house, when a cart was driven up, loaded with coffins draped in black, and stopped opposite to the place where I stood. The dream though short left a deep impression upon my mind and we did not pray to go to Utah again. Much unrest continued amongst the Saints in this country, until at length polygamy was openly taught. Numbers left the church, but others, like ourselves, clung to the faith, not knowing where to go; for we knew nothing of the Reorganization. Things went on from bad to worse until at length the climax was reached in 1876. The tyrannical conduct of an elder named Mr. Snelgrove compelled Elder Dewsnup, Elder Miller, our president, my husband and others to withdraw from the Manchester branch of the Utah church. We held meetings in our houses alternately each Sabbath, and resolved not to be deceived again. After awhile communication was opened up with Elder Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham. The result was that he baptized fifteen of us, myself being the first sister to enter the water; and now the word of the Lord is, "I have many people in this city." We feel that "saving peace" has indeed entered "Britain's borders," and is spreading slowly but surely on many hands.

In taking a retrospective view of my connection with the work of God,—the gospel, it extends over many years, until I have grown old in the work. Our household has been scattered "far and wide." My mother died in Utah, my sister in Strathalbyn, South Australia, and my brother joined the New York State Artillery Volunteers and went through the American war under General Grant. All my children are in the work, one of whom is an elder in this Mission (England).

Dear sister, we have benefitted much from the teachings of the "Home Column," and pray earnestly that God may bless you in your labor of love. As I have lived in the work so I wish to die in it, never once regretting that I heard and obeyed its glorious sound. May our heavenly Father knit us all together in the bond of peace, is the sincere desire of your sister in Christ.
J. ARMSTRONG.

LITTLE SOUX, Iowa, Dec. 27th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—Having received such encouragement through a private letter, to write again to the column, I come with my humble offering. I have been thinking today what a joyful world this would be to live in, did we always see how much better it would be to help some poor burdened heart or drooping spirit to take courage. I don't believe any of us can realize how naturally selfish we are, until God has given us spiritual sight. We may look from self under almost any circumstance of life and see others have troubles, sorrows, and heavy burdens to bear. Well now, how may we find joy in sorrow? Simply by trying to make some one else happy. Dear sisters, who may feel bowed down, and the burdens almost too heavy to be borne, did you ever try to lighten some one else's cares and not feel the weight of your own grow less? As I have received so many letters of sympathy and condolence from different ones, and have answered but two or three direct, I take the privilege of here stating that the peace and joy these communications brought has been a healing balm to my wounded heart. Yes, more, they have helped me to arise from the weight of sorrow which seemed almost to crush all my hopes and take all light out of my life, and say, God doeth all things well. And oftentimes since I have become thus reconciled, I have felt a sweet influence steal over me, and comforting thoughts have been suggested to my mind, and it has almost seemed as if the strong arm of my heavenly Father encircled me. Oh, blessed be the name of God!

"Oh blessed peace, gentle spirit divine!"
She abides with the pure in heart;
The lowliest lot sweet joys combine
When touched by her magic art.

This world has enough of cold indifference without receiving any from the Saints. In my mind I see the blessed Master going about seeking whom he can comfort; and from reading the holy record we learn he associated amongst the poorest of people, and when the proud scoffed at Him and reminded Him of the class he was dining with, He said, "It isn't the whole that need the physician, but the sick." So it is to-day dear sisters, there are many poor and despairing souls, who could they receive sufficient encouragement, might lift up their heads with stronger wills. Then I earnestly pray that any who may feel it their duty to send in their letters and pieces to the Hope, Herald and Autumn Leaves, will not delay. The reading of the Home Column has given a new impetus to my life. Let us all remember sister Frances in our devotions to God. Her task is no small one, and while we enjoy reading her writing so much, let us bear in mind she is in need of God's special blessing to enable her to perform her responsible duty.

"Oft a little word soft spoken," Falling on the ear,
Throws a passing ray of gladness
O'er the heart darkened with sadness
And dispells the tear.

"Gentle words, they cost so little,"
And such power hold
To impart to others pleasure,
Why not greater make their measure
Many thousand fold.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. G. S. HYDE.

HOLDEN, Mo., Nov. 11th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—It has been a long time since I greeted you, but not because I have not had you in my mind. I have often thought how greatly we are blest in having a medium through which we may communicate one with another. I have read with intense delight the "Column" from time to time, and wished that my time were not so limited, that I might be able oftener to send greeting; but, like many others, my time has been occupied in discharging household duties devolving upon me, and I have found myself so engrossed with the cares of this life, together with my poor health, that it has seemed impossible that I should do more, though I love this latter day work better than any thing on earth beside. I have had such precious testimonies of its truth that I could not doubt for a moment that this is God's work, and that he owns and blesses us whenever we are true and faithful. I feel to thank and bless his precious name for the manifestation of his Spirit's presence and power whenever I have met with the Saints. We are still in existence as a branch here in Holden; though we have had no elder for some time, we have the promise that we shall be gratified before long. I ask in behalf of our branch the earnest prayers of the faithful Saints, to the end that we may be blessed and strengthened to live "Godly in Christ Jesus." We have trials of our faith as all must, but then I thank God we have our triumphs through Christ who strengtheneth us.

I went out last night to hear the celebrated Dixon Williams, Evangelist from Canada. I came away disappointed, as I had expected to hear something edifying. He made a few remarks, slashed right and left at the sinners and then called for written questions, stating that if he could not answer them he would be honest enough to say so, but before he left the floor he said that people need not send in questions on doctrine, as he would not answer them; then came the altar service, when, after the old Methodist fashion, a number of penitents gathered forward, and men, women and children gathered round and prayed for them; and since then they all said they were converted. When the words came to me, "See that thou do all things according to the pattern which I have shown you." And I said "Oh, Spirit of Christ, if needs be, take all else I have, but ever give me the testimony of Jesus, and I shall be rich indeed." Nay, I would rather be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of the ungodly!

Pray for me, dear sisters, that God may work in me a good work. Ever praying for the welfare and prosperity of Zion, I am yours in the one faith.

Correspondence.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Nov. 2d.

Bro. Joseph and William:—On to-morrow morning we expect to leave on the steamer "Richmond," for Auckland, New Zealand; and then to Melbourne, Australia, via Sydney. I do not expect to stay in Sydney only long enough to exchange steamers. You will please publish our address at Hastings, Victoria, Australia. We were greatly disappointed in not being able to go to the Island of Manihi to the October conference. I hear that there were fully three hundred members of the church there, from the Islands of Maatea, Tikahau, Kaukura, Niau, Farava, Anaa, Roroia, Makemo, Tanga, Arutua, Apatai, Taroa, Tapoto, and Rairoa; in all, eighteen branches. Their disappointment in not seeing us was great; and as they expected that we would leave by the middle of October, they supposed we would leave before they could reach here; but when they learn that we have been here till November 3d, then they will feel sorry again.

Bro. Ellis writes that he will pay our fare from Auckland to Sydney—when we reach Auckland, and telegraph to him; but by paying our fare through from here we will save considerable money, and save some trouble. But we both need clothing and other things. I have succeeded in having built a nice frame church in the city of Papeete, which has only cost us $560. The carpenter work was done by Tapuni and Fatoro, and myself; while Metuaore, Tehopea, Harvatea, Tikaviu, Tevii, Pai and others, helped a great deal in various ways. I did most of the painting, and by my personal work I have saved the church here $150; and have paid out for expenses six dollars more than I have collected, so I have not been making money out of these people to any great extent.

I have been here three years, and I have not received over $500 from the church here, and not a penny from the Bishop, and but twenty dollars worth of provisions from the Bishop's Agent in San Francisco. We have plenty to eat, and sufficient clothing, (if not as fine as we could have wished.) I am satisfied with the work that we have done, and leave with a clear conscience. We opened the new church here last Sunday, and I preached the first sermon in English that has been preached in Papeete since the days of Pratt and Grouard, (that is, of our faith). I had a crowded house, and fully fifty people outside. I had splendid liberty, and traced the history of the church for the past eighteen centuries, with a few words, about the Book of Mormon, the Reorganization &c. I supposed that as the congregations had been used to half hour dissertations, that they would be weary; but after services were over, I heard on all sides the question, "Why did you not keep on, we could have listened an hour longer cheerfully."

A great amount of prejudice has been removed. We have now a neat building in the city of Papeete, 24x42 feet, and a missionary of our faith can get a hearing in Papeete, which has not been the case for over thirty-five years. I did hope that the steamer would not get in before Saturday next, so I could have another Sunday here. The church at Avatoru, Rairoa, are going to build a new house of worship, and also a house for the missionary; and as it will be in the center of this field, it will be the best place for one missionary to locate. I hope that the next conference will send out two elders at least. It will never do to abandon this field now. It ought not to have been revived if it is to be left alone now. It will take no harm to be without a missionary for six months or so. I assure them that you will send one or two at next April Conference, who should reach here by last of June. Send two efficient men to Australia. Two or three can be sustained here, and a half dozen in Australia. The work is in quite good condition all around now. The United States mail has not got in yet, and I fear that we will leave before it arrives. Address all mail matter to Hastings, Victoria, Australia, until further notice.

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS W. SMITH.

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ills., Jan'y 7th.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from Lake City, Arkansas. I began preaching there Thursday evening before Christmas and remained there debating and preaching until Friday before New Years. I removed a great deal of prejudice, and left a few believing. I would have remained longer, but the weather was cold, and when the Court-house was closed against us we had to hold meetings in a private house, and the people did not turn out well, and those that came were uncomfortable. Whoever goes there should go in warm weather and stay in the neighborhood as the work required. I think a few there might obey the gospel.

I came by Kenton, Tennessee, on my way home, preached there to an attentive audience, and left a promise that I would return and preach till they were satisfied, when I could spare the time. Bro. Rosson would gladly entertain an elder that would labor there. It is on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, sixty miles south of Cairo, Illinois. Sister Rosson paid me fifteen dollars tithing that she had made the last year from her butter, chickens, and eggs. If we could all do that well proportionally, there would be an increase in the treasury. I still desire to do all I reasonably can, but the outlook for me to go much is not flattering. Praying for the prosperity of the church, and desiring to labor for the same, I continue in the covenant.

G. H. HILLIARD.

DES MOINES, IOWA, Dec. 29th.

Dear Herald:—We send you the wherewith to visit us another year. In the past you have brought us many words of cheer and comfort from faces you have made us familiar with in our fancies, and can recognize them before we see their names at the end of their letters. We pray God to speed you on until every foe is vanquished. We have, like many of your contributors, seen many changes and passed through tribulations, and have found that all things work together for good to them that love the work you are engaged in and shall endeavor to hold fast to the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life. We have been highly edified by your defense of the work against apostates, and your liberal views on all topics in dispute, also in your great historical researches, in "Persecution and its Causes" and your direct answers to all questions pertaining to the gospel. Therefore we shall feel proud to introduce you to our neighbors and friends as a safe, reliable guide in the paths of truth and righteousness. Hoping you may still come with your good counsel and your gems of light and truth, we are yours in the bonds of the everlasting gospel,
THOMAS HULL.

EAST PORTLAND, Oregon, Jan. 6th.

Bro. Blair:—I send you my letter to the Vindicator here; as an inducement to other brethren to do likewise, for I find no trouble in getting a concise statement of our position printed in almost every paper I have tried; they seem perfectly willing to give it room. I think it would be well for our elders to get such a statement before the people through the papers everywhere, and if they will go to the editors in a genteel manner, telling them the truth, I believe that with few exceptions they will succeed. I have reached seven papers with articles similar. A hundred dollars expended this way would reach a hundred papers, and about a hundred thousand people. Would that not be better than putting out money on interest? or hoarding it up? I am doing all I can under the circumstances, and my main work here will be in the papers, and I expect to reach several more. My health is not good. There are five of the Saints here, and we hold prayer meetings and are blessed. The weather is very cold.
A. HAWS.

Editor Vindicator:—Your columns being a place of defense and I having a defense to make, please give place to the following vindication of the character and rights of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from the unjust calumnies and misrepresentations that have so largely obtained among ministers, public speakers, the press and the people at large, chiefly because the difference is not known between us and the apostate Mormon church at Utah, who falsely and unlawfully claim the name of Latter Day Saints, and who have by an apostasy from their original faith and practices under which they were organized and had their perpetuity for over fourteen years, brought this reproach upon all who bear that name. Cruel, unjust contumely has been heaped upon the law-abiding, christian members and representatives of the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by the press and from the pulpit, the rostrum and by the people, who through ignorance and a too hasty belief and acceptance of these reports, and not having the fear of the Lord always before their faces they have 'Taken up (this) reproach against (their) neighbors,' Ps. 15:3, for which they are reprehensible.

"Now that these ministers, editors, public speakers and the people at large may be left without an excuse and have an opportunity to do us justice and draw a distinct line between us and the Mormons at Utah, I will state our grievances, correct misrepresentations, and ask my readers to "prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Our grievances are first, this reproach was brought upon the true church by the apostasy of Brigham Young and the faction that followed him to Utah, who tried to force polygamy and other false and unchristian doctrines and practices upon the church. But in this they failed, for the great majority of the church repudiated Brigham and his followers as usurpers and heretics, and remained true to their original faith and practices. Second, we are not allowed the rights common to all other churches and societies of declaring our faith, doctrines and practices, nor are we allowed to write our own history, but are judged, ostracized and maligned without a fair and impartial hearing, from histories written by our enemies, a large portion of which had no foundation in fact up to the time of the apostasy above named, neither since that time by the true church. Third, we are held up before the public as being Mormons by name and also in the practice of polygamy and other false, unlawful and unchristian doctrines and practices and as law-breakers.

"CORRECTIONS.

"First.—The members and representatives of this church are law abiding, honorable Christians.

"Second.—This church utterly repudiates the name of Mormon, as it never was its name, but was a nickname given by its enemies and never accepted.

"Third.—This church never at any time nor under any circumstances taught, practiced, nor insigated others to teach or practice polygamy, or any other unlawful and unchristian doctrine or practice contrary to the laws of the land, but has always maintained an uncompromising warfare against this and all other false doctrines, both in and out of Utah, by preaching and practicing the faith once delivered to the Saints, believing that 'Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God.'—2 John 1: 9.

"Fourth.—This church was the first church that brought the Utah question relative to polygamy before Congress by sending memorials and delegates there to meet and withstand Utah's delegates with their false claims of bible authority, (the bible being the standard of religious worship in the United States), for under it they claimed constitutional right and protection to practice polygamy and to have and cohabit with many wives as did David and Solomon, and by these and other false claims they held Congress for over twenty-five years from passing any effectual prohibitory laws against the unlawful relic of barbarism until this church brought their standard books, the Bible, Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, to bear in the following passages and proved that polygamy was not a tenet or practice of the original church.

"We believe that marriage is ordained of God and that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman, except in cases where the contract of marriage is broken by death or transgression. Gen. 2:18, 21-24; 7:1, 7, 13. Prov. 5:15-21. Mal. 2:14, 15. Matt. 19:4-6. 1 Cor. 7:2. Heb. 13:4. Doc. and Cov. 42:7; 49:3.

"We believe that the doctrines of a plurality and a community of wives are heresies, and are opposed to the law of God. Gen. 4:19, 23, 24; 7:9; 22:2, in connection Gal. 4th and 6th c. Gen. 21:8-10. Mal. 2:14, 15. Matt. 19:3-9. The Book of Mormon says: "Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord. For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none, for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me, saith the Lord of hosts."—Jacob 2:6-9.

"Congress in passing laws prohibiting polygamy did not interfere with any doctrine, tenet or practice of the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.
ELDER A. HAWS."

KEWANEE, Ill., Jan. 5th.

Dear Herald:—From letters received from my family, also from Bro. John Chisnall notifying me of the low state of my wife, together with the impressions of the Holy Spirit, I bid a brotherly goodby to all the dear Saints in my native nation, Wales, and embarked on board the ship Alaska of the Guion line from Liverpool, November 26th, 1887, and in about seven days reached New York, and home the 8th of December, having met with kind hearts by the way and a pleasant passage. I desired to have stayed yet longer, instead of returning so soon. My heart's desire was, and is, to toil with that people for Zion's cause, knowing as I do from actual experience among them that they are (generally speaking), a kind and loving people, having the "latter day call" at heart, so far as their knowledge extends. It is meat and drink to me to do my Maker's will, ever toiling on here or elsewhere for Zion's cause, for in it my treasures lie.
With love in Christ,

JOHN D. JONES.

UNDERWOOD, IOWA, Jan. 2d.

Brother Blair:—Bro. J. C. Foss has preached of late in our neighborhood, and I am thankful to say, has done much good. The Lord blest his labors, and nine have embraced the blessed gospel. More are investigating. The Lord is stirring up the minds of the people. My heart rejoices more and more in this work, and I feel thankful to our heavenly Father for sending Bro. Foss to us. Oh how I wish we had hundreds of such men in the field. We did have such good meetings, with houses crowded. Our branch meetings are held at Underwood now, and Bro. Foss organized a Sunday School there. I think we will have better times than we ever have had. The Saints seems awakened up to a sense of their duty. I do not know how we would have got along in the past if it had not been for the Herald.

How do so many get along without it? We could not, and keep alive—or at least it seems we could not. I think Autumn Leaves is a splendid work for both young and old, and I feel thankful we have such a work started and hope it will meet with good success.

We have been looking for you to come here and hope it will not be very long before you visit us. Henry Cook said if we wrote you to give you his best respects, and said he wished you would come and preach here a week or two to them if you could. Your sister in Christ,
M. BRADFELD.

SAN BARNARDINO, Cal., Jan. 3d.

Dear Herald:—After writing you in September last I preached twice in the Presbyterian church in Santa Maria to small but very attentive audiences. The first night the minister, Mr. Beard, was present; but though very cordial in his manners he refused to sit in the pulpit. The second night he came not. I next stopped with the Saints of Long Valley branch, near San Lucas. I preached in the School-house once and in San Lucas a few times, and baptized a young lady. From Long Valley I accompanied Bro. Asa Davis to San Benito, where we arrived in time to be in attendance in the Central district conference. We had a pleasant and I hope profitable time. Had good attendance, and a very good feeling was manifest. Bro. John B Carmichael was ordained an elder and was subsequently chosen president of the district, Bro. J. F. Kingsbury was sustained secretary, Bro. J. W. Range Bishop's agent, and Bro. Daniel Brown assistant president. Thence I went to San Francisco, where I had the privilege of meeting Bro. E. L. Kelley, of the Bishopric, and was glad to welcome him to the Pacific Slope, as he came to labor with us for a season. We attended the Northern California district conference, at Oakland, October 6th. We had an interesting session and enjoyed the Spirit in our ministrations. Bro. Kelley and I labored in that district the most of the time after adjournment of conference until early in December. The Saints received us cordially, but serious troubles which we found to exist in Oakland, Sacramento, and Stockton branches marred our joy. In each case we did what we thought wise, so far as circumstances would allow, and left our work to the Master's care, humbly praying God to bless his people. In this arduous work I found Bro. Kelley an excellent helper and was more than ever convinced that his visit to the coast was opportune.

Leaving the Northern district we spent a week in the Central district, in Tulare county. We had not time to visit all the Saints, but found what we did see alive in the work, and we rejoiced greatly. We had quite a fair interest at Alila, near Pixley. I had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. William Clapp and wife. Bro. Clapp is a brother of Bro. J. C. Clapp. December 15th, I left Bro. Kelley in Los Angeles, and came home, where I spent the time since. At last advices Bro. Kelly was yet in Los Angeles.

Of the missionary force, Bro. Mills at last report was sick, but I hope it is not serious. Bro. Gibson is laboring in this vicinity; Bro. Badham is laboring in Los Angeles; Bro. Haws at last advices was in Oregon; Bro. Daley is in the field, making his objective point Stockton, California; Bro. Holt labored as long as practicable with the tent, and is now at home for a season; Bro. Harris did a good work in Santa Barbara county and is now at home; Bro. David E. Lander, a young man whom I have recently appointed to missionary labor, is, I suppose, engaged in Monterey and San Benito counties.

Our hearts have been made sad of late by the visits of death's messenger. Two veterans have been stricken down, and sadly we feel the loss. One, Elder D. J. Phillips, of Oakland, has been long and favorably known in California, and his honesty and unflinching devotion to the right endeared him to all. At the time of his decease he was president of Northern California district, and had also been appointed to missionary work. Immediately after his appointment he entered upon active duty, labored for a few weeks at Stockton, where he accomplished good; returned home sick, from which sickness he never recovered. We mourn, but not as those who have no hope. The other, Elder John Eams, of Santa Monica, had not been so long among us; but in his short stay he impressed all who met him as being an honest conscientious Saint. We have no fears for these brethren. It is doubtless well with them.

At the Oakland conference Elder James H. Parr of Sacramento was chosen assistant president, and he will consequently succeed Bro. Phillips in the presidency of the district. I trust the Saints will sustain him and that God will give him humility, wisdom and strength for his work. All is not sunshine here, but I never felt stronger in the faith or more confident of its final glorious triumph.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

MT. WASHINGTON, Pa., Jan. 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have been home from my mission a short time, and during my stay have enjoyed it pleasantly. Have preached occasionally, and have enjoyed excellent liberty of spirit in presenting the word, and hope all may be comforted and encouraged in the way of righteousness and peace. The branch here is in fair condition, so far as I know. The officers are united and are striving to encourage the Saints to duty. I have baptized six—the children of the Saints of this branch—a son and daughter of Bro. Jacob Reese; son and daughter of Bro. E. Thomas; son of Bro. Rogers, and a son of Bro. Barrett. The oldest was eighteen and the youngest eleven. They were the fruits of the labor of the parents and of those who preached here. We were greatly blessed in the confirmation meetings by the Spirit's presence, giving assurance that the Lord was well pleased with the offering made.

I have preached twice at Mansfield, being invited to go there by Bro. Jacob Reese, who has charge of the branch there. I enjoyed excellent liberty there in presenting the truth to the Saints and friends. Bro. Richard Salyards is here helping to defend the Master's cause. I delivered a lecture on Salt Lakeism, and there were two reporters present, and the lecture received a favorable notice in two of the leading papers of Pittsburg—the Post and Dispatch. Privilege was granted Bro. Salyards to write an article on the same subject, and on the history of the church. By this means we hope to remove prejudice so the truth may not be hindered in its onward march.

I have received good news from my co-laborers in the Canada Mission. New places are opening for the preaching of the word, and a number have been baptized. While I am writing this the postman brings me a letter from Bro. John Shield's with the news of twenty baptisms of late in a new place, and they are expecting more today, or soon. Bro. Shields is a young man, and has a small family. He is just starting out in the gospel field, and hopes to take it permanently. I expect to return to my mission on the 10th inst. I am well pleased with the reports in Herald coming from afar, of the spread of the truth in the world. May the Herald live long, and be strong to bear the gospel tidings to the Saints and to the nations of the earth, to prepare the way for the coming Savior.

The Autumn Leaves is good. May it be blest and prove a success, and be as leaves of light falling upon the minds of the young to instruct and comfort in the ways of truth and peace.

Yours in hope of endless life in Christ,

JOHN H. LAKE.

BIG SPRING, W. Va., Jan. 3d.

Dear Herald:—The Lord has been gracious to me. Five years ago the eleventh of December last I came into this "marvelous work" that God has brought forth in these last days, being enlightened by the teaching of Elder L. R. Devore. Since that time I have been alone, but prayed that God in his due time would send the gospel here, and now Bro. Devore has been here over two weeks sounding the gospel trumpet by the Spirit, and to the understanding of quite a number. There are some bitter enemies to the work, some honest at heart believe the doctrine is true; one has applied for baptism and more will follow. Doors are opening all around with calls on every side. I wish we had another elder here as able as Bro. Devore, for there is much work to do. I am enjoying the Spirit of God. I love the work, and rejoice that God is moving it on rapidly. Pray that Bro. Devore may have success here and win many souls.

Yours in Christ,

MARY A. LEESON.

CHASE, Kans., Jan. 7th.

Bro. Blair:—In our conference notice in Herald of the 7th should be A. H. Parsons instead of A. H. Harrows, president of the north-west Kansas district.

I came here a week ago; some are deeply interested, while prejudice is hard against us. What will be the result of our labors time will tell. The calls are on the increase for preaching. We have had a very pleasant winter so far—quite changeable—but the cold waves do not last long.

A. H. PARSONS.

CLINTON, Mo., Jan. 7th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—"The pebble has dropped in the water, and the waves circle 'round with a shock." Our quarterly conference held at Independence is over, and we had a good time. Bro. Joseph Luff preached a "rousing" sermon Sunday night. Bro. John A. Robinson gave us one of his pithy sermons Saturday evening; and I tried to cheer the Saints Sunday at eleven a. m.

Bro. Warnky is president of Independence branch and seems to be trying to do his part to keep the work up. Bro. Etzenhouser's calling was rushed upon him, and he as a wise man manfully stepped forward into the active ministry again. May God bless him in his effort. Brn.

Curtis and Foss will go to Bates county and commence a series of meetings. Had I time I would like to give you some testimonies I have collected in favor of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Some Saints having been aroused in Cedar and Vernon counties by Whitemerism and through the nasty efforts of Elder Price, caused them to go to God for a witness to the divinity of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. None have failed to get unmistakable evidences in favor of it.

The work is moving all along the line. I am glad Joseph has gone to the West. We are living at a time when his efforts will be felt for good. May God be with him.

Yours,
I. N. WHITE.

BY A MOUNTAIN FRIEND IN UTAH.

Calmly for thee my mountain muse awakes
From peaceful slumber in the snowy vale,
In the lily-white bosom of the mountains white
On which the clouds—God's pearly chariot—rests.

O,
There is pleasure pure, and sweet, and deep,
In viewing the beauty of the winter morn !
And watching the sky grow bright beyond the veil
Of silvery mist, in ethereal beauty spread ;
Whilst 'bove the mist the beauteous morning star
Shines gloriously, as thus ordained of God.

There's holy joy in viewing Nature's scenes,
The earth in snow that God hath wisely sent
As a precious treasure to be safely kept
In the frozen bosoms of the hills 'till Spring,
And then dissolve in crystal rills to glide
Down to the valleys for the good of men,
And cause again the fairest flowers to rise,
And trees to blossom fair and white as snow.

There's holy rapture, listening to the sound
Of the morning's wind that wanders from the north,
On whose viewless wings God walketh as of old,
When Israel's Psalmist mused of God's great power.
There's sacred meaning in the sighing wind
That shakes the snow's white blossoms from the trees,
And the gleaming crystals floating to the ground
In tender music murmurs to my soul.

Yet,
From the snowy valley of the west
That mountains guard, decked with their crystal crowns,
And where, like ermine robes and soft as down,
The snow envelops the perennial flowers,—
My thoughts speeds through the white and misty vales, Past snowy mountains on whose northern sides
The frozen cataracts in beauty gleam
Like glistening pearls, in winter's bright'ning dawn—
And rests on thee whose natal day again
I recollect and greet with sober joy ;

And earnestly to God, creator of all things,
Who makes the glorious morning star to shine,
And who controls the countless suns in space,
And limits e'en the rapid comet's speed ;
And causeth fire, and water, and dry lands,
With their variable degrees of heat and cold ;
And causeth storms and pleasant calms to come,
And myriad worlds is forming still anew ;
And who knoweth the instincts and the minds of all
The various creatures everywhere exists—
I render thanks for the wisdom He hath shown
In preserving still thy life upon the earth ;
One yet engaged in man's noblest aim,
Of guiding others into better ways,
And scattering moral precepts, like bright gems,
For any to glean and profit from their wealth.

Ah,
How like jewels of a clear white sheen

Thy years upon the earth to me appear !
Tho' on them sorrows have deep shadows cast,
Like night's bright stars they have the clearer shone.
In all the years since childhood that are past,
Thou, when by trials and by sorrows bowed,
Hast humbly, and in faith sought God in prayer
To give thee courage to maintain the right,
And thou hast triumphed o'er the tempter's wiles,
And held to fairest gems of priceless worth.
Shines virtue, and shines temperance with bright rays
Among the jewels thou hast polished bright.
Thou hast maintained the sanctity of home
An unblemished diamond in thy moral crown,
And hast revered thy country's upright laws,
Believing thus the gospel to obey.

O Friend,
Large souled and charitable, I pray
Thy years be many and with blessings filled ;
Friends lovingly surround thee, and thy home
Be filled with love, and constant joy and peace.
And mayest thou live to reap the harvests bright
From all the goodly seeds that thou hast sown,
And mildly wield the sword of truth in love,
And never wound, except to safely heal.
To thee may earth its best of treasures yield,
And future health and happiness be thine—

Zion,
In all her beauty and her joy,
And peaceful blessedness by thee be found,
And the attainment of thy hope within
The glory of her fair, eternal light !

THE NATURE OF GOD

AND HIS WORKS OF CREATION, ALSO HIS LAW CONCERNING PREDESTINATION.

MUCH learned labor has been spent in vain attempt to search out the nature and character of God, and to pry into the attributes of the Almighty. As though poor, sinful man, in his fallen and depraved state, were able, by his own wisdom and understanding, to trace out those qualities which constitute the Almighty God! "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty to perfection?" Job. 11:7. The infinite and invisible God can be known only through the medium of Divine Revelation. As far as God in his wisdom sees fit to reveal his true character to man, so far it may be known but no further. And it is certainly most reasonable and consistent, as well as most just and equitable, that a being who is infinitely just and righteous, should make the greatest display of himself to those who, by faith and obedience, approach the nearest to Him. Therefore, it is not to the learned theologian that God deigns to reveal himself in his true character, but to those who deny themselves of all ungodliness; who walk in the paths of righteousness and peace, and that are not merely knowers of the word, but doers of his work. Such and such only have a just right to look to God for a true knowledge of his character.

God having constituted man a reasonable, intelligent being, capable of knowing and doing his will, he addresses him as such: "Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land."—Isa. 1:18, 19. Man is not required to believe on and practice that which is contrary to the plain and obvious dictates of right reason. In all the works of God there is a perfect consistency, and all his manifestations to man are perfectly reasonable. Many arguments have been drawn from certain passages of scripture to prove that God by an unalterable decree, and without any respect to faith and good works, has elected a certain portion of the human race to eternal salvation and reprobated the remainder to eternal damnation. But it is to be lamented that there are so many in this enlightened age "who minister questions rather than godly edifying which is in faith; desiring to be teachers, yet understanding neither what they say nor whereof they affirm." (1 Tim. 1:4-7), who presume to maintain doctrine so contrary to the liberal and righteous principles of the gospel, and so inconsistent with the true character of God.

As it is through divine revelation that the true character of God is made known to man, so a true knowledge of his decrees, as far as they relate to what he requires of man, are known only through revelation. But those decrees by which in the beginning God established the law of creation, and by which the works of creation and providence are governed, though they are beyond the reach of man, yet their existence is readily ascertained and confirmed by their visible effects; and by these effects the rational mind may easily be led to believe what none can deny, that God works by an unalterable plan of wisdom, which necessarily produces an unchangeable order and regularity in all his visible works; and hence we must rationally conclude that all his invisible works are under the same established laws, and that they must and do operate with the greatest order and harmony, and in the end will most certainly accomplish all his divine purposes in perfect wisdom and righteousness. The decrees of God, so far as they are made manifest either by Divine Revelation, or by their visible effects in the natural world, are of two kinds. The first are those which respect God's own established laws and purposes, whether they relate to man or to any other part of His creation. The second are those which God has given to man for his protection, and which are calculated and designed to prove his faithfulness and obedience.

First.—Those decrees which respect God's own established laws and purposes comprehend not only the works of creation and providence; but the final event of whatever he has designed. In the works of creation it is obvious that God has established laws which are unalterable except by the same Almighty power which first established them. Among these we may reckon the established order, courses, and relative situation of the sun, moon and stars, together with the whole planetary system; the order and courses of the seasons, and the laws of nature by which they are governed heat and cold, light and darkness; the laws of gravitation, attraction and repulsion; and everything which depends upon the established laws of nature. These are known by their visible effects. Also God's determinate purposes relative to the operation of his divine attributes with respect to man. Among these may be mentioned the decree of his power in creating man a moral, free agent, perfectly capable of exercising his moral faculties in choosing and acting according to the dictates of his own mind in doing good or evil. Also the decree of his wisdom in placing man in a state of probation, and giving him a fair trial, that he might prove himself in the choice of good or evil, without any influence on either side more than he was really able to resist or follow, according to his own free choice. And also the decree of his goodness by which he determined to extend his blessing to all his creatures in their obedience; and after the fall to extend mercy to man and send a Redeemer to redeem him from his fallen state, and raise him to a heavenly paradise, of which the earthly paradise from which he fell was but a figure. Man being still endowed with the faculty of free agency, notwithstanding his fall by which he was brought into darkness or bondage, God who is the source of light decreed to afford him a sufficient degree of light to see and appreciate in some measure the benefits to be obtained by accepting the offer of salvation through the medium of the Redeemer, that he might be at no loss respecting his duty or privilege in choosing for himself, nor respecting the course of life to be pursued in order to obtain salvation through this medium. And in his righteousness and justice he decreed a crown of righteousness as the just reward of all who would walk in the way of righteousness and peace. And his decree necessarily excludes the disobedient from any inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ. These are unalterable decrees of God, and all who are willing to accept the benefits of them in the line of obedience are freely entitled to them; but God has willed that they shall not be obtained in any other way. The fixed and unalterable nature of these laws by no means renders them unreasonable, but rather the contrary. Even those which more immediately respect man show forth the unchangeable goodness of God by their permanence, and are rendered infinitely valuable by being unalterable. When we consider that God is infinitely wise and powerful, that "he is righteous in all his ways and holy in all works," and that he is perfectly free and independent, it must appear perfectly consistent and reasonable that he should create man a moral agent, free to choose and act for himself, independent of any supernatural control. Herein appears man's divine origin. And where is the man who is willing to have his moral freedom and independence taken from him, and be compelled to think and act according to the dictates of some other being, without any choice or will of his own, and, at the same time to be made accountable for his actions. But this can not be, for God has endowed man with moral agency and it can not be taken from him. It is fixed by an unalterable decree. And though intolerant popes and persecutors have often attempted it, even by the power of fire and sword, and every implement of torture, yet they never could control the moral powers of man, nor deprive him of his free agency. They may indeed bind, imprison, or kill him (the body), but they can not fetter the thoughts nor destroy the soul. As well might they attempt to arrest the sun in its progress or change the course of the stars.

Second.—Those decrees which God has given to man for his protection, and which are calculated and designed to prove his faithfulness and obedience. Such was his decree to Adam:—"In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Such was his decree to the Jews by the mouth of the prophet Isaiah: "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land."—Isa. 1: 19. And such was the testimony of Jesus Christ:—"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God."—John 7: 17. This may also apply to any command or any established law of God for the government of his people which requires their obedience; and in case of disobedience, exposes them to suffer the penalty decreed by the law. The decrees of God which require the obedience of man consist in the declaration of his mind and will concerning their duty, and are manifested by divine revelation, either mediately or immediately. His command to Adam respecting the forbidden fruit was direct and positive. His decrees to the people of Israel through Moses, Judges and Prophets were direct and positive, and the promises conditional; yet punishment or suffering of some kind followed disobedience. Adam and Eve violated the command of God to them and therefore they fell from their union with God, for the command could not be altered. The doctrine so strongly maintained and so extensively believed, that God decreed the fall of man, is most unreasonable and inconsistent. If he fulfilled God's decree in eating the forbidden fruit, then he must have done the will of God, and therefore did not commit sin in so doing. For it can not be sin to do the will of God, and God can not decree anything contrary to his will, therefore he can not decree that man should commit sin. Such a decree would indeed be contrary to every attribute of his nature. The command of God to Adam was his law; in keeping that law he could not sin, for "sin is a transgression of the law." The command was given to prove Adam's obedience and keep him from evil. In transgressing the command he violated the law of God and that occasioned his fall. If sin is a transgression of the laws of God as the scriptures declare, and God's commands are his laws, as all must acknowledge, then it falls that God never decreed that man should sin. For to say that he decreed that man should sin, is to say that sin is not a transgression of his laws, but a compliance with them; therefore, sin is not sin; which is a contradiction. Again, if God did decree that man should sin, then sin must have been agreeable to the will of God, for God can not without an absolute inconsistency decree anything contrary to his will. Hence the sin can not be imputed to man; it must be imputed to the will of God; consequently no condemnation can fall on man, seeing he did the will of God. This involves the same absurdity, namely, sin is not sin! Such are the inconsistencies which necessarily flow from this soul-darkening, anti-christian doctrine.

Again, God could not interpose his power to prevent the fall of man, or to prevent him from sinning whether he would or not, because this would at once have deprived man of the trial of his obedience, and of accountableness, by fixing an insurmountable barrier to prevent in him the power of transgression. In this case man never could have been the subject of praise or blame; he never could have known the power or extent of his own free agency; he never could enjoy the glorious reward of faithfulness, nor have felt the dishonor of blame for unfaithfulness, having no law which he could of his own choice obey or disobey, his conduct in all cases must of course be impelled by almighty power, like the stars in their courses. This would have deprived man of the power of self-action and rendered him a mere machine. Man was created a moral agent in the beginning; that is, he was endowed with free agency, capable of acting according to his own voluntary will without any compulsion either of good or evil; and his having good and evil set before him was that which constituted his state of trial. God assumed no compelling power over him, and the devil could have none without his previous consent. He was, in this sense, left entirely without control.

Some will argue that, because God is omniscient, and knows all things, even before they come to pass, he must of course foreordain that they should come to pass; but this consequence does not follow. It is taken for granted, that which can not be proved, namely, that God can not know that such an event would come to pass without foreordaining that it shall come to pass; thus making his foreknowledge to depend on a previous decree. To say that God can not foreknow without foreordaining, is to limit his power and wisdom, and subject them to his decrees, making his decrees, which are evidently the effect of his power and wisdom, superior to both. This is in reality making the effect superior to the cause, and placing the common absurd doctrine of predestination above his divine attributes. The power of God and the wisdom of God must extend infinitely beyond all human conception. This truth may be illustrated by a comparison. It is well known that a clock, being constructed on certain mechanical principles, is able to keep time without the maker's assistance, and though the maker can not confer the power of intelligence and volition on his clock so as to enable it to go right or wrong of its own choice, yet it is capable of keeping time according to the principles of its construction, independent of the maker, even if he was a thousand miles away. And since it is admitted that God can and does confer the power of intelligence and volition, why should it appear unreasonable to suppose that he, as an Almighty Creator, can render that intelligence perfectly free and independent of his influence, or the influence of any other being as easily as a clock can be made to keep time independent of its maker.

Although man is indebted to God for his power of intelligence as well as his faculties of every kind, yet without the power to exercise or improve all these gifts, to good or evil, according to his own choice independent of any external or foreign influence, he could not be accountable for his conduct. But being honored of God with this most important and highly exalted trust, he is therefore highly responsible to his Maker for a faithful discharge of his duties, and herein appears his great accountability.

The doctrine of particular election, and reprobation so-called, which maintains that God, by his omniscient decrees has from all eternity elected some to everlasting punishment and doomed others to eternal damnation without any regard to faith and good works, is supposed to be confirmed by certain passages of scripture, which its advocates, contrary to all truth and reason have found fit to interpret in that sense. But it appears evident from all I have seen written or published on this subject by its most strenuous advocates, that they are entirely ignorant of the true sense or import of these passages. Certain it is that nothing recorded in the scriptures on election and predestination has any reference to the final lot of any souls without a special regard to their faith or good works. There is not a passage of scripture advanced in support of that doctrine but what will admit of a reasonable explanation; but for brevity's sake I will only mention the following: "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live."—Deut. 30: 19. Here is a positive declaration of God through Moses to the children of Israel, that he has set before them the free and uncontrollable choice of good and evil, and that their reward of life or death depended, not on any predestinated decree, but on their good or evil works, freely done; for God is a God of righteousness and truth. But to say that God has before determined to fix their choice by any secret decree, is to make this declaration a most glaring imposition upon their faith and understanding, which is wholly inconsistent with the righteousness and goodness of God. "What mean ye that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge? As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel."—Ezek. 18: 2, 3.

This proverb is founded on the same principles with that which maintains that, because Adam partook of the forbidden fruit, it is just and right for God, by an arbitrary decree, to damn all his children without any regard to their works, or, rather, works that they were impelled to do by irresistible necessity; and that if any are saved it must be through a partial election by the same arbitrary decrees; but if this be really the case we still have occasion to use this proverb, notwithstanding the positive declaration of the great Jehovah to the contrary. Thus we may see that this preposterous doctrine has a direct tendency to impeach the character of the God of justice and truth. "The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him. Yet ye say, The ways of the Lord are not equal. Hear now, O House of Israel; Is not my way equal? Are not your ways unequal?"—Ezek. 18: 20-25. What can render the way of God more unequal than the doctrine of unconditional decrees? On the other hand what can be more equal, just and reasonable, than to reward all souls according to their works—whether good or evil? "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live."—Ezek. 33: 11. What can be more plain and positive? It is impossible that God should foreordain anything that is contrary to his own will and pleasure. If, therefore, God has foreordained that man should commit sin, for which he must die, of course he certainly must have pleasure in the death of the wicked. Here then we may see that the forementioned doctrine not only charges God with the height of injustice, but with the grossest deception and falsehood towards his rational creatures. But it may be objected by some, that as these declarations were made under the law, they only concerned the life and not the final state of the soul; and that unconditional election was in Christ which respected the eternal state of all souls. But, I would ask, Are God's ways more just and equal to men in their temporal than in their eternal state? Is he more favorable to the bodies than to the souls of men? Even this supposition can by no means remove the inconsistency of the doctrine nor lessen the absurdity of the argument advanced in its support. But the declarations and promises under the gospel are equally plain and positive. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest to your souls."—Matt. 11: 28, 29.

Here is a positive call and promise to all who obey it. Where then is the law that can hinder the fulfillment of this promise, aside from mankind being unwilling to comply with the call? Has God decreed that they shall not be willing to comply? Then the call must be a mere mockery, a vain pretense to deceive souls into a belief that the gospel was intended for all when in fact only a part was to be saved, while the rest after being mocked with the pretense that the grace of God was free for all, and that the call of Christ extended to all without exception, were to be eternally damned! Such are the natural and necessary consequences of that blasphemous doctrine of unconditional decrees which have been forged in the tyrannical school of Antichrist and palmed upon the God of of righteousness and truth. "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."—Acts 10: 34, 35. This testimony of the apostle Peter is directly to the point and shows plainly who will be elected, and what the conditions are,—"He that feareth God and worketh righteousness." But if God has in fact decreed the final lot of all souls from all eternity and has unconditionally elected some to salvation and others to damnation, which necessarily fixes an eternal difference between them, he must in this case be the greatest respecter of persons, and must display the greatest possible partiality and injustice toward his creatures. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."—2 Peter 3: 9. Here again we have another plain testimony of the same apostle. If therefore, God is not willing that any should perish, and yet has foreordained that any part should perish, that any part should not come to repentance, then he must have passed this decree against his own will! Such is the ridiculous light in which this horrid doctrine places the God of wisdom and goodness. "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God, our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth."—1 Tim. 2: 3, 4.

If then God will have all men to be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth, he can not possibly will to the contrary, therefore he could not foreordain that any should not be saved, nor come to a knowledge of the truth. Thus it appears that the law and the prophets, and also the testimony of Jesus Christ and his apostles, all tend to disprove the doctrine of election and reprobation, and to confirm in the most positive manner the free agency of man. Hence it appears that the obedience or disobedience of all souls depends on their own free choice, and that their reward will be according to their works. As to the passages which are supposed to imply the doctrine of predestination according to the sense in which it is held, and which its advocates generally advance as evidence in its favor, they are easily explained upon rational principles without involving that absurd doctrine. Election does not necessarily imply predestination, nor does foreordination as used in the scriptures by any means involve the final destination of the soul without a fair and impartial trial according to the just and equitable principles of the gospel. Election, according to the common import of the term, means choice; and when it is used in the scriptures it implies a certain selection of particular persons or people for certain purposes.

This subject may be illustrated by a comparison. It is well known that in an elective government the officers are elected or chosen to fill certain places or stations and to perform certain duties, but this election does not necessarily imply that they were predestinated to those offices, nor does it exclude other citizens from the privilege of participating in the affairs of the government, or of enjoying its benefits. There must be public offices to every well regulated government, and suitable characters must be elected and appointed to fill those offices. But all can not be presidents nor secretaries of states; all can not be senators nor representatives in congress, yet all may enjoy the blessings and privileges of a good government; provided they conduct themselves worthy of it. The Constitution of the United States has fore-ordained or predestinated that the persons elected and qualified according to such and such provisions, shall hold such and such offices; consequently their election is established and confirmed by certain articles and decrees of the constitution, which perhaps were enacted and made a part of the supreme law of the land before some of the persons so elected were born. Yet the constitution did not foreordain or elect these persons; it only designated the characteristics and qualifications necessary for such offices, but left the election of the officers to the future determination of the electors, who were to be governed in their proceedings according to the provisions of the constitution on the subject. But the choice of the worthy candidates, so far from being detrimental to the rest of the citizens, is of essential benefit to them, being chosen for their service. And it must be obvious also, that the choice can be of no use to the persons chosen unless they accept of it and fulfill its duties. So it is with the election of all souls in the works of God. Hence we may see the comparison between things temporal and spiritual. By the constitution of heaven it was decreed and established by the Almighty, it was predestinated that such and such characters, possessing such and such essential qualifications, should be teachers, prophets, elders, &c., to the public, to guide and direct them in their duty. Accordingly, when the time arrived in which the occasion required the selection to be made, Noah was chosen to build the ark and save himself and family from the flood because he was a just man, and one who was obedient to the will of God and thereby found favor with God. Abraham was chosen and ordained to be the typical father of the faithful because of his faithfulness and obedience to the call of God. For the same cause Moses, Samuel, Joshua, and the prophets were chosen as faithful servants of God and to do the work which God ordained to be done. But these individuals were not chosen to the exclusion of others from the work of God, but for the benefit of all over whom they were appointed the leaders and guides that all might be sharers with them in the blessings promised to the faithful and obedient. Thus the election of Moses as a leader to the Israelites was designed for their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage and for their protection and salvation in their journey through the wilderness. But this election did not decide the final state of one individual of that nation or any other. It was intended to serve as a figure of Jesus Christ, who was to be a savior of his people. And as all who were faithful and obedient to the law of Moses were blessed and protected and delivered from the power of their enemies, while the disobedient and rebellious were destroyed, so all who will be faithful and obedient to the law of Christ will be blessed and protected and delivered from the power of sin and Satan and find an inheritance in the heavenly Canaan, while the disobedient and rebellious will lose their day and privilege and be excluded from the kingdom of Heaven. Thus the posterity of Abraham were highly privileged with temporal blessings, according to the promise of God to their faithful father Abraham; though they were called God's chosen people, yet that election could never secure their final salvation without their own faithfulness and obedience. It is evident that it did not decide the final state and character of the Jews, for they proved a rebellious people, and therefore, notwithstanding their election, were afterwards cut off by the judgment of God and scattered over the face of the earth, and exist even to this day as a monument of God's displeasure against the sin of disobedience. Many are called, but few chosen, said Jesus; and this was evidently the case with respect to the Jews; for although the whole nation was called, yet comparatively very few of them proved so faithful as to be found at last among the real chosen of God. "For they are not all Israel which are of Israel." Election, therefore, is not the seal of salvation. It did not save Judas, although he was elected and chosen one of Christ's apostles, yet he proved himself a traitor and was therefore disinherited and cut off, and another was chosen to fill his place.

The case of Jacob and Esau is often advanced as an argument in proof of the doctrine of predestination which is supposed to be fully confirmed by the following passage of scripture: "Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord; yet I loved Jacob, and I hated Esau."—Mal. 1:2, 3. And again: "for the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth?"—Rom. 9:11.

But what does this prove? What was the purpose of God according to election concerning them? As before observed, election implies choice. The purpose of God therefore in the choice of these two individuals was to typify the worldly part, and the spiritual part, and to show where the love and blessing of God would finally rest, and where his hatred and displeasure would fall. It is written the elder shall serve the younger, but though we have no account that ever Esau served Jacob, personally, yet this prediction was evidently fulfilled in the two nations that sprung from them, which rendered the figure still more complete. God therefore selected these two children even before they were born, and of course before they had done either good or evil by which they might be judged as to their own merits, for the very purpose of displaying in them and in their posterity a representation of the wide difference between the children of the world and the children of the kingdom. But in this election there is nothing which could decide their future state as to their salvation or damnation. The final lot and portion of these two nations, and every individual of them, was yet to be proved and decided in a future day of greater light and spiritual power, and by a more unerring rule of judgment than could be given in that day. Therefore the election or choice of these two brothers was never intended to decide their eternal state, but intended to represent, in a figure, God's hatred of sin and his love and blessing to those who will wisely distinguish themselves by their faith and obedience to the call of the gospel. The instance of Pharaoh is produced as another argument in favor of the doctrine of predestination. "For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth."—Rom. 9:17. This text is supposed to be an unanswerable argument in favor of the doctrine of predestination; but, to the contrary, it is a very fallacious one. For how did God raise up Pharaoh? He undoubtedly raised him up as he raises up all other men, and for a similar purpose, only he was in a more distinguished station. In the order of his divine providence he raised him first to a child, then to a man, then to a king. Hence by God's providence his power was made known and his name declared through the earth according to his exalted station. Again: How did God harden Pharaoh's heart? I answer: He sent his commands to him to let Israel go. This aroused his selfish feelings and he refused to obey. God then sent judgments upon him for his conviction, which softened his heart so that he promised obedience. Being left to himself after the judgment was removed, he still refused to obey, and by his rebellion he hardened his own heart still harder than before. Hence God's convicting power proved the means' and his own disobedience, of his heart's being hardened. So that in consequence of his continued rebellion he finally brought upon himself a just judgment, which terminated in his own destruction. This is in accordance with the word of Christ: "If the light which is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." God displays light to man and requires him to follow it; and though this light can not be turned into darkness, yet if he refuses to follow the light he will fall into greater darkness than before, and this will continue to be the natural effect so long as he continues to reject the light, until by final rebellion he will be left, as a just judgment, to fall into eternal darkness. The Spirit of God never did or never can operate to harden the heart of any man; it is inconsistent with His nature, "For God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."—Jas. 1:13. No; the direct tendency of his Spirit is to soften the hearts and draw souls to obedience as evidently appears even in the case of Pharaoh. And if they will comply they will inherit his goodness; but if they refuse and rebel they will be hardened in judgment to their own destruction, for their reward will be given them, and they can not charge it upon a just God. Such has been the dealings of God from the beginning, and such have been the effects and ever will be to the end of this probationary state. Therefore this selection of Pharaoh was also designed as a figure to represent the arch-oppressor of God's people in the spirit of wickedness, and the subsequent destruction of him and his host in the Red Sea typified the flood of destruction which will finally overwhelm the enemies of God's people, and put an end to all manner of oppression; but neither the hardening of Pharaoh's heart nor the destruction of the Egyptian hosts can be any evidence of the final state of either. It will doubtless be more tolerable for them in the day of judgment than for the rebellious Jews; and beyond comparison more so than those who reject the light in the present day. Obedience or disobedience to the everlasting gospel, the light of which must finally be extended to all, whether living or dead, will at length prove the salvation or damnation of every soul. The scriptures have been greatly wrestled with to prove doctrines which have originated in anti-christian darkness, but after all there is nothing to be found throughout the sacred volume that affords the smallest proof of that gloomy and soul darkening doctrine of eternal and unconditional decrees, which so unjustly fixes the final salvation or damnation of souls without a special regard to their works. The election of individuals as prophets, apostles, elders, teachers, etc., by no means implies a certainty of salvation to the person so elected, any more than it implies a certainty of damnation to those not elected to those offices, because all must finally be judged and awarded according to their works.

Those works, however, which were performed in a state of darkness and ignorance, though they must have their due reward, can never decide the final state of any soul. Those performed under the light of the gospel, and with a full understanding of its requirements, are the works by which the soul must be tried and for which we must receive our final reward. The truth of these things are so abundantly testified in the scriptures, and appear so consistent with the righteousness and justice of God, that there seems no possible ground to dispute it; and yet we find many Antichristian preachers and writers continually exclaiming against the efficacy of good works, and thus discouraging all attempts to obtain the love and mercy of God by the virtuous acts of faithfulness and obedience. But this discouraging doctrine will finally prove a poor excuse for their own idleness and disobedience. "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his works shall be."—Rev. 22: 12.

LEAVES FROM THE TREE OF LIFE.—No. VIII.

THE AIDS PROMISED IN THE GOSPEL TO ENABLE THE BELIEVER TO SECURE ETERNAL LIFE.

THE sixth gift of the Holy Spirit as mentioned by Paul, is, "prophecy."—1 Cor. 12: 10. The pretended Orthodox of the day not having this gift and therefore seeking to destroy the force of our claim that this gift, with the rest was to be perpetuated, make the counter claim that the word "prophecy" here should be rendered "preach;" and hence they claim they have this gift, "because they preach or expound the scriptures." It is true they all profess to "preach or expound" the scriptures, but instead of making plain God's will to man, they mystify and confuse the mind, and thereby only "expound," or lay bare their own folly and darkness by their conflicting and contradictory teachings, which proves that their prophesying is not one of the gifts of the Spirit of God. Then, when driven from the above subterfuge, they deny that there was to be any prophesying after the apostles' days, and in their blindness even quote Matthew 11: 13, to prove it: "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." If their "expounding" of this text was correct, it would dispense with most if not all of the New Testament, and would make him of whom Moses and the prophets prophesied an impostor; for he prophesied long after John the Baptist. Another scripture referred to by them is 1 Cor. 13: 8; but they discern not the fact that these prophecies shall not fail until the perfection spoken of in Ephesians, chapter 4, and referred to in 1 Cor. 13: 10, is brought about in all the children of God. Then, indeed, the perfect child of God, having attained "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," may no longer need the helps that have brought him to that condition of perfection. They also refer to 2 Timothy 3: 15, 16, and try to make it appear that "As Timothy had enough scripture in his youth to make him wise unto salvation, therefore we need no more." They forget that Timothy, in his childhood, only knew Moses and the prophets; for the New Testament was not then penned; hence they sweep away with one fell stroke the brightest gem of truth, and would leave the world in utter darkness. Paul does not say "All scripture that was intended of God has been given." He conveyed the idea that "all [holy] scripture was given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," thus establishing the fact that we "must live by every word of God." Their last stronghold, as they think, is in the Revelations, 22: 18. But they are not sufficiently honest to confess that which they well know, viz, that John's revelation was not the last book written even by John himself; hence he could not mean that no more would be given or written, if he did he permitted himself to become the subject of the terrible curse uttered in the text, to fall upon all who should presume to add their views and palm them off as the word of the Lord. Furthermore, God gave these revelations, and the text does not intimate that He will give no more. He simply forbids man to add his own vain thoughts and claim that they are divine, and hence of binding force upon humanity.

Having thus briefly reviewed the objections against modern prophecy, I will now return to the word of the Lord in support of it, but first permit me to show that not only were the apostles thus inspired, for there were many prophets in the early church. Elizabeth was a prophetess, Luke 1: 44; Zechariah was a prophet, Luke 1: 66, 78; Simeon prophesied, Luke 2: 25, 32; also Anna, the "prophetess," mentioned in verse 36. A number of prophets came from Jerusalem to Antioch, Acts 11: 27, 28; Judas and Silas, Acts 15: 32; the twelve Ephesians, Acts, 19: 6; Agabus, Acts 21: 10; in fine, all who had received the Holy Ghost, had thereby "the testimony of Jesus, "For the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy."—Rev. 1: 9, 10.

We have in former leaves shown that, without the Holy Ghost, no man can know that Jesus is the Christ, and without that knowledge eternal life can not come unto man. The word of the angel to John above quoted is, that the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy; hence the Spirit of prophecy is the testimony of Jesus to every believer, advancing him on to the divine knowledge which is "eternal life." Isaiah declares, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord."—Isa 11: 9. Hab. 2: 14, and Joel shows how this knowledge is to be given.—Joel. 2: 28, 29. And the apostle Peter, under the influence of the divine power, confirms it in the following language: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophecy." Has this ever been realized? Were the few humble followers of the Lamb that were in that "upper room" the all flesh? It is useless to claim that the unconverted Jews who rushed together, "and were confounded" at what they saw represented "all flesh," simply because they were "out of every nation under heaven; for had that been true they could not in their unconverted state receive that Spirit; for they were of the world, and Jesus says "The world can not receive him."—John 14: 17. Hence the prophecy of Joel was not then fulfilled; but Peter declares "It shall come to pass in the last days." Isaiah indicates the time as the day of universal peace and rest when it shall be enjoyed in its fulness. See chapters 11 and 65. All the prophets are in harmony with him. But he is referring to the glorious results of the outpouring of this Spirit upon all creation, while Joel and Peter shew its immediate results upon man, preparing him for the blessed conditions in the reign of Christ on earth. The outpouring of this Spirit invariably follows the introduction of the gospel to earth. Such were its blessed effects in the days of the apostles and such must follow the introduction of that gospel in the last days. And as John the Divine when on the Isle of Patmos was shown things "that must come to pass hereafter" (Rev. 4:1); and as he afterwards said, "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," (Rev. 14:6), the outpouring of the Holy Spirit must follow the preaching and obedience to the gospel; and thus as many as accept it will be made the sons of God, and will be endowed with the gift of prophecy as they were on the day of pentecost; heavenly visions will illuminate their minds; pure and holy dreams will soothe the soul and give a foretaste of the promised rest; the sacred stream of prophetic light will guide their vision and enable them to foretell the wondrous joy and the boundless blessings that shall befall the righteous, while it warns of dangers and scans the purpose of the adversary, thereby affording a sure means of escape. But it will also reveal the dire evils that shall fall upon the head of the rebellious. Wondrous gift! How much to thee we owe! Every ray of light; every word of truth; every throb of joy; every gleam of hope, and every impress of faith divine that has ever gladdened the human breast was inspired of thee! And yet the world despises thee, and would rather grope in darkness than see thy glorious light. When thy great Author came to earth, surrounded with the halo of thy glory, men closed their eyes and blindly pointed to what appeared to them thy retreating form, as though of the past alone, but would not own thy advancing steps, because "they loved darkness rather than light for their deeds, were evil." And so it is to-day; "Men will not come to the light, lest their deeds be reproved." But the wise will understand and receive the injunction of the Apostle,—"Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts; but rather that ye may prophesy."—1 Cor. 14:1. Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues."—v. 40. "Quench not the Spirit, despise not prophesyings."—1 Thess. 5:19, 20. "And the wise will always remember that the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy."—Rev. 19:10.

Is it not a comfort indeed to know that "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him;" and that "he will shew to them his covenant. (Ps. 25:14): that "he will guide the meek in judgment, "and teach them his way?"—v. 9. Thus this gift is an evidence of sonship and close intimacy with Christ, for he says: "Henceforth I call you not servants; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you."—John 15:12. Take away this sweet communion by prophecy, revelation, visions, dreams, and you rob us of many evidences of sonship toward God, and of friendship with Christ, while here we remain in the flesh.

(7). "To another discerning of spirits." From this we learn there are different kinds of spirits in the world, some of which are evil. King Saul was troubled by "an evil spirit."—1 Sam. 16:14, 23. A "lying spirit" was in the mouths of Ahab's prophets to lure him on to destruction. 1 Kings 22:10, 25. Evil spirits possessed people in the days of Christ. And the apostle John says, "Beloved believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world."—1 John 4:1. Jesus warns against false Christs and false prophets who should come before the destruction of Jerusalem, (Matt. 24:5-9), and also prior to his second coming. He says, they "shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect."—verse 23. Paul tells of "that wicked one" whose coming is not until after there cometh a falling away, by the working of Satan with all power, and signs and lying wonders.—2 Thess. 2:8, 9.

In a previous article we have referred to John's vision in which he says: "I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Rev. 16:13, 14. In view of this astonishing array of evidence respecting evil and delusive spirits seeking to destroy mankind, is it not reasonable that our great Father should provide his children with some means to detect the false from the true? Would he leave us exposed to the wiles of the enemy without any means of detection? No! He has made ample provision in order that the weakest may be shielded from the fiery darts of the wicked one. He who ascended up on high gave gifts unto men, and the gift of "discerning of spirits" was among them. There was a time when the name of Jesus was so unpopular in the world, and was such a subject of hatred, that no man, except he that was born of God, dare be found confessing that name. To-day that name has become the most popular under heaven, and, I am sorry to add that, almost every false doctrine assumes that name as its insignia of authority and that, almost every dark and damning deed of cruelty and deceit has claimed that name as the seal of divine sanction. Hence the mere confession of that name is no longer a test by which we are to try the spirits, whether they be of God. Millions are led "away by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive," hence the necessity of the discerning of spirits. The Holy Spirit gave that key, nor can the Church of Christ be perfect in its organization, or effective in its work, without it.

If it could, the Almighty would never have placed it in the body. It is just as essential to the spiritual body, or church, as the discerning, detective powers of our physical nature are to the preservation of our bodies. Is it wise to reject the gifts of God, and especially those which he has given for the protection of his children? "Covet earnestly the best gifts."

"To another divers kinds of tongues." Among the gifts promised by Jesus to the believer was this,—"They shall speak with new tongues." By the possession of this gift, on the day of Pentecost, the gospel was preached to men from every nation under heaven. Acts chapter 2. And from this we learn that preaching of the gospel was one of the purposes for which it was given. But from the tenor of Paul's teaching that was not its only use. It appears to have been used, with the gift of interpretation, as a means of comfort and instruction in sacred assemblies. In preaching the gospel to men of another tongue, in their peculiar tongue, the hearers would certainly understand their own language, and hence would need no interpreter; but Paul says, "To another [is given] the interpretation of tongues." And in chapter 14 of this epistle he enjoins not to speak with, or in, other tongues unless there be an interpreter present. He does not, as some think, speak lightly of the gift of tongues; he knows too well its divine origin, and its sacred benefits to the body; but he recognizes the dependence of the one gift upon the other, and he desires them used in harmony with the well-being of the church. "How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying."—1 Cor. 14:26. "Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues." "Let all things be done decently and in order."—verses 39, 40. "In the law it is written, "With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that they will not hear me, saith the Lord. Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not; but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe."—Verses 21, 22.

In concluding the enumeration of these nine gifts, Paul says: "But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."—1 Cor. 12:11. In all candor let me ask: Since Christ placed all these gifts in the church for the purpose as expressed in Ephesians, chapter 4; and as there is no intimation in holy writ that they were to be taken away until the purposes for which they were given were answered and attained, (except in case of departure from the faith and doctrine of Christ), are we safe in despising them? Can the body (Church) of Christ exist without those members, which are its means of life, any more than the body of a man could exist when dismembered? If it could, it would be a useless trunk, devoid of power and sense, without form and comeliness, hence unfit to be

"the bride, the Lamb's wife." Christ spurns such a body, a shapeless trunk! and declares, "They draw near me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me. They teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of Godliness, but they deny the power thereof." "Their creeds are an abomination in my sight." Thus he rejects modern Christendom with its many creeds and conflicting doctrines, and having restored the ancient holy order, he is looking for "a glorious Church," fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army of banners, "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." He will accept of no other. Reader, if this galaxy of blessings adorned the church established by Christ, eighteen hundred years ago, was not that church to retain its beauty and symmetry until he should come to claim her for his bride? If she has not retained them, but has torn away her bridal robe and cast her heavenly jewels beneath her feet, and, in her rebellion, trampled them in the mud and mire, will he recognize her as the comely virgin who wept at his departure, and then so anxiously looked for his return? If these were given to help her retain unsullied her virgin purity, and to increase her loveliness and render her more and more worthy of her kingly spouse, could she throw aside these divine helps and still retain that purity and loveliness? Compare the "Christianity" of the last seventeen centuries with that of the first century, and the soul sickens at the sight! Instead of the comely virgin, whose beauty surpassed all human loveliness, whose form was the perfection of beauty—the conception of infinite wisdom—and whose garments were woven of the tissues of eternal light, radiant with the glory of God, upon whose head was a diadem of glorious light beset with twelve stars, shining with heaven's own brightness, while beneath her feet the moon seemed to fade into insignificance. Thus armed with the omnipotence of truth eternal she went forth to conquer the powers of darkness and fill the world with heavenly light. But instead of this vision of transcendent loveliness our eyes are disgusted with a headless trunk a dismembered body polluted with its own filthiness, dripping with blood of its victims shed in her internal dissensions and greedy thirst for worldly power and gain. Her shame is made bare; no robe of heavenly whiteness; no jewels of light; no diadem of shining stars; no sunlight robe envelops her form or sheds its divine radiance around her; and yet in her blindness and pollution she cries, "I sit as a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day; death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."—Rev. 18:7, 8. But the Church of Christ, "clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars," adorned with the jewels or gifts sent down from heaven, shall increase in loveliness and in all the virtues and excellent qualities that shall fit her to be, indeed, "the bride, the Lamb's wife;" and her members, armed with these divine aids, shall be enabled to enjoy the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance—which fruits the gifts of the Spirit were to enable them to develop, till we, in the unity of the faith, come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Eph. 4:13. "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all Saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."—Eph. 3:17, 19.

Reader; would you reach this divine excellence, and thus permit the eternal purpose of God to be fulfilled in you, namely, "that you might have eternal life, through Jesus Christ his son?" If so, cast off the vain and empty creeds of men. Despise no longer the means ordained of heaven. Seek the divine aids which Christ set in his church; that by believing in him, repenting of your sins, and being baptized for the remission of them, then seek the baptism of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of holy hands and fervent prayer, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is unto all. And having received this divine seal of your adoption, endure faithfully to the end. For it is written: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2:10.

KEWANEE DISTRICT.

To the Saints of the Kewanee District, Greeting:—Having been recommended at our last district conference to the Bishop of the church to be his agent in the Kewanee district, and the Bishop having approved the same, I therefore take the liberty of addressing this epistle to you, by which means I hope to call your especial attention to the subject of tithes and offerings for the benefit of the general church treasury and missionary work, the sustaining of the families of missionaries, together with the care of those who, by reason of age or other untoward circumstances may have a just claim on our bounty, to the end that you may become personally interested in the same.

It is a matter of regret that our district is not keeping step in the march with the general church in this important matter: and in view of this fact I urgently appeal to every member of the district to arouse themselves from this lethargy and assume at once a personal pride in bearing the burdens of the church to the extent that God may have blessed them and enabled them to do; and let us not continue to make the mistake as heretofore of waiting till we have a goodly sum to give that will appear well to our names; but we should rally at once with the amounts already at hand, and these will be sure to swell the aggregate still larger. I am confident that every member in the district would be glad to have more missionary help than we are now receiving. And the fact that many portions of our district are fully ripe for the reaper's sickle should be an urgent incentive to every one to contribute to this great work.

Come, then, dear brethren and sisters, and give of your small amounts or great, as unto the Lord. Yea, try him, and see if he will not open the windows of heaven to you for so doing. As a matter of convenience and economy in branches, let as many send together as may be found agreeable. And that the district may have due credit, let all tithes and offerings pass through the agent's hands to the Bishop of the church; for you may rest assured that all such will be duly reported to our district conference and in the General church reports. Heretofore we have done ourselves an injustice in not recognizing the fact that a Bishop's agent was a part of our district organization, and while a few have come regularly to the rescue, and will undoubtedly continue to do so, yet very many have lived beneath the privileges of a Latter Day Saint in not sharing in the responsibilities of the work of God as counselled by the Bishopric of the church. And to all such I appeal, that they make a personal effort in tithes and offerings, that by doing so you may soon see our district take her place in the front ranks as of old.

And to still further advance this needed help, I ask all officers of branches, in their ministrations with the Saints, to call attention to these things, bringing their better judgment to bear on the possibilities that may be attained by concert of action. Meantime I shall be pleased to correspond with any member of the district in relation thereto, and more especially to receive their active co-operation in the attainment of the end in view. And that the blessings of God may attend upon every member of the district shall ever be the prayer of

Your brother in Christ.

JOHN CHISNALL.

DIED.

HOUSMAN.—At Clear Lake, Indiana, December 28th, 1887, sister Catherina Housman. She was born June 24th, 1823, in Franklin township, Summit county, Ohio; united with the church November 29th, 1876, at Clear Lake, Indiana, being baptized by Elder J. F. McDowell, and remained faithful and true to her covenant until death called her hence. She was beloved by all who knew her, combining all the qualities that constitute a real Saint of God. A very large concourse of relatives and friends followed her to the grave. Bro. Kelley was telegraphed for to officiate at her funeral but arrived too late. She sleeps in Jesus.

IN MEMORIAM.

We miss thee at the morning dawn,
The sacred hour of prayer,
And when at noontide meal we see
The vacant place and chair;
And when the dusky shades of eve
In silence draw apace,
We miss thy kindly, cheerful voice
And gentle, loving face,
But he who doeth all things well
Has taken thee away;
We're coming, mother dear, to thee;
And wait the appointed day.

GOODALE.—The following clipping from the Barry (Ill.) Adage, relates to sister Maria Goodale, consort of Elder Jackson Goodale, both so long and favorably known by many of the Latter Day Saints. Bro. Goodale, in his letter of January 6th states that "she died as she had lived, firm in the faith of the gospel. We were driven from our home in Nauvoo, [in the persecutions of the Saints, 1845-6—Ed.] but finally settled down here [Barry.—Ed.] where we have lived since the fall of 1852." "Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with them." "Maria Stokes was born of Quaker parents in the year 1823 at Morristown, Burlington county, New Jersey, where they lived until she was three years of age. The family then moved to Warren county, Ohio. She resided there until 1845, when she was married to J. Goodale, and the husband and wife came west to make their home. After many changes and vicissitudes they came to Barry in the fall of 1852 and they occupied their homestead from that time until two years ago, when in consequence of a death in the family she went to reside in the home of her son, C. W. Goodale, where she sought by her tender care and devotion to cast the sunshine of peace and happiness upon the bereaved family, and to care for their interests. She was all that a good wife and mother could be. She never tired in doing good and was much beloved by all that knew her for her many virtues and amiable disposition, as she never had an unkind word with her husband or any of her neighbors. She was an earnest and zealous worker in the cause of temperance, and was always interested in anything that worked to the betterment of the community. The funeral was held at the Baptist church, Wednesday afternoon, and the sermon was delivered by Rev. H. C. First. Her remains were deposited in the city cemetery."

CURTIS.—At Stansbury, Gentry county, Missouri, December 28th, 1887, of measles, Bro. Benjamin Curtis, aged twenty-five years. Being a member of the Stewartville branch, by request of parents memorial services were held in said branch for him on January 1st, 1888, conducted by J. M. Terry, assisted by D. R. Baldwin. Peace to his soul.

MARTIN.—Near Kewanee, Illinois, December 17th, 1887, of dropsy and heart disease Bro. William Martin. He was born September 8th, 1831, at Allgreen, England, and was baptized by H. C. Bronson, May 25th, 1875. He leaves a wife and a large family of children to mourn his death. Bro. John Chisnall administered words of consolation.

Among the number dead
In rank and file
May peace attend his bed,
In sleep awhile.
His weeping kindred left behind,
May they a friend in Jesus find,
Eternal, everlasting, kind—Amen.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The next conference of the Fremont district will convene at Shenandoah, Iowa, at ten o'clock on Saturday, February 25th, 1888.

HENRY KEMP, Pres.

The conference of the Central Nebraska district will convene with the Clearwater branch on the 25th and 26th of February, 1888, at eleven a. m. All the branches should be represented if possible. We cordially invite all to come.

J. H. JACKSON, clerk.

Farwest district conference will convene at Stewartville, Missouri, on Saturday, the 25th of February, at ten o'clock.

J. T. KINNAMAN, President.

The Western Wisconsin district conference will convene February 4th and 5th, at half-past ten a. m., at Webster, Vernon county. All are cordially invited to attend. Come praying.

A. L. WHITEAKER, Dist. Pres.

Conference Minutes.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

This district conference met at Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 11th, 1887. Bro. J. R. Lambert chosen president, Thomas Scott secretary. Bro. J. P. Carlisle and Bro. L. Jensen, committee appointed to examine the Bishop's report; found the same correct; it was received and committee discharged. Report of Elders:—Bro. H. N. Hansen stated that he had preached every Sunday except two or three, in Hazeldell, North Star, Underwood, Crescent City and Council Bluffs, and his desires are to do all the good he can for the cause. Bro. Lambert reported he had preached two sermons in Crescent City. Bro. D. K. Dodson reported his labors for the past six months; had preached twenty sermons, and baptized three, assisted in confirming six persons; had labored at Underwood, Crescent City and in the western part of Council Bluffs, and been blest in the discharge of his duties and had assurance given him of the heavenly Father of his acceptance, for which he praises His holy name. Bro. Beebe's labors has been confined at Council Bluffs. Bro. Hans Hansen reported he had preached in Hazeldell and Council Bluffs, and at North Star. Bro. Joshua Carlisle reported he had endeavored to prepare himself for future work. Bro. J. T. Carlisle reported he had labored and presided over the North Star Branch and at Underwood. His desires are to do all the good he can in the gospel. He also baptized one in the branch. Bro.

Andrew Hall reported he had acted as Bishop's agent and was prevented from doing more on account of poor health. Bro. John Evans reported he had not much report to make. He had baptized 7 and had assisted Bro. Harding in opening meetings. His desires are to do all he can for the cause. In the afternoon Bro. Harding stated that he had preached once at Downsville, once at Underwood and the principal part of his labors were in the Crescent Branch. Bro. Drebbis stated he was elected priest and he had taken charge of the meetings when Bro. H. N. Hansen was absent, and he wished to do all he can in the work. Bro. Gess reported he had taken the stand once or twice, but his desires are the same as when he first embraced the gospel. Bro. Basset stated he rejoiced in the work and he hoped that he should prove faithful. Reports of Branches:—Wheeler's Grove branch, Bro. Needham reported not in as good condition as he would like to see it. Bro. Harding reported the Crescent branch in excellent condition and that an excellent feeling prevails, for which he is thankful. Bro. J. P. Carlisle reported the North Star branch in a good spiritual condition, and that there seemed to be an improvement. Bro. Beebe reported the Council Bluffs branch in a good spiritual condition. Bro. H. N. Hansen reported the Hazeldell branch not in as good condition as he would like to see it, but at the same time he thinks the Spirit is with them and they intend to go on and do the best they can. Resolved that we hold our next conference at Underwood, Iowa, the last Saturday in February, 1888. Bro. D. K. Dodson and John Evans were appointed to labor in Boomer and North Pigeon. Bro. J. P. Carlisle and Joshua Carlisle were appointed to labor in Underwood and Downville. Bro. H. N. Hansen was appointed to labor in Neola and Hickory Grove. Bro. Hans Hansen was appointed to labor among the Danish people as much as convenient. Bro. D. K. Dodson was appointed to labor in Streetville in connection with the mission assigned him. All elders and priests were requested to labor as circumstances may permit. Bro. H. N. Hansen was elected district president. Sunday morning preaching by Bro. J. R. Lambert, prayer by Bro. J. C. Foss; in the afternoon preaching by Bro. J. C. Foss.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.

The conference of the above district convened at the Cummings School-house, near Derby, Perry county, Indiana, November 26th to December 1st, 1887, James G. Scott in the chair, S. C. Grover secretary pro tem. The forenoon of the 26th was devoted to prayer and testimony, in which the Saints rejoiced in the power of the Spirit. At two p. m. the Bishop's Agent reported, on hand last report $11.20; received since $6.25; total $17.45. Expenditures $12.15; balance $5.30. J. M. Scott, agent. Branch reports: Eden 19, including 4 elders, 1 priest. J. M. Scott president, T. F. Wheeler clerk. West Fork 24, including 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 teacher. V. D. Baggerly president, C. E. Jobe clerk. Elders reports: J. M. Scott reported by letter with James G. Scott had visited and labored at Union, Canaan and Olive branches, and at Union school-house. V. D. Baggerly had labored in numerous places and preached in all thirty-three times, and assisted others; baptized and confirmed 2, blessed 6 children, and administered to the sick with good results. James G. Scott had labored in the Union and Olive branches, also at the Union school-house; had baptized 1, and administered to the sick with good results. The court of elders appointed to adjust difficulties in the Union branch, reported difficulties adjusted satisfactory, and were released. At 7 p. m., November 26th, preaching by V. D. Baggerly; 27th at 11 a. m. preaching by J. G. Scott, at 7 p. m. by V. D. Baggerly, 28th, 29th and 30th at 7 p. m., by J. G. Scott. God seemed to be with us in the power of the Holy Ghost. Had large and attentive audiences. December 1st, Bro. Simpson C. Grover was ordained a priest and Bro. William Cummings a deacon. District authorities, laborers and general church authorities were sustained. Adjourned to meet with the Olive branch, Ripley county, at the call of the president.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY:

THERE is now before the Utah church one of the best opportunities to put themselves right on the record of American citizenship that has been offered them in more than a decade of years.

John T. Caine, delegate to Congress from Utah, has presented to that body a petition for the admission of Utah to the sisterhood of States, accompanied with the draft of the constitution upon the basis of which the proposed statehood is demanded. This constitution virtually admits plural marriage to be a wrong, and declares it to be a misdemeanor. It assumes the functions of a statute and provides a punishment for an infraction of its provisions.

Simultaneously with this action of Delegate John T. Caine, Mr. W. H. King, Representative from the nineteenth district in Utah, introduced into the House of Representatives in session at Salt Lake City, January 13th, 1888, a bill declaring against polygamy and its correlatives, and providing penalties for the things made misdemeanors by it. Mr. E. D. Hoge of the twelfth district also introduced a bill for the "regulating of marriages" in Utah.

The general feeling outside of Utah is that the protestations of the Utah Church to divest the church of the obnoxious feature of polygamy, are not sincere. A suspicion has everywhere obtained that all that has been so far done is of a doubtful, Jesuitical character, and that if statehood is accorded to Utah upon it, there will soon be a complete reversion of the apparent assurances of acting in good faith, the constitution be disregarded, and all statutory enactments be left as dead letters upon the statute books of the Territory. It must be apparent to the most dull of comprehension among the leading men of the Utah Church, that with such a state of feeling obtaining all over the United States, something of a completely satisfactory nature should be done.

The opportunity is now offered that portion of the Mormon faith in Utah and elsewhere who are of the opinion that plural, or celestial marriage, or polygamy is not vitally essential to the existence and continuance of primitive Mormonism, to come to the front and emphasize the action of their votes lately given in favor of the constitution now presented by John T. Caine as the representative of the whole church, by an assertion of their power as a majority of the people, and openly refuse to be longer compromised by that which sits at the doors of the promotion of their interest and progress, and bars them from the benefits of their industry, devotion and sacrifice. They can now far more safely do this than ever before. The action of their leaders has given them due notice that when the matter is pushed to a choice, those leaders prefer personal safety from arrest and punishment to the consequences of a manly standing by their professed rights, according to claims made in the past.

If the movement for statehood originated with the leaders now in hiding, and was intended by them as a device to blind the American people and hoodwink the nation's law-makers, it is directly within the lines of the law of compensation for the suffering majority to avail themselves of the legitimate consequences of the Jesuitical performance and compel their unwise brethren to abide the result, by holding them to their action as if it had been done in absolute good faith. If the movement did originate with the leaders, and was the result of a desire to act in good faith with the Government, and to be freed from the further disabilities of polygamy, then the opportunity to the monogamous element, which alone will ultimately be recognized by the nation to be entitled to citizenship and its privileges, should be seized as a golden one and be improved and enforced by such direct and wholesome legislation as will set the matter at once and forever at rest. If the leaders were in earnest in urging the action for statehood upon the people, it ought to be taken for all that is worth by them who are involved in the evil workings of polygamy, without having been permitted to enjoy its pleasures, if there be any.

To us of the Reorganized Church this move for statehood means much. In its inception we see a willingness upon the part of some to let events take their course, so long as they can keep out of the way of the lash. To us it means further, that the long, persistent and uncompromising adherence to, and advocacy of the monogamic principle as found clearly revealed in the Bible, Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is to be crowned by at least a partial success. This has been accorded in the fact that when the constitution of which Delegate John T. Caine was made the bearer to Congress, was submitted to the votes of the people of Utah, thirteen thousand voted for it and some five hundred voted against it. If the so-called Gentile population of the Territory acted in accordance with their refusal to join in the convention to frame the constitution, they did not vote when it was submitted to the people; hence the vote was essentially Mormon. This is significant; and if it shall at any future time be claimed that this vote was simply the subterfuge of subtle men to gain a political advantage, it will stamp with still deeper characters the opinion already obtained abroad that the men who did it have hitherto had and now have one face and one tongue for the Nation and the world, and another tongue and another face to their people, the one directly the opposite of the other. This claim once made, and this conclusion sure to follow, would be fatal to the faith of many; and if properly presented in the conflict of church opinions would drive hundreds to desert such leadership. Jesuitism and its methods may have done in darker times than these, when it was popular to force conviction by fraud, deceit and the sword; but now, in the days when "freedom and reason make us men," they are out of place—what can not stand the light of fairness and truth are unworthy of credence and support. The two-faced god should have no worshipers among Latter Day Saints.

THE LAMB-ELVIN DISCUSSION.

THE discussion mentioned elsewhere in this issue in regard to the Book of Mormon reminds us that this is the last one heard from, and that should it result as discussions usually do on that topic, the scholarship, effrontery, audacious cunning, blind zeal, falsehood, and money-making motive will be found on the side of him or them who attack the book; while on the other side there will be exhibited a firm reliance on the pertinent facts of prophecy and history contained in the Bible, on the testimony of credible witnesses who, within the past sixty years, personally had much to do with the coming forth of that book, both with respect to seeing and handling the plates from which it was translated, the direct work of its translation, with those who translated and wrote it, also with the witnesses whose names are appended to the book. And besides this, its defender will exhibit an overwhelming amount of corroborative evidence from the writings of reliable anti-quarians, archæologists, and travellers in America, adding thereto both the history and the traditions of the American aborigines, also the exalted moral precepts of the book, the exact and very notable fulfillment of many of its unique and marvelous prophecies, its general harmony with the Bible in doctrine and principle, its special but very favorable disagreement with some Bible texts, concluding with the personal spiritual testimony of hundreds of thousands of witnesses who have lived in this century and obtained testimonies from heavenly sources confirming their confidence in its divinity. Its defender may not have the profound learning of the schools, the polish of the universities, nor the extended and varied forensic experiences of his opponent to aid him; nor will he be animated by fear of loss to his reputation or purse as a minister, lecturer, book-maker or salaried correspondent. But we feel assured he will wage battle sternly, hotly, and persistently with the solid facts and principles of truth at his command, guided by the Spirit of the Master—Christ Jesus.

From what we have learned of Rev. Lamb and his work, it is evident that he has searched, gleaned, raked, scraped, dug and sifted from all the anti-Mormon books and papers obtainable, and to this has added what inventions and crafty theories he could originate, combining and condensing the whole into a somewhat plausible but false and bewildering system which he peddles out from pulpit, platform, and press, causing those who receive it to be "drunken, but not with wine;" to "stagger, but not with strong drink." It appears that Mr. Lamb dare not hold a fair and equitable joint discussion on the subject with a representative minister of our church. He has been challenged a number of times to do so, but always refuses, so far as we have learned.

The people have said that Joseph Smith was both fool and knave. But no man of that kind ever did or ever could produce the Book of Mormon and its marvelous harmonies with the facts of ancient prophecy, ancient and modern history, archaeology, tradition and the sciences. And what is true of Joseph Smith in this, is likewise true of all those immediately connected with its coming forth to the world. The crafty, but baseless theory, so long kept in stock by anti-Mormon lecturers and book-makers, that a Rev. Solomon Spaulding wrote the Book of Mormon, or any part of it, is now proclaimed an unmitigated falsehood by this same Spaulding in his writings which of late have, in the wonderful providence of God, risen out of their hiding place, which, when compared with the Book of Mormon show that in matters of religion, morals, history, principle, social and domestic economy, and in their general and specific plans, there is no likeness whatever between the two, and that the Book of Mormon is as much superior to Spaulding's "Manuscript Story" as Holy Scriptures are superior to dime novels. But with fat-salaried preachers, mercenary book-makers, sordid minded lecturers, and the like, "Anything to beat the Book of Mormon," has been their battle-cry; and so they forged and fashioned this vile weapon that now is turned into a viper in their own hands as were the rods in the hands of Egypt's magicians. For over sixty years the enemies of the Book of Mormon and the work connected therewith, have spared no effort, and with blind and barbarous zeal have sought by every means, whether fair or foul, to degrade and destroy them. But they live, and flourish! Every sweeping blast against them but adds to their strength, their thrift, their widening influence and conquest. We pity the blind bigots who in their delirious fury kick against the pricks, and we are led to conclude they either think their "craft is in danger," they love the applause of men more than the honor that comes from God, or they hope by their efforts to make money for themselves by playing upon the prejudices and credulity of the masses, even though it be at the expense of truth and the interests of their fellow men.

HERALD AND HOPE.

THE following table showing the circulation of the HERALD and Hope from 1879 to 1888—nine years—will give the reader a pretty fair idea of the gain made by them during that period, though we have not carried for the last three years so many delinquents as for years before, proportionately. When we bear in mind the general depression in financial matters, the gain will be regarded as very fair.

THE END OF THE WORLD IN 1891?

It is claimed by some that Joseph the Seer prophesied February 14th, 1835, that the end of "this world"—age—and the second and glorious coming of Christ would occur as early as 1891, and they pretend that this prediction is found in what purports to be the history of the church endorsed by the Seer and published in the Millennial Star, vol. 15, page 205, by the Utah Mormons, which reads as follows: "And those who went to Zion, with a determination to lay down their lives, if necessary, it was the will of God that they should be ordained to the ministry, and go forth to prune the vineyard for the last time, or the coming of the Lord, which was nigh—even fifty-six years should wind up the scene." The facts are as follows:

1. This statement does not claim to be either revelation or prophecy.

2. It does not necessarily relate to the end of this world, nor to the glorious coming of Christ; for it is neither unscriptural nor unreasonable that the Lord may come to his people before his public and glorious advent. And "the winding up scene" of preaching the gospel to the Gentiles—those to whom these ministers were to be sent—may occur a long time before the final and glorious appearing of the Lord.

3. Finally, it is not at all certain that the Seer wrote or dictated the passage in question in its present form, or even at all; for we find no such teachings by him, as that Christ would come in 1891, in any of the earlier publications of the church—those published during his life-time—from 1830 to 1844. Whoever will read the Doctrine and Covenants will find in the following passages what were the authoritative teachings of the Seer during his life-time concerning the end of this world and the final and glorious coming of the Lord: Section 28: 1-5; 33: 1, 2; 36: 12-14; 43: 5, 6; 45: 2-10; 63: 13; 65: 1; 85: 23-27; 98: 4, 5. These revelations declare the time of Christ's glorious appearing, the signs which will precede it, the events that will transpire prior to it, both in and out of the church, and these should be accepted as the teachings of the Seer on the subject to the exclusion of whatever may be found in unauthorized publications to the contrary in fact or seemingly so. It is probable that the first prominent promulgation in this century of the second personal and glorious appearing of Christ, was made in the revelations to and through Joseph the Seer.

Paul says to the Saints that, "the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night" upon those not in Christ; but of the worthy Saints who shall be living at the glorious advent he says: "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and of the day." Christ had previously taught the same idea when he said that "as the days of Noah were, so also shall the coming of the Son of Man be." The days of Noah and of Lot were blessed with and by the revelations of God and the ministrations of angels to those who loved and served God. And the parable of the ten virgins, (Matt. 25: 1-13), reveals further the fact that God will by the gospel and its light and power (Matt. 24: 14) call the church—"virgins"—to prepare for the coming of the Lord, and that "the wise" ones will have the needed light to prepare them for that august and joyful event when the "midnight" cry comes from the angels of God to them. Yet, with all the teachings given by the Master and the apostles in respect to that event, there was, nevertheless, no little strife and misunderstanding among the former day Saints about it, and Paul and Peter, and probably others, found it necessary to correct the false ideas and theories which had gone forth, as any one may see who will read Paul's epistles to the Thessalonians, to Timothy, etc.; also Peter's epistles and the Revelation of St. John.

It is not improbable that aspiring, self-willed or faithless persons in those times misstated, misquoted, or falsely interpreted the teachings of both Jesus and the apostles on the subject.

As Jesus and his apostles have foretold, this, it is claimed by Joseph the Seer and his faithful fellow servants, is a time of divine "light," of heavenly "day," of angel ministrations, of revelation from God to those who humbly and faithfully seek Him, and that God is giving "line upon line, line upon line; precept upon precept, precept upon precept," both in respect to "the glorious appearing" of our Lord, and also upon all essential subjects proper for His loving, dutiful children to know in this dispensation.

If people would use the same charity, wisdom and fairness, in criticising and considering the teachings and doings of Joseph the Seer that they ask for Bible teachers and writers, there would be but little grounds for complaint and strife. Beware of false teachers. Beware of busybodies.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PARTIES in Michigan and Kansas have written to us asking if Elder L. D. Hickey is a member and minister of the Reorganized Church. To these and all others wishing to know, we reply that, he is neither that we are aware of. He claims to be a Latter Day Saint, is somewhat friendly to the Reorganization; but so far as we are informed he holds to some theories, doctrines, and principles of church government, and church methods, quite at variance with those obtaining in the Reorganization. We wish all men well; but, "can two walk together, except they be agreed?" On the 8th inst., he wrote us from Topeka, Kansas, that he was there seeking to do good.

President Joseph Smith reports very cold, stormy weather at Salt Lake City, in his letter of the 14th instant, and concludes the weather there is equally cold with that of Iowa and surrounding states. He is having fair sized and inquiring congregations, and says prospects are favorable for additions to the church by baptism at an early time. He notes the fact of kind treatment accorded him by all, and of very cordial greeting by some. This is as it should be. People should not be bigoted, self-righteous, nor quarrelsome about religion, but the reverse of that.

Bro. Thomas Whiting writes from Brockton, Massachusetts, January 12th: "I am doing what I can for the advancement of the truth. The prospects in this district are good."

Sr. Mrs. Clara Bassford, of Franklin county, New York, is anxious for any of the elders passing that way to stop there. She says the branch there is inactive, although the few remaining members are all firm in the work. Her post office box is 717, Malone, N. Y.

Bro. J. C. Clapp wrote from Farmington, Kentucky, the 9th instant, that he would begin a course of lectures in that place, beginning the 22d instant. He further says: "Weather bad; health much better, and plenty of preaching to do."

Bro. John Shields wrote from Grand Valley, Ontario, January 12th, that brethren J. A. McIntosh, W. J. Smith and himself, had succeeded in baptizing twenty-two at that place since the last of October, that the interest continues good, and that he is laboring there "with good prospects."

Bro. Ethan Barrows, of Salt Lake City, an old-time member, says in a recent letter that his heart is pained over the blindness and hardness of the Utah Mormons, and he expresses deep regret that they all do not seek to hear Joseph, the son of Joseph the Seer, who, he is confident, could and would point their way out of present and prospective perplexities and tribulations. He says also that the "Josephites" in the city make some progress.

The Tama, (Iowa) Herald of the 30th ult., draws a very clear line of distinction between the faith and practices of the Saints from 1830 to 1844 and what obtained under the rule of Brigham Young after 1844. It further says that the "Josephites" adhere closely to the original faith, and quote the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants in proof. It demands for the "Josephites" the same rights and privileges extended to other religious societies and bears witness to their high standing in respect to citizenship.

Bro. N. Stamm wrote us from Adel, Iowa, the 16th instant, that he is having good liberty in preaching the word in that region.

Bro. S. K. Sorensen, of May, Nebraska, writes of late that but little interest is felt in that region to hear the Latter Day Saints. Bro. J. Caffal had done some preaching in that vicinity, creating a seeming desire to hear more, but on the return of Bro. Caffal later, he found "the enemy" had been there "sowing tares" and harming the good seed sown.

Sr. M. E. Lowe, of Plano, Illinois, widow of the late Doctor Lowe of that city, renews for the HERALD and says: "I thank God for the many testimonies he has given me of the latter day work, and shall do all I can to spread the good news." Sr. Lowe was one of the faithful little band who stood by the work of God in Plano from its first planting there in the sixties, until now. May heaven bless and prosper such worthy Saints.

Please do not send for "Rules of Order" till some time after next General Conference. The present issue is exhausted, and none will be printed before that time, when it is probable important changes may be made in it.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Pres. Joseph Smith wrote us from Salt Lake City, the 16th instant, as follows:

"Yours of the 11th was received last night. No mails of moment from the east for two or three days previous. * * * Last night I faced a pretty full house in our chapel, and presented our views in regard to the institution of marriage being monogamic. I had excellent liberty, and am satisfied that some who heard were benefitted. * * * Quite a number of Brighamites were present. A more respectful and attentive congregation no one need to ask for. The attention was most excellent. * * * "The effort will have a good effect, I am persuaded. I presented the law as found in the three church books, dilating upon the revelations as found in Doctrine and Covenants and the duty of Latter Day Saints under them. I was impressed to discuss the question. The result must appear further on. There is, very apparent, a much more cordial feeling among those of the church here that I meet, than I ever experienced before. If it is commiseration for me in my erroneous and benighted condition (?) I am grateful for it; and if it be a true bending to the logic of events and the truth, I thank God for it, as it evinces the dawn before the coming spiritual day. May the good Lord send comfort to the needy and poor in spirit, enlightenment to the blinded ones, and punishment upon the wilfully wicked who seek to continue the yoke upon the down trodden. . . . I had seen Mr. Abram Hatch sometime before leaving home, in a dream, and knew him the first time I set eyes upon him here. . . . The weather has been bitterly cold for the time I have been here. Yesterday the mercury was down to 15, 16, and in some places even lower below zero. All the praises of Utah climate have frozen on the lips of those uttering them. The snow creaks under the wagon wheels this morning, and the air bites severely."

SOMETHING in respect to the discussion going on between Rev. Lamb and Elder R. M. Elvin of late may be gathered from the clipping below which we take from the Salt Lake Herald, of January 11th.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, Jan. 3d.

"Malad is wild with the lecture fever. People of all denominations flock from their homes and trudge through blinding snow storms to listen to the Revs. Lamb and Elvin from night to night. The large and spacious court room proves to be entirely too small to accommodate those desiring admission, and it is safe to say that if the court room was as large again it would be packed from night to night. The Rev. Lamb held forth again to-night, and conducted his lecture in a very gentlemanly style and manner, but it was very noticeable that he had put all the cream and force of his arguments into his first attempt (that of Sunday evening), and his attempt to-night was indeed very weak compared to that of his first evening. To-night he produced new and different maps, and dwelt upon the geography of Central and South America, and his lecture was too much the same as his first evening, thereby proving himself to be at a loss for new material with which to make his fight, but he said that he intended to prove that the Book of Mormon was of modern origin rather than ancient, but somehow or other he didn't touch upon the modern origin of the book whatever, but dwelt upon his old theme entirely, occasionally referring to his brother speaker (Elvin) as misquoting him last night.

"Judging from the way this thing is going, it will last for some time to come. The Rev. Elvin is to take the stump again to-morrow (Wednesday) night, to defend the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, and try to convert the Lamb to the other side of the question.

"Among the Mormons and Josephites here, these two gentlemen are referred to as the Lion and the Lamb, but it is easily seen that the Lamb is far the best scholar, whether he be right or wrong; and I am very much inclined to believe that outside of Lamb's well-learned lecture, which he has studied for lo! these three years, he would not be able to offer up a very strong argument against the authenticity of the book.

"Lamb said to-night he did not wish to promise whether or not he would face Elvin again, but thought probably he would."

To which we add this from President Joseph Smith, dated at Salt Lake City, January 14th:

"Bro. R. M. Elvin, who has been at Malad, Idaho, reviewing lectures delivered there by Rev. M. T. Lamb, author of the 'Golden Bible,' the latest, and for that reason the most subtle work against the Book of Mormon, is ably defending the faith. In a note to Bro. R. J. Anthony, now at Salt Lake City, he said: 'There are from three hundred to five hundred in attendance at the lectures every night; snow two feet deep and the mercury at twenty-eight degrees below zero.' Bro. Elvin feels much encouraged."

PLEASANTON, IOWA, Dec. 26th.

Dear Sr. Walker:—We are delighted with your magazine, both as to matter and form. We think its get up especially neat and tasteful, and as to the matter it can not but do an immense amount of good. May God bless you is our prayer.

DUNCAN CAMPBELL.

This is what Bro. Campbell says of the January number of Autumn Leaves. Below we give the table of contents of the February number. Saints, give it a trial.

"Prophecy. With the Church in an early day. Father, take my hand. A century of dishonor. The ark of the covenant. The little girl and the fresh air fund. February cluster of memory gems. Whom. Supplication. The story of the Book of Mormon. The right road. Autumn leaves from the tree of poetry. Pres. Joseph Smith. Waiting. Two gentlemen. Sermon by Elder A. H. Smith. The form of a servant. Breaking the will. Under the lamp-light. Some queer folks. An honest man. Good is a good doctor, but bad is sometimes a better. Driftwood. A mother's talk on obedience. Students Society. Editor's Corner. Helpful hints and suggestions. Round table."

RESTORATION OF LAMANITES.

THE following clipping taken from a late Kansas City (Mo.) Star is another evidence enabling us to see how the promises made to the Nephite prophets concerning the restoration of the Lamanites by the aid of the Gentiles is having a literal and striking fulfillment. The Lord said by Jacob, "I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles, that they shall be like unto a father unto them."—2 Nephi 7: 2.

"Mr. J. F. Choteau, the interpreter of the Osage Indians, in company with Nehewahkopah, the president of the Nation and Big Heart, the chief of the council, arrived in Kansas City to-day from the Indian Nation en route for Washington.

"To a Star reporter Big Heart said in very good English: 'We are going to Washington to get the surplus money in the treasury belonging to our nation. I think the amount is about $350,000. If we get the money we will build school houses with some of it and invest the remainder in farming lands for the poorer Indians of our nation. The schools have been doing us a great deal of good. A number of fine houses have been erected by the Osage Indians and we expect in a few years to get along entirely independent of the government. We have enough corn and wheat to last us all winter. Our horses and cattle have nearly doubled during the past year. The squaws learn the civilized ways much more quickly than the men. The people of the Osage nation are the most civilized of any tribe of Indians. We work all winter as well as summer. A little more help from the government and we will be able to meet the white man in business. All the Indian boys and girls go to school."

"Big Heart is a large man with as pleasing a countenance as an Indian can possess, and is a rapid and fluent talker. Choteau, the interpreter is a cousin of the late John Choteau, a pioneer settler of Kansas City."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—In Revelations 20: 10, 15; 21: 8; etc., a "lake of fire and brimstone" is mentioned. Are we to understand this to be literal and material?

Ans.—We understand this to be figurative, and yet most real. If the reader will examine the following texts it will be seen that "fire" is not always of a physical kind; Jam. 3: 5, 6; 1 Pet. 1: 7; Jude 23; Rev. 3: 18; Luke 12: 49; Isa. 7: 4; Ezek. 30: 8; Zech. 2: 5; Lam. 2: 3; Mal. 3: 2; Matt. 3: 11, etc., etc. Of the finally impenitent at the last judgment day the Book of Mormon has this to say:

"And it shall come to pass, that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have become immortal, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel, and then cometh the judgment; and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God. And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, that they who are righteous, shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy, shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy, are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up forever and ever; and has no end."—2 Nephi 6: 6.

"And now behold I say unto you, then cometh a death, even a second death, which is a spiritual death; then is a time that whosoever dieth in his sins, as to a temporal death, shall also die a spiritual death: yea, he shall die as to things pertaining unto righteousness; then is the time when their torments shall be as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flame ascendeth up forever and ever; and then is the time that they shall be chained down to an everlasting destruction, according to the power and captivity of Satan; he having subjected them according to his will. Then I say unto you, they shall be as though there had been no redemption made; for they can not be redeemed according to God's justice; and they can not die, seeing there is no more corruption."—Alma 9: 3.

"And now, I speak also concerning those who do not believe in Christ. Behold, will ye believe in the day of your visitation; behold, when the Lord shall come; yea, even that great day when the earth shall be rolled together as a scroll, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; yea, in that great day when ye shall be brought to stand before the Lamb of God, then will ye say that there is no God? Then will ye longer deny the Christ, or can ye behold the Lamb of God? Do ye suppose that ye shall dwell with him under a consciousness of your guilt? Do ye suppose that ye could be happy to dwell with that holy being, when your souls are racked with a consciousness of guilt that ye have ever abused his laws? Behold I say unto you, that ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell. For behold, when ye shall be brought to see your nakedness before God, and also the glory of God, and the holiness of Jesus Christ, it will kindle a flame of unquenchable fire upon you. O then ye unbelieving, turn ye unto the Lord; cry mightily unto the Father in the name of Jesus, that perhaps ye may be found spotless, pure, fair and white, having been cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, at that great and last day."—Book of Mormon 4: 5.

"And now, I say unto you, my brethren, that after ye have known and have been taught all these things, if ye should transgress, and go contrary to that which has been spoken, that ye do withdraw yourselves from the Spirit of the Lord, that it may have no place in you to guide you in wisdom's paths, that ye may be blessed, prospered, and preserved. I say unto you, that the man that doeth this, the same cometh out in open rebellion against God; therefore he listeth to obey the evil spirit, and becometh an enemy to all righteousness; therefore, the Lord has no place in him, for he dwelleth not in unholy temples. Therefore, if that man repenteth not, and remaineth and dieth an enemy to God, the demands of divine justice doth awaken his immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt, which doth cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord, and doth fill his breast with guilt, and pain, and anguish, which is like an unquenchable fire, whose flame ascendeth up forever and ever. And now I say unto you, that mercy hath no claim on that man; therefore, his final doom is to endure a never ending torment."

"And now, I have spoken the words which the Lord God hath commanded me. And thus saith the Lord: They shall stand as a bright testimony against this people, at the judgment day; whereof, they shall be judged, every man, according to his works, whether they be good, or whether they be evil; and if they be evil, they are consigned to an awful view of their own guilt and abominations, which doth cause them to shrink from the presence of the Lord, into a state of misery and endless torment, from whence they can no more return; therefore, they have drunk damnation to their own souls. Therefore, they have drunk out of the cup of the wrath of God, which justice could no more deny unto them than it could deny that Adam should fall, because of his partaking of the forbidden fruit; therefore, mercy could have claim on them no more forever. And their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames are unquenchable, and whose smoke ascendeth up forever and ever. Thus hath the Lord commanded me. Amen."—Mosiah 1: 11, 16.

"Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame; these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made. And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him; who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless, I, the Lord, show it by vision unto many; but straightway shut it up again; wherefore the end, the width, the height, the depth, and the misery thereof, they understand not, neither any man except them who are ordained unto this condemnation. And we heard the voice saying, Write the vision, for lo, this is the end of the vision of the sufferings of the ungodly."—Doc. Cov. 76: 4.

ALCOHOL CURE IN DIPHTHERIA.

ALCOHOL, we make bold to say, is the prince of antiseptics and the most perfect and reliable medicine of which we have any knowledge in diphtheria. Diluted with equal parts of water and given in small and repeated doses, the malignant symptoms of this most fatal malady soon disappear and convalescence becomes assured. It is interesting to note with what facility the alcohol dissolves the diphtheretic exudation in the throat, lowers the temperature, and calms the pulse, showing its destructive action upon the germs of the disease, which have been absorbed by the glands and gained access to the blood. This remedy has been used by us in the treatment of diphtheria since 1873, during which time no case of the disease has slipped through our hands except in one solitary instance, and that case was in articulo mortis before the remedy was given. The remedy is also prophylactic to the disease, as we have found in many instances where it has been expedient to quarantine the patient. For this purpose it is only necessary for exposed persons to use the remedy, diluted as above stated, as a gargle and to swallow a little of it three or four times a day.—Medical Times.

MOTHERS' HOME COLUMN.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Oh, more than thrice blessed relic, more Than solemn rite or sacred lore,
The holy life of one who trod
The footmarks of the Christ of God."

SLEEP.

"So He giveth his beloved sleep."—Ps. 127: 2.

He sees when their footsteps falter, when their hearts grow weak and faint;
He marks when their strength is failing, and listens to each complaint!
He bids them rest for a season, for the pathway has grown too steep;
And folded in fair, green pastures, He giveth His loved ones sleep.

Like weary and worn-out children, that sigh for the daylight's close,
He knows that they oft are longing for home and its sweet repose;
So He calls them in from their labors ere the shadows
'round them creep,
And, silently watching o'er them, He giveth His loved ones sleep.

He giveth it, oh, so gently! as a mother will hush to rest
The babe that she softly pillows so tenderly on her breast;
Forgotten are now the trials and sorrows that made them weep,
For, with many a soothing promise, He giveth His loved ones sleep.

He giveth it! Friends, the dearest, can never this boon bestow;
But He touches the drooping eyelids, and placid the features grow;
Their foes may gather about them, and storms may
'round them sweep,
But, guarding them safe from danger, He giveth His loved ones sleep.

All dread of the distant future, all fears that opprest to-day,
Like mists that, clear in the sunlight, have noiselessly passed away;
Nor call, nor clamor, can rouse them from slumbers so pure and deep,
For only His voice can reach them who giveth His loved ones sleep.

Weep not that their toils are over, weep not that their race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly when our work, as theirs, is done!
Till then we will yield with gladness our treasures to Him to keep,
And rejoice in the sweet assurance He giveth His loved ones sleep. —Sel.

SHALL WE NOT BEAR THEM?

"BEAR ye one another's burdens, and thus fulfill the law," is the voice of Holy Writ, and is borne to our ears from time to time by faithful teachers; and yet, how slow we are to hear and comprehend the full meaning of the sentence. Have we done all when we have lent a helping hand to those in distress; or have watched with, and waited on the sick; have ministered in kindness to the afflicted. Are we free when we have done all of these things? True they are labors of love and require a little self-sacrifice sometimes to perform them; but are they really burdens? One would be almost inhuman not to attend to duties like these: and then, the grateful smile or the heartfelt thanks of the sick or afflicted ones repay in a great measure the trouble or pains taken in their behalf. So instead of being weighed down, we feel happy in the consciousness of having relieved suffering or sorrow, and we can bear that quite easily; and too often feel that our duty is done. But should a real burden be placed upon us by the busy tongue of another, how ready we are to hurl it back to where it belongs, feeling that we have no right to rest under any such burdens. Or if from envy, jealousy or malice, we have been misrepresented, or false reports circulated concerning us, how hard it is then to obey the injunction, "bear ye one another's burdens." We wish to go and tell all our friends that we are free; we can not rest under such; our minds are weighed down; we feel it to be a burden. Yes, a burden always requires an exercise of strength. But are we required to bear such burdens? If so, what for? for Christ's sake, who bore our sins, and by whose stripes we are healed. So if we bear one another's burdens, by our patience and love, they also may be healed; and though our hearts may be wounded and sore, there is more balm in the one thought, "I will bear it for the sake of others," than in all the re- dress that can be got by maintaining our rights—as we put it—and clearing ourselves. Christ has borne for us, and shall we be like him? Was there any sympathizing heart, or ear, to which he could go and pour out all his troubles? Tell that the people said evil things of him, how he cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils, and that he was a wine-bibber and a gluttonous man, that he did many things which he ought not to do? No, none but his Father's. Let us follow him in this also, and go only to the Father. Such sorrow becomes also sweet, when we have put down our own natural feelings and brought them in subjection to the spirit of Christ, which spirit is always love. And though we may not have become sufficiently Christ-like to do so from love towards those who cast the burden upon us, let it be for the love of Christ, who first loved us and suffered in our stead; and because we find that a portion of the "law of the spirit of life" is binding upon us to do so, if we would be made free by that law, for the Scriptures say, "and thus fulfill the law." Then if we come short in this, we come that far short of fulfilling the law, and consequently are not made free by it. I fear we trust, in too many instances, to the unfulfilled law to make us free. O when shall we have sufficiently conquered this carnal nature to bear patiently, and with at least a portion of Christ-like grace, all the burdens that are consequent to this life; so that we may look forward with a greater assurance, feeling a clearer title to those mansions prepared for the faithful in Christ Jesus? SISTER EMMA.

HASTINGS, Victoria.

Sister Frances:—Please permit me to send a few words of thanks through the "Column," to an unknown friend.

To L. L. L.:—I take this mode, dear friend, of acknowledging the receipt of the Christmas package, and thank you most heartily for the same. I prize the contents highly, especially the cabinet photo.; and to know that some unknown friend so far away remembered, months beforehand, to make our Christmas-tide happy, was pleasing indeed. May the Lord bless you and all of Zion's children, is my desire.

HASTINGS, Australia, Oct. 1st.

Dear Sisters:—I have been greatly blessed by reading the many testimonies of the sisters who write to the Mothers' Home Column. They have taught me many good lessons. I was one time like the sister who got tired of the humdrum, dry housework, the same to do over again every day. I could not help thinking while reading the sister's letter, that it was my experience. I have had a long spell of illness, that has caused me to think it would be a real pleasure to do my house work if I was able. I have learned that it is good to be afflicted; the Lord afflicted me to make me more patient. O! that the Lord will grant me more of that great virtue, patience, not only me, but all the dear Saints; we so much need that blessing, especially us mothers need to exercise a deal of patience in bringing up our little ones.

This latter day work has done a great deal for me. I ought indeed to thank God for sending brother and sister Burton to Australia to preach the gospel in its fullness and purity to us, and to teach us to obey all God's holy commandments. Sister Burton is more than a sister to us here in Hastings; by her good example and kind advice we are enabled to be better Saints. Sister Addie takes great interest in the children, also sister Burton. The children are very fond of them; we will all miss them very much when they go away. We would like them to stay with us, but we know that God wants them in other places to do the good work they have done here. I hope God will bless their labors wherever they go; and if we should not meet again here, I hope we will continue faithful till our Savior Jesus comes to receive us unto himself; then we will meet to part no more. I rejoice to think of that glorious day.

Before I became a member of this Church of Jesus Christ I often thought there was nothing worth living for; was almost tired of my life; I lived only for pleasures of the world, and they caused me so much unhappiness; I thank God that by being obedient to his will I have been able to cast them all to one side. I now see much pleasure in living to serve Jesus, and hope he will help me and all the Saints to do his holy will, that we may not be alarmed at his coming.

ANNIE GRAYDEN.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 3d.

Dear Sister Frances:—Enclosed you will find one dollar, which my Sabbath school class send as their offering to the missionary fund. We only began this little box about two months ago, and they were surprised to see that their little offerings of a penny or two at a time had grown so large in that short time. They understand what it is for, and I believe they tried to make a little sacrifice, and save part of their spending money for the little box. I shall continue it in this present year, and introduce it if we can into the whole school. The class which sends this offering consists of nine boys and two girls, of whom I am proud, and I dearly love each one. Four boys and one girl were baptized of late. At their confirmation one Sunday afternoon, a brother who has the gift, sang in tongues. The spirit of peace came with the hymn, and filled the room. One or two wrote it (the hymn) as it was given. I will send it to you that you may read it too, and rejoice with us. What a precious blessing this gospel is. I have not had much experience yet,

Dear sister, I could not live without it. While writing I must tell you that the Mothers' Home Column has been a great source of comfort and strength to me. Often since my dear mother's death have I found comfort in reading from the mothers who have written. A sister once said to me, "If it had not been for the Home Column, I should have given up at one time." May our Father above bless the mothers, that we as younger ones may receive the counsel we so much need. May He also bless them with an abundance of love and patience; for the younger do not always desire in their heart to do wrong, but temptations are great and the flesh is weak.

Our school is waiting anxiously for the lesson books. We received our Autumn Leaves, and think it truly splendid; I am very much pleased with it. We had a very nice time Christmas—Monday night—at our Sunday School Treat. We had some music and recitations mixed in with the candy, and all seemed to enjoy the evening.

MARY E. HULMES.

WE append below the words given by the Spirit to which our young sister has referred, and thank her for sending them.

The angels of God, they are glad and rejoice,
Because of the young that are heeding his voice;
Continue to serve him, remain in the fold,
Your days will be numbered with blessings untold.

Yield not to temptation, division or strife,
Abstain from the evils and follies of life;
Let God's holy law be your only delight,
And meditate in it by day and by night.

Your future is glorious, your mission is grand,
And many through you shall obey my command;
The Spirit will guide you, and darkness dispel,
Abide the conditions and all will be well.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, Nov. 20th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints since 1843, and my faith has never been shaken in the latter day work; but when I look back on my past life, I see many times where I have erred and gone astray, which causes me to mourn, not that I have done anything to injure any one, but the trials of life have not been borne as patiently as they should have been; and I also see many things that causes my heart to rejoice when I realize how good God has been to me, when dark clouds have hung heavily over me he has bid them disperse, and given me comfort and joy, that has caused my heart to be glad; and I have then been strengthened to press on, knowing that only those who continue faithful unto the end, can be saved.

I don't know how I would get along without the Herald; it comes to us every week filled with such good cheer, it is meat and drink to our souls in this salt land. While reading it many times my thoughts are carried back to the time I joined the Reorganized Church in 1865, and the testimony and promises I then received have been a strong support to me, and cheered me on, and I can see the watch-care that has been over us when the waves of trouble have run high; then I have seen God's power made manifest in our deliverance. I have been led to exclaim, Thanks be to God for all his blessings to us. I have four children, three sons and one daughter, all are members of the church, and are living near me. This is a great comfort to me in my lonely journey. We many time wish we could have the society of the Saints, and meet with them often. We have a small branch of the church here, but are much scattered, and can only meet occasionally; but we find that it is good, and we receive strength in so doing.

This is a hard country for Saints to live in, and requires all to watch and pray. I feel to ask an interest in the prayers of my sisters, that we may be kept ever in the straight and narrow way that leads to eternal life.

Your sister in the gospel,
P. B. S.

GLENWOOD, Iowa, Jan. 3d.

Dear Sister Walker:—I have often thought I would like to write to the Home Column," to let my sisters know how I rejoice in reading the good instruction that comes in the Herald every week. I am happy to-day that I am with you in this great work of the Lord. It is forty years since I embraced the restored gospel, and to-day I rejoice that I am still holding on to the rod of iron. I have no meeting to attend, but I hope I shall have some day, for I like to meet with the Saints so much. Sisters pray for me that I may ever be firm in the faith of the Saints.

Your sister in the gospel,
LYDIA WALLING.

FREMONT, Ind., Dec. 14th.

Dear Sister Frances:—It has been nearly ten years since I heard the gospel in its fullness. It did not take me long to accept and obey it; and I have never regretted for one moment that I did so. I thank God that secret prayer is a pleasure none are denied. I always had a desire to be a Christian, ever since I can remember. At a tender age I was left without a mother's love and care, and I was put out to live with strangers. They made no profession of religion, but were good moral people. I knew what it was to feel lonely and friendless, and long for a kind word or a pleasant smile; and I often took refuge in reading my mother's Bible. Of course it was like a sealed book to my understanding; but I believed it to be God's word, and I took great comfort in reading it, and hoped and prayed in my childish way that I might some day understand it. I can look back over all these years and see my heavenly Father's kind care and protection over me, and his hand in the circumstances that brought to me the gospel; and I feel to thank Him with all my heart for the little knowledge I have of the precious truths contained in that book. Dear sisters, let us be faithful; let us be patient with our little ones, and try to guide their feet in the narrow way,

SISTER MARY.

DALTON, Kansas, Jan. 1st.

Dear Home Column:—I feel it a duty as well as a pleasure to testify for this church of Latter Day Saints. I have been a member of it about one year, and I can say I have been greatly blessed. I am young both in the work and in years, but the Bible teaches us to do all we can and we shall be rewarded for it; and I am going to do all I can be it ever so little. I hear no preacher here but the Herald, and oh how glad I am to see the latter part of the week come so I can get the paper. I think the Home Column is the nicest part of the paper; but perhaps that is because I am young. I think some of the dear mothers give good advice by which we could be benefitted. I have a mother that is always talking and teaching me what is right, and those dear letters sound so home-like. I am the only child. Mamma is an invalid. She has the asthma and heart trouble. I hope all the sisters will pray for her that she may get well. My papa was taken away when I was quite small, and my brother when I was twelve years old, he was eighteen when he was called away. I have a step papa. He, mamma and I are all the Saints around here that I know of, except uncle and aunt.

Your sister in the one faith,
MAMIE ZENOR.

Correspondence.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 10th.

Dear Brother Joseph:—We, a little band of Saints in this large city are trying to hold up the gospel banner in our feeble way before the people; but find there is not enough attraction to draw the masses from their comfortable cushioned seats, singing attractions, and many other of the modern entertainments connected with popular churches of the day, which are indeed, especially to the young, very fascinating. Then they have such a very pleasing way of tickling the ears, and pleasing the senses of the people from the Christian rostrum, that anything like the plain and simple story as taught by Jesus the Christ and his immediate followers, seem to have no charm for them. And when we by chance get one or two strangers to hear us, it is sometimes of that kind known here as church tramps, who go from one place of worship to another, who believe all things in general, and nothing in particular. They seem to have a propensity of agreeing with every thing they hear, and seem to be as much at home with the "Salvation Army's" bang and blast of drum and trumpet, as with the quiet, patient, mute Quaker, who will sit pensive for an hour for the moving process. Yet at times we have the honest heart to hear us, who receive the word with joy and gladness, and among such are to be found those who have the testimony of Jesus received through obedience to the true and everlasting gospel.

We have had Bro. E. C. Briggs with us a little, but we feel his labors among us as a branch, and if I included the district I should only echo the sentiments of the district, in saying his wise counsel and timely advice has been fraught with much good. We would fain have kept him in this city longer if we could, but his eastern district is so vast, the calls for the labors of "wise master builders" so many, and the laborers so very few, that perhaps our desire to retain him has been somewhat selfish. We are patiently awaiting his return from Maine and Nova Scotia, where he has been laboring.

We often wonder where that grand young elder is who was to come along to labor with us. Perhaps Bro. E. C. has him "way down east." I pray the time may speedily come when there will not be such a lack of good, live, hard-working, wise, spiritual men in this great harvest field. Saints, awake to your duty to the Lord of the harvest! Send in your tithes and offerings, that there may be meat in the house of the Lord, and the bread of Life dispensed to the hungry—those who are hungering for the "true bread which cometh down from heaven." Let it never have to be said of us through the prophet of the Lord, "Ye have robbed the Lord your God;" but let us live to receive the blessing, and not the curse, that the devourer may be rebuked, and our fields bring forth plentifully through our faithfulness in observing the temporal as well as the spiritual law, which is perfect. In doing this, brethren and sisters, we shall be pushing forward this glorious work; and the quicker bring to a completion the work to be done before He comes whose right it is to reign. Praying for greater success to our grand "Herald of truth," and a speedy triumph of this glorious cause,

I remain yours in Christ.

H. BULLARD.

FORD, Iowa, Jan. 13th.

Bro. Blair:—The work is moving along in this district, slowly but surely. I left the Sheridan branch and went to Rhodes; found the Saints feeling well and striving to live right. Bro. W. C. Nirk, district president, went with me to the Valley branch, and Bro. Nirk spoke to the Saints, comforting them, and admonishing them to faithfulness. We administered to Bro. S. Longbottom. On the 9th we proceeded to Bro. G. M. Jamison's with whom we soon made arrangements for night meeting, at the Robert's Schoolhouse. Bro. Nirk leaving I and Bro. Jamison in charge, he went to Percy, ten miles away, to fill appointments there. Notwithstanding the most severe snow storm, we have had good and seemingly interested congregations. The Lord is good to us, and we feel to labor while the day lasts.

GEORGE SHIMEL.

XENIA, Ill., Jan. 16th.

Dear Herald:—We are still alive and trying to do something for the Master. Am sorry that I can not report as encouragingly as many of the brethren in other parts of the field. Think perhaps we are holding our own, but can not say that we are gaining much. The field is too large for the number of laborers. As my experience in the missionary work increases, the more settled are my convictions that a small territory and it well worked is much better for the cause both spiritually and temporally. But, as the field is so large and only a few to work it, I see no chance for a change in this until the Lord shall see fit to raise up more laborers for the work. May that time soon come!

Bro. I. A. Morris and I have just closed a series of meetings at McVey, in Macoupin county. The weather was very bad the first week, preventing many from attending, but as the weather grew better our congregations seemed to increase both in size and interest. Think there were some few there who are really interested in the gospel and will be likely to obey it if the work can be kept up; but to go and spend a week or two once or twice a year will not be likely to bring them in very fast. Bro. B. A. Morris and wife are alone in the work there and are very anxious for their neighbors to hear the gospel. May the Lord bless them in their efforts!

I feel greatly encouraged from the favorable reports coming in from different parts of the field. Surely God is at the helm. The glorious work is moving. The slothful servant—the sluggard—will surely be left except he reforms. "Oh for a faith that will not shrink."

Am well pleased with Autumn Leaves. May it live long.

May the Lord direct and bless his servants; is the prayer of ISAAC M. SMITH.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 17th.

Bro. Blair:—I enclose a clipping which shows how in every direction the Saints are being respected and are finding "grace and favor." I have written a short article correcting some errors. Have preached in Rhodes about ten times, at Grinnell seven times. Got a Baptist preacher named Brand "on his ear"—when Brand meets Brand. Preached at Sheridan in spite of snow blockades seven times, and at Newton delivered twelve lectures. I go on Saturday to Van Meter.

E. C. BRAND.

WEST SURREY, Maine, Jan. 5th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been a constant reader of the Herald for a year. From it I derive much benefit and encouragement. I wish I could have it said of me as we heard from Mrs. Shoults, "That is the way to live; let others see our good works and be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven." It seems as if I was born to believe the gospel, while others say they try so hard to see it as I do.

The gospel seed was first planted in this place by Elder W. G. Pert, and was watered by Brn. F. M. Sheehy and U. W. Greene. We are eight in number, and are trying to live faithful. As a teacher, I have tried to observe section 17:11, Doctrine and Covenants, and in this way I have tried to bind the people's hearts together in love. When we have been faithful, we have had some of the gifts with us to witness that the work is of the Lord. I wish all the officers in the church observed section 17, I think we then would see more of the glory of the Lord manifested in the church; for if the officers are not faithful, it is not likely the members will be.

Bro. Briggs met with us on the first of December, and we listened to a number of able discourses from that worthy brother. Quite a number in the place are interested, and I think some of them will unite with the church in the near future. I feel to bear my testimony to the truth of the gospel. Saints, be faithful; for we are engaged in a great and glorious work.

McFALL, Mo., Jan. 11th.

Bro. Blair:—I have been to Allendale, Worth county, Missouri, stayed three weeks, preached most every day or night while there, and was blessed with the Spirit greatly. They need some one to labor with them three months, for there are friends there who are convinced that we preach the gospel in power, as it should be. The Saints at Allendale are a kind hearted people and full of good work. They need spiritual food and encouragement. The Saints at Stanberry want us to come and preach at that place; and if the Lord will we expect to go at an early day. We shall be able to organize a branch here soon.

J. W. JOHNSON.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa, Jan. 17th.

Bro. Blair: I am still working for the Master in various ways, and feel blessed of God in my labors. The following significant language of Daniel March has oftengaged my mind:—"You may seek after riches, and have success in your search. You may aspire to lead in the giddy whirl of fashion and frivolity, and receive for your reward the flattery which you love. You may study language and science and literature, and master them all. You may climb to the high places of power, and look down with proud superiority upon your fellow men. And all such success may give you self-reliance, courage, increase of power; but nothing can give you such greatness of soul, such a true and exalted estimate of the dignity of your own work, of the value of your own being, as to feel that you are a co-laborer with the infinite God in filling the world with good. You bear a commission from the Most High; he looks to you for work that no one else can do. * * * Whoever follows Christ shares with him in the divine work of doing good."

While humble the work may seem, yet there accompanies it always, in every place the consciousness of God's presence in the work you do; that there is attaching to it his authority! When I think of it, often do I wonder why he called one so weak as I to do a work for him. Still, I have the assurance he has called me. My mother, who now sleeps in Jesus, once told me of the appearance of an angel in glory, to her, before I was born, and spoke to her of me. When I was a few months old an angel appeared to my father in a room filled with resplendent glory and spake to him of my work for God. It was repeated in 1875. And four years before that, the Savior appeared to the writer in night vision, telling me of my call to the ministry; and the very words he spake to me were uttered in prophecy during my first ordination prayer, nine months after the vision. All these years has the Lord stood by me in power. I have recognized his presence while administering to the sick—and in remarkable power—in the setting of dislocated joints; the righting of stiffened joints; healing of consumption; removing of bronchial goitre; restoring sight from partial blindness; rebuking fevers; removing gravel; restoring hearing, and in many other cases. These things I have never written of before. These, with peculiar revelations of his will that have been in perfect accord with the records, have been a stay and strength to me through the many trials I have had. All through them I have known one thing—God knows my heart, my desires, my efforts; and I leave them all with him. The continued prosperity of his work rejoices my heart.

I am attending to my weekly ministerial duties in connection with others. Our Sabbath School is large—the largest ever had in this town, so friends say. Good interest, and good attendance at all the services. We have an enrollment of eighty-six names. Our attendance ranges from fifty to sixty-five. The writer received some substantial tokens of regard, in useful presents, from a number of merchants for Christmas. One merchant—a member of no church—sending a very complimentary letter of appreciation of our work, containing a few dollars. For these we felt grateful. In December the writer collected money from the merchants with which to treat the town children. We went to the public schools, obtained names of all children between five and fourteen years of age, and on the evening of the 23d ult., one hundred and forty children were made happy with a treat of candies, nuts, oranges, apples and popcorn, each receiving alike. We had also, in connection, an entertainment which netted the school $26.40. We were pleased to do them good. And every body was pleased as well.

We feel encouraged in the good cause, and are assured that every effort put forth for good receives the divine approval. We are here to do good at all times, and to seek opportunities, so that the Spirit may cheer, enlighten and uphold by its blessed presence all who seek God's will to do. We need his help every day; every hour; and as we live for it we get it.

Our prayers are for Zion's welfare.

STANBERRY, MO., JAN. 11th.

Dear Herald:—I rejoice in this glorious gospel of Jesus our Lord; and though we are as it were alone here, we have God's Holy Spirit to comfort. We contemplate holding meetings here in the near future. Bro. J. W. Johnson, of McFall, was here doing some work for the Master, administering to the sick, for we have all been down with the measles. One of our brothers died, yet we do not mourn as those without hope. We know he has gone where pain will be no more, and if we live faithful we will meet him in the sweet by and by. What is our loss is his gain.

JOSEPH CURTIS.

BIG SPRINGS, W. Va., Jan. 9th.

Bro. Joseph:—I left home on the 28th of November for West Virginia. I began meetings at Oak Grove, some four miles from Cornwallis, a station on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, on the 30th; delivered nine discourses to a people who seemed to appreciate what was said. I never was treated better anywhere. The door was opened through the efforts of Bro. Thomas Smith, of Sinnott's Mills. We were requested to return, which we anticipate doing if favored with health. We then came to Sinnott's Mills, where that part of the world was turned upside down last fall by the introduction of the gospel, at which time I baptized four of the most influential members of Disciple church in that place, Bro. Thomas Smith and wife, and Bro. Jonathan Hoffman and wife. Bro. Smith had been a licensed preacher in the Methodist church, before he joined the Disciples, Bro. Hoffman was the only ordained elder they had in their society in that place. The result was, they closed their "synagogue" against me; but a school-house was opened near by, and I continued to dispense the word with liberty, until I got them pretty well warned. By the time I returned there in December, the enemy had sowed tares, and we were closed out of the school-house, after speaking twice on Sunday, the 11th, thus making two houses closed against me on Indian Creek. I then rested a day or two and moved on to this place, which is an entirely new field. Sr. Mary A. Leeson lives here; she obeyed the gospel some five years ago when I was laboring in Doddridge county, this state. She was on a visit there at that time. I commenced preaching the next evening after my arrival, and have delivered seventeen discourses; the result is a wonderful uproar among the people, and another house closed against me. Some have threatened to shoot me, others spoke of stoning, others of egging me, and to crown all, on the morning of the 5th inst., the following remarkable (?) notice was found posted on the bee-house, in plain view of the front door of the house where I was staying.

"Lodge No 23 Box—Smithville W. Va 1-3-88 Mr Deevore We under Stand that you have been Preaching Up Mormonism & that Joseph Smith was a Profit and you have been condemned at this our las SeSSion Now we will give you un-til Friday night to leave this Country if not you may expect to be visited by uS in perSon & know the effects of Sec—132

Respectfully SeCretary of United Brother Hood of Red Men."

The above is a verbatim copy—spelling, punctuation, etc. Friday night came, and I did not leave the country—am here yet—and have not yet been molested. While sleeping soundly on the Friday night referred to in the notice I dreamed of having a pleasant interview with you on Daniel 2:44. You encouraged me very much. On waking I was under the influence of the Spirit which has bade me to be humble, and the Lord would lead me by my hand and give the answer to my prayers. On the 30th ult., I took a severe cold which has compelled me to stop speaking; but I am recovering slowly. A number of doors are open, and I am impatient to be at work, but I must move as my health permits. I have written Bro. Beatty to come and aid me. One has given her name for baptism; others are seemingly near. I wish them to understand well what they are doing before they demand baptism of me. I think the Herald is growing better all the time.

Brethren, continue to raise your voices against tobacco. Brethren Griffiths and McDowell, let us hear from you again on that subject. This section exceeds any I ever was in for using snuff. If the Saints all over the world would stop the use of tobacco in any form, and take the amount they spend in one year and respond to the "Christmas Call" of Bro. Luff to aid in building one of Zion's temples, it would be a step in the right direction; God would bless the sacrifice, the heavy burdens of some would be lightened and all would have occasion to rejoice.

There once lived a class of men who had more zeal than knowledge; and to-day I believe their is a class who profess to be Saints, (I do not mean all), who have more knowledge than they have zeal. Let such read James 1:25, and then act. This morning there was a bunch of withes and a notice at the door, threatening me therewith if I did not leave the country.

May the Lord speed the right.

L. R. DEVORE.

England, Dec. 28th.

Dear Herald:—I have learned a good deal from your pages, and hope to profit thereby. It is only eight months since I united with the church, and from the first time that I heard the gospel by the Lord's humble servants I was convinced of its truthfulness. Before becoming a member I attended the Congregational church, but never found that peace which the gospel brings. Being young, I have many things to learn, and hope, if faithful, to be a sower of the good seed in the Lord's good time; and I have resolved, from advice given by a worthy servant of God, Bro. Dewsnup, to study and learn all I can that I may be prepared to give an answer for the hope that is within me, when asked for. During my short experience in the work, I have had a few grand testimonies which have confirmed me in the faith, which the outside world can not rob me of. I am the only one of my family in the church, and wish many times that they could see the gospel in its true light. I have presented it to them, and leave it with God that they may yet be brought into the fold, which is my heart's desire.

I ask the faith and prayers of every dear Saint, and have a desire to continue in the good work.

G. H. ARBER.

UNION, Dak., Jan. 2d.

Brn. Joseph and William:—I feel it is my duty to give my testimony to the world, that God's name may be glorified, and that all men may come to see the goodness of God, that he is indeed the unchangeable God in whom there is no variableness nor shadow of turning, but a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. I do not want to boast, but with the help of God I shall do better in the future than in the past. I feel my inability in writing in English. In the month of November our boy got seriously sick. We thought he was going to die. We prayed to God to heal him. Whenever we prayed, he seemed to be relieved; but he soon turned worse. He could neither walk nor stand. One Sunday morning, in our family prayer, it came to me that I should fast, which I accordingly did. The night following he was worse. He turned cold. That was the critical moment. It was life or death. But thanks be to God, the fever left him at that moment. All this time we used no medicine. A year ago last April, the same boy was very sick with diphtheria—was in danger of being suffocated. We removed all medicine, prayed to God to heal him, and in about a half an hour after prayer the boy was up to play.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

GALIEN, Mich., Jan. 13th.

Bro. Cochran:—At a recent meeting in Cass county, after a lecture on the distinction between the Reorganization and the Utah Church to about three hundred hearers, I sold six copies of the Voice of Warning, faster than I could make the change. I believe I could just as easily have sold one hundred copies. The severest storm of the season is upon us, and you know what a snow here is. I have just been examining the reasons of D. M. Canright for renouncing Seventh-day Adventism, published at length in The Michigan Christian Advocate, an M. E. periodical published at Detroit, for July and October, 1887. A review of them may be necessary and do good, for he gives the "Mormons" a stroke occasionally, and claims to know whereof he affirms. Inquiry after the truth is widening in adjacent vicinities.

SPRINGFIELD, Neb., Jan. 10th.

Dear Herald:—Some of your readers, it appears, do not like to see in your columns much on Utah affairs; but if they had ever been of the deceived ones, and had left their son, daughter, grandchildren, brother, sister, nephews, nieces, kind neighbors and friends of your youth, some of them still in darkness, they would be glad as I am to see plenty about Utah in the Herald.

PASTORAL.

Dear Saints:—With a happy heart in the great "latter day work," I again enter upon another new year, and am admonished that the demand is so very great everywhere for the word of life, that we will not be blameless if we do not do our utmost in supplying the necessary labor, and avoid all unnecessary work.

Time and treasures are too precious to be wasted upon barren fields or unfaithful servants; and souls of men are too wonderfully grand to be sacrificed by carelessness or unfaithfulness on our part. "For upon you rests much responsibility;" and, "There is a great work to be done by mine elders." This means great care for the watchmen upon the walls of Zion, lest the enemy take the city unawares, and it suffers loss.

Some strange things are near at hand, and if the church is prepared for them it will be benefitted. Every vantage ground should be taken by us in the battle.

Our enemy never shows any quarters; neither should we. Compromise is out of the question, and he knew it right well when he cried out, "Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?"

I am holding meetings every evening, and three on Sunday, in this place and vicinity. Bro. Sheehy, at Lisbon Falls, is having full and appreciative houses, and Bro. Greene is at Jonesborough and at what is called The Bay. He is an able, promising young man, loved by all who know him as a defender of the "one faith;" and he has the armor on.

The people are starving for the word of life. Little essays on the lives of ancient men of God, made by a hireling clergy, are far inferior to the orations on the living issues of the day by politicians and philanthropists of the land; and already sectarian churchmen are saying, "Surely, our fathers have inherited lies, vanity and things wherein there is no profit."

Nova Scotia is a blessed field of labor, and must have faithful servants sent to their help. Brn. J. C. Burgess, Alfred Wood, John W. Dimmock, John W. Layton and Robert Newcomb are holding the fort there, and are the fruits of Bro. and Sr. Burton's labors (our honored Australian missionaries). They are wanted back again very much; and they think his five years is a long time ere his promised return.

Sister I'a Layton, of Port Greville, is like one of the guardian angels, holding up the banner of Emmanuel's kingdom, Oh, so grandly! I was happy to meet such a spirit in that distant field. She is sister Burton's own sister. The people of the little village where she lives are ever so religious, and though they think she is a perfect Saint they would not let us have either of their commodious churches, or even their old School-house, to hold meetings in. But their "zeal without knowledge" will appear to them later on. I think there are good people there, but they need to know that the "wolves" are not Latter Day Saints, as charged by their hirelings. We shall yet have a good hearing even in Port Greville, like we got at Lakeland, a place where they did not boast of being so religious. The contrast between the two places was so great that I was forcibly reminded of the "Samaritan" that was neighbor unto him that fell among thieves.

Can't Bro. Lake (I have not been able to reach him yet by letter) send two able elders to Novia Scotia? They would find a good harvest field and warm souls to greet them welcome. Novia Scotia is so closely associated with the Canadas that it seemed a natural part of that mission. Do help them if you can, Bro. Lake.

The people in that distant part of the vineyard are naturally inclined to be respectful to all ministers, hence their own clergy have great influence over them until they see indeed that they have been fed on chaff instead of the wheat. Therefore they are inclined to give the Saints a wide berth until we can show them by honorable living and good argument out of the scriptures that God has indeed not changed, and that what was gospel in the blessed days of the Savior is the same good news now. Oh the "Macedonian cry" is on all sides! Let every Saint "call upon the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers."

Please notice, dear Saints in other large missions, that there is so much to be done that it is almost impossible to retrace our steps back to you again. I have promised all to do the best I can to extricate all from entanglements connected with our warfare in the blessed cause of Christ. "There must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." This, then, is no new thing. "The mills of the gods grind slow, but they grind exceeding fine." I believe these are processes by which to develop them "which are approved" of God.

I have never been unmindful of the wants of the churches under my charge, and shall, by the grace of God helping me, deal mercifully with all; and none but the wilful shall appeal to me in vain. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." And "the removing of those * * * that are shaken * * * that those * * * which can not be shaken may remain." is the binding of "the tares in bundles" which requires solicitude, "lest we root up also the wheat with them." Be patient, dear Saints. God has the reins in his own hands; and ere you are found "accusers of the brethren" be sure that at least you have no hardness toward them. If you have, then know that "you have the greater sin" to answer for before God. Be of good cheer, all ye humble Saints; and be not disturbed in mind on the account of evil doers. For "he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons."

CHOOSE YOUR ASSOCIATES.

WE desire wisdom and the Spirit of Christ to aid our thoughts, and to direct our pen, while we set forth not only the importance, but the necessity there is in a wise compliance with the advise of our captian. The importance of making a proper choice of associates with a wise selection of reading matter, especially for the young, is second to nothing save the gospel of Christ?

That a compliance with the conditions of the gospel will enable us to obtain the pearl of great price; (see Matt. 13:46.) or in other words, eternal life in the mansions of glory, none who read and love the truth will deny. Then how inestimable in value and importance is the gospel of Christ, the plan of salvation. This being true, then all that will in its nature and tendency lead to an acceptance of said gospel, is of the utmost importance.

It has been truthfully said: "Show me the society that a man keeps, (his associates), and the books that he reads, and I will describe to you his traits, his character and his profession."

The man who loves the society of the Saints, and who loves to read their "three standard books," and their church papers and periodicals, is almost sure to become a Saint himself, if he is not one already; and this is especially true of the rising generation. [By the word love, as above used we mean a decided choice, a preference.]

Who will deny that a wise selection of associates has a decided influence over man for good, during all the walks of life? In marriage this is especially true, as he is most likely to select a wife from the society with which he is most intimate. We are speaking of general rules. We know that there are exceptions to the general rule here, as well as everywhere else. Then as the apostle admonishes us not to be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," (See 2 Cor. 6:14). Then let us all take heed how we form our associates.

In the book of Doctrine and Covenants, we find this on the marriage question: "We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying outside of the church if it be their determination to do so, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."—D. C. III:1. This, although not claiming to be a revelation, we think is of vast importance on this subject, harmonizing as it does with the teachings of St. Paul, as quoted above.

There are many passages of scripture in the Old Testament relating to marriage; instructing Israel never to marry outside of the seed of Abraham, as such a union would tend to lead them away from the true God, and to lead them into idolatry. Here is one of them: "And when the Lord thy God shall deliver them before thee; thou shalt smite them, the seven nations of Canaan, and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them: Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son. For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other Gods: so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly."—Deut. 7:2-4.

This shows the wisdom of the paragraph that we have quoted from the Doctrine and Covenants, although many of the Latter Day Saints seem to ignore it both in teaching and in practice. Read 1 Kings, 11:1-4, and see if there was not wisdom in the text.

We will now quote some of the passages of Scripture (and may refer to others) that we think has a direct bearing upon our captian, "Choose your associates."

"But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one, no not to eat."—1 Cor. 5:11. Of course it is not necessary for us to prove by the dictionary that to keep company and to associate are synonymous; and if we are not to associate with "a brother" of the above description, we certainly should not with one who makes no pretensions to goodness or godliness. As for eating with such a brother, Paul doubtless had reference to the Lord's supper, and not to the eating with those for whom we work or labor.

Here is a very important injunction: "My son, if sinners entice thee consent thou not."—Prov. 1:10. And here is another: "Would God, that all might heed."

"Enter not into the path of the wicked and go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass by it, turn from it, and pass away."—Prov. 4:44.

O, flee from their path. And this is, O how dangerous and how true:

"For they sleep not, except they have done mischief; and their sleep is taken away, unless they cause some to fall. For they eat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence. But the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. For the way of the wicked is as darkness: they know not at what they stumble."—Prov. ch. 4.

Here is another admonition from the wise man of Israel: "Be not thou envious against evil men, neither desire to be with them. For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief."—Prov. 24:1, 2.

But why multiply either words or proof upon so self-evident a principle as that contained in our captian. All parents who have been at all observing through life, have seen the evils resulting from letting children associate promiscuously with whomsoever they like. Has this not been one of the most prolific sources from whence they have learned to gamble, to curse and swear, to drink, to chew and smoke? Yes, and many other evil habits. O, that every Latter Day Saint, could and did but realize the importance attached to a wise selection of reading matter and of associates for the rising generation. Yes, and for themselves, and thus teach their children by example as well as by precept.

W. R. CALHOON.

THE MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

RETROSPECTIVE AND PROSPECTIVE.

THE year 1887, with its joys and sorrows, hopes and fears, has now taken its place in the ranks of the past. The ever pregnant womb of time has again brought forth her bantling whose future is as yet unknown to mortal ken. Nevertheless it is a future full of hopes for those who have been "bought with a price." Who have rendered obedience to the commands of Him who has paid the "ransom." Principalities, powers, and man-made creeds are in transition. Human hearts, unsupported by gospel power, are shaking with fear in the face of a future dark—alike to politician and priest—fraught with evil forebodings. They have eyes, but can not see. They have ears, but will not hearken. Like the Ephraimites of old, "They will not frame their doings, to turn unto their God. The prophets prophesy falsely. The ministers teach and preach for hire. Their doctrines are according to the traditions of men, causing the people to err. Each is seeking to establish his own righteousness, rejecting the righteousness of God, whom with their lips they honor, but in their ways despise. Their refuge is in lies. Their security is self-deception, craving peace! peace! while their hearts are filled with violence towards their neighbors.

O, how have the people fallen! But God has not willed it thus. Man has disobeyed His righteous laws, framed His doings according to the corruption of his own heart, established his creeds to the liking of a depraved nature, and now seeks to measure the will and word of the Creator by the creeds of the creature, thus bringing upon himself his own chastisement, the inevitable result of presumption and disobedience. Whereas, had he remained obedient to the law of his Maker, how different now would his condition have been. Instead of jealousy and selfishness, there would have been confidence and joy; perfect love would have been paramount, casting out all fear. Yet the lover of the good and the pure need not despair. A kind and loving Father has again sent forth his servants bearing overtures of mercy to all those who faithfully believe and obey His commandments, promising to confirm his words by signs to all who thus receive. But, alas, with few exceptions men reject and despise the proffered kindness, rushing headlong unto destruction. Thus has it always been.

Since the opening of the year 1887, the increase of the church in the Manchester district has been more marked—both numerically and spiritually—than at any other similar period since its organization, leaving us at the close in a better position and upon higher vantage ground than we have ever been before. The district, as a whole, may be represented as in fair condition. There is, and has been disturbing causes in several of the branches; but, with each years experience, the ministry are becoming more competent to deal with such matters as they arise. A wiser application of the law obtains, and consequently a higher degree of spiritual efficiency. We have Sunday Schools established in several of the branches, besides an efficient system of tract distributing in one or more of them.

The Manchester branch has, in addition to such agencies, a "Band of Hope" temperance society. I believe that the great majority of the membership of the district are total abstainers from all kinds of alcoholic drinks, while a still larger number are non-smokers also. I mention this, because to some extent it indicates the progress we are making under the beneficial influences of gospel teaching. The ministry are, with very few exceptions, alive to the importance of our God-given work, and are faithfully co-operating with those in charge, in the effort to uphold the banner of the cross high above the contention of sectarian influences, and the contaminations of the worldly minded. There have been two missionary enterprises established in connection with the before named branch, conducted by district officers; one by Elder Henry Greenwood, the other by Elder Wm. Armstrong, assisted by other officers and members. The work already accomplished is of a very encouraging nature, and will give impetus to other movements of a similar character.

"The Manchester district Latter Day Saints' Burial Society" has been a very successful movement, considering our numbers. It has been established about eight years, during which time there has been paid in claims, etc. about £30, leaving us at the close of 1887 with a balance in hand of near £50, the result of a subscription of one half-penny per week for each member. As a movement in the direction of self-help, this society has proved a successful one.

"Brighamism" is practically defunct in this neighborhood. The only effort that its representatives seem capable of is the one mentioned and condemned by St. Paul in 2d Timothy 3:6. Elder Woodruff had abundant reason, from his own point of view, for the wail sent up by him in reference to their work in this country as mentioned in his epistle of October, 1887. I am not surprised that their position is such as mentioned by him, but I should be much surprised were it not so. In fact, when men fear to defend their position against all comers, it can not be otherwise. That these men are so afraid, must be self-evident to all who know how they permit the past and present challenges of the elders of the Reorganization to pass by unheeded, merely sheltering themselves behind the unmanly subterfuge—"Our church does not permit us to discuss with apostates." "How are the mighty fallen!" they have become mere "boasters," "uttering great swelling words of vanity, they entice in the lusts of the flesh, by lasciviousness, those who are just escaping from them that live in error; promising them liberty, while they themselves are bond-servants of corruption."—2 Peter 2: 18, 19. (Revised Version). Like Israel of old, they can not escape the just retribution of an offended God: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge: I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest of me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children."—Hosea 4:6. Spiritual cowardice, failure, and chaos, must follow in the trail of a system promulgated by duplicity and fraud.

I may here mention a matter that I believe to be important to the work in this country. I allude to the occasional appearance of letters in your pages from brethren on this side of the water, and others who pay us a visit now and again, and then give your readers the benefit of their opinions to the disparagement of the country in general, and our present government in particular. I do not endorse the sentiments of such writers, and deprecate such statements when they take the form of political bias. Personally, I do not like to see the church paper used for the propagation of political animus. I love the Church of Christ enough to enable me to sink myself politically, having no desire to see membership of the church wrecked upon the rock of current politics. Let every man exercise his rights of citizenship in that manner which he believes to be best calculated to benefit his country and most likely to enhance the interests of our God-given church, leaving others to do the same, without imputing stupidity or unworthy motives to any one. We want a non-political pulpit, and a non-political press so far as present politics are concerned.

Retrospectively, we have great cause for thankfulness. The past year has been the most successful one that we have heretofore experienced in connection with the Lord's work in the Manchester district, while prospectively we have commenced the year 1888 with higher anticipations of progressive work in behalf of the Master than we have ever had before. Reports from every side are encouraging, and we ask for the prayers of the faithful Saints to enable us to obtain that measure of proficiency in our work that shall receive the approval of our heavenly Father, and the approbation of his servants and people, whether it be as president of the district or as door keeper in the house of the Lord.

Ever praying that our Father's blessing may attend the weak efforts of his servants in the cultivation and adornment of the true Christian character and the establishment of the kingdom upon earth, I remain your humble assistant in the behalf of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

RABINOWITCH AND THE JEWISH MOVEMENT IN SOUTH RUSSIA.

JOSEPH RABINOWITCH is about forty-seven years of age, though, as the result of study and work, he looks a little older. He is five feet eight or nine inches in height, is of fair complexion, and has a ruddy countenance. He has a short grey beard, though the greater part of his hair has fallen from his head. He walks with a stick, being lame on his left foot. In ordinary conversation on Divine things, he spreads his arms and hands like eagles' wings, and then, loudly and rapidly, he pours forth his sentiments in torrents, compelling the attention of his listeners. Every muscle of his face and every member of his body seems to aid him in expressing his meaning. His eye is as full of fire as his voice is of energy, especially when either the Bible, or the love of Jesus is the topic. He has a strong will, a sanguine temperament, a simple faith, a gentle spirit, and a kind and tender heart.

Rabinowitch is a thorough Jew of the Eastern type: and though perhaps not a model leader for German or English Jews, he seems admirably qualified for a leader of Jews cast in his own mould. He has been steeped in Rabbism; and his thought and form of expression will long run in Talmudical and Cabalistic lines. For instance, the Lord Jesus Christ is designated "Son of Man," the word man is Adm—Adam, and is composed of three letters—Aleph, Daleth, and Mem. The three Hebrew letters form the initials of Abraham, David, and Moses. From Abraham, kings were to come: from David, was to come the King Messiah, who was to be the prophet like unto Moses. In dealing with this passage, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One," the word One is achd—echad, and the three letters, form the initials of the words, Truth, Life, Way; thus we have the One God, the truth, the life, and the way; and Jesus says: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

On the same Cabalistic principle, the first three letters of the Hebrew Bible teach the doctrine of the Trinity, Beth, Resh, and Aleph, being the initial letters of the words Son, Spirit, and Father. We, however, showed our friend that, ingenious and interesting as this system might be, it was rather uncertain and dangerous, for the same letters might be taken as initials of other words directly contradicting the points supposed to have been proved.

Rabinowitch has a wife, a Jewess, still living, and they have three sons and three daughters. He was married about thirty years ago, and his eldest son is now about twenty-nine. This son, once an infidel, is now a believer in Jesus, resides in Odessa, and has an agency in some French company. One daughter is married; but her husband is still a doubter. His six children and wife are all believers. The youngest child, a boy, is about nine years old. A brother of Rabinowitch was baptized by the late Dr. Ewald, about thirty years ago.

Though not a regular solicitor, Rabinowitch says he was licensed by the Russian Government authorities to practice as a lawyer amongst his own people, and now, as a matter of course, all his clients have forsaken him; but if they had not, this Jewish Reform movement would occupy all his time and strength.

His mind was greatly exercised and agitated during and after the last Russo-Turkish war, as to the temporal well-being of his people. How could Jews be settled in Russia or Roumania, when houses could not be held in the name of a Jew. A Lutheran pastor had once called his attention to Psalm 105, and it now came back to his mind with much force, especially verses 23, 24, 25, and 26. "Israel also came into Egypt, and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham. And He increased His people greatly; and made them stronger than their enemies. He turned their heart to hate His people, to deal subtilly with his servants. He sent Moses, His servant, and Aaron whom He had chosen." He then read verse 42, "He remembered His holy promise, and Abraham, His servant."

Rabinowitch reflected, surely this is a parallel time of suffering and of promised deliverance. As yet, he thought of nothing beyond relief from distress, and promoting the people's temporal welfare. The sad and desperate condition of his people led him to entertain the question of agricultural colonies, which, if successful, would partially relieve the suffering. He first conceived the idea of forming an agricultural colony in Bessarabia; but the Jews themselves would not encourage this. Those who were usurers and public-house keepers preferred to remain as they were, and the better class of Jews were hindered; so this scheme fell through.

He now (1882) resolved to go to Palestine. Arrived in Jerusalem, he gazed on the holy city and the temple site, deeply moved by the ruin and desolation all around; even the devout Jew, weeping and praying at the wailing place, could be frightened away by an Arab woman.

He was now led to meditate upon 2 Chron. 36: 14-16. "Moreover all the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed very much after all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of the Lord which He had hallowed in Jerusalem. And the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by His messengers, rising up betimes, and sending, because He had compassion on His people, and on His dwelling place. But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised His words, and misused His prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against His people, till there was no remedy."

This passage, he remembered, was in the last chapter of the last book of the Hebrew Bible, and the words "no remedy" impressed his mind with overwhelming force. "No remedy," even in the study of the Talmud, though some considered otherwise. He even thought of the New Testament and its teachings, and received impressions, as by a light from heaven, that probably all the sufferings of the Jews, and the desolation of the land of Palestine, were to be traced to the people's continued rejection of Christ; and that all the hopes of the nation probably centered in Jesus the crucified one. He returned home with his mind full of this new light. His wife at first opposed his views because she did not understand them; but his children soon accepted them. He now began to regard the teachings of the New Testament as Divinely inspired as were those of the Old, and the Lord Jesus Christ as the true Son of God, the Way, the Truth, and the Life. To know the Son, he says, is to know the Father, and for this reason his special delight is in the Gospel of St. John. He says the Jews think they can understand the Son through the Father; but Jesus says: "No man cometh to the Father but by Me;" "He that hath seen Me, hath seen the Father."

In answer to the question, "When did you definitely trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation?" he replied, "A year ago last Rosh Hashana (Jewish New Year), that is, about two years ago."

On his return from Palestine, he began to converse with the Jews about Mr. Oliphant's scheme of colonisation; but these, he said, would not lead them back to Palestine. The Jews gathered round him to talk about the Holy Land; but, at first, he did not speak to them of Christ, the Messiah.

Many of the Jews thought that Rabinowitch would himself form a colony, and lead them back to Palestine. Soon after this, Rabinowitch began to tell his brethren that he thought the only one who could lead them back to their land would be the Messiah, and to set them looking in the right direction for their Messiah, he told them a little story by way of illustration. A number of Jews travelling by a four-wheeled conveyance in a little town in Poland, lost one wheel, but still pursued their journey. They overtook another carriage driving on in front, and asked if they had seen a lost wheel on the road. The driver replied, "You foolish man, you must go back, and not forward, to find your lost wheel." The four wheels were Abraham, Moses, David, and the Messiah. The fourth wheel, the Messiah, had been lost: the Jews must go back to find it. Finding this, Israel's four-wheeled chariot would run with safety. Some of the Jewish prayers for the New Year Rabinowitch regards as simply a protest against Christianity. The Jews, he says, find it difficult to think of the Messiah as a servant, and they don't wish to believe in the preaching of John. They do not regard his voice as a warning trumpet. They regard as good Jews those who properly eat Sabbath meals; and all as Christians who eat pork.

When Rabinowitch began to think that he ought to be an avowed and open believer in Christ, he was much perplexed with the number of sects amongst Christians, and hesitated to join any of them. He says, as the Jordan must be crossed to reach Canaan, so Jesus is the way to spiritual possession and rest. As to the Lord's Supper, Rabinowitch says that the members of the New Covenant do not celebrate this, except as a Passover Supper. They do not yet see their way to celebrate it at other times; but this they hope to do when they have been baptized. He says the Lord Jesus Christ did not command His disciples to remember his resurrection, but to remember Him.

Neither he nor his followers at present see the necessity of keeping Sunday as the Sabbath, but continue the observance of the Jewish Sabbath. He thinks, however, it is very likely that at some future time they may observe Sunday as the Sabbath.

Circumcision is still observed; but is not at all considered as necessary to salvation.

As to his preaching, he proclaims the love of God in Christ, but states that repentance must also be preached. He seems to have much faith in sacraments, which may be owing to his somewhat close contact with Lutheranism.

The movement of which Rabinowitch is the leader, seems as far as man can judge, a real work of the Spirit of God, and should not be interfered with by any church or society, with the idea of absorbing it, or controlling it. The leader should be encouraged and helped, but his independence should be strictly preserved.

It is in print that a Lutheran pastor has proposed to a committee in London that Rabinowitch should be employed by their society as missionary to the Jews. We rejoice to see that the committee declined, though only on the ground that Rabinowitch was not then baptized. Rabinowitch has, however, since then been baptized in Berlin; but we trust that the society will not alter its decision. He has been baptized, not into the Lutheran Church, nor into the Anglican Church, but simply into the Church of Christ, by an American minister, and any missionary society absorbing Rabinowitch would incur the tremendous responsibility of paralyzing the entire movement.

At present, Rabinowitch is in possession of a large pile of letters received from Jews from all parts of Russia and Roumania, inquiring into the movement, its rules and its doctrines, with a view to joining it, or starting another, and a similar one.

As to his projects, his heart seems much set on a school for boys and girls, and he stated in conversation with me that there were plenty of children ready to come. He would himself be the teacher, and would teach Christ out of the Old Testament and New. He so rejoiced at the prospect of a school, that he exclaimed, "When mine eyes shall see this, I shall live; it will seem that all is done."

His heart is also set upon an agricultural colony. He thinks that for the sum of 4,000 rubles (about £400) a year he could get land that would soon support about one hundred Jewish families. But for the school and the colony he would require the consent of the Government authorities, which he has not yet obtained.

All Christians would do well to pray much for this brother, and render him all needed pecuniary help; but they would do equally well in leaving him absolutely free to carry on his work as the Lord may direct him. The movement is unique and exceptional, and should be allowed to work itself out to the glory of God and the greatest possible blessing to the Jewish people. Rabinowitch possesses a very gentle, humble, loving spirit, and quickly responds, even to tears, to assurances of Christian affection; but he does not desire to identify himself with any sect, but wishes to take his Christianity from the New Testament, and grow out of old habits and doctrines into new ones, as the Holy Spirit may teach him in his continued and prayerful study of the entire word of God.

It would be premature and unwise to pronounce upon the issue of this movement; but the bare possibility that it may develop into natural restoration and blessing, and the return in glory of our Lord, should lead all Christians to watch it with loving sympathy and prayerful solicitude. As to absorbing or controlling the movement, the cry should be, "All hands off."

REV. JOHN WILKINSON.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE'S OPINION OF CHRIST.

THE conversation at St. Helena very frequently turned upon the subject of religion. One day Napoleon was speaking of the divinity of Christ, General Bertrand said: "I can not believe that the Supreme Being ever exhibited himself to men under a human form, with a body, a face, mouth, and eyes. Let Jesus be whatever you please—the highest intelligence, the purest heart, the most profound legislator, and, in all respects, the most singular being who ever existed. I grant it. Still he was simply a man, who taught his disciples, and deluded credulous people, as did Orpheus, Confucius, Brahma. Jesus caused himself to be adored, because his predecessors Isis and Osiris, Jupiter and Juno, had proudly made themselves objects of worship. The ascendancy of Jesus over his time, was like the ascendancy of the gods and the heroes of fable. If Jesus has impassioned and attached to his chariot the multitude—if he has revolutionized the world—I see in that only the power of genius, and the action of a commanding spirit, which vanquishes the world, as so many conquerors have done—Alexander, Caesar, you, Sire, and Mohammed with the sword."

Napoleon replied: "I know men, and I tell you that Jesus Christ is not a man. Superficial minds see a resemblance between Christ and the founders of empires and the gods of other religions. That resemblance does not exist. There is between Christianity and whatever other religion the distance of infinity. We can say to the authors of every other religion, 'You are neither gods nor the agents of the Deity. You are but missionaries of falsehood, moulded from the same clay with the rest of mortals. You are made with all the passions and vices inseparable from them. Your temples and your priests proclaim your origin. Such will be the judgment, the cry of conscience, of whoever examines the gods and the temples of paganism. Paganism was never accepted, as truth, by the wise men of Greece; neither by Socrates, Pythagoras, Plato, Anaxagoras, or Pericles. On the other side, the loftiest intellects, since the advent of Christianity, have had faith, a living faith, a practical faith, in the mysteries and the doctrines of the gospel; not only Bossuet and Fenelon, who were preachers, but Descartes and Newton, Leibnitz and Pascale, Corneille and Racine, Charlemagne and Louis XIV. Paganism is the work of man. One can here read but our imbecility. What do these gods, so boastful, know more than other mortals? these legislators Greek or Roman, this Numa, this Lycurgus, these priests of India or of Memphis, this Confucius, this Mohammed? Absolutely nothing. They have made a perfect chaos of morals. There is not one among them all who has said any thing new in reference to our future destiny, to the soul, to the essence of God, to the creation. Enter the sanctuaries of paganism, you there find perfect chaos, a thousand contradictions, war between the gods, the immobility of sculpture, the division and the rending of unity, the parceling out of the divine attributes mutilated or denied in their essence, the sophisms of ignorance and presumption, polluted fetes, impurity and abomination adored, all sorts of corruption festering in the thick shades, with the rotten wood, the idol, and his priest. Does this honor God, or does it dishonor him? Are these religions and these gods to be compared with Christianity? As for me, I say No. I summon entire Olympus to my tribunal. I judge the gods, but am far from prostrating myself before their vain images. The gods, the legislators of India and of China, of Rome and of Athens, have nothing which can overawe me. Not that I am unjust to them! No; I appreciate them, because I know their value. Undeniably princes, whose existence is fixed in the memory as an image of order and of power, as the ideal of force and beauty, such princes were no ordinary men. I see in Lycurgus, Numa, and Mohammed only legislators, who, having the first rank in the state, have sought the best solution of the social problem; but I see nothing there which reveals divinity. They themselves have never raised their pretensions so high. As for me, I recognize the gods and these great men as beings like myself. They have performed a lofty part in their times, as I have done. Nothing announces them divine. On the contrary, there are numerous resemblances between them and myself; foibles and errors which ally them to me and to humanity. It is not so with Christ; every thing in him astonishes me. His Spirit overawes me, and his will confounds me. Between him and whoever else in the world there is no possible term of comparison. He is truly a being by himself. His ideas and his sentiments, the truths which he announces, his manner of convincing, are not explained either by human organization or by the nature of things. His birth, and the history of his life; the profundity of his doctrine, which grapples the mightiest difficulties, and which is of those difficulties the most admirable solution; his gospel, his apparition, his empire, his march across the ages and the realms—everything is, for me, a prodigy, a mystery insoluble, which plunges me into a reverie from which I can not escape—a mystery which is there before my eyes—a mystery which I can neither deny or explain. Here I see nothing human. The nearer I approach, the more carefully I examine, everything is above me—everything remains grand, of a grandeur which overpowers. His religion is a revelation from an intelligence, which certainly is not that of man. There is there a profound originality, which has created a series of words and maxims before unknown. Jesus borrowed nothing from our science. One can absolutely find nowhere, but in him alone, the imitation or the example of his life. He is not a philosopher, since he advances by miracles, and from the commencement his disciples worshiped him. He persuaded them far more by an appeal to the heart than by any display of method and of logic. Neither did the impose upon them any preliminary studies, or any knowledge of letters. All his religion consists in believing. In fact, the science and philosophy avail nothing for salvation; and Jesus came into the world to reveal the mysteries of heaven and the laws of the spirit. Also, he has nothing to do but with the soul, and to that alone he brings his gospel. The soul is sufficient for him, as he is sufficient for the soul. Before him the soul was nothing. Matter and time were the masters of the world. At his voice everything returns to order. Science and philosophy become secondary. The soul has reconquered its sovereignty. All the scholastic scaffolding falls, as an edifice ruined, before one single word—Faith. What a master, and what a word, which can effect such a revolution! With what authority does he teach men to pray! He imposes his belief. And no one, thus far, has been able to contradict him; first, because the gospel contains the purest morality, and also because the doctrine which it contains of obscurity, is only the proclamation and the truth of that which exists where no eye can see, and no reason can penetrate. Who is the insensate who will say No to the intrepid voyager who recounts the marvels of the icy peaks which he alone has had the boldness to visit? Christ is that bold voyager. One can doubtless remain incredulous. But no one can venture to say, It is not so. Moreover, consult the philosophers upon those mysterious questions which relate to the essence of man, and the essence of religion. What is their response? Where is the man of good sense who has ever learned anything from the system of metaphysics, ancient or modern, which is not truly a vain and pompous ideology, without any connection with our domestic life, with our passions? Unquestionably, with skill in thinking, one can seize the key of the philosophy of Socrates and Plato. But to do this, it is necessary to be a metaphysician; and moreover, with years of study, one must possess special aptitude. But good sense alone, the heart, an honest spirit, are sufficient to comprehend Christianity. The Christian religion is neither ideology nor metaphysics, but a practical rule, which directs the actions of man, corrects him, counsels him, and assists him in all his conduct. The Bible contains a complete series of facts and of historical men, to explain time and eternity, such as no other religion has to offer. If this is not the true religion, one is very excusable in being deceived; for everything in it is grand and worthy of God. I search in vain in history to find the similar to Jesus Christ, or anything which can approach the gospel. Neither history, nor humanity, nor the ages, nor nature offer me anything with which I am able to compare it or to explain. Here everything is extraordinary. The more I consider the gospel, the more I am assured that there is nothing there which is not beyond the march of events, and above the human mind. Even the impious themselves have never dared to deny the sublimity of the gospel, which inspires them with a sort of compulsory veneration. What happiness that book procures for those who believe it! What marvels those admire there who reflect upon it! All the words there are imbedded and joined one upon another, like the stones of an edifice. The spirit which binds these words together is a divine cement, which now reveals the sense, and again veils it from the mind. Each phrase has a sense complete, which traces the perfection of unity and the profundity of the whole. Book unique, where the mind finds a moral beauty before unknown, and an idea of the Supreme superior even to that which creation suggests. Who, but God, could produce that type, that idea of perfection, equally exclusive and original? Christ, having but a few weak disciples, was condemned to death. He died the object of the wrath of the Jewish priests, and of the contempt of the nation, and abandoned and denied by his own disciples. They are about to take me, and to crucify me, said he, I shall be abandoned of all the world. My chief disciple will deny me at the commencement of my punishment. I shall be left to the wicked. But then, divine justice being satisfied, original sin being expiated by my sufferings, the bond of man to God will be renewed, and my death will be the life of my disciples. Then they will be more strong without me than with me; for they will see me rise again. I shall ascend to the skies; and I shall send to them, from heaven, a Spirit who will instruct them. The spirit of the cross will enable them to understand my gospel. In fine, they will believe it; they will preach it; and they will convert the world. And this strange promise, so aptly called by Paul the "foolishness of the cross," this prediction of one miserably crucified, is literally accomplished. And the mode of accomplishment is perhaps more prodigious than the promise. It is not a day, nor a battle which has decided it. Is it the lifetime of a man? No! It is a war, a long combat of three hundred years, commenced by the apostles and continued by their successors and by succeeding generations of Christians. In this conflict all the kings and all the forces of the earth were arrayed on one side. Upon the other I see no army, but a mysterious energy, individuals scattered here and there, in all parts of the globe, having no other rallying sign than a common faith in the mysteries of the cross.—Harper's Monthly.

Miscellaneous.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS BY THE BISHOP.

Q.—A member having property, and having paid a tithe of the same, leaves it at his death to be divided among his children who are also members of the church. Does the law require that this should be reckoned by the children as a part of their property when they pay their tithes?

A.—Yes. The law of tithes and offerings imposes a duty upon individuals, which duty must, to be complied with rightly, be voluntarily discharged. It does not attach to the property on the principal of a tax, as has been asserted by some, and even taught by two or three church societies. The law is a spiritual one, given, as a means of testing and disciplining God's people, and relates to all individually. The church makes no estimate of property tithes, has no record of it, knows not what special property has or has not been tithed. It only deals with the individual who must make his own estimate and render the account as he is able to open his heart and affections to the occasion, and that "without grudging." He is not only to "render an account in time," [here], but in "eternity." The father does not answer for the son, nor the son for the father, but each for himself; and by so doing they "lay up for themselves treasures in heaven." This is one way in which to become "rich toward God."

It is just as much a duty for a son who receives an income or an estate from his father to render an account of this to the Lord, as it is for the son who receives nothing from his parents to render an account upon that which came to him by the labor of his own hands. Each should regard the means as coming to them under the blessings of their heavenly Father, for it is actually Him who giveth to all life, and breath, and all things that are proper for man.

Q. 2.—Does the text, "make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness," refer to dealing with individuals, or properties?

A.—It is a statement made by the Savior in illustration of the parable just given by Him touching the manner in which the disciples should regard and use the things of this world which came into their hands. Those things we are given here are only ours as stewards of the Creator. We are not to be miserly and keep things for self, nor be riotous and waste them. We should seek to bless God's children in our deal with them however, and that is the reason that the unjust steward was commanded when he went and dealt leniently with his "lord's debtors" who were stewards and children as he was also.

"The mammon of unrighteousness" is the riches of this world. The "friends are not the mammon itself, nor the people of the world as contrary to Christ; otherwise the everlasting habitations would be unrighteous habitations. The friends are those to whom we will render an account of our stewardship in eternity; hence, the plain thought is expressed: make to yourselves friends of God and Christ by the proper use of the riches of this world, that when ye fail, or, are brought to the time when the account must be rendered in eternity, this proper use shall be reckoned to your reward in eternal riches. Hence God called them friends, not "servants."

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John 15:14.

"But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal."—Matt. 6:20.

"And Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me."—Matt. 19:21.

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon who will commit to your trust the true riches?"—Luke 16:10, 11.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

Presidents and clerks of districts who have branch reports in their hands which should come to me for record are hereby asked to kindly forward the same without unnecessary delay. Also I hope to hear from the Mission Secretary of England, and from the branches in Australia. Among the hundreds of letters sent to various parts of the United States are some which have not yet been answered, therefore I ask those written to for corrections that they reply as soon as possible. It will save a rush of business the last of March if many others would be prompt besides those that now are so.

H. A. STEBBINS, Church Recorder.

NOTICES.

Mrs. Charlotte Morrison, of No. 252 South 5th East street, Salt Lake City, Utah, wishes to learn of the whereabouts of her sister Sarah Mc-Tear Brown, who with three children and without her husband, James Brown, emigrated from Glasgow, Scotland, to Salt Lake City in 1863. Any information of her or any of the children will be gratefully received at the above address.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The conference of the Massachusetts district will meet in Dennisport, January 28th, at 2:30 p. m. Brethren Briggs, Sheehy and Bond are expected to be present. The question of a reunion of the district of Maine and ours, will come up for consideration. Excursion tickets will be sold on the Old Colony road at the points mentioned below: To North Harwich and return, good from January 28th to 31st, providing five or more persons leave one depot. Attleboro, $2 52; Fairhaven, $1 95; Bowenville, $2.28; Brockton, $2 22; Plymouth, $2.75. We can not secure any special rates from Boston, but the Boston Saints can procure tickets at Brockton as the train goes through there. The fare from Boston to Brockton is fifty cents each way. Any further information can be obtained by applying to

I was authorized at last district conference, held at Philadelphia, in August last, to appoint our next conference, therefore I appoint it to be held in Brooklyn, commencing February 25th, 1888, at 6:30 p. m. We wish all to attend, who possibly can, and make it an enjoyable time. The Saints of the Brooklyn branch will make ample provisions for all that will come. All the officials of the district who can not attend will please send written reports. Those that would like to come who do not belong to the district are invited. Those coming must take the Elevated road at Brooklyn bridge and get off at Alabama Station, East New York, and then enquire for Henry Avenue or Hinsdale Street. I live opposite Miles' brush factory. Any of the traveling ministry are invited to call and give us all the help they can.

JOSEPH SQUIRE, SEN.,
Pres. of Dist.

HIGH PRIESTS' QUORUM.

The brethren of the quorum will please remember the rule that the quorum desires to hear from every one, either in person or by letter, at the annual meeting. Therefore please write in season and not delay till the last.

H. A. STEBBINS, Quorum Sec'y.

CHURCH SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

All Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, who have not yet sent in their names for the purpose of being placed in quorums are again notified that the order of the General Conference has been that none shall be so enrolled except by their own request. There are vacancies in the five quorums of Elders and the one quorum of Priests that are organized, and if enough are present at the coming General Conference to organize other quorums, it is probable that it will be done. Therefore all who desire to be thus enrolled are hereby requested to send or authorize the sending of their names at an early date.

H. A. STEBBINS, Church Sec'y.

MARRIED.

LEFLER—MUNSON.—At the residence of F. C. Warnky, Independence, Missouri, January 15th, 1888, Mr. John Lefler and Sr. Mary J. Munson. Elder F. C. Warnky officiating.

O Lord do thou in heaven seal
The solemn pledge these two have made,
And may they still be blest to feel
The obligations on them laid!

ROGERS—HOWES.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Providence, Rhode Island, January 12th, 1888, Mr. John F. Rogers to sister Eva Howes. Elder Wm. Bradbury officiating.

"Quench no flame of pure affection,
Place a guard around its urn;
Give to it the right direction,
May its sacred incense burn."

DIED.

STANDEVEN.—At the residence of his son, Joseph H., 1311 Cass street, Omaha, Nebraska, Thomas S. Standeven, favorably known in America and England as a Saint in deed as well as word. Father Standeven was born at Rochdale, England, on February 26th, 1813, and died October 31st, 1887, being then in the 75th year of his earthly life. In the years 1866-7, he filled a mission to his native land, and there, as here, wherever known, he was beloved for his sterling worth. About four years ago, his life-partner passed on before, and added to his great loss by Death having stricken down his noble-hearted and estimable wife, he was made to feel the bitterness of his solitude more keenly by a paralytic stroke that deprived him of the use of those faculties through which, by reading and by conversation, the mind may thrive though the body fades. During these four years of trial he has resided with his son, our honored city Boiler Inspector and his daughter-in-law, Bro. and Sr. Joseph H. Standeven, who carefully nursed him, and provided for his needs with an affection whose spontaneity needed no promptings from without. Nobler than a granite monument, and of more worth than one of parian marble, was the tribute paid him over his coffin by his more than dutiful daughter-in-law, "I never heard him murmur, however he suffered, and can truly say of him, I never saw him commit a serious fault." Thus love in kindness manifest by deed was silently answered by love manifest in enduring patience. The writer, in his boy-hood days, opened the town where our Father in Israel was born, by first unfurling the gospel banner there—the banner carried by the church the deceased loved—and at urgent requests, with tenderest feeling, attempted to preach the word of consolation to the sorrowing ones left but a little while behind. Father Standeven's earthly body rests on the hill-side at Forest Lawn cemetery, near Florence, and his burial site overlooks the valley where so many thousands of modern Israel have rested since expelled from the goody land. Farewell. We shall meet again.

M. H. FORSCUTT.

STANDEVEN.—At Omaha, Nebraska, on July 9th, 1887, Charles, son of brother and sister Joseph H. Standeven. Deceased was born on November 9th, 1886, and was the hope and promise of Love's young dream fulfilled. It however became the duty of their friend, M. H. Forscutt, at the funeral and at the last resting place of the earthly home, to recall the better hope of spiritual love's awakening, and encourage that spirituality of mind and purity of life which alone can make joyful and continuous the reuniting of the several branches of the family tree in the land of unfading light and amid the perpetual bloom of new unfoldments. He is gone, but "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." His body rests in the quiet shades of Forest Lawn.

SHEEHY.—At Lisbon Falls, Maine, December 8th, 1887, Daisy R., daughter of F. M. and Orilla Sheehy, aged 3 years, 2 months and 14 days. Her death was caused by being struck down by a blow from a swing which produced a concussion of the spine. She was an interesting child, of much promise. Funeral sermon by Elder F. A. Potter, of Providence, Rhode Island. The choir of the Baptist church assisted in the song service. The following lines were written by some friend and published in the local paper, the Lisbon Observer.

Lines written on the death of Daisy R., daughter of Elder and Mrs. F. M. Sheehy.

Oh! where is little Daisy gone?
We miss her smiling face,
We miss her blithe and airy form
In its accustomed place.

We miss her merry singing laugh;
Her bright and beaming eye—
Alas! that one so young and fair,
And beautiful, must die.

I seem to see her even now,
As still in death she lay,
I thought that I had never seen
So fair a piece of clay.

Within her father's home on high,
She claims a mansion bright,
A crown of gold, a glorious harp,
And a robe of white.

Yet we hope to meet our Daisy,
When the toils of life are o'er,
When we're called from Earth to Heaven,
She will meet us on the Golden shore.

S. F.

BISHOP.—At No. 550, John Street, Elmira, New York, January 4th, 1888, at 11:45 a. m., Edith Maud, daughter of brother and sister Alma N. Bishop, of diphtheria. She was born in Swansea, South Wales, December 19th, 1881; was blessed by Elder John R. Gibbs of the Lansamlet branch. She was an unusually bright and intelligent child, and after six days' sickness passed calmly away. The doctor remarked that he never saw so peaceful a death from such a dreadful disease. Funeral services by Rev. Dr. McKnight, of the Episcopal Church.

HILL.—At Stanbury, Missouri, January 6th, 1888, of measles, Benjamin Silas, infant son of brother R. F. and sister E. L. Hill, aged 13 days. Funeral services at the house by Elder J. W. Johnson.

"Fare thee well, thou fondly cherished,
Dear, dear spirit, fare thee well.
He who lent thee, hath recalled thee
Back with him and his to dwell."

GEORGE.—At her home, East End, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, November 27th, 1887, of erysipelas, Alma O., beloved wife of Bro. William C. George, aged 30 years, 7 months and 13 days. She was the youngest daughter of Elder Richard Savory, born at Steubenville, Ohio, April 14th, 1857, and was baptized at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, while yet in her childhood. She was kind and winning in her disposition and endeared herself to all the Saints and others acquainted with her. No language can describe the desolation of this once happy home. A devoted husband and five lovely children, the oldest eight years, the youngest three months old, are left to mourn this irreparable loss. No mother was ever more devoted, no wife more watchful of the comfort of her companion than she. The floral offerings were very beautiful; a large pillow with the name "Alma," and a pure white dove, couchant, the tribute of clerks in the office with Bro. George; a large wreath of cut roses and a white dove with outstretched wings, the offering of the messenger boys employed under Bro. George; a large pillow of roses, the gift of the widow of one of Pittsburg's most prominent merchants; and a casket lined with flowers, all testified to the high esteem in which the deceased and husband were held in the community. Services were conducted by Elder W. H. Garrett, assisted by apostle J. H. Lake, and this beloved Saint was laid to rest in the Homewood cemetery, Pittsburg, to await the morn of the first resurrection.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord
From henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit,
That they may rest from their labors;
And their works do follow them."

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN MAINE.

A special conference convened November 26th, 1887, at Green's Landing, at two p. m. Bro. E. C. Briggs was called to the chair, Bro. John Smith to assist, U. W. Greene clerk pro tem. Elders W. G. Pert, Geo. Eaton, S. S. Eaton, John Smith, E. C. Briggs; also Priests U. W. Greene, J. B. Knowlton, Wm. Hawey; and Teacher J. H. Robbins, reported. Branch reports: Green's Landing, Bray's Mountain, Brooksville, (2 baptized). Bishop's Agent reported on hand last report $15.88; received since $12.50; paid out $6.12; balance on hand $22.26. Appeal of Bro. Ames was referred to Bro. Briggs. Committee from Massachusetts and Western Maine on reunion meetings reported the feasibility of such a plan, and recommended the appointing of a committee to whom will be entrusted the power of appointing such meeting, F. M. Sheehy, G. W. Eaton, U. W. Greene to represent the district. Resolved, that we request all officers in this district, who are not, and do not intend, laboring in their respective callings, to surrender their licenses to the church, and that we enforce the above resolution. All officers are requested to labor in the district as circumstances will permit. The district president, clerk, and bishop's agent, Elder E. C. Briggs and the general officers of the church were sustained in righteousness. At seven p. m., preaching by John Smith. Sunday at nine a. m., met for prayer meeting, after which E. C. Briggs addressed the Saints. At two p. m. Bro. John Smith gave an object lesson on the temporal law, which we trust reached the hearts of the Saints assembled. Preaching at seven p. m. by Bro. Briggs, on the "marvelous work and a wonder." Adjourned subject to the call of Bro. F. M. Sheehy, he to act with district president.

SENSITIVENESS.

We have heard people talk about their sensitiveness sometimes as if it was a particularly meritorious quality—something to be proud of, indeed—until we have longed to undeceive them; for by sensitiveness they only meant that they were extremely quick to take offense and uncommonly apt to fancy hidden meanings where none existed.

Such sensitiveness has other names not quite so flattering to its possessors, as touchiness, suspicious temper and even self-conceit. Few people are more uncomfortable in every day life than these sensitive ones; and too often they exhaust the patience and alienate the love of their best friends.

To be explaining or smoothing over is a wearisome task and when we must stop to measure our words and adjust our phrases continually, the constraint becomes irritating as well as tiresome and we feel like that Rhode Island woman who used to say of her son, "I don't know what to make of my Sammy; he is so sensible I don't know what on airth to do with him."

A little good, wholesome self-restraint and homely common sense would greatly improve these "sensible" people, who seem to think the world revolves around them and that everybody is thinking of them, or speaking of them, or intruding on them. When they learn the lesson of their own littleness and find how small a place they occupy in the universe, they will be less self-conscious and much more peaceable and comfortable.—Self,

FEAR? OR MALICE?—WHICH?

WE note the fact for present and future reference, that only the Enquirer, of all our Utah Mormon exchanges, has given the least notice of anything pertaining to President Joseph Smith's recent three weeks visit in Salt Lake City. Not that Bro. Joseph or his friends are in the least offended about it, for such courtesies are not really essential to their present or future progress and happiness; but it is well to display the fact that some of the Utah leaders who claim to have so much of the knowledge of God and so much of the love and light of Christ, and who profess to have such profound reverence for Joseph the Seer, are too wise (?), too holy (?), too angelic and godlike (?) to descend so low as to mention in their multiplied organs, big and little, that Joseph, the eldest son of Joseph Smith the prophet, had come to Salt Lake City, or was tarrying there, or had left there for California. If he had been a commercial "drummer," a stock-breeder, a fish culturist, a stock gambler, a quack doctor, a musical crank or a theatrical dead-beat, these same papers would have curtsied politely, mentioned his advent, tarrying and exit, in labored paragraphs and with studied journalistic amenities. But it happens that he is veritably Joseph, the eldest son of Joseph Smith the prophet, founder and wise master builder of the church up to 1844; and it happens also that he is president of the rapidly increasing Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and is calling the people to build their faith and hope for time and eternity on the doctrines set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Nauvoo edition of Doctrine and Covenants; and it further happens that he teaches that plural marriage, disloyalty, union of church and state, Adam-God, oppressive tithing, and taxation to build costly temples and to support the chief priests in luxury and in evading and resisting the laws of the land are all unwise, harmful and heretical, and should be honestly abandoned at once. He is generally reputed to be a pure hearted gentleman, an active reformer, a model citizen, and a large-brained and large-hearted Christian, by those who know him well. And why should the Utah leaders fear him? They know he would not corrupt the morals of their people. Are they afraid of their craft! Dare they not let their people hear him! Are they afraid to have him discuss in their midst the doctrines of the Saints! Are these leaders the victims of servile fear! We have read of those whose fears, like fancied ghosts, were their un pitying tormentors and "cow'd their better part of man."

If these leaders ignore Joseph out of malice toward him, then they lack the very first and most essential elements of Christian grace, and therefore are utterly unfit to lead any one, no, not even themselves. Joseph differs with these men most radically in respect to what constitutes the religion of Christ—and that is his God-given privilege, and his natural and guaranteed right—but he has never harmed them or theirs by word or deed, and yet they treat him in such ways as indicate both bitter hate and vengeful spite. These men should remember that they are making history which they can not blot out at will, and that it will confront them both here and hereafter. This class of men, from 1860, have done all in their power to prevent their people learning the doctrinal and historical facts touching the Reorganization, and to prevent its ministers from reaching the ears of their people. They will, by and by, find out that in this they have been "cunning" simply, but not wise. Joseph Smith is making his record, and that, too, most publicly, as in the sight of God and angels and men, that it may be known and read of all, leaving its issues with heaven and all fair-minded people.

WE take the following from the Salt Lake Tribune of the 19th inst:

"PRESIDENT SMITH SUNDAY EVENING.

"Rev. Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, son of the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, delivered an eloquent sermon Sunday evening, at the Josephite Chapel, to a full house. He spoke guardedly, but to the point, and his arguments were full of force and power. The speaker cited numerous illustrations of Divine displeasure with polygamy, both in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, and made a strong argument from the fact that section 3 of the Doctrine and Covenants was cut out of the editions used in Utah in 1876. This section is on marriage and began about as follows: 'Because of a certain reproach against this people we declare that a man shall have one wife, and a woman but one husband, except at death, when the survivor may marry again.' Mr. Smith wanted to know why this section has been excised which had been in the book since 1835. Most of the congregation could have told him why, but they didn't respond. The organization of the Mormon Church under monogamic auspices, and in monogamic States, and how the revelations plainly showed that God intended to build up the Church under and in consonance with the laws of the land, were plainly shown. 'He that keepeth the law of God, keepeth the law of the land,' is one of the principles of the Reorganized Church. If the prophet ever practiced polygamy, the speaker never knew it. Mr. Smith closed by reciting how he had successfully preached Mormonism in the very court room where Joseph and Hyrum were arraigned, and had baptized even in Bear Creek. After the services a number of the Utah Polygamous church members, who were present, shook hands with Mr. Smith pleasantly enough. Among these were Messrs. Woolley, Hatch and Olson, of the Legislature; Patriarch John Smith, and Proprietor Hall, of the Valley House. Mr. Smith goes to California this week."

NOTICE TO THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

I HAVE made various predictions, which I had printed in leaflet form and sent forth as purporting to come from a Seventy. These have received a somewhat extensive circulation among the Latter Day Saints. I desire to humbly ask the forgiveness of my brethren and sisters in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for this wrong which I have done. I can only say, in palliation of my offense, that Satan deceived me and actually caused me to suppose I had a mission to circulate these predictions, and I verily thought I was doing the Lord's service in the matter. I now see my folly and wickedness, and wish my confession to be as public and as widely known as my pretended prophecies have been. And I humbly ask the forgiveness of the Lord for this grievous sin of which I have been guilty, and also my brethren and sisters, whom I have attempted to mislead in this way.

Trusting that I shall obtain the desired forgiveness, I remain very humbly, ABINADI PRATT.

—Deseret News, Jan. 20th, 1888.

We commend Mr. Pratt in his humble acknowledgement of wrong-doing in the matter confessed above, and we are led to think it would have been extremely well for Brigham Young and some of his associates to have made similar public confession in their last days or before. Brigham Young professed to "know" that polygamy was ordained of God, claiming that God "revealed" it to him prior to 1844.

when he was in England; and August 29th, 1852, he declared to the Utah people that he knew that polygamy would "sail over and rise triumphantly above all prejudice and priestcraft of the day;" and he said further, "It will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world, as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people." It perhaps is needless to say that only a very small number among enlightened nations profess to even tolerate polygamy and its like, that the vast majority loathe and detest it as altogether evil and vile while hosts of the Utah polygamists are fleeing from the wrath of our nation or are languishing in prison.

Brigham said further to his blinded people, "Your hearts need not beat; you need not think a mob is coming here to tread upon the sacred liberty which the constitution of our country guarantees unto us, for it will not be."—Mill. Star, Supplement, vol. 15, page 31. The very reverse of what Brigham here promised his followers has come to pass in respect to the triumph and popularity of polygamy.

When Brigham led his people into his system of temple building, which has cost not less than $9,000,000 already, he did so by professing to be inspired and directed of God to engage in that work, and also by professing to "know" all about it. To prove that he had not even the ordinary wisdom of men, to say nothing of the wisdom and knowledge of God, both of which he claimed, we present the following from his teachings, October 9th, 1852, and published in Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pages 209-220:

"You may bring the stone from San Pete, which is a beautiful specimen of rock, and erect a temple here with it; then you may take this sandstone that is found in Red Butte Canyon, and build a temple of that; then you step over to the Emigration Canyon, and get this bastard marble, and build another of the same dimensions as that you have built of red sandstone. . . . Then right beside that, another of adobies, mixed with pebbles—take that clay and these pebble stones that are so abundant here, and mix in with them straw, and build another temple of that composition, besides the three which are built of different kinds of rock, and let them stand together—which do you think will stand the longest? Being a chemist in theory, I should say, according to my mind, when the San Pete rock is washed into the Jordan the other buildings will be standing and be in moderate condition. The red sandstone will go next, and the other two still remain; the bastard marble, or limestone, will be in pretty good preservation; and when that is all decomposed and washed into the Jordan, you will find that the temple which is built of mud, or adobies, as some call them, still remains, and in a better condition than at the first day it was built. . . . The monuments, towers and pyramids that were erected in the days of Joseph, and before he was sold into Egypt, they were built of what we call adobies, clay mixed with straw. . . . They have bid defiance to the wear of ages, and they still remain. . . . I give it as my opinion that adobies are the best article to build it [the temple] of."

These teachings, to say nothing of Brigham's Adam-God doctrine, blood-attonement, and his boast that the Saints would return to Missouri before 1870, also that he would remain Governor of Utah as long as he chose, and scores of other things which have proved fallacious, deceptive and misleading, are a very damaging commentary on his boasted wisdom, and especially on his claim to divine inspiration and guidance. If it is proper to publish Mr. Pratt's errors, then it is ten thousand fold more needful to publish those of Brigham Young. "God is no respecter of persons."

THE following from the Chicago Tribune of a late date sets forth so clearly and vigorously the views generally held by anti-polygamists everywhere touching the proposed scheme for state-hood for Utah now introduced before congress, that we deem it best to give it to our readers and also preserve it for the future. The Utah leaders have a great work on hand if they will convince the American people that their present anti-polygamous professions are likely to be enduring. Their past record is sure to be scanned thoroughly and searchingly, and their present professions will be weighed and measured in the light of its general facts. "Uncle Sam" seems both saddened and soured toward the Utah Mormons, and until these conditions are favorably modified, and that for good cause, we may expect he will treat that people with distrust and with severity. As we have often said before, there is but one proper way for the Mormons out of their dilemma and distress, and that is by their returning back heartily to the teachings of the New Testament, Book of Mormon, and Nauvoo edition of Doctrine and Covenants. This only is their remedy.

"THE ADMISSION OF UTAH.

"The November number of the Forum contained an article upon the admission of Utah to the Union by Mr. George Ticknor Curtis, the professional and paid retainer of the Mormons in all their contests with the authorities of the United States. The object of the writer is to show that polygamy can be best suppressed by the Mormons themselves, with Utah erected to Statehood under the provisions of their recently adopted Constitution, which declares polygamy a misdemeanor and provides a penalty which shall be operative without the aid of legislation. In discussing this subject, Mr. Curtis makes these three principal points: (1) The United States has in the past been criminally indifferent to the prevalence of polygamy in Utah. (2) It is at present cruelly and unjustly harsh in its efforts to suppress it. (3) Utah ought to be admitted into the Union on the terms proposed by the Mormons themselves.

"To this article Senator Dawes of Massachusetts makes a vigorous and logical reply in the current number of the Forum. Of the first two points made by Mr. Curtis he makes quick and summary disposition. Their weakness, indeed, is apparent on the surface, for if the United States has long been criminally indifferent to the prevalence of polygamy, does that constitute a good reason why it should remain so? Or, if the courts have been too harsh in applying penalties, is that a good reason why no penalty should be enforced? Even Mr. Curtis does not contend that polygamy is not a crime. To the third point, however, which is the material one after all, Senator Dawes devotes the most of his argument. Mr. Curtis claims that 'the matter has now assumed an entirely new aspect,' meaning the adoption of a Constitution as a condition of Statehood; but Mr. Dawes punctures this at once with a reply that 'this new aspect does not consist in any change in the actual condition of the people in respect to polygamy. It does not consist in an abandonment of the practice, nor even in a disavowal that it is still, as ever, a part of the Mormon religion.' Mr. Curtis affirms: 'The real question is whether it will be possible for the Mormons under this Constitution by any contrivance whatever to restore polygamy or to create any legal or constitutional status of plural marriage.' To which Mr. Dawes replies: 'The real question is not at all whether polygamy is to be restored. It is already there, and the vital question is, Shall it be abandoned, destroyed, removed as an unclean thing?' He carries his argument still further, quotes the Mormon constitutional clause, about which so much has been said, and demonstrates that polygamy could find no greater legal hindrance under the proposed Constitution than under existing law, in defiance of which it has spread through the Territory. He adds:

"If the 95 per cent of all the Mormons in Utah who voted, as is alleged, for this provision, really, in their consciences, and with sober, honest judgment, believe polygamy to be a crime which ought to be punished by fine and imprisonment, they can, without outside help, banish it from Utah in far less time than they can convince the American people that pretense is as safe as sincerity, or that a belief that polygamy is religion will put it down just as soon as a belief that it is a crime.

"Before leaving this branch of his argument Mr. Dawes deals this constitutional provision another trenchant blow. In spite of all the stringency and effectiveness of the Federal law, and with all the machinery in Federal hands, polygamy has flourished in defiance of its penalties. But the moment Utah becomes a State the enforcement of the new Constitution will fall absolutely into the hands of the Mormons. 'A burglar,' Mr. Dawes says, 'might as well ask to be tried by a struck jury of burglars as a band of polygamists to be permitted, by the means here proposed, to erect themselves the tribunals in which, and control the instrumentalities by which, the crime of polygamy is to be punished, if punished at all.'

"Mr. Dawes concludes his paper with one of the strongest of all arguments against the admission—namely: that under the provision of the Mormon constitution, which sets forth that the polygamy clause shall not be changed except with the consent of Congress and the ratification of the President, the admission of Utah will be a surrender of the equality of the States in the Union, which have come in one after the other 'on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.' If such a condition is binding upon Utah she can not make her own State Constitution and Congress can absorb her local government, and if Congress can do this with one State it can with all. From this point of view Mr. Dawes discusses the possibility that after Utah is admitted she may violate the condition, and states the situation in the following vigorous manner.

"Utah amends her Constitution in regard to polygamy in the manner every other State does—by the sovereign act of her people. What then? What is the remedy? There is no process by which the State can be enjoined, restrained, or indicted. Nor can the citizen who persists in plural marriage after the change be in any way punished. He has violated no law of the United States nor of Utah. If Utah, by coming into the Union under this condition shall have made, as Mr. Curtis claims essentially limiting her own sovereignty, it is not the individual who makes it, and he can not be punished because the State fails to keep it. Mr. Curtis admits that the State can not be punished, but he would enforce the penalty not upon the State, which made the covenant, but upon the individual who did not make it. When Utah becomes a State it is a State law against polygamy alone which the citizen violates, if any; and the State alone can punish him; and when the State has repealed that law he no longer violates any law. If the State has covenanted with the United States that it will not repeal the law, and then repeals it, the State alone can be dealt with, for it alone has offended. And if the United States is without power to reach the State, it is without remedy.

"Putting the whole question in a nutshell, if Utah is admitted as a State it must come in on terms of perfect equality with other states. That it would not so come in is demonstrated by the inability of Congress to change the Constitutions of States. The proposed Constitution is a flimsy, transparent trick. Once in the Union, polygamy and every other domestic institution would be relegated to the control of the State forever. To admit Utah with that Constitution would be a monstrous blunder or something worse. She would at once slip from under the jurisdiction of Congress so far as her domestic affairs are concerned. When polygamy is dead it will be time to admit her, if she wants to come in."

DAVID WHITMER DEAD.

FROM the Chicago Tribune of January 24th, 1888, we clip the following:

"DAVID WHITMER PASSING AWAY.

Richmond, Mo., Jan. 23.—David Whitmer, the last one of the three witnesses to the truth of the Book of Mormon, is now in a dying condition at his home in Richmond. Last evening he called the family and friends to his bedside, and bore his testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon and the Bible. He is past eighty-three years of age. Mr. Whitmer is an old citizen of this town, and is known by every one here as a man of the highest honor, having resided here since the year 1838. He is not and never has been a believer in polygamy. He left the Mormon Church in 1838 on account of their departure from the faith as he believes. His mind is still clear. He is in no pain whatever, but is gradually sinking, and death is expected every hour. During the evening he affixed his signature to several papers in the closing up of his earthly affairs. His hand was wonderfully firm.

"David Whitmer, who played an important part in the translation of the Mormon Bible, and who was one of the pillars of the church during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, was born in Pennsylvania, January 5th, 1805. During his early childhood his father moved from Pennsylvania up into Ontario county in New York, and settled on a farm in the vicinity of Watkin's Glen.

"It was during the early part of June, 1829, that David first heard that a young man named Joseph Smith had found an exceedingly valuable golden treasure in the northern part of the county. In company with his brother-in-law, Oliver Cowdery, young Whitmer set out to ascertain the truth or falsity of the story. Smith, who was at that time living with his father on a farm near Manchester, was indisposed at first to exhibit his treasure, but was finally persuaded to do so. The treasure consisted of a number of golden plates about eight inches long, seven inches wide, and of the thickness of ordinary sheet tin. They were bound together in the shape of a book by three gold rings. A large portion of the leaves were so securely bound together that it was impossible to separate them, but upon the loose leaves were engraved hieroglyphics which were unintelligible to any person who had seen them. With the tablets was an immense pair of spectacles set in a silver bow. Smith announced that he had been commanded to translate the characters upon the plates as soon as possible, and stated further that the work must be done in the presence of three witnesses, Smith, his wife, Cowdery, and Whitmer then proceeded to the house of Whitmer's father, where the work of translation was carried out, Smith reading the characters by means of the magic spectacles, Cowdery, Christian Whitmer, a brother of David, and Smith's wife acting as amanuenses.

"The work of translation occupied nearly eight months. Smith carelessly tattled to the neighbors of the secrets which they were working out, and as a consequence the plates were taken from him by the angel of the Lord who in place of them gave him a Urim and Thummin of a different shape which he was to place in his hat and on covering his face with the hat he received straightway a direct revelation. After the completion of the translation David Whitmer became an ardent disciple of the new revelation, and for some time preached throughout the neighborhood on its behalf. His efforts, and those of Cowdery and some others met with such success that a Mormon church was founded April 6th, 1830, in which year the Book of Mormon was first published to the world. In the year following the church and its disciples moved to Kirtland, O., where Brigham Young first joined the church. The original manuscript from which the Book of Mormon was printed has been in the possession of Mr. Whitmer from the time it was written. It is stated that the Mormon Church has of late years made strenuous efforts to induce Mr. Whitmer to part with it, but all offers made by them were steadfastly refused.

"Leaving Kirtland, Whitmer set out as a missionary, preaching the truth as he saw it and exhorting all his hearers to come to Christ. He was very successful in this field, making many converts, and assisted in establishing the settlement in Jackson county, Missouri. When the church had been compelled to flee from Kirtland the members came to Jackson county, but trouble soon arising between them and the Missourians, the Mormons moved to Caldwell county. Whitmer then moved to Richmond, Missouri, where he has since resided."

And in the same journal for January 26th we find these words:

"A telegram received yesterday announced the death at five p.m., at Richmond, Mo., of David Whitmer, 83 years old."

And so "the last of the three witnesses," David Whitmer, has passed into the presence of that God who called him by revelation through Joseph Smith, the translator, in connection with Oliver Cowdery and Martin Harris, to be a "witness" to the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and to the fact that Joseph Smith was a prophet, seer, revelator and translator, called and accepted and approved of God. He from first to last has maintained this testimony unshaken and undismayed, and that, too, under great pressure, temptation and trial. For this, all who are called to be Saints should honor him and hold his memory in veneration.

As to his views in respect to the ministerial labors of Joseph Smith, and as to his own ministerial policy and doings, they are quite separate and somewhat different matters. To us it is painful to think that, almost from his first acquaintance with Joseph Smith, David Whitmer held dissimilar views from him in respect to doctrinal matters and methods of church government, which gradually increased up to 1836-8, when it culminated, first in accusations being laid against him by Isaac Rogers, Artemas Millet, Abel Lamb and Harlow Redfield, before a High Council in Kirtland, May 29th, 1837; and afterwards before the "General Assembly" of the church in Far West, Missouri, February 5th, 1838; and finally in his being disfellowshipped in Far West, April 13th, 1838, after due trial before the Bishop and High Council.

In after times he was persuaded by William E. McLellin (who was expelled from the church by the Bishop's Court at Far West, May 11th, 1838. (See Mill. Star, 16: 151) to attempt to lead the church, was baptized and ordained by him, accepting at the same time the strange ministerial work of William E. McLellin and others just previous at Kirtland, Ohio. But this movement failed to make progress. At different times after this, yielding as we believe to the persistent persuasions of disappointed, officious and meddling men, Mr. Whitmer has displayed his views, opinions, explanations and interpretations relative to the teachings of the sacred books of the church in respect to church doctrine and government, and also as to wherein he thought Joseph Smith erred in judgment, in policy, and in personal conduct.

As to the correctness and wisdom of Mr. Whitmer's opinions on these matters, all must judge for themselves. But out of all this seeming disageement and evil, we have confidence that God will bring great good, for none can say that David Whitmer bore testimony to the divinity of the Book of Mormon and the inspiration of its translator because of personal fear, favor, worldly interest, or those interests and influences arising from intimate church associations. God may have suffered the foregoing conditions to exist for wise and all-glorious ends to the church and the world. If all will carefully study the Book of Mormon with unbiased minds they will readily learn what that book is and is intended for, and there, too, they will learn of the respective and diverse callings of Joseph Smith the Seer and David Whitmer, one of the "three witnesses" to its divinity.

Let all think charitably and speak kindly of David Whitmer. His life-work is ended; and however much we may disagree with his views and opinions and statements relative to church affairs, his steadfast and undeviating testimony touching the Book of Mormon, even up to his dying moments, commands our admiration and our love.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A LETTER from Bro. R. H. Wight dated at Flora Vista, New Mexico, December 29th, informs us that his failing health compelled him to seek a more genial climate than Nebraska, and that he hopes he has found it, for many who came to that region invalids have attained good health in a short time. He found a few believers there, some of whom heard father Gurley over thirty years ago, and others who heard Bro. F. C. Warnky ten years ago. Bro. Wight intends to "lift the warning voice" among the people there and hopes for good results. He further says there are relics of the Aztec race in that immediate region, also that there are large tracts of land there which awaits the hand of enterprise and skill to make it "blossom as the rose." He learns that about twenty miles south of where he is, on the San Juan river, there is a settlement of Brighamites, and that the Southern Methodists have an organization where he resides. He will correspond with any who write to him.

We are compelled for want of room in the HERALD to abridge many of the letters we publish, to barely notice some, and others, for reasons, we consign to the waste basket. All should study brevity, plainness, and directness when writing for the HERALD, either letters or articles. None should attempt to write till they have matured in their minds what to write, and never to write until they have something of value to the church generally to publish. Besides this, they should never ask us to publish petty private grievances, nor anything that reflects upon the personal character of any one, whether member or minister. And further, they should not ask us to answer questions through the HERALD that reflects upon the personal conduct of the ministry or the members, for we usually detect those questions as soon as seen. All questions touching the administration and teaching of the ministry should be first referred to the ministry in the locality where the question arises, thus honoring those to whom honor is due. But all questions on doctrine, history, church government, etc., etc., which are not answered by the ministry at hand will meet with attention at this office when we have time and space to answer. Many questions now on hand will be answered soon.

Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith reached Sydney, New South Wales, last November 29th, went thence at once to Newcastle, and from there went to Hastings, Victoria, Australia, from whence he wrote us last December 23d. The latter place will be his address until further notice. A letter from him will appear in our next issue, it coming too late for the current one.

We have received, but too late for publication in this issue, a lengthy obituary of the late father David Whiter, published in the Richmond (Missouri) Democrat. It will appear in our next.

Bro. L. M. Sollenberger wrote from Moore Dale, Pennsylvania, the 18th inst., that he was seeking to exemplify his faith by his works among those who charged him with being "a disciple of Brigham Young." He says the Dunkard Church in all that region is on the down grade, and he feels sad for them.

Sr. Myers, of Fairbury, Nebraska, renews for the HERALD of late, and says she thinks a faithful, competent minister would get a fair hearing in that place.

President Joseph Smith wrote us from Salt Lake City, the 20th inst., that he would start that afternoon for California. His address for the present will be No. 1801 Polk street, San Francisco.

By letter from Bro. George S. Lincoln, dated the 18th inst., he informs us that the church is prospering there, and that the Saints have great hopes for its future.

Bro. A. H. Parsons requests that Bro. E. L. Kelley meet with them in conference February 25th, at ten a. m., at the Andes' School-house near Elmira, Mitchell county, Kansas.

Bro. E. J. Martindale wrote from Forestville, Michigan, January 21st, expressing confidence in the latter day work and a determination to press forward in the ministry. He exhorts the young ministers to put their trust in God, keep his commands, press forward courageously and humbly, and all will be well.

We hear by way of Bro. F. M. Cooper that the Saints in the vicinity of Lyons, near Burlington, Wisconsin, are having very spiritual meetings and that the gifts abound.

By request of the church secretary, we call the attention of presidents and clerks of districts to the resolution of the General Conference which requires them to make out annual reports of their districts early in each year. There should be given the names of the organized branches in each district, with the total membership in them, and the number of officials with the total gains by baptism, by letter and vote for the year, and the losses by letter, expulsion and death. Those resident in the district, left of disorganized branches, and others not enrolled in branches (providing they are not numbered in branches somewhere else), should be given as a total, together with a statement of the spiritual condition of the district, the labor done during the past year, etc., and signed with name of president and clerk, all should be sent up to Secretary Stebbins at an early date to be prepared for conference and for the published minutes. Do not leave this matter till the last thing, nor wait to send by some delegate to conference, for it takes too much time during the rush of business to copy for publication at that late date. Blanks are for sale at the Herald Office, two for five cents. The ministry who are under General Conference appointment would also do well to make out their reports as much before the session as they can, so that they may be prepared and read early, all of them together, not scattering along through the session.

We thank the enterprising Journal of Leon, Iowa, for its kindly notice of the Herald Office, its editors and its work, in their issue of the 10th instant. The extended and complimentary comments in respect to President Joseph Smith, editor-in-chief of the HERALD, also its flattering statements relative to the Latter Day Saints in this region, are hereby acknowledged and are highly esteemed.

The Fact, another one of Leon's papers, not long since gave this office and its work a very flattering notice, for which it will please accept our thanks, if it can forgive our tardiness. Through press of editorial and other duties we deferred acknowledging the courtesy when due, and when we sought for that issue it was non est. May the Fact remain—and flourish in the land as bright and newsy as ever.

NOT A "BLIZZARD" REGION.

WHILE we read of extremely cold, stormy weather in nearly all places, from Utah, Idaho, Montana and Manitoba on the west and north to Virginia and the Carolinas on the east, and to Texas and Louisiana on the south, the southern part of Iowa and the northern part of Missouri have been notably free from either "blizzard" or very low temperature, and now, as in the past, seem to be outside the great "storm belt" that mark so many regions of the North American Continent. The thermometer, in the region of the Missouri and Iowa line seldom indicates more than twenty degrees below zero, howbeit this year, in January, it ranged for a few days from 18 to 26 below. Snow has fallen pretty abundant, but the "Iowa zephyrs" have swept it into huge heaps in the lanes, hollows, orchards and tracts of timber till the sleighing has been of a somewhat uncertain character and doubtful duration wherever there were smooth and unobstructed surfaces. A matter of first importance during the season of cold storms is plenty of fuel—coal and wood—and of this there is great abundance in the region of the Iowa and Missouri line. Besides this the climate is such that we seldom hear of any considerable loss or suffering among the numerous herds of stock.

In view of these things the dwellers in all this region have many things to be thankful for and to offset its disadvantages. When we take into consideration the prominent natural provisions abounding here in regard to healthfulness of climate, fertility of soil, abundance of fuel, plentifulness of stone, excellence of its well water, its adaptability to stock, fruit and poultry raising, we have very much to encourage and satisfy us in regard to temporal concerns.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Can a person who marries another who has been divorced by the laws of the land for other reasons than adultery, retain their membership in the church?

Ans.—Yes; provided such divorce was obtained when they were not members of the Church of Christ, and were therefore not under its laws. But if a person has left his or her companion before entering the church, and did so for the sake of adultery, he or she being the offender, such person "shall be cast out," if such companion whom he or she put away is still living.—Doc. Cov. 42: 20.

Q.—Can the crime of abortion be forgiven?

A.—Under some conditions, Yes. But we may surmise conditions under which the church would have no authority to forgive such a deed and retain such an offender in fellowship. The character of such an act should be determined by the motives which lead to it, and by all the conditions connected with it.

Q.—Is it time for the ministry to teach the celestial law? and does the Doctrine and Covenants teach that such is the only law by which the Church is to be governed?

A.—Yes. Read Doc. Cov. 76: 5, 7, with section 85: 4, 5, 6. These texts teach that the gospel, including the law for the government of the Church, is the "celestial" law, and that the Saints possess that law, and that they must be perfected by it if they attain to celestial glory.

Q.—Do the Scriptures teach that the Holy Ghost was ever given before the laying on of hands?

A.—Yes. See the case of Cornelius and his household, Acts 10: 44-47; 11: 15-17.

Q.—Should a minister be supported in the field who spends time and money attending dime museums, theaters and the like?

A.—The church makes no provision for such expenditures. We think the minister could find recreation and employment in far better ways. Whatever tends to vanity, pride, idleness, or needless, profitless expenditure of time or means should be avoided by ministers and members.

Q.—How was the Prophet Joseph baptized, and by whom?

A.—By immersion, by Oliver Cowdery.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Willard J. Smith wrote from Cadillac, Michigan, January 20th:

"I left Ontario, by permission of Pres. J. H. Lake, on the 17th inst., came here to Cadillac and expect to labor in Michigan the balance of the winter. I have appointments here for Sunday afternoon and evening in the Opera Hall. If we can only get people interested we will try and unfurl the gospel banner to the breeze, and do the best we can."

Sr. Ella Myers, of Fairbury, Nebraska, renews for the HERALD and says:

"I think the Herald just splendid. Can not afford to do without it. I am one of the scattered ones and find the Herald a great source of instruction and pleasure. The Home Column has been a great benefit to me. We had Bro. Caffall and Dr. Anthony here last August. Think we could now have more to come to hear if some of our ministers would hold meetings here. We will try to have preaching here again soon."

Bro. M. R. Scott writes from Bird's Eye Dubois county, Indiana, the 19th inst., that he was preaching in the Grand Army hall there, with interested and increasing audiences, and had received pretty fair treatment thus far. On the 23d he wrote:

"Our meetings here closed last night with one accession, baptized to-day. Our meetings were well attended. Last night the audience was the largest of any. The men who attacked our faith all skipped when we came. We go this evening to Riceville, by request of some of the citizens of that place. I have enjoyed good liberty and am feeling well."

Bro. William Thompson wrote from Dawson, Dallas county, Iowa, January 24th and says:

"I thank God that my desire is to study the sacred books of the church, and that I have the opportunity to procure them. I am having a time with some of the Methodists of this place who oppose my humble efforts by all the means in their power. But by the assistance of the standard books of the church I propose to defend the cause so far as I can."

Bro. J. C. Carpenter is laboring at Five Lakes, Michigan. He wrote us January 23d:

"I baptized one yesterday, and many more are about ready for baptism. I never saw the time when so many seem ready to hear and receive the gospel. Some who were once our worst enemies here are now believing, and some of them have said they intend to be baptized soon. I go to open a new field to-day."

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Man who walketh in a show,
Sees before him, to and fro,
Shadows and illusions go;
All things flow and fluctuate,
Now contract and now dilate;
In the welter of this sea,
Nothing stable is but Thee!"

PARENTAL AUTHORITY.

THE very height of human wickedness is described in the Holy Book as "lawlessness." Subjection to the holy, just, and good law of the Most High God is the essential condition of well-being here, and the essential element of glory hereafter. In keeping with this, human beings come into this world in a state of dependence and subjection, and for about one-half of the average term of human life that is their proper and natural state.

I can not doubt that the great idea of the long pupilage of man is just that the principle and habit of obedience, of submission to authority, may be wrought into his utmost nature, that, taught to obey an earthly parent, even from infancy, he may pass from subjection to the earthly father to subjection to the heavenly one. Reverent obedience of the child to parents is the preparation for reverent obedience of the man to God. The one is the stepping stone to the other. It is asked in the Epistle of John, "If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" In the same spirit and with at least equal emphasis it may be asked, "If a child honor not the father whom he hath seen, how shall he honor his Father whom he hath not seen?" There is rebellion against God in our inmost nature. Well, train up a child in willfulness and insubordination, and what must you expect as the result of nature's tendencies and such a training commingled. Law is everywhere here. There is law in the Bible. There is law in our souls. There are laws written with a pen of iron upon our bodily frames; there are laws upon earth and sky, and to send forth from your home a lawless creature, is to send forth a blind man to walk among pitfalls and precipices; to offer up an immortal nature to the god of misrule. In a religious point of view it seems to me just of the first importance that the parent should exercise over his children a sovereign authority. There must be no permitted resistance to his will. Obedience must be the primary law of the family. Does this have a sound of harshness? But it is the Bible way!

The confidence in regard to Abraham was that he would command his children after him. Children are bidden by the apostle to obey their parents. It is the essential requisite of a ruler in God's house that he should be able to rule in his own house, having his children in subjection. And authority is not tyranny. As the authority of God is not tyranny, neither is the authority of a parent, rightly used. If it is rightly used it will be used under the feeling of tender love and affectionate interest. The children themselves will more and more come to feel that. We parents should rule in love—in Christian love—but we should rule. Parental authority, like all authority, needs a wise hand to wield it. There is needed especially great wisdom in the exercise of it, when the boy is passing into the man. At that stage of human life, when you have the feeling of independence beginning to come—when you have so often the passions of manhood to deal without manhood's checks and sense—no one can tell what the blessing is of having, say, a father to whom a son has been in the habit of looking with submissive reverence, and who has the wisdom to use his influence aright.

But altogether, we may depend on it that there is nothing more ruinous than disobedience allowed in our little ones. I may even venture to say that it is great cruelty and great sin in us to permit it, out of, it may be, an indolent easiness of mind, or an unwise softness of disposition. The parent is to rule in home, the world of childhood, as the great Parent rules in the world, the home of manhood.—Selected by E. Elliott.

Dear Sisters:—I have been thinking to-day of how temptations double as soon as we become wives. It seems as soon as we enter the stage of married life we are given the keys of death and life; and how broad is the road to death, and what multitudes travel it. Let us look and see why. We find pleasure on every hand, and all the time we have is to be spent in the enjoyment of it in any way we choose. There is nothing to keep us at home; no children to deprive us of so much of husband's income, rob us of so many beautiful garments and soil our home decorations. Nothing to keep us awake at night but our pleasures and our own guilty conscience; and after that conscience has become seared it will trouble us no more. But where is the end of all this robbery?

bery of life; or what does it profit us if we gain the whole world and lose our souls? On the other hand we find a very narrow path, very rough and steep, and with but little communion with the outside world; darkened by the scoffs of the world, and with a work for almost every hour, and only an hour in which to accomplish it. And how we are tempted! Sometimes my heart is made to cry out, "Oh that mother Eve ever sipped the tree of knowledge," for if we knew not how to do wrong, how easy it would be for us to do right. But it is not all darkness. There is the light of love; the love of little children the purest affection on earth, innocent and undefiled. The pleasure that we can derive from this is unsurpassed by any thing except the love of God; and as we can enjoy both at the same time, we should consider ourselves truly blessed. Dear sisters, let us give the little ones a welcome; they will repay us in being pleasant and happy, but if the room they occupy in our homes is grudgingly given, they will be fretful and cheerless. Let us hear from more of the sisters.

"Let the lower lights be burning,
Send a gleam across the wave;
Some poor fainting, struggling seaman
You may rescue, you may save."

I am one of the isolated ones, and am very much subjected to neuralgia. If these lines should be read by some elder whom the Spirit may prompt so to do, I should like him to administer to me where he is.

Yours devotedly, SISTER MAY.

WINCHESTER, Tenn., Dec. 14th.

Dear Sister Frances.—I feel it a duty I owe to my sisters to say a few words in the "Column," to tell how much I love the good work we are engaged in. I embraced the truth twenty years ago and can truly say it is more precious to me to day than ever before. I can not express the thankfulness of my whole being that I was led to see the restored gospel, and the only sorrow I have is because I did not live nearer the pattern given by my Savior. I often wish I could have had the good instructions when raising my family that my young sisters have to-day. May the Spirit so impress it on your minds that you may be guided by the same and teach it to your children; then you will not like myself have to look back with sorrow and say, "I wish I had done better." I have had many sorrows and passed through many trials and through deep waters, but my Father in heaven has always left me a dry place for my feet, and has been so merciful to me in so many different ways that I am not able to tell it with my stammering tongue, but am often led to say, "O, that all men would praise the Lord."

For the past five years I have had the privilege of meeting with the Saints. May God bless them and may they keep the faith and magnify their calling, for they know the work is of the Lord. Then why should we grow cold or careless in this good and glorious work? Many times I feel to thank God that I have been spared to see this day; to see the church putting on her beautiful garments and arising to show to the world that it is a city set on a hill that can not be hid. Why shall we fear what man can do if God is for us? He is more than all who can be against us. Truly the gifts are returning as of old; the Lord has blest even me with prophetic dreams and visions; some to instruct, some to strengthen and some to reprove. I had a vision to reprove me for not praying for a dear brother that was in darkness. Sisters, let us pray for one another, and let us love one another and so fulfill the perfect law.

I had a feast of fat things truly at our late Reunion; but am now far away from any of like precious faith that I know of, but hope to meet again; if not in this world, we may in the world to come. I desire an interest in your prayers that I may be kept meek, humble, faithful and be accepted by the Master when he comes.

Your sister in bonds,
MARY LEE.

"OUR OWN."

If I had known in the morning,
How wearily all the day
The words unkind,
Would trouble my mind,
I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, daring,
Nor given you needless pain.
But we vex "our own"
With look and tone,
We might never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening
You give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it might be
That never for me
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth in the morning,
And never come home at night;
And hearts have broken
For harsh words spoken
That sorrow can ne'er set right.

We have careful thoughts for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometimes guest;
But oft for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love "our own" the best.
Ah! lips with the curl impatient;
Ah! brow with that look of scorn;
'Twere a curl of fate,
Were the night too late
To undo the work of the morn.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 3d.

Dear Sister Frances.—I try to tell the glad tidings of the "restored gospel" to my relatives, friends and neighbors. To the former by letter (which takes an amount of time and space), to the latter by neighborly calls and over the fence when no better chance is offered. O, I can not be sufficiently thankful! for once I was blinded by priestcraft and now I can see. O, praise the Lord. I have found the straight and narrow way.

In our "Hymnal," the hymn 1074 tells the whole story in a few lines, and I repeat and explain it when talking about what the straight and narrow way is, and it has helped many to see clearer and has set them to thinking. I have asked many earnest Christians, "Have you found the kingdom of God?" when they have told me they have the Holy Ghost, and I ask them "what is the organization of the kingdom of God?" and they almost always say, "The kingdom is in our heart," which to us who know better, is a most absurd answer, and I can not help but pity such darkness for I was once in the same place. And of the organization of the kingdom they can not answer. It makes me sad to see such darkness among the people.

I attended a meeting of the Holiness people last evening. It was the last one of their convention in this city, and I have since appreciated the light and truth more than ever. I took some tracts and gave them to some who had gone forward. One poor man threw himself on his face and lay there sobbing until the crowd began to go home, and all they did for him was to sing a piece, "Jesus comes and fills me now." How I wish some of our Elders could have been there to have told those poor souls what to do; they wanted to do more than believe. They seemed to make it a point not to say anything about doctrine. They claimed a man would get to heaven if he did differ in that point, and to illustrate said he knew a man and he believed that man had gone to heaven, and he didn't know for many years before he died and didn't know now what church he belonged to. One of the Reverends who had a seat on the platform stepped down beside a repentant girl, while they sang, "Jesus comes and fills me now," and I heard him say, O, all you have got to do is to believe," then he talked a while in that strain and then he prayed for her and talked and after awhile gave it up for that evening. As soon as I had a chance I asked him, "Is to believe, all you have got to do? haven't you got to repent and be baptized?" He took a good look at me for a minute, (he was a big fellow, but I did not waver) and said, "O, you can if you want to," I replied, "The Apostles always preached 'Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins.'" He said, "Yes," and left me abruptly, but before he left the hall he came up where I was sitting and says, "Baptism is only a sign any way, and not essential," and I answered, "Jesus said it was to fulfill all righteousness." And if we are to follow Him, we ought to follow Him into the waters of baptism, and I would have said more but he began to move on, and said, that's so, and that he had been baptized so he had got that straight. As much as to say he had got it straight to my way of thinking, whether he considered it essential or not. O, let every one of us let our light shine that those who are earnestly seeking for light and truth may find it, and thus glorify our Father in heaven.

SISTER LOTTIE.

HARPER, Missouri.

Dear Sisters in the Lord.—I drop you a few lines to let you know that there are some scattered in the mountains of south-west Missouri that call upon the Lord and think upon his ways, yea and enjoy some of his blessings and are also in hopes of meeting with you all when Zion shall have been redeemed and all the Saints of every age and nation are gathered to receive their everlasting inheritance. Your sister in the one faith, SUSAN C. LANCE.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Anna Robertson, Hartford, Michigan, writes:—"I can not tell you how much strength I receive from the letters in the 'Home Column.' The Herald has doubled in value to me since its introduction. How much strength and patience we need to govern and teach our children. I should become discouraged entirely but for the fresh supply God gives me daily."

Sr. Mary Prettyman, Knox, Indiana, writes:—"I do rejoice in the gospel of the latter day, and that there is more than one way of sowing the good seed of the kingdom. We can distribute tracts and back numbers of the Herald. I intend by the help of the good Lord and his Spirit to guide me, to scatter them far and near as opportunity offers. We have no meetings here at present, but hope to have soon."

Sr. E. Hightower, Beattie, Kansas, writes:—"We are deprived of the society of the Saints, and wish very much that some of the travelling ministry when passing this way would call on us. My health is poor, but I desire to live faithful, for I know there is nothing better on earth or in heaven than the gospel of salvation."

Sr. Mary Gillespie, Kirtland, Ohio, writes:—"I would like to say a few words to encourage those who have often encouraged me. Sisters, be of good cheer, for though the cares of life weigh heavy for a time, it will not be forever. Jesus has obtained the victory, and will give us his Spirit to help us overcome. Let us be brave of heart for our trials all over, we shall at last enter into rest."

Sr. Ruby M. Thompson, Ellsworth, Kaasas, writes:—"I am strong in the latter day work, and my heart rejoices in the Lord. Pray for me that I may be faithful to the end."

Sr. Lizzie Hutching, Richfield, Michigan, writes:—"I have not the privilege of meeting with the Saints and am sometimes very lonely, but I am trying to do my duty and to live faithful to God, and trust that I may be found worthy when the summons shall come."

Sr. Laura S. Cook, of Frederick City, Maryland, writes:—"I wish to bear my testimony to the truth of this work. I know that God hears and answers prayer. I have been healed of the asthma in answer to prayer. There are but four of us here. We wish an elder would come this way and call on us."

A sister writing from St. Louis gives an interesting description of the bazaar given by the Sister's Mite Society of that place to help the branch there in raising money to build a house of worship. All passed off harmoniously and in every respect the entertainment was a success. We would be pleased to give the letter entire, but for the crowded state of our columns.

Sr. Mary Britain, Garden City, Kansas, desires the prayers of the Saints, that her health may be restored to her, if it is God's will.

Sister Jessie writes from Kansas City, Missouri:—"I have been in this work a little over five years. I was opposed by my relatives, but was not left alone, for God was with me. There came to me a time of trial, when feeling that I must know of my acceptance with God, I strove earnestly to obtain a witness for myself. Being in a testimony meeting I was struck with the remark made by a brother that, The Savior was always pleading for us. I earnestly asked myself the question, Can he be pleading for me? To my astonishment I heard a voice answer distinctly, Yes, I am pleading for you. Dear sisters, I shall never forget the sound of the voice nor the words spoken, and I ask you to pray for me that I may prove faithful."

Sr. Katie C. Morrison, Buttsville, Missouri, writes:—"We are still trying to serve God to the best of our ability. We have not had any preaching since Bro. Lambert was here, and we would gladly welcome any of the brethren to declare the good tidings of salvation to us."

Sr. Mary E. Pooler, Central Point, California, writes:—"I can not render praise enough to God for all the blessings he is constantly bestowing upon me. I send in my mite for the Missionary Fund, and wonder that I do not see more names from Independence, Missouri. I know there are many good Saints there."

We wish to state to our readers that we this week received Bishop Blakeslee's receipt for $240.70 on Home Column Missionary Fund. Don't be weary in well doing, but let us strive to help roll on the great work as those who know the truth of what they are sustaining.

LAMONT, IOWA, JANUARY 25th.

Correspondence.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Jan. 19th.

Bro. Blair:—It is a source of pleasure for me to read the letters of my brethren, from far and near, especially those with whom I am personally acquainted. And anticipating that such acquaintances derive a degree of satisfaction in knowing of my whereabouts and spiritual standing, I am constrained to write.

It was three years ago last October when I took upon myself the name of Latter Day Saint. I praise God for the instruments and opportunity that places me where I am. There is no event of my life that was the direct forerunner of so many radical changes, or preceded the turning of so many things bottomsides up. The evil one began very early in my spiritual life to harrass me, and as it appeared, to reverse all my plans of future life. In less than five months the master stroke was made, which was the death of my companion, who united the same hour I did with the church. But the good Father was not slow in preparing me for the blow, by sending one of His angels who stood before me one evening with that heavenly, assuring smile, and grasping my hand said: "You shall prosper and be happy."

The message was short, but sufficient to bear me up and through all trials since. From the beginning, however, we had to meet the scoffs of friends and the frowns of relatives. Not one of the latter, on either side, ever having had any use for the "Mormon doctrine."

My connection with the church was the cause of my removal to a strange land, among a new people; and three years have now almost passed since I took up my abode in the center of Zion, and while the way seemed clear for me to come to this land, there seemed influences at work during the first two years of my sojourn here that caused me a great deal of uneasiness, amounting sometimes to alarm; and I can say like some of my brethren, the way has not all been strewn with roses, and where the roses were strewn, thorns were found also; and through the green fields, briars and thistles grew along the pathway.

How plain the necessity for the instruction by the Seer when he said, "Let all things be prepared beforehand." I hear many of my brothers say that they sought in vain for many months for labor when they first came here. Every door seemed closed against them, not because they were Latter Day Saints, but circumstances seemed to combine to discourage, and not until the last extremity was reached, with means and patience alike exhausted, did a ray of sunshine brighten and renew their hope; but their faith in the promises of God that they should possess a home in Zion gave them strength and encouragement. From my observation and experience I would advise all Saints whose steps are turned Zionward that they bring with them the means necessary to support their families two years or more after arriving! or better still, sufficient to purchase a home. But above all bring willing minds and hands to labor, and a positive determination to do right, and then pay your tithing; and as the Lord lives you shall prosper.

I am thankful, yes, my heart swells with gratitude that my lot is cast with so good a people as the Latter Day Saints are. I know their faith is founded on a sure foundation; and never at any time, or under any circumstances have I doubted this latter day work being of God; and it never fails to give joy and comfort when applied.

Ever praying for latter day Israel, your brother,
M. S. FRICK.

BIG SPRING, W. Va., Jan. 16th.

Bro. Blair:—I still live, and have been blowing the gospel trumpet amidst the persecutions against the work in this new field. On the 11th I baptized a lady of excellent repute, and yesterday I led six into baptismal waters and will confirm them this afternoon—all heads of families save one. A man by the name of Silas C. Malone gave his name yesterday for baptism next Sunday. I hear of others coming. The Lord has been with me in a marked degree, verifying his counsel to me heretofore. A few nights ago I dreamed of catching so many fish that I could scarcely get them all on one string. Such dreams have always been encouraging to me. May the Lord add such as shall be saved. Good health is returning, and a number of doors are calling "Come and preach for us." I am looking for Bro. Beatty to come to my assistance in a few days. I am pleased to learn that Bro. Joseph has undertaken another mission through the far west. May the Lord prosper his way. Specially remember us in this hard mission.

L. R. DEVORE.

EAST NEW YORK, BROOKLYN.

Bro. Blair:—We consider this branch of the church in fair condition; the Saints are beginning to understand their duty better. Some persons are investigating, and will in the near future join with us. The Saints were very much strengthened by the recent visit of Bro. G. T. Griffiths; our heavenly Father, through his Spirit, having revealed his visit to the branch through the presiding elder in the Saints' testimony meeting, one week previous to his coming. He stated that one of the Twelve would come in the near future by permission of our heavenly Father. Bro. Griffiths, on his arrival one week later, told us that he had come by the word of the Lord to him; that he had to turn out of his way; and that the nature of his work was, that the Saints here needed encouraging and strengthening. These and many other blessings we receive and feel thankful. We have good hope for the future. Prejudice seems to be giving way, and many seem to be more friendly to the work. Bro. Griffiths' visit was timely; and meat in due season was imparted to all who heard him.

GEO. POTTS.

WESTON, Iowa, Jan. 17th.

Editors Herald:—In the latter part of November I visited Wheeler's Grove, in company with Bro. J. C. Foss, where we held several meetings with some interest; but as Bro. Foss was anxious to commence labors at Underwood according to previous intention, we did not stay long. There is a noble band of Saints at Wheeler's Grove, and they wield an influence for good among their fellow-men. They had the misfortune to have their house of worship demolished by a cyclone some time ago, and have not been able to rebuild as yet. The branch is not so strong numerically as when they first builded, owing to the fact that several have removed to other parts, yet I understand that they intend to rebuild. I hope they will succeed, for they need a house in which to worship. Saints in other localities have a grand opportunity to manifest some of their brotherly love, as well as love for the work, by extending unto them a helping hand.

In the first part of December I went to Fontanelle, in Adair county, where I preached six times in the Christian Chapel, held a few meetings in a private house, and baptized two, a man and his wife. There are only about twelve members at this place, but they seem interested and alive in the work. I think if more labor could be performed there, others would come into the fold. Bro. Briggs Alden, or, "Grandpa Alden," as he is called, is in his ninety-second year, feeble in body, but heart and soul in the work. He says it is Mormonism that keeps him alive. His companion has an affliction on one of her limbs, causing her much suffering and distress. May the Lord comfort and bless them according to their wants. There are other old-time Saints there, some who had been led away during "the dark and cloudy day" that came on the church, but are now indorsing the Reorganization; and when I beheld the interest manifest by them I was satisfied they had not lost the Spirit of the latter day work. It does my soul good to see the old Saints that have stood the severe trial and disappointment and have been tossed about 'til almost discouraged, still clinging to the faith, and now rejoicing that the church is reorganized.

Since my return home I have labored some about ten miles north of here, where there seemed to be a good opening for the presentation of our faith. A few Saints live there, and they are anxious for labor to be performed, while friends outside are willing to hear. The Brighamites have been working there and made a few converts to their institution. One of their missionaries was at our meeting the last time I was there. I endeavored to show the difference between us and the Utah church, which seemingly did not suit him very much. He got the privilege to speak, and complained much of the treatment they received from the "Josephites" wherever they go among them. He claimed we were apostates, while the church in Utah was all right. I challenged him to discuss the question, but he thought that would do no good. Now I wish to say right here that though this man complained of the treatment received from the Saints, I am satisfied the Saints have treated them well—just as I claim they ought to do. They may close their doors against our brethren in Utah, but we must not retaliate, but do to them just as we would that they should do to us, whether they do it or not.

While at Fontanelle I was presented a copy of "Mormon Portraits," a book claiming to be written by one Dr. W. Wyl, against Mormonism. It, like most Anti-Mormon works, seeks to blacken the character of "the first elders of the church;" but it overdoes the matter, so much so that none but Mormonhaters can begin to believe it. While thinking of the many works of a similar nature that have been circulated, together with newspaper articles and public lectures against the faith of the Saints, the question arose in my mind, How is it that the work has not been destroyed long ago? It surely appears as if God had his hand in it.

This was considered a wise saying by Gamaliel in the days of the apostles, when speaking of the work of the Lord then performed: "If this council or this work be of man it will come to naught; but if it be of God, ye can not overthrow it." Apply this rule to the latter day work and it certainly looks as if the work must be of God, even if we had nothing more to confirm us in the faith.

I am glad to be able to say that the condition of the Pottawattamie district is improving. Some have been added to the church, and the Saints feel encouraged. Calls for preaching come from every quarter—many more than we can fill. The labors of Bro. Foss were highly appreciated, and we hope he will be able to return again soon. Some few of the local elders are doing well; but we need more help. The field is large, and the laborers too few.

H. N. HANSEN.

MCVEY, Ills., Jan 22d.

Editors Herald:—We are happy to say that the gospel sound has again been heard in this part. Elders I. A. Morris and I. M. Smith came here December 30th and preached with good liberty, expounding the word in that way that the sectarian world know not of save as they hear it from those who are chosen and set apart to preach the restored gospel. Although we (husband and self) are entirely alone here, we take courage knowing that the form of doctrine we have obeyed can not be overthrown by the doctrines of men. Bro. Morris remained until January 9th, but suffering greatly with cold he preached but few times, yet he had good liberty. Bro. Smith continued the work until the 13th. His discourses were all good, and the last four were really grand. We thank the great Author of this latter day work that he has chosen such men and defends them while presenting his word. The weather was unfavorable, yet the people turned out surprisingly. The best of attention was given and some are interested; others are prejudiced, yet we think prejudice is fast giving way. We would be delighted if Bro. G. H. Hilliard would hold a series of meetings here sometime during next summer, and Bro. Smith and Morris as circumstances permit. We hold our membership with the Brush Creek branch.

We hope to attend the coming June conference at that place. The Herald is a great comfort to the isolated ones, also the Home Column. Mr. McVey, the gentleman for whom this station is named, very kindly tenders us McVey hall free of charge, and Mr. Yawl, who keeps merchandise in the room below the hall, very generously kept up lights and fire during the meetings. Can some of the traveling ministry call here and preach?

MRS. B. A. MORRIS.

HERSEY, Mich., Jan. 18th.

Bro. Blair:—Since I last wrote I have continued to wield the "Sword of the Spirit" till I have begun to see some of my labors in this part of the field. On the eighth instant I led two precious souls, middle aged men, into the waters of baptism. They are heads of families and bid fair to become useful in the latter day work. Several others are believing, and will obey in the near future. Last Thursday my brother Joseph W. Shippy went with me on a short preaching tour to Wilton Junction and vicinity. We had fair congregations, good attention, and good liberty, and blessed two children. Some said they would be baptized before long. The work is onward here and the Saints rejoice in hope. I expect to leave for Canada next week.

JOHN SHIPPY.

KINGSLEY, Iowa, Jan. 13th.

Dear Herald:—After my last communication I continued the discussion, which lasted, in all, fourteen nights. After its conclusion I lectured on the Book of Mormon, and on Saturday night the minister's son lectured on Mormonism, I answering him on Sunday. From certain developments I concluded it would be in keeping with my position to throw out a challenge, and as a consequence proposed to discuss the merits of the respective churches, either between ourselves, or have the liberty to choose—each a representative man. He would not come to time, as to himself or their church, but thought it might be that he could get some one to negative a proposition defending our church. Consequently I corresponded with one of the brethren, who agreed, sending a proposition, which in turn I sent to the minister, who answers back refusing to accept.

Taking the courtesy extended me at the close of discussion as evidence, the church lost nothing by it. A paper drawn by the leading merchant, and without my knowledge, and circulated by one of the leading men, contained an expression of gratitude for the labor performed, and offered the hope that I would return in the near future. To it were subscribed twenty-four names and $22 90. I believe it to have been an expression of respect for the church which had been assailed, though the question under discussion related only to infant baptism. Why it is that men will entirely turn from the question under consideration and abuse the church, I can not see; and I would be glad in my soul to have these men come to a knowledge of the truth, for I am made sad to know that they are "kicking against the pricks."

Our stay of five weeks at Richland was made pleasant and home-like. Thanks to all. With the length of our stay there, and near four weeks stay here, we are becoming confirmed in the thought that a place should not be left till thoroughly worked.

Please, Mr. Editor, allow us to enter our protest against tobacco. While away out in Dakota we were in conversation with a young man who said that he had come to the conclusion that all our elders chewed, as the three that had preceded me were all guilty of the habit. Brethren, why should we in any way retard the progress of the work! One young man in this place is making the commendable effort to quit the use of it.

Leaving Richland the 19th ult. we came to Sioux City, where, through previous arrangement, we met Bro. J. L. Gunsolly, who is now with us, and is making rapid progress. Next day we came to this place, riding twenty miles of the way by stage, with the thermometer seven degrees below zero! In the old town of Quorn we held fifteen meetings, and from there went to Squash Hollow, where we preached but once, on account of the cold. We then went to the town of Kingsley where we held two meetings in the school building, and, being denied further use of it, we went to the rink. This, through the kindness of Mr. H. B. Jordan, we were permitted the use of free. The inclemency of the weather has again put a dead-lock on our meetings. There is a fair interest in the place, and as the professors(?) are so prejudiced, we are determined to hold forth for some two weeks if we can get a suitable place. J. W. WIGHT.

SWEET HOME, MO., Jan. 24th.

Bro. Dancer:—We could not do without the Herald and Hope, they contain such good news every week. Christ says the Saints are the salt of the earth, and we are salting this part of Missouri very good. I have ten children; all are in the church but two, and they are too young to be baptized. This is the Church of Christ, therefore I rejoice that I am engaged in such a glorious work. WM. POWELL.

WASHINGTONVILLE, Ohio,
Jan'y 15th.

Dear Herald:—You are a welcome visitor in my home. I read your many testimonies of the goodness of God to his children, and I desire to bear my testimony also.

We had about thirty members in our branch, but have been reduced to about seventeen by removals to other places; but though not many in number, the Lord has greatly blest us in our prayer and testimony meetings through the gifts that he promised would follow them that believe.

We have one member—a brother—who was called into the church by the Spirit of God, made manifest through a sister. Two weeks after he obeyed the call we held a prayer meeting at the home of an aged sister, the inclemency of the weather and her poor health preventing her from attending meetings, and he had the gift of prophecy. Oh! what a blessed meeting we had—one ever to be remembered by all present. The Master has truly said "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there will I be with them," for there were only six persons at that meeting.

In October I had a vision: I beheld a straight, narrow path, stretching away in front of me, and, on each side of the path were beautiful green trees, and I was standing at the beginning of that path, ready to commence my journey onward. I could not tell you, my brothers and sisters, how much that vision strengthened and encouraged me to keep on in the good work. In November I was blessed by another vision: I was standing on a steep embankment, about five feet high, when suddenly I saw water gush out of the ground and flow away in a large stream which grew larger and larger until it formed a great river of clear, sparkling water, which still grew broader as far as the eye could see, and I felt that the Lord had truly blessed me. O, that we may be enabled to "work out our salvation with fear and trembling." My daily prayer is that the great latter day work may prosper, that we may all continue faithful, that we may meet where all sorrow and pain will be over.

ROBERT ROBSON.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, Jan. 14th.

Brother W. W. Blair:—At the request of the Saints and friends of this place, and by direction of Bro. R. J. Anthony, I came here the 30th ult., to be present when the Rev. M. T. Lamb delivered his prepared lectures against the Book of Mormon. He would not debate, but consented to let me review each lecture. He gave six lectures, and I followed in six reviews of about two hours each. Excitement ran high, and the attendance was large throughout, all thing considered. The contest was somewhat unequal, for he has devoted his whole time and study to overthrow the Book of Mormon for the past three years, and he therefore knows his "piece" like a school-boy, while I was under the necessity of borrowing every book I used in evidence. Notwithstanding this, I can say truthfully that my knowledge, confidence and love for the book has been increased. Mr. Lamb is a smooth, mild, winning speaker, but, withal, cutting, sarcastic and misleading. Therefore in the very nature of things his method should be studded. I closed the reviews last evening. Perhaps I shall report more fully when I have more time. There is a great deal of snow here, and it is bitter cold.

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

CHASE, Kansas, Jan. 23d.

Bro. Blair:—I have been here doing what I could to enlighten the people on the gospel. It has been very cold since I wrote you last. The 14th and 15th was our coldest. Please say in Herald to brother Kelley that we would be pleased to have him with us during our conference, February 25th, at ten a. m., for the Saints could all have a chance to hear him. We expect a large attendance. I go from here to Barton county this week, thence to Ellsworth county.

A. H. PARSONS.

AVOCA, Kan., Jan. 21st.

Brother W. W. Blair:—We are not dead nor frozen in. I have been to the little capital of Kansas and had a good time with some honest souls who have been reading their Bibles until they found the rottenness of old Babylon and her institutions. They seemed to be looking for the old land marks, and when we unfolded to them the gospel that Jesus, Peter, Paul, Joseph Smith and others preached, they had no fault to find, but listened to and received the word with gladness.

I left yesterday for this place, where I am to stop over Sunday. I then go to Horton. Here is quite a number of the Strangite school of Saints; all industrious; some mechanics, farmers and railroad men; all calculate to be called temperance men; but I am sorry some use tobacco and strong coffee, while others detest the evils. When will the Saints live by every word that God in mercy has given us. We rather keep the Word of Wisdom and have health, wisdom, and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures. And the Lord says the destroying angel shall pass them by. Now are not these blessings worth living for?

These Strangite Saints are becoming more reconciled to young Joseph. They have come together and held a meeting at which points of doctrine were taken up and compared, and there is a better feeling now than has been for years. They want me to locate out here; but I have not yet decided. There is plenty of missionary work in these parts. I have had quite a good time with the Indians located near here. It has been my daily prayer to do no harm and all the good I can. * * * And here let me say I hear complaints about those long-winded writers in the Herald. Shorter articles and written oftener on some other points, would be relished far better. I had rather read extracts from the Bible, sayings of Joseph Smith and Hyrum, etc, etc, than those long articles.

Truly and sincerely,

L. D. HICKEY.

CHURCH NEEDS OF CITY AND COUNTRY CONTRASTED.

UNDER the above heading, a very ably written article appeared in Herald for January 14th, by Bro. W. R. Sellon; the perusal of which was to me, instructive and amusing. 'Tis perhaps well the ministerial question has been introduced, as a free and respectful expression thereon may be followed with good results. There can be no reason why we should feel disconcerted because of a variety or difference of ability, or object to its legitimate utilization, or evidence but superficial thinking in deciding that culture, through natural or acquired ability is the one and only needed qualification in a representative of the latter day work. For while many who would go to hear a cultured speaker that would rather read Shakespeare or perchance Ingersoll's effusions than spend time in listening to one less competent, there are some that could not be effectively reached through the cultured if evidence of other qualifications as essential from their standpoint as culture was wanting.

What the criticism might have been, we have no means of knowing, but certain it is, some one, or ones whose cultured sensitiveness was aroused by hearing some ungrammatical phrases, discovered the apostles to be unlearned, yet the fact stares us in the face of thousands been brought to a knowledge of the truth through their instrumentality, who doubtless thought more of the evidence these unlearned men adduced to substantiate the validity of their doctrine than the manner of its introduction, which might be called common sense. And the history of the latter day work develops proofs of very similar effects. Paul was wont to inform the Saints that he came not unto them with excellency of speech, or with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in the power and demonstration of the Spirit, and of power, that their faith should not stand in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God.

Of these unlearned men Christ said:—"And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake the dust off your feet. Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gormorrah in the day of judgment than for that city."—Matt. 10. The above is very pointed, and evinces the fact that Christ was so far from being ashamed of these unlearned men as to give assurance of recognizing acts performed in purview of their calling; such acts to be as effective for weal or woe as his own. Hence the declaration, "He that heareth you heareth me." And in the face of these God-approved facts, there is no reason to believe that God will accuse men for a failure in accepting gospel truths because they may not be made dazzling by eloquence man can acquire. A gospel discourse delivered in an intelligible manner, minus of classical phrases will prove as effective in condemning, if refused, as one made flowery and fascinating with them; otherwise a method to educate with a view to the ministry would be sensible. And yet there is no guarantee of a premium; for neither do I believe it would be seemly to thank God for ignorance, while he who would indulge the thought of having his mouth filled by opening it, without correspondingly striving by dint of perseverance and study, commits a grave blunder, and mistakes the nature and requirements of the latter day work; failing in an appreciation of the teaching of the prophet Joseph, who strictly enjoined studying upon the church. And if those who have or may be so enthusiastic to give or receive ordination with the thought that the mere act of ordination was the only requisite would carefully read and ponder over the 8th, 9th and 10th paragraphs of section 10 of Doctrine and Covenants, they might be stayed in their wild career and evince a moderation consistent with gospel injunctions. I may be told that this was given to Hyrum Smith, to which I don't object; but it is general in its application, and still profitable for study, correction, etc. There are special and general commands, and to discriminate is very essential.

The law of adaptability is wonderfully developed in all God's works, and to doubt the propriety of its observance in the consummation of the latter day work would be as wild and inconsistent as to insist on the possibility of its observance to an extent as is desirable by the Reorganized Church as the present juncture. For from its first inception barriers have arisen to question its right, saying thus far, but no further go. And while barriers of various kinds have arisen, the kind of an antagonism between extremists and non-extremists, would create, has not been wanting, so that whatever gain has been made, the contest has been continuous and severe. And the end is not yet.

That ministerial labor in populous cities by cultured elders would be effective none need doubt, but that effects would be so astounding as some might be led anticipate, I don't believe, for reasons I might, but are not necessary to assign. And yet I have and still consider it proper to secure and utilize all the help or talent available, and if I knew of hindrances to this essential method, I would think it proper, manly and God-like to legitimately work to remove it, and let the glorious latter day cause have the benefit of all available aid; and if the same responsibility to stay what might hinder the cause does not exist, then I have mistaken the nature of the latter day work; and much prating about discretion, etc., is the veriest twaddle.

With the understanding that diligence culminating in the introduction of the work by the distribution of the printed word opening places for preaching at various points three, four or six nights in the week, and holding forth at one or two more important points on Sunday, and if places could not thus be had in a city, branch out six, eight or ten miles to other points, so divided the time. I should be glad to see as many elders as there are prosperous cities in America as classical as a Beecher or Talmage in battle array to-morrow, and could say God bless them. But if city missionary labor is to consist in the cultured missionary being housed six days, and screened from the pelting storm and the scorching rays of the sun, to prepare two sermons for Sunday, and they to consist of gospel doctrine, or a mixture of what might be called science, or large doses of mine opinion, as the taste or wisdom of the cultured missionary might lead, with the occupancy of costly apartments, etc., I should earnestly and solemnly protest. I believe the work of such magnitude as to think it worthy of man's very best efforts. And if a man gives ten dollars because he has but a hundred, he is equally justified in God's sight as the man who gives a hundred because he has a thousand dollars. And so if one has two talents, or abilities, that two talents might represent, he is doing as much according to his abilities as the one who has five. And if the two-talented brother is to go into the country and get bespattered with mud, covered with dust, wet with rain, scorched with the sun, froze with the cold, and chilled with the wind, held to strict account for the manner he represents the church, by what precedent governing the ministry in the latter day cause would the five-talented brother be justified, applauded and praised, for doing and preaching what and where he might please?

Omaha, Nebraska, and vicinity opens a fine ministerial field for an active, conscientious, competent elder. There is doubtless, as in other cities, a class that could more effectively be reached by being visited at their residences, which might be effected by a system of tract distributing away from the central parts of the city, in plain, small residences where, doubtless, some are to be found whose humble situation in life, leads them to think they are unworthy to mix with society, whose mind by being properly approached and instructed, might be disabused and in time made useful members. And the cultured are well adapted for such work, being ready to freely and clearly express themselves. I believe a more thorough systematizing of ministerial labor very needful. To illustrate: In Kearney and Franklin counties, Nebraska, a circuit, say within a radius of forty miles, might be formed, with several points, which might be visitable once or twice a month; said points ten or twelve apart; appointments filled regularly, and in such a circuit two elders might labor advantageously; and in six months or a year a good work might be done, or proof developed that nothing could be done, in which event a new field might be sought. Thus with such a system much more might be done at a much less outlay of money than in a few months traveling over a state or two, with labor in but a desultory or unsystematic manner, and reflect credit in that a becoming economy in the use of the money that comes to the coffers of the church would be evinced.

Recent developments seemed to necessitate some labor; three business meetings were held, the most interesting and peaceful I ever saw. Labor attendant upon an effort to adjust trouble is remunerated by delving down to the bed rock or cause of the trouble. To the credit of those concerned, they were willing for this method. And for Omaha branch we hope an era of peace has dawned to continue, with much fruit. We have had their struggles but it is cheering to see struggling ones strive to help themselves and roll back the pestering waves.

THOUGHTS ON CHURCH LITERATURE.

THE old year has passed; the new one has been fairly introduced. Its introduction is not novel, but somewhat customary. It did not take us by surprise, for the advancing days of the "old" suggested the approach of the new. The record of the old has been made; and a peculiar one it was. It contained records of murders, suicides, debaucheries, licentiousness, falsehood, embezzlements, defaultings, thefts, poverty, wretchedness, squalor, famines, earthquakes, floods, fires, wars, tempests, cyclones, scourges, etc. Any thing else? Was its record all of blackness and terror? No. There were deeds of charity, acts of benevolence, vigils with sick and dying, almsgiving, gratitude, thankfulness, tears for the erring, kind words, noble deeds, outbursts of noble impulses, many poor relieved, afflicted comforted, hymns of praise, prayers prevalent, souls born of God!

What of the present year? Who can tell? What has it in store for the world at large? It shall have its share of all things needful. But we leave these generalities and come to specialties. We wish to glance at the church and its progressive work. In 1852 and after, in southern Wisconsin, I hear the whisperings of waiting souls! I look to Cincinnati in January, 1860, and find a friendly man issuing and editing a paper called the "Herald." In northern Illinois, at Amboy, in April, 1860, I see a small assembly engaged in earnest, prevailing prayer and counsel—and things assume a more definite shaping. The little "Herald," in time is removed to Plano, Illinois; afterward to Lamoni, Iowa. During the passing days and years, the small obscure church increases her strength, enlarges her borders, extends her ministerial ranks, enlarges her periodical, issues a "Hope," a "Messenger," then an "Advocate" follows the latter; then comes a "Sandhedens Banner;" then an "Expositor;" also the "Vindicator," in England, rises to view; and lastly, but by no means the least, "Autumn Leaves" greets us so pleasantly!

Away back in the sixties I find a little corner in the monthly "Herald" headed "Little Folk," if I mistake not. A children's paper was actually demanded; we get it. It does a good work. We needed Sunday School lessons; they come. We want them graded, we get them. The time fully came when the young folk of the church required a periodical for themselves; a clean, pure sheet for the young men and women whose welfare the church seeks, and whose services she must have! "Autumn Leaves" has been long coming, but it is here, and it must stay. There's no evading it. No father or mother of the church can ever consistently let it die. Die? That were a shame too mean to name! What parents in this church, who have a jealous care for their offspring, could be otherwise than solicitous for the spiritual welfare of their own.

Do you care, father? Are you anxious, mother? Yes, of course. You, whose hearts have been touched with a power divine; you, who have become acquainted with the gospel, know—surely know—of how vast importance it is to judiciously seek the eternal good of son and daughter. It is not enough that they live surface lives. There are depths to the work of God into which they should delve; and this can only be done by a prayerful, studious, sacrificing life! and an attendance upon divine services—with home—spiritual duties attended to. A careless, prayerless life never can know of God's eternal beauties; can never feast upon the rich viands that crown the board of our Master's table. The latter day work should be made attractive—enticing to the young. They should be kindly, lovingly taught; but never coerced. "Autumn Leaves" designs leading young minds in that way. Religion is not "dry," "morose," or "sultry." The pure religion of Christ is filled with glittering worth; it shines with an everlasting light; and so happifies the soul that, once enlightened, no darkened desire for retrogression can ever take hold thereon!

"Autumn Leaves" can do a noble work for our youth. The mover in this good work had no thought of popular praise, or of seeking to be prominently foremost; but evidently it was born of a deep-set desire to see a great, yet painful deficiency supplied. Painful, from the fact that we who constitute the Church of Jesus Christ, had no pure-toned literature prepared for our youth. They need special looking after. They have been too long and too seriously neglected. I have seen them almost spurned. There have been no sermons for them; no lectures for them; no special church services for them; no church literary societies for them, until quite recently.

The writer ventured within the last few years to give to young men and young women something of this, risking adverse comment, and unsavory criticisms, and good resulted therefrom. No one can be a thinker that is not a reader! Stagnation follows inactivity of mind. The mind that has no care for spiritual, historical matter, is a mind that has lain uncultivated in that direction; and while the world abounds in literature, refined and crude; and while the world is to-day a reading world, so should the church be a reading, studious church; and while other literary matter comes into the hands of our youth, let the Church of God put literature into their hands—and let it come to stay! "Autumn Leaves" should have a wide circulation. It is good, wholesome, readable! It surely should be to day a necessity, and it is. It is only waiting to be recognized as such. Such recognition will surely follow a careful reading of the work, for it is self-commending.

We should always be found an intellectual people. Illiteracy is not to be envied. Who, among the thoughtful, desires it? If ignorance ever were bliss, it is not blissful now. "Autumn Leaves" has the impress of intellectual thought upon its fair pages. Its first issue is evidently a model of subsequent numbers. Its opportunities for good are manifold; its harvest, rich and golden. Its first introduction into every home whither it has come, has received an unmistakable welcome. Let every issue be of an increased number. Let every page be studiously read. Blessed be the heart that conceived the idea of such a work; and blessed be the dauntless courage that dared to undertake it. Its real, living importance is not yet realized—but shall be.

We must be a progressive people. Our progress should be found in all good works. This magazine works in the right direction, and no one will think of disputing it. There has been, of too long time, an idea advanced of our making progress without means. We can't do it. Money is necessary. No one makes a living on "thank ye's," neither can the church thrive and issue literary matter on that. Money, and money well spent, can be no more advantageously spent than by dropping it in the church coffers, where wise men judiciously dispense it where needed.

Come on with your money for "Autumn Leaves." Who begrudges one dollar and twenty-five cents a year for a work our young people have so sorely needed! May God impress upon every one the actual necessity of sustaining it. Let no Latter Day Saint's home be without it. Get friends and neighbors to subscribe for it. Young folk, introduce it to your school mates. You need not be ashamed of it, nor anything that belongs to the church.

Support "Autumn Leaves."

WHITMERISM REVIEWED.

DAVID CITY, Neb., Jan. 7th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Inclosed you will find a copy of letter written to a friend of mine, pointing out what I believe to be some of the weak points in David Whitmer's doctrine.

Yours in Christ,

J. M. STUBBART.

"Dear Brother:—It has been a long time since I received your last letter, which I should have answered before now.

"I feel to say like Paul, 'I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him [Joseph Smith] that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.' I do not wish to speak harshly in this matter; but as I love your souls, I would to God you could see this matter aright. I have examined carefully David Whitmer's pamphlet, which I received from him sometime ago. I have been investigating this matter ever since I first heard of his views. And the more I examine them, in the light of the scriptures, the less confidence I have in them; and now I am fully satisfied they are not of God. Since he admits that, 'Some revelations are of God, some revelations are of men, and some revelations are of the devil,' I am forced to the conclusion that his is of one of the latter two classes, or my judgment of the teachings of the Bible, and of language, is entirely wrong.

"I believe I have had some light from the Spirit on this matter every time I have tried to investigate it. The last testimony is as follows: Yesterday and day before I reviewed this matter carefully; and on going to bed I asked God to give me a testimony that I might know his will more definitely, and He did so; for before I awoke this morning I saw that mother and I were at your father's on a visit. Your folks wished mother to stay with them, but she said, 'No; I must return home.' I remained behind, and it was impressed on my mind to go around the house they were in and examine its structure. It was then made known to me that where the house stood had been a splendid and substantial building, which had had first a smooth surface for a foundation; and upon this stood, on either side, a row of solid iron pillars. Upon these pillars had rested the building. On account of some internal pressure the pillars had been pushed outward, and they stood leaning in that position. What became of the building I did not see; but upon that same foundation, or ground-work, a certain man went to work and built the house your folks were in. The building was entirely new, and of different construction than the previous one. He discarded the iron pillars, and built a one story building, which, from a distance, looked pretty well, and had the appearance of being built of cut stone. However, when I came up to examine it closely, I discovered that it had been built entirely of mud. To give it the appearance of cut stone, the builder had taken an instrument and marked off the surface in squares. To further help the appearance of the building he had made curves and flourishes at the corners of the squares.

"Now brother, I find this an exact picture of Whitmer's church. It is built on the right foundation, or ground work,—Christ, the Book of Mormon, Bible, and the first inception of the latter day work—but right where the building commenced, the iron pillars that ought to be there were rejected! For these pillars see Eph. 2:20, 21: 'Are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, * * * fitly framed together.' Also Eph. 4:11,—'Apostles, prophets, evangelists, [or high priest], etc.' Gal. 2:9, 'James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars.' Instead of having suitable timbers to 'fitly frame' together the whole structure, it is of one material—mud. No beams; no pillars; no corner-stone!

"Christ said, 'Whosoever teaches more or less * * * is not of me.' Whitmer says Joseph teaches more. But it is plain to see that Whitmer teaches 'less.' If he means that Joseph taught more than we have a record of Christ teaching, then the apostles and the Nephites did the same thing. Christ, personally, says nothing of ordaining elders, priests, teachers, deacons, bishops, etc., on either continent, yet we find the church did ordain such officers. To the Jews he spoke of apostles, or disciples; (Luke 6:13); and seventies; (Luke 10:1.) To the Nephites he only speaks of the twelve disciples. Now all of these other 'pillars' Whitmer discards. Elders, priests and teachers were not spoken of till in the last part of the Book of Mormon. Moroni's 'Priests' are not spoken of in the New Testament as gospel ministers, but rather to the contrary. Heb. 7:11, 12.

"Then according to Whitmer's logic, the church could have but disciples for apostles, and seventies he will not accept. But the apostles add to these more apostles than the first twelve. Matthias, (Acts 1:15-26). Paul and Barnabas, (Acts 13:1-4, with 14:14): Titus and others. Prophets, (Acts 13:1; Eph. 4:11; 2:20). Evangelists, or high priests, as in Matthew, Mark, Luke, John. 'Philip the evangelist.'—Acts 21:8. Deacons, (Acts 6:1-6). 'Bishops and deacons.'—Phil. 1:1.

"I believe the evangelists and high priests are the same, because I find their offices to agree. Dungan's Greek Lexicon says an evangelist is 'An ecclesiastical writer. An aid or assistant preacher of the apostles, who went on missions from church to church.' They seem to take the place of the apostles in the established church. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants says the high priests are to travel, (page 230), and perform other duties as councilors (pages 270, 275, 290). The three presidents must be high priests (page 291). So in the established church they have the same authority the Twelve has to the world. This is the only office that supplies the place of the evangelist. The difference in the two appears only in name.

"But Whitmer would 'make a man an offender for a word.' He would say we have no need of 'ecclesiastical writers.' But please note the following: 'Because that I have spoken one word, ye need not suppose that I can not speak another; for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be, until the end of man; neither from that time henceforth and forever.'—Book of Mormon, p. 105.

"If God deals with this generation, they must write his word to let the world and future generations know it. Yet before that writing is put in the hands of the world, they should understand their first and second readers—Bible and Book of Mormon—or they will not understand it.

"The office of 'prophet, seer, and revelator,' which is simply three names for one office, has been filled by Joseph, or the latter day work is a failure and a fraud. To translate the Book of Mormon he had to be all that that office implies. It is true he translated the Book of Mormon before he received his ordination, but that was because there was no one holding authority to ordain him till the church was organized. (He was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood in May, 1829. See O. Cowdery's letters, page 3, also Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pages 865-6; and Mill. Star, vol. 14, p. 15.—Ed.)

"Whitmer says Joseph was to have no other gift but to translate, but that does not agree with the Book of Mormon, for it says, after speaking of his translating the Book of Mormon:—'And again it shall come to pass that the Lord shall say unto him that shall read the words that shall be delivered unto him. . . . that Lebanon shall become a fruitful field,' etc.—p. 101. This evidently shows, that with his work of translating he should also prophecy. What good would it do for him to prophecy if the same was not published? We could not tell that Joseph ever translated the Book of Mormon (notwithstanding Whitmer's and others testimonies) if we had not those very prophecies in print so as to prove him a prophet, seer and revelator, and capable to do such work.

"Whitmer objects to Joseph being that 'choice seer.' I believe he was, but that has nothing to do in the case. The facts are, that 'choice seer' has been, is, or must in some future time, be in the church, hence that office must be in the church sometime. If it can be in the future, could not Joseph hold the office of a seer, even if not that 'choice seer?' Paul was a 'prophet, seer and revelator.' (See Galatians.) John the Revelator held that office. So did Peter.

"Whitmer objects to the word 'priesthood,' and says it should be authority. Priesthood is authority; but authority is not always priesthood. Priesthood is the only word that will express that kind of authority—that of priests. Paul in speaking on the subject of priesthood said that Christ was a 'Great High Priest,' and in Hebrews 3:4, says, 'No man taketh [present tense] this honor [high priesthood] unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron.' That shows me that God called men to that same office in Paul's day. Again; Hebrews 7:11, 12, Paul in speaking of the same matter says, that under the Levitical priesthood the people received the law of Moses, or of carnal commandments, by which perfection could not come. But the perfect law, the gospel law, was to be administered by another priesthood—the Melchisedec—to which Christ was ordained; and hence there was 'a change in the priesthood.' 'For,' said he, 'the priesthood being changed, there was made of necessity a change also of the law.' We know the law was changed, and can we not recognize the fact that the Melchisedec priesthood must accompany it? If we have no priesthood we have no authority.

"Read of 'the prodigal son' in Luke, chapter fifteen, and you may discover these facts. The 'certain man' is God; the 'house' is the kingdom of heaven on earth; the 'younger' son is the human family; the 'elder son' is the host of heaven, including Christ. 'Yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered.'—Heb. 5:8. The human family, through their agency, chose evil. Afterwards they returned to God, and the church or kingdom is established when 'the father meets him.' The 'best robe' given him denotes the highest order of priesthood, the Melchisedec, which extends into heaven, and is 'without beginning of days or end of years.' The 'robe' was always a sign of authority. See Matthew 27:28. The 'ring' is the seal of authority, or 'key of the kingdom of heaven.'—Matt. 16:19. See Esther 8:8, for seal of kingdom.

"The question next is whether one man, three men, or no man, should be at the head of the church on earth. Whitmer objects to the first two, and says, Christ is the only head. I find Christ is not the only head. God is Father, or head of all. Christ comes next, the Holy Ghost next, after that, 'apostles, prophets, evangelists,' or high priests, etc. Which should we recognize as head on earth? Christ is not here in person, so naturally we must have a head, for nothing can exist without a head.

"Whitmer does not want it said he is the head of his church, but nevertheless everything in his writings show that he is. More than that, he is the 'arm of flesh,' for they are all depending on him; and although he objects to the theory, yet if there is a question raised about important things, his followers, or those leaning that way, will go on long pilgrimages to see him and get his views. There is 'a head.' He is in fact their head.

"In the Jewish Christian church, were 'James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars.'—Gal. 2:9. They were the head. For further proof of this see John 21:15, 17, where Christ gives Peter special charge over the church; and Matt. 16:18, 19, where he gives Peter 'The keys of the kingdom of heaven.' This is considerable authority for one man to hold. Again; in Acts chapter fifteen we read of a question of doctrine arising which demanded authority to settle it, and they had to get the decision of the higher authorities, the head. This is not the way Whitmer says he would have them do. Each party should go to God for himself. But again, he says they will each get an answer according to the desire of his own heart! If so, he would be no better off! These ancient brethren had to send Barnabas and Paul up to the highest council in the church to get its decision. Now hear it. After Paul and Barnabas had explained the matter, James answered, saying: Men and brethren, harken unto me.—Acts 15:13. Next comes a reason for his judgment, and in verse 19 he says: 'Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them,' etc. Here is one man's 'sentence,' or decision. Will we accept this, or Mr. Whitmer's teaching?

"I wish to make a few remarks on changing revelations. Whitmer's book, on page 58, reads thus: 'For in them [the Book of Mormon], are all things written concerning my church, my gospel, and my rock.' Now read it carefully and see if you can find room, or use, for the Bible! And what about the rest of the books that are to come forth, if in the Book of Mormon 'are all things written concerning my church?' etc. Don't you think that needs 'changing?' Doesn't that sound like what the Book of Mormon says the Gentiles would say?—'a bible; a bible; we have got a bible, and we need no more bible.' Whitmer's quotation surely does not mean what it says; still he thinks he is right and wants it to stay so. In the other changes I see no harm done.

A man may make a mistake in giving a revelation; or the one who writes or copies it may make the error. Man is liable to error. All make mistakes..

[God says he will not suffer his prophet—one who is his mouthpiece to his people—to give more than one false revelation, for he will destroy him from the earth for that evil lest he should mislead his people. See Deut. 18:20; Ezek. 14:1-11; Jer. 28:15-17.—ED.]

"Mr. Whitmer says Joseph received a false revelation through the 'stone,' and when it was proven false he enquired through the 'stone' and the answer was: 'some revelations are of God, some revelations are of man, and some revelations are of the devil;' and that shortly afterwards he gave away the 'stone.' Perhaps it was best to give it away, if that is the way it did.

"Now who was at fault? Was it Joseph? or was it the stone? or was it the powers behind the veil? Read 1 Kings chapter 22. Here we find 'a lying spirit' coming directly from the councils of heaven and speaking falsely through about four hundred of God's prophets. [Ahab's prophets.—ED.]

"From this we see that God suffers false revelations to accomplish his designs against the wicked. Polygamy, possibly came in this way. Israel got a king in this manner. Paul said that, 'God shall send them a strong delusion that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.'—2 Thess. 2:11, 12.

"That Joseph was an erring man, at times, all admit. Peter lied and cursed, yet we accept his writings. Paul said that evil was always present with him, and that he might become a cast away. That choice Seer will be no better than some other mortals.

"The name of the church is another molehill magnified into a mountain. The Book of Mormon, page 471, says: 'Ye must take upon you the name of Christ.' That is right. In Acts, chapter 4, the high priests said to the apostles, 'By what name have ye done these things?' Peter answered and said: 'That by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, verse 10. And in verse 12, 'Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.' Now what name must we acknowledge or take? Christ? or Jesus Christ? I have as much faith in the Bible as I have in the Book of Mormon. I can not see why the church should not be called by the full name, 'Jesus Christ', which was and is his name. But in this Mr. Whitmer would 'make a man an offender for a word.' He strains at gnats and swallows camels. Do you not see he is guilty of the offense of teaching too little? He wants you to trust in the arm of flesh, (Whitmer), and not in the revelations of God. He speaks thus: 'If you believe my testimony to the Book of Mormon, then believe my testimony in this.' Would it not be just as well and as wise to say, 'If you believe Joseph Smith was sufficiently honored of God to bring forth the Book of Mormon, then believe that his testimony is as good, or better, than any one who might be called to 'witness' his work. But 'Jack wants to be better than his master.' J. M. STUBBART."

FAITH AND WORKS.

"FAITH without works is dead." No sect will object to the truth of this. But when we consider another text equally as true, as well as important, to be put in connection with this, possibly some difference may be seen in men's opinions of true and living faith.

Paul speaks of "dead works," (Heb. 6:1), as all may read. He speaks of the danger of "dead works." What are dead works? This is now the point to be discovered and settled. Dead works and a dead faith stand in opposition to the gospel in precept and practice, as I am now to show. There should be, and there is, a manifest and wide difference between the plain precepts and practices of all the popular sects that I am acquainted with, when compared with the simple method by which converts to Christ were made by those men that God sent to preach and baptize in his name.

I wish I could tell the whole substance of this gospel story in few words so that all may understand and do the works that the gospel enjoins in Acts 2:38. This answers the question by a God-sent man to those who asked "What shall we do." Not a word about coming to an "anxious seat;" but, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This was, and still is, the true gospel. None do, or dare, to preach this gospel but the ministry that God sends, lest they should be exposed as false prophets. For the Lord did not promise to go with any whom he did not send. It was, and still is, the Lord himself who works with his ministry, as is said in the written word, viz: "They went forth preaching every where, the Lord working with them with signs following." And as he promised to be with his ministry "even to the end of the world," no doubt but this promise holds good.

Here is the foundation that God has laid. Upon this we rest our unshaken faith. This is not a dead faith, but a "faith that works by love." This faith does not stand in "the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." The wisdom of men says that the age of miracles is past. And were only designed for the purpose of "establishing the gospel." But why should another gospel be established in flat contradiction to this? And this is the "everlasting gospel."

With astonishment we enquire of such wise men, who presume to preach another gospel, with other forms and ceremonies, while they deny the power of godliness which always accompanies the holy priesthood, how shall they escape the curse denounced upon them by the holy priesthood, or apostles.

Again; if there be but one faith that is genuine, and that the faith which was "first delivered to the Saints," and not to sinners or outsiders, then it follows as a logical sequence that the only true and living faith is the "gift of God," as it reads, namely, "By grace, through faith; which faith is the gift of God."

Faith is one of the spiritual gifts; as much so as the gift of prophecy. Faith is a principle of power in proportion to the measure that is possessed, if it be only as a grain of mustard seed. Hence Paul says of faith, "it is the substance of things hoped for."

No man who is in possession of the faith first delivered to the Saints will deny the power of godliness, or give credit to that kind of preaching which denies the ministration of angels in this generation.

J. S. COMSTOCK.

HERE is a fact that shows that the negroes of the South are making material gains. Late statistics of the states of Georgia, South Carolina and Louisiana indicate that since the war they pay taxes on $48,000,000. This is a cheering fact to patriots and Christians alike. Since the colored people have become citizens—a decided force in the politics of the country, it is of the utmost importance that they have a property interest in the communities where they are; and to good citizenship, thrift and economy and saving are needful, and to see progress in this direction among so many of those who are usually considered so improvident augurs favorably for the future improvement of the race. And as they acquire land and houses, they will be able to support schools and churches. Intelligence and religion with homes and real estate will elevate and fit them for advancing duties and responsibilities.

Selections.

CRIMES AND CRIMINALS.

WARDEN R. W. McClaughry of the Joliet Penitentiary, Illinois, recently addressed the association of Attorneys of Illinois, in regard to "Crimes and Criminals." His remarks were substantially as follows:

Your experience in the courts and in your practice has familiarized you with the great commercial criminal, with the accomplished and gentlemanly forger or confidence man, with the good-natured, benevolent, frequently pious counterfeiter or dealer in counterfeit money, with the shrewd horse-thief, with the cool, calculating burglar and safe-blower, with the daring highwayman, with the plain, common thief, with the "sneak-thief," with the impetuous unfortunate whom passion and whisky have brought to his down-fall, and the low and beastly despoiler of purity—with all these types you are familiar. But those of you who do not live in our large cities can scarcely be familiar with the meanest, most heartless, most unscrupulous, treacherous, pestiferous scoundrel in the whole catalogue of villains—the receiver of stolen goods, known as "the fence." He is well described by Dickens in his character of "Fagin." He does more to foster and encourage crime than those who commit the felonies. Careful estimates show that 90 per cent. of the average proceeds of robberies and larcenies go to these Fagins. Yet, owing to the peculiar nature of their business and the peculiarities of our criminal practice it is very difficult to secure the indictment of one of these villains, or, if indicted, to convict them. We greatly need a chapter of our criminal code framed for his especial benefit. In dealing with all these offenders the question must have often forced itself upon your minds, "What are we to do with our criminals?"

Statistics, carefully collated, show that there are nearly or quite half a million of them in the United States, and only about 50,000 of these in duration of any kind. We are further confronted with the startling fact that of this half million a little more than one-third are under twenty years of age, a little more than one-half under twenty-one, and something more than two-thirds under twenty-two. In our penitentiary at Joliet—and the same is true of Chester—where only felons are received, sixty-six per cent of last year's receipts were under thirty, and eighty-eight per cent under forty years of age. Thirteen and a quarter per cent were re-committed for from the second to the sixth term. At a meeting in Chicago to devise ways and means to rescue dependent boys and girls from ruin it was stated as a fact, on good authority, that within four years past over 4,000 boys between the ages of nine and fifteen years, or an average of over 1,000 a year, have been confined in the Cook county jail. You who are acquainted with such jails need not be told what breeding-places of criminals they are. It requires but a few days' residence in such a place for a boy to become thoroughly posted on every variety of crime. There the bad boy becomes worse, the comparatively good boy becomes thoroughly bad, and the lad imprisoned by mistake or for some unpremeditated folly or offense becomes contaminated and inoculated with crime as surely as he would with small-pox if, unprotected, he was confined in a small-pox hospital. These facts show that the army of criminals in this country is being recruited mainly from the young. In three States—taken as samples—Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New Hampshire, the percentage of increase of crime above that of the general population in fifty years has been 152. Add Illinois to the three States just named, and in the four the percentage of increase of crime above that of the general population for the last thirty years is 104. One of the most reliable statisticians, from whom these figures are obtained, gives it as his opinion, "that there are more than one-third more convictions in the entire country in proportion to the population than there were twenty years ago, at the close of the war."

Do not these facts raise the presumption if they do not prove that there is something defective in our present method of dealing with crime? Do they not tend to prove that punishment in our common legal acceptance of that term, and as it is applied by our courts, is not deterrent, as it should be, as our laws intend it to be, and as, perhaps, it once was?

A prominent and very worthy gentleman was not long since visiting one of our penitentiaries. He wanted to see and talk with a prisoner upon whom steady discipline had produced a reformatory effect, and was referred by the Warden to a prisoner whom he considered a shining example. His record was perfect as regards conduct and faithfulness to prison duties. An interview was granted. "How do you employ your mind during your leisure hours?" asked the visitor.

Said the prisoner: "I review my past life and try to discover what mistakes I have made, so that I may not repeat them when I go out."

"I am delighted," said the visitor, "with such evidence of your reformation. Self-examination is at the basis of all growth in moral and Christian character. Now will you be kind enough to describe particularly the exercises of your mind."

"O, yes," said the prisoner. "I was first detected, arrested, and convicted because I got drunk. I have resolved to drink no more. My next conviction was because I had a confederate and he gave me away. I shall enter into no more partnerships. The third time I trusted my secret to a woman. I shall not fall into that trap again. By sticking to these resolutions I think I shall not be caught and caged again."

Now, I must not be understood as asserting or even intimating that genuine reformation does not take place in a penitentiary. I am glad to bear testimony to the contrary. I could probably name men in every county which is here represented who, though they have served a term in prison, are now leading sober, honest, useful lives. Of the causes of crime there may be named idleness, ignorance, whisky—with all the forms of dissipation that accompany or flow from its use, gambling, lack of home and home influence—dime novel literature, lack of industrial training, of family government.

And as to the cure, it is the opinion of the best authorities that the State should assume control of all young persons under fourteen who are without proper guardianship. That it should delegate the guardianship of such children either to individuals of known fitness, who undertake to adopt them into a family, or to corporate bodies selected by citizens, who undertake the charge of them in home institutions, industrial schools, etc. The State, while delegating parental authority to such persons or bodies, to lay down the conditions which are to be fulfilled by them and exercise such inspection as is necessary. All industrial schools, by whatever name called, to be required to develop so far as possible the conditions of a home. Let such institutions be small, let them be located in the country, let their work be to develop these children into self-supporting young men and women and find places for them. To all objections that may be raised against the cost of this proposed system it may be replied that it is cheaper by far than catching, convicting, and punishing the criminals or caring for the paupers or vagabonds that these boys and girls will make unless cared for. Let the punishment not only "fit the crime," but let it follow promptly the commission of the crime. If it could be arranged that in criminal cases, when an appeal is taken to the higher courts, all other business could be "side-tracked," so to speak, until the appeal is heard and decided, much of the moral effect of such decisions—which is also the deterrent effect—that is now dissipated and wasted by "the law's delay" would be saved for the benefit and protection of society. Let every valid reason for delay be considered and allowed its full weight, but let it be understood that in the matter of punishing crime the State, to use a slang term, "always mean business."

It having been determined by the statutes that a certain number of convictions shall constitute a man an habitual incorrigible, he shall, after reaching that point, receive a life sentence. For the second class a maximum and minimum sentence is recommended, with authority vested somewhere to release or parole after minimum sentence has been served and before the maximum is completed. For the third class—the first offender, the accidental criminal—is recommended the indeterminate sentence, with authority to release on parole or absolutely, according to the tests of labor, rigid disciplipline, and education makes manifest to the authorities what manner of man he is, and how much training he needs to fit him for becoming a useful instead of useless citizen. But no prisoner can be released on parole, or in any other manner, until, before he is released, employment outside has been secured for him with reputable people. Now it is further proposed that the authority to thus parole or release, conditionally or unconditionally be vested in a special judge or court, constituted by law for that purpose. That will divest the plan of all objectionable political features. It is further proposed to secure uniform legislation upon this subject in the different States, so that the record of conviction in one State can be used as evidence in another in determining to which of these classes a convicted criminal belongs, and thus determining his punishment.

It is my deliberate conviction that a fixed sentence for one year is a wrong both to the prisoner and the community. In the great majority of cases society is not protected by it, the prisoner is not benefited by it. He is disgraced as much as he would be by a longer sentence, and is, too often, only confirmed and hardened by the short term. Now, if he comes under an indeterminate sentence, knowing that it is possible for him to work his way out in a little more than one year, but that it is also possible that he may be held for twenty years, and very probable unless he comes up to a required standard in labor, obedience, education, and general manliness of conduct, you can easily understand how he will, from the start, address himself to all those things that go to make up a character which will entitle him to release at the earliest day possible. What are called the Elmira system in New York and the parole system in Ohio are based upon the idea of the indeterminate sentence. Each has some excellent features, and some, perhaps, that would not suit in this State. I am not wedded to any particular plan or system, but I am profoundly convinced that our own beloved State needs some better system than she now has for dealing with her criminal classes.

A LITTLE TALK WITH BOYS.

WHEN I meet you everywhere, boys—on the street, in the cars, on the boat, at your homes, or at school—I see a great many things in you to admire. You are earnest, you are merry, you are full of happy life, you are quick at your lessons, you are patriotic, you are brave, and are ready to study out all the great and curious things in this wonderful world of ours.

But very often I find one great thing lacking in you. You are not quite gentlemanly enough. There are so many little actions which help to make a true gentleman, and which I do not see in you.

Sometimes when mother or sister comes in where you are sitting on the most comfortable chair, you do not jump up and say, "Take this seat, mother," or "Sit here, Annie," but you sit still and enjoy it yourself. Sometimes you push past your mother or sister, in the doorway from one room to another, instead of stepping aside politely for her to pass first. Perhaps you say "the governor" in speaking of your father; and when he comes in at night you forget to say "Good evening, sir." Sometimes when mother has been shopping, and passes you on the corner carrying a parcel, you do not step up and say, "Let me carry that for you, mother," but keep on playing with the other boys. Sometimes when mother or sister is doing something for you, you call out, "Come, hurry up!" just as if you were speaking to one of your boy companions. Sometimes when you are rushing out to play, and meet a lady friend of your mother's just coming in at the door, you do not lift your cap from your head, or wait a moment till she has passed in.

Such "little" things, do you say? Yes, to be sure; but it is these very little acts—these gentle acts—which make gentlemen. I think the word gentleman is a beautiful word. First, man—and that means everything strong and brave and noble: and then gentle. And that means full of these thoughtful acts of which I have been speaking. A gentleman! Every boy may be one if he will. Whenever I see a gentleman I feel so glad and proud! I met one the other day and have been happier ever since.—Selected.

CATHOLICISM.

SHALL the Romish religion secure the ascendancy in the United States? Some have thought so from its boasted progress during the last fifty years. But it must be remembered that, though on the surface there are vast gains, underneath influences are at work producing great losses. A late number of The Catholic Standard while rejoicing in the marked advance of its church in membership, position, institutions and aggressive agencies, yet acknowledges that neither the present nor the future warrants the claims made for it as the coming dominant religious body in our land. It rests its judgment upon the following counteractive forces:

"The first of these is the constantly occurring losses which the church suffers from the falling away from the faith, and still more from the practice of the Catholic religion of large numbers of the laity. Mixed marriages, the public schools, intemperance, evil associations, too close intimacies with Protestants, indifferentists and skeptics, too absorbing interest in secular pursuits, and other influences and instrumentalities which the world and the devil know only too well how to employ, constantly draw many heads of families away from the practice of their religion, and this results in countless instances in loss of faith on the part of their children.

Then, too, it is to be borne in mind that immigration which did so much in past years to build up the church in the United States, no longer furnishes so vast an annual accession to the numerical increase of the church as it did in former years. Its volume, in proportion to the annual increase of the native-born population, has diminished. Moreover the proportion of Catholic to non-Catholic immigrants has also greatly decreased.

"Then, too, we fail to see any indications of a really favorable change in the position of the non-Catholic public as respects the Catholic religion."

These admissions speak volumes. They are a cheering revelation. They assure us that if Protestants are true to their mission and opportunity there is nothing to fear in the way of the supremacy of Roman Catholicism. With a pure and aggressive Christianity, a free school, an open Bible and a Christian civilization operative, and a decreasing immigration, Rome will lose almost fast as she gains.—Presbyterian Observer.

Miscellaneous.

BORN.

KIRKENDALL.—December 15th, 1887, to Bro. and Sr. A. B. Kirkendall, Creole, Ohio, a son; named Rothbe H. Blessed December 30th, by Bro. T. J. Beatty.

MARRIED.

EDWARDS—MACKENZIE—At No. 275, High street, Providence, Rhode Island, on Christmas Day, 1887, Elder Edward O. Toombs officiating, Bro. James L. Edwards of Philadelphia to sister Jane Mackenzie of Providence.

DIED.

CAMPBELL.—Sister Agnes Campbell, January 5th, 1888, near Sedalia, Missouri, of heart disease, and paralysis. At the time of her death she was on a visit to her daughter. She was brought to her late home, near Camp Creek, ten miles south of Nebraska City, Nebraska. She was born August 25th, 1821, in Scotland, united with the church in her native country when young, came to Nebraska in 1855, and renewed her covenant with God by baptism under the hands of John Jameison, September 16th, 1863 at Camp Creek, and united with the branch at Nebraska City, October 3d, 1876. Her age was 67 years, 4 months and 11 days. Thus has passed away a loving mother and a Saint of God. She was beloved by all who knew her. She leaves five children, all married, three girls and two boys. The funeral sermon was preached by J. Armstrong, assisted by P. C. Peterson, in the United Brethren church, near her late residence. A large audience of friends and mourners were present and followed her remains to their resting place in the Lee's Cemetery, by the side of those of her husband whom she survived but one year and three days. Her Spirit is at rest, and the body awaits the morn of the first resurrection.

BOYCE.—At Lake Station, Clair county, Michigan, December the 19th, 1887, Bro. Foster H. Boyce. He was born March the 1st, 1833, county of Whilby, Ontario, and was baptized and confirmed April 1st, 1882, in East Tilbery, county Kent, Ontario, by Gordon E. Deuel. He leaves a wife and two daughters to mourn his death. Funeral sermon by Elder John Shippy.

BEST.—Near Beaumont, San Bernardino county, California, January 5th, 1888, Arthur L., son of brother Newton and sister Annie Best, aged 14 years, 3 months and 6 days. A bright and promising boy, called suddenly away. Funeral sermon was preached at the residence, January 7th, by Elder Heman C. Smith, to a large gathering of relatives and sympathizing friends.

TO CHEYENNE VIA THE C. B. & Q. R. R.

By a recent extension of the Burlington Route, a new, direct and first-class line is now opened to the public from Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis to Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory. Trains, from the points mentioned, for the entire distance to Cheyenne are under Burlington Route management, the Burlington being the only line with its own track between Chicago, Peoria or St. Louis and Cheyenne. "The Burlington's number One" of the Burlington Route fast train service, which leaves Chicago for Denver via Omaha at noon, daily, carries through sleeping cars from Chicago for Cheyenne. This through sleeping car arrives at Cheyenne at midnight the second day after leaving Chicago, but passengers are allowed to remain in it until breakfast time. The train carrying the Cheyenne sleeper connects with the C. B. & Q. daily trains leaving Peoria in the afternoon and St. Louis in the morning.

Note that the Burlington Route is the only line running sleeping cars from Chicago to Cheyenne without change, and see that your ticket to Cheyenne reads via the C. B. & Q. R. R. It can be obtained of any coupon ticket agent of its own or connecting lines, or by addressing PAUL MORTON, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago Ill.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

A conference of the Nodaway district will be held in the Union church, near Long Branch, Nodaway county, Missouri, the 25th and 26th of February, 1888. We trust all will attend who can.
JAMES THOMAS, Dist. Pres.

The conference of the Tennessee and Kentucky district is hereby changed from Foundry Hill to Eagle Creek, and will commence on the second Sunday in March, 1888.
P. B. SEATON, Pres. of Dist.

Conference of the South-Eastern Ohio and West Virginia district will be held at Limerick, Jackson county, Ohio, March 17th and 18th, 1888. I have been appointed Bishop's agent for this district, and we are behind in financial interests. I hope the branches will respond at or before the conference, that we may get the books straight and come out ahead if possible—this being our first year on tithing. Saints, come prepared that we may have a good meeting.
T. J. BEATTY, Dist. Pres.

The conference of the Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin district will convene at Plano, Illinois, February 25th and 26th. Full reports and representation is solicited.
F. M. COOPER, Dist. Pres.

NOTICES.

Beware of him! George Brush left his wife in Kentucky, went to Tennessee, married another woman and with her left for the west, perhaps Texas or Kansas. He holds a certificate of baptism signed by P. B. Seaton.

Wanted to know the whereabouts of James and George Huse. When last heard from they were in Iowa. Also, Margaret Crow, wife of Charles Crow. When last heard from she was in Illinois. Any one that can give information of these parties will confer a great favor by addressing Mrs. Sarah A. Karr, Cameron, Marshall county, West Virginia.

IOWA AND MISSOURI.

The last quarterly reports from the missionaries in this field will become due about March 15th. In making these reports out and sending them in, I trust the brethren will be prompt, and fully comply with the published request of last May. If you can keep the field for another year, and are willing to do so, state it in your report, naming the field you prefer, if any. State what will be required to support your family, together with the number who are actually dependent upon you. Most of the missionaries have reported faithfully, but a few have failed. These reports need not, and should not, be lengthy. Report what you have done, whether it be little or much, in a plain and pointed way. I trust the brethren will strive to be faithful and conscientious in the performance of this, as well as all other duties with which they have been entrusted by the Church of God.

JOSEPH R. LABBERT,
Missionary in charge.

A CURE FOR GOSSIP.

WHAT is a cure for gossip? Culture. There is a great deal of gossip that has no malignity in it. Good natured people talk about their neighbors because, and only because, they have nothing else to talk about. As I write, there come to me the pictures of different young ladies. I have seen them at home; have met them at the library; coming to and from the bookstore with a fresh volume in their hands. They are full of what they have seen and read. They are brimming with questions. One topic of conversation is dropped only to give place to another in which they are interested. They are interested in art; love to talk about a water color sketch, or a new piece of music just learned.

After a delightful hour with such women one feels stimulated and refreshed, and during the whole evening or hour, as it may be, not a neighbor's garment was soiled by so much as a touch. They had something to talk about. They knew something and were anxious to know more. They had no temptation to gossip because the doings of their neighbors formed a subject very much less interesting than those which grew out of their knowledge and their culture. There are neighborhoods in which it rages like an epidemic. Churches are split in pieces by it; neighbors are made enemies by it for life. The cure is not difficult. We have agricultural papers, religious, scientific, political papers, devoted to every interest, great and small. Surely if reading is a cure (certainly a help) there is food for all tastes in this direction. With the mind and brain bankrupt for the want of something to busy one's self with—about these spring up the temptation to gossip; and there is such a thing as it becoming chronic—practically incurable. Let the young, those just starting in life, beware of it.

A COLOSSUS OF PHARAOH.

THE Egyptian Exploration Fund Society has presented the Boston Museum of Fine Arts with a valuable colossus of Rameses II, Biblically known as the Pharaoh that compelled the Israelites to build the treasure cities of Pithom and Rameses. This colossus was disclosed by Mr. Griffith at Nebesheh which is a few miles distant from Tanis (the Biblical Zoan) and overlooks the "fields of Zoan" where the "wonders" occurred. The colossus, placed at the entrance to the Egyptian Room from the main hall, is the most striking object of the Egyptian antiquities. It is the only colossus of Rameses II in the United States, and the only regret is that a portion of the nose should be wanting.

BIBLE TERMS.

Readers of the Bible will be interested in the following explanation of expressions frequently met with in the Holy Scriptures. They are believed to be entirely correct: A day's journey was 33 and 1-5 miles. A Sabbath day's journey was about one English mile. Ezekiel's reed was 11 feet, nearly. A cubit is 22 inches, nearly. A finger's breadth is equal to one inch. A shekel of silver was about 50 cents. A shekel of gold was $8.09. A talent of silver was $1,518.32. A talent of gold was $23,309. A piece of silver, or a penny, was 13 cents. A farthing was 3 cents. A gerah was 2 cents. A mite was 1½ cents. A homer contained 76 gallons and 5 pints. An ephah, or bath, contained 7 gallons and 4 pints. A hin was 1 gallon, 2 pints. A firkin was 7 pints. An omer was 6 pints. A cab was 3 pints. A log was one-half pint.

DAVID WHITMER'S SPECIAL WORK.

MR. GEORGE SCHWEICH, grandson of the late David Whitmer, of Richmond, Missouri, sent us for publication in the Herald an article printed in the Richmond Democrat of the 26th ult., in respect to the birth, life and death of his grandfather, including a statement of his belief in and his testimony to the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and consequently to the seeric, revelating, and translating powers bestowed of God upon Joseph Smith. This will be found in another place in to-day's issue.

With joy we accept this last testimony of David Whitmer as a "witness" to the divinity of the Book of Mormon and to the divine endowments conferred upon Joseph Smith, and we revere his memory for the faithfulness with which he maintained that testimony; but it does not follow by any means that, because he was thus honored of God, and because he continued firm and consistent in that testimony, that we must accept all his opinions, and endorse his judgment and his ministrations in respect to church doctrine, prophecy, and church government, and allow they were always good or infallible.

His most unhappy endorsement of the revelations and administrations of Wm. E. McLellin when seeking to build up the church in 1846-8; his baptism, and his ordination at the hands of Wm. E. McLellin in September, 1847, to be the successor of Joseph Smith the Seer in all the offices, callings and powers said to have been conferred upon the Seer according to the Doctrine and Covenants, testify sharply against the correctness of his judgment in respect to doctrine, church building, and the purity and divinity of spiritual pretensions, and prove it very faulty. The reason for this want of spiritual discernment and this great mistake and misstep, we should not impute to dishonest motives, nor to unworthy intentions, but to his having been moved by ambitious, unwise men's advice; to a "zeal without knowledge;" to a misdirected desire to do a work and to fill positions to which the Lord had not called him, all of which this made possible and very alluring by his past prejudices against the revelations and ministrations of the Seer; also by the terrible trials, persecutions, internal heresies, dissensions, strifes and misunderstandings that had previously afflicted the church. He knew that the Book of Mormon was divine. He knew that God had made Joseph Smith his seer, translator and revelator. And this very knowledge, coupled with his sincere desires and conscientious intentions made it possible for Wm. E. McLellin and others to deceive and mislead him. And that he erred, and confessed it, is made doubly sure by the fact that, after 1847-8, he utterly repudiated the work of Wm. E. McLellin—his revelations and ordinations—which he had previously accepted, endorsed, and submitted to. All this was done when David Whitmer was about forty-three years of age, and in the full flow of life and intellectual vigor.

His judgment in respect to church building, his interpretations of revelation and prophecy, and his opinions as to his being called to set the church in order and preside over it instead of Joseph the Seer, having all proved faulty and delusive, himself afterward being a witness of that fact, who can now, in the late years of his decrepitude, dotage and feeble memory, rely on his opinions and his judgment in these same matters! And may it not be, that God suffered David Whitmer to be blindly and grossly misled by ambitious enthusiasts as a reproof and a rebuke for his rejection and desertion of Joseph the Seer whom God had endorsed and approved to him by His angel, His Spirit, and by His own voice from heaven! It is a grievous thing to reject, abandon, or oppose the Lord's anointed. Joseph, by reason of his peculiar position and calling, needed the constant aid, watchcare, faith and forbearance of the "three witnesses," (Doc. Cov. 15:2), and when they forsook him, that gave great occasion to the enemy everywhere to oppose. And further, may it not be that God suffered David Whitmer to be openly misled as before indicated lest the Saints should "trust in an arm of flesh" and reject the order of God for the government of the church set forth in the revelations of His Seer and revelator, Joseph Smith! God said of such to His ancient seers: "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me."—1 Sam. 8:7. And yet we believe the Allwise God will overrule all this for final good.

Some may think us out of place in mentioning these matters, ^{How} that the patriarch is dead. But the salvation of souls, the peace and integrity of "the church of the Lamb of God," alike demand that the watchmen of Zion be fully awake to the evils of dissension and division; warn the flock of dangerous and misleading paths, and point them to the safe and shining way marked out by the unerring word of God, and to the further fact that every one should learn their own duty, stand in their own office and calling, and not seek the place nor work of others. David Whitmer, during the past nearly sixty years, has testified that both God and angels, amid the blaze of day, in the seclusion of the quiet forest, testified to him, in June, 1829, that the Book of Mormon is true, and that Joseph Smith, by divine gifts constituting him a seer, revelator and translator, had translated that book by the power of God. Here, then, is a solid basis on which to further build. We now turn to that book and learn what it says as to the special and peculiar callings, missions, and differing work appointed of God to both Joseph Smith and David Whitmer; and when we do this, it will not be difficult for unprejudiced minds to clearly discern the very different duties assigned to these men, learn also whose views and counsels relative to church building it is safest to follow, and whose interpretations of prophecy, whose instructions on doctrine, and whose professed revelations from God it is safest to endorse and observe. Here is what the Lord says of these matters by the prophet Nephi:

"And it shall come to pass, that the Lord God shall bring forth unto you the words of a book, and they shall be the words of them which have slumbered. And behold the book shall be sealed; and in the book shall be a revelation from God, from the beginning of the world, to the ending thereof. Wherefore, because of the things which are sealed up, the things which are sealed, shall not be delivered in the day of the wickedness and abomination of the people. Wherefore the book shall be kept from them. But the book shall be delivered unto a man, [Joseph the Seer], and he shall deliver the words of the book, which are the words of those who have slumbered in the dust; and he shall deliver these words unto another; but the words which are sealed he shall not deliver, neither shall he deliver the book. For the book shall be sealed by the power of God, and the revelation which was sealed shall be kept in the book until the own due time of the Lord, that they may come forth; for, behold they reveal all things from the foundation of the world unto the end thereof. And the day cometh that the words of the book which were sealed, shall be read upon the housetops; and they shall be read by the power of Christ; and all things shall be revealed unto the children of men which ever have been among the children of men, and which ever will be, even unto the end of the earth. Wherefore, at that day when the book shall be delivered unto the man of whom I have spoken, the book shall be hid from the eyes of the world, that the eyes of none shall behold it, save it be that three witnesses shall behold it, by the power of God, besides him to whom the book shall be delivered; and they shall testify to the truth of the book and the things therein. And there is none other which shall view it, save it be a few, according to the will of God, to bear testimony of his word unto the children of men; for the Lord God hath said, that the words of the faithful should speak as if it were from the dead. Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to bring forth the words of the book; and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good, will he establish his word; and wo be unto him that rejecteth the word of God.

"But behold, it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall say unto him to whom He shall deliver the book, Take these words which are not sealed, and deliver them to another, that he may shew them unto the learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee. And the learned shall say, Bring hither the book, and I will read them; and now, because of the glory of the world, and to get gain, will they say this, and not for the glory of God. And the man shall say, I can not bring the book, for it is sealed. Then shall the learned say, I can not read it. Wherefore it shall come to pass, that the Lord God will deliver again the book and the words thereof, to him that is not learned; and the man that is not learned shall say, I am not learned. Then shall the Lord God say unto him, The learned shall not read them, for they have rejected them, and I am able to do mine own work; wherefore thou shalt read the words which I shall give unto thee. Touch not the things which are sealed, for I will bring them forth in mine own due time; for I will show unto the children of men, that I am able to do mine own work. Wherefore, when thou hast read the words which I have commanded thee, and obtained the witnesses which I have promised unto thee, then shalt thou seal up the book again, and hide it up unto me, that I may preserve the words which thou hast not read, until I shall see fit in mine own wisdom, to reveal all things unto the children of men. For behold I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will shew unto the world that I am the same yesterday, to-day and forever; and I work not among the children of men, save it be according to their faith.

"And again it shall come to pass, that the Lord shall say unto him that shall read the words that shall be delivered him, Forasmuch as this people draw near unto me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear towards me is taught by the precepts of men, therefore, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people; yea, a marvelous work, and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid. And wo unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord. And their works are in the dark; and they say, Who seeth us; and who knoweth us? And they also say, Surely, your turning of things upside down, shall be esteemed as the potter's clay. But behold, I will shew unto them, saith the Lord of hosts, that I know all their works. For shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? Or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding? But behold, saith the Lord of hosts, I will shew unto the children of men, that it is not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field; and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest. And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book; and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness: and the meek also shall increase, and their joy shall be in the Lord; and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. For assuredly as the Lord liveth, they shall see that the terrible one is brought to nought, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off; and they that make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought. Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale. But when he seeth his children, the work of my hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel. They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine."—2 Nephi 11:17, 18 19.

This extract proves that God would begin and carry forward the work of revealing and delivering the plates to the man "not learned"—Joseph Smith,—giving him instruction by revelation, "line upon line, line upon line," authorizing him to obtain "the witnesses" promised, explaining to him the fact of and the reason for the work He was then introducing, declaring it to be "a marvellous work and a wonder," and promising that it should be "not a very little while" after these things should occur until "Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field." In all these matters the man "not learned" was to be the chief actor as God's servant, while the "three" are known only as those who should know of the truth of the plates and their translation by the power of God given to Joseph Smith and testify publicly to the same.

This identification of the work of Joseph the Seer as the first and the principal actor in the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the founding and establishing of the Lord's "marvellous work and a wonder," and this pointing out of the other and subordinate work of the "three witnesses"—of whom David Whitmer became one—is so distinct, and so very plain, that none should confound them together, nor think for one moment that the Lord intended David Whitmer to ever have similar authority or perform similar duties to those He conferred upon Joseph Smith.

If the reader will now turn to 2 Nephi 2:2, 3, 4; 12:12, 13, 14; Book of Nephi 9:11, 12; with Ether 1:11, 12, and 2:1, he will readily perceive further the nature and magnitude of the work begun in and by the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and he will also perceive the fact, that Joseph the Seer, the translator of the book, was the first, the chief, and beyond all comparison, the leading authorized and appointed servant of God in founding and carrying forward that work; and he will further perceive that the person next in importance to the Seer in that work was "the spokesman," (2 Nephi 2:3, with Doc. Cov. 27:1, 2), who was Oliver Cowdery. The written history of the church shows that Elder Cowdery was "the second elder" and the "Aaron" of the church from the first, both in respect to calling, authority, and work, also that he remained faithful and in accord with Joseph the Seer up to the grievous internal, as well as outside troubles, of 1837-8, as his own authentic writings also fully prove. These predicted trials shook many, and removed some.

It is now proper to introduce the very revelation, given through Joseph the Seer, by which Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris obtained permission to become the "three witnesses" mentioned in the Book of Mormon. And it should be noted also that the only conditions upon which they could become such witnesses, was, that they "must rely," "with full purpose of heart," upon the revelations of God given through the Seer. And it should be further noted, that if they exercised that essential faith, and thereby attain "a view of the plates," etc, and bore a faithful testimony thereof, that then, on these conditions, the Lord covenanted to so keep them that "the gates of hell" should "not prevail against" them, and that the "grace" of God should be "sufficient for" them; or, in other words, that God would, however they might be tempted, tried, and sifted, lift them "up at the last day." Here is the revelation:

"Revelation given to Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris, June, 1829, given previous to their viewing the plates containing the Book of Mormon.

"1. Behold, I say unto you, that you must rely upon my word, which if you do, with full purpose of heart, you shall have a view of the plates, and also of the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, which were given to the brother of Jared upon the mount, when he talked with the Lord face to face, and the miraculous directors which were given to Lehi while in the wilderness, on the borders of the Red Sea; and it is by your faith that you shall obtain a view of them, even by that faith which was had by the prophets of old.

"2. And after that you have obtained faith, and have seen them with your eyes, you shall testify of them, by the power of God; and this you shall do that my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., may not be destroyed, that I may bring about my righteous purposes unto the children of men, in this work. And ye shall testify that you have seen them, even as my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., has seen them, for it is by my power that he hath seen them, and it is because he hath faith; and he has translated the book, even that part which I have commanded him, and as your Lord and your God liveth, it is true.

"3. Wherefore you have received the same power, and the same faith, and the same gift like unto him; and if you do these last commandments of mine, which I have given you, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; for my grace is sufficient for you; and you shall be lifted up at the last day. And I, Jesus Christ, your Lord and your God, have spoken it unto you, that I might bring about my righteous purposes unto the children of men. Amen."—Doc. Cov., Sec. 15.

These "three witnesses" remained faithful to their testimony, as found in the preface of the Book of Mormon during their lives and up to their dying moments. Oliver Cowdery died in the midst of his family and friends at Richmond, Missouri, in 1850. Martin Harris died at Clarkston, Cache county, Utah, July 10th, 1875, at the residence of his son, Martin Jr., aged 92 years, 1 month and 22 days; and David Whitmer died at his own home in Richmond, Missouri, January 25th, 1888, aged 83 years and 20 days.

Oliver Cowdery, when the gloom of death was gathering about him, called for his family and kindred to come and bring him a Book of Mormon, and when bolstered up in bed he read from its pages select passages, testified of its divinity, exhorted all to faithfulness if they would meet him in peace in the world to come, and so passed away into the presence of that God who called him to be a "witness" and to be a minister for Christ. Martin Harris, crowned with over ninety-two years of earth-life, dying of old age, begs to have a copy of the Book of Mormon placed within his hand when folded on his silent breast and have it thus buried with his mortal remains. David Whitmer, when "life's fitful fever" was near its close, called his family, kindred and friends to his peaceful couch and then ardently reaffirmed, as in the sight of God and angels and men, that his former testimony to the divinity to the Book of Mormon was yea, and amen. These "three witnesses" proved faithful to that divinely imposed trust. Whatever their foibles, errors, mistakes or weaknesses may have been, let their memory be precious with all the Saints of God. Let their names be ever held and mentioned in honorable remembrance. By their testimony the Book of Mormon will gain credence, will be read and endorsed, and will dispel doubts and darkness from the souls of hosts of earth's children, pointing them upward to that heavenly city whose builder and maker is God, whose light is the glory of God and the Lamb, where "God shall wipe away all tears" from the eyes of his people, and where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

The wonderful record of which they bore such faithful, undeviating testimony, came forth in fulfillment of prophecy; came forth by the power of God manifest to and through a "young man," one "not learned;" it reaffirms the divinity of Christ; it endorses and supports the Bible; it aids in introducing "the dispensation of the fulness of times"—God's "marvelous work and a wonder." The "three witnesses" were honored instruments connected with the founding of that work; therefore we say again, let their memory ever be held dear and sacred by the faithful Saints of God.

NEW PRESS NEEDED.

THE Board of Publication has felt the need for a few years past of having a new press. The chief reason for this lies in the fact that one of the presses, that upon which the HERALD and a great amount and variety of matter has been printed during the past twenty years, is becoming worn, defective, and unreliable. The rapidly increasing demands of the office require that the presses be found equal to its present and future needs, and to effect this, prompt aid must be given by our patrons, and especially by those in arrears for church publications, whether books, papers, or anything else. The Board therefore, by its President and Business Manager, requests all who are in arrears to forward at once what they owe the office, also that all others pay in advance for the papers if possible, according to advertised terms, and to remit by Post Office Order, Express Money Order, draft on Chicago banks, or by registered letter—and not by Postal Notes, for they are not safe—directing all to David Dancer, box 82, Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa. Please let there be no unnecessary delay in this matter, for the Board, confident that its patrons will readily lend their aid to this needed work, will proceed at once to purchase the press, relying on them for immediate compliance with this urgent and pressing call. Send up your money—and send at once.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH wrote us from San Francisco, California, the 28th, ult., that he was to preach in that city the 29th inst., and the Sunday following in the city of Oakland.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert has been preaching of late at St. Joseph, Clarksdale, and Pleasant Grove, Missouri. Unfavorable weather had hindered some, but good meetings and fair interest in those places are reported by both Bro. Lambert and others. Bro. J. F. McDowell is now at St. Joseph, engaged as superintendent for the society of organized Charities of that city, also preaching as he can.

By recent letter from Bro. J. R. Anderson we learn that Elder A. H. Smith is in Becker county, Minnesota, preaching, and that the weather has been so bad that his efforts have been limited. Nevertheless, his work is well received and good is resulting. Bro. Anderson says, "the work is onward up here."

Bro. O. O. Bean, of Van Horn, Iowa, in a recent letter, commends the church publication very highly. He is to take charge of the yards of the C. M. and St. Paul at Ottumwa this winter, and wishes to meet with Saints living in or near there.

Bro. J. T. Williams wrote from South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, the 30th ult., renews for the HERALD, and expresses deep interest in the welfare and progress of the church.

Sr. E. H. Hillman, of Adams, Nebraska, requests the prayers of the Saints for herself and family.

In his letter of the 1st inst., Bro. J. H. Cameron, of Kenosha, Wisconsin, bears witness of many testimonies he has had in proof of the gospel taught by the Saints and says "he would not exchange that knowledge for the whole world."

Bro. J. J. Cornish wrote from Bay Port, Michigan, the 31st ult., saying that in that region "there is a great desire to hear the truth," also that one had just been baptized at Caseville. A previous letter reports how a cowardly, crafty Rev. Sims refused to discuss with Bro. Cornish at a time and place mutually agreed upon, and how he induced Bro. Cornish to go into a discussion after, among Catholic opposers where he took occasion to slander, revile, and defoul Joseph the Seer and the Saints, paying little or no attention to the questions at issue. We would gladly publish the letter entire, but that, with many others, is crowded out for want of room in our columns. And here we would again suggest, that those who contribute either letters or articles, should make them as pointed, plain, and brief, as attending circumstances will permit.

Bro. Arthur Allen writes of late from Kansas City, Missouri, that Bro. St. Clair had recently held a debate with a gentlemanly opponent named Peter Otto, and that Bro. St. Clair proved to be an able defender of the faith.

Under date of January 24th, Bro. John Smith wrote us from Seneca, Illinois, that he and Bro. Walters from Gardner, had settled there, and should try and establish a branch there. Bro. Smith is a new member, but feels in high spirits. They had held meeting the previous Sunday with fair results. We regret lack of space to print his letter entire. Write again, Bro. Smith. We hope the Mission Saints, north of you a few miles, will hunt you up and aid you in church work.

Bro. T. W. Sherrill writes encouragingly from Peoria, Hill county, Texas. Bro. Nunley had been there in December, baptized one, and others are investigating. He is circulating the Voice of Warning, and now sends for the "Cowdery Letters" to use in the same way.

Bro. E. Marshall wrote us from Lone Rock, Missouri, the 23d ult. expressing his confidence in the church, his determination to be faithful to God, and his ardent desires to be ready to meet Christ at his glorious appearing. He thinks "Autumn Leaves" is excellent.

Bro. E. C. Briggs wrote of late that he intended to attend the conference on Cape Cod. He also had procured subscribers for church publications and forwarded to this office—a very commendable act—for which we thank him. He writes that "all is well," and says his address while he remains in the east will be 46, Waverly street, Providence, Rhode Island.

Bro. C. A. Bishop, of Independence, Missouri, says in a late letter: "The Herald is a welcome visitor. I have taken it twenty-five years." He says they are pressing forward building the new church steadily, and that excellent meetings abound with them, and that the church is growing in as uprising manner there and elsewhere.

Sr. Julia A. Waugman wrote of late from Watsonville, California, that she was deeply interested in the church papers." Also that she intends to remove to Los Angeles.

Sr. Mary A. Leeson wrote us January 28th, from Big Springs, West Virginia, that Bro. L. R. Devore had baptized and confirmed seven at that place, had then gone to baptize others; prejudice was giving way to truth, and many were now seeking for gospel light.

Bro. A. J. Layland writes that himself and family are the only members of the church at Montpelier, Bear Lake county, Idaho, but that they nevertheless feel cheerful and hopeful.

Bro. R. W. Hugill of Five Lakes, Michigan, wrote for church publications January 23d, and says: "The work is moving in this place—five baptized lately and more are almost ready.

Bro. T. N. Fields, of Mt. Vernon, Oregon, in a late letter renews for HERALD and says he preaches when he can, but is hindered much.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Duncan Campbell, of Pleasanton, Iowa, wrote us January 28th:

"Bro. Charles W. Prettyman, of Broken Bow, Nebraska, came in on Wednesday night for a visit of two or three weeks. I am to have his aid in gospel work in Mercer county, Missouri, during his stay. He made many friends in that section while preaching there two years ago, and they will be highly pleased to see and hear him again, as well as being benefitted by his ministrations. Pres. Joseph Smith's efforts in that region were greatly appreciated and have materially helped us."

Bro. R. Etzenhouser wrote from Holden, Missouri, 28th ult., and says:

"Am here at work. A neat room is provided by the Saints and the Episcopal Church together. We hope this union in furnishing and using the hall may continue. Had a fair audience and good interest last evening. Shall remain while the interests of the work demand it. Hope to remain permanently in the field if it be found practicable by the Church."

Bro. W. T. Maitland wrote us from Fulton, Iowa, the 24th ult:

"Amid terrific 'cold wave,s' driving snows and other distractions and attractions, our gospel work goes on, interest good and prejudice melts, if ice does not. I find interest is enhanced by the written question method advised by some stirring brother through Herald. Bro. J. S. Roth is with us here to the delight of all concerned.

MOSES Q'S REASON.

Moses Q. keeps a barber shop under the savings bank. He is about as black as black can be, and was once a slave.

One morning I stepped into his shop to get my hair cut. There was another man just taking a seat in the chair as I entered. He was the secretary of the — church Sunday-school, and a very fine specimen of a man.

I was not a little amused at the conversation that was carried on between Moses and his customer, for unlike his Hebrew namesake, the darkey Moses is by no means slow of speech.

"No sah," said Moses, very emphatically, "I'se done quit dat dirty business."

"But," said the customer, "you came from a tobacco raising state. You must have used the weed a good while."

"Yes sah," said Moses, "I beginn'd it when I was a pickaninny. I smoked on de ole plantation, and I smoked in de wah times, and after de wah was ober I kept on smokin'. I began wid a clay pipe, but arter I got free and commenced to pick up de dimes, I got shut of de clay pipe and took to usin' cigars.

"Seemed like I was mo' of a gemman wid a cigar in my mouf, 'specially when de little white boys on their way home from school would grab for my stubs, that was as short as my wool, and den go round the streets smokin' 'em for all dey was wurf.

"Dey wouldn't eat wid a nigger nohow, but dey wasn't above smokin' his old cigar stubs. Dey might jes' as well have worn his old clo'es."

"What made you give up smoking, Moses?" said the gentleman in the chair.

"Well sah," said Moses, "dere was a great awakenin' in the Free Methodist Church about five years ago. De evenin' meetin's of dat church used to keep de neighbors awake ebery time.

"De debbil make a big fight for dis yer sinner, but de good Savior stood by him, and I tell you, sah, I didn't git no peace till I went back on de debbil and jined de army ob de Lord.

"One Sunday mawnin' de preacher took for his text dis yer passage ob Scriptur: 'Know ye not that your bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost?'

"De preacher said de good Lord did not care wheder de body was black or white, if only it was clean on de inside. I had smoked all de way to church de very day I heard dat sermon. So I looked at de matter dis way: I axed myself, 'Moses, is yer clean on de inside? Den I axed myself, 'Did I ever see a smoke house dat was clean on de inside?' and I had seen some dat had mo' bacon hangin' in 'em when I opened de doah dan when I shut it.

"Furdermo,' for some time befo' I heard dat sermon, I had been teachin' in de Sunday-school. Some of de boys was serious like. Seemed as if de Holy Spirit was a strivin' to git into deyer hearts. I thought, suppose de Holy Spirit should come into dat class next Sunday, and smell de teacher's bref, and den say, 'Moses, you ain't clean, and it ain't no use for you to try to lead dese young lambs to Jesus, when you's a wanderin' sheep yourself.'

"And den I thought, can de Holy Ghost live in Moses' heart when dares old cigars stubs lyin' round in ebery corner of it, and I tell you, sah, I jest had to giv in and tell de Lord I was dun quit smokin'.

"After dat I felt as if I was kind o' tidled up inside, and when I stood befo' my class de next time it didn't seem as if dey would say, 'Go away you old hypocrite, what you lettin' on about a clean heart for? De boys used to smoke cigarettes, but when dey heard dat de teacher had dun quit his cigars dey dun quit smokin' too, and I tell you what, boss, I'se got a glorious class."

"Well, what's to pay, Moses?" said the customer.

"Let's see, you've had a shave and a sea-foam. Thirty-five cents, sah. De top ob your head am clean, and I hope sah, you's clean inside."

A day or two after that my friend, to whom Moses had given his reasons for giving up his cigar, took a seat in my office.

"Do you know," said he, "that I have quit smoking?'

"No," said I, "have you?'

"Yes, I have," said he.

"You heard black Moses tell me the other day why he quit, and it occurred to me that if a darkey who has been a slave could take such a position as he takes, for the sake of his influence, and for conscience' sake, then for conscience' sake, I, a white man, and secretary of a Sunday-school, ought not to take a lower one."

There was a roar in the office at this little speech, for several veterans of the weed were making the air blue with smoke.

"So you are a disciple of Moses, are you?" said one of them. "Well, see how long you will hold out."

"A hopeful young convert," said another. "Young converts are generally like young robins, the younger they are the more mouth they have. We all hope you will persevere."

"But I, the listener on both occasions, think that Moses was right. No matter who laughs, I would say to any minister of the gospel, or Sunday-school teacher who reads this sketch, as President Lincoln said to the Marquis of Hartington, when he announced to him a marriage in the Queen's family, 'Go thou and do likewise.' —From "Stories of the March."

The foregoing was sent us by Sr. Viola Short, Bro. M. T. Short's excellent wife, from Millersburg, Illinois, and contains a spicy rebuke to some of our tobacco chewers and smokers. If the mind of a man whose skin is black, can comprehend what cleanliness of heart is, and is assured that he is not clean while his clothes and person are saturated, and his brain befogged, confused and weakened by the fumes and acute narcotic of tobacco, how much more ought a man whose skin is white and who considers himself so immeasurably superior to the black man, because he belongs to the famed and superior race, to realize what true cleanliness of heart and soul are.

We believe to-day more firmly than ever before that tobacco has an effect upon the nervous tissues of the body and brain of the average man, whether believer or unbeliever, by which he is made sluggish and dull, both for work and study, which unfits him in small or large degree from rendering unto family, society and God, in satisfactory measure the service and duty which he owes to them. Our observation and experience during the time we indulged in the habit of smoking and since we quit the use of tobacco altogether, have confirmed us in the opinion that the Lord knew what he said when he authorized his servant to say "tobacco is not good for man."

We lately met a man whom we have known for some years, and always when we met him up to the last time we saw him he had a nice meerschaum pipe in his hand or mouth, smoking; but the last time we met him we remarked how fresh and well he looked. He told us that he had not been so good in health for many years. "I have quit the use of tobacco," said he. We then noticed for the first time the absence of his pipe. "Yes," he continued, "On the 24th of January last, I left my home to attend prayer meeting in the hall where our people met, with my pipe in my mouth. At the foot of the stairs I took my pipe out of my mouth, knocked the ashes out of it, put it in my pocket, and bit off a generous quid of tobacco, went up the stairway and crept away round to the wood-box so as to have a place to spit while I chewed during service, as I could not bear to think of spitting on the floor. While sitting there thinking, before meeting commenced, I thought about my tobacco habit; and I remembered that at home, my daughter usually emptied and cleaned the spittoon. It nearly always nauseated me to do it, and sometimes made me feel quite sick, so I left it for her. This night I thought how mean I was to make her clean the nasty spittoon, because it made me sick to handle it. And then I thought about how I had crept round to this wood-box to avoid spitting on the floor. And then I thought, Will there be spittoons in heaven to which I hope to go. Who will empty them; and will I help to make them filthy. I tell you, Elder Smith, it made me see myself a good deal nastier than I ever supposed I could be; and I felt meaner and more degraded than I cared to acknowledge. But what can I do. I had tried to quit several times and had always given up after a little while. Finally I prayed, and I said to the Lord, 'If you will take the appetite for tobacco from me, I will never use it more.' The Lord heard me, and from that time I have not used tobacco in any form. It is the Lord's doings and not mine. Only once since have I been tempted, and I suppose that was from habit, for, coming down the stairs from the hall I took my piece of tobacco from my pocket, put it to my mouth to bite off a piece, when as quick as a flash it occurred to me, 'No, I don't care for any just now,' and so I put it back, and that is the last of it; I really have no appetite for it. I sleep sounder and enjoy my food as I have not for years."

This man is not a member of the church, but may belong to some one of the ruling denominations, or may be to none of them. He evidently believes that God heard his prayer and took the desire for tobacco from him. What reward, if any, is he entitled to? He asked the Lord to take a gross appetite from him, that he might overcome a nasty and evil habit, instead of facing the self-restraint necessary to overcome. One thing is certain, however, whether the Lord took the appetite away, or he overcome it by dint of self-control, the blessing of a peaceful mind and increased soundness of a relieved and renewed body are his, as the direct and positive results of emancipation from the long continued indulgence.

Those of you, brethren, who are desirous to be free from this pernicious habit, may do as did this gentleman above referred to; ask the Lord for help, and he may in response to your call, take the appetite for tobacco from you. But our opinion is that if in this way you get rid of the habit, while you will certainly reap the physical benefits to be derived from abstaining from the use of tobacco, you will not be entitled to that cheering plaudit, "Well done good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things,

I will make thee ruler over many." We think further, that while some of you may have the craving, gnawing hunger for tobacco taken from you, there are many others who will suffer the pains of sacrifice and have to overcome by rigid will and the exercise of continued self-denial. True Latter Day Saints ought not to ask the Lord to do for them what they can and should do for themselves. We clamor for new revelation when we are neglectful of the old.

THE following clipping from the Toronto Mail, of Toronto, Ontario, was sent us of late by Bro. J. A. McIntosh. We think the statement is lacking in one essential element—that is, truth. We know of no Latter Day Saints who teach in the manner indicated. And we hope that it is not true that "citizens" in Michigan propose to "force" anybody out from among them because of crankiness. If any party violates the laws of the land, apply legal remedies. But if they are simply peculiar, funny or fanatical in their religious notions, don't make the matter worse by persecution. Common sense, if not Christianity, should govern in such cases.

"LATTER DAY SAINTS.

"MORLEY, Mich., Jan. 17th.—A blind preacher came into Bruce district, about three miles southwest of this village, something like a year ago. He began to preach from house to house. Soon his labors collected a band of followers about him, and they advanced the work with considerable zeal. They called themselves 'Latter Day Saints.' Early last fall the blind preacher went away, and when he returned he brought with him another advocate of his faith, and the man's wife also. They denounced all other denominations, and called their workers hypocrites and workers of iniquity. They advised women to put off their clothing and jewelry. A considerable following was again secured, and the excitement, which was not great at first, has grown to such proportions that domestic difficulties have been bred in several families. One woman has left her husband because he won't follow the evangelists. Their belief seems to be much like the Mormon, except they have not advocated polygamy. Citizens in that neighborhood are talking of organizing to force the missionaries out of the district."

"The gospel of a life like hers
Is more than books or scrolls.
From scheme and creed the light goes out,
The saintly fact survives;
The blessed Master none can doubt Revealed in holy lives."

"BUCKLE ON YOUR ARMOR AND STAND TO YOUR INTEGRITY!"

How the words thrilled through and through us as they fell from the lips of the speaker, and swift as thought, memory carried us back; and while we were present in the body, apparently attentive in Spirit to the conclusion of the sermon, we were in reality far away in Spirit, and kept repeating from time to time as if talking to those who had been conversing with us, "Buckle on your armor and stand to your integrity." Perhaps this may seem enigmatical to some who are reading. Let us explain by introducing here some quotations from letters recently received.

"Sister Frances, will you give us something, in either Autumn Leaves or the Column, on the subject of the older Saints going ahead and making the Sunday School and church attractive to the young folk, thus causing them to feel that they have an interest in the work of God and humanity. Can't you urge the older ones to feel the necessity of going ahead and encouraging the young in various ways? Oh, I can see so plainly where so many of our people fail in this respect. They seem to feel that all they have to do is to go to church. They don't try to get the young interested, but seem to think that after they have obeyed the gospel that there is a royal highway opened up upon which they and their families will walk to paradise. They look with a kind of pitying contempt upon the efforts put forth in behalf of the young by other Christian denominations, and when they wish to shirk their duty, there is such a convenient way of branding it, Sectarian! There was a class of people in the days of Christ who esteemed themselves especial favorites of heaven. The rest of the world were not exactly Sectarians, but 'Gentile dogs.' To this class of people the Savior upon one occasion said, 'The publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.' Now, sister Frances, don't think me harsh or severe in my judgment, but I can not help wondering how it is that any people, who are enlightened by the good word of God and have really tasted of the powers of the world to come, can hug to themselves such a delusion as this; and moreover, I often wonder if the watchmen upon the walls of Zion are entirely guiltless—have no responsibility for the existing state of things. It seems to me, (and I can not help the feeling), that we in reality have no pastors. I have yet to hear the first sermon in this church relating to the duty of the Saints in regard to their own families, the Sunday School, amusements for the young, the obligations of parents to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, or in fact anything intended to give encouragement to this work. I hope and trust that my experience is an exceptional one, but this is what it has been. The circumstances which surround me cause me to speak feelingly upon this subject, and just as truly as I know this to be the work of God, so truly do I know that we never can as a people be blest of God, while such a state of things continue to exist. There will be faithful ones who will be blessed because of their faithfulness, but I believe with the apostle, and believe too that it has a broad reference to the church as a family—the household of faith, if you please—that he who provides not for his own household has denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.' Why worse? Because he is sinning against greater light. Where much is given much will be required. I was, and am not ashamed to confess it, before I united with this church, a sectarian; and while my soul rejoices in the gospel and I know it to be the power of God unto salvation, there are times when I actually long for the strengthening support which was given us in all good works by the pastors of the church to which I belonged. This may seem to you a strange confession, but it is true, and the time will come—it must come—when our elders will realize the absolute necessity of feeding the flock, beginning with the lambs, and of taking the oversight of the people in a way in which it is not done now. I had not thought to have said or written so much upon this, but I see such an indifference upon the part of parents and those far older in the work than I am, to take part in Sunday-school or in anything in fact, calculated to interest and benefit the young or bind them to the church, that I feel much as Paul must have felt when he saw the Athenians and their city given up to idolatry. His soul was stirred within him. If you do not write yourself, I can but trust that God will raise up some one to put this matter before the church in such a way that they can not help feeling it, and if they once do feel it—once awake to the fact of its existence, I feel sure that they will arouse and put it from them; for I know that as a people we love the truth and will follow its teachings when they are made clear to us."

We will not apologize for using this letter, because we are led to believe that the desired result will be better obtained by so doing than by anything we could say. We had intended to have given extracts from other letters, but upon second thought we publish them entire, letting them speak for themselves. In conclusion, what can we say that we have not already said, to awaken the Saints upon this matter. In the words of the speaker to-day—the words at the heading of this article, let us entreat you, "Buckle on your armor and stand to your integrity,"—integrity before God and man. You are called to be a light to the world, a city set upon a hill can not be hid. The eyes of the world are upon you, and if indeed the ministry are at fault, let us entreat you as Paul exhorted Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. * * * Be thou an example of the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." We entreat you because we feel that the time is coming when these very children, these young people of the flock for whom our sister has been pleading, will enter into a reckoning with the church—the church which should be to them a fostering mother, a bulwark of defense between them and the evil in the world, and not with the church only, but with parents as well. Let none of us suppose that by weakly yielding to the wishes of our children and refusing to restrain them from following the evil ways of the world, we shall gain their respect; far from it, for the time will come when they will demand a reckoning with us.

We remember a young sister telling us, when speaking of the Sunday School at Independence, Mo.:—"We can not get the fathers and mothers to come out and take an interest in the school. It is left almost entirely to us young people." This sister (God bless her) is now a wife and mother, and we venture her boy will never say this in reference to his mother. She will remember too well how keenly she felt this neglect upon the part of those whose duty it was to act differently, and she will set a better example to her children. Let us stand by our integrity, for the steady tramp of the advancing host is heard! Let us buckle on our armor—the whole armor of righteousness, lest we fall in the wilderness and this army—the children whom God has given us, march in alone to take possession of the promised land. Let us stand by our integrity for the day of reckoning is surely coming. Let us buckle on our armor for we can not escape the conflict, and cowardly as well as unworthy is that soldier who tries so to do.

Home, January 15th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Do you hear my faint knock at your door, and may I enter and join the happy workers who are tolling for Zion's cause? I desire to come in the strength of Israel's God, not in my own, and I pray for wisdom. My plea for entering is that I have received so much benefit and such pure instructions from the Mother's Home Column, that I feel like casting in my mite, small though it may be.

When I read your appeal to the young, my heart leaped for joy. Oh! if the young could but realize their situation and the responsibility that rests upon each one who has taken upon them the name of Christ, it seems they would awake from their inactivity, and putting on the armor of righteousness follow after Christ, caring not for the vain, foolish things of this life; for what are all the pleasures of this world compared to the robe and crown we shall receive and the joy we shall have with our Savior if we are but faithful. Only think what will be our feelings on that great and eventful day should we be found wanting, and be shut out forever from the presence of our loved ones who have gone on before, and know that it was our own deeds that condemned us. Truly there will be weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Let us be prepared, having oil in our vessels, our lamps trimmed and burning; so that when the midnight cry shall go forth we may be prepared to meet the bridegroom with joy. As time rolls onward we are nearing the goal, and 'tis but a few short years at most before those to whom we look to be our instructors and teachers will have joined the silent army, and we who are now the pupils will have to fill their places; and it stands us all in hand to ask ourselves the question: "Are we doing our duty?" I know of young Saints, who when they first engaged in this glorious gospel "brought forth fruits," but when they were just entering into manhood and womanhood, the time when the young are most liable to be led astray, became cold and indifferent, took no part in Saints' meetings, ceased to bring forth fruits, and now where are they? Can we not trace a great deal of their backsliding to their home training? 'Tis oftentimes the case. So, parents, look well to the example you set and the language you use before your little ones. Make the home too sacred a spot for defiled language to enter; banish it as you would a deadly serpent. Teach them to obey, not through fear but by love, for "love rules her kingdom without a sword;" gather them about you at the close of the day and instruct them in God's law. Teach them to love and read the Holy Bible; and, above all, teach them to pray. Let their voices be heard mingling in your evening devotion, and then, when they are grown up and gone out into this wicked world to battle for themselves, they will have a safeguard to shield them from the buffetings of the evil one. Then will you see the fruits of your labors; then will your children rise up and call you blessed. Hoping my own experience may prove a warning to many, I give it.

I was baptized when between nine and ten years of age. Whether I understood what I was doing it for I am unable to say, but I know this, that I had not been instructed in the principles of the gospel; knew nothing about it. Well I brought forth no fruit. Tares sprang up, and I went on in the same way as before. We were not instructed in God's law, not taught to love and peruse the precious book, not taught even to pray; and, must I say it, Father was an elder, and mother a member. For years I went on in my blind sinful way, until now that I have entered womanhood, I have resolved, by the strength and aid of my Redeemer, to forsake my evil ways, take up my cross and follow him. But what of all those years spent in sin? Dear Saints, shall your children have a like confession to make?

I love this work and feel thankful that its light has ever dawned upon my benighted mind; and can truly say I faithfully believe it to be the work of God, for I have indeed seen the signs follow the believer, for I have seen the sick healed, have heard tongues and interpretations of tongues, and also heard prophecy and seen it fulfilled. If these words penned in weakness shall do good to but one soul, I am content. In your prayers remember your weak an wayward, SISTER NELL.

STEWARTSVILLE, MO., Jan. 25th.

Dear Sisters:—Since I last wrote to the Home Column we have been called upon to give up another one of our dear ones—a son eighteen years old. Oh, how hard it was to part with him; but still harder to think that he had not united with the church. He was a kind and dutiful son, always willing to do anything he could for the cause; but did not see the need of going forward in obedience until he was taken sick and then it was too late. But we take great comfort in knowing that God is just; and I would say to the young, Do not put off till to-morrow what can be done to-day, for to-morrow may not be yours. And I do know if you will go forth and obey the commandments of God with a pure motive, you will never regret it, no never. I am thankful that I can tell you that my only daughter has gone forth in obedience to the will of God.

I still rejoice in this work, and I, like many others, am very thankful for the Herald and Hope. To me they have become a necessity. I often say to some that do not take them, that I would sacrifice one meal a day to get them, if I could not get them without. I was much edified in reading Aunt Patience' letter in December 10th, and would say, "Come again, dear sister Fannie."

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion's cause, ANN SUMMERFIELD.

The letter given below was not intended for publication, but we have asked and obtained the writer's permission to publish it, believing that it will comfort and admonish more than one heart among those who will read it.—Ed.

December 28th.

Sister Frances:—I thought I would write you a few lines to tell you how much we are pleased with Autumn Leaves. I think it is just what we have been wanting all these years. The young people in the church will be delighted with it; the spirit of it is so quiet and kind, one is soothed while reading it. Just here I will tell you about Lottie. Annie sent her one for the year, and when she went to see her she asked her how she liked it. Lottie replied, "Very much; I have read it all through, and do not know why, but I had to cry at every piece I read."

I hope that none of the dear sisters who know me will think that I am lacking in faith because I never bore any testimony while I was in Lamoni. The thought of speaking in an assembly of people always made me tremble, and I simply could not speak. My heart was all right, and my faith in the gospel as firm as the rocks and hills, but I have always lived away from the society of the church; still I thank the heavenly Father that he has kept the faith alive in me. I have never doubted, even for one moment. I suffered much in my early days, more than most children do, because of my own nature being very sensitive, and I always knew more than those around me thought I did. I remember very plainly, although I was only five years old, when the elders first came into Canada and father and mother came into the church. Then they left me in Canada with my grandparents. Now the trouble came to me which I have before told you of. I thought father and mother were right, and grandmother was of a different faith; and as I was young it cost my little mind many deep thoughts, so many that I was not very happy; but after two years we came to join my parents in Illinois.

We went to Nauvoo and there I saw our dear prophet Joseph, who is now in heaven. I shall always remember his fine personal appearance. Nauvoo was a very new town at that time. I afterwards saw it when it caused my heart to ache to see it, but you know all about that as well as I do. But the day that the prophet was slain I shall never forget. Father came in and told us. It seemed that the blackness and darkness of death was over us all. We were like a ship cast adrift in the ocean. After this we were tossed and driven about without mercy. We went this way and that way, with none to guide or direct. Our sorrows seemed too great to bear. Father prayed constantly for some help to guide us, and had we known all things and kept together even in a family capacity, much sorrow might have been averted, but it was otherwise. Just here let me say, our young people should marry in the church. Neglect of this has been the cause of much bitter sorrow to many; but the kind Father remembered his scattered ones and sent brother Joseph to gather them together, and again they meet and rejoice in the goodness and mercy of their God. My sister and myself were baptized by brother William Smith when I was sixteen and Mary was fourteen years of age; although we knew that our first baptism was sacred, we had a wish to be rebaptized and become real members of the Reorganized Church.

And now there is another point I want to mention. I have always had to defend my faith, and I have always been able to do it, still I never commenced the subject myself in my life. My friends always knew that I was a Mormon, but they were my friends still. I never forgot at any time that the honor of our church was in some degree in my keeping. I have lived so that none could cast reproach on the church through me. The world outside of the church has been very good to me.

Your sister in the bonds of the gospel,
C. S.

Correspondence.

CHOTEAU, I. T., C. N., Jan. 26th.

Editors Herald:—Please say to all those who have written to me about this country, that it is out of reason for me to answer all who have asked questions, but that will now say through the Herald that this land is owned by the Indians, and that a white man can not own, neither improve, nor cultivate the land, nor live in the Territory, only through a citizen of the Territory, and that at this time of year all the farming land is rented. The country is healthy, plenty of timber and water and range for stock. The rent of land is one third to the owner, and six dollars a years for a permit to farm in the Territory. We expect Congress to pass laws this winter to sectionize the land. If that law passes, then there may be a chance for many. I am to baptize some next Sunday.
S. MALONY.

BAY PORT, Michigan, Jan. 24th.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—With pleasure I write concerning how I came to hear and obey the gospel. I had been a member of the M. E. Church for seventeen years, and for the last few years, at least by times, I felt like giving up in despair, from the fact that the church was so far from the pattern laid down in the Bible. And seeing that their preaching had no effect on the people, I prayed that the Lord would send some one that would stir up the people to a sense of their duty. In February last my prayers were answered, Bro. J. J. Cornish coming with the gospel of Christ. When the word began to take effect, many of the devout people began to cry, "Delusion!" Still the work went on, and as many as gladly received the word went forth in obedience until the list has neared one hundred, and still the cry delusion is heard. On the sixth of March I was baptized, and on August 7th I was ordained a priest, and have been trying in my weak way to present the truth; but having a very limited education, I desire the prayers of all the Saints that I may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. I am most thankful that I have lived to hear and obey the gospel, and for the blessings it has brought to me and my family. We have been blest with able defenders of the gospel since the work began here, in the persons of elders Cornish, Kelly, John Shippy, Davis, Salyards, Phelps, and Barr, besides several of the lesser priesthood, and above all, with the spirit of the Master. Bro. Robert Oehring is laboring among the Germans in this vicinity.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Jan. 23d.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Joseph left us on the 20th inst. for California. His sojourn in the city was appreciated by all, and his discourses were just elegant—and highly instructive. The more the people know of him, the better they like him. We all felt sad when he left. Bro. R. M. Elvin has returned from the conflict with Rev. Lamb. He feels perfectly satisfied with results. Bro. H. R. Evans wrote me the people were well pleased with Bro. Elvin's effort. We have thought it would be good to have Lamb's "Golden Bible" reviewed and published in book form. What do you think of that? Could it be done without to great an outlay? I have thought from the first it ought to have been done. If you think it practicable, Bro. Elvin will essay the task. I presume Joseph kept you posted while he was here, so I will wait for new developments. I will leave this city to-morrow for the south—how far I may go depends on circumstances. I intended to spend the latter part of this and next month in Montana, but the extreme cold weather has made it impracticable. If I can secure a place in Provo, I, with Bro. Elvin, will hold some meetings there and any of the settlements south as far as Springville. Yours,
R. J. ANTHONY.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Jan. 24th.

Editors Herald:—A good time was had all through our late conference. The Lord was truly with us. Our conferences are becoming more and more interesting. The church we now occupy is too small to seat the congregation at times. The work is progressing on our new church, and when finished, it will be a credit to the church. It will be the only stone church in the city. If some of our old brethren here fifty years ago should drop in and see Independence now, they would see a great difference. Electric lights are being extended in all directions over the city; gas on all the prominent streets; street railway and a dummy railway line between here and Kansas City and many other improvements too numerous to mention. We have also natural gas and two veins of coal close together, one four feet and one three feet and a half feet, close to Independence. The land around Independence is very high. I have been detained at home for some months on account of sickness in my family.

GOOSE CREEK, W. Va., Jan. 25th.

Mr. D. Dancer:—Some time ago a man by the name of Devore, a Latter Day Saint, from Jackson county, Ohio, came into this country and held meetings and has stirred up the people the most that any man that was ever here. Some wanted to egg him when they heard he was to preach, but by the advice of a few coolheaded men, they were persuaded to go and hear him, and now some of his worst persecutors have become his best friends.

I always went on the plan of giving a man a trial before passing judgment on him, and I had a good deal to do in getting Mr. Devore a hearing. And have to say I never heard the gospel preached until I heard Mr. Devore. I think the Saints have the pure, unadulterated gospel; but a good many of the people will not accept it, and I have had some very warm debates, and I want some help. I thought I would ask you to send me some tracts and help me in that way as much as you can. I have four that were handed me by a friend—"The Good Shepherd," "The Kingdom," "Laying on of hands," and "Who then can be saved." If you have any more as good as those, I would like to have them. I want the Book of Mormon. Let me know where to get it and what it costs. I would like to see a copy of the Saints Herald, and if it suits I may subscribe for it. Send me a price list of the books you have. If Mr. Devore would come back here he could organize a church. I don't know where he is. He did not get any one when he was here; the people wanted time to investigate.

NEWCASTLE, N. S. W., Australia.
Dec. 13th, 1887.

Dear Brother Joseph:—We reached Sydney from Auckland, New Zealand, on the 29th of November, having left Auckland on the 24th. We found Bro. Ellis' place in Sydney without much trouble, and received a cordial greeting. We remained till forenoon next day and then came on to Newcastle, for we could go on the steamer Te Anau, without cost, as we came on it from Auckland, and it had to go to Newcastle for coal. We reached the latter place in the evening, and after Elder Broadway had taken our things by a dray to Bro. Dixon's, we called on old Sr. Webster in Newcastle, and on Bro. C. R. Davis, a colored brother, who is an American, born in Portland, Maine. We came on to Islington, a suburb of Newcastle, under the guidance of Bro. Clark, a young man of promise—one of Bro. Burton's children in the gospel. It was half-past ten at night when we reached Islington. There we found a welcome from Bro. and sister Dixon, who have not been long in the church. We found a comfortable and convenient room prepared for us; and since we have been here Bro. and Sr. Dixon have done all that they could to make us comfortable and contented.

Early next morning we were visited by the branch president, Bro. J. G. Dickenson; and by the branch priest, Bro. Purvis; and by brother Broadway. At night we held a meeting in the house where we stay, and all took part. Sr. Smith spoke in prophecy, which was much appreciated by the Saints. Next day we went with Bro. and Sr. Dixon to Wallsend, a distance of about eight miles, where we met Bro. Gregory, the branch president, and his family, also Bro. and Sr. Haworth, and Bro. and Sr. Lewis and their sons, Amaron and George. Bro. and Sr. Gregory have four daughters in the church; Alice, Maria, Rachel, and Esther. Bro. Lewis' sons Amaron and George bid fair to become useful in the church. Bro. Haworth also has a son, a young man of promise in the church, and also a younger one. These young people take quite an active part in the meetings and do exceedingly well. They are quite good singers as might be expected, being of Welsh and English blood. Here all the brethren are not so fortunate as at Wallsend, in having their wives with them in the church. Brethren Dickenson, Purvis, and Penfold's companions are truly excellent women, yet they have not succeeded in getting them into the church. I hope that they may soon see their duty clear in this direction. Brn. Dixon, Broadway, and Davis, are one in the faith with their companions, as well as in the flesh. Bro. Broadway is an excellent musician and singer. He has been saved from the Salvation Army, as was also Bro. Dickenson. The brethren have been troubled here by an old (formerly Brighamite) elder, who, although baptized by Bro. Rodger, claims that the church is all wrong, (and he, of course, alone is right), because we teach that the priest of the branch is to take the lead of the meetings in the absence of the presiding elder. He seems to be anxious to argue the question with every one. I made short work of the case by simply informing him that the decision of the body was, that the branch priest had the right to lead the meetings in the absence of the presiding elder, and that he could do just one of two things, either keep his opinions to himself, and neither teach them publicly or privately to the Saints, or give up his office and step down and out; and that this rule will apply to all the ministry, and to all matters adopted as the faith and order of the church by the body in General Conference assembled.

We had a very interesting meeting at Wallsend on Thursday night. The gift of tongues and interpretation were enjoyed. Last Sunday afternoon and evening I spoke in the hall used by the Saints here; but one outsider was present. However, the notice was not put in the papers, and had only a few handbills posted late on Saturday. I learn that Bro. Burton never had more than a dozen outsiders to hear him at a time here, and often but one or two. Crowds assemble on the Public Domain, and will listen for a little while to a speaker, especially if they think he would likely be opposed by some one ambitious to display his wisdom (or folly) in argument, so-called. They assemble to hear controversy, and not for the sake of receiving any light, or of learning the truth, but to be amused. They care not for what is said, except merely to enjoy the spectacle of a couple of men debating a question, no matter what the subject may be. A cock-fight, if allowed on Sunday, would suit them much better. But here our elders must either cast the good seed among thorns and in stony places, with faint hope of a grain or two dropping into the little good ground accessible, as out-door preaching presents opportunities, or else preach to Saints alone in halls or other public buildings. This applies to Sydney, Newcastle, and the towns and villages around in New South Wales.

I learn that in Queensland north and Victoria south, the situation is different, and the people more willing to hear. But I am satisfied of one thing, that if one-tenth the labor bestowed here had been spent in New Zealand, it would have resulted in ten-fold more good fruit. I attended a number of meetings in Auckland, held by different sects, who everywhere else are unpopular, and I was astonished to see the crowds of intelligent, earnest, and orderly people who turned out to these meetings; and I believe from what I could learn that we could raise up churches all over that land. I believe that the masses of the people in New Zealand are mentally and morally superior to those of this colony at least, and they certainly are much ahead in physical, personal appearance; for the New Zealanders are much more robust, healthier, and better looking than those here, as a rule. In Auckland, the women, almost without exception, are clear-skinned, rosy-cheeked, and symmetrical, but here they are sallow and shrivelled, and seem to grow old fast. Of course there are exceptions; and perhaps other colonies than New South Wales may present a different picture. For some six or eight years I have had that field in my mind, and one certain elder has always come before my mind in connection with it, and now having seen something of the people, I am confirmed greatly in my previous impressions that it is a field that ought not be longer neglected.

I had thought of going to Forster and Nambucca before going south to Hastings, but receiving a letter from Bro. Burton, in which he states that he is quite sick with bronchial affections and congestion in the lungs, and that a brother Stewart, who is lying very low with cancer is anxious to see us; we have concluded to go on there this week, and expect to leave on Friday, to reach Hastings by next Tuesday night or Wednesday morning. We will probably return here in a couple of months to hold a conference and form a district in this part of the field. And we shall also form one in Victoria. The climate is very changeable here. This is the beginning of summer, and is verging on to the hottest period. We are glad that we did not come here in winter. I do not want to see any colder weather than we have already had.

I do not feel near so well as in Tahati. Helen is as well as when there. If personal comfort were all that we had to consider here, we would never leave the South Sea Islands. I never desired to come to this land, but I knew that it was my duty to come before I left America. Many will remember that I said often that I had no desire to go to Australia. But from what was shown me in vision, or dream, years ago, I knew that I had to come here, as well as to go to Tahati. And if all is fulfilled as the dream indicated, we shall return to Tahati before we will be free to return to the States. We may be required to spend a year or more here.

Now a word about missionary labor for this part of the world. There ought to be a clear understanding by the church at home that it is positively important and necessary that some one shall be sent to New Zealand, and to the Society Islands, also here. Or if it can not be otherwise arranged, some one should be sent to New Zealand, to come here after a year's stay there. And some should be sent to the Islands. We had some fresh cherries yesterday, and have had strawberries often. Flowers are in full bloom, and we are having our June in December.

RICH HILL, MO., Jan. 25th.

Bro. Blair:—I came to this place on Saturday the 14th, in company with Bro. Emsley Curtis. We found this country covered with a sheet of ice, and almost impossible to travel, the streets were so smooth and slippery. We went to Shobe to speak on Sunday, but no one dared to come out. We met with a few Saints at Sr. Holmes' house, and we had a very good prayer and testimony meeting. I left Bro. Curtis there, and came back to this place, as I was directed, feeling that I could not get any of the several churches or halls in the city.

I made up my mind I would hold a series of sermons in a dwelling house. I found two families of Saints here: John Ferry and family of Lucas, Iowa, and S. S. Black and family. We made Bro. J. Ferry's house the place to invite the neighbors in. We gave notice that on Wednesday night we would commence our meetings. The first night we had thirteen, the next night eighteen, next twenty-four, and the increase has been so great that last night the house was packed full. I. N. White, H. H. Robinson and E. Curtis have visited this place before. Bro. Robinson tried to get the Christian church, but all in vain. Bro. Daniel Donavan, of Independence, was with me a few days, and tried to obtain the Christian chapel for me to speak in; they told him they would like to accommodate him, but could not. Well did Jesus say, and ye will not come to the light. Bro. Curtis is now at Taborville. On Monday I baptized one, Thomas O'Neal, once a Catholic, and then for a long time in the Presbyterian church. Little Tom, as he is called, says: "I lost my father and mother when but a small boy, and I had to bring myself up. I always had a strong reverence for God, and sought for God's truth, and now I have found it." Many remarked after I had confirmed him, what a blessing Tom got. His wife, who has belonged to the Presbyterian church all her days, begins to see things in a different light. I am looking for her with others soon to obey. Last night the eyes of many in the house were wet with tears, as I preached from Isa 55: 17-25. We are glad when we get the Herald and Autumn Leaves, for they bring us such good news. May they live long, and be well supported, is the desire of RICHMOND, Mo., Jan. 27th.

Editors Herald:—I have just sent you the Richmond Democrat. It contains the most accurate account of the death of Elder David Whitmer yet published that I have seen. I was going to Carrolton last night, but could not for, to me, some unaccountable reason, and came to Richmond to attend the funeral of the last witness of the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Through the kindness of Mr. Snyder I went to the late home of Elder Whitmer, and on entering the door I found a stand, about twenty inches square, with a sheet of paper on which was written "The table on which the Book of Mormon was translated." The mortal remains of the aged witness lay in the front room; a calm and peaceful expression rested on the wasted face. Here I was introduced to a Mr. Short, and to David Whitmer the younger. I had hoped to hear something at this professed spiritual fountain regarding the great work that God had selected the deceased to perform, of his testimony, the angel's visit, and how faithfully he did his work as a "Witness" down to his latest breath. But not one word of that kind did I hear regarding that eventful portion of his life, upon which millions in the unknown future will hang their faith. My soul burned within me when I saw the chief opportunity of a life lost in a community in which the aged patriarch had lived an esteemed and honored citizen. But it passed without one mention of the greatness, the grandeur and the honor that will attend the name of David Whitmer. A short exhortation was made, also a statement of his life spiritually and his fitness for another world. A hymn was sung—"Gates Ajar"—and prayer was offered by John Whitmer, (I suppose he is an elder). Mr. Snyder read the first fourteen verses of the 22d chapter of Revelations, the fourteen verses being read at the request of the deceased. After an exhortation by John Whitmer a son of David's brother, we followed the remains to the cemetery, on a high hill commanding a fine view of the Missouri valley, and there the last of David Whitmer on earth was laid to rest. His reward will be for his faithful testimony. He does and will rest in peace.

The Whitmerites feel very shy of any of our people. But any who feel that light is there that is not in the Reorganized Church, are most welcome to it. For "two year olds," as are some of them who stopped a few months with us, to get up and with their little brains condemn our organization and the great work of the inspired Seer of Palmyra, and with their shallow conceptions condemn the glorious revelations of God, through that Seer to the organized kingdom upon earth, in the entirety of its organization and government which was not fully carried out during the short time that "the last witness" was with the church, and because they know nothing about it oppose the great Prophet, Seer, revelator and translator of the latter day dispensation, this, to me, is the very height of what I call self-conceit and self-righteousness. David Whitmer filled his calling, and has entered upon his reward. His calling was not to be a principal actor and leader in the great work of restoration, but to be a "Witness." And for those people to try to make him a principal is an error, and evil, and adding that to the work of the Almighty which he did not call them to perform.

GRATITUDE.

GRATITUDE is that quality of the heart that leads us to give prompt, due, and proper acknowledgments for favors received or blessings bestowed, and as the favor, gift, kindness or blessing is absolutely voluntary on the part of the giver, so is gratitude the voluntary expression of appreciation on the part of the receiver.

This quality is not peculiar to man; it is found in the lower animals, as has been proven in ten thousand instances, with this seeming difference. In the latter it seems almost spontaneous, or, in other words, the natural outburst of their feelings at receiving the kindness shown as though interested in them, while in man it must often be the result of culture. Perhaps this difference is only seeming, for we may meet with instances in both classes where the degree of gratitude varies, and where it appears to be largely the result of culture; but as we can hardly attribute self-culture to the lower animals, we must conclude that the difference in degree of gratitude in them is largely the result of culture by man in the treatment they receive. Undoubtedly the conditions for the growth of gratitude are inherent in both species, so that the proper cultivation of both natures would develop this quality to a greater or less degree. And while we are not prepared to absolutely deny that there may be a degree of self-culture in what is sometimes called the brute creation, we are satisfied that this quality is more spontaneously manifest in them, under favorable conditions, than it is in man under like conditions. In this particular man seems to have fallen beneath "The beasts that perish."

Gratitude is no more inherent in the human mind than any other excellence. Pope erred when he wrote, "An honest man's the noblest work of God." Men were not made honest, nor yet rogues—they were created men and endowed with powers of mind to be honest or dishonest; grateful or ungrateful; good or evil, as they were pleased to elect; and when good and evil were set before them they were free to make their choice with an understanding of the consequences resulting from either course, and hence the justice of the judgment that should follow.

If any should disagree with the idea that "gratitude seems to be inherent in the beast," upon the ground that upon that hypothesis the beast was created better than man in that particular, I answer that therein is manifest one evidence of the care of the divine Father over man; for had the brute creation been entirely destitute of all sense of gratitude, many of them being physically stronger than man could easily have destroyed him from the face of the earth. I know it is generally thought that fear is the ruling power in the beast which prevents him from exerting his superior strength against man. This no doubt is one great cause, but I question its being the only one. The beast was to be subordinate to man of necessity; but man alone submissive to God by choice. Hence the quality of gratitude in the former would render them more docile and tractable toward man, and much more susceptible of control than fear would make them. Moreover, the beast fills the measure of his creation here, and, for aught we know attains to his highest excellence; but while man may, if he chooses, fill the measure of his creation here, the height of the excellency intended for him to reach is not attained until the great hereafter. The crown is after the conflict.

I know "comparisons are odious," but if man suffers by comparison with the brutes in this particular, the fault is with man only; for the power of appreciation is given to him that, understanding the nature of the favors received, he may not only give expression to the gratitude he feels but proves himself in harmony with the giver and worthy of the gift. Gratitude is one of the holiest qualities of the heart, the grandest expression of a noble soul. It is indeed the voice of love in its sublimest strains of praise. It has inspired the good and true in all ages and lands, man and angels; cherubim and seraphim; nor was it beneath the Redeemer of the world to bow in holiest, humblest reverence and acknowledge the boundless love of "Him who is all in all." And when earth is subdued to his will, man's redemption made complete, all the powers of darkness beneath his feet and the whole universe acknowledge his sway, then his glorious and triumphant voice will lead the universal choir in gratitude, praise, glory and honor to him who hath given him the victory.

With this truth before our minds, shall we, the workmanship of his hands, the creatures of his care and objects of his love be silent? Shall our hearts be dead to the influence of kindness so boundless and love so infinite as that which created the earth for our abode, gave us existence here, provided us with every needed joy? And after the forfeiture of all these on the part of men he condescended to our low estate, was made sin for us, bore our shame and suffered for our sins, redeeming us by his precious blood from the power of death and hell and revealed unto us the fulness of his gospel that by obedience thereunto, we might become "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ" and finally be prepared to enter into the celestial kingdom and be crowned upon with his glory; if after all this we are found ungrateful, then indeed we shall be unworthy of the least of God's mercies and be found forever unfitted for eternal life.

One of the grandest inspirations of gratitude that ever moved the heart or fell from human lips was that chanted by Moses after the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage; yet that work of deliverance, great, grand and glorious as it was, pales into utter insignificance before the redemption of a lost and ruined world from the thralldom and slavery of sin and death. One was the deliverance of a nation from human bondage; the other the redemption of a world from chains that must have been eternal had not the love, the wisdom, and the justice of Omnipotence been exerted in their destruction through Jesus Christ our Lord. Hence our gratitude should be infinitely greater, and our praise sweeter and loftier than that which inspired Moses and attuned the timbrel of Miriam.

As the goodness of God to us endureth for ever, so our lives should be one continual hymn of praise. Every thought should be pure; every word an echo of the gratitude we feel, and every act a song of praise. This calls for the consecration of our entire being to his service; and if we are wholly consecrated to God we shall have nothing that we can withhold from him, whether houses or lands, gold or silver, husbands or wives, parents or children, flocks or herds—we must yield them all and ourselves also to him; for we "are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

Our gratitude will be measured by our willingness to yield ourselves and that which we have to his service. Empty professions will not do. Unmeaning assertions of professed love will not be accepted as the expressions of gratitude, for they bear the brand of falsehood, and "The liar shall have his portion in the ake."

The three records of Holy Writ abound with exhortations to gratitude. "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; worship the Lord in the beauty of his holiness."—Ps. 29. "Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what is the will of the Lord. And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Eph. 5:17, 20. "In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."—1 Thess. 5:18. "Behold, my beloved brethren, remember the words of your God; pray unto him continually by day, and give thanks unto his holy name by night. Let your hearts rejoice, and behold how great the covenants of the Lord, and how great his condescensions unto the children of men."—Book of Mormon, p. 75. "Being commanded of God to pray without ceasing, and to give thanks in all things."—Book of Mormon, p. 195. "And that which the Spirit testifies unto you, even so I would that ye should do in all holiness of heart, walking uprightly before me, considering the end of your salvation, doing all things with prayer and thanksgiving, that ye may not be seduced by evil spirits or doctrines of devils, or the commandments of men; for some are of men and others of devils."—Doc. Cov., p. 157. "Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things."—Doc. Cov. p. 180.

By these and scores of other texts are we instructed to shew forth our gratitude to God for all his wondrous love and unremitting kindness. And shall we withhold our praise, or fail to give him the honor due unto his holy name? Let that be far from every one of us. To-night the year 1887 closes forever. The evidences of our gratitude or ingratitude are written by an unerring pen on the records of time; they will be reproduced in the eternal records. We must meet them. Shall we gaze upon them with joy? or turn from them with shame? We can not alter the past; we may repent and improve the present and the future; but the past has gone from our reach. "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time because the days are evil."—Eph. 5:15, 16. In my retrospect I count forty years since I was ordained to God's ministry. In the record of those years I see some things that I could wish undone; words I would have unspeaken; thoughts that should have had no place in my heart; but I thank God I can write that they were not the result of determination to do wrong. Still they were wrong; and the causes that led to them are known in the bosom of Him who seeth all things. Those wrongs mar what might otherwise have been a pleasant picture. But my heart swells with gratitude to God for all his love and tender mercies over me in permitting me to be numbered with his children, and to serve as one of his ministers at his sacred altar; and I pray that the divine flame of gratitude may ever illumine my life, that while I minister to others the word of life, my example may stimulate them to confess the hand of the Lord in all things. And in everything to give the praise due unto his holy name.

CHARLES DERRY.

CIRCUMCISION.

WE do not present this subject simply to get into print; but with the hope that if wrong in our views, we may be set right by some one better acquainted with the subject.

In our recent discussion the minister claimed that the Mosaic circumcision merged into baptism under the Christian dispensation, hence the necessity for baptizing infants. As a counter claim, we argued that under the new covenant the circumcision of the heart took the place of the covenant in the flesh, hence there was no necessity for the baptism of infants. The following are a part of the Bible proofs produced:

"In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. Buried with Him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."—Col. 2:11, 12.

Here we discover that under the gospel law there was a circumcision which was to be obtained by "putting off the body of the sins of the flesh." John 3:5 taken in connection with the passage just referred to, shows that through the ordinance of baptism are we made pure, and our hearts are circumcised with the circumcision of Christ; and that what before was a token and a seal of a temporal promise made to Abraham, (Gen 17:10, 11), now becomes the seal of our adoption into the higher or spiritual law, by which seal we become heirs to the blessings promised under the gospel; and that inasmuch as the schoolmaster was a law of types and shadows pointing forward to the reality, or substance, circumcision must of necessity find under the law of Christ its antitype.

Again: "Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem; lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings."—Jer. 4:4. By reading the contexts to the above, we learn that the prophet was speaking of a time future and subsequent to the gospel dispensation, as will be learned by a perusal of verse seven. And here is plainly pointed out what is to be expected of us under said dispensation. It is also shown that God commands it, so that his fury might be stayed; and it points out the fact as already cited, that it is a seal of our adoption as citizens of the kingdom.

In Acts 7:51, we read: "Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye." When we consider that Stephen was so filled with the Spirit that, just after the above declaration (which speaks for itself) he was permitted to see heaven opened, it makes it all the more binding, if such were necessary. Here it is noted, that they who are not circumcised in heart do always resist the Holy Ghost. And who among us want to be in such condition!

Paul, he who received the gospel "by the revelation of Jesus Christ," (Gal. 1: 12), seems to have the same idea, as witness his declaration in Rom. 2: 28: 29: "For he is not a Jew who is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of man but of God." Here is plain evidence that the covenant in the flesh is of no avail under the new law; but that circumcision is still a necessity, is plainly shown in verse 29; also that it is that of the heart is just as plainly pointed out.

It seems to me that the only logical argument to be deduced from Paul's teaching of the matter, is, that the Abrahamic and Mosaic circumcision has found its reality under the higher law, in the circumcision of the heart; and was not as the adherents of infant baptism would fain have us believe, merged into baptism. And further; to become an Israelite indeed, we must undergo the change which this covenant brings about, else we are not conditioned to become "citizens of the kingdom," and can have no promise of the praise of God, the indwelling of the Spirit—not being in any way made a receptacle therefore—and hence we are not Jews, not being so "inwardly."

By turning to Rom. 15: 8 we discover the fact that "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the father." One of the promises made to the "father" was that, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." And in order that the "truth" of God might become effective it was necessary for Jesus to become a "minister of the circumcision;" also that all, "both Jew and Gentile," without any distinction as to race, color or condition, might, through obedience to the law of God become heirs of the "glorious promises."

But the key to the situation is found in Phil. 3: 3: "For we are the circumcision which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." Taking it for granted that Paul, who was a special minister to the Gentiles, knew whereof he affirmed, and that such knowledge came to him by special revelation, he is truly a good witness. Here we learn that it is only those that worship God in the Spirit that are of the circumcision under the higher law—the law of Christ.

This worship in spirit can only be through a broken heart and contrite spirit. Hence we conclude that the argument as herein presented was that understood by the ministers for Christ.

Another argument presented by those who believe in infant baptism, is, that the law of circumcision belonged to a spirit- ual covenant, and was the seal of spiritual adoption into citizenship. To this we object, claiming that it was only a token of their faith in the temporal promises, and, especially under Moses, was a seal of their citizenship under the temporal laws. Had it been, as is claimed, that it was a seal of their adoption into a spiritual covenant, then there had been a necessity for the females, as well as the males, to be circumcised, and only those having the authority of the priesthood could have officiated. Whereas, under that law, even the women had the right to administer, as witness the case of Zipporah. And that it was understood by the Jews themselves as a means of attainment unto temporal citizenship is learned from Josephus, Book 13, c. 11, par. 3. "Aristobulus compelled the inhabitants, if they would continue in the country, to be circumcised, and to live according to the Jewish laws."

That it could not possibly have been a spiritual law, is seen in the fact that faith was not a prerequisite, for the servants were to be circumcised, and the child of the most impious Jew was as much under the law as that of the most pious. Even reason, or any degree of intelligence, was not demanded under the law, as there is no command given, or in any way expressed, not to circumcise the idiot; but on the contrary all male children were to come under that covenant.

From the foregoing, as well as many other reasons, we conclude that the circumcision of the heart is the anti-type of the Abrahamic circumcision, and as such it is now a necessity, and hence binding on all who obey the gospel law.

CHANGING BOOK OF RULES.

I BEG leave to submit a few thoughts on the committee's report on chapter 13, "Book of Rules," and appeal which, as per action of general conference of 1887, (see Herald for May 7th), is pending. Sec. 2, of the above report permits the offended to seek redress, if sought within one year of the time an offense shall have been committed; which I think should be so modified as to leave the limiting of time, for redress, etc., to those authorized to hear and adjust difficulties. For in the course of human events one may desire, and be justly entitled to redress, and yet, perforce of circumstances be prevented seeking it within the limits. Furthermore, Christ's authorized method of adjudication as to limits in which redress should be sought, is silent. And the limiting or extending rights or prerogatives through the method of common consent which Christ's law neither grants or denies, may need sober thought.

Still further. A branch having power to regulate its own affairs, only to be called in question when violating some known law, and dealing with unruly members being one of its works, it would seem that when necessity compels action in this matter, the officials would be more competent to act as the nature of the trouble should necessitate, than that a general conference could pass rigid measures to meet an emergency that may or may not arise. Besides all this, the body exists in integral parts, and efforts to make each integral part mighty in its sphere, is to secure the success of the body. In view of which fact, all should seek to prevent rather than pass measures at a general conference that might hamper, instead of helping the integral parts in their respective sphere.

There can be no doubt but promptitude is most essential in all gospel imposed works. But a branch could better detect a lack in this, and act accordingly in cases properly coming under its jurisdiction. And when a tribunal or government is left to do its appointed work, and dissatisfaction exists, redress may be sought in a proper way. And it is better to foster legitimate work than encourage the fractious in essaying to modify existing rules as fancy may lead.

From sec. 85: pars. 8, 9, 10, Doc. Cov., we learn, 1. That which is governed by law is preserved and perfected thereby. 2. That which abideth not by law, etc. becoming a law unto itself, willing to abide in sin, etc. can not be sanctified or perfected by law; but must remain filthy still. 3. To all laws there are bounds, and also conditions. We learn from page 114 that nothing shall be appointed to the church contrary to the church articles; while on page 148 is found a command to the effect, that the elders shall instruct each other in the law of the church, etc. and are explicitly told on page 192 that a failure to act as the law directs will be offensive to Him who is our lawgiver; and are positively told on page 145 that a failure to do as the scriptures directs will bring condemnation; the legitimate result of violating law, whether human or divine. And turning to page 65 we are told that these commandments were given to God's servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding.

Thus we find, in entering the sacred precincts of God's divine economy, its positiveness, and non-flexibility confronts us, and its occupancy made more solemn in the portrayal of consequences to follow disobedience.

The first clause of sec. 5, of the report seems to recognize a district conference, and Bishop's court, as courts of appeal. The latter being incompetent, if the Bishop was present, at the trial of him who seeks the appeal, in which event, if the case has been tried by the district authorities appeal can be made to the High Council.

From page 79, "Book of Rules," we learn that presidents of districts are authorized to appoint elders courts, according to the nature of the complaints, where no branch organization, or district, has been perfected. An understanding of law, prerogatives, etc. is very necessary, and though cautiously approached, one is liable to have his motives attacked. That the motives in preparing the "Book of Rules," and its acceptance by conference, were good, I believed and still believe, but think subsequent examination of that received by conference permissible. If provisions to constitute a district conference a common, or court of appeal, or, both, other than custom exists, I would be glad to examine the evidence and submit, if valid. But the investment of power by a vote of general conference seems a grave question, opening the way, at least for effects to dispossess, or limiting power law has, or may impart.

The consummation of God's purposes through the gospel necessitates the inauguration of measures incurring labor and expense that all should, through the order or method of common consent, be privileged to acquiesce or not in assuming these responsibilities is consistent, but it can not be that the right of common consent authorizes the erasure of that made inflexible by a "Thus saith the Lord" and a substitute in view thereof. To human rights there must be a limit, or power to regulate, otherwise the supremacy of law were a myth.

Special endowment obtains through special provisions. Thus from page 296, Doc. and Cov., I learn that if the president transgress, he is to be tried by the common council, assisted by twelve councilors of the high priesthood. What would save me from censure, were I to insist in the event of a necessity, the president should be tried according to the pattern given in Doc. Cov., page 46. The bishop, on page 295, is called a common judge among the inhabitants of Zion, etc. And whether this would justify a conference in declaring the Bishopric an appeal court, in our scattered condition, I would hesitate to decide, and think the matter should be approached by a general conference with sober thought and becoming gravity. That our predecessors anticipated and provided, so far as practicable, rules, etc., for governing stakes of Zion, is clear. With a revelation of the duties of the First Presidency, quorums of Twelve, Seventies, Elders, Priests, Teachers, Deacons, members, and by a "Thus saith the Lord," the Seer defined the duties of high priests, saying they might travel if they chose, but rather be ordained to preside over stakes abroad.

Page 314, Doc. Cov., we learn that high priests were to be ordained by the direction of a high council or General Conference, as necessity should demand, of course. For ordination is not to be conferred as a compliment, or to rush into power a superabundance of officials to dispute about honor, etc. The high priest were under the president. Hence the power of appointment was lodged in the president to appoint the high priest where, and to the work the law assigns them.

And how far teachings and rules to govern stakes of Zion, high and common councils within their borders, may be applicable, in our scattered condition, is a matter for thought. Measures for districts between the periods of 1830 and 1838 seems by our worthy predecessors in the latter day work not to have been provided; yet in carrying the gospel into foreign lands, as in our scattered condition, the necessity for them or similar arrangements must be apparent, as the preaching and spread of the gospel must be the primary object. The use of time and space for proof that the scattering was through a departure from recognized law were superfluous, as the fact is conceded. Therefore a love evinced for accepted law while toiling to spread the gospel will hasten a restoration of that forfeited through a disregard of the same. For as Christ sought not to change, but to teach and practice his Father's appointed economy, it can not be that He would hold man guiltless in essaying such a forbidden work.

And now that amending a part of the "Book of Rules" is awaiting final action, the necessity of reaching a definite conclusion on note (a) as found in "Book of Rules" pages 101-102, which leaves the right of a negative vote in the presentation of a decision of an elders' court an open question, will, I think, hardly be questioned. I herewith insert two items of law in juxtaposition, with a confession that logic, or reason, to uphold the literality of one, and rendering the other flexible, is unknown to me.

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave to her and none else."

"And the elders shall lay the case before the church, [members], and the church shall lift up their hands against him or her, that they may be dealt with according to the law of God."

It might be said that the two items treat of different matters. But law is supposed to govern in each case; and law being the rule of action, therefore the action in each case must be imperative. The law says baptism by water is for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands is for the gift of the Holy Ghost. But should I be allowed to say the church had not decided on the former or the latter? If not, why not? They are different items, but the law authorizes and imposes both; therefore they are not susceptible to change or modification by common consent. If they were, common consent would be superior to and above the law. That all law is arbitrary in a sense, is too well known to need comment. But none complain of this but the lawless; for all lovers of law and order, if suffering through maladministration, will patiently, though determinately seek redress by a law imposed procedure; and resisting or setting aside an authoritative decision never finds encouragement from them, the imperativeness of law being one thing, and abuse of power to administer it another.

In the method of adjudication given by Joseph Smith, and accepted by the church, I find the following: 1. Those who fail to be reconciled, are to be "delivered up to the church, not to the members, but the elders;" which serves to show that the elders are authorized to act. And the members are forbidden, unless law further directs them, only to act as directed, neither more or less. 2. Those arraigned before the elders are condemned in the mouths of two or more witnesses, which fact, together with the fact of the authorization of the elders by law, makes them a competent tribunal to decide for or against, the evidence given being the basis for decision. 3. The elders having reached a decision, as an authoritative tribunal, that involves a necessity for the acceptance of said decision by all parties concerned. Its rejection, therefore, or modification, save in a legitimate manner, would be a gross violation of law and order, there being but two ways in which a decision reached by an authoritative tribunal, can be changed or modified, first by itself; second by a higher tribunal, for good and substantial reasons. 4. As of necessity there must be a point, at which controversy must cease, and that authoritatively, and the submitting of the case, or decision, by the elders to the branch, and the branch accepting the same being the end of law proscribed work; they, the branch members, are thereby relieved from further responsibility, leaving the aggrieved party (if there is one) to seek redress by a legitimate procedure; all of which may be seriously interfered with and prevented by granting the right of a negative vote, besides generating much strife, which can scarcely be prevented in a departure from the literality of law to foster common consent, or what might be thought individual rights. That which is governed by law is preserved by law, etc.

4. Should the right of a negative vote obtain because of parliamentary usage, then parliamentary usage is made above and superior to the law, and law, said to be the rule of action, a misnomer. But it may be asked, Is a branch expected to raise their hands as evidence of a willingness to abide by a decision without a knowledge of the evidence on which the decision is based? Yes; most decidedly. Why? Because the law so commands. But it might also be asked, Is, or could a branch be justified in rejecting a decision without knowing the basis of rejection to be valid? Here is a dilemma from which the [law] offers an escape.

5. In my understanding, an elder's court, is not a court of inquiry merely, to hear evidence for another court to pass upon, or set aside. Nor do I believe that a branch is authorized to modify, or set aside a decision of a lawfully authorized tribunal. Then again it is possible a branch may be the accuser; and the establishment of a precedent that would invest the accuser with power to pass sentence against the accused, would be monstrous! It would be at variance with the jurisprudence known in civilization. We have all gained something by experience; and I have found that motions by a General Conference which but appear to collide with local authority, are readily seized upon to justify, under the pretext that, "a General Conference knows best."

To wit; since the motion of conference in 1886, some who hesitated, have grown bold; others, fond of promiscuous dancing, somewhat defiant, saying, "General Conference does not strictly forbid dancing; branches therefore have no right to." The motion obtained in lieu of one, to visit and labor with members, etc., who should indulge in the practice of dancing. And while there might not have been the remotest intention to encourage the practice, there appears nothing to prohibit, but is susceptible of being construed as being advisory only. To visit and labor with those who transcend the bounds of propriety, or evidence a departure from the high moral rectitude the gospel imposes, is quite compatible with the genius and spirit of the gospel economy. And why reference thereto, with a recommend to practically observe it when necessary, should so alarm the advocates of liberty, and at once bring to their astonished vision the terribleness of expulsion, leading to an outburst of eloquence in the portrayal of the sweets and grandeur of liberty, is passingly strange, but serves to show that a governing policy, or procedure, of branch officials towards members at one point of the compass may be non-effectual at another. Some branches have good reason to know that taking a positive stand against the practice of promiscuous dancing is of the highest importance. That many have participated in the whirling, and, to them exhilarating exercise, with no evil design I can well believe. But the tempter has been there; and ere they have been aware some have been deceived, disgraced, perhaps lost. Think of an elder "standing in the way of sinners and sitting in the seat of the scornful," a sister, a wife, a mother, a maiden being whirled around in the embrace of whoever may solicit the privilege according to ballroom etiquette, inhaling the fumes of tobacco, with a little whiskey to render the above fumes more effective, with frequent outbursts of profanity, in an illy ventilated room, and let the stalwart advocates of liberty tell how such a procedure is to be made compatible with the injunction to "abstain from the appearance of evil," if they can, or how God-fearing branch officials could see a member, young or old, about to be inveigled into such debasing practices, without efforts, by visiting and labor, with a view to point them to the yawning precipice below them, if persisting, and while such labor should be respectfully and patiently performed, a positiveness impressing the erring one, that a repetition of such practices would not be tolerated should not be wanting; for to this end are branch officials raised up. And a discretion between rights and prerogatives of a general conference, branches, etc, is most essential.

I have thus written as of, and for, myself. And these may be thought small matters, but I understand if God's written laws are small matters, then these small matters should be a constant study and practice, and God will see to the big matters in His own way.

Should action be had on, and the right of a negative vote obtain in the presentation of decisions of elders' courts, it is to be hoped for the sake of consistency that one more step may be taken, abolishing elders courts. And in the event of any one being charged with wrong-doing, adjust it by vote of the branch; for the work of an elders' court (consuming time and per chance money) to be interfered with or set aside by a vote of seven to six, would be supremely ridiculous. I believe a general conference could do one as well as the other, but believe neither can be legitimately done. But when once an entrance is made within the limits of established law, with a view to change, one method is as good as another.

I am of the opinion that the action of general conference preventing expelled members entering, save by baptism should be revoked—or those violating it be held to account. Of course, those complaining of unjust dealing should be heard; but the thought, much more the act, of a definite decision being reached by ex parte testimony should be declared monstrous. Crookedness between church records revealing legislative acts, church law and discipline, and representatives in expounding or administering the law, would be as distasteful as snow that was once white, but now saturated with filthy water.

A REPLY.

In a Herald of recent date an article appears under the title of "Woman the weaker vessel," in which the writer attempts to prove from the Bible, woman's inferiority and man's right to rule over her; not because man has proven himself less fallible, but simply because "She is the weaker vessel." We are indebted to the Apostle Paul for the passages occurring in the New Testament regulating a wife's conduct toward her husband, who, though a bachelor himself, felt able to explain her duty to her. We read that in the beginning God made man in his own image, "Male and female created he them," and gave them (not him) dominion over every living creature. In the article referred to, the writer puts great stress on the passage in Genesis, which reads: "And thy desire shall be to thy husband and he shall rule over thee." But it does not sound quite so conclusive when we turn to the next chapter, and find the same language addressed to Cain regarding his brother Abel: "And the Lord said unto Cain, why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door; and unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him."—Gen. 4:6, 7.

Are we to suppose the Almighty intended Abel to be subject to Cain the rest of his days? No; common sense forbid!

If we are to take everything in the Bible literally, then as a church are we committing some grave mistakes, for we read in 1 Cor. 14:34, "Let your women keep silence in your churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak." In Christ's government there is no distinction of sex.

"There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—Gal. 3:28. And the fact that "Adam was not deceived" proves nothing in his favor; Eve was tempted through her ambition for wisdom; while Adam meekly followed her example without a word of objection or remonstrance. And surely God does not need disobedience on the part of his creatures in order to carry out his designs. I admit the sentence pronounced on woman does sound a little severe; but as God is merciful as well as just, we find in 1 Tim. 2:13, a promised recompense. And let us remember one woman was honored above all the human race—the mother of Christ. Also Christ appeared first to a woman when he arose from the tomb.

A great deal more might be said on the same subject; but I will leave the citing of farther proof of woman's right to stand by man's side his acknowledged equal, to abler pens than mine.

DAVID WHITMER.

DAVID WHITMER, one of the original Mormons and a sketch of whose life was printed in Tuesday's Times, died at his home in Richmond, Missouri, at five o'clock yesterday afternoon, the news reaching here last evening in a dispatch to Mr. Vancleave, of the city clerk's office. A Chicago man, on hearing of Mr. Whitmer's death, related the following incident:

"Some sixteen years ago I chanced to ride across the state of Missouri, from Hanibal to Kansas City. There were but few in the car in which I rode, and the seat directly in front of mine was occupied by a very tall, quiet, elderly gentleman, with whom I had some conversation. Some things in his dress, manners, and talk caused me to think that he was a prosperous Pennsylvania Quaker, journeying west to look after his investments. I soon found, however, that he was possessed of much information about the land over which we were passing, the various resource of the same, and of its early history. About noon a gentleman in the car asked me into the smoker to enjoy a cigar. He asked me if I knew the man with whom I had been talking. I informed him that I did not. He then stated that it was David Whitmer, one of the 'testifiers' of the Book of Mormon, and one of the early associates of Joseph Smith. I asked him if he was well acquainted with Mr. Whitmer, and he stated that he was, having always lived in the same county with him. As I now remember he said he was brought up on a farm, but had for several years been practicing law or performing the duties of sheriff of the county. At my request he gave an account of what he knew of our travelling companion and his estimate of his character.

"He said he was a small boy when some patriotic citizens proposed to drive the Mormons out of Missouri, the leading charges against them being that they were 'Yankee abolitionists and prohibitionists, who spent more time in going to meeting than most persons thought there was any need of.' He was on horseback behind his father when they were driven out. The leader of the party, he said, dismounted, took a stand on the stile in front of David Whitmer's house, and, producing various firearms and dirks, declared that he should stand guard over those premises. He declared that he would kill like a dog any man who ventured to molest David Whitmer or his brother or to take any of their goods. The Whitmers continued to reside on their places after their old companions had left, and were always highly respected. At the breaking out of the civil war, the narrator continued, most of the people in our county were secessionists, and it was proposed to notify the union men that their room was much better than their company. A meeting was accordingly called, at which the sentiment of the community was to be expressed. Some speeches were made and a committee was appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the feeling of the members present. At this point in the proceedings David Whitmer arose, walked to the platform, and delivered a short but very telling speech. He stated that no resolutions or threats would cause him to run away. He declared that he was a citizen of the United States, and should remain such. He proposed to live or die under the old flag. If anyone desired to shoot him then was a good time. The resolutions were not passed, the meeting adjourned to a given day, but did not convene. In the opinion of this gentleman, no man in Missouri possessed greater courage or honesty than this heroic old man. 'His oath,' he said, 'would send a man to the gallows quicker than that of any man I ever knew.' He then went on to say that no person had ever questioned his word to his knowledge about any other matter than finding the Book of Mormon. He was always a loser and never a gainer by adhering to the faith of Joseph Smith. Why persons should question his word about the golden plates, when they took it in relation to all other matters, was to him a mystery."

Conference Minutes.

INDEPENDENCE.

This district conference convened in the Saints' chapel, Independence, Missouri, December 31st, at ten a. m., with Pres. I. N. White in chair, S. Crum, secretary. Branch reports:—Independence 538; 9 baptized, 2 received by certificate, 8 by letter, 3 removed by letter, 1 died. Eldorado Springs 45; 7 baptized. Clinton 53; 5 received by baptism. First Kansas City 29. Holden 18; 4 removed by letter. Reports:—Elders C. Curtis baptized 14, J. C. Foss baptized 9, F. C. Warnkey baptized 6, I. N. White baptized 3, C. St. Clair baptized 3, Joseph Luff baptized 15, H. H. Robinson baptized 13, J. W. Brackenberry, A. White, B. Myers, S. Hogue, F. G. Pitt, J. H. Lee, S. Crum, J. S. Loar, M. Shaw, H. H. Holdsworth; Priests:—E. Winn, A. J. Cox, J. H. Clemenson, J. J. Vickery, J. Allison. Teachers:—J. A. Kennedy, M. S. Frick, J. A. Burnham; Deacon, J. A. McGuire. Bishop's agent's report:—On hand last report $888.12, received for six months $599.28, paid out $715.25, balance $772.15, holding one note bearing interest $116.33. Auditing committee reported the above correct. Committee discharged. Letter from Armstrong asking for a committee to investigate some business; granted and committee appointed. Moved and seconded that we rescind the motion at our last conference in regard to Bro. J. T. Clarke's case. Carried. When this conference adjourns it does so to meet at Independence, Missouri, 24th March, 1888, at ten o'clock. The president was authorized to organize a branch at Rich Hill, when he deems it wise. A committee was appointed to take into consideration the advisability of voting by representation, at our district conference and adopt a system and report at our next conference. Officers for next six months:—I. N. White, president, E. Curtis vice president, S. Crum, secretary. A committee of three was appointed to assist the district secretary to do the necessary work on district records and purchase new books. The church authorities were sustained in righteousness. T. W. Chatburn was tendered a vote of thanks for past services as secretary. In the evening preaching by J. A. Robinson. Preaching on Sunday forenoon by I. N. White. Sacrament meeting in the afternoon in charge of F. C. Warnkey and H. R. Mills; the good Spirit was there and many souls made glad. Preaching in the evening by Joseph Luff. The ministry to labor under the direction of the president.

Miscellaneous.

THE LAST WITNESS DEAD!

For many days past our aged fellow citizen, David Whitmer, lingered on the very brink of the grave waiting for the summons, but it did not come until yesterday evening, at 5 o'clock, when his spirit winged its way into the infinite.

David Whitmer was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, January 7th, 1805, consequently was in his 83d year. He possessed a remarkably robust constitution which, added to his habit of activity and temperate living, prolonged his life beyond four score. He lived in Richmond about half a century, and we can say that no man ever lived here, who had among our people, more friends and fewer enemies. Honest, conscientious and upright in all his dealings, just in his estimate of men, and open, manly and frank in his treatment of all, he made lasting friends who loved him to the end.

When a youth he moved to Ontario county, New York. He was married to Julia Ann Jolly, on January 9th, 1831, in Seneca county, New York. In 1832 he moved from that place to Kirtland, Ohio. In 1834 he came to Jackson county, Missouri, and in 1837 moved to Far West, Caldwell county, Missouri, and from there to Richmond in 1838, where he resided to the day of his death. He leaves a wife and two children, two grand children, and several great grand children.

It is well known that he was a firm believer in the bible, in the divinity of Christ and in the authenticity and divine character of the record of the Nephites, better known as the Book of Mormon.

He was the last to go of the three witnesses to "the divine authenticity of the record of the Nephites," and as the history of this Book of Mormon is not much known, we think this a fitting occasion to repeat what Mr. Whitmer has often said on the subject, taken in part from an article written by Joe Johnson of the Plattsburg Democrat.

When he was twenty-four years of age and working on his father's farm near Palmyra, New York, then all that section of the country was more or less excited over the reported discovery by Joseph Smith of the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, Oliver Cowdery, the village school teacher, mentioned the matter to him and announced his determination to visit Smith and investigate the matter for himself, promising Mr. Whitmer, at the latter's request, to advise him of the result. A few days later he received a letter from Cowdery, urging him to join him, which he did, being received by the "prophet" with open arms. After remaining long enough to satisfy himself of the divine inspiration of Smith, the three returned to Whitmer's home, where it was agreed that the work of translation should be prosecuted.

Shortly after his return, and while he was plowing in the field one afternoon, he was visited by Smith and Cowdery, who requested that he should accompany them into the woods on a hill across the road for the purpose of witnessing a manifestation that should qualify he and Cowdery to bear witness to the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, Smith explaining that such procedure was in accordance with explicit instructions he had received from an angel of the Lord.

Repairing to the wood they engaged in prayer for a short time, when suddenly a great light shone round about them far brighter and more dazzling than the brilliancy of the noon-day sun, seemingly enveloping the wood for a considerable distance. A spirit of elevation seized him as of joy indescribable and a strange influence stole over him which so entranced him that he felt that he was chained to the spot. A moment later and a divine personage clothed in white raiment appeared unto them, and immediately in front of the personage stood a table on which lay a number of gold plates, some brass plates, the "urim and thummim," and the "sword of Laban." All of these they were directed to examine carefully, and after their examination they were told that the Lord would demand that they bear witness there of to all the world. These plates were engraved with characters termed in the Book of Mormon "reformed Egyptian," characters unknown to the linguists of the present day, which is claimed as a fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah:

"And the word of the Lord has become unto them as the leaves [words] of a book which are sealed, and which is delivered unto him that is learned, saying: Read this, I pray thee, and he sayeth, I can not, for it is sealed," etc.

A slip of paper containing a fac simile of these characters, traced by Joseph Smith, was submitted to the celebrated Professor Anthon and others and all confessed their inability to translate them, recognizing in them characteristics of several ancient alphabets. This slip is still in Mr. Whitmer's possession, and is cherished with the same sacred care that he bestows on the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, which he also has.

While describing this vision to us, all traces of a severe cold from which he was suffering disappeared for the time being, his form straightened, his countenance assumed almost a beautiful expression, and his tones became strangely eloquent. Although evidently no studied effort, the description was a magnificent piece of word painting; and he carried his hearers with him to that lonely hill by the old farm, and they stood there with him awed in the divine presence. Skeptics may laugh and scoff if they will, but no man can listen to Mr. Whitmer as he talks of his interview with the angel of the Lord, without being most forcibly convinced that he has heard an honest man tell what he honestly believes to be true.

The result of this vision was a proclamation setting forth the facts enumerated. The "urim and thummim," mentioned in the account of the vision were a pair of transparent stone spectacles. Smith would put on the spectacles, when a few words of the text of the Book of Mormon would appear on the lenses. When these were correctly transcribed by Cowdery, who acted as his amanuensis, these words would disappear and others take their place. When one hundred and sixteen pages were completed, Smith entrusted them to Martin Harris, to take to his home with a view to convert his family to the new faith. They were placed at night in a bureau drawer and next morning were missing, having been stolen. They were never found and never replaced, so that the Book of Mormon to-day is short that number of pages of the original matter. As a chastisement for his carelessness, the urim and thummim was taken from Smith. But by humbling himself, he again found favor with the Lord, and was presented with a strange oval-shaped, chocolate colored stone, about the size of an egg but more flat, which it was promised should answer the same purpose. With this stone all the present book was translated. The prophet would place the stone in a hat, then put his face in the hat and read the words that appeared thereon. This stone is the only relic of the prophet's work in existence which is not in possession of Mr. Whitmer. It was confided to Oliver Cowdery and preserved by him until his death in 1852. After that event Phineas Young succeeded in getting it from Cowdery's widow and it is now among the sacred relics preserved at Salt Lake City.

He bore his long illness with great patience and fortitude, his faith never for a moment wavering, and when the summons came, he sank peacefully to rest with a smile on his countenance, just as if he was being lulled to sleep by sweet music. Just before the breath left the body, he opened his eyes which glistened with the brightness of early manhood. He then turned them toward heaven, and a wonderful light came over his countenance, which remained several moments, when the eyes gradually closed and David Whitmer was gone to his rest.

On Monday last at ten o'clock A. M., after awakening from a short slumber, he said he had seen beyond the veil and saw Christ on the other side. His friends who were constantly at his bedside claim that he had many manifestations of the truths of the great beyond, and which confirms their faith beyond all shadow of doubt.

On Sunday evening at 5:30, January 22d, 1888, Mr. Whitmer called his family and some friends to his bedside, and addressing himself to the attending physician, said: "Dr. Buchanan, I want you to say whether or not I am in my right mind, before I give my dying testimony."

The doctor answered: "Yes, you are in your right mind, for I have just had a conversation with you."

He then addressed himself to all around his bedside in these words: "Now you must all be faithful in Christ. I want to say to you all, the Bible and the record of the Nephites, (Book of Mormon) is true, so you can say that you have heard me bear my testimony on my death bed. All be faithful in Christ and your reward will be according to your works. God bless you all. My trust is in Christ forever, world without end.—Amen."

It is proper to state the Book of Mormon, the manuscript of which Mr. Whitmer retained to the day of his death, strongly condemns polygamy and the practice of Utah Mormons. In 1879, Orson Pratt and other [Utah] Mormon Elders came here and attempted to buy the manuscript, but Mr. Whitmer would part with it for no consideration, as he considered it his duty to retain it.

In the spring of 1887, he published a pamphlet, setting forth his religious views, in which he strongly condemns polygamy and forcibly argues by giving scripture quotations, in favor of the Church of Christ, which is the name taken by all true believers in the record of the Nephites.

His remains will be laid to rest to-morrow at the new city cemetery in Richmond. Mr. Whitmer was a very plain man and it was his desire that no display of any kind be made at his burial, hence the only ceremony will be a few appropriate remarks at his late residence.—Richmond Democrat, Jan. 26th.

BORN.

HOLENBECK.—At Elmwood, Nebraska, September 21st, 1887, to brother and sister John Holenbeck, a daughter; blessed January 8th by Elder Charles H. Porter, and named Ruby Ethel.

JEMMETT.—At Collinston, Box Elder county, Utah, April 24th, 1887, to Mr. Henry G. and sister Eliza Jemmett, a daughter. Blessed at place of birth, January 20th, by Robert M. Elvin, and named Eva.

SORRENSEN.—To brother Marce and sister Lizzie Sorrensen, Lamoni, Iowa, January 5th, 1888, a son.

GAULTER.—To brother William and sister Mabel Gaulter, Lamoni, Iowa, December 3d, 1887, a son, named Loren William.

DIED.

POWELL.—At the residence of her parents, at Cleveland, Lucas county, Iowa, January 22d, 1888, of typhoid fever, Sr. Margaret Jane, beloved wife of Bro. Lorenzo Powell, aged 31 years, 7 months and 21 days. She was the oldest daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Sarah Watkins. She was born at New Tredegar, Monmouthshire, Wales; was baptized at same place, April 1st, 1867; she emigrated to this country, with her parents, and settled first at Canton, Illinois, after which they removed to this place. She was kind, affectionate, and gentle in her disposition, and endeared herself to all, and especially to the Saints. Words can not portray the extent to which the whole community sympathize with the bereaved parents and husband, whose loss is great, and where nought but time and the assistance of God's Spirit will enable them to endure the desolation which has come over their once happy home. She was truly a child of God, ever willing to bear her testimony to the world of God's goodness to her. Her faith was unshaken even to the last, and during her illness she did not trust in human aid or medical skill, but placed herself in the hands of God, to do according to his will. Funeral services were conducted by Elder John R. Evans. For further particulars concerning her death, please notice "Home Column."

She's gone! Her work on earth is done;
Her battle's fought, her race is run:
Blest is the path she trod:
For she espoused the glorious cause,
In prompt obedience to the laws
Of the Eternal God.

A CALL.

Saints of the Kent and Elgin district:—Brethren and Sisters:—Thanking you for the liberal manner in which you have contributed your tithes and offerings in the year that is past, we hope your record will not be lessened the present year. We trust all feel the need of means being placed in the Bishop's hands, that the ministry may be so sustained, that the gospel may be preached; and in order to accomplish this we all have to make some sacrifice. The ministry have to sacrifice the comforts of home, leaving those who are dear to them, and in many cases go forth and face a frowning world, their families having to do without their support and company. It is very evident from what the Lord says in the fiftieth Psalm that we have some sacrifice to make, for he says: "Gather my Saints unto me; those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Now it is clear from this that we can not "do nothing" and receive blessings as those who make a sacrifice for the work. In Malachi, third chapter, we find that the Lord promised great blessing to his people by their bringing their "tithes" into his "store house." And as God is unchangeable, will he not bless his people the same to-day? Prove him and see. May all who read this be impressed with the great need of obeying the whole law; and let us all ask ourselves the question: "What sacrifice are we making for the cause we love so well?" And if we find we are not doing our part, let us determine that we will do it from this time onward. God does not compel us to pay our tithes and offerings, but has promised great blessings to his Saints when doing so. May the Lord bless us with his Holy Spirit, so that we may be able to learn our duties and perform them with an eye single to his glory.

Send money to me by Postoffice order or bank cheque. That is safer than by registered letter.

RICHARD COBURN, Bishop's Agent.
Box 48, Blenheim, Ontario, Jan. 30th.

FIFTH QUORUM ELDERS.

If any of you have changed your address since last report, drop me a card immediately, so I can send you blank report. So far our quorum has made a good record. Let us keep it up. The money on hand, over all expenses, last report, was $11.56. Why may not the quorum have a stone in the new church at Independence, Missouri? Should the dues be as liberal as last year, there would be $20 over expenses. Let every one report and send their dues, and be as liberal as they choose. The quorum will use it wisely. Do not send stamps where other methods are available. Money Orders are safe. Brethren in England and Wales, please use only the "International Money Order."

Blank reports will be sent you on February 25th. Please fill them out from 1st to 10th of March, giving account of labor since last report and prospects for the coming year, and address R. ETZENHOUSER, box 452, Independence, Jackson county, Missouri.

Several brethren have applied for admittance into the quorum since April, 1886, the last convening when there were sufficient present to do business. These who wrote me thus will please renew application through Bro. H. A. Stebbins, as per his late notice in Herald for January 23d, stating if they choose having previously applied to the Fifth Quorum. Any business with secretary should be addressed W. S. Loar, Lock Box 203, Independence, Missouri.

R. ETZENHOUSER.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

A conference of the Decatur district will be held at Pleasanton, Decatur county, Iowa, beginning at ten o'clock on Saturday, February 25th. The branches are requested to send reports. Let none fail, for the annual report will be made up from them. Let all branches be represented, as delegates to General Conference will be chosen at this session. H. A. STEBBINS, Dis. Pres.

The Southern California district conference will convene March 2d, 1888, at ten o'clock, near the corner of Main and First streets in A. O. U. W. Hall, (Opera House Building), Los Angeles, California, and continue three days. President Joseph Smith, and Elder E. L. Kelly of the Bishopric will be present. We hope to have a full representation. Come determined to work, and pray for the success of conference. Los Angeles is the principal city of southern California, and to make a good presentation is to the interest of all. Make the sacrifice to come, and you will be blest.

HEMAN C. SMITH,
Missionary in Charge.

The conference of the Pittsburg and Kirtland district will be held at Wheeling, West Virginia, on the 3d and 4th of March, 1888. Commencing at half-past ten o'clock on Saturday. Delegates will be appointed to represent the district at the General Conference, April 6th, 1888, also the present district president will resign; hence it will be necessary to appoint another. Let all officers and clerks of branches send in their reports in ample time to R. S. Salyards, No. 4728, Jacob street, Wheeling West Virginia.

G. T. GRIFFITHS, Pres. Dist.

A conference of the Pottawattamie district will be held at Underwood, Iowa, commencing on Saturday, February 25th, at half-past ten o'clock. Business of importance may come up, as this will be the time to choose delegates for the Annual Conference. Reports sent by mail should be sent early, and addressed to Thomas Scott, Underwood, Iowa.

H. N. HANSEN, Pres. Dist.

BISHOP'S NOTICE.

In consequence of the resignation of Bro. C. C. Reynolds as Bishop's Agent for the Eastern Iowa district, and Bro. Warren Turner being recommended by their last quarterly conference as Bishop's Agent, I therefore appoint him for the same, and for said district, and would recommend him to all the Saints. Ever praying that they may uphold him by their prayers and sustain him with their means that we may carry on this great work that has been committed to our trust.

Ever your co-laborer in the one faith,
G. A. BLAKESLEE, Presiding Bishop.

COMMON STOCK.

It is rumored in some quarters that "Elder W. W. Blair favors common stock rather than the law of tithing." To this we reply, 1st, that he never has in the past; 2d, that he does not now; and 3d, that he is not at all likely to do so in the future.

The Bible everywhere, from the garden of Eden down to the Isle of Patmos, teaches that man is and is to be personally responsible to God and man for his individual efforts and the management of his own earthly stewardship; first in respect to his duties toward God; and second, in his duties as a citizen. This too, we find the Book of Mormon to teach—also the Doctrine and Covenants.

Common Stock systems tend to lessen individual effort, to confound and destroy personal responsibility, and to shut out those incentives that heaven has ordained, in nature and in grace, to move the individual forward in the achievement of personal good works and the attainment of man's best conditions. Whoever will carefully read Luke, chapter 12, and Matthew, chapter 25, need not be told that God will make each individual account for his own personal conduct and the stewardship committed to his trust.

It is true the Scriptures say that the Christians in Jerusalem, immediately after the crucifixion, when persecution ran high, and before suitable organizations were effected, "had all things common." But in no place do we find the apostles to endorse that state of affairs as the proper and permanent order of the church. The Saints in those times (mentioned in Acts 2: 44; 4: 32-34), were sorely persecuted, had no certain dwelling place and no permanent system of business, and herein we can find readily a reason for the policy—if such we may call it—that was practiced temporarily and only till proper organizations could be had.

It must not be thought that everything which was done, or left undone, by the apostles and their fellows was ordained and appointed of God, or that we have a full and detailed account of general church affairs in those times; for the facts are, that a history of the details of a city of twenty thousand people, including the laws and usages touching its government, for even ten years, would make a book much larger than the entire New Testament, while that of the Christian Church for seventy years would no doubt be vastly greater. We have in the latter only a small, fragmentary, and in many things a closely abridged statement of church history and church government. In that we have only a part of the writings of less than one half of the apostles. But enough is given in it to enable us to see that, as years were added and the church increased and developed, needed organizations were had and the kingdom took on that systematized and organic form typified in the teachings of our Savior in Matthew 13: 24, 31, 33, 44, 45, 47; John 10: 1-16; 15: 1-7; Luke 12: 32; and also in 1 Timothy, 3: 15; 1 Peter 4: 7; Ephesians 2: 19-22; 4: 16, etc., etc.

As for tithing, it was established by the will of God as early, at least, as the times of Melchisedek, who was both a fellow minister with, and a type of, Christ; (Gen. 14: 18, 20; Alma 9: 6, and 10: 1, 2); it was cheerfully observed by Jacob at "the house of God" and "the gate of heaven;" (Gen. 28: 17, 22); it was enjoined by the Lord upon Israel with great promise, (Malachi 3: 7-12); it was endorsed by Sinta Paul, who testified that Christ "received them;" (Hebrews 7: 8); and it has been given in our day through that man Joseph the Seer, whom the Lord called authorized and empowered to plant and organize the Church of God in this dispensation; (2 Nephi 11: 17-19; 2: 2, 3; Book of Nephi 9: 11, 12; Book of Mormon 4: 2; Doc. Cov. 1: 4, 5; 3: 1, 2; 17: 1; 19: 1, 2, etc.); and it is the lawful, practical means by which to systematically, and equitably furnish aid, temporally, in building up and bearing off the Church of Christ till he comes. Doc. Cov. 64: 5; 94: 3; 106: 1, 2; with 42: 8, 9, 10.

Furthermore, we hold and have held, that when God builds up Zion and her stakes according to His own will, their temporal concerns will be established after the manner set forth in Doc. Cov. 42: 8, 9, 10; 106: 1, 2, as interpreted by the Seer in his letter to Bishop Edward Partridge, found in Times and Seasons vol. 6, p. 801.

As for Common Stock, the "Choice Seer" repudiated it in these words:

"The latter part of January, in company with brothers Sidney Rigdon and Edward Partridge,

I started with my wife for Kirtland, Ohio, where we arrived about the first of February, and were kindly received and welcomed into the house of brother N. K. Whitney. I and my wife lived in the family of brother Whitney several weeks, and received every kindness and attention which could be expected, and especially from sister Whitney. The branch of the church in this part of the Lord's vineyard, which had increased to nearly one hundred members, were striving to do the will of God, so far as they knew it; though some strange notions and false spirits had crept in among them. With a little caution and some wisdom I soon assisted the brethren and sisters to overcome them. The plan of "common stock," which had existed in what was called "the family," whose members generally had embraced the everlasting gospel, was readily abandoned for the more perfect law of the Lord; and the false spirits were easily discerned and rejected by the light of revelation."—Times and Seasons, vol. 4: page 368.

In July, 1833, "The Elders stationed in Zion" sent forth an epistle "To the Churches Abroad," from which we take the following valuable items in respect to the order of the Church touching its temporal and financial affairs as they were then being established under the law given for the building of Zion and her stakes. In this "Common Stock" is disallowed, and the fact that each person had and will have his personal inheritance in all property affairs, sole and separate, and be held accountable to God for his own personal work, is clearly stated. We commend it to the careful attention of our readers with the assurance that we heartily endorse it, and have ever done so:

"One object in writing this epistle is, to give some instructions to those who come up to the land of Zion. Through a mistaken idea, many of the brethren abroad, that had property, have given some away; and sacrificed some, they hardly know how. This is not right, nor according to the commandments.

"We would advise in the first place, that every disciple, if in his power, pay his just debts, so as to owe no man, and then if he has any property left, let him be careful of it, and he can help the poor by consecrating some for their inheritances: For as yet, there has not been enough consecrated to plant the poor in inheritances according to the regulation of the church, and the desire of the faithful.

"This might have been done, had such as had property been prudent. It seems as though a notion was prevalent, in Babylon, that the Church of Christ was a common stock concern. This ought not so to be, for it is not the case. When a disciple comes to Zion for an inheritance, it is his duty, if he has any thing to consecrate to the Lord for the benefit of the poor and the needy, or to purchase lands, to consecrate it according to the law of the Lord, and also according to the law of the land; and the Lord has said, that in keeping his law, we have no need to break the laws of the land. And we have abundant reason to be thankful that we are permitted to establish ourselves under the protection of a government that knows no exceptions to sect or society, but gives all its citizens a privilege of worshiping God according to their own desire.

"Again, while in the world it is not the duty of a disciple to exhaust all his means in bringing the poor to Zion; and this because, if all should do so there would be nothing to put in the storehouse in Zion for the purposes which the Lord has commanded.

"Do not think, brethren, by this, that we would advise or direct that the poor be neglected in the least; this is not the desire of our hearts; for we are mindful of the word of our Father which informs us that in his bosom it is decreed that the poor and meek of the earth shall possess it.

"The welfare of the poor has always a place in our hearts: yet we are confident that our experience, even had we nothing else to prompt us to advise on this point, and that wholly for the good of the cause in which we labor, would be sufficient in the minds of our brethren abroad to excuse a plainness on this important part of our subject.

"To see numbers of disciples come to this land destitute of means to procure an inheritance, and much less the necessaries of life, awakens a sympathy in our bosoms of no ordinary feeling; and we should do injustice to the Saints were we to remain silent when, perhaps, a few words by way of advice may be the means of instructing them, that hereafter great difficulties may be avoided.

"For the disciples to suppose that they can come to this land without aught to eat, or to drink, or to wear, or any thing to purchase these necessaries with, is a vain thought. For them to suppose that their clothes and shoes will not wear out upon the journey, when the whole of it lies through a country where there are thousands of sheep from which wool in abundance can be procured to make them garments, and cattle upon a thousand hills to afford leather for shoes, is just as vain.

"The circumstances of the Saints in gathering to the land of Zion in these last days are very different from those of the children of Israel after they despised the promised rest of the Lord, after they were brought out of the land of Egypt. Previous to that, the Lord promised them if they would obey his voice and keep his commandments that he would send the hornet before them and drive out those nations which then inhabited the promised land, so that they might have peaceable possession of the same without the shedding of blood. But in consequence of their unbelief and rebellion, they were compelled to obtain it by the sword, with the sacrifice of many lives.

"But to suppose that we can come up here and take possession of this land by the shedding of blood, would be setting at nought the law of the glorious gospel, and also the word of our great Redeemer: And to suppose that we can take possession of this country without making regular purchases of the same according to the laws of our nation, would be reproaching this great Republic in which the most of us were born, and under whose auspices we all have protection.

"We feel as though enough was said on this point, knowing that a word to the wise is sufficient; and that all our brethren are aware of the fact, that all the tithes can not be gathered into the storehouse of the Lord, that the windows of heaven may be opened, and a blessing poured out that there is not room enough to contain it, if all the means of the Saints are exhausted before they reach the place where they can have a privilege of so doing.

"Do not conclude from these remarks, brethren, that we doubt in the least that the Lord will fail to provide for his Saints in these last days; or, that we would extend our hands to steady his ark; for this is not the case. We know that the Saints have the unchangeable word of God that they shall be provided for; yet we know if any are imprudent, or lavish, or negligent, or indolent in taking that proper care, and making that proper use of what the Lord has made them stewards over, which is their duty to do, they are not counted wise; for a strict account of every one's stewardship is required, not only in time, but will be in eternity.

"Neither do we apprehend that we shall be considered as putting out our hands to steady the ark of God by giving advice to our brethren upon important points relative to their coming to Zion, when the experience of almost two years' gathering has taught us to revere that sacred word from heaven, 'Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you.'

"Then, brethren, we would advise that where there are many poor in a church that the elders counsel together and make preparations to send a part at one time and a part at another. And let the poor rejoice in that they are exalted: but the rich in that they are made low, for there is no respect of persons in the sight of the Lord.

"The disciples of Christ, blessed with immediate revelations from him, should be wise and not take the way of the world, nor build air-castles, but consider that when they have been gathered to Zion, means will be needed to purchase their inheritances, and means will be needed to purchase food and raiment for at least one year: or, at any rate, food: and where disciples, or churches, are blessed with means to do as much as this, they would be better off in Zion than in the world, troubled as it is, and will shortly be, with plagues, famines, pestilences, and utter destructions upon the ungodly."—Evening and Morning Star, vol. 2, ps. 219, 220.

About this time Joseph the Seer and his counsellors wrote to Bishop Edward Partridge in respect to the administration of temporal affairs in Zion as follows:

"Brother Edward Partridge, sir, I proceed to answer your questions, concerning the consecration of property: First, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is this, a man is bound by the law of the church, to consecrate to the Bishop, before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this, he can not be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church book: therefore, to condescend to particulars, I will tell you that every man must be his own judge, how much he should receive, and how much he should suffer to remain in the hands of the Bishop. I speak of those who consecrate more than they need for the support of themselves and their families.

The matter of consecration must be done by the mutual consent of both parties; for, to give the Bishop power to say how much every man shall have, and he be obliged to comply with the Bishop's judgment, is giving to the Bishop more power than a king has; and, upon the other hand, to let every man say how much he needs, and the Bishop be obliged to comply with his judgment, is to throw Zion into confusion, and make a slave of the Bishops. The fact is, there must be a balance or equilibrium of power, between the bishop and the people; and thus harmony and good will, be preserved among you.

"Therefore, these persons consecrating property to the Bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back, must shew reasonably to the Bishop that he wants as much as he claims. But in case the two parties can not come to a mutual agreement, the Bishop is to have nothing to do about receiving their consecrations; and the case must be laid before a council of twelve High Priests; the Bishop not being one of the council, but he is to lay the case before them."—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 80r.

These quotations utterly exclude all "Common Stock" systems and support tithing and consecration; and these we fully endorse.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ELDER R. J. ANTHONY wrote us from Provo, Utah, the 4th instant, and assures us that remarkable changes are going on in all that region among all classes, especially the Utah Mormons. The sentiment is rapidly obtaining with them that "polygamy must go," also that the people will hear and judge for themselves and vote for whom they will, free from the dictation of the priesthood. He reports bad weather and bad roads, but feels greatly cheered with present and future prospects touching the work of the Reorganization in all that mission-field. He does not now expect to attend General Conference.

Sr. Adelia Mosher, of Watterville, Le Sueur county, Minnesota, in a late letter asked that ministers be sent there and expresses confidence that a branch could be raised up readily. This county is southwest of St. Paul, and is easily reached by railway. Our Minnesota Elders should look after this call and supply it soon.

Bro. W. M. Goreham wrote us of late that the Saints at Beeler, Kansas, and vicinity held regular meetings in the town, have good attendance, and that a good feeling prevails.

Bro. John T. Davis, of Pittsburg, Kansas, wrote us of late that he had been preaching as occasion offered since the first of last December, and that he hopes to continue permanently in the field, and he hopes at no distant day to visit his large circle of relatives and friends in Utah. He also says his eldest son would soon make a trip to the Indian Territory with Bro. John Hawley.

Bro. Moses Turpen, of Keighley, Kansas, renews for Church publications, and he says "the Saints at this place, as a rule, are trying to live their religion."

Bro. A. H. Parsons writes of late from Barton county, Kansas, and says: "I am wanted in Rice county to administer baptism to a man and his wife where I had spent four weeks presenting the good word. I feel well in the work."

Bro. William Leeka, of Plum Hollow, Fremont county, Iowa, reports that Elder J. D. McClure, of the Christian Church, would deliver four lectures in the M. E. Church at that place against the Latter Day Saints, beginning the 6th instant. Those having charge of that mission field should be on the watchtower, clad in the armor of the Lord, and see that no harm comes to "the flock of God, over which the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers."

Sr. Margaret J. Braden writes from Monmouth, Ontario, that she knows the work is of God, and that she intends to faithfully endure to the end when Christ comes to claim his own.

Bro. J. S. Roth wrote from Clinton, Iowa, the 3d instant that the local press had kindly presented the teachings of the Saints, thereby removing much prejudice, the editor remarking that such teachings had much good sense in them. Brother Roth further states that many school-houses and one church had lately been offered him to preach in Jackson county, also that that quite a number in Clinton and vicinity were investigating.

AID CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

BRO. R. J. ANTHONY, wrote us encouragingly again, the 6th instant, from Provo, Utah, sending the names of new subscribers for church publications, and he says:—"I expect to get some more new subscribers, both here and in other places. I shall do all I can for the office."

In behalf of the cause of God and His saving truth; in behalf of the progress of His church; and in behalf of the Board of Publication, we thank Bro. Anthony for his interest and his efforts. What he proposes is no new thing for him, for he has ever been an active worker in the interest of the Board of Publication, sending up much help in the way of subscriptions for its publications, thereby aiding in disseminating the teachings and the influence of the church. Some other ministers, and still others not of the ministry, have been excellent helpers in this direction. The works of this class are known and very much appreciated. Others there are who seem never to make an effort to aid in this direction—but we are glad they are not numerous.

How any person can conscientiously think himself a worthy member (and especially a representative of the church, enjoying its blessings and support), and still do nothing, or but little, to encourage and aid a great earthly "arm" of the church—the Board of Publication—is strange and past finding out on common sense and Christian principles.

Every member of the church is bound by the very fact of membership to aid as he or she may find or make opportunity, and to the extent of his or her ability, in building up every department of the church, and especially those of first importance. This is more especially true of the ministry, the presiding and traveling ministry in particular. Whoever will not aid in building up the kingdom of God, when they can, are not worthy of membership in it. And whoever loves the church and work of God will show their faith by their works. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The members of the Board have the right to expect the aid of their fellow Saints, and they look for it.

NEW PRESS NEEDED.

THE Board of Publication has felt the need for a few years past of having a new press. The chief reason for this lies in the fact that one of the presses, that upon which the HERALD and a great amount and variety of matter has been printed during the past twenty years, is becoming worn, defective, and unreliable. The rapidly increasing demands of the office require that the presses be found equal to its present and future needs, and to effect this, prompt aid must be given by our patrons, and especially by those in arrears for church publications, whether books, papers, or anything else. The Board therefore, by its President and Business Manager, requests all who are in arrears to forward at once what they owe the office, also that all others pay in advance for the papers if possible, according to advertised terms, and to remit by Post Office Order, Express Money Order, draft on Chicago banks, or by registered letter—and not by Postal Notes, for they are not safe—directing all to David Dancer, box 82, Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa. Please let there be no unnecessary delay in this matter, for the Board, confident that its patrons will readily lend their aid to this needed work, will proceed at once to purchase the press, relying on them for immediate compliance with this urgent and pressing call. Send up your money—and send at once.

"AUTUMN LEAVES."

Number three of this magazine for March, embraces the following table of contents:—Frontispiece: the Woodland Path. With the Church in an Early Day. Home Influence upon Heredity. The Minister's Daughter. "Neither pass me by, O Lord." Letters to Young Men. In the Sierras. Under the Lamp-light. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth." March Cluster of Memory Gems. The story of the Book of Mormon. "Be you a Lady." The Minutes. Autumn Leaves from the Tree of Poetry." Doing ordinary things in an extraordinary way. The Jews under four dominions. Through the storm. News from Palestine. The woodland path (illustrated). Plato. My friends Household Decalogue. Be patient with the living. Helpful Hints and Suggestions. Dat Boy Fritz. A cable character. Little Orphans. Drift-wood. Editor's Corner. Round Table.

Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., No. 42 York street, Cheetham, Manchester, England, on 25th January, wrote Sr. Walker, as follows:—

"I have received in due course the three dozen Autumn Leaves ordered, but find the supply unequal to the demand. I shall be much obliged if you will forward me another dozen copies of the first issue, and please increase my monthly order from three dozen, as per original order, to four dozen copies per month. I believe this will fall short of our actual requirements, as the work only requires to be seen to be appreciated. I am delighted with the first number, and can assure you that it has exceeded my most sanguine expectation. I consider the frontispiece alone worth double the cost of the whole paper. In its sphere Autumn Leaves bids fair to become as much appreciated as the Herald is by the bulk of the membership of the church.

Number one is now being re-printed, and will be ready for delivery early in March.

MR. J. H. KENNEDY, a member of the Cleveland, Ohio, Library Board, writes for information relative to the temple at Kirtland, the doctrine and history of the Church, and says:

"It is curious, that while a year or so ago all calls for literature concerning the Church of the Latter Day Saints were upon the anti side, people are now asking for the pro side, and we find ourselves lamentably short."

Replying to this, we have sent the gentleman what he requests, so far as we find it practicable. Mr. Kennedy's statement is but an added proof that a favorable change is taking place toward the latter day work abroad in the world.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—After a person has been baptized, if they feel that they have not lived right in the sight of God, and have never received the gift of the gospel, (or Holy Ghost), to their knowledge, is it right to be baptized? and would they then receive the Holy Ghost?

Ans.—If they were properly baptized—that is, if they were truly converted and were then regularly baptized by an authorized minister, they, if they fall into transgression, or become lukewarm, have no need of further baptism. See 1 John 1:9; 2:1, 2; Eph. 5:14; Rom. 8:34; Isa. 53:11, 12; 1 Pet. 2:24, etc, etc. But if, after faithful seeking God in prayer, (Luke 3:21; Matt. 7:7-11, etc, etc), the Holy Ghost is not given, then the person should be baptized as in Acts 19:1-6.

Q.—In Revelation the 11:4, where it mentions the "two olive trees" and "candlesticks," does it mean the same as the two olive trees mentioned in Zechariah 4:3-14?

A.—Yes; both relate to the anointed prophets of God.

Q.—Will the two prophets mentioned in Revelations 11:3, 10, prophesy at Jerusalem before the coming of the Lord in glory?

A.—Yes; read "Concordance" to Doc. Cov. p. 32.

Q.—What is meant by the "seal of the living God?"—Rev. 7:2; 9:4. The Adventists claim it is the Seventh Day Sabbath? Please explain.

A.—That "seal" we understand to be the special endowment of the Holy Ghost. (2 Cor. 1:22; Eph. 1:13; 4:30, etc., etc.) which imparts confirmation, divine knowledge, authority and power. See also "Concordance" to Doc. Cov. p. 31.

Q.—Is it proper for an elder to go and preach out of his own state, unless he is sent by conference, on his own or his friends willing expense?

A.—Yes; by first having the consent of those branch, district or mission church officers in charge where he intends to labor.

Q.—If a woman desires baptism (without "persuasion") and her husband notifies the elder of whom baptism was desired that he objects to it, would the elder be justified in administering the ordinance against the husband's will? If so, by what law or principle?

A.—No; the elder would not be justified, for the law of the church says: "It is not right to persuade a woman to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband." (See Doc. Cov. 111: 4). If it is not right to persuade a woman to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband, then it follows, of course, that it is not justifiable for a minister to baptize under these circumstances.

Q.—Is not the principle or right of "common consent" reserved to the church in its legislative assemblies the same as that involved in branches and districts of the church in reference to their local governments?

A.—The principle is the same, but the application of it may not extend to the same objects.

Q.—Are branch and district assemblies of the church bound to "raise their hands" in support of the finding of an "elder's court," provided they are convinced that the said finding is either unlawful, malicious, or without "legal process?" If so, then where is the agency of man and liberty of conscience when members are thus compelled to vote for that which they do not approve?

A.—The "Rules of Order," adopted by the General Conference of the church, must govern in this matter so long as they remain in force, and they provide that the court of "elders shall lay the case before the church, and the church shall lift up the hand against" the convicted transgressor. Book of Rules section 159, (with Doc. Cov. 42: 22; and Matt. 18: 15-18). We do not understand this to be directly a "vote" on the merits of the case, but simply an action on the adoption of the findings of the court. Where a "vote" is had, there must be the free exercise of individual choice, for or against. Besides this, it is not permissible for the membership to "vote" on the merits of a case of personal transgression, for they are not supposed to either know the law governing the case, nor to possess authority to administer it even if they did know it. Furthermore, the law provides that transgressors are not to be tried before the members, and that, therefore, the members, except such as are witnesses, are not to know the facts, real or supposed, in such a case, at least not before said case is finally disposed of, if ever. For the law provides that the transgressor shall be delivered "up unto the church, not to the members, but to the elders;" and that, too, "not before the world." Doc. Cov. 42: 23. The manifest object of this is to prevent scandal and reproach, and to shield the accused from improper influences so far as practicable, leaving the matter under trial solely in the hands of a competent court whose duty it is to try the case on its merits according to the law and the testimony touching it. These are some of the reasons why members who "lift up their hands against" the transgressor do not thereby "vote" for or against the person according to their private, individual opinions and views of the relative merits of the case, but simply and only as publicly and formally accepting and adopting the authority of said court and its action in the premises. Inasmuch, then, as transgressors are to be delivered up for trial "to the elders," and "not to the members," it follows therefore that the said

"members" are not qualified nor legally competent to "vote" individually, as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. It follows, then, that either branches or district assemblies may "lift up their hands against" a transgressor convicted before a competent court, even though they may think such conviction "unlawful, malicious, or without legal process," and they still retain their "agency" and liberty of conscience. The law, as before stated, requires them to "lift up their hands" in such a case, not as expressive of their personal opinions as to the guilt or innocence of any individual, nor as to the regularity or legality of the elders' findings, but as their acceptance and endorsement of the authority of the court and its proceedings.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Falsehoods which we spurn to-day
Were the truths of long ago;
Let the dead boughs fall away,
Fresher shall the living grow."

SAN LUCAS, Cal., Jan. 8th.

Dear Sisters:—A few days since, while reading in the Herald of December 31st, an article headed, "Woman the Weaker Vessel," my spirit was stirred within me, and I was constrained to write a few thoughts upon that same subject, which I have often pondered over in my mind. It seems to be the opinion of many men, that of necessity man must rule over the woman and that she is not capable of governing herself. Well, he has never given her a trial as yet. Let us see how it was in the beginning, in the morn of creation, when all things which God had made were very good; (the women included). God first made Adam, and placed him in the garden of Eden. Adam being alone and without a companion, God created another, and placed her also in the garden, that they might be mutual companions for each other, and thereby be happier: (howbeit God made all things spiritually before he did naturally upon the earth; (see Inspired Translation, 2d and fifth verse).

And when God created man he said, "I God created man in mine own image; in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them." There He calls them both man—"and I God blessed them and said unto them, Be fruitful, multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it." So we find that they were commanded to multiply before the fall; however we have no account that they did, until afterward. God formed Adam of the dust of the ground; but Eve was made of a rib (finer material); and God brought her to Adam and Adam said: "This is now bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh, she shall be called woman, because she was taken out of man;" (Adam was first to call her woman, not God), "therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother and shall cleave unto his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." So we find that in the morn of creation God made no distinction. He did not say to the man, You are the head and to the woman, you are the weaker vessel, etc. Neither did Jesus, but when talking to the Pharisees he said, "Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives, but in the beginning it was not so; they twain shall be one flesh;" counseling togeth, and agreeing to disagree in peace if not of same opinion; no usurping of authority one over another.

And thus it should be; but oh, how different the picture since the fall! We find that Satan beguiled Eve, deceived her, told her that she would become wise; there's wherein lay the chief temptation. She like we desired wisdom. She did not try to deceive Adam, "but gave unto her husband with her, and he did eat;" 3 chap. 11 verse. So we find that he was with her when she took of the forbidden fruit. Why didn't he manifest his strength then and say, "No; do not touch it, for God hath so commanded;" but no, he manifested his weakness in hearkening to the voice of his wife and she hers by hearkening to the serpent. She did not know that it was Satan speaking by the mouth of the serpent. The article in Herald says that Adam was not deceived, and knew what he was about. It seems to me that if Adam sinned knowingly and willingly that his sin, to say the least, was as great as hers. The authors (of Herald article) say, "that this shows plainly to their minds that man here showed his strength and nobility in not deserting his weaker companion in transgression, knowing that there would be no salvation for her without him." That there would have been no salvation for her without him I am sure I can not say, although I verily believe that God was perfectly able to make a plan whereby she might be saved or restored. It seems to me that man would have manifested his strength and nobility a great deal more if he had said, "no; I will not disobey God if you do." He would then have been in better plight to save his wife, (that is if her salvation depended on him). Then we could have given him the glory; but as it is we feel that we must give God all the glory. But verse 7th says, "and the eyes of them both were opened." If Adam's eyes were not opened before, how could he know all those things? God in pronouncing the sentence upon the woman, said "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." Surely his word has been fulfilled. Man has done the ruling; the reins of the government are in his hands and will be, I suppose, until He comes, whose right it is to reign; and when He comes we shall be redeemed from the curse, as well as our brethren and restored to our former position, even side by side with the man, equal with him in every respect, enjoy all the rights and privileges that he enjoys; and we will occupy no fourth place in the scale of importance then, though we may now. There will be neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but we shall be one in Christ; no more lords and handmaidens, but brothers and sisters.

The love of liberty and freedom and patriotism are just as great in the heart of woman as in that of man, and she instills the same into the minds of her boys and thereby fits them for rulers and governors.

As to the ministry God hath put that in the hands of the man, for he is better able to meet the storms of persecution. He has reasons to be more brave, while she may take care of the home and children, and, if need be, labor for means to sustain him in the preaching of the word, while we instruct our children at the fireside, and bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and with God's help fit and prepare them for the work of the Lord.

And now sisters, if we perform our part well, will it not be said unto each of us, as unto our brethren, "Well done thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee"—no, I must not quote the balance, lest my brothers break the vial of wrath upon my head! But we beg pardon; we do not look for these things until our Emancipator comes; then shall the curse be removed, and we shall be free. Lift up your heads and rejoice as ye see the day approaching. "But," says one, "you are clear off the track; doesn't Paul say, 'Wives, submit yourselves unto your husbands? Yes; havn't we been submissive? But God made man first and did not make man for the woman but woman for the man. Does that make man of more importance? If woman is of the man, is not man of or by the woman? I claim that one is not perfect without the other; what is lacking in one is made up in the other. Man is physically stronger, more austere and coercive in his manner of governing; woman is more patient, more persuasive and sympathetic. Who will say that both dispositions are not necessary in raising a family of children? The father fills his place, the mother hers. Those who know me best know that I am a devoted wife and mother; am the mother of ten children, seven boys and three girls—two have gone to God who gave them. I love my family and serve them willingly; yes, love to serve them, so long as they appreciate my service; but should they cease to appreciate me, and begin to talk of woman's weakness, of her non-importance, and that she was made to serve man and for him to rule over, then my forbearance would cease, my spirit revolt, my womanhood be crushed: I would no longer serve willingly and life would become a burden. Let those who write upon this subject handle it tenderly lest they cause the weak to stumble. We entreat you, fathers, to educate your girls equally with the boys; give them every chance to improve; let them increase in wisdom, and it will be better for the nation, better for the church."

Now may the good Father bless all the works of his hands, and help us to keep his commandments by loving and serving each other. Not esteeming ourselves one above another, but in lowliness of heart seek each others welfare and good. Some may differ with me in opinion; I ask that they take no offence, as none has been intended. I only thought to offer a few words for the encouragement of my sisters.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

E. J. HOLMES.

There is a bit of private history connected with the above letter to which we wish briefly to refer. When it came to us, we gave it a careful reading and then, not thinking best to publish it we so wrote sister Holmes, stating the fact that we had always carefully guarded the "Column" from anything like controversy; and really feeling in our soul like Nehemiah, who when invited to cease his work upon the walls of Jerusalem and meet his enemies, replied, "Why should the work cease while I leave it, and come down to you;" for we confess to you that it is really a coming down from the great work of the gospel which demands the energy and time of every follower of Christ, to take the least notice of any one who while professing to be enlightened by this great latter day work, yet hesitate not to display in public print a spirit so diametrically opposed to the pure gospel of the Son of God. With this feeling in our mind and never realizing that any intelligent Latter Day Saint could possibly be tried by anything so crude, and seeing that Sr. Holmes was abundantly able to defend herself, we dismissed the subject from our thoughts; and it might never have recurred to our mind again but for what we are going to tell you. Upon the great western plains, passing our letter to Sr. Holmes, was one coming to us; and upon reading it we discovered to our utter astonishment that for weeks this same "Herald Article" had been trying the faith of one of the most refined and best educated sisters in the church, (not that refinement and education make this trial more to be sympathized with, but the more to be wondered at); and at the same time she says, "I can but feel in all my struggle that I am finding fault with a misinterpretation of God's will rather than his will itself." We are of the same belief and we hope to be able to give a reason for our faith.

John in writing to the Saints says, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they be of God." . . . So say we to you dear sisters, Try them by the word of God, and mark this: "Every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesses not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God."—1 John 4: 1-3. Now to confess that Christ came in the flesh, implies more than to say, Lord, Lord; it implies a full and free acknowledgment of the work he came to do, and not only this, but a perfect obedience to his commandments.

Lay the letter of Sr. Holmes side by side with the article to which she refers, and see which spirit will bear the test. In the article the assertion is plainly made in regard to the knowledge of Adam, "knowing that there would be no salvation for her without him." And this assertion in the face of such passages as the following:—"But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of Sons." The earth might indeed never have been peopled had not Adam fallen, but if man had any part or lot in the matter of Christ, the Savior of the woman as well as of the man, being born, we would be pleased to be informed what that part was? We need only to refer to this fact, for it is matter of sacred history that whatever share man may have had in the fall, Christ was born of a virgin; and had Adam remained in the garden of Eden to this day, the salvation of Eve or any of her daughters could in no wise have been effected thereby, for there is no other name given under heaven in which there is salvation, save the name of Jesus Christ. Which Spirit is leading us to Christ in the flesh. Again, it is asserted by those who have so boldly declared that there would have been no salvation for woman without man, that the true strength and nobility of man is best displayed in violating with a high hand and open eyes the commandments of God, because his wife wants him to. If Adam displayed his nobility by this act of knowing violation of the law of God and (as according to these writers) a true gentleman and true husband could not do otherwise, why condemn Herod for delivering the gory head of John the Baptist to the dancing daughter of a wicked mother? According to the standard of right and wrong placed before us, Herod was a true gentleman and true husband. Does this spirit confess Christ as come in the flesh? Verily I say unto you it is not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."—Matt. 7: 30. Again: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Does it not seem that it is high time men professing to write or speak by the Spirit of the living God should have a little more care in what direction their teachings lead? The political huckster or the circus clown may afford to sacrifice truth for the sake of a facetious jest, but we have yet to learn where the Spirit of God ever forgot the solemnity of the message which is a savor of life unto life or death unto death. Again let us analyze the passage quoted from Eph. 5: 22, 23:—"Wives, submit yourselves unto your husbands, as unto the Lord." We confess that we see no hardship in this. We are required to submit as unto the Lord, not as unto man. This limits the submission to that which is right in the sight of God, tested by his infallible word as the standard of evidence; for if this command be not limited, then is a woman no longer a free agent, but by the will of her Creator she is the mere tool or creature of man. Is this the case? Is this the gospel plan of salvation! Shame, that the question should be asked in the Church of God! "For I live saith the Lord. And every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall swear to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself unto God. Rom. 14: 11, 12; and it might do no harm to read the 13th verse in connection.

"For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church." Here again is this headship limited. Christ when upon earth taught most plainly that his commandments were of no value only from the fact that the Father gave them to him, and he delivered them to men (the church included) just as he received them from the Father. Mark with what jealous care the Lord guards the rights of his children, not suffering even the Son of his bosom to declare any terms of salvation other than those received from him. And herein is the test and limit of the authority of anything which the husband may do or say in regard to the wife. Even Christ, Son of the living God as he was, supported his teachings by constant reference to the word of God, to the "Thus it is written." Think you, my sisters, that when our husbands shall maintain the same holy relationship to Christ which he maintains to and with the Father, it will cause any sense of humiliation to submit to them? And this is the only submission required of us, and the attempt to teach or establish any other is the Spirit which denies the coming of Christ in the flesh, takes from us our agency and dethrones Christ by proving him to have taught falsely when he asserted that he taught only as he had received commandment from the Father. "And he is the Savior of the body."

Is this a strange assertion? Certainly not, for we know that he is; and furthermore we know that the body, the church, is composed of men and women, and the blindness which could so pervert this passage of scripture to mean that man was the Savior of woman, could come only from a Spirit denying that Christ had come in the flesh; because it denies the work which he came to perform and gives to man, who had no part in that work of redemption, the honor which belongs to Christ alone, as the angel declared to Mary: "His name shall be Jesus, for HE SHALL SAVE his people from their sins."

"I will redeem them," said one in the morning of creation, "and the honor shall be mine." I will redeem her said many even in these latter days, "for man is the savior of woman," and lo, there followed that corruption which has been a stench in the nostrils of all christendom from that day to this. "Mine honor will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images."

And now for a few thoughts, or asides, if you please, in reference to what Paul has said. We know that God never ordained woman to minister at the altar. Priest at the altar, but priestess at home. Sister Holmes has referred to this in a plain and lucid way. Does this signify that her priesthood is inferior to that of man? Can the fountain rise above its source? Show us the brave, the noble, the talented men of any age or generation, and we will show you the men who most honor and reverence the name of woman. "Weaker vessels," you say. Perhaps the delicate china cup is not as strong as the vessel made of iron; but one shall grace the board, the other find its place on the kitchen range. Both useful in their place. We have never found it in our heart to quarrel with Paul for what he has said, but, with what to our mind, is the blundering interpretation many have put upon his words. In writing to the church at Corinth he says, "Let your women keep silence in the churches . . . for it is a shame for women to rule in the church."

If there ever was an occasion for analyzing a passage of Scripture this is one. Paul was not writing to Jews, well instructed in the law, but to those who were but lately converted from idolatry and whose temples had been served by profane and corrupt priestesses. What more natural than that these should not understand the law of God in regard to his service and should be inclined, as Paul expresses it in another place, "to usurp authority," or to act in the Christian church as they had been in the habit of doing in the temples of their idols? (that they had been idolaters see chap. 12: 2). The very degradation to which their heathenism had condemned them would be likely to strip them of that modesty natural to woman when not oppressed by man, and they most probably thought it no shame to openly contend in the church for what they esteemed to be their rights. If there can be a doubt left in mind of any one as to the light in which Paul esteemed the help of woman in the gospel (when rendered in its proper way) let them read the following, "And I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also and with other my fellow laborers, whose names are in the book of life."—Phil. 4: 3.

"Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren; the elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity."—1 Tim. 5: 2. (Mark here if you please, that Timothy, a bishop of the church, is instructed by Paul to render honor, even the honor given to a mother, to the sisters of the household of faith).

"I commend unto you Phoebe, our sister, which is a servant of the church, which is at Cenchrea; that ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh Saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you * * * Greet Priscilla and Aquila, my helpers in Christ Jesus."—Rom. 16: 1-3.

That this last declaration of Paul's may stand in its true light let us see how they had helped Paul. Turning to 18th of Acts we find the history given of a certain Jew, who was instructed in the way of the Lord and was also fervent in spirit; an eloquent man and mighty in the scriptures. This man spake boldly in the synagogue, but he knew only the baptism of John, "Whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them and expounded unto him the way of the Lord more perfectly." This then is how they, not he, had been Paul's helpers in the gospel; not by any act of usurpation, but as helpers in Christ Jesus; and we can not help thinking that it would be a good thing for the church today if some, like this eloquent man, were willing to be taught.

One other point and we drop this subject, at least for the present. If we ever resume it it will not be the humiliating task which this has been (for it is humiliating to even refer to a principle so derogatory to the gospel of the Son of God), but it will be that we may seek to incite you, my sisters, to fit yourselves for any sphere of labor which God may have in store for you, and to assure you that the best, truest and most enlightened men in the church stand ready to say to every daughter of Zion who is truly worthy, as Paul said of Phoebe the servant of the church, "I commend unto you our sister."

In answer to the graded theory which labels woman fourth class and seems such a pleasant morsel when rolled under the tongue of ignorance, let us refer you to the words of the Great Teacher at whose feet the whole world must yet bow the knee. "That they all may be one; as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one."—John 17: 21-23.

Christ the great head of the church, who thought it not robbery to be equal with God, and those who are joint heirs with Christ to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away, prepared for all those who love his appearing.

We would like to intimate that if the Inspired Translation had been brought forward as proof in regard to the time of Cain's birth, instead of following Bible commentators, we might have learned that there had been time enough between the fall and Cain's birth for many children to be born to Adam and Eve and grandchildren as well.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, Jan. 30th.

Sister Walker:—A great many readers of the Herald will remember Sister Maggie Powell, formerly Sister Maggie Watkins. She died at Cleveland, Lucas county, Iowa, January 22d, 1888, on Sunday, at ten minutes past twelve. And she having been unusually blessed with a fore knowledge of her near departure, I wish to state some remarks she made just before she died. When first taken sick she was with her husband at a place called Zero, but not being satisfied, as there were no elders there, she came home to her father's, John Watkins, to be administered to, thinking to go home in a few days; but as she did not get any better her husband, Lorenzo, came up here and stayed with her. She frequently made the remark, after being administered to and not receiving the blessing, "If it were not for Lonie and Willie I would not care how it ended." She continued to get worse, and on Saturday morning she turned her face to me and said, "Sister Birchell, this is Saturday?" I said yes. She said, "I will die on the morrow (Sunday), but do not let them bury me on Monday, this will be too soon. Have them keep me until Thursday." She had a sister and relatives living at a distance, and I think this was her reason for desiring to be kept so long. She kept asking for them to be sent for as soon as she was dead. She then went on and told what dress to put on her; how to fix her body, what kind of a casket she wanted, and where to bury her. She made mention of two elders she thought of, but said she did not care who preached her funeral sermon. During the day she saw her mother standing in the room, and she said: "There is my poor old mother. She will be sixty years old her next birthday, while I am a young woman thirty-one years, seven months and twenty-one days (just her exact age), going to die first. 'Well,' she said, 'that is all right.'"

But that which I take the greatest pleasure in telling, is how firm her faith, her trust, her confidence was in her God. In the darkest time of her sickness, while her family and the elders were consulting together whether to continue with the ordinance or send for a doctor, she made the reply to them: "I will trust in the Lord let it end as it will," and "I am not afraid of God, and I am not afraid to die," when she was almost too weak to speak. After taking some nourishments she said, "I am so glad I have not filled my stomach with medicine, and God will reward me for it. She asked her husband during the day, if he thought they would know her on the other side of the river? He told her Yes; and then she plead with him to be faithful and they would meet again beyond the valley of death. Her only trouble was in leaving her companion. She requested me to send a dollar to the Missionary Fund for her, saying she had intended sending it, but had put it off until now it was too late. She mentioned it again a short time before she died. When she realized she was passing away she said, "O, it is sweet to die; I am so glad I can die, and I will die so sweetly." And so she died; not a groan nor murmur; not a muscle twitched while in death, but she folded her hands across her breast and quietly passed away. Her last words were, "We have a God in heaven, and a Jesus Christ." Angels were there to waft her spirit home; and at her funeral, while they were singing her favorite hymn, "Shall we meet beyond the river," it seemed as though the windows of heaven were opened.

I have seen a great many sick and dying persons, but I never saw nor heard such a thing as this before. All the time during her sickness God's spirit attended the administration of his ordinance; and although our desires were not gratified as we would have had them, yet it has not weakened my faith in the church, nor caused me to doubt the efficacy of prayer with God's people in administering his ordinance to the sick.

Thus has passed away our sister. We will miss her in our mite society, in our Sunday School, in our prayer meeting and in our home circle. We all will miss her, but most of all her mother, her adopted son and her husband.

Ever your sister in the bonds of love and truth,
H. E. BIRCHELL.

Correspondence.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Returned home last Friday, after having been gone seventeen days; preached five times at St. Joseph, five times at Pleasant Grove branch, which is about twenty miles from St. Joseph, and three miles from Clarksdale. Bro. H. C. Brunson had commenced a series of meetings in St. Joseph, having spoken twice before my arrival. Bro. J. F. McDowell spoke twice during the series, to the edification and instruction of his hearers. The first of these meetings were not well attended, but the attendance and interest grew better till the close. Just why the Saints allow themselves to become lethargic, at times, is not always easy to tell; but as a rule, it is much easier to determine the causes of this abnormal condition, than it is to remove them.

Bro. McDowell is now on probation as superintendent of the "St. Joseph Society of Organized Charities." This new arrangement, which renders his former appointment to labor in Little Sioux and vicinity nugatory, was entered into and completed by brethren Robert Winning, W. W. Blair and himself, together with the society above referred to. The Society is evidently a good one, and its objects philanthropic and highly commendable; but a disposition to look on all sides of a matter, so far as possible, gives some people a good deal of trouble in this world. Bro. McDowell seems to be fully impressed that the movement was a proper one, and is all alive to his work.

At Pleasant Grove, the Saints, with the assistance of their friends, have built a neat little church, which is nearly paid for, and is proving a wonderful incentive for good. The Pleasant Grove branch is coming up nicely, and I trust it will continue to rise. We had a good, spiritual time, while there, and left them all feeling well.

The building of this little church shows what can be done where there is a united effort put forth, with the blessings of God upon the work. Times were hard, crops poor, and yet this church went up as if by magic, and before their friends and neighbors were hardly aware of it, they were meeting in their new home, with the Spirit and blessings of God resting upon them. In addition to this, they discovered, while feeling so well, that they could, and it was their duty, to pay up on Herald and Hope, renew subscriptions, and give "Autumn Leaves" a little lift. Twenty-seven dollars of Herald Office money was paid over, and three dollars and seventy-five cents for "Autumn Leaves!"

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

WHEELOCK, Texas, Jan. 24th.

Dear Herald:—I am still in the land of the living, but am doing very little in the Master's cause in the way of preaching. One reason is, the weather has been unfavorable. We have had a great deal of cold and snow here this winter—more than I ever saw in this section of country. I hope to commence preaching as soon as circumstances will permit. Our branch was made sad a few days ago by the death of Bro. Lee Hartman. He was young and promising, the son of a widow, one upon whom she depended in a great measure for support. Our loss is his great gain, so we humbly submit to God's will, with the hope of meeting him in the morning of the first resurrection. My heart rejoices in the prospect of having part in that, for over such "the second death hath no power."

I greatly desire to be the means in God's hands of saving many; but it seems I am doing so little in that direction since I came into the church which has been nearly two years, yet I am anxiously waiting for the way to open up for me to devote my entire time to the ministry. I am inclined to believe that my work is among the Lamanites, or at least much of it. Let that be as it may, I desire to do the Master's will, now, henceforth and forever.

In gospel bonds,
E. W. NUNLEY.

CUSTER, Mich., Jan. 25th.

Bro. Blair:—The work of the Lord in this part of the Lord's vinyard is onward. There are calls for elders in all this part of the district. I am laboring under direction of the president of the district since last General Conference. I baptized four before our last district conference, one at Juniata and five at this place since in Black River, on the 19th inst. There are others that say they will be baptized at an early date. I have much opposition in this place, but it does not stop the work. Pray God that his Spirit may be with me and then I have not anything to fear.

ROBERT DAVIS.

BURNETT, Neb., Jan. 20th.

Bro. Joseph:—I am trying to do what I can to help to spread the glad tidings of a restored gospel as far as I can. I have been in Boone county twice, it is thirty miles from here; there is one sister living there, her husband did belong to the church, but has fainted by the way—has got discouraged and given it up. Sister Randall is strong in the faith; her eldest girl came down here thirty miles from her home to be baptized last summer. I think there are some fish there if some elder would go. I held some meetings twelve miles north, among the Christians, and one of their members told me that he heard some of the other members say that it would not do to let the Saints preach there, for it would break up their church.

OSCAR BEEBE.

HAMILTON, N. S. Wales, Nov. 28th.

Bro. Joseph:—As I read so much to encourage me from your valuable columns from the different branches and fields of labor and many sowers and reapers of life's harvest, who spread the glorious news of the gospel in the latter days, I feel to rejoice that the God of Israel has given me the knowledge that this work is his work, and that we will if faithful, live with Christ and all his redeemed, when we will know as we are known and see as we are seen. I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may have part in the resurrection with all the faithful in Christ.

There are many changes in this life, so that it behooves every Latter Day Saint to watch and pray, and be sure that they are lead by the Spirit of God, for there has many false spirits gone out into the world, and would deceive the very elect.

There are a few Saints here who are trying to keep the law of God in doing what they can to spread the gospel, but the people here are so fond of the world and its pleasures, that it is only one in fifty that will give heed to the truth. There are a few that know and acknowledge the work to be true, but will not obey. I hope that when Bro. T. W. Smith comes here there will be much good done. We have been praying for his coming this long time, and may God speed him on his way. I heard from brother Burton in Victoria lately, he is doing a good work there—in fact he has done good wherever he has been in Australia. He is well worthy of the prayers of the Saints, and may God bless him with the Spirit of his office continually.

JOHN G. DICKINSON.

GRAND VALLEY, Ont. Jan. 23d.

Bro. Blair:—I am doing all I can in the way of preaching, and am kept busy. Prospects are brightening at Riverview. I also feel a little better disposed towards future prospects at Alliston, as there are hopes of three or four coming in there in time. The work is by no means done at Masonville and north of there, and in Garrafraxa and vicinity there are good prospects of quite a gathering in the near future. Bro. Smith and I have done considerable preaching there, and now Bro. J. Shields holds the fort and has baptized ten, Bro. W. J. Smith twelve, and others at the door. I will go north to Bruce county about March 1st, to open the work there by request of late.

J. A. MCINTOSH.

PLUM HOLLOW, Iowa, Feb. 4th.

Bro. Blair:—I herewith enclose notice of four lectures to be delivered at the old M. E. Church in Plum Hollow, Iowa, commencing February 6th, by Elder J. D. McClure of the Christian Church, from which you may learn that the claims of Joseph Smith as prophet, seer and revelator, and the Latter Day Saints priesthood are likely to be brought in question.

From what I can learn, however, by report as to the calibre of the lecturer I shall only expect to hear declamations, quotations from the Rev. Clark Braden, harsh epithets and slander, instead of scriptural argument. Be this as it may, I am glad to see the question raised, for it may give an opportunity for proper investigation.

Many persons who were present at our camp-meeting express themselves well pleased with most of the preaching, but fail to see wherein Joseph Smith should be called upon to figure so conspicuously in preaching the gospel, and in organizing a church.

If the elder succeeds in awakening sufficient interest we shall try to secure an elder to represent the latter day work and show up the mission of Joseph Smith in all its bearings in the restoration of the gospel, to prepare a people for the second coming of Christ and the ingathering of his people from the four quarters of the earth.

May the good work go on,

WM. LEEKA.

HAMILTON, Ontario, Feb. 9th.

Brothers Joseph and William:—I have been much benefitted through the letters in the Herald, and wish to add my testimony. It is just one year to-day since I was born into the kingdom, to participate in the promises and advantages which as children, if we are faithful, we are to expect and which I have realized; for before, not being very strong, it cost me at least two dollars per week in medicine, while since it has not cost me one cent that I remember.

On looking over the past year I think I have made poor progress in the cause of the Master, nevertheless I thank our dear Father that he ever showed me wherein I was walking and gave me strength sufficient (for it required not a little) to carry out my convictions on leaving the Methodist Church and kind friends, in which church I was a constant attendant for forty years with my family.

I enclose you Postoffice Order for Herald; also two dollars for Missionary Fund, saved by quitting the use of tobacco.

CHARLES KING.

GALENA, Ind., Jan. 30th.

Bro. Joseph and William:—While I was holding forth at Birdseye, Dubois county, there came a delegation from Riceville, Crawford county, consisting of Messrs. P. J. Sinclair, A. B. Tinsley, F. R. Leonard and H. H. Meredith, business men of that place, and requested me to visit their place and hold some meetings. In complying with their request I reached Riceville the 23d inst.; found a crowded house of attentive listeners, and continued services every night until the 28th, and then did not stop for the want of an audience; but I got so hoarse I thought it best to rest a few days, as I had then spoken fourteen nights in succession. I was cared for by Mr. Sinclair and his amiable wife, who are the proprietors of the hotel at that place. Thanks to the above gentlemen for aid and kindness while at their place. The outlook was never better than now in the south-west part of this district. Thank God for the liberty I enjoyed.

M. R. SCOTT.

CEDAR POINT, Va., Jan. 24th.

Dear Herald:—Since writing last I have been reading and visiting friends and relatives in the hilly country of Virginia. The weather is very disagreeable for holding meetings, yet the people have turned out in mass. I have more invitations to preach at different places than I can possibly fill. I have scattered a number of tracts; they are doing a good work. There is a large scope of country here that is open to us for preaching the gospel. I have visited twenty-two families of my own relatives, and have many more to visit yet, before I return to my mission in the south-west. I hope and pray that this part of the country will not be neglected, for I am satisfied there is a harvest of souls here. I wish I could stay here to enjoy the ingathering. The people are very much surprised to hear a poor, ignorant boy like me preach the gospel in such power and plainness. Truly the good Lord is with me in power. The hired priests look at me cross-eyed, and say but little. Any one wishing to correspond with me will please address me at Cedar Point, Page county Virginia. Ever praying for Zion's triumph, I am as ever your brother in bonds,

I. N. ROBERTS.

HICKSVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 25th.

Editors Herald:—As opportunity presents itself I will send a few lines from this part of the vineyard, and will preface it by stating that since I wrote last I have been on the "war path" to advocate "peace," in St. Joseph and Hillsdale counties, Michigan, and at Clear Lake, Indiana, and am able to report that prospects are favorable to the success of the cause. I came here on the 19th instant, and immediately began operations, found that there was still a spirit of enquiry growing among the better class of minds, and the spirit of opposition and persecution commensurate with it in another class. A Methodist revival was in full blast when I arrived here, but I hear it will close to-night. The preachers are very much incensed against us, even going so far as to tell our brethren they were not wanted there. They say hard things of us, and consequently a great deal of pious lying is indulged in. One of the sanctified preachers said none but fools would attend my meetings to hear the devil preach. I sent him a challenge to meet me in discussion five nights, and offered to pay him $5; but it seems he does not wish to earn money that way.

Bro. and Sr. Emrich, of Clear Lake, accompanied me here, but returned home yesterday. I was sorry to lose them, for they assisted me greatly. On Sunday last I ordained Bro. John Erter to the office of a priest, and organized a branch and called it Maumee, with Bro. Erter president; and sister C. Erter clerk; after which we partook of the sacrament, and all the members bore a faithful testimony to the truth of this great latter day work. I felt proud of that faithful little band who had entered into covenant with God through my weak labors. The Spirit of the Master seemed to brood over us, and to permeate every heart. I preached twice, assisted by Bro. Emrich. To-morrow I commence a series of meetings at another point. There are still other good openings awaiting me, which I will attend to as soon as practicable. The field is widening, interest increasing, while the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing.

Well, the revival, above alluded to is over, and now that the thunderings have ceased, and smoke of battle cleared away, we count the souls saved, and we find in round numbers 6,000. Oh, what a waste of eloquence and other delicacies. The preachers claim to be filled to the brim with the Holy Ghost, warned the people to steer clear of the Mormons, saying that they ought to be driven out of the country. One of the leading characters seemed to manifest the same spirit that in other days gave rise to the cry of, "Away with him, crucify him." He seemed to have all the points of identity to be recognized as a "stand thou there, I am holier than thou," kind of a man. Poor soul; verily he itcheth and knoweth not where to scratch. Let us rather, who have received the ministry of reconciliation, strive to make full proof of our ministry and become workmen approved of God; let devil-making and hoofs and horns go, and He for whom we labor will fully qualify us for the work assigned us.

B. V. SPRINGER.

KENT BRIDGE, Ont., Jan. 30th.

Bro. Blair:—One year ago I united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, having been convinced through the preaching of Elder R. C. Evans that the Latter Day Saints were a chosen people. Great is the responsibility resting upon them; but with the promised Comforter as our guide and the books of the church for our study, we should rejoice, knowing that Zion is soon to be established in the earth. The Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and Inspired Translation of the Bible I prize, as they are harmonious in their teachings, of Christ-like purity and piety as advocated by the Nazarene over eighteen hundred years ago.

Yours for the truth,

CHAS. W. SIFTON.

OLIVET, Dakota, Jan. 25th.

Bro. Joseph and William:—The fates were somewhat against Bro. J. W. Wight when here. But the sermon he preached in Olivet removed much prejudice, and many are asking when he is coming again. Quite a number that did not hear him scolded us for not bringing him to see and talk to them.

After reading Bro. R. W. Sellon's article in the Herald, touching the right man in the right place, we have been constrained more than ever to write, for we believe Bro. Wight could accomplish more towards the spread of the gospel here than any elder we know of. He is well adapted to "breaking the sod." We feel safe in saying to the next General Conference that it would be for the benefit of the church to send Bro. Wight to labor here again. We will do all lies in our power to convey an elder from place to place.

Two elders and one sister paid us a visit last spring. The elders preached twice in our school-house, once at Olivet in the Christian Church, and held one social meeting at our house. We had a good time though all were busy and prejudice ran high. Good attention was paid. Bro. I. Hogaboom, was here last August, stayed over Sunday, preached once in our house with apparent good liberty. My wife and I were administered to by the elders with good results, for which we thank our heavenly Father.

J. F. & N. M. PATEN.

SILVER HILL, Ark.

Dear Editors:—On June 3d we left Seligman, Missouri, and next morning arrived at Van Buren. In the forenoon we left for Conway and arrived there in the evening. There was no one to meet us, so we hired a hack to take us nine miles. We arrived at Mr. A. S. Sowell's about dark, and was made welcome by him and his lady. June 25th, Mr. Sowell and I went to a Baptist meeting. Before the time arrived for them to begin, I was busy telling the people what my business was. After their meeting dismissed it was announced (by some Baptists) that I would preach for them at four p. m. We met a large crowd. Before we commenced services, a kind of dummy singing teacher tried to sing me out, but the people promptly voted him out, and I tried to break to them the bread of life, and was truly blessed in the effort. When done, I dismissed the audience without saying anything about my meetings. Several persons asked me if I would preach for them again. I told them I would. Others asked me if I would preach at a church three miles from there. I told them I would, provided there was no objection. They assured me there would not, and before the crowd had dispersed there were two appointments for me. With each appointment came large crowds, and invitations to go to new places. Oh what mingled feelings of joy and sorrow prevailed my soul, as I stood there and listened to the earnest solicitations of those around me to come and preach for them. I rejoiced because God had restored the "everlasting gospel" with all its power and attendant blessings, and that I had become a recipient of the same, and was there to tell the people how they could be saved—how they could prepare to meet their Redeemer in peace and reign with him on the earth a thousand years. Then sorrow, because of the blindness of the people, and their rebellious disposition toward God.

Appointments are kept up as often as circumstances will permit, and I have invitations to go to six new places. At their next meeting the missionary Baptists voted us out of their house. On the following Sunday I went to hear their minister, and he spent most of his time in warning his hearers against false prophets, false teachers, &c. When he dismissed I asked him if he would affirm what he had said in public debate. He said no; his brethren would not endorse him as a representative of their faith. I told him I would not preach for them if they would not endorse me. A short time after, one Rev. McPike sent me word that he wanted to debate with me, and when I heard from him again, a Mr. Kirkland was to do the talking. Arrangements having been made, we met on the 19th of July, under an arbor that the people had prepared for me to preach under when I was turned out of the house, and began the discussion of the first proposition, namely: "The Baptists in this country teach all that is necessary for the salvation of the people." Kirkland affirmed. Two days were occupied in this proposition, and during and after the discussion, Baptists told me that they did not know they had so near nothing to save them. He was not ready to go on with the discussion of the other two propositions, namely: "The Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and that the Reorganized Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints is the Church of Christ." I had to wait two weeks for him to get ready, but the time was not lost, for I put in all the time in public and private preaching.

When the time arrived, August 1st, we met and spent one day and a half in the discussion of the last proposition, and during that time I had to listen to more dirty, filthy and unmanly expressions than I thought it was possible to get in a man (?). He had to be called to order several times, and one time when he was called to order, a gentleman (?) in the audience thought to call the moderator to order, saying "we want to see fair play." I proposed that we let the moderator settle the matter. A Mr. Cox then started towards me, and a Mr. Hook stepped in ahead of him then their friends began to gather around them; and I was told afterward that the ominous

"click" of the revolver and jack-knife could be heard in several pockets.

When we dismissed for dinner, my friends advised me to stop the discussion, or somebody would get hurt, for a majority of the people had determined not to listen to any more of his filth. When we assembled after dinner, the matter was left to the people, and a large majority voted to stop the debate; so I had to succumb. Notwithstanding the debate was brought to a close so abruptly, it was another victory for the truth—it strengthened those who were favorable to us, and removed a great deal of prejudice from others—in fact all were our friends except a few that did not have an idea of their own.

On the 4th I reluctantly bade adieu to the people of Faulkner county and started to Sevier county. We stopped in Little Rock with a cousin, until the 17th, and arrived at Bro. Wolf's on the 19th, and after the usual greeting, I began to enquire for the Herald, as I had not seen one since the first of June, and oh how hungry I was for the precious fruits of its pages. I can not understand why it is that some of the Saints don't take the Herald, and why some that do take it do not read it.

Yours in bonds,

INDEPENDENCE, MO., Jan. 30th.

Bro. D. Dancrr.—We have received both numbers of Autumn Leaves and are highly pleased with them. I think it should be taken by every family of Saints in America—such a publication is a necessity. Our boys and girls are rapidly coming to the front in their intellectual attainments in school and college. They, in common with all other American boys and girls, have keen appetites for reading, which if properly controlled and directed will develop in much good. That is if parents rightly appreciate their desires, and lay before them a food class of literature. A magazine that affords abundance of moral, intellectual and spiritual good for the young should meet the hearty endorsement of every father and mother in Israel. Autumn Leaves if well supported by the Saints, I am satisfied will, judging from the tone and quality of the first two numbers, fill the bill quite satisfactorily. I certainly wish the editor and publisher abundant success in so worthy an enterprise.

Very truly yours,

H. R. MILLS.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, Feb. 1st.

Bro. W. W. Blair.—The Lamb-Elvin discussion here lasted twelve nights. Weather very severe and snow deep, yet had a full house almost every night. Bro. Elvin commanded the largest crowd. Rev. Lamb, about the fourth or fifth night showed the cloven foot and said that Bro. Elvin was a minister of the gospel of blasphemy. I can not in my heart condemn him—his "bread and butter was at stake, he was rapidly losing ground, his every argument was refuted by masterly strokes." Bro. Elvin at first had no books, but at last found what he wanted. The third night of Rev. Lamb's lecture he drew the case pretty tight, and Bro. Elvin to prove the Book of Mormon of God, had to prove that iron, steel, glass, horses, sheep, gold, silver, copper and brass were had in ancient America, and no books at his command. When we came home I could see that Bro. Elvin was in trouble—and I was no better myself. I do not think he slept much that night, I know I did not, but was praying and thinking. Bro. Elvin before retiring, said, "In the name of the Lord he shall not get away with it!" The following morning books were found from which he proved that from steel, glass, gold, silver, copper, brass, horses and sheep existed in ancient America since the glacial period.

The last night of the discussion Rev. Lamb stayed in the Prosecuting Attorney's room and did not make his appearance in the lecture room, but Rev. Godsmen came before the close.

I think the Book of Mormon came out victorious with all except those that would sacrifice all—even their reputation—to make it false. May God ever bless Bro. Elvin, for he by the help of God saved the Maladians. I think that every minister ought to make the Book of Mormon more of their study. I will try to by the help of God, that I may be able to meet the "small fry" around here.

In the gospel of peace,

JOHN LEWIS.

FARMINGTON, Iowa, Feb. 7th.

Editors Herald.—I have been holding meetings lately at Montrose and Rock Creek. We had good liberty, and all seemed edified, but that seemed the only effect manifested by the large audiences at these places; yet we hope the seed sown may grow and sheaves be harvested by and by.

Yours respectfully,

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

MULBERRY, Cal., Jan. 22d.

Bro. W. W. Blair.—I herewith mail to you a San Francisco Weekly Examiner, thinking that some of the contents marked on second page may be of interest to some of the readers of the Herald, and especially to ministry, for it behooves us as a people and church, to collect and preserve all we possibly can of every available means of proof of the divinity and authenticity of the Book of Mormon. And without flattery, but willing to render to each their honest dues,—I know of none more willing than yourself to support the claim made for that, to us, sacred record. And it causes my heart to rejoice to see the evidence of the discoveries of antiquities which are almost continually being made, thus strengthening our faith and confirming our hope in the glorious promises contained in the gospel of salvation. Truly we are permitted to live in the most noted of all the different periods of the world's history! For it is the beginning of the "fulness of times," "When he [God] will gather together all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."—Eph. 1:10. I am glad that Pres. Joseph Smith is out at Salt Lake, and hope that people will profit by his visit, which they will do if they hearken to his council. I hope to see and hear him when he visits our coast.

I trust the good Master will hasten his glorious work, that much may be done in the near future. I am trying at intervals to do a little preaching, it is not much that I can do at the best; but I have a desire to bear my testimony to the Lord's glorious doings, for the benefit of the children of men. I spent last Christmas near San Juan, twenty-five miles north-west of here. I had the privilege that day of preaching to a few interested listeners at the Zahelan school-house in the forenoon, and at my uncle Jasper Twitchell's house in the evening. Within the last three and a half months I have preached some twenty times, and at times have been greatly blessed in presenting the word. O that my work may be done in such a manner that if it does not make but little show here it may be approved of by the Master.

J. H. LAWN.

BEVIER, Mo., February 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—My last communication to the Herald was from Scranton, Pennsylvania. While there I endeavored to stimulate the Saints to duty, though circumstances of a peculiar nature prevented me from doing much in the way of regulating. I found the Saints in a bad condition, spiritually. A good work could be accomplished in that region, did the Saints but live according to the privileges of their religion. The writer is grateful for kind treatment by the Saints while there.

From Pittsfield I was directed to Brooklyn, New York. Here I found a little band of Saints under the watchcare of Brn. George Potts and Joseph Squires. By the impression of the Spirit I was made to realize that they were accepted of God. I am of the opinion that a grand work could be wrought in that city if the necessary efforts could be put forth. Oh, what a pity we have not the requisite means to keep able, talented ministers in all the prominent cities! Saints, awake to the fact that it is "a day of sacrifice." Why should we be backward in paying tithes, and offerings to the Bishop. Do you not know that the future success of the church depends upon the efforts put forth by all in that direction? The coming General Conference will send out missionaries in proportion to the amount of means there will be in the church treasury. Therefore, if we are interested in God's work, in the souls of the people, it is absolutely necessary that we observe the temporal law as well as the spiritual, for one is as dead without the other, as the body is without the spirit.

My family and I started westward the latter part of December last, stopped a few days at Sandwich, Illinois, and had a very pleasant visit with Bro. and Sr. Rogers. Went from there to Lewiston, thence to this place. I start this week on a tour through north-east Missouri and perchance the southern part of Iowa.

My address for next two months will be Bevier, Macon county, Missouri, box 56.

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

PROTON, Ontario, Jan. 22d.

Bro. Blair:—I send you an article I clipped from the Dundalk Herald, written by one McDonald, of Horning's Mills, a Presbyterian minister, who has done all in his power to hinder the work of the Master in that part of the country; but he did not succeed very well, for now there is a large branch flourishing there, which is known as the Masonville branch.

Mr. McDonald agreed to meet Bro. Evans in debate last October, which he failed to do. After having put his name to a proposition he backed down like a mean coward, after which he gathers up culmy and scandal from bitter enemies of the Latter Day Saints, and tries to throw reproach on the Church of Christ by inserting it in the Dundalk paper. After having occupied its columns for a few issues he was refused room for such trash, and the editor asked for something original on Mormonism, and Bro.

Willard J. Smith wrote an article which is to be published in the Dundalk Herald and will commence this week. I am sending you the paper for three months and also the article that McDonald wrote. Bro. Willard J. Smith has written a fine piece. It will take about twelve issues, a column each. I think it will do good in breaking down prejudice against the Saints.

Bro. Willard left for Wexford county, Michigan, last Tuesday. He is a good defender of the faith.

I am taking "Autumn Leaves" and think it very nice, for both old and young. May the choicest blessings of heaven attend Sr. Walker in her labor of love.

JAMES McLEAN.

McFALL, Mo., Jan. 31st.

Bro. Blair:—Sunday, the 29th inst., we organized a branch here with seven members, known as the McFall branch. When the Saints pass this way we would like to have them stop and see us. We are hunting down the whiskey traffic now in our county. We vote on local option February 2d.

J. M. JOHNSON.

BENNETT, Neb., Jan. 25th.

Dear Herald:—The Southern Nebraska district has just closed at Nebraska, one of the best conferences that the writer has ever had the pleasure of attending. The official attendance was large, and a goodly number of brethren made this the occasion of a friendly gathering. Among the brethren from the Iowa side of the river were brethren George and Henry Kemp. The attendance at the services, before and after conference, was good. A prayer and testimony meeting was held in the afternoon of the Sabbath, at which the gifts and blessings of the Spirit were manifested in a goodly degree, to the comfort and strength of the Saints. Two business sessions were held on Monday, in which the officials made an earnest endeavor to promote the good of the work in the district. Great interest, and much good-will were manifested, and although some slight differences of opinion were held by the officials in regard to the necessities of the work in the district, yet they labored to preserve that unity of spirit which is essential to the accomplishment of the best results in the vineyard of the Master.

The brethren were somewhat disappointed in not meeting Bro. Mark H. Forscutt at the conference. It was expected that he would be present, but he stated in his report that neither his circumstances nor his health would permit his being present with us. The familiar face of Bro. R. M. Elvin was missed in the conference, and to the writer, and we presume to many others, the conference hardly appeared complete without him. We hope he may be highly successful in his new field of labor. The preaching was by Henry Kemp and Charles H. Porter, assisted by Levi Anthony and J. E. Malcom.

The Saints separated with expressions of good-will and love to each other, and with the avowed intention of prosecuting the work with renewed vigor. The writer in participating in the spirit of love that was truly manifested to us on this occasion could not do other than look forward to that happy time when we shall all meet to part no more; when we shall, if we are faithful, have a part and lot with Christ at that time when they shall not hurt nor destroy in all the holy mountain of the Lord, and when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." We shall open up the work to-night in the town of Bennett, and if the interest proves to be as good as we have reason to expect, we shall stop here a few days, and longer if necessary.

May the Lord grant unto his people wisdom and understanding is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

CHAS. H. PORTER.

PUBLIC PREACHING OF THE GOSPEL.

IT may, to some, seem presumptuous for a layman to attempt to discuss this subject, but since public preaching is chiefly for the benefit of the people as distinguished from the ministry, it may do some good, and can do no harm, to present the subject from the stand-point of one who holds no official position in the church and who would not dare unless by what purported to be the command of God, accompanied by manifestations leaving no shadow of doubt upon his mind, to assume so fearful a responsibility, who is yet earnestly desirous to promote its interests and increase its influence for good, whose associations, both before and since his admission within its sacred portals, have of necessity been much more with the "world" than with the "church," and to whom it has seemed that in our enthusiastic devotion to that which all of us believe and many of us profess to know to be the truth, we are sometimes too prone to condemn those who do not patiently listen to and accept these truths regardless of the manner in which they are presented.

When men are called to, or assume the position of public teachers, their motives, qualifications, methods and manner are fair subjects of discussion, and if such discussion be conducted fairly and honestly, with a view to extended influence and increased usefulness, the result can not be other than beneficial; and without undervaluing the services of those noble men who have heretofore devoted themselves to this work, and to whose self-sacrificing labors are due the growth and influence of the church and its present favored position in the public estimation as compared with its former condition, we may with propriety enquire whether in the present age and under existing conditions there are any means by the use of which still greater results may be attained in the public preaching of the gospel. To this end let us first enquire:

What is the object of public preaching? One object is, undoubtedly, to encourage and strengthen the Saints in their desire and ability to serve God acceptably; to instruct them more perfectly in the truths of the gospel and to point out, earnestly, intelligently and impressively the influence which the study of these truths should have upon our lives, purifying and strengthening all the faculties of our nature, spiritual, intellectual and physical; to awaken latent zeal; to enjoin obedience to his holy laws; to point out faults and to exhort to more earnest effort to overcome besetting sins; to promote harmony and unity of thought, feeling and action; to inculcate love for and sympathy with each other, without which we can not be said to have "fulfilled the law."

For these and many other reasons it is essential to the healthy growth of the church that we should not neglect the assembling ourselves together for public worship and to listen to the preaching of God's word.

And there is another and no less important reason why, as often as practicable, there should be public preaching.

All desire that others should think as they think and believe as they believe on all subjects which they deem of importance, and especially if convinced that such belief is essential to happiness even in this world, and we, even if animated by no higher motive, naturally wish to prove to the world that our belief is based upon and in accordance with the word of God, and, if it were possible, to convince all mankind of the validity of our claim. And when we say that we not only believe but that we "know of the doctrine" that it is of God, how much more earnest should we be in our efforts to disseminate the grand truths of the gospel, especially in view of the fact that He who is the author of all law has given the command to "preach the gospel to every creature." If we do so love our fellow men that it is the most earnest desire of our hearts that they may be persuaded to follow Him through whom, only, can salvation be attained, how zealous should be our endeavor to devise, by the assistance of His Holy Spirit, the best possible means to induce attendance on the preaching of His word; for "how then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?" And since preaching is perhaps the principal "means of grace"—the means by which it is designed that men shall be brought to "a knowledge of the truth," it is important that this truth be so presented as to both attract and retain hearers, and it will therefore be proper to consider the qualifications and duties of those to whom is to be entrusted this most important work. And it must be distinctly understood that it is not within the scope of this article to enquire into qualifications for the performance of other duties of the ministry.

The first requisite is, of course, that the individual be "called of God;" and the honest man will seriously and prayerfully determine whether he is indeed "called of God" or whether in his zeal he has mistaken for such call his own inclination in connection with the wish of the branch or the utterance of some individual, perhaps professing to speak "by the spirit," in the absence of that internal evidence—that positive assurance—without which the assumption of the sacred duties of the ministry is a terrible mistake.

Assuming that a man is truly "called," it by no means follows that he is, immediately upon his ordination, if ever, fitted for the promulgation of the gospel at all times and in all places, however zealous and devoted he may be. Indeed, a not very extended study of the bible would rather lead to the conclusion that careful cultivation of the intellectual as well as of the spiritual faculties is as necessary to success in preaching as in other vocations. That "God helps those who help themselves" is as true of this calling as of any other; though it is not denied—is, indeed, to be devoutly and thankfully believed—that God does sometimes suspend or vary the operation of natural laws—His laws—and, when the emergency demands, may and undoubtedly will supply any deficiency whether of education or of intellect. And little study of the bible will be needed to learn that God has always selected as his instruments men specially adapted to the object in view and given them opportunity for preparation for their work.

When a man was to be provided to lead the children of Israel, the infant Moses was committed to the care of the Egyptian princess, and many years of his life were spent at the court of the monarch of the most powerful and learned nation of the world, until he became "learned in all the learning of the Egyptians," after which he had some forty years of experience in desert or pastoral life, thus becoming thoroughly familiarized with all that would be necessary for the successful prosecution of the great work for which he was born; and when at length the Israelites, under his guidance, went forth into the wilderness, God, in his infinite wisdom, chose, instead of exercising His miraculous power, to require forty years in which to transform a nation of slaves into an army of disciplined soldiers by whom alone could the warlike nations of the promised land be displaced.

When a prophet was required to stand before the Babylonian king, to warn him of the downfall of his mighty empire, to prove that God alone reigneth omnipotent upon the earth, to foretell the fate of nations yet unborn, God selected a prince of the house of Judah, to be carefully nourished and educated at the court of this mighty monarch, thoroughly conversant with its customs, and learned as became one destined to occupy positions of earthly honor second only to his king.

When God decreed that a king should reign over Israel under whom and his immediate successor that kingdom should assume a commanding position among the nations of the world, He chose a man whose early life, it is true, was devoted to peaceful pursuits, but the superiority of whose peculiar qualifications is abundantly proved by the history of his life which has come down to us, as well as by the literary excellence of his inspired writings preserved in holy writ, and placed him in circumstances where, of necessity, were developed and cultivated that military skill and that far-reaching statesmanship indispensable in the brilliant part he was to play in the world's history.

It is true, indeed, that there were undoubtedly thousands of others of whom we have no account and whose names were perhaps never heard beyond the limits of the villages in which they lived and labored, who were just as truly called and just as surely afforded opportunity for preparation commensurate with the work to which they were assigned as were those illustrious men whose names have been handed down to us; and it is also true that all these men, of high or low degree, were doubtless faithful servants of the Most High God, that all were imbued with His Holy Spirit, and that all habitually looked to Him for that guidance without which their natural and acquired ability would have availed them nothing; and these few examples from among the many which might be cited, are given to justify the expression of the conviction that not only does God select fit instruments to carry out his purposes, but that he requires of his servants that they strive diligently to avail themselves of all the means at their command for preparation for the work committed to their hands, and that He does not require of any one services for which they are not, or may not become competent.

So, when Christ entered upon His mission upon earth, He, with the same wisdom which marked the selection of his ministers in past ages, knowing that the poor and comparatively uneducated, the "common people," would form by far the greater portion of His followers, selected, for the promulgation of his gospel, men who were of the same station in life, and who, in social relations, manners, habits, modes of thought and expression, would be fully in sympathy with those to whom they were to be sent, and so soon as some of these had been sufficiently instructed He sent them out to teach to others these grand yet simple truths and endowed them with all the powers needful for their mission; but those to whom was to be confided the leadership of the church, to whom the people, including the ministry, were to look for guidance and counsel after he should have ascended to his Father, He kept almost constantly with Him during the whole period of His mission upon the earth, and who can doubt, if salvation is for the entire man, physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual, that, in addition to what may be termed their theological and spiritual education, He who was the author of all law, the Creator of all things, imparted much of other knowledge, both of his own volition and in answer to the many questions which would be asked of Him whom they looked upon as the fountain of all knowledge, by these men who, however uneducated, were keen, intelligent, observant; so that at the end of those three years of intimate association with Him they must have been at least fairly educated in the best sense of the word, since they had the best teacher the world ever knew or will know, although in all probability retaining many, if not all, the peculiarities of language and expression incident to their surroundings, and which perhaps would tend to increase their influence with those among whom they would be mainly called to labor.

And yet when Christ, knowing that not many of the so-called "higher classes," not many of the noble and rich and powerful and educated would accept the truths that He came to teach, with that all-embracing love which includes all mankind, would bring home to these classes those truths, so that perchance at least a few might be saved; when he wanted a man who should "stand before a king," who should present the gospel to the refined and intellectual citizens of Athens, who should preach "Christ crucified" in the imperial city of Rome, the center of power and wealth and civilization, He chose Saul of Tarsus, a Roman citizen, the associate and equal in culture and refinement of those before whom he was to appear, a man of influence, evidently widely known and esteemed not only for his honesty and zeal in the advocacy of what he thought to be right, but also for his learning; and although he has said that his preaching was not "with enticing words of man's wisdom," we are by no means justified in assuming that he deliberately refrained from availing himself of his mental superiority and intellectual training, or that he did not even sometimes use arguments, if not language, difficult of comprehension, to some of his hearers or readers, since for the latter assertion we have the authority of Peter; and we have his own admission that he was "made all things to all men" that he might "by all means save some;" and all will agree that his "great plainness of speech" is not incompatible with great power or with correctness of language, and, indeed, that the more correct the language, the greater the certainty that it will be correctly understood.

With but a passing reference to the reformers of the middle ages, who certainly possessed peculiar qualifications for their work, and whose mission it was to prepare the world for the bringing forth the gospel in the latter days, we come to him to whom we believe was committed this great responsibility. Here we find no deviation from God's law. He chose a youth, poor, uneducated, without social position or advantages, but with a tender conscience, an indomitable will, a loving heart and a strong intellect, subjected him to the peculiar influences necessary in his case, associated with him for the immediate necessities of the time men of greater educational attainments, upon whom he did not, however, long depend, but earnestly and successfully strove to remedy the defects incident to want of early educational advantages, and not only this, but impressed upon all whom he could hope to influence, and especially upon the ministry, with all the authority of divine inspiration, the necessity for the acquisition of knowledge and the careful cultivation of their intellectual as well as of their moral and spiritual nature.

Beyond a reasonable doubt his servants are, with perhaps a very few remarkable exceptions, required and given opportunity for special preparation, though but few have to bear so heavy a load of responsibility as those referred to in the preceding paragraphs. To many, and perhaps to most, will be assigned humble positions; their names may never be heard outside of the little communities in which they have lived and labored, until the roll-call of those who have "fought the good fight of faith" and have "won the crown;" yet each needs preparation for his work, and he who is assured that he is indeed "called of God" to be a preacher of the gospel, should not only seek spiritual gifts, but should also diligently cultivate all of the natural ability with which God has blessed him, not only that he may do good in his present position but that he may become fitted for still greater usefulness.

Plainness of speech there may be, and often the plainer the speech the more effective the preaching; inelegance of expression there may be; ungrammatical language there may be; awkwardness of manner there may be; and yet the preaching may be both attractive and convincing; but "knowledge and understanding" (Jer. 3: 15) there must be. "The priest's lips should keep knowledge" (Mal. 2: 7). There must be ability to "teach others," (Tim. 1: 5), and "aptness to teach," (Tim. 2: 24). The minister without these qualifications, however well he may be fitted for usefulness in other directions, can hardly be said to possess the requisites for effective preaching; and if all who have been ordained to offices in the church authorizing them to preach have been truly called, the conclusion can hardly be resisted that many have failed to take advantage of their opportunities for preparation, or that they were called to work in some direction other than preaching.

That some are called for other purposes would seem to be indicated, among other passages of scriptures, by Eph. 4: 11. "He gave some, apostles" to govern and guide and counsel the church as well as to preach; "some, prophets," who might or might not be preachers; "some, evangelists," men authorized to preach but not having charge of a particular church or congregation, who must be preachers and need not, necessarily, have special qualifications for other work; "some, pastors and teachers," whose special duty, as the terms indicate, is the care of particular congregations, or as we call them, branches; each of these positions requiring special qualifications, all of which are seldom combined in the same person.

Nor are all preachers blessed with equal intellectual ability or endowed with equal facility of expression. Granting that all are equally sincere and, as we must believe, assisted by the Spirit in proportion to their faith and faithfulness, one may be peculiarly fitted to address refined and critical audiences only; another, while equally acceptable to such hearers, may be able to adapt himself to all classes and to all circumstances; others, with less of natural and acquired advantages, may be especially successful with certain classes or in certain localities. To all equal honor is due. No one man, however able and devoted, can of himself effect very much; each one, however limited his ability or opportunity, can do something; and the more carefully each selects his field of labor, and the more thoroughly he prepares himself for his work, the greater the probability that his preaching will be like seed sown upon good ground and that he will have much reason to rejoice in the results of his labor.

It is also worthy of consideration whether the preacher should, if he can avoid it, ever enter the pulpit without a definite aim, and whether, consequently, this preparation should not extend, so far as practicable, to each sermon or address, although circumstances may, and undoubtedly will sometimes require a total abandonment of the intended subject, in which case he may, of course, safely rely upon the inspiration of the Spirit, and the question may well be asked whether, ordinarily, the selection of a speaker from among the preachers present at the moment immediately preceding the opening of the services, is just to the preacher, to the audience or to the cause to be advocated, although circumstances may sometimes justify such choice.

Least it may not have been made sufficiently plain it may be necessary to repeat that there is no intention to place too high an estimate on intellectual attainments, or that they can in any way take the place of humility, prayerfulness, devotion and reliance upon the promised assistance of the Holy Spirit, but that those who are engaged in this most important of all avocations should neglect nothing which may tend to increase their usefulness.

If the foregoing suggestions shall encourage any in their efforts for more thorough preparation for the grand and responsible work to which they have devoted their lives, or if they shall do anything, however little, to counteract the impression, happily becoming less and less prevalent, that calling and ordination, with zeal, prayerfulness and reliance upon the inspiration of the Spirit, but without special effort for intellectual cultivation, is all that is necessary for effective preaching, their object will have been attained.

THE DISPERSION.

"THESE are the three sons of Noah: and of them was the whole earth overspread."—Gen. 9: 19.—Blatant doubt has assailed the plain statements of the scripture on all topics in respect to science or ancient history, and that monumental tenth chapter of Genesis has caused scientist to follow the race lines around the globe, like the bloodhound his prey, or the savage his victim. The results reached by learned ethnologists, philologists and archaeologists, are well told by many writers who have spent almost a lifetime on these themes. Taylor Lewis says: "We find that the soundest and most learned philosophers honestly carrying on their investigations in history, philology and physics, all arrive by their different methods at the same conclusion, identical with the statement of scripture. This is as when, starting on any portion of the tire of a wheel and passing down the nearest spoke, all these diverse spokes lead to one axle." Thus, M.

Balli, and Sir Wm. Jones, "reach their conclusions of a common origin for man by studying the traditions, the myths of all known races. These myths exist in a remarkable similarity among all peoples, except a few fragments of humanity, who, in adverse circumstances, have lost their original light. These common traditions point to a common stock." See Bricks from Babel, page 13. "Students in man's physical structure have learned that however in some or many minor points man may differ, they are descendants of one sole species." See Cosmos, vol. 1, and Bricks from Babel. "While a large proportion of people accept this belief solely on the authority of revelation, others obtain it in its entirety from researches into the history of organized creation."—Prichards P. H. of mankind, vol. 1. "If we were to be guided by the mere intersection of linguistic paths, and independently of all scripture records, we should still be led to fix upon the plains of Shinar as the focus from which the various lines radiated."—H. R. Bampton lectures, 1859, and B. B. page 16. Wm. Osborne, "A prince of Egyptologists" says of America: "A country which the unanimous voice of all ancient authority declares to have been the cradle of the whole human race after its destruction by the flood."—Antiquities of Egypt.

The sacred historian informs us that, "they were divided in their lands; every one according to his tongue, according to his family, and according to his nation."—Gen. 10:5, 20. The dispersion seems to have been regulated by providence. See Book of Ether. Shem also moves by commandment.—See Josephus' Antiquities. Paul in speaking to the learned Athenians refers to the dispersion as a well known decree, and says God made of one blood every nation of men to dwell upon the whole face of the earth; having appointed the predetermined seasons and boundaries of their dwellings.—Acts. 17:24-27. This was conformable to their own geographical allegory, that "Chronos, the god of time, or Saturn, divided the universe among his three sons, allotting the heaven to Jupiter, the sea to Neptune, and hell to Pluto; but Chronos represents Noah, who divided the world among his three sons, allotting the upper region of the north to Japheth, the middle of the earth to Shem, and the lower region of the south to Ham."—See encyclopedia of R. K. page 467. Abulfaragi records the Armenian tradition, "that Noah distributed the habitable earth from north to south between his sons, and gave to Ham the region of the blacks, to Shem the region of the tawny, (fuscorum) and to Japheth the region of the ruddy, (rubrorum). And he dates the actual division of the earth in the hundred and fortieth year of Peleg, B. C. 2614, or five hundred and fifty-one years after the flood, and one hundred and ninety-one years after the death of Noah, in the following order: To the sons of Shem was allotted the middle of the earth, namely, Palestine, Persia, Arabia, Syria, Assyria, Samaria, Singar (Shinar) and Babylonia—To the sons of Ham, Teimen, Africa, Nigritia, Egypt, Nubia, Ethiopia, Scindia, and India, (or India west and south of the river Indus). To the sons of Japheth also, Garbia (the north) Spain, France, the countries of the Greeks, Sclavonians, Bulgarians, Turks, and Armenians"—Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 467.

These migrating sons of Noah left their family names to some of their original settlements, hence we read of the "land of Ham," "land of Nimrod," "land of Canaan," and "Tarshish," Phut, Ophir, Cush, Ethiopia, Elam, Pathros, Madai, Magog, Ammon, Moab, Midian, Chittim, Gomer, Tubal, Israel, Joseph, &c. Isaiah says: "And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan."—Isa 66:19. Again he says: "The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people . . . from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath,"—Isa 11:11. Ezekiel, lamenting in chapter 27 for Tyrus, names the countries that traded there. We see there the old family names of Noah's immediate descendants; for instance: Chittim, Lud, Phut, Tarshish, Javan, Meshech, Togarmah, Dedan, Kedar, Sheba, Ramah, Asshur, and Chilmad." These Bible countries are often a stumbling block to our feet, and we wonder why they did not write so we would understand.

Ham had four sons, namely: Cush, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan. Gen. 10:6. Cush had seven sons, Mizraim seven sons. Phut is counted in one family, Canaan eleven. (Verses 7-18.) Cush had one son named Ramah. Ramah had two sons, named Sheba and Dedan. Cush's seventh son is Nimrod. Shem had five sons, namely, Elam, Assur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram. Aram had four sons, namely, Uz, Hul, Gether, and Mash. Arphaxad one son, Salah; and Salah one, Eber; and Eber two sons, Peleg and Joktan. Joktan had thirteen sons and we see among them, Shebah and Ophir. Japheth had seven sons, namely, Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Tiras. Gen. 10:2. Gomer had three sons, Ashkenaz, Riphath, Togarmah. Javan had four sons, Elishah, Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim. We see at once that the Bible names of countries, at least many of them, were the names of the immediate descendants of Noah. Where are these countries and these families?

Ham goes to Egypt, Psalm 105:23. See also Osburn's Antiquities of Egypt, and Bricks from Babel, page 35. He, with the families of Cush, Mizraim and Phut, are believed to have gone there even before the confusion. We see that Moses, in speaking of Ham's families, says of Canaan: "Afterward were the families of the Canaanites spread abroad."—Gen. 10:18. See also Rawlinson's five great monarchies, vol. 1. This, however, is disputed by McNair Wright. See Bricks from Babel, pages 40 and 55, also Prof. Smyth on equal surface protection.

Mizraim settled in Egypt: "Hither they came, these fathers of ancient Egypt, at the first dispersion of mankind, and the civilization of the Nile land derived from the banks of Euphrates," Ibid, also Encyclopedia of Religious knowledge, page 468. Cush settled Ethiopia, (Abyssinia) the "land of fiery heats." See Bricks from Babel, page 35. Phut settled west of Egypt in north Africa. See Ency. of R. K., page 800. Of Canaan's land we read at school, also of "Jordan's river banks."

Egypt is called "the land of Misr" (Mizraim) to this day in the east. Ency. R. K., 468. "Land of Pathros" is south of Egypt, and comes from Pathrusim, son of Mizraim. The famous Libyans were west of Egypt. Phut and Lud (Libyans). And Cush, (Ethiopeans), are mentioned together by Jeremiah 46:9; Ezekiel 30:5. Jerome notices a district in Libya, called Regis, Phutensis, or "land of Phut." See Ency. R. K. page 468. Shem's son "Elam, settled not far from his brother Asshur, on the east bank of the Tigris at Susa."—Ibid. "Out of Elam grew the great Persian Monarchy."—Bricks from Babel p. 52. "Ashur to the north."—Ibid 49. "Asshur planted the land thence called Assyria."—Ency. of R. K. p. 468. Josephus tells us that Asshur founded Nineveh and the Assyrian Kingdom. Antiquities, chap. 7. "The Shemitic origin of the Assyrians have never been questioned."—Bricks from Babel p. 45, also Hist. III. of O. T. and Five Great Monarchies, vol. 1, chap. 5. Arphaxad seems to have taken no part at Babel, he being at Uz. Josephus says Shem was with this branch of his family, and thinks that his speech was not confounded. Lud settled in Asia Minor.—Josephus' Antiquities. "Aram settled the fertile country north of Babylonia."—Ency. of R. K. p. 468. Hence we read, "Aram between the rivers called Mesopotamia by the Greeks. Joktan, the great grandson of Arphaxad, "Was the prince of thirteen tribes—brother to Peleg. Joktan possessed many of the nomad instincts of the race of Arphaxad. Asshur, his kinsman, led out a host full of ambition, hot in war, luxurious in tastes, avaricious of the conquerors power, fathers of great cities, and renowned palaces." "Joktan headed an emigration less brilliant, but far more enduring. To him the breath of the desert full of quivering fire was life and delight; his were the traders, and the caravans slowly creeping over the long wastes of sand; his were the shepherds with their flocks; his the granite fortresses of Arabia the rocky; his the fragrant spices of Arabia the happy; his Sheba an Ophir. . . . As there were Asiatic and African Chusites, so there were Shemitic or pure Arabs, i. e. the Joktanidae, and Chusite Arabs, who probably entered the peninsula at a later day. These later were the hosts of another Seba and Dedan. The last mentioned descendants of Cush."—Bricks from Babel, p. 50. "Several of the sons of Cush wandering along the coast established settlements even so far as Raamah and Dedan on the Persian gulf. These became noted among the nations of old for wealth and luxury. Sheba had kings. Psa. 72:10. Queen of Sheba visits Solomon. 1 Kings 10. Had troops. Job 6:19. And traded in Tyrus in spices, precious stones and gold. Ezek. 27:22. Dedan is in the utmost corner of Arabia. Jer. 25:23. As neighbor to Esau, Jer. 49:8. He traded in Tyrus in precious cloths for chariots, Ezek. 27:20.

"We find in India two distinct races of men; the first settlers pressed into the mountains while Persia and Media were in their cradles, and the first Chaldean Empire was in the febleness of childhood. . . . In the Asiatic researches, we find an earnest article maintaining the Cushite descent of the first settlers in India."—Vol. 3, Bricks from Babel, p. 85. "Supposing them Cushites from Babylon; and in support of this theory, the ancient intercourse between Egypt and India is brought forward; also that India was called Oriental Ethiopia, and that the earliest Indians held the Nila a sacred river in Cushdewip holy."—Ibid. Also that the names of Cush, Mizr, and Rama remain unchanged, and revered by the Hindus. Thus it is argued that early Chaldeans went into India, making a primary Hamitic stratum, and that this emigration was overlaid by a superior people of the Median—Japhetic—stock, with a mingling of the Persian Shemites. In support of this theory it may be alleged, that the aborigines of India are to this day a distinct race, with Hamitic features, and that their language in its purity is not related to the Sanskrit, while that wonderful tongue pervades nearly all the European and Asiatic languages."—Bricks from Babel, p. 85. "The aboriginal mountaineers of India were foreign to the Indian race."—Pritchard's Nat. Hist. of Man, vol. 1.

Japhet's son Javan settled in Hellas (Greece). We have read of Grecian proverbs older than Japetus, denoting remote antiquity. "Javan found his home in Ionia, called from his name of Ion."—Bricks from Babel, p. 109 and 110, also Ency. of R. K. p. 467, also Kalisch Commentary of Genesis. Tarshish, his second son, settled in Tarsus, Cilicia. His descendants are thought to have settled in Spain. Spain in ancient times was called Tartessus. The river Tagus was called Tarshish. Starling's Atlas, and Ency. of R. K. p. 800.

There has been much disputing among the learned about Tarshish. Eusebius places Tarshish in Spain, Josephus in Cilicia, Knoke decides for Tuscany, G. Rawlinson leaves him at Tarsus. Bricks from Babel p. 110. Hiller will have Tarshish to signify the country of the Celts in Gaul, Spain, etc. Ency. of R. K. p. 1109. But Brown says, "There must still be another Tarshish, to which Solomon traded from the Red Sea, and for which Johoshaphat fitted out his fleet." Bochart proves by Diodorus, Pliny, and Stephanus, that Tartessus in Spain was the ancient Tarshish—it furnishes the metals said to have come from Tarshish. Ency. of R. K. p. 1124. But Watson suggests: "As Cornwall (England) in very ancient times was resorted to by the Phœnicians for this metal bedil (tin), some have thought that to be the Tarshish of the Scriptures."—Ency. of R. K. p. 1124. David speaks of the Kings of Tarshish, Ps. 72:10. They are at the Isles—a commercial nation. 1 Kings 10:22; and 2 Chron. 9:21; 2 Chron. 20:36; Jeremiah 10:9; Psalms 48:7; Isa. 2:16, and 23:1. Isaiah in speaking of the gathering of Israel says: "Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee." Also Isaiah 66:9. What does Ezekiel mean—"The merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof?" Elishah, his first son, "found his satisfaction in the Peloponnesus" (western Greece).—Kalisch Com. on Genesis; also Monteith's Atlas, Comprehensive course, p. 91.

"Isles of Elishah."—Ezekiel 27:7. "We find there the province of Elis, and a country called Alisium by Homer."—Ency. of R. K. p. 498; also p. 673 on art. Javan. Kittim, the third son, takes the Isles of Cyprus. Bricks from Babel, p. 110. And he settles along the coast and islands of the Mediterranean."—Ency. of R. K. p. 356. He moves still west to Italy.—Starling's Atlas.

Dodanim, Javan's fourth son, otherwise called Rodanum, went to Rhodes. And Calmet says, "Several Hebrew manuscripts read 'Rhodanim' and believe that he peopled the Island of Rhodes."—Ency. R. K. p. 470. "There are those, however, who find in Dodanim the earliest occupation of Italy."—Kalisch, Crit. on Genesis. "Rome, mistress first of all Italy, and then of the world, was a true son of Greece."—Bricks from Babel, p. 113. They learned their letters from the Shemites,—Keightley's Hist. of Greece. From the foregoing testimonies, sacred and profane, it appears that Javan and his descendants settled the isles and southern coast of Europe.

Gomer: "Hitherto we have found the sons of Japhet lingering in their way, clinging to Asia Minor and the banks of the Euxine sea. We must follow in Gomer that broad belt of migration which filled all central Europe, and passed into the British Isles."—Bricks from Babel p. 96. "When Gomer was dispossessed from his earliest abode, he probably retreated first into northern Armenia." Smith's Bible Dict. vol. 3: also Thomas Starling's Atlas of primitive settlements, in Ency. of R. K., p. 800: also art. on Gomer, p. 576. "Here Togarmah (Gomer's son) became the ancestors of the Armenians." See Eudoxus, Strabo, Herodotus, also Rawlinson's Herodotus. "Ashkenaz gave his name to the country first peopled by him in the north and north-western part of Asia Minor, answering to Bithynia." Ency. R. K., p. 130. Jeremiah mentions the Kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashkenaz, with the Kings of the Medes. Jer. 51:27, 28. About eighty years later Ashkenaz did follow that captian (Cyrus) and took part in that famous siege of Babylon of which the prophets had spoke. See Isaiah chapters 13 and 14 also 45:1-4; also the orders issued by Cyrus to his troops on the march to Babylon. Xenophon Cyrop, B. 5, C. 3, 38. When Belshazzar saw the handwriting on the wall, Ashkenaz, under the leadership of Cyrus, was preparing to go through the "gates of brass." Herodotus 1:191.

Riphath, Gomer's second son, was "the dwellers of the most northern mountains known to the ancients," and following Josephus, of the Paphlagonians."—Bricks from Babel. These Gomerites were late in finding a final resting place. Babylon and Egypt had seen their best days, and Gomer was yet in "bands." See chapter on "Gomer," Bricks from Babel; also Ezekiel, 38:6.

"Among all these struggling barbarians two families of Gomerites emerge, and take clear shape before us—the German and the Celt." Bricks from Babel p. 101. "The Celts were an ancient race of people, who formerly inhabited central and western Europe. Their descendants now inhabit Ireland, Wales, the Highlands of Scotland, and the northern shore of France." Monteith's Com. Geog. p. 62.

Madai, Japheth's third son, "was the father of the Medes." Ency. R. K. p. 766. "We have seen him setting up a great kingdom in Asia, north of Persia." "The early historians represent Madai as first dominated by Assyria, then in anarchy; then ruled by its own kings; next overrun for a number of years by the Scythians; after that emerging grandly from obscurity, giving a wife to Nebuchadnezzar, and uniting with Babylon in the overthrow of Nineveh."—Neibuhr, vol. 1, lect. 4; also Rawlinson's Five Great Monarchies. Afterward the Median seizes Babylon (under Cyrus, Dan. 5:31), the Medes and Persians uniting under Cyrus. Neib. Lect. on ancient Hist., Vol. 1, Sect. 11; Xenophon Cyrop, b. 5, c. 3, 38, also Hist. of Books of the Bible p. 532 to 535, also Bricks from Babel p. 88, also Herodotus 5:9. "But these realms—Media and Persia—were the gates of another empire." The arms of silver. Dan. 2:31.

Magog, Japheth's second son, "directed his march north-west from Babel, and established himself above the Euxine (Black) and Caspian seas."—Bricks from Babel, p. 93. Starling's Atlas, Rawlinson's Geog. of the Hebrews, and Major Renol's Geog. of Herodotus, Ency. of R. K. 467, also the Bible Atlas, published by the American Tract Society with the Bible Text Book.

Meshech and Tubal are noticed together with Magog, by Ezekiel, as settled in the north. Ezek. 38:2, 14, 15. "And as the ancestors of the numerous Slavonic and Tartar tribes, the first (Magog) may be traced in the Mongolians, Monguls, and Moguls; the second (Meshech) in the Mesechi, or Moscow, in the Moschici, Moscow, and Muscovites. The third, Tubal, in the Tobolski. We catch the first glimpse of these three families "south of Caucasus, where were the Montes, Moschisi, and wherein, in after times, were the Iberi, Tibareni, and Moschi. There appears also to have been in the same neighborhood, namely, in Armenia, a river and country termed Rosh; for so Bochart says the river Araxes is called by the Arabs; and that there was a people in the adjoining country called Rhossi. There Rhossi, and Moschi, who were neighbors in Asia, dispersed their colonies jointly over the vast empire of Russia, and preserve their names still in those of Russians and Muscovites. Ency. of R. K. p. 798. That passage in Ezekiel, chapter 38, "The chief prince of Meshech and Tubal," is in the Septuagint, "the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal." Close critics give it, "Gog of the land of Magog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal."—See Smith and Clark's Bible Atlas. "This word 'Gog' is frequently used in the Old Testament as the name of a line of princes over Magog, as Pharaoh is over Egypt."—Bricks from Babel, p. 93, also Kalisch, Com. on Genesis. "Only a little later than this, Magog saw an extension of his boundaries in Rosh, his descendant, who pushed his uncle Gomer out of his habitation; and when Gomer yielded to the aggressions of his nephew, Rosh sat down in his room."—Bricks from Babel, p. 94. "Here enters Rosh, who becomes the dominant or naming tribe."

"Tiras, the last named son of Japheth, has been generally accepted as the ancestor of the Thracians; these found their home widely extended between Halys, the Drave, and the Save. Out of Tiras, thus viewed, rose the mighty Goths and the Dacian's. Tiras was in league with his eldest brother, Gomer, in many a wild sweep of warfare and panic of migration. Strabo tells us that when the Kimmerii went to ravage Asia Minor, the Thracians went with them. The Dacians and the Goths thundered, under Alaric, at the gates of Rome." Tiras' home, thus viewed, was Turkey in Europe.

Miscellaneous.

REQUEST.

To those who subscribed to aid in the erection of the Independence church upon the list in my possession, and have not paid, I would very respectfully ask that on or about the 1st of April, 1888, you send to my address at Independence, Missouri, the amounts you subscribed, as I wish to make a final settlement with the committee about that time. I wish to turn over the list all paid up.

R. M. ELVIN.

SECOND QUORUM OF ELDERS.

I will send a blank report to each member of the quorum to fill out and return by the 1st of April. If the address of any member is changed from that of the last circular letter, please notify me at once. We desire to hear from every member this coming conference; let no one think that because they have not done as much as desired that they have nothing to report; tell us what your desires are if nothing more.

F. C. WARNKY, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Southern California district conference will convene March 2d, 1888, at ten o'clock, near the corner of Main and First streets in A. O. U. W. Hall, (Opera House Building), Los Angeles California, and continue three days. President Joseph Smith, and Elder E. L. Kelly of the Bishopric will be present. We hope to have a full representation. Come determined to work, and pray for the success of conference. Los Angeles is the principal city of southern California, and to make a good presentation is to the interest of all. Make the sacrifice to come, and you will be blest.

HEMAN C. SMITH,
Missionary in Charge.

FIRST QUORUM OF PRIESTS.

The address of secretary of the First Quorum of Priests is Clarksdale, DeKalb county, Missouri, it formerly was Stewartsville.

CHARLES P. FAUL.

DEDICATION.

It being deemed necessary by the members of the Logan branch that a house should be built unto the Lord, in which his people could worship before him, and also to which they could invite their fellow travelers to eternity to come and learn the way of the Lord more perfectly, President P. Cadwell made out a deed of a valuable lot in a desirable portion of the town of Logan, Harrison county, Iowa, in the name of the church and forwarded it to the Bishop of the Church, as a portion of his subscription toward the erection of the contemplated building. A building committee being appointed, plans were examined, and the kind of structure determined upon, Bro. John Baker was awarded the contract for the sum of twelve hundred dollars. The building, completed, it was determined to dedicate it to the Lord of Hosts on the 29th day of January, 1888. Elders Joseph Luff of Independence, Missouri, and J. F. McDowell of Little Sioux, Iowa, were invited to be present; Elder McDowell to preach the opening sermon at eleven a. m., and Elder Luff to preach the dedicatory sermon at 2:30 p. m.; Elders Crabb and Derry were also invited to be present.

On Sunday morning, the 29th, the house was well filled, but a cloud of disappointment hung over the audience, and was felt, as the two brethren who were engaged to perform the services were not present, and none knew the cause. But a very good substitute was found for the morning service in the person of Elder James Crabb, president of the district. Elder P. Cadwell took charge of the services; sister Pearl Derry presided at the organ. A suitable portion of Scripture was read, and the opening prayer was offered by Elder Whiting of Deloit, Crawford county, Iowa, after which Elder Crabb read a long chapter, (the writer thought he was hoping Elder McDowell would come), but the chapter being read and no McDowell appearing, he delivered a logical gospel sermon, very satisfactory to the Saints, and, I trust, not offensive to the strangers. After singing and prayer, the meeting adjourned until 2:30 p. m.

Dedicatory service opened by singing by the choir, then reading the sixth chapter of 2d Chronicles by President Cadwell, and prayer by Elder Crabb. After which the dedicatory sermon was preached by Elder C. Derry, who also offered the dedicatory prayer. There was a full attendance and good attention. Bro. Cadwell gave the history of the work done, stated that the entire cost of the building, lights, stove, seats, papering, painting, etc., was sixteen hundred dollars. The Sisters' Aid Society, of Logan branch, had contributed about one hundred dollars of the above, besides what they individually contributed other ways. Aid was acknowledged from other sources, such as the "Magnolia Sisters' Aid Society," and the citizens of Logan outside of the church had contributed liberally to the work, which was properly acknowledged. The members of the Magnolia branch had lent their kindly aid, apart from what the Sisters' Aid Society of that place had done.

But to none is greater praise due than to Bro. John Baker, a good mechanic, but a poor and weakly man, who erected the building at a sacrifice to himself, for the small sum of twelve hundred dollars. He spared not pains nor expense; his purpose was to rear a house suitable to invite the sacred presence therein, invoke his blessing, and in which his people could "worship in the beauty of holiness." This work he accomplished, for it would be hard to find a more solid structure, or a more neat and beautiful one than the house of the Lord at Logan. A baptismal font is one of the necessary appendages to the building, snugly stowed away under a portion of the platform for the choir, which platform can be readily removed, and the font will be supplied from the city water works. May it be often needed, and many souls be "born again," of "water and the Holy Spirit," in that temple of truth. Only two hundred dollars are owing on the building, and that is vouched for by competent parties. One item must be stated, there was no collection which must have seemed strange to the members of other churches present, and the writer is not sure but the neglect of this was a mistake; for I think all had come expecting to give something. One little boy, a church member, insisted upon leaving his gift with Bro. Cadwell to help defray the expenses. His name is Trumbull Emerson, about eleven or twelve years old. "If the boy is father to the man," we may expect Trummy to grow up to be a noble and generous man.

In conclusion I must state that Elder W. W. Whiting preached at night, and the day passed off very pleasantly; but it is possible, that disappointment marred the pleasure of some, but we are sure the brethren invited did not intend to disappoint. The Saints in Logan cared for the visitors in a generous manner. The prayer of the writer is that the branch at Logan may indeed be as "a city set on a hill," a beacon "light to the world," and that their "light may so shine before men, that they seeing their good works may be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven."

President Cadwell has been indefatigable in his labors, as well as the other members of the building committee, in securing means and forwarding the good work. I am not certain who were the committee, having had no official report to copy, but I think it consisted of Phineas Cadwell, Wm. Davison, and Wm. C. Cadwell, and they have the proud satisfaction of having a house reared and dedicated to the Lord, of which they can not be ashamed.

May temples spring all o'er the land,
And God's unsullied truth be taught,
While millions yield to his command,
And own His gracious, loving hand,
As to His kingdom they are brought.

May Holy Fire upon them rest,
Shedding its glorious light afar,
To guide the wanderers east and west,
To that sure goal of blissful rest,
Where God and Christ our Savior are.

CHARLES DERRY.

PATIENCE IN PERSECUTION.

Just now, when persecution lifts its afflicting hand against the Saints in parts of West Virginia, Ontario, Michigan, Ohio, and at some other points, it seems needful that we remind them, and especially the ministry, to be patient, humble and forbearing, to pray for their enemies and seek to bless those who persecute them. Do not indulge in bitterness, harsh words, raillery nor ridicule, but in all meekness and gentleness seek to render good for evil.

When the Saints are placed under severe temptations and trials, when they are cruelly assaulted on every hand, and become a spectacle to the world, if they then endure as good soldiers for Christ, they are indeed His "living epistles;" for by their conduct they teach, most publicly and effectively, the saving and exalting principles of the religion they profess.

Faithfulness to duty at the sentinel's post or on the raging battlefield, where dangers are thick and toils and watchings and duties are multiplied and pressing,— that is what wins honor and fame and renown and evolves the patriot and the hero.
This is equally true of those called to be disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ. He is "the captain of our salvation," and his followers are his "army." Unyielding faithfulness is indispensable, and on it depends success. The Saints have accepted Christ
Jesus as their "leader and commander," (Isa. 55:4; Heb. 2:10; Rev. 6:2; 19:11 —16, etc.), and their safety and success depend on their exact and constant faithfulness to him, heeding both his precepts and example. As Jesus did when sorely tempted and tried, so they should ever do, for God giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you; on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator."—
1 Peter 4:12-19.

"For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps; who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously; who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed. For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls."—1
Peter 2:19-25.

And Saint Paul said:

"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us. For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."—Rom. 5:1-8.

In the foregoing are essential principles which must be put in practice by all the worthy children of God, and the ministry should be first in this wonderful work.

It may be true that the enemy pours forth reproaches and falsehoods and slanders "like a flood" to befoul and destroy the work of God; but this is no new thing; for, from time immemorial, similar things have befallen every reformer in almost every department of society. Slander let loose his slimy tongue to degrade and destroy Jesus and the early Christians. And when the Reformation dawned on a benighted world, this vile fiend went forth to his wonted work and filled all Europe with the emissaries and instruments of his horrid wrath, till the mourning and weeping and lamentation of his victims moved the heavenly powers, and those of earth likewise, to expose and stay his diabolical work.

Socrates, Galileo, Luther, John Huss,
John Wesley, George Fox, John Bunyan,
Robert Fulton, George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, James Garfield, and hosts of others too numerous to mention, have suffered in their time at the hands of Slander. And it is nothing strange nor wonderful that the name and fame of Joseph Smith and the Saints of these latter days should likewise suffer at his hands.
He comes in ministerial garb, sanctimonious as Satan when seeking to tempt Jesus; he comes with "suborned" witnesses and pretended or real affidavits, seeking to defile and destroy personal character and blind the minds of the people to the authorized and accepted standard works of the Church of God and the exalted and divine principles taught therein. He once charged that Jesus was a bastard, that he was a winebibber and a glutton, that he was guilty of treason to the government, that he was a servant of the prince of devils, also that his disciples were nearly or quite as bad as he and that they offered their tender infants in bloody sacrifice to Christ, etc., etc., and they found no difficulty in proving all this on the testimony of bigots and their dupes. The answer of all sensible people then, and since then, was and is, that persons disciplined under such pure and exalted principles as those enjoined in their sacred writings could not be guilty of the evil deeds charged. And this is our answer to the bigoted slanderer and ready affidavit-maker of to-day who seek to befoul and malign the life and work of Joseph Smith and the faithful Saints; it is not consistent that Joseph and the Saints should have and teach the ennobling and exalted principles found in all their sacred writings and at the same time be living in open and avowed violation of them.

Professing Christians should apply similar rules when judging Joseph Smith and the Latter Day Saints that they find necessary for others when judging of Jesus and the early Christians; and that is, that they should be judged by what they themselves taught and did as recorded by themselves!

Every nation, every society, and every so-called Christian church demands that it shall be judged by its own authentic records written by its friends, and not by what may be written by its open and avowed enemies! In keeping with this, let Joseph Smith and the Saints be judged by their publicly avowed doctrines and teachings, and by their own accepted history, and not by the false, contradictory, and idiotic vaporings of Slander, whether found in the garb of a priest, a mercenary bookmaker, a lying correspondent, or a revengeful apostate. The Latter Day Saints know their own doctrine and teach it better than their enemies are capable of doing. They know their own history better than their enemies do, and are better qualified to judge of it than they are. Let right and sound reason govern.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ELDER H. A. STEBBINS left the 10th inst. for Allendale, Missouri, on the pressing calls of brethren Joseph Hammer, E. M. Carr and others. Bro. Stebbins has baptized about twenty there in times past, and the people have a high opinion of both his ability and his Christian worth. We earnestly hope he may yet baptize scores in that place and vicinity, and thoroughly plant the good work of the Lord in the hearts and homes of many.

Bro. J. A. Robinson came to us Saturday, the 11th inst, smiling like a May morning, and tarried over till Monday afternoon. He preached to a full congregation in the evening, who him gave their undivided attention as he displayed the gospel order in his characteristic and graphic manner, weaving into his discourse very much of interest from his early experiences, and especially those relating to his first-acquaintance of the latter day work and his conversion. Come again, brother John.

Sister C. West writes from Highland county, Ohio, rejoicing that she has found "the Pearl of great price." Elders Devore, Beatty, and Moler had labored some there since one year ago, a few united with the church, and many are believing. She says the gospel plan is now very plain, whereas it formerly was an unexplained and incomprehensible mystery to her.

Bro. Thomas Ranson wrote from White Rock, Michigan, the 6th inst., saying Bro. Levi Phelps had been preaching in that region since New Year's, having fair congregations, good interest, though an effort was made to break up his meetings, and at one place the people shut the school house against him. But this resulted in his having private houses offered him to preach in, and now there are some near the waters of baptism and many are investigating.

Elder Albert Haws was at Independence, Polk county, Oregon, the 6th inst., preaching and visiting as circumstances and weather permitted. He baptized a man and his wife on the 5th "who," he says, "are keepers of the Word of Wisdom from a common sense and hygienic standpoint.

Bro. D. O. Stites, formerly of Union, Jefferson county, Indiana, wrote us the 9th instant from Plainville, Daviess county, subscribing for HERALD, and exhibits love for the church and the work it has in hand.

Bro. Samuel W. Tomlinson writes from Petrolia, Ontario, that the Saints there are striving to be faithful and that they have the gifts of the Spirit, confirming their faith. An aged sister Nickerson, baptized when a girl by Joseph the Seer, in Lower Canada, had come to them, and the Spirit in prophecy testified to her that "young Joseph" was called of God and had taken his father's place at the head of the church.

Bro. E. Delong wrote us the 9th instant from Juniata, Michigan. He had been holding meetings there nearly two weeks, had baptized one and others were almost persuaded. There are twenty seven members there. He further says: "I am greatly encouraged in this latter day work."

Bro. Asher Allen writes from Birkner, Illinois, that the Saints there were alive to the work. They had been favored of late with Elders Gillen, Robinson and Cooke. He also says: "I thank God for a knowledge of the truth, of which I was ignorant until the last three years, although I was brought up in the church." He exhorts all to avoid the use of strong drink and tobacco, and to resist all "conversation in the lusts of the flesh."

As usual of late, we have to lay by some letters sent us, make extracts from others, and "trim down" still others.

THE "GOSPEL TRUMPET."

A FRIEND sends us two numbers of the above paper, published at Grand Junction, Michigan, and edited by D. S. Warner. It seems to be the organ of a body of "come-outers" who claim to have escaped from "Mystery, Babylon," and are lustily calling on all others to likewise "come out of her."

But how is this, Bro. Warner? We see you have at "the head and front" of your paper a female angel with a huge pair of wings and blowing a trumpet to "All ye inhabitants of the world and dwellers on the earth." Is not this a Babylonish angel! Did you ever read in the Scriptures of a female angel? Do the angels of God have wings? Is not all this a mere pagan, anti-Christian, Babylonish conceit? The Cherubim have wings (Ex. 25: 20); the Seraphim have wings (Isa 6: 2); but the angels of God are advanced and highly perfected "men" (Gen. 18: 2; 19: 5, 8; 32: 24; Judges 13: 3-13; Dan. 10: 5-21; 12: 5-7; Mark 16: 5; Luke 24: 4, with John 20: 12; Acts 1: 10; 10: 3, 30; Rev. 19: 10; Heb. 13: 2.

We blame no one for thinking that woman is an angel (minus the wings) in this life; but when we find men, professing to be teachers in Israel, exhibiting female angels having wings and blowing the gospel trumpet to the nations, we think they are still tipsy and befuddled with "the wine" of "Mystery, Babylon the great," and don't know it.

It is true that angels sometimes "fly;" and so do men, (1 Sam. 14: 32; 25: 14; Matt. 24: 20; Heb. 11: 34; Isa. 11: 14; 60: 8); riches fly (Prov. 23: 5); so does the arrow (Ps. 91: 5); and so do other things that move with celerity, and yet none of them have the wings of a Babylonish angel.

If Bro. Warner and his co-religionists were clean escaped from Babylon, they would hardly have taken with them one of its broad-winged female angels.

Now, we are interested in this angel question, for Jesus promises that the resurrected Saints shall be "equal unto the angels." Hear him:

"And Jesus answering, said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given to marriage: but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20: 34-36.

Matthew records his promise thus:

"Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven."—Matt. 22: 29, 30.

Inasmuch as man, when redeemed of God through the resurrection, is to be "equal unto the angels," and "as the angels of God in heaven," it is very proper that while seeking for that glorious condition he have the correct faith, and the scriptural "one hope" touching that matter. And certainly, having "the faith once delivered to the Saints," and the genuine "one hope" of the gospel of Christ, also having that "one Spirit" by which God's people are ever taught the things of God, the man of God will not think to have for himself or his fellow Saints a ponderous pair of wings in the resurrection.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH AT LAMONI.

WE are happy in being able to state, that at no time in the history of the Lamoni branch has it enjoyed such unity in doctrine, principle and work as during the past six months; and at no time has its spiritual condition been so good as of late. Sunday after Sunday for months past the Holy Spirit has mightily sustained the ministry in preaching the word, in administering the ordinances, and also in blessing with great light and power and edification those attending the prayer and testimony meetings. These seasons have been most gladsome, and have done much to cheer, confirm and build up the Saints in their most holy faith, bearing witness that the work they have espoused is both authorized and approved of God.

Trials and temptations have come and have fiercely assaulted some, but, like the passing cloud that hides the sun for a moment, they have fled away, giving place for the light in renewed strength and glory. The gifts and graces of the Spirit have been manifest in a notable degree, joy and gladness have followed, with thanksgiving and the voice of melody in tongues of men and of angels. Here is a prophetic and exhortative song, given in tongues and interpretation through sister Sarah Bailey in the assembly of the Saints, Sunday afternoon, the 4th instant, which was attended by such an universal manifestation of the Spirit upon all present that every heart was sensibly touched with its holy, heavenly fire. This manifestation, with others occurring in the same meeting, especially a thrilling, edifying prophecy, made the occasion one like that on the day of Pentecost in some degree:

It is even now as day-break,
And the night not fully gone,
When the sky is tinged with crimson
Ere the coming of the morn.
Then awake, ye Saints, and labor—
Labor while in life you may;
Gather out the honest hearted,
Bring them in the narrow way.

Yes, the clouds are fast dispersing,
And the darkness well nigh spent;
Then go forth, ye faithful workers,
Saying unto all, repent;
For the work is all majestic,
And the Spirit is divine;
Then arise, and work together,
And, behold, the sun will shine!

SPURGEON AND THE BAPTISTS.

The following brief telegram from London, England, dated January 30th, occurs in the foreign news of the day.

"Rev. Charles Spurgeon, in a letter to the Baptist Union, says that every union, unless it is a fiction, is based on certain principles. The doctrine of baptism by immersion will not suffice as a ground work. There are other doctrines besides which are essential. He is unable to fellowship with a man merely because of his adherence to the doctrine of immersion, if in other matters he is false to the teachings of scripture."—San Francisco Chronicle, for January 31st, 1888.

This is virtually the position of the Re-organized Church, following the precepts of the church as at first established. It is not enough that men shall subscribe to the belief in baptism by immersion and found a church union on that alone; for there are indeed other principles found in the "teachings of Scripture," equally as essential, and without which there can be no perfected union in Christ.

The bond of union in the economy instituted by Christ, and upon which he proposed to build his church, was the revelation, by divine means, of the fact that Jesus was the Christ. "Upon this rock" the church was to be built. Against the church so built the "gates of hell" should not "prevail."

Mr. Spurgeon has made an important discovery, but has made it very late in the history of religious development. It would have been better, much better for the Baptist Church, if some other than Charles Spurgeon had many years ago made this discovery, and with it had taken all that the Scripture teaches as essential to the success of the Christ-idea in the plan of redemption and salvation. Had such discovery been made and the discoverer heeded it might have been that the world would not have been troubled with Joseph Smith and Mormonism.

Alexander Campbell came near making this discovery. Sidney Rigdon came much nearer. But there are reasons for belief that the mystery hid from the world was not to be developed by human discovery unaided by divine interposition; and hence the "revelation" of God's will in these last days.

It is a grand thing to be able to pray, in fervent accord of spirit: "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Can such a man as Mr. Spurgeon, with the full meaning of his words—"there are other doctrines" besides immersion "which are essential"—forced upon his attention with the doctrines of Paul's letter to the Hebrews, then pray this prayer without committing himself to the propagation and defense of all found there? We think not; and yet how many have done so in the past, and how many, alas, will do so in the future.

It is possible for Rev. Charles Spurgeon, able man that he is, to gather to himself a large following; and he may do so; and it will be interesting to Latter Day Saints to watch what course he and they will take in selecting from the Scriptures the doctrines which will compose their creed.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. S. Brown, of Birmingham, England, bears testimony in a late letter to us, of her knowledge and rejoicing in the gospel, and is very grateful for her "deliverance from men-made doctrines." She further says:

"My husband was raised up to health and strength after a two years illness with dropsy, when he was baptized into this church. He had been given up by several doctors. This is well known in the English mission."

Bro. N. N. Cooke has this to say of late in regard to the St. Louis (Mo.) district:

"Am happy to say the work in this district is on the improve. The Saints are beginning to see the need of closer union. Brethren Gillen and Robinson are still laboring here, and the Master is blessing their labors. The Spirit of peace characterizes our meetings, and ere long we hope to see this district bloom."

Bro. Frank Allen writes from Independence:

"Bro. Joseph, I have been a slave to tobacco for ten or more years. After reading your article against the use of tobacco I quit it. It is terrible thing to be a slave to the practice. I hope to live and die with a clean mouth and an honest heart."

Bro. F. M. Cooper wrote of late from near Piper City, Illinois:

"In conjunction with Bro. Hougas I organized a branch containing sixteen members, on the 6th instant. Lars Lewis, presiding priest and Bro. Ben Bergerson, teacher, were respectively called to these offices by the Spirit of prophecy. We held about twenty-five services at the following points: Emington, Kempton and Campus. Bro. Hougas departed for home on the afternoon of the 6th. I closed the present effort at Kempton, on Monday evening, speaking upon the prophetic character of Joseph Smith, and upon the Book of Mormon, to a packed house, with unusual liberty. The Saints are alive; the people are being moved by the Spirit of the work. Some will be baptized in the spring, if not before, while many are believing the gospel."

The leading papers of San Francisco, California, have given President Joseph Smith very fair and respectful notices thus far. Here is what the Call of the 30th ult. had to say:

The little hall at 71 New Montgomery street, where those in this city who hold to the tenets of the Mormon faith are accustomed to worship, was pretty well filled last evening by the regular congregation and others who were attracted by curiosity to see a son of the original Mormon Prophet, Joseph Smith, and hear his exposition of Mormon doctrines.

During the devotional exercises which preceded the discourse Joseph Smith, Jr., sat with the congregation, but up at the front, so that until his abrupt appearance on the speaker's platform those who did not know him by sight were dividing between the two comparatively young men who conducted the preliminary service the honor of being the son of a prophet.

At the conclusion of a prayer by Elder Elkins Mr. Smith stepped, almost with a bound, from where he was sitting to the speaker's desk, and at once commenced speaking.

SMITH'S APPEARANCE.

His personal appearance was that of a man between fifty and fifty-five years of age, possessing a fine physique and strong vitality, with steel-gray hair, rather short and cut in the ordinary way, and a flowing beard, the color of which was a mixture of blonde and gray. There was nothing strikingly clerical in his attire, and his features were more indicative of strong will than a high order of intellectuality. His enunciation was vigorous and distinct and by no means unpleasant, and while his sentences were apparently extemporaneous and without strict conformity to grammatical rules, he spoke fluently, as of a subject to which he was not a stranger.

In commencing, he said that whatever differences of opinion there might be among religious denominations with regard to doctrines, he presumed that all were agreed upon this one point—that those who could show the best right to be called the Church of Jesus Christ were entitled to the better salvation. He was not going to apologize for God or Christ. He took the New Testament and preached Christ as he found him there. The central thought of the first part of his discourse was baptism.

A CARDINAL DOCTRINE.

They had been challenged to prove that baptism was for the remission of sin. This, he said, was one of the cardinal doctrines of the church of the Latter Day Saints, and he read from the gospels of St. John and St. Luke and from the Acts of the Apostles to prove that it was taught by Christ and his disciples. How is it, he asked, that Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon and Oliver Cowdery put the Bible into the hands of the people if they are to be counted imposters? When Smith, Rigdon and Cowdery began in 1830 to preach Jesus Christ they did not, like the Jews in their dealings with the Samaritans, claim that they had, to use a commercial phrase, a corner in the kingdom of God.

He said the Book of Mormon was in no particular in antagonism with the New Testament. On the contrary it was a co-witness with the New Testament for Jesus Christ and stood side by side with it. If there is any such antagonism it was only necessary for those who are opposed to them to show it, and that would end the matter. But failing to show a conflict they fall back on the argument that the testimony of the Book of Mormon is simply cumulative and therefore not needed. He said that they only offer the Book of Mormon as secondary testimony.

POLYGAMY.

With regard to the statement that this branch of the Church of Latter Day Saints is anti-polygamous, he had said nothing, because it was aside from doctrine; but whosoever teaches it, was not taught by Christ, is not of Christ. Therefore, said he, we reject polygamy, no matter by whom it may have been proclaimed. He next proceeded to show, from both the Old and New Testaments, that the "laying on of hands," which is practiced by the Mormon Church, is by divine authority. By the laying on of hands the Holy Ghost is conferred, and whoever preaches Jesus Christ must preach the Holy Ghost.

It was as competent for Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon to receive a revelation as it was for Alexander Campbell to preach a new light, or for a Catholic prelate to promulgate a doctrine which divided that church in Europe.

He then, for the gratification of many in the audience who did not belong to the Church of Latter Day Saints, gave a personal statement concerning himself and his views with regard to polygamy.

A PERSONAL STATEMENT.

"My father," said he, "was killed in 1844. When I grew to manhood's estate I felt it my duty to become religious. I took up the statement just where my father left off, after preaching for fourteen years. He and his co-workers had made 150,000 converts. Afterward polygamy crept into the church, and in forty years there were only about 160,000, scattered north, east, south and west. Then it was the province of myself and perhaps some others to oppose polygamy. In Utah we are called apostates.

"I did there and do now here proclaim myself opposed to polygamy. It is contrary to law, and the Government laid its heavy hand only upon transgressors. It has been said that polygamy originated with my father. Of this I do not know; but I have inquired diligently in all parts of Utah for issue by him from polygamous marriage, and I have found none, and that is to me physical evidence that the statement is not true. But true or not, I do not stand responsible for any of my father's faults.

"He never told me to do anything that was against the laws of the country. I am satisfied to answer for my sins, and he has gone to his reward or punishment—time will tell which—and when the final arbitrament shall come it may then be said of us: 'They were right upon earth, and they ought to receive the better salvation.'"

The Chronicle speaks of him in this manner:

Among the distinguished arrivals from the East during the last week was Joseph Smith, eldest son of the Mormon prophet of that name and President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, sometimes called Josephites, though they do not favor that name. Mr. Smith's home is in Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa, where there is a large congregation of that faith, and where he edits a paper called the Herald, which is the official organ of the denomination. On his way hither he spent several weeks in Salt Lake City, and he intends to remain on this coast several months looking after the interests of the various congregations, and publicly presenting the principles and doctrines for which they stand. He was found yesterday at the home of Elder George S. Lincoln, the leader of the congregation in this city, and readily consented to speak of his views and his recent observations in Salt Lake City.

President Smith is a man about fifty-five years old, of medium height and stoutly built. He is large-featured, and his face has altogether an intelligent and benevolent look. In manner he is affable and unpretentious, and he bears about him none of the marks of a zealot or fanatic.

With regard to his visit to Salt Lake City he said he lectured to good houses in the chapel there eight times, and was much better received by the Mormons than on his previous visits. Most of the Mormons with whom he conversed were of the younger and non-polygamous members, and they seemed to be sincere in their disposition to conform to the requirements of the law and drop that most objectionable feature of the Mormon faith. The polygamists were in a bad way—greatly demoralized. Scores of them were under indictment and a great number were in hiding to prevent being arrested. From what he saw and heard he believed the law would be triumphant in the end and polygamy would be stamped out. Not more than one-fifth of the Mormons were practical polygamists and there was an increasing feeling against the practice, particularly among the younger portion of the community.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 16th.

Dear Sisters:—The time for the meeting of the General Conference is near, and we trust that our Missionary fund will not fall below what it was at the last conference. See the encouragement which the Spirit is giving us upon every hand, let us not forget that all depends upon our own faithfulness. If we are not faithful in the use of the unrighteous mammon, put into our trust while upon this earth, the word of God is pledged, that the true riches will never be intrusted to us. The needs of the ministry are great and the cries of the poor are coming up before God as a witness against us. We own nothing in this world—only hold it in trust as stewards of a just God. Our God is no respecter of persons and can never look with complacency upon those who are trampling upon his laws and wasting his substance in selfish pandering to depraved appetites and the vanities of life, while his children by creation and by redemption—whose souls are just as precious in his sight as are our own, are dying in ignorance of that gospel which has been entrusted to this church—to us as a people to carry to the ends of the earth. If sacrifice was necessary upon the part of the Son of God is it not upon ours? If necessary for the elders, is it not so for us? Read carefully what the Lord said to us here in Lamoni (see Bro. Blair's article), and ask your soul if it is not time to arise and trim our lamps?

PRAYER AND FAITH.

PRAYER is the earnest desires of the heart, the inmost cravings of the soul; for if only from the lips it is mockery, and can not be called prayer. It must flow from the recesses of the heart, sinking to the very depth of our nature; and is one of the greatest privileges bestowed upon the human family. What an unestimable blessing! What comfort and joy it affords, to draw near in close communion with our Maker, as children who are shut out from his divine presence through disobedience. It matters not how few the words or the simplicity in which they may be uttered; if clothed in humility and decked with faith, they must and will have effect. If we ask for bread, will he give us a stone? Nay; his ears are ever open to our cry, and his hands are filled with blessings, and he is ready and willing to bestow plenteously in mercy; but justice demands confidence, integrity and obedience to his commands, then no good thing will be withheld. Prayer is the rock of strength. Before its shrine mountains become small hills; clouds of blackness speedily disappear before its radiant light; sorrow is turned to joy; the sad and lonely are comforted; the tempted receive power to resist temptation, while the enemy is filled with wrath, turning sorrowfully away; knowing it to be the wall of sure defence, the key to unlock the treasures which are incorruptible and fade not, the root of preservation which will grow in beauty, in faith, power and height until it brings us to that beautiful city to join the faithful and blest, those who have fought manfully and overcome through the blood of the Lamb. "Pray without ceasing" was wisely given, and is very appropriate to-day; not that we are to be bowed in the attitude of prayer all the day long, but our hearts and minds can be lifted on high in praise and gratitude, asking assistance even amidst the daily avocations of life. Experience teaches that no trial can be overcome, no evil habits conquered, no sinful passions subdued, no haughty spirit quelled and brought in subjection without prayer. It is the sweetest balm to soothe the aching breast, heal the broken hearted; and the secret weapon to conquer foes. Through the prayers and faith of an honest youth, angels have visited the earth and restored the fulness of the gospel for the salvation of mankind. Truth long concealed has been made manifest. The God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, has revealed himself, also his beloved son; visions of glory and splendor have been open to view; the blind have been made to see, the deaf hear, the dumb speak, the lame walk; evil spirits cast out, and many with incurable diseases been healed. Prayer and faith must join hands; for without the latter, the former would be like a bubble, without substance naked and void. We need, then, a heart to pray, faith to feel and know if we seek aright we shall obtain; for the promises of the Father never fail. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but not one jot or tittle of his word shall pass until all be fulfilled. With such precious promises as these our faith should be strong, believing in Him in whom we trust; knowing he is not an imaginary being, without body, parts or passions, beyond all bounds and space, but one that hath ears to hear and mouth to speak, who formed man after his own image, dwells in a tabernacle not made with hands, by his matchless power created all things, both in heaven and earth, visible and invisible, condescended to give his only begotten son as a propitiation for the sins of the world, who knows our wants before we ask. Then let us seek him diligently in prayer and faith, and all our needs will be well supplied.

C. ACKERLEY.

We owe an apology to the writer of the following letter, which should have appeared several weeks ago, but for the original of which this is a copy, having been misplaced.—Ed.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 8th.

Dear Sister Frances:—The Saints here are endeavoring to raise money to erect a building in which to worship God and call it our own. To raise means for the same the Mite Society of our branch, assisted by their friends and the Saints in general, gave an entertainment, supper and bazar, at our hall, 1447 Broadway, on December 15th, 1887, which proved a great success. Many strangers present requested to be notified when we gave another, as they wished to attend. The entertainment consisted of singing and recitations, in which sisters Samuel Burgess, Thomas E. Taylor, Angie Remington, Patience Cook, Belle Molyneaux and Sadie Bradshaw, brothers Iver Davis, F. C. Molyneaux, Samuel Burgess, Mr. Crocker and others participated. The recitation by F. C. Molyneaux on Woman's Rights, created much laughter, as it was very humorous. The display of fancy work at the hall, on the occasion, did great credit to those who executed it; and it would be very hard to equal, much less excell it. Mr. John Dawson, a member of the building committee, worked most energetically for the affair, and deserves great praise for the same. At the bazar several articles were voted for at five and ten cents a vote. A beautiful red plush album was voted to the most popular married man present; Brother Gillen was the recipient. A beautiful pin-cushion to the most popular young lady present; Miss Belle Molyneaux; a beautiful doll cradle and doll to the most popular little girl; Ethel Taylor; a nice sled to the most popular little boy; Master William Cowlshaw; a pair of slippers to the most popular single gentleman present; Mr. Crocker; this voting caused considerable amusement, as all present were anxious for his or her favorite to win and almost all the articles realized a good price and increased the proceeds of the bazar, which was really the object of the arrangement. About $200.00 was cleared at the affair, and all were well pleased, which latter was satisfactory to those who labored for its success.

ONE IN THE FOLD.

THE BURDEN BEARER'S SONG.

"I'll drop my burden at his feet,
And bear a song away."

Over the narrow foot-path
That led from my lowly door,
I went with a thought of the Master,
As oft I had walked before.
My heart was heavily laden,
And with tears my eyes were dim;
But I knew I should lose the burden
Could I get a glimpse of Him.

It was more than I could carry.
If I carried it all alone;
And none in my house might share it—
Only One on the throne.
It came between me and pleasure,
Between my work and me;
But our Lord could understand it,
And His touch could set me free.

Over the trodden pathway,
To the fields all shorn and bare,
I went with a step that faltered,
And a face that told of care.
It had lost the light of the morning,
With its shimmer of sun and dew;
But a gracious look of the Master
Would the strength of morn renew.

While yet my courage wavered,
And the sky before me blurred,
I heard a voice behind me
Saying a pleasant word.
And I turned to see the brightness
Of heaven upon the road,
And sudden I lost the pressure
Of the weary, crushing load.

Nothing that hour was altered,
I had still the weight of care;
But I bore it now with the gladness
Which comes of answered prayer.
Not a grief the soul can fether,
Nor cloud its vision, when
The dear Lord gives the Spirit
To breathe to his will, Amen.

Oh friends if the greater burdens
His love can make so light,
Why should His wonderful goodness
Our halting credence slight?
The little sharp vexations,
And the briers that catch and fret,
Shall we not take them to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?

Tell him about the heartache,
And tell Him the longing too;
Tell Him the baffled purpose,
When we scarce know what to do.
Then, leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song.

Sunday School Times.

KINGSLEY, Iowa, Feb. 4th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have been but six months in the work of Christ, but I have seen many pleasant hours since I united with the Saints. I love to see the work progress, for I know it is true. The brethren who have been holding meetings here, left us February 2d. May the Lord be with them wherever they may go. Brother Wight while at this place baptized five. The Latter Day Saint's Church surely is right. I do not know of any other church but what does away with the gifts, and deny the power of God. My prayer is that God may give me strength to do my duty. May heaven's choicest blessings be with the Saints, so when the Son of Man cometh we can stand before the judgment bar of God and hear the words, "Well done thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over few things, I will make thee ruler over many."

I remain your sister in Christ,
MAGGIE JORDAN.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Maria Rainbolt, Galesburg, Missouri, writes:—"I realize that the work we are engaged in is of God and that each one of us has a work to do in helping it on. I have long been alone in the work, but thanks be to God one of my daughters is now with me, though my husband is still out of the fold. I feel that he is convinced of the truth of the work and has had testimony that God is with us. When our little girl was sick and nigh unto death, he saw God's power manifested in healing her in answer to prayer. Dear sisters, remember me in your prayers that I may prove faithful to the end."

Sister M. A. Christie, Akron, Iowa, writes:—"I rejoice in this great work, and I know it is God's. I am trying by his help to assist in spreading the gospel, that others may learn and obey it. I try to sustain all who are laboring for it, by my faith and prayers, and I praise God that secret prayer is denied to none, neither the glorious promise that 'He who seeth in secret himself will reward openly.' I often say, 'Precious Herald, my only preacher most of the time. I can not do without you!'"

Sister Julia Lloyd, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, writes:—"We have been taking the Herald for a long time and could hardly get along without it. I am a young mother, with two little boys to bring up, if the Lord spares them to me, and I ask the Saints to pray for me, that I may have wisdom to bring them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord. I realize deeply the need of patience. We as a branch are having a time of rejoicing. Bro. I. N. White, of Clinton, and Bro. Emsley Curtis, of Independence, came down on Friday and held meetings. On Sunday we had three meetings, and times of refreshing they were, long to be remembered. We will gladly welcome the brethren again—whenever they can come. We have a flourishing little branch of forty-three members. Three were added by baptism last Monday. I ask the prayers of the Saints for my mother, Mrs. Mary Miller. She is afflicted with sore eyes, and is isolated from the church."

Sister D. Bates, Bayport, Michigan, writes:—"I rejoice in this latter day work, which I know is of God, and earnestly desire to so walk before, and so train my little children in the fear and admonition of the Lord, that we may stand firm to the end."

Sister America Thompson, Beebeville, Kansas, writes:—"I was baptized by W. W. Blair, in the year 1870, at Eden, Indiana. I was badly afflicted at the time, but had the promise of the Spirit that the Lord would bless me, and the promise was fulfilled; for which I thank my Father in heaven. The greatest desire of my heart is to so live that I may have his grace to help me bring up my little family, that they may grow up to honor his name and be instruments of doing good in the world."

Sister B. A. Nunley, Wheelock, Texas, writes:—"We are the only family of Saints living here, and you may believe that the Herald is a welcome visitor. The nearest branch, which is the Central branch, is fourteen miles away. My husband preaches there twice a month. We have our lessons every Sunday morning from the Hope. It is quite a small school, but we are not at all discouraged."

DERBY, Miss., Jan. 30th.

Dear Sisters:—As one of the other dear sisters has said, the Herald is my only preacher, and I can not tell you how much comfort it brings me. The letters in the Home Column are a source of great enjoyment and profit to me. If we can not meet and converse, how blessed that we may thus communicate with each other. We have not resided here long, and at present our family circle is quite broken. We have no church privileges where we now reside, and I have not attended divine worship for five years. Where we formerly lived I had a class of young and old, as many as could gather together, invited to my house, and we had a little Sunday School on Sunday mornings, and studied God's holy word. It was very little to do, but it was a mite for the Master. I wish it were in my power to do more, yet I know I am where God has placed me, and I am much blessed. I beseech you, dear sisters, to pray for me and mine. I desire above all things to bring up my children in the fear and love of God, and that I may say at the last great day, "Lord, I bring the treasures thou did'st give me, all to thee."

Your sister in the faith,

CATHARINE LIVINGS.

ANACONDA, Mont., Dec. 21st.

Dear Sister Frances:—Enclosed please find one dollar and twenty-five cents for the "Home Column Missionary Fund," for my son and self; I feel so sorry that the fund is decreasing in amount, instead of increasing. I derive great pleasure weekly, from the letters written by the sisters, they are full of good instructions; and if we will only follow them, we shall reap our reward. I have received such a testimony of God's mercy to me, that I thought I would write to the Home Column. I have been a great sufferer for over ten years from liver and kidney disease. In times past I have tried medical aid, in fact anything I thought would relieve me, I became very ill. I had no rest day or night. My suffering was fearful. No elder nearer than Deer Lodge, twenty miles. I had oil in the house but not consecrated. I had received a letter from a sister during this time, saying Bro. Mills was going to administer to her, and she had oil (not consecrated), that she should pray, as ask God to bless it. The thought came to me instantly, if God will bless the oil for her, he will for me, and stop those violent pains in my back and loins. That night I prayed and asked God to bless the oil, and to remove the pain. I believed he would, and I knew he could. The next morning the pain was not so severe. The next night I used the oil, and prayed again. The next morning I was still better. The same evening I thought, Why don't the pain leave altogether; there is something left undone! I prayed and asked what it was. The Spirit directed me to a letter I had received from sister Helen Smith, written me by the Spirit. With the rest that was written was this, if I would fast and pray, I should have health and strength; and the time would come, when I would be wise, and put it in practice. I then commenced to fast and pray, continuing till next morning and the morning after; and praise his Holy name, I arose in perfect health; all pain had left me. A week after the pains returned. I thought there still is something I have not done. I fasted and prayed again, asking what it was. The Spirit told me I had taken no oil internally. I did this, and the following morning all pain was gone. I continue in health and strength, and to my Eternal Father be all the praise.

Dear sisters, I wish to say, If we will only live faithful, and put our trust in the Lord, we shall neither want good health nor any good thing. I have proved this so often. I am a widow and have not much of this world's goods. If I need anything very much I go in prayer, asking God to grant it, fully believing he will, and I have never been disappointed yet; and I feel I never will. That I may prove faithful to the end is my constant prayer. Asking God to bless you.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZA DINGLE.

SHENANDOAH, IOWA.

Mothers in Zion:—I would speak a few words to you. There is a building going up. When finished, Christ our Savior, is going to present it to his Father; and every stone in that building is to be a polished one. The lessons in the Hope are one of the means to polish. See to it that your children, old and young, take interest in them. You help them; or, if father has his evenings at home, let him, if he has the most time. One take the Bible, another take the lesson leaves and see what these lessons are about. Give the children some knowledge of their lessons before Sabbath School hour arrives, and you will find if this is done, your Sabbath Schools are a might power for good. You may think the schools are good now, and so they are, but they will be better; and, as sister Walker says, there is a "work for the young, a great work." I too feel this strongly, and I am anxious that your children become fit stones for the building and an example to their associates. Parents, I know you need all the assistance you can get to keep your children in the straight way. Take the "Autumn Leaves," if possible, for them to read.

I felt I wanted to write this to you all. Let us all be in earnest in keeping the commandments of God, and we will be polished stones in the building.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

Presidents and clerks of districts who have branch reports in their hands which should come to me for record are hereby asked to kindly forward the same without unnecessary delay. Also I hope to hear from the Mission Secretary of England, and from the branches in Australia. Among the hundreds of letters sent to various parts of the United States are some which have not yet been answered, therefore I ask those written to for corrections that they reply as soon as possible. It will save a rush of business the last of March if many others would be prompt besides those that now are so.

H. A. STEBBINS, Church Recorder.

Correspondence.

EMINGTON, Ills., Jan. 31st.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin is a splendid missionary field, but what is needed is the missionaries. Bro. M. T. Short has done some effective preaching in Wisconsin, and he has been laboring in the northern part of our district, in this state. But the labors of twenty elders would not be adequate to supply the demand; and if the interest increased in ratio to the added misisterial force, the demand would rise to twenty twentys. I enjoyed the pleasure of holding a series of meetings near Custer, assisted by Priest Joseph Kahler. It was a new point, and the word Mormon was a "pandoras box" replete with all of the vices known in the calender of human depravity to many of the good people of that community. But the way the thing turned out they were disappointed, and I have grave fears that some were unhappily disappointed, especially a hard shell Baptist minister. Mormonism did not sound as they expected. It did not endorse libidinous Utah. It stuck too close to the Bible and apostolic Christianity. In fact it intruded itself upon the people as the gospel of Christ, as certified to by himself and his apostles more than eighteen centuries ago. The Baptist pastor was present each evening, with one exception. Our expositions so filled him with theological combustibles that we gave him one of our appointments, and was present to witness his explosion; but it proved to be quite an innocent affair, and resulted very favorably for the truth. We found many friends, especially among the United Brethren, who opened their doors and bade us welcome to their pleasant homes. At the close of the last service, unexpectedly to me, a Mr. Smalley passed the hat, and several dollars were contributed to help me on the way. We left many noble hearted and earnest investigators of our faith in that section of the country, and believe that the foundation of a good work has been laid.

Taking dinner recently with a Mr. Palmer, one of Elder Green's flock, he stated that after my departure from their neighborhood, that their pastor started a revival service, but the effort came to an ignoble focus, with a congregation of three besides the preacher. Green's failure was followed by a Methodist minister, who was greeted by empty seats. United Brethren preacher anxious to upset Mormon influence, over his flock, began a revival effort, with the same result as the rest. The verdict at Custer is that there is a premium on Mormon preaching, while orthodoxy is below par.

Bro. T. Hougas conjointly labored with me in this country for some time. We preached at the Chase School-house, and at Emington, in the Congregational Church, to large and seemingly interested audiences. After Bro. Hougas' departure I labored for a few evenings in a school-house near Bro. Lars Lewis'.

More recently I began an effort in Kempton, in the upper story of the large village school-house, the room was well filled the first evening, and a number of chairs were brought in to furnish seats for those standing. The last evening the house was densely packed, with a number of additional chairs brought into service. We tried to entertain the people the first evening on Mormonism, in its theological and ethical character; the second evening we introduced the restoration of the gospel.

This week up to date we have been holding forth at the Close school-house, and at the Congregationalist church in Emington again. Though the weather and roads are against us, yet we had a good house last evening, including the little pastor of the church, whose diminutive physical form is greatly in excess of his moral manhood, as he has been laboring hard against our faith, by misrepresenting it both publicly and privately. He told one lady, who has subsequently joined our church, that the Mormons substituted Joe Smith for Jesus Christ. If the plea of non compos mentis don't help such fellows hereafter, theirs will be a critical case. We occupy the church against the will of the pastor, but it meets the endorsement of the people and the majority of the trustees. Rev. Kelsey is doing a good work for our cause in this country, though he proceeds at it negatively, yet the reaction of public sentiment from his little selfish, prejudiced, narrow, contracted attacks, demonstrates the truth of the apostle's declaration: "Ye can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth."

There are a number of families of excellent Saints living in this country, who occupy an influential position in the world, morally, socially, and financially,—and with their influence enlisted upon the side of earnest ministerial effort, good will be accomplished, and a branch can be organized here in the near future. The growth of the work may not be very rapid, or superficial, but it is to be hoped that it will be permanent, and it will if it is developed according to the immutable laws of moral and spiritual life, which places the lives of those who embrace the gospel above the selfish and narrow feelings of a wicked world, and places their regenerated feet upon that exalted plane of life, where every controlling thought is to make ourselves and the world around us better.

The demands for ministerial labor is more than I can handle, so Bro. Howard telegraphed for Bro. Hougas to return to our aid. I do hope he will come. I renew our effort at Kempton to-morrow evening, continuing if the Lord will until Saturday, then speaking in the evening at Campus in the Methodist Church. I ought to go to Piper City, to Mayfield, to Wisconsin, to Custer again, to Twelve Mile Grove, and no doubt but the Saints in the branches think it about time for me to put in an appearance; but when they consider the extent of territory comprised in my field, the many places where no preaching has been done, they may be inclined to excuse my seeming tardiness. Many places I am compelled to neglect for want of time to visit them. Catlin, in Vermillion county, is one. Excellent attendance and interest greeted us there last Winter, while Bro. J. S. Keir and myself made a short visit to Bro. Charles Thomas', an old timer, who had not seen a Latter Day Saint for near thirty years. I hope if the Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin district fail to receive any additional aid from General Conference, that the local authorities will see to it that the work in the district be persecuted with greater vigor in the future, and that so many urgent calls will not be made in vain. I do not think there is a single complication in the district; peace seems to prevail throughout with but little if any exception. The Spirit of the Lord blesses the congregations of the Saints in many places; while young members who have but recently embraced the work are being blest with the gifts of the gospel. The local brethren have been faithful in attending branch duties so far as I know. Bro. Southwick, president of the branch at East Delavan, Wisconsin, has done ministerial labor outside of the branch. The same should be said of brethren Hougas and Vickery. I feel greatly indebted to the Saints everywhere for kindness and hospitality shown me; also to many not of the church, whose conduct towards us gave evidence at least, that they believed we were trying to do good. That we all may live to do the Master's will, and at least reach the better life and rest beyond, is my prayer.

F. M. COOPER.

HORTON, Kan., Feb. 5th.

Elder W. W. Blair:—I see by the Herald that some of the Saints have bothered you (as well as me). Times too numerous to mention, I have been questioned as to whether I belonged to the Reorganization. And it has been so often that I have got tired of it. And now I will send you a few lines setting forth my former, present and future standing. God be praised that I was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in February, 1842. Shortly after, I was ordained an elder and directly began to preach, hold debates, etc., etc. I stood by Joseph Smith as the Prophet, Chief Pastor, until he was taken. I then took up the claims of Brigham Young and Mr. Strang. I found Mr. Strang's claims were the only ones that compared with the order of the priesthood as set forth by Joseph Smith. I accepted him as the direct, and only direct successor of Joseph. I stood by Mr. Strang until he was taken. But in accepting Mr. Strang I had no occasion to be baptized again. At the death of Mr. Strang I had occasion to search the law on priesthood to find who held the presiding authority over the church. I was just as successful in my researches as at the first, and have stood to my post, and intend to, until this earthly house falls. Since my first adoption into the church I have had no occasion to be baptized over. At the present I hold that "young Joseph" Smith was duly anointed and ordained into the Presidency, etc., as was his uncle—Hyrum. And I propose to hold him in that Presidency until God removes him or me.

As the friends in Kansas and Michigan wish to know my standing they will please see by the foregoing, that they be not be misled. If my baptism and ordination under the martyr, will not justify men of America or the whole world, in fellowshiping me, they can do as the Jews did with Jesus, Peter, Paul and others. I shall only move on in the line of duty as God by the prophets has marked it-out, risking my all with him who first called me into his fold, set me in his church as a minister of the everlasting gospel.

As to my holding theories, doctrines and principles at variance with the Reorganization, I don't take much pains to publish the differences, only when it becomes my imperative duty. And even then I show up the differences in all plainness and charity. I find some of the elders who are in the Reorganization differ materially; yet all that does not change my faith in the general work.

The editor thinks two can't walk together unless agreed. It seems the Democrats and Republicans have walked together and sustained brother Cleveland, and will until Grover's time is out. So with us; we can sustain President Smith in the Presidency, though he differs in some points with us.

Please excuse my long letter; but as I don't write often the readers will pardon. I have baptized some and will send their names up to the Church Recorder, and he can do as he pleases about recording them. I keep a record of all my official acts.

Truly and sincerely,

L. D. HICKEY.

SYRACUSE, Ohio, Feb. 6th.

Bro. Blair:—Since my last to the Herald I have been preaching in Vinton, Jackson, Athens, and Hocking counties; have baptized two, both heads of families. Others would have been baptized but were afraid of the icy water. I have had good liberty by the Spirit of the Master in presenting the way of life to the people. I am happy to say that the work of the Lord is on the onward march in this part of the vineyard. During the latter part of last September, in company with our noble brother, T. J. Beatty, I was at Sand Run, preaching for a short time. The only family of Saints living there then was sister Hannah. Since that Bro. Beatty returned and labored several weeks and baptized nineteen and organized a branch with Bro. Charles Cooper, priest, Bro. D. J. Hannah teacher, and Bro. Wm. Cooper deacon. This is a noble band of Saints. They have organized a Sunday-school with Bro. D. J. Hannah superintendent. A good club of Zion's Hope is coming to the school. May the good work go on in this direction in the churches of the Saints. I stayed there preaching for two weeks, baptized one, leaving others almost persuaded. I met a man who claimed that he was acquainted with the Josephite Church and some of its apostles, naming J. W. Briggs, and others which are not nor ever have been apostles of that church, and said they were very rich, telling this story to a crowd of people. When he got through I told him there was a great mistake somewhere; that he had mentioned names that was not of apostles nor ever had been, of the Josephite Church, as he called it. At this he said no more, but left. A man standing by said, "You served him right." What next! Will be off to my work in a few days.

THOMAS MATTHEWS.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 7th.

Bro. Blair:—I met Prof. Benner, of the Salt Lake Academy who spoke in Tremont Temple in our city at the close of Rev. Joseph Cook's lecture, which you will find underlined in the Boston Herald of the 6th inst. The Professor said, in substance, that he had lived in Utah ten years, and that the Mormons had no thought of leaving their faith in plurality of wives, and that when convicted of that crime they were asked if they would have their sentence remitted by taking an oath to discard polygamy, and they went to prison rather than give up their faith, and that they expect to finally win all Gentiles to their faith.

I made myself known to the Professor, and he seemed pleased to meet me. He said he was personally acquainted with our mission in Utah, and that we had done a noble work; also that "Little Joseph," so-called, was a gentleman and was making friends everywhere.

You will also find in the Boston Herald a sermon of a Rev. Divine on faith-cure. My candid opinion, based on the law of God, is that that man is a good specimen of very weak faith in any of God's promises and will rank favorably with the infidel of our age. As to healing ministrations, we are well acquainted with them and their workings. No genuine, no counterfeit. We are well acquainted with the pure gift that comes from God to heal the sick, and the prayer of the faith that prevails with the living God. The genuine is wickedly counterfeited—and will be.

A. N. HOXIE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Feb. 6th.

Dear Herald:—Something near two months ago, on a beautiful afternoon, I took my leave of home and loved ones for this mission field, having been duly appointed thereto by the First Presidency. En route here I formed some very pleasant acquaintances who were very kind to me during my first ride in an immigrant car. Upon my arrival I found a resting place with Bro. Ethan Barrows. One days rest, and in connection with that whole souled missionary, Bro. R. J. Anthony, commenced holding meetings in the chapel. Attendance was small, but the attention, order and interest good. We continued for two weeks, when duty and the demands of our work, called me to Malad, Idaho, where I withstood the matured and cunningly devised attacks of Rev. Lamb on the Book of Mormon. I am not ashamed of the defence made, and it was with humility of heart that we gave thanks to our heavenly Father when it was manifested by the Spirit through the gifts that God was well pleased with our efforts in defending His work. I am fixed in my conclusions that those who shall seek to intelligently, faithfully and humbly strive to serve God, and keep the commandments with a pure motive, will never be forsaken, neither put to shame. How all-important, therefore, that the ministers of the covenant of eternal life should live Godly, and ever be diligent in gaining knowledge pertaining to all the requirements essential to obtain the full fruition of Saintship, that citizenship may be assured in that kingdom which shall "be given to the Saints of the Most High," which kingdom shall "never be destroyed, or given to another people."

I preached once in the Presbyterian Chapel and several times in the Saints' Chapel, with a growing interest and an increasing attendance, and it was simply astounding to see the people continue to come out, night after night, while the quicksilver indicated 44 below zero, the most severe weather I ever experienced. I wish to say that the Saints and friends, in a handsome manner remembered me with substantial aid, for which I render sincere thanks.

I returned back to this city, the 20th ult., and on my way met Bro. Joseph, at Ogden, on his way to California. He was cheerful seemingly and in good spirits. Our conversation was limited, and mostly upon my labor at Malad. Soon after my return Bro. R. J. Anthony, left for a trip to the southern part of Utah, and left me to "hold the fort" in this place. The meetings are somewhat better attended at present than upon my arrival. Perhaps Bro. Joseph's three weeks sojourn is largely the cause thereof.

Here as elsewhere there seems to be an endless variety of attractions to satiate those who delight in pleasure and vanity than in the gospel. Some few seem to be deeply interested in the salvation of their souls, and it is quite probable they may cast their lot with us; but at the present I see no immediate prospect of any very great work, however this to me is not a valid excuse for the cessation of faithful and continued labor upon our part to redeem the fair name of the church, from reproach, even in Utah. Our duty is to patiently abide in hope, while we seek for good, and leave the results to Him that doeth all things well after the counsel of His own will.

I am almost led to believe that my coming here will prove a blessing in furnishing a golden opportunity for me to increase my store of patience, charity, brotherly-love, forbearance, long-suffering and endurance; and only by the grace and mercy of God can I expect to attain unto any degree of success. Should I fail or perish in the attempt to show forth a life sanctified in Christ, it will be the weakness of the head, and not the fault of the heart that desires only righteousness, and to obtain which I feel willing to endure sacrifice.

I wish to record in conclusion, that at my departure from home and the dear ones, I felt a more calm, holy, peaceful spirit permeate my soul, than upon any former occasion when leaving home for mission duties. To me this was a good omen that if I continued trusting in and was faithful to the gospel work, God would accept and bless my humble efforts. I therefore will still strive to work and wait, trusting in my heavenly Father.

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

SANTA CLARA, Dakota, Feb. 2d.

Dear Herald:—Over two years ago you became a weekly visitor to our home and have grown very dear unto us. You are the first thought of when the mails come in. Many times have I sat by the lamy-light reading the testimonies of truth which you bring, till the old clock on the shelf strikes the hour of twelve. As I read the testimonies of those who have grown old in the service of the Lord, and of those who have just put on the gospel armor and have gone out to fight the adversary of the truth, the thought has pressed itself upon me, "Why do you not give in your testimony?" I have kept putting it off with one excuse and then another, but now I have concluded to tell you how and why I become a Saint.

In the fall of 1884 I was at the house of a neighbor, a book was upon the table, and being quite a hand for reading, I looked at the book, and when starting for home I asked permission to read it. I found that it was a history of the pioneers of the west. It gave a history of the "Mormons," in which I grew quite interested. One day two gentlemen stopped with us to dinner. I showed them the book, saying that it gave quite a history of the "Mormons," showing clearly that Joseph Smith was an impostor. The conversation drifted on, and I found to my surprise, that there was a settlement of Saints about fifteen miles north of us, and that a little German who had stopped with us over night a few weeks before was a "Mormon preacher." I told them that I would like to see him answer that book and prove that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. The book, to my mind then, took the whole foundation out from under the church and left it to fall.

Time wore on and I had almost forgotten the conversation, when, one day, as I drove up from the field and was feeding the horses, my father said that there was a Mormon preacher out by the house that wished to see me. I went out, hardly knowing what to expect in the way of argument from him. I thought I had a clear case. Well, after about half an hour's talk with him, I concluded to let the book stay in the house. I found out that he did not believe in polygamy, and that it was not a tenet of his church and was not taught by Joseph Smith, but was a false and corrupt doctrine taught by Brigham Young, who led a portion of the church to Utah, but that the faithful Saints had no connection with that church whatever, and was sending missionaries there to bring them out of darkness and back into the light. He proved to my entire satisfaction that the Reorganized Church was the continuation of the original church, but he had yet to prove that the "original church" was the Church of Christ. When I talked upon Bible matters I was willing to take the Bible as proof, and the end of dispute. So after careful study for a year and having frequent conversations with those of other denominations, I concluded that it was in reality God's Church. But to make sure that I was not misled, I went to God in humble prayer, knowing the promise was, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."—James 1:5. I received the testimony asked for, and on the seventh day of November, 1886, the "little German," Robert Oehring, lead me down into the waters of baptism. We had to drive about fifteen miles from Bro. Oehring's to find sufficient water. But that was no hindrance. I had made up my mind to obey God's commands, and had it been twice that distance we would have went. I was confirmed by Brn. Robert Oehring and Frank Hackett. On the 1st of December, 1886, our branch was organized. I was ordained a priest under the hands of Brn. Hackett and Oehring. The Spirit was present in prophecy, part of which is now fulfilled, and that was that my father should come into the church. He at that time was a strong Methodist, and had been for over thirty-three years, and was doing his best to lead me out of what he called "a delusion;" but, thank God, I had the pleasure of baptizing him and two others, August 21st, 1887.

The day after the branch was organized, Brn. Oehring and Hackett were called to administer to a boy about seven years old who had been taken with what the doctors called Saint Vitu's dance. Some weeks before his parents procured medical aid, but to no effect, he grew worse, until at last he lost his speech. The evening we arrived at the house I sat down on the side of the bed, took one of his little twitching hands in mine, but could not hold it still. He could not turn himself, lift his head, or even lift his arm. That night they administered to him. The next morning he spoke the first he had in two weeks; and in a few days he was perfectly well. There has also been other cases of healing. My father had a large open sore under his arm, and had to cover it with silk, as he could not bear the least touch of cotton or woolen upon it. It was growing larger, and he was afraid it was a cancer. When I led him up out of the water, I touched it with my hand, and he said it pained him. On the way home he thought of the sore, put his hand to where it was, but felt no pain. When he got home he looked, and lo, he was healed!

I might give other testimonies of prophecy and their fulfillment, tongues and their interpretation, but this is sufficient at present. The work is of the Lord and will triumph. Let us hold up the gospel banner, and in that great day when the Lord gives each man his reward, may it be said of us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

RESURRECTION.

THOSE professed believers who claim that the redemption wrought out by Christ pertains to the spirit alone, deny the possibility of the resurrection, on various grounds. First they claim that "the human body undergoes an entire change every ten years at most, and in consequence of these changes a person having lived seventy years has had ten new bodies;" and they ask which of these bodies will rise again, or will they all rise again and constitute one resurrected body?" and then sneeringly point to "the monstrosity," which they picture as rising from the dead as a man. Another form of the objection is that our bodies being laid in the grave decay and return to original elements, and these elements enter into the composition of plants, forming food for animals or other generations of men, and thus constituting bodies of animals and other men through successive generations, and then they picture the confusion they suppose would result from each individual man claiming his own body in the resurrection. To the first of these claims I would simply reply, that whatever change is going on in the human body it must be very gradual, and the waste, or dead matter passing off at any instant of time very small, and as any part is not equal to the whole, and as the entire change of all the particles does not take place at any one period of the human life, until the moment of the separation of body and spirit, there is only one body for one person, though he lives a thousand years, because that body retains its identity through life, and the particles of dead matter that pass away are not a body proper when they pass off, nor do they ever unite again in that relation, as a whole, while the body of which they once formed a part is entire. Again, if a man receives a new body every ten years, what is it that grows old? Surely the immortal spirit is not old at seventy years of age! Yet something grows old, but ten years is not old—and if the body is renewed every ten years its youth and vigor would be renewed, and man could never die from old age.

To the second form of the objection we reply, the resurrection is not the work of man but of God. Man will have no more to do to hunt up the particles or portions that once formed his body, than Adam had in the creation of his body, the same Power that created the body has pledged himself to restore it, and it seems inconsistent for men who teach that God "created all things out of nothing" to doubt his power to restore to being those bodies that he created when they have decayed and gone to their original elements, seeing those elements are still in existence. And while there are difficulties that loom up before the mind of the creature, as impossibilities, it is folly supreme for us to undertake to measure Infinite power, and set bounds to the possibilities of the Almighty.

We may talk loudly of reason, and treat every thing with contempt that does not accord with our notions of reason, but every Bible believer knows that it is written, "The wisdom of the world is foolishness with God."—1 Cor. 3:19. Again, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent."—1 Cor. 1:19. Will some of these wisecracks who doubt the power of God to raise the dead, and yet profess to believe in him, tell us how Jesus fed the five thousand people with five loaves and two small fishes, and after the multitude had eaten and were filled, the fragments left amounted to twelve baskets full? John 6:1-13. Will they say it was not done, simply because finite reason can not comprehend it? "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"—Acts 26:8. He has pledged his word to do it, if that word has any meaning, and "He hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him (Christ) from the dead." "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead."—1 Cor. 15:21. "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John 11:25. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all who are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they who have done good, in the resurrection of the just; and they who have done evil, in the resurrection of the unjust."—John 5:28, 29.

"But this I confess unto thee that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."—Acts 24:14, 15. Thus we find the scriptures plainly teach the resurrection of the dead, not a redemption of the Spirit merely, but of the whole man, and we may safely leave the seeming impossibilities in the hands of him who has promised. "He who created all things by the word of his power," has perfect control of all the elements, nothing is beyond the reach of his omniscient eye; and if the winds and the waves on the tempestuous sea of Galilee obeyed his voice while he was not yet glorified, and ere he had conquered death, shall not all the elements be subjected to his command, who could say, "All power is given unto me both in heaven and on earth," "Whom God hath exalted and given a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus everything should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth?" Surely his power is equal to his purpose, and his purpose is that that "Death shall be swallowed in victory."—1 Cor. 15:56. "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we [who live] shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15:52, 53. But incontrovertible as the testimony of the Bible is upon this, and every other part of God's eternal purpose, it is not the only witness he has given. The Book of Mormon, bears testimony to the same truth, as follows: "O how great the goodness of our God, who prepareth a way for our escape from the grasp of this awful monster; yea, that monster, death and hell, which I call the death of the body, and also the death of the spirit. And because of the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel, this death of which I have spoken, which is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead; which death is the grave. And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead, which spiritual death is hell; wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits, and the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the bodies, and the spirits of all men will be restored one to the other; and it is by the power of the Holy One of Israel."—Book of Mormon p. 71. "Behold he created Adam; and by Adam came the fall of man. And because of the fall of man came Jesus Christ, even the Father and the Son; and because of Jesus Christ came the redemption of man. And because of the redemption of man, which came by Jesus Christ, they are brought back into the presence of the Lord: yea this is wherein all men are redeemed, because the death of Christ bringeth to pass the resurrection, which bringeth to pass a redemption from an endless sleep, from which sleep all men shall be awoke by the power of God, when the trump shall sound; and they shall come forth, both small and great, and all shall stand before his bar, being redeemed and loosed from this eternal band of death, which death is the temporal death."—Book of Mormon p. 498. "Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death; the spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time; and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; and there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost, but all things shall be restored to its perfect frame as it is now, or in the body, and shall be brought and arranged before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good, or whether they be evil.

"Now behold I have spoken unto you concerning the death of the mortal body. I say unto you, this mortal body is raised to an immortal body; that is from death; even from the first death, unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption."—Book of Mormon pages 235, 236.

From the foregoing we can see plainly the justice of God. That as man has sinned in the body, and is determined to remain in sin, so he must be rewarded in the body, and receive the reward according to his works. On the other hand, if he forsakes his sin and continues in righteousness during the mortal life of the body, he shall receive, in the body, raised to immortality, the fruit of righteousness, which is celestial glory.

We now quote from the Doctrine and Covenants which God has given as a third witness for the establishment of His truth. "But, behold verily I say unto you, before the earth shall pass away, Michael, mine Arch angel shall sound his trumpet, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth, yea even all; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father."—D. C. p. 117. "And truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten, his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men."—D. C. p. 133. Thus we have seen from the testimony of the three records, that God has decreed the resurrection of all men, both the holy and the unholy, and that resurrection consists of the reunion of body and spirit. And inasmuch as he has resurrected Jesus Christ as a surety for the resurrection of all men, he has given proof of his power to accomplish all that he has promised; and his believing children look forward in full faith in the accomplishment of his glorious promise, and wait with earnest expectation for its complete realization.

From certain passages which we have quoted from these three records, we have seen there is more than one resurrection, and a great difference in the nature of those resurrections. Paul foreshadows this truth when he says, "But every man in his own order; Christ, the first fruits; afterward they that are Christs at his coming. Afterward cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father."—1 Cor. 15: 23: 24.

Having proven from the Scriptures that all men, good and bad, must rise from the dead, and be judged according to their works, let us now examine the order of the resurrection, or resurrections, for the Scriptures plainly teach two resurrections, different as to their nature; and different as to the times in which they shall take place. We will first consider the difference in their nature. The angel told Daniel, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."—Dan. 12: 2. Christ distinguishes these resurrections thus: "They who have done good in the resurrection of the just—They who have done evil in the resurrection of the unjust."—John 5: 29. Or as the common version reads, "They that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Solomon says: "The wicked is driven away in his wickedness, but the righteous hath hope in his death."—Prov. 14: 32. Isaiah says: "Say ye to the righteous that it is well with them; for they shall eat the fruit of their doings. Woe unto the wicked! for they shall perish; for the reward of their hands shall be upon them."—Isa. 3: 10, 11. The prophet Jacob, speaking to the wicked, says, "Know ye not that if ye will do these things, that the power of the redemption and the resurrection which is in Christ, will bring you to stand with shame and awful guilt before the bar of God?"—B. M. p. 128. Alma shows that the righteous "are raised to dwell at the right hand of God, in a state of never ending happiness."—B. M. p. 281. Nephi says:—"If they endure unto the end, they shall be lifted up at the last day, and shall be saved in the everlasting kingdom of God."—B. M. p. 26.

Abinadi says, "Even this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruption shall put on incorruption, and shall be brought to stand before the bar of God, to be judged of him according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil. If they be good to the resurrection of endless life and happiness, and if they be evil to the resurrection of endless damnation."—B. of M. p. 174. "And thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man his probation; that by his natural death, he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe, and they that believe not unto eternal damnation."—D. C. p. 118.

The foregoing is sufficiently plain to show the difference between the nature of the two resurrections, and also to show that our own lives determine which of these resurrections we must receive. We shall dwell more largely on the resurrection of the just in a future paper, and also point out the difference as to the times when these resurrections shall take place, and in the conclusion of this paper, I would call the attention of the reader to the fact that our destiny is, to a great extent, in our own hands. Our lives will determine whether we shall come forth in the resurrection to endless life and glory, or to shame and everlasting contempt; and in view of this fact what are all the pleasures of the world, its honors, its fame, its wealth, and greatness, compared to the blessedness of the resurrection of the just? The honors, wealth and pleasures of the world, be they ever so sweet, will pass away, "perish with their using," and leave an empty, aching void in our hearts. We may heap up wealth, but it will canker our souls unless we use it to the glory of God. We may drink our fill of worldly pleasures but they will be more deadly than the fabled Upas tree, and will leave our lives a stained and blotched page of sin and shame, for God has decreed that "If we sow to the flesh we shall of the flesh reap corruption; but if we sow to the spirit we shall reap life eternal." Then may God "teach us so to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

O TEMPORA! O MORES!

THE false theories of modern philosophy taught in the schools of metaphysical abstraction, like cause and effect, antecedent and consequent, have been spinning, and weaving the destiny of the community for ages. One prominent result being the thrifty growth of religious strife, and the spontaneous erection of ecclesiastical parties, based in opinionism.

Through all the imperceptible shades and grades of life and station that intervene between greatness and littleness, from the sage to the idiot, from the monarch to the beggar, is a tangible demonstration that there exists an inseparable connection between present action and future condition, and as there is an inseparable connection between present action and future condition, therefore there was an inseparable connection between past action and present condition. As the sectarian institution originated, and was moved, influenced, and directed to past action by the potency of cause and effect; so is its present condition by the inseparable connection and influence of antecedents and consequents. Standing then amid the systems of modern divinity, built up by the profound (?) erudition and most critical (?) acumen possible for uninspired men to call into requisition, we stagger at the doubt, darkness and uncertainty growing out of the unhappy state of the predicted apostasy, involving all religious parties in a tempest of controversy, so much so that the inquiring mind might meet with extreme difficulty, unavoidably, in endeavoring to ascertain the "narrow way" from the numerous by-paths marked by the firm tread of "mystery Babylon's" invading hosts. Without unnecessary circumlocution, reader, we enquire,—"Has not the truth, in doctrine, faith and practice, been made to yield its sovereignty to the transmitted traditional theologies and fancies of men? The seed being sown in a soil admirably adapted, under the gloomy and withering sway of her who made all nations intoxicated, what an abundance of fruit does the present age exhibit! What crowning tendrils! But as the sweetest wine makes the sourest vinegar, so Christianity, when corrupted, makes its devotees degenerate, refuses to be guided by laws of honor; and by a coalition of opposite principles, presents the monstrous system of cruelty and benevolence, barbarism and civility, rapine and justice, fighting and devotion, revenge and generosity, which has harrassed the world for several centuries with crusades, holy wars, knight errantry and single combat. France, revolutionary France, can tell the tale! The marble slab which marked the resting place of the dead, draped with sober curtains of eternal annihilation, and nothing short of an indiscriminate obliteration of every vestige of Christianity could satiate her deadly antipathy against the Christian institution. We lay down this proposition: That every principle of the gospel of the kingdom has been distorted, changed, and perverted from the original meaning given them by Christ and his authorized representatives.

Investigating those principles as in Hebrews 6: 1, 2.—First that the current, long taught false theory that the spirit operates directly on the human heart in unbelief, producing faith without or independent of the testimony or word of God.

Second.—That the word is a dead letter, and has no power to produce faith until quickened by the Spirit.

Third.—That man is, by nature, totally depraved, and has no power to believe until a direct and quickening energy of the Spirit vitalizes his depraved heart.

Fourth.—That the Holy Spirit of promise comes, or flows, through the written word as its conducting medium.

The first presentation is that man can not believe the word till God bestows the especial ability to believe. In order to demonstrate by sound inductive reasoning, that man can believe, we proceed to lay down the first principle of all reasoning, premises self evident, by propounding the first radical question:

Has man the faculty, power, or ability of speech? If so, his auditors have the ability and faculties to hear what is spoken; and if the faculty to hear, he has the faculty, power and ability to believe what is heard; for why should man have the ability of speech and reason, if his auditors have not the ability to believe what is spoken? It is self-evident that man possesses the faculty, power and ability of speech, therefore his auditors have the faculties, power and ability to believe.

The third step is, That if man can believe man, he can also believe God. If man can believe the testimony of man, he can also believe the testimony of God. That if the word or speech of man can produce faith, the word or speech of God can produce faith. Is this not rational? Can any conclusion be more logically drawn?

Man is a sensitive being, a compound of body and spirit. He is filled with the organs of sense, producing sensations. The outward man, or corporeal organism possesses five corporeal or external senses. These form the avenues to five worlds:

There is a world of colors, cognizable to the optic nerve. A world of odors, cognizable to the olfactory nerve. A world of sound, cognizable to the auditory nerve. A world of facts, or of the tactile properties of bodies, cognizable by the nerves to touch. A world of savors cognizable to the gustatory nerve. He that is destitute of any one of these corporeal senses is debarred from the intricate laboratory of the realm of which it is the portal.

The inward man—the spiritual organism called the understanding—has five also: 1, "The eyes of your understanding."—Eph. 1: 18. 2 and 3, "Taste and see that the Lord is gracious." 4, "That they might feel after the Lord."—Acts 17: 27. 5, "Because thou hast heard, oh! my soul, the sound of the trumpet."—Jer. 4: 57. "I heard the voice of harpers, harping with their harps."

All the faculties have their relation, and use. Objects are adapted to all,—sweet odors for the olfactory; delightful, palatable fruits for the gustatory; sylph-like tones, producing an agreeable progression of chords for the auditory; light moving in straight lines, for the optic.

But faith is the evidence of things not seen. The faith of the gospel is not the evidence about man, the soul of man, or the spirit of man; but about "things not seen." Do you affirm that the soul or spirit of man is not seen? If they are "not seen," then they are "eternal." Paul says, "Things seen are temporal, things unseen are eternal."

Question, how is man led to possess this faith? Answer, By hearing the language of the Holy Spirit, giving "the evidence of things not seen." What is the language of the divine agent? The word of God spoken by the Holy Spirit of God,—"As it is written, they shall all be taught of God." Therefore we are taught by the Holy Spirit; we are educated in the literature of "the faith." How are we taught of God? By hearing those whom he sends, by whom he speaks. In ancient times God spake to the fathers by his prophets, in these last days hath spoken unto us the apostles of that age, by his son.—Heb. 1. Now hear the testimony of "his Son;"—Verily, verily, I say unto you; he that receives or hears whomsoever I send, hears me; and he that receives me, hears him that sent me. Hence, to be taught of the Father and the Son, we must hear and be taught by those whom they send.

How is a man sent in the name of Jesus Christ? By receiving the direction of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, which is sent in his name. Hear his testimony,—"But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name." . . . John 14: 26. All those not sent by direct inspiration of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, are not sent in the name of Jesus Christ, but have come in their own name, as Jesus testifies: "If a man come in his own name, him you will receive; he seeketh his own glory," etc.

Christendom in this light is without a New Testament ministry or commission; therefore, let us place the Apostle Paul on the witness stand for a few moments. He will give us definite answers. Bro. Paul, we all have confidence in your competency to answer questions correctly; will you be so kind as to inform us whether, in your day, God converted with, or without means?

Paul.—"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes."—Rom. 1: 16.

Modern Teacher.—"But have you not known many persons converted and saved, by the immediate and personal operation of the Spirit without the gospel, or outward means?"

Paul.—"It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe."

Modern Teacher.—"I hope you will be a little more definite, if you please.—Have you not known persons receive faith by the direct operation of the Spirit on the heart, without the word of God?"

Paul.—"So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

Modern Teacher.—"I will try to be still more definite in propounding my questions. Have you not, in your travels in heathen lands, met with faithful praying Christians who never saw a sent preacher, or heard the word?"

Paul.—"How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed, and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?"

Modern Teacher.—"Why, Paul! you astonish me. Many, very many grave, philosophic sectaries, in connection with myself, have been teaching sinners of this generation to strive and pray for faith."

Paul.—"He that comes to God, must believe that He is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. And now, you Modern Teachers, hear what Bro. James says to your faithless sinner:—"Let him ask in faith, nothing wavering," (not at all irresolute like the waves of the sea, driven and tossed)—for of such he says, "let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." Now, friendly reader, you may set this down as torn into logical ruins by reason and the Bible.

In the analysis of the second proposition we shall try to elicit truth by comparison of claims:—"That the word of God is a dead letter, and has no power to produce faith." This is a miserable subterfuge, supported by those who are laboring under the influences of the long, dark night of superstition, it is anti-scriptural, illogical, and incompatible with the sentiments and genius of the Christian institution, as will be shown. First: "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed, (now follow the true philosophy of conversion), lest at any time they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears, and should understand with their hearts, and should be converted, and I should heal them."—Jesus in Matt. 13: 15.

Luke says,—"And I should forgive them." Baptism is essential to bring about this "healing," or "remission," for "John did baptize in the wilderness of Judea, . . . the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."—Mark 1: 4. So, instead of faith being the consequent of regeneration, and a principle implanted in the human heart independent of the word of God, 'tis just the reverse. Reader, who is it that's "turning things upside down?" "Lest they should see with their eyes, understand with their heart," and, as a result, be converted." But these individuals have "conversion" first, theoretically; confusion and perversion, practically, latterly.

Lest they should hear, see, and understand. What? a dead letter! Nay, verily. "Seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth, through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, . . . being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible by the word of God, (which is inoperative, nullity, dead letter)? Nay, but that liveth and abideth forever." "For all flesh is as grass, the glory of man is as the flower of grass, (very transient, fleeting), but the word of the Lord endureth and abideth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."—1 Peter 1:22-25.

Jesus represents this gospel or the word of God, as seed, with which is blended a vitalizing power, denominated by Paul as follows:—For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.—1 Thess. 1:5. And the "word" is compared to "seed," which in the Savior's time instead of being dead was as vital as a grain of "mustard seed" which, "when grown" is the largest, is susceptible of progressive development to such an extent that Luke records, in Acts, that the "word of God" "grew," "increased,"—a little leaven leavens the whole mass.

But is it a Bible truth that God bestows the especial ability to believe, independent of testimony. Is it in unison with his mode of procedure in the past? Can it be harmonized with God who is "no respecter of persons?" What is the inevitable sequence of this teaching? "God is no respecter of persons," therefore is impartial. If his benevolence leads him to bestow the especial ability upon one, independent of the testimony, his universal benevolence would lead him to so bestow on every individual of Adam's race. And as the same parties teach "justification by faith," or that "salvation is dependent on faith alone," we have, therefore, according to the apostle's declaration, a universal salvation. God, therefore, either desires to save men, or he does not. If he so desires, he will bestow the especial ability to be saved, and if any of the human race are damned, that party is not responsible, but God alone, as he will not, by miraculous interposition, enable them to believe unto salvation.

I object to this monstrous dogma at once, for it strikes down God's system of salvation, and makes God the author of sin, making no distinction between vice and virtue, righteousness and unrighteousness; for if the sinner can not believe until God grants the God-send, his "standing all the day idle," in a sinful condition, is not his fault,—he can hurl the responsibility back to the throne of God!

Again, this theory uproots the plan of salvation, and makes the Holy Ghost the all efficient agent, whereas Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation."—Rom. 1:16.

Again: The Bible nowhere teaches that all are totally depraved. All men are more or less depraved and "given over to hardness of heart and reprobacy of mind, that they might believe a lie and be damned;" but some are certainly worse than others, which could not be true if all men are alike totally depraved. One who is totally depraved can get no worse; for his Satanic majesty is only totally depraved. Paul says "wicked men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Hence this dogma, (which involves the idea of a "personal (?) application,") is as false as it is unreasonable and unscriptural. It impeaches the Divine Justice. For if God sends his Spirit to make a "personal (?) application" of the benefits of redemption to some, while he withholds it from others, how can his justice be vindicated in the condemnation of those who never had the ability to come to Christ, and had no "personal (?) application" made to them? Jesus says, "Go ye into all the world, preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned; and these signs shall follow" the believer. Mark, chapter, 16. But these modern teachers say that signs, or the "personal (?) application," which is a sign, go before—precede faith—and are necessary to produce faith. In the name of reason, why did not the Savior gratify these whims and say,—Go ye into all the world and work miracles, he that believeth (that it is a miracle) and is baptized by sprinkling, pouring, dyeing, tinging, staining or not at all, shall be—no, is already saved? For if the "personal (?) application" of the Holy Spirit, in the light of orthodoxy, is not a miracle, then what term in the ecclesiastical nomenclature of christendom will define its meaning?

Now I have never, in all the good book, read where God converted men "without means." When God desired to convert the first Gentile, he employed "outward means;" for he sent an angel, not to tell what he must do to be saved, but to tell where and by whom he could get that information.—"Send to Joppa, for Simon Peter, and he shall tell thee these words whereby thee and thy house shall be saved." God could have converted Cornelius by a miracle, but he did not do it. He could have authorized the angel to have taught him his duty, but he did not do it. He had not commissioned angels, but men, to preach the gospel. But Peter the apostle must be sent for. He had "the keys of the kingdom of heaven." This ambassador of heaven's eternal throne, by the authority committed to him, having unlocked the many-bolted door, to his own nation on Pentecost day, he hastened to the Centurion's house and gives scope to the overflowing of his enraptured soul in these words: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that worketh righteousness is accepted with him." And Paul says: "The righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel."—Rom. 1:16. Therefore man's acceptance with God is suspended on works of "righteousness," which are made manifest only in the gospel, the outward means which God has ordained from the foundation of the world.

Again: When the Lord designed to make an apostle of him who by his own confession was the "chief of sinners," and appeared to him "in the way," he did not tell him what he must do to obtain remission of sins, but he sent him into the city of Damascus to hear the saving word from the mouth of his commissioned servant, Ananias.

Again: When he would introduce the gospel into Ethiopia, by the conversion of the eunuch, who was the high treasurer of the kingdom under queen Candace, he did not work without "outward means," but sent Philip to "preach Jesus" to him. And the apostle Paul was commissioned to "go to the Gentiles, to open their eyes, and turn them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to God." In order to accomplish this, hear him to one of his congregations: "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I have preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain."—1 Cor. 1:2. Peter was also one of those whose special business was to lead men to Christ; and in order to merit the divine favor and approval, and to successfully lead men to Christ, he had to teach them. Hence, "Go teach all nations," &c. And that which he taught was commendable to reason. Hear his testimony: "Men and brethren; you know that a good while ago God made choice among us that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel and believe."—Acts 15:7.

You will readily perceive that the first preachers of the gospel, after Christ, formulated no creed. 'Tis the "gospel that is the power of God unto salvation;" "Glad tidings of great joy to all people."

In the investigation of the fourth proposition let us not lose sight of the infallible standard, the word of God, "sharper than any two edged sword," "that lives and abides forever," and "shall not pass away." The proposition is, that the Holy Ghost—the Comforter—the Spirit of God, comes through the written word as its conducting medium. Now gentle reader, set this down as demonstrably false, and anti-scriptural; for if the Holy Spirit, whose office and mission into the world is to "reprove the world of sin," to guide into all truth," comes through the word as its conducting medium, then the senseless, meaningless platitudes of apostate christendom would never have torn the great gap in the range of religious thought and action as has characterized the past. The stupendous wall of "orthodoxy," which is ostensibly intended to enlighten and save, would have in reality grown up interlaced, without any barriers, "unto an holy temple in the Lord," with all the race as trophies.

Further; if the Spirit comes through the word as its conducting medium and its mission is to "reprove the world of sin" and guide into all truth, then why wasn't Col. Ingersol directed, "guided" to acknowledge the divinity of the Bible, ("the medium"), and the genuineness of the Christian institution, when he read and studied that medium? If it was, and is, to reprove the world of sin, why did it lead Mr. Ingersol to deny the existence of sin? This simple presentation leaves Sectarianism stranded in the fogs of error, as regards this theory.

Now, Paul, let us ask you a very profound question,—How is the Spirit (the Comforter) received? Does it flow through the written word as its conducting medium? Paul:—Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, (How, Paul?) by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through—the written word? nay; "through Jesus Christ."—Titus 3: 5, 6. Brother Peter you will confirm this testimony, for our Savior says, the concurrent testimony of two or three is credible. Yes,—"Repent * * * and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."—Acts 3: 19. Why, Peter! How did you say we received the Holy Ghost?—"Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven."—1 Peter 1: 12. Now, Paul, when God sends the Holy Ghost into our hearts, does it inspire us to gather around an "anxious seat," and prate like the hoarse-screaming voices of the four hundred false prophets of Baal, and exhibit religious confusion? Paul:—"God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of Saints."—1 Cor. 14: 33.

As there is only "one Spirit," and its fruits and operations are "peace" and "unity," we therefore question the origin of that influence which tends to distraction. As before remarked, the office of this advocate of Messiah's cause, is to "guide into all truth;" takes of the things of the Father and show them unto those who obey God, is "the spirit of prophecy," "the testimony of Jesus," establishing beautiful paths of wisdom strewn with lilies of celestial intelligence between the abode of mortals and the "heavenly Jerusalem." 'Tis the testimony of he who passed through and beyond the resurrection, teaching of the glorious possibilities of "the world to come." Hence, Jesus the great "Advocate" between the Monarch that saves or condemns and the party to be saved or condemned, pleads and "makes intercession for us," and says: "He that doeth the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine." If this promise is verified on the conditions specified, the evidence of its veritableness and divinity is experimentally furnished. "Ask, and ye shall receive." Yielding obedience to the "will," results in realizing the accompanying promises. If promises like these conditional ones are not fulfilled, they carry along with them the elements of their own condemnation, The whole course of divine providence would testify against them, and give them their false character. No impostor would thus jeopardize his veracity, nor would such pretensions ever have occurred to the mind of one whose object was to impose. Hence, if the system of doctrine and the precepts of the Latter Day Saints are false, it can, on these principals of coming, hearing, and doing, be demonstrated. The system may well thus commit itself, because its Author is both able and willing to redeem the pledge. His honor is concerned in making it good. The fulfillment of the promises testify to its divinity. This, then, is not an impression of enlarged imaginative powers, or overweening enthusiasm. 'Tis a sober, convincing argument, and thousands now are a living "cloud of witnesses" to the light and truth. This, then, is self-evident; and it would be very improbable for the subtleties or clamors of false philosophy to diminish the force and power of this inward conviction.

The unlettered follower of Christ, excluded from the ever-onward march of modern literature, has evidence within himself of God's truth, which all the fine-spun theories reeled off the wheel of sophistry in the circles of figure-ology, can not invalidate. "Because ye are sons, God has sent the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." "His spirit bears witness with our spirits that we are the sons of God." The positive conviction of "the witness of the Spirit" in the confirmation of a believer, can not be philosophically overthrown, (his position is invincibly established beyond the power of philosophical conquest,) by the mere negative or non-conviction of the unbeliever. Negation, in the law of evidence, is no evidence. A million negatives can not overthrow one positive. If the believer "has the witness in himself," his testimony is not falsified by the mere negative conviction of the unbeliever who has not the witness. The testimony of one credible witness who possesses the internal, the self-evidencing power, would overturn the negatives of half the world.

There is another remark which will present this internal evidence more clearly in the light of rational conviction, relating to the nature of the evidence which gives rise to all those convictions of the mind which flow from experience. It is the perfection of reasoning when the mind, by due process of argument, unavoidably reaches the conclusion to which the argument would conduct it. By the universal consent of mankind, there are intuitive and instinctive principles of belief that are not the result of any process of induction, because they are self-evident. They are too plain to need to be established by any such process. The most conclusive argument does nothing more than unite propositions which are of a questionable verity, with those which are unquestionable, and thus establish the unknown by logically identifying it with the known. There is also a difference between reasoning and experience. No necessity exists for reason, where we have the evidence of experience. Also a difference exists between coming to a logical conclusion, and making a practical experiment. You may demonstrate the chemical properties of an acid or alkali, and thus come to a scientific and just conclusion of their nature; and you may taste them, and thus with equal certainty ascertain their properties by experience. There is also the "evidence of sense," as well as of reason. When you see the light of the sun, you do not require any other proof that it is light. When you hear sound, you need no other proof that it is "sound." When you touch a pillar of marble, you know it is cold and hard, because it feels so. These subjects do not admit of any other than "the evidences of the senses." The nature of evidence is adapted to its subject. This remark and these illustrations of it, present the thought I wish to convey in relation to those convictions of the mind which flow from experience. As before remarked; the "understanding," or spiritual organism, blended with the physical, has its senses as well as the corporeal. It has a sense of beauty and deformity; of right and wrong. Particular classes of men have a quicker and keener sense and apprehension than others. A poet possesses keen and intuitive perception of the beauty of poetry; a musician, of the harmonies of sound; an architect, of the beautiful proportions of edifices; an artist, of the beauties of painting. No individual judges of subjects of this class by those laws of reasoning by which his conclusions are formed of the agreements of different parts of a mathematical theorem, or logical syllogisms; because there are other laws of his nature besides his reasoning faculties which are now necessarily consulted. Now we are bold to affirm that the spiritual perception of a good man, by which he judges of the truthfulness of this latter day message, is as infallible as the perception of the poet, musician, or artist. He who has experienced the fulfillment of "the promise," felt its "power," "tasted" its goodness and graciousness, possesses the internal sense and evidence of its reality and truth, and has the inward spiritual conviction. When the beams of truth reflect upon his mind and pathway, he knows such to be truth. When the gentle Shepherd's voice falls upon his ear, he asks for no other evidence that it is His voice. There is no other to whose accents his mind so vibrates. 'Tis "the voice of the Good Shepherd, leading his flock in verdant "pastures" and by the "still waters." "My sheep hear my voice, and follow me. A stranger they will not follow, for they know not the voice of strangers."

The conclusion then is quite logical: He that hears not sound, knows not music; for sounds compose music.

Now, gentle reader, in this age of religious extravagance, who are "witnesses" for Christ? Who have "the testimony of Jesus?" In the foregoing we have sought to impress you with the nature of evidence, and your susceptibilities; also what the great "law of life" appealed to, and what rank and position, a faithful acceptance would lead you to occupy, as regards the "knowledge," to be obtained as a result of the operation of that "Comforter" which conducts into all truth. Paul says: "We have not received of the spirit of the world, but the Spirit of God." What for, Paul? "That we might know the things given to us of God."

Since that fatal period when the disciples of Christ rejected the tender guidance of Him who descended in the interest of the race, and indulged a self-confident spirit, who knows anything about the things of God? Who knows that the Bible is a divine revelation? Who knows that Jesus is the Christ? Who knows that death does not end all? Who knows that the Redeemer liveth? Who but Paul knows that there is a crown laid up for him? "This is eternal life"—What is?—"to know thee the true God, and Jesus Christ." Our faith in the foregoing may be very strong, suspended on historical credibility; but please note a distinction between the terms "faith" and "knowledge." "He that cometh to me and heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them," is compared to a wise disciple who laid the foundation upon a rock. This, connected with the Savior's statement that "he that doeth his will shall know," clearly identifies "the rock" with the "knowledge" obtained by revelation, and that hearing—or believing—"these sayings of mine," leads man to do "the will," to obedience; and obedience leads to knowledge."

Let us then contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints;" for it has been supplanted, in all the divine departments of the kingdom of God, by a diversity of adverse forms of church organization, separating, engendering strife, discord, emulation, etc., has been the result of attempting to explore the dark caverns of the past for the sacred gems of uncorrupted Christianity independent of the light of present revelation; independent of the tremulous lustre of the radiant "morning star;" and the sum total is, 1, a diversity of creeds; 2, a diversity of sects; 3, a "mystery Babylon;" 4, inter-ecclesiastical war; 5, the non-conversion of the world.

Can any one believe that the kingdom of heaven, the divine economy, the scheme of infinite redemption, devised by supreme intelligence, organized with all its officers, authorities, powers and blessings, by the wisdom of the eternal Spirit, is left to be shaped and patterned by the thousand varying fancies of men, subject to all the modifications of man's ever-fluctuating and capricious fancy! Who will join issue!

Paul was an apostle "by the will of God;" the apostles of sectarianism are by the will of man. Vox populi, vox dei, never originated in the Church of Christ.

Where did it originate? "All power and authority in heaven and in earth is given to me."—Jesus in Matt., chapter 28. When was Jesus divested of this power.

In Paul's time the Saints were "led by the Spirit of God," and he desired for them that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."—Eph. 1: 17.

Modern Teacher:—"Why, Paul; I have been acusing brother Scott, all along of being a Mormon, and now you agree with him in ever particular! Why, Paul; indeed, if you were not the 'Apostle Paul,' I should say you were a Mormon, too!"

Conference Minutes.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The above conference convened at Dennisport, Massachusetts, January 28th. E. C. Briggs was chosen president, Thomas Whiting and F. M. Sheehy clerks. Elders E. C. Briggs, M. H. Bond, N. W. Eldridge, W. Bearse, G. S. Lenell, T. Whiting, F. M. Sheehy, John Smith, J. B. Pearse, reported in person; J. Woodward, G. S. Zerrington, N. R. Nickerson, C. E. Brown, F. A. Potter, A. N. Hoxie, by letter. Priests J. H. Long, A. O. Tripp, H. Doane, I. Ames, in person; F. L. Sears by letter. Teachers F. Joy in person; W. B. Leland and R. Bullard by letter. Deacons T. Boyd, A. B. Peirce and A. Chase in person; by proxy Elder E. O. Toombs and priest T. Shaw. Preaching in the evening by F. M. Sheehy and E. C. Briggs; after which John Smith reported as district treasurer and Bishop's agent. Report referred to the auditors. Branch reports was received from Fall River, New Bedford, Boston, Brockton, Cranston, North Plymouth, Dennisport, Plainville, Little Compton, Providence. Prayer meeting on Sunday morning at half past eight. Preaching in the forenoon by Elder John Smith; in the afternoon by Elder M. H. Bond, and in the evening by Elder F. M. Sheehy. Business resumed on Monday morning. The following resolutions were then adopted:—Whereas, Many unwise ordinations have been made in this district in the past; therefore, be it resolved that no ordinations be allowed in the district without the consent of district conference or the president of the mission. Resolved that every official in the district who does not magnify his calling and thus show himself "approved," and accounted worthy to "stand" in his office, shall after this resolution passes be required to surrender his license to the president of the mission. Resolution number three was postponed indefinitely. The matter of abolishing the office of district president was laid on the table until next conference. The time and place of next conference was left for the president of the mission to appoint. E. C. Briggs, W. H. Kelley, and G. T. Griffiths were sustained in the eastern mission. The general church authorities were sustained in righteousness. The auditing committee reported having examined the documents referred to them and found them correct. The committee on branch reports recommended the returning of those reports that are incorrect to the branches for correction. John Smith was sustained as district president and Thomas Whiting clerk.

ST. LOUIS.

This district conference convened in the Saints' Hall, No. 1447, North Broadway, St. Louis Missouri, on Saturday afternoon, January 7th. Wm. Jaques, president; N. N. Cooke, clerk. Branch officers will please be prompt and report without fail.

JAMES G. SCOTT, Pres. Dist.

BORN.

WILSON.—In Clinton, Iowa, 28th January, 1888, a daughter, to Sr. Emma and Bro. Pearl Wilson. Blessed February 5th, by Elder J. S. Roth, and named Elva May.

DIED.

STEVENSON.—At his home near Adrian, Hancock county, Illinois, Thomas Stevenson. He was born at Sulley, Derbyshire, England, on June 11th, 1809; was baptized at Ravenstone, Leicestershire, England, April 5th, 1843; came to America in 1846, landing at New Orleans on the 25th of November, thence to Hancock county, Illinois, February, 1847. During the dark days of the church he united with the Christian Church, on condition that they receive him on his Latte Day Saint baptism—he still maintaining his faith in the gospel. After the Reorganization of the church he again cast his lot with the people of his choice, and remained faithful to the end of his life, which occurred in peace and almost painless, January 31st, 1888; he being 78 years, 7 months and 20 days of age. It seems that he was warned of his approaching death, as but a short time before his last illness he went to Nauvoo and made arrangements with the undertaker for a coffin, and selected the things necessary for his burial. The funeral services were held at Rock Creek Chapel, Elder James McKiernan in charge. The remains were followed to their last resting place by a long procession of mourning relatives and friends, who attested the universal respect and high esteem in which he was held. The casket was deposited at the Thornbur Cemetery, there to await the summons when "the dead in Christ shall rise first."

LADNER.—Near Buffalo, Scott county, Iowa, November 22d, 1887, Sr. Eliza Ladner, beloved wife of Bro. E. Ladner, aged 65 years, 5 months and 6 days. She was a devoted companion, a most affectionate mother, a kind neighbor, and a very steadfast and devoted child of God. Elder W. T. Maitland, of Clinton, Iowa, preached the funeral sermon to a packed congregation of relatives, friends and neighbors from Matt. 16: 25-27. By her request, on the Saturday previous to her death, friends sang "Mansions are prepared above," "Nearer, my God, to thee," and she joined, feebly, in singing the chorus. She sleeps—sweetly sleeps—in Jesus. [By the mislaying of documents sent us over two months ago by Elder Maitland, this obituary has been delayed till now.—Ed.]

SYLVESTER.—Died of pulmonary disease on September 9th, 1887, at the home of her parents in Omaha, Nebraska, one of the sweet singers of Israel, sister Blanche Sylvester. Her sickness was of but a few months' duration, about nine weeks of which she was confined to her bed, needing and receiving those tender ministrations which a mother's hand alone can bestow. Months before she was taken sick it was manifested to the writer by a very forcible dream that our beautiful songstress would soon be called from us to a more desirable home than earth can now supply, and he so warned her and her friends that all needful care might be taken in order to preserve her to us until the Master's loving voice should call her home. Her sweetly winning ways, her bird-like powers as a soloist and in the choir, her efficiency in Sunday School work, and her charming amiability of character were, with their combined force, such as won human hearts, and held them firmly with the golden chain—bondage of love's best powers. She has gone to join the angelic choir above. Born on March 14th, 1868, she was in the beautiful bloom of a sweetly budding womanhood when death commenced to disrobe her of her earthly charms, yet even he could but concentrate their powers to beautify the lovely spirit within. Her funeral sermon was preached on Sunday, September 12th, by Elder Mark H. Forecutt in the Saints' Church, in Omaha, the church whose walls had often resonated with the echoes of her voice in peans of praise to Him at whose bidding she left us. Hers the gain; but ours the loss; for she has left a void that will not soon be filled. Her body was laid away by loving hands in Forest Lawn Cemetery. She sleeps in peace; we sleep and dream that soon we must follow.

HART.—At Bloomington, Bear Lake county, Idaho, January 10th, 1888, sister Ann, wife of Bro. John Hart, formerly of Council Bluffs, Iowa. Sr. Hart was well advanced in years and leaves her husband, and daughter Alice who is blind, to mourn her loss.

MILLARD.—At Cleveland, Iowa, January 23d, 1888, of acute inflammation of the kidneys, Mrs. Mary Millard, aged 30 years, 1 month and 13 days. Although she had been confined to her bed for six weeks, she died without a struggle, calm and gradually. She was baptized at New Tredegar, South Wales, by Elder James Bishop, several years ago; but for some cause was never active in the church. She emigrated to this country in May, 1885. She leaves a husband and relatives to mourn her death. Funeral services were conducted by Bro John R. Evans at the residence.

CAMPBELL.—At Woodville, Michigan, January 3d, 1888, Mr. D. I. Campbell, husband of Jennie, daughter of Sr. Josephine Poling, of Aurora, Illinois. He leaves a wife and an infant daughter to mourn his death.

NELSON.—At his home in Arbela, Scotland county, Missouri, October 14th, 1887, Lorenzo Dow Nelson, aged 76 years, 5 months and 26 days. He was born in Rowan county, North Carolina, April 17th, 1811. Bro. Nelson served through the Black Hawk war. He leaves a wife and one child, and many other friends to mourn his death.

TUTTLE.—At Seligman, Missouri, December 30th, 1887, sister M. J. Tuttle, aged sixty-eight years. She has belonged to the church about thirty-five years, and died in full faith, saying she was ready and willing to depart, and that her way was clear.

BROWN.—Died January 30th, at New Albany, Indiana, Green Brown, of typhoid fever. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his death. He was strong in the faith, for he said just before he died that there was nothing that pained him from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. He talked to the last, and was in his right mind. He was born in Clark county, Indiana, June 13th, 1843; was baptized May 22d, 1870, by W. W. Blair, and was a member in the Eden branch, in good standing. Funeral services were conducted by Elders James G. and M. R. Scott.

CHURCH SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

All Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, who have not yet sent in their names for the purpose of being placed in quorums are again notified that the order of the General Conference has been that none shall be so enrolled except by their own request. There are vacancies in the five quorums of Elders and the one quorum of Priests that are organized, and if enough are present at the coming General Conference to organize other quorums, it is probable that it will be done. Therefore all who desire to be thus enrolled are hereby requested to send or authorize the sending of their names at an early date.

H. A. STEBBINS, Church Sec'y.

HIGH PRIESTS' QUORUM.

The brethren of the quorum will please remember the rule that the quorum desires to hear from every one, either in person or by letter, at the annual meeting. Therefore please write in season and not delay till the last.

JOSEPH SMITH EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, March 3, 1888.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Feb. 12th.

Bro. Blair:—In Herald for February 11th is an article from the Richmond Democrat concerning the death and testimony of David Whitmer, is the following:

"The result of this vision was a proclamation setting forth the facts enumerated. The 'urim and thummim,' mentioned in the account of the vision were a pair of transparent stone spectacles.
Smith would put on the spectacles, when a few words of the text of the Book of Mormon would appear on the lenses. When these were correctly transcribed by Cowdery, who acted as his amanuensis, these words would disappear and others take their place. When one hundred and sixteen pages were completed, Smith entrusted them to Martin Harris, to take to his home with a view to convert his family to the new faith. They were placed at night in a bureau drawer and next morning were missing, having been stolen.
They were never found and never replaced, so that the Book of Mormon to-day is short that number of pages of the original matter. As a chastisement for his carelessness, the urim and thummim was taken from Smith. But by humbling himself, he again found favor with the Lord, and was presented with a strange oval-shaped, chocolate colored stone, about the size of an egg, but more flat, which it was promised should answer the same purpose. With this stone all the present book was translated. The prophet would place the stone in a hat, then put his face in the hat and read the words that appeared thereon. This stone is the only relic of the prophet's work in existence which is not in possession of Mr. Whitmer. It was confided to Oliver Cowdery and preserved by him until his death in 1852. After that event Phineas Young succeeded in getting it from Cowdery's widow and it is now among the sacred relics preserved at Salt Lake City."

Now there must be a mistake somewhere, for history informs us that about April or May, in 1828, Martin Harris took the manuscript home to his family, and they were lost, and Joseph lost the gift of translation for a time. We find on pages 34 and 35 Life of Joseph the Prophet, that the gift of translation was restored to Joseph, and that in April, 1829, he had a revelation to Oliver Cowdery, through the Urim and Thum-mim; also history informs us that through the Urim and Thummim several revelations were given, among them the revelation concerning John the beloved, (Doc. Cov. Sec. 6), and the revelation to Hyrum Smith, May 1829, (Doc.

Cov. Sec. 10). All this happened before any of the Whitmer's joined the church, for Hyrum Smith, David Whitmer and Peter Whitmer, were baptized the same day in June, 1829.

This article purports to come from David Whitmer, and it states that Joseph did not have the Urim and Thummim restored to him at all, but that in its stead a strange oval shaped chocolate colored stone, about the size of an egg was given him. For one I would like to know which is correct."

I would like that some one through the columns of the Herald would give us the straight of this matter, also if there is any truth in the statement. Is that strange, oval shaped, chocolate colored stone in Salt Lake City?

R. MAY.

Replying to the above we have to say that, David Whitmer was not a competent witness in respect to the Urim and Thummim having been taken from Joseph the Seer, for he was not personally acquainted with the facts, and could have no knowledge of them except by hearsay, as he did not meet with Joseph the Seer till in June, 1829, whereas it was in June, 1828, —one year before—that the Urim and Thummim was taken because Joseph had suffered the one hundred and sixteen pages of the manuscript to be lost through the importunities and carelessness of Martin Harris.

Joseph the Seer, in his "History," informs us that the Urim and Thummim was restored to him, and that he not only translated with it, but that he also obtained many revelations through it. And Oliver Cowdery, who became Joseph's scribe to write the Book of Mormon
April 7th, 1829, about two months before David Whitmer first visited Joseph, states in his letters written to the Messenger and Advocate in 1834, as follows:

"Near the time of the setting of the sun, Sabbath evening, April 5th, 1829, my natural eyes, for the first time beheld this brother. He then resided in Harmony, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania. On Monday, the 6th, I assisted him in arranging some business of a temporal nature, and on Tuesday, the 7th, commenced to write the Book of Mormon. These were days never to be forgotten—to sit under the sound of a voice dictated by the inspiration of heaven, awakened the utmost gratitude of this bosom. Day after day I continued, uninterruptedly to write from his mouth, as he translated with the Urim and Thummim, or as the Nephites would have said,

'Interpreters,' the history, or record, called 'The Book of Mormon.'—Letters of Oliver Cowdery, page 2.

Joseph the Seer states in the Times and Seasons, March 1842, vol. 3, p. 707, in reply to a letter written him by John Wentworth, editor of the Chicago Democrat, as follows: "With the record [plates. Ed.], was found a curious instrument which the ancients called 'Urim and Thummim,' which consisted of two transparent stones set in the rim of a bow fastened to a breast-plate. Through the medium of the Urim and Thummim I translated the record by the gift and power of God."

Whoever will now turn to the Book of Mormon and read the following passages will learn clearly how the Lord provided "means" for the translation of the Book of Mormon: Mosiah 5:10, 11; 12:3; Book of Mormon 4:2, 8. These texts show what "means" God had prepared "for the interpretation" of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated.
The testimony of these texts and that of Joseph the Seer and Oliver Cowdery harmonize, therefore we endorse it instead of that which purports to be the testimony of David Whitmer.

David Whitmer, we repeat, was not a competent witness as to the "means" used by the Seer in translating the Book of Mormon. He did not meet Joseph the Seer until at least two months after Oliver Cowdery had been writing the Book of Mormon as the Seer translated it.
David Whitmer never wrote a line of the Book of Mormon; and there is no evidence at hand to prove that the Seer ever showed him the "means" by which he translated.
The purported testimony of David Whitmer as to the "means" by which the Book of Mormon was translated, is that of a man who had no direct hand in that translation, being neither translator, nor scribe, but simply a "witness" after its translation, while, on the other hand, the testimony of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery is that of men who were the immediate agents in the translation, the first being the translator, and the other the one who wrote it, word by word, as dictated by the translator. The testimony of Joseph and Oliver was given in the first years of the church, while these matters were fresh in the minds of these chief actors and the Saints; while that which purports to come from David Whitmer was given when he had become feeble with infirmities and multiplied years. One is the testimony of men who knew; the other is of one who did not personally know.

We can see no reason why Joseph and Oliver should say the translation was done by "means" of the Urim and Thummim—the "interpreters"—if in fact it was done by means of a "stone." In either case it would be miraculous, and nothing special to be gained by alleging that it was translated by the Urim and Thummim if it was not.

Whatever David Whitmer may or may not have said on this point, it should be remembered that he had little or nothing to do with the Church and its history since the spring of 1838—fifty long years—and it is not difficult, from this fact, to account for errors in memory and defects in judgment which have been painfully apparent of late. The fact that David Whitmer remained idle, comparatively, in ministerial matters, for about fifty years, should be accepted as clear proof that the Lord did not call him of late to set in order and correct either the history, the doctrine, the organization, or the government of the Church. And not having been called to that work, it is both vexatious, misleading, and dangerous to give heed to what purports to be his efforts in that direction.

It is unpleasant to reply to inquiries coming to us relative to what David Whitmer has said or done; but when pertinent, proper inquiries are made, we must lay aside our personal preferences and attend on the duties of a vigilant, faithful "watchman."

Rumor has it that the "stone" in question went into the hands of Phineas Young.

TOURGEE AND GIST ON MORMONISM, REVIEWED.

THE clipping below we take from the Willoughby, (Ohio) Independent of January 27th, 1888. It has the ring of honesty and fairness. The writer treats of important facts in regard to Sidney Rigdon, the Latter Day Saints, and the Book of Mormon. His personal knowledge of Mr. Rigdon and the Latter Day Saints during their residence at and near Kirtland give such character and strength to his statements as make them trustworthy and reliable. Thus it is, that in these late years the truth is coming to the forefront, rebuking falsehood and bigotry.

"The review of 'Button's Inn' by Prof. W. W. Gist, an extract from which appeared in your columns last week, is deserving of comment. The professor says 'Much of it is history.' 'It is well known that Sidney Rigdon was the real founder of the Mormon church. The author has given a true picture of Mormonism as it appeared in Kirtland, Ohio, fifty years ago.' Sidney Rigdon 'disappeared for a time and when he returned it was to be a leader in the Mormon church. The mass of the Saints were extremely ignorant,' &c., &c. Now let us see how 'much' of this is worthy of being called 'history.' Judge Tourgee in his book locates Kirtland forty miles from Cleveland, when in a straight line it is perhaps not half that distance, and only twenty-two miles by the usual somewhat circuitous traveled route. Jack Button, alias Abner Jackson, second cousin to Sidney Rigdon, a prominent character in the story, passed through Cleveland, hears of the 'New Jerusalem' in Kirtland, and with a friend resolves to visit it. The story of this visit, 'the Sabbath meeting in the temple, his seat by a green silk curtain, his almost miraculous conversion, his appointment as 12th apostle, the silken curtains of royal purple which enclosed the prophet Smith from the eyes of the audience, their being drawn aside by angel hands, of music by hidden performers'—all this with other accessories is very graphically told by the author, who as a novelist is privileged to 'give to airy nothing a local habitation and a name.' He describes also a curious cave located near the temple much visited, and between which and the temple some supposed there was a secret passage. All this will do for a novel, but it is very far from being history.

"The writer has been a resident of Kirtland village nearly fifty-four years; was here the year the temple was built; was present at its dedication and knew all the prominent men in the church at that time. There never was a 'silken curtain' in the temple. The curtains, such as were there, were of coarse, heavy canvas, painted white, and were raised and lowered like a theatre drop curtain by a person in plain sight of the audience. The nearest cave is several miles distant.

"Judge Tourgee further says (and this perhaps may be considered history) 'the first half of this century was a hot bed of new beliefs,' and then he goes on to enumerate the different sects that arose. He says: "Mormonism sprang up in central New York, and obtained its first foothold on the Western Reserve in the midst of a population of the highest average of intelligence to be found in the world, the most universal religiousness, the strictest morality, and the most fearless independence. Four-fifths of the people are of the purest New England stock, and from this people the primitive Mormon church drew almost its entire membership.' The followers of Smith were 'sober, industrious, intelligent and devoted.' In reply to Prof. Gist's statement that 'it is well known that Sidney Rigdon was the real founder of the Mormon Church,' will simply say that over a quarter of a million of so called Mormons and many others believe Joseph Smith to be the founder of their church. Sidney Rigdon joined the Mormons in the latter part of the year 1830, some time after the first edition of the Book of Mormon was printed. At the time he was an eminent Disciple minister and had a church and a large congregation in Mentor, about half a mile east of the Garfield mansion. For fourteen years previous he had been a licensed minister, during which time it is not recorded that he was ever charged with any immorality. We knew him personally, have heard him preach many times, and met him in society and by the family fireside, and from our own knowledge and that derived from other sources we believe him to have been an earnest, conscientious, religious enthusiast; and that when the Book of Mormon was first presented to him in Mentor by Parley P. Pratt, a Mormon Missionary, late in the year 1830, he was by virtue of his organization as a man and his peculiar religious nature, fixed and intensified by a remarkable religious experience, well fitted and prepared to believe in its divine authenticity, and accept Joseph Smith as a prophet of the Lord, commissioned by the Most High to usher in a new dispensation in these latter days. We have no desire to propagate or defend the religious views of the people known as Mormons, having less faith in them than Prof. Gist himself, only when we are writing history let us be sure of our facts, and above all let us not go to our prejudices for information and counsel."

KIRTLAND, JANUARY 24th, 1888.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

"BOTH sides will have a hearing before the Senate and Territorial Committee to-morrow on the Mormon question. To this committee was referred the memorial of the alleged Utah Constitutional Convention asking for admission into the Union. The committee has also before it the constitutional amendment of Senator Cullom for the wiping out of polygamy and other bills looking to legislation. The Mormons have engaged some of the most eminent legal men in the country to look after their interests. They seem to have no end of money for this purpose. There are lawyers enough to take care of dozens of cases, but they are hired with a view to their personal and political influence rather than their legal usefulness."—Chicago Tribune

If the above statement be true, the Utah leaders have great confidence in the Almighty Dollar, and make that the god in whom they trust to secure statehood, etc. In trusting to a host of well paid lawyers for the success of their scheme, they thereby acknowledge the source from whence they finally hope to win. Acts speak louder than mere words.

THE editor of the Expositor has this to say of the calumniators of the Saints, in the February issue of that excellent paper:

"Why, we have run the Rev. 'Spaulding manuscript,' of Hurlbut and Howe out of its hiding place, where it has been hid for nearly fifty years; we have published the illiterate vulgar, profane, obscene and infidel production of this pious Presbyterian divine, and it makes the retailers of the old lies of Howe and Hurlbut sore, and destroys their stock of lying evidence, and now they wish to invent another by trying to prove that this pious infidel minister wrote another 'manuscript found,' and that the one unearthed recently is not the one they meant all the while. Their old, persistent lie about Rigdon's stealing said manuscript and remodeling it into the 'Book of Mormon,' has been exploded and the authors unmasked to the utter contempt of all honest men, and leaves these pious divines without ammunition to load their guns to shoot paper wads at the Latter Day Saints, and hence the effort of Mr. Deming to supply the long felt and much needed dirt for these venerable dirt slingers.

"This 'charcoal' Deming, like all who have written before him, has fallen into the mistake of claiming that the 'Book of Mormon' was a history of the 'ten lost tribes of Israel,' and so the second 'manuscript found' of Rev. Spaulding, they say, was a purported history of the lost tribes of Israel. Now we will do as well by Deming as we once offered the Rev. (?) Dr. Roberts in the debate we had with him in Iowa on the subject. We will give Mr. Deming or any other person, 160 acres of good land if they will find a single sentence in the Book of Mormon which purports or pretends that said book is a history of the lost tribes of Israel or anything pertaining to their history. Unfortunately for the cause of Deming & Co., Mrs. Spaulding nor her daughter, Mrs. M. S. McKinstry, never told of ever giving Hurlbut but one manuscript, nor ever pretended that he got but the one; and we have proved time and again that one went into the possession of Howe, and that when Rice bought out Howe's office this identical manuscript went with the rest and has been under Rice's care and keeping since about 1840, until it was placed in the keeping of President Fairchild of Ohio, who furnished us the copy we have published.

The name 'Manuscript found' is the name given to Rev. Spaulding's manuscript by his widow and daughter, and by Howe and Hurlbut. And, as the manuscript had no name of its own, the publishers were justified, yes, in duty bound to give it the name it had always been known by, and that all the friends of the manuscript gave it. And it comes now with ill grace for them to charge the publishers with the forgery of the name 'Manuscript found,' which was placed on the published book. And the fact that on the wrapper which held the manuscript the words 'Manuscript Story—Conneaut Creek,'—and which name Fairchild says was evidently the handwriting of Mr. Rice of Honolulu, and not the author, and further, as the Spaulding family and friends have always called it 'Manuscript found,' it was no forgery for the publishers to prefix the name they all had given to the production. Consequently the claim put forth that Spaulding wrote another manuscript in regard to the lost tribes of Israel from which the Book of Mormon was made, rests in the addied brains of the opponents of the Book of Mormon. And another fact, patent to any person who ever read the Book of Mormon, there is not one word or sentence in the book claiming or pretending to be an account of the lost tribes of Israel. And here is where the whole subterfuge of the false witnesses is brought to light and exposed to every person who will read the book."

To the above we may add that it does not matter how many manuscripts Rev. Spaulding may have written, either after or before he wrote the "Manuscript Story." One thing is now established by the widow of Spaulding, Mrs. McKinstry, the witnesses whose names are signed to the "Manuscript Story" (including that of Doctor Hurlbut), also the testimony of Howe, Rice and Fairchild, and that is, that the said "Manuscript Story" is the genuine, verifiable work of said Rev. Solomon Spaulding. In this an all essential point is gained, for in that document we have Rev. Spaulding's powers and qualities exhibited so clearly and fully that we can easily measure him and size him up in respect to his natural abilities, his defects in scholarship, his morals, his religion, his ignorance of the antiquities of America, his irrational and flimsy theory in respect to the aborigines of America, all proving that he never possessed, and never could possess, the qualifications necessary to write the Book of Mormon, nor anything approaching it. He, in that manuscript, has furnished to all people the plain evidences of the manner of man he was. And judging him by what is there displayed, he had neither natural nor acquired wit, wisdom, skill, learning, morals, religion, nor archaeological knowledge sufficient to unite anything superior to his stupid, irreligious, immoral, and nonsensical "Manuscript Story." It was and is his last, best, and only effort in that line. He had no more ability to write the Book of Mormon than a gibbering penny-a-liner had to write the Principia of Sir Isaac Newton, or the Cosmos of Humboldt. We repeat, that it does not matter how many manuscripts Rev. Spaulding wrote; for the one he did write fixes his capabilities, religion, (if he had any), and his morals at a low-down standard, utterly and hopelessly beneath that required to design, plan, and execute a work like the Book of Mormon. But there is not a shadow of proof that he ever wrote save the one. It now will be in order for the Rev. "Mormon-eaters" to invent some other theory on which to wreck the Book of Mormon. We cheerfully await developments.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Thomas Burt wrote from Springville, Utah, sending remittance for church publications, and said:

"We all love the Herald, and I am of the opinion it is guided by the hand of the Lord. There are several persons here that promise to subscribe for the Herald this year, but have failed to come yet with the money. Bro. R. J. Anthony is with us, and the school trustees have given us the choice of four school-houses here, so Bro. Anthony will lecture to-night on the divinity of the Book of Mormon."

This is good reading all through. We are glad the Utah people take some interest in our publications, and very glad that those in authority among them now show some willingness to do by others as they wish others to do by them.

When Elders Briggs and McCord visited Brigham Young in 1863 as missionaries of the Reorganized Church, he told them they could not, with his consent, have any house in which to preach, and that he would write to the different parts of the territory and warn the people against them and their doctrine. The last twenty-five years has witnessed the fruit of his threat. Only God and the confiding Saints there, and those who have left there, can know the sorrow and shame and suffering that has followed his tyrannical system of priestcraft from the first. But the hand of the Almighty is lifting the covering from the despotic doings of Brigham Young, and disclosing his secret as well as his public transactions; and all the combined powers or wealth and priestly influence that has hitherto dominated the rank and file of the Utah Church can not prevent it. It may not come as speedily as could be wished, but come it will, and it will come to the confusion and merited condemnation of those at whose doors blame justly lies, whether living or dead.

Any society that is hindered by its leaders from seeking truth and light, will in time see and detest its bondage and hurl down the authors of its wrongs to the low level of the intentional evil-doer and the conscienceless oppressor.

If the Utah people will give hearing ears to the ministers of the Reorganized Church, as we hope they yet will, they will learn that which will take the veil from their minds, the pain and shame from their hearts, and send in the sunshine of joy and gladness.

Bro. J. C. Clapp wrote from Farmington, Kentucky, February 16th:

"I am now very busy and the light is beginning to shine into the hearts of some here * * * Thank God for a renewal of health."

Bro. Cyriel E. Brown, of Providence, R. I., has this to say:

"I see no faults in the Herald worth speaking of. If anything seems hateful, it is finding faults where there are none. I like the Herald. It never dodges the question, but meets it openly, honestly and kindly. It is not ambiguous, but meets its opponents fairly, following them closely, and deals with them sharply, but generously."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

An effort is being made by the citizens in and about Lamoni to erect suitable buildings and establish an Academy or College in or near the town, at an early time in the future. The railway company has offered, free, two and a half acres of well located lands on which to make the location, and others have also made liberal offers for that purpose. It is safe to say that no better point can be found in the west at which to establish such a school than Lamoni. The site is healthful, beautifully located, environed by a rich, rolling prairie dotted and skirted with pretty groves and strips of timber land, in the midst of an excellent class of farmers, stock growers and business men, and free from the attractions, allurements, excitements and corruptions, common to large cities and leading thoroughfares, with moral and social conditions exceptionally good. We fondly hope the enterprise may succeed.

Pres. Joseph Smith wrote from San Francisco, California, the 16th instant. He was holding services in both Oakland and San Francisco with fair attendance and interest.

Persons who do not see their letters in the HERALD will please take no offense, but bear in mind that we use only such, or such parts, of the communications sent us as we deem available and proper. We seek to use our discretion in the premises fairly and wisely for all parties concerned. Our publications should ever be the medium of valuable information, presented in a plain, instructive, and entertaining manner. These facts should be kept in view by all who write for our press, and then forbearance, a rare virtue, will be needed to abide results.

Bro. E. L. Kelley is invited by Bro. R. H. Davis, Bishop's agent for the Spring River district, Kansas, to call and labor there some this spring when going on to General Conference.

Sr. Susan Tyler, of Erie, Pennsylvania, sends for eight copies of "Voice of Warning" and directs where to send them, one in a place, and intends by this to enlist the attention of her relatives and friends in the doctrine of the Saints, and she intends to send them the Book of Mormon also. She says: "The Herald gets better every year, and Autumn Leaves could not be better."

Bro. R. B. Howlett, of London, Ontario, writes that he distributes tracts with good results, and had baptized two persons. He speaks highly of the HERALD as a family paper and thinks none should be without it.

Priest George H. Graves writes that he hopes at not distant day to be engaged more thoroughly in advancing the Lord's work, and he thinks all the priests should strive earnestly in that direction.

Bro. E. C. Brand wrote from Flagler, Iowa, the 14th ult: "Am having good meetings here, with full house Sunday. Will preach here all the week."

Bro. Robert Oehring wrote us from Forestville, Michigan, the 18th inst., saying: "There is quite an interest here among the Germans." He is soon to labor in Saginaw City and other places near, and intends to return to his home in Dakota by March 15th. He feels joyful in the Spirit, though not well in body.

Sr. Caroline Wyatt, of Glen Easton, West Virginia, wrote of late that Bro. James Craig had just closed an interesting discussion there with a Tunker—Dunkard—minister, on the apostacy of the primitive Christian Church, in which Bro. Craig nobly defended the truth and was answered by slang. The Tunker was confounded, friends made to the truth and the Saints were confirmed and edified. She further states that the Church publications are highly prized, and more thoroughly appreciated than ever; and also that she hopes all may labor against "the dirty," expensive, and hurtful tobacco habit.

Bro. N. Stamm wrote from Adelphi, Iowa, saying he had been preaching some this winter, and that he had fair hearing and good treatment generally.

All mail for Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith should be sent to Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, in care of Thomas Gregory.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it legal for a branch to demand a business meeting by vote when there is a previous rule that the business meetings shall be subject to the call of the branch president?

Ans.—No. The branch should abide by its own rules. If they wish to act contrary to any of them, they should first rescind the objectionable rule, in a regular, fair manner. Otherwise the house would be divided against itself.

Q.—Can a branch officer be released at any of the regular branch meetings for worship, he having expressed no desire to be released?

A.—No. For otherwise a prayer meeting, few in number, may undo and overthrow what a regular and full business meeting may have done. All permanent officers of a branch should be chosen or released according to "Book of Rules," sections 5, and 170.

"All persons who are to have permanent charge of an organized branch, should be chosen, they being previously eligible, by vote properly taken at a regular meeting of such branch, or one specially called for that purpose, of which due notice has been given. It shall be considered the duty of every member of the branch to attend the business meetings of the branch, at the regular sessions thereof."

Q.—If the presiding officer of a meeting refuses to put a motion, can the mover put it?

A.—No. It is the duty of the presiding officer, "To announce the business before the Assembly in the order in which it is to be acted upon; to receive and submit, in the proper manner, all motions and propositions presented by the members; to put to vote all questions, which are regularly moved, or necessarily arise in the course of the proceedings, and to announce the result."—Book of Rules, chap. 2; pars 7, 8, 9.

"The branch officers are to be the officers who shall preside over, and have charge of, these meetings; and none others shall preside, except by vote of those present at any meeting, or by the courtesy of the officer present, whose right it may be to preside at the time. The officers of the church who will be recognized by these meetings, as having a right to preside, are:—A presiding elder who has been regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a priest, or priests, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a teacher, or teachers, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a deacon, or deacons, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a secretary or clerk of the branch, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch. It shall be the duty of the presiding officer of the meeting to preside over the same during its session; to enforce the rules of order and an observance of the same, with decorum and propriety; to secure, so far as he is able to do so, a due respect and regard for the laws governing the church, as contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and prevent these books from being treated lightly, jestingly, or disrespectfully."—Book of Rules, sections 163, 164, 165.

Q.—Can a branch, by vote, release each officer, and disorganize the branch in this way?

A.—Yes; if it is done in harmony with the rules that govern the organization of branches which provides as follows:

"Branches are the primary and congregational organizations of the Church, and may be formed wherever six or more members in good standing may be resident in any one neighborhood, one of whom must be an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon." Such organization may be effected under the care and supervision of any local or traveling elder, by the desire and consent of those who shall constitute such branch, when organized; or by the consent, advice, or direction of district authorities, where such exist. All persons who are to have permanent charge of an organized branch, should be chosen, they being previously eligible, by vote properly taken at a regular meeting of such branch, or one specially called for that purpose, of which due notice has been given. A branch is said to be fully organized, when there is a presiding elder, a priest, a teacher and a deacon; there may be, if necessity require, two or more priests, teachers and deacons. In addition to these officers, there may be a secretary or clerk, who may or may not be an elder, priest, teacher or deacon. The rules governing the General Assembly of the Church in its deliberations, should also govern branch meetings; subject to the modifications of organization only."—Book of Rules, sections 4, 5, 6, 7.

And inasmuch as the Book of Rules in section

13, provides that a "President of the district . . . shall . . . have charge of the several congregations of the district," it is therefore legal, proper and orderly, that such disorganization be done under his supervision. The Book of Rules as adopted by the General Conference, may be, and ought to be, received by all the Saints as one of the essential "helps in government" provided to secure the easy and uniform administration of the law and order of the church, thus preventing misunderstandings, strifes and divisions, and promoting and securing unity, concord and edification to all the church. The laws of the church should be honored by all and held inviolable. The Book of Rules, having been adopted by the church for what they claim, are a part of that law, and should be carefully observed. The revelations given for the government of the church declare these sensible, self-evident and divine principles:

"And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and will-eth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still. All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions. All beings who abide not in those conditions, are not justified."—Doc Cov. 85: 8, 9, 10.

Q.—Are we to understand that the Saints are to build a city, and old Jerusalem be rebuilt before the Lord will appear in his glory? before his second coming? and are they to be real, material cities?

A.—Yes; see Ps. 50: 1-6; 53: 6; 102: 16; 147: 2; Isa. 2: 1-4; 24: 17-23; 59: 20; 60: 1-22; 62: 1-12; 66: 10-24; Jer. 30: 18-24; 31: 6-14; Ezek. 36: 1-38; Rom. 11: 25-29; Matt. 23: 37-39; Mal. 3: 1-4; Zech. 14: 1-16, with 1 Thes. 4: 16-18; Joel 3: 1, 2, 9-21; 2 Nephi 5: 9-11; Book of Nephi 9: 9-11; 10: 1; 11: 1; Book of Ether 6: 1; Doc. Cov. 36: 12; 42: 3; 10: 17; 45: 12-14; 83: 1, 2; 108: 4, 5, &c., &c.

These texts afford proof that both Zion and Jerusalem will be builded before Christ comes in glory, and that they are where Christ and his Saints will reign in glory and dominion during a thousand years and the "little season." We hope some of our able ministry will treat this subject at length, and in detail, at no distant day. We now have in view an excellent article on the millennium, but we lack room in the HERALD for it at present. It embraces much in regard to the second advent and glorious reign of Christ, the redemption of the Saints, the gathering of Israel and Judah, and the advanced condition of the created world.

HERE AND THERE, OR THIS WORLD AND THE NEXT.

BY HANNAH MOORE.

Here, bliss is short, imperfect, insincere,
But total, absolute, and perfect there.
Here, time's a moment, short our happiest state;
There, infinite duration is our date.
Here, Satan tempts and troubles e'en the best;
There, Satan's power extends not to the blest.
In a weak sinful body here I dwell,
But there I drop this frail and sickly shell.
Here, my best thoughts are stained with guilt and fear,
But love and pardon shall be perfect there.
Here, my best duties are defiled with sin;
There, all is ease without, and peace within.
Here, feeble faith supplies my only light;
There, faith and hope are swallowed up in right.
Here, love of self my fairest works destroys;
There, love of God shall perfect all my joys.
Here, things, as in a glass, are darkly shown;
There, I shall know as clearly as I'm known.
Frail are the fairest flowers which bloom below;
There, freshest palms on roots immortal grow.
Here, wants or cares perplex my anxious mind,
But spirits there a calm fruition find.
Here, disappointments my best schemes destroy;
There, those that sowed in tears shall reap in joy.
Here, vanity is stamped on all below;
Perfection there on every good shall grow.
Here, my fond heart is fastened on some friend,
Whose kindness may, whose life must have an end;
But there, no failure can I ever prove—
God can not disappoint, for God is love.
Here, Christ for sinners suffered, groaned, and bled,
But there he reigns the great triumphant Head:
Here, mocked and scourged, he wore a crown of thorns:—
A crown of glory there his brow adorns.
Here, error clouds the will and dims the right;
There, all is knowledge, purity and light.
Here, so imperfect is this mortal state,
If blest myself, I mourn some other's fate.
At every human woe I here repine;
The joy of every Saint shall there be mine.
Here, if I learn, the world shall pierce my heart;
But there that broken reed and I shall part.
Here, on no promised good can I depend,
But there the Rock of Ages is my friend.
Here, if some sudden joy delight inspire,
The dread to lose it damps the rising fire;
But there, whatever good the soul employ,
The thought that 'tis eternal crowns the joy.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Piddington, of Crescent, Iowa, writes:—"I rejoice reading the good instructions which comes in the Herald, and am striving to hold on to the 'rod of iron.'" She requests the prayers of the Saints for her companion, who is very sick.

Sister Melissa J., Deloit, Iowa, writes:—"I have been greatly blessed since I obeyed the commandments of God, and my soul rejoices in this work. When we do his will how bright is the knowledge that comes to us, proving that we are his children in deed and in truth, and what a desire we have for others, that they should know even as we know that those who do his will shall inherit eternal life. Let us pray for one another, and be charitable to all."

Sister M. M. Brooks, of Essex Center, Ont., writes:—"We are rejoicing greatly in the ministering of brethren Brown and Shippy, and God has testified through the gifts of his Spirit that he is well pleased with our efforts to serve him. We have rented a hall for the use of the brethren, for which we pay twelve shillings a night. If any of the Saints who read this feel disposed to aid us in this, it will be thankfully accepted.

Our aged brother and sister Halstead came to pay us a visit last Sunday, and to hear the gospel ably defended."

Sister Mamie Zenor, Oxford, Kansas, writes:—"When I read letters from all parts of the world, it makes my heart rejoice, and swell with gladness to know how the gospel is winning its way and the honest in heart are being gathered in. There is quite an excitement here now over the Salvation army—would that all men would come to the light."

Sister Kate M. Barnett, Taylor Ridge, Illinois, writes:—"I feel like bearing my testimony, with others of my sisters, to the truth of this work. Before I united with the church I was very sick, and by both physicians and friends was given up to die. When my friends came to see me die, some of them who belonged to the church insisted upon sending for the elders. My husband gave his consent, and after Bro. Rowley came and administered to me I began to grow better. As soon as I was able to ride, my friends took me to Davenport to conference. When I went into the water to be baptized I was not able to walk without help, but after I was baptized, so greatly was I strengthened, both in soul and body, that I walked out of the water with all my wet clothes clinging to me. I knew then that I had obeyed the truth. My aged mother is living with me. She is eighty-six years old, and will be remembered by many of the Saints as mother Webb."

LAHONA, IOWA, February 23d.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., Jan. 22d.

Dear Sister Frances:—The letters in the Home Column are a great comfort to me. My soul rejoices in the testimonies in it. I finish it always with a God bless you, dear soul. It does me good because I can not have the preaching, which is good to hear. But, thanks be to the Lord, he is always near with his Spirit to enlighten the mind; so I want to say to the dear ones who are alone: Be not disheartened; the Lord hears your prayers, and accepts your good deeds, as well as if you were in a big branch. What we have to do is to exercise faith. When I was baptized I knew there was a new life before me, and a narrow way to walk in, and if we would like to be helped by him whom I had obeyed, I must live up to it. So by receiving the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of the servants of God, that was the lamp for my feet, to overcome the stumbling blocks in the way. I meet many. I saw very well that my road was not a very smooth one; but the help of that blessed still voice led me always to prayer, and thus far I have overcome many a struggle in many circumstances when I did not know what to do, or which way to turn, and sat fretting and crying. But fretting did not bring me over the hill or mountain. No, that will not do, at all. I have had to go to my heavenly Father for wisdom and understanding, and then, in that great sorrow, that blessed Spirit would raise me up, and a voice come to me, "I am the Lord thy God; I will be with you all the days of your life and forever." O, glory to God and the Lamb, forever and ever. Amen.

So, dear Saints, we are all struggling along in that same narrow way. Hold fast to the "iron rod," and never grieve the Spirit. My prayer is that we may all hold out to the end.

S. BOURGUOIN.

NORTH FORSTER, Australia.

Dear Sister Frances:—In reading the many letters in the Herald I am helped and strengthened in this good cause. We are blessed in that God permitted us to hear the gospel in its purity. We have had a visit from Bro. Burton, when he led five more into the waters of baptism. I would like to see Bro. and Sr. Burton stay in our branch; this may not be right yet it is my feeling toward them. They are doing a great deal of good; and it is my prayer that God will raise up friends to them wherever they go, for they are worthy of them. As we have entered into a covenant with God I pray that we may eat the bread of life and drink the waters of life freely; and that we may never turn aside, but go upward and nearer to eternal life. We sisters have a mother's prayer meeting, and by prayer and perseverance we shall get nearer to God.

Ever your sister in the one faith,

M. A. ANDERSON.

January 26th.

Dear Frances:—I wish to write a few lines on the Word of Wisdom, Doctrine and Covenants 86th section. There has been much discussion on the 1st verse, that strong or hot drinks and tobacco are not good for man; but in 2d verse God speaks of the flesh of beasts and birds, that they should be used sparingly, and it is pleasing unto Him that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold or famine. While this is not by commandment or constraint, yet God says it is pleasing unto him that we should not use them. Dear sisters, we all profess to love the Lord, and why should we not try to please him in all things; besides, he who formed our bodies ought to know what is the best food for us. How many of us eat flesh day after day, summer and winter, when God in his wisdom has supplied for us such wholesome vegetables and fruits. Surely we ought to be satisfied. I believe there would not be so much billiousness and sickness if we would not eat meat and grease in hot weather. And in the 3d verse there is a promise: "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden knowledge; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them. Amen."

Sisters! what a great promise to us; and we know what the Lord promises he will surely do. If we follow these sayings we will be healthy and strong; and which one of us would exchange health for riches. Some may think that meat is strengthening and we can not do without it; but I believe God knows what is best for us, and if we rely on his blessed words he will bless us with strength. We can use it in winter, in times of cold, that is when we most need it. I, for one, believe this great promise has as much to do with the 2d as with the 1st paragraph. I would like to hear the views of others on this subject, as I have never heard the whole Word or Wisdom explained. A SISTER.

FORESTVILLE, Mich., Feb. 22d.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—When I first heard of the Latter Day Saints I was among others to oppose the doctrine, being always taught that they were the Utah Mormons. But I can now testify that I am a true believer in the gospel of Christ. Two years ago this month I was baptized and since have received many blessings, and can now bear testimony to the healing power of God. When I obeyed this work my friends and doctor had said I would soon follow my friends who had died with consumption, but I believed God had the same power now that he had in olden times; and while attending conference in Brown City I was administered to. God's Spirit was there in power. I have had good health ever since, and to God alone do I give the glory. My desire is to keep humble, ever ready to do my Master's bidding, for I realize that only those that bear the cross can wear the crown. My people are all opposed to the work, and I would ask the prayers of all God's people that I may ever stand for the right, and be ready when the Master comes.

Yours in one faith,

LOUISA BREIDENBOCH.

MEDINA CITY, Texas, Jan. 31st.

Dear Home Column:—As we have just entered upon a new year, I feel impressed to come to you again to let you know how we spent Christmas and New Year in this far away corner of the Master's vineyard; not that I think I can edify any one, but because the Home Column is dear to me. I love the letters, and have been strengthened and encouraged by them many times. Yes; who needs strengthening more than the weary mother. Those letters from my far away home, (England), are so full of good tidings. I often shed tears of joy while reading them. Likewise this may be some one's far way home and they would like to hear from it.

A few Saints and friends had a nice Christmas Tree, Christmas eve, with singing by the young people and a few edifying remarks by Bro. J. A. Currie, Jr. We had a pleasant time. Christmas day we repaired to the school-house (near six miles) and had preaching by Bro. Currie. Then spread our dinner in the bright sunshine; after which we had prayer meeting, and returned home strengthened and encouraged by that blessed peace pervading the soul that pen can not portray. Oh, for a nearer walk with God, that his Spirit might be ever with us! New Year's day was spent in Sunday-school and conversing on the plan of salvation to one of our neighbors who is very much opposed to our faith and has done a great deal against us. We hope good was done. Let us, dear sisters, ever be ready to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints. To do this we must keep our lamps trimmed and burning. Let us go hand in hand in the bond of unity, that the strong may help the weak and that all with one united effort help hold up the hands of those who are appointed to feed the flock. Let us be more humble and prayerful, that we may be worthy of the blessings that our Father sees fit to bestow upon us. Oh, let us not waste our time, for it is short!

Some in this place are ready for baptism, but are kept back by unbelieving husbands and fathers: Let us send up one united prayer for them, and that the spirit of investigation may be given, and evil surmising be done away. Let us, with a godly walk be ensamples, "laying aside all malice guile, hypocrisies, envies, and evil speakings;" that when the race is ended we may receive the plaudit, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

May peace abide with you all.

SISTER SOPHIA WIGHT.

Dear Sisters:—As I sit alone this morning, I feel that I must write a few lines to you. I have felt impressed at many times that we as sisters and followers of our Savior, are too neglectful in visiting our sick and afflicted. The words of our Savior were, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these you did it unto me. When I was sick and in prison ye visited me, when hungry ye gave me meat, athirst and ye gave me drink." Now, dear sisters, are we doing this? Just think of the lonely hours a sick brother or sister has, confined in the house for weeks, perhaps months while we are enjoying health and happiness. Is it much to give an hour or two to cheer them. Surely we don't think or we would do better. I have frequently heard the remark: "Mrs. — is dead. Well, that is too bad; I heard that she was sick but did not know that she was dangerous." And then you will try to dismiss the subject from your mind, but you can not do it. All day long and perhaps for days your conscience will whisper, Why did you not go and see her, you might have helped her bear her cross, spoke words of comfort and cheer and the dying one would have carried a sweet remembrance of you to the spirit world, and angels would have recorded the good deed. Now, dear sisters, if you have neglected this duty, try and do so no more. Visit the sick; it will do them good and you will be blessed. Take a good book or a little delicate bit of your cooking; let them know that you are praying for them and you will feel glad when the dear face is lost to your sight, that you have done what you could.

"A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion or a tear,
Has often healed the heart that's broken
And made a friend sincere."

LIMERICK, Ohio, Feb. 6th.

Brothers Joseph and William:—The work in this district is progressing well for the number of laborers in the field. The news still comes from those preaching the word that doors are opening and calls made for messengers to dispense the word of life. Brn. Devore and Beatty, notwithstanding great opposition, are having good success in West Virginia.

On the 26th of last month I left home to labor a few days in Highland county, Ohio, by request of the Saints there. I found them, with few exceptions, trying to honor the work. They are all young in the cause and need teaching. I met with them in two Saints' meetings and instructed them in duty to themselves and to each other. I spoke ten or eleven times in the immediate vicinity of the Saints to full houses of good listeners. Spoke once at another place near Marshall, met opposition, and they closed the door for the time, saying, at a more convenient season they would call. The brethren secured the Town Hall at Sinking Springs for me the night of the 26th of January. This village is two and a-half miles from where I had been preaching, and between forty and fifty of the people I had been preaching to accompanied me to the hall where I spoke two hours to a full audience of very attentive hearers. I think the result will be good. A doctor resides there, (I don't remember his name), who has been to Utah, and he informs the people of the difference between the "Josephites" and "Brighamites," and it gives us favor with the people. The citizens of Highland county are a noble people. Saints and others administered to my wants. May the Lord bless them. While there I baptized six, and others are near. I also ordained a very worthy young man to the office of priest. He will look carefully after the interests of the Saints. At the close of the last service I held in Highland county, I united in the bonds of matrimony brother Samuel Stethem and sister Lauretta Irons, both of the Highland branch.

On arriving home I found five calls for preaching which, under existing circumstances, I can not respond to. I love to see this work moving. If the Saints would keep the whole law, be wise and not bring reproach on the work, inasmuch as it is now lifted off the church to a great extent, it would be more encouraging to the elders to go forth to preach the word. The Herald always comes full of good things. I never expect to be without it, and when traveling I try to induce others to subscribe for it.

Yours in the faith,

JAMES MOLER.

NORTH HENDERSON, Ill., Feb. 10th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—In looking over a January number of the Herald I found the testimony of father John Landers, and my heart was filled with joy and the Holy Spirit. My memory ran back to a scene of my childhood, near fifty years ago. The Spirit seemed to whisper, "Write and bear your testimony." But owing to my inability in writing, (as I am now sixty-one years old), I put the matter off. But now, by the help of the Spirit, I will write. When I was a child, near fifty years ago, father Landers came to my father's house (Samuel Black was his name), here in Henderson Grove. My father was an elder in the church. Father Landers found my mother and I both sick. I had been sick for some time and was quite feeble. Father Black said to brother Landers, "I wish you would administer to my sick folks, if you will." They knelt in prayer, and brother Landers in his prayer asked the Lord to make it known to me that it was my duty to be baptized. Sister Hogaboom was the first to speak. She said it had been made known to her that I was willing to be baptized. Father asked me if I felt it my duty to be baptized, to which I replied I did. A team was ordered and I was conveyed to the water. The Spirit of the Lord was with us in great power, and that to bless. As I was quite feeble, father helped me into the water. But, thank God, I came out of the water well; was not sick another moment; and in a few days had my usual strength. Never can I forget that time while memory serves me; and I can truly say I hope it may be God's will to ever bless that dear old Saint with the richest of heaven's blessings while in this life, and then at the end he may have an abundant entrance into God's heavenly kingdom. And if I never meet father or mother Landers in this life, I hope to meet them with the redeemed in "the sweet by and by."

Yours in bonds of the everlasting gospel,
ISABEL GLASS.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Feb. 15th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—We have had a very pleasant winter; general health good; but some sick with pulmonary diseases. I recently held a two-weeks' meeting at Diamond and Palmyra, in Portage county, this State, with good results. Quite a number became deeply interested. Bro. and Sr. Stewart and Sisters Hawley and Scott, with friends of the faith are doing what they can to support the cause there. They deserve credit for their constancy and zeal in the faith.

WM. H. KELLEY.

PLANO, Ills., February 13th.

Bro. Joseph:—That grand paper which heralds the bread of life to the hungry and famishing souls upon this earth, is eagerly watched for, and very greatly appreciated at our house. Whenever I read the Herald the Spirit is ever present. Many times while reading the many testimonies of this latter day work, my heart rejoices exceedingly, and my eyes are filled with tears of joy to think that the good Lord has seen fit to reveal to me the true way of life. I could not for a moment renounce the light I have received in visions, dreams, and also the many manifestations of the Holy Spirit's presence with me, as a witness to confirm to my mind the truthfulness of the doctrine.

While reading the account in the last Herald of David Whitmer's death, I wept tears of joy, not on account of his death, but of his testimony, and also to see the peacefulness and rest which comes to the soul of a dying Christian, although he may have done some things which did not seem quite right to the Reorganization. I am convinced he died a true Christian. I would like to see the account as set forth by the Richmond Democrat in tract form, for instance with the epitome of the faith it might do a wondrous work towards convincing many prejudiced minds.

A short time ago I read in a certain paper a piece written by a professedly learned man, stating that at the second coming of Christ he would be born again a child, as he was at the first. Is not this man one of those false prophets, trying to force upon us a false Christ, like those which our Lord and Savior warned the Saints of old about, which was to appear in the last day? To my mind this professedly learned man was more ignorant than wise, at least in Scripture; and as a warning to him and all who may believe in his words, I would cite them to Matthew 24:4-30; also Acts 1:9-11.

WILSON L. GORTON.

GRAND JUNCTION, Iowa, Feb 10th.

Bro. Joseph:—We joined the Utah Church in England, not knowing but it was the real church; then in 1866 we came to Pennsylvania, and were there ten years. We then went to Utah, in 1876, and when we got there we found that it was not the church we expected. My husband then left the church, and I, in September, was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. After three years we came to Nebraska. Now we are residing in Grand Junction, Greene county, Iowa. Since the death of sister Masters on Shell Creek, Newman's Grove, Madison county, we have been as sheep having no Shepherd, shut out from all communication with the Saints, which troubles me very much. I am anxious to enjoy the communion of Saints. We have heard several times that they are holding meetings somewhere around Angus, but I am not able to attend, as I am afflicted. We would be happy to have some of them call and see us. They will find a happy welcome. I feel lonesome without the Saints. Besides, there are some enquiring about the faith and doctrine of the church, and if meetings were held here they would come and hear. Please, Saints, don't fail to come as soon as you can make it convenient, for I am anxious to see some of you. Enquire at any of the hotels or stores and they will direct you to where we reside.

Your sister in the covenant of peace,

MARY METCALF.

DENNISPORT, Mass., Feb. 7th.

Dear Herald:—The Massachusetts district conference which convened here in the Saints' Chapel, January 28th., and ended on the 31st was a very profitable season to all present. The preaching was excellent in quality and gratifying in quantity. To name the speakers will vouch for the truth of the above statement. They were Elders E. C. Briggs, John Smith, M. H. Bond, Frank M. Sheehy, Thomas Whiting and E. N. Webster. The last five I conceive to be the staff officers of the district, working under the supervision of Zion's "Stonewall Jackson." Brother Sheehy stopped with us until Friday, February 3d. He is a pleasant, attractive, and logical reasoner. Brother M. H. Bond remained with us until Tuesday, February 7th. He seems to possess an inexhaustible fund of gospel subjects. He is reverent in demeanor, fluent, forcible and rapid in utterance, hurrying his auditors along with impetuosity, often lifting their minds above the ordinary range of gospel thought. We hope that brother E. C. Briggs will return east from General Conference as early as possible with additions to his staff.

The Dennisport branch was organized November 27th, 1866. Since then, 115 have been baptized, 19 have died, 9 disfellowshipped, 31 removed by letter. The remaining 56 are, with a few exceptions, established in the faith. Members driven from this branch through stress of circumstances became the nucleus around which Brockton and Plymouth branches have been built up. We were loth to lose them, but we were confident that they would make their marks which would tell for good to the cause wherever they went.

W. BEARSE.

WILKSVILLE, Ohio, Feb. 13th.

Editors Herald:—One year ago to-day I and my wife were baptized. The good Father has blessed us many times. The goodness of God I can't express. I am thirty-five years old and this is the first church I ever joined and it is all that I wish in this life if I can only prove faithful to the end. I know this is God's work. I love it. The Herald is a blessed comfort to the Saints. I don't know how any of them do without it. Why will some stand up and say that they know this work is true and it is of God, and yet not pay their tithing nor even take the church papers. Brethren, let us wake up. We should do our part. Let us prove God by paying our tithing, and so receive the blessing. I am handling ten of Bro. Peeters' Voice of Warning with good success. I hope they will do good. All like them that read them, but some say that they don't believe them all. How thankful I am that I had the privilege of hearing the gospel in its fullness. I was just as ready to obey it as I was to hear it. I have attended many big revivals in my time, but their doctrine I could not accept, for it was not the gospel of Christ, but the gospel of man.

Yours,

R. H. ERVIN.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Mo., Feb. 15th.

Brother Blair:—I have labored some little lately in company with Bro. E. Curtis, of Independence, in Taborville, which is a town of considerable age, but not of much note, in St. Clair county, Missouri. This field was opened up by our worthy president, I. N. White, during last year. And by his bold effort in defense of truth quite an interest was awakened. Bro. E. Curtis followed up with appointments and was greatly blessed, so much so that the members of the Christian Church, many of them, expressed their dissatisfaction with having membership in that church. So Elder Quinly told his flock to meet him on the Wednesday night following and he would show them why they were so dissatisfied with their religion. One of his members spoke up and said, "Now Quinly, you must have had a revelation, if you can straighten up things here." This caused quite a laugh by the people, for Elder Quinly had raised objection at the close of our service all the time since preaching began at Taborville. Bro. Curtis requested him to wait until he returned from Shobetown, that he might be present when he made the attack. Then a question was agreed upon for discussion:—"Resolved, That the Christian Church occupies apostolic grounds; Elder Quinly affirms; E. Curtis denies. Then E. Curtis affirms the same for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, while Elder Quinly denies. The discussion lasted four nights, Elder Quinly in defense of the Christian Church, read largely from the "Gospel Preacher and "Christian Discipline;" while Bro. Curtis, on the negative, showed a departure from apostolic usages.

Bro. E. Curtis made an able defense for the church of the Saints. There was a degree of fairness not often found in discussions shown by Elder Quinly until the last speech, when he brought to the front some of the old trash found in the novel literature of the day, for which he was called to order at different times. We can cheerfully say that the glorious cause came off victorious. This was the first discussion for Bro. Curtis. He was blessed with unusual liberty and force of argument. To our merciful Lord be all the praise.

Through the undaunted labor of God's servants in this district, his sheep are being gathered into the "one fold" and are found rejoicing in the love of God. North of the town of Taborville there were eight baptized by Bro. Curtis, and many more are very near the kingdom.

I will labor in this district, according to my circumstances, in company with Bro. Curtis. May our merciful Lord abundantly bless the good Herald and all the publications of the Church, that they may be widely circulated with their freight of eternal truth. Yours,

ABNER LLOYD

LYNNVILLE, Ont., Feb. 6th.

Brother Blair:—When I wrote you last December, I was just starting for this place. I preached a few sermons in the Baptist Church, but some of the "greater lights" decided that the people had enough religion, called a few members together, and upon vote it was decided I could not have the use of their church any more. Only ten voted, six against and four for me. As soon as the main body of members were apprised of this little meeting, they were disgusted. Some say they will never go to the Baptist Church again. However the ballroom belonging to the hotel was opened for us, an organ was put in, and a choir from the Baptist church assisted us. The hall was full the first night. I announced preaching for every night in the week, but I received a telegram from Bro. Brown to go to Seaforth at once. I was sorry to leave Lynnville, but on receiving the third telegram we had to say good bye.

Arrived at Seaforth, I found Bro. Brown at the desk in the Town Hall. I confess that I felt somewhat discouraged when called upon to address about twenty-five persons after leaving congregations running from two hundred to four hundred; but we can not always judge the amount of good that will be accomplished by the number who comes to hear. Some infidels had been making a display of their diminutiveness and disturbing Bro. Brown, they became quite brave soldiers. Bro. Brown thought, as I was the smallest target, I would be the harder to hit, so I became the target. When time came to open fire, they found their ammunition faulty. I gave them something in the line of Bible, history, and figures, and they sent for their "big brother." And in a few days I received a letter asking me if I would meet Mr. Charles Watts, editor of Secular Thought, of Toronto, and discuss the principles of Christianity. I replied that I was not sent out to debate, but to preach the gospel; that I believed Christianity had a divine origin, and that if Mr. Watts wished to affirm that it had not, I would take the negative, but that I would not enter into a controversy with him under any other circumstances. They wrote Mr. Watts and he replied that he would debate two nights with me, and affirm "That the allegation that Christianity had a divine origin, is unreasonable, and without sufficient evidence." We were to have two half-hour speeches each both night. But as he demanded the opening and closing speeches we failed to meet.

The Church of England minister was next one on the war-path. He proved himself a Braden for abuse. He announced in the papers that he would lecture on Mormonism. We went to hear him, and when the collection plate came to us, we dropped a letter of invitation on it for the preacher to come to the platform next night and listen to our reply, also requesting him to announce our proposed reply to his congregation. He failed to comply with our request.

I replied to him on polygamy. It was said that over one thousand people came out to hear. Many had to leave, there being no room in the hall. The next night I replied to his objections to present revelation, and next night I lectured on the origin of the Church of England. My points were: 1. It was conceived in lust; 2. It was born in murder; 3. It lived in polygamy and idolatry; 4. It is dying with formality and pride.

Bro. Brown stood by me and gave counsel, faith and prayer. We made many friends and preached nearly every night for the three weeks I was there. Our congregations numbered from one hundred to three hundred all the time after the first two nights. Some bade us farewell in tears.

We received word from Bro. Green, yesterday, saying: "Come; come; come; the people are asking for you every day." He writes that a number are on the verge of obedience.

We arrived home on time for Christmas dinner, was very busy for three weeks in London branch. Met Bro. Lake at Vanessa, January 23d. He looked refreshed and was feeling strong in the good work in which the summer of his life has been so well spent. I preached in Vanessa January 23d, and Bro. Lake gave us some wise counsel. Next morning he left for Corinth, and at night I preached to thirty-six persons in a ball-room adjoining Mr. Addison's hotel, in Lynnville. The Baptist and Methodist friends learned I was to be here, so they joined hands in one of those soul-stirring revivals, in the Baptist Church. This made the number in our hall small for the first few nights, but we went right along on the line of duty as we understand it, and the result is that the revival meetings are stopped, and our hall is well filled six times a week and twice on Sunday. I have baptized eight the last week, and some more will follow to-morrow. We have been offered three different sites on which to build a church.

The Baptist preacher delivered a lecture on "Old Joe Smith and polygamy," yesterday afternoon. I am to devote this week to the origin, rise and progress or the latter day work, the apostasy of Brigham Young and birth of polygamy.

I feel weary sometimes, talking night and day, but I look forward to that time when the people of God shall enjoy the rest that is being prepared for them. I hope those who are looking for us at other points along the line will have patience, and accept of this our apology for delay.

So far as I have heard from the elders and laborers in this mission, the work is onward.

Later.—Have baptized the hotel keeper's wife, and he has closed his bar and given his name for baptism. I had over four hundred to-night to hear my lecture on Brigham Young.

WOONSOCKET, Dak., Feb. 16th.

Editors Herald:—I want to bear testimony to being healed by the laying on of hands through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the fall of 1887 I was sick with lung fever. Elder Stephen H. Morse, a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ, of the Latter Day Saints, came and administered to me in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ and I was healed almost immediately. They were holding meeting at our house at the time, and it was just before meeting on Sunday that I was healed. I was so very sick the neighbors thought it was terrible that we did not have a doctor. I could not swallow anything only as I drank water from a teaspoon; but in five minutes after I was administered to I drank as freely as anyone could. I also helped sing in meeting, and some said they heard my voice above the others.

On the 18th of August, the same year, I was thrown from a horse and had my elbow dislocated. The doctor set it and said I would have to keep it bandaged for four weeks. He said it was worse than a break. This was on Sunday; and Elder Morse anointed it with oil and prayed with me, and that evening I took the bandage off and did not put it back, in four days I had it out of the sling, and in less than two weeks I worked with it. KILMAUGH, Mich., Feb. 16th.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—I rejoice and thank my Creator for his goodness to me, even that he has spared my life until the gospel has again been preached in fullness as it was at the first. I never belonged to anything called a church, and when I heard the gospel one year ago next March. I accepted it. I belong to the Bay Port branch, and we have good meetings. We have not yet had any of the gifts in our branch, except that one of the sisters spoke in prophecy. When Bro. J. Shippy was here he spoke in tongues and I was called to be one of God's servants. I desire to grow strong in the faith, and in the knowledge of the truth. We had some good times at Bay Port last winter. About one half of the people were glad that the gospel had come, and the other half were fighting mad because their craft was in danger. Well, I suppose they had reason to, for their meeting was all broken up, and there is now no preaching there except by the Saints.

F. C. SMITH.

NEPHI, Utah, February 18th.

Brother Blair:—I arrived here on the 16th inst. Had a splendid meeting last night in the Court house. Will speak there to-night and to-morrow night. I held two interesting meetings in the School-house at Salem. I find the same good Spirit working with the people that I wrote you about before. The leaven is working gloriously. I spoke last night on the Book of Mormon. Rev. Lamb was there and took notes. He created quite an excitement here a few evenings ago, lecturing on the Book of Mormon. He found an old man named Chase here in his dotage, and he was willing to discuss with him. He being feeble, his voice failed, and a great victory was claimed by Lamb and his clique. But he never opened his mouth to me, but said he had to leave to-day. He is a coward.

The old man, Chase, knew nothing of the historical matters alluded to in the book, and indeed was not able to defend it. Such Rev's may gloat over a victory of that kind, but it is not to their credit. Bishop Booth has allowed us the 4th Ward Meeting-house in Provo. Bro. Elvin and myself will begin a series of meetings there the 23d inst., and will keep you posted. Brother Burt is with me.

Yours,

R. J. ANTHONY.

MAYFIELD, Mich., Feb. 15th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Since I wrote you January 23d I came here, and have been here since. January 24th the first sermon was preached here ever heard from a Latter Day Saint. Since that I have baptized sixteen, and more are ready for the water. I have been feeling unwell for a few days, and shall return home to-morrow to remain a few days and recruit up, and shall return here soon. I have many calls from every direction to come and preach. There are so many places where they are interested, and are desirous of hearing the gospel, that I hardly know which way to go. But by the aid of the good Spirit we are able to move along with success. I have baptized about eighty since last General Conference. January 28th the Saints at Five Lakes and those of the Juniata branch met at Five Lakes on my birthday and had a dinner, and afterwards had meeting, and a good time was enjoyed by all. I received many nice presents perhaps to the amount of twenty dollars, or more.

Last week Elder Andrew Barr was at Five Lakes. He is the Bishop of our district, and was on his mission teaching the law of tithing. The Saints there were well pleased with his instruction and enjoyed his presence and the good Spirit which he possesses. Many of them see the need of living up to the law of tithing.

Yours in bonds,

J. A. CARPENTER.

BELLVILLE, Ills., Feb. 14th.

Bro. Blair:—I am still trying to advance the cause of Christ. Since I came here to assist Bro. Gillen, I hear the work is in a better condition than when he came, so his efforts have not been in vain. Like many other places there is still room for improvement.

It seems to me we are too apt to judge of others' motives, by what is said or done, without taking into consideration the nature or circumstances of the case, and perhaps without a knowledge of facts, judging from hearsay, or something of the kind.

I learned important lessons when I first commenced traveling in this work, and that was to forgive all men, and let the Lord forgive whom he will. I understand we are to ask to be forgiven as we forgive one another. We are brethren and sisters. God is our Father; Jesus Christ our Elder Brother. Now if we have hardness and ill will towards another, will God hold the same against us if he only forgives as we forgive one another? The thought often comes to my mind, especially so when I think hardly of any who have done wrong. We should be sorry for those who go astray and try to restore them in meekness and humility instead of being angry and allowing evil thoughts to arise and turn us from the narrow path. The charity that Paul spoke of, will prevent a multitude of sins.

I sometimes find myself short of the work of our high calling in Christ, but I am thankful I am led to see my own weaknesses; for this gives me a chance to guard against them. I rejoice in the progress of the work, and the efforts of the Saints to build churches in St. Louis and Independence, also in the advancement of the work throughout the world. It strengthens me to make the sacrifice required to preach the gospel of Christ.

I expect to remain here over next Sunday, then will go to Chester, Illinois, two weeks, return to St. Louis and look after the work until April.

Bro. Gillen intends to visit Alma, Illinois, then turn his face towards Independence, to attend the General Conference, after which I hope he may return to finish the good work he has begun here. I can truly say my hope grows brighter as I see the day approaching. Autumn Leaves and Herald are good. They are food for hungry souls. Since I last wrote I have baptized seven.

Yours in Christ,

HIRAM H. ROBINSON.

IRON HILL, Iowa, Feb. 15th.

Dear Herald:—When I read your pages I rejoice to see that the gospel work is onward. It is so in this vicinity. I baptized two more on the 6th inst., and now Bro. Matland and I are holding forth in the Union Church in this place. We have large congregations of very attentive listeners every night. We need more help in this district. There has been word sent us from four other localities that their school-houses were open to us, and they wanted us to come and preach for them. Prejudice flits before the gospel like snow before the hot sun. If only the Saints were all Saints, the work would still grow faster. The cause has been hurt in this locality by one who used to belong to the church, and at that time preached in these parts and did great injury to the cause which we now have to meet. But, thank God, there are some Saints here who are an honor to the work. And I pray that we may gather many more into the fold of the same kind. I think we will soon organize a branch here. There is a mutual desire among the Saints here to build a church, and many of the outsiders have already offered liberal assistance. God's people are gaining favor.

BAY CITY, Michigan, Feb. 15th.

Editors Herald:—We are trying to do good here. Seven have been baptized near Bay Port lately. Rev. (?) Sims gave a three hours' lecture a few days ago against the Saints. Now is the time for us to take right hold here. Bro. J. A. Grant is to keep up work here a week or so while I go elsewhere.

Yours,

J. J. CORNISH.

SINKING SPRINGS, Ohio, Feb. 6th.

Dear Herald:—Our branch numbers forty-eight members. The gospel of truth in its fullness was first proclaimed here by brethren T. J. Beatty and L. R. Devore about one year ago. They are earnest workers in the cause, and are sincere and honest in their efforts. Bro. James Moler has visited our branch twice, and baptized eight the first time and six the last, fourteen in all. He stands up in the Spirit of God and demands that men and women obey the gospel of Christ, and warns the people that if they do not they can not have a part in the first resurrection. By obedience to this gospel we obtain the full assurance that God is true, and that he has "set his hand the second time to recover his people." I thank the good Father of all that he brought me to the light of his truth and founded me on the rock. I was very sorry to learn that some bad persons had threatened Bro. L. R. Devore's life. I pray the Lord to keep him from the hands of the enemy.

THEODORE CLUFF.

BIG SPRING, West Va., Feb. 8th.

Editors Herald:—Near the middle of last December Bro. L. R. Devore came here and has been sounding the gospel trumpet very proficiently, resulting in bringing many souls into the kingdom of God. Bro. Beatty came to his assistance about the 20th of January. They have baptized nineteen, and we now have an organized branch of twenty members. Although we are young in the cause, persecution is raging high, friends forsaking their relatives, and our liberties are threatened, notwithstanding that the constitution provides that all men shall have a right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. After several notices had been served on the elders to leave or abide the consequences, they held service at a private house, the same being crowded with attentive listeners. A Baptist preacher near there foreseeing the result of the preaching could not stand it any longer, and having had preaching a little early that day, closed his meeting and took all of his followers that would join him and came to mob our elders. We have this statement from some of the mob, and believe it true, as he was there. However, he had not the stamina to step out when called upon by those he had persuaded into the business, claiming they would be justified under the law. They made use of many hard words and false accusations against our brethren. When the elders dismissed the congregation they retired to a creek near by where they baptized two. They then passed out through the mob as brave as if they knew no one dare molest them, and in this they made many friends. Before the mob left they gave Bro. Devore a written notice to leave there in twenty-four hours or suffer the consequences. He then had announced preaching the next night at the same house. While gathering in to hear him we got word that the mob were going to carry into effect their threats, and that all who defended our elders would share the same fate. After meeting closed we got word that the mob would contain eighty men. In view of this, ten men stayed with the elders that night; and about eleven o'clock the mob came, and we heard the command to form in line. At this the brave boys on the defense prepared axes, clubs, and revolvers, and said all with one voice, "We will stand the test if we all fall by the way." After the mob had formed in line they demanded our elders to be delivered to them in five minutes, at the same time claiming they had forty-one well armed men, saying if we did not deliver them we would all share a like fate. We responded to them that the extension of time was quite unnecessary, for if they intended to carry their threats into effect, that we were there for defense and would stand till the last man of us fell before we would surrender, at the same time admonishing them to beware, for they were acting in open violation of both the law of the land and of God.

The mob being personally acquainted with those acting in defense, wisely retreated, and gave up the ghost. After deciding to go away, they fired many shots in the open air. A large number of them were Baptist members. The elders had preaching the next day and each successive night in that neighborhood, also on Sundays, for nearly two weeks, having generally many anxious hearers, but no more mob.

The elders have many warm friends here, who are not members, and will gladly have them return again. The prospects are very good. Many souls are near the kingdom. Some of the mob have even made confession, and have offered themselves for baptism. Young men have said they would not have been in the mob had they not been persuaded by old members of the different churches—mostly Baptists. Just think of it; men who claim to be religious and trying to do the will of the Lord, yet lifting up the arm of rebellion against the laws of God and of man. The Savior says, "Thou shalt not kill." The mob will be delivered up to the authorities at our next court to be dealt with according to law. My sympathies go out to all those young men and boys that were led by the bad counsels.

Brn. Beatty and Devore left here for Sinnett's Mills, in Ritchie county, this state, Saturday, February 5th. May the grace of God be with them and they be the means of winning souls to the kingdom of God there, and while on their journey.

J. G. DEPUE.

TABERVILLE, Mo., Feb. 13th.

Bro. Dancer:—Since writing on the 5th inst. I have baptized three. On the 8th commenced a discussion with Elder Quinley of the Christian faith, who is teaching the village school here. He is also the superintendent of the Sunday School. We had full houses. The good Lord stood by and we lacked for nothing. I never was blessed so abundantly as since I have been laboring here. To God be all the glory. At the close I baptized three more. Others say they believe.

Yours, EMSLEY CURTIS.

STATE LINE, Iowa, Feb. 14th.

Bro. Blair:—The work is onward in these parts, and the demand for preaching comes from various places. Where they once opposed the work they now ask us to come and preach.

I have been holding forth at different places in Missouri and Iowa. The interest has been good, and the people seem to say, What means this?

It is encouraging to read in the Herald the letters from others of the gospel winning its way. Surely, the time is at hand when we will get fame and a good name in the land where we were put to shame.

I find some who are ready to destroy the work because they do not believe the Doctrine and Covenants. They say it is of man. They should read the conversation between Philip and the Eunuch. When Philip said, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" The Eunuch's answer was: "How can I except some man guide me?" The Eunuch, not having the Spirit, could not "understand."

By reading Corinthians 2:14, they will see that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned."

I feel well in the work. The Giver of all good blesses me with his Spirit when delivering the word and administering to the sick.

Was at Bro. Wight's some time ago and expected to give a course of lectures, but bad weather would not permit. I expect to return before long, for as I intend to give most of my time this summer to the ministry. And I hope to hear that S. J. Salisbury has entered the field, for I heard him called by the voice of the Spirit through Bro. John H. Lake.

Yours in Christ,

THOMAS WELLINGTON.

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 20th.

Bro. Blair:—I have had very good success disposing of the "Cowdery Letters," and Voice of Warning. Weather for the past two weeks has been beautiful, but last Saturday it snowed all day, and now it is just awful getting about. I am told the Mormons have been more active in religious matters this winter than for many years. Dr. York, an infidel lecturer, is drawing the people nearly every Sunday evening, and and this seems to please them much better than the truth. I expect to go down to Provo this week. The brethren there have obtained the use of the Fourth Ward meeting house for us. Bro. Anthony is now at Nephi, but will meet me at Provo. Bro. Peter Anderson spent the Sabbath here, and assisted me in the pulpit yesterday. He went south this afternoon, but will go to Council Bluffs early next month. But a few take much interest in our work in this city, still we labor on trusting and hoping.

Editors Herald:—I want to bear testimony to being healed at one of Elder Stephen H. Morse's meetings in the fall of 1887. I had been troubled with my stomach for nearly twelve years, and by spells I have been in great distress. I heard of the wonderful power of healing among the Latter Day Saints, and at one of the meetings I thought I would have Elder Morse administer to me; but during the meeting the pain left me, and I have not felt it since. See Eph. 2:8.

RESURRECTION.—NO 2.

RESURRECTION OF THE JUST.

HAVING shown, in the preceding paper, the distinction in the nature of the resurrection of the just from the resurrection of the unjust, we will now shew that the righteous will come forth from their graves at the second coming of Christ, while the wicked must remain until the final judgment, or after the millennium.

After Paul has assured us that "all will be made alive" he says, "But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Cor. 15:23. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that they who are alive at the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them who remain until the coming of the Lord, who are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch angel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then they who are alive shall be caught up together in the clouds with them who remain, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall they be ever with the Lord."—1 Thes. 4:14, 17. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3:4. In harmony with this, John says: "When he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3:2. Peter confirms it thus: "When the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory which fadeth not away."—1 Peter 5:4. While John was on the Isle of Patmos, he saw a vision of the Millennium wherein the Saints "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." "This" he tells us "is the first resurrection."—Rev. 20. The prophet Abinadi, in the Book of Mormon, declares: "There cometh a resurrection, even a first resurrection; yea even a resurrection of those that have been, and who are, and who shall be, even until the resurrection of Christ, for so shall he be called. And now the resurrection of all—the prophets, and all those that have believed in their words, or all those that have kept the commandments of God, shall come forth in the first resurrection; therefore they are the first resurrection. They are raised to dwell with God, who has redeemed them, thus they have eternal life through Christ, who has broken the bands of death. And these are they who have part in the first resurrection; and these are they that have died before Christ came, in their ignorance, not having salvation declared unto them. And thus the Lord bringeth about the restoration of these; and they have a part in first resurrection, or have eternal life, being redeemed by the Lord."—B. M. p.

173. Alma also speaks of "a first resurrection."—B. M. p. 311. From the testimony of Matthew we learn that after the resurrection of Christ, "The graves were opened; and the bodies of the saints, which slept, arose, who were many, and came out of their graves."—Matt. 27:56. Now, some entertain the idea that this "first resurrection" is still going on. But as revelation is silent upon this matter, I shall not presume to affirm or deny the truth of the suggestion. Suffice it to say, the scriptures plainly teach that the righteous dead who remain at the coming of Christ, will then come forth. Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, wrapt in the vision of the Almighty, have left this testimony: "And again we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: they are they who receive the testimony of Jesus and believe on his name, * * * these are they whom he shall bring with him, when he shall come in the clouds of heaven, to reign on the earth over his people; these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just."—D. C. p. 213, 214. The Lord says again: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, and it has gone forth in a firm decree, by the will of the Father, that mine apostles, the twelve who were with me in my ministry at Jerusalem, shall stand at my right hand, at the day of my coming, in a pillar of fire, being clothed with robes of righteousness, with crowns upon their heads, in glory even as I am, to judge the whole house of Israel, even as many as have loved me and kept my commandments, and none else; for a trump shall sound, both long and loud, even as upon Mount Sinai, and all the earth shall quake, and they shall come forth, yea, even the dead which died in me to receive a crown of righteousness, and to be clothed upon, even as I am, to be with me, that we may be one."—D. C. p. 115, 116. Thus we have shewn that the resurrection of the just, the first resurrection, will be complete when Christ shall have appeared "the second time; without sin unto salvation unto them that look for him."—Heb. 9:28. But in the vision of John the Revelator, we are expressly informed that "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were ended."—Rev. 20:5. And the vision of Joseph declares: "These are they who shall not be redeemed from the devil until the last resurrection, until the Lord, even Christ, the Lamb, shall have finished his work."—D. C. p. 215. With this testimony agrees the Apostle Paul, when he says: "Afterward cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the Kingdom of God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed."—1 Cor. 15:24, 26. Thus we see the great advantage righteousness brings. First, the happy consciousness here, of being a child of God, cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, through obedience to the gospel, receiving the smiles of the Infinite Father. This guidance, by the Holy Spirit, which gives to constant obedience the constant assurance of divine approval, sanctifying and purifying the soul, and preparing it for that glorious exaltation assured in the resurrection of the just, and secondly the realization of all that is promised, in the resurrection to eternal life.

Let us contemplate more fully this resurrection of the just. The hope of it has inspired the children of God in all ages. As we have seen Adam, Eve, Abel, Seth, Enos, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and all the prophets looked forward through the vista of ages to the consummation of the work of redemption, to be wrought out by the sacrifice of Him who was "as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." The stricken but patient Job looked down the ages through his blinding tears, and the vision enraptured his whole being, and with the certainty of realization he cried, "Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."—Job 19:23-27. Pretended believers in the Scriptures have tried to dim the vision of the Old Patriarch, by twisting his words to apply to the latter end of his natural life, but the beacon light, that was then enkindled in his soul has shed its beauteous rays into the heart of every true believer in the world's Redeemer, and has engraven the hope as with an iron pen in the solid rock, so that the inspired assurance has cheered the millions of oppressed souls, who, feeling that they "were strangers and pilgrims here," have clung to the promise of a glorious resurrection, and have in turn received renewed assurance through the whisperings of the spirit to them, that their hope is not in vain. David, while trembling under the weight of grief caused by "foes without, and fears within," having proved the littleness of human greatness gave vent to the yearnings of his soul and his confidence in God's word, in these words, "As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake in my likeness."—Ps. 17:15.

The crown he wore, even as the emblem of authority over Israel's kingdom, was in his eyes a bauble compared with the privilege of awaking from the long sleep of death, in the likeness of Israel's greater and Eternal King. Without this, all was empty chaff. Nothing could satisfy his longing soul, but this glorious awaking; and with this comes every joy, every honor, and the full fruition of eternal bliss. In thy likeness! Can poor humanity comprehend the meaning of the words, measure the greatness, grandeur, and glory expressed in these words? To be like God! Is there power in the gospel of Christ to raise humanity to such infinite excellence? We answer, for this purpose was it revealed, and "he is faithful that promised." The apostle assures us that this work of transformation, in a spiritual sense, is now going on. "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18. If the gospel has such transforming power, spiritually, shall it not be equal to all that God has promised? "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. 15:49. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Phil. 3:20:21. But the divine purpose does not end even here, for the Holy Spirit with its numerous gifts were given to lead us "to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."—Eph. 4:13. That ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all Saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."—Eph. 3:18, 19. Surely, "Great is the mystery of Godliness." Such love, the human mind can have no just conception of without the Spirit's enlarging, enlightening, and inspiring light and power; and the blessedness and glory of such a resurrection can not be told by the pen of mortal, nor can mortal ears receive the glorious tidings in the fulness and glory thereof; but enough is revealed to inspire our hearts with love and gratitude to our infinitely kind and loving Father, and his beloved Son, our Redeemer, and to fill us with boundless desire to serve him, and give him all the honor and praise our finite souls can give. I can not fittingly close this subject without again referring the reader to the vision already quoted from in these papers.

"And again we bear record, for we saw and heard. And this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just; They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given, that, by keeping the commandments, they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power; and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true; they are they who are the church of the first born; they are they into whose hands the Father has given all things; they are they who are priests and Kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedeck, which was after the order of the only begotten Son; wherefore as it is written, they are Gods, even the sons of God; wherefore all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs, and they are Christs; and Christ is Gods; and they shall overcome all things; wherefore let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet; these shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever; these are they whom he shall bring with him when he shall come in the clouds of heaven to reign over his people; these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just; these are they who are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly place, the holiest of all; these are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and the Church of Enoch, and of the first born; these are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all; these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the Mediator of the New Covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood; these are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all; whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical."—D. C. p. 213, 214.

"And thus we saw the glory of the celestial which excels in all things; where God, even the Father, reigns upon his throne forever and ever, before whose throne all things bow in humble reverence and give him glory forever and ever. They who dwell in his presence are the church of the first born; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received of his fulness, and of his grace; and he makes them equal in power and in might, and in dominion. And the glory of the celestial is one, even as the glory of the sun is one."—D. C. p. 215.

Reader, the prize is before you; your life must determine your fitness to receive it. It is in your power to reach out and obtain it, but it must be by conforming to the revealed gospel of Christ. It is promised "to all who obey him." "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

In the foregoing paper we have shown from the word of God as given in three records. First, that God has decreed a resurrection of all mankind from the dead. Second, that the resurrection does not come to all at the same time. That beside the rising again of the just, who had lived before Christ, that there are two periods in which the dead shall rise; the one at Christ's second coming; that "of the just," and the other after the reign of Christ upon the earth, with his redeemed for a thousand years, which is called in Scripture "the resurrection of the unjust." Third, we have shown that the resurrection set forth in God's word is a rising again of the mortal body, and the re-uniting of the Spirit and body, that the entire being may be judged, and receive in their re-united state a reward according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or evil, and not merely of the Spirit. We do not claim to have given every passage that bears upon this subject; our object has been to prove the truth of the doctrine from a scriptural standpoint. We do not claim to have met every argument put forth against this doctrine by the sceptical world; but we have endeavored to convince the professed believer in God and Christ that a literal resurrection of the just and unjust was taught by Christ and his apostles, and also by the prophets. Convinced of this, they certainly will need no argument to convince them that the infinitely wise and omnipotent Creator is able to accomplish all his purposes. His work alone must prove his power. It is true we have repeated various passages from the fact that the subject matter is so interwoven with other promises and purposes, that we could not always separate them without doing violence to the texts treating upon the subject. May God bless the effort to every reader, then we are amply rewarded.

CHARLES DERRY.

DEARTH OF MINISTERS!

MINISTERIAL Supply, is the caption of a brief article published in the Michigan Christian Advocate for October the 8th, 1887, and is, to our mind, quite suggestive in a number of regards: "Michigan Methodism has failed to furnish her quota of men for the ministry. The statement is not startling, for it is not new. Year by year the fact has been rising into prominence that our young men, best fitted by gifts of nature and of grace for the ministry, are turning away to more remunerative fields. Seasons of depression in business circles have generally furnished an unusual number of recruits for our conference, but such barks, left on our shores by the ebbing of the financial tides, are quite apt to put to sea again on the first wave of returning prosperity. With this exception, perhaps, the fact remains that there is a growing aversion to the work on the part of those who have within them the elements of success in any calling. And the fact is deplorable. For the ministry is a faithful exponent of the church. It is the measure of its spirituality and aggressive energy. When the church fails to develop a spiritual and aggressive ministry, sufficient for the work it has to do, the fact may be accepted as indicating a lack of what, perhaps, Bishop Taylor would call 'indigenous resources.'

When the church in any quarter (missionary fields of course excepted) must depend upon an imported ministry, it is time it gave way for another and more vigorous form of Christianity. The failure alluded to is felt to some extent throughout the church, but is especially conspicuous in the Detroit conference, as a glance at the composition of that body will show. It is apparent at once that of the more recent additions to the conference, the Methodist Episcopal Church within the bounds of the conference, has furnished a minority. The fact might be taken as evidence of a decaying condition of the church were it not referable to other causes. The policy pursued by the conference in the past few years has not been such as to encourage young men, reared, converted and educated among us, to enter our fields of labor. That policy has been shaped largely by a fact of geography. The territory of the Detroit conference is contiguous along its eastern boundary to her Majesty's dominions. So far as the commercial relations between that country and our own are concerned, some restrictions have been found necessary. To foster home industries, and develop home resources, we discourage the importation of certain products of that country. But there are no duties on ministerial imports. There is no protection for our young men who are striving to meet the demands of our pulpits. For years that demand has been met and exceeded by a foreign supply. To make room for the excess our charges have undergone a process of division or subdivision, until not more than one-fourth of our conference appointments afford a comfortable living. The disclosures of the minutes on this point are suggestive. Only forty-four charges report a salary of $1,000 or more; while the average of fifty other charges is about $340, including house rent. So, after the presiding elder's claim is settled (as it usually is on such charges, mainly out of the pastor's pocket) and rent deducted, the balance is generally given to the pastor as an affectionate token that his labors are appreciated. It is true that this is a grouping of the weaker charges, but it serves as an example. No wonder that our young men are not enraptured with the prospect. There is every reason that this invasion from Canada will continue, and will be welcomed in the future as in the past, and with the same results as in business circles, when the competition of cheap labor has driven a more desirable class of workers from the field. Add to this the facility with which transfers are made from other conferences, and the promptness with which they are promoted to our best charges, and surely the field is not an inviting one to a young American, who to prevent piety joins a spirit of manly independence and energy."

J. S. J. whoever he may be, is the writer of the foregoing, and should it be thought worthy of a place in the Saints' Herald, it would surely lead those who read to think of the present religious situation, and with profit. If it be true that "seasons of depression" or prosperity "in business circles" governs the supply of ministers to the Detroit Conference of the M. E. Church, and that there is an unusually large supply during "seasons of depression in business circles," who is able to determine which is of greater importance in the estimation of these ministers, the building up of the church and the salvation of souls, or the money obtained from it? It is true that "depression in business circles" affects church finances similarly; but should the ministry be more exacting of the church than the business man is of the business world? Is it morally right for the ministry to "put out to sea" because his financial prospects are brighter, at times, than while laboring for the eternal well-being of his fellows? In the business world he must study retrenchment, at times; and should he not be willing to do as much for the sake of Christ's cause? I may be able to illustrate my idea better by asking the following questions: If, on condition that the church proposes to me to aid my family to the sum of $15 per month, should I enter the ministerial field in its interests, and, in consequence of a depression in business circles, it becomes necessary for me to be content a portion of the time with $12 per month,—(and we can get along with the reduction), should I, at the end of the conference year, hold the church responsible for the first named amount in full? or should the account be balanced and thus closed?

This entire article leads us to conclude that the financial question, is, with the church referred to, an embarrassing problem; and that the embarrassment is causing "a growing aversion to the work" of the ministry "on the part of those who have within them the elements of success," leaving the men who do not possess the elements of "success in any calling," to take care of the Christian civilization of the world and age! And, if this is a fact, as affirmed, is the conversion of the world likely to be a success, as viewed from the writer's stand point? Our query is growing in interest, if it be true that "the ministry is a faithful exponent of the church," and "the measure of its spirituality and aggressive energy." This failure of Methodism to furnish her quota of ministers "is felt to some extent throughout the church," says this writer. And if this be true, can it be accounted for on the like cause as that assigned for the failure in the conference referred to? namely, that its entire eastern boundary is contiguous to her Majesty's dominion, and they are therefore invaded by foreign ministers? And if this failure that "is felt to some extent throughout the church" can not be made attributable to the same cause, as "in the Detroit Conference," why not the fact "be taken as evidence of a decaying condition of the church," as suggested by the writer? Does the church named lack "indigenous resources?"

Again; if the "failure" to produce her quota of ministers, on the part of the church under consideration, "is felt to some extent throughout the church," and the cause of the failure is, as argued by the writer, a lack of means to supply the conference appointments a "comfortable living," taking the minutes for the evidence, then the failure or success of the cause is plainly one of dollars and cents. Is the institution therefore founded on "this rock," as stated by Christ, or on finances? There are plenty of laborers, it seems, with the gifts of success; but these laborers place too high an estimate on their successful abilities to employ their gifts for the price afforded by the Savior's cause!

Let us pause here and study that very peculiar prophecy of the Apostle Paul recorded in 2 Timothy, chapter 4, in its relation to the time there specified, and to the idea conveyed by the terms "covetous" men, "having a form of godliness," and we are thereby helped to understand the real situation.

It appears that the demand made for preachers in this section of the evangelical world, is "met and exceeded by a foreign supply," and to make room for the excess a division and sub-division of the constituted charges is made, and this "foreign supply" is referred to as an "invasion," and, as compared with home talent, a "competition of cheap labor."

A question here arises: Who is responsible for this excessive supply of unsuccessful ministers? Is the Lord calling more of this class of ministers than his kingdom here on earth can use or knows what to with? Ought the Lord to institute a system of protection to those home born men so they can be protected against a "foreign invasion" and not be under the necessity of competing with these more cheap laborers? or, is the Lord a "free trader," and is taking this course, to impress their minds with the fact, and allowing the "more desirable class of workers to be driven from the field?"

Allow us in conclusion to inquire, Is the kingdom of God, as described in the gospel record, of such a nature and character, as to be susceptible to such contingencies as is referred to by the writer of the foregoing? Are its constitutional elements of such a nature as to be affected by the reverses of fortune, depression or prosperity of business circles on earth, just as human governments are? Does it legitimately develop the principle of ministerial competition, based on geographical boundary facts of such a nature and to the extent that an exchange of fields of labor becomes an invasion of one class by the other? If the kingdom of God, in fact, is thus constituted, wherein does its superiority over earthly governments consist? Can any one tell whether it, or some of the earthly governments will exemplify "the survival of the fittest," if these queries be answered affirmatively?

C. SCOTT.

SHOULD THE NAME "MORMON" BE REPUDIATED?

JUDGING by the article of a certain brother, "Mormonism" is but a system of corruption, a cesspool of iniquity, so that the very name of "Mormon" should be repudiated by the Reorganized Church, to ensure their success as a religious body; but the fallacy of this allegation I will disprove by the law and the testimony.

In the Doctrine and Covenants, 113:6, it says Joseph and Hyrum were slain for the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, and that their innocent blood, on the floor of Carthage Jail, is a broad seal affixed to Mormonism that can not be rejected by any court on earth. Why is the term "Mormonism" used here in preference to any other? Because it is the most comprehensive, honorable, and appropriate one to express and define the great latter day work, kingdom of God, church of Christ, Zion, etc. It comprises, as in a nutshell, the whole scheme of that marvelous work and wonder established by Joseph Smith the martyred prophet, predicted in Isaiah 29th chapter, etc. This marvelous work is predicated upon the divine calling of Joseph the Seer and the "Book of Mormon" which contains the fulness of the everlasting gospel, Doc. Cov. 115:16; 34:4; 39:3; 42:5; etc., and through obedience to the same the body or church is formed, with the injunction to remember the Book of Mormon, and to do as written, or else they should remain under condemnation for treating lightly the things received from above. Doc. Cov. 83:8.

As the term "Mormon" is defined as "more good," only an elevated influence can emanate therefrom to those who accept the same as their "golden rule." The great sufferings, and the death of many noble souls in the early days of the church, and the steadfastness to these divine precepts by all except the followers of the various factions, are strong and positive proofs of the inherent value and virtue of the book and the name of Mormon. Also the tenacious clinging to that name by those who brought reproach upon it by their anti-Mormon practices is another evidence in favor of the name, although they ought to know that they use that appellation unworthily until they return to the pure precepts of the book, the "golden rule," "more good." Would it not evince the height of inconsistency to discard that God-given name on our part to humor the adversary, and court popularity. Why not also repudiate and cast off the name "Saints" to make the distinction more apparent between the Reorganization and the Brighamite church? As the name is properly a reflex of that represented by it, the repudiation of the name "Mormon" would include the Book of Mormon, and of course "Mormonism"—the latter day work. Who can afford this?

Let us hold aloft the same glorious banner, or standard as held forth in the rise of the church, clear away the rubbish from the same, until original "Mormonism" arises Phoenix like, more gloriously than ever. Let us not be ashamed of that name selected and approved of God for a wise purpose. It is the first step towards apostacy, as it is the name of that book containing the fulness of the gospel which is essential for salvation and eternal glory. Let consistency be our motto, and all will be well.

President Joseph Smith, in his fourth reply to Elder Littlefield, administers a severe rebuke to the disclaimers, and repudiators of the name "Mormon," in language not to be mistaken by the dullest of the dull.

"That book [of Mormon] is one of the essential features of Mormonism. It should be to you and all other Mormons what the Koran is to Mohammedans, the Bible to Christians—the end of dispute. Without it the Mormon Church had not been born. It is the "Golden Bible" to the devout Mormon. From it I have the undoubted right to select those portions of the text that confirm and sustain my faith in Christ as primitive Mormonism has revealed him." Comments by me are unnecessary. The members of the "Reorganization," which represents "primitive Mormonism," should be the foremost in restoring that once so highly honored and respected name to its primitive esteem and import, by not objecting when called so by the world who consider it consistent to do so by reason of the acceptance of the Book of Mormon, called by President Smith devout Mormons. Therefore, the closest relationship exists between Saints and Mormons, for both depend on, and derive from the same source their spiritual food and life-giving power, even the gospel of Jesus Christ, as contained in the Book of Mormon, Bible and Doctrine and Covenants; and a surety of celestial glory by living up to the precepts of the same.

THE MORBID RECORD OF 1887.

The chronological record of the year 1887 is prolific in matters for thought and consideration. A year to some laden with expectations unrealized, hopes blasted, freighted with death and disaster, to others full of success, prosperity and happiness. Yet its but the record of the years that have gone, and the years to come. Of course the work of the chroniclers is mostly with the former class; victims of death, sufferers by disease and epidemic, victims of the fire fiend's speedy work; of those who "go down to sea in ships" for the last time; of the criminal classes whose violations of the law force severe penalties and of the unfortunates to whom the miseries of this life are barriers against it—the suicides.

These are the subjects enlarged upon gratuitously by the chroniclers of the press; as matters of general news and as a tempting morsel for the morbid appetites of the public; leaving the successes in the business world to be chronicled by the advertising man at 75 cents to $1.50 per line as the case may be.

And what of the record of crime and penalty, disease and death, storm and disaster, fire and the destruction in hours of the labor of years on years! The earthquakes, pestilence, war, disease and accidents on land and water have carried thousands on thousands to known and unknown graves. The depravity of that class known as criminals has caused the foul fiends of murder, arson, robbery and their kindred to run riot, only occasionally checked by stern justice rightly and honestly administered. 'Tis the record of 1887, was the record of 1857, 'twill be the record of 1897 only better or worse; no man can tell.

From Jan. 1, 1887, to Dec. 31, the death roll from natural causes has been increased from the ranks of scientists, clergymen, doctors, bankers, scholars, all classes, trades and callings in youth or age. Disasters have made thousands of victims; 1,000 in one fire, 700 in one earthquake, 200 by a theater fire, 5,000 by floods in China, again 4,000 and 2,000 in the same manner, 150 in a railroad disaster, 162,000 from pestilence, 10,000 in battle, in all 187,950 in Europe and 2,610 in our own country, of whom 1,822 met the grim monster on the rail; 204 lost their lives on our inland lakes, and 6,557 lives were lost on the ocean; the grand total of pestilence, battle, disaster, reaching the enormous number of 199,164 souls as against 122,791 last year.

Suicides, poor mortals incapable of further conflict in the battle of life, through blighted affections, melancholy or the thousand alleged causes for the rash act, number in the United States alone 1,287, including men prominent in mercantile, scientific and political circles. Nineteen different methods of taking off were used, the revolver being favorite; the hemp route second choice, with novelties in the way of starving, cutting down a tree so as to fall on the suicide, and the dynamite route adopted by Anarchist Lingg.

Murder has held high carnival in America during the year, his victims numbering 2,335 against 1,499 in 1886. Quarrels resulting in 1,199; jealousy 184, liquor 212 and self-defense 34.

The law and Judge Lynch have not been idle, though the vengeance has been in small ratio with the crime, 79 judicially hung, while the less merciful but generally more just Judge Lynch has swung off 123 victims, the majority in the Southern States.

The fire fiend destroyed $65,158,000 in $100,000 to $5,000,000 lots or over, while smaller fires raises the sum total of property destroyed to about $130,000,000 against $115,000,000.

These are but a few of the statistics of chroniclers, but they are important for consideration. In the increase of suicides, murders, and the decrease in hangings is not indicative of a near approach of the millennium, nor is it a glowing tribute to the "Blind Goddess" as represented in our judiciary system.—Chicago Commercial Bulletin.

A WORD OF WISDOM.

THE Mormon Apostle, Joseph Smith, teaches in his "Word of Wisdom" that it is "not good to drink wine or strong drinks, excepting in the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and then it should be home-made grape wine; that it is not good to drink hot drinks, or chew or smoke tobacco; that strong drinks are for the washing of the body, and that tobacco is an herb for bruises and sick cattle; that herbs and fruits are the food of man; that grain is for the food of man and beasts and fowls; and that flesh is not to be eaten by man excepting in times of winter, cold and famine." It is not pretended by the Mormon that this "Word of Wisdom" is to be regarded as a divine commandment, but simply as a revelation showing forth the will of God, and "suited to the conditions of all Saints, young or old, male or female, without distinction." It has had its effect upon the Mormon people, so that next to being the thriftest, they are the soberest people on this continent."

We do not turn instinctively to the Mormons for guidance on any question of health or morals, but are rather inclined to ask, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" But instruction which will make of any people the thriftest and soberest people in the nation must be words of wisdom for the world.—Laws of Life.

Conference Minutes.

WELSH MISSION.

The conference of the above mission was held at Aberaman, Wales, October 30th, 1887. T. E. Jenkins, president, D. Lewis, clerk. Bishop's Agent's account was reported from April 23d to October 30th, 1887. Eastern district was reported:—Seventies 1, elders 21, priests 7, deacons 1, members 49; baptized 5, received by letter 1, died 1, expelled 1, total 87. Wm. Morris, president. Western district was reported:—Elders 11, priests 4, deacons 2, members 52; removed 1, died 1. Total 71. D. Lewis, president. Carnarvon branch was reported:—elders 1, priests 1, members 4; died 1, total 7. J. E. Hughes, president. J. D. Jones reported his labor in Wales. A resolution was passed that some English Tracts should be translated into Welsh. A committee of three was chosen:—Brethren J. R. Gibbs, D. Lewis (Dewi Chwefror) and Bro. B. Davies, to have them completed. In the afternoon, address by the president. The authorities of the church were sustained in our faith and prayers.—Joseph Smith as president, W. W. Blair his counsellor, and all the quorums of the church in America. T. E. Jenkins as president of the Welsh Mission; J. R. Gibbs his assistant. Wm. Morris as president of eastern district; D. Lewis president of western district. J. E. Hughes for North Wales, and all the elders and members of the church. The gifts of the Spirit were enjoyed. Preaching in the evening by Pres. Jenkins, John Jenkins and J. D. Jones. Adjourned to meet at Llanelly the last Sunday in April, [29th], 1888.

LITTLE SIOUX.

Conference of the above district met at the Saints' Chapel in Persia, (Spring Creek branch), on Saturday, December 3d, 1887. J. C. Crabb president, P. C. Kemmish and D. Chambers clerks. Branch reports.—Magnolia 173; 4 baptized, 1 received by certificate of baptism, 1 by letter. Unionburg 33; 1 received by certificate of baptism. Spring Creek 90; 4 baptized, 1 died. Magnolia Sabbath School:—Total attendance 317, average 23, donations $4.86, average 35c; verses learned 143. Spring Creek Sabbath School:—Enrolled 64, average attendance 38, donations $94.44, paid out $93.22. Little Sioux Sunday School.—Classes 5, teachers and officers 7, enrolled 87; average attendance 60, collections $8, average 50 cents; books awarded as prizes 11, Hopes taken aside from individual subscriptions 55. High Priest J. C. Crabb; seventies J. F. Mintun (by letter), and J. F. McDowell (by letter—baptized 4); elders J. W. Wight (by letter—baptized 25), D. Chambers (baptized 4), P. C. Kemmish, Thomas Thomas, Samuel Diggle, (baptized 4), Wm. Chambers, E. R. Lanphere, Frederick Collins, Joseph Seddon, John Hunt (by letter), and Wm. C. Cadwell (by letter); priests Frederick Hansen and John Chapman, Jr.; and deacon Isaac Haner, reported. E. R. Lanphere was requested to labor in this district as wisdom may direct. Joseph Seddon was requested to continue to labor in the Little Sioux district with thanks for past labors. Final action being called in the case of Bro. J. S. Knauss as laid over from last conference, he was on motion expelled from the church. J. C. Crabb reported no labors by him in the Missouri Valley Mission, and by his request he was released from the same. Preaching on Saturday evening and Sunday forenoon by J. C. Crabb. The sacrament was administered Sunday afternoon by Thomas Thomas and Joseph Seddon, after which a soul strengthening season of prayer and testimony was enjoyed. Adjourned to meet at Logan, the first Saturday in March [3d], 1888.

Miscellaneous.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Kewanee district conference will convene at Kewanee, Illinois, on the second Saturday in March, at ten o'clock. Let there be a good attendance from all the branches. Especially should each branch see to it that they are properly represented in the conference with carefully prepared reports. Special invitation is extended to any elder who may be en route to General Conference, who can make their arrangements to attend conference with us. All will meet a hearty welcome.

JOHN CHISNALL, Sec.

DECATUR DISTRICT.

In consequence of the bad weather and roads but few of the brethren met at Pleasanton on February 25th to hold a conference. Those who were present resolved to adjourn to meet at Lamoni in two weeks. Consequently notice is hereby given that it will convene at ten o'clock on Saturday, March 10th, 1888, at Lamoni.

H. A. STEBBINS, Dist. Pres.

CALL TO THE TWELVE.

To the Quorum of the Twelve: Greeting.—In pursuance of a resolution passed in the last session of the High Council, at the Kirtland conference, of 1837, you are requested to convene Tuesday, March 27th, 1888, in Independence, Missouri, the historic city of latter day Israel. The grand work of God in which we are engaged demands divine wisdom and as no one within its folds has all the gifts of the Spirit, the law of life has, by the example of the Master, provided that the first elders of the church should retire by themselves to rest and counsel together upon the affairs of the Kingdom of God. And inasmuch as the prophet Daniel saw the government of God set up in the last days, and another of the ancient prophets saw that "Zion's watchmen shall see eye to eye," when the Lord shall bring again Zion; and in order to fulfill these and many more of the wonderful prophecies, let us come together prepared with pure hearts to consider and grapple with all the issues which have sprung up in the church that have a tendency to disturb or distract the peace of the Saints.

And as it is contemplated by the great apostle to the Gentiles in the affirmation, "and the rest will I set in order when I come," that there is and always will be things arising in a living church of God on earth that demands explanation and expounding by way of setting in order the church above and beyond (yet in keeping with) that which is written. Come, therefore, together in faith, not the least daunted because things do not go as smoothly as you would like.

The sea has been always rough and tempestuous for the children of God, and if "others fought to win the prize," we should not seek it by easier means.

Harmony among all the ranks of the warriors must be sought, and the generals must set the example first, and then all others will follow. And in order to bring this about, a better acquaintance among ourselves ought to be had, and our experiences should be talked over together, in matters relative to the regulating of the churches, the demands required at our hands, and the magnitude of the work intrusted to us as overseers of the flock, in keeping with the word of the Lord which says: "For upon you rests much responsibility."

Try and come together in the full spirit of your office to work, and not physically tired. Another very important matter is, that the quorum should attend all the public services of the conferences for their own and the good of the church. The Quorum of Seventies, as far as practicable, and also requested to meet the 3d of April so that the two quorums can confer together, also the Bishopric. And it is to be hoped the First Presidency will meet with us as much as they can, to give instructions, counsel and directions. All the ministry on missions, and those who desire to take missions to preach the word, are requested to send in their reports to the quorum, stating their wishes, also the amounts necessary to free them of the charge that he "hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." It can then be known who can be depended on as a traveling ministry. The prayers of all God's children ought to be offered as one voice in behalf of the assemblage of the elders of the church, that our heavenly Father may be with us in the demonstration and power of the Holy Spirit, giving wisdom, and the revelation of His will for the consolation and comfort of all Saints.

Address all correspondence to your respective presidents of the missions, or the secretary of the quorum, Elder James Caffal, care of Joseph Luff, Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, so as to reach the quorum by the 25th of March.

Your co-laborer,

E. C. BRIGGS.

MARRIED.

MILLARD—STIVERS.—At Irvington, Alameda county, California, the home of the bride's parents, Bro. Simeon Stivers and wife, Sunday, February 12th, 1888, Joseph Henry Millard and Lottie J. Stivers, all of Irvington. Pres. Joseph Smith officiated, and the rite was solemnized in the midst of a happy group of the relatives of the parties, Mr. and Mrs. Millard, the parents of the groom, as well as the parents of the bride being of the number. The feast was enjoyed and the young people left for their home in Oakland, amid a shower of rice, and the traditional shoe-throwing, and the good wishes of all.

DIED.

RICHARDS.—At Staunton, Macoupin county, Illinois, of congestion of the lungs, sister Elizabeth Richards, December 18th, 1887, aged 73 years. She was baptized in Llanelly, Wales, in the year 1847; rebaptized to the Reorganized Church by Bro. John T. Phillips at Dry Hill, Missouri. She died strong in the faith. She met death as calmly as the summer's morn. Faithful and devout mother in Israel.

OMAN.—Sister Melvina G. Oman was born in Kentucky, August 12th, 1812, and died at Petaluma, Cal., January 27, 1888, in her 76th year. She joined the church in the days of Joseph the martyr; moved to Nauvoo in 1844, and resided there about eighteen months. At the time of her death she was a member of the Stockton branch. She joined the Reorganization in Petaluma in 1864, was baptized by Elder E. C. Brand and confirmed by him and Elders Wm. Potter and Jacob Adamson. She sleeps in Jesus her hope.

HILL.—At the home of her parents, Bro. William Chambers, near Persia, Iowa, February 5th, 1888, sister Mary, wife of William S. Hill, after a brief sickness of only four days, aged 20 years and 8 months. On Monday, February 1st, she gave birth to a child, which only lived one day. She seemed to gradually sink away, but thought she would get well until within a few hours of death. She called her friends around her and bid them each good-bye. The funeral discourse was at the house, Sunday at 3 p. m. by Elder Joseph Seddon, after which her remains were followed to the cemetery on David Chamber's farm, and placed by the side of her child. Her loss is deeply felt, for to know her was to love her.

RUBY.—At Bird City, Kansas, September 13th, 1887, of congestion of the brain, Phebe Ruby, aged 62 years and 11 days. She was born in Ohio, united with the church in an early day; was with the Saints in and through all the troubles and trials in Missouri and Illinois. She united with the Reorganized Church about twenty-four years ago, and remained faithful and true to her covenant until death. She was a kind, indulgent mother, and a true Saint in word and deed. She leaves three sons and two daughters who sincerely mourn her death.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas it has pleased the Almighty in His wisdom, to take from our midst, February 5th, 1888, our beloved sister, Mary Hill, wife of our esteemed brother William Hill, and daughter of brother and sister William Chambers, of Persia, Iowa, in the morning of her life, together with her little babe, the first fruit of her womanly love; and appreciating, as we do, her kind and genial nature, her abiding love for her companion, and also for the cause of truth, always manifest in her readiness to give a helping hand as a wife and as a lover of truth; we hereby desire to express our sorrow, and our sympathy with and for her bereaved companion, who by her death, and that of her sinless babe, has been deprived of everything earthly that could make life sweet and dear to him, and knowing also the pure affection, deep and holy love that existed between herself and her sorrowing kindred, we extend to them, as also to her youthful and loving husband, our tenderest sympathy, to comfort each bereaved soul in the divine assurance that "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

We pray God that all, and especially her beloved companion, may seek and find the consolation which only the gospel can bring to every faithful one in the blissful hope of an eternal reunion with wife and child where pain, disappointment and death can never come.

Signed in behalf of the Magnolia, Iowa, Sisters' Aid Society, of which she was an active member.

C. S. EMERSON, Secretary.

So young and beautiful, so loving and so lovable! Just when the fondest hopes inspired her woman's heart, And when her sky seemed cloudless, and the bright sun Its genial rays bent on her path to lure her on to nobler joys

And cause her heart to glow with tenderer sympathies than yet,
Had made that gentle breast to heave and throb since life was hers—

When the warm, pure lips of holy infancy should press That maiden breast and send a thrill of holy love and joy Through every fiber of her soul, as mothers only know— Those lips grow cold in death, and send a chill more dire To that young mother's heart than all the blasts of winter stern.

That dart struck home. The mother's silent mournful gaze

With anguish full, follows her child to "gates ajar" And thither yearns to follow, that in the blissful Paradise She may enjoy the sweets, denied her here, with her sweet babe.

Her soul goes out, like Rachel's to her God and child; And there, in blissful union joined, clasped in such loved embrace

That death with all his terrors can never break or mar. There they await that glorious morn when, at the trump of God,
Their bodies clothed in glorious immortality shall rise As temples worthy of those spirits cleansed from sin,
To dwell in brighter realms, with joys that ne'er shall fade.

And glories that shall ne'er grow dim. Nor pain nor death shall their dark shadow cast
Where all is light and joy and peace and love.

BABYLON IS FALLING.

"MORMON CHURCH CASE.

"SALT LAKE, Nov. 8.—The territorial supreme court to-night made a formal order appointing United States Marshal F. H. Dyer receiver for the Mormon Church property in excess of the $50,000 limit fixed by congress; also that he take possession of the personal effects of said church, and of rents, leases, etc., and account to the court from time to time for the proceeds of the same, and to employ counsel and bring such suits as may be necessary to enforce his possession and accounting to him."—Chicago Times.

"THE FUTURE OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

"The Standard states:—It is impossible to say what the future may have in store for the Church of England. But the horizon is not so particularly bright at this moment as to relieve her from all anxiety, or to justify her in neglecting any new sources of strength which the course of events may lay open to her. The Anglican Establishment considered simply as the Church of the nation, and dependent to a great extent on its connection with the State for the position which it holds among us; and the Anglican Church regarded as the head and center of one great branch of the Catholic body, in communion with numerous churches in all quarters of the globe, all looking up to her as their model and preceptress, are two widely different things; and it is hardly too much to say that if Disestablishment ever comes it can only be by possessing such a position as this latter that the Church of England can avoid the degradation of sinking into a mere set. She must widen her boundaries and deepen her foundations against the evil day. The institution of the Pan-Anglican Synod has already had an excellent effect. It does not seem altogether impossible that some scheme of comprehension may even yet bring back to her the more moderate among the Non-conformists. If to these could be added to her communion those seceders from the Romish Church who, like our own Reformers, appeal to Catholic antiquity, she would have a high position wholly independent of her connection with the State, and even of that hereditary property which the State neither gave nor has any right to take away, though, of course, in the event of Disestablishment, she would lose the greater part of it. In any case, it is well to be prepared for the worst. Should such a misfortune overtake both the Church and the nation as we are here contemplating, the former, at all event, might find—in the more influential and cosmopolitan character which she has of late years been rapidly acquiring—something more than compensation for the loss of any dignity and territorial wealth which she may have enjoyed as an insular Institution, and at some sacrifice of both her power and her independence. It would be better for England that the Church of England should continue on her present footing. But the Church herself, under the circumstances we have supposed, would have less reason to regret the loss of it."—Manchester (Eng.) News.

"SPURGEON AND THE BAPTISTS.

"The rumor a few days ago that Mr. Spurgeon was about to leave the Baptist Union turns out now to be correct. For some time past the charges laid by him against ministers and churches of being upon the "down grade" theologically and spiritually have been ardently combated privately, but at the meetings of the Union in Sheffield early this month they were ignored, while at the gatherings of the Congregational Union they were denied. Replying to his critics and declaring his final decision, Mr. Spurgeon says that 'to pursue union at the expense of truth is treason to the Lord Jesus. He is our Master and Lord, and we will keep His words; to tamper with His doctrine would be to be traitors to Himself.' Proceeding, he argues that as a matter of fact 'believers in Christ's atonement are now in declared religious union with those who make light of it; those who hold Evangelical doctrine are in open alliance with those who call the Fall a fable, who deny the personality of the Holy Ghost, who call justification by faith immoral, and hold that there is another probation after death, and a future restitution for the lost.' 'Yes,' he says, 'we have before us the wretched spectacle of professedly orthodox Christians publicly avowing their union with those who deny the faith, and scarcely concealing their contempt of those who can not be guilty of such gross disloyalty to Christ.' This being the case he retires at once and distinctly from the Baptist Union, urging that as the Baptist churches are each one of them self-contained and independent, and the Union being only a voluntary association of such churches, it is a simple matter for a church or an individual to withdraw from it. Mr. Spurgeon does not blame the Union for 'harboring errors of the extremest kind,' for he says 'so far as we can see, it is powerless to help itself even if it wished to do so.' Replying to the question, 'Why not start a new denomination?' he says it is a question for which he has not any liking. There are denominations enough in his opinion, and 'if there were a new denomination formed the thieves and robbers who have entered other 'gardens walled round' would climb into it also, and so nothing would be gained. Besides, the expedient is not needed among churches which are each one self-governing and self-determining; such churches can find their own affinities without difficulty, and can keep their own coast clear of invaders.' In conclusion, Mr. Spurgeon says, 'Oh that the day would come when, in a larger communion than any sect can offer, all those who are one in Christ, may be able to blend in manifest unity! This can only come by the way of growing spiritual life, clearer light upon the one eternal truth, and a closer cleaving in all things to Him who is the Head, even Jesus Christ.' This decision of Mr. Spurgeon will be regretfully received by the Baptist denomination generally, for at the meetings in Sheffield, when it was hinted that he intended to leave the Union, an urgent though unofficial wish was expressed that he would not go to that extreme, and that even if he did, pressure would be brought to bear upon him to reconsider such a decision."—London (Eng.) News.

God has a people in the midst of Babylon, (confused and corrupted Christianity), and the "voice from heaven" (Rev. 18:4) has been calling to that "people" within her borders since over sixty years ago, (Doc. Cov. 1:1-4; 34:3; 84:1; 108:2,4), saying; "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."—Rev. 18:4.

There are various kinds and classes of sins, because there are various kinds and classes of laws. Law is an authoritative rule of action, and "sin is the transgression of law." The sins of "Mystery Babylon" are doubtless very numerous, and very great; and perhaps none of them are so seductive, delusive and full of harm as are those doctrines, dogmas, theories and administrations by which she makes "all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication;" (Rev. 14:8); and by which "the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication."—Rev. 17:2.

It was predicted in holy writ that "the kings of the earth" would commit "fornication" with her; (Rev. 17:2); and this manifestly alludes to the anti-Christian doctrine and administration of blending Church and State. Jesus said emphatically, "My kingdom is not of this world;" therefore whoever seeks to make it of the world, they thereby violate a basic and indispensable principle of the religion of Christ.

"Mystery Babylon" (confused and corrupted Christianity) has "made the inhabitants of the earth * * * drunk" with the mixed "wine" of her mysterious, mystifying, contradictory, irrational and anti-biblical theories, doctrines, dogmas, ceremonies, ordinances, and pretended spiritual powers and graces—doing much of it, if not all of it, professedly in the Christian name, and pretendedly under the sanction, direction, permission and authority of Jesus Christ. Measure her doctrines and works by the divine patterns in the Bible, and they are found sadly wanting. Apply the line, the plummet, the compass and the square furnished in the word of God, and measure "Mystery Babylon" within and without, in part and in whole, from foundation to capstone, and it will readily be seen that she is widely and radically different from the "habitation of God" (Eph. 2: 22) set forth in the New Testament by Christ and the apostles. But however false her pretensions, however erroneous and unbiblical her doctrine and her works, she nevertheless has broad dominion; her bands and her defenses are strong, and only the Infinite One can subdue her, destroy her, or deliver from her power. This He has promised to do; this He is doing; and this he will continue to do till, like her ancient prototype on the river Euphrates, she sinks to rise no more. In her pride, her wealth, her worldly skill and wisdom, and in her widely extended dominion and influence, ancient Babylon sat "a queen," and flattered herself she would "never see sorrow." But "in one hour" her fall came. Influences and processes had been at work quietly, but steadily, to that end, for many years, in many places, and with many peoples. To all this she was blind. But that eye that never sleeps was seeing; that ear that is ever open was hearing; that hand that never wearies was moving in the wonderful procession of the divine plan till the appointed time arrived, and only then she awoke to the stern realities of her own overthrow on finding her mailed captors within her own walls and within the very gates and corridors of her own palaces. So it is, and is to be, with "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH." The elements of her downfall are already within her borders. God's "people" in the midst of her He is now calling, and bids them "Come out of her." And it remains for divine wisdom and divine power to "overturn, overturn, overturn," by means of His own selection and using, to effect the warning, the way of escape, and the perfect deliverance of His "people" from her seductive, hurtful power.

The Church and the name of Christ have been used to aggrandize and support the State, and to honor and enrich the few at the expense of the many. On the other hand, the power and prestige of the State have been used to give place and power and wealth to the Church and its ministry at the expense of justice, mercy and truth. These are crying evils wherever they exist, and are doomed to exposure and overthrow, whether in Utah, England, or elsewhere.

As for Mr. Spurgeon, he is a whale of his kind; but he will find that the sea in which he swims, and He that made both him and the sea, are vastly greater than he. Jesus claimed to teach the "doctrine" and "commandments" given him of his Father, (John 7: 16; 8: 28; 12: 48-50), and he said it would be "more tolerable" for ignorant or heathen sinners in the day of judgment, than for negligent, wilful, or self-righteous professors. (Matt. 10: 15; 11: 20-24). But how can this be, if there is but one lot and part for all classes of sinners, and that lot consists in being thrust eternally into a never ending hell as "Old Orthodoxy" teaches.

Jesus taught further; that sinners would be punished in proportion to their sins, for the reason that some would be held more accountable—or be accountable for more—than others. (Luke 12: 47, 48). How can this be if all sinners are doomed to the same condition and punishment, both as to extent and degree! Jesus also taught that men were sinners only when they had knowledge of the right and the true, or the way to attain it, and they did not accept and comply with them. (John 9: 40, 41; 15: 22). Paul, (Rom. 1: 21), and James (James 4: 17), both of whom were eminent apostles of Christ, teach the same doctrine. How then can it be that unnumbered millions of earth's unchristianized children are, and will be, doomed eternally to a never ending hell, when they have never known the gospel of Christ, and some of whom never had an opportunity of knowing of it, or of hearing that there was such a thing, or even such a person as Christ! God, it is evident, holds all men responsible for their opportunities, and then for the use they make of them. Therefore they will be held accountable by and for the law and the light they sin against; and so long as sins are not remitted in and through Christ, they remain in force against the individual just in the degree of their sinfulness—and no more—hence sinners will be "judged according to their works," in kind and degree, and a just measure will be meted to every one "according to his deeds."

Inasmuch, then, as God is so just as to discriminate in respect to degrees of sin and punish transgressors only according to the measure of their sinfulness; and inasmuch as untold millions have never heard the gospel of Christ in this life, and therefore have never sinned against the knowledge of God revealed therein, why will Mr. Spurgeon and his like deny to them the opportunity of hearing it in the spirit world? It is a comforting fact that "Our Savior Jesus Christ * * hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel;" (2 Tim. 1: 10); and is it just, is it in accordance with the love and wisdom of God, that the knowledge of this soul-cheering fact should be denied the heathen and billions of others in this life and also in the life hereafter? But if this life is the only probation that the souls of men can have, then such is the case, and then less than one in twenty of Adam's race can ever hope in him whom St. Paul declares to be "the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe."—1 Tim. 4: 10.

But St. John knew more of these matters than Mr. Spurgeon; and besides this, he had not been made "drunk" with "the wine" of Mystery Babylon; but, seeing in the clear light of divine revelation, he declares that all will learn of both God and the Lamb, for he says: "And every creature which is in heaven and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."—Rev. 5: 13. St. Paul teaches similarly, for he says: "For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God."—Rom. 14: 11. All these scriptures teach that, at some time, all the race will learn concerning both God and the Lamb. And now Peter, who is a most competent witness, testifies clearly that some will learn of them in the "prison," in their spirit state, and that this is for the purpose of enabling them to "live according to God in the spirit" and eventually "be judged according to [in the same manner as] men in the flesh."—1 Pet. 3: 18-20; 4: 5, 6.

Did it ever occur to Mr. Spurgeon, and his like, that the final, "eternal judgment" of God is not passed upon man before death; nor at death; nor in the intermediate state; but that it follows after his resurrection? And is it not to be inferred from this fact that all the conditions essential to a full, just, merciful and perfect judgment, are not complete until after the resurrection?

This article is lengthened much beyond what was intended in beginning it; therefore we will close by saying that, God is turning on the light in these latter days, and the dark and crooked ways of "Mystery, Babylon" are being laid bare; the vile contents of her bewildering "wine" cup are being discovered and exposed, for "the everlasting gospel," with its ever attendant blessings of knowledge and wisdom and power has been restored by an angel from heaven, (Rev. 14: 6-8), and the time has come for Mystery Babylon to fall, and her fall to be followed by the glorious advent of our Lord, crowned and kingdomed, (Rev. 14: 14-20), to reign with his Saints. Mystery Babylon, and her conflicting systems of theology, are coming to judgment; the cramping, contradictory, corrupting creeds under which the people have groaned and murmured for centuries past are being weighed in the balances and found wanting. Religious freedom is asserting itself; priestcraft is on the retreat; right reason and progressive knowledge are moving steadily forward; and if Mr. Spurgeon and his kind, the English Church, and the Utah Church, do not move on with the procession, it will prove to be their misfortune and their loss, and perhaps be a hindrance and a stumbling block to others. Daniel predicted that in "the time of the end, many [of God's servants] shall run to and fro, and [divine] knowledge shall be increased."—Dan. 12: 4.

FRIENDS have sent us copies of the following clipping from the Chicago Inter-Ocean, asking to know if it is genuine, to which we reply, No. First, for the reason that there is not, nor has there ever been a "Second Book of Mormon;" therefore, second, "the Mormons" do not "consider these books in the same light that Christians consider the Old and New Testaments." Third, Joseph Smith never claimed to translate anything from "two large copper plates;" fourth, he never claimed to find on any plates figures of "crowns, the crucifixion, and other such signs;" fifth, he never pretended to translate with "magic spectacles" at Nauvoo, or anywhere else, "copies and descriptions" of hieroglyphics that had been "sent all over the old world to prominent hieroglyphists for translation." Here is the clipping:

"SECOND BOOK OF MORMON.

"METAMORA, Ill., Jan. 30th.—The Inter-Ocean of the 27th contained an account of the origin of the 'Book of Mormon,' which reminded your correspondent of what he knows of the translation and origin of the 'Second Book of Mormon.' Every one who is at all acquainted with their history will know that this Second Book came to light just prior to the evacuation of Nauvoo, and that the Mormons consider these books much in the same light that Christians consider the Old and New Testaments.

"An account of the origin of the Second Book may prove interesting to most of your readers. After having read the statements to follow all will agree that it is not only possible, but very probable that the First Book was no more of divine origin than the Second Book.

"The facts are as follows: Some time before the demise of Joseph Smith, the Mormon leader, one Mr. John Fugate, who then lived in or near Quincy, Illinois, conceived a little plan by which to startle the natives. He obtained two large copper plates of a blacksmith (whom, of course, he had to let into the secret) and they thereon engraved, by the use of wax and acid, some signs and symbols. The plates were mostly covered, I think, with a writing very similar to the Egyptian hieroglyphics, and around on the margin were figures of the sun, crowns, the crucifixion, and other such signs of similar character. And then with paint, or acid, and iron filings they covered them with a very good imitation of rust. They then bound them together with a rusty wire, went to the woods and buried them between two huge flat stones, and down deep in an old Indian mound. They covered them up carefully, replaced the sod and dirt and awaited developments.

"On a day that there was a big religious gathering in town they went to the woods with the avowed purpose of excavating a well-known Indian mound, and returned with these plates. Of course their find soon became known and everyone in town was interested, and particularly so when the rust (?) was taken off and the marks exposed.

"Joseph Smith, hearing of this and seeing therein a strong hit in his favor, obtained possession of the plates, proclaimed them to be connected with the Mormon religion, and set about to have them translated. For this purpose they, or copies and descriptions of them, were sent all over the old world to prominent hieroglyphists for translation. But the problem came back unsolved, and many letters were written to Mr. Fugate concerning the same. Undaunted, however, Smith put on his magic spectacles and proceeded to translate from them the Second Book of Mormon.

"This is not quite all. Mr. Fugate, thinking the joke had gone far enough, told the whole affair to one of the leading Methodists in town. The Methodists immediately spread the news far and wide. Owing to the anger of the Mormons, Mr. Fugate was obliged to quietly leave to avoid being murdered by them. Mr. Fugate died at Camp Point, Adams county, three years ago, but his wife and all his family still live. His oldest son, Dr. J. T. Fugate, of Urbana, Illinois, has all the newspaper reports, documents, and letters concerning the case, and would no doubt be glad to verify these statements to any person skeptically inclined."

The transaction to which the above probably relates, and (if so), of which it is a false and misleading perversion, is described as follows by John Hyde in his book against "Mormonism," pages 265-269, when arguing and seeking to explain away the divine origin of the Book of Mormon:

"It is a fact that Smith did copy some characters on to a slip of paper, which he sent by Martin Harris to Professor Anthon. It is also a fact, that the description of the characters made by the Professor, does somewhat resemble the description of the glyphs of Otolum, made subsequently by Professor Rafinesque (Atlantic Journal, 1832, Professor Rafinesque). Of this similarity O. Pratt makes great capital as a proof of the Book of Mormon. I admit the resemblance. It is also a fact that eight men testified that Smith had shown them several plates curiously engraved; that they 'did handle and left them;' and that they knew Smith had them. Although, as before shown, these plates could not have been the pretended golden Bible, yet I think there can be no doubt that these men told the truth as to seeing and handling certain plates, and that Smith had them. Unless Smith had got something, he could never have originated the idea of the book; could not have copied the characters sent to Professor Anthon by Martin Harris; still more, those characters could not have happened to resemble engravings subsequently found; and as these eight do not pretend, as do the three, to have seen them with all the ridiculous concomitants of the eye of faith and coming of angels, it is reasonable to believe that Smith really possessed some plates. If their testimony be credible, it proves that he not only had them, but that he kept them, and not delivered them 'up to the angel,' as he elsewhere pretends. To possess the plates is one thing, to have received them from God is quite another. To admit that he had them does not admit the truth of the Book of Mormon.

"How did he get them?"

"On the 16th of April, 1843, a respectable merchant, by the name of Robert Wiley, commenced digging in a large mound near this place. He excavated to a depth of ten feet, and came to rock. On the 23d, he and quite a number of the citizens, with myself, repaired to the mound, and after making ample opening, we found plenty of rock, the most of which it appeared had been strongly burned; and after removing full two feet of solid rock, we found plenty of charcoal and ashes; also human bones, that appeared as though they had been burned; and near the cephalon a bundle was found, that consisted of SIX PLATES OF BRASS, of a bell-shape, each having a hole near the small end, and a ring through them all, and clasped with two clasps. The ring and clasps appeared to be iron, very much oxydated: the plates first appeared to be copper, and had the appearance of being covered with characters. It was agreed by the company that I should cleanse the plates. Accordingly, I took them to my house, washed them with soap and water, and a woolen cloth; but, finding them not yet cleansed, I treated them with dilute sulphuric acid, which made them perfectly clean, on which it appeared that they were completely covered with characters, that none, as yet, had been able to read. They were found, I judge, more than twelve feet below the surface of the mound.

"I am, most respectfully, a citizen of Kinderhook," "W. P. HARRIS, M. D."

"The following certificate was forwarded for publication at the same time:

"We, citizens of Kinderhook, whose names are annexed, do certify and declare, that on the 23d of April, 1843, while excavating a large mound in this vicinity, Mr. R. Wiley took from said mound six brass plates, of a bell-shape, covered with ancient characters. Said plates very much oxidated. The bands and rings on said plates moldered into dust on a slight pressure."

"ROBERT WILEY,	J. R. SHARP,
GEORGE DECKENSEN,	IRA S. CURTIS,
W. LONGNECKER,	FAYETTE GRUBB,
G. W. F. WARD,	W. P. HARRIS,
	W. FUGATE."

"The characters on these plates also resemble Professor Anthon's description: 'The characters were arranged in columns like the Chinese mode of writing, and presented the most singular medley I ever saw. Greek, Hebrew, and all sorts of letters, more or less distorted, were intermingled, with sundry delineations of half moons, stars and other natural objects, and the whole ended in a rude representation of the Mexican Zodiac.' (Professor Anthon's letter.) Professor Rafinesque describes the glyphs of Otolum, Mexico, as being 'written from top to bottom like the Chinese.' 'The most common way of writing is in rows, and each group separated.' (Atlantic Journal for 1832.) This similarity between the characters on Wiley's plates and Professor Rafinesque's description, does not prove that Wiley got his plates from an angel. However much the characters on Smith's plates may have resembled either of the above, it does not any the more prove that Smith got his plates from an angel either.—Mormonism by John Hyde.

Of this matter the Times and Seasons published in Nauvoo, Illinois, May 1st, 1843, only a few days after the alleged discovery of the above plates, has this to say:

"ANCIENT RECORDS.

"Circumstances are daily transpiring which give additional testimony to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. A few years ago, although supported by indubitable, unimpeachable testimony, it was looked upon in the same light by the world in general, and by the religious world in particular, as the expedition of Columbus to this continent was by the different courts that he visited and laid his project before. The literati looked upon his expedition as wild and visionary, they suspected very much the integrity of his pretensions, and looked upon him—to say the least—as a fool for entertaining such wild and visionary views. The Royal courts, aided by geographers, thought it was impossible that another continent should or could exist; and they were assisted in their views by the learned clergy who, to put the matter beyond all doubt, stated that it was contrary to Scripture; that the apostles preached to all the world, and that as they did not come to America it was impossible that there should be any such place. Thus at variance with the opinions of the great, in opposition to science and religion, he set sail and actually came to America; it was no dream, no fiction, but a solid reality; and however unphilosophical and infidel the notion might be, men had to believe it; and it was soon found out that it would agree both with religion and philosophy.

"So when the Book of Mormon first made its appearance among men, it was looked upon by many as a wild speculation, and that it was dangerous to the interest and happiness of the religious world; but when it was found to teach virtue, honesty, integrity and pure religion, this objection was laid aside as being untenable. We were then told that the inhabitants of this continent were, and always had been, a rude barbarous race, uncouth, unlettered, and without civilization. But when they were told of the various relics that have been found indicative of civilization, intelligence and learning; when they were told of the wealth, architecture and splendor of ancient Mexico; when recent developments proved beyond a doubt, that there was ancient ruins in Central America, which in point of magnificence, beauty, strength and architectural design, would vie with any of the most splendid ruins on the Asiatic continent; when they could trace the fine delineations of the sculptor's chisel on the beautiful statue, the mysterious hieroglyphic, and, the unknown character, they began to believe that a wise, powerful, intelligent and scientific race had inhabited this continent; but still it was improbable, nay, almost impossible—notwithstanding the testimony of history to the contrary, that anything like plates could have been used anciently; particularly among this people. The following letter and certificate, will perhaps have a tendency to convince the sceptical, that such things have been used, and that even the obnoxious Book of Mormon may be true; and as the people in Columbus' day were obliged to believe that there was such a place as America; so will the people in this day be obliged to believe, however reluctantly, that there may have been such plates as those from which the Book of Mormon was translated.

"Mr. Smith has had those plates; what his opinion concerning them is, we have not yet ascertained. The gentleman that owns them has taken them away, or we should have given a facsimile of the plates and characters in this number. We are informed however, that he purposes returning with them for translation; if so, we may be able yet to furnish our readers with it.

"It will be seen by the annexed statement of the Quincy Whig, that there are more dreamers and money diggers than Joseph Smith in the world, and the worthy editor is obliged to acknowledge that this circumstance will go a good way to prove the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. He further states that, 'if Joseph Smith can decipher the hieroglyphics on the plates, he will do more towards throwing light on the early history of this continent than any man living.' We think that he has done that already, in translating and publishing the Book of Mormon, and would advise the gentleman and all interested to read for themselves, and understand. We have no doubt however, but Mr. Smith will be able to translate them."—Times and Seasons, vol. 3 p. 185.

Kinderhook and not Quincy, many miles distant, is where these plates were said to have been discovered.

We are not aware that Joseph Smith ever claimed to have translated the above mentioned plates, or accepted them as genuine, much less to translate a "Second Book of Mormon." There are many newspapers and their correspondents ever ready to cry "hoax!" "humbug!" "delusion"!!! and yet when weighed in the balances they are found to be the class foreshown in the Scriptures who are "deceiving, and being deceived." This Inter-Ocean correspondent is one—but not a very brilliant one—of that despicable class.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE are continually receiving words of commendation for the HERALD, and we occasionally publish some of them. If we sought for these only as we strive to make our paper worthy, we should feel guilty and under condemnation. But when they come entirely unsolicited, either directly or indirectly, we think they are the spontaneous, honest utterances of faithful hearts deeply devoted to the interests of the church and the salvation of souls. Why is it not equally proper to publish commendations of our church publications as it is to publish similar words in respect to the ministry? We delight to do the latter; and we see no reason why we should not gratify at least some of our patrons when commending our church literature. We would despise to boast of our own efforts or glory over our own work. But when others speak well of them we feel gratified and encouraged, and we may be pardoned for publishing some of their kind words. But we hardly expect to please everybody.

Where it reads "Book of Rules," on page 132, last issue, it should read Rules of Order.

Sister Walker requests us to say, that she has now mailed copies of the January number of Autumn Leaves to all parties having ordered the same; and if any omissions have occurred, parties should at once send notice of the same. Those desirous of obtaining a complete set of the first volume, should not delay sending in their names early, as the number is limited.

Elder E. C. Brand informs us that he has lately organized a branch at Flagler's, Iowa, with thirteen members.

Bro. E. W. Nunley, of Wheelock, Texas, is recovering his health, preaches what he can, and says conviction and conversion follow.

Bro. D. S. Crawley is preaching at Weir City, Kansas, and at other points in that region. He reports large attendance on his services, and excellent interest. He feels keenly the need of correcting the errors of those who hold that the followers of Christ must keep the seventh-day Sabbath.

We are pained to chronicle, in the obituary column, the sad death of Bro. George W. Stone. We have known him from his boyhood as a person of excellent character, a member of one of the best families in the vicinity of Amboy, Illinois. We trust he has found acceptance and rest with the spirits of the just in the paradise of God.

Bro. Justice Smith says he was baptized last March by Elder J. J. Cornish, at Bay Port, Michigan, and rejoices in the knowledge and blessings of the gospel.

Bro. P. B. Seaton writes that Bro. J. C. Clapp and himself have been engaged at different points in Tennessee and Kentucky of late. He finds Bro. Clapp an able and efficient minister, whose labors are highly appreciated. The Saints and friends in that region are anxious that General Conference shall send him to that field for future work.

February 23d, Bro. E. L. Kelley wrote us from Los Angeles, that the outlook for the work is good in Southern California.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser wrote us from Lowry City, Missouri, the 21st ult., saying he baptized two the 20th, one of them a lady who had not left her bed for five weeks previous.

Bro. E. Keeler wrote from Twin Falls, Kansas, the 23d ult., sending $10 in advance on subscription for church publications to aid in purchasing our new Babcock press, and says:—"I am preaching all the time and can begin to see some fruits."

By letter dated February 24th, we learn that Pres. J. Smith would leave San Francisco for Los Angeles, Monday, February 27th. His address while there will be No. 116, Bunker Hill avenue.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. S. S. Thornton wrote us February 17th from Rexburg, Idaho. He says there are openings in that region now for preaching; that the Brighamites do not meet him with such harshness as hitherto; also thinks he can soon get subscribers for church publications. Bro. Thornton expresses delight in the communications of "Burr Joyce" and the testimony of General Doniphan in late Heralds, and says:

"My heart swells with emotion of no ordinary character on reading these, for I was acting under Lyman Wight at Diahman, in the persecutions of 1838. I went through many hair-breath escapes in those times, and could tell many heartrendering circumstances through which we passed there. I rejoice in God that the truth is coming forth in plainness through the instrumentality of Joseph and his able co-workers."

He further says a railway has been located down Snake River Valley near them, and that markets and other conveniences will soon be at hand.

Bro. W. A. Bennett, of Graham, Texas, wrote us February 20th, asking that an elder be sent there to preach at Whitt, Keech's, Bryson, Tonk Valley and Albany, and says further:

"I am confident an elder would be well supported, and I know one could thus do a good work for the Lord. The people seem anxious one should be sent here. If any of the Saints think of ever moving to Texas, now is the accepted time. The ground is thoroughly wet, so we have great hopes for good crops."

BRO. JOHN HEIDE, of Fulton, Iowa, sends us the following from the "Jackson Sentinel," (published, we think, at Maquoketa, Iowa) in items from Newcastle:

"The announcement of a discourse by the Rev. John Said for Sunday evening, February 12th, coupled with the rumor that the props would be knocked from under the Mormons, was the occasion of a crowded house to hear the fun. He carried himself nobly, reviling none, pleasing all who heard him.

Elder J. S. Roth, of the Latter Day Saints, addressed a full house of courteous and interested listeners on Saturday evening, February 18th, on the subject of Brigham Young in history and prophecy. The Elder challenged proof in rebuttal of his positions, and although some demurred and asked pointed questions, the querists themselves were made "Nolens Volens," witnesses on the elder's side to the no small amusement of the audience. It was clear to all that Brigham Young's pet doctrines are in very bad odor with the church the elder represents."

Thus the distinguishing differences between Brighamism and the original faith of the Latter Day Saints is brought to the notice of the people. This is needed work.

"I feel the earth move sunward,
I join the great march onward,
And take by faith while living
My freehold of thanksgiving."

THE OLD HYMN.

To-day, with quiet heart, I heard
The prayer, the anthem and the psalm,
And gently on my spirit fell
The sweetness of the Sunday calm,
Till, at the reading of the hymn,
With sudden tears my eyes were dim.
That old, old hymn! Its sacred lines
Had fallen on my childish ears;
My life turned back, unhindered by
The stretch of intervening years.
Near me my little daughter smiled,
And yet I was again a child.
Outside the winds were fierce and rough,
The winter's chill was in the air;
But I could hear the bonny birds,
And humming insects everywhere;
And feel, in spite of frost and snow,
A summer breeze from long ago.

To find the place I took the book,
And held it in a woman's hand,
While all my soul was moved with thrills
No other soul could understand;
And quite unseen, with love divine,
My mother's finger folded mine.

And now, although the music rose
Exultingly, I held my breath,
Lest I should lose its sweet delight—
Upon her lips the hush of death
For years has lain!—and yet I heard
My mother's voice in every word.

Full well I know the dead are dead,
Yet sometimes at a look or tone,
With short relenting, will the past
One moment give us back our own.
Oh, happy pain! Too quickly done—
As swiftly ended as begun.—Sel.

DON'T BOX THE EARS.

BOXING the ears is a too common form of punishment practiced by irritable and ignorant persons, and it is almost always done in fits of sudden anger. I say done by irritable and ignorant persons, because it seems to me that no person of any information on the subject would allow his passion to get the better of his judgment in such a matter. The drum of the ear is of a paper-like thinness; it may, and has been, in numbers of cases, ruptured by a single slap on the side of the head, incurable deafness resulting. Says an eminent physician: "All strokes on the head of children with an angry hand are brutal and criminal." In the same connection he adds that "a generous, wise and humane parent should allow a night to intervene between the commission of the fault on the part of a child and any decided punishment. The veriest thief should be allowed time, lest the law should be vindictive and wrathful. And shall a man or woman punish an unresisting child with angry inconsideration, with unreasoning wrath in the heart. It is monstrous."—Sel.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 29th.

JONESPORT, Me., Feb. 18th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—The sun has sunk below the western hills, and twilight has wrapped her cold, gray mantle o'er the earth,

"And darkness
Falls from the wings of Night,
As a feather is wafted downward
From an eagle in his flight."

One by one those far away sentinels appear in the fathomless depths of blue, and girdling the heavens is that grand galaxy of stars so far remote from earth that apparently they are so near together as to form one vast glimmering belt of light. As we gaze upon the magnificent scene before us, and realize that every star is a sun, and every sun the center of a solar system like our own, with its planets, and they in turn with their satellites, performing their rotations and revolutions with such accuracy, and in such harmony with the laws governing them, that there is not a jar nor discord; but all is one grand harmony, we involuntarily exclaim: Is it possible that the Great Architect of this universe, that mighty being who sits in yonder heaven surrounded with angels and archangels who bow in humble adoration, and the very courts of heaven resound with their acclamations of praise,—that He communes with, and is interested in the eternal welfare and redemption of humanity? For a moment it is almost enough to stagger the human intellect; but the answer comes ringing down through the ages: "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son." No wonder angelic hosts from the courts of heaven sang "glory to God in the highest" on that memorable night, and that the plains of Bethlehem reverberated with their glad chorus of rejoicing, and to-day mortal tongues take up the glad refrain and reiterate the notes of joy and praise; for Jehovah again communes with mortals as in days of yore; and we do not have to search the ruins of antiquity for some sacred relic of the ancient apostles; for we have had a veritable, living one in our midst of late—Apostle E. C. Briggs, who held meetings nightly and three times on Sunday for nearly six weeks in succession, to deeply interested audiences, eloquently and beautifully portraying the glory and beauty of the resurrection, and making a grand distinction between salvation in a celestial glory and that of some other; also treating upon other interesting subjects too numerous to mention. He was assisted by Bro. U. W. Greene, a promising young elder, who bids fair to make one of the great men of the future. As a result of their efforts four souls were led down into the waters of baptism, and several others gave in their names who will unite with the church at an early day.

We have also been visited by Elder John Smith, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, who came here under the direction of the Bishop to teach us the financial law more thoroughly. In him the church has a staunch defender of this principle of its faith. The law of tithing was presented in such a manner, that any person of ordinary intellect could not fail to comprehend the principle involved. Passages of scripture which before had been enveloped with the mists of ages were now made clear and satisfactory to our minds. For instance, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and thieves do not break through nor steal." Why the Master should use the name of that class of people who are predisposed to appropriate other people's property, in connection with treasures in heaven, if it referred to our good deeds, we never could tell; but now we know they do not come to steal our deeds but our money, and the only place where it will be perfectly safe, is to lay it up as treasure in heaven, by giving one-tenth of it to the Lord. Again, "He that tithes himself shall not be burned at His coming." For he has laid up treasures of gold and silver, which can stand the purifying process by fire, with only the loss of the alloy; while he who has not tithed himself, his works, which are compared to hay, wood, and stubble, will be burned up, and he will appear before the lord of the harvest empty handed. We who comprehend the law and fail to keep it, will in the language of the Bishop of the church in a late article in the Herald, "have to rise to the sublime occasion of giving all that we have."

I have a request I would like to make of the sisters who may read these lines, that you will offer prayer in behalf of Sr. Sarah Smith, who is afflicted with heart disease, and in a very critical condition. She is a widow with two children who are of that age when they most need a mother's care and counsel. We also need her services in our Sunday School and meetings, where she has been a faithful worker.

Our Sunday School is still flourishing under the superintendency of Sr. E. M. Walker, who is an able and efficient worker. Our "juvenile choir" is the admiration of all who attend our school and meetings. They sing with a will and spirit which oft times brings tears to the eyes of the listeners.

"Autumn Leaves" is just grand, and worthy of a welcome in every home in our land. May its publisher long live to edit its pages, and continue the grand work in which she is engaged.

Your sister in Christ,

LIZZIE WOODWARD.

PANAMA, Iowa, Feb. 6th.

Dear Sisters:—There are only a few of our people here, yet we have preaching when an elder can be procured. Brn. Chambers and Seddon, of Persia, spoke for us in November, and in December Bro. Charles Butterworth, of Dow City, and Bro. Warren Peak, of Harlan, delivered nine discourses. Bro. Peak also delivered two sermons Sunday, February 29th; I think good was done.

There is nothing I love to read better than the correspondence and Home Column, for in them we find food for our souls. I sometimes think how little a sister can do, when so much is to be done; but we can help some by scattering books and tracts, also by our daily walk. I seem to see the harvest, and the reapers toiling on for the good of mankind. Some have been sounding the gospel for years, and others are being sent at the close of the day, all working for the same reward. Dear sisters, let us pray for the reapers, for their work is great. Let us petition the Lord to send more laborers into the harvest, for the prayer of faith availeth much.

I would like to tell you what I saw in a dream, on 2d February last. I saw an image of a man, beautiful to behold. It was of stone, finely worked and clear as glass. This dream troubled me, and I prayed for the interpretation. The next night I again saw the image. It was in three parts, but so closely connected that it looked like a perfect whole. It was shown me it was the priesthood. Would some brother be kind enough to write an article on the priesthood? I love this work we are all engaged in. I have had many testimonies of its truth.

Your sister in bonds,

ISABEL WILDER.

BUFFALO, Iowa, Feb. 8th.

Dear Mothers and Sisters:—Travel-worn and weary, with the weight of accumulated years upon me, yet comforted and sustained by the Holy Spirit of promise I come to you; and with a gentle rap at the door of the Column, ask admittance. And now, I fancy I hear Sr. Frances say, Come in; we gladly welcome the old veterans of the cross, and we cordially invite the young soldiers.

Thank you, my sister. I come to offer a word in testimony of the truth of the great latter day work in which we as Saints believe—to the truth of the glorious gospel of Christ as it has been restored to the inhabitants of the earth in our own day and generation, and that, too, by angelic administration. I profess to have gained a knowledge of its truth by a careful research and close investigation of the Holy Scriptures, which I found upon studious examination to harmonize beautifully with this latter day message—this proclamation of truth. And so, my dear sisters, with an honest heart I accepted it; and went forth in obedience to its holy commandments, giving thanks to God our heavenly Father that he gave me sufficient humility to accept of the gospel in his own appointed way; yes, praise his holy name.

The Mother's Home Column, how we love it and the letters it contains! We rejoice to know that we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses as come to us every week in our beloved Herald. Sisters Emma and Eleanor and a host of others are wielding a good influence with their pens. May God bless their efforts. I, too, have a word of counsel for young sisters in the church. If I were permitted I would say, dear young Saints, beware of a vain and trifling spirit; too much joking and levity will grieve the Spirit of God just as certain as water will quench fire. And a word about the "great army of gnm-chewers." If you don't belong to that army, I do hope you never will; and if you do, take a mother's advice and quit it. Don't you think it unbecoming to a Saint, and unladylike in any one? I do. Jesus has gone to prepare a place for us, dear sisters, and there will be no tobacco or gum-chewing there.

Your sister in hope,

M. RUBY BALDWIN.

LONDON, Feb. 4th.

Feeling lonely and somewhat down-hearted, I thought if I wrote a little to the Home Column it would help me. I like the Herald; it is well worth reading, and it cheers me to hear how this work is being scattered far and wide. How I would like to meet all the Saints whose names I read in the Herald. I know if I am faithful I shall, one day; if not in this life, in the one to come, when the earth is purified and Christ shall reign with His people. God forbid that any one after obeying this gospel should return again to the world. There are many things that seek to draw us away from the truth; but if we hold fast to the rod of iron and walk in the path of duty we shall be able to overcome through Christ who strengthens us. I wish to thank sister Eleanor for her kind words of comfort. They have strengthened me and I feel encouraged to press on. I am trying to put on the whole armor of God, that I may withstand the temptations of the wicked one; for the signs of the times plainly show us that we are in the hour of temptation.

The first month of this year I have been led to reconsecrate myself, body and soul, to the service of my Master; and I desire to add to my knowledge that zeal that will enable me to render service that will be acceptable to God, and to show to those around me that there is a reality in this work, and that I possess what I profess. We are the lights of the world and we (myself as well) should let our lights be burning so brightly, and shed such an influence around that others would see our good works, which should be to the honor and glory of God, and be led to investigate for themselves. I can not speak of this gospel as others can; but I can live it in my daily life. I think if we love it we should prove it by our walk and conversation. I have made many mistakes in my past life that I would recall, but I can not. The past is not mine, but the future is, and it rests with my own self whether it is spent in the service of God or not. It is my whole desire so to live that I may have God's Spirit to be with me to guide and direct me in all ways, and to lead me in the paths of righteousness, till I have finished my course and run the race that is set before me, ever looking unto God who is the author and finisher of my faith. I do not take the Herald, but it is loaned to me; and I leave it where my own people can read it if they wish, for they are prejudiced against the work, and have forbidden me to have any of the church books. I do hope they may see something in them that will cause them to give more than a passing thought to this gospel, and cause them to search for themselves; and if it is done with an honest heart and desire after truth, God will reveal it unto them as he did to me. I will close now, asking the blessing of the God of Israel to rest and remain with all His Saints and with all who are working for the advancement of His cause.

Your sister in the bonds of faith and love,

GIRTIE.

Correspondence.

PLEASANTVILLE, Iowa, Feb. 23d.

Dear Herald:—You are the representative of a great and glorious work which is making its mark in the world, and is becoming honorable. I have sounded the gospel trumpet as circumstances permitted, and have been much blessed with the Spirit, having great liberty of speech, and I think some will in the near future be gathered into the fold of God. Was it not for the knowledge I have of this great latter day work, I would not and should not make a gazing stock of myself; but having a perfect knowledge that it is God's work and the dispensation of the fulness of times, I am willing to endure many things, and would like to endure all things. I often feel that the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak. Here is Paul's definition of the fruits of the Spirit: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another."—Gal. 5:22-26.

When I put myself in the balance, and these weights on the beam, I tell you, dear Saints, I fear lest I be found wanting. It is true we have been engrafted "into the vine," and if we continue and abide in the vine, and his words abide in us, we shall ask whatsoever we will it shall be given unto us. The vine we have been grafted into is productive of wisdom, knowledge, healing, miracles, discerning of spirits, tongues and interpretation of tongues. Outside of this we do not find the fruits of the kingdom. And because these fruits are not there, some say they are done away, and no longer needed. To me this is not strange. It would be very foolish to seek in a pine forest to gather apples, pears, peaches, or other fruit than the pine. The Savior says, "Ye can not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles." I enjoy the Home Column, and have felt the melting love of the Holy Spirit accompanying many of the letters. May its luster never grow dim. There are not many labors in this part of the vineyard, and it is very large. But there are a few who try to build up the work and are Saints indeed, keeping the "unity of the Spirit, in the bonds of peace."

DAVISON, Mich., Feb. 21st.

Brother Blair:—I left Juniata the 13th inst. and came here to administer to one not of the church, but strong in faith. She is a daughter of sister Mary Henderson of this place, and has been treated by three different physicians. She read the Voice of Warning, and became convinced of the truth. I administered to her the same day I came, and began to hold meetings. I preached four times last week, and twice on last Sunday, and yesterday I baptized six. This is the place where Bro. C. Scott preached a few years ago. The work is rolling on. At our confirmation meeting we were all blessed, and all bore testimony to the truth. Last Saturday night I endeavored to show the difference between the doctrine taught by the Saints and the people of Utah. One man said in meeting, "Oh I know what you are, you are a Joe Smith man. You worship Joe Smith." I could not stand it to hear him talk in that way, so I asked him if he knew what a Mormon was. He then got mad swore at me and would have struck me perhaps, but the men listening took hold of him. Satan is working and people are being convinced of the truth.

Yours,

E. DELONG.

JUNIATA, Mich., Feb. 28th.

Editors Herald:—I came here on 20th inst., and have been laboring ever since. I have made one new opening and preached twice there. On the 25th was called away to preach the funeral sermon of old sister Hemingway, and came back the same day. On the 27th I baptized a Methodist preacher. When I first came here he fought us hard, but he finally gave up, came right out and told the people he had been preaching false doctrine; and he asked them to forgive him. He told them he now had seen the true light, and so called for baptism. I believe he will be a good help to the cause. Yours,

J. A. CARPENTER.

NORTH MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.,
February 23d.

Dear Herald:—Last November I concluded to not leave this city, but resolved to stay and help my neighbors. I settled down to loaning the Voice of Warning and explaining questions asked me. On the 12th of last December it was published in the North Minneapolis Chronicle that if I could find that a gunning party would be organized. But I did not scare. I continued, and then Rev. M. W. Montgomery gave a lecture on Mormonism and raked us well, classing us with the Utah Mormons. On last January, 25th, I attended his meeting. He made a specialty of classing our people with the Utah Church, giving the congregation the third time to understand we were liars all alike, polygamists and murderers from the beginning, and disloyal. I asked the privilege to correct the gentlemen, and did so as to our disloyalty to the Government, read from the Doctrine and Covenants the article on Governments. But they would not let me say anything on polygamy, saying, "We know Mr. Montgomery is a truthful man." Then two Reverends got mad, spit fire, and tried for ten or fifteen minutes to raise a mob. I made many friends. The Star-News published a piece in our favor, and denounced the Reverends.

On February 12th I was called to speak at the funeral of a neighbor's wife and son. And by request I spoke in a hall on the 13th of February, and will speak again on the 26th. All seem well pleased. The Spirit attended my effort. What results will be, I can not say. I went to meeting intending to speak on certain parts of Scripture, but changed my subject some. One man said, "If people can't understand that, they do not want to understand." A lady said the other day if I preached that kind of doctrine I would get half the town. Bro. A. H. Smith, if in Minnesota, will please send me his address, and say what time he will start for the General Conference, that I may write him further.

THOS. M. PARR.

SILVER HILL, Ark., Feb. 16th.

Bro. Blair:—Since I wrote to the Herald last I have had various experiences. Shortly after I arrived here I thought I would help the Lord a little, so I commenced to work to help defray expenses. I did not work long in this way until I was taken with a severe illness, and at one time my friends gathered at my bedside to see the last breath leave me. While I was sick I was enabled to see what appeared to be the way I would have to travel after my spirit left the body; but I could not see what kind of a place I was going to. I have often thought I would be afraid to die; but when it seemed the time had come, it rather brought peace than fear, and I had rather have went on then than remain. It then seemed that I could to some extent at least, realize some of the attributes of God, especially His love, justice and mercy. When I recovered from this condition, (some said I was insensible), it seemed that I had been dreaming, and had seen the things mentioned, also a struggle between spirit and body—the spirit trying to depart, but hindered by a very small cord which seemingly held it back. I now began to get better, in some respects, but I was still suffering the most severe pains. One day I got a little ease and fell into a slumber when a man came to me and told me the cause of my suffering. I then made a promise that, if I got well, I would do my duty better, I would spend all my time, and that when I could not meet with the people and speak to them publicly I would visit them at their homes and talk to them and leave the result with God. I had thought I was doing that which would be for the best before I got sick. Since I got well enough I have been fulfilling my promise as far as my health permits. In my public ministrations I have had better liberty and a clearer understanding of the work than ever before. After I recovered sufficiently to commence work, I began by trying to get the branch here in better working order. But there has been as yet no visible change for the better. I then went to Walnut Springs where a "door" was opened, and now prospects are flattering.

Thence I went to Friendship and Bog Spring churches. At each place there are most flattering prospects.

Last Sabbath I went by request to the Valley School-house, but no appointments had been made. I listened to a Baptist divine at eleven a. m. During his discourse he told us we had "something to do," and if the congregation didn't mind when the "great whistle blown" they would not be ready. I then obtained permission to use the house, and will see them in the future. New calls are still coming in from different places.

"Autumn Leaves" far exceeds my most sanguine expectations. God bless sister Frances in her noble work. Yours,

A. J. CATO.

FULTON, Iowa, Feb. 27th.

Bro. Blair:—The Saints in this branch are scattered—ten of us are near here, and eleven fifteen miles away. There is no priest at this end of the branch, but we have prayer and testimony meeting once a week and we are blessed—not with the gifts, but we are strengthened. Bro. Maitland was with us two months, and Bro. Roth one month, including conference at Clinton, Iowa. They spoke at Fulton and New Castle, opened a new place at Iron Hill, spoke there eight times, and then the church was closed on us. We had good meetings, large congregations, many old people turned out to hear, and there was a good interest worked up, with some almost persuaded. May the Lord lead them aright. There are still four School-houses open for us. Babylon seems to unite against God's chosen people. Christ said, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake."

I can say this work is true, this work is of God. We "endure sound doctrine," and have no mutilated gospel. Oh, the glory of this latter day work!

Yours,

JOHN HEIDE.

DAVISON STATION, Mich., Feb. 24th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I write to let you know what the Lord is doing for his people here. It is seven years since I obeyed the gospel, and I have never been sorry for it; but I have stood alone, for my family and friends were opposed to the Church. I have prayed all this time that the Lord would in some way open the eyes of my family to the truth, and I feel to-day to thank my heavenly Father that my prayer has been answered. It came about in this way: My daughter Ila was taken sick one year ago this month; her physician said she had a combination of diseases, and it was a very complicated case. Five different physicians have prescribed for her, but the disease baffled the skill of them all. About seven weeks ago my niece came to visit us. She is a believer in the restored gospel, and we were talking on the subject, and my daughter became interested in our conversation. One of her physicians advised her to read a little every day to keep her mind from her sickness; so she asked me for some reading concerning the restored gospel; I gave her the Voice of Warning to read, and about one week from that time she called me to her bed and told me she wanted me to send for the elders, "For," said she, "I know I shall never get well unless the Lord heals me." I sent immediately for the elders. Elders E. Delong and J. A. Carpenter came; they administered to her, she was helped immediately, and in four weeks from that time—which was last Monday, the 20th of February—she was baptized, with five other members of my family after hearing five sermons from Bro. E. Delong.

Last evening an old lady sixty years of age came in the rain three miles to our meeting to be baptized. We assembled at the water about nine o'clock in the evening for baptism, with the rain pouring down upon us. This sister had rheumatism very bad, and it was quite difficult for her to get into the water, but she came out whole, so she declared to the people. Others are believing, and we hope they will soon obey.

Your sister in the faith,

M. L. HENDERSON.

GIRARD, Minn., Feb. 18th.

Dear Herald:—I write you a brief account of Bro. A. H. Smith's visit to us. After advertizing for him through the Herald I found he was neither "lost, strayed, nor stolen," but was at work for the Master in this Northern Minnesota district. I met him January 2d, looked him over and concluded he was a true son of a noble father, and was a servant of God called to labor and warn the people of the events that are to shortly come on the earth. After a short stay with Bro. J. R. Anderson and family who did all they could to make our stay pleasant, we went to Silver Lake with Bro. Alonzo Whiting. Our trip was pleasant, for though the roads were bad, the company was good. We found father and mother Gould and their children glad to see us. From there we went to the town of Maine, where Bro. Alexander preached two good sermons which were much enjoyed. We stopped at Bro. Barnhard's and were well cared for, I did not enjoy my visit at Silver Lake as well as usual, for brother and sister Clayton Gould were not there. I missed them and that spiritual communion I have enjoyed with them. But we know if we are faithful we shall meet with them again.

From Bro. Barnhard's we went to Bro. Frank Sherman's, and Bro. Alexander preached once with good liberty and had close attention. "Bread cast upon the waters returns after many days." While at Bro. Sherman's the storm came that brought so much suffering and death. We did not realize the fury of the storm, for we were well sheltered, but were snow bound here and took things easy. I talked and sung and Bro. Alexander tended to his affairs. Our lot was cast in a pleasant place, Bro. and Sr. Sherman and family doing all they could to make us comfortable. We next visited the Luce Saints, held two meetings and hope good results will follow. Bro. and Sr. Dinehart, Bro. Omans and Sr. Crane and family, are here. Bro. George Crane took us with his team to Lake View, to Bro. Tabbut's, dining on the way at sister Albertson's who with her husband treated us kindly. On the 22d held meeting at Bro. Tabbut's, but roads so bad that only sister Keith and husband were present besides Bro. Tabbut's family. These Saints are strong in the faith and full of good works and words. The next day Bro. Tabbut took Bro. Alexander to Cormorant, to Bro. McLeod's, and I went home. Bro. Alexander commenced work at Cormorant January 29th, preaching every night. Two were baptized, Bro. and Sr. Ellsworth. Had some opposition, but we don't scare. Bro. and Sr. Way came twelve miles, over bad roads, but felt repaid for their labor. Bro. McLeod sent out the word far and near, and none entered more fully into the joy of the harvest than did he and sister McLeod. May God keep them faithful to the end, and for their kindness to us reward them in this life also. There are a number of active Saints here, but it would make this letter too long to mention all by name.

Bro. Alexander preached his last sermon at Clitherall, February 12th, to a good congregation. I parted with him with sorrow. He has the prayers of the Saints here. We love the memory of his father, and we also love his sons. God bless and guide them in their labors; and may it be said of them, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many."

I am visiting and preaching among the Saints, and they are trying to keep the commandments.

Yours in the love of Christ,

T. J. MARTIN.

ALLENDALE, Mo., Feb. 23d.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Since coming here from home the 10th I have been preaching each evening, except on one occasion Bro. John Moore occupied the time and gave us a good sermon. He rendered good aid while he stayed, in the way of opening services. He left the 16th for his field in Nodaway county.

The opposition forces in this place have weakened a good deal since last summer. The meetings they started this time failed entirely. Some of the old and hardened opposers of God's law and gospel still circulate falsehoods, and try to keep from our meetings all new-comers. But these few men are meeting with the contempt that people find they deserve; for investigation proves fully their baseness and dishonesty, their trickery and untruthfulness.

Have baptized five persons this week, all adults, making with those last summer nineteen persons that I have baptized here during the past thirteen months, sixteen of them being married people. The resident brethren and sisters fell that they are getting their reward for the years of faithful labor they have bestowed. I am doing Church writing by day getting ready for Conference. Will be at home next week, I expect.

Your brother in hope,

H. A. STEBBINS.

VINITA, I. T., Feb. 23d.

Bro. Blair:—My companion, Bro. John Davis, has gone to Kansas, and Stephen Maioney is forty-five miles south of this city, so, as usual, I am alone. But I know the Lord is on my side, and will be so long as I fulfill my part. I have opened up in two churches in this city, and I preached one discourse four miles south. The interest seems to be good, and prejudice is giving way. I wrote a short article for the Vinita paper. The editor said he would publish it next week, and I have asked the Tablet papers to please copy. Should they do this, it will give the people to understand that the original doctrine and faith of the Church does not incorporate polygamy. I think it will do good. I have done the most of my labor in Southern Kansas and over in Missouri. As long as I can find work every night I feel well; and this has been the case, either preaching or visiting from house to house. Visiting in this Territory is what the elders will have to do more or less, or run over a large field of uncultivated ground. This is a peculiar mission. Should the Church think best to keep elders in it a mission should be established. A missionary in this Territory is entitled to fifteen acres of land, and upon that they may put as much improvement as they wish. The missionaries would be allowed to reside and labor in the Nation without a permit. Then in this way we would have a head-quarters.

The most good that I seem to be doing is by breaking down prejudice and gaining friends. I have opened up eleven places where no preaching has been done by us until I opened up. It seems to be a bold thing for an elder with my want of ability, naturally, to go into a city or among wise, thinking men, and introduce our faith and doctrine, it being so unpopular, but I have yet the first place to fail in this.

I have been well treated in this Territory by the Methodist and Baptist missionaries. I am inclined to think this will not last long, for I heard a deacon say Sunday, "If you continue to preach such doctrine as you now do, you will get all the good people of this town and every last colored man." I don't expect to see this Nation converted in a minute, but I truly believe the gospel should be preached to them. If it was not for my afflicted ankle I would feel all right. I shall endeavor to endure patiently. It is encouraging to hear the good news of good things in the Lord from abroad.

JOHN HAWLEY.

MAUD, Kansas, Feb. 21st.

Dear Herald:—I was a slave to the use of tobacco for near twenty years. About eight years ago I came to the conclusion that if I did not quit the use of it I would not live long, for I was a perfect invalid. But to quit the use of the nasty weed was a great task, as all tobacco users can testify. One day Bro. George Green, when at my place, said he had quit chewing tobacco, (he was the proudest man I ever saw); so he told me his experience and said he had went to the Lord in prayer, feeling he alone had not strength to quit its use, and asked for help; and the result was, the appetite was taken from him. This was before I was baptized, but I believed the doctrine of the church. I studied the matter over and made up my mind that the Lord was no respecter of persons. "Faith comes by hearing," and I therefore tried the same remedy, and received the great blessing, and more, for it was to me a great testimony of the great latter day work.

I write this that it may be a help to some who have not power in themselves to throw off the habit. All Latter Day Saints believe that God will answer their prayers. And we have no reason to doubt, for he says in the Scriptures, "Ask, and ye shall receive." In the Word of Wisdom in Doctrine and Covenants the Lord says to his church: "And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises and all sick people, to be used with judgment and skill." Think of it, brethren. The Lord says it is a remedy for "sick cattle." And will God's people spend money for the stuff to smoke, chew and spit away, while that money, if given to the Bishop and spent in sending the gospel to the nations of the earth would be the means, no doubt, of many an honest heart receiving the gospel. How many elders are there who are tied at home because too poor to preach without means to sustain their families? too poor to even have fit clothing to occupy the pulpit, while thousands of dollars are spent for tobacco, coffee, tea, and strong drink. How long will this continue to be the case! May the Lord inspire all to adhere to the Word of Wisdom.

Your brother,

I. N. DELONG.

FORSTER, Australia, January 1st.

Dear Herald:—This is the first day of the year 1888; and how many of us shall live to see the last day of the year? We know not what shall come to pass neither would it be God's will for us to know; but we have time left us for reflection on the past, and to examine ourselves and see have we lived in accordance with the will of the Lord. Oh! that we all could be able to say "Yes." We all have had our troubles more or less. Stay; consider; have we not been the cause of those? Or has the Lord sent them for His own wise purpose? What is our life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away. May our faith be stronger in the Lord, for faith truly enriches the soul. Faith gives the soul propriety to all the rich consolations of the gospel; to all the promises of life and salvation; to all needful blessings. It draws virtue from Christ to strengthen itself and all other graces; and the greater our business, by so much the more need we have to pray for God's good-speed and blessing upon it, seeing it is certain that nothing can prosper without His blessings. What do we owe our Lord? We can not tell. Therefore, be our money millions or mites; be our talents ten or two; be our hearts young and green, or seared and withered, lay them all at our Savior's feet. Let his glory be our glorious aim. Raised far above the common objects and base pursuits of the world; this is an end worth living for. A life such as that, elevating and ennobling the humblest lot, shall command the regards and fix on us the gaze of angels. Lofty ends give dignity to the lowest of fices.

Let us learn first, says Paul, to show religion at home. Religion begins in the family. One of the holiest sanctuaries on earth is home. The family altar is more venerable than any in the cathedral. The education of the soul for eternity, begins by the fireside. The principle of love which is carried through the universe, is first unfolded in the family circle. However humble the Christian's walk, or mean his occupation, it matters not. He who lives for the glory of God has an end in view which lends dignity to the man and his life. A man of piety may be lodged in the rudest cottage, and his occupation may be only to sweep a street, that through the honest and diligent doing of his duty God is glorified and men are led to speak and think better of religion, and he forms a link between earth and heaven. He associates himself with holy angels; and though at a humble distance treads in the footsteps of that blessed Savior who, uniting divinity to humanity, as our Maker made all things for himself, and as our brother—man, whether he ate or drank, or whatever he did, did all to the glory of God, and doing so left us an example that we should be baptized for the remission of sins; that we should follow his steps. Reader, go and do likewise; glorify God and you shall enjoy him. Labor on earth and you shall rest in heaven. Christ, judges them to be the men of worth who are the men of work. Let our lives, then, be more devoted to his service—now for the work; hereafter for the wages; earth for the cross, heaven for the crown. May we all so work that we shall indeed be able to receive our wages from our Heavenly Father.

What unspeakable comfort it is for a poor soul that sees nothing but sin and vileness in itself, to see at the same time what a high esteem and value the great God has for it! Remember that God will suit your strength to the work He appoints for you; and in the hardest service you shall have the greatest assistance. There is no higher honor than to be engaged in the service of God. When God would honor his Son, He sent him down to earth to be a servant of men. This was the language of God from eternity:—"I will glorify my Son."

To be in Christ is to be safe in life and death; in time and eternity. To be out of Christ, is to stand exposed every hour to the most appalling danger!

SISTER COLVIN.

DECATUR, Neb., Feb. 21st.

Bro. Blair:—We have had some good preaching in these parts by Brn. Rumel and Whitney. The Campbellite champion showed his cloven foot, but the Saints all feel good and think of a surety that the cause has lost no ground. One was added to the church by baptism. It was a heartrending scene. She has consumption in the last stage. She was baptized in the house, in a tank, by Bro. Rumel. She has been convinced of the truth of the work for years, but for some cause did not obey. I ask the Saints to pray for her that she may remain with her family. She is a noble woman.

Yours in the one faith,

WM. W. WALTER.

THE DREADFUL DEMING.

A PERSON named Arthur B. Deming has begun the publication of a paper which he calls "Naked Truths About Mormonism." It will be given in monthly doses at fifty cents per year, or five cents per copy. He begs the public, Mormon or otherwise, to buy, as he wishes to obtain means to exhume and re-inter his father, who had the misfortune to be buried in a cemetery which has since been utilized as a pasture lot for horses and cows. In the meantime he will indulge his ghoulish propensities, he hopes with profit, by slaving with his imbecile and obscene drivel, the reputation of other people's fathers and mothers, provided they are dead and unable to call him to account. In short, one way or another, he lives on the dead, and has added new terrors to the grave.

At the top of the first page of his paper he says,—“Read and laugh as you never laughed before.” There is indeed matter for mirth in his paper, but not in the way he intended. Where he and his statement-makers intend to be merry, they are sad, shallow or disgusting, but when they mean to be serious, then they are foolishly funny.

Having paid my “nickle” on Mr. Deming's representation that his was a humorous paper, I shall endeavor to obtain mirth to that amount, and being of a benevolent disposition, I will try to place the same within the reach of others, freed from the gratuitous nastiness with which the Deming school of humorists embellish their remarks. Remember, the distinguishing trait of Deming's character is ghoulishness. To be attacked by him, you must first be dead. So, too, his most “edifying” statements are not published during their author's lifetime. He usually collects such from the mumbblings of irresponsible dotage, possibly supplying whatever malice and depravity they may require to bring them down to the Deming standard, after which he waits until the alleged author has, as he says, “departed in the triumph of a living faith,” and then he rushes into print. In fact, there seems to be a sad fatality about making a statement to him. Deming appears to be a synonym for death. After a “Salutatory,” Mr. Deming begins his “Introduction” thus:

“While fasting and reading the Old Testament in New York City, in 1880 or '81, I was strongly impressed that I had revealed to me (not by Mormon Revelation) the principal reasons for great intellect in children. While on a visit to Boston, in September, 1881, I spoke to a prominent physician about it. He replied it was new to him, and said, ‘Talk it wherever you go.’ I did as far north as Minneapolis, Minnesota, and west to Colorado and Salt Lake City, where I was kindly received by leading Mormons.”

It is deplorable that those no doubt occult reasons for “remarkable intellect in children” were not revealed to the ancestors of Mr. Deming. He states elsewhere that he has written much presumably valuable matter on the subject of “heredity;” that his paper is a “Journal for newly apprehended truths,” and that if those who believe in the Book of Mormon, will read his paper, it will make them “free.” In other words, he will teach you that the gospel plan of salvation is out of date. That you are not responsible for your meanness. Blame it on your grandmother, especially if she is dead.

During Mr. Deming's stay in Salt Lake, he was the guest of Gen. Wells, concerning whom one of his paragraphs reads as follows:

“One evening the General commenced to preach Mormonism to me. He began about Bro. Joseph and the Hill Cumorah. I laughed and said, None of that, it would do no good. I afterward regretted I did not hear his argument. He desisted, but in a few minutes handed me the Wells genealogy, and requested me to read a statement he showed me. It read: ‘In 1666, at Wethersfield, Connecticut, Gov. Thaddeus Wells married Elizabeth Foot, daughter of John Deming,’ and then he claimed a relationship, and to make it stronger he offered me two of his daughters, before I left the city, who were own sisters, for wives, which offer I declined (no reflection intended towards the ladies, one of whom has since married and died with her first child).”

However it was, by missing Deming, in the language of sweet Ophelia, she “made a good escape.” It is not certified that either of the girls was a party to the proposal for Mr. Deming's hand; and if it was made at all, doubtless Gen. Wells was merely working that fund of merriment of which Mr. Deming is unconsciously the source. It is not my wish to defend any of the heresies which were introduced by Brigham Young to subvert the faith once delivered to the Saints, but I protest that the sins of Utah will become respectable if they are long opposed by such men as Mr. Deming. He makes no distinction between the genuine church and the Utah counterfeit. He does not attempt to refute our doctrines, but preferred rather to breathe the venom of his slanderous breath upon the record of the man through whom the everlasting gospel was restored to earth; the man who was faithful unto death; the man who exchanged a world unworthy of him for a martyr's crown in heaven.

Early in life, Mr. Deming appears to have manifested that peculiar kind of thrift for which he has ever since been remarkable. He remarks that when a mere child, it was his business to show visiting "Mormons" through the Carthage jail and describe to them the killing of Joseph Smith and his brother by the mob. Occasionally, he says, in delightful retrospect, they gave him a "picayune or bit." His mother told him the "Mormons" were poor, and not to accept anything from them. He adds, "I did not knowingly," and, considering how little he knows to-day, it was no doubt true. He says, "I write these few of many similar facts to convince all Mormons that from childhood I have been friendly to them." It is evident, however, that he uses the word "friendly" in its cannibalistic sense merely.

Concerning Mr. Deming's father he states, that pending his trial for killing a man in self-defense, he "Removed his flannel during a very hot day late in August, and caught cold, which resulted in brain fever, from which he died September 10th, 1845, within twenty feet of where the Mormon prophet was shot. During his sickness, when delirious, four men were required to hold him in bed; he said they were coming to kill him. His dying request to mother was to give the boys educations if able, if not trades."

He informs the reader that sixteen horses and two or three cows now crop the herbage above his father's grave. His uncle is buried there also. As an extenuating circumstance he observes:

"Instead of purchasing another lot in some better-kept cemetery, and removing my father's and uncle's remains, I have devoted my time, and all the money and aid I could earn, borrow, or beg, with scarcely any assistance, in continuing my search for the evidence needed to prove the true origin of Mormonism. Various persons have respectfully called me a fool for so doing."

Not for this reason only, but owned and operated by A. B. Deming, a victim of circumstances, heredity, and newly apprehended truths. Fifty cents per year. Reduced rates to the "zealous" among the clergy and to young ladies Seminaries, if Deming succeeds in eluding the vigilance of Anthony Comstock. The paper differs from the Police Gazette in having no pictures. It is also a hundred times more destitute of truth.

No doubt some well-meaning persons, ignorant of Mr. Deming's character, (or want of it), and of his methods and motives, have been betrayed in stating an opinion or telling what their fathers said that they had heard, but when, in the first number of his paper, they see Deming display the vacuity of his mind and the foulness of his heart, in simpering unconsciousness of his awful state, such decent persons will blush that a mistaken sense of duty ever led them on general principles. I think most people will reaffirm the verdict with the "respectfully" left out.—Perturbed shade of Deming pere, rest! Although thou didst defy the laws of hygiene by braving the inclemency of a hot August day flannelles, yet as soon as thy ghoulish offspring has finished his present "Burking" operations with sufficient profit, he intends to dig thee up!

Mr. Deming declares that his father was a friend to the "Mormons," and that although all his own misfortunes through life can be traced infallibly to that friendship, he is yet more friendly than was his father; and if they doubt it, just let them buy and read the "evidence" he intends to offer. Professing zeal for the spread of his alleged evidence, he has copyrighted the contents of his paper, and no "esteemed contemporary" shall quote more than one column, stating that said column has been taken from the "Odorous Excavator," to give their names to a creature whose acquaintance is polluting; whose praise is infamy; whose enmity is renown.

The favorite theory of those who have sought to disprove the Divine origin of the Book of Mormon, has always been that Sidney Rigdon obtained it at Patterson's printing office in Pittsburg, where it had been left by Mr. Spaulding, and that he gave it to Joseph Smith. By the most conclusive testimony, the whereabouts of the Spaulding Manuscript has been accounted for until long after the publication of the Book of Mormon. It has been proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that during all this time it was either in the actual or constructive possession of Mr. Spaulding or the heirs; that after the publication of the Book of Mormon it was obtained by a person [Doctor Hurlbut, Ed.] engaged in collecting material for a book against the Latter Day Saints, under the supposition—the bare theory—that Sidney Rigdon had copied it, and that the person obtaining it afterwards informed Mr. Spaulding's widow that, as it did not read as expected, it would not be published. Since then this manuscript has been recovered from Mr. Rice, late a resident of the Hawaiian Islands, and it has been published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to show that it could not have been the basis of the Book of Mormon. True to his ghoulish nature, Mr. Deming leans upon his scythe, shakes his hour-glass encouragingly, and when he learns that the receivers of the Manuscript (Hurlbut and Howe) are actually dead, he informs the world that undoubtedly Mr. Howe sold the real Manuscript to the "Mormons" who destroyed it, and that the one now found was a different one altogether, written, however, he admits, by Mr. Spaulding. Nay, should you find a thousand of Mr. Spaulding's romances, (the man being dead), Mr. Deming stands ready to assure you, on the honor of an honest body-snatcher, that he wrote still others!

In like manner it has been proven over and over again by unimpeachable witnesses, that Joseph Smith never saw Sidney Rigdon until after the publication of the Book of Mormon and the organization of the church. So long as these men were alive, no one ever attempted, by direct testimony, to prove to the contrary. Nor, indeed, for years afterward. That exploit awaited the ripening mendacity of Arthur B. Deming. When reliably assured that all the parties competent to deny and disprove his statement are dead, he discovers a lady in San Francisco who once saw Sidney Rigdon at Joseph Smith's house. She was told that it was Sidney Rigdon by Saphronia, Joseph Smith's sister. Mr. Deming informs his readers that in some cases he does not give the exact words of his gossips, but interrogates them, doubtless encouragingly and suggestively, (one victim for "two days and two evenings"), taking notes the while, and when the unlucky wretch is quite exhausted and calls for fresh air, Deming selects such parts as he thinks will be marketable, and weaves them into a "statement" with the Deming flavor of clumsy fraud and imbecile malice infused, by which time the victim is willing to sign anything if it will only purchase his absence. In this way appears to have been evolved the "statement" of the lady in question. She says, or is made to say, that she once saw a stranger at Mr. Smith's house, and that Sophronia Smith told her it was Sidney Rigdon. She does not say, (even Deming does not make her say,) that this was before the publication of the Book of Mormon; but Deming asks the reader to infer, nay, to consider it proven that it was so. But if the lady should hereafter state that it was prior to that publication, would such evidence, in the light of the facts, have anything to commend it to any man or woman of candor and intelligence? What are the facts? All the persons against whom she would thus testify, have long been dead, and are therefore unable to deny and refute her testimony. They were, however, alive for years after the inferred occurrence, during which the Rigdon theory was often asserted as a matter of opinion, but never as a matter of fact. During this time no device was left untried to prove the collusion of Sidney Rigdon, and without success. In vain did they search for facts to fit their groundless theory. And why? Simply because there were no facts. The witnesses to prove the falsity of that theory were then living. They did prove it time and again. There are those living to-day who can prove it, but such are not the persons whom Mr. Deming's "statement-makers" quote. These content themselves with telling what persons long dead told them; and this, frequently with a false construction placed upon it, is brought forward by this professional defamer of the dead, as "evidence," forsooth! Upon such "evidence" the Son of God was crucified. Upon such "evidence" Stephen was stoned to death.

Upon such "evidence" Joseph Smith was murdered by a mob, for teaching none other things than Jesus commanded and the apostles taught; even that gospel concerning which Paul said, "Though I or an Angel from Heaven, preach any other gospel, let him be accursed." And yet devils, with only the transparent screen of A. B. Deming held up before them, can enlist Methodist ministers and a Bishop in making war against that gospel and those to whom it has been "the power of God unto salvation."

So far as regards Mr. Deming himself, it is not easy to be indignant. He is rather an object of alternative amusement, pity, and contempt. But what shall we say of the reverend gentlemen who, with the Bible in their hands, applaud this creature for assailing the very essence of the Bible? One of those reverend gentlemen, who in early life was "soundly converted," and "preached Methodism for fifty years," made a statement to Mr. Deming which Ananias would blush at. With a Satanic faculty of invention, he slanders the sainted mother of men whom all decent opponents respect; men whose lives are stainless monuments of integrity and of sacrifice for righteousness and truth. With unholy glee he relates approvingly, acts and intended acts, whose authors must have been among the vilest that ever disgraced the name of man. This statement was not published until after the maker of it, as Mr. Deming remarks with extreme unction, had "departed in the triumph of a living faith;" therefore, how much of it is his and how much Deming's, it would be hard to tell.

Mr. Deming avers that he expects to be killed; he is obliged to be constantly on the alert to escape the sanguinary designs of parties vaguely described as "Danites." At a certain period the editor of the Presbyterian Banner writes, rejoicing to hear that Mr. Deming was still alive, and saying it had been reported that he had fallen a victim to the "Danites!" Make yourself easy, Mr. Editor. Your protege has about him that mark of imbecility which shall be as servicable as the brand of Cain. There is one person, however, that he should avoid, and that is the "fool-killer." Deming, beware!

And it is by such men as Mr. Deming, and by the methods he employs, that the enemy of souls now attempts to assail the gospel of Jesus Christ, and to make men satisfied with substitutes for it and perversions of it, knowing that the authorized administration of its original ordinances turns men from the power of Satan unto God.

Little children, called to be Saints, know ye that He in whom ye have trusted, is faithful. Be not faithless, but believing. All power is given unto Him in heaven and on earth. It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. When there was no eye to pity and no hand to save, God committed the everlasting gospel to you through the prophet whose testimony ye have received. Concerning those who persecute you, pray as the Son, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Speak comfortably to my people. Pray for the peace of Zion. They shall prosper who love thee. Can a mother forget her sucking child? Yea, she may forget, yet will not I forget thee. As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort thee. I was angry, and hid my face for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I remember thee.

RESURRECTION.—NO 3.

AS IN ADAM ALL DIE, EVEN SO IN CHRIST SHALL ALL BE MADE ALIVE.—I COR. 15: 22.

IN treating of this and kindred subjects, if permitted to follow out my plan, I shall do so in the light of the Inspired Translation of the Bible, and also of the Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as the three records which God has given to his church in these last days. I may sometimes refer to the written teachings of Joseph the Seer, when necessary to show how he understood the revealed word. It is with a sense of weakness that I undertake the task, realizing that without the aid of the divine Spirit I can not convey to the human mind a right conception of this glorious doctrine.

The fact that mankind, together with all created things, on this earth, is subject to death, is patent to all who have come to a knowledge of things; but revelation also informs us how death came into the world. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. 5: 12. Although the foregoing scripture was written at least four thousand years after man became the subject of death, it is in perfect harmony with the history of the creation, and the subjection of man to death or the fall of our first parents. (Gen. 2: 8, 22). In Genesis 3d we read of the temptation by the serpent—their yielding to his enticements, and there we learn the penalty that was affixed, consisting in part of death, with their banishment from the presence of their Creator and from the garden of Eden. How truly and strictly that penalty has been visited upon the human race all the dead and dying generations of men too plainly declare to need rehearsing here.

In Genesis 3: 21 we see the first gleam of hope for man, beaming forth from the lips of the Almighty in these words, rebuking the serpent, He says, I will put enmity between thee and the woman; between thy seed and her seed; and he shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel. Here was a promise given that of the seed of the woman one should come forth, who should take away the power of the evil one, and "destroy him that had the power of death." But in order to understand the nature of the hope enkindled by these words in the human breast, we must have some idea of the nature and extent of the results of the Fall. Man was by creation a child of God, and to Him he owed his entire allegiance. "For in him we live and move and have our being."—Acts, 17: 28. "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made."—John 1: 3. "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him."—Col. 1: 16. See also B. M., page 57, par. 7. "For there is a God, and he hath created all things, both the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them is." But when our first parents broke the command of God, they became alienated from him, and became the subjects of the devil; and thus having forfeited their right to his protection and care, they became spiritually dead." Being alienated from the life of God."—Eph. 4: 18. They "were dead in trespasses and sins."—Eph. 2: 1. "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness."—Rom. 6: 16. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin."—John 8: 34. "Wherefore, it came to pass, that the devil tempted Adam and he partook the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment wherein he became subject to the will of the devil, because he yielded unto temptation; wherefore, I the Lord God caused that he should be cast out from the garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression; wherein he became spiritually dead, which is the first death, even that same death which is the last death which is spiritual; which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed."—D. C., p. 118. "And because man became fallen, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord."—B. M., p. 71.

From the foregoing, and many other scriptures, we learn that when man yielded himself to be the servant of sin, he became dead unto righteousness and true holiness and was no longer fit for the presence of God, "For to be carnally minded is death. * * Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither in deed can be."—Rom. 8: 6, 7. This then is spiritual death "which is the first death, even that same death which is the last death," and to be pronounced upon the wicked at the final judgment. Matt. 25: 42, Rev. 22: 11. In consequence of this spiritual death or alienation from God, came the temporal death, or death of the body with its attendant evils. "And unto Adam, I the Lord God, said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hath eaten of the fruit, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it, cursed shall be the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; by the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, until thou shalt return unto the ground, for thou shalt surely die; for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. 3: 23, 25. "Behold it was appointed unto man to die; therefore as they were cut off from the tree of life, they should be cut off from the face of the earth; and man became lost forever; yea, they became fallen man."—B. M. p. 314. "For the wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6:23. With this terrible reality before them, humanity might well exclaim with Paul, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"—Rom. 7:26. No human power could possibly have redeemed man from this spiritual death any more than from the temporal death. Deliverance from the first implies and carries with it deliverance from the second, in God's due time. "And now we see by this that our first parents were cut off, both temporally and spiritually from the presence of the Lord; and thus we see they became the subjects to follow after their own will. Now behold, it was not expected [at this time] that man should be reclaimed from this temporal death, for that would destroy the great plan of happiness; therefore, as the soul could never die, and the fall had brought upon all mankind a spiritual death as well as a temporal, that is, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; it was expedient that mankind should be reclaimed from this spiritual death; as they had been carnal, sensual and devilish, by nature, this probationary state became a state for them to prepare, it became a preparatory state. And now remember, my son, if it were not for the plan of redemption, (laying it aside), as soon as they were dead, their souls were miserable, being cut off from the presence of the Lord. And now there was no means to reclaim men from this fallen state which man had brought upon himself, because of his own disobedience; therefore, according to justice, the plan of redemption could not be brought about only on condition of repentance of men in this preparatory state; for except it were for these conditions, mercy could not take effect except it should destroy the work of justice. Now the work of justice could not be destroyed: if so God would cease to be God. And thus we see that all mankind were fallen, and they were in the grasp of justice; yea, the justice of God, which consigned them forever to be cut off from his presence. And now the plan of mercy could not be brought, except an atonement should be made."—B. M. p. 314, 315.

In the foregoing Scriptures we learn something of the nature of the fall, and also of the nature and extent of the penalty, namely, that the spiritual death involved the temporal death. Our business now is to enquire into the redemption. It must be kept in mind that man having become "the servant of sin." "Sin had dominion over him," both body and spirit; hence he could do nothing to free himself from this fallen state and its consequences. Therefore, if freed at all, it must be by a higher power than man's. We have seen that in the sentence pronounced upon the serpent there was a gleam of hope given to man that at least the power of the serpent should be broken. But shortly after a brighter ray of light shone upon Adam, and a sure and certain hope was given to him of his final redemption, for "the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam, which beareth record of the Father and the Son, saying, I am the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth and forever; that as thou hast fallen thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will."—Gen. 4:9. (Inspired Translation.)

In this we see the manifestation of the infinite love of God toward his creatures. He not only, on account of his foreknowledge that man would fall, had made provision for his redemption through him is recorded as "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," (Rev. 13:8), but in the early morning of man's life, while he was writhing in the agonies caused by his fall and banishment from the presence of his Creator, that Creator condescends to reveal to him the great plan of redemption. How like God! What a loving Father! Man had turned his back upon his Creator, had trodden his command beneath his feet, had spurned his counsel, and in consequence must feel the pangs of eternal shame, having become the subject of death that must be eternal unless some mighty arm can snatch him from its grasp. The only hand that could do this was that of his Creator, the Being whom he had spurned. That arm was already raised, the great work of redemption already begun. The Lamb for the sacrifice was found—He "by whom all things were created," and "without whom was not anything made that was made," had offered himself a sacrifice for the sins of the world. He was accepted, and was considered as we have already written "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Paul was right, "Great is the mystery of Godliness." The carnal mind can not comprehend that mystery. The Almighty is not willing that his erring creature should wander in darkness without one ray of hope, suffer the excruciating pangs of a guilty conscience without even a smile from the face of him against whom he has sinned, or the whisperings of a peace that may yet be enjoyed. He reveals to him the plan of reconciliation whereby he may yet be restored to his Father's family, and again become a son of God, heir to eternal life. He does not, as some think, leave the joyful news, only to be told by angels, four thousand years afterwards. He wants the glad news to reach every heart, not only that of Adam, but of all his posterity, who were as yet unborn, and who had no part in the original crime; but who, being, afterward born of alienated parents, were by nature "strangers and foreigners," and must be heirs to the penalty of death, spiritual and temporal, and subject to the same evil power that ensnared their progenitors. To all of these the glad news must come, and the light of love and truth shine upon their path. Hence, as we have seen, the loving and comforting assurance of redemption, full and free, was given to Adam. Seth, Enos, and all who desired righteousness and truth were permitted to receive this hope of redemption. "And, behold, Enoch saw the day of the coming of the Son of man, even in the flesh; and his soul rejoiced, saying, The righteous is lifted up; and the Lamb is slain from the foundation of the world."—Gen. 7:54. Noah was a preacher of these glad tidings, but a corrupt generation heeded them not. To Abraham, the friend of God, this covenant of peace was revealed, saying, "In thee shall the families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 12:2. "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 22:22. Acts 3:25, 26. It was confirmed to Isaac, Gen. 26:4. And renewed unto Jacob, Gen. 28:14, Gal. 3:8, 14. "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they all drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ."—1 Cor. 10:1-4. This Christ, the seed, who was to bruise the serpent's head,—Abraham's promised seed—was ordained to be the means of reconciliation—the Savior of mankind—the deliverer from spiritual death, that all may become the sons of God. Also "the resurrection and the life," that we may not only be delivered from the spiritual death, but also from the temporal death or the death of the body. That the spirit and body may be again united, a living soul, that "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Many profess to accept the glad news of a spiritual redemption, but question the possibility of a resurrection of the body. Some accept both, yet lack an understanding of the true nature of either. Many of this latter class, are inconsistent with this acknowledged faith in this doctrine, inasmuch as they teach that "when a Christian dies his spirit is immediately carried into the celestial glory, and is placed in possession of the fulness of eternal joy." If this view were correct, that the spirit apart from the body could have this fulness of joy, the resurrection of the body would be a superfluous work, and as the Almighty does nothing in vain, or that is not essential, either the doctrine of the resurrection of the body is not true, or they are mistaken in their view of the perfect enjoyment of the spirit in celestial glory without the body. And if they do accept the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, they should be consistent, and admit, as the scriptures teach, an intermediate state between death and the resurrection. It will be admitted that Christ has been given as a pattern in all things for the government of the Christian's life, and are we not warranted in concluding that he is a pattern also of the Christian's reward, and of his condition between his death and resurrection? It will not be questioned that Jesus knew the provisions made for man between death and the resurrection, and as well as after the resurrection while upon the cross, and in the agonies of death, when the penitent thief uttered his dying prayer, "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," the loving Savior replied, "Verily I say unto thee; To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke 23:43, 44. Yet three days after, when Mary saw him in the garden, and was about to embrace him, "Jesus saith unto her, hold; touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God and your God."—John 20:16, 17. Dear reader, in the light of this word it is evident that paradise where the spirits of Christ and the penitent thief went, was not the abode of the Father. And if Christ was not received into the fulness of the glory of the presence of God prior to his resurrection, can it be reasonable that any of his followers shall be admitted there prior to their resurrection? Further, although prior to his crucifixion we find him praying, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was," (John 17:5), it was not until after his resurrection that we find him acknowledging the answer to the prayer in these words, "All power is given me in heaven and in earth."—Matt. 28:17. Other evidences might be adduced, but to the Bible believer, one testimony from God is ample. We have established the fact from the highest authority that the spirit of man does not enter into the fulness of celestial glory until after the resurrection of the body. For it is written, "The servant is not greater than his lord."—John 13:16.

The class who profess to believe in a spiritual redemption but deny the resurrection of the body, urge that the scriptures do not teach such a resurrection. To prove that the resurrection of the body is an essential part in the plan of redemption, and that such resurrection is taught in Holy Writ will now be our task. First, let us consider the nature of the being whom God created and called man. God tells Moses, "I, the Lord God, formed man from the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Gen. 2:8. It may be remarked here that it is not said that man was a living soul as soon as the body was formed, nor yet the instant the breath entered into his nostrils; but it is said "Man became a living soul." It is very evident from the language of Holy Writ that there are two natures in man, the earthly or physical and the spiritual. The Creator is called "The God of the spirits of all flesh."—Num. 16:22; 27:16. Paul calls him "The Father of our spirits."—Heb. 12:9. Zechariah informs us that God "formeth the spirit of man."—Zech. 12:1. Elihu says, "There is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." From these and many other testimonies we learn that man is composed of spirit and body. Hence when we read that "The Lord God formed man from the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," that now, the tabernacle was prepared for the spirit to take possession, and when that spirit entered, "man became a living soul."

Thus we see the spirit and the body were united by the Creator in this being called man, and if we are to understand the history given by the Lord to Moses in its literal sense then, so long as man obeyed the command of the Creator, this union of spirit and body was never to be broken. In the temporal death the union of spirit and body is dissolved, the cause of the dissolution was sin. Jesus Christ has undertaken the work of complete redemption, not merely a redemption of the spirit, but a redemption of the entire man. This must be a true statement of the case, for it is written: "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1:29. "He shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 2:4. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world."—John 6:51. "The good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep * * * and I lay down my life for the sheep."—John 10:11, 15. O, how great the holiness of our God! For he knoweth all things, and there is not anything save he know it. And he came into the world that he might save all men, if they will hearken unto his voice; for behold he suffereth the pains of all men: yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women and children, who belong to the family of Adam. "And he suffereth this, that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him, at the great judgment day."—B. M. p. 72. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins."—1 John 4:10. "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all."—1 Tim. 2:5, 6. "By whom we have now received the atonement."—Rom. 5:11. Webster defines propitiation, 1, "The act of appeasing wrath and conciliating the favor of an offended person; The act of making propitious." 2, "The influence or effects of the death of Christ in appeasing the divine justice, and conciliating the divine favor. That which propitiate; atonement or atoning sacrifice." The same author defines Ransom, 1, "Release from captivity, bondage, or the possession of an enemy." 2, "The money or price paid for redemption of a prisoner," etc. Atonement is defined, in the second sense as "Expiation; satisfaction or reparation made by giving an equivalent for an injury," etc.

It is evident from the whole tenor of holy writ that Christ was the propitiation for our sins, "a ransom for all," and that by him the atonement was made." Was the ransom paid equal to the debt? Was the propitiation full and complete? Was the atonement sufficiently broad and deep to cover and reach down to the innermost depths of the evil? Let holy writ answer. The grand mission of Christ was to do his Father's will. "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."—John 6:38.

He testifies that he has filled his mission, "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou hast given me to do."—John 17:4. "Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in him. If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him."—John 13:31, 32. Was Jesus glorified in himself? The Son of Man has been crucified, buried, and risen again from the dead. Now hear his triumphant words, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Could there be a greater glorification? See his triumphant ascension: "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight."—Acts, 1:9. His work was accepted, and in this he receives another proof of his Father's approval. "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye see and hear. . . . Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."—Acts 2:33, 36. "Whom he raised from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in heavenly places, far above all principalities, and power, and might and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church."—Eph. 1:20, 22. "For if by one man's offense death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. Therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one many shall be made righteous."—Rom. 5:12-21.

"For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell. And having made peace by the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your minds by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and unreprouvable in his sight."—Col. 1:19, 23.

Yes, the ransom was equal to the forfeiture. The propitiation was full and complete. The Atonement included in its effects the entire "sin of the world," with all the terrible consequences of that sin; Christ is glorified, and God is justified in restoring man to his primitive condition; first spiritually, making him a member of his family, and bestowing his favors upon him; and, second, temporally, delivering the body from the chains of death, in his due time. For if "Christ has reconciled all things unto God by the blood of his cross," surely mankind is redeemed from the pollution of original sin, and placed upon the same footing as Adam before his fall, that is, free from sin, or not having sin imputed to him, and equally free to act upon his own agency, and bear his own responsibility, before the great judge. Christ recognized this truth when he blessed little children and said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." And if delivered from the taint of original sin, or in other words that spiritual death—then the deliverance from the temporal death must follow, or the redemption is not complete, but God's word assure us, as we have seen, that the redemption from death, wrought out by Christ, is complete, and will be realized by all the children of Adam. "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."—1 Cor. 15: 12, 13, 20.

Selections.

WHY DO YE SUCH THINGS?

"WHEREFORE do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."—Isa. 55: 2. It is true that in the direct connection in which this scripture is used, the subject of bodily ailment is not the one under consideration, but it is used as a figure in the great invitation to the gospel board spread with the bounties of God's grace. Nevertheless, the importance of the questions here asked is none the less, in a material sense, but is the rather increased; because if the prophet of God, in inviting men to the provisions of God's house, could find a fit simile only in these things, it shows, as nothing else could, the immense importance of the things themselves.

That this view is just is proved by the fact that God gave to his people explicit directions regarding what they might eat and what they might not eat; and even in the gospel times he gave by inspiration the express "wish" that his people might "prosper and be in health," even as their souls should prosper. And there is nothing more certain than that if men will eat that which is good, and drink and breathe also that which is good, they will prosper and be in health. And more than that, the soul of such a one will prosper better than where the conditions are otherwise. We do not say that to eat and drink and breathe what is good will make a person a Christian, but we do say that the person who does it can be a better Christian than he can if he does not do it. It is evident, on the mere statement of the case, that the person whose vital forces are all properly performing their special functions, being properly supplied with the right materials,—that such a person is better, and can be better in every way, than he could otherwise be.

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?" "Bread" is here used for food in general. Why, then, do you spend your money for hashish, opium, tobacco, alcohol, beer, coffee, or tea? None of these things are food. The tendency of them, one and all, is only to impair the vital functions. Some may think that we have gone too far in including tea and coffee in this list, along with beer, alcohol, tobacco, opium, and hashish. But such is not the case; in that list is exactly the place where they belong, as we see from the following extract:—

"From tea to hashish we have, through hops, alcohol, tobacco, and opium, a sort of graduated scale of intoxicants, which stimulate in small doses and narcotize in larger."—Encyclopedia Britannica, art. Drunkenness.

These things, therefore, each being both simulant and narcotic, can have none but an injurious effect upon the system when habitually used. We repeat: Their only effect is to impair the vital functions. And to do anything which impairs the vital functions, is to strike at the life (for our word "vital" comes from the Latin word "vita," which means life). All this will be readily enough agreed to regarding hashish, opium, and alcohol, and in fact it will be agreed to respecting the other things named, except by those who use them. For a person to use a thing and like it, even though he may have used it for years without any injury apparent to himself, is no proof that it is not an injury to him. The person who is practicing an evil is not always the one who is best qualified to decide the question whether or not he is being injured by it. Many a person who uses whisky, yet who never was drunk, will say, "Whisky does not hurt me;" while every one else knows that it does hurt him. Thousands of men who are addicted to the use of tobacco will say, "Tobacco does not hurt me;" while every one but the tobacco-user knows that it does hurt him, and that its only effect is that of injury. It is so with all the elements in the list we have given; but we do not by any means intend it to be understood that all the things named in that list are equally injurious. Tea is not as injurious in its effects upon the system as opium, tobacco, or alcohol; but its effects are of the same kind, though less in degree. Tea is the lowest in the list, but the whole list, from tea to hashish, forms only "a graduated scale of intoxicants," and "the physiological action of all these agents gradually shades into one another," so that it is impossible to tell where the effect of any one in the list ceases, and where that of the next begins.

It matters not how poisonous or injurious to the vital organs a thing may be, if it can be taken in any perceptible quantity at all without causing death, the repeated use of that thing will create an appetite that can be satisfied with nothing else, while every time the thing is taken the appetite is increased, until at last, in the use of the most poisonous, the terrible habit will absorb the whole being, and bring its victim to a horrible death. This is well known in cases of those suffering from delirium tremens, opium or arsenic eating, etc. The principle of this is shown in the following definition of "vitality," by Baron Leibig:—

"Vitality is the power which each organ possesses of constantly reproducing itself. For this it requires a supply of substances which contain the constituent elements of its own substance, and are capable of transformation. When the quantity of food is too great, or is not capable of such transformation, or exerts any peculiar chemical action, the organ itself is subjected to a change."

The organ may at first raise the whole system in rebellion against that which is given it, as in the first chew of tobacco or the first cigar; but if the wicked stuff be pressed upon it again and again, the organ is forced to undergo a change, and adapts itself to the persistent demands that are made upon it, and becomes perverted, so that the thing against which at first it utterly rebelled, it now must have, and not only that, but will have nothing else. This is the secret of the formation of all the evil habits which are known to the human race. "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Every organ and every function of the human system, God made for good, and only good can come from their proper use. On the other hand, it is safe to say that there is hardly an organ or a function that has not been perverted by the abuse that has been heaped upon it by men, and the result is seen in the mass of misery that fills the world to-day.

Yet from all this Christ will redeem us and save us if we will but yield ourselves, both soul and body, to his gracious control. In closing this article, we can do no better than again to read the text in both its physical and its spiritual meaning: "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? . . . Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."—Pacific Health Journal.

Conference Minutes.

EASTERN.

The above conference was held in Clinton, Iowa, February 4th to 6th, 1888. Jerome Ruby presiding, W. T. Maitland acting secretary. Branches reported:—Apostolic, Jackson, Butter-nut Grove, Davenport; Buffalo, no report. Official reports:—Jerome Ruby, ministered regularly in Davenport. Warren Turner preached continuously, baptized 2, J. S. Roth labored considerably in the district, baptized 5. Priests:—J. R. Johnson assisted the ministry as required, W. T. Maitland preached constantly, baptized 2. Bishop Blakeslee instructed and advised to the edification and comfort of the entire assembly, upon the temporalities of God's kingdom. General Conference was petitioned to return J. S. Roth to this district during the ensuing year. Warren Turner and J. S. Roth were elected delegates to the General Conference. The First Presidency decision in appealed case of the church vs. Addie Briggs was unanimously sustained. The missionary in charge and all the authorities of the church were sustained in right-cousness. Preaching in the evening by Bishop Blakeslee on the law of tithing whereby the Saints were much edified and minutely instructed. Preaching on Sunday forenoon by J. S. Roth. Sacrament services in the afternoon in charge of Bishop Blakeslee, wherein was enjoyed a great degree of the Spirit's prophetic utterance made and fulfilled ere the meeting closed; two administrations to the afflicted resulting in immediate benefit, one of the parties being an outsider, when she found herself helped, asked for baptism. The peace, unity and spiritual enjoyment of this service is certainly without precedent in this district. Preaching on Sunday evening by Pres. J. Ruby. Baptism on Monday by J. S. Roth. Preaching in the evening by W. T. Maitland, followed by instruction to the Saints upon duty—good spiritual meat and in season. Adjourned to meet at Fulton, upon call of president.

SPRING RIVER.

Conference of the above district was held January 27th-29th, 1888, at Bird School-house. Preaching on Friday evening by Bro. Westervelt. Saturday's session Elders D. S. Crawley, John T. Davies, J. Alfred Davies, E. E. Wheeler, Richard Davies, Conrad Severin, J. A. Davies, E. W. Dupue, Isaac Ross, John Thomas, E. A. Davies, John Hawley, J. M. Richards, W. Westervelt, W. Pender, reported. Bro. Hawley had delivered 85 discourses since he had labored in the district; had been much blessed in presenting the gospel. E. A. Davies had one discussion with a Christian minister at Seligman, Missouri, and thought a good impression was left among the people. Others had labored at various times and places, and all seemed to realize that the work they were engaged in was divine. Branches reported:—Pleasant View, Columbus, Mound Valley. Bishop's agent reported:—On hand last report $11.62, received $33, paid out $20, on hand $24.62. Bro. W. Pender resigned as clerk of the district, and J. M. Richards was appointed. J. Alfred Davies was re-elected to preside over the district the ensuing term, which conference is to re-convene at Columbus, Kansas, May 25th, 1888. Preaching on Saturday evening by E. W. Dupue, Sunday morning by D. S. Crawley, evening by John Hawley. Prayer and testimony meeting in the afternoon, at which Bro. Richard Bird was ordained a priest; one child blessed. J. M. Richards, W. Westervelt, Orsen Sutherland, Richard Davies and E. A. Davies, were elected delegates to General Conference.

Miscellaneous.

NOTICE.

John G. Morgan, born 6th Marth, 1848, at Perth, Scotland; baptized September 6th, 1885, at Stewartville, Missouri, by W. H. Kelley, and went the same fall to Pittsburg, Kansas, to work in the coal mines; had the appearance of being a worthy brother, and won the esteem of his acquaintances and love of his brothers. Any information of his whereabouts would be thankfully received by D. R. Baldwin, Stewartville, Missouri.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The annual conference of the Manchester district will convene for the transaction of district Church business at the Latter Day Saints' Chapel, No. 113 Clarendon street, Hulme, Manchester, on Friday, 30th and Saturday 31st March, 1888, at four p. m. The elders and lesser priesthood, will please forward their licenses and reports of labor; and branch officers, in addition to licenses and reports, will also forward statistical, financial, and spiritual reports of their respective branches, to the district secretary, Elder James Baty, No. 2 Chapman street, Hulme, Manchester, not later than Monday, 26th March, 1888.

JOSEPH DEWSNUP, Pres.
JAMES BATY, Sec.

The Texas Central district conference will meet at Elmwood branch, Bell county, 23d of March, 1888; it being Friday night before the full moon in said month. All persons concerned will take notice and govern themselves accordingly. E. W. NUNLEY, Dist. Pres.

The Central Kansas conference will convene at Netewaka, Jackson county, March 17th and 18th, 1888. A full representation is requested. All the officers should be present, either by person or letter, as there may be business before this conference that all are interested in.

DANIEL MUNNS, Dist. Pres.

BORN.

BLANCHARD.—A son born to Ether and Silvia Blanchard, of Springville, Utah. In answer to prayer December 10th, 1886, and named Ether Archillis. Blessed February 9th, 1888, by R. J. Anthony and Ezra Strong.

KILLIAN.—To Henry and Sarah Killian, of Salem, Utah, a son; named Henry Earl. Blessed by R. J. Anthony and Thomas Burt, February 15th.

BRATTON.—At Denver, Colorado, to Mr. William and Sr. E. Bratton, August 18th, 1887, a promising daughter; blessed February 21st, 1888, by Elders James Caffall and James Kemp, and named Ellen Adelaide.

DIED.

LARSON.—Christian Larsen, of Nephi, Utah. He was born in Weileant, Hveisel, Denmark, June 9th, 1809. Married his present wife, December 7th, 1845, and emigrated to Utah in 1854; joined the Reorganized Church about 1875, and died December 6th, 1887. Brother Larsen was a kind husband, loving father, and a true Christian—kind and charitable to all. Funeral by Rev. Martin, of the Presbyterian Church.

SMITH.—Sister Rachel M. Smith, wife of the late Elder Howard S. Smith, died January 28th, 1888, at the residence of her grandson, Bro. William Smith, Persia, Harrison county, Iowa, aged 74 years and 2 months. She passed away in peace, with the full assurance that the latter day work was true, and that she would receive a full reward for all her work. Funeral services were held at the Saints' Church, Persia, Iowa. A large assembly of Saints and friends present.

STONE.—Near St. Joseph, Missouri, December 8th, 1887, Sr. Margaret Stone, in her 80th year. She joined the church in the year 1830. During the dark and cloudy day of the church she went to the salt land, in hopes of finding the church there in harmony with the books, but was disappointed; so she returned to the states, and joined the Reorganized Church in 1872. She leaves four sons and one daughter, a number of grandchildren to mourn. It can be truthfully said that mother Stone was a good noble woman; her faith in the work was strong till her last moments. By her request William Lewis preached her funeral sermon.

"STONE.—In Challis, Idaho, on Saturday, January 22d, 1888, George W. Stone, aged 47 years. Mr. Stone was born in the State of New York—living there until eight years old, when his parents moved to Amboy, Illinois. Since, he has resided in Kansas, Iowa and Missouri. He married at Geneva, Illinois, a Miss Sarah McCain, who survives him. From Missouri he moved with his family to Salmon City, Idaho, in 1883, and from there to Pah Simari, in Custer county. He afterwards came to Challis for the purpose of educating his children. In 1886, his family, consisting of his wife and six children returned to Missouri, where they are now. Since, he has worked for different parties a portion of the time, and looked after his stock the remainder. The last work he did was for Robert Dunlap, of Salmon City, whose wife is a niece of Mrs. Stone. He was not rugged from childhood—but always industrious, and willingly doing all he could to make headway—taking deep interest, in case of his decease, for what he should be able to leave for his family. This regard for others cost him his life. He was so anxious for the care of his stock that he ventured on a journey under circumstances that required more endurance than he was possessed of. He was an honest, peaceable man, a good citizen, an indulgent and affectionate father, and devoted husband.

At the funeral, which took place at Challis, Sunday, January 23d, a large concourse of people were in attendance, paying that respect due to the worthy who go before. It was hard to think that his family could not be present to attend him in his last hours—but such are often the regrets of our people, where there are so many changes. All the friends sympathise with the few relatives who are in the vicinity, and most deeply with the family, who, so far away, are called to mourn.—Idaho Messenger.

ROCKWELL.—At Davis City, Decatur county, Iowa, February 23d, 1888, of consumption, sister Helen M. Rockwell, aged 48 years, 9 months, 24 days. She was born May 2d, 1839, in Vermillion county, Illinois; was baptized near Pleasanton, Decatur county, Iowa, in July, 1859, at the age of seventeen years, by Elder W. W. Blair. From her dying lips was borne a faithful testimony of the work of God.

TO THE SEVENTIES.

To the Presidents of the Quorum of Seventy, Greeting:—You are hereby requested to meet at the house of Bro. C. A. Bishop, Independence, Missouri, April 4th, at ten a. m., in council, to confer, and as the Spirit may direct "to choose other Seventy," that the quorum may be more perfectly filled, as we are commanded by the Master,—Sec. 104, par. 43. In bonds,
E. C. BRAND.

March 1st, 1888.

To the Quorum of Seventy, Greeting, Dear Brethren:—Our secretary is preparing a blank circular, a copy of which will be mailed to each member. We hope that every member of the quorum, without a single exception, will fill up and return the same before the date specified, that we may have a full and perfect report.

The various reports indicate that brethren in the field have fought nobly and been sustained by the Captain of their salvation. We desire to urge on you that every member of the quorum that can attend this next conference to do so. There are matters of great importance to be presented to the body, upon which it would be wise for us to confer in quorum capacity.

Brethren; let us gather to the "City of Zion," get our spiritual strength renewed, and go forth thence "clothed" and "armed" for greater and more glorious victories.

Your brother in bonds,
March 1st. E. C. BRAND.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE HERALD is now printed on our new Babcock Standard press, which thus far gives first-class satisfaction, and promises all that can be desired. There has been a ready and generous response by many for further and prompt payment for church publications so as to pay for this press, and if some in arrears would now send forward what they owe the office, others procuring new subscribers for our papers, also purchasers for other church publications, it would place the office in an easy condition. We trust no reasonable effort will be spared in this direction, and that at once.

We call attention to an interesting letter from Bro. R. M. Elvin in our letter column. There will be seen some of Rev. Lamb's flimsy and false allegations against the Book of Mormon.

Bro. R. M. Elvin wrote from Provo, Utah, the 2d instant: "All goes well for the gospel."

Bro. Robert Oehring wrote from Forestville, Michigan, the 28th ult., sending us a large order for church publications. He baptized two converts February 26th. His address will now be Newark, Marshall county, Dakota. We trust he has done much good on his late tour to Wisconsin and Michigan, and that further excellent fruits will appear in due time.

Bro. Robert Nelson, of Barnard, Missouri, wrote of late, that Bro. John Moore was proving a great blessing in that region by his faithful labor in the gospel.

Bro. J. W. Johnson, of McFall, Missouri, states that the Saints at that place have recently established a library for the benefit of the church there, and that books or pamphlets donated and sent to him for the library, will be received with many thanks.

We are in receipt of good news from Attleboro, Massachusetts. Bro. Arthur

B. Pierce wrote us from there the 5th instant, that the good seed sown by the ministry, also in the distribution of books and tracts, was finding lodgement in many honest hearts. One—a head of a family—was baptized on the 4th instant and others nearly persuaded.

The North Attleboro papers have made alterations and improvements of late which are of importance and will prove valuable.

Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio, sent us the Cincinnati (Ohio) Post of the 2d inst., which contains two-thirds of a column of valuable matter relative to the faith and history of the Latter Day Saints. Mr. Conner, a Methodist minister, prepared it, and in doing so he has reflected honor upon his profession as a Christian gentleman. The Post has a daily circulation of over fifty thousand, and is read by perhaps twice that number of people—a large congregation addressed from one pulpit.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Wentworth Vickery wrote from Plano, Illinois, the 28th ult., saying:

"Our conference here was said by some to be the best they ever attended. Truly, it was a time to be remembered. The former district officers were sustained. Reports show urgent calls for preaching from all parts of the district. We wish to have the General Conference for 1889 at Plano. Help us; will you?"

A letter from sister Pauline Anderson, Zenas, Maricopa county, Arizona, dated February 29th, says:

"Bro. G. P. Dykes departed this life the afternoon of last Saturday, the 25th. He had been very feeble a long time."

Sr. C. H. Crowley, of Indian River, Maine, in a late letter says:

"I can do without any other paper better than I can do without the Herald, for its blessed pages give peace to my soul whenever I read them."

Bro. Williard J. Smith was at Cadillac, Michigan, March 5th. He sends for church publications, as is usual, and says:

"I baptized five here yesterday—all heads of families—and others are near the kingdom."

TULLIDGE'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

THE Western Galaxy has been received at this office. It is a first-class magazine, and a surprise coming from the west. It contains 144 pages, is very finely illustrated, and the subjects important and ably treated. The more important are the following:

The Mines of the West. The Birth-place of English Civilization. The Flora of Utah. Hon. Schuyler Colfax's Journal. The Climate of Utah. A Ramble Among the Salmon River Mountains. The Ship Brooklyn.

In the paper on the birth-place of the English Civilization, favorable notice is made of Donnelly's forthcoming preposterous book calling Bacon the author of Shakespeare's plays. It seems to us that the matter in controversy is satisfactorily disposed of in a few common sense sentences by Boucicault in which he makes Shakespeare say, "There's the old play of Hamlet, which used to be a favorite. It's a bit out of date, and needs freshening up. I'll take it home and see what can be done with it."

The plays of Shakespeare are old plays, novels, and poems, worked over and adapted to the wants of the theatre Shakespeare owned and for which he was the working playwright; and so gorgeous was his fancy and so superlative his powers of expression that he could change other men's potmetal thoughts all to glittering gold.

ANGUS M. CANNON QUESTIONED.

THE following questions and answers found in the Deseret News' court items, in its issue for March 2d, will furnish our readers, especially old church members, with matter for useful reflection. Attorney Sheeks inquires:

"S.—You speak of the Temple; will you state what that is?"

C.—It is a building erected for the use of the people in the performance of sacred rites and ordinances pertaining to the salvation, of our living and the redemption of our kindred dead.

S.—For religious purposes?"

C.—Yes, sir.

S.—How long has it been in the course of construction?"

C.—The ground was broken early in the spring of 1853.

S.—Can you give about the estimate already expended in its construction?"

C.—Well, I can hardly say, but it is up in the millions.

S.—How near complete is it?"

C.—The walls are complete, but the towers are not; we contemplate finishing it when we can.

S.—State how it has been built?"

C.—It has been built by the offerings and voluntary donations of the people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

S.—Have any donations been given by any who were not members of the Church?"

C.—No, not that I am aware of.

LeGrande Young—Mr. Cannon, can you state whether there has been any of the property removed from the place?"

C.—I think none of the things have been removed, as it would incur extra expense. We did not disturb it because we thought it would not justify us making any change.

Mr. Williams—Mr. Cannon, how many temples are completed and how many are in course of erection?"

C.—Two are completed, and two in course of construction.

W.—Are these temples used for public worship?

C.—No, sir; they are for the performance of sacred rites, but in the temple at Logan there are lectures delivered to the students of the school, not only in relation to our faith, but also on scientific subjects, as we were told by the founder of this church, Joseph Smith, to store our minds with knowledge from all good books, so that our intelligence would correspond, if not exceed that of the people of the world. And only those who can get the proper recommend, or whose names are on the list, are permitted to attend these schools.

W.—Will you state whether or not it is a tenet of your church that a man may marry more than one woman at the same time?

C.—That is according to the revelation received by Joseph Smith in 1843.

W.—Is it taught now by the Church?

C.—I will say that I have not heard it taught for some time.

W.—Is it still a tenet of the Church?

C.—I believe it is; at least, that is my opinion.

W.—Do not the authorities of the Church perform polygamous marriages in the Temple now?

C.—No, sir. It has been discontinued—it must have been for nearly a year that persons who have applied have been refused.

W.—Do you issue certificates or recommends?

C.—No, sir; I have simply to sign them. And when persons have come to me, I have told them the consequences if they did.

W.—Are these marriages which have been discontinued, permanent?

C.—I can not say.

W.—Why was it suspended?

C.—I don't know, unless it is that it has entailed so much suffering upon the people and brought them in conflict with the government. But we feel that the responsibility rests upon those who prevent us; and it is out of honor for the laws.

W.—Why have you refused to recommend persons to the Temple?

C.—Because I have heard that President Woodruff would not endorse their recommends.

W.—Do you refuse to grant or endorse recommends on heresy?

C.—No, Sir; I wrote to President Woodruff, and he told me he could not grant recommends to the Temple for such marriages.

W.—How long has this been stopped?

C.—I should think about a year.

Mr. Sheeks—Mr. Cannon, are there any other ordinances performed in these temples, or do they continue these marriages?

C.—No, Sir; the authorities of the Church have seen best to discontinue them.

We publish the following extracts taken from a late "Letter to Engineers and Firemen employed on the C. B. & Q. R. R.," in respect to the wages paid them, etc. It is an official document of that company:

"The C. B. & Q. R. R. believes that, under the present system of paying for trips run, its experienced enginemen are earning as much per month as those on neighboring railroads. In the past, its enginemen have not, in noticeable numbers, left its service and entered that of other railroads, and, on the other hand, enginemen of other roads have applied for positions on the C. B. & Q. R. R. This does not indicate that they receive less wages per month on the C. B. & Q. R. R. for similar services. No general complaint has been made to the officers that such has been the case. The C. B. & Q. R. R. has been ready in the past to consider all complaints of that nature, and, if they prove to be well founded, to advance pay so that its employes shall receive as much per month as is paid by neighboring railroads." * * *

"Owing to the existing State and Inter-State laws, poor crops, and extremely low rates, as well as a great multiplication of new lines, the western roads are passing through a critical period. It is at present impracticable to maintain rates that cover the cost of transportation.

"Railroad construction has almost entirely ceased. The rail mills and other factories find their business decreasing; the demand for labor is decreasing, and wages likely to decrease.

"At a time when wages are tending downward enginemen can not expect more pay, unless they are under-paid now in comparison with other workmen.

"Below is a statement of the earnings per month, of enginemen on the C. B. & Q. R. R., who worked during the whole month, taken from the rolls of November, 1887:

	ENGINEERS.			FIREMEN.
	No.	Men.	Av. Rate.	No.	Men.	Av. Rate.
Chicago Division,	77		105.10	94		55.95
Galesburg Division,	68		113.56	77		63.34
St. Louis Division,	31		115.29	37		60.63
East Iowa Division,	26		110.69	33		58.22
Middle Ia. Division,	36		126.43	23		76.37
West Ia. Division,	50		128.76	53		72.51
Average,	-	-	115.47	-	-	62.78

"Upon the B. & M. R. R., for October, November and December, passenger engineers who worked during the whole month averaged $125.97 per month, and freight engineers $138.28 per month.

"In the month of November upon the B. & M. R. R., several passenger engineers earned more than $160.00, and several freight engineers more than $180.00.

"The above figures plainly indicate that the wages of enginemen are, to say the least, fair, as compared with men in other branches of the service.

"It must be noticable to you that few, if any, C. B. & Q. R. R. enginemen are now seeking employment upon other railroads which are paying more nearly in accordance with your proposed schedule. The number of men who have worked for the C. B. & Q. R. R., and also for other roads paying upon the mileage basis, seem to prefer to work for the C. B. & Q. Some who have been tempted to try the experiment of changing their flag have returned at their own earnest solicitation to the C. B. & Q. R. R. service.

"At present we have one rate of pay for engineers just promoted from firemen, which continues one year. In the second year of service as engineer, an advance in pay is given. On the expiration of the second year, a further advance to full engineer's pay is given. The schedule proposed by the committee does away with this classification, and insist upon full pay for every man as soon as he runs an engine.

"The classification arranging for lower pay for beginners is in force in other branches of the service. There is no complaint about this system from any of the C. B. & Q. R. R. employes, excepting enginemen. There seems to be no explanation offered that the classification of which you complain is not as applicable to the enginemen as to other employes. To mass all engineers into one common body, and to pay all alike taking no account of superior ability or intelligence, seems to us unjust and unfair, and in direct opposition to the spirit of the times we live in, which tends to assure each man whatever rewards are due to his own abilities and skill, and not to produce casts, all members of which are on the same level.

"The rules now in force provide in Article I for a full and impartial hearing in any case of suspension or dismissal of an engineer. The company believes that this affords a sufficient guarantee of just treatment, and they are unwilling to accept any proposal which in any way would involve giving up the control of their road.

"To properly conduct its business the company must be the judge of what are the most economical runs for its engines, and any claim by its employes to decide where Division Terminals shall be made can not be allowed.

"The company must reserve absolutely the right to ascertain, by whatever examinations it may think advisable, whether its employes of all classes are capable of fulfilling the duties they undertake, and the public also demand that the railroad company shall take every precaution to employ only those men who can safely perform the work entrusted to them.

"The company at present furnishes over its lines, free transportation to its employes in good standing, and to their dependent families. It also furnishes free transportation to employes and their dependent families of other roads, upon the request of their managing officers. This has been our practice for years, and we believe that in doing it, we are dealing generously with railroad employes. To extend this to all members of an organization, which however good its objects, is a purely private affair of individuals, and to grant free transportation to them as a right, seems unreasonable and unjust, and moreover in direct violation of law.

"In conclusion, we would say that, while we can not see our way to accepting your committee's proposals, we expect to pay as much as our neighbors for similar services, and we are ready at any time to take up the question of wages, and adjust any inequalities in our schedule that may be shown to exist. We can not, however, attempt to adopt a basis which says that one 100-mile run should be paid the same as another 100-mile, regardless of the effort and ability required and the difficulties to be overcome on each.

"Believing as we do, that these are matters of great importance, we will print for distribution copies of this communication, so that these questions may be fully considered by all concerned."

Taking the above as a fair presentation touching the wage question we can better judge as to whether there are just grounds for the "strike" that has lately been inaugurated on that road.

We are warm friends to the toiling masses, as also to the fair dealing capitalist. There should be and need be no conflict between labor and capital. It is the interest of both to harmonize on correct principles. Only in this way can best results be attained for all. Capital in large amounts, and great corporations, are needed to develop the industrial resources of the world, and labor alone can make them available and effective. Great risks and responsibilities attend the aggregation and management of large bodies of capital, and only those in immediate control are fully competent to decide as to its proper management.

On the other hand the laborer, skilled and unskilled, must have his just dues; and it should be the ambition and pride of the employer to honorably and faithfully remunerate him for services performed. To secure these conditions for all, wise, equitable, upright and generous dealing should be had on both sides; and patient arbitration, and not "strikes," is the readiest, cheapest, and most peace promoting method. If this fails, appeal should be made for legal relief and redress through the legislatures and courts.

Strikes are largely an injury to the entire country, also to the capitalists in some degree, but it is far worse, on the average, to the strikers. To this all will agree who have impartially and thoroughly studied the history of strikes in our own and other lands.

If capital and labor do not, will not, mutually adjust themselves for the common good, then it remains for the State to take the matter in hand and regulate them in the interests of all concerned—and it should be done speedily and effectually.

The following very sensible views presented in a Chicago Times editorial, February 28th, will enable our readers to further perceive the real merits of the situation:

"STRIKING FOR THE WRONG.

"The officers of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Company say: 'At present we have one rate to pay for engineers just promoted from firemen, which continues one year. In the second year of service as engineer an advance of pay is given. On the expiration of the second year a further advance to full engineer's pay is given. The schedule proposed by the committee [of engineers] does away with this classification, and insists upon full pay for every man as soon as he runs an engine.'

"The demand for this schedule is wrong. Both engineers and firemen assume that the former should receive higher pay than the latter in the ratio of 100 to 60. If that is right, why is it not right that engineers should be paid according to experience and efficiency? It is certainly a fair presumption that an experienced engineer is worth more than an inexperienced one. Chief Arthur is reported as saying that the demand is not for higher wages on the average, but for higher wages for the inexperienced and lower for the experienced engineers. If this is true, and the statement has not been denied by the spokesmen for the engineers, the strike is not so much by the engineers as a body against the company as by the inexperienced engineers against the experienced ones. How do the latter enjoy it? Do they not feel that they are entitled to something for their experience and diligence? Is it not a warranted inference that they have been outvoted?—that they are in this fight against their inclination, and that they would be out of it and at their posts but for fear of the nameless and unlawful penalties inflicted by a tyrannical majority? Is it not the case in a majority of strikes? If so, how long does an experienced and powerful minority propose to submit to the tyranny of a majority composed of comparative tyros?

"So far as the purpose of the strike is for an indiscriminate leveling of wages it wrongs the best of the men involved in it. And not only so, but it is calculated to injure the inexperienced as well as wrong their seniors. Most men are so constituted that incentives are required to bring out the best of which they are capable. The dead level system of pay would remove a powerful incentive now impelling engineers to perfect themselves in their work. It is, therefore, calculated to lower the general standard of excellence in the calling. It deprives the best of a motive to maintain their excellence, and at the same time it deprives the least experienced of a motive to improve themselves.

"The dead-level system is calculated to injure the companies that adopt it. They must render good service or fall behind in the competitive race, from which they can get no exemption. They are therefore justified in resisting a demand for a change which would be more than likely to result in deterioration of the service they render.

"And the people are interested in the contest. Their interest extends far beyond any temporary inconvenience from the interruption of traffic while the contest is in progress, and beyond any incidental riotous outbreak like that which was so destructive in Pittsburg in 1877. They are interested in having the best of service, freight and passenger, throughout the country. They do not want to intrust their property, much less their limbs and their lives, to incompetent or reckless men. It is to their interest, therefore, that a movement which is well calculated to lower the standard of qualifications among men in the railway service who have property and lives committed to their care should not succeed. If the movement has succeeded in the case of a number of western roads the public should not on that account be the more indifferent to the present struggle. This struggle has called attention to the great importance of the leading question involved, and now public sympathy should range itself on the right side. Public opinion should sustain the party that is in the right. If the right wins now, as no doubt it will, any wrong arrangements that have heretofore been made will presently be readjusted on a sounder basis."

IN the "Home Column" in this issue will be found a strong and incisive letter from Sr. Catherine Salisbury, the only surviving sister of Joseph Smith the Seer. The letter is marked by that plain, frank, straightforwardness so prominent in the writings of the Seer, and shows her to be "a chip out of the same block." There is nothing ambiguous in her style; she says what she means and means what she says. Aged, intellectual, experienced, and closely allied and associated with the founders of the Church of the Lamb of God in these last days, she is entitled to speak and be heard, even if she does exhibit warmth and vigorous earnestness. We hope, however, that it was neither negligence nor a want of Christian love on the part of the ministry that has caused them to not visit and preach where Sr. Salisbury resides and in that vicinity.

She speaks of the humble, self-sacrificing manner in which the first elders of the church went forth to preach the gospel. This is well, for the Saints need to be reminded of these facts occasionally. The elders of the Reorganization from the first went forth in a similar manner, and some do now. Of this the writer can speak from a personal and somewhat lengthy experience in that line; and he can say as much for some others among the active ministers of these latter times. We have confidence that our ministry, with but few exceptions at most, would scorn to give any of the Saints the go-by, especially our beloved and honored sister.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"We were sent into this world to clamor after happiness, but to do our part in a life work."

SORROW AS GOD'S MESSENGER.

AN impression prevails that sorrow is in itself a blessing in its influence, that it always makes holier and better the lives that it touches; but this is not true. Sorrow has in itself no purifying efficacy, as some suppose, by which it removes from sinful lives their blemishes and stains. The same fire which refines the gold destroys the flowers. Sorrow is a fire which in God's hand is designed to purify the lives of his people, but which unblest produces only desolation. It depends on the relation of the sufferer to Christ, as friend or enemy, and on the reception given to grief, whether it leaves good or ill where it enters. But in a Christian home where the love of Christ dwells and holds sway, sorrow should always leave a benediction. It should be received as God's own messenger; and we should welcome it, and listen for the divine message it bears.

For God's angels do not always come to us, as we are apt to imagine them coming, in radiant dress, with smiling face and gentle voice. Thus artists paint them in their pictures. Thus we fancy them in their ministries. We think of them as possessing rare and wondrous loveliness; so, no doubt, they do, as they appear before God, and serve in his presence. There is no unloveliness in any angel-face in heaven; no angel has features of sternness. But as these celestial messengers come to earth on their ministries, they appear oftentimes in forms that appall and fill the trembling heart with terror and alarm. Yet oftentimes it is when they come in these very forms that they bring their sweet messages and their best blessings.

"All of God's angels come to us disguised,— Sorrow and sickness, poverty, and death,
One after another, lift their frowning masks,
And we behold the searph's face beneath,
All radiant with the glory and the calm
Of having looked upon the face of God."

Wherever God's messenger of sorrow is thus received in a Christian home, with welcome even amid tears and pain, it will leave a blessing of peace, and will make the home sweeter, tenderer, heavenlier. We speak of love as the atmosphere in which the home reaches its best development in the direction of happiness, as in summer warmth the flowers unfold their rarest beauty and their sweetest fragrance. But really no home ever attains its highest blessedness and joy, and its fullest richness of life, until in some way sorrow enters its door. Even the home love, like certain autumn fruits, does not ripen into its sweetest tenderness until the frosts of trial have touched it.

Many of the world's best things have been born of affliction. The sweetest songs ever sung on earth have been called out by suffering. The purest blessings that we enjoy have come to us out of the fire. The richest things we inherit from the past are the purchase of suffering and sacrifice. Our redemption comes from Gethsemane and Calvary. We get heaven through Christ's tears and blood. Whatever is richest and most valuable in life anywhere has been in the fire. Our love for one another may be strong and true in the sunny days, but it never reaches its holiest and fullest expression until pain has touched our hearts and called out the hidden treasures of affliction. Even the love of a mother for her child, deep and pure as it is, never reaches its full wondrousness of devotion and sacrifice, until the child suffers, and the mother bends over it in yearning and solicitude. The same is true of all the home loves; the best and divinest qualities in them come out only in the fires. The household that has endured sorrow in the true spirit of love and faith emerges from it undestroyed, untarnished, with purer, tenderer affections, with less of passion, of selfishness, and of earthliness. When husband and wife stand together beside their dead child, they are drawn to each other as never before; their common grief is sacramental. The children that remain are dearer to parents after one has been taken. Brothers and sisters grow more thoughtful and patient in their mutual intercourse when the home circle has been broken. There is in an empty chair in a Christian home, a wondrous power to soften the asperities of nature and refine all the affections and feelings. The cloud of grief that hangs over a household, like the summer cloud above the fields and gardens, leaves blessings.

"Is it raining, little flower?

Be glad of rain.

Too much sun would wither thee,

'Twill shine again.

The sky is very black, 'tis true,
But just behind it shines the blue.

Art thou weary, tender heart?

Be glad of pain;

In sorrow sweetest things will grow

As flowers in rain.

God watches, and thou wilt have sun

When clouds their perfect work have done."

But how may we make sure of the benedictions that sorrow brings? Even the gospel is the savor of death to those who reject it; and sorrow, though it be God's evangel, comes, oft-times and goes away again leaving no heavenly gift. How must we treat this dark-robed messenger, if we would receive the heavenly blessings it bears in its hands? We must welcome it even in our trembling and tears as sent from God. We must believe that, coming from him, it is a messenger of love to us, bearing a true blessing for us, though it be a loss or a pain. Some golden fruit lies hidden in the rough husk. Some bit of gold in us God designs to be set free from its dross by this fire. There is some radiant height beyond this dark valley to which he wants to lead us. Christ himself accepted and endured with loving submission the bitter sorrow of his cross because he saw the joy set before him and waiting beyond the sorrow. In the same way we should accept our griefs, because they are but the shaded gateways to peace and blessedness. Not to be able to take from our Father's hand the seed of pain is to miss the fruits of blessing which can grow from no other sowing. If we are wise, we will give sorrow as cordial a welcome as joy, for it is from the same loving hand, and brings gifts as good and golden.—Sel.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 7th.

FOUNTAIN GREEN, Ill., Feb. 27th.

Dear Sister Walker.—I have kept silent a long time thinking that after a while I would have something of interest to write about; but I have given it up. When I left Lamoni I had the promise that a couple of elders would come out here and preach a week or two for us; but they failed to come. Then I wrote to the Herald Office to let Bro. Griffiths know that we wanted him to come by and stop and preach for us a short time, but was doomed to a great disappointment. I have a niece in Colchester who has been sick all winter, and she was very anxious for him to come and administer to her. We saw in Herald that he would come, and we looked for him all through the month of January, and still looked till we saw in the Herald that he had passed us by. I would not have believed that he would have said he would come, and not come. I think that if we had had the money to have sent to him or those other elders that they would have responded to the call; but they like to ride on the railroad, and if you happen to live near the road they will call on you, and if not they will pass you by. They could not walk a few miles out into the country. When my brothers and the first elders went out to preach, when the church was first organized, they went on foot without purse or scrip, and only took their cane and their knapsack on their back, with a few books and one change of clothing; and when they were tired and foot-sore they would sit down by the way side or by a stream of water and bathe their blistered feet and call on the Lord for strength and then arise and travel on. That is the way the gospel was preached in the first rise of this church. They called on the poor, and the poor had the gospel preached to them. How many would respond to the call today if they had to go on foot without money? I fear that a very few of the poor would hear the gospel. We have tried for the last year to get elders to come here and hold a series of meetings. We think that good might be done here. There are some old Saints who once belonged to the old church who could be gathered up here if we could have some preaching, but alas! we have no money.

I read in the New Testament that our Savior, when he sent his disciples forth into the world to preach the gospel, told them to take neither purse nor scrip, nor two coats, for a workman is worthy of his hire; and I also read that when John sent to the Savior to ask, "Art thou he that should come or look we for another?" He told them to tell John that the poor had the gospel preached to them, and also the sick were healed and the lame made to walk and the blind to see.

Dear sisters, I would not write this way but my feelings have been hurt time and again when we have had promises and they failed. Many here have the gospel, but nearly all the elders go west. When I read in the Herald what good meetings you are having, you don't know how I would like to be there and share them with you all. My health is very good this winter.

Your sister,

CATHERINE SALISBURY.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. D. A. Cobb of Wilton Station, Alabama, writes: "My greatest desire is to be faithful in the service of the Lord and by this means express my gratitude to God for having been brought to a knowledge of the latter day work. I should feel lost indeed without our standard publications and church papers. Pray for me that I may be worthy to have his Spirit for my guide and comfort, the remaining days of my life."

Sister Sarah Richardson, Emsworth Station, Pennsylvania, writes: "I have been a member of the Pittsburg branch of the church for twenty-one years. The Herald is a great comfort to me. I fear some time lest I come short of my duty to the Master and his work. Let us, dear sisters, strive to show both by precept and example that we have learned of the Lord. Let us strive to bear each other's burdens that we may have peace in this life and eternal joy in the life to come."

DANGER IN PUBLIC TOWELS.

THE public towel is also never safe to use, that is, the towel that the public wipes on. It not only removes the moisture that it is its purpose to do, but it rubs of scales, pieces of dead skin, lymph from cuts and abrasions, perspiration from the pores, mucus from the nostrils, pus from sores, and ulcers and any liquid that is excreted upon the surface of the body. These impurities and disease germs are retained in the meshes of the towel and are ready to attach themselves upon subsequent users of the towel. A hundred or more persons use one of these towels in a day, and those who are among the last, especially, run unpleasant chances of catching some ill or other.—Good Housekeeping.

Correspondence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 3d.

Bro. Blair:—My last was written from Cape Cod, November 17th. On the 30th I was called to Ohio by the death of my father, whose funeral took place December 3d, Bro. W. H. Kelley conducting the service. It would be impracticable, at this time perhaps, to make mention of all his virtues. Of vices, I never knew that he had any. Shakespeare wrote: "The evil that men do live after them; the good is often interred with their bones." I do not think this was so with my father, and my heart was comforted in the sadness of that hour, when it was said by the minister that he was an honest and conscientious man; that that only was stated which every one who had ever known him, knew to be true, and not the fulsome eulogy sometimes met with on such solemn occasions. We are hastening on to judgment. I shall have no fear as regards the fate of my father, concerning his general hatred of all manner or shame, hypocrisy or dishonesty in religion, politics or the common every day affairs of life. Against his virtue and general probity, uprightness and honesty of character in all the details of life, large or small, I never knew of a charge laid, and I doubt if there ever was one. If offences came through which he erred in judgment—and I believe he did—they were confined to his head, and reached no farther. I think that he was by nature sceptical, and his surroundings in later years of a decidedly unfavorable character. So far as developing faith in God as revealed in this great latter day work, and Church of Christ, whose fortunes he espoused under trying circumstances in the state of New York, in 1833. Removing to Ohio the year following, his home became a resort for the elders of the church—a "Mormon hotel," with all that name might then, and does now in some places, imply. He made sacrifices in common with others, in the building of the temple, etc., not perhaps so common now. Though not identifying himself with the Reorganization, he never forfeited his membership in the old one, as he so expressed himself before his death. I am sorry that he did not. He has suffered loss, as was expressed to me in dream only the other night. "It must needs be that offences come." It is the imperative law of development by which we must learn to perceive the humanity in man and the God in man. The ability to neither over nor under estimate the one or the other, constitutes a strong element of safety, not only for the ministry, but the whole church membership. Eternity is before us all, God is just, and I am so glad that I know it, and that the gospel may transmute the experiences of this life, even its woes and its tears, into a character whose very self-consciousness shall make it a joy, and whose existence shall be co-equal with God.

Returning to my field of labor, I have visited nearly all the branches of the district and outside as well, neglecting affairs here in Providence too much perhaps, but the field is so large and the calls so many that we know not which way to turn. February 18th, in company with Bro. Geo. Gates, of this city, I went to Noank, Connecticut, with a view of presenting the gospel hope as the Lord might open up the way among strangers and in a place where the gospel of Jesus Christ had never been preached, so far as may be known, stopping by invitation with some friends who had become interested while at our Providence conference, and through church literature, etc. We preached Saturday evening in their home; Sunday morning attending church with the head of the family who was a Baptist. In the afternoon attended Methodist chapel, and in class-meeting was led to say something in which the fact that I was a minister leaked out somehow, I don't know. Any how it led to an invitation to occupy the pulpit that evening, the regular minister unfortunately being away from home. We spoke with liberty of the Spirit to a good congregation and with many evident signs of approval. So much so that another appointment was made for the following Tuesday evening by invitation of two of the directors who were present. The house being occupied Monday evening by the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Tuesday evening came and with it a good audience. The subject of the Kingdom of God was presented and received with many manifestations of approval, and friends did not seem to be wanting invitations given for hospitality, flattering encomiums, etc., and had we not had some experience we might have begun to think that the missionary's lot might after all not be an unhappy one. Our friends were elated and thought we might capture a whole flock, pretty near; but we who knew by sorrowful experience how straight was the gate that led to life eternal, and how few there be to-day that find it, laid no such flattering unction to our soul, but bade them wait until a taste of meat was thrown out, etc. Well, Wednesday night we were asked to lead their prayer meeting service, in which was manifest the same desire to hear more from us, and the Lord helped us to sow a little more seed, and an announcement for preaching the next Thursday evening, by consent of the directors was made. During this meeting three persons arose and signified their intentions of uniting with the Church of Jesus Christ, which they said they believed we represented, among which was the leading woman in their society, and her most excellent daughter, a splendid young woman, perhaps twenty-three or twenty-four years old, at whose home we were stopping together with another middle aged married woman, a relative of the late Elder Charles Brown, and through whose influence partially we went to Connecticut. These announcements, it soon afterward appeared, seemed to awaken them to the fact that we were there for business, and that while our preaching might not do any particular harm as a theory, its practical results was not such as had been anticipated perhaps, and a break which might prove disastrous by the start thus made in the withdrawal of those certainly among its best members, was a thing which required action. Meanwhile Satan was busy on the outside, and through his prime ministers, the priests whose crafts were being endangered, made the discovery, and were not slow in discovering to others who were most interested that the preacher was a "Mormon." The directors were interviewed. A consultation ended in a decision to refuse to allow me to fill my Thursday night appointment, or preach any more in their pulpit, and the securing of an itinerant Baptist minister to preach to my congregation. I was given notice of this by one of the directors who is still my friend, and who expressed his indignation at the treatment I received at the hands of his brethren, very freely. Meeting this Baptist minister, I inquired of him if arrangements to preach Thursday evening had been made with him. He told me positively, No. I knew then what kind of people I had to deal with.

Thursday night came and with it a good audience with expectation of hearing us of course. But the Baptist preacher was there also, who told me that the directors had been talking with him and he had "consented" to preach. I gave him to understand the situation, and that they could have had their house without the necessity of lying. He preached, however, to a very evidently dissatisfied and uneasy congregation, inviting me into the desk, however—as a plaster I suppose—taking occasion during his telling of stories (fables), to refer to Matt. 7: 22, 23, carefully omitting the context; and also using during his speech Matt. 25: 34, 35, &c., and how I groaned inwardly for the privilege, the hour and the audience, which every one knew belonged to me, to make an exposition of those texts. But I felt calm and happy under all the circumstances, for I could plainly see that "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad;" and that these people were advertising their weakness, bigotry and intolerance in a way that I could not possibly do. When he got through I requested ten minutes of their time, and the audience bristled up, and I suppose I boiled down as much in that ten minutes as I ever did or perhaps ever shall. I felt myself under but little obligation to conceal the truth, but with Shakespear, realized that "Thrice armed is he that hath his quarrel just and he but naked."

Though locked up in steel whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

I then and there announced my mission as a servant of Jesus Christ, and representative of his church as against any or all who were willing to deny the proposition; that the audience was mine and the service mine by their own consent, and that by no act of mine had I forfeited that consent, and that a notice, if not consultation, should have been granted to me. As evidence of our position I referred to the texts used by the minister, and that a knowledge of that which Jesus was talking about would reveal the fact that we were living in the day referred to, when many were saying Lord, Lord, with but little care as to what he said or commanded to be done. That the present century had furnished more than one who had prophesied (falsely) in his name, and were now professing to do many mighty works under the guise of faith-cure, "Christian science," healing, &c.; thus casting out devils in man according to their own published statements, and all without a reference or hint scarcely as to the question as to how the principle of an eternal life is to be secured, where and under what conditions was it to be administered, or where we might successfully seek for the kingdom of God and acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ amidst the Babel which surrounds us, in which scores of priests were with confused tongues, and uncertain sound, striving like their ancient types on the plain of Shinar four thousand years ago, to build in their own way a tower which should reach to heaven. That we believed we were able to show by the Scriptures, and signs of the times, that a like fate awaited modern Babel, and made the appeal for people who loved truth more than tradition to show their love for Jesus by giving heed to not only his sayings but those of the accredited servants of God in all ages. We took occasion also to refer to a little further exposition of Matt. 25: 31 to 40, &c., and suggested the bare possibility that the future King and Judge of all the earth might be masquerading there in Noank in the guise of one of his humble, and to the world, unknown servants and "brethren," as evidenced by the text, "When saw we thee;" and that one of the best evidences to those who expected to be judged by the word at the last day that a man was really the servant of the Lord was that he was willing to make that word the test of his calling. We closed by announcing baptism on the following day. The preacher arose and expressed regrets, etc., and then asked how many wanted him to continue the meetings by a rising vote. One fourth of the congregation I should think responded, more as a compliment I thought, as did others, than anything else. Had any other place in town been available I should have asked, and had the vote and hearing of the majority present, as it was great dissatisfaction was expressed by the liberal minded in the church and out. The following morning the head of the family with whom we were stopping, some two miles from town, having business in town was beset by interested parties of his own and other denominations with tales and stories which only ignorance, stupidity and cupidity could or would be willing to invent or believe concerning the Mormons. The disgrace that was about to be inflicted upon his family by allowing his wife and daughter to be baptized by a Mormon when they had already been baptized, and by immersion too, "and were members in high standing in a respectable church," etc. And although we had supposed the matter settled with him the day before in regard to their uniting with the church, he said he did not understand that they had to be baptized over again, as he had attended none of our meetings. At any rate he came home in a rage, forbade his wife's baptism, or at least refused his carriage, and ordered me out of his house by saying if I had a home I had better seek it, &c., besides many hard, unjust and ignorant, untruthful statements. I told him I was not at all anxious to stay, but reserved the right to tell him my opinion of his allowing gossips and bigots to run his domestic affairs, that I thought he might settle matters by telling people to mind their own business, and that constitutional liberty guaranteed the right for every man, and I believe woman too, to worship God as his or her conscience might dictate, and that he could settle matters in his own household without their interference. He became softened enough to send the carriage with me to town. Repairing to the water where perhaps two hundred people were assembled, I announced the postponement of baptism for that day only, two of the candidates being present and announcing their determination to obey God rather than man. We occupied about twenty minutes in an appeal for freedom of thought and religious toleration, and left the people anxious to hear more of our gospel, and with expectation of a return in the near future. These two candidates expected to and would have come to Providence for baptism the following Sunday but storms prevented, and it was well, I prefer the fight should be finished upon the ground on which it was begun. Letters from there indicate a better feeling and a probable invitation to return from the power which banished us.

Thank God I have no enmity against any person living, but that miserable aggregation of shams, hypocrisy and ignorance masquerading with the name of religion and Christianity that fosters and turns out such work, has outlived its day of usefulness, if it ever had any, and in the language of the apostle we are enjoined "from such to turn away. Every minister of Jesus Christ who is faithfully seeking to establish the Kingdom of God and its righteous government, knows where to look for the enemy every time; oil and water won't mix, and to sail smoothly is to go with and not against the popular current. With all our wisdom and with all prudence and with all lawful concession, we must know that the servant is not greater than his Lord. The lover of truth is attracted by it, what kind of a constituency do we want for a permanent building; how long it took the Savior to find a few that were fit to build the Kingdom which was designed to stand forever; "this is a hard saying," "will ye also go away;" "if any man hate not his father," &c.; why not split the difference with error in order to get a following? How we like to baptize and fill up, "when thou art converted strengthen thy brethren." I had rather convert one man so that he will stay converted than to baptize a thousand that are not converted to a wholesome, sound faith. "If any man build on this foundation" "let every man take heed he buildeth thereupon." Oh, may we not see our work fade away when the fire test is applied.

I am glad to see that the "weaker vessel" is able to take care of herself when she has a chance. I wanted to say something some time ago about that matter, as I have believed a necessity existed for it. The "weaker vessel,"—it makes me smile when I think of my experience as a minister. How many women are there to-day—some of whom I have met—whose husbands have never got acquainted with them, they can't, they don't know enough, standing over them with the whip of authority which ignorance and old fogyism has placed in their hands and preventing them from obeying God and his laws and receiving the benefits which might accrue from the privilege of worshipping God as he has directed. There are some rights which are not abrogated in the marriage covenant or disannulled. "Let the wife see that she reverence her husband." Yes, but the husband is just enjoined to love his wife, and the breaking of that covenant by one makes it impracticable if not impossible oftentimes, for the other to keep it. This is addressed to those in the church also, "the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ is the head of the church; and in no other way in my opinion; let him imitate the Savior in his care toward the church and we shall have but little discussion in the church about the rights of women, sec. 111 D. C., is an opinion and not a revelation. While I believe that it may be neither wise nor politic to "persuade"—whatever that may mean—women to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband; yet upon hearing and believing the word she desires and requests baptism, I believe that it is in harmony with par. 4, sec. 112, that women to, are amendable to God alone, and not to man for the exercise of their God-given religious rights and opinions, and that neither human law or individuals have a right to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the consciences of men or women nor distate in any way, forms or no forms, for public or private doctrines, and if discussion and difference, and perchance some trouble is engendered in the transition to higher grounds and larger freedom for women, it will be no more than the history of the past warrants us in expecting. Remember the history of the past; how that "Man, proud man! dressed in a little brief authority, plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven as makes the angels weep." "Thou shalt have no other God before me;" not even a man.

M. H. BOND.

SOUTH ARM, Michigan, March 5th.

Bro. Dancer.—I am still doing what I can for the Master's cause. I moved here over a week ago and have held two meetings in this place and expect to hold meetings on Sundays. The school house I preached in was filled, had good interest, and I was much blessed in speaking. This is a village of nearly one thousand inhabitants, and a very rough place as there is a great deal of lumbering going on. I am the only one of our church in this part of Michigan to preach the gospel of Christ. It seems lonesome for one so young in the work as I am, but I am determined to do all I can for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. There is quite an interest in every place where I have held meetings since I came here, and I think the time will not be long till some will obey. My heart is in this great work, for I know it is of God, and my desire is to see it spread to all people. You will please send my mail to this place.

From your brother in the one faith.

WILLIAM DAVIS.

LONDON, East Ontario, March 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair.—I have just reached this place. Bro. R. C. Evans and I have been together for some time at Lynnville. He telegraphed for me at Corinth. I found him nearly worn out with preaching and answering questions, in some instances taking nearly all night. The Lord had greatly blessed his labors. The interest was good. We held meetings every night, congregations from one to two hundred. A Rev. Greet had circulated a pamphlet in the neighborhood, entitled, "Is Mormonism true or false?" The most of the evidence in it was taken from the books of Caswell, Bennett and Turner. We obtained one and Bro. Evans replied to it and exposed forty-seven falsehoods in the first seven pages, and making this document of the pious gentleman contradict itself in many places. We occupied two nights, and at the close of the second night there was nothing of it left but its ruins. All present seemed to be satisfied that it was a pious fraud. Bro. Evans had baptized twenty at Lynnville, and there had been nine baptized at Vanessa, five miles from Lynnville, some time previous. So we called the Saints together the 17th of February, and organized them into a branch of twenty-nine members, to be called the Windham branch. Bro. Robert C. Langherst, priest, and Bro. James Bannister, teacher. The Spirit of the Lord was with us in much power and assurance in the organization and the call and ordination of the officers, confirming the word to the newly baptized ones. Many there are investigating and enquiring for the way of life, who I trust ere long will obey. Urgent calls obliged me to leave, so I left Bro. Evans to continue the work, and he baptized two more, and then he joined me at St. Thomas, where I had been preaching. The Saints needed encouragement. We did the best we could. We expect to go to St. Mary's for a few days, then on to Chatham; and on the 26th I expect to leave for the conference at Independence.

Your brother and fellow laborer,
JOHN H. LAKE.

DELOIT, Iowa, March 1st.

Bro. Blair:—We had a splendid conference at Dow City, February 24th. The Lord was with us in great power in preaching. The gifts were manifest, promising the elders great power in presenting the word.

The promise given at the last Reunion that the ministry should have greater power in presenting the word has surely been fulfilled, for which I am thankful.

I have been preaching in Corroll county in and near the North Coon branch. Had the pleasure of baptizing three precious souls, two of them about sixty years of age, who are rejoicing in the gospel of God's dear Son. I spoke eleven times in three different school-houses. Thank the Lord, I lacked nothing, and never had better liberty.

J. T. TURNER.

PLEASANTON, Iowa, Feb. 29th.

Dear Herald:—We are glad that you are so prompt in your weekly visits, for we like your company. Your presence is cheering and inspiring. These long winter evenings we love to sit and peruse your newsy columns and acquaint ourselves with the progress of this great latter day work in different parts of the world. Many times while reading testimonies from some of the Saints, and articles that to us seem inspired, they cause tears of gratitude to flow. May those who contribute to your columns be ever endued with the Holy Spirit, that you may truly be the herald of glad tidings of great joy.

The district conference which was to convene at Pleasanton on the 25th of February was a failure in one respect, and a success in another. In consequence of bad weather the district was poorly represented, and as there was business of importance to transact besides choosing delegates for General Conference, it was thought best to defer the business part to the 10th of March and convene at Lamoni. So we held meetings two days, in which we held five services, four preaching and one prayer and testimony meeting. The preaching services were all instructive and edifying, and the prayer and testimony meeting was the best I ever attended in this branch. All were blessed, and we truly had our spiritual strength renewed. It reminded me of a dream I had a few weeks ago. I saw myself with several of the members of this branch on a boat in still water where there was no current, and we sat conversing and passing time enjoyably, thinking that undoubtedly we were making progress towards port. But on examining closely we found that we were standing perfectly still, although the boat was equipped with machinery to propel it. The wheels were turning so slow that it did not move the boat. When we found we were making no progress whatever, and that the sun was fast declining in the west, we began to fear lest we perish in the deep. Then all hands began to work with renewed diligence. Bro. Abram Reese stepped around like a young man, and all at once, as by magic, the boat changed its color from a dingy faded white to a pure white, the wheels began to revolve rapidly, and the boat glided through the water equal to the best propeller, making for port. The dream comforted me, and I think it is high time that we awake from our lethargy.

Bro. Banta occupied the eleven o'clock hour, Sunday, and spoke on tithing. He handled the subject in a clever and masterly manner. Such sermons are calculated to make friends to the cause in any clime, if it is on tithing. May God bless Bro. Banta, restore him to health, and qualify him for the important position assigned him.

J. M. BROWN.

FARMERSVILLE, Cal., Feb. 26th.

Dear Herald and Hope:—I am an old man, in my seventieth year, and have no small children to read the Hope, but I prize you both highly, and search you thoroughly. Autumn Leaves is excellent, and I will take it even if the price is made $1.50 per year.

P. C. DALEY.

STEWART, Neb., Feb. 23d.

Editors Herald:—Will you be so kind as to insert a few lines from a friend to your best of papers, the Herald. I wish to say that if an elder will write to Mr. Hiram Brown of Dale City, Guthrie county, Iowa, and inform him when to look for him, he will find a pleasant home while there, and I think he would find him a place to hold meetings. He is favorable to the doctrine, but like many others, can not endorse Joseph Smith. He is not prejudiced against the church, and I think could be easily made to understand that the claims of the prophet are all right.

D. M.

KNOX, Ind., Feb. 21st.

Dear Herald:—I trust that silence in your eagerly read columns will not be received as evidence of silence in the divinely equipped columns of steady marchers, who are endeavoring to flaunt the banner of the latter day "ensign" on the highest battlements and firmly plant it in the citadel of error. In this line I have been gratified with all I can possibly do, and ten times more. For three weeks, and more, I have been constantly waging the conflict in this (Stark) county, which presents "open doors" throughout. In some few points, the great "popular" system of meaningless religion have advocates who are adepts at "throwing dirt" as last resort. Failing to meet living issues on Bible grounds, and confident that their craft, so killingly arranged, is sinking beneath the waves shattered by the steady volleys from the gospel gun, they seethe and boil over with "Joe Smith," "Brigham Young," Polygamy," "Golden Bible," "False prophet," &c., &c., only another list of terms for "we're beat." These are the clubs with which they propose to knock Mormonism in the head, forgetting that when it is upset, like a square granite block it is right side up yet.

The most prominent of the foregoing class includes the pious, devout, sanctified, justified, glorified, happified, jollified and "saved," whose only theme for a system of "faith without works," consists in standing before an audience and loosely declaiming against "silk threads of pink, pale greens, delicate flower embroideries, draperies, feathered fans, smooth satiny clothes, and, I am not ashamed to own my Lord," nor of the mourner's bench either, for "it is the power of God unto salvation." These individuals are so good, and perfect, that they can not sin (?) yet would gladly join in an enterprise that would locate a Latter Day Saint in a tar barrel outside of the county. They can't err; just too infallible; are not tempted at all! Well, I never did believe that his devilship would seek to tempt some.

I have presented our claims in three new points—at the Amigh school-house, Deserde school-house, and eight miles east in the land of windmills and big barns, occupying the new United Brethren church house recently built and dedicated to all religious societies. I am sure that friends to this latter day cause were made at these points. At the latter named place we delivered seven discourses to large, intelligent, interested and attentive listeners; selecting as subjects man's responsibility, his individual duty and right to "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good." Man's first acts in obedience to our heavenly Father's will. The age of darkness just gone by. The disorganization of the church, and consequent withdrawal of the Spirit without which the body is dead—during this period of gloom. The restoration, by an angel, of the same gospel which Paul declared was and is the power of God unto salvation, and the reinstatement of the church consequently upon its original New Testament basis, with its divinely inspired adjunctives. The illegality of a representation of the kingdom of heaven without divine authority or right, including the inconsistency of claiming such divine call to the ministry, and at the same time rejecting the media through which it comes, namely, revelation from God. The result was a grand interest; a host of warm friends whom I firmly believe will stand by the Lord's standard.

And, of course, they at the close, must "do something religious," so took up a collection, presenting us with $3.39 cents. A kind invitation was given us to return soon; another was generously extended to occupy a Union church farther east, in Marshall county, on the "Nickel Plate railroad." It might be well to state that two, husband and wife, wanted to be baptized, but we urged further investigation, not deeming it safe, or the better policy, to espouse a system of faith and works without an understanding of the "stumbling stone" to this generation, believing that if honesty is the principle of action, light will be given by a careful consideration of duty, to one who "lacks wisdom." And now there is a petition being circulated for subscriptions to defray expenses should we desire to visit them once per month during the year and preach for them. The United Brethren are trying to organize a class there, but have not succeeded in "fishing in" but three or four. The house was erected by outsiders, principally, who breathe the "air of freedom," and who have absolutely fallen in love with the doctrine as taught by the Latter Day Saints.

The effort was made by Bro. Prettyman, whose life among the better-informed and reasonable ones, together with his excellent family, has reflected light in honor of the cause he lives. He attended very regularly, and on the evening before the close of the services at that point he saw, by the Spirit, a huge swine come tearing down to attack us when we were gone a little distance homeward. 'Tis very plain that an attempt will be made to root out all the "good seed" that has been planted there. Pray that "grace" may be given us in the battle, and we will endeavor to protect the cause of Christ against the invading foe.

It is one of the most influential neighborhoods in the county, and our friends at that point cared for us very tenderly, of whom are William, Samuel, John, Wesley, and Amos Osborne, all well-to-do farmers, and the very cream of Stark county. They are honest to acknowledge the truth, and I pray our heavenly Father to bless them and bring them into the bonds of the everlasting covenant. The cause, so long oppressed, is nearing triumph in these parts. It seems that a range of "Rocky mountain" prejudice has been removed, and a restless spirit of inquiry aroused. Who can doubt that "favor," in the highest degree, is obtaining? Pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers. Yours,

LEONARD SCOTT.

Provo, Utah, March 2d.

Dear Herald:—The brethren here obtained from Bishop Booth the use of the Fourth Ward meeting-house, for me to review the Rev. M. T. Lamb's attack against the Book of Mormon. The attendance, order and interest were good, and best of all I was richly blessed with most excellent liberty. Rev. Lamb was present at the third review, in company with the M. E. minister of this place. I think it would not be amiss to give some of the points examined in his presence. Rev. Lamb never forgets to tell his congregation how honest he is, and how faithful during the last four years he has read the Book of Mormon. He claims to know as much or more about that book than any living man. Here is some of his great wisdom and acute knowledge. "If then the Book of Mormon contains a large amount of the 'cream' of the gospel, that the Bible does not contain, or if its statements are characterized by 'infallible certainty,' by 'exceeding great plainness,' without a particle of "ambiguity," as compared with the uncertain ambiguous statements of the Bible."—Golden Bible, p. 208. Following this is an epitome of the subjects touched upon in Richard's Compendium, and then he makes this criticism thereon. "First Fact.—While a large number of passages from the Bible are referred to upon each one of the above subjects, the Book of Mormon has nothing whatever upon the subject of 'Laying on of hands,' 'Christ's Second Coming,' his 'Millennial reign,' the subject of 'Marriage,' except the prohibition of polyamy already noticed. 'Tithing,' the 'Sabbath,' and 'Baptism for the Dead.' Have we a Mormon reader who can believe that any book could contain the 'Fulness of the Gospel' without a word upon either of the above subjects? These are all very important subjects; with the Latter Day Saints they are fundamental; and yet here this Golden Bible is entirely silent."—Golden Bible, p. 208-9.

There can be no misunderstanding of these direct statements of Rev. Lamb upon the seven points of doctrine or faith enumerated, and waving the question of the divine character of the Book of Mormon, we must appeal to its pages and discover whether Rev. Lamb has told the truth or misrepresented as to the contents of said book. Read the following, and make up a verdict to please your own fancy as to how much importance should attach to the written statements of the latest, and very cunning attack upon the book that has withstood the storm of pulpit, priest and press during the past sixty years.

LAYING ON OF HANDS

"And he called them by name, saying, Ye shall call on the Father in my name, in mighty prayer; and after ye have done this, ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost; and in my name shall ye give it, for thus do mine apostles. Now Christ spake these words unto them at the time of his first appearing; and the multitude heard it not, but the disciples heard it and on as many as they laid their hands, fell the Holy Ghost."—Book of Mormon, p. 533.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

"Therefore more blessed are ye, for ye shall never taste of death, but ye shall live to behold all the doings of the Father, unto the children of men, even until all things shall be fulfilled, according to the will of the Father, when I shall come in my glory, with the powers of heaven, and ye shall never endure the pains of death; but when I shall come in my glory, ye shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, from mortality to immortality; and then shall ye be blessed in the kingdom in my Father."—Book of Mormon, p. 474.

MILLENNIAL REIGN.

"But if they will repent, and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come in unto the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob; and also, as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem; and then shall they assist my people that they may be gathered in, who are scattered upon all the face of the land, in unto the New Jerusalem. And then shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst."—Book of Mormon, p. 465-6.

MARRIAGE.

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, took one of the daughters of Ishmael to wife: and also, my brethren took of the daughters of Ishmael to wife: and also, Zoram took the eldest daughter of Ishmael to wife."—Book of Mormon, p. 33.

"Behold, it is written by them of old time, that thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery already in his heart. Behold, I give unto you a commandment that ye suffer none of these things to enter into your heart; for it is better that ye should deny yourselves of these things, wherein ye will take up your cross, than that ye should be cast into hell. It hath been written, that whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorce. Verily, verily I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, save for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whoso shall marry her who is divorced, committeth adultery."—Book of Mormon, p. 447.

"And now behold it came to pass that the people of Nephi did wax strong, and did multiply exceeding fast, and became an exceeding fair and delightsome people. And they were married, and given in marriage, and were blessed according to the multitude of the promises which the Lord hath made unto them."—Book of Mormon, p. 478.

TITHING

"And it was this same Melchizedek to whom Abraham paid tithes: yea, even our Father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed."—Book of Mormon, p. 241.

SABBATH.

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day, the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and the sea and all that in them is: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it."—Book of Mormon, p. 169-170. "And he commanded them that they should observe the Sabbath day, and keep it holy, and also every day they should give thanks to the Lord their God."—Book of Mormon, p. 178.

I submit the foregoing quotations without any argument, because I think they are sufficiently clear to prove that the statements of Rev. Lamb are untruthful, and that he is very unreliable upon the issue of the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. The last item Rev. Lamb, tells us that the book is silent upon I have not, as yet found in the Nephite record, and perhaps he is correct on that, but what confidence can the people have in a critic, who shall make such grave mistakes, as those I have pointed out. I spent three evenings in the review business. Mr. Lamb spoke on the Sabbath forenoon to about a dozen, so I was informed, while in the afternoon, the poorest hour of the day, I spoke to about a hundred. Rev. Lamb and the M. E. minister were among the number, the Spirit gave me utterance and comfort in the effort. The evening of the 29th ult., I spoke to between two and three hundred in Clark's Opera Hall, at Pleasant Grove, in a review of late lectures by Rev. Lamb. I spoke last evening in the Fourth Ward meeting-house, the night was cold, dark and stormy, with a number of other meetings to attract, so our attendance was small, but attentive. Will occupy again this evening and thence to the city. Bro. R. J. and I are together. Last week we had the help of Brn. Peter Anderson and T. Burt.

One other item I would like to call the Herald readers attention to, "In the third place, the ancient Jew had an unusual veneration for his mother tongue, the sacred Hebrew, the most ancient language upon the earth, as he believed; the loved tongue of his illustrious ancestry; the language in which God himself had spoken from Sinai; the language in which all their sacred books had been written—the law, the prophets and the Psalms; the language in which the daily services at the temple were conducted."—Golden Bible, p. 90. A complete refutation of this may be found on page 162, Ruins Revisited, where S. F. Walker quotes Fundamental Questions, by E. L. Clark. As time and opportunity shall offer, I may furnish you additional topics on this interesting subject, but let me exhort one and all to be kind to "Mary's little lamb," for the truth will not suffer from the present warfare "is mine opinion." Now seems to be quite a favorable time to get the ear of the people, and they seem willing to read the literature as published by the Reorganization. The Utah church seems, for some cause, to leave the defense of the Book of Mormon to us, and we are willing defenders.

In gospel bonds,

DISTRICT PRESIDENTS.

DEAR HERALD:—I have noticed in several of your late issues letters of instruction from mission authorities in America, defining the duties of presidents of districts under their immediate control.

According to these instructions, district presidents have no authority whatever to interfere with or regulate the affairs of the branches within the limits of their respective districts. If I am right in my conclusions, and the writers are correct in their premises, I have very much mistaken the prerogatives attaching to my position as president of the Manchester district.

Shortly after my appointment to the office herein named, the district conference adopted by vote the "Rules of Order" (as published and recommended by the church) for the government of the district, so far as the said rules could be made applicable thereto. On page 9, section 13, of these rules, the following instruction appears:

"The desire for more permanent organization should be presented by those favoring it, when if it be decided upon, the assembly should proceed to make choice of one of their number to act as president of the district, whose duty it shall be to have charge of the several congregations forming the district."

"Charge of the several congregations" we construe to mean, its president is an overseer, or superintendent thereof, therefore responsible for the proper and lawful congregations [branches] that constitute the district of which he has been placed in charge, avoiding all unnecessary interference with the internal affairs of such branches, so long as the affairs thereof are conducted in harmony with the discipline and law of the church. But being the chief officer of that body from which the licenses of authority to act, of all officers—branch or district—receive issue, he is entitled to see that such officers are laboring to the best advantage and interest of the church collectively under his charge. Therefore, to effectively perform this duty, he must of necessity periodically visit each branch or mission of the church established within his boundaries, advising with, or, if necessary, instructing those having charge of such organizations. Whether right or wrong in thus defining the position of District President, the lines thus presented are those upon which we have hitherto proceeded in the government of the Manchester district.

In reference to the relationship between branch, district and mission, we have proceeded upon the following presumption, namely, that every member of a branch, in good standing, has the right to voice and vote in the ordinary business meetings of the branch, branch officers conducting such meeting according to the law governing such assemblies, and when required, formulating or causing to be formulated and forwarded such information and reports as may be lawfully required by the district conferences, upon demand of the president or secretary of the same.

District conferences we understand to mean assemblies of Elders brought together to "do whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time" (Doc. Cov. 17, 13) in connection with the district represented; and that when so convened they have the right to review (if necessary) the action of every branch within their jurisdiction and make such presentations in regard thereto as the nature of the work may demand. Such assemblies are superior courts, to which branches may appeal or members, as against branch ruling and obtain a rehearing of their cases, and though members of the church may have permissive access to such meetings, none but the Elders of the district, the President of the mission, or the President of the Church, can have legal right to voice or vote therein, except especially provided for by the consent of the assembly. We believe this to be a reasonable and legitimate construction of section 17:13 of Doctrine and Covenants, to which may be added in support of our position, paragraph 25 of the same section, which reads as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the several churches composing the Church of Christ, to send one or more of their teachers to attend the several conferences, held by the Elders of the Church, with a list of the names of the several members uniting themselves with the church since the last conference, or send by the hand of some priest; so that a regular list of all the names of the whole church may be kept in a book, by one of the elders, whose ever the other elders shall appoint from time to time."

The basis laid down by the "Rules of Order" is, that every member of the assembly is entitled to equal rights and privileges with every other member (Sec. 24), therefore, if this principle be conceded to district conferences, (and we know of no reason why it should not be), the fact that elders, only, are eligible to act as secretary to conference; that elders alone have the power of appointment to that office; that elders, only, are eligible to sit upon elders' courts appointed by the conference, is of itself prima facie evidence of the intended exclusion of all others from participation in the transaction of the business of such assemblies. Therefore we have concluded that the lesser priesthood, and membership, are excluded by law from taking any part in the doing of "church business" in conference capacity; and as before stated have only a permissive right to be present as spectators, witnesses, or branch messengers; and may, at any time be excluded by the vote of the assembly. This we submit is clearly established by the before named section 17 paragraph 25, wherein the lesser priesthood are mentioned as messengers, on behalf of branches, and not in any sense as members of the conferences of elders.

The appointment of elders, or members of the lesser priesthood, to branch offices, does not in our opinion relieve such officers from district supervision; and we believe that, of necessity, all such appointments ought to be reported to conference for confirmation, or otherwise as may be then determined. In the Manchester district, the conference alone has the power to grant or refuse recommendations for ordinations made by the branches, and to periodically endorse the licenses of those so ordained, whether in branch or district capacity. Consequently the same authority that grants and endorses, has the power to suspend or refuse such licenses, (good and sufficient cause being given), and thereby remove the qualification which entitles men to act in their callings as ministers of the Church of Christ.

With us, branch officers are responsible to the district authority for the preparation and forwarding to conference of all necessary reports, statistical, financial or spiritual, so that district authority may—when called upon by the president or secretary of the mission—properly represent the position and requirements of the several churches within their jurisdiction.

Briefly summarized, our position may be thus stated: Branches are associations of members (not less than six) organized for the purpose of religious worship; the presiding officers thereof being elected by the branch, from amongst those who have received ordination to one of the priesthoods (Melchisedec or Aaronic) existing in the Church of Christ, such presiding officers being subordinate and accountable to the district conference and its officers, for the proper and efficient discharge of their duties according to the law and discipline of the church.

Districts are formed by the massing together of the branches within a given area, having a President and other officers in charge thereof.

District Conferences are meetings of the eldership of the church, convened for the transaction of church business affecting the branches forming a given church district, and when thus convened form a court of revision and appeal in regard to all branch matters.

District Presidents are the duly appointed representatives of district authority, and are responsible to the conferences for the proper government of the churches within the limits of their jurisdiction.

Mission Conferences are the authorized assemblies of the representative bodies of the districts, in their collective capacity, and of such form a court of appeal in which the decisions of the districts, in branch or individual church matters, may be received, confirmed or annulled; the president thereof being responsible to general church authority for the proper government of the churches constituting his diocese. Therefore branches report to districts; districts report to missions; and missions report to general church authority under the direction of General Conference. In each of these conferences, it appears to us, that elders alone are recognized by the fundamental law of the church as qualified to take part therein, therefore they are the only officers that can legally sit together for the transaction of the legislative and executive business of the church. These are the lines upon which the conference business of the Manchester district has been conducted during the last seven or eight years, and as we believe with a fair amount of success.

But, the question with us is, in thus acting are we properly construing, and carrying out, the law of the church? We believe we are; but belief alone is not a sufficient guarantee that we are right.

If upon investigation it should appear that we are wrong, will some one of our authorities, who are entitled to speak, point out wherein we offend.

With love and esteem for the brotherhood, and still striving to "prove all things and to hold fast to that which is good," I remain, dear Herald, yours for Zion's welfare.

THE CELESTIAL LAW.

"THERE is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—1 Cor. 15: 41. All these different glories are beautifully described and explained in Doctrine and Covenants, section seventy-six, as celestial, terrestrial, and telestial kingdoms, all redeemed and saved by the "power of Christ, through the gospel." "every man in his own order," according to the degree of good or evil they may have done. "He who is not able to abide [or obey] the law of the celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory." "All kingdoms have a law, and there are many kingdoms; . . . and unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions. All beings who abide not in those conditions are not justified."—Doc. Cov. 85: 5, 9.

The all important question therefore is, What are the "certain bounds also and conditions" that characterizes "the law of the celestial kingdom?"

In the beautiful extract from the prophecy of Enoch, Doctrine and Covenants, section 36, given for the instruction of the Saints as early as 1830, we learn that his people were called "Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them." Hence equality, being one, no poor, all rich alike, must have been the result of obedience to "certain conditions" of the celestial law under which they must have lived, becoming thereby so perfect that God "took them," they being enabled to "endure his presence." In Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4, we learn that Moses "sought diligently to sanctify his people, that they might behold the face of God; but they hardened their hearts, and could not endure his presence." It must have been by teaching them the same celestial principles that had enabled Enoch's people to see his face, endure his presence, the gospel having been preached to them. (Heb. 4: 4). And because of transgression, another law, more suited to their carnal, selfish natures, was "added" as a schoolmaster until Christ. When Jesus came, he it once began to teach the celestial law. See Matt. 5 to 7 chapters. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, [but in heaven], for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other." "Ye can not serve God and mammon." "Wherefore seek not the things of this world," but rather the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

"Ye are therefore commanded to be perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5: 50. "If thou wilt be perfect, go sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come and follow me." Although keeping all the Mosaic commands from his youth up, insomuch that Jesus "loved him," yet the young man, as former Israel could not endure this "condition" of the celestial law, and "he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." This caused Jesus to say, "That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." "But if they will forsake all things for my sake" [Matt. 19: 21-26] they could be saved. There was no other way. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," and, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matt. 22: 36.

The apostles were to teach Jesus' commandments, his doctrine. (Matt. 28: 19). "And they [the people] abode steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, and fellowship; and all that believed [their doctrine] were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions, and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need," [Acts 2: 42-45], as Jesus had taught the young man in Matthew, chapter 19, and evidently had instructed the apostles to teach others. As a result, great miracles were wrought among them. "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common." (Or equal, and this must have been in harmony with Jesus' doctrine). "And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked."—Acts 4: 32-34; read the chapter. We think that nothing but covetousness as displayed by Ananias and wife, and persecution, ever caused this order to cease among them, as their (Ananias and wife) terrible fate proved that they were disobeying God.

Men were next appointed by the church to receive the consecrations and to distribute them, as it was not meet that the apostles should be burdened with this matter. (Acts. 6: 1-6.) In consequence of this oneness, as prayed for by the Lord Jesus, (John 17: 21), "the word of God increased; and the multitude of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith."—Acts 6: 7. Twenty-seven years after this, Paul seems to be referring to this same matter, as he did to baptism for the dead in 1 Corinthians chapter 15, and Christ's descent into the lower parts of the earth in Ephesians, chapter 4, as a matter so well understood that it needed no explanation. Speaking of the rules in the church, he says, in exhorting to obedience, "For he is the minister of God to thee for good." "Wherefore ye must be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For, for this cause pay ye your consecrations also unto them; for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing."—Inspired Translation, Rom. 13: 4-6. And "That your consecrations may be done in fear of him to whom fear belongs," etc.—verse 7. And why, if God had not required it? This seems the same financial system as referred to in the Acts. "Let no man therefore seek his own, but every man another's good."—1 Cor. 10: 24.

The book is replete with this same doctrine, James, dwelling upon it in particular; also that precious book in which is "the fullness of my gospel." When some through the "smiles of providence" had obtained more of this world's goods than others, the prophet says: "Ye are lifted up in the pride of your hearts, and wear stiff necks and high heads, because of the costliness of your apparel, and persecute your brethren because ye suppose ye are better than they. And now, my brethren, do ye suppose that God justifieth you in this? Behold I say unto you, Nay. But he condemneth you, and if ye persist in these things, his judgment must speedily come unto you. O, that he would show you that he can pierce you, and with one glance of his eye, he can smite you to the dust. O, that he would rid you of this iniquity, and abomination. And, O, that ye would listen unto the word of his commands, and let not the pride of your hearts destroy your souls. Think of your brethren like unto yourselves, and be familiar with all, and free with your substance, that they may be rich like unto you. But before ye seek riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. . . . And ye will seek them for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and feed the hungry."—Jacob. 2: 4, 5.

"And it came to pass that Alma did regulate all the affairs of the church; and they began again to have peace, and to prosper exceedingly in the affairs of the church. And there was a strict command throughout all the churches that there should be no persecution among them, that there should be an equality among all men; that they should let no pride nor haughtiness disturb their peace, that every man should esteem his neighbor as himself, laboring with their own hands for their support; yea, and all their priests and teachers should labor for their support, in all cases save it were in sickness, or in much want: and doing these things they did abound in the grace of God."—Mosiah 11:17, 18. "And now for the sake of these things that I have spoken unto you; that is, for the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that ye may walk guiltless before God, I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, and administering to their relief both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants, and see that all these things are done in wisdom and order; for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength. And again: It is expedient that he should be diligent, that thereby he might win the prize; therefore all things must be done in order. * * * And I would that ye should remember, that whosoever among you that borroweth of his neighbor, should return the thing that he borrowed according as he doth agree, or else thou shalt commit sin, and perhaps thou shalt cause thy neighbor to commit sin also."—Mosiah 2:5. "And he [Alma] also commanded them that the priests, whom he had ordained, should labor with their own hands for their support * * * and the priests were not to depend upon the people for their support; but for their labor they were to receive the grace of God that they might wax strong in the Spirit, having the knowledge of God, that they might teach with power and authority from God. And again, Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he have more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not, to him should be given. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will, and good desires toward God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea and to every needy and naked soul."—Mosiah 9:9. "And when the priests left their labor to impart the word of God unto the people, the people left their labors to hear the word of God. And when the priests had imparted unto them the word of God, they all returned again diligently to their labors; and the priest not esteeming himself above his hearers, for the preacher was no better than the hearer, neither was the teacher any better than the learner; and thus they were all equal, and they did all labor, every man according to his strength; and they did impart of their substance, every man according to that which he had, to the poor, and the needy, and the sick, and the afflicted; and they did not wear costly apparel, yet they were neat and comely; and thus they did establish the affairs of the church: and thus they began to have continued peace again, notwithstanding all their persecutions."—Alma 1:6. And they soon became "exceedingly rich. * * * And did not set their hearts upon riches, but ministered to all the needy; whether in the church, or out of the church, having no respect of persons as to those who stood in need." All laboring as Paul and the Saints in his day; as those who would not labor, "neither should they eat." Every man being held individually responsible to God, as stewards over his own property, or that the Lord had conferred upon him—no idleness. All this was before the coming of the Lord.

When Jesus came he at once began to teach the same "conditions" of the celestial law as in Enoch's day, and as at Jerusalem; the "fulness of the gospel." And after their baptism, "they taught and did minister one to another; and they had all things common among them, every man dealing justly one with another. [Each having his own home and property, over which as the Lord's steward he was to act, being diligent, "dealing justly one with another" according to laws governing that condition]. And it came to pass that they did do all things, even as Jesus had commanded them."—Book of Nephi 12:2. As a result, all the land was converted in a few years, and there was no poor among them, as Enoch's people. "And there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them. Who can not see that every man had his own individual stewardship? Read the following pages in regard to the glorious results of this order among them—"no manner of iniquity among them." * * * "The happiest people on earth." * * * "Mighty miracles among them." This continued until the 20th year, and "They had become exceedingly rich, because of their prosperity in Christ. And now in this two hundred and twenty-first year, there began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride, such as wearing costly apparel, and all manner of fine pearls, and of the fine things of the world. And from that time forth they did have their goods and their substances no more in common among them."

Their "property in Christ" was under the order of equality, or "all things common" as expressed in ancient times. Division, ruin, apostasy, and destruction were the fearful results of a departure from that "certain condition" of God's law. A peculiar law governed this order. I will now present some reasons for believing that this same peculiar order, same "bounds and conditions" of the celestial law, has been restored to earth with the everlasting gospel through Joseph the Seer. In the Lord's preface to Book of Covenants we read: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies, and promises, which are in them, shall all be fulfilled. What I the Lord have spoken I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled."—Sec. 1:7. "For God doth not walk in crooked paths, neither doth he turn to the right hand, nor to the left. Neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round."—Sec. 2:1. "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."—Heb. 13:8. "With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—Jas. 1:17.

Dear Saints, as He never varies from that which He hath said, O let us carefully and prayerfully examine the Scriptures and see what he hath said. In September, 1832, the Lord said to the Saints: "And your minds in times past have been darkened, because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon, and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit, meet for their Father's kingdom; otherwise there remaineth a scourge, and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion. For shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily I say unto you, Nay."—Sec. 83:8. What was it in the books that had been treated lightly? About polygamy? No complaint is made in regard to that. What can it be then? Let us carefully examine. After telling them that Enoch's people had no poor among them, evidently desiring that they should become as they, "pure in heart," the Lord says: "I give unto you a commandment, for I have heard your prayers, and the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons. And I have made the earth rich," etc.—Sec. 38:4. "And again I say unto you, let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me." Compare this with Mosiah 11:18. Then is given the great condition of the celestial law: "I say unto you be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine."—pars. 5:6. It must have been this matter of being one, as taught in the Book of Mormon and former commandments, that had been "treated lightly." It was for the purpose of giving a law to make them one that they were required to go to Ohio. (par. 7). They were told in paragraph five that he could not be just and clothe his children differently, who served him alike. In paragraph eight, men are to be appointed by the church, to look after the poor, and the needy, and administer to their relief," the same as at Jerusalem, (Acts 6), inferring that he was giving them the same heavenly law. In paragraph nine they are told that if obedient, "Ye shall be the richest of all people. . . . But be ware of pride as the Nephites of old." And elder, priest, teacher, and member, are commanded to labor with their hands to bring about His purposes, as in Book of Mormon.

Is it not fair to presume that He was giving them the same law as to Enoch, the Saints at Jerusalem, and the Nephites? Warning them against pride that had caused the Nephites to fall; and that this law was what had been treated lightly as before quoted? In section 42 this law of equality, oneness, is given. All are to consecrate their property to the Lord, to be "laid before the Bishop of my church." And "every man shall be made accountable to me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family." Dealing justly one with another, as the Nephites, also their moral obligations concerning only one wife as in Book of Mormon, is reiterated. About how to dress, duties of officers, settling difficulties among brethren, and particularly in regard to paying for what you get of your brother, and if you obtain more than needful for your family, give it unto the storehouse; also against idlers—"Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." In section 45:5, they were to look after the poor, "until all things may be done according to my law, which ye have received." Why not after that? Because that would make them all equal, all rich, "no poor among them;" "one" as taught in section 51:2; "And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one as I have commanded you." In sec. 49:3, "All things are said to be made for man, but it is not given that one man shall possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin." Compare with Book of Mormon, page 115, where inequality of God's people is called a crime. That is, those who are equally worthy. As "the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways." 74:5, "Nevertheless in your temporal things you shall be equal, and that not grudgingly, ("Be free with your substance that they may be rich like unto you."—B. of M. 115), "Otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld." They would not be withheld only on account of sin. "O God, why not bestow thy healing power as in days of old?" oftentimes goes up in the wail of anguish, as the clammy hand of death is laid upon those dearer than life. "I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." 81:3. "Neither doth he vary from that which he hath said." This answers the question so often asked, "Why don't we have more of the spiritual manifestations?"

CHINA'S DELUGES.

EVEN the best posted of the reading public but faintly comprehend the cause and extent of the Chinese deluge. Consider a province larger than Iowa—largely made up of low, rich lands, swarming with population. Along one side runs a river equal to the Mississippi in length and volume, but which has been dyked for so many years that its deposits have raised its bed to a higher level than the country through which it runs. In its time of flood the Honan section of this broad Yellow River presents the reality of a gigantic reservoir five hundred miles long by seventy-five feet deep, suspended in the air by artificial supports. The breaking, on either side, of these supports of dykes turns this vast flood upon the unprotected country—not only the present pool, but the constant renewals from behind for two months or more—or until by superhuman efforts, the opening has been filled and the waters are confined again to their customary course.

The breaking of its south side dyke some twenty weeks ago launched forth upon the province of Honan, a rushing torrent of thirty miles wide by ten feet deep, throwing out rivers almost every minute at every incline of the land, surging on through this great province—sweeping at once over 20,000 square miles, destroying more than 3,000 villages.

And the people? Death. Swim? As well wrestle with Niagara river. Fly? It takes hours in these vast China plains to reach a hillock three feet high—the waters rushing at a ten-mile rate. No more escape than from the will of God, and such as refused to struggle as thousands did in their despair were happiest because the quickest dead. The estimated deaths were from five to seven millions. What remedy? Ask Charleston the remedy for an earthquake. Dyking? Yes, but it is only a matter of time when the river bed grows so high as to defeat any dyke this plucky people can afford to build. Time and again has this river done this same—changed its bed and drowned Chinese by the millions.

What is the lesson to be learned from this? Dyking is dangerous. Clean out the river bed and mouth and keep the flood well on its course.—Davenport Democrat-Gazette.

ALCOHOL.

BELLOWS says: "Alcohol contains no power of sustaining human life, but, on the other hand, produces in the system 'evil and only evil, and that continually.'"

He quotes from Professor Carpenter's Physiology, published in 1860, these words: "It may be safely affirmed that alcohol can not answer any one purpose for which the use of water is required in the human system, but, on the other hand, it tends to antagonize many of those purposes."

"Alcohol liquids can not supply anything which is essential to the due nutrition of the system."

"The action of alcohol upon the living body is essentially that of a stimulus, increasing, for a time, the vital activity of the body, but being followed by a corresponding depression of power, which is more prolonged and severe in proportion as the previous excitement has been greater."

Bellows also says: "All agree that alcohol is a stimulus which, literally, means a goad, a whip. When a horse gets stuck with a load too heavy for him, we use a goad or whip to excite the muscles to take the load up the hill. But when once up, the careful driver will be sure that next time the load shall be lighter, or the horse made stronger with oats. What should we say to the teamster who persisted in the opinion that the whip afforded nourishment to the horse because he could be made to draw a heavier load by whipping, and therefore persisted in whipping him more severely as his strength became exhausted? But if this is not the position of those who think that alcohol is nutritious, I can not understand them."

He quotes Dr. Bell, in his $200 prize essay, as follows:

"1. The opinion so largely prevailing as to the use of alcoholic liquors, viz., that they have a marked influence in preventing the deposition of tubercle, is destitute of any foundation.

"2. On the contrary, their use predisposes to tubercular deposition.

"3. Where tubercle already exists, alcohol has no effect in modifying the course usually run by that substance.

"4. Neither does it mitigate the morbid effects of tubercle upon the system in any stage of the disease."

Carpenter's Physiology says the physiological objection to the habitual use of even quite small quantities of alcoholic drinks upon the following grounds: "They are universally admitted to possess a poisonous character." "They tend to produce a morbid condition of the body at large." "The capacity for enduring the extremes of heat or cold, or mental or bodily labor, is diminished rather than increased by their habitual employment."

Prof. Jacob Bigelow, in a lecture given in 1825, said: "Alcohol is highly stimulating, heating, and intoxicating, and its effects are so fascinating that, when once experienced, the danger is that the desire for them may be perpetuated."

Prof. Yeomans, of New York, says: "It has been demonstrated that alcoholic drinks prevent the natural changes going on in the blood, and obstruct the nutritive and reparative functions." In his paper on "Alcohol and the Constitution of Man," the same author says: "Chemical experiments have demonstrated that the action of alcohol on the digestive fluid is to destroy its active principle, the pepsin, thus confirming the observation of physiologists, that its use gives rise to the most serious disorders of the stomach, and the most malignant aberrations of the entire economy."

"It is evident that so far from being the conservator of health, alcohol is an active and powerful cause of disease, interfering as it does with the respiration, the circulation, and the nutrition; nor is any other result possible." "Nothing can be more certain than that it is a powerful antagonist of the digestive process." "It prevents the natural changes going on in the blood." "It impedes the liberation of carbonic acid, a deadly poison." "It obstructs the nutritive and reparative functions." "It produces disease of the liver." "It has a powerful affinity for the substance of the brain, being, indeed, essentially a brain poison."

Rev. W. Scoresby, before a committee of the House of Commons testified as follows: "My experience has been in severely cold climates, and there it is observable that there is a very pernicious effect in the reaction after the use of ardent spirits. I did not use them myself, and I was better, I conceive, without the use of them. I am well assured that such beverages as milk and water are in every way superior, both for comfort and health, for persons exposed to the weather or other severity. Spirits are decidedly injurious in cold climates. The men who have been assisted by such stimulants have been the first who were rendered incapable of duty. They became perfectly stupid, skulked into different parts of the ship to get out of the way, and were generally found asleep. In case of a storm, or other sudden difficulty, I should most decidedly prefer the water-drinkers to those who were under the influence of any stimulant."

Dr. Rush says, in his Medical Enquirer, "There can not be a greater error than to suppose that spirituous liquors lessen the effects of cold on the body. On the contrary, they always render the body more liable to be affected and injured by cold. The temporary warmth they produce is always succeeded by chilliness."

Backus says: "In the winter of 1796, a vessel was wrecked on an island off the coast of Massachusetts. There were seven persons on board. Five of them resolved to quit the ship during the night, and seek shelter on the shore. To prepare for the attempt, four of them drank a quantity of spirits, and the fifth drank none. They all leaped into the water; one was drowned before reaching the shore; the other four came to land, and, in deep snow and piercing cold, directed their course to a distant light. All that drank spirits failed and stopped and froze, one after another; the man that drank none reached the house, and about two years ago was still alive."

IMPURE LITERATURE.

THE following tract is issued for distribution by Mrs. Nellie H. Bradley, Superintendent of the Department for the Suppression of Impure Literature and Art, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia.

What are your children reading!

Dear friends, the answer to this question involves the deepest interests of your precious home treasures for time and for eternity.

Among the many Satanic agencies for depraving the minds and corrupting the morals of the young, none exert a more dangerous and insidious influence than the vicious literature whose moral poison sensualizes their natures, and renders them easy and early victims to vice in all its forms.

Boys of tender age linger with fascinated gaze before the boards on which the criminal newspapers are displayed, with all the shockingly realistic illustrations and recitals of the immorality, crime and brutality that are brought before the courts of earth and recorded at the bar of heaven.

They are seen in groups under the street lamps listening with eager interest while one of their number reads aloud from a popular weekly a chapter from a serial abounding in bar-room profanity and teeming with indelicate and suggestive illusions. The "love-death-and-murder, blood-and-thunder" story papers, and trashy, low, sensational dime and half-dime novels that are so widely circulated and so easily obtained, "weaken the moral nature, and create an appetite for publications of a grosser type."

The rapid increase of child criminals is the "harvest of the seed sowing of evil reading."

The majority of the criminals in our state prisons are under twenty-two years of age, and one-third are under sixteen. The chaplain of one of these institutions is authority for the statement that three-fourths of the boys and girls incarcerated there attribute their crimes to the debasing effects of vicious literature.

One of the most diabolical traps is set by certain manufacturers who make persistent efforts to poison the minds of school children, by obtaining lists of all the children and youth in the country and sending to them advertisement of the most secret and villainous character.

Boys who buy tobacco and cigars which defile the body, have the soul polluted by the pictures that accompany every package. "That there should be human beings fiendish enough to deliberately plan and work to excite immoral thoughts and debasing curiosity—to stimulate passion and start the fires of unholy desires in innocent children, is almost past belief, but it is a horrible and menacing fact that there are men continually at work using the printing-press, cheap picture making processes, all the contrivances of trade and all the ingenuity of the evasion of law, to maliciously and purposely destroy this sweetest and most hopeful treasure of humanity, the purity of little children. A picture, a story or a suggestion used for the debauching of youthful innocence, does its work fatally well. A child can not, if it would, forget readily, a leading toward evil of this sort. The obscenity reaches down through the purity which is its priceless birth-right, down to that animalism which underlies the human and divine in our natures; and, stirring that animalism to conscious life, it forces a warring of elements in the soul, for which the child has as yet no moral strength."

Dear friends, scrutinize carefully the mail matter that comes to your children. Guard well their reading. Supply them liberally with the bright and entertaining literature that is now so abundant and inexpensive. Set apart for them a space in your bookcase, or what is better still let each own a pretty little set of bookshelves that can be bought for a dollar. Above all, do not be too busy to show an interest in their reading, and, if possible, read to them. Many a boy is kept from the streets and evil associations at night, by his eagerness to know "what is coming next," in the interesting book from which his mother or sister reads aloud after evening.

We are doing what we can, legally and otherwise, to protect the youth of this city from the debasing influence of the many vile devices for their ruin. Aid us in our efforts by doing your part in the sacred sphere of the home circle for the children's sake!

Conference Minutes.

FAR WEST.

The above conference convened on Saturday, February 25th, J. T. Kinneman in the chair, C. P. Faul clerk. Elders W. Sumnerfield ordained 1 priest, 1 teacher, 1 deacon, organized one branch. W. T. Bozarth, H. C. Bronson, J. H. Merriam (since last reporting to this conference has baptized 11), J. F. McDowell, J. D. Flanders, A. J. Seely, Robert Ware by letter, J. T. Kinneman, D. E. Powell, L. L. Babbitt, J. M. Terry, Temme Hinderks, Henry Hinderks. Priests L. Niedorp, E. M. Bryant, Peter Peterson, John Peterson, Frank M. Mauzey, A. W. Head, C. P. Faul. Teachers Welliar Wells, G. W. Leach, Thomas McKee, Thomas Mauzey, K. Hinderks. Deacons C. Householder, J. Smith. Branch reports were heard from Pleasant Grove, Kingston, DeKalb, St. Joseph, German Stewartsville, Stewartsville, Delano and Edgerton. The president of each branch was appointed as a committeeman to solicit money for the purpose of defraying the funeral expenses of father Baldwin. An appeal was asked for by Bro. John Hardacre in the case of Stewartsville branch versus John Hardacre. Moved that conference entertain the appeal, and that a court be appointed to investigate the matter. Chair appointed H. C. Bronson, Wm. T. Bozarth and A. J. Seely. This conference instructs its delegates to General Conference to vote, work, and use their influence to have the sitting of the General Conference in 1889, held at St. Joseph, Missouri. Moved that Charles Duncan be ordained to office of a priest. Moved a substitute that the ordination of Bro. Charles Duncan be referred to the Kingston branch, with the recommendation that he be ordained if in wisdom they see fit. Delegates to General Conference: J. T. Kinneman, H. C. Bronson, W. T. Bozarth, J. M. Terry and Wm. Lewis. President of district is requested to meet with the Saints at Spickards, Missouri, once a month, or call some one to keep up the appointment. General Conference is requested to continue Elder Joseph R. Lambert in his present field. Present officers of the district were sustained for the next quarter. Elder J. F. McDowell preached Sunday forenoon and evening. Social meeting at two o'clock. Adjourned to meet at Pleasant Grove branch, on Saturday, May 25th, at ten o'clock.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.

The above district convened in Omaha, Nebraska, December 31st, 1887; Nelson Brown presiding, Isaac Sylvester secretary. Statistical report:—Columbus 34; no changes except 1 ordination. Omaha 102; 1 baptized, 1 died. Union 49; 2 baptized, 1 died, 1 ordination. Lake Shore 31; 5 baptized, 3 received, 1 ordination. Elders reports:—James Caffall, W. Ballanger. W. M. Rumel (baptized one), Nicholas Rumel, G. W. Walters (baptized one), W. Brown, R. Farley, H. J. Hudson reported by letter. Financial report of Bishop's agent for six months, ending December 29th, 1887:—On hand last report $80.10, received $70, total $150.10, paid out $101.80, balance $48.30. Bro. Ballanger was authorized to labor at Florence and Bellevue as circumstances permit, and Nicholas Rumel associated with him. Nelson Brown tendered his resignation as district president, giving as reason that his circumstances would not permit him to fill the office. Resignation accepted and thanks voted for his labors, cares and anxieties in the past. The district was left to the missionary in charge until next conference. Appeal from decision of elders' court from Fremont. Resolved that the matter be left to the missionary in charge, and he pass upon it and his decision be final. Resolved that a two days' meeting be appointed, the first Saturday and Sunday in May, to be conducted by the missionary in charge, or whom he may appoint. The district secretary and Bishop's agent were sustained. Complaint being received from the Columbus branch, it was resolved that the minutes of district conference be published as soon after the adjournment as practicable. Report of James Caffall in case of Rasmussen vs. Patterson, owing to absence of documentary evidence could not give a definite decision. Report adopted. Resolved that the decision of the elders' court in case of Patterson vs. Union branch be deferred until next session. Bro. W. M. Rumel was elected delegate to General Conference, the district to pay his expenses. Resolved that a collection for the benefit of the missionaries be taken up morning and evening service on Sunday. Preaching in the forenoon by James Caffall; collection $2.80. Prayer meeting in the afternoon. Preaching in the evening by James Caffall; collection $1.13. Mark H. Forscutt's report was received too late for conference. Had preached on alternate Sundays in Omaha, and baptized two in same place. Adjourned to meet in Fremont at 7:30 p. m., June 29th, 1888.

VICTORIAN.

By call of Elder T. W. Smith, president of the Australian and Society Island mission, the Saints of Victoria met at Hastings, on Saturday, December 31st, 1887, for the purpose of organizing a district. Elder T. W. Smith presiding, J. F. Burton clerk. The statistical reports of Queensferry and Hastings branches were received, showing a membership of 37 in Hastings and 36 in Queensferry. The reports of church funds received and paid by these branches were also read and accepted. Elders T. W. Smith, J. A. Read and J. F. Burton, were appointed a committee to frame rules to govern district conferences and report to the next conference. Resolved that this district be called the "Victorian District." Elder Evan Jones was chosen president of the district for six months. Preaching in the evening by T. W. Smith and J. A. Read. At the morning prayer and testimony meeting a season of spiritual blessings was enjoyed in prophecy, testimony, prayer and song; after which Bro. T. W. Smith preached an instructive discourse on the subject of tithing. In the afternoon Bro. E. McGurk was unanimously chosen as a proper person to recommend to Bishop Blakeslee as his agent for this colony. J. A. Read was chosen as district secretary. At the sacrament meeting Elder J. F. Burton was ordained to the office of Seventy, and E. McGurk was ordained elder, Evan Jones, Jun., priest, and James C. F. Rennie deacon. An excellent season was enjoyed by the Saints—they being blessed, instructed, edified and warned by the Holy Spirit in tongues, interpretation and counsel. A stranger present was spoken to directly by the Spirit through sister Hellen Smith, in warning and prophecy. After meeting he said: "Well, if that woman ever spoke the truth she did while telling me of my past life and present desires, and it seems strange to me how she could know, unless God revealed it to her." In the evening Elder T. W. Smith occupied the stand, showing to the Saints and friends the extent of the Abrahamic covenant or promise, in the gospel; he spoke each time with much fervor and evidently by the power of God's Spirit. Adjourned to meet with the Queensferry branch, on Saturday, February 18th, 1888. Officers present:—Of the Twelve 1, Seventy 1, elders 4, priests 3, teachers 1, deacon 1; numbers reported, 73. Leopold branch (not reported) has eleven members, including 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 teacher. Thus has ended the first conference in Victoria, and the Victorian district is the first organized district in Australia.

ZION'S HOPE

Is published every Saturday by the Church of Christ, at Lamoni, Iowa. Single copies, per year, 50c; packages of four to ten 40c; packages of over ten 35c.

Miscellaneous.

QUORUM NOTICES.

To the Elders of the First Quorum:—The time of the annual meeting is at hand, and in harmony with the rule adopted by our body, I most respectfully request each member to prepare and submit his annual report of his stewardship for the labors performed during the past conference year, or from the time of his last report. Those who may send by mail will please address me at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri. Let none withhold his report on account of the limited amount of ministerial work done. The quorum is not without charity for the aged and unfortunate, and we are anxious to hear from every one. In gospel bonds,
ROBERT M. ELVIN, President.

All the Elders of the Fourth Quorum that have changed their post office since last spring, will please notify the secretary, S. Crum, at Independence, Missouri, box 121. Some of the quorum have not been heard from for two years; would be pleased to have a report from all this year. Let us hear from every one whether you have labored or not, that we may know your whereabouts and your intentions in the future. Send all reports by April 1st.

S. CRUM, Secretary.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

RAILROAD RATES.

Persons attending the General Conference at Independence, Missouri, next April 6th, going over the Chicago and Alton Railroad, in Illinois and Missouri, can have the rate at one fare and a third for the round trip; provided that they purchase first-class single trip tickets to Independence, and procure from the ticket agent when going a certificate (which the agent will furnish on request) certifying as to the form, number, route and destination of ticket purchased.

2. If through tickets can not be procured at starting point, passengers must purchase to the most convenient point where such tickets can be procured, and re-purchase through to Independence via this line, requesting certificate as before mentioned, from the ticket agent at the point at which such ticket is purchased.

3. Tickets for the return journey will be sold by the ticket agent at Independence at one-third the single trip, first-class unlimited fare, and only to those holding certificates duly signed and stamped by the ticket agent at the point from which the ticket for the going passage was sold; such certificates to be countersigned by the secretary or clerk of the conference, certifying that the holder has been in regular attendance at the meeting. It is imperative that a certificate be procured.

Tickets issued on certificate for return journey will be limited by agent for continuous trip—no stop-over privilege being allowed. Certificates are non-transferable.

The Missouri Pacific Railway Company in Missouri, will return delegates at same rates to points on their line upon presentation to their agents at Independence of certificates signed and filled out by Bishop Geo. A. Blakeslee. It is hoped that their lines in Kansas will do the same.

The Illinois Central Railroad Company will return delegates at one-third regular rates, who pay full fare going, over their lines in Iowa and Illinois upon presentation at their ticket offices at Effingham, Vandalia, Normal, (Illinois), or Sioux City, Iowa, certificates issued by the authorized officer of the conference properly accrediting them.

Persons attending the conference who pay full fare going over the Chicago and North-Western Railway, will be returned for one-third fare, provided they procure a receipt issued by the agent of that company at the railway station from which they start on that line going to conference, for the full fare paid; which receipt, when filled up and countersigned by the secretary of the conference certifying that the holder was an at-tenant, will be honored if presented at the depot ticket offices of that company at Council Bluffs, Des Moines, and Chicago.

If persons pass over two or more railways when going to conference, and pay two or more short fares, on account of local tickets not being sold through, they should procure receipts for the fare paid going over each line, or for each ticket purchased, as return tickets at the reduced rate will be issued locally by each company for same trips. Blank forms for the above purpose are in the hands of all the station agents, (on the C. N.-W. Ry.), and will be issued as receipts for full fare paid on application. The same rules apply with those going over the Rock Island and Pacific. Receipts for fare over this road will be honored by their agent at Kansas City, Missouri, for return tickets at one-third fare when properly filled up and countersigned by Bishop Geo. A. Blakeslee.

The Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific will furnish to those who pay full first-class fare going, return tickets at one-third full fare; provided, that they secure from the Ticket Agent at the Station where they purchase ticket going a receipt and certificate for and of said purchase—such certificate to be certified by the Secretary of Conference; and provided further, that there be twenty (20) or more such persons returning over the same route as in going.

Don't fail to procure receipts for the full fare paid going, as otherwise no return tickets at the reduced rates will be issued.

It is expected similar arrangements will be effected over the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Michigan Central, and other roads, at an early time.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR ENTERTAINING.

A committee has been appointed by the Independence Branch to arrange for the entertainment of General Conference members and visitors; said committee consists of F. G. Pitt chairman, H. R. Mills treasurer, M. S. Frick secretary, J. J. Vickery and R. May.

Said committee has appointed a reception committee, as follows: First Ward, J. J. Vickery; Second Ward, F. W. Barbee; Third Ward, R. May; Fourth Ward, M. S. Frick, whose duty it is to provide homes for all who come and apply to them. A uniform charge at the rate of two dollars per week will be made, said money to be paid to the committeeman assigning the guest his or her home.

All parties intending to come to conference, who have not made private arrangements for their accommodation, will please bear the above in mind, and, if possible, notify the secretary of committee, Bro. M. S. Frick, of their intention to come, that arrangements may be made beforehand for as many as possible, and thus avoid extra work at the time.

It has been decided to hold conference in the basement of our New Church, and preparations are being made to that end. Committeemen will wear a blue ribbon in button hole by which they may be known.

The Independence Branch, at its meeting held March 5th, adopted the above.

F. G. PITT, Chairman of Committee.

P. S.—It is intended to have a corner stone laying at the New Church April 6th, if arrangements can be made with Pres. Joseph Smith to preside at said ceremony on that day.

SPECIAL LAND EXCURSIONS.

On March 20th, April 3d and 24th, May 8th and 22d, and June 5th, 1888, the "Burlington Route," C. B. & Q. R. R., will run Special Land Excursions from Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis and all stations on its line to points in Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota and Dakota, and to points in Colorado east of and including Akron and Sterling on the B. & M. R. R. and Sterling on the U. P. R'y, at greatly reduced rates. This will afford home-seekers, land buyers and others an excellent opportunity for the inspection of the fertile country of central, north-western and south-western Nebraska and north-western Kansas, reached by the new extensions of the Burlington

& Missouri River R. R. in Nebraska. Also, to visit the rich agricultural districts of Dakota and Minnesota reached by the Burlington Route. A great reduction in rates will also be made to Texas, New Mexico, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Arkansas points on March 20th, April 3d and 24th, May 8th and 22d, and June 5th, 1888. Tickets good for 30 days to Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Minnesota and Dakota points; and to all other States mentioned, 60 days. Liberal stop-over privileges will be accorded passengers beyond terminal points of this line. For tickets, general or further information regarding the above, apply to any ticket agent of its own or connecting lines or address, PAUL MORTON, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Illinois.

NOTICES.

Bro. D. L. Palsgrove, clerk of Clinton branch, Iowa, desires to hear from Bro. John E. and Sr. Nancy M. Ferris, of that branch, so as to know of their present residence. When last heard from they were in Southern Missouri. Will they please communicate with Bro. Palsgrove.

The quotation from Wm. Osborne, in "Dispersion," Herald No. 7, page 109, first column, should read, "Armenia" instead of America.

DIED.

McCRAW.—At the residence of her son-in-law, Dr. A. S. Davison, in Lucas, Iowa, at six o'clock Saturday morning, February 18th, 1888, Mrs. Nancy McCraw, aged 77 years, 8 months and 29 days. She was the mother of eleven children, three of whom died early, the remaining eight, (four sons and four daughters) are all still living, the exception of two sons who preceded her in death, within the past twelve months, the last one dying on December 29th, 1887, preceding his mother, one month and twenty-one days. She was baptized by her son-in-law (Dr. A. S. Davison) into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in August, 1882, at Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa. She received a testimony of the work, and lived a faithful and consistent member of the same, and died having unbounded confidence and faith in the promises of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and with a hope of a part in the first resurrection or the resurrection of the just. "Blessed are they who die in the Lord."

HEMINGWAY.—Sister Maria, wife of Moses Hemingway, died at her home in Goodland, Lapeer county, Michigan, February 23d, 1888. She was baptized September 1st, 1872, by Charles Blanchard, and remained strong in the faith to the last. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. A. Carpenter.

MORLEY.—Sister Louisa Morley departed this life on the 11th of February, 1888. She died firm in the faith. Funeral sermon by Elder J. J. Cornish.

DOCKERY.—At Great Falls, Montana, December 2d, 1887, of diphtheria, sister Leah Ann Dockery, wife of H. Dockery, and daughter of Richard Hewitt. Born at Fremont, Indiana, December 28th, 1836; baptized at Lone Star branch, by Elder J. D. Cravin, October 13th, 1867. Sister Dockery, although isolated from the society of the Saints, maintained her integrity for the cause she loved; called her family around her and bore a faithful testimony to the truths of the gospel. The family requests an elder from Montana to come to Great Falls to preach her funeral sermon and baptize some of the family, according to her last wishes. So they pass away one by one, but the happy thought: "Blessed are they who die in the Lord, from henceforth."

GRIFFITHS.—At Scranton, Pennsylvania, February 13th, 1888, after a severe illness of five days, Elder David Griffiths. He was born in Cordiganshire, Wales, November, 1829; was baptized at Dowlais in the year 1846, and re-baptized in 1863, by William Jones, at Abermann, Wales. He came to this country January 17th, 1882. There are left to mourn his loss two sons and one daughter. He will long be remembered by all who knew him, especially by the missionaries of Wales, whom he aided so much by providing a home for them. He died firm in the faith, bearing his testimony to the truthfulness of the work. He died without a change in his appearance. The funeral took place at Taylorville; the sermon was preached by Elder Lewis B. Thomas, assisted by J. J. Morgan and H. L. Gill.

BEST.—Near Beaumont, California, February 11th, 1888, Joseph Rupert, youngest child of Bro. Newton W. and Sr. Annie Best; aged 2 years, 3 months, and 11 days. Funeral sermon at the residence by Elder Heman C. Smith. Then we laid him by the side of his brother Arthur, on the hillside. Thus two have been called from the family since the new year began.

"Such the Father's kingdom is,
These words of Christ how sweet,
Know ye that in that kingdom bright
Your angel children meet.
Look up! ye weeping ones left here,
Live faithful, humble, true;
For see, beyond the gates ajar,
Your boys are beck'ning you."

GARLAND.—Jessie Caroline, the infant daughter of Samuel and Caroline Garland, Jun., at Kewanee, Illinois, February 8th, 1888, of congestion of the lungs; aged 2 years and 2 months. Services by J. Chisnal.

O! vicious Death, how dare you tear
So cruel from our side?
Our little Jessie dear, more fair
Than all this world beside.

Death's response—

Ye parents kind, the charge recall,
I did not so intend;
I only came at heaven's call,
The "Pearl" to homeward send.
She was too pure an angel here,
With mortals to remain;
If you'd "prepare" you need not fear,
You'll meet your "babe" again.

HOPKINS.—At Netawaka, Kansas, February 18th, 1888, of pneumonia, Daniel, infant son of Daniel and Sr. Bettie Hopkins, aged 1 year and 5 days. Funeral service at the house, by Elder H. Green.

"Fare the well, thou fondly cherished,
Dear, dear spirit, fare thee well
He who lent thee hath recalled thee
Back with him and his to dwell."

WHEATON.—Bro. William Calvin Wheaton, born July 14th, 1840; baptized at Royalton, Berrien county, Michigan, by James Blakeslee, about 1860; died at Muskegon, Michigan, February 19th, 1888. Bro. Wheaton was a consistent member of the church, and died in full hope of a part in the first resurrection. His remains were taken to Chase and buried with military honors. Funeral sermon by J. J. Cornish in the Congregational church.

CLEVELAND.—At the home of his son-in-law, Joseph Emmett, in Armstrong, Kansas, January 28th, 1888, Elder George Cleveland, in the 63d year of his age. He was the first one baptized in the Reorganized Church in Canada, which was under the preaching of Elder John Shippy, at Buckhorn, Kent county, Ontario, in February, 1862; and, during the almost twenty-six years of his union with the church, was an active elder most of the time. He endured much of the privations and toils common to a faithful elder's life; and always tried to discharge his duties, however toilsome, when called upon. He was widely known throughout western Ontario, as he was the president of the old Kent and Elgin district, different terms; and many of the Saints there will remember his face and form. He leaves a wife and large family and a large circle of friends to mourn his departure, but they sorrow not as those without hope. He was buried in Independence, Missouri. Funeral discourse by Elder Joseph Luff.

"Dear father, thou art gone from this cold world of sorrow,
And 'the clouds of the valley' now hide thee from sight;
But the sunlight of heaven beamed bright on thy morrow,
And the angels did welcome thy passage to light!
Rest, soldier of Christ! Thy warfare is over!
The crown thou hast worn! Thou shalt rest evermore!"

CARDINAL Manning is a frequent guest at luxurious banquets, but the ascetic churchman in the midst of such feasts makes his dinner off a baked potato, a piece of beef and a glass of water.

THE darkest hour in the history of any young man is when the sits down to study how to get money without honestly earning it.—Greely.

TO THE SEVENTIES.

To the Presidents of the Quorum of Seventy, Greeting:—You are hereby requested to meet at the house of Bro. C. A. Bishop, Independence, Missouri, April 4th, at ten a. m., in council, to confer, and as the Spirit may direct "to choose other Seventy," that the quorum may be more perfectly filled, as we are commanded by the Master,—Sec. 104, par. 43. In bonds,
E. C. BRAND.

March 1st, 1888.

To the Quorum of Seventy, Greeting, Dear Brethren:—Our secretary is preparing a blank circular, a copy of which will be mailed to each member. We hope that every member of the quorum, without a single exception, will fill up and return the same before the date specified, that we may have a full and perfect report.

The various reports indicate that brethren in the field have fought nobly and been sustained by the Captain of their salvation. We desire to urge on you that every member of the quorum that can attend this next conference to do so. There are matters of great importance to be presented to the body, upon which it would be wise for us to confer in quorum capacity.

Brethren; let us gather to the "City of Zion," get our spiritual strength renewed, and go forth thence "clothed" and "armed" for greater and more glorious victories.

Your brother in bonds,

March 1st.

E. C. BRAND.

TO A YOUNG HOUSEKEEPER.

ONE of the best rules ever given by a mother to a daughter just about to begin housekeeping was: "Always see every part of your house from garret to cellar at least once a day; the servants get to know this, and consequently they never throw things into corners, or leave untidy closets." This is especially good advice concerning the kitchen. Make a point of opening pantry drawers, lifting the washtub lids; take a look into the refrigerator every morning, and see what a difference it will make in the cook's neatness. A good mistress can always manage to do this while she is giving the day's orders, and in such a way as not to offend the girl's feelings; for some—and the best girls—are very sensitive about being watched, or rather at having their ability to keep a tidy kitchen doubted. At the same time, the knowledge that her mistress is more than likely to take a look into the refrigerator at any time will greatly influence the putting away of provisions and keeping the waste-pan empty.—Harper's Bazar.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, March 24, 1888.

WILLIAM LAW.

"Tis slander;

Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue
Out-venoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world; kings, queens, and states, Maids, matrons,—nay, the secrets of the grave
This viperous slander enters."

Why should William Law, after saying many evil things of Joseph the Seer and Emma, his wife, and after endorsing an hundred-fold more, raked together by a Dutch scandal scavenger named Dr. W. Wyl—why should he turn his slanderous pen upon the sons of Joseph and Emma? He admits that he left Nauvoo early in 1844. One of these sons was then unborn, and the others were small children, the oldest—Joseph—being then but eleven years old. And inasmuch as he has not known those sons, why should he speak evil of them? Has he not sufficient moral sense to know that his testimony against them simply stamps him a false witness? For, he who assumes to testify of what he does not know, is both false and base. Honorable people, of all times, detest and loathe the slanderer. And "he that loves and makes a lie," especially if to defile and destroy the reputation of his fellowman, richly merits the terrible condemnation denounced against him by the Almighty.

When Mr. Law defames the character of the sons of Joseph and Emma Smith, men of whom he has never had any personal knowledge, he disgraces himself, he dishonors and rudely violates the laws of his country, he insults society and outrages its dearest, most sacred safeguards. What but the meanest malice could have moved Mr. Law to volunteer the assertion that the sons of Joseph and Emma were and are wicked and vicious? Only the basest spite and the vilest form of revenge, could have inspired his direct and indirect statements that Joseph and Emma were wicked and vicious, and then add the following about those whom he admits he never knew:

"Young Jo Smith, president of the 'Reorganized,' is a 'chip of the old block' and would be just as bad as his father if he had the ability. David Whitmer is a crank and always was, and so was Martin Harris."

This was said after he had written these words to Dr. Wyl:

"In your book you give a most appalling, black and horrible history (true, no doubt) of the Smiths, Rigdon, and many others, leaders and members of the organization, show them guilty of almost every form of crime and abomination, murderers, robbers, thieves, swindlers, perjurers, fornicators, adulterers, polygamists—defying the laws of God and man, a people not fit to live with or to associate with in any way."

In this Mr. Law endorses all the villainous things penned and scraped together by Dr. Wyl in his book against Joseph the Seer, and then with the recklessness, readiness, and gloating mendacity of the professional calumniator he asserts that "Young Joe Smith, president of the 'Reorganized,' is a 'chip of the old block,' and would be just as bad as his father if he had the ability."

Turning from the base testimony of this man who admits he has no personal acquaintance with the sons of Joseph whom he defames, let us see what are the testimonies of honorable, intelligent persons who know these sons and have known them for the past twenty-five years and longer.

Of President Joseph Smith, the publishers of the Biographical and Historical Record of Decatur county, Iowa, has this to say:

"His youth was passed amid trials, sorrows and afflictions that would have embittered one of less noble character against the world. His life has been saddened by the events of those years, but his manhood has not deteriorated, and it may be that the persecution of his family, which did not end with the death of his father, has had much to do with forming his character. No semblance of intolerance has place there. The same liberty of action and thought he exercises himself, he freely accords to all. In religion, loyal to the faith of his father, he recognizes in every worker of good, a brother. As a citizen, no man outranks him in his fealty to the Government. As a man, his character of honor and integrity stands unquestioned. At his step-father's solicitation Mr. Smith began reading law in his sixteenth year, with Wm. E. McLennan, a local attorney at law, which he continued, closing with a year's reading in the office of Hon. William Kellogg, of Canton, Illinois, in 1855-'6. Mr. Smith did not seek admission to the bar, disliking the practice of the law. He was chosen a justice of the peace in 1858, and was re-elected in 1862; was a school director for the same period of time, served one term as alderman of the city of Nauvoo. * * *

"During Mr. Smith's stay in Plano he served several terms on the Board of Trustees of the town, and for three years as a justice of the peace, elected by the people. He removed from Plano to Lamoni in October, 1881, accompanying the office of the Herald, removed at that date. In politics Mr. Smith was first an Abolitionist, then, as a consequence, a Republican, but is not a politician, being engrossed in his religious pursuits. From his fifteenth year he has been a strong advocate of the temperance cause, and an uncompromising opposer to licensing the sale of intoxicating drinks, and has lectured in many places in the temperance interests. * * *

"He has, with others, labored diligently, and congratulates himself that he has seen the church over which he presides grow from a handful, obscure and unpopular, into a body of persistent workers of many thousands of honest, honorable men, known and loved by their neighbors and loyal to their country."—History of Decatur County, pages 513, 514.

To this we add a leading editorial from the Amboy (Illinois) Times, on the proceedings of the General Conference in that city, April 6th, 1860:

"THE MORMON CONFERENCE.

"We devote considerable space to the proceedings of this body, believing that they are of great importance to us, even as a nation. There is a great body of these people scattered through the States, who, unwilling to follow the fortunes and doctrines of Brigham Young, have been quietly waiting for the time to come when they could organize under a lineal descendant of Joseph Smith, as their prophet. That time has at length arrived. Joseph Smith, Jr., occupies the position which his father once held. A new era in the history of Mormonism has dawned—an era which we hope will greatly improve the name of this despised people.

"Whatever ideas we may entertain in relation to the doctrines of the Mormons, we must look with approbation and satisfaction upon any movement on their part which looks towards a radical reformation in their practices as a people.

"For many years past Brigham Young has been looked upon as the embodiment of Mormonism, and those professing to be Mormons have been regarded as no better than he. Henceforth, they, or at least one branch of them, are to be judged by a different standard. The eyes of the world will now be turned upon young Joseph. Hitherto this man has borne a good name. His talents are of no mean order; and it is earnestly to be hoped that he will use them for good, and not a bad purpose."

About the same time Ossian E. Dodge, editor and proprietor of Dodge's Literary Museum, of Cleveland, Ohio, published a report of his visit to Nauvoo, in which occurs this good testimony touching the family of Joseph the Seer, and particularly of "young Joseph:"

"We had not been in conversation with this gentleman five minutes before we were firmly impressed with the fact that, like Louis Napoleon, whom we met in Paris in 1851, he had been greatly underrated by newspaper writers. Like Louis Napoleon, Mr. Smith feels that he has got to sustain the name of the hero that has gone before him; that he has a destiny to fulfill, and, like Louis Napoleon (unless we err in our judgment), he will yet astonish the world by his natural energy and self-reliance. But he and his mother are uncompromising foes to polygamy.

"Mr. Smith was born on the 6th of November, 1832, and will therefore be but 28 years of age this coming fall. He lives in a neat little one-story dwelling opposite the Mansion House; has three acres of land, facing the river, for his garden; has an accomplished wife and one child, a daughter three years of age; and enjoys the confidence and esteem of the citizens generally to such an extent that he was elected Justice of the Peace, without opposition. When, in connection with this fact, it becomes known that the citizens are all opposed to Mormonism, and that there are but two avowed Mormons in Nauvoo, it must be admitted that the compliment is one of no ordinary value or meaning.

"When Joseph, Jr., shall sound the trumpet, as he assuredly will ere long, for the true believers to come together and be again united, some of the leading families in the southern part of Illinois, who are now the least suspected, will rally around Joseph's standard with enthusiasm.

"Since our visit to Nauvoo, we have learned the names of all the leading Mormons from the infancy of the society, and among these we find some of the highest integrity and spotless reputation—people, in short, who, for reasons no doubt satisfactory to themselves, have, for years, kept aloof from the society, waiting, perhaps, for the trumpet of Joseph, Jr.

"It is by the choice of the Mormons in Illinois and Ohio, and many of the best of those in Salt Lake City, that the shoulders of Joseph, Jr., are to wear the mantle of the famous prophet."

Ex-Senator M. B. Castle, of Sandwich, Illinois, had this to say of Pres. Joseph Smith in his paper, the Argus, September 10th, 1881:

"The danger in [Utah] Mormonism lies in the practice of polygamy. That makes them a distinct people, a nation within a nation, threatening a revolution and a religious war, however erroneous the claim. These converts are spreading over that rich central portion of our domain, believing in their right to practice this abomination, and strengthened in that belief by being allowed to do so. The Argus has frequently pointed out a remedy; which is on the frontiersman's principle of a back fire. Opposed to these practices, while holding the general principles of the Mormon faith, is the 'Reconstructed Church,' with Elder Joseph Smith at its head; a body of earnest, able men, already making inroads on the Brighamites, and to aid them in promulgating the new faith in Utah, should be the aim of the general government.

"To this end it would be wise to appoint Elder Joseph Smith—who has character and ability for the position—as Governor of that Territory: an appointment which would receive the approval of his own branch fully, and largely of the other, and would so divide the power of the Brighamites as to enable this branch successfully to combat the crime at its central point. Mr. Smith is a true, loyal citizen, a practical christian, a strong temperance man, an able leader, and bitterly opposed to the 'peculiar institution.'"

The Ex-Senator has been personally acquainted with Pres. Smith for nearly twenty years, hence his testimony as to his character is reliable.

In 1882 he said this in the Argus:

"Joseph Smith has all the qualities necessary to make a Governor of that Territory. He is a calm, able, conscientious man, of most excellent habits, mental and physical. He is a loyal citizen, a leader in all moral reforms, and in that position would win the confidence of the government he represented on the one hand, and the people he governed on the other. Joseph Smith as Governor of Utah would solve the problem of polygamy."

Joseph Smith never in any way sought for the governorship of Utah. But many of those who knew him well thought he, if appointed to that office, could and would wisely, quickly, peacefully and economically adjust the "Utah problem," and Ex-Senator Castle was one of that number.

Governor Murray said in The North American Review for January, 1884:

"The Mormons known as the 'Reorganized Church,' are entitled to the respect of all, and that Church recognizes and receives in common with all others, every protection under the constitutional guarantee. But polygamous Mormonism, which has overridden the Constitution, nullified Federal legislation, and defied the Government, has made of Utah a deformed child."

In 1884, Senator Castle says this in the Argus:

"Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Mormon church, is a leader of rare judgment—a citizen of most unblemished character—the embodiment of patriotic devotion to the nation. As a government, or as a people, we have nothing to do with the religious beliefs of the Mormon church, but to bring the Utah branch into sympathy with the moral sense of the nation must be done. The only question to settle being how to do it with the least friction."

The Decatur county Journal, published at Leon, the county seat, sixteen miles distant from Lamoni the residence of Pres. Joseph Smith, had this to say of him in its issue for January 19th, 1888:

"Joseph Smith is the son of Joseph Smith the founder of the Latter Day Saints' church. He was born November 6th, 1832, in Kirtland, Geauga Co., Ohio. From Kirtland Joseph removed with his parents to Caldwell county, Missouri, where a colony had been established in 1837, but this colony being broken up by persecution in 1838, the family moved to Nauvoo. In June, 1844, the tragic death of his father by a brutal mob left his mother a widow with three sons and an adopted daughter to shift for themselves. Joseph being the oldest, upon him fell the responsibility of caring for his mother and the other members of the family. And it was at this time that he began to develop those excellent qualities of both head and heart that have more fully characterized him since. His mother not sympathizing with the ambitious schemes of Brigham Young, who had been appointed [who with his quorum assumed to be.—Ed.] his father's successor, did not follow him and the Saints to the far west, but went with her family to Fulton City, Ills., where they spent the winter of 1846. Early in the spring the family returned to Nauvoo and engaged in the hotel business until December, 1847, when his mother married Major Lewis C. Bidamon. Joseph's education was carefully attended to, and his natural abilities, of a very high order, have since been greatly improved by study and experience. He began to study law when sixteen years of age and was married to Miss Emeline Griswold in 1856. In Nauvoo, he held the position of justice of the peace and school director for many years, and served one year in the capacity of alderman. In 1860, he took up the work left off by his father, and re-organized the church of the Latter Day Saints, rejecting the dogma of polygamy held by the church in Utah. He is a gentleman of commanding presence and fine address. The cause of temperance finds in him one of its most earnest and devoted advocates. Possessed of oratorical powers of a high order, his public address invariably engage and hold the attention of his audience. His uniform courtesy and kindness secures for him the confidence and respect of all who know him, and his piety, integrity and moral worth abundantly qualify him for the leading position he occupies in the Church of the Latter Day Saints."

Such is the testimony of Pres. Joseph Smith's neighbors, those who from personal knowledge of him are entitled to speak of his character. To this we might add largely with further and similar testimony, but let this suffice; no more is needed in this connection. These testimonies, coming from competent and well qualified parties, those who could have no personal interests to serve or be served in the matter, are thoroughly credible and entirely trustworthy. But that of William Law is not credible, for he eagerly speaks evil of those he does not know. He slanders the character of the wife and children of Joseph the Seer, when their character stands without blemish with those among whom they have resided for the past forty and more years. He seeks, specially, to defame the character of Pres. Joseph Smith, a man Mr. Law has never known personally, a man who, when reaching his majority, was elected to responsible offices by his neighbors among whom he had been reared and educated, and who, when locating among total strangers at Plano, Illinois, soon won by his personal worth and capability distinguished positions in the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens, and who, after locating in his present home, soon enjoyed the esteem of those who formed his acquaintance.

General Ben. M. Prentiss, when in St. John, Kansas, last summer, said of the Saints at Lamoni, and of Pres. Joseph Smith: "There is no better community in the world than that at Lamoni, Iowa, and Joseph Smith is a perfect gentleman." Mr. Prentiss has known the Latter Day Saints, and Joseph Smith's family, for the past forty and more years, he living at Quincy, Illinois, from an early time.

Here is another of Mr. Law's brutal character thrusts, in which his own character stands fitly revealed:

"As to Emma's death-bed declaration, it was like her life, FALSE. If she ever had any good in her, Smith so demoralized her, that she had none left. Anything for money, and power and gratification while she lived, and the same to her sons after her. She and the Smiths, as many as I knew, were infidels, if not atheists, at least I believe so."

Of Emma and her children the Nauvoo Independent had this to say in 1879, when speaking of her funeral:

"She was loved and respected by all her neighbors, for her charitable and kind disposition. She was a good and faithful wife, a kind and loving mother, as the expressions of her children and associates will verify. If such a record as she has left does not render a person worthy of a better life beyond, it is difficult to conceive how it can be done. * * *

"The large company filed through the room past the coffin, viewing the face of the deceased as they passed. It was a touching sight to see those citizens so long acquainted with the silent sleeper, while she was living, pausing beside her to take a last look at her peaceful face, so calm amid the grief of the assembly. Now and then one to whom she had been dearer than to others, would caress the extended hand, or gently stooping lay the hand upon the cold face or forehead, some even kissing the pale cheek in an impulse of love and regret. * * *

"The assembly was large; almost every one knew Mrs. Bidamon, some intimately and for many years; some but for a few months, but it is safe to say that the respect, esteem and love with which she was regarded by all, is but a just tribute to the sterling virtues of the woman, wife and mother, whom the community so soberly, so sadly and so tenderly laid away to rest, on this beautiful May day, by the side of the father of waters, the mighty Mississippi.

"Mrs. Bidamon was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and her funeral services were conducted by elders and members of that body of believers, and the sermon was indicative of their hope in the millennium yet to come.

"At the close of the sermon, Elder Lake paid a touching tribute of love and respect to Mrs. Bidamon, in a few words expressive of her faith and hope, stated to him a few days before her death. Taken as a whole the funeral was remarkably impressive and tenderly sad."

When men will maliciously slander women, and persons whom they know little or nothing of, what may we expect of them when they speak of those with whom they placed themselves at bitter, mortal variance? That Mr. Law became extremely vindictive toward Joseph and the church in 1844, may be seen from the following from his pen:

"When I left Nauvoo, I left Mormonism behind, believing that I had done my part faithfully, even at the risk of my life, and believing also that the Expositor would continue to do the work it was intended to do."

To which he adds this afterward in explanation:

"You ask me if the Expositor continued? No. When I spoke of its work continuing, I meant that its destruction gave it a new life and power to destroy its destroyers, for it was the chief factor in bringing about the death of the Smiths, and the expulsion of the Mormons from the state of Illinois."

Comment on these statements are needless.

We have seen what the testimony of Pres. Joseph Smith's neighbors has been from the first up to the present year. The citizens of Nauvoo, where he was reared to manhood, testify their confidence and esteem by placing him, in his early manhood, in responsible positions in the departments of Justice and Education. The citizens of Plano, where he resided for about fifteen years prior to October, 1881, did similarly. And to this may be added the fact that, prior to President Smith's removal from Plano, the citizens of the place, irrespective of creed or party, presented him, formally, with a richly wrought gold-headed cane on which was inscribed, "The citizens of Plano, to Elder Joseph Smith," also the names of some of the principal gentlemen of that city.

Of him the Kendall County Record said:

"Mr. Smith leaves Plano, but carries the good will of Plano's citizens with him. He has lived here for the past fifteen years, and has always borne the reputation of a good citizen. Always to be found on the side of right, he maintained his position to the end, and goes to his future home with sad farewells and good wishes of his many friends."

By the testimony of all these competent, honorable, impartial witnesses, it is proven that President Joseph Smith has, by his uprightness of life and superior qualifications, made his record so high as to be forever far above and beyond the reach of the reckless, ruthless calumniator. Mr. Law, in his blind rage, reveals his own inwardness; and that proves him a false and vicious witness. And yet his is the kind of testimony with which Mormon haters propose to wreck the Church of the Latter Day Saints and the reputation of Joseph the Seer and his family. Give such witnesses rope enough and they will hang themselves. They are taken in their own snare, or they fall into the pit they dig for others. Dr. Wyl, your witness testifies too much—and too badly!

W. W. BLAIR.

CONFERENCE AT LAMONI.

ON the 10th and 11th instants an excellent district conference was held at this place, and though the weather was raw and chilly, and roads very muddy, the attendance was fair, particularly on Sunday. The business was disposed of in a most orderly and happy manner, the preaching was timely and edifying, and the prayer and testimony service was cheering and refreshing. The Spirit attended in power all the meetings, and on Sunday afternoon the Lord, by his Spirit, admonished the ministry to faithfully fulfill their own missions, labor in their own offices and callings, and to not seek the offices and callings of others, but to diligently do the work appointed them to do, and to not interfere with the offices and labors of others.

This needs to be borne in mind by all the Saints, for nothing is more annoying, obstructive and despicable, than for persons to intermeddle with other peoples' business, either in spiritual or temporal matters. "Let every man learn his own duty," and then do it faithfully.

AUTHORITY OF PRESIDING OFFICERS.

A FELLOW minister requests us, urgently, to answer the following questions:

"Does a branch have the right, at their regular business meetings, to elect or release their branch officers by a majority vote, irrespective of the dictation or orders of any official of the church?"

Yes; if done as the rules of the church provide. But a decent respect should be shown to all presiding officers, whether branch, district, or mission, and their wishes and advice should be carefully and kindly considered. The rules of the church provide as follows:

"Branches are the primary and congregational organizations of the church, and may be formed wherever 'six or more members in good standing may be resident in any one neighborhood, one of whom must be an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon.' Such organization may be effected under the care and supervision of any local or traveling elder, by the desire and consent of those who shall constitute such branch, when organized; or by the consent, advice, or direction of district authorities, where such exist.

"All persons who are to have permanent charge of an organized branch, should be chosen, they being previously eligible, by vote properly taken at a regular meeting of such branch, or one specially called for that purpose, of which due notice has been given."—Rules of Order, chap. 1, sec. 4, 5.

This order of things preserves equally the rights and powers of the members and the ministry, and makes effective the fundamental law of "common consent" which underlies and permeates the entire system of our church government as provided for in Doctrine Covenants, 17: 16; 25: 1; 27: 4; 101: 3; 107: 46, etc., etc.

2.—"Is there any exception made to section 163 and 164, Book of Rules, in favor of the quorums of Twelve and Seventy?"

A.—To answer this fully and fairly, we give (1) the law of the church (2) some of its approved precedents, and (3) the rule adopted by the General Conference at Stewartsville, Missouri, April 11th, 1884.

"The branch officers are to be the officers who shall preside over, and have charge of, these meetings; and none others shall preside, except by vote of those present at any meeting, or by the courtesy of the officer present, whose right it may be to preside at the time.

"The officers of the church who will be recognized by these meetings, as having a right to preside, are:—A presiding Elder who has been regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a priest, or priests, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a teacher, or teachers, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a deacon, or deacons, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a secretary or clerk of the branch, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch."—Rules of Order, chap. 14: sec. 163, 164.

Joseph the Seer gave the follow instructions, May 2d, 1835:

"President Joseph Smith then stated that the Twelve will have no right to go into Zion, or any of its Stakes, and there undertake to regulate the affairs thereof, where there is a standing High Council; but it is their duty to go abroad and regulate all matters relative to the different Branches of the Church. When the Twelve are together, or a Quorum of them, in any Church, they will have authority to act independently, and make decisions, and those decisions will be valid. But where there is not a Quorum, they will have to do business by the voice of the Church. No standing High Council has authority to go into the Churches abroad, and regulate the matters thereof, for this belongs to the Twelve. No standing High Council will ever be established only in Zion or one of its Stakes. When the Twelve pass a decision, it is in the name of the Church, therefore it is valid.

"No official member of the Church has authority to go into any Branch thereof, and ordain any minister for that Church, unless it is by the voice of that Branch. No Elder has authority to go into any Branch of the Church, and appoint meetings, or attempt to regulate the affairs of the Church, without the advice and consent of the presiding Elder of that Branch."—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 261.

In November, 1839, the Quorum of the Twelve taught in a General Epistle to the ministry the following:

"We would also warn the elders, according to previous council, not to go on to another's ground without invitation to interfere with another's privilege, for your mission is to the world and not to the churches.

"We would also remark, that no man has a right to usurp authority or power over any church, nor has any man power to preside over any church, unless he is solicited and received by the voice of that church to preside."—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, page 14.

May 14th, 1840, Joseph the Seer directed Orson Hyde and John E. Page, members of the quorum of the Twelve, in these words:

"In answer to your inquiry in a former letter, relative to the duty of the Seventies in regulating Churches, &c., I say that the duties of the Seventies are more particularly to preach the gospel, and build up Churches, rather than regulate them; that a High Priest may take charge of them. If a High Priest should be remiss in his duty, and should lead, or suffer the Church to be led astray, depart from the ordinances of the Lord, then it is the duty of one of the Seventies, acting under the special direction of the Twelve, being duly commissioned by them with their delegated authority, to go to that Church, and if agreeable to a majority of the members of said Church, to proceed to regulate and put in order the same; otherwise, he can have no authority to act.

"JOSEPH SMITH, JUNIOR."

Millennial Star, vol. 17, p. 774-75.

The General Conference held at Stew-artsville, Missouri, April 6th to 14th, 1834, adopted the following, taken from "A report and resolutions from the Quorum of the Twelve," published in HERALD, vol. 31, pages, 285 and 299:

"Resolved, That by virtue of their office and calling, as declared by the organic law of the church, the members of the Quorum of the Twelve are the lawful presidents of the church abroad in all the world, to preside over, regulate and set in order the same, and that in all the branches of the church and districts, this presiding authority should be acknowledged and acquiesced in by the presidents of its branches and districts. And when one of them is present at a district conference or branch meeting, it should be left discretionary with him, as to whether it would best serve the cause by presiding.

Resolved, That the Quorum of the Twelve, as a judicial body have the right, collectively or individually, to render decisions involving the law and usages of the church, in their various fields of labor, and when such decisions are made by individual members of the quorum, said decisions are binding on the church, and should be respected until brought before the quorum and its decision had."

If resolution number two means that members of the Quorum of Twelve, upon their selection by vote of a district conference or branch meeting, or on invitation of their presiding officers, may use their own discretion as to their presiding over such meetings, then there is no conflict between the law, the precedents, and the rules quoted. But if it be construed to mean that they may take the presidency of such meetings without such election or invitation, upon their own will, then there is a conflict.

We advise that the church and its ministry observe, and strictly maintain the law of the church, its approved precedents and usages, and also all the authorized rules of the church unless these latter are found, on legitimate examination, to be in harmful conflict with the former. All should seek the peace and harmony and prosperity of the church; and it is far better to suffer wrong than do wrong.

The church should ever be ready to honor presiding and all other officers in their proper duties and callings, for a humble, meek, spiritually minded officer will never, intentionally, go beyond his authority and prerogatives. And if there are differences of opinions in respect to the authority and jurisdiction of any officer, those differences should be held in the spirit of Christ-like love and forbearance, and thus shun needless, hurtful strifes and questionings.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Chairman of the Passenger Department of the Central Traffic Association informs Bishop Blakeslee that they decline to grant reduced rates from General Conference for the reason that the place of meeting is outside of their territory and they have no jurisdiction over the rates to it.

Bro. W. W. Hodge, of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, writes that Elder James

Brown had been laboring some there of late and had organized a branch of seven, others were believing, and that prospects were fair for further progress. He has been using ten copies of the Voice of Warning sent him by Brother J. H. Peters with good success. He says that the Spirit is with them in their meetings, at times, in such power that outsiders are constrained to rejoice with them.

Bro. Joseph Smith attended the conference of the Southern district of California, at Los Angeles, March 2d to 4th. We look for him home to attend the General Conference, April 6th, at Independence, although he has pressing calls to labor in the Pacific and Rocky Mountain missions.

Bro. E. H. Ebert writes from Wellmanville, Ness county, Kansas. He desires some one of the faithful elders to locate in that region, promising to assist them some financially, if all goes well. He is confident a branch might soon be organized there with proper efforts.

Bro. E. D. Bullard, of Wray, Colorado, is anxious to have some "live elder" locate there, and asks that some of the elders who pass through that region over the B. & M. R. R., stop off and preach for them for a season.

We have many questions on hand awaiting answers. We ask those who sent them to be patient, for we are limited for want of both time and space.

By late letter from sister Celestine Rush, of Heppner, Oregon, we learn she is actively engaged with the C. W. T. U., in that place, and that she desires effective matter, prose or poetry, to use in pushing forward that work where she resides.

Bro. R. H. Ervin, of Wilkesville, Ohio, wrote of late that Bro. Moler and Matthews had been laboring some in that place and vicinity with success.

Bro. S. P. Sherrill wrote of late from Groesbeck, Texas, that he was using the HERALDS successfully, wanted an assortment of tracts to distribute, some outsiders would send for the HERALD, but times were extremely hard, for the reason that there had been five successive failures in crops in that region.

Bro. N. V. Pearson writes from Hamon, Gonzales county, Texas, that he hopes Bro. I. N. Roberts may visit that place at an early time. He has been distributing tracts and some persons there are interested in the doctrine.

Bro. Charles Derry says: "I know it is written 'The first shall be last and the last first;' but I did not expect to see it fulfilled in my article on the resurrection, but so it is. I wondered to see the second part come out first." We beg pardon for any mistake made and can only say we intended to publish the several parts in the order in which they reached the office. The editor has been so pressed with extra and increasing duties during the past few months that he is very happy to know that but few blunders in the mechanical department have so far occurred. Both in editorial work, in correspondence, and in duties pertaining to the First Presidency there has been large increase during the past three years.

MOUND CITY, Mo., Mar. 2d.

Editors Herald:—In Herald for February 18th, under the head of "Questions and Answers, in answer to the question in relation as to whether or not "Branch and district assemblies of the church" are "bound to 'raise their hands' in support of the finding of an Elder's Court," we find the following language: "Furthermore, the law provides that transgressors are not to be tried before the members, and that, therefore, the members, except such as are witnesses, are not to know the facts, real or supposed, in such cases, at least not before said case is finally disposed of, if ever. For the law provides that the transgressor shall be delivered 'up unto the church, not the members, but to the elders; and that, too, 'not before the world.'"—Doc. Cov. 42: 23.

The full text of Doctrine Covenants 42: 23, on that matter reads; "And if he or she confess not, thou shalt deliver him or her up unto the church, not to the members, but to the elders. And it shall be done in a meeting, and that not before the world." Does the fact that because the law states that delivering of offenders into the elders hands shall not be "before the world," necessarily restrict the church that the same shall not be before the members seeing the law says it shall be done in a meeting. If not a meeting of the members from which the "world" is excluded, what kind of a meeting does section 42: 23 have reference to? And what other portions of law is there that prohibits members from being present at an Elder's Court? Yours, etc.

JOSEPH FLORY.

Replying to this we would say, that the "meeting" here mentioned means the called, authorized and organized assembly, convention, or collection composed of the elders, witnesses, and accused parties in any given case. Most any authorized and organized collection of persons may properly be called "a meeting;" as, for instance, "a meeting" of bank or railway officials; "a meeting" of a County Board, a "City Council," etc., etc., etc.

We can readily conceive of various cases of personal transgression coming before an Elders' Court, the details of which should not be permitted in the least to be discussed before the members of the church, especially females and those of tender years; and which, if paraded before male members of mature years could only serve to gratify a base, morbid appetite for scandal and evil-speaking. God wills that the real or alleged evil doings of mankind shall be as little known abroad as possible, and not conflict with or defeat justice. When persons, especially the young, are brought into immediate and frequent contact with evil words, deeds or displays, they easily become contaminated and corrupted therewith, become less refined, and less sensitive in relation to the sinfulness of sin.

Refined, Christian persons revolt at sin, pain, distress or evil in any form or under any circumstances; and such could not be persuaded to attend Elders' Courts when an alleged transgressor is being tried, except summoned as members of the court or as witnesses. The law cited is needed only for those who are still "carnal" and need the law to protect themselves against the incitements and leadings of their own unrefined and unspiritual natures.

We assert that God loves mankind, including sinners; and, that while he hates sin, it is nevertheless his will that as little of the secret or public sins of men should be displayed and be known abroad as is compatible with the welfare of society. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked;" yet God in his pity, love and wisdom, has hidden its secret evils, far from human sight. This wisdom and this love are clearly exhibited to the careful, spiritual reader, in this matchless law provided for dealing with members charged with transgression, and the rights and interests of both the accused and the church and the world are jealously and effectively guarded:

"22. And if any man or woman shall commit adultery, he or she shall be tried before two elders of the church or more, and every word shall be established against him or her by two witnesses of the church, and not of the enemy; but if there are more than two witnesses it is better; but he or she shall be condemned by the mouth of two witnesses, and the elders shall lay the case before the church, and the church shall lift up their hands against him or her, that they may be dealt with according to the law of God. And if it can be it is necessary that the bishop is present also. And thus ye shall do in all cases which shall come before you. And if a man or woman shall rob, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land. And if he or she shall steal, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land. And if he or she shall lie, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land. If he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law, even that of God.

"23. And if thy brother or sister offend thee, thou shalt take him or her between him or her and thee alone; and if he or she confess, thou shalt be reconciled. And if he or she confess not, thou shalt deliver him or her up unto the church, not to the members, but to the elders. And it shall be done in a meeting, and that not before the world. And if thy brother or sister offend many, he or she shall be chastened before many. And if any one offend openly, he or she shall be rebuked openly, that he or she may be ashamed. And if he or she confess not, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of God. If any shall offend in secret, he or she shall be rebuked in secret, that he or she may have opportunity to confess in secret to him or her whom he or she has offended, and to God, that the church may not speak reproachfully of him or her. And thus shall ye conduct in all things."—D. & C., Sec. 42, par. 22, 23.

Paragraph 22 provides that the accused "shall be tried before two elders of the church or more," and that the accused "shall be condemned by the mouth of two witnesses," also that when they are thus tried and condemned, then—and not till then—"the elders shall lay the case [not the details of either the testimony or the law.—Ed.] before the church, and the church shall lift up their hands against him or her, [the members thereby accepting the action had in the case, and also formally rejecting the accused according to the findings of the Elders Court, whatever they may be.—Ed.], that they may be dealt with according to the law of God."

That God designs, that offenders and those charged with offending shall be dealt with so as to prevent scandal and reproach from going abroad so far as practicable is seen in the fact that He commands that, first of all, the offender be dealt with "alone" by those offended; and, second, that they shall not be delivered up "to the members," nor "before the world;" and, third, that unless the offence be a public one, "he or she shall be rebuked in secret."

Where is there a wise and loving parent who would have the real or supposed sins and weaknesses of his or her children exhibited abroad? God is love! God is wisdom!

AT THE RIVER.

I am standing alone by a mystic tide,
And the dark swift waters flow past my feet,
While floating across from the other side
Come strains of music heavenly sweet;
And I see the beautiful white-robed throng
Beckoning to me across the wave,
And I long to join in the rapturous song,
But the cold, dark waters I dare not brave.

I press my foot to the river of death,
But backward shrink with quivering start,
For the icy waters have stopped my breath
And frozen the blood in my frightened heart.
Then softly and sweetly the angel song
Comes floating across to my listening ear.
"Though the river is dark and swift and strong,
There is One who will help you, so be of good cheer."

And then in the midst of the beautiful band
A wondrous vision bursts on my sight,
And I seem to see on that shining strand
A form of celestial glory and light;
And softly there steals to my troubled soul
These loving words, and they calm all fear,
"Fear not, my child, though the waters roll
I will bear thee up, so be of good cheer."

With a world of love in his patient eyes
He stretches his bleeding hands to aid,
And once more he speaks in such sad surprise,
"Oh, doubting one, art thou still afraid?
My feet once pressed these cold, dark waves,
Unaided I stepped o'er the river's brink,
And wilt thou not trust me, its dangers brave?
I will bear thee up so thou may'st not sink."

Then all fear goes out from my doubting soul
And a wonderful peace stealeth in instead,
As once more I press to the river cold
And the icy waters no longer dread;
And as boldly I plunge in the chilling tide
The song of the angels rings sweet and clear,
"Though the river is dark and cold and wide, Thy Savior is with thee, so be of good cheer."—Sel.

"Smile on, doubt on, say life is sad,
The world is false and cold,
I'll keep my heart glad, true and warm,
I never will grow old."

SILVER HILL, Ark., Feb. 16th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have been greatly encouraged and strengthened by reading the good advice found in the sisters' letters. Like some of them, I realize my weakness, and shortcomings before the Giver of all good; but trusting that he may give me knowledge, wisdom and understanding, that I may do my work acceptably in his sight, I will ever press forward to the mark of the high calling which is in Christ Jesus. I have one dear little child entrusted to my care; and I earnestly invoke the sisters to pray for me, that I may so live that she seeing my good works may be constrained to do likewise, that I may bring her up in the fear and admonition of the Lord, and that she may not walk in by and forbidden paths. Many times I feel depressed in spirit, and think I am almost too unworthy to approach the great Physician, in order to obtain strength to overcome; but I find him ever ready to hear and answer my feeble petition when I ask aright. In your prayers remember your sister in bonds of love.

MAGGIE CATO.

BUCHANAN, Tenn., Feb. 18th.

Sister Frances:—I wish to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the glorious work we are engaged in, for I know it is of God. It was at a prayer meeting one beautiful evening that the small, soft voice whispered: "The work is true." Oh, how gladly it was received, for I had long had a desire to know myself. I had often heard Bro. Griffin and others say they knew the work was of God, but not until I received a testimony for myself did I realize what a glorious thing it was to know we are engaged in a work in which God is at the head; and, Dear Saints, I would advise all who have not received a knowledge of it, never to be contented in just believing; but seek to know for yourselves, for it will be a great help to you in your every day life, or at least it is to me. This knowledge is not obtained by sitting still, with little or no desire to obtain it. It was several years of earnest devotion before I received the blessing; and I have no doubt as to the truthfulness of the latter day work. The only fear is that I will not live as faithful as I ought. But, dear Saints, let us all try to so live that we may receive the crown that is laid up for those who are prepared to receive it.

Bro. Clapp has been here, and given us three noble sermons. We are looking for him again at our quarterly conference.

Your sister in peace,

ADA ROBERTS.

DELOIT, Iowa, Feb. 12th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—It is with pleasure that I read, each week, letters from different ones; and although you are strangers to me personally, yet you all seem near to me, because we are one in the gospel of Christ; and I know if we are faithful we will be one happy family by and bye. Our branch here is being blessed with spiritual gifts, and the children are moved upon to arise and bear their testimony to this latter day work, which makes me rejoice. When I read in the Herald of those who do not have the privilege of meeting as we do, I think Oh, how I wish I could do more to forward on the great work, and that I could do more to bring souls unto Christ. I do desire to overcome self and all that is of an evil nature.

We have some most excellent sermons by Brn. Whiting and Turner. I would just say to the Saints here in this branch; let us be active, at all times. I feel that there are many in this place that are honest in heart, that must be gathered into the fold. Let our prayers ascend to God in their behalf. I also ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints. A SISTER.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, Feb. 12th.

Dear Sister Frances:—It has been over twenty years since I obeyed the gospel. I was a member of the Methodist church fourteen years, but was not satisfied. I had doubts and fears of my acceptance, but when I heard Bro. James Brown preach, one Sunday afternoon, I obeyed the gospel; and I feel to praise God's high and holy name that I was ever brought to bear an humble part amongst the Saints, for I know this work is of God and not of man. I have had many a testimony. I was seventy-two the 7th of this month, and a few of the good sisters got up a surprise party, and remembered their aged sister. One sister gave me seventy cents. My daughter that I live with will make it one dollar and I send it for my birthday offering. I may not live to see another. Please remember me in your prayer, that I may be found faithful when the Master comes.

From your sister in the one faith,

ELIZABETH RILEY.

EAST DELAVAN, Wis., Jan. 28th.

Dear Sister Frances:—We as a people believe that God does hear and answer prayer, and that he is a rewarder of all those that diligently seek him. I, for one, can bear my testimony that this is true, in many instances from past experience.

When I married, my husband was a bitter opposer of what the world called Mormonism. I would sometimes try to approach him in a quiet way, with Bible in hand, and say, "My dear husband, I have found a certain passage of Scripture I would like to read to you, and see if you understand it as I do; or if you can give me any light upon it." He would never object to this, but as I read carefully along from chapter to chapter concerning the establishment of the church, and the gifts that should follow the believers, he would say, "Stop; I don't want to hear any more of that, for it's all Mormonism, and if I thought there was one drop of that blood in your veins, I would be tempted to leave you." Then I took it to the Lord in humble prayer, and asked the good Father to give him the spirit of investigation and an understanding heart, that he yet might see the light of the gospel, and come to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, our Lord; and I want to tell you that I know God heard my prayers in his behalf, for in less than one year he was a candidate for baptism, and three years ago he was ordained to the office of an Elder; and since his ordination there has been fifteen added to our little branch. We have a nice little church which is located on one corner of our farm, where we as Saints, can worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience. We have preaching service on Sundays at eleven a. m., and Sabbath school and Bible class the next hour, and prayer meeting at seven in the evening; also prayer meeting Thursday evenings.

We are blessed, strengthened and encouraged to labor, for the Lord does not fail to meet with us by his Holy Spirit, which he pours out in tongues and prophecy; and it seems many times that our cup is filled to overflowing. Has He not said in His holy word, "He that doeth my will shall know of the doctrine; whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." Is this not all true? I think I hear you say, most assuredly it is. Then let us not be weary in well doing, but let us go on, trusting in Israel's God; and do what we can with our might, mind and strength, nothing doubting, and the Lord will bless us.

From your sister in the one faith,

LAURA E. SOUTHWICK.

CARTHAGE, Mo., Feb. 1st.

Dear Sisters:—I have been greatly blessed in reading the many encouraging letters in the Mother's Home Column, and wish to add my testimony to the Church of Latter Day Saints. I have only been a member seven months, and I can say I have been greatly blessed. We moved here from Illinois a few months ago, away from any branch of the church; but I am happy to say we are no farther from the throne of grace. The Bible teaches us to do all we can and we will be rewarded; for virtue we have a price to receive, for vice a price to pay. We would be pleased to have Saints passing through here call on us. My husband and I are the only Saints here, but we are doing all we can in the way of distributing reading matter.

I desire an interest in your prayers, that I may be able to bring up my little ones in the way they should go; and that I may be kept meek and humble, and that my steps may ever be in the straight and narrow way.

Your sister in the one faith.

HANNA PUCKET.

BARNARD, Kan., Feb. 16th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I am not a mother, but blessed are they who are, for they have a work to perform which they will be rewarded for, if not in this world, in the world to come. I love to read the letters in the Column for there is always a word of encouragement in every letter. I love the cause in which we are engaged. There is no branch here, or any Saints. In our humble way we are trying to do all we can for the cause. Oh, that we could reach the hearts of the unbelieving! I have been a member of the church ever since I was nine years old, therefore I have never experienced the doubts and fears of the unbelieving. But I can see them around me from day to day. Oh, how terrible it must be! Several days ago while visiting at a lady friend's, she told me that she feared death with all her heart, and she said: "Sometimes I think of death, and the thought nearly crazes me; oh, that I could live always."

A sister in Christ,

CASSIE WILCOX.

WEBB CITY, MO., Feb. 10th.

Dear Sisters:—I have just been reading the Herald of February 11th, and am pleased with the leading piece in our column, "Buckle on your armor." I have often thought as the sister, and think if we as Saints would try harder to convert our children, and live more Christ-like, we would enjoy more of the spirit of love; for it is said though we should have faith to remove mountains and have not charity, it availeth nothing. Then if we teach the law of Christ, and leave out charity, the law will not avail. If we teach and practice the laws of Christ, we will have that charity that never faileth. How often those who are not of our faith slight us because we do not teach to suit the world; and often we resent the slight in the same way, when we should offer up a prayer in their behalf; and not return evil for evil; for if we could only keep in possession of the Spirit and pray earnestly for those who despitefully use us, for the work's sake, the influence would be felt, and many more would be brought to the light. Let us try to practice more friendship, and not be selfish. If we are rich in light and knowledge try to impart unto those who are in darkness by doing good for evil. And, mothers, do not neglect to teach your little ones to pray. Do not let them say when they are grown, "I never heard my mother pray," for I often think the best prayer I ever heard was offered by my mother.

We feel the need of organizing a Sunday School in this place, and think we will do so.

R. M. BRADLEY.

NORTH FORSTER, N. S. W.,

Dear Sisters in Christ:—Although young in the church of the Lord, I have a few words to say to the Home Column. I was baptized the 15th of August, 1886. I am fully satisfied, and know it to be the work of God. I am only sorry I did not join it before, for it is a grand work. I am a mother of three little children, and often feel very weak. I often shed tears when I read the letters of the sisters in the Herald. I can not express my feelings to the Herald, for I feel overflowed with joy. I ask the sisters to remember me in their prayers, for I am very weak, and hope the Lord will give me strength to bring my little children up in the right way.

A sister in Christ,

CHARLOTTE DELORE.

If I am asked what is the remedy for the deeper sorrows of the human heart—what a man should chiefly look to in his progress through life, as the power that is to sustain him under trials and enable him manfully to confront his afflictions, I must point him to something which, in a well-known hymn, is called "the old, old story," told of in an old, old book; and taught with and old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind.—Gladstone.

Correspondence.

QUEENSFERRY, Victoria,
Australia, Jan. 17th.

Bro. Joseph:—I feel to write you concerning this mission. The field is divided into two districts; one being the colony of Victoria, with all the branches in the vicinity of Melbourne on the south coast of Australia; and the other, comprising the central and eastern part of New South Wales with the branches north of Sidney. So that there are two separate and distinct fields, each needing an elder to be located therein. Just now is an unfavorable time for labor, as it is haying and harvesting season here.

In Hastings the members are mainly engaged in fishing, or are fishermen and their families. In the Queensferry branch some are farmers, some carpenters and store-keepers and farmers combined, and school teachers. In the Geelong branch, or Leopold branch, near Geelong, they are principally farmers I believe. These three compose the district of Victoria.

In New South Wales there are four branches; one called the Hamilton branch with members living in Islington and New Castle and surrounding country. They are brick-layers, miners, bakers, printers, dyers and farmers. In the Wallsend branch they are chiefly miners. In the Forster branch, Bro. Wright owns and runs saw-mills, and about all the male members are employes in the mills. At Nambucca they are all farmers. In Sydney, there are not enough to keep up branch organization.

In passing from Hastings and Queensferry branches (which are about twenty-five miles apart by water) to Geelong and vicinity, Melbourne, with numbers of fine suburban towns have to be passed, affording more or less opportunity for preaching if means to hire public halls could be available. In fact a dozen or more men could be kept at work here. In the upper district, or New South Wales, but little can be done, either in Wallsend or Hamilton except by outdoor preaching—and that I probably shall not venture much. In Forster and Nambucca it is different. The climate in Victoria, being on the sea-coast is hurtful to Bro. Burton, he having injured his voice and bronchial tubes by out door preaching in New South Wales. There are but two points therefore that Bro. Burton could do much if any preaching, and they are Forster and Nambucca. The other branches in that neighborhood, or district, are ones that require more attention than any others, and these would necessitate my being in that district also for a time. This part of the field needs therefore an elder to be located here. Bro. Burton feels that he must find a more mild and less changeable climate than Australia affords anywhere. I desire therefore that a good, active and able elder be sent here as soon as possible. I believe that a man of the make up of Bro. McDowell or Bro. Forscutt would do excellently here. An elder of a rougher or less refined nature would suit up north. I believe that either of the two would be exceedingly well suited to open up fields in and around Melbourne. And there is no finer field to be found for Bro. Caffall or Bro. Heman C. Smith than New Zealand. As for myself my present idea is that I may labor along in this field, for a year perhaps, and then return to the South Sea Islands for six months or so, before my return to the States. I most assuredly believe that I shall go there before I return home. There are a number of most excellent young people in this part of the world, who as elders and wives of elders may do a good work after awhile.

On the first of January I ordained Bro. Burton to the office of a Seventy. I never had such an experience before, nor ever heard of any one else having the same. In the opening prayer of the meeting, which was for sacrament, prayer and testimony and ordinations, I was led to pray that the angel of the Lord might assist in the ordinations. I never had such a thought before, but I now remember that I felt the same influence in ordaining Bro. John C. Foss to the same office. At the supper table I was constrained three times to ask Bro. Burton if he felt any other hands than mine on his head, and twice I put the thought away, but the next time I was almost irresistibly led to say the words to him. I felt that I must ask him or get up from the table and go away. So I asked the question, and he promptly answered, "Yes," and said that the feeling produced on the top and right side of the head at the time, still remained, a "warm, pleasant, and delightful feeling." When I ordained Bro. Foss the windows in the church at Jonesport shook or rattled, like if a violent storm was raging outside; but I was not physically affected. Yet I realized at the time that a power was communicated and the sensations caused by the attendant messenger were similar to those felt in this case. It must be a glorious thought to any one, who can realize that the hands of angels as "fellow servants" are laid on their heads with their brethren in the flesh. But John learned that angels were fellow servants with him and with his brethren the prophets. And I truly believe that they often take part in our services although unseen by us. Indeed I am inclined to believe they assist in every divinely appointed and heaven approved ordination. I once ordained—or laid on hands in the attempt to ordain a man, which was the most cold, and lifeless act I ever performed in the church. I never want to feel as I did then, for I have ever since doubted the acceptance of the act on the part of the Lord, however as an individual, I believe the brother was accepted of the Lord, as his child, and that he was a good man at the time and no doubt remains so still. But is not every ordination to be approved of God, to be performed according to the order of God, namely: (1) According to his gifts, i. e., qualifications. (2) According to the calling of God unto him. (3) By the power of the Holy Spirit which is in him who ordains. So that lacking in any of these conditions, the ordination is not approved of God?

On the first of January we also organized what is to be known at present as the Victoria district of Australia. Bro. Evan Jones, Sr., was chosen president. Bro. Read secretary, and Bro. E. McGurk selected for appointment as Bishop's Agent of the district. Bro. McGurk was prior to this ordained an elder; Bro. Evan Jones, Jr., was ordained a priest, and Bro. R. Rammie ordained deacon. A conference was appointed to be held at Queensferry on the third Saturday in February. After which we contemplate going north to hold conference in New South Wales and organize a district there. As Easter time is a holiday season for many, it is thought to be the best time to hold it, and we have so arranged. I desire that our mail be sent to Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia till further notice.

It is wise that those who correspond with us, should send our mail to either Hastings, Victoria, Australia, in care of Elder Evan Jones, Sr., or to Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, in care of Elder Thomas Gregory; for it is uncertain how long Bro. Ellis of Sydney, may remain there, and there is no one else to look after our mail there. I have received but six letters since I came here, and I am confident that I have not received all. And so that those who may have written here may know whether their letters have reached me, I mention the names of those whose letters have reached me to date: Bro. Joseph; Bro. Dancer; Bro. and Sr. Jones, Nebraska; Bro. Webster, Massachusetts; Bro. Baldwin, Stewartville, Missouri; and Bro. Brackenbury, Independence, Missouri.

I have preached four times in Hastings and four times in Queensferry, since our arrival. This is a strange country in regard to meetings. The people outside the church in Hastings will only go to meeting in the nights, while in Queensferry they will not go at nights. In Hamilton branch they will not go either day or night, but will congregate in the park or domain and lie on the grass and listen as long as you may choose to amuse them, for that is what they seem to think preaching is designed for. And on such occasions there are a number of cranks, who stand ready to make some sort of a reply, no matter how irrelevant, or non-sensical, so that it will draw the minds of the people away from what is said; that seems to be their sole design. What is needed in both Hamilton and Wallsend, is a church building, for people will not go to religious meetings in halls used for shows, dances, &c., that is, the sort of people who would go to meeting at all. The idle loungers on the public grounds do not go to hear preaching, but will condescend to open their gracious ears if they think that they can hear some new or strange thing. It will need the judgments of God in the shape of some epidemic or a scourge of some kind to awaken them out of their lethargy and spirit of apathy to divine matters. Horse-racing, cricketing, boat-racing, and various other sports absorb the attention of the people almost continually, and it is thought to be no harm, but really the duty of church members to encourage all sorts of amusements. I never saw a people so wholly engrossed with the thought of pleasure seeking. Emphatically they are "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." Godliness has indeed a form here, but the power is lacking. The Salvation Army professes to have the power, and many think that it is the "thunder" or noisy sort. If shouting "glory," "hallelujah," "praise the Lord," &c., at the top of the voice almost incessantly is power, there is plenty of it. But is it not strange that the "power of God" which is "unto salvation" is denied in a great measure, by these people, I mean "the gospel" in its entirety? What use have they for baptism for remission of sins, or the laying on of hands for the bestowment of the Holy Ghost, or for the gift of prophecy, or for Christ's personal and near coming? Still the Army has done a great deal of good in the way of rescuing many evil men, and erring women from their wicked ways, and have led them to reform and become honest and upright. I think that the leaders of religious thought here are more worldly minded and consequently more cold, and formal, and spiritually dead, than the same class is in America. Of course there are exceptions here as elsewhere, but as far as I can see, there is a tendency to give way to worldly influences in every direction, and very little thought concerning, and of course still less preparation for, the soon coming of the Messiah. But there was to be just such a state of affairs before the day of the Lord, as was foretold by Christ, Paul, Peter and others. Signs in the heavens, in the political world, in the material earth, in the church, and in society, all plainly indicate that we are living in the last days of this Gentile dispensation.

Don't fail to send an elder or two here, and Bro. Caffall to New Zealand.

Your brother in Christ,
T. W. SMITH.

[The following letter was lately forwarded us by Eliza Cook, M. D.—ED.]

SHERIDAN, Nevada, Dec. 9th.

Dear Herald:—As we have not seen anything in your columns for some time from this part of the Lord's vineyard, we write a few lines to inform you of the condition of the latter day work here. We are sorry to say there are no meetings anywhere near that we know of, except in Genoa, at Bro. Walker's, where there is meeting every two weeks. It is very seldom we have more than six at our meetings, but the Lord has promised to meet with two or three, and so he does, for he blesses us with much of his Spirit, and sometimes we are blessed with the gifts, and we are admonished and instructed in the ways of the Lord. We know we are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Though our pathway is beset with many thorns, yet through him who hath loved us and given himself for us, we gain the victory over them all. We greatly rejoice in the latter day work, although we feel sometimes we are forsaken of the brethren in this mission. We have no preaching only through the Herald—have had but one sermon since Bro. A. H. Smith was here—yet we will rejoice in the Lord and joy in the God of our salvation. Bro. David I. Jones is our president.

Your sister,
M. COOK.

GRAND VALLEY, Ontario, Mar. 1st.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—You will have been apprized ere this of the effort I have been making in this place, a new opening, in a good centre. There has been a very interesting time to me, and very exciting to others. Great interest is now being taken in the question of baptism, on account of the recent eight nights debate, my opponent being a minute-man kept specially for the purpose of debating in the interests of the Methodist Church in Ontario on that question. Many are now investigating and I think it wise to follow up the sweeping victory God has favored us with, and to help the enquirers I thought to give them matter to read.

I have delivered several sermons on the Book of Mormon, and with good favor; and am now to deliver two sermons on the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith. As a result of the sermons on the Book of Mormon, I sold every one of Bro. J. H. Peters' Voice of Warning which I had on hand at the time. The people all said they preferred buying them to borrowing. Several desired the address of the Publishing House so they could send for the Book of Mormon. At the close of my meetings I have been kept fifteen to twenty minutes writing my address for different parties. To-night and to-morrow I preach on the Doctrine and Covenants. Address me at Horning's Mills, Ontario.

J. A. McINTOSH.

DENNISON, Iowa, March 8th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I send you clipping in regard to the coming Centennial Celebration of the Century's Progress at Cincinnati, Ohio, next summer. I see the religions of the pioneers is to form quite a feature of it, and Mormonism in particular. I think our General Conference should take the matter under advisement and see that we are properly represented there. People will be there from all parts of the world, and the Church should see that nothing is palmed off and peddled out to them as a history of Mormonism that is like Beadleism or a thousand and one other things purporting to be a history of Mormonism. I also see Congress has been asked to appropriate $50,000 for the benefit of the celebration.

Yours,
R. R. MONTGOMERY.

GUIDE ROCK, Neb., March 5th.

Bro. Blair:—Our conference passed off pleasantly, and I came to near Burr Oak with Bro. Beebe, where he had an appointment. I preached with fair liberty. But during Bro. Beebe's absence of two weeks the preachers had worked up a feeling against the work so they would not let us have the house, and they made quite a noise after, muttering, halloing "Mormons! Hang them!" and made the air hideous with their uproar. We came to this place, where my parents live, and have held meetings. Yesterday we cut the ice fourteen inches and Bro. Beebe baptized two, a man and his wife. We have had some good times here. God be praised.

A. H. PARSONS.

EUREKA, Cal., Mach 1st.

Dear Herald:—Bro. Thomas Daley came to our county on the 15th of January last and went on to Eel River valley, twenty miles south of this place, where he preached a few times and baptized four persons—three adults and one boy fourteen years of age, and left others "almost persuaded." He spoke five times in this city and buried in baptism three members of our household—two girls, both of age—and one son seventeen years of age. There are quite a number in this city and vicinity who are investigating, and there is good reason to believe that some will obey the truth at no distant day. The people hereabouts have been "carried about by every wind of doctrine," and now many seem disposed to listen to our interpretation of the Scriptures more than at any former time. Some are already inquiring when Bro. Daley will visit this place again. A lady of the Episcopal faith, and of more than average understanding, who heard him, asks, "When is Bro. Daley coming?" Another one, a member of the Methodist Church, says: "Mr. Daley has spoiled me for going to any other church." Bro. Daley promised us he would return to this field after Spring conference, if the "powers that be" shall not otherwise direct. We shall hope and pray that his return may be indorsed by the Spirit through the General Conference. It is believed by all the Saints in this county that he is the one to further prosecute the work in this region.

We have received three numbers of the Autumn Leaves. It is highly appreciated by all who have perused it. Long may it live is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

WALTER BOHALL.

HASTINGS, Victoria, Jan. 2d.

Bro. Joseph:—On Tuesday, December 20th, I met Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith in Melbourne; and that night we got to Hastings. We were all very much pleased to see them, and the Saints are quickly getting more in line with the work; especially in the law of tithing—as I had not taught that law, except privately, and occasionally alluding to it in my sermons.

So far there has been no conflict in his teaching and that which the Saints have received by brethren Rodger, Gillen or myself; and several have said you are all alike, meaning we all teach the same thing. I am glad. I have received much light upon every subject he has handled. The Saints are using him all his spare time, so that I have not yet had much opportunity of conversation with him. The Saints are much pleased with him, and Sr. Helen quite charms them with her quaint singing—sometimes in the Tahitian language—while Bro. T. W. accompanies her with the bass. Bro. Smith called a conference beginning December 31st. Quite a number of the Queensferry Saints met with the Hastings branch and at three p. m., Saturday, December 31st, the first Victorian conference met; Bro. Smith presiding. Bro. E. Jones was chosen as president of the district; Bro. J. A. Read secretary, and E. McGurk was nominated as Bishop's agent for this colony, Victoria. On Sunday January 1st, at three p. m., after opening the meeting by singing and prayer by Bro. T. W. Smith, in which he asked God to bless him in the ordinations to be performed, and to assist him by permitting a heavenly messenger to lay on hands with him, while he should ordain me to the office of Seventy; and while his hands were upon my forehead and the back part of my head, I felt a slight pressure upon the top and right side of my head, as though four hands were upon my head. As soon as the ordination was over, I felt clearly and distinctly a circle of fire around my head about where the rim of my hat came, which feeling remained clearly through the remainder of the day, and gradually lessening, yet was distinctly noticeable the next day and whenever I would speak of it; and with it a calm, happy feeling, which I think is testimony to me that Bro. T. W. Smith is accepted by God in his office and work, and that God desires me to be faithful and true to his covenant so that I may wear the crown of life with the redeemed. I had fasted and prayed that I might receive an acknowledgement from God of my acceptance with him in receiving the responsibilities of the office of the Seventy, if I was worthy, and I accepted what I have written as an answer to my desires. It was also stated that the Lord was pleased with, and accepted my labors in Australia, and that I might labor yet more and in other lands.

January 16th.—We have had some excellent meetings since Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith have been with us, they are giving fresh life and vigor to the Saints, and he is bringing the branches up a little sharper in line with all the rules and practices of the church which will tend to establish the work here more firmly. At the present I am very much better than when I wrote last, but as I bore testimony a few minutes in the hall last Sunday I found that my throat would not allow me to speak above an ordinary conversational tone without pain, but I am steadily improving as the warm weather increases.

Queensferry, January 20th.—We have been over here a few weeks holding meetings and visiting among the Saints, strengthening their faith in the work by conversation, etc. Bro. Smith often preaches in demonstration of the Spirit and much power to the edification of all. His coming was very opportune indeed. We will soon go to Geelong and then meet in conference here February 18th, and I hope by that time to be able to preach again; for with care and prayer I am getting quite strong in voice again.

Emma and Addie are well, but Addie looks weary and pale for she watches with Sr. Lizzie Stewart by her father's bed-side a part of each night. He is failing fast and probably ere this reaches you he will be numbered with the departed. The work is moving on here—strangers enquiring for the way of truth and life, and in the great confusion of ways and paths the one bright path is shining brighter and brighter as the others lose their former lustre, and are getting mingled together making a broad, very broad way. Babylon is calling loudly for an amalgamation, I think they will before long accomplish it, for there will be but two churches by and by.

I love the latter day work; it is all in all to me, and the great blessing I have received lately was "That my God accepted me, and my name is written in the Lamb's book of life." I shall renew my endeavors in the future so that it may not be blotted out, and will try not to mar the record. May God help me and all Israel to keep his covenants on to the end.

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. BURTON.

WIRT, Iowa, March 7th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—With some degree of pleasure I pen you these few lines. We received a challenge some time ago from our Campbellite friends to discuss our faith: Resolved, that the teachings of the Latter Day Saints is not in harmony with the teachings of Christ in doctrine and organization. We had one of the most glorious victories that was ever known for the truth. Some here have said regretfully that they would not have had the decision given in our favor for a thousand dollars. They feel badly.

N. I. KENT.

WHITE ROCK, Mich., March 10th.

Bro. Blair:—The work is still moving on here. The interest is increasing. February 23d I baptized one; the next day I went to Sigel and labored for a few days and organized a branch of about twenty-five members. Since then I returned here and have baptized four, and Bro. E. J. Martindale has baptized three. Next Tuesday I expect to baptize a few more.

LEVI PHELPS.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, Mar. 6th.

Dear Herald:—In corresponding with a sister I admonished her to duty in regard to loving and serving our heavenly Father, and especially on account of her children, to bring them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord. She wrote back that she did not care about serving a God she feared. The Scriptures say: "The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and the that hath it shall abide satisfied; he shall not be visited with evil."—Prov. 19: 23.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his name."—Mal. 3: 16.

"Ye that fear the Lord, trust in the Lord; he is your help and your shield."—Ps. 114: 11.

"Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God."—Eph. 5: 21.

"Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied."—Acts 9: 37.

"He will bless them that fear the Lord, both small and great."—Ps. 114: 13.

"Know therefore and see that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee saith the Lord God of Hosts."—Jer. 2: 19.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant."—Ps. 25: 14.

"And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul."—Deut. 10: 12.

I understand the meaning of this fear is to fear to offend and disobey him, also and implies a knowledge and understanding of his law, ordinances and gospel.

LOU BERRY.

FORESTVILLE, Mich., March 7th.

Bro. Blair:—I united with the church February 4th, 1883, and it has been the happiest time of my life. Bro. Levi Phelps is laboring here, and is a very zealous worker. When he came there was small attendance and persecution ran high; but he stood to his post as a bold soldier of the cross, and now there is great interest, and the cry everywhere around here is, "Brother Phelps, come and preach for us." He has made many warm friends here and is just beginning to reap the fruit of his labor. I love this work. I have been raised up from my bed when I was given up by all to die.

C. K. GREEN.

SIGEL, Mich., March 6th.

Dear Herald:—The Lord's work is onward in this place. God is preparing the honest in heart to receive the truth, and he is bestowing much of his Spirit upon the priesthood of his church. This branch was organized about the 21st of February, by Elders Levi Phelps and Edward Martindale. They left a day or two after the organization, and I came here the day before they left, by request of the president of the district. The Free Methodist's had meetings started in the school-house and notwithstanding the trustees wanted them to divide the time with the Saints, they would not. Then one of the trustees who kept store and the post office, kindly offerred us the use of his hall, which he furnished us lighted, free. His name is Cooper. We commenced meeting and had a full house. The hall was not sixty rods from the school-house. On Sunday the fourth instant, I baptized four into the fold. Bro. Cornish has done the principal part of the preaching in all this part of the country. I am much blessed in preaching the word, and I desire to live and die in the great latter day work. There is, I believe, over thirty in this branch.

ROBERT DAVIS.

WHAT CHEER, Iowa, March 8th.

Bro. Blair:—We arrived here on the 3d inst. Have preached three sermons in the City Hall, and have met three times with the Saints in their place of worship. This branch is in excellent condition. There are two or three persons ready for baptism. I anticipate continuing the preaching until about the 20th, then go to Independence by way of Chariton and St. Joseph. Shall call at Lucas, and may spend a day or two at Lamoni. I visited Kingston, Missouri, recently, and had a very pleasant time with the Saints there. Bethren Lambert and Bronson have done a great deal of good in that place of late.

Yours in haste,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

PANAMA, Iowa, March 14th.

Dear Herald:—We continued at Kingsley until we had held forty-five meetings in three different localities. At Quorn we baptized five, three of them adults, and two young men. They came from the Methodist, United Brethren and Catholic Churches. A greater interest we never saw manifest than at the last named place, and we look for many more to be baptized there in the spring. We have baptized eleven at that place since last July.

From there we came back by way of Richland, Dakota, staying over Sunday and attended services twice. Our late opponent seemed to have attained the faculty of forgetfulness, for he made no profession of recognition.

Coming by way of home we stayed from Thursday till Tuesday, visiting with relatives and friends; coming thence to Dow City, where we delivered eighteen discourses in all; attending the Galland's Grove and the Little Sioux conferences in the mean time. Two gave their names for baptism at this place. From here we were brought to Galland's Grove by one of Bro. John Hawley's boys, and held four meetings.

At the two last places we were permitted to see the places and friends of childhood days, and as we plucked from the vine of memory cluster after cluster of the scenes of that happy time, we seemed transported back to the gleeful moments of youth. And yet, as we gazed on the places where once were the objects of life's dawn, we were apprised of the changes time had wrought, and there came steadily over the soul a feeling akin to sorrow, to think that the places hallowed by memory and the associations of youth, had lost their once happy attractions, and that so many with whom in our youth we had gambled forth are now gone to their account. Here it was that we received the teachings that were to become the warp and woof of our future character. And, Oh! with what sorrow we realize that at times we had so little regard for those teachings! If all could know what sacred memories cluster round the name of mother! But why linger, life is before us, and perchance there is a place in the great drama and it needs be that we should fill it.

Leaving the "Grove," we were brought to Earling by R. Wight, a half brother, whence we came to this place and will close here to-morrow night and then go to Persia, as we are on our way to spring conference.

Bro. C. A. Butterworth, a young man ordained at this district conference, is with me, and will travel in my company if I am permitted to stay in my old field.

To all the Saints and friends that have so kindly treated me in my travels I am ever grateful.

J. W. WIGHT.

CHATHAM, Ont., Mar. 6th.

Bro. Blair:—Shortly after I last wrote I came to this part of the field assigned me by the First Presidency, and by request of Bro. J. H. Lake I called on Bro. and Sr. Brooks in Essex Center. I found them excellent Saints, and firm in the faith. Bro. Samuel Brown came and we began preaching at Tilbury Center, February 5th, where he had been laboring, where there is a branch of staunch Saints ably presided over by Bro. Walter Carless. They made up a collection of seven dollars to help pay for a hall in Essex Center where we began February 7th and continued till the 19th ult.

Our labor there was not in vain, but the good seed sown will take root in some honest hearts. We have preached in Blenheim alternately, and are now in Chatham. Bro. Brown is a good speaker and an agreeable companion. We have fair congregations and good liberty generally. The branch here is quite large. They have a good hall. Many of the Saints are young in the cause, but apparently are noble souls. Bro. Geo. Shaw is president.

I have many hearty welcomes from old Saints in this mission and firmly believe my labor here will result in good; and if it be God's will I am willing to be continued in this mission another term. Some are believing, many investigating and I look for additions ere long.

REST FOR THE NERVES.

THERE is no better preventative of nervous exhaustion than regular, unhurried, muscular exercise. If we could moderate our hurry, lessen our worry and increase our open air exercise a large proportion of nervous diseases would be abolished.

For those who can not get a sufficient holiday the best substitute is an occasional day in bed. Many whose nerves are constantly strained in their daily vocation have discovered this for themselves. A Spanish merchant in Barcelona told his medical man that he always went to bed for two or three days whenever he could be spared from his business, and he laughed at those who spent their days on toilsome mountains. One of the hardest worked women in England, who has for many years conducted a large wholesale business, retains excellent nerves at an advanced age owing, it is believed, to her habit of taking one day a week in bed. If we can not avoid frequent agitation we ought, if possible to give the nervous system time to recover itself between the shocks.

Even an hour's seclusion after a good lunch will deprive a hurried, anxious day of much of its injury. The nerves can often be overcome by strategem when they refuse to be controlled by strength of will.—Selected.

"THESE SIGNS SHALL FOLLOW."

I WAS out to listen to a Rev. Divine of the Campbellite faith a few evenings ago. I heard he was to talk on the "spiritual gifts," and he did so with a vengeance. There was really no foundation to his talk, neither did he make a single point. His discourse was an effort to prove that the signs spoken of by the Savior in Mark 16-19, also those mentioned in 1 Cor. 12, were only to remain twenty-one years as a child. Until it is twenty-one years of age it is under its parents. But after the age of twenty-one years they were at liberty—were free and had no more need of parental care.—This was his line of argument through his entire discourse. He claimed that the first age of the Church was a miracle-age of twenty-one years. After that the gospel took its place and the gifts were no longer needed. He utterly denied the need of the Holy Ghost and the revelation of God to man now, utterly discarding the words of the Lord Jesus when he says: "And these signs shall follow them that believe." We understand that the gospel came before the signs, that by obeying the gospel the children of God are prepared to receive the gifts of the gospel. We read that John came preaching the gospel, preparing the people, telling them that they afterward should be baptized with the Holy Ghost. The scriptures teach that John did no miracle. But he was one sent from God with the gospel, that first, man should believe the gospel and obey its injunctions, having the soul cleansed from sin, then man became a fit dwelling place for the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Ghost was not confined wholly to the apostles, nor was the promise confined to that age alone. For it is written: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good gifts to them that ask him?"

John the Baptist preached that Christ would baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire. And when the apostles and brethren had received this promise—the Comforter—and under its power taught the people on the day of pentecost, the inquiry was made: "Men and brethren, what shall we do? The answer must be a correct one, those men being endowed "with power from on high" and qualified to tell them what they must do, and the answer was: "Repent, every one of you, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is to you, and to your children, and to them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." This promise is only to them that obey. After believing and obeying, then we are eligible to the gifts, for the gifts follow the believer.

How long were the gifts to remain? The Lord Jesus promised that he would be with the believer "always even unto the end of the world." And further, he says: "If I go away, I will send you another Comforter, which the world can not receive." "He shall take the things of the Father and shew them unto you." The apostles declared with authority that, "The promise is to you, and unto your children," to "them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Paul says that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost. We believe God is unchangeable; that when He has a covenant people on earth, He gives them light and intelligence, which the world with all its learning can not comprehend. The gifts are for the believer, and are dispensed to every one as the Son wills; as is recorded in 1 Cor. 12. Those seven spiritual gifts there enumerated are for the children of God to enjoy, that they may be instructed and built up. Without these gifts the work of the ministry could not go on, neither could the Saints be "edified." Paul further says they were to remain "till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God; unto a perfect man; unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." Hence we see they are indispensable. They must all remain until the Saints arrive at perfection in Christ. Paul says, 1 Cor. 13: "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. What did Paul have reference to when he says: "When that which is perfect is come?" He surely had reference to perfection in the Lord Jesus, who became perfected by obeying his Father's commands, in his death and suffering, his triumph over death, hell and the grave. He arose victorious, therefore he attained to that perfection. We look, as did Paul, for the perfect one to come with power and great glory.

With this in view, Paul exhorted the Saints to "follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts," but rather that they might prophecy, for he says: "We know in part, and we prophecy in part;" and then he says, "when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." The Lord Jesus received a fullness, while his Saints received only a part; but this "part" was to remain until the fullness should come, even in Christ the perfect one. Then those gifts "in part" will be absorbed in the completion of the whole. Paul says further: "When I was a child, I spake as a child. I understood as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known." Now the Saints only know in part. We have the Spirit in part. We prophecy in part; speak in tongues in part. But when the Lord comes, then the Saints will receive a fullness and become like Him. They will then arrive at the fullness or "stature" of Christ, be like him, the gifts will not be needed then in part, for the Saints will not "know in part," but will attain to a perfect knowledge. We will not then "see through a glass darkly;" but we shall "know as we are known." The house or church of God is a church of order, with every office and member in their place; as it pleased God to place them there. But it has pleased men to displace them. Ecclesiastical writers tell us that the gifts and certain officers were in the church for four hundred years after Christ, during the fourth century. John Wesley tells us that the reason the gifts were not in the church after that time was because the Christians had all turned heathens.

There is not one word in the Holy Scriptures authorizing such departure, nor the cessation of the gifts until God's purposes are accomplished in bringing the faithful Saints to perfection. It can not be denied that the gospel is for all people, for God is no respecter of persons. And the gospel being perfect and the same in all ages—unchangeable as its Author—therefore the fruits should ever be the same. What God placed in his church at first should be found in it to-day. If the gospel fails to produce that same fruit to-day, and in this life, what assurance have we that it will not fail us in the gift of eternal life?

We believe those who now say, "These signs shall not follow the believer in the gospel," are of the same spirit that came to Eve in the Garden of Eden.

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

J. ARMSTRONG.

NEBRASKA CITY, Feb. 3d, 1888.

MARTIN LUTHER, ET AL.

DURING the year 1886, while at Dorchester, Nebraska, at the house of sister R. S. Coats, in conversation with Elder Shields upon the course the Utah Mormon Church had adopted in relation to marriage, I made the remark that Martin Luther, and others of the reformers, had under certain restrictions and conditions permitted a plurality of wives. My statement was called in question. I informed the gentleman that I could cite my authority, or vouch for the truth of the statement, for I had most assuredly read it. He asked me to obtain and furnish him with the historical account thereof. I have found the item, and send it for publication for the following reasons:

First; to establish the fact that I was not mistaken. And if any Saints shall see this and are living in his vicinity, or if they know the address of Elder Shields, that they send this to him.

Second; that this may be in the hands of the eldership if necessity should force them to an examination of some of the shining lights among the early reformers.

Third; that if this extract be not true, the friends of Mr. Luther may take an early opportunity to correct the item.

It would seem that Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, one of the principal Lords and Princess of Germany, having a lawful wife, but desiring to marry another, wrote Martin Luther upon the subject, and received the following advice and instruction:

"To the most serene Prince and Lord Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, Count of Catzenlembogen, of Diets, of Ziegenhain and Nidda, our gracious Lord; we wish above all things the grace of God through Christ:

"I. We have been informed by Bucer, and in the instruction which your Highness gave him, have read the trouble of mind and the uneasiness of conscience your Highness is under at this present; and although it seemed to us very difficult so speedily to answer the doubts proposed; nevertheless we should not permit the said Bucer, who was urgent for his return to your Highness, to go away without an answer in writing. . . . If your Highness, after marrying a second wife, were not to forsake those licentious disorders, the remedy proposed would be to no purpose.

"XXI. But after all, if your Highness is fully resolved to marry a second wife, we judge it ought to be done secretly, as we have said with respect to the dispensation demanded on the same account, that is, that none but the person you shall wed, and a few trusty persons, know of the matter, and they, too, obliged to secrecy under the seal of confession. Hence no contradiction nor scandal of moment need be apprehended; for it is no extraordinary thing for Princes to keep concubines; and though the vulgar should be scandalized thereat, the more intelligent would doubt of the truth, and prudent persons would approve of this moderate kind of life, preferable to adultery, and other brutal actions. There is no need of being much concerned for what men will say provided all goes right with conscience. So far do we approve it, and in those circumstances only by us specified; for the gospel hath neither recalled nor forbidden what was permitted in the law of Moses respecting marriage. Jesus Christ has not changed the external economy, but added justice only, and life everlasting for reward. He teaches the true way of obeying God, and endeavors to repair the corruption of nature. Your Highness hath therefore in this writing, not only the approbation of us all, in case of necessity, concerning what you desire, but also the reflection we have made thereupon; we beseech you to weigh them, as becoming a virtuous, wise, and Christian Prince. We also beg of God to direct all for his glory and your Highness' salvation. May God preserve your Highness. We are most ready to serve your Highness.

"Given at Wittemberg the Wednesday after the feast of Saint Nicholas, 1539. Your Highness' most humble and most obedient subjects and servants,

"MARTIN LUTHER,
PHILIP MELANCTHON,
MARTIN BUCER,
ANTONY COWIN, ADAM,
JOHN LEVINGUE,
JUSTUS WINTFERTE,
DENNIS MELANTHER."

From the following certificate by the Notary, it will be seen that Melancthon wrote the foregoing document, and that the same is retained at Hesse.

"I, George Nuspicher, Notary Imperial, bear testimony by this present act, written and signed with my own hand, that I have transcribed this present copy from the true original, which is in Melancthon's own hand writing, and hath been faithfully preserved to this present time, at the request of the most serene Prince of Hesse; and have examined, with great exactness, every line and every word, and collated them with the same original; and have found them conformable thereunto, not only in the things themselves, but also in the signs manual, and have delivered the present copy in five leaves of good paper, whereof I bear witness.

"GEORGE NUSPICHER, Notary."

The above extracts are said to be found in the first volume of a work entitled "History of the Variations of the Protestant Churches," by James Benign Bossuet. I make my copy from "The Seer," of December, 1853, p. 178, 179, printed by Orson Pratt, in Washington, D. C. If any brother has the book referred to by Mr. Pratt, or has access to a public library containing said book, it would not be amiss to make a critical comparison. It is to be hoped that his "Highness, the Prince of Hesse, has not been libelled, also that Princes in America, may not find an excuse to do like those of Germany, three hundred years ago.

It would seem that Luther and his companions were so anxious to be in favor with the Prince, and to grant his virtuous (?) desire, that they entirely overlooked the following statement of Holy Writ: "And Adam said, this is now bone of my bones, and flesh of flesh; she shall be called woman, because she was taken out of man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh."—Gen. 2:23, 24. If this first union of man and woman was the true pattern bestowed as a guide to the offspring of Adam, then it would appear that Luther & Co., made a great mistake.

While the first mention of marriage in the Old Testament indicates but one wife, the last book thereof confirms it: "Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did he not make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."—Mal. 2:14, 15.

It does not appear that the "Prince of Hesse," was much concerned about a "godly seed," but rather that he might avoid (?) adultery, and obtain satisfaction for his inordinate lust. In such cases Bible or other truths have but little constraining influence; not even the words of Christ the superior law giver, for he said: "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain [one man and one woman] shall be one flesh. Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."—Matt. 19:5, 6. This plain and positive word of Christ was ignored by Luther & Co., and outraged by the Prince of Hesse, so that his Highness and his two wives, or, rather, his wife and concubine, became one abomination. Had Luther & Co., consulted Paul in Eph. 5:31, they would not have been so liberal in granting their consent to crime against the law of God. But "where there is a will," there is a way to accomplish wrong and evil, and it matters not how clear the law may be against the evil.

THE CELESTIAL LAW.—No. 2.

NEXT comes the instructions how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws—if otherwise they will be cut of."—D. C. 51:1. This section explains how to organize. Every man's portion secured to him in writing, by the Bishop; equal "according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs," &c. Read this section, as space forbids quoting it. "And thus all things shall be made sure according to the law of the land." This order is as far superior to all "common stock," or joint stock orders, as God's wisdom is superior to man's. A store-house is appointed, rules to govern it, &c. "And thus I grant unto this people a privilege of organizing themselves according to my laws." "An example [for Saints] in other places, in all churches. And whoso is found a faithful, a just, and a wise steward, shall enter into the joy of his Lord, and shall inherit eternal life."—Sec. 51. "For it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity."—Sec. 72:1. O, what a glorious privilege was theirs, to organize themselves as was Enoch's people, "for the purpose of establishing the poor," as we learn from preface to sec. 77, of receiving from the Almighty, through his servant, the Bishop, "a writing," a deed to an inheritance on Joseph's land, eternal. In Sec. 77:1, the Lord says: "Verily I say unto you, the time has come, and is now at hand; and behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the store-house for the poor of my people, both in this place (Kirtland), and in the land of Zion, or in other words the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and of earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you." This seems to be imperative; not only as "a permanent and everlasting commandment," but also essential to a celestial glory. And may not this have been one of the "former commandments" that had been "treated lightly?" And it required the consecration of the Lord. "For according to the law, every man that cometh up to Zion, must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion."—72:3, and receive back an inheritance as the Lord's steward. "And an account of this stewardship will I require of them in the day of judgment." "Inasmuch as they receive more [in any business] than is needful for their necessities, and their wants, it shall be given into my store-house." * * * "And behold none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."—Sec. 70. All to be one, all equal, all to labor, all to be economical, &c. No costly apparel, no pearls or jewelry, while others are in need, just as taught in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 42.

That many, rich and poor, were disobedient to this law is evident from Sec. 56:5: "Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor [according to this law], for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved!" (Compare this with James 5th chapter in Bible). "Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands." A great curse on rich and poor when disobedient. That this was the same "everlasting law given to Enoch is, we think, evident from Sec. 81. "Showing the origin given to Enoch and his Church in his day."

When Joseph the Seer and others were commanded, in order that Zion might "arise and put on her beautiful garments," "That ye bind yourselves by this covenant, and it shall ever be done according to the laws of the Lord." * * * "Behold here is wisdom, also, in me, for your good. And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea even a hundred fold, to be cast into the Lord's store-house, to become the common property of the whole church; every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God. This order I have appointed to be an everlasting order unto you [Joseph], and unto your successors inasmuch as ye sin not."—81:4. Property includes all things temporal, hence "common property" and "all things common," as equivalent terms—different manner of expressing the same idea peculiar to different nations. And as it was an everlasting order unto the Seer and his successors, may it not be for us? Read the penalty attached for transgression in same paragraph. Every man was to have ample means to work with, that instead of being an expense to the church, he might make his own support and "an hundred fold more to cast into the Lord's store-house, to enable other poor when coming into the church, to at once become abundant producers. Provision is also made for widows and orphans. Read this glorious book. Children when of age, if in church fellowship, have claim on the Bishop for a stewardship. Sec. 82. What an inducement for them to "abide in the doctrine of Christ" instead of marrying out of the church and scattering to the four wind, as mine and so many others have done. And for this very purpose I believe the Saints should be very obedient. That this law was referred to in sec. 83:8, as being "treated lightly," is evident from par. 23: "And the Bishop, Newel K. Whitney, also should travel round about and among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their wants by humbling the rich and proud." Showing that this law in regard to the poor was not being observed. In sec. 89 we learn that they were organized according to this law before March, 1833. In sec. 34:4, Sidney Rigdon is told that "Thou wast sent forth even as John, to prepare the way before me." * * "and thou knew it not." In connection with baptism for remission of sins, he loudly proclaimed the gift of the Holy Ghost, and "all things common" among Saints, as preparatory to the coming millennium; a second advent of Christ, thus incurring the sore displeasure of A. Campbell and others in opposing it, just as their disciples are opposing the truth to-day. John taught no erroneous doctrine in preparing the way for his first advent; and from analogy Rigdon should have taught none in his preparatory work. See Hayden's history of the disciples. Mr. Hayden also says that the doctrine of "all things common," taught at Kirtland, caused the "Marley family," a "common-stock" society of eighteen, to join the "Mormons." And no doubt they, with brother Whitney's family, were easily induced to leave that order and accept "of the more perfect law of the Lord" as revealed to Joseph Smith.

It must have been organized in Jackson county, as they had their store-house there before the Saints were driven out in November, for in December the Lord said:—

"I the Lord have suffered the affliction to come upon them in consequence of their transgressions."—98: 1. "Because they did not hearken altogether unto the precepts and commandments which I gave unto them."—Sec. 100: 1. And on Fishing River in June, 1844, when inquiring concerning their redemption, the Lord says:—"Behold I say unto you, were it not for the transgression [continued evidently] of my people, speaking concerning the church, and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but behold they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance as becometh Saints [as the law required] to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up [or redeemed] unless it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her to myself, [or redeem her], and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, [to that union], if it must needs be by the things which they suffer."—Sec. 102: 1. If "God doth not vary from that which he hath said, nor walk in crooked paths, neither turn to the right hand nor to the left, is without variableness or even a shadow of turning, but His paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round," can Zion ever be redeemed otherwise?

In the preceding section, (101), we read:—"Verily I say unto you, my friends, I give unto you counsel, and a commandment, concerning all the properties which belong to the order, which I commanded to be organized, and established, to be an united order, and an everlasting order, for the benefit of my church, and for the salvation of men until I come, with promise immutable, and unchangeable." Blessings to the obedient; chastisement upon the disobedient. Can any other means of "salvation of men" be superior to or supercede this in connection with other celestial principles, until Jesus comes? In paragraph two the Lord says:—"Therefore a commandment I give unto you, that you shall organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him, [This shows that what the union required was, that taught in section 42], for it is expedient that I the Lord should make every man accountable as stewards over earthly blessings which I have made and prepared for my creatures. I the Lord stretched out the heavens and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my Saints, for all the things are mine; but must needs be done in mine own way; and behold this is the way that I the Lord have decreed to provide for my Saints; that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; [to make all rich, if his law is obeyed]; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. [They may do as they please with God's property for awhile]. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." The entire section is devoted to explaining this order of union, and in paragraph twelve we are again told how much "the law of my gospel" requires. "All moneys you receive in your stewardship . . . shall be cast into the treasury, . . . five, ten, twenty, fifty, or one hundred talents," above his wants, as fast as he receives it. "For it shall not be called his, nor any part of it." But it was the common property of the whole church, and instructions are given how it was to be used. This revelation was given after they were driven from Jackson county, evidently because they had become disorganized, because of transgression, instructing them to reorganize. Section 102, given in June, 1834, shows that they had disobeyed the commandment in section 101, and they were threatened with chastisement "until they learn obedience, if it must needs be by the thing which they suffer." O, how they suffered until July 8th, 1838, with scarcely any revelations, and then after all the revelations I have quoted, and others space forbids mentioning, in regard to what the Lord required of them, with the Book of Covenants in their midst containing those revelations; when expulsion from Missouri, or extermination was threatened them by Gov. Boggs, they cried unto the Lord to know "how much" he required of their properties for a tithing. In answer he still required all their surplus property, as a beginning of tithing; but loving and pitying them, no doubt, as most of them desired to obey him, but like the young man in Matthew 19, thought it terrible to consecrate all to the Lord, because of their selfish motives, inherited from their forefathers, and the Lord had said after they were driven "in consequence of their transgression; yet I will own them, and they shall be mine in that day when I come to make up my jewels. Therefore they must needs be chastened and tried, even as Abraham. . . . Notwithstanding their sins, my bowels are filled with compassion towards them; I will not utterly cast them off; and in the day of wrath I will remember mercy."—88: 1-4.

So after still requiring all their surplus property, he says: "And after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually" (sec. 106: 1) instead of all, as under the law of consecration. And if the Saints had only obeyed and would now obey that law, strictly, as God requires, it would "as a school master" soon enable them to overcome their selfish motives so that they might again be "united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom;" redeem Zion; make her again "like unto a judge sitting on a hill, or in a high place, to judge the nations."—64: 7.

I have hereby kindly presented to the Saints some of my reasons for believing that the order given to Enoch, taught by Moses, by the apostles at Jerusalem, by the Lord Jesus to the Nephites, by Joseph the Seer in this dispensation, called "all things common" by ancient Saints, equality, being one, or having "common property," in this age, was, and is, a "certain condition or principle of the law of the celestial kingdom; that no other law can bring about perfect union; that if adopted by branches of the church, that instead of diminishing tithing, it would greatly increase it, as by mutual co-operation all would be placed in a condition not only to make their own support, but hundreds of increase. All lands of the Saints instead of growing weeds as much of it does at present, would be made to produce to its utmost capacity; thousands be made yearly by having their own store-house, "an agent to purchase food and raiment for this people;" and one-tenth of all this increase, yearly going to the Bishop "for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord;" for there would be no poor among them" requiring aid from the Bishop. And double the amount would in a few years be paid under such an order as in their present condition. No reason could be given for withholding tithing, as all the increase would be known, it being in the Lord's treasury until the entire land was converted as was the Nephites under this order. And even then it would be needed to send the gospel beyond the seas. Hence the wisdom—"And this shall be a standing law unto them forever for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord."

If, as we reason with the world in regard to signs following, like cause, like effect, so this order if observed now would bring all the glorious results as among Enoch's people and the Nephites. Read Book of Mormon, pages 478, 79. O, what a blessed people, almost a heaven upon earth. This order was not a division of property, neither "common stock," property altogether, families all in one house, and men all working together on one vast farm under an overseer, but union of property, every man having his own home, his own farm, under his own control as the Lord's steward, ample means to work with, "dealing justly one with another" as the Nephites, and whenever obtaining "five or ten talents" above what is needed in his own stewardship, giving it to the "Lord's agent, to become the common property of the whole church"—or branch so organized—See sections 51:2, 5; and 101:11, 12. Zeal and righteous ambition inciting every man in endeavoring to excell in his stewardship. Only a wicked wretch indeed would indulge in laziness in such a cause; and the strict law against idlers would soon rid the church of such an one. If any family were sick or unfortunate in their stewardship, not making enough for a support, they would be provided for out of the store-house. The poor and meek would rejoice in this "law of my gospel" and "flow into" the church, as they would at once become as rich as their brethren, and thus provided for would begin to make more talents to keep up the Lord's treasury. Much poverty and distress is often caused by mismanagement, as all do not possess talent to manage; but when "wise men" are ordained of God to manage temporal things and counsel his stewards,—wisdom, economy and thrift, will characterize all their movements. God made all riches to alleviate the sufferings of his children and make them contented and happy; and this glorious law was given to accomplish this upon just and equitable principles. It is the grand and ultimate object of our Father, and the Redeemer, to bring all their children unto perfection, and to make them one like unto themselves, in temporal and spiritual things, it would be very unwise for wealthy Saints to divide their property among the poor promiscuously. Division of property as a doctrine, is from beneath; for if all were made rich in this way, circumstances, accidents, unwise calculation, sickness and other misfortunes would soon reduce many again to poverty, while through experience, talent and favorable circumstances, others would increase and soon have all again. But united under this law of union, all remain equal. For if some of the Saints should by experience, making close trades, &c., get much of another's stewardship, what they gained would not enrich them, neither the Lord's treasury, as it would all have to be put therein above their needs. Therefore their motive in speculating or cheating would be removed, and just dealing become a pleasure. In this way a perfect equality could be maintained, for all made above a living would become the common treasure of the whole; and while this law was observed no circumstances could make them unequal; no one could or would shun his neighbor because he was poor, or because his children had not the same advantages of education; no envy could exist because of wealth; no one could sit in idleness, fasting upon luxuries earned by the hard labors of others, who perhaps had not enough to eat because of misfortune.

Inequality in riches lays the foundation for many evils. The rich can have splendid mansions, fine carriages, apparel, educate their children to the utmost extent, while the poor must toil from morning to evening to obtain a scanty subsistence. Their families are often coarsely clad, and poorly educated. Such diverse circumstances causes distinctions. The rich do not generally feel like associating with the same degree of familiarity with the poor as with those of equal wealth; neither do they encourage, or even desire their children to select companions from among the poor, however worthy; consequently the poor feel themselves slighted, and are almost forced to feel envious because they are not also rich. This celestial order prevents all this, and provides means for all to have plenty, and to be highly educated. And notwithstanding all the fault found with the Book of Covenants, this doctrine of equality, of oneness, with laws to regulate and perpetuate it, stamps the book with the impress of eternal truth, and is an incontrovertible evidence of the divine mission of God's "Choice Seer."

The grand problem, how to equalize capital and labor, thus emancipating the poor and downtrodden, and bring about the universal brotherhood of man, is now convulsing the nations; and human wisdom is unable to solve it. O, that Zion would in her strength, arise, put on her beautiful garments by remembering the new covenant, the Book of Mormon, and the former commandments, not only to say, but to do according to that which is written; thus bringing forth fruit meet for her Father's kingdom, thus redeeming herself, to again sit as a judge to judge the nations by setting a standard for the people, to bring about their universal brotherhood, causing "all nations to flow unto it," and "the poor among men to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel," loving the Lord with all their heart, and their neighbor as themselves. Then shall "the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven be given to the people of the Saints of the Most High; whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

DANCING.

Is it right to dance? What are the effects produced on them that participate in it? Is it right for those who hold the priesthood to encourage dancing?

Nephi in the Book of Nephi, 1 Nephi 5:36, says: "And after we had been driven forth before the wind for the space of many days, behold my brethren, and the sons of Ishmael, and also their wives, began to make themselves merry, insomuch that they began to dance and to sing and to speak with much rudeness, yea even that they did forget by what power they had been brought thither; yea, they were lifted up unto exceeding rudeness." Nephi began to fear exceedingly, lest the Lord should be angry with them and smite them because of their iniquity. We glean from this text, first, that when they turned to dancing they became rude and were lifted up, and committed iniquity, and they forgot what power had brought them forward. If it was a dangerous practice for the Nephites, and by it they forgot their God, will not the same cause produce the same effect now? Moroni, 7:2, says: "But whatsoever things persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the devil, for after this manner doth the devil work, for he persuadeth no man to do good; no, not one; neither doth his angels; neither do they who subject themselves unto him.

With this rule before us, we can discern that dancing is following the lust of the mind and flesh. What a harmful effect is produced in man when he forgets his God and turns to worldly pleasures.

Welsh Hymn Book.

We have on hand about 100 copies of a book, entitled "Llyfr Hymnau at Wasanaeth Eglwys Iesu Grist, Ad-Roleiddedig Saint y Dydd Diweddfaf." There are 393 hymns in Welsh and 33 in English. It is published by the church in Wales, and sent here for sale. Sixty cents each, free of postage; bound in full leather, marbled edges.

Conference Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.

The above district conference convened at the Saints' Chapel, Logan, Iowa, March 3d. Associate president, P. Cadwell, in charge. Organized by electing J. C. Crabb president, P. Cadwell associate president, and Wm. C. Cadwell and J. W. Wight secretaries. The morning session was taken up by a social service of prayer and testimony. Ann Binnell-Butler, of Woodbine, was received on evidence of membership in first organization. The following branch reports were submitted:—Magnolia 171; 2 died; Donald Maule president and clerk. Spring Creek 88; 2 died; David Chambers president and clerk. Willow Valley 50; 2 received by certificate of baptism, 1 marriage; John Hunt president, Henry C. Purcell clerk. Logan 60; received by certificate of baptism 1, and 2 by letter; P. Cadwell president, W. R. Davison clerk. Unionburg 33; no changes; T. Thomas president, P. C. Kemmish clerk. Sioux City 15; 1 baptized, 2 received by certificate of baptism; M. P. Berg president, E. A. Townsend clerk. Magnolia Sunday-school:—Total attendance 227, number of sessions 11, average attendance 20, donations $3 34; J. F. Mintun superintendent, Mamie Emmerson secretary. The district secretary submitted his annual statistical report as follows:—The district contains 8 branches, total membership 720, including 3 high priests, 5 of the seventy, 41 elders, 16 priests, 11 teachers and 8 deacons. During the past year 45 have been received by baptism, and 59 by letter or vote. Increase 104; 20 have removed by letter and 10 have died; decrease 30; net gain for year 74. Members not enrolled in branches about 80; total 800. The following officers reported:—High priests C. Derry, J. C. Crabb and P. Cadwell; J. F. Mintun of the seventy (by letter); Elder J. W. Wight (by letter, baptized 5). J. H. Hunt E. R. Lanpher, W. Pett, Donald Maule, Joseph Seddon, Lehi Ellison, David Chambers, Henry Garner, P. C. Kemmish, W. C. Cadwell, C. A. Butterworth, Colby Downs, and H. O. Smith; priests J. C. Johnson, J. L. Gunsolly, W. T. Fallon, and James Emmerson; teachers W. R. Davison and deacon C. Kennedy. P. Cadwell in his remarks referred to the action of the Adventists donating some $15 unto the Ladies' Aid Society, to assist in furnishing the church at Logan; also acknowledged assistance from the Ladies' Aid Society of Magnolia for same purpose. Bro. W. C. Cadwell made a statement reflecting great credit upon Bro. J. B. Baker for the manner in which he had performed the work of building the Logan church. Confirming Bro. Baker's statement that he had made no money out of the job, and conveying the idea that it was doubtful if he had made wages besides paying his subscription of $25. The Bishop's agent submitted his report for the six months ending December 31st, 1887. Receipts 356.30, paid out $258.51, balance $97.79. He stated that he had received about $240 less and paid out about $96 less than in 1886. D. Chambers, John Pett, and J. M. Putney were appointed to audit the report, and they subsequently reported it correct. J. C. Crabb, D. Chambers, W. C. Cadwell, J. M. Putney, and C. Derry, were elected delegates to General Conference, and by motion were empowered to cast the full vote to which this district might be entitled. The Annual Conference was requested to continue C. Derry and J. W. Wight as missionaries in this district. A communication was read from Bishop Blakeslee. The district secretary read an article he had prepared at the solicitation of a publishing firm containing a history of the Saints in Harrison county, and on motion the article was approved by this conference. Bro. Crabb made a statement in reference to Missouri Valley mission but no action was taken. W. C. Cadwell was by request released from committee to represent the district before the Twelve. A resolution was offered to rescind all standing resolutions. On motion further action on this resolution was postponed till next conference. Joseph Seddon,

H. O. Smith and David Chambers were requested to labor at Logan as much as consistent with other labors. Preaching during the conference by J. W. Wight and J. C. Crabb, and Joseph Seddon spoke under branch direction Sunday morning. A prayer and testimony meeting was held Sunday afternoon, and much peace and spiritual strength was enjoyed by all. The sacrament was also administered Sunday afternoon. Adjourned to meet at Magnolia, Saturday, June 2d, at eleven o'clock.

CENTRAL MISSOURI.

This conference met with the Wakenda branch, the 3d of March, 1888. Bro. W. L. Booker president. Elders present:—W. L. Booker, E. W. Cato, G. W. Carter and M. A. Trotter; Teacher, A. C. Stone, Deacon, M. H. Stone. Wakenda branch reported 2 dropped. Alma branch, 3 received, 1 dropped. Elders F. W. Kaiser and C. E. Blodgett, also Mary Blodgett, Hiram Blodgett, and Alexander Blodgett, were disfellowshipped, and their names ordered dropped from the records of the church. Elder F. M. Miller submitted a statement to the effect that he had united with the Church of Christ and asked to be released from the church. A committee of two was appointed to visit him and labor with him, and report to the president of the district, and that he take legal steps in the case, and report at the next conference. Bishop's agent's report was referred to an auditing committee; reported back correct; and bishop's agent sustained for next year. Bro. W. L. Booker was sustained as president for the next year, and M. A. Trotter clerk. Adjourned to meet with the Alma branch, the 9th of June, at ten o'clock.

NODAWAY.

The above district conference convened at the Union Church, on Saturday, February 25th and 26th; James Thomas in the chair, A. J. Moore clerk pro tem. Branch reports:—Platte 80; 1 died. Ross Grove no change. Eureka not reported. Stanberry branch accepted as a branch of the district, and reported eight members; Joseph Curtis presiding teacher. Elders A. J. Moore, J. W. Johnson, Ole Madison, William Powell, Peter Rasmussen, James Thomas, (baptized 7), William Woodhead; Priest Andrew Jensen; Teachers Hans Floyd, C. C. Nelsen and John Ford, reported. Bro. F. W. Curtis was recommended to conference to be ordained an elder; referred to president in charge of the mission. Bro. Joseph Curtis was recommended to be ordained a priest; his ordination was ordered. The president and clerk and Bishop's agent of the district were sustained A. J. Moore, W. Woodhead, Ole Madison, Joseph Flory and James Thomas, to represent the district at General Conference, and that any member present be authorized to cast the vote for the district. J. R. Lambert was sustained as president of the mission and request made to continue him; also A. J. Moore and James Thomas in the district. J. W. Johnson, W. Woodhead and W. Powel preached during the conference. Adjourned to meet at call of president.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

The quarterly conference convened at Underwood, Iowa, February 25th. H. N. Hansen president, Thomas Scott secretary. Statistical reports of the two branches were read and approved. The bishop's agent's report was read and received. Received since last report, $995 62; total paid out and sent to bishop $902; on hand $93 62. Elders C. A. Beebe, J. P. Carlisle, Joshua Carlisle and H. N. Hansen reported. D. K. Dodson elected as delegate to the General Conference. H. N. Hansen district president for the next four months, and Thomas Scott secretary for the next four months. D. K. Dodson preached on Saturday evening. Preaching Sunday forenoon by H. N. Hansen; in the afternoon by C. A. Beebe and D. K. Dodson. Adjourned to Wheeler's Grove, Iowa, the last Saturday in June [30th], 1888.

Miscellaneous.

MARRIED.

VANETON—DERRY—At noon March 1st, 1888, by Elder Phineas Cadwell, at the residence of Elder Charles Derry, of Magnolia, Harrison county, Iowa, Mr. M. S. VanEton, of Chadron, Nebraska, to Pearl R. Derry. Some forty were present to witness the ceremony, and after a feast of fat things was partaken of, all were treated to a feast of good music by the bride and others. A goodly number of presents were visible. At three p. m., bride and groom started for their home in Chadron, Nebraska, amid tears of sorrow that sister Pearl must leave. We all shall miss sister Pearl in very many places.

ROBINSON—GREEN.—Mr. John Robinson to Sr. Elizabeth Green, at the residence of Bro. Matthew Taylor, Lucas, Iowa, February 29th, 1888; Elder John R. Evans officiating.

NEWLIN—CHOPPER.—At Stone City, Linn county, Iowa, March 7th, 1888, by Elder J. S. Roth, Bro. J. H. Newlin, of Viola, Iowa, to Sr. J. D. Chopper, of Stone City, Iowa. May the same calm and peaceful influence ever continue with brother and sister Newlin, which was present on their marriage occasion.

DIED.

CHUTE.—At St. Clair, Michigan, April 30th, 1887, Clarence H., son of Bro. Henry and Sr. Alice Chute, aged 18 years, 7 months and 4 days. He was baptized February 25th, 1885, by Elder Gordon E. Deuel, and confirmed by him and Elder James Robb. He died firm in the faith, saying God called him and he was willing to go. He was a dutiful son, an affectionate brother, and was beloved by all who knew him.

ANDERSON.—Elder William Anderson, of No. 1302 South Pablo avenue, Oakland, California, died at his residence, at midnight, Sunday, the 8th of January, 1888, after an illness of some years. He was born in Mahoning county, Ohio, October 4th, 1835; joined the church at Nashville, Iowa, February 28th, 1861, where, and at Montrose he lived long and was favorably known to many of the Saints. He was one of the first missionaries to Utah, going with brethren J. W. Gillen and A. H. Smith across the plains by team in 1866; did good service in Utah and California for the cause. He emigrated to California, settling at San Francisco, where he went into business; subsequently removing to Oakland, where he continued in business until his death. He was a man of unsullied honesty and a fearless advocate of what he deemed to be right, liable to err, as are all, but willing to confess wrong when seen. He had many friends, few enemies, but neither fear of one nor love for the other caused him to swerve from his convictions. He is missed as are men of truth and action. He leaves a wife, and four children, one a daughter married, in Oakland.

COOK.—At her home in Sheridan, Nevada, February 11th, 1888, of neuralgia of the heart, Mrs. Margaretta Cook, aged 76 years, 1 month, 8 days. She was born in Manchester, England, January 3d, 1821; was baptized in that city in 1839 or 40; came to America in 1848, crossing the plains to Utah in the same year. Becoming disgusted with Brighamism, she became a follower of Joseph Morris, and upon his assassination she left Utah. She came to Nevada in 1870, and in September, 1873, she was baptized into the Reorganization. Her faith in the latter day work never wavered, and her greatest pleasure was in the occasional meetings, the church papers and books. Elders A. B. Johns and D. I. Jones conducted the funeral services.

EVANS.—At Forest Hill, Placer county, California, Sr. Jane R. Evans, of pneumonia, January 10th, 1888, aged 81 years, 2 months and 10 days. She was the widow of Thomas R. Evans, carpenter by trade, formerly of Gyfarthfa works, Methyr Tydville. She was baptized by Elder William Henshaw, March 12th, 1843, being one of the first who embraced the gospel in Wales. She, in company with her husband and family left Wales in 1855, and emigrated to Pennsylvania.

nia, where they resided about seven years, at which time, her husband was drowned near Pottsville, Pennsylvania; shortly after which she emigrated to Utah, where she remained about one year, after which she removed to Forest Hill. She embraced the Reorganized Church about fifteen years ago at Nortonville, California, and has proved faithful until death. She was a native of Laugharn, Pembrokeshire, Wales. She buried two children in California, and leaves six children to mourn her loss, four of which are residing in Forest Hill. Her son Edward is in Lucas, Iowa, and Thomas in Scranton, Kansas. She was a kind and gentle mother, endearing herself to her children, her friends and neighbors, and being loved by all with whom she was associated.

NELSON.—Lorenzo D. Nelson, the first shoemaker in Farmington, Iowa, who came here in 1835, died at his home in Arbela, Missouri, October 12th, 1887, aged 76 years, 5 months and 26 days. He was born in Rowan county, North Carolina, April 17th, 1811. In 1843 he married Elizabeth Doty, a daughter of another early settler. He resided in Farmington until one year ago last July. He leaves a wife and two children and many friends. He will be remembered by hosts of Farmington people as a quiet citizen, respected and loved by all who knew him.

Yet again we hope to meet him,
When the day of life is fled,
Then in heaven with joy to greet him
Where no farewell tear is shed.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

RAILROAD RATES.

Persons attending the General Conference at Independence, Missouri, next April 6th, going over the Chicago and Alton Railroad, in Illinois and Missouri, can have the rate at one fare and a third for the round trip; provided that they purchase first class single trip tickets to Independence, and procure from the ticket agent when going a certificate (which the agent will furnish on request) certifying as to the form, number, route and destination of ticket purchased.

2. If through tickets can not be procured at starting point, passengers must purchase to the most convenient point where such tickets can be procured, and re-purchase through to Independence via this line, requesting certificate as before mentioned, from the ticket agent at the point at which such ticket is purchased.

3. Tickets for the return journey will be sold by the ticket agent at Independence at one-third the single trip, first-class unlimited fare, and only to those holding certificates duly signed and stamped by the ticket agent at the point from which the ticket for the going passage was sold; such certificates to be countersigned by the secretary or clerk of the conference, certifying that the holder has been in regular attendance at the meeting. It is imperative that a certificate be procured.

Tickets issued on certificate for return journey will be limited by agent for continuous trip—no stop-over privilege being allowed. Certificates are non-transferable.

The Missouri Pacific Railway Company in Missouri, will return delegates at same rates to points on their line upon presentation to their agents at Independence of certificates signed and filled out by Bishop Geo. A. Blakeslee. It is hoped that their lines in Kansas will do the same.

The Illinois Central Railroad Company will return delegates at one-third regular rates, who pay full fare going, over their lines in Iowa and Illinois upon presentation at their ticket offices at Effingham, Vandalia, Normal, (Illinois), or Sioux City, Iowa, certificates issued by the authorized officer of the conference properly accrediting them.

Persons attending the conference who pay full fare going over the Chicago and North-Western Railway, will be returned for one-third fare, provided they procure a receipt issued by the agent of that company at the railway station from which they start on that line going to conference, for the full fare paid; which receipt, when filled up and countersigned by the secretary of the conference certifying that the holder was an attendant, will be honored if presented at the depot ticket offices of that company at Council Bluffs, Des Moines, and Chicago.

If persons pass over two or more railways when going to conference, and pay two or more short fares, on account of local tickets not being sold through, they should procure receipts for the fare paid going over each line, or for each ticket purchased, as return tickets at the reduced rate will be issued locally by each company for same trips. Blank forms for the above purpose are in the hands of all the station agents, (on the C. N.-W. Ry.), and will be issued as receipts for full fare paid on application. The same rules apply with those going over the Rock Island and Pacific. Receipts for fare over this road will be honored by their agent at Kansas City, Missouri, for return tickets at one-third fare when properly filled up and countersigned by Bishop Geo. A. Blakeslee.

The Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific will furnish to those who pay full first-class fare going, return tickets at one-third full fare; provided, that they secure from the Ticket Agent at the Station where they purchase ticket going a receipt and certificate for and of said purchase—such certificate to be certified by the Secretary of Conference; and provided further, that there be twenty (20) or more such persons returning over the same route as in going.

The Hannibal & St. Joseph, and Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs Rail Road will return delegates to General Conference from Kansas City to points on the "Burlington System" within the territory from which rates are authorized at one-third fare on certificate. Delegates enroute to the conference residing on these lines will purchase tickets to Kansas City at full fare and ask the agent for certificate receipt. On presentation of this receipt filled out and signed by Bishop G. A. Blakeslee, their agent at Kansas City will issue tickets to the starting point at one-third fare.

Don't fail to procure receipts for the full fare paid going, as otherwise no return tickets at the reduced rates will be issued.

It is expected similar arrangements will be effected over the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Michigan Central, and other roads, at an early time.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR ENTERTAINING.

A committee has been appointed by the Independence Branch to arrange for the entertainment of General Conference members and visitors; said committee consists of F. G. Pitt chairman, H. R. Mills treasurer, M. S. Frick secretary, J. J. Vickery and R. May.

Said committee has appointed a reception committee, as follows: First Ward, J. J. Vickery; Second Ward, F. W. Barbee; Third Ward, R. May; Fourth Ward, M. S. Frick, whose duty it is to provide homes for all who come and apply to them. A uniform charge at the rate of two dollars per week will be made, said money to be paid to the committeeman assigning the guest his or her home.

All parties intending to come to conference, who have not made private arrangements for their accommodation, will please bear the above in mind, and, if possible, notify the secretary of committee, Bro. M. S. Frick, of their intention to come, that arrangements may be made beforehand for as many as possible, and thus avoid extra work at the time.

It has been decided to hold conference in the basement of our New Church, and preparations are being made to that end. Committeemen will wear a blue ribbon in button hole by which they may be known.

The Independence Branch, at its meeting held March 5th, adopted the above.

F. G. PITT, Chairman of Committee.

P. S.—It is intended to have a corner stone laying at the New Church April 6th, if arrangements can be made with Pres. Joseph Smith to preside at said ceremony on that day.

 The printed name on the colored label on your paper gives the date to which your subscription has been paid. If it shows you are in arrears, please renew.

SPECIAL LAND EXCURSIONS.

On March 20th, April 3d and 24th, May 8th and 22d, and June 5th, 1888, the "Burlington Route," C. B. & Q. R. R., will run Special Land Excursions from Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis and all stations on its line to points in Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota and Dakota, and to points in Colorado east of and including Akron and Sterling on the B. & M. R. R. and Sterling on the U. P. R'y, at greatly reduced rates. This will afford home-seekers, land buyers and others an excellent opportunity for the inspection of the fertile country of central, north-western and south-western Nebraska and north-western Kansas, reached by the new extensions of the Burlington & Missouri River R. R. in Nebraska. Also, to visit the rich agricultural districts of Dakota and Minnesota reached by the Burlington Route. A great reduction in rates will also be made to Texas, New Mexico, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Arkansas points on March 20th, April 3d and 24th, May 8th and 22d, and June 5th, 1888. Tickets good for 30 days to Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Minnesota and Dakota points; and to all other States mentioned, 60 days. Liberal stop-over privileges will be accorded passengers beyond terminal points of this line. For tickets, general or further information regarding the above, apply to any ticket agent of its own or connecting lines or address, PAUL MORTON, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Illinois.

CALLINGS AND QUALIFICATION OF MINISTERS.

BRO. E. W. NUNLEY writes to say he fears lest some are called to the ministry, not of God, but of men, and he thinks this is proven by the fact that they do little or nothing in the ministry. But it should be borne in mind that this kind of proof is defective, for it is well known that persons may be divinely entrusted with "talents," and then fail to use them properly.

He also thinks mistakes are made in calling teachers and deacons without "special direction" of God's Spirit. To this it may be replied, that all selections to the ministry should be moved and directed by the Spirit. But this does not involve the necessity for all to be called by and through prophecy, vision, tongues, &c. In the primitive Christian Church some of the ministry were appointed by prophecy, while others were chosen and appointed by wisdom, spiritual guidance, and by the overruling providence of God as in Acts 1: 22-26; 6: 3; Titus 1: 5, &c. Besides this the evident holy "desires" and known good qualities of the individual had sometimes very much to do with respect to his being selected for the ministry, as in respect to bishops, (1 Tim. 3: 1); and those calling and setting apart both them and deacons were to judge of their fitness as Paul directs in 1 Tim. 3: 1-13; Titus 1: 4-9; 2 Tim. 2: 2-26, etc., etc. In harmony with this are the teachings and precedents found in the Book of Mormon 2 Nephi 4: 5; Mosiah 4: 1; 9: 9; Alma 4: 1, etc., etc. To this agree the teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants, 10: 4, 8, 10; 11: 2, 4; 35: 2, 3; 39: 8; 63: 15, 16, etc., etc. We should add to this the fact, that often, both the ordaining ministry and the membership had much to do in the selection and approval of the ministry, as we have already seen in part, and as is further confirmed by the following:

Mosiah 11: 2; Alma 3: 8; 12: 1; Book of Mormon 4: 1; Doc. Cov. 5: 2; 10: 2, 8; 11: 2, 4; 35: 2, 3; 17: 16, 17; 99: 2, 4; 104: 11; 107: 46, etc., etc.

The brother also thinks some of those writing for the Herald on the qualifications of the ministry put too much stress on education. This should not be done, and we fail to see that it has been done, at least of late in our columns. It is true that the Lord in the past and in the present has called some of "the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty," but those when faithful did not remain weak. But, blessed of God, and diligently using their own powers, abilities and opportunities, they grew in grace and knowledge and wisdom and skill, and thus became mighty men of God. The education and intellectual powers of men and women are most valuable when put to proper uses. But when they who possess them become proud and vain, and use these qualifications for improper purposes, then God is displeased with them—not, (we repeat it), with their attainments, but with their abuse, or improper use of them. Abraham was skilled in some of the sciences—notably astronomy—and taught the Egyptians. Moses was skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians. David, chosen in weakness and ignorance, became learned and mighty. Daniel and his fellows were called and chosen of God and man because they were "well favored, and skillful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science." Dan. 1: 4, 7. God called Paul the learned, also Luke "the physician," while Peter and Andrew and James and John, though called in weakness, grew rapidly in all essential knowledge and wisdom, and became polished and powerful ministers for Christ. Paul said to Timothy, "study, to show thyself approved." The prophet Isaiah said, "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in due season." The prophet Jacob said, "To be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God:" and the Lord commanded his ministry in this dispensation, saying: "Seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; yea, seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doc. Cov. 85: 36. And to the First Presidency he said, "You shall from henceforth preside over the affairs of the Church and the School; [of the prophets], and from time to time, as shall be manifest by the Comforter, receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom, and set in order the churches, and study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues and people. And this shall be your mission in all your lives, to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom." Sec. 87: 5. This being proper and essential in order that the First Presidency might thoroughly fulfill their duties and calling to the church and the world, it follows that their fellow ministers should follow out the same line in order that they, too, may successfully fulfill their ministry acceptably.

No man should be set apart to the ministry unless called of God "as was Aaron," (Numbers 28: 1), and as were those mentioned in the New Testament, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; for no man is competent to preach the gospel and build up the Church of Christ unless lawfully, regularly called and set apart to that authority. See Mosiah 11: 2, 12; Doc. Cov. 42: 4, etc., etc.

CASTING STONES.

IN the HERALD for March 24th there was an article on page 187 relative to the polygamous teachings of Martin Luther and Philip Melancthon, chief among the Reformers of the sixteenth century. This might be supplemented with the adulterous teaching, in England, of Cardinal Wolsey and the lecherous practices of Henry the 8th, King of England. The latter was known, while he remained a Roman Catholic, as "The Defender of the Faith," he writing against Luther; but when, under his management, and at his instigation, the English parliament passed an act abolishing the papal authority within the realm, he claimed and was acknowledged by parliament to be "the head of the church." This "reformer" and church founder had six wives in all, but not all at the same time. To his shameless adultery he added the crime of procuring the execution of his second wife, Anne Boleyn, and Catharine Howard, his fifth wife, besides numerous other victims who stood in the pathway of his criminal ambitions.

If the Methodists who cast stones at the founder of the Church of the Latter Day Saints would look well into the history of John Wesley, the founder of their church, they would find that he was charged with many and great evils by the opposing religionists of his time, and among evil charges are the following taken from a "History of the United States," published by Collins and Hannay, in New York, 1830. On page 106 it says: "In 1736, John Wesley, a celebrated Methodist, made a visit to Georgia, for the purpose of preaching to the colonists, and converting the Indians. Among the former he made some proselytes, but more enemies. He was accused of diverting the people from labor, of fomenting divisions, of claiming and exercising high and unwarranted ecclesiastical authority. His conduct toward the niece of one of the principal settlers was highly resented by her friends. Thirteen indictments, for alleged offences, were found against him; but before the time of trial he returned to England, and there for many years pursued a successful and distinguished career of piety and usefulness."

"They who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

BAPTISTERIES.

A SISTER asks to know where we find mentioned in the Old or New Testament where God's people had basins in their houses of worship in which to baptize.

To answer this properly and fully would take more time and space than we can now spare, but we will seek to give some points which will enable the patient investigator to get a good start toward a complete answer. To begin with, it should be borne in mind that "baptism," and "washing," are in some instances, equivalent terms and mean the same thing. Hence Paul says: "But according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, [the new birth], and renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Tit. 3: 5. And he further says: "Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify [make holy] and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." [of Christ's gospel.—Ed]. The gospel command of Christ to Paul, by his servant Ananias, was, "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins."—Acts 22: 16.

That this "washing"—baptism—was practiced in ancient times may be seen in the fact that "the gospel was preached unto Abraham;" (Gal. 3: 8); and in the further fact that Israel "were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea."—1 Cor. 10: 2.

The familiarity of the Jews with the ordinance of baptism in the days of John the Baptist is seen in the fact that, "there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins;" (Mark 1: 5); and in the further fact that the Pharisees said to John, "Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?"—John 1: 25.

William Smith in his Dictionary of the Bible says: "There is an universal agreement among later Jewish writers that all the Israelites were brought into covenant with God by circumcision, baptism, and sacrifice, and that the same ceremonies were necessary in admitting proselytes." As to the places where baptism was administered, "the sea" is mentioned, also the river Jordan, and "in Enon, near to Salim, because there was much water there."—John 3: 23.

The word Enon "is merely a Greek version of a Chaldee word, signifying 'springs.'"—Dict. Bible, Art. Aenon.

Grouping these facts together we conclude that, baptism was administered in any convenient place wherever "much water" was at hand, whether in a sea, river, spring, pool, laver, or baptismal font.

Now, it is a historical fact, that in the temple of the Lord, ordered by Solomon, there was "a molten sea," (1 Kings 7: 23-44), about sixteen feet across, near eight feet high, and resting upon twelve oxen. This great laver would contain "much water," and would therefore be suitable for baptismal purposes. Indeed one can scarcely conceive of any need for so large a laver except for baptism. And while it is evident it was used for other kinds of "washing" by the priests, (2 Chron. 4: 6), it certainly contained sufficient water in which to baptize.

There is no place in the New Testament where baptisteries "in houses of worship" are spoken of. Indeed, in those early times the Saints had but few houses of worship of their own, owing, no doubt, to both their persecutions and their poverty.

Dr. Buck and others inform us that the ancient church prepared a building separate and distinct from the place of public worship, consisting of an ante-room and an inner room, in the first of which the candidate made confession of faith, while in the inner room was administered the ordinance of baptism; and that in the sixth century the baptisteries began to be taken into the places of worship.

Relative to places for baptism, in the absence of direct commandment from God, wisdom should dictate on the grounds of convenience and both general and special fitness.

The chief essentials are, 1, genuine gospel faith; 2, repentance arising from "godly sorrow;" 3, a divinely authorized administrator; and, 4, "much water" in some convenient place in which to administer the ordinance, let that be in river, sea, lake, pool, spring, or font.

Again; we must not reject all the things we do not, can not find in the Old and New Testaments. For while it may be safe to reject all that conflicts with what is plainly, fully taught in those scriptures, yet we should remember that God will ever teach his people "precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little and there a little," yet all will be in harmony and in unity.

HERE is a specimen of the low and lofty lying so current now-a-days, and we think it well to preserve it that future generations may see the character of this Christian (?) enlightened (?) generation and thereby be assisted in fixing it in the class to which it belongs. The letter following it will explain further in regard to it. The article has scarcely one truthful sentence in it, as all well informed persons know:

DAVID WHITMER DEAD.

The last of the witnesses of the "Book of Mormon" is dead. There were originally eleven of these witnesses—three who testified that they saw an angel who delivered the plates and eight that they saw and "hefted the plates which had the appearance of ancient make and curious workmanship"—and of all the eleven only one died in the orthodox Mormon faith. This one, Martin Harris, was expelled from the church in Missouri; but some thirty years later a missionary found him in poverty and second childhood, recon-verted him and took him to Utah, where he died at 93 of pure old age. Oliver Cowdery, another of the three, was expelled from the Mormon church for "lying, counterfeiting and immorality," and became a common drunkard. When sober he declined to say anything about his "testimony," but when drunk he reiterated it with great emphasis. Many a backwoods bar-room in Missouri and the adjacent sections of Iowa has echoed to these words (and he nearly always used the same form), as loudly uttered by Cowdery: "Gentlemen, I'm only a poor——; but, as sure as I'm a living man, I saw an angel come into that room and hand them plates to Joseph Smith."

David Whitmer, the last of the three, was also expelled from the church during the Missouri trouble in 1838, and for twenty-five years lived a very quiet life in Richmond, Ray county, Mo. During this time he persistently refused to say anything about his "testimony," or to have any dealings with the Brighamite Mormons. He established a high character for honest dealing, although a horse trader, and his associates found it best to not trouble him about his connection with Joseph Smith. At length an old neighbor urged him to say once for all what the truth was, and he replied that he assuredly did see an angel with the plates, viz: Mr. Samuel Angell, "one of the neighbors!"

About this time the various bands of Mormons who had refused to follow Brigham Young to Utah, and who were scattered from Voree, Wisconsin, to Lyman Wight's place in Texas, and known as Strangites, Lymanites, Twelviters, Gatherers, etc., began to pull together and re-organize under the lead of "Young Joe," that is, Joseph Smith, oldest son of the prophet. Then David Whitmer suddenly broke his long silence and reaffirmed his original "testimony;" his grandson became a leader in the new organization, and the old gentleman was once more a religious devotee. In 1878 a tornado struck the town of Richmond, reduced a third of it to kindling wood in two minutes, killed fifteen persons and wounded many more, the talented grandson, a livery stable keeper being among the wounded. After that David Whitmer became an enthusiast on the subject of restoring the church, and repeated his "testimony" with great zeal. The effort at reunion was not a complete success, however; though the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," commonly called "Josephites," contains some 40,000 members.

David Whitmer was born in Pennsylvania, January 5th, 1805. In 1829 he heard of Joseph Smith's discovery of the golden plates and went to see them. He was then, according to his "testimony," favored with the sight and witness of the angel, after which the translation was made at his house, his brother, Christian Whitmer, and Oliver Cowdery doing most of the writing. David was one of the six who organized the church, April 6th, 1830, and he remained with the Mormons till their breakup in 1838, after which he located in Richmond. The Brighamites never made such charges of immorality against him as against Cowdery and Harris, of the latter of whom Joseph Smith made this entry in the church records: "There are niggers with white skins, such as Gramas Parrish and Martin Harris, the lackeys; but to notice such fellows would be a sacrifice too great for a gentleman to make." David Whitmer also held one rare advantage over the others—he retained the original manuscript from which the "Book of Mormon" was printed, and it descends to his grandsons among the sacro sancta of the Reorganized Church. Mr. Whitmer was but a few days older than eighty-three when he died, and almost his last intelligent utterance was a reiteration of the truth of his "testimony." In conclusion, it must be said that the Mormons have done a vast service to the science of comparative theology; they have demonstrated before our eyes the process by which ethnic religions originate and develop. Here is a purely American church, with prophets and apostles of our time, and voluminous revelations in the (very) vulgar tongue. It is the same to comparative theology that a living mastodon or hyleosaurus would be to geology.—Vicksburg Commercial.

316 Capital Avenue South,
LANSING, Mich., Mar. 18th.

Bro. W. W. Blair.—One day this week I was called over to Sr. Bagley's, in this city, she being feeble in health, to administer to her, and also to her sister—Sr. Kesler. While I was there on my mission a sister handed me this remarkable Don Quixote tangent which she had cut out of the Vicksburgh Commercial, which is now being quoted and passed around by other papers as a sacred portion of the common gospel of the kingdom of his Satanic majesty which of necessity must be preached and disseminated in all the world for a sure witness among all nations that the Latter Day Saints are extremely hated by the devil and all his emissaries the world-wide-over. Well, dear Saints of Lansing and every where else, just please remember that Jesus said, "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you." So you see Jesus has got the start of you. "Ye know," he says, "that it hated me before it hated you," and he goes on to say, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." "Remember," he says, "the word that I said unto you, the servant is not above his Lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you." Again he says, "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of the household." Please bear in mind that while these apostolic scandalum magnatum of the kingdom of Satan are blowing out and disseminating their defamatory effusions as the chief joy of their susceptibilities there is some thing infinitely better for you. The good Master says "Blessed." Thank the Lord! "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you, falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." John 15: 18-20; Matt. 10: 24, 25; 11: 12.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE are pleased to note that in the North Attleboro (Mass.) Chronicle of the 6th instant, Bro. A. B. Pierce makes a concise, but very able defense of the Reorganized Church. Good fruit will result from such efforts in due time.

Bro. G. R. Scogin wrote from Brewton, Alabama, the 13th inst. that he had visited the Escambia, Macedonia and Lone Star branches, laboring some in all of them and baptized one in the last mentioned one, and had opened some new fields. He says the Saints are gaining influence and friends, and that he intends to labor in the future to the best of his ability.

Bro. John Livings writes from Derby, Mississippi that he is circulating the Voice of Warning sent him by Bro. J. H. Peters. Himself and wife, and his father and mother, are the only members in that region, and they and their neighbors wish to have our elders preach there soon.

Bro. E. E. Marshall, of Lone Rock, Missouri, expresses in a recent letter his determination to hold fast to the faith and press steadily on to final triumph.

Bro. W. W. Cross wrote us the 10th inst., that brethren Devore and Beatty had raised up a branch of seven members at Goose Creek, Ritchie county, West Virginia, that persecution had fallen upon them, but they hoped to ever render good for evil.

Sr. Sarah J. Allen writes from Springfield, Dakota, that her brother Joshua Hartley and his wife, also her sister, Mrs. Maria Grey and her husband, of Ainsworth, Brown county, Nebraska, wish to be baptized. She also says many would like to have Elder J. W. Wight return to Dakota, and that if he will come he will be conveyed by carriage across to Ainsworth.

Bro. M. R. Scott wrote from Deputy, Indiana, the 13th instant, that the work is onward in that region.

Bro. A. J. Cato wrote from Silver Hill, Arkansas, March 10th, that bad weather from first of last December up to date had prevented his preaching much. He feels improved in health and spirits, thinks prospects are brightening, and that some religionists are losing prestige with the thinking class of society.

Bro. E. W. Nunley wrote March 6th from Wheelock, Texas, that he had been well received at two new places in Brazos and Burleson counties, and that some of his former Baptist associates were investigating, and he hopes to be able to soon organize branches there. He pronounces Bro. T. W. Sherrill and Sr. Mattie Fields "good soldiers," because of their godly zeal.

Bro. R. M. Elvin wrote us of late that Dr. York, an Infidel lecturer, has a crowd of Sunday nights, in the Opera House in Salt Lake City. God pity the poor people there and deliver them from the cheerless, hopeless darkness of Infidelity.

Bro. John Wake wrote us from Horton, Kansas, the 12th inst., that abroad in the religious world spiritual knowledge, as he views it, is at a stand-still, and that they manifestly possess no power by which to concentrate on a correct basis and build according to a correct pattern. He remarks also that he can bear a living testimony to the truth of the great latter day work; and that he rejoices in its progress. He thinks a goodly number will unite with the church in that region at no distant time.

Bro. J. F. Gunsolly wrote from Payette, Idaho, March 14th, and expresses the wish that some of the elders will call on him and other Saints at that point and labor in the gospel. He feels well satisfied with his new home, and says that when writing the weather was beautiful and the season far advanced as in April and May in Iowa.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Can a branch legally release a priest without a charge is brought against him?

Ans.—Yes. He holds his official position in a branch by virtue of the choice and vote of the branch as provided for in Rules of Order, chap. 14: 164, this being in harmony with Doc. Cov. 27: 4; 107: 46, etc., etc.

Q.—Are we to understand that those who are caught up in the clouds "to meet the Lord in the air," (1 Thess. 4: 17) will descend right away, or remain in the air a thousand years, and reign over the earth in that condition?

A.—No. For the Lord has said by the prophet Zechariah: "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal; yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah; and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be clear nor dark; but it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night; but it shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light. And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter shall it be. And the Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one. All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem; and it shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's winepresses. And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited."—Zech. 14: 1-11. To this agree the words of Isaiah: "Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth. And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare; for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake. The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall and not rise again. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited. Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24: 17-23. And the Lord says in Malachi: "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years."—Mal. 3: 1-4. Of this event Jesus evidently speaks in these words: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."—Matt. 23: 37-39. This position is further confirmed by Ezekiel, chapters 38 and 39; Daniel 7: 13, 14, 27; Joel 3: 9-21; Isaiah 59: 16-21; 60: 1-22; 62: 1-12; 64: 1-12; 66: 1-24; 2 Peter 3: 3-14; Rev. 5: 8-10; 11: 15-19; 14: 14, 15; 20: 6; 1 Cor. 4: 8; 2 Tim. 2: 12, etc.

WE take from The American Antiquarian and Oriental Journal, edited by S. D. Peet of Mendon, Illinois, the following review of Elder S. F. Walker's "Ruins Revisited." The editor expresses surprise that a work evincing so much research, and exhibiting so much skill and sincerity, should have been written by a Mormon. If the editor will take the pains to inform himself, even in a moderate degree, in respect to the faith, history, and capabilities of the Mormons, he can enjoy many surprises of this sort, those which will have the happy effect of dissipating prejudice and exhibiting the facts and principles of a system of religion that is as high as heaven and as far-reaching as the eternities.

"A book on Archaeology by a Mormon elder is a curiosity and a surprise. A surprise because of the extent of the reading which is exhibited by it, and a curiosity because of the position the author takes. The position reached is that the lost tribes of Israel came to America, and the descendants of Abraham and of Noah are to be found in this country as the prehistoric inhabitants. Of course the conclusion which a Mormon would draw would be that the tablets and other tokens, which have come down to us from prehistoric times, contain not only history but revelation. It is a singular fact that Professor Seyffarth, who was not a Mormon, interpreted the Davenport tablets as representing Noah and his family; and others who do not believe in their genuineness have maintained that these tablets were planted by Mormons. The author of this book is not responsible for these coincidences, for he seems to be sincere and no doubt believes what he has written; at least there is an air of candor about the book which would lead one to that conclusion; still there is a lack of discriminating and critical judgment that might result in self-deception. Wyrick a number of years ago exhumed a stone from a mound in Ohio, covered with Hebrew letters. Archaeologists have universally pronounced the stone a fraud. The author of this book considers it genuine. He says the science of archaeology is not complete without this "keystone." Wyrick builded better than he knew. The author says also that "the flood legend is sculptured on the great calendar stone in the City of Mexico," and quotes Delafield and Kingsborough to show the similarity between the bible stories and ancient Mexican picture writing. He also quotes Brasseur de Bourbourg, Ignatius Donnelly, Rafinesque and Dr. Le Plongeon, who says "the Maya is not devoid of words from the Assyrian." Rudolph Falb, a German professor, says that the Aymara language, spoken by eight villages in Peru, bears near affinity to the Semitic tongue. A chapter is given to the wanderings of the lost tribes. He says we are compelled to try to trace the covenant race through all its vicissitudes to see what shall befall them in the latter day. He speaks in another chapter of a chart of the wanderings of the Aztecs, furnished by Delafield, and refers to a kneeling figure in the chart with tears rolling from his eyes, and says this proves that the leader was guided by inspiration, the old world imagery, the leaning mountain, the tree of knowledge, etc., the cross and the pyramid he recognizes in America. These are the conclusions of the book, filling up six chapters, from the twelfth to the eighteenth. In all the previous chapters the author is gradually approaching the subject, and he does so in a very adroit manner, as will be seen by the table of contents, which is as follows: First, origin of all things; second, world's history; next, the cradle land, the winter of the world, which means the glacial era; the deluge tablets, Ararat, Babel, Beni Noah, the Noachidae in America. In some things the author has taken the scientific view, as for instance, when he says that the tower of Babel was built for worship, was a reproduction of the mystical mountain of the assembly of the stars, the Hormandz of the Isaiah. He quotes also the opinion of learned writers and says the weightier part of the world of learning is in favor of Pamir's high plain, Central Asia, as the only starting place of the nations; but he quotes Prof. Valentini to show the similarity of the names of five cities of Ararat to five names of ancient places in Mexico. He says: "If the traditions of the flood, had all been obliterated a nearly full account could have been made up from American sources." He maintains that Melchizedec had the true faith, but he quotes Lenormant as holding the opinion that man existed in the miocene age, not as a savage, but as a gifted being, and that the savagery of later races was the result of a divine curse. It is plain that the author's views of the legend have given a tinge to his views, and that he wears blue spectacles in all his wanderings through the fields of science. There is a lesson in all this. In the first place, those who think they know all about science and are sure that it confirms the preconceived view will be surprised when they look at this travesty; but those who think, on the other hand, that Mormonism is nothing but a system of willful imposture will find out the various ways by which certain persons may deceive themselves."

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Let me find in thy employ,
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good Seem my natural habitude."

"FEED ME WITH FOOD CONVENIENT FOR ME."

REMOVE far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me. Prov. 30: 8.

We have long since been impressed with the fact, that the food which would be just what was required by one and which would be soul-satisfying and welcome to that one as the manna which fell from heaven, would not be so acceptable to another, neither satisfying to his soul. In addition to this we have for years past been impressed with the thought that very shortly the Lord would move upon his servants by the power of his Holy Spirit, when they as the prophet declared of Christ, "Should stand and feed in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God." Were it in our power to put into words the feast of fat things enjoyed by the Saints in Lamoni yesterday, we believe that not one who would read but would realize that God is even now arming his servants with the sword of his Spirit, and moving them to the lifting up of his colors, "Fair as the moon, clear as the sun and terrible as an army with banners." And more than this, we believe that it would be food soul-satisfying to every follower of Christ, seeking for the mastery over self and the reward declared to be for "Him that overcometh." We can not refrain from the desire of giving you a few of the crumbs, and though they will be indeed few and scattering, yet if they serve to encourage one lonely or discouraged one—one who all alone in the midst of weariness and pain, surrounded by discouragements and difficulties seemingly mountain high, still holds bravely on having their faces set Zionward and a firm grasp upon the rod of iron, we shall feel amply rewarded and we are sure Bro. Luff will forgive the mutilated form in which they appear. Indeed we know that he will, for it is the earnest love of, the sublime reverence for God and his laws that, added to the zeal which can not be simulated, made the utterances of his lips marvelous in their sublime earnestness, and soul-searching depth of thought.

Bro. Luff read for his first lesson the parable of our Savior found in Luke 13:6-9: "A certain husbandman had a fig tree planted in his vineyard. He came and sought fruit thereon and found none. Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree and find none. Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? And he, answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it and dung it. And if it bear fruit the tree is saved and if not, after that thou shalt cut it down. * * *

Giving our attention to the construction of this parable in order that we may grasp the grand truth underlying it, we find that in the vineyard, a piece of ground which had evidently been set apart and prepared for the purpose of growing trees, which should yield fruit, and not carelessly by the way side, this tree had been planted, and as a consequence of the care and labor bestowed upon it with the sole purpose in view that it should ultimately bear fruit, the Lord of the vineyard came seeking it, that in the fruit he should receive the reward for time and money bestowed upon the tree. Not discouraged the first year, he came again the second year with a like object in view, that he might find the fruit this fig tree ought to bear, but again he went away disappointed not having found any, and now for the third time is disappointed in finding that which he seeks. This time, unlike former ones, he does not go away silently, but calling the dresser of his vineyard to him, he expresses his disappointment in these words: "Behold these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree and find none." I have a right to expect that it should bear fruit. The husbandman has planted it here. It is no chance sowing of a seed by the way side or the planting of one unskilled in such labor, it is the work of the husbandman. Three years now have passed since it should have borne fruit, but though I have each year sought for the fruit in its season, I have found none; therefore, "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?" This ground is valuable, and were it not occupied by this useless tree there would be room to plant another in its place which would bear fruit in return for our care, and we should be rewarded for our labors. Then is heard the pleading of the vinedresser, "Lord, let it alone this year also." I have expended much labor upon it, but this year I will even bestow more care than formerly, and if it bear fruit, the tree is saved, but if not, "after that thou shalt cut it down." The evident intention of this parable is to represent the church or kingdom of God under the similitude of a vineyard, and if there be a lesson to be drawn from it we fail to discover it if it be not that in God's church there is no room for the individual who does not bring forth fruit. There is no room in the kingdom for a lazy man or woman. We would draw a line of distinction between the gifts of the Spirit and the fruit of the Spirit, and if seeking for the fruits of the Spirit where the gifts have been given, we find none, we should say they had failed of the object for which they were given if they had not aided in the perfecting the character or in other words preparing the individual to bring forth the fruits of righteousness, "peace, joy, long suffering, faith patience," and all those God-like attributes against which there is no law.

Much is said of the sufferings and death of Christ—the atoning blood shed upon Calvary, but the grandest part of the mission of Christ to me, is the life which prepared him for this closing scene—the death on the cross. Separate the death of Christ from the perfect life which fitted him for that death, and it is robbed of its divinity, its God-like power, and placed upon a level with the death of other men. Unto man it is appointed once to die, and while Christ died to save man, he also lived to save him. He came to earth that in his life might be demonstrated that unto which it is possible man should attain, and having taken upon himself not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham, through suffering he was made perfect, and has thus demonstrated to every son and daughter of Adam that which it is possible for them to attain unto. "Every plant," said Jesus, "which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." The servant of God is the grandest representation of spiritual forces to be found in God's creation. It was the promise of Christ that the Spirit should lead and guide into all truth, and the man or woman in possession of this Spirit, has but to follow carefully and prayerfully its leadings and this promise will be verified to the letter. Let one thought however be firmly fixed in your mind, that the work of the Holy Spirit is in perfect harmony with the grand object of Christ's life, which was and is to elevate man to the divine standard. Truth, like God its Author, is immutable, unchangeable, and standing upon this platform God reaches down to draw us up to him. The gospel is sent forth to fit and prepare men for occupying this divine platform where alone God can be found. The Infinite, Eternal Jehovah, whose course is one eternal round, has never proposed to reconcile himself to man. God is not the transgressor—not the alien, but, "He so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have everlasting life." Do you believe in him? Do you believe that when he said, "It shall guide you into all truth," he really meant it? Do you believe that when he said, "Lo, I am with you always," he meant it? Those who have followed the leadings of the Spirit of truth—the Spirit which leads up to the high platform where God stands to meet them, know of this truth, but he who has deceived himself in the vain belief that God will meet him upon his own low platform, will find himself groping in vain amid the darkness of his own vain imaginations, for God will never be found of him until he looks for him where the gospel, where the life of the Son and where the leadings of the Holy Spirit all join together to point out his holy dwelling place.

Man finds himself the possessor of an intellectual, a moral and a physical nature, and God demands of him the perfect development of these in order that the tabernacle become a fit dwelling place for the Guide he has promised to give. Exertion upon our part is demanded and God will never supplant the natural forces he has endowed us with, until we come to the limit of those forces. Resist the devil and he will flee from you! God is pledged to your deliverance from evil when you have exerted every power within you, even if this deliverance must then come by the hand of an angel, it will come; but the deliverance will not come until it is needed, and, mark you, in God's economy this is never until our own resources are exhausted. Every faculty with which God has endowed man, whether that faculty be in the physical, spiritual, or intellectual realm of his being, is made subject to this one grand law. It is strengthened and improved by use, weakened and finally destroyed by abuse or neglect. We can not escape it, for though we take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, he is there, and with him is his law, in which is found neither variability nor shadow of turning. God demands of us to improve to the utmost both intellectually and spiritually. If led by the Spirit, the fruits of it will appear in our lives, and if led towards God, as his Spirit will lead us and in no other way, then will the intellect also expand, for God is the source of all light and intelligence, for the fruitful trees is worthy of the husbandman's care, but the unfruitful tree is not worthy to occupy room in the vineyard. In the light of past experience let each one examine himself to-day and see what advancement the years have developed. Are you a duplicate to day of what you were two, five or ten years ago. Are your aspirations no higher, your faults no less, your virtues no more prominent? If so, what advancement are you making in spiritual life, and what answer can you give to God for this spiritual stagnation? Better answer to your own conscience now than when life and its golden opportunities shall have slipped through your grasp, and you be called upon to answer to God who gave you this life for a purpose, and in the life of his Son manifested that this purpose was possible of accomplishment.

RICHLAND, D. T., March 13th.

Dear Sisters:—You who like myself are far from those of like precious faith, to you I would say a word of like encouragement. Don't feel that your lot is hard and you are unworthy of a place among God's chosen people. It seems necessary we should be scattered abroad, in order that the elders may have homes while carrying the restored gospel to the honest in heart.

I have stood alone in the church nine years, and have declared to my neighbors and friends the doctrine the Saints teach is the doctrine of Christ. Time after time we have invited the elders here to speak to the people and explain the law of God as we understand it, and they have made it so plain a little child could understand. Many have expressed their belief in the explanation, but why they don't obey, God only knows.

A great amount of error has been preached to this people; darkness is thick; their minds have been prejudiced against our people by the clergy, but thanks be to God darkness must flee before the sun of righteousness. Dear sisters, stand firm in the faith, wait on the Lord; his work is slow but sure. Remember he has said that his word shall prevail. Be kind to all, especially the erring ones. By and bye we shall be gathered home and the reward is only for those who continue faithful. When I first heard of the laying on of hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost explained as an ordinance in Christ's Church, I went to God for wisdom. I asked for a knowledge of his word, it did not concern me where it originated. I found it taught in God's word, and why was it not necessary, was my anxious thought. "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God," was for me, I was as ignorant as a little child of what was transpiring or had transpired in the church of the Saints. Joseph Smith's errors had never crossed my path; neither the good deeds he had done; but the coming forth of the Book of Mormon was a mystery to me, and in all the sincerity of my soul I plead with God for a knowledge that I be not deceived. And many times while on my knees, my prayer would be answered in such a forceful power, I could not ask again concerning that matter. I love the work; it removes such burdens that otherwise would be so hard to bear: lifts our feet from the miry clay, and even when sorrow comes to our homes, we can be rejoicing because we know Jesus is near. Since I obeyed the form of doctrine taught by Jesus, I have investigated the teachings of Joseph Smith, and must say I have failed to find in any of his books or works the evils he is charged with by the clergy; and honest hearts will not condemn without positive proof.

Brother Wight, an excellent young man, came in November and spoke near thirty times; he was so kind and friendly in his manner every one seemed to feel a pleasure in meeting him; his words seemed to be sent with a force to the minds of the people. I hope the conference will remember us in south-east Dakota.

I have four young men in my family. I have long prayed the day may come when they can see obedience to the law of God is as necessary as obedience to the law of our land. All who read these lines, let your hearts breathe a prayer for the good, honest hearts in Richland, that they may be gathered into the kingdom.

LILLY J. SMITH.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, Mar. 11th.

Dear Sister Frances:—This is Sabbath morning, and as I sit and look out upon the great face of nature, my heart is full of praise to Him whose creature I am. We have no church privileges here, there being no branch nearer than eight miles. I rejoice that the privilege of enjoying God's peace and grace is not confined to exercising oneself in public worship. I would that I had the ability to express to you this morning the grand, elevating thoughts that come to my mind. I see so much beauty in the service of God, and so much to encourage, that I long to impart it to others, that perhaps some poor, burdened heart may take courage. I never seemed so fully to realize before that if we work and faint not our reward is sure. Yes, let us do faithfully and well the duty before us, not allowing the thought that if we can not break away from the plain every day duties of life that must be daily performed we are not doing God's will. He has not called us all to go outside of the family circle to do something we can not do; nay, but the majority of the mothers in Zion are called to perform a most responsible duty inside the home circle. We have the training of minds whom God may in his own time, call out to do an especial work for him. Yes, many of our sons may be chosen servants to carry the message of life to their fellow men, our daughters to have the same care and responsibility we now have. Then truly our duties are great, and much depends on the manner we discharge them. If we go fretting through the world, never seeming to manifest any of the fruits of our great profession, think you our children will have been benefitted by it? And will we not as parents come under condemnation? It seems to me we will. I feel that in the past I have greatly erred in this regard; but have fully resolved, God being my helper, to try and avoid the same mistake in the future.

I am fully persuaded if we will seek earnestly to know our duty, and be content in the performance of the same, we will find our heavenly Father fitting us for our every task. I realize we live in an age when there are many forms of fashion, which if we yield to will unfit us for our God-appointed mission in life. We as Latter Day Saint mothers are called upon to use our judgment, to be wise, and not to follow all the fashions of the age. I desire to do the will of my Father in heaven, let the world do as they may.

I have been made to sensibly feel that the coming in contact with fashionable people intimidated me, and then the next thing would be conforming to their way of doing and thinking. This I think a grave mistake too. We should seek to emulate our blessed Master's example, whether we be found fashionable or not. I think the admonition of Paul applicable to us under all circumstances in life, "Prove all things and hold fast that which is good." And as I write these thoughts I fully understand it is easy to give advice; yes, it is also easy to sit in church and listen to an elder preach the wonderful words of light, and it is quite another thing to be found doing these things in our every-day life; but does this make the importance of doing them any less? Did not the poor, disobedient Jew suffer for his disobedience? And do we find any scripture to sustain the belief that a mere profession, or going to church, will save us? The scripture says, "By our works we are to be judged." I think today is the golden opportunity; yea, to-day, let us make a greater effort to honor the cause we love. Let us first look at our homes and see if we are failing in any of the responsible duties imposed in this divine organization. Let us begin aright, and I feel assured God will be on our side, and then we can rejoice in the saying in holy writ, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Yours in hope of final triumph,

MRS. GEO. S. HYDE.

WHAT CHEER, Iowa, Mar. 16th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—In the Mothers' Home Column in Herald of March 17th, is found a letter from Sr. Catherine Salisbury, in which she criticizes some of the ministry, especially the writer, (mentioning his name), because they had failed to pay her a visit. I did say in the Herald that I intended to call on her on my way west. But the traveling ministry are governed by circumstances, and can not always do just as they would like to. She seems to think if she had sent me money I would not have passed her by, also that many of the Elders, including myself, will only visit those Saints who are situated on railway lines. The last time the writer visited Fountain Green he walked from Bushnell to Colchester and carried his satchel on his back a distance of twenty miles. He is able and willing to do so again, no preventing providence. The writer not only passed Fountain Green, but Plano, Kewanee and Canton, which places are on the railway.

While in Illinois our little girl was taken very sick; so poorly was she that at one time her recovery was doubtful, and we deemed it expedient to hasten to my mother's who resides at Bevier, Missouri. From there I expected to take a tour through eastern Iowa and to Fountain Green, but on the third day after our arrival there our little boy was taken with membranous croup. My aged mother was severely afflicted, and for five weeks the writer did not experience a whole night's sleep. I made arrangements to attend the conference at Farmington on 3d and 4th of March, but could not reach there on account of the inauguration of the Burlington strike, hence took the Wabash railroad for this place. There has been a great deal written in the Herald of late with regard to elders traveling so extensively by rail. One of the great arguments is that the first elders walked from place to place. It should be remembered that they had not the railway facilities of to-day. The writer travels on second class and half-fare rates most of the time, and oft times sits up all night in the depots because he has not money to pay for a bed, has gone from one to three days without being able to purchase one square meal, has walked five to forty miles in one day to fill his appointments, and he knows of others who have done the same. I think the best policy is to leave the ministry and their acts to those whose duty it is to look after such matters.

The mayor of this city has acted the part of a gentleman. He has given us the use of the City Hall free of charge. Had the pleasure of baptizing three persons here this week, all heads of families. There are several others who are investigating. Bro. N. Miller is president of this branch, and he is ably assisted by Brn. Evan Jones and Parley Batten, both of whom are promising young men. All the Saints are feeling good spiritually. Yours truly,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

NEW PROVIDENCE, Ind., March 15th.

Bro. Blair:—I have just returned home from a tour east. We found the Saints at New Trenton, Indiana, in the faith. Saturday evening, the 25th of February, we commenced a series of meetings and continued until March 7th, delivering twelve discourses to interested congregations. There has been no missionary there since Bro. T. W. Smith's visit. The outlook there was never better than at present. I had splendid liberty in preaching the gospel. Some said that if they did not believe what I taught, they would have to do away with the Bible. They wished me Godspeed. Bro. James R. Chappelow assisted me. On Sunday, the 4th, we partook of the Lord's supper. All engaged heartily and expressed determination to go ahead. We were blest with the Spirit, and the Saints were encouraged. We tender thanks to the Saints of the New Trenton branch for their kindness. March 8th we left for the Union branch to attend the quarterly conference. We had a good conference. We hope the Saints will contribute to the agent and send their means promptly.

JAMES M. SCOTT, AGENT.

UNION, NEB., March 15th.

Dear Herald:—When we last wrote you we were about to unfurl the gospel banner in the town of Bennett. Since then we have preached fifteen discourses at that place, the result of which is, a great interest has been awakened, and quite a number of souls are trying to solve the question as to the advisability of casting their lot with us. We are anxiously awaiting the result, and have good reason to believe that the seed sown has, some of it at least, fallen on good ground, and that it will produce a harvest of good fruit. We expect to return to that place soon.

Two days ago, in company with Bro. Levi Anthony and J. W. Waldsmith, we came to this place on a mission assigned us by the last conference held in this district. We held a meeting with the Moroni branch yesterday in which the gifts of the Spirit were manifested in a goodly degree; and we feel that the future of this branch depends largely upon the efforts of the members, and we earnestly hope that the admonition of the Spirit will be heeded and that they will not "return to their former works," but will "remember their covenant made at the waters of baptism," that they may receive the fulness of the promise given unto them by the Spirit.

Wherever we turn we find the necessity for assiduous, faithful laborers in the Master's vineyard. Let us pray the Master that he send more laborers into the vineyard; and while we pray do not let us neglect to work.

CHARLES H. PORTER.

DELOIT, Iowa, March 12th.

Bro. Blair:—We are still alive in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Our quarterly conference at Dow City, February 24th, was a success. The good Spirit was present to cheer and gladden us. Bro. W. E. Peak has been preaching for us recently. At one of our prayer and testimony meetings, of late, the following hymn was sung in unknown tongues by my mother, Margaret Hunt, and the interpretation was sung by her before taking seat:

Ye Saints, be faithful and true,
And unto Jesus cling.
The time is hastening fast
When earth will be redeemed.
The wails and the moans
Are heard here and there.—
The things that are transpiring
On earth and in the air.
Be ready, O, be ready
When your Savior doth call
And say, "Come ye faithful, Receive your reward."

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Mar. 19th.

Bro. Blair:—I arrived home last night. While at Rich Hill I preached forty-five sermons, baptized nine, making thirty-five members ready to be organized into a branch. I got the record book ready and all items, names, etc., recorded, with two reports all filled out, one to be sent to the Recorder to be entered on his annual message to General Conference, the other to go to our quarterly conference. I should have organized a branch, but the district conference ordered their president to see to that, and so I did not interfere. I labored hard to make ready for organizing a branch in that place, and can only say to the president, "Come; for all things are now ready." I was directed to go from Rich Hill to Knob Noster. I arrived there Tuesday in time for our noble brother, J. H. Wells, to get the Christian Church for service. About one hundred people were present. At the close of the meeting I invited any one believing the gospel to make covenant with God, and obey his commands. Two young men were then ready, and the next day I baptized three. They had been trained up in our faith by hearing Brn. Joseph Luff, F. C. Warnky, I. N. White and J. H. Wells.

Doctors and lawyers attended my meetings, also ministers of other churches. Some I saw took notes. At the close of one meeting a doctor, an old man, said to me that the sermon came the nearest making God a God of justice that he ever heard before. J. H. Knaus, a lawyer, who has the latter day work at heart, is doing much to allay prejudice. And when he looks at a person his sharp, keen looking eyes seems to see a man as he is from boots to hat. I am glad that God is working upon the hearts of such men of brains and noble spirit to help push this work ahead. He expects to attend our General Conference. Bro. Wells is doing a fair business in his store, and has lots of friends, and they are among the chief of the city. His noble family are doing nicely. One of those I baptized was his son, Layen. I will hold meetings in Kansas City a week, commencing the 20th.

SHEFFIELD, England, March 5th.

The question with some has been, What is my work? Where is my place in the Church of God? As elders, priests, teachers and deacons, we all have a work to perform that others may be benefitted. The commandment of the Lord is, "Let every man learn his duty." We must learn this from the books of the church. We must learn from the officers likewise. We must also learn from the Holy Spirit. We must seek learning by faith and by study. Some officers seem to think that, because they are not speaking they are not doing their duty. But this is a mistake. Some of us came into the church with barren minds that have been tossed to and fro by the creeds of men. Therefore we must have them corrected and cultivated by the undefiled doctrines of Christ. Dear brethren, there is a time when speech is like silver, and silence as apples of gold in pictures of silver, yet I may say with the Master, "Wisdom is justified unto her children. Let us have patience, and it will work experience, and experience hope. We need that hope which maketh not ashamed. He that reaches the truths of the gospel in his experience is capable of declaring them as doctrine. We should go to the house of prayer with a watchful eye, with an ear to hear, and a hand to help. So shall we do a good work for our Lord, and he will call us to our field, and our peace will flow like a river. A neglect of important duties will bring sorrow upon the children of Zion and cause them to be cast away and have no claim upon the promises. When Zion is built up, it will not be by idle hands, but by diligent hearts and hands. "The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land," saith the Lord to the prophet. Let us heed the word of the Lord that liveth and abideth forever.

HENRY HOOLE.

TABOR, Iowa, Feb. 12th.

Brother Blair:—Our conference February 24th and 25th was pretty well attended considering the bad roads. Bro. J. R. Lambert did the preaching Saturday night and Sunday. He remained the following week and over the next Sunday, and did some good, solid work, preaching to both Saint and sinner. Some were deeply interested and satisfied, and thought Bro. Lambert made an able defense of our position as a church. Thankful for the help received, we would have been glad if Bro. Lambert's health would have permitted him to visit Plum Hollow, where Elder John McClure of the Christian Church attacked the life and character of Joseph Smith the Seer; also some of the revelations and the Book of Mormon. I understand from others, that he stooped below the dignity of a man, and made a special effort to malign the character of Joseph Smith and others of his day. But the caricatures he used were of such a monstrous nature that only a few of his own kind would swallow them. Bro. William Leeka was present and obtained permission and replied ably in his usual pleasant but logical manner. His words had weight with the intelligent among the audience, and this turned the scale considerably in our favor. He told them we would represent ourselves and our doctrine in the near future. The Rev. gentleman is a little wrathful in consequence of the reply of Bro. Luff to a lecture on the spiritual gifts last summer, delivered by one of their elders, Rev. Smith. We have lost no prestige. Many are looking forward with pleasant anticipations to our Camp Meeting, and some intend to unite with us at that time. We have done the best we could during the past winter; have lost no time; have been greatly blessed in preaching the word; have appointments ahead at the Ross and Dutch Hollow School-houses for next Sabbath and the following week.

Yours,

HENRY KEMP.

BARNARD, Mo. March 19th.

Bro. Blair:—I went, February 10th, in company with Bro. Stebbins, to Allendale, Missouri, where I spent a few days and enjoyed the society of the Saints. The work has revived, and there are fair prospects for much additions by baptism. I went from there to Sweet Home and found brethren holding meetings and having good interest. I then attended district conference, near Long Branch. Brother Thomas joined me at Guilford, where we held meetings, and five were added by baptism. We felt blest in speaking to the Saints and friends. Bro. Woodhead obtained the Christian Church here at Barnard, and we held some meetings. When we closed, one of the trustees told me we could have the house whenever we wanted it. We found a good home at Bro. and Sr. Keen's. To the Saints in this district I would say, Take courage and press on to victory. The light is bursting through and God will never forsake his people if they do their part. The Saints have administered unto us according to our wants. We have had snow, rain and mud, yet have lost but little time. Will try and go to Eureka, and thence to General Conference. The work is onward. The field seems ready for the harvest.

A. J. MOORE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Mar. 12th.

Bro. Blair:—We have had the pleasure of having Bro. Joseph Smith spend a few weeks with us and had the honor of sheltering him beneath our humble roof while he remained here, which was a great source of happiness to me and mine. We enjoyed his visit very much indeed, and many pleasant hours were spent in listening to his words of wisdom and instruction. We laughed with him in mirthful moods, and grieved with him while considering the sorrows that have come upon the children of Zion, and together we thanked our heavenly Father for His loving kindness, and that he had put forth His hand the second time to gather Israel. We are proud of the goodness and wisdom of our beloved president. He makes friends for himself and the cause wherever he goes, and is winning souls for Christ. With him we enjoyed the Spirit which imparts wisdom where it was needed, and restored the sick to health. Acts of kindness followed in his footsteps while he was here, and many prayers of thankfulness have ascended on account of his care and thoughtfulness. In his public labors he was much blessed with the Spirit and drew large and interested congregations.

Many of those who heard him will never forget his teachings, though to some they were new, and to others it was the old story told over again and had the right ring. He spoke for us a number of times, and his words were never wasted, never returned to him empty, but always found place in the hearts of his hearers. It is gratifying to us to know that he enjoyed the Spirit while here, that his time was pleasantly spent while in our city, and that the Spirit which we enjoy is in harmony with that enjoyed by him. We regret that he was compelled to leave us so soon, and hope that he may return to us again. Our branch is in good condition spiritually and financially, and we are working for the spread of the truth.

GEO. S. LINCOLN.

PEORIA, Texas, Mar. 12th.

Dear Herald:—I believe the Spirit tells me to give my testimony to this great, grand work. I can't tell why, for I have no education, and therefore can't tell just right all I want to.

I have been in this church only a short while, but have been a believer a year or more. When I first believed, I thought it made no difference whether I was baptized in the church or not, as I believed it. And when Bro. Roberts came to Peoria and was mobbed, I then had a chance to be baptized, yet did not think it essential. But after he left I felt bad, not knowing whether I had done right or not. I tried to console myself that if I believed I was all right, for I had repented of my sins and believed in the gospel once delivered to the Saints and felt I was a little better than most people around me who did not believe. After going to bed one night, trying to banish doubts from my mind, I saw a personage standing near by. His first words were, "If you are ever so good, and do all that God requires except in one point, yet for that sin you can be lost." He then repeated what the man had done whom, Christ told to go and sell all he had and give to the poor, and he said he had kept all the commandments but one. He then told me my own mother was tormented in the prison. But I did not believe him, for she told me on her death bed she was going home, and for me to meet her there. Then he said, "It is not all who think they are saved that are saved; but you shall see." And in one minute it seemed I was standing before my mother, and oh! how can I tell you the remorse and suffering I saw pictured in her countenance. She did not even seem glad to see me, whom she had not seen for twenty-five years. No open arms; no glad smile to greet me. I asked her some questions which she answered; but she was too busily engrossed, watching for something, to answer them satisfactorily. I asked her what she was watching for, and a girl that was with her told me she was watching for Christ to come. "Why," I asked, "does he come here?" I knew my mother was a prisoner. I had often, in hours of trouble, thought that her angel face was bending over me. Now all those hopes fell when I saw that face clouded. Awaking I began to think what that dream or vision meant. Why did God show me these things? I told my father, T. W. Sherrill, and my husband all about it the next morning; but they gave me no comfort. But pa, after he saw me so distressed about it, told me it might be that I had to be baptized for mother, and said he believed such doctrine was taught. Others told me the same thing. But I could not and did not believe it. I went to my heavenly Father and asked him if it was possible for me to do so for my mother and take her out of that awful prison. After long and earnest prayer these words came to me, "Have you saved your own soul? Save your soul. Keep the ordinances." Then I asked, "What will become of mother?" Then the answer came, "O ye prisoners of hope; I will have mercy upon you, even an everlasting mercy, saith the Lord." Then I remembered how anxiously she was watching for Jesus to come.

I expect yet to see her happy smile and hear her voice in praising God. But oh, how long she has been there, without even a child to cheer her! I thank God that I have at last been taught to obey his commands, though by the hard lesson I had to learn.

I was baptized in December last by Bro. E. W. Nunley. Others at this place are believing. I think Bro. Nunley will yet do a glorious work here, and hope it won't be long until we have a branch.

If this lesson of mine comes to the notice of others that are as I was, I hope it will teach them that all must obey the principles of the gospel, and the other lesson, that those poor despairing souls in the prison are expecting Christ every moment. If he was not coming soon, would they be looking, watching and waiting as they are?

Your sister in Christ,

MATTIE FIELDS.

ATTLEBORO, Mass., March 10th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—The work in this place is taking a more decided stand and finding favor with the people as the Lord has promised the church. Recently we have been blessed with the earnest and noble efforts of Elders E. C. Briggs, M. H. Bond, John Smith, Frank M. Sheehy, Thomas Whiting, A. N. Hoxie and E. N. Webster. Bro. A. N. Hoxie baptized one here last Sunday, the head of a family, and the eldest son of Bro. John Robbins of this place. I trust through his faithfulness he may be of good service to the church.

Sunday evening, about two weeks since, two ladies of the W. C. T. U. came to our place of meeting to see if we were Utah Mormons. I told them, among other statements, that I thought they had not been reading the newspapers.

These kind ladies expressed fear that we would take some of the "good people" of Attleboro out to Utah. I have no fear of the really good people going to such an undesirable section of this continent, and if the professedly good ones will come into our place of worship, we will teach them better.

I am on quite favorable terms with the editors in this vicinity and had a brief article in the Chronicle at North Attleboro last Tuesday.

Mr. Thomas Shallcross has kindly offered to take charge of the music department and our meetings will be of greater interest to ourselves as well as others. I find on reading over the last revelation given to the church that the 6th paragraph says: "Therefore in all the congregations of the people of God, let all strife and contention concerning song service cease; and that the worship in the house of the Lord may be complete and wholly acceptable, let them who shall be moved thereto by a desire and the gift to sing take upon them the burden and care of the service. Brethren Marchington and Robbins are among my other helpers in spiritual and temporal matters.

Mrs. Shallcross, one of God's noble women, talks this gospel to her friends and neighbors, and thus we are all trying to co-operate in this great work of the last dispensation. There are others that I expect will be baptized when the spring fairly opens.

The eldership in passing through this place are invited to stop and be entertained and give us words of encouragement.

In gospel bonds,

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

GIFT OF THE SPIRIT TO CORNELIUS AND HIS HOUSEHOLD.

IT seems from the reading of the history of that transaction, that a wonderful prejudice existed in the minds of all Jews against the Gentiles, so much so that they thought the Gentiles were not eligible to salvation. They might have thought that the Savior's remarks to the woman of Samaria established them in their belief—"Salvation is of the Jews."—John chapter 4. The Lord knowing of this deep-seated prejudice, had to prepare Peter's mind, by a heavenly vision, to go and administer the gospel to that Gentile household. He was told to not call that common which God had cleansed. Some of his Jewish traditions were uppermost in his mind when he answered the Lord that "nothing common or unclean had at any time entered" his mouth. The Lord bade him go with the three men sent to him from Cornelius. But after all this, he seemed not fully satisfied until he heard Cornelius narrate the story of the angel's visit. Then he says: "Of a truth I perceive, that God is no respecter of persons. But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."—Acts chapter 10.

The men who went with Peter (his Jewish brethren) were not convinced till they saw the manifestations of the Spirit upon those Gentiles. The word says they "were astonished" at the reception of it by the Gentiles. Peter, upon seeing that their prejudice was fast passing away, says: "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized which have received the gift of the Holy Ghost as well as we?"

We have heard of many in these latter days who have testified that when they first heard the word, the Spirit came upon them with power to the convincing them of its truth, and of the necessity of obedience to it. Some have testified to receiving heavenly visions concerning the work, before they were baptized, showing the reception of the Spirit, to a certain extent, as did Cornelius. The case of Cornelius and his household was no greater manifestation than Paul received when he was struck blind on his way to Damascus, at the time that he saw that heavenly vision and heard the voice of the Lord. And surely any biblical student will not say that it was not a manifestation of the Holy Ghost, for the Spirit is the power by which any one receives heavenly visions.

It was so with Christ; it was so with John on Patmos; it was so with Daniel, etc., etc. To the writer's mind, Paul's was a greater manifestation than the gift of tongues to that Gentile household. But the gift of tongues was an outward manifestation that Peter and his Jewish brethren could witness, and could not gainsay; and they could then bear witness to their brethren and thus exonerate Peter and themselves from the charge of eating with the "uncircumcised." Paul received his manifestation before he was baptized, the same as Cornelius did his, and all the difference in the two cases in receiving the word, was that Paul was sent by the Lord to the city, and told that it should be told him there what he should do, the Lord sending Ananias to tell him; while Cornelius was told by the angel (the Lord's ministering spirit) to send to another city for a servant of the Lord who should tell him what he should do, and the Spirit bade that servant go with the men sent for him. Both had to "hear the word of the Lord," and obey it, the word that Ananias and Peter preached and told them to do. Both had in that day, (as well as those in this day who receive manifestations of the Spirit convincing them of the truth of the work before they are baptized) to obey the gospel before they could receive the Holy Ghost as the Savior said his disciples should receive it, viz: "To abide with them forever."—John chap. 14.

If Cornelius or Paul had refused to do what those servants of God told them to do, or if any other, in whatever age of the world, who ever received the manifestations of the Spirit before obeying, should refuse to obey the word when convinced of it, the Spirit would leave them; it would not "abide" with them.

Would the Savior be so particular to tell Paul to go where he could hear what he should do; would he send the angel to tell Cornelius to send for a man who would tell him what to do, if there were any exceptions to the rule? The conditions of salvation established by the giver, must be obeyed to secure that salvation. What were these two men told to do? They were told to be baptized! Yes, to one it was said, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord;" while the others, Peter "commanded them to be baptized," and also said:—"Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized?"

Could it be possible that the Lord would send two men to tell others what they must do to be saved, and each one be authorized to tell a different story? It ought to be borne in mind that one man wrote the Acts of the Apostles, and that to be interpreted fairly, his writings must be taken as a whole. Its parts must harmonize with the whole. Taking detached sentences of Scripture and building theories on them has been the means of much confusion in the religious world.

Peter told those enquirers on the day of Pentecost, recorded in Acts, chapter two, to "repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." It was this same Peter who preached to the household of Cornelius. Could you, reader, reasonably expect that he would preach a different baptism to them than he did on the day of Pentecost? How many converts would he make, and how long would he stand accepted of man, much less of God, if he vacillates in that manner? Luke wrote the history of those two transactions, and he understood what he was writing about. He was writing to a brother in Christ, and did not need to particularize every time. But he specified at the commencement of his history that "three thousand souls" were baptized for the remission of sins; and he no doubt thought that men reading that account would naturally conclude that, if three thousand had to, twenty thousand, or twenty million would have to be baptized for the same purpose. He was also specific in Paul's case; and these ought to be sufficient for the candid reader to see that whenever Luke wrote about others being baptized, it was for the same purpose, "the remission of sins."

This author of the Acts wrote about the Philippian jailer and his household being baptized, but did not particularize. Will any one attempt to say that Paul, who was told to "be baptized and wash away" his sins, and was sent out to preach the same gospel that he received, would preach another baptism? Or that the historian who wrote about the three thousand being "baptized for the remission of sins" would intend to convey the idea that one man and his household would be exempt from it?

"But you harp upon baptism. Is that all we have to do?"

O, no, my friend, repentance is demanded before baptism, of those who have not repented of their sins.

"But to neither of these men was repentance preached."

No, it was not necessary. It would be tautology to tell a man to do that which there was abundant evidence he had already done. There is evidence in the history of Cornelius that he was living in obedience to God's commandments as far as he knew them, or he would never have prevailed with God and received the visit of a heavenly messenger. But he lacked some things which must be done before he could be acknowledged a child of God. God had an authorized ministry on earth who were qualified to tell him those things that "must be done." If he was keeping all the commandments of God that he knew, he had nothing to repent of; for says the apostle, "Sin is the transgression of the law." Peter by the Spirit of God perceived the situation of Cornelius, and therefore did not tell him to repent.

It was different here in this case to that of the three thousand aforementioned when they asked, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter had accused them thus: "Therefore, let the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ." Under this preaching and accusation, they were pricked in their hearts, and then came the question: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

Peter could not teach these enquirers, as though they were not believers, to believe first and then repent; for he could see by their actions that they believed in God, and in Christ whom he had been preaching, or they would not have cried out "Men and brethren what shall we do?" Seeing their condition, and knowing that they were sinners, yet believing in God, he said to them, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, [none excepted], in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

There is one thing worthy of remark here, that the apostles always preached Jesus. The fundamental idea was, that "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life;" and, "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved;" also "All power is given unto me, both in heaven and on earth." "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Another great reason was, that Christ was considered by the major portion of the Jewish nation to be an impostor, and that must certainly have had a great effect upon the Greeks and Romans, for "the preaching of the cross was to the Greeks foolishness, and to the Jews a stumbling block." The Roman emperors put to death by the wholesale, those who believed in Christ. It stood the apostles in hand to show that He was not an impostor, but that of a truth he was the veritable Messiah, the Savior of the world. For unless they could convince them of this, their labor would be in vain when seeking to procure the salvation of man. In agreement with this we find Peter preaching Christ on that feast day. Those Jews did not need to be told to believe in God; they had been taught that from their earliest recollection. But they did need to be taught to believe in Christ, for they had given consent to his crucifixion, and Peter seeing that they believed in the Father and the Son, told them the balance they had to do to be in a saved condition. Peter, from Cornelius' narrative, could not help but know that he believed in God, and hence he commenced to preach Christ to him as the veritable Savior of all men, and as soon as he heard the word he received it in his heart, and the Holy Ghost being given in the manner it was, convinced Peter that there was no necessity to tell him and those of his household to repent, for they had already done that. Besides this, Peter could see the fulfillment of his own vision; God had had a hand in it, and how could he, or any man, refuse water that these should not be baptized.

Paul, being a Jew, had been trained to believe in God; but he did not believe in Christ as is evident from his going about to persecute those who did believe in Him. The Lord, who doeth all things according to the purpose of his own will, appeared unto Paul on his way to Damascus, and upon enquiring who it was that was speaking to him, received the answer, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest."

"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" came tremblingly from his lips; and going (or being led, for he was blind) to the place appointed of the Lord, Ananias told him that the Lord Jesus, who had appeared to him on the way, had sent him (Ananias) to tell him what he should do. Here was corroborative proof that He who spake to him on the way was indeed Jesus Christ. This was all the needed preaching of Jesus in this case to confirm Paul in his belief that Jesus spoke to him and acknowledged those people as his own, whom he (Paul) was persecuting. He realized this, and saw that he had sinned against God and his Christ in persecuting them; and he knew that, to be in favor with God, he must cease to do so, breaking off from his sins, which is repentance. Hence we find him contrite of heart, for the Lord said to Ananias, "Behold he prayeth." Ananias, realizing this, knew that all that was necessary to tell Paul was, "And now why tarriest thou? [for through the blessing of God he had received his eyesight]; arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

This belief we have been discussing is simply the assent, or volition of the will, to the existence of God, and his Son, the Savior of the world, by those who first essay to come to God. But Paul states in Hebrews 11:6, that he that cometh to God must not only believe that he is, (exists), but must also believe that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. And in Acts 17:24-26, he says: "God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands. . . . And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if they are willing to find him, for he is not far from every one of us." We see by this language that it is also necessary to believe that God is the Creator of the world and all things therein; that he is Lord of heaven and earth; (that is, ruler and possessor of heaven and earth); that he also created all men, and of one blood, to dwell upon all the face of the earth, and set bounds to their habitations; and that the great purpose of man's creation is, "that they should seek the Lord, if they are willing to find him," and receive the reward of those who diligently seek him.

It is written, "Canst thou by searching find out God?"—Job 11:7. The inference is that man, by any plan of his own, can not find out God. This being true, to find God it must be by a way of His own appointing. If a man finds God he will know Him when he finds Him, else the search would be fruitless and futile. Jesus says in that memorable prayer in John, chapter 17, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." When do we enter upon this "eternal life" that we may know God? Let the Savoir answer: "Verily, verily, I say unto you: He that believeth on me hath everlasting life."—John 6:47. We perceive that we do not have to wait for a future state before we enter upon and begin life; but that it is attainable here. For when a man hath believed on Him sufficiently to have sought and found Him, then he hath eternal or everlasting life; then doth he begin to know God. We do not say that a man has attained to the full fruition of eternal life, or to the full knowledge of God, in this probationary state. But when man is "born of God," "born of the Spirit," he is only an infant in that life in the knowledge of God, and differs from the perfect state as much as a natural babe just born differs from the full developed man in stature or in knowledge. We do not presume this to be a parallel, but use it as an illustration. The child "born of God" enters into this life which is eternal, to grow in it "unto a perfect man" in Christ Jesus, and then receives the full fruition. We may freely use the terms "eternal life" and to "know God," interchangeably, since the Savior used them so. When do we find the Lord so as to begin to know him? When we receive "the gift of the Holy Ghost;" when we are "born of the Spirit," after the birth of water, which takes place after repentance, which repentance takes place after being convinced that we have broken the commands of God, and consequently have sinned against him, which implies, as Paul said, a belief that God is, and also that he is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. And having sought him in the way he has pointed out, we find him and begin to know him.

Paul says in 1 Cor. chapter 12: "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." This language implies that the man who positively affirms that Jesus is the Lord, does it from a knowledge he has received, and that that knowledge came to him through the agency of the Holy Spirit, and that no man can receive it in any other way. Jesus says: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things." What is a teacher? A revealer who imparts knowledge that the one being taught did not know. This great teacher was to reveal all things; and when that is done, how much more is there to reveal? Paul speaking on this subject in 1 Cor. chapter 2, says: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for those who love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." The thought is conveyed in this language that the Spirit of God searcheth all the things of God; yea, those that are deep, and reveals them unto His children; not to the natural man, for his eye hath not seen; his ear hath not heard; neither hath it entered into his heart concerning any of these things. No; the world can not receive this Comforter, for the "Author of eternal salvation" hath declared it.

Jesus, upon a certain time, enquired of his disciples: "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" They answered that some say one thing, some another. But putting the question direct, he said: "Who do ye say that I am?" Peter answering said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then Jesus said: "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." If Paul was correct, than Peter declared that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, by the Holy Ghost. And if Jesus was correct when he said (Matt. 11:28), "All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and they to whom the Son will reveal himself; they shall see the Father also." Then it must have been the Father's prerogative to reveal the Son, and through that "Comforter" whom Jesus said he would pray the Father to send, who should teach all things to those that serve him; for as Paul said, it "searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." This was one of the deep things of God that He deigned to make known to Peter by the Holy Ghost.

The objector may urge that Peter did not receive the knowledge through the Comforter, because it was in the future that Jesus said it should be sent. But, my dear reader, have you noticed the reading carefully? "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." You perceive, reader, that the disciples knew this Comforter, and that he dwelt with them, but the time that he should be in them to "abide" forever, was in the future.

If he dwelt with them, and they knew him, it certainly was for a purpose, and that purpose was to teach them the things necessary to accomplish that which Christ sent them to do; and therefore a knowledge that Christ was what He represented himself to be was essentially necessary to strengthen them to go forward declaring that he was the Christ, in opposition to the popular tide of unbelief. Jesus being represented in the Scriptures as the great master builder, said: "Upon this rock will I build my church." The church is represented by Peter as a spiritual building, composed of "lively stones." &c. Peter was only one stone in that building, and as the whole building is to rest upon the same rock, or foundation, all the stones of the building, or members of the church, must be built, or laid, or become members in the body of Christ, in the same manner as Peter, and rest upon the same foundation. Paul says in 1 Cor. chapter 12, "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." Then as Peter received a knowledge that Jesus was the Christ through the revealed will of the Father, (which revealed knowledge is the rock on which Christ said he would build his church, for he declares that he came from heaven to do the will of the Father) by the Holy Ghost, so must all receive the same knowledge in the same way. And they receive a knowledge of the Father also, for if the Spirit communicates to them that Christ is the Son of the living God, it communicates to them at the same time a knowledge that the living God is his Father. And this brings to mind other of the Savior's sayings: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." And, "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." If a man has the Father and the Son to make their abode with him, do you think, reader, that he won't know them? If he can not know them, what is the object in their taking up their abode with him? Does any one think that they would take up their abode with a person except that person was living, to some degree at least, that life which the Father and Son enjoys? We think not!

We have seen that all mankind are eligible to receive the Holy Ghost, and that it may abide with them. And if any man, the word says, has not this Spirit, he is none of Christ's. We have also seen that none are eligible to it who have not believed in God and Christ, repented of all their sins and been baptized in water for the remission of them; but that all who have, are entitled to receive it; for, "The promise is unto you, and unto your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." In another place the word says:—"God calleth on all men, everywhere, to repent;" so that none of Adam's posterity are exempt from the call, and all are required to fulfill the same conditions. God hath appointed an ordinance in his church through which the Holy Ghost is given to His children—to "abide" with them. Luke, in his history of the three thousand, in chapter two, failed to make mention of this ordinance; but he speaks of it in chapter eight, where it records that Philip had been preaching the word to the Samaritans, and had baptized some there:—"Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God; they sent unto them Peter and John; who when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost. For as yet he had fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." We learn according to this history, (1), That the Holy Ghost was not given till the ordinance of the laying on of hands had been observed; for it had not fallen upon any of those that had been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, until then. (2). That it was esteemed by the apostles which were at Jerusalem, to be of such importance to attend to this ordinance that they sent two of their number to administer it. Think you, reader, that there was an exception made here? And that there were others who received the abiding witness other than through this ordinance? Do you think that, because the writer omitted to give a full account of how those three thousand were added to the church, (not mentioning the "laying on of hands"), that therefore it was ignored? Do you think that if the apostles at Jerusalem had known of that number receiving the Holy Ghost without the observance of that ordinance they would have taken special pains to send two of their number to Samaria to perform that ordinance? How would they have known, without a special revelation from God, that those at Samaria were an exception to the general rule, and must receive the Holy Ghost differently than others? And if they had received such a revelation, we ought to have had an account of it by all means, (but we have not) in order that we might know who were excepted, and who were not, so that the excepted ones might avail themselves of the ordinance, and not be left without that good Spirit which, if a man does not have, he is not of the Lord.

Now Peter found out, and declared, at the house of Cornelius, that God was "no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." If God is no respecter of persons, all must receive the Holy Ghost on the same conditions. And the apostles knew this, or they would not have sent Peter and John to administer the ordinance to those Samaritans. The greatest test is, that God did not give the Holy Ghost until the ordinance was performed.

The conclusion is, therefore, if God, who is no respecter of persons, would not bestow upon the Samaritans the Holy Ghost when they had done all that the three thousand had done on that memorable day, then He would not bestow it on the three thousand except through the same ordinance that the Samaritans received.

The writer of the Acts of the Apostles mentions another instance of the administration of "the laying on of hands" for the gift of the Holy Ghost, as in chapter 19.

Paul came across certain persons who had been imposed upon, who thought they had been baptized with the baptism of John; but he undeceived them, and baptized them in the name of the Lord Jesus: "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." Here is positive proof of baptized persons not receiving the Holy Ghost until the ordinance of the laying on of hands was observed. Do you think, reader, that Paul would administer this for the reception of the Holy Ghost for others, if he had not received the gift in that manner and been authorized by the God of heaven to preach and practice it? Absurd! So we might reason of the apostles. Would they teach and practice that which themselves had not observed? and especially when the command of their Master was strict to "teach them [in all the world] to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always, unto the end of the world?" Under this strict charge, how could they expect him to be with them if he taught anything he had not commanded them? or left untaught anything that he had commanded them to teach?

After all that has been said we ask, with all deference to others' opinions, If Paul, who received before he was baptized a greater manifestation than did Cornelius and his household, could not receive the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, to "abide" with him, and who taught that all Saints are "baptized by that one Spirit" into the Church of Christ, and by his practice showed how, namely, by the laying on of hands, how could Cornelius and his household receive the Comforter to "abide" with them except through the same ordinance? If such was the case, we think Peter discovered that, in one way, the Lord was no respecter of persons, and that in another he was. It was necessary to uproot the prejudice in the minds of the Jewish brethren, and the Lord took his own way to do it, though out of the ordinary way to them who had imbibed such extreme prejudice against the Gentiles being eligible to salvation, but not out of the ordinary way to those who accepted the word of the Lord as follows: "And the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit cometh unto God, even the Father; and the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you for your sakes, and not for your sakes only, but for the sake of the whole world." Doc. Cov. 83: 7.

In keeping with this language we have heard men and women testify, and have read the testimonies of others in the Herald, to having received a knowledge of the truth as preached by the Latter Day Saints before they were baptized; some in one way and some in another; some by heavenly visions, some by angelic administration, and some by dreams. Thus those who gave heed to the voice of the Spirit were led to God. We heard a brother testify not many Sabbath's ago, that the Lord showed him, in heavenly vision, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and that the Spirit testified to their being true, and this before he was baptized and became a member of the church. But those so blessed of the Spirit would not have it as an abiding companion if they had not complied with the requirements of heaven, neither do we believe (the writer is responsible for this belief, not the church) that Cornelius and his household would if they had not submitted to the same gospel conditions. Why the necessity of their being baptized in water? O, it was the command of God! Is not the laying on of hands a commandment of God, as well? But God made an exception here, as he did in the case of Enoch and his city, and in the case of Elijah who did not die according to the general rule, but were translated.

"Are you sure that God made an exception so as to deprive any man or set of men from attaining to that privilege?" The only exception the writer can find in perusing the revealed word is, that all who have died have not come up to the conditions of being translated. What says the word concerning the children of Israel in the same section we have just quoted from, paragraphs three and four? "And this greater priesthood administereth the gospel, and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore in the ordinances thereof the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances, thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest to men in the flesh; for without this, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live. Now, this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God; but they hardened their hearts and could not endure his presence, therefore the Lord in his wrath (for his anger was kindled against them), swore that they should not enter into his rest, while in the wilderness, which rest is the fulness of his glory."

You perceive, dear reader, that according to this the children of Israel had a chance to enter into the "fulness of His glory" while in the wilderness; but they would not avail themselves of the privilege, but hardened their hearts against the teachings of Moses, who sought to bring about this, to him, desirable object, like unto Enoch with his city. But Moses had a more rebellious and stiff-necked people to deal with than did Enoch, and could not accomplish his desires, though one of the children of Israel, Elijah, attained to this condition afterward.

We rejoice sincerely in the thought that, so far as we have perused the word of God, it presents our heavenly Father as not a respecter of persons in any one instance, so far as the gospel and its rewards are concerned. The gospel is accessible to all; its rewards for obedience the same; and when a people arrive to the condition that they "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," the writer believes that they then are not far from perfection in this sphere, and ready to be translated to another and better one. AUTUMN LEAVES.

TO ONE who feels a deep interest in the spiritual and intellectual growth of our youth, who are so soon to assume the grave responsibilities of life, "Autumn Leaves" is a casket of literary gems, the value of which no just estimate can be given until seen and given a careful inspection. It is full of good instruction, an educator intellectually, physically, and morally. It is indeed, (as its name indicates) rich in the garnered truths of the autumnal age in which we live.

The true stories therein contained are of a most interesting and instructive character. "With the Church in an early day"—the interesting history of a family contains episodes as thrilling as any founded on fiction. Daniel in the trap, surrounded by howling wolves, was listened to by my boys, though small, with kindling eyes and bated breath. It being true, seemed to impress it indelibly upon their memories.

"Home Influence upon heredity," if heeded, will be of untold benefit to those anticipating motherhood, provided they have the hearty co-operation of the paternal side of the house. Autumn Leaves reaches the eye of both sexes. Its clear, large print, and superior quality of paper, adds greatly to its value with those who guard the eyesight, one of God's best gifts.

We all know the difficulties to overcome, the battle to be fought, by one who starts a new enterprise. In placing Autumn Leaves before us, in response to the needs of the church, Sister Walker has experienced the pioneers' hardships and difficulties. She has made sacrifice of both time and money, of which many know but little. Mothers in Israel, we who have the care of a large family of little ones, if we can do nothing else for the cause, we can show by our acts that we appreciate her great labor in behalf of our children—that we do most heartily endorse the noble work she is doing,—by subscribing every family, for Autumn Leaves. Drop, if necessary, to do it, some other and doubtful periodical; for the influence of that, which we should read, reaches to the shores of eternity. It influences the soul for weal or woe in this life, and beyond it.

The Herald has a circulation of 4,075; the Hope 4,275. Autumn Leaves, now not half so large, can be just as great if we will. We can do more; we can lift the heavy burden which Sister Walker is now laboring under, financially by voluntarily raising the subscription price from $1.25 to $1.50 per annum, thereby enabling her to procure necessary assistance to carry on her good work.

How often do we read in the columns of the Herald,—"You have grown very dear to me," "we could not get along without the Herald," "it is our only preacher," etc. If we elder ones feel the need of suitable reading matter, to strengthen, build up our faith and cheer us, how much more do our growing children need a work to nourish and develop them, make them mighty men and women and valiant in the cause of Christ!

FOOD FOR HEALTH.

OUR all wise and benevolent Heavenly Father has made the earth full of good and wonderful and beautiful creations, showing plainly to His children His power and love; and having given us minds and hearts He expects us to apply ourselves to the study of his works, at least so far as to learn their use and abuse.

In the vegetable world we find an almost endless variety of plants, vegetables and fruits designed for the sustenance of animal life, and evidently intended to contribute to the comfort and well being of His children, who on their part too often receive and enjoy His good gifts without a thought of the Giver. Worse than this, these good gifts are often perverted by mankind to wrong uses, as for example, when the grain designed to furnish us with nourishing bread is made into beer or whiskey, thus turning good, wholesome nourishment into deadly poison that destroys both soul and body.

All material substances, as we know, are divided into two classes, organic and inorganic. The organic are those that possess organs and life; such as plants, animals, and human beings; the inorganic possesses no organs, as for example, stones, earth, alcohol, gases, and the like.

The plant has been called "the factory of organization," because with its roots and leaves it gathers up inorganic substances, gases from the air, alkali from the rich earth, and manures around the roots, and feeds upon these inorganic substances, and incorporates them into its own life, thus making inorganic substances into organic substances, using what would be otherwise useless, changing that which is foul and poisonous into what is sweet and wholesome, drinking in the poisonous carbonic acid exhaled by man and throwing out for us in exchange, fresh, pure oxygen gas, to cheer and exhilarate all who breathe it; absorbing from the ground all foul and injurious dampness and pestilential odors tending to disease and sending back in return to bless mankind, beautiful flowers, delicious fruits and rarest perfumes. "From seeming evil still educating good."

How wonderful is all this! Truly the vegetable world is to us a perpetual lesson, not only of the thrift and economy of nature which wastes nothing; but of unselfishness, taking the worst and giving the best, patient industry, humility and cheerful trust. Truly there is not even a blade of grass from which we may not learn valuable lessons.

Here is a bare, unsightly spot of earth, nothing to be seen but bare rocks or clay and mud. But leave it alone and how soon friendly vegetation hastens to throw over it the mantle of charity to hide its defects. The bare rocks are covered with delicate, beautiful moss, and every desolate corner shows rich clusters of ferns, grass or wild flowers.

Thus does He who came to give "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for the spirit of heaviness," (Isa. 61: 4), speak to us in His works.

Inorganic substances are unfit for food. The only exception, perhaps, to this rule, is salt, which taken in moderation with food aids digestion. Water, also, although inorganic, is essential to health, forming a vehicle for carrying the blood discs to nourish all parts of the body and serving also as a means of carrying away poisonous excretions.

It is said that fat people usually eat little but drink much, while lean people drink little but are always hungry, yet eating more than other people, and that if this were reversed the lean would gain in fullness and the stout have the satisfaction of seeing their shadows grow less. We must bear in mind, however, that fat is not always a sign of health. On the contrary it is often found with a diseased and enlarged liver or fatty degeneration of the heart or other organs, caused by imperfect digestion, often induced by the drinking of beer, ale, cider or wine in moderate quantities.

As we know, it is absolutely essential to health that the system should be abundantly supplied with pure water, of which we are largely composed. But water, or any fluid in large quantities at meals would dilute the gastric juices and so hinder digestion. It should therefore be taken freely in the morning before breakfast and between meals. The effect of alcohol is to dry up the water in the system, it having a very strong affinity for water. It dries up and hardens the brain and nerves so that they act slowly and with great difficulty, or incorrectly, and thus often paralysis and insanity result.

The nerves, the telegraphic network conveying messages from the head to all parts of the body, in order properly to carry on the functions necessary to life and health, when nourished with pure water and with wholesome grains, fruits and vegetables or meats, act quickly and easily without pain or mistake, ordering the work of digestion, respiration, motion, thought and healthful life; but when intoxicants or narcotics enter the system, the effect is to paralyze these nerves until gradually the victim loses all self-control. He no longer commands himself but does just what he had determined not to do; his brain, his muscles, even his senses can no longer be relied upon. He is like a beautiful watch out of order. Nay, worse, for the watch still may appear well outwardly, but he has lost his beauty if he ever had it, lost his self-respect, lost his health of body and soul, lost too often, his hopes for time and for eternity.

Thus has God made man upright, but he hath sought out many inventions." Moreover, this rapid absorption of the water in the system by the alcohol, this drying up and hardening of the tissues, creates a terrible thirst, a craving which is insatiable. More of the poisonous drink only increases the thirst till partial paralysis or stupor for a time deadens sensation, when he awakes not refreshed but more wretched and more tortured than before. It would be bad enough if the evil ended here. But alas! this is but the beginning.

The weakness of brain and nerve so induced and the terrible appetite and loss of self-control and moral power are transmitted by the fixed laws of heredity from parent to child, sometimes passing over one or two generations and then coming out again in the third or fourth generation in full force. It is in this way that "the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation." In view of such facts what can be thought of those who pervert for such terrible and deadly uses the nourishing grains and delicious fruits of the earth created for our health and happiness.

Man, the highest in order of earthly creatures, endowed with intelligence above the mere animal, immortal, made "in the image of God," perverts his God-given powers and energies to concoct a poison that shall be to his fellow man a snare and a delusion bringing ruin to body and soul. He takes the delicious grape and changes it to the wine, of which scripture says, "at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." He turns the healthful apple into a drink that leads to disease and sin. He changes the beautiful grains into poisonous drinks that stupify and deaden body and soul.

Thus does man pervert and abuse his best blessings, turning organic matter into inorganic, healthful growth to premature decay and fermentation, life into death, good into evil.

God, on the contrary, shows to us His infinite wisdom and goodness by converting material, which to our finite minds would seem worthless, into that which is absolutely perfect; for every flower or blade of grass is in its way absolutely perfect, fresh from the hand of God, and far beyond our comprehension. From the noxious gases unfit for us to breathe, and from earthy, disorganized and effete matter He creates the healthful, nourishing, beautiful grains and fruits, in endless variety, each one a miracle, and all for our benefit.

At least we can but show our gratitude by not suffering them to be perverted to the service of Satan; but by using them in their purity, as God intended, for His glory.

A BELIEF IN GOD.

I WILL frankly tell you that my experience in prolonged scientific investigations convinces me that a belief in God who is behind and within the chaos of vanishing points of human knowledge—adds a wonderful stimulus to the man who attempts to penetrate into the regions of the unknown. Of myself I may say that I never make the preparations for penetrating into some small province of nature hitherto undiscovered without breathing a prayer to the Being who hides his secrets from me only to allure me graciously on to the unfolding of them.—Prof. Agassiz.

Conference Minutes.

PITTSBURG AND KIRTLAND.

District conference convened at the Saints' Chapel, Wheeling, West Virginia, Saturday, March 3d, W. H. Kelley presiding; R. S. Salyards secretary; W. H. Garrett assistant. Morning prayer and testimony. Branches:—Pittsburg 142; 8 baptized, 1 received by letter, 10 removed by letter, 2 expelled, 2 died. Fairview 42; no change. Conneaut 16; no change. Church Hill 24; 1 expelled. Mansfield 17; no change. Wheeling 42; 2 baptized, 2 removed, 2 expelled. Kirtland 25; 1 died. Blake's Mills 24; 2 baptized. No reports from Washingtonville, Lampsville and Lakeview. The report of F. Criley, Bishop's agent, read and accepted. Receipts in full for year ending February 28th, including amounts drawn from the Bishop, $1285 63. Expenses for the year $1239 17. Balance on hand $46 46. The agent presented a bill of expenses incurred by general church authorities after the General Conference of 1887, in prosecuting missionary labor in the city of Cleveland, Ohio. Upon motion it was resolved that he be instructed to present the bill to the Bishop for payment, inasmuch as it was an expense incurred by the general church, and one to which the district had already contributed. Elders W. H. Kelley, G. T. Griffiths, Jacob Reese, James Brown (baptized 6 or 7) David Strachan, W. H. Garrett, J. Craig, E. Thomas, V. Sutton, J. Yocum, R. S. Salyards (baptized 2). Priests L. D. Ulom, L. S. Holman, Amos Dobbs, reported. Resignation of Elder G. T. Griffiths as district president was accepted, and thanks tendered for past energetic labors. Elder James Brown was appointed district president. W. H. Kelley, G. T. Griffiths, E. L. Kelley, R. S. Salyards and J. Brown were elected delegates to General Conference, with instructions to request that body to appoint a minister for the city of Pittsburg and vicinity for one year. General Conference requested to return Elders G. T. Griffiths and R. S. Salyards to this district. Elders J. Reese, W. H. Garrett, J. Craig, E. Thomas, J. Yocum, V. Sutton, D. Strachan, and all others were requested to labor as their circumstances permit. W. H. Kelley, E. C. Briggs and G. T. Griffiths, were sustained as ministers in charge, and R. S. Salyards and J. Brown as ministers in the district. Preaching Saturday evening by W. H. Garrett, Sunday forenoon and evening by W. H. Kelley, Saints' meeting in the afternoon. Adjourned to Blake's Mills, Ohio, Saturday and Sunday, September 1st and 2d.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.

This conference met with Clear Water branch, 25th February, L. Gamet in the chair, J. H. Jackson clerk. Branches:—Deer Creek 34; 1 died. Clear Water 9; no change. Chelsea 14; no change. Elders C. D. Stevens, W. Rumel, B. Kester, L. Gamet, J. E. Rogerson; priest C. Derry in person. Teachers Hollenbeck, J. H. Jackson, W. Weston. Bishop's agent reports on hand last report $385, received since $2; on hand $5.85. J. E. Rodgers, B. Kester committee to investigate matters in Lake Snore branch. W. Rumel delegate to General Conference. W. Rumel officiated in the ordination of M. W. Culbertson as an elder. General Conference asked to assign W. Rumel to the same field of labor. All elders and priests who desire to labor outside of their respective branches, and who receive appointment through the president of the district, should be required to report all labor performed to the conference from time to time and if they fail to do so without good cause that their licenses shall be demanded by the president. Bro. L. Gamet sustained as president of district and as Bishop's agent; J. H. Jackson as clerk. Two days' meeting was appointed at the Yellow Banks, in Madison county, on the 23d day of June; and at Clear Water, in Antelope county, the 21st of July. Bro. Rumel gave us two rousing sermons. Adjourned to Clear Water branch, September 22d, 1888.

NAUVOO AND STRING PRAIRIE.

The above district conference met at Farmington, Iowa, March 3d, J. McKiernan president, S. Ferris clerk pro tem. Branches: Keokuk 42. Montrose 86; 5 removed by letter. Farmington 52; 1 removed by letter, 1 expelled. Burlington 42; 1 died. Elders J. McKiernan, J. H. Lambert, H. T. Pitt, S. Ferris, reported in person, and B. F. Durfee and D. D. Babcock by letter. Teachers B. B. Herrick and L. McClintan reported. J. H. Lambert, Bishop's agent, reported on hand last report $49 91, received $29 43, total $79 54; paid out $69 96, due church $9 38. Report received, and auditing committee reported book correct. M. T. Short gave an encouraging report of his labors the past three months. The president of the district was instructed to go to Montrose branch and investigate and settle all differences. J. McKiernan delegate to General Conference; his expenses to be paid by the district. Whereas, the ministrations of Bro. James McKiernan have in the opinion of this conference been productive of much good; and whereas, the work in this district requires the labor and time of at least one man; therefore, be it resolved, that this conference petition the General Conference to return him to his present field of labor. Preaching on Saturday evening, Sunday forenoon and evening by Bro. M. T. Short. Social and sacramental meeting in the afternoon. Adjourned to meet at Montrose, Iowa, June 2d.

DECATUR.

A conference of the above district convened at Lamoni, Iowa, March 10th; H. A. Stebbins presiding; V. White, clerk pro tem. Branches:—Lamoni 593; 9 baptized, 8 received, 5 removed, 2 expelled, 1 died. (Last minutes published should have read: "7 baptized, 3 received, 2 removed, 4 expelled, 1 died.") Lucas 213; 10 baptized, 6 received, 19 removed, 2 expelled, 1 died, 2 ordinations. Pleasanton 107; 1 died. Centerville 17; (organized November 6th, 1887, by H. A. Stebbins); 2 baptized, 15 received, 1 ordination. Davis City 60; no change. Greenville 35; 2 removed. Allendale 56; 6 baptized, 1 removed. Lone Rock 62; 2 received, 2 marriages. Report received from McFall Branch, Gentry county, Missouri, (lately organized) was referred back to it, with statement that we understand that they are within the limits of the Far West district. Ministry reports:—H. A. Stebbins had preached at Osceola, Lucas, Centerville, Allendale, Wirt and Lamoni and baptized 12 since October conference. He sketched the condition of the district. A. S. Cochran, as president of the Lamoni branch John Watkins, of Lucas, R. Archibald, of Centerville, and M. V. B. Smith, of Davis City, all reported; also J. Landers, D. Campbell, Wm. Anderson, H. Church, E. Lovell, O. J. and S. V. Bailey, (baptized 1), J. H. Hansen, V. White, H. N. Snively, T. J. Bell, L. Gaultier, W. N. Abbot in person, and J. R. Evans and E. B. Morgan by letter. Priests L. W. Powell, N. Lovell, J. Wahlstrom, J. M. Brown and W. Crick reported. E. Banta presented his annual report as Bishop's agent:—On hand last report $681 87; received during the year $2,651 44; expended $2,198 52; balance on hand $1,134 79. The president appointed J. H. Hansen, R. Archibald and M. V. B. Smith as committee to audit the same. They subsequently reported that they found all correct except an item of $1 50 which was in course of adjustment. Bro. Banta presented his resignation as the agent and it was accepted. Thanks were voted to him for his past services, and David Dancer was nominated as his successor. On motion Appanoose county, Iowa, was added to the district. It was resolved to appoint five delegates to General Conference and five alternates; in case delegates are not present the alternates to vote in their places, number one to fill the first vacancy, number two the second, etc. Wm. Anderson, H. A. Stebbins, T. J. Bell, Jos. Hammer and Issac Phillips were appointed as delegates, and J. H. Hansen, J. Landers, D. Campbell, E. Banta and E. Sparks as alternates. Delegates were instructed to request that the next General Conference be held at Lamoni. It was provided that two day meetings be appointed by the president as may be found advisable, and in the branches that desire them; also that he appoint the ministry to do the preaching at those meetings. Elder F. Izatt and Priest T. W. Williams wrote requesting mission appointment in the district. On motion they and all others who desire like appointment and instruction, were referred to the president of the district. On Saturday evening preaching by Duncan Campbell; on Sunday morning by O. B. Thomas; evening by A. H. Smith. They were assisted severally by L. W. Powell, E. Robinson and C. H. Jones. Sacrament and testimony meeting in the afternoon, in charge of H. A. Stebbins and A. S. Cochran. Brn. E. Stafford and J. Landers assisted at other services. Adjourned to meet at Davis City, Iowa, June 23d.

NORTH-WEST KANSAS.

This quarterly conference convened with the Elmira branch, February 25th, A. H. Parsons in the chair, W. D. Jemison secretary. Branches:—Blue Rapids 63; 1 died. Prairie Home 20; gain 7. Elmira 35; gain 2. Deer Creek 15; gain 4. Twin Creek; no change. Goshen 57; gain 7. Reports by letter:—Elders G. W. Shute, G. W. Beebe, H. R. Harder. Priests:—W. F. Clark, E. M. Reynolds. In person; A. H. Parsons, A. Sears, A. Kent, E. Maudsley; priests, H. J. Jemison, S. Andes. Motion to rescind motion made at Cuba, Kansas, in regard to branch presidents cancelling names from their respective branches at members' request or indifference, carried. A. H. Parsons sustained as president, W. D. Jemison secretary, G. W. Shute Bishop's agent. Bishop's agent reported $13 69 on hand, number of branches 7, number of members 252, including 1 seventy, 14 elders, 8 priests, 6 teachers, 5 deacons; 27 baptized, 5 received by letter, increase 32; 2 expelled, 2 died, loss 5; net gain 27. There are 45 not belonging to any branch. H. R. Harder, A. Sears and A. H. Parsons delegates to General Conference. The president and secretary to correspond with church members scattered through the district, and request them to enroll as members of district. Preaching by H. R. Harder on Saturday and Sunday evenings, on Sunday forenoon by A. Kent. Prayer meeting in the afternoon.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Conference of the above district convened in the A. O. U. W., Hall, Los Angeles, California, from March 2d to 4th, H. C. Smith president, C. T. Howland secretary. Branches:—Los Angeles 78; 3 baptized, 4 received by letter, 2 died. New Port 146; 7 baptized, 2 by letter. Laguna 36; 2 removed by letter. San Bernardino 207; received on evidence of membership in first organization 2. Santa Maria 8. Reports of Elders:—D. S. Mills (baptized 1), E. L. Kelley, H. C. Smith (baptized 3), H. L. Holt, J. R. Badham (baptized 3), E. J. French, A. A. Goff, D. L. Harris, A. W. Thompson, W. Gibson, G. W. Sparks. Priests:—F. P. Schnell, D. E. Lander, J. Wixson, J. Baldwin, W. P. Pickering. Teacher:—C. W. Earle. Deacon:—W. Schade, reported. Report of committee appointed to draft constitution for a district Sunday School. Preaching on Saturday evening by E. L. Kelley; Sunday morning by Pres. Joseph Smith. Sacrament in the afternoon. Adjourned to New Port on a day to be appointed by district president.

WESTERN WISCONSIN.

The above district conference convened at Webster, Vernon county, Wisconsin; A. L. Whitaker president, C. W. Lange clerk. Branches:—Wheatville 14; no change. Elders A. L. Whitaker, C. W. Lange, F. Hackett, W. A. McDowell and M. V. Flayer reported. Bishop's agent reported on hand since last report $28 80. C. W. Lange resigned as clerk of district and W. A. McDowell appointed. Frank Hackett is permitted to attend General Conference and we authorize him to report the spiritual, numerical and financial condition of this district. Whereas no grounds are found on the records of the district against Bro. J. L. Pride being cut off from the church, we feel to sustain him as a member and elder if he is willing to perform his duties ac-ording to the laws governing said church. Resolved that we appoint and sustain W. A. McDowell as traveling elder of this district, with our means and prayers, until next conference. A. L. Whitaker sustained as president, W. A. McDowell clerk, C. W. Lange Bishop's agent. Preaching by C. W. Lange on Saturday evening, on Sunday forenoon by W. A. McDowell and in the evening by A. L. Whitaker. Prayer and testimony meeting in charge of W. A. McDowell in the afternoon. Adjourned to Wheatville branch, Crawford county, Wisconsin, June 2d.

Miscellaneous.

C. B. & Q. TO CONFERENCE.

Each person attending General Conference at Independence, Missouri, April 6th to 20th, going over the C. B. & Q. R. R. from points in Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri, should purchase tickets to Kansas City and obtain from the Agent at the point from whence they start a certificate, form No. 435, which when properly filled out by Bishop G. A. Blakeslee, will be honored by the Agent of that road at Kansas City for return ticket at one-third full fare. Be sure to get certificates of the Agent where you buy your ticket when going.

NOTICES.

Having been notified of the resignation of Bro. E. Banta as my agent for the Decatur, Iowa, District, and the recommendation of Bro. David Dancer in his stead, I, therefore appoint him as such for said district, and I would recommend him to the Saints and ask them to sustain him by their prayers and means. Ever your co-laborer for the truth,
G. A. BLAKESLEE,
Presiding Bishop.

The scattered members of the Montrose branch, String Prairie and Nauvoo district, to report to the clerk of the branch by letter or in person, within sixty days after publication of this notice, or they will be reported as scattered members.
LOTTIE TRIPP, clerk.

In making improvements upon our church property the branch has incurred indebtedness which is past due, and we appeal to you to aid us in paying it off as quickly as practicable. Hoping you will respond soon we subscribe ourselves,
J. W. WALDSMITH, Pres.,
E. D. BRIGGS, Secretary.

The following members of the Platte branch, Nodaway district, are requested to report to the clerk before August 10th, 1888, or they will be reported as scattered members:—Margrahe Jensen. Dora M. Jensen. Johana K. Jensen, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Cary Johnson, Independence, Missouri; James L. Winters, Andrew L. Winters, Kansas; K. L. Winters, of Kentucky; also George M. Decker and Susannah Hagar. Whereabouts unknown.
JACOB NELSON, clerk,
Guilford, Mo.

BORN.

STITES.—To Mr. Alva M. and Sr. Melissa J. Stites, October 9th, 1887, a son; blessed March 14th, 1888, by Elder Levi Anthony, J. W. Waldsmith and Chas. H. Porter, and named Alvia Elijah.

MC CONLEY.—Born September 17th, 1885, at Sterling, Colorado, to Bro. George E. and Sr. Mollie McConley, Myron Alexander McConley; blessed by Elder James Caffall, March 8th, 1888.

JOHNSON.—Born May 2d, 1887, at North Platte, Nebraska, to Mr. Bayard and Lydia Johnson, Bernice and Bertrand Johnson; both blessed March 14th, 1888, by Elder James Caffall.

ADAMS.—Born to Bro. James and Sr. Eva Adams, September 6th, 1885, at Casey, Iowa, Carrie Ella Adams; blessed March 14th, 1888, by Elder James Caffall.

DIED.

GOULDSMITH.—At the home of her son, Davis Gouldsmith, in Ashland, Nebraska, of dropsy, Sr. Abigail D. Gouldsmith. She was confined to her bed for over thirteen months, and suffered much; but when the hour of departure came, she quietly passed away to await the morn of the resurrection of the just. She leaves a large circle of friends and acquaintances, and was beloved by all who knew her. She also leaves five sisters and one brother; four daughters and two sons, who mourn her. Born 22d May, 1816, at Lenox, Madison county, New York; died March 10th, 1888, aged 71 years, 10 months, 12 days. She united with the church in her youth, and was a faithful member up to her death. Baptized by Solomon Hancock in 1831. She passed through the trials in Missouri, at Nauvoo, Illinois; but when the great apostasy took place she followed none of them, but remained with the remnant. When God commanded them to reorganize, she was among the first to come forward and renew her covenant, and was baptized April 17th, 1866, by Alexander H. Smith, at Nauvoo, Illinois. On the 12th day of March, 1888, we laid the body beside her daughter Marv, in the family graveyard. Funeral sermon by Elder J. Armstrong. She chose the following hymn to be sung at her funeral.

She's gone! Her work on earth is done,
Her battle's fought, her race is run;
Blest is the path she trod:
For she espoused the glorious cause,
In prompt obedience of the laws
Of the Eternal God.

PAGE.—At Neosho, Newton county, Missouri, of consumption, January 13th, 1888, N. L. Page, son of Edward L. and Catharine J. Page. He was born January 23d, 1848. He was highly endowed intellectually, and a man of most generous impulses. He welcomed death as a happy release.

BEAUCHAMP.—In Independence, Missouri, 4th of March, 1888, of consumption, Sarah Lang, wife of David M. Beauchamp, and beloved daughter of Bro. Edward L. and Sr. Catharine J. Page. She was born June 5th, 1853; baptized in Hannibal Missouri, March 7th, 1877, by Elder Mark H. Forscutt. As a daughter she was affectionate and obedient; an exemplary wife, a devoted Saint. The summons found her ready; and of her it may well be said: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Bro. Luff's discourse on the occasion was a grand exposition of the resurrection, and was listened to with rapt attention. Good seed was then and there sown.

MATTHEWS.—Sr. Letitia Z. Matthews, wife of Bro. John Matthews, Sr., departed life March 9th, at Hinsdale, Iowa. Was born in Hartford county, Maryland, October 5th, 1830; was baptized into the church in 1863; was a faithful member, and departed life strong in the faith. Funeral sermon by Elder B. F. Durfee.

We shall greet them at home, we shall greet them,
When the sorrows of life shall be o'er;
Our loved ones we hope soon to meet them,
On Eden's fair beautiful shore.
The glorious thought, how consoling,
To know that the time is so nigh,
When Jesus the world shall controlling,
Permit us to join them on high.

EAGLESON.—At Pardo's Mills, Kent county, Ontario, March 2d, 1888, Hazel Mav, only daughter of Bro. James and Sr. Jennie Eagleson, aged 1 year, 2 months and 15 days. Funeral sermon by Elder Samuel Brown, to a large congregation of friends and neighbors in the Union Church.

Oh Hazel Mav has gone to rest,
Her trials on earth are o'er;
Her spirit is now among the blest,
Upon that peaceful shore.
But yet we hope to meet her,
When the trump of God shall sound,
To resurrect the righteous dead.
Who are sleeping in the ground.
Oh, may we meet her then,
Where parting will be o'er,
And clasp her in our arms again.
Where Jesus reigns forever more.

THURSTON.—At Galien Center, Berrien county, Michigan, February 28th, 1888, of liver and kidney disease, sister Hannah Boone Thurston, aged 60 years, 6 months and 22 days. She was born at Shamokin, Pennsylvania, August 6th, 1827; baptized at Galien, Michigan, January 21st, 1861, by father James Blakeslee. She bore strong testimony to the truth of the latter day work, at the two last services she was permitted to attend. Sermon by C. Scott at the house, Bishop G. A. Blakeslee being in charge. A large concourse of Saints and friends attending.

DUTY ought to be a man's standard; but duty ought not to be a man's impulse. A man ought to do only that which is duty, but he ought not to do it only because it is duty. It is often said that a man ought not to live to eat, but that he ought to eat to live. Yet if a man eats only because it is his duty to eat as a means of preserving his life, his eating does not do him the good it ought to do him. When it is his duty to eat, a man ought not only to love to eat, but he ought just then to live to eat. And so it is in every sphere of duty-doing. A man ought to love to do what it is his duty to do; and he ought to do it as though he loved to do it. For the time being, that which is one's duty ought to be one's pleasure, and he ought to find real pleasure in doing his plain duty. In this sense it is that whether we eat, drink, or rest, or recreate, or exercise, or whatsoever we do, we can do all to the glory of God, and in that spirit of love for God, and for all that God would have us to do, which is the fulfilling of God's law.

FREE EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

THE free-school movement is making steady progress in Germany. Already a number of towns have adopted the system of free elementary education. Berlin has had free schools for many years, and now endeavors are being made in Prussia to throw the burden of providing such education upon the state. A bill has been referred to a committee of the Prussian house of deputies with the title, "Bill for the alleviation of elementary school charges," the authors being the liberal party. It is very significant of the tone of public opinion in Prussia that the measure was accorded a cordial reception on its first reading in the lower house, although some good members of the clerical party apprehended that it was but another step toward the secularization of education. The attitude of the Government was explained by the minister of education, Dr. von Gossier, who declared that he welcomed the bill with the greatest pleasure," and who urged the house to unite in support of the measure, which was unanimously referred to a committee for consideration in the usual way. If the bill is passed it may be expected that it will pave the way to a complete system of free education at the cost of the national exchequer.—Sel.

EDITOR.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, April 7, 1888

The Idaho Enterprise, of the 17th ult., published at Malad City, has the following on Mormon politics and the methods of the Politico Religio institution of Utah known as the Mormon Church:

"THE MORMONS WILL VOTE.

"Notwithstanding the fact that the constitutionality of the test oath has been sustained by the Supreme Court of this [Idaho] Territory, the Mormons of this [Malad] valley declare that it is their intention to exercise the franchise next fall, and that they can, under the present teachings of the church, take the oath. If the Mormon doctrines have undergone such a change, we can see no good reason why Mormons should longer remain under the ban of disfranchisement, providing they exercise their rights as individual citizens and not as segmental parts of a machine that derives its power from Utah.

"If the Mormons have weeded out from their theology all that is antagonistic to the Government of the United States, and have made up their minds to hereafter live in conformity with law, they are beyond question entitled to every right and privilege that any other citizen is entitled to; but the question is, are they honest? are they sincere? If the affirmative can be conscientiously given to these questions, we say every Mormon who is otherwise qualified should go to the polls at the coming election and cast his ballot like any other American citizen.

"We have never entertained but one serious objection to Mormon political methods; and that is that but few Mormons ever exercise individual rights and independency at the polls. For the same reason we also object to Catholicism and other ecclesiastical institutions that undertake to control the political condition of any State or Territory. We will go further, and believe that the political history of this country will bear us out in the assertion, that big political machines are subject to the same objection; as, for instance, the politics of a great part of Nevada are controlled by California politicians. The case in this Territory is an exact parallel in an exaggerated form. California politicians do not pretend to interfere in all the little local political affairs of Nevada. They probably do not interest themselves farther than to control State elections. There is certainly no acknowledged authority whose consent must be obtained in every minute political transaction. Herein lies the difference between political control by politicians and political control by ecclesiastics.

"We do not think there ever was an election held in this county, in which the Mormons participated, that was not controlled and engineered down to the meanest detail by Mormon authorities in Utah.

"Let the Mormons of Oneida County, or Idaho Territory for that matter, form all the political combinations and exercise every privilege known to our Government and we will never raise an objection, so long as they are not under the surveillance and dictation of an authority which has no political connection with the local government of this county or Territory. The fact, so stated by the Mormons themselves, that the politics of this county have formerly been controlled by church authorities, in Logan and Salt Lake City, naturally makes us suspicious of the future.

"Locally speaking, we have nothing to fear from the Mormons of Oneida County if they do not allow themselves to be controlled by high churchmen in Utah; for we do not believe there is as liberal and intelligent a people in the Mormon Church to-day as those of this county.

"The question is: Can or will the Mormons of this county cut themselves loose from, or rise above this kind of supervision? Have they the courage to say to the church authorities: 'We will conduct our own temporal affairs as we deem for our best interests, and look to you for instructions in spiritual matters only?' Will they do this? If so, may God speed the day when the black clouds that now hang like a pall over Mormonism are dispersed forever."

The writer of the above has been long familiar with the subject he has in hand, for he, during many years past, has been in daily contact with the political wire workers of both Idaho and Utah, he having been reared and educated in that country. His statements concerning the political jugglery of the "Mormon authorities in Utah," are doubtless correct. In this God and Mammon system, Utah Mormonism, is seen the "hairy hands of Esau." Mormonism as taught in the sacred books of the church, and in the authentic writings of Joseph the Seer, eschews politics, relegating it to its own sphere, at the same time honoring and upholding civil governments and all their legal authorities. Brighamism, from 1844 to the present, has mingled Church and State—the church absorbing the state, in fact—and its members have, under priestly instruction, supposed it to be their duty to vote when, where, and how, as directed by their file-leaders. This is both un-Christian and un-American, and as before stated is squarely in conflict with the teachings of original Mormonism.

Jesus says,—"My kingdom is not of this world?"—Yet it was in this world, and it honored the authorized laws and rulers of the kingdoms of this world. The church organized and presided over by Joseph Smith the Seer was commanded of God to honor and uphold the Constitution and laws of our nation according to their tenor, and do so in all uprightness. And in keeping with this the church officially declared,—"We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied."

—Doc. Cov. 112:9. When the Utah Mormons "mingle religious influence" with politics to specially foster the interests of their church, its priesthood, its politicians, or its membership, it in that way proves itself to be in darkness, and in the ways of harmful error, and, to this extent, opposed to Christ and the laws given his Church.

The pernicious policy of running politics in the interest and under the influence of the church has always worked harm, both to the Church and the State. This evil was one of the causes, no doubt, that led to the popular persecution, and the expulsion, of the church at and about Nauvoo. And when we say this we do not justify nor apologize for either the expulsion or the persecution. But it were folly to shut our eyes to facts of history, both written and unwritten. The stern logic of well demonstrated facts should be wisely observed and be made to serve for good in the present and in the future.

Joseph Smith the Seer, in 1843, when rebuking the crafty, specious, political overtures and suggestions of James Arlington Bennett, said:

"But, Sir, when I leave the dignity and honor I received from heaven, to boost a man into power, through the aid of my friends, where the evil and designing, after the object has been accomplished, can lock up the clemency intended as a reciprocation for such favors; and where the wicked and unprincipled, as a matter of course, would seize the opportunity to flintify the hearts of the nation against me for dabbling at a sly game in politics; verily, I say, when I leave the dignity and honor of heaven to gratify the ambition and vanity of man or men, may my power cease, like the strength of Sampson, when he was shorn of his locks, while asleep in the lap of Delilah."—Times and Season, vol. 4, p. 374.

These sentiments should actuate all who claim to be Saints, and particularly those who hold the priesthood.

In reply some may say that Joseph afterwards engaged, actively, in politics, and even allowed himself to be nominated for the office of President of the United States. This is admitted, but that does not justify the church, nor its priesthood, in attempting to dictate or control in political matters. The Saints, as citizens, have the right under the laws of the country, to use their own judgment at the ballot-box, and do so with perfect freedom and there express their own political preferences. But neither the church or its priesthood, have the right to in any way control or direct how, or for whom its members shall vote. And for them to do this craftily and secretly, is the more condemnable.

Concerning the Seer's candidacy for the Chief Magistracy of our Nation it may be well to state, that when some of the Twelve and others in council suggested that if he were a nominee, that fact alone would give prominence and prestige to the church. Joseph sternly opposed it, and so said to Emma, his wife, after returning from the council. But, in a later meeting, he yielded to the importunate persuasions of the Twelve, (chief among whom was Brigham Young), and their co-workers, and thus he suffered himself to be made a nominee while his own better judgment condemned it. These facts the writer and others learned from the lips of the Seer's widow, Emma, the evening of April 6th, 1860, near Amboy, Illinois.

We would be delighted to see the Utah Mormons exercise the franchise wisely and justly, and enjoy freely and fully all the rights and privileges of American citizens, if done free from the dictation and control of the church.

FROM northern Utah come tidings that in that region "matters as changing fast" in respect to the religious and political faith of the Utah Mormons. The writer wisely remarks that, "it is unwise to be rabid in denouncing some of the doctrines and practices which are here held to be sacred. Patience and forbearance is needed. Practices which are not in accordance with God's laws and designs will work out. Time will work wonders."

We heartily commend the above sentiments. The First Presidency of the Reorganized Church have ever advised moderation, gentleness, and charity, in the treatment of all who have departed from the faith set forth in the original teachings of the church.

The Utah Mormons have been misled, blinded and confused, till some of them "call evil good, and good evil," and as a consequence such have become distrustful, fearful, crafty, and are given to deceit and low cunning instead of the pure, open, frank, hopeful, loving spirit enjoined under the unalloyed gospel of Christ. We pity them; and we pray God their eyes may be opened to see their errors and evils, and that their hearts may turn faithfully, humbly, and lovingly to God and to the word of his power. God is pleading with that people to return to their "first love." He is, and has been, using various agencies and instrumentalities to recover them from the errors and evils into which many of them have been unwittingly led. When the Lord raised up Joseph, "the head" of the Seer's "posterity," the "seed" promised January 19th, 1841, and at other times, the Utah leaders rejected him and the missionaries sent by him. Nevertheless, "young Joseph" warned them by the word of the Lord, in plainness and in love, to abandon polygamy and kindred errors. But they would not. It then remained for the Lord to uncover their doings to the gaze of the world, and to rebuke them in his wrath by the rod of our nation. And yet it remains for the Saints to pray for them, and to treat them with goodness, with compassion and love.

SPIRITS—HOW CREATED.

A BROTHER asks to know the belief of the church relative to the creation of spirits, and we reply that the church affirms the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, to be the church standards of authority on church doctrine, principle, and organization; but has not defined and decided upon its belief in respect to the creation of spirits. Some believe that all spirits were created of God in the sense that, as identities and persons they were, in some manner, brought into being by the creative power of God. Others believe that spirits, as beings, entities, or persons, existed eternally, and that God created them in the same sense in which he creates wise men, moral men, spiritual men, out of persons who were once unwise, immoral and unspiritual. That is, he creates them in the sense of forming, moulding, fashioning, enlarging, developing, and thus, transforming the spirit into new conditions, endowing it with new powers, inspiring it with renewed will and upright aspirations, and giving it a new sphere. The writer is of this latter class.

THE UTAH BILL.

IN the Senate to-day [March 26th] Mr. Cullom, from the Committee on Territories, reported unanimously the resolutions delaring it to be the sense of the Senate that new States should be admitted into the Union only on the basis of equality with the existing States, and that Congress ought not to exercise any supervision over the provisions of the Constitution of any such new State further than is necessary to guarantee to each State a republican form of government; that the proposed Constitution for the State of Utah, submitted to Congress, contains provisions which would deprive such proposed State, if admitted, of that equality which should exist among the different States; and that it is the sense of the Senate that the Territory of Utah ought not to be admitted into the Union as a State until it is certain beyond doubt that the practice of plural marriages, bigamy, or polygamy has been entirely abandoned by the inhabitants of that Territory, and until it is likewise certain that the civil affairs of the Territory are not controlled by the priesthood of the Mormon Church. He asked for the immediate consideration of the resolution. It was ordered that the resolution be printed. Mr. Cullom also reported back the Utah memorial and draft of the Constitution, and asked that the committee be discharged from their further consideration. It was so ordered.—Chicago Tribune.

The above means that the Nation lacks confidence in the Utah Mormon leaders, and also that until confidence is established by practical reformation, Utah can not have statehood.

CAUSES OF CANCER.

"MR. MOODY says that there has never been a cancer among the Hebrews, and suggests that their freedom from this scourge may be due to their abstinence from pork."

Pork-eating may aggravate or develop cancer, for aught we know, but from personal observation we have been led to conclude that alcohol and tobacco have done much mischief in this direction. We have known many cancer victims who were inveterate users of alcoholic drinks and tobacco. In a few cases these evil habits were not found in the victim personally, but in his progenitors, he inheriting the fruits of his progenitors sins. All should heed these lessons, both for their own good and that of their posterity.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE committee appointed by General Conference of 1887 to make "an annual examination of the books and management of the Herald Office, Brethren J. H. Peters, W. C. Cadwell and Joseph Luff, concluded their very thorough and complete work in that matter March 22d. Their report will appear in the General Conference minutes for 1888.

We find in the Chicago Tribune of March 26th, an article on the approaching conference at Independence, Missouri, that contains far more truth and fairness than is commonly found in correspondence of that kind. "Honor to whom honor is due."

Bro. J. M. McKiernan wrote us the 19th inst., that some of the Saints at Farmington, Iowa, have been sorely afflicted of late. He speaks in high terms of those residing at that place.

Bishop George A. Blakeslee is to be in Lamoni about the 30th inst., to tarry a few days and then go on to Independence to General Conference.

Sr. Cassandra Hendrickson, of Council Bluffs, says in a late letter that she is circulating tracts with good results, also that she had found a couple of "lost sheep" and they are likely to seek the fold gain soon. She also says Bro. Forscutt is to baptize some at Council Bluffs March 25th.

Mrs. Anna Tyng favored the citizens of Lamoni with a unique and very effective lecture on prohibition, Sunday evening the 25th ult. The methods, manner, and subject matter of her address were plain, searching, and to the point. She makes her subject practical and vital, and appeals directly to the brain and heart of the hearer. We wish her the best success possible in her good work.

"It gives me great joy and consolation to read the church papers and books, and I had rather go without some of the comforts of life than to be without them." So writes Sr. A. M. Clark, of Georgia-ville, Rhode Island.

Bro. Ira L. Browne, of Providence, Rhode Island, wrote us the 14th inst., saying: "We are striving, working and praying for the deliverance and upbuilding of Zion. Can not do without the HERALD. It is food for the hungry soul."

Sr. Lizzie Ferguson writes from Bird's Eye, Indiana, that Bro. M. R. Scott has been preaching at Riceville, near by, with fair prospects.

Bro. Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, England, wrote us the 8th inst., sending remittances for church publications and tithing, and saying: "The work here is progressing, and we have much reason to be thankful."

A. J. Vickery wrote of late from Horicon, Alabama, asking the prayers of the Saints that he may triumph over trials and difficulties and aid in building up the cause of Christ on the earth.

Unless persons sign their letters or articles we shall pay no attention to them further than to cast them aside, unless we think forgetfulness the cause, and in that event shall await further developments. Sign your documents or do not send them here. But if you choose to not have your names appear in article or letter, please so state, and your wishes will be respected.

Avoid sending us poetry of any kind, especially with obituary notices, except it is suitable, and has poetic merit. And should any fail of having their poetry published, please do not fret, for rest assured the editors will exercise their best judgment in the matter, whether to publish or not, and seek to do for the best as they see it.

Bro. J. A. Ferguson, of Bird's Eye, Indiana, writes that Elder M. R. Scott is having a fair hearing there and in that vicinity, and the citizens have invited him to come again. Bro. Ferguson writes also that John Stone, formerly an elder and editor in the Christian (Campbellite) Church, but latterly an elder in the Reorganized Church, has been arrested on charge of murder committed by him and three others, one of them a Christian preacher, twenty-four years ago. We sincerely hope the charge is not true.

During the stay of Bro. Joseph Luff at Lamoni of late he preached four excellent sermons to attentive congregations.

Bro. J. B. Prettyman wrote from Knox, Indiana, that the Saints and friends in that region had been made joyful of late by the labors of Elder Leonard Scott, the people hearing him gladly.

Mrs. Stephen Gardner, of Martinsville, Maine, wrote March 18th, that elders coming into that region would find a warm welcome, and she is most grateful that she heard and believed the gospel when preached by Elder F. M. Sheehy, though she is not yet identified with the church. Herself and others are expecting Elder Sheehy there again soon.

Recently we received a spirited letter from a lady in Brooklyn, N. Y., who by chance obtained a Voice of Warning which, when she had read, it made such a deep impression on her mind and heart that she felt already willing and desirous of uniting with the Saints at her earliest convenience. We have instructed both the lady and our ministry in that city as to what further steps are needed in the case, and we trust God's name may be glorified in gathering another into the fold of Christ.

Bro. J. C. Clapp returned the 27th ult. to Lamoni, from Farmington, Kentucky, and reports favorably of his mission in that region during the latter part of the past winter, and says he looks for further and large accessions to the church there in due time. He is cheered and encouraged with the general prospects of the church in all quarters.

Elder F. C. Warnky wrote from Independence, Missouri, March 28th, that four had been added to the branch there of late by baptism, and others were almost persuaded to unite.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Forty days in the wilderness introduced the ministry of the Son of man. Gethsemane and Calvary lay in the blessed way to the seat at the right hand of God. The Christ was made perfect by suffering. So, in his own sphere the Christian reaches the throne of full and far-reaching power over soul, on condition of heroic endurance of pain and vital sympathy."

"FEED ME WITH FOOD CONVENIENT FOR ME."—No. II.

To our mind there is but one object in the gospel, one object in the life and death of Christ, and the life and immortality which through the gospel is brought to light working in perfect harmony with this object, is intended solely for the foundation of such a character as shall be not only the demonstration of the law therein contained, but the perfect vindication in the sight of all men of the divine Law giver. Harmony and unity are the law of heaven. Jesus, the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, came not to do his own will, knew no will of his own, but was in perfect subjection to the will of the Father; not only, mark you, in respect to the death upon the cross, but in respect to his entire life. Everything which he taught, every truth which he uttered was in obedience to the commands of his Father—"I came not to do my own will, but the will of him who sent me" . . . "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." No liberty here for the will of man to be raised as a standard! No bringing of the Father to the will of the Son, neither of the Son to the will of man; but all mankind must come to the will of God, if ever they inherit eternal life. The Son never apologized for the Father's will, but simply enunciated it as his will; and in this respect too it is well that the servant be as the Master, that he knows that God requires no one to apologize for him. One mistake upon the part of God robs him of his divine character, and being divine he makes no mistakes.

Man was not placed upon this earth to remain forever, and leaving it what shall he take out of it with him? Surely there is a wise purpose in his coming here. This truth is self evident, and challenges our belief without argument. This being the case it becomes us to seek to know what that object was. We have before intimated our belief with reference to this. We brought nothing into this world with us when we came, and there is but one thing which we shall carry out with us and that is, the character we have formed while here.

Turn we now to the 12th chapter of Hebrews, and mark the exhortation there given! Who are these witnesses that like a cloud are surrounding us? These witnesses because of whose surrounding us, we are exhorted "to lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and run with patience and diligence the race set before us."

Examining the contents we find them to be of two widely different types. Part of them were those both men and women who exercised mighty faith before God. By faith they kept the passover, came up out of Egypt, and when the waves of the Red Sea stood in billow walls upon either side of them, set their feet firmly in the yawning chasm between and passed through as on dry land. Time would fail to tell one half of the mighty works wrought out by faith, one half the promises of God laid hold upon with a deathless grasp by this same mighty power. From the courts of the proudest monarchy on earth, clad in this vesture of faith, Moses steps forth, forsaking the halls of royalty, refusing to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. Women received their dead raised to life again, while others refused to accept deliverance from the most cruel tortures, that they might have part in the first resurrection. But we find not all that cloud of witnesses in this category. Suddenly we find a change passing over the face of the sky, and there appears no longer this mighty, triumphant host, but in their place a pale throng of patient sufferers, mocked and scourged, bound and imprisoned, stoned, sawn asunder, tempted, slain with the sword, wandering about in sheep-skins and goat-skins and making their abodes in dens and caves of the earth. No deliverance here! no mighty manifestation of the power of God; yet they obtained a good report through faith. Do we ask why is this? Why were not these delivered as were the others? There comes to us the answer, "God had provided some better things for them through their suffering, for without suffering they could not be made perfect." How different the discipline, yet both designed for the perfecting of that character which alone shall come forth in the first resurrection. Can latter day Israel expect to attain unto the same, but through the same refining fires? To the arms of one from the very brink of the grave are restored by the power of faith her children, while another, moaning with empty arms, hears the clods of the valley fall with a dull sound upon the casket lid which hides forever from her sight the form of her loved one, and with heart crushed and bleeding as though rent in every fiber her soul cries out, "Why are mine taken and others spared?" Far back across the centuries, echoing as it floats down to us, comes that one grand central thought: "It became him, for whom are all things and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering."

This discipline then we find has one and the self-same object and that is, the perfection of our character. The developing of that in this life which is the sole possession we shall take out of the world with us. It requires many times a clearer, purer, stronger faith, to suffer the will of God than to do his will. There is in action a certain amount of joy and buoyancy which is calculated to lift us over life's rough places which comes not to us, when with tied and fettered limbs, as it were, we wait patiently the coming of the angel to trouble the waters; and then after long watching and waiting when at last the angel comes, we are compelled to sit still and see another go into the healing waters before us. But rest assured the Father knows just what is necessary for the developing in us of those attributes calculated to transform us into the image of his Son. Said Jesus, "One is your Lord and Master, all ye are brethren." He had no favorites, knew no partiality, and nearness to him could only be obtained by assimilation to his divine nature. Just in proportion to the thoughts, purposes, and aspirations which we hold in common with our fellow men, are we drawn towards them; and by like thoughts, desires, aims and ambitions do we become assimilated to them. John is called, "The beloved," and being told "that he leant upon the Master's bosom" freely and unrebuked, we know intuitively that he was more like the Master than any other of that assembly. His character was more nearly assimilated to the divine character, that was all. Hear his utterances in later years and mark the confidence with which he speaks, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like him;"—strong positive declaration, but mark the reason of its strength and positiveness, "for we shall see him as he is." Who will see him as he is? Those who have part in the first resurrection. The first resurrection, for which those who compose that great cloud of witnesses, endured all things with patience and cheerfulness that they might have a part in it. What those men in the past could do, can be done by the men of to-day. What those women could do, can be done by these women. What those men could endure can be endured by these, and what those women could endure, these women can also endure. "And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure. * * * And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin." Is there dwelling in your soul this hope? Hope is made up of expectation and desire. Do you expect to see him at his appearing? Then awake from your slumber, arouse from your delusive dreams of idleness and lethargy, purify yourself by the aid of his Spirit, redeem the time now far spent, in the formation of such characters as shall bear the divine scrutiny and on which the reflection of Christ's own shall be so plainly stamped that the Father himself may see it there when our Elder Brother shall say, "Father, these were not ashamed of me nor of my words before men, therefore I am not ashamed to acknowledge them before Thee and thy angels."

TO MY AFFLICTED SISTER SARAH JANE.

While traveling on life's weary road,
Toward Zion's gates with heavy load,
Still look to Christ! In Him confide!
Lo! He will be thy Rock, thy Stay,
To keep thee in the narrow way;
For all thy wants He will provide.

All bright the path, and straight the way,
That leads to heaven's unclouded day,
And they who walk in it are blest;
No thorns nor briars there are found,
And peace and joy in it abound.
There's love forever, and sweet rest.

Be this thy portion, whilst thou stay
On earth, to walk in wisdom's way;
For she doth cheer life's darkest hour.
As thou didst heed, "Come unto Me!"
So as thy day thy strength shall be,
Till thou art raised through saving power.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

PLANO, March 13, 1888.

CISCO, Ill., March 2d.

Dear Sister Walker:—As we both are members of one faith, I thought I would take the liberty of writing a few introductory lines to you. I have heard your letters in the Herald, and was very much pleased with them. I have not the pleasure of beholding the beauties of this world, like others, as I have been blind from birth. I united with a branch of the church in Wayne county, West Virginia, in 1881; formerly made my home with a niece who lived there, but I have a brother here and I thought I would come and see him. I took great delight in the Herald while I was there, and miss it very much. I have not learned of any branch of the church in this state yet. I am very anxious to know where there is a branch. Will you please write to me and tell me all the particulars. I hope the church is flourishing and growing up strong. Well, I believe this is all of importance I have to write this time. I remain your sister in the one faith,

KATIE DAWSON.

We wish to call the attention of the sisters of the "Home Column" to the above letter and ask that some of the kind-hearted ones who generously offered a Herald at the time when we called for one before, will see to it that this dear afflicted one who is deprived of one of God's best gifts, has this medium of spiritual light sent to her. It is sad to walk with clouded eyes all the journey of life, but there is hope and joy to buoy up the soul; for if the spiritual vision is clear, a few brief days and the light of an endless eternity will burst upon the enraptured soul and the pain of the past will all be forgotten. Will the Herald editors kindly notice this request for information in regard to nearest branches, as we are not well advised in the matter?—ED.

BEECH LANE, Feb. 24th.

Dear Sisters:—I feel to night as though I would like to have a talk with you, for we few Saints here have been passing through an ordeal with some elders of the Evangelist persuasion. They came here to-day for the purpose of converting us; but they went away very much discouraged, for we told them we never felt more established in the faith of the Latter Day Saints than we did this afternoon after conversing with them. Oh, this glorious latter day work; what terrible rubs it does get, and how bright it does shine in consequence of the persecution! Among other things which they told us was that while out in Michigan, at Brown City, a sister Watson had convulsions and sent for all the neighbors that could be found near, and then sent for the elders; and when they laid their hands upon her she sat up in bed and was soon up, as well as ever. Of course, they said it was a sham miracle, and that sister Watson lied when she said that she was really sick; and that it was all a planned job, put up to deceive the people. We held the fort, and felt comforted and strengthened after the battle.

Bro. Samuel Brown was down here last fall holding meetings, and made many friends for the cause. He baptized one, a worthy lady, and left some others very near the kingdom, who we think will soon be baptized. We hope he will come again. He also preached at Walsingham, twelve miles from here, and baptized two at that place, and left many enquiring after the old paths. It rejoices my heart to read in our beloved Herald of the many who are enlisting in the army of the Lord. The work is rolling on, and Oh that I were possessed of unlimited means, that I might help more to roll it along! But all I can do is to give my mite, with an earnest prayer that God will bless it; and I truly believe he will. Praying that our heavenly Father will give us abundantly of his Holy Spirit, so that we can successfully fight the adversary.

Your sister in the one faith.

CHARLOTTE PEARSON.

Dear Sister Frances:—While reading the letter in Herald, March 3d, from Big Springs, West Virginia, stating how our brother Devore had to face an angry mob, with his life at stake, for the sake of preaching "this gospel of the Kingdom," my soul seemed stirred within me, and the words of John the Revelator rapidly passed before my mental vision: "I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held." Although many hundred years have passed away since John was allowed in the "Spirit" to behold them; yet still they wait in their white robes, not for their fellow servants; because they too have long since sealed their testimony with their life blood, and have taken their places at their side; but still they await for their "brethren that should be killed as they were." When all this is fulfilled, "the great day of his wrath" shall come upon the earth.

It must be a great sacrifice for man to make when he bids adieu to loved ones and home, taking his life in his hand, goes forth to battle for God and his word of testimony; yet he can count it not lost, for his reward is as sure as the rock of revelation, and can never be taken from him.

Now I would like to say a word of encouragement to the sisters whose eyes may fall upon these lines. You may sometimes feel down-hearted because you can not do some great thing for the Lord. You may possibly, to all outward appearances, be living an uneventful life, doing or saying nothing that ever stirred the heart, or brought the tear to the eye of any, yet there may be recorded in the archives of heaven deeds of love and kindness and sacrifices that tore the tender cords of your loving and trusting heart well nigh asunder. It is possible for you to make sacrifices, just as great and grand in the eyes of your Savior, no one ever knowing it except yourself and your God, as it is to seal your testimony with your blood. God knows the
