As this writer in Herald for last November 5th thinks it would be better to advance "original ideas" than to criticise others, I would say that as his avowed purpose in writing was to "stimulate thought," and as I thought differently from him in some things, and have presented those thoughts for his consideration, may not we, and the cause we love, be benefited by such interchange of thought, and "original ideas" be thus evolved? In Daniel 9:24, we learn that the "seventy weeks" were given as the time until "reconciliation for iniquity" would be made, and to "bring in everlasting righteousness, and to anoint the Most Holy." And as reconciliation was made by the atonement of Christ, and the "righteousness of God was brought in through the gospel (Rom. 3:20, 23), and the Most Holy was anointed" (Isa. 61:1; Acts 4:27: 10:38), it must have been then accomplished. The brother places the "one week" in the future yet, because it "was cut off from the seventy." The same reasoning would also place the "seven weeks" in the future, for they are also cut off from the seventy.

By careful reading of Revelations 13, I conclude that what is said as to all the world wondering after the beast," worshipping him, a mouth given him "speaking great things," and "power to continue forty and two months," (1260 years) and to "overcome the Saints," was all after the healing of his "deadly wound by a sword." So this could not refer as the brother thinks, to the year 1798 as the time of "receiving the wound." I think the wound was given to the "sixth head," the Roman Emperors, in severing the empire into ten divisions, and was so deadly that no civil power could ever rule and unite them again, and was healed by the union of church and state, and were ruled over again with an iron hand by the "woman," or Papal power for 1260 years.

The brother thinks France will be the "eighth head" of the beast? The Emperors were certainly the sixth form of government or "head" of the beast. The "seventh" was to abide but a "short space." "And the beast which was [had been] and is not, even the eighth, [not France], and is of the seven."—Rev. 17:10, 11. France had never existed at that time, but Pagan Rome had, and had ceased to be, but after that it "ascended out of the bottomless pit" and became the eighth as Papal Rome. If France shall be the "eighth," then the Papacy is only the "seventh," which can not be, for it was to continue only "a short space." (Rev. 17:10). The Papacy has continued longer than all the other heads (forms), of Roman government together. Perhaps the Exarchate of Ravenna was "the seventh," for it continued about three years (as I understand) between the emperors and the temporal power of the Papacy.

The late revelation says: "Inasmuch as there has been much discussion in the past concerning the Sabbath of the Lord," that "the Saints are to observe the first day;" but not that they are to cease defending it as the Lord's rest day. For if we can not defend it, then we are at the mercy of our Seventh day advocates. "The brother says, 'The Lord made the Sabbath at creation,' and for proof quotes Genesis 2:3, which utterly disproves the assertion, for it was because God had rested that first seventh day that he afterwards sanctified the seventh day as a Sabbath. How long after? is now the all important question? Surely not until he had revealed "the secret to his servants the prophets." Amos 3:7. When was that matter revealed? It was revealed to Israel by Moses. (See Neh. 9:12, 15). And why? Because God had brought them out of Egypt on that day. (Deut. 5:15). Moses had taught this law forty years, from the tables of stone, before this writing; and as there is an apparent discrepancy between this and Exodus, chapter 20, before God wrote the law, and Moses had written his recollection of it in a book, Exodus 24:4, as we no doubt have it in Exodus, chapter 20, the presumption is in favor of Deuteronomy 5:15 being correct. Although I doubt not it was a two-fold memorial, that of creation, and that of Israel's deliverance from Egypt. The brother says the moral law was given at the creation. Yes; but not the Sabbath law. All moral principles are included in the gospel, and existed eternally. Lucifer fell for disregarding them, yet he had no Sabbath law. The gospel was preached to Adam, but no Sabbath that we read of. It is not a moral, but only a positive precept. Paul says: "When the Gentiles which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law," (Rom. 2:14), nature teaches no certain day Sabbath. Morality is that which is naturally good.

That the Sabbath originated from Israel's deliverance from Egypt, is evident from the fact that they came out on that day—the fifteenth of the first month of lunar months. The fifteenth of the second month was the seventh day also, yet they traveled, led by Moses, God's high priest. (Ex. 16:1). But it was no Sabbath, for after six days manna fell, and they were not to go out of their place, on that first Sabbath day after it was made known by Moses.

The preceding seventh day on which they came over from Elam being no Sabbath. The institution of a rest, and the day upon which it is appointed, are different things. The seventh day was the Sabbath of the Lord God. The first day now is the Sabbath of the Lord Jesus Christ, "spoken of by him to spiritual Israel as the seventh day was to literal Israel. If Paul did not teach this in Hebrews chapter 4, pray what was he trying to teach? The rest, or Sabbath, was under consideration, and in verse three he says: "For we which have believed do enter into rest"—the present tense—or do keep a Sabbath. In verse four the seventh day is spoken of as the day God did rest. In verse seven "a certain day" is said to have been limited; and as the seventh day is under consideration, it is fair to presume that it (the day) is referred to. In verse eight we read in apparent explanation: "For if Jesus had given them rest, [the Israelites, i. e., recognized their rest day, which he did not. See John 5:18], then would he not afterwards have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest [Sabbath] to the people of God." And why? Because the "certain day" or seventh-day Sabbath being "limited," there would have been no Sabbath unless Jesus had "afterward spoken of another day" as a Sabbath, or rest. Therefore there was still a Sabbath "for the people of God"—Christ's disciples. As it was "another day" than the former Sabbath, what day was it? Verse ten says: "For he that is entered into his [Jesus] rest, he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from his." How did God cease from his? By speaking about the day he ceased from his works afterward, in Moses' day as a rest. So Jesus also ceased from his own works, the first day by "afterward" speaking of it, sanctifying it, as a rest-day for his people. Hence Paul says in verse eleven. "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief." The great sin of the Israelites was unbelief in God's law, wherein he had sanctified the seventh-day Sabbath; and Paul warns the Hebrew Saints against disregarding the Lord's day" as the Israelites had God's holy day. Compare this with all Paul's teachings against "Moses' law," teaching to forsake Moses, "neither to walk after the customs," (Acts 21:21), one of the strictest being seventh day keeping; he abiding seven days at Troas and meeting the first day with the Saints (no doubt by previous appointment) to worship. Acts chapter twenty. All harmonizing with the testimonies of the Christian fathers found in Herald of March 26th, 1887. It was called "Lord's day," Rev. 1: 10. God was Lord under the old covenant; but Jesus Christ under the new covenant. (Acts 2: 36). He is called "Lord" by all his people; and God as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." And as such he had "a day" called "the Sabbath day" in Book of Covenants, section sixty-eight, paragraph four; "Lord's day," in section fifty-nine, paragraph two. So the brother is mistaken in regard to the first day being nowhere called "the Sabbath."

If the brother will examine carefully 2 Corinthians, chapter three, he will learn that what Paul says "was glorious," he also says the same was "done away," "for if that which was "done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious." Certainly, the two laws, one "written and engraven in stone," the other "written" . . . "in fleshly tables of the heart," are here being contrasted; and "that which remaineth" does not refer to both of them. One was done away. Which one? The same thing is referred to in verse thirteen as "that which is abolished," called the "Old Testament" in verse fourteen, referred to as "when Moses is read" in verse fifteen.

Does the brother claim that we need the moon in the day time when every ray of its former light is absorbed in, and "done away" by the superior glory of the sun? in fact "is abolished?" Yet the light of the moon is just as essential for our guidance at noon-day, as the "law of sin and death," written and engraven in stones, is, during the ministration "of the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" written "in fleshly tables of the heart." It includes all that was good in the former, and is as much superior to it as the glory of the sun is to that of the moon. And as Paul says: "Old things are passed away; behold all things are become new," (2 Cor. 5: 17), harmonizing with all his other writings, especially Hebrews, chapter four, certainly including a new rest-day. "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest," and as "inhabitants of Zion, observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy," (Doc. Cov. 68: 4), preceding it with six days of labor.

As the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants are against our brother, how will the Book of Mormon agree with him? When the Nephites "Understood not the saying that old things had passed away, and that all things had become new," Jesus told them that the law that was given to Moses was fulfilled in him. "It hath an end in me; behold I am the law and the light." Book of Nephi 7: 1. This is strictly in harmony with all other Scriptures.

Notwithstanding all these scriptures are admitted by the brother he says: "I do not believe God ever abrogated the seventh day Sabbath, or that he will this side of the end of time." I hope he will reconsider this.

The brother says, "If there was (or is) no ministration of death, (the Mosaic law), or in other words, if we are not dead in trespasses and in sins by reason of the law (of Moses), why are we to be made alive by baptism?" We answer, that the gospel, wherein the righteousness of God is revealed, or what God requires of us to do, "without the law" (of Moses) Rom. 3: 21, was preached from Adam to Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and Moses. It was called "the law of faith;" (Rom. 3: 27;) "the law of the Spirit of life;" (Rom. 8: 2); and it was, and is, by that law, that sin was made known from Adam to Moses, and from Christ's day until now, and will ever be, even until the end of time. Paul explains it thus: "For until the law, [of Moses], sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed where there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses," (Rom. 5: 13, 14), because of sin or transgression of law, the law of faith, a far better law than Moses' law. And not until men utterly rejected that higher law was the "law of carnal commandments added" because of that transgression, in order to school and prepare a people in due time to again walk in the steps of that "law of faith" when it should be again presented by "the Lord himself." Jesus refers to this greatest law, namely: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This is not in the Decalogue. See "the law of the Spirit of life," the law to govern the spirit, in Matthew, chapters five, six and seven, how superior to the law of the flesh (or to govern the flesh), from Sinai.

As to what the National Reform League may accomplish, and what effect it may have upon the liberties of the Saints, I know not. But believing that "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," and that the kingdom of God will ultimately "break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms," I am quite sure that this government will never prevail against it if the members abide in God's laws.

I refer the brother to articles in Heralds for October 30th and November 27th 1886; March 26th and April 16th 1887, upon the Sabbath, which may give him some "original thoughts," if he has never carefully considered them. One thing the brother must admit; "the Sabbath" is changed from seventh to first day, (if he admits my quotations from Doctrine and Covenants), and the Almighty recognizes the change. Would he recognize a change which "Constantine and also the council of Laodicea did do [make] in fact" as the brother claims? Or one among "all things made new" by his Son, "Lord also of the Sabbath," as referred to in Hebrews fourth chapter, speaking of "another day" as a "rest to the people of God?"

LIGHT AND SHADOW.

No light e'er shines without its shadow casting,
A gloom as deep and dark the other way,
No earthly beam can make its force so lasting,
But that the night may shroud its fading ray.

No human joy without its shaded sorrow,
To spread as wide and deep in withering blight,
The fullest pleasures tinges often borrow
From coming grief which darkens like the night.

No sounds of laughter with their echoes waking
The sunlit air in surges of delight,
But there are moons to show that hearts are breaking,
As if the transient folly to requite.

The chandelier can never in its glowing Light up the splendor of the halls of pride,
But that the tallow dip is faintly showing
The ghastly squalor where the poor reside.

As at the first the dawn of the creation,
The evening and the morning made the day;
So thro' the world in every rank and station,
The light and shadow hold alternate sway.

Here tho' the shades their sombre palls are casting,
We should not droop, nor falter thro' despair,
Here tho' the frosts the sweetest buds are blasting,
Their shadows come not, for no night is there.

No night is there, no sea with restless heaving,
No candle light, nor any glare of sun,
No sin is there, nor any cause of grieving,
The evening and the morning both are one.—Sel.

Conference Minutes.

ENGLISH MISSION.

Annual conference was held in the Saints' Chapel, Langsett Road, Sheffield, England; May 19th, 20th and 21st, Elder Thomas Taylor, missionary in charge, presiding; Elder C. H. Caton, secretary. There were present brethren Thomas Bradshaw, James Gerrard, and F. Samis, of London; Brethren Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., Hy. Greenwood, James Baty and Wm. R. Armstrong, of Manchester; Brn. Thos Taylor and C. H. Caton, of Birmingham; Brn. G. S. Greenwood and G. R. Greenwood, of Stafford; Brn. W. H. Seekins, and J. Naylor, of Leeds; Brn. Hill, S. Holmes and W. Cousins, of Clay Cross; and Brn. Wm. Shepherd and Wm. Ecclestone, of Nottingham branch; also brother Joseph Matthews of Birmingham. Conference was called to order by singing hymn 679; prayer was offered by Bro. Joseph Dewsnup. The letter convening conference was called for and read. Minutes of Annual Conference of 1887, were then read and ordered signed by vote of conference. Deacons G. H. Harbor and Wm. Sharp were chosen deacons for conference. President Thomas Taylor then addressed the assembly. He expressed his great pleasure at meeting his brethren once more in conference, and to find in the main, health and strength were our portion. He was pleased to say that death had not robbed us of any of the more active ones; although there are many aged ones among us. He viewed with great pleasure the position the church occupied in the world, and the firm stand its leaders are taking against the great evils of our time, the use of tobacco and strong drink. Was very proud at being able to say that so far as those evils were concerned, we in this country have nothing to fear among the membership of the church. Being pretty much acquainted with most of the brethren in this country, he felt pleased to say that he did not know a single one who indulged in strong drink to any extent, and he felt sure that those who took only a small portion would be ready to leave it off for the good of the church, and he might say the same with regard to tobacco. The church in this country was surely growing—slowly it may be, but surely. One direction in which progress is being made is in the mutual love and good feeling among the brethren. And to his mind that is one of the most healthful signs of progress; for if we grow in love, we shall also in grace, and hence be better able to do battle against sin and error. He was present at the late conferences of the Manchester and Birmingham districts and rejoiced greatly at the spirit manifested there. At Manchester a good time was had and powerful sermons preached to a crowded room. At Birmingham, too, a very peaceful and encouraging time was had. By manifestation in gift of tongues and interpretation the Lord promised great blessing on the labor of the ministry if they would be faithful and diligent in their labors. With these many witnesses he felt greatly encouraged, and though advancing in years, felt his faith growing stronger, as also his desire to do what he could for the welfare of the church and the benefit of mankind. He exhorted the brethren to preach Christ and to live Christ-like so would they be blest, and so would light and truth be found of those who are seeking it. Having expressed his confidence in the leaders of the church, he announced the conference opened, and hoped for a good time. At the request of the brethren, the president made appointment for early prayer meeting for Sunday 19th, 7:30 a. m. to 8:30 a. m. The doxology being sung, closing prayer was offered by brother Bradshaw.

Sunday, May 20th 7:30 a. m. Prayer meeting, Bro. Henry Greenwood in charge. A very peaceful and enjoyable time was had; the spirit of love and concord was breathed in every prayer. At 10:30 a. m., preaching: Bro. Thomas Taylor, president, in charge. Hymn 618 being sung, Bro. Hy. Hoole offered prayer; hymn 529 was sung. Bro. James Gerrard, of London was the first speaker. He discoursed very ably on the Saints' hope in the gospel of Christ, and upon the basis of Psalms 17: 15, showed how all men may attain to the likeness of Christ. Bro. G. S. Greenwood, of Stafford, followed, taking for his subject Christ's promise to the Jews, John 7: 16, 17. His remarks thereon were pointed and well taken. The Spirit of the Master helped His servants and all present felt its influence and rejoiced. Hymn 479 was sung and prayer was offered by Bro. James Baty. Afternoon 2:30, fellowship meeting; Bro. C. H. Caton in charge. After singing of hymn 92 Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., offered prayer. Further singing hymn 401. Bro. Caton then read 133 Psalm and made a few remarks on the blessing of peace and unity. A very profitable time was then had in testimony song and prayer, in which quite a number of brethren and sisters took part. Great power of the Spirit was manifested though some of the brethren. Closed by singing hymn 70, and prayer by Bro. Hy. Greenwood. Evening, 6:30 preaching, Bro. Thomas Taylor in charge. Meeting opened by singing hymn 435. Prayer was offered by brother Naylor, of Leeds; hymn 743 was then sung. The first speaker was Bro. James Baty, of Manchester. Having read section one of Book of Doctrine and Covenants, he proceeded to speak of the coming forth of the gospel in this age, and in a clear and forcible manner presented the word and commandment of God. Bro. Joseph R. Greenwood, of Stafford followed with some stirring remarks on the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. There was a large attendance and the brethren were listened to, with great attention. The Lord helped his servants as all present were caused to rejoice. Closed by singing hymn 716. Benediction by Bro. Wm. Seekins.

Monday, May 21st, business session at 9 a. m. The president called the brethren to order and hymn 690 being sung, he led in prayer. District reports: (1.) Birmingham. This report was read. It shows that some progress had been made during the past year, and that as a whole the branch was in a good condition. In some parts the brethren and sisters were moving in that most important direction, Sunday School work, and are meeting with good results. The young men, too, are forming Bible classes from which good is resulting. Every effort that can be is being put forth for the spread of the gospel. Bro. C. H. Caton president, G. S. Greenwood secretary; of Birmingham district. (2.) Manchester district. The clerk read this report; It shows a good state of things in those parts of the vineyard. The best of feelings prevails among the brotherhood and membership generally. New places are being opened with fair prospects of success. The Sunday School in Manchester continues to make satisfactory progress. The Burial Society in connection with this district is in a sound financial condition. Since its organization in 1880 there have been £41 paid out on death accounts. The balance on hand December 31st, 1887, was £50, 4s 4d nearly 10s per member. Bro. Joseph Dewsnup Sen., president, Bro. James Baty secretary, Manchester district. (3.) Zion's Hope branch, London, reported by Bro. James Gerrard in person. Was stated to be in better condition both temporally and spiritually than it had been for some time. The brethren of the priesthood felt determined to put forth their best efforts in sowing the seeds of truth. It is contemplated to commence open air services this summer. The Lord bless them at their meetings and in their homes. Progress had been made since last report. Bro. James Gerrard president. Bro. C. D. Norton, of London, reported by letter. He was appointed by conference of 1887 to labor in London as circumstances permitted and to report. He stated having done what he could by way of preaching and wayside conversation to fill his calling. Circumstances had not proved so favorable for him in London as he wished and he had to leave that place. For the most part of the year he had been in Bournemouth and expected to settle there in a short time; was willing to continue his labors if sustained by the brethren. Bro. Caton, mission secretary, reported having done all he could on the record and explained some of the differences that existed between the mission and district record. He also read a copy of letter sent to Bro. H. A. Stebbins but thought it would be too late for him to insert it in his general report. If so that was mainly due to the lateness of reports coming to his hands. Hoped the brethren would be more punctual in future. He also read a copy of a letter sent to the apostles' quorum providing for the English Mission. He had expressed in that letter a request that the quorum would allow the letter to be published, but they had not done so. In reference to the minutes of annual conference of 1887 not being sent to Saints' Herald, Bro. Caton explained it was owing to his having to leave Birmingham on account of his employment. Financial report, Bro. Thomas Taylor, Bishop's agent: Presented copy of report sent to Bishop Blakslée. It was examined and ordered spread on the minutes. New business: Bro. C. H. Caton called attention to the epistle of the Twelve. Several of the brethren also spoke on the matter. It was resolved that T. Taylor, J. Dewsnup Sen., and C. H. Caton draw up a petition on this question of district presidents and forward it to the First Presidency and the Twelve; and that it be submitted to the Birmingham and Manchester districts and the London branch before it is forwarded to America. Licenses of brethren in London: The following was presented by Brn. H. Greenwood and James Baty: Resolved that the priesthood of the church in the London branches labor under the direction of the English Mission conference and that the authorities of the branches are hereby instructed to forward the licenses of the brethren to the secretary of the mission for endorsement, and that in future said licenses be endorsed at each mission conference; application for endorsement being accompanied by recommendation by vote of branch, thus entitling the brethren to labor with mission authority from conference to conference. Carried. Lapsed Motions: The following was presented by Brn. J. Baty and H. Greenwood and adopted by vote of conference: Resolved: That all business laid on the table subject to call not being called for within three conferences from the one at which it was so laid on the table, shall be considered lapsed.—viz.,—two conferences after the question was first considered and that this become a standing order. The authorities, from the First Presidency down to latest quorum organized, were sustained by vote. Bro. Thomas Taylor was sustained as president of the English Mission and Bro. C. H. Caton secretary. Speaking to the motion for sustaining Bro. Thomas Taylor as president of the English Mission there was a unanimous expression of satisfaction that he was sustained by the Twelve apostles and the General Conference of the church in America. The presidents and secretaries of Birmingham district, viz., C. H. Caton and J. S. Greenwood; also of the Manchester district, viz., Joseph Dewsnup Sen., and James Baty; along with H. Greenwood vice-president; also James Gerrard, president of the London Zion's Hope branch, along with all the ministry in this country were sustained by vote. Adjourned on motion of Brn. G. Gerrard and Thomas Bradshaw. Conference adjourned to meet again in London in 1889, time to be arranged by the president of the mission and the London brethren. Thus closed a happy time—another evidence that we are growing in all loveliness before the Lord and in each other's favor.

SOUTH-EAST ILLINOIS.

This Conference convened Sep. 15th, at Pleasant Ridge school-house in Dry Fork branch, G. H. Hilliard, in the chair. J. A. Morris, elected secretary, pro tem. Branch reports: Brush Creek, 133 members, 4 baptized, 1 received by letter, and 1 died since last report. Springerton: Report sent back for correction. Tunnel Hill: 76 members, 1 removed. Dry Fork, Parrish, and Alma had no report. Elders reports: Jasper Tousley, (Baptized 2), Henry Walker, John F. Thomas, G. H. Hilliard, I. A. Morris, I. M. Smith (Baptized 4), and T. P. Green reported in person. M. R. Brown there on Sunday but made no report. C. J. Hawkins and T. C. Kelley reported by letter. Missioning of elders. John F. Henson, Marion county and Dry Fork. Henry Walker, Brush Creek and other places. Bro. Tousley requested to labor in the District as opportunity offers. T. P. Green, and J. W. Stone, as their circumstances permit. I. A. Morris and M. R. Brown, Tennessee School House, Richland county, and Springerton. J. F. Thomas, Franklin and Johnson counties. Officers of the Aaronic priesthood to labor as they have opportunity. I. A. Morris, I. M. Smith and John F. Henson, as a committee to settle trouble in Dry Fork branch. Preaching Saturday night by Jasper Tousley, and I. A. Morris. Sunday at 11 a. m. by I. M. Smith; at 3 p. m. by G. H. Hilliard; at night by T. P. Green. Adjourned to meet at Springerton, December 15th, at ten o'clock.

KEWANEE.

Conference convened at Buffalo Prairie, Illinois, September 15th, J. W. Terry presiding, John Chisnall, sec. In the absence of regular minutes the minutes as published in the Herald were read and approved. J. W. Terry was elected president, and J. D. Jones secretary for six months. Branch reports: Kewanee 75, Millersburg 43, Buffalo Prairie 69, 2 baptized, Rock Island 16. Buffalo Prairie Sabbath School reported; report showing a flourishing condition. Bishop's agent John Chisnall reported: Balance last report $4.41, received since $45.10, received from the Bishop $25.00, total $74.51. Disbursements $65.00. Balance $9.51. The following elders reported in person: Jesse L. Adams, Isaac B. Larew, D. S. Holmes, E. T. Bryant, John Chisnall, J. W. Terry, M. T. Short, E. L. Kelly, other officials; brethren Wm. Allen, Levi Epperly and John Epperly. Elder Terry reported progress in the matter of the Canton branch and expected to visit them again. Elder Holmes was appointed to labor in the vicinity of Erie and in connection with the president at Canton. Elder Larew was appointed to labor under the direction of the president. By resolution the next conference will convene at Kewanee, Illinois, Saturday, December 15th at 10 a. m. All the elders in the district are requested to so labor as to be prepared to report to said conference in person or by letter. The president was instructed to take such help as he may need to labor with and more fully organize the White Eagle branch. The spiritual and temporal authorities of the Church were sustained. Officers present: 2 seventies, 6 elders, 2 priests, 2 teachers, 1 deacon. Preaching Saturday evening by elders Chisnall and Short. Sabbath services: fellowship meeting; preaching at 11 a. m. by E. L. Kelley of the bishopric. This was truly an interesting discourse on the law of tithing from the Savior's stand-point of "laying up treasures in heaven." Preaching in the afternoon to an interested audience by M. T. Short. Elder Kelley again occupied the stand in the evening. From a report on the subject the president and secretary were instructed to grant an elders licence to Henry Holmes. Thus ended one of the Kewanee district's most interesting conferences, only a mere synopsis of which is given in deference to the editor's wishes.

NODAWAY.

This district conference convened at Sweet Home, Missouri, September 15th and 16th, J. Thompson presiding, M. P. Madison clerk pro tem. Report of branches: Platte 76, Stanberry 12, Ross Grove 26, Eureka not reported. Report of elders: John Hawley, W. Powell, J. W. Johnson, C. Williams, R. K. Ross and J. Thomas. Report of Bishop's agent, R. K. Ross: On hand last report $52.20, paid out $50, on hand $2.50. Report of sub agent, C. C. Nelson: On hand last report $5, received since $60, paid out $65. Bro. Flory sent in his resignation as district clerk which was accepted and thanks tendered for past services. M. P. Madison was chosen clerk of the district. Priests report: A. Jensen and F. J. Curtis. Teachers: C. C. Nelson and R. F. Hill. The authorities of the church were sustained. Preaching by J. W. Johnson, John Hawley and J. Thomas. An excellent feeling was manifested and a most peaceable time was had during the conference. Adjourned to Ross Grove the Saturday and Sunday before the full moon in February, 1889.

CENTRAL KANSAS.

Conference held in the Saints' church, Scranton, Kansas, September 15th and 16th, D. Munns in the chair, J. B. Jarvis clerk pro tem. Branch reports: Fanning 33, 1 expelled; Neta-waka 41, 7 baptized; Scranton 34, 6 baptized, 1 received by letter, 2 removed, 1 died; Good Intent 25; Centralia, no report. Elders reported: W. Menzies, E. C. Brand (baptized 8) Hiram Parker, Peter Adamson (baptized 5), William Hopkins, D. Munns, J. B. Jarvis (baptized 1), P. Devlin, Alma Dodd, Frank Loft; William Gurwell by letter. Priests Joseph McDowell and W. Cairns and deacon John Patterson reported. "Whereas, Bro. C. Hersing was required by the conference held June 23d, to make acknowledgment of wrongs and unchristianlike conduct; and, Whereas, he has refused to do so, under pretense that his case is appealed; wherefore, Be it resolved that he be labored with a second time by letter by some one that this conference shall appoint, giving him thirty days in which to send in his confession of wrong and apology to the president of the district, and in the event of this not being done within the time specified, or his confession not covering the grounds, the president is hereby instructed to prefer charges against the said Bro. C. Hersing and appoint a court to try the same. "Resolved that Elder Peter Adamson labor with Bro. C. Hersing as directed." "Resolved that this conference respectfully request Elder Joseph Luff to respond at his earliest convenience to the invitation of the Good Templars of Scranton to give a temperance lecture and preach for the benefit of the church in that place. The general and district authorities were sustained. Bro. E. C. Brand was sustained as a missionary in this district. Officials present: 1 seventy, 11 elders, 2 priests' 1 deacon. A vote of thanks was tendered to the Good Templar choir for their services in singing and the use of their organ. Preaching services by E. C. Brand and a sacrament meeting at which two children were blessed, were held during the conference. Adjourned to meet at Good Intent, 10 a. m. Saturday, December 15th.

A WORD TO THE SAINTS.

BY THE BISHOPRIC.

Beloved Brethren in Christ:—It was deemed wise on the part of the last General Conference of the church to place in the active ministry a much larger force than has at any previous time been sent by the Reorganized Church; and an additional expense by this has been incurred, until the demand upon the treasury is over four thousand dollars per month. Every one must admit that this demand should individually call to our minds the question of duty on our part, severally and collectively to the law of Christ.

Have we wholly complied with the law as taught in the word of God, and yet, there is no "meat in his house?"

Without an effort on the part of the Saints at once made, many of those who were placed in the field and who have been zealously laboring to preach the word, will be compelled to return to their homes and personally aid their families. This would be a step that we can not as a body, or as individuals afford to take—it is backward—and certainly will incur the displeasure of our heavenly Father. We place the question fairly before you, then; and, in the language of the apostle ask you, "to examine yourselves, whether you are in the faith; prove your own selves."

It is our firm faith and assurance in the work of the Master, that when the Saints have zealously made an effort to keep the law and do it, that whatever is lacking will be supplied by our heavenly Father.

But the law must be kept; by doing this we prove ourselves to be "children of our Father who is in heaven."

We, therefore as ministers of the Lord and custodians of the treasure house, make known unto you the demands and necessities of the same and ask of you that with your "tithes" and other "free will offerings" you remember the condition of the work of the Lord—of need, in food, clothing, and general work—and to administer in this hour of want. "He that doeth it to the least of these my little ones, doeth it unto me."

The year just past, has, under the blessings of God, brought to us plentiful harvests and increased returns in many places for faithful and devoted labors. Let us each return to Him, to render not only praise, but a just account, and our blessings will be great and we shall rejoice greatly in the love and admiration of his truth.

We urge upon you then, brethren, prompt and faithful action in the work of compliance with the law of tithes and offerings, and hope that the New year shall not arrive and find a single member of the body who has not made an effort at least to "fulfill the law." This you can do by calling upon the Bishop's Agent in your respective districts, or by applying directly to the Bishop. But where the Saints have ready communication with the agent it is preferable to pay into their hands. The agent should not feel neglected, or aggrieved in any manner, however, if a member should prefer to send direct; this is optional with the member and we should rejoice with him in the fact that the law is kept, and that without criticism.

Ever praying that the especial blessings of our Heavenly Father may be and continue with you, and that he may aid each of you in bringing your offerings to the cause of Zion and our God, we are your co-laborers, in word and his gospel work. In behalf of the Bishopric.

G. A. BLAKESLEE.

Presiding Bishop.

DEAN STANLEY ON BAPTISM.

THERE are some strange things in an essay on Baptism written by Rev. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D. D., Dean of Westminster, England, for the Magazine "The Nineteenth Century."

In answer to the question, "What was Baptism in the apostolic age?" He replies:

"It coincided with the greatest religious change which the world had yet witnessed. Multitudes of men and women were seized with one common impulse, and abandoned, by the irresistible conviction of a day, an hour, a moment, their former habits, friends, associates, to be enrolled in a new society under the banner of a new faith. That new society was intended to be a society of 'brothers' bound by ties closer than any earthly brotherhood—filled with life and energy such as fall to the lot of none but the most ardent enthusiasts, yet tempered by a moderation, a wisdom, and a holiness such as enthusiasts have rarely possessed. It was, moreover, a society swayed by the presence of men whose words even now cause the heart to burn, and by the recent recollection of One, whom, 'not seeing they loved with love unspeakable.' Into this society they passed by an act as natural as it was expressive. The plunge into the bath of purification, long known among the Jewish nation as the symbol of a change of life, was still retained as a pledge of entrance into this new and universal communion—retained under the sanction of him into whose name they were by that solemn rite 'baptized.' In that early age the scene of the transaction was either some deep wayside spring or well, as for the Ethiopian, or some rushing river, as the Jordan, or some vast reservoir, as at Jericho or Jerusalem, whither, as in the Baths of Caracalla at Rome, the whole population resorted for swimming or washing. The water in those eastern regions, so doubly significant of all that was pure and refreshing, closed over the heads of the converts, and they rose into the light of heaven, new and altered beings. It was natural that on such an act were lavished all the figures which language could furnish to express the mighty change: 'Regeneration,' 'Illumination,' 'Burial,' 'Resurrection,' 'A new creation,' 'Forgiveness of sins,' 'Salvation.' Well might the apostle say, 'Baptism doth even now save us,' even had he left his statement in its unrestricted strength to express what in that age no one could misunderstand. But no less well was he led to add, as if with a prescience of coming evils, 'Not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but—the answer of a good conscience towards God.'—1 Peter 3: 21.

Of its origin and significance, he states:

"Baptism is the oldest ceremonial ordinance that Christianity possesses; it is the only one which is inherited from Judaism. It is thus interesting as the only ordinance of the Christian church which equally belonged to the merciful Jesus and the austere John. Out of all the manifold religious practices of the ancient law—sacrifices, offerings, temple, tabernacle, scapegoat, sacred vestments, sacred trumpets—he chose this one alone; the most homely, the most universal, the most innocent of all. He might have chosen the peculiar Nazarine custom of the long tresses and the rigid abstinence by which Samson and Samuel and John had been dedicated to the service of the Lord. He did nothing of the sort. He might have continued the strange, painful, barbarous rite of circumcision. He, or at least, his Apostles rejected it altogether. He might have chosen some elaborate ceremonial like the initiation into the old Egyptian and Grecian mysteries. He chose instead what every one could understand. He took what, at least in Eastern and Southern countries, was the most delightful, the most ordinary, the most salutary, of social observances.

1. By choosing water and the use of the bath, he indicated one chief characteristic of the Christian religion. Whatever else the Christian was to be, Baptism*—the use of water—showed that he was to be clean and pure, in body, soul and spirit; clean even in body. Cleanliness is a duty which some of the monastic communities of Christendom have despised, and some have even treated as a crime. But such was not the mind of Him who chose the washing with water for the prime ordinance of his followers. "Wash and be clean," was the prophet's admonition of old to the Syrian whom he sent to bathe in the river Jordan. It was the text of the one only sermon by which a well-known geologist of this country was known to his generation. "Cleanliness next to godliness" was the maxim of the great religious prophet of England in the last century, John Wesley. Every time that we see the drops of water poured over the face in Baptism, they are signs to us of the cleanly habits which our Master prized when he founded the rite of Baptism, and when, by his own baptism in the sweet soft stream of the rapid Jordan, he blessed the element of water for use as the best and choicest of God's natural gifts to man, in his thirsty, weary, wayworn passage through the dust and heat of the world. But the cleanness of the body was in this ordinance meant to indicate yet more strongly the perfect cleanness, the unsullied purity of the soul; or, as the English Baptismal Service quaintly expresses it, the mystical washing away of sin,—that is, the washing, cleansing process that effaces dark spots of selfishness and passion in the human character, in which, by nature and by habit, they have been so deeply ingrained."

*This is the meaning of the frequent reference to "water" in St. John's writings. As in John vi. 54, the phrases "eating" and "drinking," "flesh and blood" refer to the spiritual nourishment of which the Eucharist, never mentioned in the Fourth Gospel, was the outward expression, so in John iii. 5, the word "water" refers to the moral purity symbolized by Baptism, which in like manner (as a universal institution) is never mentioned in that Gospel.

A secondary meaning:

"Baptism" was not only a bath, but a plunge—an entire submersion in the deep water, a leap into the rolling sea or the rushing river, where for a moment the waves close over the bather's head, and he emerges again as from a momentary grave; or it was the shock of a shower-bath—the rush of water passed over the whole person from capacious vessels, so as to wrap the recipient as within the veil of a splashing cataract.* This was the part of the ceremony on which the Apostles laid so much stress. It seemed to them like a burial of the old former self and the rising up again of the new self. So St. Paul compared it to the Israelites passing through the roaring waves of the Red Sea, and St. Peter to the passing through the deep waters of the flood. "We are buried," said St Paul, "with Christ by baptism at his death; that, like as Christ was raised, thus we also should walk in the newness of life."† Baptism, as the entrance into the Christian society, was a complete change from the old superstitions or restrictions of Judaism to the freedom and confidence of the gospel. It was a complete change from the idolatries and profligacies of the old heathen world to the light and purity of Christianity.

* See Dr. Smith's History of Christian Antiquities, vol. i. p. 169.

There is now no disappearance as in a watery grave. There is now no conscious and deliberate choice made by the eager convert at the cost of cruel partings from friends, perhaps of a painful death. It is but the few drops sprinkled, a ceremony undertaken long before or long after the adoption of Christianity has occurred. But the thing signified by the ancient form still keeps before us that which Christians were intended to be. This is why it was connected both in name and in substance with Conversion. In the early Church the careful distinction which later times have made between Baptism, Regeneration, Conversion and Repentance did not exist. They all meant the same thing. In the Apostolic age they are, as we have seen, absolutely combined with Baptism. There was then no waiting till Easter or Pentecost for the great reservoir when the catechumens met the Bishop—the river, the wayside well were taken the moment the convert was disposed to turn, as we say, the new leaf in his life. And even afterwards, in the second century, Regeneration (paliggenesia), which gradually was taken to be the equivalent of Baptism was, in the first instance, the equivalent of Repentance and Conversion.

"Baptism," says the English Baptismal Service, "doth represent unto us our Christian profession, which is to follow Christ and to be made like unto him." This is the element added to the Baptism of John. In the first two characteristics of Baptism which we have mentioned, water is signifying cleanliness of body and mind, and immersion as indicating the plunge into a new life, the Baptism of John and the Baptism of Christ are identical. John's Baptism, no less than Christian Baptism, was the Baptism of purity, of regeneration, "of remission of sins."—Luke 3: 3.

The change in mode of Baptism:

For the first thirteen centuries the almost universal practice of Baptism was that of which we read in the New Testament, and which is the very meaning of the word "baptize"—that those who were baptized were plunged, submerged, immersed into the water. That practice is still as we have seen, continued in Eastern churches. In the Western Church it still lingers amongst Roman Catholics in the solitary instance of the cathedral of Milan, amongst Protestants in the austere sect of the Baptists. It lasted long into the Middle Ages. Even the Icelanders, who at first shrank from the water of their freezing lakes, were reconciled when they found that they could use the warm water of the Geysers. And the cold climate of Russia has not been found an obstacle to its continuance throughout that vast empire. Even in the Church of England it is still observed in theory. Elizabeth and Edward the Sixth were both immersed. The rubric in the Public Baptism for Infants enjoins that, unless for special cases, they are to be dipped, not sprinkled. But in practice it gave way since the beginning of the seventeenth century. With the few exceptions just mentioned, the whole of the Western Churches have now substituted for the ancient bath the ceremony of sprinkling a few drops of water on the face. The reason of the change is obvious. The practice of immersion, apostolic and primitive as it was, was peculiarly suitable to the Southern and Eastern countries for which it was designed, and particularly unsuitable to the tastes, the convenience, and the feelings of the countries of the North and West. Not by any decree of Council or Parliament, but by the general sentiment of Christian liberty, this great change was effected. Not beginning till the thirteenth century, it has gradually driven the ancient Catholic usage out of the whole of Europe. There is no one who would now wish to go back to the old practice. It had no doubt the sanction of the Apostles and of their Master. It had the sanction of the venerable Churches of the early ages, and of the sacred countries of the East. Baptism by sprinkling, was rejected by the whole ancient Church, (except in the rare case of deathbeds or extreme necessity) as no baptism at all. Almost the first exception was the heretic Novatian. It still has the sanction of the powerful religious community which numbers amongst its members such noble characters as John Bunyan, Robert Hall and Havelock. In a version of the Bible which the Baptist Church has compiled for its own use in America, where it excels in numbers all but the Methodists, it is thought necessary, and on philological grounds it is quite correct, to translate John the Baptist by John the Immerser. It has even been defended on sanitary grounds. Sir John Floyer dated the prevalence of consumption to the discontinuance of baptism by immersion.* But speaking generally, the Christian civilized world has decided against it. It is a striking example of the triumph of common sense and convenience over the bondage of form and custom. Perhaps no greater change has ever taken place in the outward form of Christian ceremony with such general agreement. It is a greater change even than that which the Roman Catholic Church has made in administering the Lord's Supper, in the bread without the wine. For that was a change which did not affect the thing that was signified; whereas the change from immersion to sprinkling has set aside the larger part of the Apostolic language regarding Baptism, and has altered the very meaning of the word. But whereas the withholding of the cup produced the long and sanguinary war of Bohemia, and has been one of the standing grievances of the Protestants against the Roman Catholic Church, the withdrawal of the ancient rite of immersion, decided by the usage of the whole ancient Church to be essential to the sacrament of Baptism, has been, with the exception of the insurrection of the Anabaptists of Munster, adopted almost without a struggle. It shows the wisdom of not imposing the customs of other regions and other climates on those to whom they are not congenial. It shows how the spirit which lives and moves in human society can override even the most sacred ordinances. It remains an instructive example of the facility and silence with which, in matters of form, even the greatest changes can be effected without any serious loss to Christian truth, and with great advantage to Christian solemnity and edification. The substitution of sprinkling for immersion must to many at the time, as to the Baptists now, have seemed the most dangerous innovation. Now, by most Catholics and by most Protestants, it is regarded almost as a second nature.

In the Apostolic age, and in the three centuries which followed, it is evident that, as a general rule, those who came to baptism came in full age, of their own deliberate choice. We find a few cases of the baptism of children; in the third century we find one case of the baptism of infants. Even amongst Christian households the instances of Chrysostom, Gregory Nazianzen, Basil, Ephrem of Edessa, Augustine, Ambrose, are decisive proofs that it was not only not obligatory, but not usual. They had Christian parents, and yet they were not baptized till they reached maturity. The liturgical service of Baptism was framed entirely for full-grown convert, and is only by considerable adaptation applied to the case of infants. Gradually, however, the practice spread, and after the fifth century, the whole Christian world, East and West, Catholic and Protestant, Episcopal and Presbyterian (with the single exception of the sect of the Baptists before mentioned), have baptized children in their infancy. Whereas, in the early ages, adult baptism was the rule, and infant baptism* the exception; in later times infant baptism is the rule, and adult baptism the exception.

But there is a better side to the growth of this practice which, even if it did not mingle in its origin, is at least the cause of its continuance. It lay deep in early Christian feeling that the fact of belonging to a Christian household consecrated every member of it. Whether baptized or not, the Apostle (1 Cor. 7: 14) urged that, because the parents were holy, therefore the children were holy. They were not to be treated as outcasts; they were not to be treated as heathens; they were to be recognized as part of the chosen people. This passage, whilst it is conclusive against the practice of Infant Baptism in the Apostolic age, is a recognition of the legitimate reason and permanent principle on which it is founded.

Such are some of the conclusions to which the wise and learned Dean of Westminster has come concerning the rite of Baptism, as instituted by the Savior of men in whose name and in whose teachings only men are to have the promise of eternal life made in Scripture fulfilled unto them. Which is the more reasonable thing to do, accept the rite as instituted of Christ, or as dictated by the taste and convenience of men?

SAYINGS OF JOHN C. WHITMER.

THE following extract is from a letter dated at Richmond, Missouri, September 13th, 1888, signed by Andrew Jenson, Edward Stevenson and Joseph S. Black, presumably elders of the Brighamite church, for we clipped the extract from a late Deseret News. From this it would appear that the so-called "Church of Christ" began its existence about 1875-6, (twelve or thirteen years ago), but the facts, as furnished by William E. McLellin and others, prove that it began in 1846 and 1847, (over forty years ago), for about 1846, William E. McLellin and others at Kirtland, Ohio, claimed to organize the Church of Christ, baptizing and ordaining each other February 13th, 1847; and September the 8th following, this same William E. McLellin, at Far West, Missouri, baptized, confirmed and ordained David Whitmer, John Whitmer, Jacob Whitmer and Hiram Page, the two latter to be High Priests, John Whitmer "to be counsellor to David in the First Presidency of the church. And then," says William E. McLellin: "We stepped forward and all laid hands upon David and re-ordained him to all the gifts and callings to which he had been appointed through Joseph Smith in the general assembly of the inhabitants of Zion in July, 1834." See The Ensign of Liberty, published by Mr. McLellin the same year, also the Saints' HERALD, June 4th, 1887, pages 355-6. Herein is manifestly the times of the origin of this so-called "Church of Christ."

The "gifts and callings" conferred by and through Joseph Smith upon David Whitmer "in [what Mr. McLellin falsely claims] the general assembly of the inhabitants of Zion in July, 1834," may be seen by the following:

"On the third of July, [1834], the High Priests of Zion assembled in Clay county, [Missouri], and I [Joseph Smith] proceeded to organize a High Council, agreeable to revelation given at Kirtland, for the purpose of settling important business that might come before them which could not be settled by the Bishop and his council. David Whitmer was elected President and W. W. Phelps and John Whitmer Assistant Presidents."—History of Joseph Smith, Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 1109; also Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 109.

By what authority did William McLellin baptize and ordain David Whitmer to any office, seeing himself had been dis-fellowshipped by the Bishop's Court, in Far West, May 11th, 1838, David Whitmer having been dis-fellowshipped April 13th—just twenty-eight days before! (See Millennial Star, vol. 16, pages 133, 134 and 151.) This baptism and ordination was irregular and plainly unlawful; yet it was the origin and basis of this so-called "Church of Christ."

This clipping is quite valuable for its historical items in respect to the witnesses to the Book of Mormon:

We visited the new cemetery, situated a short distance west of town, where the mortal remains of the last witness of the Book of Mormon now slumber in the dust. We also visited the old cemetery about half a mile north of Richmond Center, where rest the remains of the senior Peter Whitmer (in whose house the church was organized) and his wife together with their son Jacob (one of the eight witness) and Oliver Cowdery. A fine marble tombstone designates the resting place of Jacob Whitmer, but the grave of Oliver was entirely hid among and overgrown with weeds. While we found the new cemetery in a first class condition we found the old one entirely neglected and marble monuments, head stones and fences scattered promiscuously on the ground as the cyclone left it ten years ago. Standing over the graves of Oliver and Jacob we instinctively uncovered our heads, uttered a silent prayer and passed on with heavy hearts. How we should have appreciated a short interview with him who was blessed with the ministration of angels, the Savior, Moses, Elijah, the prophet and other holy beings!

Toward evening we went on foot about one and a half miles south of Richmond to the house of John C. Whitmer, the only living son of Jacob Whitmer. He is the presiding elder of the so-called Whitmerites and is a respectable farmer, fifty-three years of age. He received us kindly and gave us some information that is highly appreciated in regard to the eight witnesses of the Book of Mormon and others. His uncles Christian and Peter Whitmer both died as faithful elders of the church in Clay county, Missouri, the first named November 27th, 1835 and the latter September 22d, 1836. Both bore faithful and unflinching testimonies to the last of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Jacob Whitmer died in Richmond April 21st, 1856, aged 56 years, 2 months and 26 days. John Whitmer died in Far West, Caldwell county, Missouri, in 1878 and Hiram Page died on a farm about fourteen miles west of Richmond, near the boundary line of Clay county, August 12th, 1852.

John C. Whitmer testified as follows concerning the witnesses:

"I was closely connected with Hiram Page in business transactions and other matters, he being married to my aunt. I knew him at all times and under all circumstances to be true to his testimony concerning the divinity of the Book of Mormon. I was also at the deathbed of Oliver Cowdery in 1850, and I heard him speak to my uncle David (Whitmer) and say: 'Brother David, be faithful to our testimony to the Book of Mormon, for we know that it is of God and that it is verily true.' He then closed his eyes in death. My father, Jacob Whitmer, was always faithful and true to his testimony to the Book of Mormon, and confirmed it on his deathbed. Of my Uncle John (Whitmer) I will say that I was with him a short time before he died at Far West, Missouri, when he confirmed to me what he had done so many times previously that he knew the Book of Mormon was true. I was also with Uncle David (Whitmer), who died here in January last, and heard him bear his last testimony in the presence of many witnesses whom he had called together for the occasion. He solemnly declared that the record of the Nephites, as he always called the Book of Mormon, was of God, and his testimony concerning it true."

John C. Whitmer then gave us in substance the following particulars in regard to the church over which he presides: He was baptized by his uncle, David Whitmer, September 15th, 1875, and by him also ordained an Elder January 28th, 1876, receiving instructions to go forth and preach the Gospel as it had been taught by Joseph the Prophet and organize a new church according to the original pattern, in which he (John C.) was to be the first Elder. In obedience to this he immediately commenced his labors and succeeded in baptizing the first three individuals on the following February 17th, (1876). Others followed and soon the new church commenced to hold meetings and completed their organization as far as their numbers would permit them. They now claim to have about one hundred members, all told. Some of these reside in and around Richmond, others in Independence, Jackson county, while the remainder live in a more scattered condition in Iowa, Kansas, Illinois, Tennessee, California and other states. The few around Richmond and as many of the others who can conveniently come together hold meetings every third Sunday in a small school-house situated about a mile and a half south of Richmond in the school district where John C. Whitmer, their president, resides. The Whitmerites, or as they call themselves the Church of Christ, believe only a part of the revelations given through Joseph Smith the Prophet, but they take the Book of Mormon and the New Testament as their standard and rule of faith. Anything that agrees with the teachings of these two books they accept, and everything that conflicts therewith they reject. They have no High Priests in their church as they do not believe in that order of the Priesthood, but they have a few Elders, Priests and Teachers. They have no Deacons, but believe in the order, and would also ordain Apostles and Seventies, if the number of their members would allow it, but there being so few of them they could not possibly find element enough to ordain twelve Apostles, say nothing about seventy men wherewith to make a quorum of Seventies. Elder Stevenson suggested that the Whitmerites and Hedrickites unite so as to make a stronger body; whereupon Mr. Whitmer said he expected to visit Independence in a few weeks, when he hoped to be able to baptize all the Hedrickites into his church.

POLYGAMY IS DOOMED.

WE present below a clipping from the Chicago Times which contains the majority report of the Utah Commission Messrs Godfrey, Williams and Thomas are well informed in regard to the political situation and intentions of the Utah Mormons, and when they recommend that the admission of Utah to statehood be deferred until an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting polygamy is made, it is clear that polygamy is indeed doomed.

The majority report of the Utah commission, signed by G. L. D. Godfrey, A. B. Williams, and Arthur L. Thomas, recommends that Utah be not admitted to the union until such time as the Mormon people shall manifest by their future acts that they have abandoned polygamy in good faith, and not then until an amendment shall have been made to the constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy. It says the convention which adopted the proposed constitution upon which an appeal was made to congress for admission to the union was held without authority from any proper source. It is further asserted that the proposed constitution is silent with respect to the crime of polygamy, and the commissioners are of the opinion that the government can not afford to surrender the great advantage which it now holds and which has been secured at much expense and trouble. They also think that no harm can result from delay in the admission of the territory. It is also stated in the report that the democratic and republican parties of Utah, in their conventions recently held, indorsed the position taken in the majority report. The report concludes that the Mormon Church is committed to a policy which, if successful, will prove destructive to the public-school system in Utah. During the year there have been eight indictments for polygamy and four convictions, 304 indictments for unlawful co-habitation and 326 convictions.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH left Lamoni on Tuesday the 2d inst., for Independence, Missouri, whence he expects to go to Missouri Valley, Iowa, to attend the annual Reunion which opens October 6th. Brn. W. W. Blair, A. H. Smith, J. R. Lambert, M. H. Forscutt and R. M. Elvin will leave for the same place in a few days. Besides those mentioned Bro. A. M. Chase, wife and mother have gone and will doubtless be followed by others of the Saints. All appearances indicate that the Reunion of this year will be a very successful and enjoyable one.

Bro. A. L. Whiteaker wrote from Wheatville, Wisconsin, September 23d, that Brn. M. T. Short and Pender had been laboring in that portion of the field and that their labors had been well received and was productive of good. Several had been baptized and a good hearing accorded by others. The brethren had left for other places in the same field.

We present elsewhere a letter from Sr. Mary Eaton, of Independence, Missouri, which we commend to the readers of the HERALD. The letter was sent to the Kansas City, Missouri, Star and was declined by that paper, so she sent it to us for insertion.

From the October 3d issue of the Chicago Tribune we learn that the Supreme Court of Nevada has decided that the anti-Mormon test oath, passed by the last Legislature of that state, is unconstitutional. This is as it should be, as the oath took the form of a sectarian ban, inasmuch as it prohibited a Mormon from voting whether he be a believer in or a strenuous opposer of polygamy.

Sr. Mary Anway in a late letter mentions the labors of Bro. G. E. Deuel in the vicinity of Greensburg and Kingsley, Kansas. A few meetings were held, but election matters and heavy storms prevented all but a few of the people from attending.

Bro. R. J. Anthony writes a cheering letter from Albion, Idaho, under date September 25th. He thinks that prospects for the Utah Mission were never as bright as now and expects ere long to see an abundant harvest for the many years of toil by the elders of the Reorganization.

Bro. J. C. Crabb has lately organized a branch of fifteen members at Kingsley, Iowa.

Bro. John Erter, of Antwerp, Ohio, writes that Brn. C. Scott, H. Rathbun, and B. V. Springer had been laboring in that vicinity for about two weeks.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Walter Menzies writes from Coal Creek, Colorado:

"We expect Bro. Caffall here soon to organize a branch. We are seven in number, and meet every Sunday. A few others attend our meetings who say they will be baptized when the elder comes. We hope and pray for an ingathering here. This is truly a hard mission."

Bro. J. J. Cornish says in a late card from Farwell, Michigan:

"On the 26th two were baptized and on the 27th six more. Great threats among the opposers,—'Tar and feather them! Drum them out! They will get the eggs to-night,' etc. The work is onward here."

Bro. J. A. Currie, Jr., writing from Pipe Creek, Texas, September 25th, says:

"Baptized five to-day. One more made application since I last wrote. Our opponents are going to send for another man to meet us."

Bro. B. V. Springer writes from Ray, Indiana, September 29th:

"I am on the move doing what I can under the peculiar circumstances under which I labor. I go to Ohio October 5th to baptize. Hold forth here two or three nights."

Bro. William Culbertson writes from Chelsea, Nebraska:

"I baptized three on September 30th. The work is onward here and we are having good meetings. I expect to work in the gospel cause more in the future, to sound the gospel trumpet long and loud. If it is my Master's will."

Bro. Duncan Campbell writes September 24th, from Milan, Missouri:

"Bro. Henry Grim and I have held nine or ten meetings south of Humphrey's with gratifying results. We had two good meetings here yesterday. We start to-day for Wintersville, to try what can be done there."

Bro. Noah N. Cooke, of 2730 Rutger street, St. Louis, wrote September 23d, that their chapel was nearly completed, and they hoped to be successful in finishing it in time to dedicate it at their October conference. He says:

"Our meetings are more than good of late, the Master is with us by his Spirit. The work is looking brighter than for some years. Some are aiming high, to obey celestial law and attain to celestial glory. I was over to see Bro. Wm. H. Hazzeldine, to-day. He is very feeble, tottering with age; is now in his eighty-third year. I found him firm in the faith of the gospel, and ready to give a reason for the hope within him; willing to do anything for the work."

Bro. Hazzeldine is one of the old time defenders of the faith, and is blessed of God with an abiding testimony unto life everlasting.

Sr. S. A. Moore, of Lincoln, Nebraska, writes:

"We scatter the Heralds around us but the people are deaf and blind to its truths and never request another number to read. But I tie up a few in a parcel and drop it in the street and some one is sure to pick it up who will perhaps read them. Why is it that Lincoln is not visited by the ministry?"

BURNED BY GASOLINE.

A SAD accident occurred at Lamoni on Sunday, September 30th, by which sister Eunice Allen and Mrs. H. H. Wheeling were severely injured. The former was filling the reservoir of a gasoline stove when it ignited from a fire in a cooking stove close by and exploded, burning her very severely on her face and body; the latter coming to her assistance was painfully burned in face, neck and hands. Sr. Allen's life was despaired of for some days, but she is now apparently recovering. The injuries of both were very painful, and enlisted the sympathies of the entire community.

Bro. R. M. Elvin drew up a subscription list to which the Saints and friends in the vicinity contributed liberally; fifty-five dollars and fifty cents being paid in to date which will be divided between the sufferers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—What is the sin against the Holy Ghost?

Ans.—"Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men, And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."—Matt. 12:31, 32.

"For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame."—Heb. 6:4-6.

"Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made."—Doc. and Cov. 76:4.

The above texts explain the question.

2.—What is meant by "the elect" and "the elected?"

A.—Those specially chosen.

2.—Where are the spirits of the pure, innocent, and perfected Saints destined to dwell?

A.—In paradise. See Luke 23:43; Rev. 2:7; 2 Cor. 12:4; with Phil 1:21-25; 2 Cor. 4:16-18, and 5:1-8; John 13:36, 37; Acts 7:56, 57, etc.

2.—Are there classes of angels?

A.—Yes.

2.—Are angels disembodied spirits?

A.—The angels who "minister for those who shall be heirs of salvation" are evidently persons who were once on this earth, who were either translated or resurrected.

Joseph the Seer said in June, 1839, "An angel has flesh and bones."—Millennial Star 17:312. He further said February 9th, 1843:

"There are two kinds of beings in heaven—viz., angels who are resurrected personages, having bodies of flesh and bones. For instance, Jesus said, 'Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.' The spirits of just men made perfect—they who are not resurrected, but inherit the same glory. When a messenger comes, saying he has a message from God, offer him your hand, and request him to shake hands with you. If he be an angel, he will do so, and you will feel his hand. If he be the spirit of a just man made perfect, he will come in his glory; for that is the only way he can appear. Ask him to shake hands with you, but he will not move, because it is contrary to the order of heaven for a just man to deceive; but he will still deliver his message. If he be the Devil as an angel of light, when you ask him to shake hands, he will offer you his hand, and you will not feel anything: you may therefore detect him. These are three grand keys whereby you may know whether any administration is from God."

And April 2d, 1843, he said:

"When the Savior shall appear we shall see him as he is. We shall see that he is a man like ourselves; And that same sociality which exists among us here, will exist among us there, only it will be coupled with eternal glory, which glory we do not now enjoy. The appearing of the Father and the Son, in that verse, (John 14:23) is a personal appearance; and the idea that the Father and the Son dwell in a man's heart, is an old sectarian notion, and is false. In answer to the question, 'Is not the reckoning of God's time, angel's time, prophet's time and man's time according to the planet on which they reside?' I answer, yes. But there are no angels who minister to this earth but those who do belong or have belonged to it. The angels do not reside on a planet like this earth; but they reside in the presence of God, on a globe like a sea of glass and fire, where all things for their glory are manifest—past, present and future and are continually before the Lord. The place where God resides is a great Urim and Thummim. This earth, in its sanctified and immortal state, will be made like unto crystal and will be a Urim and Thummim to the inhabitants who dwell thereon, whereby all things pertaining to an inferior kingdom, or all kingdoms of a lower order, will be manifest to those who dwell on it; and this earth will be Christ's. Then the white stone mentioned in Revelations 2:17, will become a Urim and Thummim to each individual who receives one, whereby things pertaining to a higher order of kingdoms, even all kingdoms, will be made known; and a white stone is given to each of those who come into the celestial kingdom, whereon is a new name written, which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it. The new name is the key word.

"I prophesy, in the name of the Lord God, that the commencement of the difficulties which will cause much bloodshed previous to the coming of the Son of Man will be in South Carolina. It may probably arise through the slave question. This a voice declared to me, while I was praying earnestly on the subject, December 25th, 1832. I was once praying very earnestly to know the time of the coming of the Son of Man, when I heard a voice repeat the following: 'Joseph, my son, if thou livest until thou art eighty-five years old, thou shalt see the face of the Son of Man: therefore let this suffice, and trouble me no more on this matter.' I was left thus without being able to decide whether this coming referred to the beginning of the millennium or to some previous appearing, or whether I should die and thus see his face. I believe the coming of the Son of Man will not be any sooner than that time. Whatever principles of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection; and if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come. There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated; and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also: but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit. Were it not so, the Holy Ghost could not dwell in us. A man may receive the Holy Ghost, and it may descend upon him and not tarry with him." See Millennial Star, vol. 20.

2.—Are all the righteous to be resurrected?

A.—Yes; resurrected, "quicken" or "changed."

"But I would not have you to be ignorant brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—1 Thess. 4:13-18.

"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15:50-53.

"And there shall be silence in heaven for the space of half an hour, and immediately after shall the curtain of heaven be unfolded, as a scroll is unfolded after it is rolled up, and the face of the Lord shall be unveiled; and the saints that are upon the earth, who are alive, shall be quickened, and be caught up to meet him. And they who have slept in their graves, shall come forth; for their graves shall be opened, and they also shall be caught up to meet him in the midst of the pillar of heaven: they are Christ's, the first fruits: they who shall descend with him first, and they who are on the earth and in their graves, who are first caught up to meet him; and all this by the voice of the sounding of the trump of the angel of God."—Doc. and Cov. 85:27.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—DELINQUENT SUBSCRIBERS.

By request of the Business Manager we again call attention to the list of outstanding balances due the Herald Office, on account of books purchased and subscriptions for the HERALD, HOPE and other publications.

The business interests of the publishing department are suffering on account of the long lists of delinquents who fail to give even ordinary attention to the payment of these obligations.

The Board of Publication in their endeavors to supply the Saints with church literature containing the good news of the spread of the work and the manifestations of divine favor upon the Lord's people need to be promptly and properly sustained in order to continue this good work, and to publish it to the world. In this they should be heartily and faithfully sustained. Promptness in payment insures success in this work; while long and continued failure so to do greatly retards and hinders it; often making the undertaking very burdensome, for means must be had to continue it.

The publishing department has lost, and is still losing large amounts by being compelled to drop long lists of accounts which have never been paid.

Some who are in arrears notify us from time to time of their intentions to pay, sending part of the amount as it comes to them, thus showing that they remember their obligations. With such the Board is willing to be, and has been, lenient.

But a long list of others is carried who seemingly fail to consider that money due the Herald Office should be paid as fully and as promptly as any other debt; or that it is a sacred obligation.

The publishing department is an important branch of the Master's service, and all should see that in their stewardship they deal justly with it. Thus all may become helpers in the good work. None need be a hindrance, nor should they be such. No offense is intended in this, and none should be taken. All can see that the subject requires "plainness of speech."

—John Dryden.

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING FOR GIRLS.

IF I were able I would change the public sentiment so radically that no girl should be considered well educated, no matter what her accomplishments, until she had learned a trade, a business, or a profession. There would then be fewer fathers and brothers tolling like galley-slaves to support healthy and vigorous human beings in stagnating idleness—idle for no earthly reason save that God has made them women.

Lack of technical and industrial training not only makes dependent and inefficient women of our daughters; it puts them in fearful peril morally. Indolence is always demoralizing. It ruins health, destroys beauty, and enfeebles the will. "Out of 2,000 fallen women in the city of New York, 1,880 had been brought up to do nothing; 525 pleaded destitution as the cause of their sad life." In view of these facts, which might be multiplied indefinitely, ought we not to rid ourselves of the inherited social idea that it is a shameful thing for young women to be taught to support themselves by honorable industry?

In the early stage of the late war, before the Government had organized its various departments, I saw a body of soldiers march from the St. Louis camp of rendezvous, and embark on boats to go down the Mississippi. Among them were companies without uniforms and without equipments. The men wore the citizens' dress in which they had enlisted. It was explained that they had been ordered to the front immediately after enlistment, in advance of the arrival of their uniforms and guns, to maintain the morale of the army, which was unfavorably affected by the mustering out of large numbers who had only enlisted on short terms of service. Uniforms, guns, and the all-important drill would be given these raw recruits, we were told, when they reached their destination.

Two or three weeks later I met some of these very unequipped men, still without uniforms, on board a hospital boat, steaming slowly up the river, en route for the superb general hospitals of St. Louis. Some of the poor fellows were so rent with shot and shell, that their own mothers would not have recognized them. I heard their pitiful story from many lips, but it was always the same story. Hardly had these green boys in the clothing of civilians reached their regiments, when they were surprised by the enemy, and without guns or an hour's drill, they were plunged into a sharp, disastrous engagement. Shot at, shot down, they could make no defense; for they had not been supplied with the munitions of war, nor taught how to use them.

It is as wasteful, as unwise, as inhuman, to send our delicately-nurtured and tenderly-reared young daughters out from the home to fight the battle of life without a preparation for it—without an equipment in the form of an industrial and business education, as it was to send these hapless young fellows to fight the enemy without drill and without guns. The results are more disastrous, and reach farther. Our daughters are not shot down like the untrained military recruit; they live, but with no individual grasp on life. They become anxious concerning the future, with no power to provide for it. At the mercy of circumstances which they know not how to control, victims of petty beliefs, old abuses, and respectable tyrannies, they drop into mental ill health, and bodily disease comes with it. Or they marry and make faithful, loving, lovely wives to admiring husbands. But the husband dies. He was living on a salary, which ceases with his life. His young widow has one or more children. What is she to do? Or the husband may drop into permanent invalidism, or into bankruptcy, or into dissolute habits. If the young wife has not been in part prepared for such emergencies by previous training, her lot is hard indeed.

"Oh, you can't prepare girls to meet such emergencies," said an eminent clergyman, in whose parlors this topic was being earnestly discussed. "Your must prepare them to be good wives and mothers, and risk the rest. There you will have to leave them, and trust in God."

Our trust must be in God, to be sure. No one disputes that. And yet I have the deepest respect for the advice that Oliver Cromwell gave his soldiers: "Trust in God, and keep your powder dry!"—Sel.

"HE KNOWETH ALL"

The twilight falls, the night is near;
I fold my work away,
And kneel to One who bends to hear
The story of the day.

The old, old story; yet I kneel
To tell it at Thy call;
And cares grow lighter as I feel
That Jesus knows them all.

Yes, all! the morning and the night,
The joy, the grief, the loss,
The roughened path, the sunbeam bright,
The hourly thorn and cross.

Thou knowest all—I lean my head,
My weary eyelids close,
Content and glad awhile to tread
This path, since Jesus knows.

And he has loved me! all my heart
With answering love is stirred,
And every anguished pain and smart
Finds healing in the Word.

So here I lay me down to rest,
As mighty shadows fall,
And lean confiding on His breast
Who knows and pities all. —Selected.

WITH this letter from our much loved and highly revered Sister, we publish a clipping which has long been on our file waiting a time for the grouping together of many of a like nature, calculated to show how great, how mighty, is that love manifested by the Son of God, even when held in an earthen vessel. The deep, veering pity which throbs in the bosom of our sisier, is but the workings of that Spirit which is moving upon the hearts of Zion's daughters, and the final result of which shall be "Zion's Redemption." Let this divine love and compassion take possession of the hearts of Zion's mothers and daughters, causing them to overflow with that genuine pity which shall manifest itself in words of righteousness, and from such homes will go forth fathers and sons, strong in the God of Israel; and the armor of righteousness buckled on by the hands of wives and daughters such as these, will be armor against which sword and bullet will be hurled in vain, for they may exclaim with Israel's Shepherd boy, 'Thou comest to me with a sword and with a spear and with a shield, but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Host, the God of Israel whose armies thou hast defied.'

"Thou must be true thyself,
If thou the truth would'st teach;
Thy soul must overflow if thou
Another's soul would'st reach.
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.
Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed.
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed.
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed."

God bless the pen which wrote these lines.

THE MINISTRY OF SORROW.

"One day, when Mrs. Butler, the friend of friendless girls, was revolving bitter and unavailing regrets in the solitude of her heart, in the midst of her silent home, the burden became unbearable. She rose and went out, haunted by visions of what might have been if Evangeline had not died, and sought refuge at the house of an aged and saintly Quakeress. Sitting at her feet, Mrs. Butler poured out the desolation of her soul. She listened patiently to the passionate wail of the broken heart, and then, laying her pale, thin hand on Mrs. Butler's bowed head, said: 'God hath taken to Himself her whom thou lovest, but there are many forlorn young hearts who need that mother's love flowing from thine. Go to — Street, No. —, and knock.' Mrs. Butler obeyed. She found the house, knocked, and the door was opened to her. It was a refuge where the Quaker lady had sheltered forty lost girls—she had become too infirm to visit them. Mrs. Butler took up the work, and from that day, in ever-increasing and extending fields, she labored for the 'forlorn young hearts' who needed a mother's love.

"Light had broken in upon the darkness, and a great and burning love and compassion for the lost daughters of other mothers entered into the wounded heart of the bereaved mother, and Mrs. Butler's destiny was fixed. She went out and began her ministry. When she went her rounds, and visited the hospitals, or pierced the lowest haunts of vice, she found she had the secret of the power of suffering. She was able to succeed in touching the hearts and winning the confidence of the most hardened of her sex. She conquered because she loved; and she loved because she had suffered. Mouths that were full of blasphemies and filthy speech she stopped with a kiss. No woman was too degraded or too foul but she could press to her heart in sincere affection. When the poor outcasts sought to escape, she opened a little refuge in her own house, where they had food and shelter and home. This work went on for many years nor has it ceased even to this day."

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Sept. 20th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel almost constrained to write you a few lines, as there has been one subject of prayer presented to my mind many times,—“Our fallen sisters.” Their terrible state has often made my heart ache when I have thought that many of them have been the daughters of loving homes, perhaps tenderly reared and as respectable as our own loved ones and have been led away, some by their strong young love, others by treachery, some by vanity and folly. But when we think this their sin is not like any other, that may be overlooked when sincerely repented of, but that from the moment it is known that they have fallen there is a ban put upon them, and they cast out as the leprous are, we feel all the terribleness of their situation; for though they may sincerely repent and heartily detest their life and wish to abandon it—as no doubts hundreds do wish—they are worse off than the lepers, for these, at least, when they are healed may return to their homes and kindred; but where is the home, where are the kindred ready to extend a helping hand to these? They are outcast to the day of their miserable death. Jesus said, the Harlots should go into the kingdom before the scribes and Pharisees and hypocrites; but how, oh, how are they to find entrance? how are they to be reached? It seems to me that the mothers in Zion must have something to do in this work.

I have had the subject presented to my mind at different times for several years and have prayed for them, and for myself that if I have any part to take in the work, that the Lord would fit me for it; and since, I have been thinking often of the "Prayer Union," (I like this name better than Prayer League), I have thought that possibly through the united prayers of the sisters the means might be made known and the way opened by which the gospel might reach them.

Now I have given you a few of my thoughts on the subject and if you think it will be the right thing to bring it to the thoughts of the sisters in a public way, give it to Sr. Eleanor as a subject of prayer; and let her formulate it, for I feel myself incompetent to prepare anything for publication. As I said, I have often prayed for those poor outcasts, and numbers of times I have felt blessed while praying. And why should they not come up in remembrance before the Lord? They are of his creation and probably no more sinful than many of us might have been under different circumstances and surroundings; and "He that was without sin was told to cast the first stone;" and none were cast.

I feel like saying to the mothers "Pray, pray for your fallen sisters, for you know not but that your own loved ones may be led away, though you watch them never so carefully."

SOPHIA.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa, Sept. 16th.

Dear Sisters:—I wish I could come with words of encouragement to some of you who have the burden of great trials to bear; but what we can do and ought to be found doing, is to ask God to give us strength to endure them. We all have our "forty days and forty nights temptation" to pass through and the more faithful the Saint is, the harder Satan works with his tempting powers. But, oh, let us be ever ready and able to say, "Get thee behind me Satan!" We must not let go the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, and as we have but a short time here to live let our lives be such that we may be found worthy to "arise first and reign with Christ a thousand years" longer than those who do not obey the gospel and endure unto the end; for they are shut out entirely from that great privilege (of reigning with Christ the thousand years).

If you wish to know something about the additions to the church by baptism, when you get your Herald and as you read it, keep account with pencil and paper as you come to them and you will be surprised; although most likely we do not get account of all who are baptized. I have just adopted this plan. Two weeks ago one Herald gave sixty-six and the other eighty-one. Isn't it enough to encourage one to keep "Steadily Forward" in the work we pledged to do when we were "buried in baptism?" Does it not recall the love we had and ever should have for this glorious work? I would rather lay my body down in mother earth to-day, than to know I should depart from the belief I now have in the gospel. I have been a Latter Day Saint only one year the 10th of September, 1888; and I will be twenty-five years of age the 11th of October, 1888. I have two "precious jewels" to care for and I greatly need the prayers of "righteous" Saints, that I may bring them up in "the way" they should go, that when they get old they will not depart therefrom.

I am your sister,
ELLA MILLER.

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for Thursday, October 18th, 1888.

Memory texts: Matt. 11: 29; John 14: 14.

Subjects: The conversion of unbelieving husbands, whose wives are members of the church.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS.—Sr. Frances: Would you please ask the Prayer League to pray for sister J—P—, that she may be enabled to bear her oppression in a Christ-like manner, and to be kind to her oppressors; and that God will soften her husband's heart towards her and the church, and bring him to obey the gospel.

CONVICTIONS IN UTAH.

"Under the provisions of the Anti-Polygamy law of 1882 and its amendments, there have been in the Territory of Utah 470 convictions for polygamy, adultery, and unlawful cohabitation, with fines imposed, and thirty convictions where the sentence was imprisonment without a fine, making a total for the Territory of 500. In Idaho there was a total of eighty-nine cases. There have been fourteen pardons granted by the President to persons convicted under the above-mentioned acts, which, as shown by the inclosed tabulated statements, were generally made upon the recommendation of court and Territorial officials on the grounds of old age, ignorance of the law, and extreme poverty. There was one conviction in Utah in 1875, one in '81, four in '84, fifty-five in '85, 132 in '86, 220 in '87, and 105 in '88. Fines to the amount of $48,208 have been collected and a forfeiture of $25,000.

POLYGAMOUS MORMONS NOT BIBLICAL.

A defense of the Bible and answer to the Kansas City Star for August 16th, 1888.

The Bible does not teach polygamy as a correct principle, but as a custom of the heathen. Their influence caused a few of the Israelites to practice it. When the Author of all good, the great architect of our world, placed the happy pair in the garden of Eden, he planned the true pattern for the happiness of all the world. This was observed by his people before the flood, until Lamech, a descendant of Cain, and a murderer, "took unto him two wives." Righteous Noah, to whom the Lord talked and gave particular instruction, went into the ark with his wife; his sons also followed the Edenic pattern and were saved, when the posterity of Cain and the rest of the wicked were drowned and exterminated from the earth. We follow the Bible history to Abraham. His wife Sarah gave him her maid to be his wife. This she did in her unbelief in the promise of the Lord, that "Sarah should be the mother of nations." Sarah soon found she had done wrong; and Abraham also, for the Lord commanded him to put away the bond woman. He obeyed the Lord, a good example for Bible believers; but mark the curse, one that yet follows the Arabians, the descendants of Ishmael, the son of Hagar. "He shall be a wild man, and every man's hand shall be against him." A Bible prophecy verified; truly, a warning to all who practice like follies. Next we notice the righteous youth Jacob, deceived by the heathen Laban and persuaded to follow their customs. Moses commanded the kings of Israel not to multiply wives, but they brought terrible calamities upon themselves by disobeying this law. The New Testament and Book of Mormon adhere strictly to the Lord's plan. Those who led the Mormons to Utah deceived them, and taught them the customs of Laban the heathen. There are many thousands of Latter Day Saints in the world, under the ministerial charge of Joseph Smith, the son of the founder of their church. They are loyal to the government and are of pure morals, and obey the law of Eden. They send their elders to teach the people in the west that polygamy has not come to stay. It must go to the heathen, its natural originators, its final home. M. EATON.

MINERSVILLE, Kansas, Aug. 28th.

Brother Blair:—I am the one lone Saint here. Have lived here seventeen years, and am sixty years of age. Had my right ankle broken two years ago and have not fully recovered the use of my limb yet but live in hopes. There are no Saint's meetings here, so it is necessary that I take part in doing my duty to Christ, therefore we hold prayer meetings at my residence once a week with Christians from other churches, and we devote some time to exchanging views on subjects in the Bible, which is some times very interesting.

I have had calls from Elders Beebe, Parsons, Kent and Bennett, and quite a number of the Saints call to see me. I get very lonesome at times, but am cheered by reading my Bible and Book of Mormon.

My youngest daughter had a dream about eighteen months ago which she dreamed Bro. Blair could interpret. It is this: She lost her first-born, a daughter three months old. (She now has two young children). She saw two angels coming from the east, one her little daughter, while the other was unknown to her, and one, a young woman who had died a few years previous coming from the north. They all stooped over her, and the one from the north said, "Shall we take her now?" Whereupon her little daughter angel said: "Leave her a little longer;" then all departed.

MARY J. WILLIAMS.

[The dream illustrates the solicitude of departed ones for their living friends, the watchcare of the angels over them; also that the days of the sister will be prolonged.—ED.]

Alma Road, Hamilton Park, WINSTON,
Bournemouth, Hants, England,
September 20th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—It is a long time since I wrote you. You will see that I have moved a long way from my last address. I am now about one hundred and thirty miles from London, and am in a place where there are no Latter Day Saints. I think I hear you say, "thrust in your sickle and reap." Yes, sir; I feel that that is it; and I shall try it as wisely as I can.

I have not done any public preaching yet, but have done some private and fireside talking; and on one occasion I wandered about the village, passing the Wesleyans, the Independents, the Church of England—both the High and the Low church of that name—and at last went into the Christadelphians and heard a discourse on the unconscious state of the dead; and you will not be surprised when I say the old fire began to move my every nerve. When the strangers were given the opportunity to ask questions, I very gently said to the lecturer something that had been working within my mind, and, (in their usual way,) he challenged me to debate. Of course it was accepted, and the debate has come off. I did not know I was debating with a Christadelphian newspaper correspondent. But the first night's debate he reported to the printer here, but made out that I was deficient, that I "wandered," etc. Well, I wanted to do a little preaching the first night, but in my last speech I gave him notice that he should have all the proofs needed on the following night. You will see by the paper I send by this post that he had more than he bargained for, and of course his pen refused to write to his paper the second night's debate. I dare say if he had done as he told his people, (that he would fix me the second night), he would have sent the report, and been glad to have done so as a Christadelphian victory. But seeing it did not appear, I wrote one, and you will see I lost nothing, the voting on his side being his own people's 11 votes,—mine 22. Please give the readers of the Herald my address, because there were a great number of Saints here forty years ago. I live a little over twenty miles from Southampton. If any of the Saints in America have friends in Hampshire or Dorsetshire, let them refer them to me, or they may write me their address, and if possible I will hunt them up.

Dear brother, my soul is with you in this work, for it is of God, and I know it; and this knowledge is very comfortable to have. I knew it in 1848, and I know it in 1888. Yes, I shall always know it; for I shall always be conscious, here and hereafter. I shall try to be a Saint to the end. I suppose I have not many years to stay now, for I have seen sixty-five summers, but am well and hearty.

Peace to you, my brother, and to all with you.

Yours in the gospel of Christ,

C. D. NORTON.

HILL CITY, Kansas, Sep. 24th.

To the Brethren in North Western Kansas:—I have been laboring constantly since my appointment as the way has opened, and I am happy to say that my labors have been blessed, but not in such a marked degree as some of my eastern co-laborers. The circumstances that have surrounded this mission have been of a hindering nature; the country being thinly settled; the people poor, and the country and crops burned up so that very many are leaving. Truly these are perilous times. Many who cannot get away will suffer this winter for the necessities of life. I have just attended conference at North Branch, Jewell county, where we had a very pleasant time, I am now holding a series of meetings in the Court House in this place with very good attendance and interest. Some wonder; some admire; some kick. Some will obey here soon, but some want to fight and want us run out. Well, such is life in the Latter Day work. I will do the best I can, God helping. I am not so mighty in word or deed, but the Lord is my help. I go from here to Trego, thence into the northern counties where I shall continue until December. Brethren can address me at Banner, Trego County, Kansas. Those who are able to help should remember their tithes and free-will offerings and send them along for the good of the cause. Many have thought that this work will go ahead whether they help or not. It will go on, but those who fail to help when able will have no works to be rewarded for. We all want to live and labor to be equal in temporal things that we may be equal in spiritual things. Pray for the good work.

Yours in bonds,

GEORGE W. SHUTE.

ONSLow, Iowa, Sept. 8th.

Editor Herald:—After reading the article in Herald of September 1st, under the title of "Let all thy garments be plain," I am moved to reply.

Bro. Maitland begins by saying that the revelation given in Doctrine and Covenants, page 144, paragraph 12, has been, is, and will be "a stone of stumbling" and a "rock of offense," to many honest in heart who desire to serve God in the "beauty of holiness" rather than the garb of austerity or ugliness; or words to that effect. In the same paragraph it reads "Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart." Now if pride of dress finds no place in our hearts there will be no "stone of stumbling" or "rock of offense" to hinder our acceptance of the revelation just as it reads and means. Why should our brother consider the sisters' letters on this subject so doleful, when so many have been very sensible in their views. Trimming is not mentioned in this revelation, and I agree with a sister who wrote lately, in thinking the Lord meant what he said in this as in all others. If "all thy garments" refer to both sexes, then the whole thing must apply to both sexes, and the men's garments should be plain and their beauty the beauty of the work of their own hands. I can not see the comparison intended to be drawn between this revelation and the late one given at Kirtland; for the part quoted in the revelation of April 11th, 1887, is very plainly addressed to the "men of God who bear the vessels of the Lord," and has no reference whatever to the sisters. I do not think any Saint who is what a Saint should be will torture themselves in order to follow all the dictates of fashion, and would ask what in male attire (or female either) comes under the head of "monstrosities" and "addenda" to the human form divine? Bro. Maitland asks—"Can you criticize the angels attire?" How we are to know what the angels' attire is? Would the style of clothing worn by angels be suitable for Saints to wear? Have not angels appeared to men in such common garb as was worn by people in those times, and were not recognized as angels? Would it be possible to "entertain angels unawares" if they were clothed in some peculiar way that would be noticeable at a glance?

I agree with the brother in regard to the quotation "Let thine eye be single and thy whole body will be full of light; but think that it does not apply only to those who are gathered, else where would be the blessing to those who live faithfully and are and have been alone for years.

Yours in the search for light,

ELLA J. GREEN.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia., Sep. 23d.

Dear Herald:—I joined the church in the year 1844, just before Joseph the Martyr died. I am now 66 years of age; and after the manner of the many testimonies which have been given of this great Latter Day work, I also desire to give mine. In former days Israel's God always made himself known to his servants the prophets through his own voice, or by the administration of angels. It is also said by the Savior: "Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you." And again, "Ye being parents know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly father give good gifts unto those that ask him." And again, Joel the prophet says, "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out of my Spirit, saith God, upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your old men shall dream dreams and your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out of my Spirit." Dear Saints, you see the promised blessings God has in store for those that call upon him in truth. David said to Solomon his son, "And thou, Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy fathers and serve him with a perfect heart; for the Lord searcheth all hearts and understandeth the imaginations of the thoughts; if thou seek him, he will be found of thee, but if thou forsake him he will cast thee off forever."

Some time about the year of 1830, I being quite small, I remember reflecting upon the death of my parents, who were not dead, but I thought they might be taken from me, which caused me to weep bitter tears of sorrow for fear they might die. I concealed myself in a bed-room by my self. I left my hiding place for fear of being seen crying and walked out near some trees, where I saw a glorious light in the heavens above, nearly as bright as the sun, which caused a great joy to come over me, and my mourning was turned into exceeding great joy. As I viewed the light I heard a voice saying unto me, "Thou shalt one day be called to preach the gospel," and the vision was closed. I had not so much as heard that there was a Latter Day Saint in being. I lived at this time in the state of Pennsylvania, Erie county, town of Waterford. My father emigrated from there to Michigan, where I first heard the gospel preached by Elder Brown. It was so plain I could not help believing it to be true. A few years after this, I was baptized by L. D. Hickey in the year 1844, received the Spirit through the laying on of hands; dreamed dreams and saw glorious visions. Once as I retired to bed one night my soul was drawn out in prayer to that God who revealeth secrets, to know for myself the truth of the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith's mission. It was not long before an angel of the Lord stood before me and said, "Joseph Smith is a true prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon is true; and you need not be afraid to declare it to the people." It was shown to me in such power that my knees smote together like Belshazzar's, when he saw the hand writing upon the wall. I have received many manifestations since then. I have also been to the North country, in vision, and beheld the ten tribes. They with their prophets are preparing to come over; it was north of the Arctic Ocean. To God be all the glory. I am trying to live humble and walk in obedience to all his commandments, that in the end I may have a right to the tree of life. I know that there are many in this church who have received such manifestations through the Spirit of God, who would like to have their testimony added to the list. Your brother in the new and everlasting covenant, CHANCY LOOMIS.

BOONESBORO, Iowa, Sept. 17th.

Bro. Joseph:—Elder George Shimel has been with us for some time. He is a humble and able minister of the gospel. He preached three times last week and twice Sunday. There are several that seem to be greatly interested, as I heard one woman remark that he made it so plain that one can not help but understand it. One man that has never been to our meetings before attended all but the first meeting, and has borrowed the Book of Mormon. I understand he has been a preacher on a small scale. One woman who was intending to join the Free Methodists concluded, after hearing one sermon, that she had better not be in a hurry, for she says Bro. Shimel preached the truth. So you see the Lord is calling the honest in heart. Bro. Shimel expects to be with us again in a few weeks, the Lord willing. We have had no preaching here before for several months and hope he will be able to come. We need a missionary in this district that can be in the field all the time and we hope that the General Conference will appoint him again next year, and make it possible for him to labor as the work demands, as he is both willing and competent. His arguments are strong and convincing. The Saints here are pretty well scattered but are living in peace and harmony, and by their lives are making the name of Latter Day Saint respected. We have a chapel of our own and hold one meeting and a Sunday School every Sabbath, believing that the school is the nursery to the church; also in the Bible injunction to "train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." We are often refreshed and strengthened by the letters in the Herald which show how the Lord is blessing his people, and opening the way for the pure in heart to seek the Lord in his own appointed way. Believing that he who began this good work is able to continue it to the end, I remain yours in the bonds of peace,

SAMUEL MCBIRNIE.

CRESCENT, Iowa, Sept. 23d.

Editors of the Herald:—The work is progressing nicely here. The Lord remembers us when we keep ourselves aright. There were four baptized to-day and one two weeks ago to-day, all sisters, brother John Evans officiating. We had a good time to-day; Brn. D. K. Dodson and C. G. McIntosh were with us, giving us the bread of life. In their discourses they recalled some things of their past experience which moistened the eyes of many of their co-workers. They have our prayers and may the Lord help them. Brn. Peak and Davis are working hard to prosecute the work in this district. They are ardent little workers and deserve the prayers of the Saints. Brother Peak is somewhat under the weather, bedfast, afflicted as was our ancient brother Job. With one desire "to thrust in my sickle for the Lord,"

I remain, your brother

C. F. PRATT.

WHEN DID HE PREACH?

SOME THINGS YOU SHALL KNOW.

I SAW an article in Herald for September 22d, page 610, headed, "Some things I would like to know." And having had to meet and examine the subject mentioned, I think I can turn a little light upon the same; not because I think I am more spiritual or have more spiritual light than others, but having had to meet it with the Adventists and Soul Sleepers, &c., I have had to study upon it and feel sure that the result of my study, fastings and prayers to God for light, have resulted for good to me. Some two or three years since, I wrote an article upon the "Spirits in Prison," but for certain reasons it was not published. The main point of difference seems to be as to the time of our Savior's preaching to the spirits in prison; so I purpose only to speak of the points touching that.

First. The prophets who spoke of the mission of Christ, do not make any change; do not say that he will administer to some in body and to others in spirit, but lead us to conclude that it would be the same Jesus (body and spirit) that would perform the mission spoken of. See Isa. 42:6-8, "will keep thee and give thee for a covenant of the people, (Jews), for a light of the Gentiles, (other nations). To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison," etc. The same Jesus who was to be a covenant to the Jews and a light to other nations was to preach to the prisoners in prison. Read also Isa. 61:1-3; 49:5-9; 24:21-23. Now read what Jesus himself says, Luke 4:18: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor, . . . to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, and to set at liberty them that are bruised." The Savior here leads us to believe that he who does the work here to those who are in the flesh, will also go to the prison. But he makes it clear beyond a possible doubt when he says, "for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."—Matt. 12:40. Jonah was cast out of the ship into the sea and the great fish swallowed him. Johah 1:15, 17. Jonah was there in body and spirit and while there prayed unto the Lord God, out of the fish's belly. (Jonah 2:1, 2.) "As Jonas was [body and spirit] in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be [body and spirit] in the heart of the earth."—Matt. 12:40. Please notice that Jonah was three days and three nights in the fish, (Jon. 1:17.) So shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the prison. But his body was only in the tomb about thirty-six hours, about one half the time that he was to spend in the prison. He was crucified on Friday in the afternoon about three o'clock. (Luke 23:44.) It was the day before the old Sabbath, and in the evening of that day Joseph craved the body of Jesus. (Mark 15:42, 43.) Joseph was a disciple of Jesus'; and after he was permitted took the body and buried it in his own new tomb. Why? Because there was no time to make another. (St. John 19:42.) They then returned and rested (on the old Sabbath) according to the commandment. (Luke 23:52-56. See also Matt. 27:56-61.) Now we see the day was gone and the evening was come and if they had been very slow about it the Sabbath would be upon them.

The day of the crucifixion can not be counted as one of the days in which his body lay in the tomb because it was not put there until the close of the day. He was there that night (Friday night) and all day Saturday and all of Saturday night; and the next morning early, at the rising of the sun, they came to anoint him.

Notice that they did not have time to do it on the day he was crucified, but when they came he was gone. (Mark 16:2.) Hence we find that he was there no part of the first day of the week, (Matt. 28:1; Luke 24:1; John 20:1), all of which clearly proves that the body of our Savior only lay in the tomb one day and two nights. It may be questioned whether he lay there three hours or not, from all that Matthew, Mark, Luke and John say about it, but when they came to the sepulchre he was gone. Yet from the Savior's own saying it is evident he rose the third day. (Matt. 20:19; Acts 10:39, &c.)

or tomb three days and three nights, then in all the places where the Scripture says he rose again the third day, it would have to read, "He rose the fourth day," in order to get in the three nights. But he rose the third day and if you would demand the counting of the day he was crucified and the day he rose, then you have the three days, but where are the three nights?

Yes, Bro. Cairns, that would count three days, but only two nights. Now just leave it the way it reads and you will have his body there one day and two nights, whilst his spirit is in paradise. (Luke 23:43.) Then allow his body to be resurrected, the spirit to enter it and (body and spirit) go and spend three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. No clash then, Bro. W. C. Another point: The tomb and the "heart of the earth" are two different places. The heart of the earth (its centre). The tomb, on or a little above the surface, in a rock—"Rolled a stone to the door."—Matt. 27:60. Peter had to stoop down to see where the body of Jesus had lain. (Luke 24:12; see also John 20:3-8.)

In the Book of Mormon page 311, paragraph 5, Alma says: "And then shall it come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous are received into a state of happiness which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from their troubles and from all care and sorrow," &c. John's statement in Revelations 14:12, 13 agreeing thereto. Paul says that paradise is above. (2 Cor. 12:1-5.) Pit, prison, hell, heart of the earth, etc., are not up but down, (Num. 16:3; John 17:16; Ps. 88:3, 4; 30:3-9), and Nephi says that Jesus did speak to the people on this continent during the hours of darkness, lightnings, earthquakes and the great calamity. (Nephi 4:437, 442.) Thus did Jesus speak to the people from paradise after his death and before his resurrection. Hence the spirit was not in prison but in paradise where all the righteous spirits go, and where they remain until the time of their resurrection. (Alma chapter 19:6, page 311.)

Again, Jesus says: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."—Rev. 1:18. These words were uttered by the Savior to John about sixty-two years after his resurrection. When did he get the keys of death and of hell? Evidently after he was raised from the dead, when "all power was given unto him." (Matt. 28:18.) Before his death his Father was greater than he. (St. John 14:28.) He must rise from the dead before he can be a conqueror of death, but rising conqueror over death, hell and the grave, he obtains the keys of hell (the pit or prison). Now he can go (body and spirit) and set the captives free, etc.; can show the prisoners his pierced hands and feet and declare by the word of his power, and by the signs in his hands, his feet and his side that he was indeed the Savior who should come into the world. Jesus says: "The hour cometh when the dead and all that are in their graves shall hear his voice;" not that his spirit only shall go there. (John 5:25-29.) And Peter tells us that he did go there and preach to the spirits in prison and that he went after he was resurrected from the dead. "Being put to death in the flesh, (the body dead) but quickened by the spirit;" (The body made alive by the spirit), by which spirit (that which made the body alive) also he (body that is alive) went and preached to the spirits in prison. (1 Peter 3:17-20.) The preaching was done after he was made alive. The same he that was put to death, was also quickened, (made alive) and by the spirit that made him alive, HE went and preached to the spirits in prison.

Paul says that Christ, who ascended up on high, descended first into the lower parts of the earth. (Eph. 4:8, 9). He does not mean when the spirit of Christ went up on high to paradise; no, but when it went far above all heavens and sat at the right hand of the Father.

Paradise is in the third heaven. That is where the spirit of Christ went whilst the body lay in the tomb. But Paul is here speaking of the time when Christ, body and spirit, went far above all heavens (far above the paradise) when he promised the gifts to men, for he says: "He that descended [into the lower parts, pit, prison, heart of the earth, etc.] is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things."—Eph. 4:10.

Now, Bro. Cairns, did Jesus go up body and spirit and sit at the right hand of God? That same HE that went up, went first to the lower parts of the earth that he might fill all things. All what things? Why what was spoken of by the prophets Isaiah 61:1-6; Isaiah. 42:6-9, etc? Is the problem solved, Bro. Cairns?

Now, brother, I will try in my weak way to answer your questions:

Ques.—"What do the righteous do in paradise?"

A.—They rest from their labors. Rev. 14:13. They are comforted. (Luke 16:25). They are enabled to sing the new song. (Rev. 5:9). They are received into a state of happiness, a state of rest, a state of peace, etc. (B. of M., Alma 19:5, page 311). "I soon go to rest in the paradise of God" (allow that the Savior did the same) "until my spirit and body shall again reunite," etc.—Moroni 10:2, p. 545.

Q.—"Jesus said: 'Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up again.' What did he mean?"

A.—He meant just what he said. He did it inside of the "three days." Died at the end of one day, and ere the sun had risen to give light for the third day, he arose and only two nights had passed as hereinbefore mentioned.

Q.—"Was that not three days, and is not this what he meant when he made an illustration of the sign of the Prophet Jonah?"

A.—No; it was one whole day, and but a very small portion, if any, of the first and third, and that at most there could only have been two nights. No, that could not have been what he illustrated in speaking of Jonah's case, but the illustration was this; that as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, [body and spirit], so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights [body and spirit], in the heart of the earth. (Matt. 12:40.)

Q.—"Can we in the flesh hold conversation with disembodied spirits?" This or nearly the same is asked again.

A. To both questions.—Yes. Jesus took Peter, James, and John (three embodied spirits) up into a high mountain, and Moses and Elias (two disembodied spirits) appeared and talked to Jesus, who had a body of flesh and blood. Moses was an untabernacled spirit, as his body was dead. Elias was the spirit of that body once called John the Baptist, whom Herod had caused to be beheaded. See Matt. 17:10-13; Matt. 14:8-12. Now Moses and John were both there in spirit, the resurrection of their bodies not having yet taken place. No doubt, at the appearance of these heavenly messengers the Master received ordination to the Melchisedec priesthood. See Hebrews 5:1-10; 2 Pet. 1:16-18, etc. And in like manner did not the same Peter, James, and John appear to Joseph and Oliver? See Doc. and Cov. page 113:3. Peter and James had died since that resurrection spoken of in Matt. 27:52, 53, and the first resurrection, yet to come, has not yet taken place; hence they are disembodied spirits administering to bodies of flesh, bone, and blood. We also notice the angel that gave John instructions, with a host of others that we might cite. But I give one more evidence: See the testimony of one W. C., in Herald, page 610, middle column. "The spirit communication was most brief—just a word or two?"

Q.—"Was there none but Jesus that ever peaced unto the spirits who are in prison?"

A.—Yes, if your statement should happen to be correct, "Now when he went to paradise could he not have rested and chatted a while among the good spirits there, then chosen twelve good spirits and gone to the prison," etc. Should that have the case, then there would have been twelve who went with him to preach to the spirits in prison, but being in paradise until the resurrection of the body, at which time "Many bodies of the Saints which slept arose" after his resurrection, etc. (Matt. 27:52, 53). Why not take twelve of them who had glorified bodies like himself? Or as he is no respecter of persons, (Acts 10:34), why not do as he did with the people at Jerusalem, ordain twelve among them; or as on this continent, ordain twelve here? Why not do the same among the lost tribes, and among the spirits in prison? I guess we will have to live a little more faithfully, Bro. C., and wait until the Lord reveals to us that "Sealed Book," that will reveal things to us "from the creation of the world to the end thereof."

There is one more objection to Christ's preaching to the spirits in prison with the body: "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Acts 2:27. In Doctrine and Covenants, page 234, paragraph four, it says: "The spirit and body is the soul," hence, "thou wilt not leave my soul" (spirit and body) "in hell," (pit or prison), "neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One [body] to see corruption;" that is all clear. His soul was only in hell, or prison three days and three nights after his resurrection, (1st Pet. 3: 17-19), and before he ascended; (Eph. 4: 8, 9); some time during the forty days spoken of in Acts 1: 3. And his flesh did not see corruption, being in the tomb but one day and two nights, as before shown.

There are some other objections to the body going to the prison, one of which I will clear up. One claimed to be of importance is that Christ could not go to the prison in body. I think he could as well go in body to the prison just as he did go where the disciples were assembled and go into their midst when the doors were shut, (John 20: 19), or to vanish (to become invisible) out of their sight. (Luke 24: 31, etc). He had "all power." (Matt. 28: 18).

For further proof on pit, prison, etc., see my "Bible Synopsis." For fear of making this too lengthy I will close with good feelings and good wishes to brother Cairns and all who may see fit to differ with me upon the subject, hoping that we may at all times live in such a way and manner as to be enabled to learn "some things we would like to know."

INFIDELITY.

THE above named disorder is not content to waste away and die like the extinct species found in the ledges. The fossil remains of beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles and insects are found petrified in the quarry. Many varieties of the vegetable kingdom have gone into oblivion during the lapse of ages. While mastodons and leviathans perish, the tiny coral and the veriest animalculae of sea and land reproduce. Surely these facts are hard on the doctrine of "spontaneous generation" and the theory of the "survival of the fittest" is forever nullified. Skepticism being an attribute or state of the mind, it seeks affinities and is highly transmissible. The malady originated in and immediately departed from heaven; walked amid the fruits and flowers of Eden; perambulates the polluted earth and has for an objective point and terminus an insatiate hell. Gloomy doubts, dark forebodings and distressing fears invade the heart of the rude savage, the semi-barbarous tribes, civilized races and enlightened nations. The felon in the cell, the mariner on the high seas, the herdsman on the plains, the maid in the kitchen, the belle of fashion at pleasure resorts, the busy housewife, the superannuated grandmother, the princes in expectancy, or the queen on the throne. The philosopher, statesman, scholar, scientist, benefactor, or spiritual adviser, are liable to fall a prey to this baneful deadly disorder, for "he that doubts is doomed."

When doubts are waning misery is subsiding and these restless demons seeking to incarnate or possess a tabernacle, are chagrined and foiled. As the star of hope arises, the soul enlivens; the eye glistens, the countenance is beautified and the heart is happyfied. As faith gains the ascendancy and maintains the vantage-ground distrust becomes a thing of the past; assurance crowns the scene, salvation is wrought out and our Maker is both honored and pleased. "I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting."—1 Timothy 2: 8.

People may vainly suppose and fraudulently claim that the good Lord has not given enough and sufficient proofs of his goodness and grace, but "he left not himself without witness in that he did good and gave us rain from heaven and fruitful seasons." The facts are that evidences of the divine exist, not only in the creation, but in the continuation and vigilant providence, are rife on every hand and at all times; therefore infidelity is attributed to "an evil heart of unbelief."

We exonerate God and exculpate the devil from man's misgivings in this particular, because of his agency to choose, or refuse, to embrace, or to forego and relinquish anything and everything from an atom to a world, from a speck of star dust to a meteoric shower; from a nebulae to a planet, from a solar system to the multiform and endless creations of the universe. From small to great and from the immense to the infinite, proclaim and reiterate the existence and oversight of a Divine Hand, a Sublime Ruler, a Supreme Being. The skeptic, with a ruthless hand, would purloin the precious foundation stones from the holy Jerusalem. A bottle of cogniac, a decanter of champagne, a demijohn of whiskey, a glass of English ale, or a mug of Milwaukee beer is prized more highly by his lordship than the Balm of Gilead, or the Water and River of Life.

The scientific bigot vociferates in a despotical dogmatic way all about what he knows. He prates about known truths, scientific disclosures, and demonstrated facts and then sarcastically bemoans all that "walk by faith, and not by sight." What he really knows could be printed on a leaf; whereas the things he thinks he understands would make a large book; and the innumerable that he does not comprehend would fill vast volumes. To cavil at the unknown is to call in question our own existence. I pass by a well stocked farm, with a skeptical philosopher. We behold domestic animals and poultry, in abundance, all subsisting upon the grain and drinking from a common stream. While this nourishment produces vitality in all and growth in general, it yields feathers from the fowl, bristles from the swine; hair of different hue, on the ox and horse; and wool from the sheep, and that, too, of different quality. Mr. Wiseacre, how is this? What make fire burn? Who originated that grain of sand? Where is the power that perfected the flower? Why does the deadly nightshade grow in the same bed, and get such adverse qualities from the common soil? Why does opium put us to sleep, and coffee keep us awake? What makes the disposition of beasts different, as also twin brothers? If the logician can give good reason for all the foregoing, how they came into being, why they exist, and the way they are perpetuated without a God, let him rise up and explain and we will agree to catalogue no further. If you would find a wooden hand-rake, and tell him it came by chance, was an accident, or made itself, he would brand you as being an implacable fool or a downright idiot. The oft repeated argument of demand and supply is as good as it is ancient. In the kingdom of nature we hunger and thirst, and the natural laboratory is teeming with food and boiling, streaming, and pouring with water. In the realm of grace we feel, meditate, think, reason, desire, long, beseech, invoke supplicate, pray, intreat, beg, implore, importune, fear and revere, hunger and thirst for righteousness and redemption, while a loving Savior says, in pitying tones, "Seek;" "knock;" "ask." The chemical properties of the snow fertilize the earth; the virgin mantle thereof protects the fall sowing, and the winter wheat; the frost enlivens the soil, and renders it mellow and porous. The warm spring sun kisses the land; the refreshing rain awakens universal nature, and, thus, seed time and harvest are recurring links in an endless chain, while an indulgent providence lavishes forth these elementary and physical, these temporal, and earthly bounties, man alone is vile. Monopolies, Confederacies, Syndicates, Rings, Cliques, Secret Orders, Trade Unions, Pools, Labor Societies, Vigilance Committees, Protectionists, Detectives, and Anarchists unite and combine, not to kill snakes, or vanquish ravenous beasts, but to maintain and defend themselves against the encroachments of mankind. Our beloved land is all honeycombed with treason, while the nations of Christian Europe (?) would sooner try the adventures of war than to smother to death under her armor. Retribution is not far away. Scoffers may scorn; villains go unwhipped; liars and thieves, the lascivious, and the red-handed murderer will all be overtaken and brought to summary justice and condign punishment sooner or later, for it is decreed that any nation refusing to honor and serve the Lord shall be utterly wasted and consume away. While we deeply deplore, and painfully commiserate the utter ruin of the wicked, and the sufferings of the ungodly, we feel to say, Surely it must be just. We do not wish to connive at sin, or palliate wrong doing; but, forsooth, there are many extenuating circumstances that will mercifully mitigate pain. Ones circumstances and surroundings, the chances for knowing and the occasions and opportunities for doing good will all be figured into the account on summing up. Seasons of apostasy, ages of darkness, and times of rapine, are not calculated to evolve healthy minds, steady habits, confiding hearts, and good faith. The heresy of an advocate, the duplicity of a professor, the defection and weakness of the Saint is a sweet morsel for those who watch for iniquity, but the doctrine of Jesus Christ is all right whether people hold out faithful or stumble and fall altogether away. Infidelity is cruel in the extreme, while trust and obedience are ennobling. But further your true well-wisher saith not now.

M. T. SHORT.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 12.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

REVOLTS UNDER TRAJAN AND ADRIAN. A. D. 70-136.

JERUSALEM was now become "heaps," and the Mountain of the Lord's House was "as the high places in the forest;" hope itself had perished in the fall of the Temple, and lay buried beneath the desolate ruin. Yet in the sullenness of utter desperation, resistance was still prolonged; and three strong fortresses in the rocky region of the Dead Sea afforded a temporary respite to a few thousands of hopeless Jews. To crush this last remnant of resistance to Roman supremacy, Lucilius Bassus was sent into Judea in the year after the reduction of Jerusalem. The first fortress, Herodium, was soon taken; and though the others, Machærus and Masada, from the great strength of their position, on the summit of perpendicular precipices, seemed to bid defiance to a besieging army, yet they soon fell into the hands of the Roman general. The garrison of Machærus, capitulated in order to save the life of one of their leaders who had been taken captive in a sally; and that of Masada, after watching the gradual elevation of the enemy's embankment to the height of four hundred and fifty feet, perished by their own swords, leaving only a silent necropolis to become the prey of the conquerors. Contrary to the usual custom of the Romans on the subjugation of a foreign country, the Emperor Vespasian did not rebuild the cities of Judea that had been laid waste, nor did he permit the conquered people to inhabit their own land. The latter he ordered to be sold in lots to the highest bidders, enriching his privy purse with the proceeds; nor was any part of the country exempted from this indignity save the village of Emmaus near Jerusalem which was bestowed upon the eight hundred Roman soldiers, to whom was assigned the duty of garrisoning the ruins of the desolated city.

To add to the sufferings of the prostrate people of Israel, the Emperor imposed on them a tax, which wounded in the most insulting manner, their religious feelings. A tribute of two drachmas, or half a shekel, had been always paid by every adult Jew, (see Matt. 27: 24; Ex. 30: 12-16), from the earliest times, and the money had been appropriated to the service of the Tabernacle and of the Temple. This sum Vespasian ordered to be still collected, and to be applied to a purpose abhorrent to every Jew, the rebuilding of the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, the most magnificent Idol-shrine in Rome, which had been lately burned. The detestable tax was levied throughout the empire with inexorable tyranny; nor was it repealed even after its ostensible purpose had been complete in the restoration of the Roman Temple; for we find it in the time of Origen.

For nearly sixty years after the tide of desolation had flowed over the land of Judea we know little of its history. As the first jealousy which watched the blackened heaps on Moriah and Zion began to abate its sleeplessness, individuals and families would doubtless wander back to seek a shelter in a spot endeared by memories both glorious and sorrowful, or to lay their bones in the tombs of their fathers. When the Emperor Adrian visited Jerusalem about fifty years after its destruction (if Epiphanius' date is correct) he found a small Christian Church assembling at the Cœnaculum, or House of the Last Supper, on Mount Zion, and occupying a few houses in the vicinity; while of Jews there were seven synagogues not far from that hallowed spot, one of which remained even down to the time of Constantine. But these intruders, few and feeble as they must have been, were watched with the severe scrutiny of imperial suspicion. Strict search had been made by Vespasian for all who claimed affinity to the royal house and lineage of David, that they might be put to death. The jealous Domitian revived the odious inquiry; and a Christian historian has recorded an incident of singular interest, to which it gave rise. Two individuals, accused of being descended from the royal line, were brought before the Emperor, or more probably before his representative, the Procurator of Judea. They made no secret of their lineage, for they were the grandsons of the venerable Apostle Jude, the brother of the Lord; but the simplicity of their answers, the humility of their demeanor, and the homeliness of their garb, disarmed all suspicion even in their judge. They spoke indeed of the Kingdom of Christ, but showed that its character was not such as to excite the fears of the Roman Emperor; and their horny hands confirmed their declaration that their earthly subsistence was derived from their daily toil, to which they were dismissed unpunished, with mingled pity and contempt. (Euseb. 3: 20). The persecutions of the Christians by this cruel emperor, which occurred in the fifteenth year of his reign, (A. D. 95), was directed no less strongly against the Jews. The former were popularly considered as a Jewish sect; and both were confounded in the common charge of impiety and Atheism, because they rejected with abhorrence the myriad idols of the Pagan world. Dio states that many Jews were condemned to death, to exile, or to the confiscation of their property, on this odious accusation; and Suetonius ascribes these proscriptions to the avarice, no less than to cruelty of Domitian. Under the mild administration of the virtuous Nerva who assumed the purple in A. D. 96, the Jews were treated with less rigor. Those who lay in prison under the charge of impiety were discharged, and those who were banished were recalled; persecutions under such a pretext were prohibited. Many burdensome impositions by which the Jews had been oppressed, were remitted. A medal of this emperor, inscribed "Calumnia Fisci. Judaici Sublata," has been supposed to imply the abolition of the capitation tax of the half shekel; but as Origen expressly asserts the continuance of that impost to his time, the inscription can mean no more than that the Jews were no longer "calumniated," that is, they were no longer as in the reign of Domitian, fined in heavy sums on false and frivolous charges.

During the greater part of the reign of Trajan, a period of about eighteen years, we find little recorded of this people. The Jewish legend is that Rabbi Joshua was in such favor at the emperor's court that permission was granted him to rebuild the temple. "The narrative, however, in its sequel, shows how precarious this sort of favor was felt to be. The Jews eagerly made preparations for the work; but it was represented to Trajan, that they would revolt, and refuse to pay tribute, if allowed to re-establish themselves in such an advantageous situation as Jerusalem. Trajan, unwilling to recall his orders, asked the advice of his counsellors; they replied, that he must direct the building to be made nine feet longer or shorter than the former temple. The Jews were assembled at Rhumon. When this order reached them they were thrown into consternation, and had recourse to Joshua, the son of Chanania, whose profound wisdom was universally acknowledged. He related to them the apologue of the lion who was tortured, while devouring his prey, by a bone that he could not swallow. The animals were summoned to his aid with promises of a great reward; but when the stork had extracted the bone, and claimed the reward. 'You are fortunate to escape uninjured from my jaws.' The application was readily made. 'We are fortunate,' said Joshua, 'in living peaceably among this heathen nation, and we must be contented.'—Basnage.

This seems to indicate at least that they were not actively oppressed. But such a transient gleam of sunshine could but little irradiate the gloom of that tribulation under which the whole nation "scattered and peeled" was brooding. The same traditions speak in sorrowful terms of sufferings endured under this melancholy period; and we can not doubt that a high-minded and brave people would chafe in bitterness of heart under the pressure of so overwhelming a calamity as had recently befallen them. The contempt in which they were universally held, and which was never concealed, would be no less intolerable than the severities of tyranny; and we can not wonder that they should watch for an opportunity of rising in arms against their oppressors. That opportunity seemed to have arrived in the eighteenth year of Trajan, when the Parthian war having in some measure drawn off the military resources of the Empire to the east, the African provinces were left in all probability comparatively unprotected; and the Jews rose in arms. Nothing but the blind and unreasoning madness of desperation could have prompted their insurrection; for it was a rising single-handed against the world. And if, with the advantage of their own land, with its mountain fastnesses and strongholds, its walled cities and military resources, commanded by able generals, and, above all, animated by the unbounded enthusiasm inspired by the presence of the Temple, they had been unable to withstand the power of Rome, how could they hope to succeed now—dispersed and minished, in exile, their spirits broken by oppression, their land desolate, their cities dismantled, their Temple in ruins! Yet such was the fury with which they endeavored to throw off the Roman yoke, that they maintained a desperate, and for some time a successful, resistance to the forces brought against them; nor could this insurrection be suppressed until the slaughter on both sides had been immense—a waste of human life scarcely less vast than that which attended the desolation of Judea itself. In these frantic attempts to shake off the chain which irresistibly bound them, how forcibly are we reminded of the comparison which Holy Writ had applied to them, “A wild bull in a net.” “O, Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out. There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons she hath brought up. These two things are come unto thee; who shall be sorry for thee? desolation, and destruction, and the famine, and the sword; by whom shall I comfort thee? Thy sons have fainted, they lie at the head of the streets, as a wild bull in a net; they are full of the fury of the Lord, the rebuke of thy God.”

It was at Cyrene, a city of Libya that the flame of insurrection suddenly burst forth. Here the Jews had been numerous and powerful for many centuries, as they had been also in the contiguous country of Egypt. The immediate occasion of the outbreak is not recorded, but we may well suppose the existence of the same jealousy and animosity between the Jewish and Greek inhabitants, that always burned in other cities, where the rival races were nearly equal in power, wealth, or numbers. Whatever the immediate cause of the conflict, it seems to have blazed forth simultaneously through all “Egypt and the parts of Lybia about Cyrene,” and hence affords some grounds for conjecturing that it may have been the consummation of a long purposed, well organized, and wide-spread conspiracy. The Jews had some advantages at first over the Greeks; but the latter, retiring into Alexandria, excited their countrymen in that great and populous city to rise against the Jewish population, the whole of whom were massacred. The Cyrenean Jews were incensed to madness at this retaliation; and burned to wash out the stain in the blood of their enemies. Under the command of one Andreas (who is called Luminum by Abulfaragius, and Lucuas by Eusebius), they marched hastily upon Alexandria, being joined in great numbers by the Jewish insurgents, and wasting lower Egypt with fire and sword. Horrible cruelties are said to have been practised by them in this insurrection, which we may be permitted to suspect, as not entirely devoid of exaggeration, since we have but the report of Dio Cassius, the Roman historian, who would probably write with somewhat of the bias of a partizan. If really enacted, the Jews might still point to the examples of their enemies for similar atrocities. The historian adds a statement, however, which shows the furious and unrelenting character of the warfare. Two hundred and twenty thousand persons are said to have been slain by the insurgent Jews in Lybia and Egypt. The Roman governor, destitute of troops, could do little to repel the insurrection; nor could the presence of Martius Turbo, who was sent with a large force of infantry and cavalry to the scene of the revolt, quell its power, until after many bloody battles, the result of which left Libya so depopulated that Adrian was compelled to repeople it with colonies from Europe. While this sanguinary contest was going on in Africa, the war was raging with equal ferocity in the beautiful Isle of Cyprus. Led on by one Artemion, the Jews who were unnumbered in that island, suddenly rose and massacred two hundred and forty thousand of its inhabitants. The Jewish historians themselves state, that the slaughter was so complete that not a Greek survived in the Island. “Eusebius seems to confine the ravages of the Jewish insurgents to the city of Salamis; but the number of the persons massacred, two hundred and forty thousand added to that of their murderers, whom we must suppose equally numerous, would give a population of half a million, which would be far too great for a single Cyprian city.”

The Emperor Trajan sent Adrian, the commander-in-chief of his forces and afterwards his successor, with a large army against the revolt, who having signally defeated them with great loss, compelled the remainder to evacuate the island. In revenge for the perfidy which marked the commencement of the incurrection, the Jews were prohibited by law from even landing there; and so rigidly was the edict enforced, that it is said, if a Hebrew were ship-wrecked on the inhospitable shore, he was instantly put to death.

In the following year the insurrection broke out afresh in Mesopotamia. This province which had belonged to Parthia, had just been transferred to Roman jurisdiction by the victorious arms of Trajan; and the Jews who had hitherto lived in peace and comfort under the shadow of the Parthian kings, found themselves suddenly subjected to the hateful yoke of the Romans, with its attendant oppressions and exactions. They rose, in imitation of their brethren in Africa and Cyprus; perhaps with the hope of creating a diversion in favor of the former, where the revolt was not yet subdued. By the efforts of Lucius Quietus, a Moor by birth, but esteemed one of the ablest of the Roman commanders, this revolt was soon suppressed; but the orders of the Emperor to expel the distracted nation from the province involved a task to which all his power was unequal; and the Jews remained in Mesopotamia. The appointment of Quietus to the government of the province not only shows the ability of the general, but also proves that the spirit of rebellion, however kept in check by his presence, was still unsubdued. The losses of the Jews in these desperate and sanguinary conflicts are estimated by themselves at six hundred thousand men, an enormous number, but nearly equalled by the aggregate of their enemies slain in Africa and Cyprus; and though we are not informed what loss befell the Roman arms in Mesopotamia, the carnage already mentioned amounts to considerably more than a million human beings. It does not appear that any prisoners were made. The Emperor Trajan did not long survive the pacification of the east, for he died in the summer of the year 117 and his successor Adrian, who had been personally engaged in the late Jewish war, had entertained feelings of aversion towards his Hebrew subjects. “He had been an eye witness of the horrible scenes which had desolated the lovely island of Cyprus; he had seen the voluptuous Italian groves reeking with blood, or unwholesome with the recent carnage of their inhabitants, the gay and splendid reduced to the silence of desolation.” It is not wonderful, therefore, that he should look upon them as a race unworthy of respect or confidence, and to be kept in order only by being crushed under the heel of a vigorous and severe despotism. The province conquered by Trajan was indeed relinquished by his successor; and thus the Mesopotamian Jews were restored to the mild and equitable yoke of Parthia, but throughout the Roman world, the broken and scattered children of Israel, already smarting under their sore disappointments, were destined to groan under the galling tyranny of Adrian. Others had made their yoke heavy, but he added to their yoke; others had chastised them with whips, but he chastised them with scorpions. (See 2 Kings 12:2.) “And God said unto Abraham, thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee in their generations. This is my covenant which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee; every man child among you shall be circumcised. And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of a covenant betwixt me and thee. And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man child in your generations. He that is born in the house, or bought with money from any stranger, which is not of thy seed. He that is born in thy house and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised; and my covenant shall be in your flesh with an everlasting covenant. And the uncircumcised man child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my cov-

THE PRESS AS AN EDUCATOR.

THE following address by Prof. Wm. M. Croan made at the Commencement exercises of the Western Normal College, at Shenandoah, Iowa, will be read with pleasure by the scholars and thinkers of HERALD. We commend it to the attention of the Saints.

Your partiality has assigned me the task of responding to the sentiment—"The Press as an Educator." I profess to you, Mr. President and ladies and gentlemen, a glowing regard for the professional educator. Reasoning from cause to effect, I behold in his profession a mission giving results of such far-reaching consequences for good that I contemplate it in rapt admiration. I am not unmindful of the fame won by warriors on tented fields, nor the applause which greets the orator, as, with "thoughts that breathe and words that burn" he charms the multitude. I see on every hand aspiring men bent upon success, toiling towards the goal of their ambition. I see the tools with which they are hewing their way to higher elevations, and the weapons with which they are defending themselves in the battles of life. I ask myself in what forge were they fashioned and whose was the master mind and hand that taught these toilers how to wield them? The answer comes—the professional teacher—the man capable of dealing with mind and intellect, heart and soul—the man qualified to inspire high and holy ambitions, of awakening the latent powers and energies and setting them in motion, of unfolding great truths, of laying the foundation of useful lives, and of informing the State what constitutes its largest sources of wealth. Such men give luster to any station in public or private life, and no class of men, I care not who may be named, have placed their country under more lasting obligations. But I enquire, what are the efficient aids the professional educator has brought to his support? Do you answer, "the church?" I would not rob the church of the smallest leaf in its chaplet of glory. I would not take from its diadem the least of the gems that flash and burn in their supernal light. The church is an educator and holds its position by right divine. The church lends its assistance to the professional educator, and always with a power that commands respect. Am I told that the professional educator is under obligations to the stage? It is said that before Bethlehem's star arose and flashed its light from horizon to zenith, when Athenians on Mars hill were worshipping at the altar erected to the unknown God, the stage was doing educational work, the vitalizing power of which still remains? Am I confronted with the declaration that the stage now, as in the past, is one of the great educational forces which civilization recognizes, and professional educators acknowledge and admire? In responding to the enant." (Gen. 17:9-14.) A law was made and rigidly enforced, that any one throughout the Roman dominions who either circumcised his children, or submitted himself to that rite, should be banished; the physician who performed the operation was to be put to death, while the same punishments were enforced on those Jews who proselyted the Pagans, or circumcised Pagan children. But Judaism, though sorely visited, was not to be rooted out by any effort of the heathen. He who had so severely smitten his ancient people had not forgotten his ancient covenant; he had cast them as of old into the iron furnace, but he had decreed their preservation there; like the wondrous bush seen by their great lawgiver at Mount Horeb, they were indeed to be "burned with fire, but not consumed." "Behold the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob saith the Lord. For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." (Amos 9:8, 9.)

At the same time to cut off from the Jews all hope of ever regaining possession of their desolate, but still beloved city, and of re-establishing the Temple of Jehovah, Adrian determined to occupy Jerusalem with a Roman colony, which involved the alienation of the soil and the bestowment of it in perpetuity upon strangers. Accordingly he began to rebuild the city, to which from his own name, Ælius Adrianus, he gave the name of Ælia, instead of its ancient appellation. To crown all, he decreed the erection of a Pagan temple on the mountain where the Holy House of Jehovah had stood, and its dedication to Jupiter Capitolinus. How far these designs were put into execution before the Jews burst forth into new revolt, is not quite certain, as the testimony of historians is conflicting. Eusebius places the transmission of the colony to Judea after the storming of Bithur and the suppression of the sanguinary rebellion which we shall presently narrate. But Dio Cassius, the Roman historian, asserts positively, that the colony was the occasion of the war and that the Jews, being infuriated by the presence in their sacred city of those who worshipped strange gods, took up arms to expel them. It is probable that the decree of Adrian and the commencement of its execution, might have produced the ferment and deferred the completion of the imperial purpose until after the subjugation of the province.

sentiment, "The Press as an Educator," I am not required to intimate doubts in regard to the position of the stage as a co-worker with the professional educator. The English speaking people of the world are not prepared to listen to words, however guarded, which casts a shadow upon the name and fame of Shakespeare. That great master has passed beyond the reach of philippic, and eulogy adds no lustre to his burnished renown. Shakespeare wrested the stage from the teachers of pagan philosophy and clothed it with educational pomp and power. The professional educator of the present accepts the aid of church and stage. He recognizes their lifting power, their sublimating influence, and in the spirit of brotherhood and comradeship walks with them in the enjoyments of help and hope, and in the fruition of a faith which sees humanity, in the not remote future, basking in the beatitudes which universal education will confer.

But, ladies and gentlemen, there is still another educator abroad in the land—a school master, a servant, a philosopher, a scientist, an explorer and philanthropist, a statesman and politician, an educator in trade, commerce, art and industry—an educator of kings, presidents, parliaments and congresses; an educator of nations; an educator as austere as fate and as persistent as truth; arrogant in statement and analysis, and yet forever demanding more light; an educator whose shibboleth word is "progress;" an educator that is forever a pathfinder, the avante courier on every highway where humanity marshals its forces to march in search of its God's designed destiny. Do you ask me to name this educator? I respond, the Press. The Press as an educator occupies, by universal consent, a pre-eminence which clothes it with responsibilities, in the characterization of which, hyperbole becomes transformed into acted truth.

The enlightening power of the Press is everywhere working miracles which fill the mind with amazement. The Press is as the voice of one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare the way for the coming triumph of humanity." It is the harbinger voice of new dispensations. Men listen and learn, and nations bow before the displays of its majestic energy. The Press educates men to know, to appreciate and to defend their rights. The Press opens prison doors, breaks fetters, emancipates mind and soul from ignorance and superstition, and educates man to know that while God is no respecter of persons, and creates all men equal, man's sovereignty is founded upon principles of eternal justice, which can neither be abrogated nor abridged without degradation. In the empire of knowledge and learning the Press is the friend of all other educators. In the mighty mustering of intellect which is now taking place, where genius and virtue, wealth and dignity, art and literature, skill and invention are untiring for the diffusion of knowledge, the Press stands royally robed to act its part. The Press speaks for the race. It champions humanity. It gives instruction in the philosophy of human rights and human needs. I speak for the American Press, the free Press of the great Republic—where the government is of the people, for the people, and by the people. Where the will of the people is supreme. A Republic where man is solving grander problems than were ever submitted to angels. In this favored land the Press as an educator is true to its mission. It is loyal to law and order. It is mindful of its obligations to right, justice and liberty.

The Press is the friend of the church, the patron of the stage and the vindicator of the schools. It believes in God. It has faith in man's capacities, and combines with all other educational forces to lift humanity to the highest plane of its possibilities. It holds converse with the devotees of science. With the geologists it reads the records of centuries in rocks, and with the astronomer it walks amidst the stars; with the farmer and agriculturist for its pupils, it lectures upon subjects relating to soils and crops. It holds its levees in colleges and counting rooms, in factory and machine shop. It is where bankers discuss finance and capitalists plan investments. It is in the humbler home of the toiler and in the palatial residence of the bonanza King. It is in the great centers of population, the crowded marts of trade, and teaches its disciples at the remotest outposts of civilization; where enlightenment and savagery are separated by imaginary lines, everywhere an educator, everywhere pointing to the right and exposing the wrong in human affairs with words of encouragement for virtue and of warning against vice.

Thus, briefly and imperfectly, have I, ladies and gentlemen, responded to the sentiment, "The Press as an Educator." Prudence forbids elaboration notwithstanding the subject invites discussion. It would be a pleasing task to speak of education in its relation to society, of the excellencies of knowledge and of its power for good. To do this would afford occasion to make further reference to the press as an educator. But this I will say, that my countrymen can not place too high an estimate upon the free press of the Republic. We are now more than sixty millions. Another generation will enjoy the heritage of freedom when an hundred millions shall inhabit this land of the free and home of the brave. With the coming and increasing hosts, what agency will be evoked to reconcile vast and conflicting interests, control elements of agitation and discord, and hold in check headlong energies and inconsiderate men? Who shall stand perpetually as priests at the altar of freedom and feed its sacred fires by dispensing that knowledge and cultivation on which hangs the political salvation of our country? The Press.

I might not be able, had I the time, to present to your minds the agencies that, as occasions should require, will be found ready to guard the ark of our country's liberties, but I believe the time will never come when the press of America will cease to teach lessons of fidelity to the Union and Constitution.

A. L. WHITEAKER, Dist. Pres.

MARRIED.

MINEAR—WIGHT.—At the residence of the bride's parents, near Medina City, Texas, September 20th, 1888, Bro. Joseph Minear and Sr. Harriet E. Wight—J. A. Currie, jr., officiating.

May they be led in wisdom's way,
With grace sufficient for each day;
Success attend their efforts here,
And a home with Jesus over there.

LOCY—DORN.—At Shiocton, Outagamie county, Wisconsin, August 29th, 1888, by Mr. Oliver Smith, Justice of the Peace, Mr. Albert Locy and Sr. Mattie E. Dorn.

DIED.

HELMS.—Joseph Helms was born March 9th, 1841, in Holmes county, Ohio, and came to Missouri with his parent in 1845. Enlisted in the army for the preservation of the union in 1862. He came home suffering from sickness contracted in the war, and died three weeks thereafter, on November 8th, 1862. His dust lies at rest in the Henry graveyard.

HELMS.—Julia A. Helms was born May 25th, 1838, in Holmes county, Ohio. She moved to Sullivan county, Missouri, with her parents in 1845. She was a member of the Christian Church, and during the lingering illness which preceded her death, manifested the patience and resignation which befitted her profession. She died at her father's house, in Sullivan county, Missouri, in April, 1881, and her remains were consigned to the earth in the Henry graveyard.

HELMS.—Amanda Isabel Helms was born in Sullivan county, Missouri, October 8th, 1850, and lived with her parents up to the time of her death, which took place in September, 1881—the same year in which her sister died, thus causing a double bereavement to the stricken parents.

A funeral sermon in memory of the three persons above noticed, was preached near Milan, Missouri, on Sunday, September 23d, by Elder Duncan Campbell, assisted by Bro. Henry Grim.

DAVID.—Bro. Morgan David of Spanish Fork, Utah, departed this life September 12th, 1888. He was born March 3d, 1804, and was baptized by William Hughes in 1847, in South Wales. He emigrated to America in 1849, and remained a short time in St. Louis, Missouri; then came on to the valleys of the mountains and settled in Spanish Fork, where he remained until his death. He lived over thirty years in the settlement where he died, being honored and loved by all. For years he was dissatisfied with church affairs under the presidency of Brignam Young, and became conscious that the Spirit of the Lord was withdrawn from the church. He longed and prayed for the light of other days as he had enjoyed it in far off Wales. Hearing of the light in the east, he sought out the Reorganized Church presided over by the son of the Seer, and there again found the Spirit's presence and the peace of God. He was baptized into the Reorganization, May 29th, 1875, by Walter Edgington. He leaves a large family of children, grand children, and great grand children, to mourn their loss. The services were conducted by Thomas Burt and George Wilkins.

SALADEN.—At his late residence near Amboy, Webster county, Nebraska, August 31st, 1888, of cancer on the brain, brother Adam Saladen. He was the third son among five children, who were left orphans at a very early age. His birth day is given as December 24th, 1840, and his place of nativity Cincinnati, Ohio, as set forth in his discharge from the United States service. He was enrolled in Company A, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, November 1st, 1861; and was discharged April 1st, 1865, at Fort Laramie. He was reared in the Catholic faith, and was very slow and thorough in the investigation of the latter day work. By upright dealing, conscientious deportment and consistent demeanor in all his intercourse with his neighbors (whose confidence and esteem he held to a remarkable degree), he did much to allay prejudice in his neighborhood. He leaves a wife, three sons and three step children, with a host of friends to weep and mourn his absence. He entered the gospel covenant May 7th, 1888, at North Branch, Kansas, under the ministry of Elder A. H. Parsons.

The swelling bud, the sweetest rose
Dwells but a moment here;
The tender flower its petals close
As evening shades appear.
The fairest field with bloom o'erspread
Is stamped with sure decay;
The leaf-clad bower above our heads
Will droop and fade away.

So thus it is creation o'er,
As oft in sorrow seen;
The new born babe, the sage of yore
Must pass through changeful scenes.
And though we lay our friends away,
To heaven's will resigned,
We know the resurrection day
Our loved ones we shall find.

JOHN D. BENNETT.

WATSON.—Near Medina City, Texas, August 24th, 1888, of consumption, sister Jincy Watson, aged 26 years, 1 month and 21 days. She was baptized July 15th, 1888, and leaves a husband and three little children, also little brothers and sisters that she had in her care, to mourn their loss. Funeral sermon by Elder J. A. Currie, Jr.

Her stay was brief with the Saints of God,
But she set her feet in "the way"
That leads the soul to that blest abode—
"The realms of endless day."

SMITH.—At Estell Springs, Franklin county, Tennessee, August 13th, 1888, Elma E., eldest daughter of Bro. A. J. and Sr. A. A. Smith, aged 16 years, 7 months and 16 days. Sr. Elma was baptized March 27th, 1887, at Clear Lake, Indiana, by Elder B. V. Springer, and until death remained faithful to her covenant. None knew her but to love her.

Hail, Jesus! mighty conquerer, prince and king!
'Tis finished; the grim monster's lost his sting.
Earth's hosts shall chant the song of jubilee—
O grave where is thy boasted victory!
O, Elma, loved one, rest in perfect peace,
Till we who mourn your loss shall find release;
Then in the peaceful paradise we'll meet
No more to sever, and our joy complete.
Then weep not for the loved one passed away;
You'll join her in the bright and perfect day;
For he who takes away, and he who gives,
Gives us assurance that our Elma lives.

TRYON.—Rolly L. Tryon, son of Lewis and Harriet Tryon. He was born at Henderson, Knox county, Illinois, August 15th, 1879, and died September 22th, 1888, from the effects of diphtheria and blood poisoning. This was a sad loss to his parents as Rolly was especially noted as an affectionate boy, obedient to his parents and kindly disposed to all around him. He gave promise of intelligent usefulness had he in the grace of God been spared to reach manhood. He suffered patiently, and when nearing the end, conscious of an early dissolution he called for all the members of the family and lovingly bade them good bye. His was a life of simple home purity. As he reached the end of life's journey he gave his father a crumpled piece of paper which was found to contain a beautiful song, "The Tree of Life," which was used by Elder John Chisnall who conducted the funeral services in the Saints' Chapel at Henderson Grove, Thursday, September 15th. Rolly is not dead but sleepeth.

HOLCOMB.—Sr. Mary L., wife of Elder Oliver E. Holcomb, died August 21st, 1888, of inflammation of the stomach and bowels, aged 35 years and 6 days. She was baptized about sixteen years ago, and has lived a devoted Christian, a loving wife, and an affectionate mother. She leaves a husband, four children, and many relatives and friends to mourn her death. Elder John Pett had charge of the funeral services, the sermon was at the Saints' Chapel in Galland's Grove, Iowa, September 30th, by Elder John A. McIntosh, Elders C. E. Buttrworth and John Pett assisting in the exercises. A large and attentive audience was in attendance.

Husband, yes, thy wife is gone;
Thy truest friend in her was given;
Thy home is lonely, and thy heart is faint,
Longing still for thine own dear mate;
The children round thee nestle near,
Wondering when and asking where
Their mother dear they'll meet once more,
And greet her in a home most fair.
The father points up with faith in God,
To the one good Lord who died for all,
And tells his children, amid his tears,
To trust in Christ and have no fears;
But serve him well and keep his law,
And they'll meet their mother, Christ and all,
In a beautiful world of light and joy,
The home of the just that angels extol.

C. E. B.

RATHBUN.—At Lansing, Michigan, September 19th, 1888, of consumption, Carrie E., daughter of Bro. Hiram and Sr. Lovina Rathbun, aged 28 years, 6 months and 5 days. She was baptized on July 13th, 1888, by her father. She retained her mental powers until her death. Strange to say, after she had breathed her last she closed her own eyes. She leaves an affectionate father and mother, three sisters and two brothers to mourn their loss. Her last words were, "Jesus help me, Jesus take me." Funeral sermon by Elder J. A. Carpenter.

BENNETT.—Josephine Bennett departed this life on the 8th of September, 1888. She was born the 10th of March, 1848; was baptized the 22d of March, 1888, at Kansas City, Missouri, where she died. Funeral sermon by Elder Thomas Lloyd, of Independence, Missouri. Text 2 Cor. 5:1.

CHESWORTH.—At Fall River, Massachusetts, September 14th, 1888, Sarah, beloved mother of Bro. Joshua Chesworth, aged 64 years, 6 months and 17 days. Funeral September 16th; services by Elder John Smith.

PEAK.—At Crescent, Iowa, July 22d, 1888, infant daughter of Warren E. and Melie E. Peak, aged 1 month and 2 days.

THE INDEPENDENT PATRIOT,

THIS is the LAMONI GAZETTE enlarged to a seven column quarto. This enlargement has enabled us to improve the paper in many respects, and we are now pleased to have the privilege of offering to the Saints and friends as a general newspaper of good and reliable character—one which needs and is worthy of their support. We publish the sermons as before. Patriot without sermons $1 per year; Patriot with Supplement (which consists of one sermon each month) $1.25 per year.

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocetian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Especial attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of binding, cloth and leather.

EXTRACTS FROM THE WRITINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH AS TAKEN FROM HIS HISTORY.

We present herewith some of the teachings of Joseph Smith, culled from his history as published in the Millennial Star, volume 17.

They are of value to those interested in the life-work of the Seer, and inasmuch as they are the productions of his own pen they serve as an index to the spirit and intent of the man.

A great deal has been said and written concerning the life and character of the prophet by his open and avowed enemies; and also by those who, undertaking to study his career, have committed the blunder of making an estimate of him from data furnished by those who, in the guise of friends have made the Seer a scapegoat for their iniquities, and who, knowing the prestige of Joseph Smith's name have, as an exculpatory measure, falsely charged him with authorizing that which was conceived in the evil hearts of some leading spirits among them. Thus the faith of the Latter Day Saints and the moral and religious teachings of Joseph Smith have, until recently, been generally measured by the social and religious status of a people, many of whom, having a name to live, were dead to it; and the evils imbibed by them have been regarded as the legitimate fruits of his work and teachings. But "truth crushed to earth will rise again," and as the facts of history concerning the church and its founder are brought to light, men of literary prominence, located in various sections of the country, are, as if moved upon by a common impulse, greatly aiding the cause of truth by lifting the veil of calumny and misrepresentation from the name of him who, under God, was the instrument chosen to inaugurate the last dispensation and to announce to the world the restoration of the everlasting gospel as an ensign to the nations.

These writers are now setting forth his real teachings and giving true accounts of the deeds of his momentous life. Present indications justify us in the conviction that ere long the general public will respect him and do justice to his memory.

This result is being accomplished by contributions to standard encyclopedias, leading magazines and newspapers of extensive circulation. The heaven is working and will work until multitudes shall bless the name of God's servant and accept his work who are now blinded to regard and reproach both as synonyms of evil.

In every age when any in advance of his fellows has proclaimed against existing evils and pointed out the better way whether in the social, political or religious departments of life, such a course has invariably caused antagonism and unjust persecution against them and their measures, no matter how beneficent their nature and results. It is a historic fact that only after years have passed and the people have been educated above the follies of their predecessors, have they been disposed to lay aside their prejudices and bigotry and render a dispassionate and considerate judgment, or form a true conception of the work of those whose very virtues have provoked the malice of the fanatical, the ultra-conservative and the ignorant. The teachings of the Seer compare favorably with those of the Apostles, because they bear evidence of the same inspiration that constrained those holy men to speak as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost.

He who reads can readily discern in them the spirit of humility, love for God, for His Saints and for his fellow men.

Joseph Smith has been charged by some professing to believe in his divine calling with becoming worldly-minded, and as having lost the spirit of the work after the years 1834-5. But the writings here presented are much later productions. They completely refute such charges, and exhibit him as "faithful unto death," for which he was promised eternal life even though he "should be slain."

His counsels to the ministry are worthy a president of the church, bearing witness that he was imbued with the spirit of his high office. The ministry thus sent forth became a power for good, and in their ministrations continued to bless multitudes whose hearts were made glad by their teachings. It was only after they ceased to regard such counsel as the Lord constrained his servant to impart that their power for good began to wane. We predict that as the Saints live by the teachings of the Holy Spirit as given through the Seer that they will ultimately come

"unto Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant."

COMMERCE, Ill., June 27th, 1839.

I attended a Conference of the Twelve, at which time brother Orson Hyde made his confession, and was restored to the Priesthood again.

At this time I taught the brethren at considerable length on the following subjects—

FAITH comes by hearing the word of God, through the testimony of the servants of God; that testimony is always attended by the Spirit of Prophecy and Revelation.

REPENTANCE is a thing that can not be trifled with every day. Daily transgression and daily repentance is not that which is pleasing in the sight of God.

BAPTISM is a holy ordinance preparatory to the reception of the Holy Ghost; it is the channel and key by which the Holy Ghost will be administered.

The gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, can not be received through the medium of any other principle than the principle of righteousness, for if the proposals are not complied with, it is of no use, but withdraws.

TONGUES were given for the purpose of preaching among those whose language is not understood; as on the day of Pentecost, etc.; and it is not necessary for tongues to be taught to the church particularly, for any man that has the Holy Ghost, can speak of the things of God in his own tongue as well as to speak in another; for Faith comes not by signs, but by hearing the word of God.

The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment are necessary to preach among the first principles of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The doctrine of election. St. Paul exhorts us to make our calling and election sure. This is that sealing power spoken of by Paul in other places, (see Ephesians, 1st chapter, 13th and 14th verses): "In whom ye also trusted that after ye heard the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation, in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of His glory, that we may be sealed up unto the day of redemption." This principle ought (in its proper place) to be taught, for God hath not revealed anything to Joseph, but what He will make known unto the Twelve, and even the least Saint may know all things as fast as he is able to bear them, for the day must come when no man need say to his neighbor, Know ye the Lord; for all shall know Him (who remain) from the least to the greatest. How is this to be done? It is to be done by this sealing power, and the other Comforter spoken of, which will be manifest by revelation. There are two Comforters spoken of. One is, the Holy Ghost, the same as given on the day of Pentecost, and that all Saints receive after faith, repentance and baptism. This first Comforter or Holy Ghost has no other effect than pure intelligence. It is more powerful in expanding the mind, enlightening the understanding, and storing the intellect with present knowledge, of a man who is of the literal seed of Abraham, than one that is a Gentile, though it may not have half as much visible effect upon the body; for as the Holy Ghost falls upon one of the literal seed of Abraham, it is calm and serene; and his whole soul and body are only exercised by the pure spirit of intelligence; while the effect of the Holy Ghost upon a Gentile, is to purge out the old blood, and make him actually of the seed of Abraham. That man that has none of the blood of Abraham (naturally) must have a new creation by the Holy Ghost. In such a case, there may be more of a powerful effect upon the body, and visible to the eye, than upon an Israelite, while the Israelite at first might be far before the Gentile in pure intelligence.

The other Comforter spoken of is a subject of great interest, and perhaps understood by few of this generation. After a person hath faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost, (by the laying on of hands), which is the first Comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted, etc. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve Him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure, then it will be his privilege to receive the other Comforter, which the Lord hath promised the Saints, as is recorded in the testimony of St. John, in the 14th chapter, from the 12th to the 27th verses.

Note the 16th, 17th, 18th, 21st, and 23d verses—(16th v.) "And I will pray the Father and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever, (17) even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world can not receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you; (18) I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you. (21) He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. (23) If a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him."

Now what is this other Comforter? It is no more or less than the LORD JESUS CHRIST himself; and this is the sum and substance of the whole matter; that when any man obtains this last Comforter, he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him, or appear unto him from time to time, and even he will manifest the Father unto him, and they will take up their abode with him, and the visions of the Heavens will be opened unto him, and the Lord will teach him face to face, and he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the Kingdom of God; and this is the state and place the ancient Saints arrived at when they had such glorious visions—Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, St. Paul in the three heavens, and all the Saints who held communion with the general assembly and Church of the First Born, etc.

The Spirit of Revelation is in connection with these blessings. A person may profit by noticing the first intimations of the Spirit of Revelation; for instance, when you feel pure intelligence flowing unto you, it may give you sudden strokes of ideas, that by noticing it, you may find it fulfilled the same day or soon; (i. e.) those things that were presented unto your minds by the Spirit of God will come to pass; and thus by learning the Spirit of God and understanding it, you may grow into the principle of Revelation, until you become perfect in Christ Jesus.

An Evangelist is a Patriarch, even the oldest man of the blood of Joseph or of the seed of Abraham. Wherever the Church of Christ is established in the earth, there should be a Patriarch for the benefit of the posterity of the Saints, as it was with Jacob in giving his patriarchal blessing unto his sons, etc.

Tuesday, July 2d. Spent the forenoon of this day on the Iowa side of the river. Went, in company with Elders Rigdon, H. Smith, and Bishops Whitney and Knight and others to visit a purchase lately made by Bishop Knight as a location for a town and advised that a town be built there and called Zarahemla.

Afternoon, went with the Twelve and some of the Seventies who are about to proceed on their mission to Europe, and the nations of the earth, and islands of the sea.

The meeting was opened by singing and prayer, after which the President proceeded to bless two of the Twelve who had lately been ordained into that quorum, namely, Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith; and one of the Seventies, namely, Theodore Turley; after which blessings were also pronounced by them on the heads of the wives of some of those about to go abroad.

The meeting was then addressed by President Hyrum Smith by way of advice to the Twelve, &c., chiefly concerning the nature of their mission; their practising prudence and humility in their plans or subjects for preaching; necessity of their not trifling with their office, and of holding on strictly to the importance of their mission, and the authority of the Priesthood. I then addressed them and gave much instruction calculated to guard them against self-sufficiency, self-righteousness, and self-importance; touching upon many subjects of importance and value to all who wish to walk humbly before the Lord, but especially teaching them to observe charity, wisdom and fellow-feeling, with love one towards another in all things, and under all circumstances, in substance as follows:

Ever keep in exercise the principle of mercy, and be ready to forgive our brother on the first intimations of repentance, and asking forgiveness; and should we even forgive our brother, or even our enemy, before they repent or ask forgiveness, our heavenly Father would be equally as merciful unto us.

Again: Let the Twelve and all Saints be willing to confess all their sins, and not keep back a part; and let the Twelve be humble, and not be exalted, and beware of pride, and not seek to excel one above another, but act for each other's good, and pray for one and another, and honor our brother or make honorable mention of his name, and not backbite and devour our brother. Why will not man learn wisdom by precept at this late age of the world, when we have such a cloud of witnesses and examples before us, and not be obliged to learn by sad experience everything we know? Must the new ones that are chosen to fill the places of those that are fallen, of the Quorum of the Twelve, begin to exalt themselves, until they exalt themselves so high that they will soon tumble over and have a great fall, and go wallowing through the mud and mire and darkness, Judas like, to the buffetings of Satan, as several of the quorum have done, or will they learn wisdom and be wise? (O God! give them wisdom and keep them humble, I pray.)

When the Twelve or any other witnesses stand before the congregations of the earth and they preach in the power and demonstration of the Spirit of God and the people are astonished and confounded at the doctrine and say, "That man has preached a powerful discourse, a great sermon," then let that man or those men take care that they do not ascribe the glory unto themselves, but be careful that they are humble, and ascribe the praise and glory to God and the Lamb; for it is by the power of the Holy Priesthood and Holy Ghost they have power thus to speak. What art thou, O man, but dust? And from whom dost thou receive thy power and blessings, but from God? Then, O ye Twelve! notice this key, and be wise for Christ's sake, and your own soul's sakes. Ye are not sent out to be taught, but to teach. Let every word be seasoned with grace. Be vigilant; be sober. It is a day of warning, and not of many words. Act honest before God and man. Beware of Gentile sophistry; such as bowing and scraping unto men in whom you have no confidence. Be honest, open and frank in all your intercourse with mankind.

O ye Twelve! and all Saints! profit by this important key—that in all your trials, troubles, temptations, afflictions, bonds, imprisonments and death, see to it, that you do not betray heaven; that you do not betray Jesus Christ; that you do not betray the brethren; that you do not betray the revelations of God, whether in the Bible, Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants or any other that ever was or ever will be given and revealed unto man in this world or that which is to come. Yea, in all your kicking and floundering, see to it that you do not this thing, lest innocent blood be found in your skirts, and you go down to hell. All other sins are not to be compared to sinning against the Holy Ghost, and proving a traitor to thy brethren.

I will give you one of the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom. It is an eternal principle, that has existed with God from all eternity: That man who rises up to condemn others, finding fault with the Church, saying that they are out of the way, while he himself is righteous, then know assuredly, that that man is in the high road to apostasy; and if he does not repent, will apostatize, as God lives. The principle is as correct as the one that Jesus put forth in saying, that he who seeketh a sign is an adulterous person; and that principle is eternal, undeviating, and firm as the pillars of heaven; for whenever you see a man seeking after a sign, you may set it down that he is an adulterous man.

"A BLOW AT MORMONDOM.

ALL OF THE CHURCH'S PERSONAL PROPERTY ESCHATED TO THE GOVERNMENT.

"Salt Lake, Utah, October 8th.—The Supreme Court of Utah to-day entered final judgment and decree in the case of United States against the Mormon Church, which was pending, to dissolve the church corporation and have the property declared escheated to the Government. The suit was brought about in the Supreme Court of this Territory under the act of Congress of February 10th, 1887. In that suit a receiver was appointed for the church corporation. He has succeeded in collecting over $1,000,000 worth of property. The decree entered to-day is a complete triumph for the Government. It declares the corporation of the church dissolved, and asserts that the voluntary religious sect now in existence has no right to the corporate property except the Temple block and buildings, which are set aside to it. It denies the intervention of a large number of individuals claiming the property, and orders the real estate of the corporation to be held by the receiver until the informations for the forfeiture for the same brought by the Government can be brought to a conclusion, and it declares all of the personal property of the late corporation to have become escheated to the Government. This point was the one most bitterly fought, as the property of the church was claimed on behalf of the incorporated Mormon sect as successor in interest to the late corporation and by individuals who were members of the corporation, who intervened in behalf of themselves and all other members of the corporation. Upon the evidence the court decided that neither the present church nor individuals had any legal claims; that all of the property had been held upon trusts, the objects of which were principally to uphold polygamy, and that these trusts were the only ones existing to which said property could be devoted. It furthermore decided that the present church still upholds, teaches, and maintains polygamy, and that any dedication of property to it would be for the purpose of upholding polygamy and would be unlawful. The court declares the property to belong to the Government by the operation of law. The defendants have taken the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it will be hotly contested.

"Major John T. Caine was renominated to-day by the Mormon Church convention for Delegate to Congress."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. HIRAM L. HOLT writes that there were some Saints living near Hepner, Grant county, Oregon, whose addresses he would like to have. He also desires to give notice that he expects to reach eastern Oregon and Washington Territory this winter and wishes all interested to address him at Mount Vernon, Grant county, Oregon, and he will try to visit them and hold meetings. He intends to leave for the above named places some time in November.

BRO. W. S. Taylor wrote from Sherwin Junction, Kansas, that in company with Bro. D. S. Crawley he had been addressing large congregations. Peace and unity prevail in the branch where he lives and the local brethren, priests Curtis Randall, William Bath and others are a great help to the cause, magnifying their calling by preaching and living their religion.

SR. MATTIE E. LOCY writes from Shioc-ton, Wisconsin, that Bro. W. S. Montgomery had been laboring in that vicinity.

BRO. J. S. Whitney, of Lake Crystal, Minnesota, mentions the efforts of Bro. E. A. Steadman in that locality and says they are having good meetings.

SR. CORA PROUD writes, desiring to add her testimony to the divinity of the work. She has been blessed with light and truth since her baptism and confirmation and thanks the great giver of all good who has confirmed the word unto her by his divine Spirit. She exhorts all Saints to faithfulness that they may strengthen one another and be sustained amid the cares and experiences of life.

SR. CAROLINE HIDEY, of Collins, Iowa, also writes appreciatingly of the work and expresses her thankfulness for the favor of the Lord as manifested in the gospel. The Saints have no branch at Collins, but as a little band are trying to hold fast that which they have proven to be good.

MR. JOHNSON BROWN writes from Fanning county, Georgia, that he very much desires an elder from East Tennessee to visit himself and family, and like Philip guide them into the truth. He would like to become a member of the church and also have the gospel preached to his neighbors. He states that prejudice is very strong against the cause there on account of the teachings of one of the sons of Heber C. Kimball, who, according to Mr. Brown's statement, taught some detestable dogmas while there.

BRO. J. C. FORD writing from Sweet Home, Missouri, states that they have organized a branch there to be known as the Sweet Home branch, numbering twenty, including two elders and one teacher. He also states that the Saints are trying to do their duty and that the work is onward.

SR. EUNICE ALLEN who was so badly burned by the accidental ignition of gasoline to which reference was made in our last issue, died Thursday morning, the 11th instant. Her symptoms were favorable until yesterday, the 10th, when inflammation set in, which soon after produced the fatal result. She was buried in the Rose Hill Cemetery on the afternoon of the 11th, Brn. A. S. Cochran and H. A. Stebbins conducting the services which were very largely attended, the sad affair having enlisted the sympathies of the entire community. Sr. Allen was in her sixteenth year.

ELDER J. W. GILLEN arrived home on Wednesday, the 10th inst., in good health and spirits. He reports progress all along the line, with especially encouraging prospects for the work at St. Louis, Missouri, where he had lately been assisting in the dedication of the new Chapel of the branch in that city.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

ELDER DUNCAN CAMPBELL lately wrote from Pleasanton, Iowa, concerning his recent labors there:

"Bro. Grim and myself held one meeting at Winterville, but on account of political matters, we thought it best to postpone further meetings there until election is over. I left Bro. Grim there to do what he could from house to house before going south of Humphreys again. I went from Winterville to Buttsville, in Grundy county, and held four meetings with good audiences. I will be engaged in this region until after district conference.

ELDER JOSEPH DEWSNUP, Sen., Manchester, England, writes September 14th:

"Autumn Leaves continues to be highly appreciated over here. The interest appears to grow stronger with each succeeding issue, and I hear many say that they would not like to be deprived of them. I have begun to read portions of them in the Sunday School and find that the stories are much appreciated by old and young. On Sunday last I read from the September number a part of the story, "With the Church in an Early Day," and afterwards questioned the children upon it, and was pleased to find how apt they were in their answers, both historical and doctrinal."

OPENING OF THE REUNION.

PRES. W. W. BLAIR wrote October 8th from the Reunion Camp Grounds, near Missouri Valley, Iowa, as follows:

"Weather clear, bright and cool. Camp began erecting tents and booths Saturday, and now there are between eighty and one hundred tents up. Campers continue to come, and this week if weather remains good, will bring many more. All goes well thus far, and prospects are excellent. Yesterday it was estimated that there were fifteen hundred or more on the grounds. The cold of last Thursday and Friday, and the then prospects for rain, etc., have contributed to keep many from our meetings thus far, but the attendance is steadily increasing, and those hindrances are vanishing. Good attention is paid to the preaching, and the interest in a general way is good. We look for a fair attendance from this time forward; also for good interest in all the exercises and for satisfactory results."

Mother's Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Put thou thy trust in God,
In duty's path go on;
Fix on his word thy steadfast eye.
So shall thy work be done."

DO IT WITH ALL YOUR MIGHT.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

Never put off till to-morrow
The thing you can do to-day.
Never let pleasure borrow
An hour that pain must pay.
Though a storm on your path seems brewing,
And clouds may obscure the light,
Whatever you deem worth doing
Is worth doing with all your might.

Would you win Dame Fortune's favors?
Then woo her with heart and soul,
Though the cup she offers savors
At times of the gall-touched bowl.
Press on when the plow you're driving,
Look not to the left or right,
Though hard be your task, keep striving—
And do it with all your might.

If ever you turn from the labor
Appointed for you to do,
Let it be to assist a neighbor
Less stalwart and strong than you.
Stand not as a cold beholder
Of woes that may meet your sight;
Relieve them, and work on bolder,
And do it with all your might.

Ah, this is life's lesson and learning
Its wisdom and truth you will gain
Such treasures that even their earning
Will take all the sting out of pain.
When the dark shadows round you have vanished,
And nature is smiling and bright,
Be sure they were scattered and banished
When you struck them with all your might.

Again let the maxim be spoken,
Once said by the wise and the true,
And lay it to heart as a token
Of what courage and patience can do.
When life's tumult is raging around you,
If you gird up your loins for the fight,
Battle on until conquest has crowned you,
And battle with all your might!

A writer in a London paper discourses about the danger of easy "intimacies," that is, of giving the confidence to people of whom we know nothing except that they are pleasant companions when they are met socially. "The danger lies," he says, "in the facility with which companionship of this kind is mistaken for true intimacy, though it does not really imply anything approaching to it." A woman "will trust her life to the keeping of a man, of whose aims, of whose standard of right and wrong, of whose power and habit of living up to that standard she knows just as much and just as little as she does of the actors whom she has seen on the stage, though she is deceived into thinking she knows more, only because she happens in this case to have been one of the actors and not merely a passive spectator." There is more truth than poetry in this thought, for in nine cases out of ten the two persons who come together in marriage have no more conception each of the other's true character and real disposition than of those of a dozen others in their circle of acquaintance. They are simply pleasant, social companions, and that is all.

There are quite as many mistakes made in friendship through these "easy intimacies," though the consequences are not as far reaching. Women, especially, are apt to give their confidence to those with whom they have been familiarly associated when they have never proved their trustworthiness. It is one thing to have pleasant little familiar conversations about everyday matters; it is another to impart what perhaps touches the inner life, and, which made light of, or misrepresented, would place one in an uncomfortable position, or possibly even worse, injure the reputation or put it in the gossips' hands to do with as they please. A real friend, a true friend, one who can be trusted to enter the holy of holies of your heart without desecrating it, is among the best gifts that life can offer, but they are found in small numbers, and are only proved by trial. A certain amount of reserve, even with familiar companions, is a good thing to employ, for it gives not only a sense of safety, but of security.—Sel.

We commend the above thoughts to parents with reference to intimacies which children are allowed to form.—Ed.

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for Thursday, October 25th, 1888. Memory texts, Ephesians 3: 14-21. This being the fourth Thursday of the month, the subject will be for the members of our families by name; for the families of each other and of the ministry, and for the young of the church in general.

ELEANOR.

ERRATA.—In the Herald of September 22d, this subject was incorrectly stated as prayer was to be offered for the families of the ministry, and not for the ministry, as it there read. In writing to us recently a sister said, "As I was in prayer last Thursday at the appointed hour, and was praying for the ministry, and especially for those appointed to bear the gospel abroad, the Spirit said to me: 'Pray for the families they leave at home to sacrifice and bear the burdens of life alone.'"*

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. A. J. is in special need of the prayers of the League at this time. Let her be borne up in faith.

Many in writing request the prayers of the League for themselves and unconverted friends. The subjects of the last concert of each month covers all such requests and only where the case is of special need, or urgency, can we insert special requests.

Persons or parties sending in subjects for prayer, should at all times send memory texts with the same, and it is desirable that the name of the party be signed to the request.

Dear Sisters:—So much has been written on the subject of the Prayer League, that a few, at least, of the dear, earnest sisters are at a loss to know exactly the object, rules and manner of conducting it, as well as the qualifications required of members. It does seem to one thoroughly understanding the subject, that it has been fully explained in all its bearings; yet here and there a good sister will say, "I have hesitated in sending my name to the Prayer League, because, some how, I'm afraid I don't clearly understand it." Such answers surprise us, and we cast about us to see if we do. Let us see: We are required to come in faith and humility; are we expected to be able to repeat the Lord's Prayer from the heart? Endorsing it all, and feeling to ask God's forgiveness as we also forgive all others? As we forgive others? that little word as may be construed to mean, we will forgive others when they ask us as we ask the Father. Other interpretations as clearly perhaps, asks God to forgive, in like manner as we forgive others. So if we fail to forgive every trespass against us fully and freely, our heavenly Father is asked to forgive our trespasses accordingly. How is it, Sister Eleanor? Patiently bear with us, and if possible let us see eye to eye in this matter. For to us it seems a weighty one. What other personal requirements are necessary?

We must send our names to Sister Frances to be kept enrolled, not published. Then we must meet every Thursday at 10 a. m. as near as practicable, in our closets if no other way, and earnestly pray for the special objects mentioned beforehand in Mother's Column for said date. Sister Eleanor doesn't exactly specify, but we think it would be well to pray every day at that hour for the same things, until a week is accomplished.

We are to learn the memory texts indicated for each week. Is this all? Please state in full the requirements and qualifications of the Prayer League, that we may all comprehend it properly.

If any one is in doubt let her speak out, and we feel sure our worthy Sister Eleanor will kindly elucidate the matter which originated with her—a divine inspiration, and a movement that will if properly followed out, be a grand, silently powerful motor, that will redound to the glory of God in the bringing about of great achievements, and purifying and uniting in bands of faith and love the sisterhood of the church.

Your sister,
VIVE VALE.

OSCODA, Mich., Sept. 15th.

My Beloved Sisters in Christ:—I feel it my duty to again write and tell you of the great comfort and joy I received when I read the letters in the Home Column. I was greatly benefitted when I read of the first Prayer League meeting. It filled my heart with joy and gladness, and I felt that Spirit of unity and love which pertaineth to the Saints of good. I feel sure that there has been much good done through the Prayer League already. On the morning of September 6th I arose feeling unusually happy, and it seemed that I could think of nothing but the Prayer League and the sisters engaged in it. After family prayer, when I was left alone with the little ones, I could find no rest until I had gone to God in secret prayer, and I never was more blessed since I have obeyed the gospel than I was at that time. I felt happy indeed. On the afternoon of the same day I was led to go in secret prayer again, and felt that indeed I needed to pray more earnestly for strength and grace from God, that he would ever help me to remember that sacred hour set apart for prayer; and thus from one time to another it has led me to prayer, when at other times before this I have thought, "Well I will go to my room just as soon as I get this done," but now I can not wait until

I finish my work, but feel it my duty to leave whatever I am doing and go in prayer to God. There is no time that we should not have our hearts uplifted to God in prayer.

I think some of the sisters here will send up their names soon. We still hold our Friday afternoon meetings, and sometimes we can get one or two of our neighbors to meet with us.

I ask the united prayers of the sisters on behalf of our youngest child, who is sick, that God will heal him if it is his holy and righteous will. He has been raised up many times through prayer, which has greatly encouraged us, and we know the Lord can raise him up again.

Your sister in Christ,

AGNES SMITH.

SISTER ROSE, of Quarry, Ohio, wishes us to state to her numerous friends that she has been unable to reply to their kind missives, having been prostrated by a very severe attack of neuralgia, from which she is still suffering, though somewhat better.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Jane Saladen, Amboy, Nebraska, writes:—"On the 31st of last August my companion was laid away to his last peaceful rest. His faith was strong, and I rejoice in the hope of meeting him in the life beyond. I should be lonely indeed without him, were it not for the sustaining love of my children and the blessed influences of the gospel. I am suffering from injuries received by being thrown from a carriage; but the prayer of faith is my great physician. Sisters, in your prayers remember me and my loved ones who are not yet within the fold."

Sr. Amy Gill, St. Edmonds, Nebraska, writes:—"I was glad to hear of so many uniting with the church at the Plum Hollow camp meeting. May the good work roll on until it fills the whole earth. 'The Mission of Christ' in Herald of September 22d, was a grand article. Write another, Bro. Rumel, and when you are out in Nebraska do not forget to give us a call. I think a hall for preaching could be obtained. I wish Bro. Luff or Bro. Kemp would come while this fine weather lasts."

Sr. Margaret Hoagland, River Stoux, Iowa, writes:—"How dear the Savior is to us when we draw near to him, and union in prayer is strengthening. I am old and lonely, living a mile from our church, but I do feel the Spirit's presence many times, and often have poured upon me a spirit of prayer, and many times my prayers are answered in a remarkable manner. Sometimes when sick I am instantly healed in answer to prayer."

Sister Hannah, Riverside, California, writes:—"Oh, how often I wish I could meet with the Saints; but as this privilege is denied me, I try to make the best of those I have, and they are more than I can number! How often my heart is made glad when I read the good things in the Herald, and my heart goes out in love towards all this grand army of workers for the saving of souls. I want to thank the dear sisters for the help and encouragement received from their letters. May our hearts be united upon all subjects offered in our petitions to a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God, for there is strength in union. May the desires of each heart be right in the sight of God, and may the Prayer League be so united that whatever they ask in righteousness may be granted. May the spirit of love, meekness, charity, faith and long-suffering pervade all hearts engaged in this great work."

THINGS THAT NEVER DIE.

The pure, the bright, the beautiful,
That stirred our hearts in youth;
The impulse of a worldless prayer,
The dreams of love and truth.
The longing after something lost,
The spirit's yearning cry;
The striving after better hopes—
These things can never die.

The timid hand stretched forth to aid
A brother in his need,
The kindly word in grief's dark hour,
That proves a friend indeed;
The plea of mercy softly breathed
When justice threatened high,
The sorrow of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

The memory of a clasping hand,
The pressure of a kiss,
And all the trifles sweet and frail,
That make up life's first bliss:
If with a firm, unchanging faith,
And holy trust and high,
The sorrow of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

The cruel and the bitter word,
That wounded as it fell;
The chilling want of sympathy
We feel but never tell;
The hard repulse that chills the heart,
Whose hopes were bounding high,
In an unfading record kept—
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand
Can find some work to do;
Lose not a chance to waken love,
Be firm and just and true;
So shall a light that can not fade,
Beam on thee from on high,
And angel voices say to thee,
These things shall never die.—Sol.

Correspondence.

SAVANNAH, N. Y., October 1st.

Brethren Smith and Blair:—I arrived here at Greenwood, at the home of brother and sister J. Seelyes on Saturday morning and found them quite comfortable. Had a good time at Greenwood on the afternoon of the day before I left by leading two into the waters of baptism. Their names are Mr. Elry Updyke and Mrs. Cora Campbell, daughter of Mr. Joseph and Sr. Sallie Deremer. There could be a good work done there and in that vicinity had we more force at hand, of the younger class of the eldership, to labor. There are also several at Obi who I think are near the door of the church, and I would rejoice to see them come in.

I am expecting to make this a starting point for Illinois and the west before long. I have now been down east for over four years and I leave by feeling a goodly degree of satisfaction at the result of my feeble efforts in the gospel cause. Though I can assure you it has not all been sunshine with me, nor all pleasant roads to travel, but I feel that the Lord has watched over me for good and has borne me up, and to Him be all the praise for evermore. I have baptized eight in all since in the east.

I was over to Obi a few days ago to call on the friends. There is a good feeling with several families there towards the work. One lady, when I left her house, put up a parcel of paper and envelopes and accompanied it with a silver dollar which she handed to me with tears in her eyes, wishing they had more to aid me. On my way back I called on a family at Allentown over night. They take the Hope and Autumn Leaves. When parting with them they sent their little boy with a silver dollar to hand to me when I had got a few rods from their house. Tokens of kindness like these bespeak the sentiments of the heart and by them we are to know the disciples of our Lord.

I want, through the Herald to thank all the Saints and friends where I have been for aid and kind assistance rendered me. May the Lord bless them abundantly for their kindness. I wrote to brother W. H. Kelley on Saturday and hope to hear from him ere I leave.

A little over a week ago I was at the house of Mr. James Spink at Alfred station, about nine miles from Andover. Mrs. Spink, his wife, is a daughter of Sr. Polly L. Hyde, of Belmont. She is a most excellent lady and her husband is kind and much attached to his home and family. They have three promising little boys, and Mr. Spink takes the Hope for them. They all speak in praise of the paper and like the stories and reading matter it contains.

Yours in bonds,

C. G. LANPHEAR.

LAKE CRYSTAL, Minn., Oct. 1st.

Brother Joseph:—We are still alive here in southern Minnesota and are feeling well in the work. I am trying to open a new place for preaching about five miles from home. Brother J. R. Lambert will remember the place. It is where a Brighamite stole an appointment that I had given out for him. Bro. Lambert spoke there once after ward and that I believe is all the preaching that has ever been done there until I began six weeks ago. I am preaching there once in two weeks, and have an appointment there for next Sunday. The last time I was there I gave out three Voice of Warnings and some tracts and shall try and hold meetings until I get our faith fairly before the people; that is if they continue to come and hear. The Methodists and others have tried to do something there but had to give it up as they could not hold a congregation. I have had fair congregations so far with fair liberty in speaking, and I pray that good may be done. We are holding prayer meetings now in a public hall and occasionally one not of our faith comes in and takes part in our meetings and they seem to feel well. The Methodist minister and one of his members that has preached some, came in and took part, and thought, as he expressed it after meeting, that it would not hurt any one to come in. We thought so too! We have been promised that if we continue faithful that members shall be added to us here. We feel encouraged to go on believing that there are better days in store for us. We would be glad to have Brn. A. H. Smith and Hanson stop here on their way home from the northern part of the state and do some preaching for us. Can't you stop brethren, and help us? Now is a good time of the year to labor in this part of the state, better than it will be after winter sets in; so come and help us if you can.

For the truth,
E. A. STEDMAN.

ORLAND, Me., Sept. 26th.

Editors Herald:—Our meetings at Sedgwick, Maine, were not altogether a success, not yet quite a failure, apparently. The turn out was not large at any time, but friends were made, I think, for the cause. We were kindly cared for at the home of Bro. W. Pert. The 17th Bro. Frank Carter came after and brought us to Blue Hill, where he had an appointment which storms prevented us from filling both on that and the ensuing evening. The third night we essayed to speak to a baker's dozen, mostly boys and girls, and gave it up as the "worst I ever saw." The Baptists were holding forth with a convention which, with storms, may partially account for the failure.

The 20th we left the hospitable home of Bro. Carter and his wife, who is both a kind of Mary and Martha in one, and whose kindness and cheerful willingness to aid the missionaries of the gospel is not unremembered by them. Bro. Carter is himself to be credited with a good share of the work of opening up this country, in carrying the elders from place to place, securing openings, etc. The 20th he brought us to Orland, leaving us with our Universalist friends, Mr. John Soper and family, whose gifts in the name of a disciple can not be confined to a cup of water alone. Since here we have been holding forth every night to small audiences up to Sunday evening, when good weather or some other cause brought a good house, and with fair turn outs since, as weather has been good until to-day, when prospects are that storms will again hinder, if not altogether stop us. Several interested and considerable excitement and falk of running us out of town; but it is quite apparent that we have too many friends for that. The result of apostasy and paganism is met everywhere by the messengers of Christ. To listen to the "arguments" of the opposition is to convince one that "surely our fathers have inherited lies and vanity and things wherein there is no profit." The contrast between these things and the rational appeal to the Scriptures, to that which "is written" makes the "heathen to rage" and their dupes to "imagine vain things" concerning the Church of Christ and his servants. It seems strange to see what zeal the imaginations and vaticinations of men, whose judgment in ordinary affairs would be considered good, will lead them to in denial of not only the Scriptures, but the commonest rights of courtesy, to say nothing of the higher law of him who said, "love your enemies."

Yesterday we spent the afternoon at the place of Mr. Fairbrother, superintendent of the public schools at Washington, D. C., but whose family spend their summers here in Maine, and through whose influence the Universalist Church here, which has no pastor, was secured. Prejudice is being laid, friends secured, and it is generally admitted that the thinking classes everywhere we go very largely make up our audiences. Whether any will unite with the church here at present I know not, but that the number of people that are spoiled for anything else are not few is one of the certainties.

Bro. U. W. Greene left us at Sedgwick and is now at Tennant's Harbor looking after appointments, where Bro. Sheehy and myself expect ere long to go. Our purpose is to get into New Hampshire before winter sets in, but its a hard matter for the missionary to set stakes.

My health has been poor ever since I was at Jonesboro, and I am trying to serve the cause under difficulties, and serious discouragements, but I try to exercise faith and look beyond these and toward the prize of eternal life in hope of the glory of God which shall be revealed in us who walk not after the flesh but have the courage to seek for, obtain, and follow after the leading of the Spirit of God. This to me is, I confess, the hardest part of our service and Christian warfare, to subdue the enmity of the law that so easily governs the carnal mind, and patiently wait for the appearing of our blessed hope, when Christ who is our life and our hope shall appear. Then will be completed for us the story of his descent among men to do for us what that law against sin in the flesh could not and can not in any age nor in any wise do, condemn sin "in" not out of the flesh, that the righteousness which is in the law, which is spiritual, of God, and holy, might be fulfilled and made apparent in us who walk not after the flesh—but after the Spirit, and are possessed of the mind that was in Jesus Christ our elder brother,—our Savior and our glorious Redeemer.

How hard, however, to attain to this standard! How impossible, were it not for the divine example to follow and the wondrously divine accomplishment; the most stupendous fact in human history; the hope of Adam's race; that which the angels desired to look into! Amazing grace! He has trodden this winepress alone. He knows our sorrows and our griefs. Not hidden from him are all our temptations, and he alone can be touched with the feelings of all our infirmities. He alone is or can in reason be our lawful, righteous, and acceptable intercessor before Him who is the Eternal Father of whom it is written that "justice and judgment are the habitations of his throne." I love the gospel sound; it touches all the harmonies of my soul and at once reveals and also vindicates its heavenly authorship and origin. May grace be given to his Saints to endure until the end of our gospel faith shall have been reached,—"even the salvation of our souls,"—the fulfilled design of God in us; an estate in which sin shall have no more dominion over us, because having overcome through his grace we shall be fit for the seal, and heirs of eternal life, with a beautiful body, a restored earth, a reign of peace universal not only among mankind, but of the now wild beasts of the desert. I have seen in the spirit the fierce tiger that now inhabits the jungles of the East crossing the road as harmless and as peaceful as a New Foundland dog. A common event during the millennial era, I think. Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of the natural man the things which God hath prepared for them that love and wait upon the Lord, "but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." For this to us well grounded hope secured to us by the cloud of witnesses which God has raised up in our day,—for this we leave home and loved ones—the ease and pleasures of this world with its honors and prospects of wealth—not to proclaim the uncertainties of the doctrine and commandments of men, but to preach and to plead and to certify that God is, and that he is an abundant rewarder of those who have ears to hear and hearts to obey him. To fulfil our calling and our mission to become workers together with God and fellow laborers with Jesus Christ and under commission from him to fulfil his prophecy and promise that "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come."

I fell to request the prayers of God's people, that I may be relieved from distress and physical infirmities and that my service toward the church may not be thus hindered.

In the faith,
MYRON H. BOND.

BEE, Nebraska, October 1st.

Brother Joseph:—As there seems to be a great interest here and all want to hear the gospel preached; and as we think it our duty to have some of the elders come and stop with us a while; we will do the best we can for them and will pay their way and furnish a church to preach in. I think there can be some good done here. Please have the elder to direct his letter to W. H. Fender, BEE, Seward County, Nebraska.

Your brother in the gospel,
W. H. FENDER.

[Can Bro. Caffall see that this call is answered. The promise of "a church to preach in" would agreeably vary the monotony of closed doors to which he refers in a late letter.—Ed.]

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Sept. 27th.

Bro. Joseph:—Since last General Conference I have not been idle, but have preached almost every Sunday and some during the week. My labors have been performed in Council Bluffs and vicinity; have also labored in Underwood and Crescent City. After coming home from the General Conference I thought I would try and see if an opening could be made for preaching in other localities in this city. The readers of the Herald are already informed of the effort through Bro. Richardson's letter in the last Herald.

On the 9th of September five were baptized in the Council Bluffs branch, and eight or nine more are almost persuaded. Brn. Peak and Davies have labored some here and have awakened considerable interest. I believe the conference made no mistake in sending Brn. Peak and Davies here. They are two noble young men, full of the Spirit of God, and are able to defend the faith. My prayer is that God may bless all his faithful ministers, that selfishness and envy may not dwell in the hearts of God's people. Last Sunday I was at Crescent City. Bro. Peak was to preach a funeral discourse, but some of the friends of the deceased were sick and Bro. Peak was afflicted with boils, so he could not preach to the people, and the discourse was postponed. There was a very large congregation present, and by request of Bro. Peak I spoke on the second advent of the Savior. I had good liberty and at the close of the meeting four were baptized by Bro. John Evans, the priest of the branch. They were confirmed by C. G. McIntosh and myself. There has been a good deal of sickness in this county this fall and the Saints have not entirely escaped. There were three cases where the elders were called to administer the ordinance of the gospel at which times instant relief was given. Thus God verifies his word that "these signs shall follow those that believe." My heart was made glad to know that God hears the prayers of his servants, and thus may it ever be.

Yours in the bonds of peace,

D. K. DODSON.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., October 2d.

Dear Herald:—Subsequent to the adjournment of the Wilber camp meeting I re-visited Kearney county, Nebraska, and organized a branch of eleven members, to be known as the Snowflake branch. May the members finally reach the purity a falling snowflake suggests. Brother P. Moldrup was selected for presiding elder, S. K. Sorenson, priest and secretary, and P. B. Anderson, deacon and treasurer; all of good repute among their neighbors. One was added previous and one since organization. Arrived at the above place September 19th, and began services in Bro. James Richard's private residence. On Friday evening, 21st, some Baptist's revoked a promise given in the morning for the occupancy of their church building, and as we learned, on dit, nailed down the windows, replaced the old lock with a new one as a preventive to our crawling in the windows or entering by the door. Whether the long key of the new lock is as elastic as the North Platte Baptist's consciences, deponent said not. But these would-be immaculate Baptists are as ignorant of our conceptions of independence as their prospective pastor is of the Scripture, as he publicly declared that ordinances have nothing to do with man's salvation, or they would have known that we would rather go to the infernal regions with evidence of welcome than intrude ourself in the kingdom of light without it; and so have saved themselves trouble in nailing down their windows and investing money for a new lock as a preclusion to our entrance.

On Sunday the 23d, I buried Sr. Adams, a very excellent woman, and Peter Mohr, in the Platte River, the latter a German by birth, well advanced in years, but hale and hearty. An account of his efforts and researches for truth is interesting. Though educated for the Lutheran ministry, his eyes were too wide open and his yearnings too great for truth, to rest satisfied with the dogmas of that church. Since his sojourn in Nebraska he became interested in the doctrine of the Seventh Day Adventists and cast his lot with them. With a heart overflowing with love he visited Sr. Richards and sought to show her the grandeur of Adventism, but soon discovered that the sister had something she was not willing to exchange for Adventism, as the sequel showed, for lo and behold the would-be converter became converted. Adventist ministers who do not want their faith disturbed must be cautious how they visit zealous sisters of the Latter Day Saints. Sr. Richards has been very active in the distribution of tracts and advocacy of the faith where and when opportunity offered. Bro. Mohr bore a very excellent testimony in our Sunday social gathering, though the noble man excused himself for inability to satisfactorily express himself in, to him, a strange language. It was quite noticeable that after years of anxiety, trouble, etc., the glorious gospel proved to be just what he wanted; indeed he has found a resting place for the soles of his feet, and under God's guidance we hope he will become an instrument in teaching many of his countrymen in their own tongue God's saving method restored with authority to proclaim it in the latter days. I spent much time in endeavoring to lay the order of the church before him, which he gladly received; and after mature consideration, conferred upon him the eldership, as the exigencies of the case seemed to demand and justify this step, and so commended him to God. In behalf of this noble man I solicit the prayers of the church.

I am pushing westward, please say responding to calls as fast as possible. And in my simple way quite busy and hopeful. Think the process of wearing preferable to rusting out. So far as I learn, the general conference appointees are doing well in Nebraska. Though regretting to hear of Bro. H. C. Bronson's health being poor, but hope it will not interfere with the contemplated protracted effort at Omaha and vicinity. Let all co-operate. Bro. Bronson will be in harmony with local authority, and with safety you may heed his suggestions.

JAMES CAFFALL.

P. S.—If some of the German brethren will correspond with Bro. Mohr to instruct and cheer him in his own language it will be thankfully received by him and much good be done. Address Peter Mohr, Trenton, Hitchcock county, Nebraska.

J. C.

PIXLEY, Cal. October 4th.

Brn. Smith and Blair:—We were much edified lately by Bro. J. F. Burton. Since we came to this county we have been visited first by Brn. H. L. Holt and J. R. Cook. There is a work here yet undone for Bro. Holt and we want him to come and do it. Next to come was Brn. H. C. Smith and E. L. Kelly. Their stay was so short that I felt like it was only one of those pleasant dreams that we sometimes have. Come again brethren and stay a while. Then came Brn. Henry Lawn and D. E. Landers, and again our hearts were made to rejoice at the sound of the good tidings they brought of how God was blessing his people. Then Bro. J. F. Burton came and it seemed a rare treat after thirteen years to see and hear him again. It has been a great comfort to us to have these brethren here. It seems that we almost go to sleep when some good brother comes along and rouses us to a sense of our duty. We have been here now three years and have not been able to attend a conference, but now we hear that the Central California district conference is to be held in Alila, our nearest town, in March next, for which we feel to rejoice and thank the Saints who have been so mindful of us. We also hear that Brn. Lawn and Brown are soon to be with us again, which causes us to rejoice.

We have much to thank the Lord for; he is ever mindful of us and blesses us in many ways. I trust that we may soon have good news to report to you of some obeying. I hope soon to have some money to send the office. The papers must be sustained. They are a power for good and I can not see how one can do without the Herald. It seems that I could not keep pace with the onward progress of the work, were it not for it. The papers all seem to get better as the dawn of the Millennium draws near. The branch here is alive as usual, and we confidently look for good results from the next conference.

Your brother,

WILLIAM N. DAWSON.

LONDON, Ontario, Oct. 3d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—The conference of the London district has just closed, and it was thought to be one of the good conferences of the district. It was well attended, with quite a full report of branches, and the report of missionary labor done since the June conference was good and cheering. Many new openings were made with and calls for the preaching of the word. Four new branches had been organized, fifty-eight had been baptized and many are investigating the work. I can say the work in the mission so far as I am informed is prospering, and most of the branches are in fair condition. A number of the Saints from Waterford were at the conference. They have a branch of twenty-four members, all baptized and organized since the smoke has cleared away from the battle between Bro. R. C. Evans and the Rev. T. L. Wilkinson at that place. It is thought that if Bro. R. C. Evans continues his labors there, many more will obey the gospel of Christ. His return was requested by a large petition from the people of the world and one from the Saints, which will be duly considered.

Bro. John Shields and I organized a new branch in the township of Garafaxa on the 13th of September, and before they were organized they had most of the material on the ground to build a brick church 22x32, and four have been baptized there since the branch was organized. Bro. James Mortimer is the presiding elder, and John Taylor priest. Bro. Willard J. Smith has reported in his last letter in Herald of our labors in Haliburton county and in that part of the mission. He has done nobly for the Master's cause. It is a pleasure to labor with him, for he is blest of the Lord and is meek and humble, ever ready to help to defend the truth when duty demands. We are continuing meetings in this branch for four nights this week and over next Sunday, and then we expect to go to the other district to attend their conference on the 13th and 14th inst., to be held in the Zone branch. I expect to labor in that district for awhile and then I hope to go home for awhile. My health is usually good and I am feeling well spiritually in presenting the gospel to the people, and in caring for the Saints. I have no doubts or fears as the final triumph of the gospel, and the great latter day work in which we are engaged. I hope to ever be faithful that I may be able to "anchor my bark in the center and be safe from the rocks on the shore," for I realize as the power of God increases with the Saints, so the enemy's power increases and is manifested in many ways as false Christ's, false teachers and false gifts, and in claiming to perform miracles. So it will be well for the Saints to not believe every spirit, but to try the spirits by the law and testimony, and if they speak not in accordance therewith they should reject them, and hold on to the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life, and seek to become humble and meek and ever have a forgiving spirit; for as we forgive we are to be forgiven. Hoping that the Saints will ever remember these two points in the great Master's teaching, for if we are humble and meek we will obey, and if we forgive we will be forgiven. Then we may claim to be justified and have peace with God, and be in his favor. "By grace are ye saved." May this be our reward in the prayer of your brother and fellow-laborer in Christ,

JOHN H. LAKE.

FORSTER, N. S. W., August 17th.

Dear Herald:—Since our last from this place we have been at work in the surrounding country. The first effort made outside the branch was at Wingham, some thirty-two miles away. At two p. m. Friday we mounted some horses—the principal mode of travel here—and started, arriving at our destination at nine the same evening. Here was an experience we never met before, and as we rode through the "bush" and saw the various animals and birds, the scene was at once novel and wild. At the appointed time next night we were faced with an audience of some sixty. After meeting an old gentleman of the Church of England, and a young one of the Church of Christ, fired questions at us for about an hour, and seemed in high glee till we began to catechise. When they were thus put to the test their desire to remain soon weakened.

Next day we rode twenty-five to fill at three p. m. an appointment, and at night were back here to listen to Bro. T. W. Smith in one of his lofty and soul-stirring gospel discourses. Next night we occupied, and on the following night were at Failford, ten miles away, which was the beginning of a series of ten discourses at that place. The owner of the hall furnished it free, but during our stay put us to the test night after night, with the avowed intention of an expose. You can rest assured there were times when we felt a weakening in the lower extremities, when after the close of meeting we saw him stand to ask of us a question the nature of which we could only conjecture. In the midst of those, some of whom we almost felt were ready to introduce us to the unpleasant realities of a coat of tar and feathers, we could only breathe a silent prayer for the aid of inspiration to answer what questions might be asked. Thus did the time pass by, and we were made glad to see that the tide was taking a turn and that the flow was coming directly to our relief. At the consummation our heart was made glad to hear from one of the Wesleyan persuasion, that he was glad of the effort there, and that while he had heard preaching all his life and from various ministers, he had never before heard the Scriptures so clearly explained. He offered a wish for our personal safety, and that God would bless us wherever we might go.

The owner of the hall also made public acknowledgment that he was no match for us in a Bible argument, and twice said there was no use to argue with us, as the church only sent from America her smartest men! Poor man, how little did he think that such an admission was virtually saying that he was no match for the young men he had invited there, with a full belief that he would so entangle them that the church would suffer loss. He has since admitted that he tried to anger us, but that we stood the test in an altogether different way than he had expected.

There are times in our life when passing through such trials as this that we almost imagine we can feel the Spirit rising within us that at times was manifested by our father during Missouri's troublous times, but with a will power begotten only by the grace of God, we are permitted to overcome and manifest a meek and quiet feeling. To God be all the glory.

Since our arrival we have found the Saints so far seen, kind, warm-hearted and true. And while we are moving slowly, we ask those in other parts to be patient, as it requires time for that kind of survey necessary to a proper knowledge of the field to be worked.

20th.—We have been permitted to lead two more into the waters this day, making four since our arrival here for self, and one by Bro. Smith. Hastings, Victoria, Australia, will be our address till further notice.

MCPAUL, Iowa, Oct. 3d.

Editors Herald:—Since my last I have attended two grove meetings, one at Plum Hollow, Iowa, and one at Clarksdale, Missouri, and have done some labor at McFall and Stanberry, Missouri. You have been quite fully informed concerning the meetings at Plum Hollow and perhaps will be concerning the meetings at Clarksdale; but what little I may say in this communication will, I trust, do no harm.

As the good work which God has committed to our trust moves on and out we ought to be growing wiser and better. There is a progress in God's work. In some sense every dispensation is in advance of the one preceeding it. If this is conceded as I think it will be, then the question propounded by the apostle when applied to us comes with great force, "What manner of men ought we to be?" Our work is to preach Christ, not ourselves nor our brethren; therefore when we present the mission of Joseph Smith to the people, we do it because the work done by him in the name of the Lord was a part of God's work, and as such needs to be understood and accepted by the people. It is the work, God's work, that we ask the people to accept rather than the man. Our language should be carefully guarded when speaking on this subject, and indeed on all other subjects, lest we convey more than we intend or less than we intend, and thus are not in harmony with the word of God found in the books—the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants.

I heard testimonies some years ago concerning Joseph Smith, by members of the church, which I considered too strong; and some of them though borne by good people, almost made me shudder. Those who delivered these testimonies, or some of them, are now with the Whitmerites and deny very much of the work which Joseph Smith claimed to be divine, and which the church has accepted as such! Then they claimed too much; now they claim too little. What we are required to do is to "abide in the doctrine of Christ."

We believe that we should be kind and charitable with all. As a rule it is bad policy and wrong to ridicule and caricature that which we deem as false doctrine taught by others. In my opinion there is a better way of getting at it—one which will result in more general good. On the other hand there have been and are, some men who oppose this work who are so cunning, and who possess such a large amount of natural force all used in opposing the truth, that it becomes necessary to expose their work in a very strong way, in order that the people may see the truth and be able to determine who are engaged in it. Elders have sometimes been led to take this course by the Holy Spirit, and the same Spirit has given unmistakable evidences of God's sanction upon the work. In cases of this kind they (the elders) are apt to be misunderstood by those without and by those within, and unfriendly criticisms made upon their work. Some infidel writers denounce Jesus as intolerant and abusive—one who would crush without mercy any who dared to believe and teach contrary to his doctrine. But are these charges true?

The grove meetings at Clarksdale were enjoyable and spiritual. Most of the preaching after the departure of Bro. Blair devolved upon Bro. J. F. McDowell and the writer. However, we were kindly and ably assisted by Bro. J. T. Kinaman excepting Sundays and a few of the night meetings. The attendance was small, which perhaps can be best explained by those who did not attend. We are willing they should rise and explain. One thing is clear however, and that is this: Those who might have attended and did not (if there were any such) lost many precious blessings. How cheering it is to know that God acknowledges his people by the outpouring of his Spirit when they make a proper effort to teach his word and do his work, as enjoined in the sacred books of the church.

I am on my way to the Reunion to be held at Missouri Valley, Iowa, and hope and pray for a pleasant and profitable time. May the Spirit of the Lord rest upon his people; leading them to all that is good and true, and confirming them in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ.

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

DETROIT CITY, Minn., Oct. 1st.

Brethren Joseph and William:—I have been striving to do the best I can for the spread of truth and the advancement of the glorious kingdom of God. September 16th, at Frazee City, I baptized two old people. I am in hopes that others in that place will obey. Our conference will be held there next Saturday and Sunday, after which I shall leave for home and after a few days go to northern Illinois for the winter; that being the field the president of my mission desires me to labor in. Twenty-one have been baptized since I came here last May and others are near the kingdom. We are very sorry that Bro. Alexander had to leave here before conference for he was doing a good work. May God bless our worthy brother. Bro. H. N. Hansen has put in the time nobly since he came here, by preaching to the Scandinavians. Very few came to hear him, but the seed is sown and has no doubt taken root with some, and time remains to tell the result of the faithful labor done by our good brother. He preached a sermon to us yesterday that caused all to rejoice. My heart was made to rejoice. In reading the report of the Reunion at Jonesport, Maine, the places where I labored for thirteen years and where I led one hundred and fifty or more souls into the water. I rejoiced greatly to hear that Bro. Jerry Johnson with thirteen others had obeyed the gospel call. May God bless them. I read Bro. Willard Smith's letter in the Herald to-day and I felt very sorry to think that a man could have such a hard heart as to persecute his wife because she obeyed the gospel. Mr. Nun, at Lake Eunice was asked how he felt over his wife joining the Saints Church. His answer was: "I love her all the more." The man that asked the question said, "I'll never persecute my wife again." I said, "Thank God for his softening spirit." The people in this cold north country are getting their eyes opened to the truth; and I am glad that all the local authorities are doing their best with a few exceptions, to further on the cause. It is hoped that all will fall into line and work like men of God.

Yours truly,
J. C. Foss.

CHRIST A STUMBLING-BLOCK.

"Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14: 6.

BELOVED HERALD:—While listening to a sermon lately delivered by our worthy brother, C. D. Carter, from the above text, we had some thoughts given us that we would like others to read, if we can be aided by that Spirit that assisted our brother in his discourse; to enable us to meet the approval of your editors, and to make it instructive to your readers.

We wish to ask why, or wherein Christ became a "stumbling-block" to Israel?

Evidently it was in the fact that they overlooked His first coming.

Coming as he did, in the humble and (in their eyes), degraded manner that he did; being born in a stable and cradled in a manger, they looked at these conditions and failed to discern his teachings or his works.

What were their views of his teachings?

"Never man spake like this man."—John 7: 46.

Even in their synagogues we are told: "And they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes."—Mark 1: 22; Matt. 7: 28, 29.

What says another of those Jewish rulers?

"We know that thou art a teacher sent from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest expect God be with him."—John 3: 2.

Nor does it invalidate our claims in the least, that it was not the teachings of Jesus that the Jews stumbled at because our last witness became one of his followers.

Our last reference, with many others that might be cited, proves that it was not the works of Jesus, that the Jews stumbled at; nor do we find that they claimed, as do many of the priests of Mystery Babylon, that the teachings of Jesus, or of his called and chosen ambassadors were non-essential, or not necessary.

Then at what did they stumble, if not at his doctrine, (his teachings), or his works?

We will endeavor ere we close, (the Lord willing), to show what they stumbled at. Also to show that while modern Christians accept what the Jews stumbled at, they are stumbling over what the Jews accepted.

In Matthew we find that John the baptist came claiming to be the forerunner of Christ. "The voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the regions [people] round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins."—Matt. 3: 3, 5, 6.

We discover no non-essentials here; but if language means anything, we are forced to believe that vast multitudes yielded obedience to the teachings of John the baptist.

In John 4: 1, 2; we learn that there were more who yielded obedience to the teachings of Jesus and his disciples than to those of his forerunner, hence it was not what the Jews accepted, viz: His doctrine, or his teachings, that they stumbled over; but it was that which they rejected. They rejected Him.

They stumbled over his person. They were looking for a great king, a deliverer to come in great pomp and state; one who would deliver them from bondage; who would break the Gentile yoke, and set them free from the Roman power.

They were doubtless looking for the fulfilment of Isaiah 9: 6, 7; when Christ was to sit upon the throne of David, to order and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth and forever.

They could not receive the babe of Bethlehem; born in a stable and cradled in a manger. One to them of doubtful parentage, and whose father (so called) was a carpenter, and his mother, doubtless then as now, was accused of lacking in virtue.

In his manhood his associates were from the lower walks of life, while his chosen apostles were mostly fishermen. He ate and drank with publicans and sinners, (Mark 2: 16), and doubtless with unwashed hands; at least his disciples did. (Matt. 15: 2).

In this we see that he condescended to men of low estate, and low birth, instead of seeking out the rich, the noble and the great men of his nation, the pious and those exalted in their own eyes. This was more than those pious, bigoted Jewish rabbis could stoop to; it was with them as it is with a great many very religious persons in our day, who acknowledge that we preach the gospel as it is in the Bible. "But," they say, "there is old Jo Smith, and his golden Bible, that is more than we can swallow; it is stooping too low."

Please excuse our emphasizing the name of the above book, for we love that name although given to the Book of Mormon in derision by its enemies.

They say: "If the Lord had chosen some great, noted and popular divine, instead of a poor, ignorant, unlearned youth, (Isa. 29: 12), we would think better of your cause."

How often we have heard the above excuse, but here is where they are stumbling. They stumble not over Jesus, but over his teachings. Over the doctrine that his Father is unchangeable. That he is willing to reveal his will to his Saints in all ages of the world, hence is a God of (continued) revelation. And if so, then he must have prophets and revelators to whom to reveal his will. If he has no revelators or prophets, then of necessity there are no true Saints (Eph. 1: 1) to receive the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of God. (Eph. 1: 17); none who have the testimony of Jesus, for that is the Spirit of prophecy. (Rev. 19: 10). Descending still lower in the scale of poverty and humility, we find him saying: "Foxes have holes and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."—Luke 9: 58.

Isaiah doubtless saw his conditions and surroundings, in his first advent, rather than his person, when he said: "He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." And why? The reason given is that "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, [in his lowly and humble condition], and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted."—Isa. 53: 1-4.

As further proof that it was the person of Jesus that the Jews stumbled over, please read: "Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious; but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is become the head of the corner. And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, [person of Jesus, see John 1: 1, 14], being disobedient; whereunto also they were appointed."—1 Peter 2: 7, 8.

Having shown in the above quotation that Christ was the stone which the builders rejected, and that he was a "stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense," let us see what Paul says concerning it: "Wherefore, because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they stumbled over that stumbling stone; as it is written, Behold I lay in Sion a stumbling stone and a rock of offense; and whosoever believeth on him, [this person, this rock of offense], shall not be ashamed."—Rom. 9: 32, 33. In Isaiah 8: 13-16, we have the same sentiments and in nearly the same words.

We have proved that it was the person of Jesus and not his doctrine, teachings or works that Israel stumbled over; also that it is not his person that the religious world is stumbling over now. Webster defines stumble, "To trip in walking; a mis-step; a blunder." "A stumbling-block, that which causes one to stumble."

Since man through disobedience fell from his first estate, and became in a lost condition, it became necessary that there should be a plan of salvation ordained for him whereby he might become adopted into the family of God. But before any plan or scheme of salvation could take effect or reach us, there must be a restoration brought about; for the lost must be found before it can be saved. The dead must be restored to life before they can enjoy salvation. Because we do not believe in the unconscious state of the dead, (that is the spirit), nor that we can be perfectly happy until the soul and body are reunited. We are aware that other questions are sprung here, but we must let them pass. This restoration was brought about through Christ. Christ died for us, but not that we might be saved in the celestial kingdom of God. Because if he did die for that purpose, we will all be saved in that kingdom, or else he died in vain. He died that we might live; that we might be placed in a condition where we could "work out own salvation with fear and trembling."—Phil. 2: 12.

"For since by man (Adam) came death, by man (the Savior) came also the resurrection of the dead."

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. 15: 21, 22. We use a figure that we once heard John E. Page make use of. He said, "that just so large as the wound was made by the fall of man; just so large was the plaster that healed it made by the death of Christ upon the cross."

The debt now having been paid that was incurred by the fall, we are in a condition to accept of the plan of salvation, which we must do in order to be saved, as the Lord will never take from man his agency.

The plan of salvation, or road to heaven, (so to speak), is paved with conditions. Those conditions are the stumbling-blocks or stumbling-stones over which the man desiring salvation will stumble, if he stumbles at all.

The conditions of this plan of salvation as we understand it, are first, officers called and sent by the great I Am, to administer in and execute the laws of God. Then ordinances, ceremonies and duties to be complied with.

The first officer in this kingdom is the Chief Shepherd of the flock. He that gave his life to perfect this plan of salvation. We must receive him first, before we can acceptably comply with the rest of the conditions, because Jesus says "he that receiveth you, [that is your teachings], receiveth me, and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me."—John 13: 20.

The Jews would not receive Jesus, the first officer in the kingdom or church; and that was where they stumbled. But we, (the religious world), are willing to receive Jesus, and exultingly sing:

"O how I love Jesus, Because he first loved me."

Let us see what other officers are in this kingdom, and also learn if anybody is stumbling at the official arrangement.

It may not be necessary to enumerate all the officers in the church or kingdom of God, but we will name enough to see whether anybody is stumbling over them. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Cor. 12: 28. Who set them there? The text says God did. Then who has taken them out, or, where is the warrant in the Scriptures, that they should ever be taken out except for the cause of transgression? We boldly assert that there is none. In Ephesians 4: 8, 11, 12, 13 and 14, we read: "Wherefore he [Christ] saith, when he ascended up on high, he lead captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers."

What for, Bro. Paul? "For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body (Church) of Christ." Please tell us, Bro. Paul, how long they were to continue; and what other purpose they were given.

"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie it wait to deceive."

Who gave these officers to the church? Evidently God; for Jesus came to do only the will of his Father. (See John 5: 38; 6: 38; 8: 26-29.

These references we think are sufficient to show that whatever Jesus taught or did, was but the will of his Father.

Is there no stumbling here among professed Christians of our day? and especially among those who claim that they are called of God to preach the gospel?

Do they acknowledge the necessity of these officers that God has set in his church, or caused to be placed there? If not, then they are stumbling over those officers, that is certain. And we are plainly told that if we will not accept those whom God through Christ has sent; then we neither accept the Father nor the Son. (Matt. 10: 40; John 13: 20.)

We now wish to examine some of the conditions of salvation, to see who is stumbling there.

None, we trust, will deny after reading the following texts, that righteousness is essential unto salvation. "And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"—1 Peter 4: 18.

This also: "Then Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, [please remember this as we may want to refer to it again], but in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him."—Acts 10: 34, 35.

It follows then that if righteousness is one of the prerequisites necessary to salvation, and if God is no respecter of persons, both of which propositions we have proven, then of necessity it follows, that he with us must fulfill all righteousness, and it was for this very purpose that he demanded baptism of John the Baptist, when he said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."—Matt. 3: 15.

We have here the words of Jesus, some of which we have emphasized, that it was necessary for him to be baptized in order to fulfill all righteousness.

Then if "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," (Ps. 19: 7), and if Jesus "had to learn obedience by the things he suffered," (Heb. 5: 8), it follows that as he was a teacher sent from God, (Mark 9: 37), and was himself a man, (Heb. 2: 16-18), he must honor his own teachings, as we have seen that he did, (Matt. 3: 16), for he said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

In Mark 16: 16 we find these words: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Now let us quote a few more of the words of the Master unto his apostles:

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."—Matt. 28: 19, 20.

It will not do to claim, as some have claimed, that the baptism referred to here, and also in Mark 16: 16, was the baptism of the Holy Spirit, for the apostles were to administer this baptism, which in Matthew 3: 11 and Mark 1: 8, we are told that Jesus should baptize with the Holy Ghost.

We wish now to state that the teachings of Christ's chosen apostles and ministers, (of nearly nineteen centuries ago) were entitled to the same weight and force as his own. To prove this assertion, we quote: "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scriptures is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but by holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost."—2 Peter 1: 20, 21.

Again: "All Scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. 3: 16, 17, Inspired Translation.

We expect soon to come to some more stumbling-blocks, or stumbling-stones; but we wish first to pave our way so that none who believe the Bible to be the word of God can dodge the issue.

Jesus after his resurrection, commanded his disciples to "tarry in the city of Jerusalem, until they were endued with power from on high."—Luke 24: 49. We may sing, "O, how we love Jesus," but if we honor not his teachings, nor those of his chosen ministry, how dwelleth the love of God in our hearts?

Jesus says: "If ye love me keep my commandments." Again: "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings; and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me."—John 14: 15, 24. This also: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John 15: 14.

Is not this conclusive that, if we honor not the teachings of Jesus, nor those of his chosen ambassadors, that we have no love nor friendship for him?

Paul tells it truly, when he says: "Even so the things of God knoweth no man, except he has the Spirit of God."—1 Cor. 2: 11, Inspired Translation. Of the Comforter or Holy Ghost, we read: "If ye love me keep my commandments and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world can not receive because they seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you, but the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14: 15-17, 25, 26.

We have emphasized some words in the last verse to show that the words Comforter and the Holy Ghost are synonymous terms; so also, is the Spirit of truth, as well as the Spirit of God, as is evident from Matthew 3: 16. Luke 3: 22. John 14: 26; 16: 13. Again we read: "Howbeit when he the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come."—John 16: 13.

This endowment was that power from on high that they were to tarry for, as has been cited (Luke 24: 49), and we think is as reliable as any of the words of Jesus. Behold how this "power from on high," was manifested on the day of Pentecost. See how it enabled those illiterate, uneducated fishermen and disciples to speak in some sixteen or more different tongues, and languages, by the mighty power of God's Spirit, and then tell me if you do not think that Peter was abundantly able to tell those three thousand convicted sinners, who were pricked in their hearts what to do, when they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Think you that Peter would command any non-essentials? Oh, no. Such a thought is not worthy any Bible scholar. O my beloved reader; do not stumble over what the Spirit of God through Peter commands them; but listen to his reply: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." What more? "And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Who shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost? Peter said by the Spirit of God on that occasion: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2: 37-39. The last verse quoted shows that the promise of "the gift of the Holy Ghost," extends down to the latest generations of earth; but how many are stumbling here? Has the kind Father got a different kind of a Holy Ghost for those who live in the last days? One with no power, like was promised in Mark 16: 17, 18; John 14: 16, 17, 26; 16:

13; 1 Cor 12: 1-11? Or as was manifested, in Acts 2: 2-11; 8: 15-17; 10: 44-47; 13: 2, 3; 19: 5, 6? Has he a Holy Ghost now that will only make us feel happy, and cause us to shout glory, and make us think that we know our sins are forgiven; and thus lull our souls away in carnal security? It is now taught that we can not have the testimony of Jesus to know that "the doctrine," is true; (John 7: 17), for the "testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy," (Revelations 19: 10), and that, we fear, would not do, if the spiritual gifts are all done away with.

Let us now examine some of the essentials of the gospel and see if there are any who are stumbling here:—Jesus says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark 16: 16. The promise of salvation here hinges as much on the word "baptized," as it does on faith.

To Nicodemus Jesus said: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5. What says Peter on this subject? "The like figure whereunto even baptism, doth also now save us." 1 Peter 3: 21. What was the figure here referred to? Verse twenty tells us it was water. Thus Peter's statement harmonizes with what Jesus told Nicodemus. We wish to examine still further what the disciples taught concerning baptism and its mode: "Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them." What duties and ordinances did he preach unto them? Matthew 28: 19, 20; and Mark 16: 15, 16, tell us what he was commanded to preach, and from the following we think that Philip heeded that command: "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women."

We next find Philip joining himself to a certain chariot, and forthwith he began to expound the scriptures to a certain eunuch. What did he preach to that eunuch? The text says he preached to him Jesus. Neither the text, nor Philip's discourse contains anything about baptism, its necessity, or its mode. Why then should the eunuch be so anxious to be baptized if it was not essential to salvation? Or why the necessity of them both leaving the chariot and going down into the water, and coming up out of the water, if sprinkling or pouring was just as good? Acts 8: 5, 12, 26-40. Had Philip told the eunuch what Jesus told Nicodemus, and also what Peter told the three thousand on the day of Pentecost? What is being born of water? Can a person be born of that with which he has never been inclosed or surrounded? If this stumbling-block (baptism), is not necessary to salvation, why did Peter command those who had already received the Holy Ghost to be baptized? Acts 10: 44-48. Was it not because it was just as necessary for them to fulfill all righteousness after they had received the Holy Ghost, as it was for Him who was conceived by the Holy Ghost? Or as it was for Paul to be commanded as follows? "And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins calling on the name of the Lord." Acts 22: 16. And this after he had seen a heavenly vision, and had talked with Jesus; and even after Ananias had laid his hands upon his head that he might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost. Acts 9: 5, 17; 22: 7-14. We may learn a useful lesson here, viz., that the Lord may bestow great blessings upon those who have never obeyed the gospel; may even come to them in person and converse with them face to face, as in Paul's case. May send angels to them to instruct and encourage them. He may even bestow upon them the Holy Ghost, as in the case of Cornelius, so that they both speak in tongues and prophecy, but this does not release them from obeying every ordinance of God's house. They must be baptized for the remission of sins, as certain as the writer must give a day's work for a day's pay, even if his employer has seen fit to bestow the money, before the work is done.

We wish to refer to one case more before we close, as it is often used by our friends who discard baptism, and especially immersion. Some even claim it in defense of infant baptism. It is the case of the jailer and his household.

"Then he [the jailer] called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, and brought them out, [out from where? Of course out of the prison], and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Was that all that the Apostles told him to do? No; for we further read. "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." Remember that we have once got them out of prison. "And he [the jailer] took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced believing in God with all his house."—Acts 16: 29-34.

We have emphasized certain words above, first their being brought out of prison, and being baptized before they were brought into the house. This does away with the objection that they could not go where there was water enough to immerse. And the gospel being preached "to all that were in his house," shows that if there were any infants baptized, they were old enough to have the gospel preached to them.

Beloved Herald, we are aware that in this article there are some repetitions, also that some texts of Scripture are referred to several times, and perhaps some of the verses are quoted the second time; but the subject containing so many and various stumbling blocks that we could not well avoid these and do the subject justice.

If the writer has said anything that will enable the honest seeker after truth, the plan of salvation, as devised by our heavenly Father; to see, and to avoid all such stumbling-stones, and to become identified with the children of Christ, he will be amply rewarded for all his pains.

Yours in the gospel of Christ,

W. R. CALHOON.

A GLANCE AT JEWISH HISTORY.—No. 13.

BY ELDER WILLIAM KENDRICK.

REVOLTS UNDER TRAJAN AND ADRIAN. A. D. 70-136.

THE Jews themselves in their traditions attribute the actual outbreak of hostilities to an incident sufficiently trivial; but their testimony in this instance will not be rejected as improbable, when we reflect how often, in the most important revolutions, an event the most minute and unexpected has proved the match by which the whole train has been set in a blaze: "It is customary in Judea for each family to plant a cedar before the house at the birth of a son, and a pine at the birth of a daughter. These trees were deemed sacred and were not cut down till they were needed to form the marriage-bed. The daughter of Adrian was traveling in Judea, when her chariot was injured, and her attendants proceeded, in an overbearing manner to cut down one of the sacred trees to be used in repairing it. The inhabitants of the place rose and massacred the train of the princess, who was so enraged that she forced her father to make war against the Jews to humble their pride."

At this moment, when the whole nation was kindling into a flame, the general enthusiasm was raised to the highest pitch by the startling announcement that the Messiah had appeared. An adventurer named Simeon, whose early history is unrecorded, suddenly gave out that he was the long announced and long expected Christ; and in allusion to the renowned prophecy of Balaam, took the appellation of Bar-Cocheba, or the Son of a star. His cause was espoused with ardor by Akiba, the most illustrious of the Rabbis. Akiba, or Aquiba—Ben Joseph, is said to have been descended from Sisera, the General of Jabin, who fell by the hammer and nail of Jael. He began life as a shepherd, keeping the flocks of a rich citizen of Jerusalem. Falling in love with his master's daughter but rejected on account of his low condition, he applied himself to study, and returned at the end of twelve years to claim his wife, with twelve thousand disciples at his feet. Her father disinherited her on learning her union with Akiba, and the latter returned to his college, whence after twelve years more, he again visited his father-in-law with twenty-four thousand disciples. His transcendent reputation overcame the obstinate resentment of the wealthy sire, who, rescinding his angry vow, bestowed his favor and his wealth upon the happy pair.

The Talmud abounds with details of the sayings and doings of this marvelous Rabbi, as extravagant as they are minute,

The divine revelations made to him are declared to have been greater than those made to Moses. A thousand maxims, reputed to contain the most profound wisdom, were delivered to him. An entire volume might be filled with passages from his memoirs. One hundred and twenty years are assigned to his life, in rivalry of his predecessor, Moses.

Such are a few of the fables with which Jewish tradition has adorned the attendant of the self-styled "Star." Patriotism, or ambition, at once determined the Rabbi to cast the whole weight of his immense influence into the scale of the bold adventurer. "Behold," cried he in a conclave of the people, "This is the Star out of Jacob! The redemption of Israel is come!" And he immediately announced himself as his precursor and standard-bearer. The new leader seems to have been a man of great abilities, fitted by his address and intrepidity for the command of men. He is said to have awed the most skeptical into an acknowledgement of his lofty claims by the exhibition of miraculous powers, among the chief of which is recorded that of sending forth a stream of fire from his mouth, supposed to indicate the flaming vengeance with which he would burn up his enemies before his face. The meek and lowly Jesus, the true Christ of God, had long ago declared, "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." (John 5: 43.)

The fame of this pretender spread like lightning; and two thousand men in arms are said to have flocked from all parts of the world to the standard again uplifted on the mountains of Judea. The Christians alone refused to acknowledge his assumptions, and were persecuted by him with great barbarity. Having overpowered the feeble garrison of Jerusalem, Bar-Cocheba made himself master of the Holy City, assumed the title of King, and issued coins, inscribed on the one side with his own name, and on the other with the words "Freedom of Jerusalem." One of these is in the British Museum: one side represents a portion of four columns, in the midst of which is a lyre; a serpentine stroke below is said to represent the brook Kidron, and a star alludes to his name and pretensions. On the reverse is a pot of manna and a leaf. The inscriptions read "Simeon," and "Freedom of Jerusalem." This coin is, by some numismatologists, assigned to a higher antiquity, and ascribed to Simon Maccabæus.

The Roman lieutenant in Judea at this time was T. Annius (or Tinnius) Rufus, called by the Jews Turnus Rufus, and perpetually confounded by them with Terentius Rufus, the stern desolator of Jerusalem after the conquest by Titus. The force which the commander was able to bring against Bar-Cocheba was wholly unable to quell the insurrection. He exercised, indeed, the most unrelenting severities on the prisoners who fell into his hands, slaying many thousands of men, women, and children; but these barbarities could not retard the steady progress of the Jewish leader, who gradually got into his possession many places of strength. He chose for his metropolis, not Jerusalem, which although partly rebuilt, was still unwalled, but Bither, a city in the neighborhood of it; a stronghold on the summit of a craggy mountain. Here he was crowned as King Messiah, and here he issued his coin.

The emergency was so great that the emperor at length recalled from Britain the most renowned of his commanders, Julius Severus. On his arrival in Judea, he found a victorious enemy with fifty fortresses in his possession, and nine hundred and eighty-five villages. This able general soon turned the tide of success, and sustained his military reputation. Avoiding a decisive engagement with so powerful an adversary, he harassed his forces in detail, straightened his quarters, captured his convoys, stormed his fortresses, and at length laid siege to Bither. The insurgent king made a desperate resistance, and the strength of his citadel for a time defied the Roman besiegers. How long it held out is not known, but it was at length stormed and a general massacre ensued. Bar Cocheba himself was slain, and his head was brought to Adrian.

The day on which this calamity took place was once more the memorable 9th of Ab, the day on which the Temple had been destroyed, first by Nebuchadnezzar, and afterwards by Titus. The Jewish writers relate that the slaughter was dreadful. A greater number are said to have perished than those that came out of Egypt under Moses. The students of the numerous colleges were burned to death with their books tied to them. The skulls of three hundred infants were found in a single rock; the horses waded up to their bits in human blood, which flowed so copiously that great stones weighing four pounds each were carried by the current to the sea. The corpses covered the ground for eighteen square miles; and so saturated was the soil with gore, that the cultivators had no need to manure it for seven years. The Roman historian Dio, affirms that during this war the number of those who fell by the sword amounted to five hundred and eighty thousand, besides those who perished by famine, disease and fire.

Judea was turned into a desert once more. Wolves and hyenas howled in the streets of the desolate cities.

The Romans also, according to the same authority, suffered severely in this sanguinary war; they were often defeated, and lost the flower of their armies. It was indeed a war of horrors. The aged Rabbi who had contributed so much to the delusion of the miserable populace was consigned to a terrible and barbarous fate. The traditions of the Talmud have recorded the singular constancy of this man. Being arraigned before T. Rufus, in the midst of his examination he recollected that it was the hour of prayer. Indifferent to the presence of his cruel judge and the heathen spectators, he instantly fell upon his knees, and calmly, as though he was in his closet, performed his devotions.

In prison he preferred to use his scanty pittance of water in the performance of the ordained ablutions to quenching the burning thirst with which his throat was parched. Adrian ordered him to be flayed alive, by means of iron combs; a horrible and diabolical act of vengeance.

As on the former reduction of the rebellious province, so on this occasion, the common people were consigned to slavery. In the south of Judea stood a venerable terebinth tree, of gigantic size, whose existence tradition carried up to an antiquity so remote, that Abraham was believed to have pitched his tent beneath its spreading shelter, and to have there entertained the three angels who were sent against Sodom. An annual fair of merchandise from time immemorial had been held under its boughs, and here the miserable Jews were brought in droves and sold like cattle. Those who remained unpurchased here were afterwards driven to another mart of Gaza.

Some writers have supposed that T. Annius Rufus at this time ploughed up the very surface of Jerusalem; but this seems to have risen from the Jewish habit of confounding him with Terentius Rufus. It is more consonant with historic testimony, as well as with probability to believe that Adrian pursued his original design of rebuilding the city by the name of Ælia Capitolina, though in so doing he would have to dig up many of the foundations of the ruined buildings. The circuit of the new walls embraced a wider area than that of the old, but the stones of the dismantled fortifications were largely used in constructing them. The massive hewn stones that had excited the wonder of beholders in the construction of the magnificent Temple, were now employed to build a Theater.

These desecrations would be sufficiently galling to the minds of the Jews, but the vindictive emperor still further insulted their religious feelings by placing the statues of idols on the site of the sanctuary, and by placing over the gate that led to Bethlehem the figure of a swine, of all animals the most abhorrent to a Jew.

He enacted a law, prohibiting under pain of death, any Jew from entering the city, or even from gazing on it from the neighboring hills; but the Roman soldiery made a gain of this edict by selling at a large price the painful privilege, not the less prized because dearly bought, of weeping over the venerable ruins, and scattering perfume over the stones of the Temple.

Adrian celebrated the subjugation of Judea by the issue of medals, one of which bears the figure of a woman sacrificing and holding two naked children by the hand. It has been ingeniously conjectured that the woman is intended to represent Judea, who consents to the sacrifice, to receive the Pagan religion, and that the naked children imply the renunciation of circumcision. There is another medal of this reign, representing Judea as a woman on her knees, stretching out her hand in supplication towards the emperor. Three children are with her, one of whom is naked, who appear to join in their mother's entreaties.

The actual sight of Bithur where the tragic scenes were enacted, which a second time extinguished the hopes of the broken children of Israel, has until lately eluded the research of modern topography. Some have supposed it to be the same as Beth-horon, others Bethel. But it seems to have been recently identified in a satisfactory manner by the Rev. G. Williams, whose interesting words we here subjoin:

"It is a great satisfaction to have it in my power to determine beyond all doubt the site of this important position, which has so long and so strangely baffled the search of the curious. I say strangely, because its situation in the neighborhood of Jerusalem, where Eusebius has taught us to look for it, the fact of its retaining its ancient name entirely unaltered—which has even found its way into the later maps, and lastly the local traditions existing among the native Mahommedans—certainly not taught, because not known, by monks and travelers—contribute to form a chain of evidence for its identity stronger than any I met with in Palestine, excepting such as I was prepared to expect. The importance of the subject will, I trust, excuse the digression and minute detail. Having heard of the existence of a village in the vicinity of Jerusalem, whose name appeared of sufficient interest to justify a visit, I took with me a Mahommedan guide, a peasant of Ain Karim, and on Friday the 28th of April, 1843, went in quest of Bithur. Leaving the convent of the cross, and Ain Malakh, on the right, and Beit Safafa and Es Sherafat on the left, I followed the deep Wady Hannich, until, after passing the fountains of Yello and Wellager, I found a valley running into it from the left, which comes down from the neighborhood of Beit Jala. This last Wady derives its name from the village of which I was in quest; standing at the point of juncture of the two vallies. The first feature that attracted my attention, as I approached the spot, was a lofty hill, projecting into the valley which surrounds it on three sides, attached to the modern village by a rocky Isthmus. On this hill my guide pointed out Khirbet el Yehud (the Ruins of the Jews), of which he had volunteered mention on the road. Following a track down which a copious stream of water was flowing, I came to a fountain which rises above the village, having a passage cut through the solid rock to the source. In this passage I found the Sheikh of the village, and immediately engaged his services. On inquiring if there were ruins in the neighborhood, the Sheikh and several villagers who had congregated, with one voice repeated the welcome words 'Khirbet el Yehud,' pointing to the hill over against us. Under the guidance of the Sheikh I ascended to it, passing on the way some large caverns in its rocky sides, in some of which he said there was architecture; but they were blocked up, and I could not explore them.

"On reaching the summit of the hill, my guide conducted me, without the slightest hesitation, to the ruins of a 'tower' on the north, near which he pointed out the remains of an 'old wall,' which he told me had surrounded the hill. There was also a 'second tower' on the south side, the ruins of which are very distinct, though the masonry is not striking but solid; and beneath this he directed my attention to 'a fosse,' which had been contrived by art for the fortification of this remarkable position. Surrounded by the almost precipitous valley on three sides, the hill was by nature impregnable, except on the south, where, as was said, it was attached to the modern village and the mountain region above it by a rocky isthmus. This isthmus had been cut through and a deep trench formed to guard the approaches in that quarter; and a stronger position for ancient warfare can scarcely be imagined. Having explored the spot for some time, and made my notes, I was well satisfied with the result of my visit; and was about to commence the descent, when the Sheikh pointed to the hills behind the modern village, rising to about the same height as that on which we stood, and remarked, 'They shot at them from that hill.' Who shot at whom, I enquired. 'Oh! I don't know,' he replied; it was a long while ago. How should I know?"

"Strange that the tradition of the siege by the Romans should have been handed down to this day in this vague form; among the infidels; for there are none but Mahommedans in the village; and the Greek monks at Jerusalem, to whom I afterwards mentioned the facts, knew scarcely of the existence of the village, much less of its traditions.

"The site is more circumscribed than I had expected to find it. The wall which surrounded the hill could scarcely have exceeded a mile in circuit; but this difficulty may be solved by the supposition of the tower having covered the hill on whose side the modern village now stands, and to which the isolated hill would form the Acropolis."

The traditions of the Rabbis respecting the extent of Bether are no doubt absurdly exaggerated; but it is incredible that its whole population should have been so long cooped up within such narrow limits as those above described.

Whatever solution may be offered to this difficulty, I do not apprehend that any objections can avail to set aside the evidence which has now been adduced for the identity of this site with the Bether of Jewish history; and I have as little doubt that the high region to the south of this, which I afterwards traversed on the way to El Khudr, is described by Solomon in the Canticles as "the Mountains of Bether," as the valley which bounds it on the east is still called by that name."

We may learn from the intensity of the chastisement which had fallen upon the people of Israel, God's estimate of their transcendent crime. Seventy years' captivity was the punishment of national apostasy from the worship of Jehovah; but the rejection of the mission of the Son of God, has been visited with a far heavier vengeance. Eighteen centuries of desolation, oppression and contempt, have not expiated their awful sin. Robbed and spoiled, hunted like wild beasts into snares, thrown into dungeons, the victims and the prey of every oppressor, with no deliverer, no pitier, nor avenger, they remain a monument of God's righteous ire against sin, and the truth of His holy word. "But this is a people robbed and spoiled; they are all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison houses; they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for a spoil, and none saith, Restore. Who among you will give ear to this? Who will hearken and hear for the time to come? Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? Did not the Lord, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in His ways, neither were they obedient unto his law. Therefore he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle; and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart. (Isa. 42: 22-25). "As the Jews from age to age," observes a commentator, "read this chapter, the Lord calls upon them to reflect on their condition, and the cause, and author of it, and enquires, 'Who, among them will hearken for the time to come?' Nor can they assign any other reason for their long continued miseries, except the hot displeasure at their obstinate rejection of their promised Messiah. But though He hath poured out upon them his indignation, yet they know not, and lay it not to heart; and their insensibility forms as striking a demonstration of the truth of the Scriptures as their desolate and unprecedented situation."

Conference Minutes.

DESMOINES.

Conference convened in the Saints' Chapel, Des Moines, Iowa, September 1st. The district president being absent, Bro. W. T. Bozarth was chosen to preside. After devotional exercises Bro. W. C. Nirk was chosen to assist the chairman, H. A. McCoy secretary, Bro. Batten as assistant. Brethren Lyke, Freel and Johnson were appointed a committee on credentials, and Brn. Hand, Shimel and McBurney on program. The branch reports were referred to the secretary and the credentials' committee whose subsequent report was accepted. Elders' report:—J. S. Roth, organized one branch, baptized 11, and ordained a priest; W. N. Ray, J. P. Knox, J. Sayers, Geo. Shimel, baptized 2, W. McBurney, S. Longbottom, W. S. Barbee, N. Stamm, baptized 1, W. C. Nirk, W. Thompson, (by letter) baptized 4, J. X. Davis and W. T. Bozarth. Priests reported:—Evan Jones, baptized 1, Parley Batten and T. R. Williams. Teachers:—John Clark, John Coiner, (by letter), and deacons H. Lyke, Wm. Johnson and H. Pratt. Bishop's Agent's report:—On hand last report, $239.07; Received since, $190.35; total $429.42; paid out $344.69; balance $84.73. Report and book audited and found correct. George Shimel was sustained as district president, J. S. Roth as Bishop's and book agent and H. A. McCoy as secretary. A committee of three was appointed to report to the next district conference a certain matter of difference in opinion of brethren and see if it could then be adjusted; if not to then be referred to the General Conference if the body deems best. The church authorities were sustained. Preaching by Geo. Shimel, W. T. Bozarth and J. S. Roth. Prayer and testimony meetings Sunday morning and afternoon. A collection of $4.30 was taken up to pay the secretary's expenses. Adjourned to meet at Boonsborough, the second Friday in March, 1889, at 7:30 p. m.

NAUVOO AND STRING PRAIRIE.

Conference met with the Rock Creek branch Saturday, September 1st, J. McKiernan president, G. P. Lambert clerk. Minutes of last conference were read and approved. Branch reports: Keokuk 43; 1 received. Rock Creek 41; 1 removed. Montrose 85; 1 baptized, 1 death. Ministry reports: Elders J. McKiernan (baptized 1), J. H. Lambert, H. T. Pitt, S. J. Salisbury and W. T. Lambert; also A. A. Hall, priest, reported. A request for information coming from a member of the former Elvaston branch, it was moved that we request the members of the Elvaston branch, now disorganized, to join other branches as most convenient. It was moved that the records of disorganized branches be placed in the hands of the district clerk to be by him sent to the General Church Recorder as soon as necessary corrections can be made on the district record. Bro. James McKiernan presented a report of personal receipts and expenditures for the past three months. The report was received. Bishop's agent, J. H. Lambert, reported: Amount due agent last report $4.05, received since $74.57, balance due church June 1st, 1888, $14.32. The report was received and an auditing committee consisting of H. T. Pitt, S. J. Salisbury and R. Lambert reported amount due church $15.75 instead of $14.32 as reported by agent. Had examined books hastily in the absence of the agent and admitting the possibility of a mistake on their part, the report was received and committee continued with instructions to report to next conference. A Two Days' meeting was appointed to be held at Montrose, Iowa, October 13th and 14th, beginning at 10:30 a. m. The next session of conference was appointed for Burlington, Iowa, December 1st, at 10:30 a. m. Preaching Saturday at eight p. m., by Bro. James McKiernan; Sunday at 10:30 a. m., by Bro. S. J. Salisbury; Sunday at eight p. m., by Bro. James McKiernan. Social and sacrament meeting Sunday at 2:30 p. m., in charge of Brn. S. Ferris and R. Lambert. Conference adjourned per resolution.

AUSTRALIA.

Minutes of conference held at Hastings, Victoria, June 16th: Conference called to order by Apostle T. W. Smith who occupied the chair by vote of meeting. E. McGurk, secretary pro tem., W. J. Trembath, assistant. Minutes of last conference read, amended, and approved as amended. Report of Queensferry branch read and referred to branch president for full particulars of all changes. Report of Leopold branch read and approved. The president of Leopold branch reported that unity and good will prevailed among the members. Increase of two since last report. The president of Hastings branch being absent through illness, Bro. Woolley reported no alterations. A letter from Bishop G. A. Blakeslee was read confirming Elder McGurk's appointment as Bishop's agent for district of Victoria. District president's report read and approved. Brn. McIntosh, Woolley and Grayden also gave satisfactory reports of their labors and of the state of the work. Ordinations: Bro. G. W. Hailey was ordained a priest and Bro. J. Grayden a teacher, both by Elder T. W. Smith. A vote of thanks was tendered to Brn. and Sisters Carmichael and Grayden for kindness rendered. Brn. Jones, McGurk and Read were sustained in their respective offices as district president, Bishop's agent and district secretary. All the authorities of the church were sustained. Preaching by Brn. T. W. Smith, D. McIntosh and W. J. Trembath. At the prayer and testimony meeting held on Sunday morning the gifts of the Spirit were manifested in tongues, interpretation and prophesy, causing the hearts of all to rejoice. Financial reports: Queensferry branch £12 15s. 6d.; Hastings £6 10s. 3d.; Leopold £1 14s.; total £20 19s. 9d. Bishop's agent reported £2 in hand. Officers present: 1 apostle, 3 elders, 4 priests and 1 teacher. Adjourned to meet at Queensferry, Saturday, October 20th, at 10:30 a. m.

Miscellaneous.

CHRISTADELPHIAN DISCUSSION.

Editor Guardian:—I do not know whether anyone has communicated Friday's debate or not. In reference to Mr. Norton wandering, as was reported to you, it was done purposely, to bring out the Christadelphian doctrine, for I knew the proof I should bring to bear would be more than the Christadelphian doctrine could stand. As for the question time of my opponent, the question was so ridiculous such as, "What is man?" Answer: "A human being." "What is a monkey?" My answer: "It is a ridiculous question." "What is an elephant?" Answer: "A large animal." (I do not know whether I said with a trunk or tail). Seeing the foolishness, I refused to answer, and also to question him on the first night, and in my last speech I gave him notice to prepare for the next night. The following Scripture texts formed the basis of my first speech on Friday last:—Matt. 10: 28; Luke 14: 19-31; Luke 23: 39-43; Matt. 17: 1-13; Mark 9: 2, 13; Luke 9: 28-36 (see Moses' death, Deut. 34: 5-6); St. John 5: 25; Matt. 22: 31, 32, and 6: 47-51; 2 Cor. 5: 1-10; Phil. 1: 21-24; Heb. 12: 23, 24; James 2: 26; Rev. 6: 9-11. When my turn came to question my opponent on Matt. 10: 28, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him that is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Question 1: "According to this text, has man got a spirit or soul that lives after he is killed by another?" He hesitated. "You must answer, yes or no." "I suppose he has." Question 2: "Had the rich man a soul, together with Abraham and Lazarus, and were they conscious?" This he was also obliged to confess. Question 3: "What about Moses and Elias? (Matt. 17: 1-13) We have the account of Moses' death at Deut. 34: 5, 6; were these men conscious?" "Ah, that was only a vision." "Vision or not, they came to tell him what death he should accomplish at Jerusalem; was Moses conscious then?" "I suppose he was." "Yes, so I say." Question 4: (Phil. 1: 21-24) "Would Paul have been conscious if he had departed then, and if not, he would have been worse, instead of far better?" I forgot the answer, but the question is plain enough. Question 5: (James 2: 26, "For as the body is dead without the spirit") "What is it that lives?" Echo answers; he did not. Question 6: (Rev. 6: 9-11) This he did not like to answer, saying the Revelations required a lot of thought before an answer could be given. "Oh! but, as my question time is nearly up, you must answer it now. Now, were the slain conscious, or not; answer yes or no?" He said, "I suppose they were." "That is my point," I said. There were two speeches after that, and then, at my request, a vote was taken from the audience for each opponent. For the Christadelphian, 11 votes; for C. D. Norton, 22 votes. I think, in all fairness, as you published the first night's debate, you will give to the public my side of the matter.

Respectfully yours,

C. D. NORTON.

WINTON, Eng., Sept. 10th.

A HINDOO WOMAN'S CREED.

The Pundita Ramabai, who has been visiting Boston, and who has more lately been with Miss Willard, at Evanston, Illinois, and who is preparing to return to India to engage in teaching high caste Indian women, does not find it easy to tell what denomination she belongs to. A reporter asked the question, and she answered: "I belong to the universal church of Christ. I meet good Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians and presbyterians, and each one tells me something different about the Bible. So it seems to me better to go there myself and find the best I can. And there I find Christ the Savior of the world; and to Him I give my heart. I was baptized when in England, and I commune with all Christian people who will allow me to do so. I do not profess to be of any particular denomination, for I would go back to India simply as a Christian. To my mind it appears that the New Testament, and especially the words of our Savior, are a sufficiently elaborate creed. I believe as the Savior has told us, and His message through John has come to us, that God is a Spirit, is light and love; in His threefold nature He creates, illuminates and pervades the universe, that Jesus His Son and Servant, the Apostle of our faith, was sent by Him to be the Savior and leader of His children; that as many as believe on Him have the right to be the sons of God, and that the Holy Spirit is our guide and comforter, the great gift of God through Christ, that there is but one church, and that all who acknowledge Jesus as their Savior are members of that church. I believe that whatever is needed for my salvation will be given me, and I pray earnestly that God may grant me the grace to be a seeker and follower of truth and a doer of His will. In Boston they said I was a Unitarian; I told them I was not. Neither am I a Trinitarian. I do not understand those modern inventions at all. I am simply a Christian and the New Testament teaches me my religion."—American.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Texas Central district conference will convene Friday, November 9th, instead of October 19th, as erroneously announced. All interested please note the date, November 9th.

By order of District President.

MARRIED.

BARMOR—WALKER.—At the residence of Bro. Benjamin Jones, Mendon, Kansas, by Elder W. S. Taylor, Bro. Orvil M. Barmor and Sr. Alice Walker. Dates not given.

DIED.

MOLESWORTH.—At Birmingham, England, January 30th, 1888, after a long and painful illness of consumption, Miss Jane Molesworth, aged 18 years. She was a true and faithful Saint. One bright Sunday afternoon in August, her mother was looking on the sky; the heavens opened and she beheld paradise brighter than the sun, and therein was Jane, clothed with a fullness of joy. She exclaimed, "I would not exchange my position for all the world you are in."

I stood by the grave of my daughter, who's gone
To a brighter and happier sphere;
I sighed, but I felt in my heart not to mourn,
For the loss of my loved one so dear.
As the azure blue flower that hangs near her tomb,
Shedding fragrance and beauty around,
May be plucked from its stem in the prime of its bloom,
And its leaves wither low on the ground.
Thus my dear one was called in the springtime of life,
Her spirit escaped from its clay;
Has soared far aloft from all sorrow and strife,
And commenced a more glorious day.

ALLEN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, on the morning of October 11th, 1888, sister Eunice A. Allen, aged 15 years, 6 months, and 12 days. Her death was caused by a gasoline disaster, her clothing taking fire from the burning fluid. She lingered twelve days and suffered much. She became a member of the Church July 7th, 1885, being baptized by Elder H. A. Stebbins, who also officiated in the funeral services at the house and grave on October 11th.

DUNCAN.—At San Jose, California, August 26th, 1888, of paralysis, Bro. W. T. Duncan, aged 53 years. He was born June 10th, 1835, in Rhea county, Tennessee. Was baptized and confirmed May 10th, 1885, at Webb City, Missouri, by Elder John T. Davis and was by him ordained a priest June 20th, 1886. He removed by letter from Webb City branch September 10th, 1887. Funeral from his late residence in San Jose, August 27th, 1888; discourse by Elder D. S. Mills, from Job 14:14 and 19:23, to a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors, who on a short acquaintance had learned to love and honor him for his integrity and noble saintly virtues. He was a living light to all around him. May his bereaved family emulate his virtues by following Christ. Our brother bore strong testimony to the truth, in the light of which he lived and died in the Lord; being perfectly reconciled and ready to depart in peace. Was buried under the auspices of the A. O. U. W., of which he was an honored member and from which order his otherwise destitute family receive the handsome sum of two thousand dollars. His family propose to return to Webb City shortly to live.

MENZIES.—At Scranton, Kansas, September 27th, 1888, after an illness of ten days, Walter Menzies. He was born December 4th, 1887. Funeral services by Elder E. C. Brand.

LARSON.—Sr. Martha Johnson Larson, born in Denmark, May 7th, 1831; died at Omaha, Nebraska, August 10th, 1888. Funeral service by E. Rannie, Jr.

AUTUMN LEAVES, Prospectus for 1889.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND PATRONS.

With the next issue of AUTUMN LEAVES the volume for 1888 will close, and your next number will begin the new volume. Before entering upon our work for another year we wish to express our heartfelt thanks to you for the support and encouragement given us in our labors the past year. To this support and encouragement the periodical is indebted for its existence; and in reality, it is not our work any more than it is yours; and in the great day of reckoning there will be a sifting and readjustment of debit and credit which will upset many a nicely balanced sheet, by transferring credit to names which have not appeared thereon, and subtracting or utterly cancelling those which in their prominence have had entirely too much placed to their account. Let us thank God for this, and take courage, for we know that our God will reward each one faithfully and fully; not only for what he has done, but for that also which he had in his heart to do.

with the success of the past year, we do not feel that the permanent success or continued life of our Magazine is yet assured. The slight advance in price which we have been compelled to make may not meet the approval of all, and yet we can not think that any friends of the work will make this an objection. Some who have had the Magazine to examine during the past year, may not be as well pleased with it as they hoped to be, and for this reason wish to discontinue it. For reasons like these it behooves those who are interested in the work and desire its continuance, to put forth an effort in its behalf. Our subscription list this year ought to reach at least three thousand. Every day the church is enlarging her borders; and this, if reached, would be a small circulation in a church of twenty or twenty-five thousand members.

We make no promise for the future, save what we have made in the past. If our work falls below your expectation, it will be because we fail after having done our best to succeed. No one can honestly pledge you more than to do their best.

ONE PROMINENT FEATURE OF THE NEXT VOLUME

will be extracts from a very rare and voluminous work, "Kingsborough's Mex can Antiquities." These articles will be contributed by Elder S. F. Walker, who during a recent visit east had access to this work and copied largely therefrom. Its author, son of the English Earl of Kingston, died in 1830, (memorable date) after having spent his life and a large fortune upon this work, which shows, beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt, that Ancient America was occupied by Hebrews. We are thankful to be able to present to the church a knowledge of the existence of this work and extracts therefrom, for by this and other kindred means we learn as plainly as facts can demonstrate, that long before the coming forth of the Book of Mormon God was providing means to establish the proof of its origin and authority, thus leaving those who reject it and his latter day work without excuse in the day of judgment.

TO OUR OLD SUBSCRIBERS

we say, that it will be a great saving of time and trouble to us to receive the renewal of your subscriptions before the 15th of December, as it will obviate the dropping of your names from the mailing list, and the replacing of them should you afterwards send us your names. All parties renewing their subscription before that date can send the money at our risk and expense, if sent by bank draft, express check or, best of all, post office money order. Send the amount of subscription, less the cost of the draft, check, or order and you will be credited with a full year's subscription. This offer does not hold good for less than one year's subscription. Do you wish to obtain

YOUR OWN MAGAZINE FREE?

You can do so by sending us a list of ten names with money (this may also be sent at our expense) and we will send you a copy for 1889 free. If you can not obtain so many names, we will allow you 10 cents for each name and you can pay the balance in money.

TO THE TRAVELLING MINISTRY.

desiring the Magazine, we shall be pleased to send it without cost, to themselves or families upon application by postal card, asking only that they interest themselves in obtaining subscribers and otherwise as heretofore helping to sustain the work. To such we will also allow the commission offered above.

There is a way by means of which

in extending our circulation, and possibly be the means of bringing the work to the knowledge of some one who otherwise would never know of its existence. The Christmas-Tide is coming and you are in the habit of exchanging tokens of love and good will with your friends at this season. Send them this year a series of the Magazine; and what its monthly visits may accomplish, eternity will reveal. If you have no friend to whom you especially wish to send it, then subscribe for an extra copy, and either name for yourself, or ask your missionary in charge to give you the name of some worthy family, too poor to subscribe, but to whom the Magazine would be a blessing.

During the past year we have learned that the Magazine has been read by many outside of the church, in many instances removing prejudice and opening the way for the preaching of the gospel. To God be the glory, and may the means of usefulness in the church be multiplied until the kingdoms of this world "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ."

Send all moneys to David Dancer, box 82, Lamoni, Iowa; also all notices of change of address, or missing numbers etc. Remit only by one of the four methods mentioned.

Elders when remitting for subscription should always remit at our expense.

Price $1.50 per annum, strictly in advance. Parties wishing to renew who are not prepared to forward money before the January issue, must notify the office of their intention to subscribe, or they will fail to receive their Magazine.

THE INDEPENDENT PATRIOT,

THIS is the LAMONI GAZETTE enlarged to a seven column quarto. This enlargement has enabled us to improve the paper in many respects, and we are now pleased to have the privilege of offering to the Saints and friends as a general newspaper of good and reliable character—one which needs and is worthy of their support. We publish the sermons as before. Patriot without sermons $1 per year; Patriot with Supplement (which consists of one sermon each month) $1.25 per year.

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX.

This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocetian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Especial attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference.

The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of binding, cloth and leather.

THE REUNION.

THE Annual Reunion in western Iowa, was this year held at Missouri Valley, Harrison county, Iowa, the camp being on the Fair Grounds a mile west of the railway station and business center of the city. The citizens gave the committee the use of the grounds free of charge, and arrangements were made to make them as suitable and convenient as possible. Water was abundant, wood convenient, hay plentiful and good; and supplies for the outer man provided for by booths and eating stands sufficient for the need. The police regulations were good and the force efficient. Peace reigned from first to last, with scarcely an exception. In addition to those appointed by the Reunion itself, the marshal of the city notified Bro. Frank Garner, in charge of the police on the grounds, that in case help was required to call at once on him and it would be given. We are pleased to state that there was no necessity, good order prevailing during the meeting.

The minutes of the meetings are given elsewhere, from the notes of Bro. S. B. Kibler, one of the secretaries chosen at the opening services. Bro. P. Cadwell, chairman of the locating committee, and W. C. Cadwell, of the tent committee and one of the secretaries, were present at the first; but were called away on Tuesday by business exigencies, and did not again attend. The Editors of the HERALD were called to take charge; Bro. Blair was present from the opening, Bro. Smith not arriving until Tuesday; both were in attendance from that till the close.

The preaching was up to the standard in excellence, and the prayer and testimony meetings were marked by an unusual degree of spirituality; tongues, prophecies and testimonies gave evidence of marked advancement in grace and spiritual growth. The attendance was not quite so large as last year, but was fair; many new faces being present. Seventeen were added by baptism; some promising young men being of the number.

MINUTES OF ANNUAL REUNION.

THE Committee appointed by the Reunion last year to locate grounds selected the Fair Grounds at Missouri Valley; where on October 6th at 2 p. m. the first meeting was called to order. Presidents Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair were chosen to have charge. Prayer was offered by Elder Joseph R. Lambert, after the singing of a hymn. W. C. Cadwell and S. B. Kibler were chosen secretaries. Frank Garner was appointed marshal with the authority to select a chief of police and as many assistants as he should need. Bro. Mark H. Forscutt, was appointed chorister. The meeting was then addressed by Pres. W. W. Blair; "Let us walk in the Light" was sung; benediction was pronounced by Alexander H. Smith and adjournment was had until evening at 7: 30.

The order of exercises was the same as last year; prayer and testimony at 8: 30 in the morning, which held until 10: 30; preaching at 11, and at 2: 30 and 7: 30 in the afternoon; except on Sunday, when the evening service was at 7: 00.

On the evening of the 6th the tent was fairly filled, and after the hymn "O, Lord, Thy people bless;" Bro. Robert M. Elvin led in prayer; hymn 471 was sung and Elder Joseph R. Lambert preached the first sermon of the Reunion. His text was from 2 Timothy 4:2. "Preach the word; be instant in season," etc., together with 1 Peter 1: 22 and Ephesians 1st. From these he delivered an excellent discourse, which was well received. His exhortation to the people was: To the Saints to live upright, consistent lives; to the enquiring and those out of Christ, to seek the Kingdom; examine the things presented by the elders of the Latter Day Saints and make the wise choice.

At the close of the meeting the Doxology was sung; and the benediction was pronounced by Bro. W. W. Blair.

OCTOBER 7th, SUNDAY.

Bro. Jonas W. Chatburn had charge of the morning prayer service. The usual song and prayer opened the meeting, during which many offered prayer, many bore testimony, tongues were manifest and prophecies uttered; the Spirit being with the people, a joyful season was had by the Saints in attendance.

At the hour of eleven the Saints and friends regathered at the tent and sang: "With thankful hearts we meet, O Lord." Prayer was offered by Bro. A. H. Smith; and the morning sermon was preached by Bro. W. W. Blair from the 10th Psalm; and was a review of grounds occupied by the church, upon the main questions of faith involved in the controversy between us and the religious bodies.

We believe in the Bible, so far as it is correctly translated. As an instance of what this might mean he cited, that in one version it is stated that woman has not the right to speak in the church; but that in a later and better translation it is given that woman has not the right to rule in the church, notwithstanding she has the right to speak. He gave several citations where woman had not only spoken but had done active and effectual work in and for the church of God and his people.

We believe also in the divinity of Christ. That he was both man and Christ; possessed of deity as well as manhood.

We believe that the church must be organized in accordance with the plan laid down in the New Testament; viz.: apostles, prophets, and other officers, with the signs confirming the believers. No man has the right to say that any one of the ordinances is not needed. The church of the Latter Day Saints is not a new church, but the old church renewed.

We believe that all men were created free and equal, male and female, black and white, without distinction of race, color or sex. For this belief we have suffered bitter persecution. But it has been so clearly stated that no man need err. It was for this reason that in the dark hour of the late rebellion the Saints had no difficulty, or misunderstanding, knowing that the black man must be made free. We believe that all should obey the laws under which we live, and that they should be obeyed to the letter. He read Doctrine and Covenants, pages 231 and 177, concerning the duty of Saints toward the law as citizens. He urged that in view of the declarations in our church rules of government we should be free from the accusation of being polygamists, and quoted from pages 146 and 147 of Doctrine and Covenants, in support of his statement. In the matter of marriage the church had been grossly misrepresented, giving reasons and proofs in support of the position taken. He also presented the views of the church, resulting from the teaching of the revelations of God to the church, concerning temperance, the use of tobacco and other things named in the Word of Wisdom; insisting that by reason of the goodness of God and his revelations unto the church, we were in the declarations of belief many years in advance of church reformers of the day. The move for temperance would surely triumph, and he prayed God that the time might speedily come. He urged the Saints to faithfulness in the doctrine they had embraced.

"Jesus, we look to Thee," was then sung, and benediction was pronounced by Bro. A. H. Smith.

After coming together at 2:30 in the afternoon, the Saints sang the hymn, "I ask not now for gold to gild." Bro. Jonas W. Chatburn offered prayer. "All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung, and Bro. Mark H. Foscutt was introduced to the assembly; and from the text, "What shall I do to be saved," as offered to the brother in charge by some one who desired it spoken from. The brother in his argument presented the Gospel as the saving power in Christ, and argued that as it took both body and spirit to constitute the man in his entirety, the salvation desired saved both. He quoted Mr. Robert G. Ingersoll as saying that if he worshipped a God who fulfilled a part of his promises here and a part hereafter, he could not trust him, &c.

Hymn 224 was sung and the congregation dismissed with benediction by Bro. J. W. Chatburn.

The Secretary's minutes have no record for the evening services of October 7th.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 8th.

The morning prayer service was in charge of Brn. James C. Crabb and Hyrum O. Smith, and was such as to cause the Saints to rejoice in the truths of God.

At eleven, Bro. Charles E. Butterworth spoke from Paul to the Hebrews; the services being in charge of Bro. Charles Derry. The text, "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free." The speaker urged the necessity of each working out his own salvation; not failing because some others should fall and become castaway. Says the speaker, "We have the testimony of many to the divinity of this latter day work who have sealed that testimony in their blood in Missouri and Illinois, in addition to the testimony of the three and the eight witnesses to the Book of Mormon."

Song; and the benediction by Bro. W. W. Blair.

The afternoon service was in charge of Bro. Joseph R. Lambert, and the sermon was by Bro. Charles Derry, from John 17:3. "This is life eternal, that they might know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." The sermon was listened to with close attention; the speaker was earnest and fervid, and the impression was good.

At the close two offered for baptism.

The evening service was opened by singing "Home, home shineth before us;" the prayer was offered by Bro. W. W. Blair, who also delivered the sermon, using Hosea 12:13 as text. Benediction was by Bro. J. R. Lambert.

At the morning service, October 9th, Bro. John Pett presided. At this session, after the opening exercises seven of the members offered prayer, seventeen gave their experience and bore testimony, and one spoke in tongues, the interpretation of which was given. Bro. C. Butterworth pronounced the benediction and the meeting dismissed.

Bro. Hyrum O. Smith presided at the morning preaching service. Bro. John A. Davis preached the sermon; the text being 1 Cor. 12:1. The sum of the argument was that as all other things known to man were governed by and were subject to law; so man in his spiritual affairs must be in like manner subject to law, and this law as all others must emanate from God. The spiritual law to which man became subject was productive of spiritual fruits, which clearly manifested their origin; as the apple produced its kind, other seeds their own sort, but not until the processes of planting, growth and fruitage had all occurred. The law of God should prevail, the faith declared by Christ and not the creeds formulated by man should have our allegiance. Bro. Davis is a young man just entering on ministerial work, and his effort was good and was well received. Benediction by Bro. R. M. Elvin.

Bro. James C. Crabb occupied the afternoon hour, from Christ's saying: "Upon this rock will I build my church," found in Matt. 16:13. The argument was that after Jesus had chosen his twelve from the disciples, he called them apostles, hence disciples are not necessarily apostles. He commissioned them to preach the gospel and induct men and women into his kingdom. The church being builded of Christ is not and will not be completed in its fullness so long as there is a son or daughter of Adam's race to be saved, or added to that church in this world, or the world to come.

After the benediction, which was pronounced by Bro. Charles Derry, the congregation went to the water side, where Bro. Charles Derry baptized the following named, Ida May Bradfield, Elizabeth Bush, Mary Hall, Mary Balfour, and Carrie Tiltson.

The tent was full to overflowing at the evening service. Prayer was offered by Pres. Joseph Smith, who had arrived during the day; and Bro. Mark H. Foscutt delivered a most timely and interesting discourse from Rom. 7:6. "He that is dead is freed from sin." Context: "Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid." The argument was that baptism was essential unto salvation and that immersion in water was the only scriptural and ordained mode of baptism. At the close of sermon Bro. Blair followed with brief remarks. Benediction by Bro. J. Smith.

The minutes of the later sessions were received too late for this issue, but will appear next week.

We also publish the following account of the Reunion Camp Meeting sent us by Bro. W. W. Blair:

This meeting assembled October 6th at Missouri Valley, Iowa, and remained in session till the morning of the 15th inst., during which time there were twenty-five sermons delivered, nine prayer and testimony meetings, seventeen baptisms and a number of children blessed. With the exception of the first evening the best of order prevailed. Some parties "of the baser sort" were only warned by the presiding authorities, and they removed from the grounds under the direction of the police between ten and eleven p. m. This notice served to inform all vicious persons of the treatment awaiting them if they disturbed or menaced the quiet of our assemblies. The character of the sermons was of a high Christian order, the symmetry of the entire series was well preserved, there being a well chosen variety in respect to subjects and manner of discussion, all tending largely to the edification of the hearers.

The number in attendance was not so large as for the three former reunions, owing in part to the lateness of the season, and especially to the prejudice entertained by many against locating the meeting on Fair grounds and so near a railroad and railroad town. But much of this prejudice was found to have but little justifying cause, except in the whistling and clatter of passing trains.

The weather, except the last Sunday, was bright and clear, but on that day it rained quite steadily, deterring many near and far from attending. As it was the large tent was filled to its utmost capacity, and not a few could find neither sitting nor standing room during the preaching services. Many of the citizens of the town and adjacent country did what they could to make the meeting a success, and the newspapers of the town extended courtesies in publishing fair reports of the exercises.

These reunions are fruitful in good results, both in preaching the gospel to the unconverted, and in confirming and edifying the Saints, and also in unifying and moulding the ministry in doctrine, spirit, manner and method; for the elders "teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom" as commanded of the Lord in the Doctrine and Covenants.

Besides all this, there goes out from these meetings influences mighty for good, both in allaying prejudice, and in promulgating the great fact of a restored gospel and church, arresting the attention of the public in a most favorable and effective manner, thereby forwarding the great work of God.

The spiritual gifts were manifest abundantly and to edification, and the Saints enjoyed richly "the spirit of love, of power, and of a sound mind," consequently there was but little "wild-fire" in either testimony, tongue, or prophecy. Some prophesied and exhorted and warned and encouraged, with words of grace and searching force; others spoke in tongues and interpreted, and others sang in tongues and interpreted, causing the hearts of the Saints to swell with gladness and thanksgiving. "Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart." "Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary; who is so great a God as our God? Thou art the God that doest wonders; thou hast declared thy strength among the people." We heard of none who were not well pleased with the session, from first to last, and not a few pronounced the meetings the very best they ever attended.

The next general reunion will be held next fall in Bro. Henry Garner's grove, ten miles north of Missouri Valley and four miles east of Mondamin. The matter is placed in the hands of a competent committee, and we may be assured that no reasonable effort will be spared to make it a success.

THAT LETTER FROM INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

NOT long since the Deseret News, had in its columns, a letter from Andrew Jensen, Edward Stevenson and Joseph S. Black, elders from the Utah Church, who have lately been visiting Independence, Richmond and other places in Missouri. In this letter occurs the following:

"Some years ago the Josephites invited them to appoint a committee of three to meet with a similar committee in behalf of the former, for the purpose of adjusting the differences existing between the two factions in doctrinal matters. The two committees met and the Hedrickites (so our informant stated) were given an opportunity to join the Josephites unconditionally, the small difference in their religious belief being considered of no consequence by the committee representing the Josephites. The Hedrickites, however, disgusted with the proposition, declined, as it was evident their friends were simply planning to become possessors of the temple lot, in consideration of which they were willing to overlook technicalities in point of religion. Failing in this attempt, we were also informed the Josephite faction have recently given notice that they will enter suit against the Hedrickites for the possession of the lot, but the latter say they are prepared for them, and that they will not find it so easy to get possession of the temple lot in Independence as they did the Kirtland Temple in Ohio, a few years ago."

It is somewhat unfortunate for these men from Utah that other men than those from whom they receive their information are informed in regard to the committee appointed by the Josephites and the work done at the conference of the committees referred to by them in their letter.

The following letter from Richard Hill, president of the Hedrickites, in Independence, will sufficiently answer for the Josephites, so far as the offer of an unconditional reception of the Hedrickites into the Reorganized Church is concerned.

It so happens that the conference between these two committees, one for the Reorganization, and one for the Hedrickites, or Church of Christ, was not the first effort to reach an understanding of views between the two bodies, with an idea to an adjustment and possible unity; neither of which was especially sought by the Josephites.

At a conference held at Mission, LaSalle county, Illinois, in the month of April, 1862, Elder Granville Hedrick and two others of the Church of Christ, Mr. Hedrick then being their president, attended, and at their request, Mr. Hedrick was permitted to make a statement of the views and position held by them. At that time Mr. Hedrick and his people refused to accept a portion of the Doctrine and Covenants, and two or more doctrines, tithing being one of them, as we believe; placing the dividing line in date before and up to which the revelations in Doctrine and Covenants were genuine and of divine origin, in the year 1834, just at what day or month we did not learn; all coming after 1834 were to be rejected. This was the view then stated to the Reorganization by Mr. Hedrick, and it was done in such specific terms that the elders of the Reorganization could not entertain the proposition for a coalition. The answer to Mr. Hedrick and those with him at that time was made by Joseph Smith on behalf of the Reorganized Church, and was that having specifically affirmed a belief in the revelations contained in the Book of Covenants as accepted and published by the church prior to Joseph Smith's death, the Reorganized Church could not and would not accept any proposition which required an abandonment of any of those revelations, and had no compromises to offer to any faction or body of believers in the Book of Mormon and the mission of Joseph Smith. That we knew of no one whom we deemed qualified by the direction of the Lord to point out those revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants which ought to be received and those which should be rejected as unworthy of belief. Mr. Hedrick to this stated that if such was the position assumed by the Reorganized Church, and it would not modify such view, further conference between the two bodies was unnecessary.

We are not aware that any illfeeling was engendered in either party at that conference; nor was there any occasion for any.

The consultation between the committees appointed by the Josephites and Hedrickites to which Messrs. Jensen, Stevenson and Black refer; was the result of private conversations between Mr. Richard Hill, George Hedrick, George Frisby and others of the Hedrickite brethren in Independence, and Stephen Maloney, Frederick C. Warnky, John Brackenbury and some others of the Josephites, all conducted in apparently the best of good nature and feeling. In these conversations the question was suggested whether it would not be a good thing for the two churches to each appoint a committee for the purpose of an interchange of views with a view to a possible agreement. The matter was presented to the conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ and Elders W. W. Blair, F. C. Warnky and S. Maloney were appointed on their behalf; and as we understand, Elders Richard Hill, George P. Frisby and George F. Hedrick on the part of the Church of Christ. At the first meeting of these two committees, held at Elder Warnky's house, Richard Hill, of the Hedrickites, alone was present on their part. The subject was talked over, amicably and quietly; the views of both parties, and the positions on different points of doctrine, were stated as understood by those composing the committees. No agreement was reached. The committees separated, each reporting to its respective body, after which a subsequent meeting was held at the house of Stephen Maloney at which Bishop G. A. Blakeslee, W. W. Blair and S.

Maloney of the Josephites, and Elders Hill, Frisby and Hedrick of the Hedrickites were present. Upon presentation it was discovered that the same division in date before which the revelations in Doctrine and Covenants were entitled to credit and after which they were to be rejected, was held to by the elders of the Church of Christ, the date being given as 1834.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ could not consent to accept such position, and the Church of Christ could not accept the whole book. The committees separated with this understanding, with apparent good feelings of both sides. Nothing was said or done at either meeting that we heard of at the time to create bad feeling.

The statements made by Elders Jensen, Stevenson and Black in reference to an offer made by the Reorganized, or Josephite Church to receive the Hedrickites, or Church of Christ without conditions, and that the Hedrickites regarded it as an effort to get possession of the temple lot, were matters of news to us, and to every member of the committee on the part of the Josephites, as well as to all the members resident at Independence at the time, and who knew of the conference between the two bodies. There is not a particle of truth in the statement that an offer was made by the Josephite committee to receive the Hedrickite brethren without condition; nor was there any proposition submitted by that committee to abate one item of the faith of the body, for the sake of a unity between the two. There could be nothing of the kind from the very nature of the positions taken; the Reorganization accepting the Book of Covenants as published from 1835 to 1846, and even so late as 1876, for no change was made in any of the editions of that book until the fall of 1876, when there was an edition published by the Utah Church from which the section on marriage was expunged; and the Church of Christ, as the Hedrickite brethren call their organization, accepting the revelations given as early as 1834 and rejecting the rest. This difference is by no means a slight one; and the issues involved are not easily set aside. There is no disposition upon our part to disparage the men composing the Church of Christ at Independence; they are as entitled to their views as we are to ours; they are regarded by us as holding to their opinions honestly; their acting president, Richard Hill, is a fair minded earnest man, who states his opinions quietly and in a kindly manner, and has the good will and respect of his neighbors. Such a man does not change his position hastily, or without careful consideration. The men who represented the Reorganization on their committee are men of almost life long devotion to primitive Mormonism, and are by nature and cultivation men of kind character; they would not in any way needlessly injure or insult a fellow man because of a difference of belief, much less men of such disposition as Elder Hill.

We can scarcely help believing that the statement made by Elders Jensen, Stevenson and Black in which they attribute an improper motive to the action of the Reorganization in appointing their committee was born of the spleen that would give rise to the wish that such should have been the motive; and a sort of gratification in the thought that possibly if the Josephites should seek to obtain possession of that portion of the temple lot now held by the Hedrickites, the latter would make it much more difficult to accomplish than did any one in the case of the temple at Kirtland; for in the latter case there was no adverse plea, although the Utah church was notified of the action sought. We venture the opinion that when the so-called temple lot at Independence, (or any other spot of earth) shall be wanted by the Lord for the accomplishment of any of his divine designs the possession of that spot will be easily acquired by whoever the Lord may command to do a work there. We believe that Elder Hill, at least, of the Hedrickites, is also of this opinion. If the work which revelation and traditional teaching among the elders seems to point out to be done in Jackson county is to be done by the church practicing polygamy in Utah, and it is so decreed by the Lord; then neither Josephites, nor Hedrickites will be permitted to stay or hinder that work, no matter how factiously, or honestly they may oppose it. If that work is by design of the Lord to be done by those holding to the views of Granville Hedrick, and now called the Church of Christ; then neither the Utah polygamous church nor the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ will offer a successful hindrance to such work. And if it shall have been so decreed of the Lord, that the people of the Reorganized Church, who believe themselves to be the people of the Lord, and to have the best right to be known as the Church of Christ as instituted through the angel's message in these last days, are to be the people to do a work requiring the building of a temple; then in that case neither the Hedrickites, nor the followers of Brigham Young, Granville Hedrick, or any others may, or can make a successful opposition to it. And we feel quite safe in saying in behalf of the people whom we represent that should the Lord require that work to be done by any other people than themselves they will not by word, or deed attempt to hinder; but will say; Amen; the will of the Lord be done! We ought to feel safe in believing in reference to those in Utah and those in Independence, Missouri, who profess faith in Mormonism, but have none in Joseph Smith's sons, nor confidence in the work they are doing, that they too would feel the same in regard to such work; that if it was required at other hands than theirs, by the will of God, they would say, "Amen; the will of God be done!"

The temple lot originally, was a tract of some fifty-three acres in extent; the portion occupied by the followers of Mr. Hedrick is less than four acres. The Josephites have a lot, as much within the original tract as this four acres, but not the spot supposed to have been dedicated to the building. On this lot there is in process of erection a building that when done will seat over a thousand people; and it is a perfectly safe prediction that when that building shall be ready for dedication, whether that be at an early or a remote date from present writing, it will be filled with a host of believers in the latter day work, who accept the work done by Joseph Smith as left on record by himself, and who are not willing to sacrifice any portion of their faith for the sake of members, or accept what is subversive of and destructive to the primitive doctrines found in the new covenant. They propose to do the work which they believe assigned to them of God; no matter what the opinion of other men respecting that work may be. If God has designed work for others to do, let them see to it that they do that work; but this is not a day, nor a time for standing still. It is the period for work—gospel work—and we have neither time nor disposition to quarrel about who shall build the temple, or who shall erect the walls round a temporal Zion. A people are to be prepared for the coming of Jesus, and that is within the pale of our work; whatever else may lie without. If we do this faithfully and well, we need have no fear about any other necessary work to be done; it will be done in due time, whether by us, or others. And, if the future may be judged of the past, it is far more likely to occur that the Lord will choose active workers to perform his commands, rather than idlers who stand croaking in the way. "Faithful is that servant, whom when his Lord cometh he shall find so doing."

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Oct. 7th, 1888.

To the "Deseret News," Utah:—In the letter of Messrs. Andrew Jensen, Edward Stevenson and Joseph S. Black, published by you in your issue of September 25th, they represent that in the conference of the committees of the Josephites and Hedrickites, mentioned by them, the Josephites proposed to receive those of the Hedrickites unconditionally, as follows:

"SOME years ago the Josephites invited them to appoint a committee of three to meet with a similar committee in behalf of the former, for the purpose of adjusting the differences existing between the two factions in doctrinal matters. The two committees met and the Hedrickites (so our informant stated) were given an opportunity to join the Josephites unconditionally, the small difference in their religious belief being considered of no consequence by the committee representing the Josephites. The Hedrickites, however, disgusted with the proposition, declined, as it was evident their friends were simply planning to become possessors of the Temple lot, in consideration of which they were willing to overlook technicalities in point of religion. Failing in this attempt, we were also informed the Josephite faction have recently given notice that they will enter suit against the Hedrickites for the possession of the lot, but the latter say they are prepared for them, and that they will not find it so easy to get possession of the Temple Lot in Independence as they did the Kirtland Temple in Ohio, a few years ago."

I was myself the only one of the committee on the part of the Hedrickites who attended the conference so appointed between us and the Josephites, at its first session; and I hereby state that no such offer was made by the Josephite Committee. The differences of belief were talked over, and were discovered to be of such a nature that no agreement was reached; and the two committees parted in good feeling.

Subsequently to this I reported to my brethren, the other committee to theirs, as I suppose, Brn. W. W. Blair, G. A. Blakeslee and S. Maloney of the Josephites, brethren G. P. Frisby, George F. Hedrick and myself, of the Hedrickites, met at the house of S. Maloney, where the differences were again talked over; and here again no such offer of unconditional reception was made by the Josephites; nor did I hear any such offer stated at any time.

Whoever the informant may have been from whom the writers of the letter published by you may have gathered their information, no statement was made by me to them, nor was any made by any of my brethren in my presence which could be correctly construed to mean as they have stated it.

I am presiding over the Hedrickite brethren in Independence, and know that the committee were not disgusted with this conference with the Josephite committee, nor do I know, nor did I state that the meeting of the committee was an attempt on the part of the Josephites to get possession of the Temple lot. It was held for the purpose of conferring upon differences of belief as understood by both committees at the time, and for no other that I am aware of.

If these elders, your correspondents, understood the statements as they have written them they have misunderstood and have misrepresented the matter; which I regret.

(Signed) RICHARD HILL,

President of the Independence Branch of the Church of Christ.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. FRANCIS H. LONG of Decatur, Kansas, writes that Bro. Samuel Payne had been preaching in that vicinity, but the opposition combined to keep the people from hearing the word. He states that they have enough members there to organize a branch if some elder would attend to it. Bro. Long desires the address of Bro. O. B. Thomas.

Bro. W. W. Hodge of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, in a late letter writes feelingly of his faith in the work, and expresses his deep interest in its welfare. He greatly mourns the loss of his wife and child, each of whom died within a few weeks of the other, leaving him with three children to continue the conflict. Let the Saints remember Bro. Hodge and his children that they may be sustained and comforted.

Bro. W. W. Blair wrote from Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 15th, as follows: "Bro. Joseph Smith thinks some of attending the Shenandoah conference next Saturday, the 20th inst. I am to remain west for three weeks to attend conferences and dedicate Underwood Church. The Reunion will close to-day. Held service here last night."

Bro. Mark H. Forscutt returned on Wednesday last from Missouri Valley, Iowa, where he has been attending the Reunion.

Bro. H. A. Stebbins lately returned from a three weeks ministerial trip to Allendale, Missouri. He baptized two while there making twenty in all baptized by him at that place during the past year, and a half, nearly all of whom were adults and former members of the Baptist, Christian and other churches. Many others there confess their belief in the gospel and will doubtless obey ere long.

The attention of the elders and all interested is called to the advertisement of the "Elders Diary" in this issue. Those desiring to keep an accurate account of missionary expenses and a brief summary of labor performed during their ministerial career can readily do so by the use of Bro. Luff's Diary or Journal. A few strokes of the pen upon its blank columns will record all that the use of the ordinary memorandum book requires hours of time and labor to note.

CHURCH PROPERTY IN UTAH.

"The union of church and state among the Mormons, contrary to the laws and principles of this country, has been finally broken by the recent ruling of the United States territorial court of Utah. By this decision the immense property interests of the church are escheated to the government. A severe blow is thereby inflicted on the spreading of polygamy, as it was largely from these sources that the revenues for proselyting were drawn."

"SALT LAKE, Utah, Oct. 8.—The Supreme Court of Utah to-day entered final judgment and decree in the case of the United States against the Mormon church, which was pending to dissolve the church corporation and have its property declared escheated to the government. The suit was brought about in the Supreme Court of this territory under the act of congress of February 10th, 1887. In that a receiver was appointed for the church corporation, and he has succeeded in collecting over $1,000,000 worth of property, real and personal.

"The decree entered to-day is a complete triumph for the government. It declares the corporation of the church dissolved; ascertains that the voluntary religious sect now in existence has no right to corporate property except the temple block and buildings, which are set aside to it; it denies the intervention of a large number of individuals claiming the property; orders the real estate of the corporation to be held by the receiver until the information for the forfeiture of the same brought by the government can be brought to a conclusion, and it declares all of the personal property of the late corporation to have become escheated to the government. This point was the one most bitterly fought, as the property of the church was claimed on behalf of the incorporated Mormon sect as successor in interest to the late corporation, and by individuals who were members of the corporation who intervened on behalf of themselves and all other members of the corporation. Upon the evidence the court decided that neither the present church nor the individuals had any legal claims; that all of its property had been held upon trusts, the objects of which were principally to uphold polygamy, and that these trusts were the only ones existing to which said property could be devoted. It furthermore decided that the present church still upholds, teaches and maintains polygamy, and that any dedication of property to it would be for the purpose of upholding polygamy, and would be unlawful.

"After exhaustive evidence the court declares the property to belong to the government by operation of law. Defendants have taken the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it will be hotly contested."

The foregoing is an editorial and telegram taken from the Omaha Bee, for October 10th, and is probably the end of the controversy, as it is likely that the Supreme Court of the United States if an appeal is taken will reaffirm the decision in the court below.

To us, while we view the forfeiture of corporate existence and its dissolution, with the additional escheating of the property of the dissolved corporation as a harsh, possibly an extreme and ultra measure, unjustifiable, except upon the issue, fairly stated by the court, that the dissolved corporation was fostering an institution hostile to the genius of the American government, and hence not only liable to be interfered with, but rightfully deserving to be suppressed by law; we can but believe that the course pursued by the government is permitted as a means in the hand of the Lord to chastise a people who have departed from his beneficent teaching and command unto practices clearly forbidden to them; practices which, besides being in contravention of good moral obligation to true virtue and chastity, are in violation of laws directly made to their suppression and the punishment of those guilty of them.

It may not not be out of place for us to remind those who are smarting under this action of the government that the Lord said unto the Church of Christ once, (and that should be for all time), that he who would "keep the law of God had no need to break the law of the land." Had they been as zealous to observe this rule, as they were eager and willing to subscribe to a tenet subversive of all the direct commands of God to the church concerning the marriage relation, no such chastisement would have been needed, or have been inflicted.

Whether the issue between the government and the Utah Mormon church has or has not been clearly stated by the courts before, it seems to be so now, and it is this: The church in Utah, whether as a corporate body, or a voluntary organization for religious purposes, holds to a tenet which teaches its members to believe and practice a system of marriage which permits and enjoins a man to marry and live with more than one woman at a time as wives; which practice is contrary to the laws of the United States; that the Mormon church did not cease the practice when laws were enacted against it; that as a measure to correct such practice and prevent its further continuance the church is impleaded in the court by the government, upon a rule of law made by the government, which rule requires the dissolution of the church incorporation and escheats its property, because of the continuation of such unlawful practice. It is now a question between the law and law breakers— which must yield?

There was a time in the history of the church when persecution raged against its membership, many of whom suffered much; but no such spectacle as one of its apostles being arraigned before the court for an alleged gross violation of the law of the land of which he was guilty, was then known. Some of them were arrested, charged with wrong doing, but they awaited trial from which they emerged free by the law. No long continued prosecution of its members under existing statutory enactments for infractions thereof can be found in the records of the courts. It remained for this western, Utah, polygamic Mormonism to make this pitiable spectacle before mankind, and while we have warned them against the evil of their tenet itself, we have pointed to the result as inevitable; though we pity the victims under the rod, we dare not say Lord, hold thy hand. Nor do we believe he will until these misguided men retrace the steps they have made and put away their evil, as Abraham did his.

WE also publish the following editorial from the Chicago Tribune of October 11th:

The final judgment and decree of the Supreme Court of Utah in the case of the United States against the Mormon Church ends the career of that church as a corporation and relieves the Mormon people from its oppressive system of tithes. By this decree it is stripped of a large part of its power for harm, as it loses its wealth, its taxing authority, and its personal control. Hereafter it must occupy the same position as any other church and devote itself to the promulgation and teaching of religious doctrine—if the doctrine it professes can be called religious. It has no right to any corporate property except the Temple block and buildings, which it uses ostensibly for purposes of worship, and in this respect is brought to the same conditions as other churches. It must raise its money by voluntary contributions and not by compulsory taxation. It can no longer keep up its military system or its police and constabulary forces. It can no longer hold control of courts or civil administrative power, dominate elections, or dictate in secular affairs. In a word, the Mormon Church is now a church pure and simple, under the same limitations as other religious bodies, and will be free for all purposes of religious instruction. It has ceased to be the State church of Utah, and has been brought into subjection to the fundamental principles of republican government.

The church still continues to preach the pestiferous dogma of polygamy and will probably cling to it, but those of its members who practice it will be amenable to the law and punished for immoral practices, as well as deprived of the rights of citizenship. Upon this point all parties are agreed and have so declared in their platforms. There is practically a unanimous sentiment on the part of the people of the United States that the lewd and corrupt practices of polygamists shall be punished, and that this relic of barbarism shall be wiped out of existence like its twin, slavery, as a public curse and a danger to our institutions.

The receiver appointed by the courts for the church corporation under the law, by which all its personal property has become escheated to the Government, has collected over a million dollars' worth of property. By the same law this property now belongs to the Government and must be devoted to the educational uses of the people of Utah. There is a poetical element of justice in seizing the wealth which this church has unjustly wrung out of its ignorant and superstitious members for the maintenance of polygamy and the personal aggrandizement of its managers and devoting it to the organization and maintenance of common schools, whose teachings will do as much as, perhaps more than, any other agency to extirpate this degrading, debauching, un-American practice, and which will send out a generation of monogamists and good citizens to take the places of polygamists and enemies of good government. The appeal to the United States Supreme Court will not benefit the Mormons' case, however hotly they may contest it. The learned Judges of that court will sustain the law, and the new Chicago Chief Justice with his large and blooming family is a conspicuous illustration of the blessings of monogamy. The Mormon Church is now only a church. Its temporal power has gone forever.

PREACHING TO PARENTS.

The Oskaloosa Herald reproduces a solid sermon to parents in the statement that thousands of the best homes and kindest parents in the world turn their daughters out in society to drift about in the snares and traps lying so thick about them, letting them go out with young men of doubtful morality, going to balls that take up nearly the whole night, and keeping as late hours as they please, and with whomsoever they please, and then are horrified when they are awakened to the fact that their girl, that they sent out all innocence and trust to cope with the world, has fallen a victim to some scheming but polite, genial and winning man who is all guilt. Thus speaks the Omaha World, and commenting further, adds: "Can parents who are thus guilty curse a daughter who has fallen into the pits from which they could and should have warned her? It is the first wrong step of a girl taken innocently, not the last, that ruins her. And nine times out of ten that first step the watchful, careful eye of parents could have prevented. Let not parents who know how full the world is of temptation to women blame too harshly the daughter who has fallen by reason of not knowing a little of the things of which her mother might have warned her. For it is too often the over-indulgence of parents that gives the reins and license for the first step that leads to the ruin of the girl and to the sorrow and woe of all who love her. Any close observer in a city or town now can see almost every day sweet and lovely innocent girls taking this first fatal step. Girls are seen taking their first step in handkerchief flirtations on the street with some man they do not know, or if they do they ought not to know. Again, it is seen in one step too far at the ball, in some sacrifice of modesty, or too great familiarity, of which the young libertine who was her partner boasts to his chums the next day, adding still more to it. Sometimes it is taken in answering a clandestine letter; at others in long and late walks at night in secluded places, terminating in a supper somewhere at which wine adds fire to a flame already, but perhaps unconsciously, started. It is taken, too, in a clandestine kiss at the gate or in a carriage—a kiss not of a brother or accepted lover, but of a pirate and his poison; in the secret reading of an inflammatory book, secretly and shrewdly loaned, and in many other ways we need not mention. The sweetest, purest thing in all the world is a pure young girl, when she is just emerging from the daisy and violet field of youth and blushing into all the beauty of womanhood. Standing thus in her purity, she moves more a thing of heaven than of earth, and all heaven contains nothing that ought to be more sacred from the touch of the spoiler. But the earth is not heaven, and that which good people would hedge about as sacred, thousands of evil hearted men would trample down into the mire of earth and into the fires of hell. Let the parents who know this and see their daughters stepping out of their arms in all the radiance of their girlish beauty or ripening womanhood look more closely to the safety and purity of their jewels. Let the girls, too, listen more faithfully to the low-toned monitor of delicate instinct that nature has placed in every true woman's breast, and not trust as fair all that seemeth so, and there will be fewer such tragedies, fewer girls and women daily falling to a depth that is below and beyond even the kindness of death.

WEBSTER, Neb., Sept. 28th.

Dear Sisters:—Yesterday was the day for the Prayer League to meet, but as there are no others who belong to it here, I have prayer by myself. I always have wanted to be by myself when I had prayer. I have two little boys; the oldest one would ask me questions, such as, "What is you doing that for?" And if I told him, he would not seem to understand, but would keep on asking questions; so yesterday I sent them out of doors to play while I took my Bible and read the verses and prayed. But there seemed to be a cloud over me, a heavy load, and I could not pray. After I had tried to pray the thought came in my mind, "Is this teaching your children to pray, or setting a goodly example before them?" This I feel sure is why I was not blessed with God's Holy Spirit; and, dear sisters, I made up my mind to take my little boy every day and tell him of God and his goodness, and have him bow with me when I pray. This morning I took him on my lap and explained why we prayed, then had him bow with me while I prayed, and felt greatly blessed in doing so.

I feel that I have a great responsibility resting upon me in raising up these little ones; but my daily prayer is that God will give me wisdom and patience to raise them in the ways of righteousness. I think the Prayer League a good thing. I enjoy reading the Mother's Home Column. It has taught me the responsibility of raising up my little ones, as I am young, and did not think of the responsibility until I began to read the Home Column.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain your sister, J. L. HUGHES.

Dear Sisters:—A few days ago I had a dream which seemed so real that on awakening I had hard work to persuade myself that it was but a dream. I will give it to you.

I first remember approaching a large dwelling, and was told on my arrival that some mail awaited me. I replied that I had been expecting a letter from Sister Walker, and hastened on. At the steps I saw many sisters grouped together as if in waiting, and as I met them I shook hands and talked with each one. One young sister, holding a small child by the hand, said: "I have not yet sent in my name to the Prayer League; but at last we have begun having family prayers every night and morning at home, and my husband asks a blessing on our food at meals. This is quite a step in advance for us, and why couldn't there be a list kept in each branch of all who would do even that much? The branch officers could urge the necessity of these things upon the young of our branch, and I am sure they would be nearer to God if they would perform them." I said that I saw no objections to such a list, and would speak of it.

By and by they all departed to their homes, and I bethought me of my letter. I found it and saw it was a feast of good things from Sr. Frances, consisting of scraps of poetry, extracts from papers, and her own precious thoughts. But I was somewhat weary mentally, and thought I would look over the house before reading it. I came to room after room and passed through hall after hall but found nothing but bedrooms, etc. Finally I exclaimed, "But where is the parlor? There is surely a parlor somewhere?" At this I turned into a long hall from which opened two doors on the right. These I knew to lead into the room I sought, and I turned the handle of the first. What a sight met my eyes!

The western sunlight softly filtered by shutters and curtains, lit up with mellow light the most beautiful room I ever saw. Of large dimensions and beautiful proportions, it seemed to me mankind had never before attained such perfection in length and breadth with height of ceiling. The walls and ceiling were richly and tastefully frescoed, the windows were draped with finest curtains; beautiful crystal pendants were suspended from both ceiling and walls; large paintings covered the spaces between the windows; and the most beautiful furniture and carpet, perfectly harmonizing with the rest in color, filled the room with beauty and richness. As my vision gradually comprehended the whole, I exclaimed almost breathlessly, "How perfect!" Just then, so low as to seem spoken at my elbow and yet coming from the other end of the hall, came a beautiful voice, saying, "These are vanities with which the rich surround themselves." Intuitively I knew it to be the voice of the Spirit, but I was astonished at its burden. Again I looked over the room and said, "It seems to me perfect." And again came that still, small, penetrating voice, with a plain emphasis on the word vanities, "These are vanities with which the rich surround themselves. This building [or room, I forget which] cost $200,000; money which belonged to the poor of my church." Instantly I saw how unnecessary it all was, and how much better the money might have been spent; and solemnly rebuked in spirit I shut the door, resolved never to look at the room again. I then went back to my letter, and wondered if I could find a room in all the house suitable to read it in. I opened a door and scanned the contents of the room before entering. It was a bedroom, with smooth, white, plastered walls, plain dark wood work, and a large window at the farther end. In one corner was a plain bed with a home made covering over it. At the side of the bed was a small table with candle on it, while at the foot was a low box trunk. A closet for clothing opened out of the room, and two chairs with a mat in front of the bed completed the furnishing. I immediately saw that all the necessaries were there with nothing else to distract the attention, and with a sigh of relief threw myself on the bed and began reading my letter.

SISTER VINA.

PEORIA, Tex., Sept. 14th.

Dear Sisters:—I do not take the church paper, but borrow it sometimes to read when I read at all. My eyes are so weak and sore that I read but little at a time. I almost envy those who are able to keep all the papers and read them. I was baptized by Bro. Nunley, July the 8th, and am young in the cause. I was brought to a knowledge of the truth by Bro. T. W. Sherrill's and Sr. Mattie Field's conversations, which showed me where I stood. I was then a member of the Baptist church, but I soon saw that my church was built on air, while theirs had a sure foundation. I read my Bible, and studied it well, until I felt convinced that this was the Church of Christ or he had none on earth. It seemed a long time to me after I came to believe before I was baptized. I was so anxious that I could hardly wait; and I want to testify to the world that there is nothing so bright, so glorious as the true Holy Ghost religion. When I was confirmed there were people present of every denomination, and I felt and knew they were laughing at me. How I did wish they could just see and know my heart, and just how I felt, for I know they could not laugh if they could only feel God's love as I felt it that day. I then, for the first time, could realize the words of John the Baptist when he said, "There is one cometh after me, that shall baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire." How I love and thank my Savior for his kindness and love in bringing me into his fold. I felt as a lost sheep which had wandered around so long away from the fold; in fact, had never known the True Shepherd. I felt then that while my own friends on earth were laughing and scorning me, those dear ones gone before were rejoicing. I have not had visions as some have, but I have a peaceful, quiet, soothing feeling, that I can not analyze; but I know it is from above; no one could give such peace but God. I have been tempted oftentimes, as I believe all the children of Jesus are.

I am (like hundreds of others) looking for a gathering, and may the good Father speed the time; for I, for one, am cast among thorns, and they sometimes hurt me, although I know some of them will come out and will be turned to wheat, and will wash their garments as I have. I am always praying that they may see the light as we do, for I can say as the Savior said, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

We are persecuted here at Peoria, on all sides; and when the Rev. divines see they can not uproot us or down us (using their own expression), why they just smile (such a sickly smile), and treat us with silent contempt. We are hardly worth their notice then; but, mark you, it is always after they find out to their sorrow that they can not hold a light for us to read by. That is, we have all the Scripture, while they have a verse now and then in the Testament, and get the rest of their doctrine in Obadiah 3d chapter. We have the will to do a great deal more than we do; but we have little opportunity. We can sympathize with the mothers in Zion who have large families and are poor, for they can not do as others who have no families and are well off, or as the elders, who can go and carry the good news to others; but it seems to me the mother's work is the greater, for are we not caring for and training these little babes for Jesus? Are they not his?

Pray for me, sister, that I may hold out faithful and true, and be found worthy when we are called home to Zion, or heaven.

LUCY LLOYD.

JUNIATA, Mich., Sept. 20th.

Dear Sisters:—I feel, with the rest of you, that the Prayer League will be of great benefit in the church, if the sisters who are engaged in it will prove faithful. Five of us in this branch meet together. If the hour appointed was changed to the afternoon it would be better for a great many. It will be better for many who have large families; for they can not get their work done in time in the morning; and we are all hurried and do not have the time we would like. In the afternoon we can spend more time in our meeting; but in the forenoon we have to get home to get dinner, and it does not give a chance for those who do not live close together. I agree with sister May Butterworth, in Herald, August 25th; and I wish to say to those sisters who have not husbands in the church with them, to cease not to pray for them. One sister told me she prayed all night, one night, for her husband; the next night he arose and said he wanted to be baptized. He had been bitter against the Saints till then. I feel strong in this latter day work, and I have a great desire to go on and do my duty in all things. I hope I may prove faithful to the end.

Your sister,

ANNA PHELPS.

SOMEWHERE TO GO.

Nurses in hospitals are rather apt to lay too much stress on the advantages received by the patients and their duty of thankfulness; but still it is the poor soldier who suffers most from always having his causes to be grateful flung in his teeth. Witness the following story. Chaplain: So poor Hopkins is dead. I should have liked to speak to him once again and soothe his last moments; why didn't you call me? Hospital orderly: I didn't think you ought to be disturbed for 'Opkins, sir, so I just soothed 'im as best I could myself. Chaplain: Why, what did you say to him? Orderly: "'Opkins," sez I, "you're mortal bad." "I am," sez 'e." "'Opkins," sez I, "I don't think you'll get better." "No," sez 'e. "'Opkins," sez I, "You're going fast." "Yes," sez 'e. "'Opkins," sez I, "I don't think you can

'ope to go to 'eaven." "I don't think I can," sez 'e. "Well then, 'Opkins," sez I, "You'll go to 'ell." "I suppose," so sez 'e. "'Opkins," sez I, "you ought to be werry grateful as there's a place perwided for you, and that you've got somewhere to go." And I think 'e 'eard, sir, and then 'e died.—Hospital.

In Camp near MISSOURI

VALLEY, Iowa, October 10th.

Our meetings thus far, though not large, have been most excellent in their order, doctrine, and spirituality. Five were received into the church by baptism yesterday afternoon. The camp continues to increase its numbers daily by new arrivals, and this is likely to be the case for the next four days or more.

Between eleven p. m., last night and six o'clock this morning, we had a copious, quiet, and much needed rain. To-day is cool and beautiful, and the Saints and friends are cheerful and happy. We have never seen the Saints more united, confident, resolute and charitable. The prayer and testimony meetings are quite free from "wild-fire" or mournings over "the dead past." All seem willing to leave those things which are past, and press on to those which are before, "ever looking unto Jesus." The Saints are growing in wisdom, grace, and unity, as also in numbers and influence for good, and in spiritual understanding and power. These reunions are proving rich and mighty in divine fruit.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Oct. 16th.

Bro. R. S. Salyards:—President Joseph Smith preached to a full and attentive congregation last night in the Saints' Chapel in this city, and will remain and preach nightly till Thursday or Friday next and then go on to attend conference at Shenandoah next Saturday and Sunday. I go to Omaha to day and expect to preach a series of sermons closing next Sunday night and then return to labor for two weeks at different points in Iowa not far from Council Bluffs. Elders J. R. Lambert, A. H. Smith, and R. M. Elvin are here en route to their respective fields of labor.

W. W. BLAIR.

PORT GREVILLE, N. S., Oct. 9th.

Dear Herald:—Since coming to this country with my husband I have been greatly strengthened in the faith. God is as mindful of his children in one part of the earth as in another, and when they come before him in faith and prayer, he verifies his promises to them. The work here is progressing slowly. Some come out to hear; others are kept away by their preachers. The Saints here are few in number but, I believe, strong in faith and are trying to do right. We have met with kind friends everywhere. I thought when leaving home that I would feel homesick or long for the society of the dear friends I left, but as yet I have not felt lonely, for where true Saints are there we are at home. I often think of the Saints at Independence and hope to meet them again. I love the gospel and want to do all I can to help advance the truth, in visiting and talking with those who are not of the faith. I find some willing to hear; others who think they have all the truth they want. Bro. and Sr. Parsons have been in a different part of the province from us until lately when we visited their locality to attend conference which was held September 15th, after which they came down here with us. We are now staying at the home of Bro. J. W. Layton. Bro. Parsons and Hiram are holding meetings at this place and Dilligent River. Quite a number came out last evening. Have had better attendance at the last named place than any other in the province. The weather has been very cool and stormy ever since we have been here. The farmers could scarcely gather their grain, and hay and harvesting is not all done yet. Bro. and Sr. Parsons will locate at South Rawdon this winter. The Saints there have a small church; not all furnished yet, but expect they they will get it done before winter. We will live in Parsboro this winter, and will hold our meetings in a store room which the brethren will assist us in seating, &c.

I hope the Saints will remember us in their prayers, that we may do good and keep the faith.

As ever your sister,

MARY E. ROBINSON.

WARREN, Ohio, Oct. 12th.

Bro. Joseph:—While the autumnal equinox has thrown up its signal on nature's pedestal, and the glowing roses, proud dahlias, queenly camellias and all the sweet denizens of the garden so redolent of perfume, have anticipated the change; have drooped in silent submissiveness to the play of nature, we were impressed as to the time occupied by us in the moral field, in the culture of those tender flowerets that shall bloom in unfading loveliness, and richly adorn the trellis-frame of heavenly bowers in the "sweet bye and bye."

These apostles of the lawn, with each cup a pulpit, each leaf a book, are rare sources of instruction; grand revelations of beauty and usefulness. But this flowery and verdant path is now o'er-grown with thorns and brambles, for Bro. Brown has just now appeared from surveying the field, bringing the intelligence that one, a very bright flower, has been chilled by the icy breath of tyranny. Five noble souls have laid their errors on the altar of dusky superstition, and have stationed themselves 'neath the ensign of truth, meekness, courage and religious freedom. One of these, very tender and young, whose tear-bedimmed eye should have touched and moved a stone, appealed to her father to relent stiffing her conscience and convictions. But dead to the very charms of the universe, deaf to the voice of tenderness, alien to the instinct and reasons of true manhood, her plaintive plea was met by a threat to tie her up and fight the whole crew. Talk they of liberty! Why his Satanic Majesty is almost as omnipotent as the Pope in his palmiest days.

This community is wrought up to the highest tension of excitement and has been for two weeks past, but more especially since five good people came over to the banner of faith.

Having been granted the use of the United Brethren Church at this place, we have availed ourself of every advantage and privilege favorable and unfavorable to a proper elucidation of the gospel of peace. But I have often thought that in a short move somebody else could see the end from the beginning if he wasn't enthroned above and if he did "fall from heaven as lightning." As to his reasoning being inductive or deductive I can not say; perhaps he weaves his cloth by analogy; but on last Sabbath the popular Babylonian seal was rolled 'gainst the "open sepulchre."

At evening, great liberty being given in the proclamation of truth, we opened the door of the kingdom. The events were not strictly simultaneous, but when they turned out, God turned in, and the above number are for the kingdom. Not feeling at ease because the people were driving God's work from their hearth-stones, and intent on crushing down right, we procured the Town Hall at Center Bazetta; circulated and hoped, yes and prayed, but now those fine-spun fibres were darting through the air at every angle, and another catspaw is hauling the chestnuts out of the embers for the monkey;—closed doors again.

Ah! isn't that "closed door" an abbreviated term? Isn't it going to fertilize literature on the page of history in subsequent generations? Will the advocate of freedom—Americanism—fifty years hence look back with pride and patriotism to the afternoon, yea the repentant death-bed of the nineteenth century?

Why, the wilfully malicious thrusts, the horrid misrepresentation and cool falsifying that have been prominent in this part, are almost sufficient to cause the bronze statue, "Liberty Enlightening the World," to weep through its granite pores and draw down the dark curtains of cloud as a veil to hide its frown. I marvel if the sunny isles of Themistocles and Solon, the cradle of ancient freedom, would again dedicate as tribute to this republic a block picked from the glorious old Parthenon, should tidings of this denial of inalienable rights, lash her borders by the proud free waves. We simply ask comparison in the spirit of the times. Proscribed religionists of the dark dead centuries ago were lighted on their exodus to a protracted death, from the fiery roof of their own dwellings in the dark tempestuous night. And the followers of every faith not established by creed, banned and hunted down, conscience outraged, ministry tracked like the wild breast, existence ignored. This same spirit, imbibed under a free realm, as instanced in 1833-44, when cries of oppression ascended to thrones, and fell on the stony hearts of national sovereigns. And 'way down here, standing on the top crags of freedom, that principle, as innate to the human heart as the sparks fly upward, must we stultify under Anglo-Saxonism, and employ some Chicagoan or Bostonian brain to think for us for the next six or twelve months? Must the precepts of men undermine and contravene the principle of free government? "Oh no, only you can't go and hear these men; they teach demoralizing doctrine." Has God endowed me with reason? Can I not discriminate? "Oh no, I must think for you."

Ah! is this the genius of that bright empire which under God, plucked the laurels from Britain's brow with talons of steel, and wreathed the garlands of religious and political freedom 'round the pillars of republican institutions? Would it not have been more in harmony with the sentiments and spirit of both religion and politics to have said, "Bro. Scott, you are wrong. We would love to be governed by controversial rules in the investigation of the subject on the platform and let the people have the benefit and be their own jurors in the case." But no! Conscience of total failure in meeting the arguments deduced by our claims, and acting legitimately from an overgorge of an impure and defiled religion they become the sport of neighborhoods, and the play-toys of the minister, for the trustee in giving us our solemn charge, said: "The preacher told us you couldn't occupy the house and forbade us attending." Oh dear! Those trustees were sweetly loyal to the trust imposed by the congregation! There we have it; "Exaltation for the few; degradation for the many." Is this Bible, God and Native Land? But "I'll never step my foot inside the door while I live;" "I propose to have my money back;" "Worse than heathenism;" "Be the downfall of the United Brethren Church here," are some of the numerous invisible, yet very audible transparencies that fluttered on the breeze afterward. Boasting of erudite scholars and free principles, just here, under the shadows of dome and spire with gorgeously to almost shame the mammoth architecture of the famed Aelian or Parthenic, absolutely stifling thought, and opening the flood gates of personal feeling. But the humble Lamb of Calvary has taught us this, as a chief characteristic of the subject's religion. Yet the paradox of paradoxes is that the pretended ministers are at the bottom of this whole unwarranted system of espionage. "Truth crushed to earth will rise again," has been frequently demonstrated since Galileo was fastened to the crucifix, and God who speaks light from darkness, decrees that truth shall be triumphant through moving up through the dark and murky waters of superstition to the front.

The Baptist editor and minister of this city, blew up a bubble through his paper which burst on first flight. "The Book of Mormon," said he, "draws its material from the Bible and like the Koran endorses polygamy." We waited on the gentleman and interviewed him in his own sanctum. In his august presence we were nearly dismayed, but presented his statement, also Book of Mormon, page 116. Had interlined with green and red inks, certain that he could not be mistaken. He compared notes; "Tis a slip," he lisped. "Will you correct?" I asked. "Yes," was the reply; "Your doctrines tend to morality." "What, that doctrine the book teaches?" I interrogated; "Have you investigated the book?" "Yes." "Then you have wilfully misrepresented. I thought to extend charity if you had never investigated, and had done so ignorantly, but now I am sorry to say 'tis a palpable falsehood. I had learned that you are a Baptist minister!"

We left his sanctum with his promise to correct, with the penalty that if he did not we would spoil his whole sop and let his congregation know what kind of a minister they had employed to feed the flock of God which he has purchased with his own blood. We await next issue of periodical.

We have just returned from the waters of baptism. The gathering clouds distilled a genial shower, but a large concourse of people gathered on the brink to witness the first baptism of the Saints. After being convinced that the water did not cast off the immemorial law of nature and blush to wine; and that there was no artly process of legerdemain, they were somewhat reconciled to the situation and concluded that the Latter Day Saints were in some respects like other good people who go by the Bible. In speaking of the disposition among the people to magnify and exalt the creed, we will not be understood as inferring that such is common to all classes, even in this community. So far as general observation extends the heart of this great religious christendom is pulsating for something of a sacred character from whence it may derive some permanent good and substantial bliss. Many good men in this region, even if the name is a synonym for all that is bad, are with those who are casting the dark old superstitions of Babylon to the bats, and are erecting the standard of the New Evangel. The work is onward. The newly baptized have been confirmed, and are rejoicing in the light of the gospel of peace, while "Babylon trembles for her loss."

Yours in hope,
LEONARD SCOTT.

WEIR, CITY, Kan, Oct. 8th.

Dear Herald:—After the debate of Arcadia with the Campbellite preacher, ending August 23d, I returned home, and after filling other appointments returned to Arcadia, September 16th, to hold a six evenings' debate with a Baptist minister who had challenged me upon church identity. After preaching four days and baptizing three, the fruits of the former debate, two of whom had never heard the word before, I affirmed for three evenings against the Baptist minister, the harmony existing between the former and the Latter Day Saints. He became so terribly entangled during that time, that he utterly refused to affirm his proposition, although I offered him a dollar an hour to do so, as he had been very abusive of the Saints. Opened up two new places near there where much interest was manifested; one place on the streets, the other where a large hall was filled with many outside, upon two days' notice. I expect to return there this week. Since that time have been preaching nearer home. Baptized three near Cherokee, August 31st. Have been detained at home the past week by sickness in my family, having nine children at home, whooping cough and malarial fever. Hope to be able to get out again soon. Bro. John A. Davis, my co-laborer here, has been unable to be out for some time because of sickness; also Bro. Jasper Richards; so, many places of interest are neglected.

Yours in gospel bonds,
D. S. CRAWLEY.

FARMINGTON, N. H., Oct. 8th.

Bro. Joseph:—Bro. Sheehy and myself arrived here from Lisbon Falls, Maine, on the 4th. Our meetings at Orland closed with a good audience. Indifferent success at Tennant's Harbor and vicinity, where we found Bro. Greene working away, but storms and other causes hindered large audiences with one exception. At Lisbon Falls the way seemed not clear. Perhaps a more favorable opportunity may present itself.

Upon our arrival here we sought for and found the home of our worthy and esteemed Sr. Rich, who has proved herself an honor to our cause, and at whose place we are now sojourning, comfortably cared for. We had not been here two hours before we learned that two "Mormons" had come to town and when I reflected that our mouth had not been opened to any one, it became a matter of interest as to how the devil was enabled to so promptly anticipate trouble in any part of his dominion. We have found out already, however, that he has here as elsewhere, a tolerably well established agency, and that his principal agents everywhere wear the same badge and collar and are quite easily detected by the signs which the Savior has furnished us.

Friday evening, after a good deal of running around, we secured the Armory Hall by paying for it one dollar per night and extra for gas. A mixed audience of about fifty, mostly curiosity seekers, greeted the first effort, I believe, to represent the interests of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ in the old Granite state. The results so far have not been very flattering; small audiences, bad weather, great political excitement, religious indifference and other causes conspire against us. If people are to be humbugged they of course want it to be in the way that is fashionable and popular, and as the idea is gaining ground in as well as out of the churches, that religion as taught by past experience is very largely something other than it claims or can be maintained, it becomes a long, tedious and oft-times thankless task to even undertake to show to such a people that the kingdom of God does not come with sensual observation, or that the reproach of Christ will never, until he shall come bringing his rewards with him, be taken from those who are called and have the courage to follow him through evil as well as good report. And if to be a partaker of a glory that seems to the rational mind, as interpreted by the doctrines of men, mostly fiction, largely unreal, they shall be obliged to be a partaker of Christ's sufferings and submit themselves to anything like the discipline enjoined by the one that they so easily and cheaply call Lord, Lord, and the ostracism which the world will always place upon such, they will most certainly avoid the straight,—the narrow, the unpopular way which only those who earnestly and in all sincerity—and not with lip service are seeking for.

Bro. Heman Smith once said that it was hard to preach this gospel, but harder not to do it.

Of either service with me this is certainly true. The cross of preaching with me lies in the fact that my physical infirmities make it so heavy at times that I fain would lay it down, but I dare not, fearing the consequences. But I truly long for rest and surcease from bodily pain and affliction. I am so glad however that I have found a Savior and an everlasting friend, in whom I feel to trust for the fulfillment of that glorious hope which shall be accomplished "when he who is our life shall appear." For this I want to work and expect to suffer all that God wills that I should suffer.

A fair audience greeted us last evening. Rain came on again, however, and it seemed as if the clouds would never dry. A month later would have given us a cheap hall, better and uninterrupted service, and freedom from the intense political excitement now centering in New Hampshire. We have succeeded in stirring up our Adventist friends, however, who are quite numerous in this country, and they do not seem to take kindly to a disturbance of the monopoly they have enjoyed in criticising and challenging other sects; so that we are not real certain whether we shall leave the town upon two rails or one. At any rate they have a chance to show up or shut up; but they probably will do neither. A discussion would enliven things and institute a comparison that might prove odious to somebody. That they are one of the daughters of their mother with whom they do not seem to be really so well acquainted as they may have imagined, is proved to our minds by the readiness with which they join in "union meetings" in company with these—to use their own expression—"harlot daughters of an apostate mother," whenever the true servants of God are heard calling "Come out of her, my people," as was the case last evening. Divided among themselves, agreeing only in opposition to the truth as it is in God, they are ready to urge common war against the Church of Jesus Christ and his appointed ministry—always and in all places. For my part, it seems to me that these later progeny and offspring of this abominable woman betray less of that charity that "rejoiceth in the truth" and more of the spirit of meanness, opposition and persecution, with all the advantageous lessons of past history by which they might, if disposed, profit, than do some of the older daughters of the household of Satan. "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Askelon." Shall we not? "Let the truth come though the heavens fall," said Maximilian. Shall we be so over-wise as to spend too much time in presenting the truth as it is in Christ Jesus as given in his word to us in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, always of course drawing plainly the line between men and principles. Thank God it is written that "Babylon shall fall." Whatever approximate good she may have accomplished, surrounded by other kindred or heathen influences, the day of her service for good is past. God, the Most High, has established something better. "Come out of her, O my people!"

M. H. BOND.

GOLDFIELD, Iowa.

Dear Herald:—Although it has been but a few months since I united with the Church, yet I can truly say that I am not ashamed of this gospel. I am the only believer in the gospel in this place. I first heard it while on a visit to my parents at Buchanan, Michigan. The more I meditate upon it the stronger becomes my faith, and I thank God that he has made the truth known to me. On the third day of June last, my dear sister and I were led into the waters of baptism by Bro. John Shook and were confirmed by Elders Cyrus Thurston and R. Alcott. I am striving to enter in at the straight gate, and to fight the good fight of faith that I may wear the crown. How faithful and kind is our Father in heaven to those who trust him. No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.

O, may God be pleased to spare my life to meet again with the dear Saints in Buchanan. I know that their prayers ascend in behalf of their lonely sister. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that my dear husband may see the light and be brought into the fold before it is too late. I wish to relate a dream that I had shortly before I visited Michigan. It seemed as if I was at a neighbors, when a great storm arose and all went out of doors to watch it. The clouds were black as night, and as I looked up a bright spot appeared as if the sun shone through; then out came a beautiful white hand which seemed to float down toward me until, as I looked up at the bright spot again, a number of white doves came out and circled around the hand. It was a lovely sight and one which I shall never forget. That dream made a great impression on my mind, but I can understand it now.

It was the hand of the Almighty pointing out to me the true gospel of Christ. O, that I may be worthy of my dear Master's love, and that my lamp may be found burning when he comes.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. NELLIE BOLSTER.

SINNET'S MILLS, W. Va., Sept. 26th.

Editors Herald:—The opposition that Bro. Devore had to contend with when he first came here has pretty nearly died of its own accord. Bro. D. L. Shinn, of Clarksburg, has been preaching for us every two weeks since he has been working near by. The people generally like his preaching, and the few Saints here are greatly strengthened. Bro. Shinn says he wants to take the field by the last of October. There are a number of openings that could be secured in this part of the state. Bro. Shinn has a great measure of the Spirit and could accomplish a great deal of good if he could be kept employed. I hope the time is at hand when the church will rise in her strength and keep such men preaching instead of working at some secular employment. Asking the prayers of the Saints,

Your brother,
THOMAS SMITH.

Editors Herald:—St. John 14: 12. Not being posted on the above text I thought I would write that I might get some one else started on that point. To my mind it should settle all questions of dispute; that if Jesus did or approved of anything, then we are at liberty to do the same thing.

Now Jesus was baptized and approved of the same of others. He took children in his arms and blessed them; he laid hands on the sick to heal them. He cast out devils and raised the dead; forgave sins and so on. Did he approve of others doing the same things? If so does it not reach the believers of to day? If not, will you give the reason why it don't reach down to us. I hope some that are able to do the text justice will write and tell us what the greater works are as I live about one hundred miles from preaching.

Again: I claim that as God and Jesus are one in purpose, then the same teachings that the Son taught must be the same that the Father taught. I hope that what I have written will start the thing on foot, so I may learn the truth on the above subjects. Yours in the one faith,

B. H. CASE.

FULTON, Iowa, Sept. 30th.

Bro. Joseph:—Conference of the Eastern Iowa district convened here on the 22d and 23d of September. A number of Saints from all parts of the district were present, helping to make it enjoyable and profitable. Elders Bozarth, Roth and Turner were present. President Ruby and secretary Maitland were unable to attend. Bro. Bozarth's health would not permit him to take an active part in the meetings, but on Sunday eve we had the pleasure of hearing him. We had splendid meetings during conference, and afterward, and I think great good has been accomplished. When I look back one year ago and then view the present, I can not but praise God for the change that has been made in this community and all tending toward such a noble cause. On July 24th, 1887, Bro. Maitland preached the first sermon here, and from the first I became interested as did many more, until ultimately, we became Saints. We now have a branch numbering twenty-seven, organized by J. S. Roth on June 16th. All the Saints here are in good spirits. The Spirit was present during conference. On Monday, during meeting, Bro. Jackson was taken ill and went home. Some time afterwards his family arrived, finding him at the door unconscious. Bro. Roth was sent for and administered to him, when he commenced to mend, and next day was up and around.

The labor here was not in vain; four were baptized and more are ready. I have been thinking that for the safety of Bro. Roth, it would be well to have him attended by a body guard. At one time during baptizing, a man tried to borrow a revolver to assassinate him, but as no one carried such dangerous weapons, he was not able to procure one. A dirk knife was offered him but that would bring him in too close contact, and Bro. Roth's life was spared, only to be pounced upon by one of the gentler sex. He came out without a scratch, something remarkable. He is now warned that if he baptizes a certain man's wife that he can expect to lose his life by being caned to death. Elder Roth says he is not afraid if the women will leave him alone. Ever hoping for the good of the Saints, BANDERA, Texas, Sept. 20th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have just finished a discussion with two Christian (Campbellite) preachers at Pipe Creek, Texas.

First proposition—Resolved, That the signs denominated in Mark 16: 17, 18, should follow the believer.

Currie affirmed; King denied.

Second—Resolved, That, guided by the Spirit of God, the apostles and prophets of God, as recorded in King James' translation of the Bible have given a full and complete, or all revelation from God to man necessary during the gospel dispensation.

J. A. King affirmed; Currie denied.

The debate opened September 15th and was to continue four days; two days to each proposition, and two sessions of two hours each per day. I followed the line of argument on first proposition as follows: God's word can not fail. (Isaiah 55: 11); Jesus had commands from the Father and had to abide by them. (John 12: 49, 50). He sent others as he was sent, (John 17), and the same blessings he asked for them (John 17); extended to others, Acts 2: 39; Mark 16: 17, 18, &c. Verified Acts 8: 17; 19: 6; 10: 45; 9: 17 and 1 Cor. 12th chapter. Also showed two states of perfection were taught; one by obedience to the word of God in any age; the other when we are "changed into the image of Christ," and will "know as we are known," &c. First; Gen. 17: 1; Lev. 11: 44; Matt. 5: 48; Col. 4: 12; &c. Second; 1 Cor. 13: 10; 2 Cor. 3: 18; Phil. 3: 9-17, &c. That that "perfect" thing, or time has not come, for the gospel law was just as perfect on the day of Pentecost as the time of collecting and compiling the manuscripts so as to make the Bible, &c. The one who met me first, received news from relatives during the discussion, and being of a sorrowful nature, he chose to give his "part and lot" in the matter to one Mr. Turner, of same faith, before close of second day. Some of my friends objected; said they feared he was too much for me, &c. I told them I had plenty of help and was not afraid; so we met. He finished the first proposition best he could, and, of course had a sure thing of the second. He proceeded by showing the "will" was finished and all had been revealed; "And not to the book of Revelations," &c. I showed a falling away, (Matt. 11: 12; 2 Thess. 2: 3; Rev. 19th chapter, &c. Gospel to be restored, (Rev. 14: 6). Angel to a young man, (Zech. 2: 4, 5.) Also that Israel were to be gathered by "hunters and fishers," &c. (Jer. 16: 14-18.) By a covenant, (Rom. 11: 27; Jer. 31: 31-35, &c.) To put His spirit in them. (Ezek. 11: 19); Set Shepherds over them. (Jer. 23: 4, &c.) They tried to show the "perfect time" had come, and that Israel was gathered under the Spiritual reign of Christ (?). Mr. Turner, in his last speech, got into Jerusalem with the walls down and never got out. Thank God victory was ours! I never had such liberty and victory in life before. All closed in good humor, and Mr. King brought myself and wife home. He acknowledged that much of my arguments were not answered, and is now investigating. Mr. Turner only used one day on second proposition.

Some, who have been bitter against us, told me they had fought that which they knew nothing about and never would do so again. Mr. King thinks Mr. Turner got enough experience to do him awhile. He says it has also taught him a lesson. I believe God will bless Mr. King, for his honesty and feel that he will be guided into the truth. I would have let another send account of debate, but the Saints did not live near, and were too busy to attend. Four have joined and others near the kingdom. Allow me to say, if I understand aright, members should not be confirmed immediately after baptism, unless well informed in "the doctrine." (Doc. and Cov. 17: 18.) And I also believe that a confession is implied, if not taught, in the following: Romans 10: 9, 10; Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7. I believe that a departure from the rule brings confusion, and I know by experience that a hasty confirmation is sometimes regretted, as also hasty baptisms; sometimes by one and sometimes by both parties. Will some one please write about this and thereby let us come to a better understanding.

I feel well in the work and expect to give my entire time to its interests this year. Some talk of sending for another man to meet us. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion,

In truth yours,

J. A. CURRIE, JR.

WHEELLOCK, Texas, Oct. 7th.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—I have just returned from a trip to Anderson and Houston counties, this state. At Elkhart branch, in Anderson county, I met Bro. J. W. Bryan, who entertained me for some time very pleasantly, and then I met Bro. Hassell and family on their way to Elkhart to hear a Campbellite preacher; however they are not Campbellites. I next met Bro. A. J. Moore at the home of Bro. J. W. Bryan, where we had a good time in conversation about the great latterday work. Next day Bro. Moore and I went to Bro. Hassell's where we spent a part of two days and a night very pleasantly, and then went to fill an appointment at Myrtle Springs, where the people were very attentive. Thence to another branch in Houston county, which has been organized lately of good material. I found that Bro. Moore had done some good work in this section of the country; also that the membership esteemed him very highly as a laborer in the Master's vineyard. Many outside the church also seem to think well of him, and well they may, for he is a noble brother and fellow laborer, and zealous for the cause. May God's blessing ever attend him. I preached twice in the last branch where I left Bro. Moore and made my way to the Central branch in Robertson county, in this state. Found it getting along about as usual, and after transacting some business in the branch, left for home, finding the family well. And now I am attending to domestic affairs preparatory to starting out again to preach and visit the branches in the district before conference, which meets at Cook's Point. Friday, November 9th. Hope to meet all the elders and officers of the branches in the district and as many members as can attend. In bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

HARRISONVILLE, Mo., Oct. 12th.

Dear Herald:—On the 6th of June I traded my property in Independence for a farm of two hundred and forty acres about thirty miles south of Independence, and five and one-half miles west of Harrisonville, Cass county, Missouri. I think I did well, for we have a fine grain and stock growing country. Improved farms are rating all the way from twenty-five to forty dollars per acre. Bro. H. H. Robinson labored here a while and baptized eight, but owing to calls for preaching elsewhere the appointment was dropped for nearly a year, until I moved my family here in June, and since then I have held forth the first Sunday in every month, so the work is reviving.

Bro. A. Lloyd who was appointed to be my co-laborer has not been able to arrange his affairs until of late. Two weeks ago we started with team and buggy for a trip into Kansas to look out new fields. Five miles south of Belton, Missouri, we found two families named Frazee, and Gifford, who once belonged to the Hedrickites but who had lately joined the Whitmerites, except Mr. Frazee. Here we left an appointment for October 8th, thence we drove to Mr. John Eccles' in Johnson county, Kansas. His wife was baptized by Bro. Lloyd some nine years ago, and here we received a hearty welcome, and after our conversation, Mr. Eccles remarked that the doctrine was altogether different from what he had expected, and he would make arrangements in the near future so we could open the work there.

From here we went to LaCygne, Linn county, Kansas, to visit some parties who claim to be preaching the four first principles of the gospel but reject all the books except the New Testament, also the mission of Joseph Smith. They claim wonderful power in healing the sick, speaking in unknown tongues, prophesying, etc.; they also claim to have several branches in Kansas and New York. They are presided over here by a man by the name of McDonal, who is seventy-two years old. He wears his hair very long and parts it in the center, so we were told. We did not chance to meet this great champion, but one of his members who enjoys the gift of prophecy told me that when the Spirit came on him he got as cold as ice. I told him that it must be of the devil, for as he entered the serpent to deceive our first parents the snake had been cold ever since. We were treated kindly by this people, and they seemed anxious to have us come and preach for them. The conduct of most all their preachers has been very bad, their leaders included.

As we could not stop to preach for them then as we had other appointments to meet, we made arrangements with them for appointment at any time that we saw fit. While here the Spirit said to us that if faithful we should gather out some that had been deceived. We were gone five days on this trip, traveling a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles, but returned in time to meet our appointment on the first Sunday in October at the Rockford School-house.

On Monday last we went to meet our appointment five miles south of Belton. Sr. Lloyd accompanying us. On our arrival I learned that somehow or other the impression was out that I was a Baptist preacher from Harrisonville, and so they had made arrangements for us to preach in the Baptist Church, so we found it well lit up and a fair sized congregation awaiting us. We occupied and at the close took a vote as to whether they wanted preaching the next night. The vote was unanimous, and after the meeting we learned that we had given general satisfaction. One of the most prominent men of the vicinity remarked that it was the best sermon ever preached in the house. We occupied three nights and at the close Mrs. Frazee remarked that she had received more light from our efforts, than she had ever before and was tired of living on the husks, but wanted the corn; and as evidence of her sincerity, she bought a new hymn book and signed for the Herald. To-morrow we go to Pleasant Gap, Bates county, Missouri, to hold forth in the Union Church near that place. Since the April conference I have labored at Taborville, Eldorado Springs, Rich Hill, Shobetown and Rockford with good success. The work in the Independence district is prospering under the faithful and wise supervision of Bro. I. N. White. At no distant day I expect to see a large ingathering; prejudice is giving away fast. But sometimes I think that the devil has mustered every foul and unclean spirit under heaven on the land of Missouri, but by the help of the Lord I feel the victory will be ours.

In conclusion I will say that after an experience of five years in Independence, I think that many of the Saints there could better their condition by coming down here and farming for a living. The crops are generally good. Corn will run from forty to eighty bushels per acre.

Yours for the truth,

EMSLEY CURTIS.

PERE CHENEY, Mich., Oct. 7th.

Bro. Joseph:—I left home the 17th of last month for Cheney. Made one new opening six miles north of Reese, and left a good interest. I shall visit there again soon. I have been holding meetings here for the last two weeks and the interest is good, with just enough opposition to roll on the good work. Yesterday I baptized a lady, and some that witnessed her baptism could not refrain from shedding tears, as much as to say, I believe the work. Another lady asked consent of her husband to unite but was refused, although he could give no reason therefor. His name is Samuel McIntire. He stated that at one time he asked Colonel Bidamon where Joseph Smith's wives were. Mr. Bidamon pointed to Sr. Emma, the prophet's widow, and said, "There they are." He then said, "Is that all?" His answer was,

"Yes, sir; that is all the wife he ever had." Mr. McIntire is much respected, and has friends on every side. We do not understand why he should oppose his excellent wife in securing her eternal happiness and peace with God. However, all things work together for good to them that fear God.

Bro. Frank Hastings will carry on regular prayer meetings.

Yours,

E. DE LONG.

A LETTER IN DEFENSE OF THE GOSPEL.

BY SR. ELLA A. MILLER.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa,

May 6th, 1888.

Dear Sister Della:—Your kind letter received last Friday evening. * * * Sister Hyde brought me her Herald today which contains a letter from my sister Violet Jordan, in which she says: "There is nothing so grand as giving up the pleasures of this world, in order to serve the Lord, and for the enjoyment of this great latter day work, although we are despised by the world, we know if we do our duty and our hearts are filled with love for God, that we are precious in his sight." I am glad she has the courage to endure the revilings of the worldly, and their false sayings, and I hope her faith will never be shaken by such idiotic vaporings as some peddle. Many do so ignorantly and many do so wilfully, but we have a blessed promise of the Savior's, in Matthew 5: 11, 12. These are plain facts.

In Matthew 24: 9, Christ, in predicting what signs should take place not long before his second advent, comparatively speaking, said of the prophets, that their enemies will deliver them up to be afflicted, and would kill them, and that they should be hated of all nations for his name's sake; for bearing the testimonies he would send them to bear.

He also foretold that many of their enemies,—the different denominations,—would become offended and would betray one another. You know they are pulling and hauling all the time, yet they are one in persecuting the Saints.

At the period of time when the Lord has prophets at work, false prophets will also appear and deceive many. This is like all the rest of Satan's work, for he always says that God does not mean to do what he says he will do.

There can not be a false, a counterfeit of anything, if a genuine does not exist.

We would have no fear of receiving a counterfeit dollar, if there was not a genuine dollar in existence.

If silver dollars would no longer be used we would not need to "beware" of counterfeit, or "false" dollars.

On the other hand, if genuine dollars are in use we will have a means given us by which to know them. Counterfeits do not have the same ring, or sound, when thrown on a table or counter that the genuine have. They may have a coat or "cloak" having the appearance of silver, but "inwardly" they are full of worthless metal.

We see the need of a rule of some kind by which we may test them, and not be cheated out of the genuine dollar, or prophet of God. Why did Christ explain so definitely how to "know" a prophet of God from a false prophet?

Christ preached that which was commanded him of his Father, and he would not have spent his time so worthlessly as to talk of something that would never be of any use.

Your answer at present, perhaps, would be, (if we are to know them by their fruits), that, the Utah Mormons are "the fruits."

I would not blame you for making such an assertion under the circumstances, that is, when you know of no better fruit brought forth by him, (Joseph).

But you seem to seek the "enemies side" of the question and hug it as tight as a sacred revelation. Do you believe this is fair? I do not, though I do not believe you do so wilfully, but innocently.

Della, if it were not for the prophecies in the Bible from Genesis to Revelations, and the confirmation of many of the same in history, and others which are in process of fulfillment in the present time, I should never have been a Saint.

For the above reasons I am willing to bear patiently the scorn of the world, for I know God is working in these latter days just as he tells us in the Scriptures that he would.

What would you think of Samuel, the prophet, if you knew he would hew a man to pieces in cold blood in the sight of the Lord? (1 Samuel 15:33). What would you think of the prophecies given through him?

Also Peter, what would you think of him when you find he would lie and curse and swear?

Do you think you would have any confidence in the preaching he did?

I do not quote the above for the purpose of criticising God's holy word.

I think the men God has used to established his work on earth are nothing but men after all; for they sometimes exhibit the weakness of men; though they accomplished the purposes of the Lord just the same. But it was by the power of God and not of the men, for the "arm of flesh is weak."

I do not refer to these sayings with the intention or the least idea of trying to smooth over any of the faults of the Lord's servants, if they had any.

I mean to show that God can bring about his purposes by a man if he is not quite so perfect as the holy angels in heaven.

If the class of people that followed Brigham Young to the "salt land," and abided by his doctrine of plural marriage regardless of Christ's doctrine that was first taught to them by Joseph, were the fruits of his (Joseph's) work, then also were the persecutions of Christ and the saints in former days, by the Jews, fruits of Moses as leader. Are you honest enough to admit that? I think you are.

The Jews accused Moses of misleading them, because so many of them perished in the wilderness, just as some of those Utah people accuse Joseph of being the cause of all their sufferings, though it came long after his death.

Now Della, Joseph was in his grave, and was no more responsible for that villainy than was Moses for the persecutions of Jesus by the Jews. For if they had abided by Moses' teachings they would not have crucified Christ. Christ said unto them, if they believed in Moses they would also have believed in him.

The same reasoning holds good against the doctrine of polygamy, for if they, the followers of Brigham, believed Christ they would not have departed from his gospel as Joseph taught it to them.

I will quote from his doctrine, as it is in one of these clippings I send you from which I copy it.

"We believe that one man should have but one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again."

This you will see by the article from which I quote, was taken from the book containing Joseph's revelations, which was printed two years after Joseph was murdered by that merciless mob.

If Joseph had taught or received any such revelation—as Brigham Young falsely tried to lay upon him in order to clear his own filthy skirts—would they not have expunged the above quotation at the time of publishing, instead of waiting seven years later? They did expunge it no less than seven years later, doing so nine years after his death.

The excuse which Brigham made for Joseph's not making his so-called revelation a point of doctrine in his own days, is in itself sandy enough, and it was this: That "he [Joseph] was afraid of being persecuted more than he was." How absurd! This is flimsy enough and shows evil lusts of Brigham by wishing to lay it on some innocent persons shoulders, as persecution was as hot as it could be against Joseph at that date.

I am no judge of Brigham's hereafter. He may receive forgiveness as all those men in olden time for all I know, but this I do know, that Brighamism is contrary to the commandments given the Saints through Joseph. You are in great error when you think Brigham Young only carried out Joseph's revelations. . . .

The New Testament declares that some who wished to find fault with Christ, said that he was a wine-bibber, and a friend of publicans and sinners, and that he cast out devils by Beelzebub. Mere assertion is not fact, thank heaven!

The statements that the Savior Jesus and the Prophet Joseph, were not sent to fulfil divine missions does not make it so.

Perhaps you do not know what the Book of Mormon is. I will try to briefly sketch its contents, as I have read it from the first page to the last:

1st. You are aware that this country—America—was once or twice inhabited by civilized people before it was discovered by Columbus, and that when he (Columbus) discovered it, the "roving red men" flocked down to the ships.

2d. With all the wise men since that time they can not fathom the mystery of how those people came to be here and who they are. There is no way of finding out unless God "reveals his secrets unto his servants the prophets."—Amos 3:7. He has sent those people here and he must keep his promise, or his word is not good for anything.

3d. Do you believe those people lived here all that time, (as relics are being found every year, of their remains), without the knowledge of the Father and the Son? You would have to admit that He was a "respector of persons," if you think they did, and that is contrary to the Bible.

The Book of Mormon is a record which was kept by them, handed down from father to son as long as they existed. When it so happened that there was not a son to hand it down to, it would be entrusted to some near relative or righteous person. It tells how they came here and how destroyed, except the Indians and the last white man, who buried this record.

The first people that inhabited this part of the globe were called "Jeredites." They also kept a record of their doings, and this record was apparently accidentally found by the second people who were called "Nephites."

The first were commanded of God to build vessels as he directed them, and they did as Noah did, that is, they obeyed Him. This was at the time of the confusion of tongues at the Tower of Babel, when they were brought by the power and guidance of God to America.

The second people called Nephites, were commanded of God in the same way to flee from Jerusalem, as God said it would be destroyed, and if they and their descendants wished to be saved to obey him which they did, and were brought here by the same means as the Jaredites were.

As their record was kept by each person, it is divided into "books" named after the recorders. The last named was Mormon, and he named the record the Book of Mormon. His son was the last living except those who become wicked and wild. They (the Indians), destroyed the last of the white people, and become so wicked that God put a skin of blackness upon them, and allowed them to eat the raw flesh of animals, etc., as a curse upon them.

When they came to America, they brought with them the record of their progenitors, "Moses" and part of the "prophets."—The Old Testament Scriptures.

They were literal descendants of Joseph who was sold into Egypt. Their record tells us what occupations they followed and of their temporal affairs, generally; also of their form of worship, and that we find to be exactly as the Bible teaches. It is, therefore, another evidence of the divinity of the Bible. They left Jerusalem about 600 B. C. and were destroyed about A. D. 400.

In St. John 10: 16, Christ said that he had "other sheep which are not of this fold." (at Jerusalem), "they" (the other sheep, "Israelites") "shall hear my voice." They are not the Gentiles; oh no, for they never heard his voice. He never manifested himself to them except by the Holy Ghost. He kept his word, for in that he said they should hear his voice, he came to them, the Nephites, after he ascended from Jerusalem, and appeared unto the people here, and established the same "everlasting gospel" among them.

The last people were divided into two classes, after they came here and named after two brothers. The "Nephites" were descendants of Nephi, the brother who kept the Lord's commandments, and the Lamanites—Indians—were descendants of Laman, the very wicked brother who would not hearken unto the Lord's commandments. The Indians are a remnant—the Lamanites.

In this record are several sermons by different men of the Lord, and in one of them are the words you will find on the title page of of the Herald. I need not write it here as it would take unnecessary space.

In the record of the Jaredites is found the following:—"And it came to pass that Riplakish did not do that which was right in the sight of the Lord, for he did have many wives and concubines, and did lay that upon men's shoulders which was grievous to be borne. Yea, he did tax them with heavy taxes; and with the taxes he did build many spacious buildings."—Book of Ether 4: 5.

Brigham Young pretended to believe the Book of Mormon yet he did all of these very things.

I will make a few quotations from the book containing Joseph's revelations and see if it agrees with what you claim Brigham Young only carried out:

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out. Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out; but he that has committed adultery and forsakes it, and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive; but if he doeth it again, he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out. Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my Scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out. If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments."—D. and C., sec. 42: 7, 8. Revelation given Feb., 1831.

"And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbideth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man, wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain [not 19] shall be one flesh."—Sec. 49: 3, given 1831.

This revelation was given as some of the elders were going on a mission among the Shakers who did not believe in marriage.

I will leave you to draw your own conclusions from the above quotations after I quote one little passage of Scripture:—"Men do not put new wine into old bottles."

Now, I presume you would have me refer you to the Bible supporting this latter day work. It will make my letter longer than I would wish to weary you with, but as we wish our "discussion" to be brought to a close soon, I will refer you to a few, and if they are not enough, you may tell me so in your next.

I will commence by quoting two passages of Scripture to be kept in mind:—"Surely the Lord God doeth nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."—Amos. 3: 7, and "Behold the former things are come to pass and new things do I declare; before they come to pass I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42: 9.

Now turn to the forty-eighth chapter of Genesis and read it very carefully and you will notice that Ephraim received the greater blessing. In the seventeenth verse also notice where they are going to grow into a multitude. They are also going to become a "multitude of nations."

We will now see what Joseph's blessing is by going to the 49th chapter and 22d verse.

"Joseph is a fruitful bough by a well, [ocean] whose branches [descendants] run over the wall," [over the ocean]. . . . "Unto the utmost bound [the farthest point in either direction from where they were then, and it would bring them to America] of the everlasting hills, they [the blessings] shall be upon the head of Joseph and on the crown of him that was separate from his brethren." The Nephites were descendants of him that was separate from his brethren, therefore the blessings of this latter day work and Book of Mormon are on his head. This needs no comment but is very plainly understood.

Now turn to Deut. 33: 13-17. We will find a similar passage: "Blessed of the Lord be his land, [America], for the precious things of heaven, for the dew and for the deep that coucheth beneath; and for the precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof." You know of the numerous kind of mines and of the precious or "chief things" of the "lasting hills," and of the variety of fruits, and vegetables, and grain, the "fulness thereof," besides the different kinds of soil, and climates we have in America, do you not?

"And his horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: They are the ten thousands of Ephraim and they are the thousands of Manasseh." You must bear in mind that this is a blessing given to Joseph who was sold into Egypt, three hours later.

My beloved sister I beseech you not to mock with scorn what I am about to tell you, for I am yet trembling from the influence of the Spirit.

I went to see sister Hyde to get an explanation of the quotation I last made, but she said she did not know as she could explain it without reading some other passage of Scripture with it, so we read awhile and I got up to come home and she said to me, "You haven't come to any conclusion as to what that means." I hastily sat down again as I had forgotten that I had not come to any definite conclusion as to its meaning. We began again to read passage after passage of Scripture, and once in a while I would catch a new idea and speak of it; but after all, I came home without her explanation of it, and did not notice what I had done until I came in my house, and then I thought I must be "absent minded" to do such a thing; but it was too near dinner time for me to go back.

Before I commenced writing to you I went to God in humble prayer, in obedience to His commandment in James, first chapter and fifth verse, to "ask of him" to allow me a portion of his Spirit of inspiration to guide and teach me what to write you; dinner is over with and the doctor gone to his office, and I will explain that passage in my own way, I never heard it explained in this way before, nor in fact, any other way fully.

I shall first lead you to Ezekiel 37th chapter and 16th verse. I shall call your attention to its being a prophecy, that is, it is to be fulfilled in the future.

"Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write for Judah, [Jerusalem or the land of Judah], and for the children of Israel his companions. Then take another stick, and write upon it, for Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions."

In ancient times they wrote on parchment and fastened it to a stick, so that it could be rolled up, instead of binding them in books as we do now, hence he called them "sticks."

The Bible as every one knows, is the "stick of Judah." I mean that the Old and New Testaments together is the stick of Judah. But what and where is the "stick of Ephraim?" In the 19th verse the Lord says that he will, in his own due time, put it with the stick of Judah and make them one stick. They are in one teaching. And he says that these sticks shall be before the eyes of the house of Israel that they shall become one in his hand. (They must teach the same thing or they can not become one.) And that when both of them are before their eyes, he will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land, &c.—Ezek. 37: 15-21. I will give you more quotations and references to guide you in searching the Scriptures and read for yourself concerning the Jews returning to Jerusalem, after the stick of Judah was brought forth, but I wish to prove more about this book or "stick." In Isaiah 15: 21 are the following words: "Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes." . . . 24th verse: "Therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust; because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel,"—meaning the Jews, also those who reject it.

"For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still." 26th: "And he will lift up an ensign to the nations," (Gentiles), "from far," (far from where this was written), "and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth," (the farthest point from where this was written.) "And they," (the enemies,) "shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea." Della, dear sister, do you believe you are not helping to make that "roar?" Isaiah 11: 12: "And he shall set up an ensign to the nations," (Gentiles) "and" (then,) "shall gather the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth." Then "The envy also of Ephraim shall depart." . . . "Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim."

You see they will then become one, or "in the unity of the faith."

If the pretended believers of Judah,—the Bible,—believed it all they would also believe Ephraim, the Book of Mormon, as each plainly tells of the other in various places.

Christ will sometime say to them as he did to the unbelieving Jews, "if ye had believed in Moses and the prophets, ye would have believed in the divinity of the Book of Mormon;" but we will let that rest, and go to Isaiah 18: 1. O, it is so plain I do not see why people are so blinded, but, of course, it is because they have "blind guides."

I hope you will bear patiently with me this time for writing such a long letter, but it is all for the sisterly love for you that I plod along to bring you a lamp to guide yourself and not allow the blind to lead you.

As I said, we will refer to Isaiah 18: 1: "Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia."

There is not a country so shadowed with wings as that which is "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," they (the rivers) all flow towards America, therefore, America is the land he is speaking of; we will not say anything about the variety of birds and fowls of the air, but will ask if there is another country whose emblem is a large bird with its wings outspread taking blessed tidings, as it were, to every man, woman, and child? Also how much the shape of wings America represents with that little isthmus dividing it north and south.

He says in the next verse that the land of the above description will send ambassadors by the sea to take good news to a nation scattered and peeled who have been a people of terrible vicissitudes from their beginning. We learn from the Bible that the Jews were disobedient.

He tells us again of the "ensign;" here is the news they will take with them. "All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains, and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye."

Oh, Della, how can you doubt when you see this prophecy is to be fulfilled after our country—America—is made free, and the knowledge of that great emblem has been spread far and near.

Isaiah 28: 21 says the Lord will "do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act; now, therefore, be not mockers, lest your bands be made strong."

I scarcely believe that the Lord would think it a "strange act" or "strange work," but the "inhabitants" and the "dwellers on the earth" would think so.

Please turn to the 29th chapter of Isaiah. The first six verses of this chapter portray the distress and punishment of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and its ruin, which is completed by a "flame of devouring fire." The seventh to the tenth portray that all the nations, (Gentiles), that distress her shall be as in a dream; for he says "it shall be as when a hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth, (that is, he joins some organization and expects or "dreams" that he will receive comfort or blessings by doing so), "but behold, his soul is empty. He hath appetite for more but it is not to be found; he is not satisfied; he did not get what he expected to receive. And behold, he dreams that he drinketh,"—of the water of life,—but when he waketh he finds he did not drink after all, but is still thirsting after more righteousness—and is hungry.

RULES FOR SPIRITISTS.

THE Spirit Circle is the assembling together of a number of persons seeking communion with the spirits who have passed from earth to the world of souls. The chief advantage of such an assembly is the mutual impartation and reception of the combined magnetisms of the assemblage, which form a force stronger than that of an isolated subject—enabling spirits to commune with greater power and developing the latent gifts of mediumship.

The first conditions to be observed relate to the persons who compose the circle. These should be, as far as possible, of opposite temperament, as positive and negative; of moral characters, pure minds, and not marked by repulsive points of either physical or mental condition. No person suffering from disease, or of debilitated physique, should be present at any circle, unless it is formed expressly for healing purposes. I would recommend the number of the circle never to be less than three or more than twelve. The best number is eight. No person of a strong positive temperament should be present, as any such magnetic spheres emanating from the circle will overpower that of the spirits, who must always be positive to the circle in order to produce phenomena.

Never let the apartment be over-heated; the room should be well ventilated. Avoid strong light, which, by producing motion in the atmosphere, disturbs the manifestations. A subdued light is the most favorable for spiritual magnetism.

I recommend the seance to be opened with prayer or a song sung in chorus, after which subdued, harmonizing conversation is better than wearisome silence; but let the conversation be directed toward the purpose of the gathering, and never sink into discussion or rise to emphasis. Always have a pencil and paper on the table, avoid entering or quitting the room, irrelevant conversation, or disturbances within or without the circle after the seance has commenced.

Do not admit unpunctual comers, nor suffer the air of the room to be disturbed after the sitting commences. Nothing but necessity, indisposition, or impressions should warrant the disturbance of the sitting, which should never exceed two hours, unless an extension of time be solicited by the spirits.

Let the seance extend to one hour, even if no results are obtained; it sometimes requires that time for spirits to form their battery. Let it be also remembered that circles are experimental, hence no one should be discouraged if phenomena are not produced at the first few sittings. Stay with the same circle for six sittings; if no phenomena are then produced, you may be sure you are not assimilated to each other; in that case, let the members meet with other persons until you succeed.

A well developed test medium may sit without injury for any person, but a circle sitting for mutual development should never admit persons addicted to bad habits, strongly positive or dogmatical. A candid inquiring spirit is the only proper frame of mind in which to sit for phenomena, the delicate magnetism of which is made or marred as much by mental as physical conditions.

Impressions are the voices of spirits, or the monitions of the spirit within us, and should always be followed out, unless suggestive of wrong in act or word. At the opening of the circle, one or more are often impressed to change seats with others. One or more are impressed to withdraw, or a feeling of repulsion makes it painful to remain. Let these impressions be faithfully regarded, and pledge each other that no offense shall be taken by following impressions.

If a strong impression to write, speak, sing, dance, or gesticulate, possess any mind present, follow it out faithfully. It has a meaning if you can not at first realize it. Never feel hurt in your own person, nor ridicule your neighbor for any failures to express or discover the meaning of the spirit impressing you.

Spirit control is often deficient, and at first imperfect. By often yielding to it your organism becomes more flexible, and the spirit more experienced; and practice in control is necessary for spirits as well as mortals. If dark and evil-disposed spirits manifest to you, never drive them away, but always strive to elevate them, and treat them as you would mortals under similar circumstances. Do not always attribute falsehoods to "lying spirits," or deceiving mediums. Many mistakes occur in the communion of which you can not always be aware.

Unless charged by spirits to do otherwise do not continue to hold sittings with the same parties for more than a twelve-month. After that time, if not before, fresh elements of magnetism are essential. Some of the original circle should withdraw, and others take their places.

Never seek the spirit circle in a trivial or deceptive spirit. Then, and then only, have you cause to fear it.

Never permit any one to sit in circles who suffers from it in health or mind. Magnetism in the case of such persons is a drug, which operates perniciously, and should be carefully avoided.

Every seventh person can be a medium of some kind, and become developed through the judicious operations of the spirit circle. When once mediums are fully developed, the circle sometimes becomes injurious to them. When they feel this to be the case, let none be offended if they withdraw, and only use their gifts in other times and places.

All persons are subject to spirit influence and guidance, but only one in seven can so externalize this power as to become what is called a medium; and let it ever be remembered that trance speakers, no less than mediums for any other gift, can never be influenced by spirits far beyond their own normal capacity in the matter of the intelligence rendered, the magnetism of the spirits being but a quickening fire, which inspires the brain; and, like a hot-house process on plants, forces into prominence latent powers of the mind, but creates nothing. Even in the case of merely automatic speakers, writers, rapping, and other forms of test mediumship, the intelligence of the spirit is measurably shaped by the capacity and idiosyncrasies of the medium. All spirit power is limited in expression by the organism through which it works, and spirits may control, inspire, and influence the human mind, but do not change or re-create it.—Sel.

CLARKSDALE GROVE MEETING.

The ten days' Grove meeting convened near Clarksdale, Missouri, Friday, September 21st. On Saturday the 22d, a complete organization was effected by choosing Bro. J. R. Lambert president, Charles P. Faul secretary, and Charles Duncan general foreman of the grounds. The programme for each day was: prayer meeting at 10:30 a.m. and preaching at 2:30 and 7:30 p.m. The speakers were brethren J. T. Kinnaman, J. F. McDowell, J. R. Lambert and W. W. Blair; the latter stopping over the first Sunday. The grove in which the meeting was held is nicely situated, being one and a half miles east of Clarksdale, and about the same distance from Pleasant Grove, and DeKalb German Stewartville churches.

On the week days the attendance was small, on account of the farmers being very busy; but on both Sundays the attendance was large, many being present that have never heard our claims before. Good order prevailed through the meeting, and a noticeable feature was the excellent prayer meetings, in which nearly all who were present took part, the Spirit bringing that joy that only Saints can realize. Seven prayer and eighteen preaching meetings were held, four of them in the Clarksdale church, it being rather cool to hold meeting in the grove, in the evening; also one in the German church. The preached word was attended with the Spirit of God.

COMPENDIUM
 —OF—
 FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPILOGUE OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocletian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 245 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Especial attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

THE RE-UNION.

IN addition to what has been stated by the secretary of the locating committee appointed last year to locate the grounds for five years it is but justice to that committee to state that when they came to take the subject into active consideration they found difficulties to encounter which they did not feel willing under the circumstances to take the responsibilities of deciding. There were prejudices existing which made it impracticable to suit all; many preferring a grove to open ground and others favoring an open place with better railway facilities. In these conditions the committee secured a most favorable proposal from the city of Missouri Valley, for the use of the Fair Grounds near the city, with all its privileges, and they are many for one year, with the privilege of five years, if desired. These grounds were easy of access, as any one coming in by rail could see the tented city on the plain, looking down the main street toward the west in fair and open sight. There are only two things which may be regarded as drawbacks to this location. One is it is located on the plain, with no shelter from the winds, which in the fall from the north and west blow cold; and should the rains be heavy during the session the grounds being flat would undoubtedly be wet. Dry as it was this fall it was not an objection. The other objection is that the grounds are so close to the railway track, and that too just where two wagon ways cross, one on the east and one on the west, that the whistling of the engines and the roar of the trains is sufficient to make it impossible to hear speaking in the tent while trains are passing. The last three days of the session the railway engineers, were, however, quite considerate and only blew their whistles sufficiently to keep within the rules of law requiring them to give signals at such crossings. No complaint was made by us, but one of the brethren spoke to one of the officers about it, and the annoyance was much less after that. At the first it really seemed as if one or two of the engineers on the passing engines were anxious to see how much noise he could get out of his whistle all along the line of the camp. The hours of their passing in greater number were on the hours devoted to the morning and evening preaching services; and all that the preacher could do when the din began was to stop and wait until the train was by. This occurring three, four or more times during the preacher's hour had a bad effect; often creating confusion in the mind of both hearer and speaker; some otherwise most effective passages of a sermon being greatly hurt by the unseemly and illtimed interruption. We confess to having the usual amount of self assurance possessed by the average preacher; but in spite of our "cold blood," we were "put out," more or less by the hoarse roar of the "iron horse." How it affected the finer and more nervous among our speakers was noticed in the less impassioned speech and spiritual service after one of those interruptions occurred. We blame no one; it is one of the incidental annoyances that all eligible sites are more or less subject to. Besides this interruption to services during waking hours, the night was made tedious to some who could not woo back the drowsy god when once he had been driven from their pallets in the tented city by the hideous shriek of the iron monster, passing with his loads of humanity and burdens of merchandise. With the exception named before the location was very desirable. The citizens were respectful and desirous of being favorable to our meeting. There was but little profanity among those not of the church attendant upon the ground; and but an instance or two of disturbance at the tent by loud talking near it. The charges made for what the Saints required to buy of those who sold to them were not excessive that we heard of, and accommodations seemed to be ample—people seemed to be pleased if they could do anything for us.

The weather was quite cool, for the most part during the session; the wind blew cold and raw from the north and west during two days almost making a stay on the grounds uncomfortable both day and night. It rained a little on Tuesday night, which was just what was needed, as it had become very dusty; and on Saturday the clouds gathered and rain began falling Sunday the 14th about daylight and continued at intervals all day. This prevented the attendance of those outside of the church, and many of the Saints in all the surrounding country, the roads being so wet and slippery that teams could not travel. The weather was cool—almost cold—so that many thought it discretion to stop at home. This caused the attendance to be much smaller than usual; but what the meetings lacked in number was made up in spiritual enjoyment, and we think we speak for all when we state that the seasons of prayer were never more enjoyable, and the sermons never better at any of the meetings of the past, than were those we had at this session. The Spirit was present in great degree and those who spoke felt its warming, cheering, elevating influences in wonderful power. There was much less illness among those stopping on the ground than upon some former occasions; administrations to these in the laying on of hands in most cases was followed by relief.

The feeling in favor of holding a Re-union next fall was general, and the desire for a renewal of diligent and earnest labor was prevalent throughout.

Some of the speakers were young men; but to those older in ministerial work, the conduct and speech of these young men were a reminder that young men were for war, (active labor in the field) and old men for counsel.

The rain on Sunday the last meeting day left the Saints mostly to themselves; and we question if ever there was a more profitable day spent at any of the Reunions of the past than was passed by the people of God in that moveable tabernacle of cloth pitched on that open Fair Ground, with nothing to mar and nothing to disturb their unity and their communion with the Lord whom they serve. For ourself we are sure that we were blessed abundantly in meeting with the Saints.

RUMORS.

It has reached our ears that some of the ministry in the field are being hurt in their efforts to reach the people by conduct, which while not criminal, is certainly unwise. To illustrate this, and still not deal offensively with the reputation of any, it is hinted that one has been in the habit of contracting debts in small sums, at different times, until his credit is financially destroyed; until indeed his word for payment is decidedly not good. That he is a good speaker and intelligent is conceded; but people persist in thinking that this weakness of buying when not able to pay, should be overcome.

Another is hindered in his labors by an unseemly haste to press on to other and more distant fields while doors equally inviting, and sometimes of far more promising prospects for an ingathering are standing wide open near by, but are ignored or unregarded by this anxious minister.

Another has his influence for good sadly crippled by ill-timed and always injudicious attacks upon the faiths of others, in which attacks the beliefs of those attacked are held up to scorn and ridicule not pleasant to the brethren of milder traits, and decidedly disagreeable to those attacked. This sometimes occurs when the persons so offended are favorably considering the work, but are repelled by so harsh an attack. It is true that it is possible that those repelled are on the look out for what to them might be a reasonable excuse for ceasing to investigate; but should this be the case in nine out of every ten instances the harm done in the tenth will warrant our appeal to the elders to avoid such sharp and harsh argumentation. What might be excusable in this line in the heart of debate, is not and ought not to be justifiable during the cooler presentation of the word of God, through the hearing of which faith is produced in them who are preached unto.

Brethren, banner bearers, "Let your moderation be known unto all men." If Paul would not eat meat if his brother was caused to offend thereby, can not we forbear making enemies to our cause by harshness.

WHO SHALL IT BE?

IN conversation with the Bishop at the late Reunion we learned that the unusually large number of the ministry put into the field at the April Conference, and the additional number sent in by the presidency and ministers in charge, there is grave reasons to fear that some will have to be recalled, for the reason that the treasury will not be able to sustain their families, as it should of right do. The effort made to sustain the work in accordance with the laws given of God to rule the church in its systematized alms giving, for the purposes of preaching the word, supplying the needs of our dependent poor, and the other needs of church labors, has been found to be wise; but like all other rules this must be understood and appreciated to be fully successful; and this has not yet been fully reached. The efforts of the Bishopric to set the financial condition of the church fairly within the reach of the understanding of all have been very commendable; and though some misapprehension concerning the rules prescribed by the Bishop has existed, it is pleasing to know that this is giving place to a better condition of things.

The Bishop does not know, nor does he foresee whether the condition of the Saints this fall is such that there will be such a consecration of means as will enable him to keep the whole ministerial force moving, or not; but he greatly fears it will not. There has been considerable means paid in localities for the building of local places of worship. This has been in most instances commendable; but the means so used has of necessity lessened the receipts of the Bishop for the general purposes of the work. No one is blamed for this, but the result may be unfortunate.

We lay this before the Saints to the intent that it may if practicable aid the general fund; but especially that should it be necessary to take some of the laborers out of the field, the eldership may be prepared for it, and will have thought of it in such way that they will not be hurt if they perchance may have to cease labor in the field for a season. Of course, if the result can not be avoided those appointed during the interim will be among those first recalled; then those who for reasons are the less active; the effort being to keep the general ministry in the field, whose duty lies there by virtue of their calling. The Presidency and Twelve will do the best in the premises that they can; and they will sincerely hope that none will be given offense in the affair, should it terminate in some having to leave the field. While we pray for the "Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the field" we must use righteous endeavor to keep those already in from being accounted as "infidels" because their families are not provided for.

MINUTES OF ANNUAL REUNION.

At the prayer service on the morning of the 10th Bro. J. S. Roth presided; ten offered prayer and testimony was borne by eighteen; oil was blessed, and those baptized the day before were confirmed, Brn. J. C. Crabb, C. Derry, A. H. Smith and J. R. Lambert officiating in the rite. This was followed by the blessing of a son of Bro. and Sr. Triplett, by Brn. Derry, Smith and J. S. Roth.

At the hour of eleven a. m., Bro. J. W. Chatburn led in prayer, after which Bro. Joseph Smith occupied, in a brief review of the causes and necessity and the fact of the Reorganization. At the close, "Lord let thy blessings rest in peace," was sung and Bro. J. W. Chatburn gave the benediction.

At 2:30 in the afternoon the Saints assembled at the ringing of the bell, and after a song was sung, Bro. R. M. Elvin led in prayer, and Bro. Alexander H. Smith gave a characteristic sermon upon the laying on of hands, as a doctrine of the church. 1st for ordination; 2d conferring the Spirit; 3d for blessing of children; 4th for the healing of the sick. The speaker urged that of the saying of Christ as found in Matthew and Mark commanding men to go into the world and preach, was authority for their doing so, it was also commanded to lay on hands, as this direction is found in the same statement of Christ, and in close relation to the command to go and preach. Which will men receive the statement of, Jesus or the sayings of men?

Bro. James Putney was in charge of the evening services, and led in prayer. The sermon was preached by Bro. Joseph Smith; the texts being Matt. 24:14 and Rev. 16:6; the first being the prophecy of Jesus direct, and the latter being the vision to John; both prophetic. "This gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue and people." He argued that Christ being a true prophet, the statement in Matthew must be fulfilled; and the statement to John on Patmos must also come to pass, if it had not yet transpired. He further claimed that the statement in Revelations had been fulfilled and that the prophecy of Christ in Matthew 24:14, would be sure of its fulfillment.

At the morning prayer service of October 11th Brn. John Pett and John A. Davis were in charge. An excellent meeting was held.

Bro. Warren E. Peak presided at the preaching service at eleven o'clock, and Bro. John S. Roth delivered the discourse, using Acts 19:2 as a text.

At 2:30 in the afternoon Bro. R. M. Elvin read the hymns and Bro. G. A. Blakeslee offered prayer; the preaching was by Bro. R. M. Elvin, on church organization.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert had been selected for the evening service; but owing to illness which prevented him from taking the stand Bro. Hiram C. Bronson was requested to occupy, which he did from Acts 1:1-8 inclusive. His discourse was well received and proved edifying to those who heard. The argument was that whosoever was sent out to represent Christ must know him; and that the knowledge now came by and through the witness bearer, the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth.

Bro. Joseph Smith followed with a few remarks, the Saints sang "Home, home shineth before us," and the audience was dismissed by benediction by Bro. Blair.

The prayer meeting on the morning of the 12th was one of the best of the session; Brn. James Putney and J. C. Crabb in charge. Nine of the membership offered prayer and thirty-eight bore testimony. Prophecy was delivered by two.

Bro. W. W. Blair occupied the morning preaching hour; using Isaiah 29th chapter as a basis of a discourse upon the fulfillment of prophecy, in the coming forth of the latter day work, and the favoring of the Jews as the ancient and covenant people of God to whom excellent promises have been made in the Scriptures and Book of Mormon. He also related his experience, and the way he was led from ways of unbelief to his assured confidence in the Word of God and the latter day work. It is a marvelous work and a wonder. If it were not it would not be God's work; for his work to be done in the last days was to be a "marvelous work and a wonder."

At the close of the session the appointments for the day following were made; including a session at which the question of holding another reunion was to be decided. Hymn 145, "My God, my Father, while I stray," was sung, and then Bro. C. E. Butterworth pronounced the benediction.

Bro. Warren E. Peak occupied the afternoon hour, his subject being the coming forth of the work, and its harmony with the dealing of God with man so shown in the Holy Writ. The means employed of God, angelic ministrations. It was a timely and suggestive discussion. Benediction by Bro. W. W. Whiting. At the close of service John Barclay, John Gump, Euclid Squires, Wellington Schofield, James Vredenburg, S. W. Underwood and Mary Ann Thomas gave their names for baptism. The congregation repaired to the water, under the charge of Brn. A. H. Smith and J. C. Crabb; when Bro. C. E. Butterworth administered the rite of baptism. Lydia Johnson and Mary Palmer being added to the number. These were confirmed same day by Brn. J. C. Crabb, C. E. Butterworth, J. S. Roth and R. M. Elvin.

The Saints reassembled at the tent at 7:30. "All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung; prayer was offered by Bro. R. M. Elvin; hymn 713 was sung and Bro. Charles Derry was presented as the speaker of the evening. Text Jude 1:4. The argument was that the faith once delivered to the Saints was and is the faith that will now save men. The speaker enjoyed a degree of the Spirit and all were edified. One God, one Lord, one faith, one Spirit, one baptism and one hope of our calling, must result to make God's people one, that they may be one with Christ as Christ and the Father are one. This faith he urged the Saints to earnestly contend for. Benediction by Bro. Joseph Smith.

Brn. W. W. Whiting and Joshua Carlisle were in charge of the morning prayer service, which was occupied in blessing children of Brn. Terry, Dickey, Lockling, McIntire and Kemish; Brn. Crabb, Butterworth, Roth and Elvin officiating. Oil was blessed; after which the time was well occupied in song, prayer and testimony.

At 11 a. m., the Saints were addressed by Bro. Edmund L. Kelley, of the Bishopric, by request of Bro. George A. Blakeslee, Bishop; upon the law obtaining in alms giving. Bro. Kelley's discourse was able and full of instruction, plain and acceptable to the people. The argument was that religion demanded not only service in spiritual things, but required free and voluntary service in temporal substance, the things of this world; as all the laws given of God to the church are not temporal but spiritual. Bro. John A. McIntosh, the aged veteran of the cross, pronounced the benediction.

October 13th, 8:30 a. m.: Prayer meeting was in charge of Brn. J. Putney and J. C. Crabb. The Spirit was present and the meeting was much enjoyed by those present.

8:30 p. m.: The tent was filled at the hour named. Bro. D. Chambers led in prayer. The object of the meeting, the determining in reference to the Reunion another year, and where; the report of committee on grounds appointed last year, was briefly stated by Pres. Smith. Bro. S. B. Kibler, for the committee on grounds, consisting of Phineas Cadwell, W. C. Cadwell, S. B. Kibler, Jonas W. Chatburn and Andrew Hall, appointed last year, reported: That owing to inability to agree, for reasons unnecessary to state, the committee had decided to not locate the Reunion grounds for five years, as was contemplated in their appointment, but to locate for one year; when, if such location suited the Saints they could definitely decide by vote. In accord with this decision they had considered the different locations open to them and selected the Fair Grounds at Missouri Valley and contracted for them for one year with the privilege of five; the grounds being offered to them free of charge, including the use of the Floral Hall, for sleeping and shelter, and the stables for horses. The committee asked that the matter of location be determined by the meeting and that the committee be discharged at the close of this Reunion.

On motion of Brn. J. C. Crabb and C. E. Butterworth the report so far as made was adopted. It was decided by unanimous vote to hold a Reunion next year. Brn. Crabb and Putney then moved that the next Reunion be held on the Fair Grounds at Missouri Valley. Brn. Whiting and Carroll moved that it be held at Dow City. Brn. Chambers and Dougherty moved that it be held at Garner's Grove. Brn. Dodson and Hansen moved that it be held at Council Bluffs. Brn. Davison and Derry moved that it be held at Logan. Brn. Chapman and Newcome moved that it be held at Woodbine. Brn. Forscutt and Chatburn moved that it be held at Harlan. Brn. Dodson and Thomas moved that it be referred to a committee of five, who should take the matter of location into consideration, locate and report through the HERALD. This was spoken to by several when Bro. H. Garner and others moved that the location be selected by the meeting which motion prevailed. Brn. Pratt and Jones moved that it be held at Crescent City. Brn. Hawley and Peterson moved that it be held at Galland's Grove. Brn. Ellison and Houghton moved that it be held at Six Mile Grove.

It was ruled by vote that but one representative should speak in advocacy of each place named; and that when these had spoken the vote should be taken. Brn. Crabb, Butterworth, Chambers, Dodson, Davison, Kibler, Chatburn, Pratt, Peterson and Houghton spoke in reference to their respective localities, and the vote was ordered.

Missouri Valley received 75 votes, Dow City 70, Garner's Grove 106, Council Bluffs 84, Logan 48, Woodbine 26, Harlan 2, Crescent City 1, Galland's Grove 1.

When the vote had been taken Garner's Grove and Council Bluffs having received the highest number of votes, were again presented and Garner's Grove received 275 and Council Bluffs 169. It was then moved that the choice of Garner's Grove be made unanimous, and this prevailed. It was then moved to locate for five years, which motion was ordered to lie on the table.

Upon separate motions Brn. J. Coffman, W. T. Fallon, D. Maule, J. Erixon and D. Gamet, were appointed on grounds and arrangements, and the tent given into their charge, with its fixtures; with the understanding that if the use of the tent should be required by either the Little Sioux or Galland's Grove districts it should be at their disposal. The time of holding such Reunion was also left to this committee, they to report through the HERALD.

October 13th, 7:30 p. m. "Glorious things are sung of Zion," was sung, Bro. Joseph Smith led the prayer; and the address was delivered by Bro. M. H. Forscutt, and was a continuation of the subject of Baptism. The argument was that the mode having been instituted by Jesus Christ, it was unmistakably God's method and should not be changed. He quoted copiously from scholars belonging to many of the Protestant churches, the Catholic; and also other learned authors as to the meaning of the word and its authority. He cited Rom. 6:6-7; John 3:5; Mark 1:8; 1 Cor. etc. Benediction by Bro. J. Smith.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 14TH.

The morning prayer service was in charge of Bishop G. A. Blakeslee. "Nearer my God to Thee," was sung and Bro. Blakeslee offered prayer.

Two who had been baptized the evening before, Bro. John Barclay and Sr. Lucinda Lewis were confirmed by Brn. Elvin and Crabb. Oil was offered and blessed. Prayers were offered by six and testimony was borne by twenty-seven. It was a felicitous and happy time.

At eleven o'clock a. m. after the usual opening exercises Pres. Joseph Smith addressed the Saints upon the conditions, circumstances and duties of the time in an instructive, edifying and strengthening discourse which many heard and will remember with profit to themselves and the work.

At the close of this session by the request of Brn. Chatburn and Kibler of the committee, a collection to defray necessary expenses incurred by the holding of the Reunion was taken, the brethren responded by placing $57.54 at the disposal of the committee.

The meeting at 2:30 was addressed by Bro. E. L. Kelley, from Matthew, thirteenth chapter. The argument was that if we were properly educated in Christ, there would be such a state of society that trials between brethren would not occur either in courts of the land or the church. He urged a complete subjection of self until we could live up to the standard "forgiving all men their trespasses," even as we hope that our "heavenly Father will forgive our trespasses;" and that too without waiting until he who trespasses says, "I repent."

"Beautiful Zion," was sung, benediction pronounced and the audience separated.

When assembled at 7:30, songs 970 and 896 were sung with fervor, and Bro. A. H. Smith led in a feeling prayer.

During the interval between meetings Bro. R. M. Elvin had baptized William L., a son of Bro. John Coffman, and he was now confirmed by Brn. M. H. Forscutt and R. M. Elvin.

The evening sermon was by Bro. Joseph R. Lambert, and was a most excellent and fitting one to close the long and profitable Reunion. His text was Hebrews 4: 9:—"There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God." The argument was, there is a rest; it is ordained of God, and remaineth for his people; God has promised it, and He will fulfill his promise.

The doctrine of the resurrection is not unreasonable, and is certainly not unscriptural.

The choir led by Bro. Thomas Hougas, sang, "God be with you till we meet again," and the benediction closed the service.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15TH.

The Saints met at the tent for prayer and confirmation and to hear the final report of the committee and decide thereon. Pres. Joseph Smith in charge.

Bro. C. E. Butterworth had baptized two whose names had been given the evening before and these were now confirmed; Sr. Cynthia Land and Bro. Frank J. Seeley, Brn. C. Derry, J. C. Crabb and C. E. Butterworth acting in the rite of confirmation.

The committee reported having received from stands and booths on the grounds $81, from collection $57.54 a total of $138.54. The expenditures as reported were:

Carpenter work on benches, $10; to P. Cadwell, on fixtures, fifty cents; expressage on tent, J. S., forty cents; printing names of sheets, $1.25; rope encircling camp, $1.95; expenses of elders invited to attend and in attendance: J. R. Lambert, $8; A. H. Smith, $9.28; R. M. Elvin, $8; W. W. Blair, $7; J. Smith, $5; M. H. Forscutt, $10; J. S. Roth, $7.75; to H. Garner, moving tent, $10; to board bill, Bentz on Police, $5.68; to turned over to F. Garner to pay bills at Missouri Valley, lumber, oil, etc., and for police service, $53.73; total $138.54.

This report was approved by vote and on motion the committee was discharged. Thanks were voted on separate motions to the citizens of Missouri Valley for their kindness and courtesy; to the railways for their courtesy in giving reduced rates, to the newspapers of Mo. Valley for kind notices; to the committee on grounds, and to the choir and police.

By request of Pres. Smith Bro. M. H. Forscutt offered prayer; the choir and audience sung, "When shall we all meet again," and the Reunion was closed at 10 a. m.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. JOHN L. PRIDE, formerly from North Freedom, Wisconsin, latterly in Dakota, and Sioux City, Iowa, has surrendered his elder's licence to Elder H. A. Stebbins, secretary of the Church, in whose hands it is now lodged, and withdrawn from all active labor as an Elder; and has requested us to notice such withdrawal, that he may not be required to perform the duties attaching to the eldership. Bro. Pride assured us at the Reunion, that this surrender of his licence and cessation of labor, was not in consequence of loss of faith, or desire to depart from the fold; but was owing to certain embarrassments which made it impracticable to perform those things attending the office of Elder as in his opinion they should be. We promised Bro. Pride to give proper notice, hence this writing.

Bro. H. C. Bronson will hold a discussion with the Rev. Mr. Williamson of the Christian Church at Nebraska City, Nebraska, commencing Monday evening, November 12th, to continue six evenings. Two propositions have been agreed upon, which briefly stated are that Elder Bronson affirms that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the Church of God, and is in harmony with the New Testament in church organization and doctrine; while Mr. Williamson affirms the same of the Christian Church. The propositions will be discussed in the order named.

Bro. Jas. Cameron of Kenosha, Wisconsin, writes bearing testimony of his faith in the latter day work. Bro. Cameron is in his seventy-sixth year and thanks the Lord for "the best of health and as good working strength as when in middle age."

Sr. Mattie Locy, nee Dorn, wrote some time ago that her father would like to learn the whereabouts of "a man (presumably a Latter Day Saint) by the name of Helsor (or Belsor) that preached in Bristol (state not given) some years ago. Bro. Dorn's address is Shiocton, Wisconsin, and he would like to hear from any members of the Helsor family.

It is said by some that the prayer meetings held by the Saints at the Reunion just closed, were the most markedly spiritual in their nature of any yet had at our annual meetings; there was such an absence of personality, such an apparent spirit of willing subjection to Christ, such a desire to be instructed of the Spirit, that it all pleaded successfully with the Lord for recognition which was accorded, and the people blessed. Blessed be the name of the Lord "For he is greatly to be praised."

Sr. C. E. Sparks writes from San Diego, California, of her faith in the latter day work and her desire to do her part towards its advancement. She sends tithing funds which her little daughter, Idella, before her death had saved to be used in the Lord's work.

Bro. James Moler wrote October 12th, from Mt. Sidney, Virginia, that he was laboring in the great valley of the Old Dominion and was having many calls for preaching. He expected Bro. Griffiths to join him soon and hoped to labor in the section of country where Bro. I. N. Roberts had formerly been preaching, some time this winter.

Bro. C. C. Reynolds writes from Buffalo, Iowa, that the Saints there would very much like to receive a call from some of the traveling ministry who are laboring in that section.

Sr. N. I. Fuller writing from Phoenix, Yazoo County, Mississippi, says that she would be glad to have an elder call there and preach the word to the people. A home will be furnished him and all be done that can be done to assist any elder that may go.

Bishop G. A. Blakeslee arrived at Lamoni, from the Reunion meeting on Thursday the 18th inst. and remained until the 23d when he left for his home in Michigan.

President Joseph Smith arrived home on Monday last. He reports as being well pleased with the spirit and results of the reunion.

Mr. Richard Williams of Flagler, Iowa, writes making favorable mention of a lecture delivered at that place by Bro. J. S. Roth. Our limited space prevents its insertion, as the matter contained has been frequently presented to the readers of the HERALD. Mr. Williams speaks well of our people and we thank him for his good words.

A permanent worshipping place is now established in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, at No. 2518 Elliot Avenue. It was opened for service Sunday, October 7th, a brief description of the opening exercises being given elsewhere in our columns, by one who was present. We certainly congratulate the Saints of St. Louis and vicinity upon so happy a termination of their labors; and we shall earnestly hope that neither prying influences from without nor ranking jealousies within will detract from the continued peaceful occupation of the tabernacle they have erected to the worship of the Lord.

We acknowledge the receipt of the Manchester, England, Courier; Denison, Texas, Sunday Gazetteer; San Jose, California, Mercury; and the Territorial Enterprise of Virginia City, Nevada.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Theodore Gerber writes as follows:

"I would be glad to have any of the ministry coming this way call and see me. I live across the river from Chattanooga, Tennessee. My address is 171 Main Avenue, Hill City, Tennessee."

Bro. James W. Morgan wrote October 21st from Angus, Boone county, Iowa:

"I was baptized one year ago the third of last July, and have never had cause to regret the step I then took; but have had many instances occur in which I had cause to rejoice. It is my daily prayer that I may live a life devoted to observing the law written of God, that I may in the resurrection clasp the hands of the children of God."

Bro. Joseph Squire, writing from 99 Hinsdale street, Brooklyn, New York, October 21st, says:

"Our district conference was one of the best I have attended in this district for many years; the business session was quiet and peaceful. Bro. W. H. Kelley was with us and did the preaching. We had quite a few at the meetings; two more were baptized after our conference. The good Spirit is striving among the Saints here; and if we can give heed to its teachings, we shall soon have more added to our numbers."

Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, in a late letter from Manchester, England, writes as follows:

"The work is moving forward in this part of the vineyard; five or six have been baptized at Leeds and Sheffield within the past few weeks, and further additions may be looked for in the near future. In fact the outlook in the Manchester district continues very promising, and so far, our local ministry, with one or two exceptions, are making, so far as circumstances will permit, the best of the situation. Our district conference convenes in a few days and we are looking forward to it as a time of ministerial reunion and spiritual refreshing."

Bro. John D. Bennett writes:

"I leave to-morrow to move toward Hebron, Nebraska, thence to Cuba and Barnes, Kansas; thence to Fanning, St. Joe or St. Cloud, Kansas, or westward via Odell, Nebraska; afterwards as providence directs toward Sweet Home and Allendale, Missouri, and Lamoni, Iowa. I travel by buggy and can visit neighborhoods where the lonely ones are hungering for the word. Such I love to meet. All interested can address me at Barnes, Washington county, Kansas, care of Mr. Transue."

THE statement made by Bro. Hawley, in his account of his visit to the widow of Oliver Cowdery, that the cause of the latter being estranged from the Church in Missouri, was the idea that the secret order of Dr. Sampson Avard was sanctioned by the heads of the church there, may be true. Oliver Cowdery may have so thought; others thought so, why not he. But the history of the times kept by the men most interested and who knew whether the order was endorsed by the leading men or not, states that Joseph Smith wrote distinctly and specifically denouncing the action of Dr. Avard and the secret order. It is hardly proper to believe that Joseph Smith would have condemned in specific terms those measures adopted by men in fellowship with him, if he had himself authorized them, or sanctioned them, knowing as he would have done that the men knew of his so sanctioning them. If it be true that such a band organized as it is stated by some, existed, when Joseph Smith is heard from on the subject it is to directly denounce it. That should be accepted as his position in regard to it.

WE clip the following from the Cambria Leader for September 25th, published at Swansea, Wales. From these item it will be seen that the brethren there are at work. From the same paper we learn that a strong feeling against the teachings of the Utah Church exists in that part of Wales.

"A conference of Latter Day Saints was held at the long-room of the Gladstone Coffee Tavern, Merthyr, on Sunday. The delegates present included J. H. Edwards, Llanelly; J. T. Davies, America; Thomas E. Jenkins, John Lewis, Aberdare; David Thomas, Pontyyears; Thomas Gould, Cardiff; James Collins, Mountain Ash. A meeting was afterwards held, which some of Mr. Jarman's supporters attended to question the Saints, being under the impression that they were of the Brigham Young tribe. They were asked if they had been in the Endowment House, and one of the brethren was asked to lay bare his breast to see if it contained the usual alleged acknowledgment of a visit to the Endowment House. This was done and the visitors were satisfied."

"On Sunday Mr. J. T. Davies, of America, addressed the meeting of Latter Day Saints and others at Island place Chapel, Llanelly. Mr. W. H. Edwards stated, in introducing the lecturer, that the subject taken, "What shall we do," had been cut short and there should have been added to it the words, "to be saved." His own brethren knew well that he (the speaker) had been from home at the conference, and had met with people who blamed them as a sect a great deal, but they should make known the difference between those people of the Rocky Mountains and themselves taking a walk to Dowlais during the conference week he met a gentleman who had seen him (the speaker) at one of the meetings, he accosted him and at once opened the subject of polygamy, and after the speaker had explained that the sect he belonged to was opposed to polygamy, the gentleman thanked him, and was pleased to find it so. Mr. Davies stated it was due to those present and their cause, and the parties that claimed the name of Latter Day Saints, that it should go forth to the public who they (the Saints) really were. Their only object was that it should be placed before the people in the proper light. Their order was the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They published at Lamoni, Iowa, the 'Saints' Herald,' 'Zion's Hope,' a Sunday School paper, and 'Autumn Leaves,' monthly. Their president was Joseph Smith. They were known all over the United States, Canada, Australia, England, and Wales. They denied that the locality of the Rocky Mountains was where the Almighty would gather his people in. Anywhere but there. They upheld a mission at great expense in Utah, which mission endeavored by all reasonable ways to get them in Utah to see the error of their ways. For twenty-eight years they had labored in that district. The way in which things had been done there gave many the chance of saying things against them, but there he was, bound in justice to say many things said of the Utah Mormons were not true. The speaker's church was first founded in 1830, and embraced all the Bible doctrines. Mr. Davies then proceeded with the subject of his text. Mr. S. Williams, Dafen, closed the meeting."

THE following is suggestive of further church division, if division be possible in the even now terribly confused condition of the Protestant world. What with dividing theories among the churches themselves, the supposed and dreaded advancement of Catholicism in America, the effort being made to so unite Christians that there may be a successful embassy sent to the heathen knocking at Christianity's doors, the new and seemingly fatal exposure of Spiritualism by its putative founders in America, the Fox sisters, the Utah problem, and the progression of primitive Mormonism—God's Truth—by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, it would seem as if the world might come to a knowledge of the truth and be saved.

"THE ANDOVER CONTROVERSY AGAIN.

"Boston, Mass., Oct. 22d.—The Andover controversy entered upon a new phase to-day in the ordination of the Rev. William H. Noyes to missionary work by the Berkeley Street Church. Mr. Noyes' views on future probation caused the American Board to reject him. The Berkeley Street Church decided they could send him into mission fields if they chose. The council included such as Profs. Smythe and Tucker of Andover, President Seelye of Amherst, and the Rev. Drs. Herrick, Duryea, Gordon, and Griffis, of Boston. Other liberal churches, it is said, will adopt this plan to circumvent the American Board."

THE Supreme Court of United States has affirmed the constitutionality of the Iowa Prohibition law. This makes prohibitory statutes by State legislatures within the law; the question having been raised in both Kansas and Iowa, and having been appealed from the lower courts in both States to the higher of the United States has been decided affirmatively in favor of the States—truly the way of the spirituous transgressor is hard. We give the decision below, from Chicago Tribune for October 23d:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 22.—The Supreme Court to-day sustained the constitutionality of the Iowa Prohibition law, holding that it was not contrary to the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States. The case was that of J. S. Kidd, a distiller, who was the plaintiff in error, and who had carried the litigation up to the Supreme Court, backed up by the distillers of the whole country. The evidence showed that Kidd had not tried to manufacture intoxicating liquors for sale in the State, but solely for exportation into other States. This is contrary to the State law. The plea set up by Kidd was that in so far as the Iowa law undertook to prohibit the manufacture for exportation beyond the State lines it was void because in conflict with the constitutional provisions giving congress the sole right to regulate inter-State commerce. The court, in its decision, brushes this contention away without ceremony. It declares that the State law, which prohibits both the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors except for mechanical, medicinal, culinary, and sacramental purposes, is valid and does not conflict with the inter-State commerce provisions of the Constitution. The decision of the Iowa court is upheld, and there is no further recourse for the distillers. The opinion was delivered by Justice Lamar. It is a unanimous one, none of the Justices dissenting.

The point now decided is a new one, but the decision is in line with the findings of the Supreme Court in the last year or two upholding the constitutionality of almost every phase of the State prohibition laws. In the famous Kansas cases the broad ground was taken by the opponents of prohibition that the Kansas Prohibitory law was void because in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, which forbids any State to make laws abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Another prohibition case which the Supreme Court will be called on to settle is the right of an inter-State common carrier to refuse to receive goods for shipment into a State where their importation, manufacture, or sale is forbidden. This also grows out of the Iowa law.

A Milwaukee brewer sues one of the railroads for refusing to receive beer for shipment into Iowa and claims damages. The presumption is that the courts will hold that a common carrier under such circumstances is not bound to transport the goods.

DO WE REALIZE.

Do we realize that in God's sight we are all criminals? Do we realize that we are all under God's condemnation? that no one of us could stand before Him on the plane of vindictive justice? that every one of us needs forgiveness and redeeming grace? Do we realize that this world, bright as it is with all its forms of beauty and all its wonderful displays of life, is but God's reformatory, where He is holding those that are law-breakers against His law and love, that He may deal with them, not as they deserve, but as he delights. And on what principle does He deal with us breakers of His law? No palliation of our sins, no explanation of them, no petting and smoothing pity, making light of them, no sentimental talk of "victims" and "unfortunates." A deep, earnest, strong recognition of the sinfulness of sin, written again and again all over the pages of his Bible, written with letters of fire all over the leaves of our conscience. Inexorable law—law that never deviates from its purpose; law that goes straight to its mark as an arrow from a bow; law that will not turn aside to the right hand or to the left; law that carries penalty with it to every deliberate, persistent, wilful wrong-doer—with the great background of mysterious penalty in the far-off future to those who will not be reclaimed. But, with all that, a world of beauty and light, a world full of beckonings, temperance, purity, virtue, uprightness, in which all life is calling us to goodness and to truth; a world to which God has sent His only begotten Son to suffer and to die, a crowned King whose crown is of thorns, and whose scepter is like the scepter of the Eastern monarch of old, held out to the suppliant who comes to touch it, that he may lay hold upon it and live.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, at Saratoga.

The supercilious haughtiness of the human heart passes with its cold and ghastly indifference thousands for whom Christ died, and, if the heart of God's people be not stirred, if they be not roused to pity the wretched and to lift up the fallen, then darkness must cover the earth, and gross darkness the people. When we look at the character of our Blessed Lord, we see that His wondrous work was directed just to that great and tremendous salvation which every believer yearns to behold in us. He separated what man does not separate: He separated the criminal from his crime, the sinner from his sin, the guilty from his guilt, and He loved the sinner, while He hated the sin. We speak and say, "I can not endure this man, I must pass him by." Why? Well, because of his character. Another says, "I hate the individual." Well, why? Because he is an offense to man. Yes, but Christ's character is not seen in us, when we speak thus. There was One who looked right down into the deep sorrowing heart of man, and could see his crimes distinctly, yet loved with an eternity of love the poor lost one whom He beheld. The sneering pharisee could not understand it. The devout pietists of His day scorned him. Simon said, "If this man were a prophet—which He is not—He would know what manner of woman this is that toucheth Him, for she is a sinner." Yes, Simon, Christ did know—better than she herself did. He knew all her past history, he saw it in the noontide of his own prophet life, but yet he loved her. He loved her, and he could save her, and could say to her, "Thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace." We see the quartz, Christ saw the gold.—The Bishop of Huron, at Toronto.

OVER THE WAY.

Across in that mansion yonder,
Half hidden by curtains of lace,
I see through its polished windows
A child's sweet little face.
His form is clad in a texture
Of soft and silken array,
For fortune has showered its favors
On my neighbor over the way.

And here in my little cottage
When my day's toil is done,
I sit with my little darling
And gaze on the setting sun.
My babe is dressed in cotton,
Its little feet are bare;
Yet its face is as sweet and handsome
As my neighbor's boy, over there.

My home is small and lowly,
With its curtains of simple chintz.
My baby's wardrobe only
Some pretty colored prints.
Her babe has many changes
Of raiment for every day,
And beautiful, costly garments'
Clothe my neighbor's boy over the way.

My neighbor's lofty mansion
With its statutes of marble and brass,
Its frescoed walls and ceilings,
Are admired by all who pass.
And I, in my humble cottage,
Murmured and thought away
That heaven sent all its brightness
To the mansion over the way.

Ah me! how we judge each other.
I thought her heartless and cold,
So proud of her wealth and splendor,
Of her satin's shimmering fold.
But I saw her to-day in the garden,
Guiding his steps to and fro,
Then I knew she was bearing the burden
Of a mother's bitter woe

And now in my little cottage
Though I toil hard all the day,
I would not exchange with my neighbor
In the mansion over the way.
And though no diamonds adorn me,
To my fate I am resigned.
My babe's eyes catch the sunshine,
But my neighbor's boy—is blind.

Alas! how oft we murmur
And fill with regret the day,
Thinking others have all the sunshine
While our clouds are always gray.
We may not see their sorrow
Nor their trials, day by day,
Yet each heart bears some burden,
Like my neighbor over the way.

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for Thursday, November 8th, 1888. Subject, Our fallen sisters; that the Lord may open the way for the gospel to be preached to them. Memory Texts, Matt. 15:20; Luke 7:37-50.

Prayer League of Independence, Missouri.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

is made in behalf of our aged mother in the gospel, Hannah P. Gamet, of Clear Water, Neb.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister M. Dawson, Stuart, Neb., writes:—"I feel that since enlisting in the good work, I have not made that steady progress which I ought to have made. My forward march has been very slow; but my faith in the gospel has grown stronger as the years have gone by. Whatever of failure there may be, I know that the fault is all my own. I would like to say to any elder who may pass through north-west Nebraska, that there are five of us here who would be glad to have them stop and break to us the bread of life."

Sr. Anna M. Halstead, Harrow, Ont., writes:—"I still desire a place in your ranks, and the more warmly with increased acquaintance. I have felt a deep interest in every subject for Concert of Prayer, and have received blessings from God when with the Holy Scriptures, Saint's Harp and Herald, I have assembled in my little room near the hour appointed each week and offered up my prayers to God. I think Aunt P's. opinion with reference to dress is good. I have measurably succeeded in reforming my own garments—all weight resting on the shoulders, and trimmed simply. I wish very much the whole church would consider this question.

INDIAN RIVER, Maine, Oct., 3d.

Dear Sisters:—I feel led this morning to write a few lines on the subject of family worship. Many of us as sisters perhaps may think that if our husbands are not members of the church that it is not required of us to attend to these duties, but is only required of the head of the house. It may be that our Father does not require us to do so, but I am very confident if we make the effort he will strengthen us, and bless us in it, and it may be a great blessing to our families. Now I wish to give some of my own experience in regard to this matter; and although it is a subject very sacred to me, I feel that if we can do good to others and glorify our heavenly Father by so doing, we should withhold nothing.

I have been some years a member of the Church of Christ, and have received many testimonies of its truth, but still I was not growing in grace and the further knowledge of the truth as I felt it my duty and privilege to do. My husband was not a member of any church; and while he did not oppose me in my faith, he had no faith of his own, and there was no family altar, and the cares and duties of life would crowd these duties out, "check the good seed and render it unfruitful," and spiritual darkness of course would be the result. Some three years since I was arrested from this course, and my feet turned into a better way. I attended a conference where the Spirit of God was richly enjoyed by His child. I saw many, many things wrong in my life, and how far below my privilege I was living. Family worship was one of the duties enjoined upon me as a child of God, and in weakness and trembling I many times performed the duty; but thanks be to God it was not long before I felt that my husband was interested, and many times would read from the Word, and at last would bow in prayer; and about one year ago he received strength enough to raise his voice in prayer. And when he thanked God that the family altar was ever erected I felt my happiness full, but not yet complete, for he had not yet been buried with Christ in baptism; but of late it seems that my cup has run over with the rich blessings of my heavenly Father, for some weeks since I saw my husband led into the water of baptism for the remission of sins; and he has, I trust, arisen to newness of life. Morning and evening now I hear his voice, full of the spirit in praise and thanks to his God who has redeemed him; and with all of this great happiness coming into my life I can say with a full heart: "Bless the Lord oh my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

Your sister in the gospel,
SARAH H. JOHNSON.

Dear Sisters:—I have often thought I would like to write a few words for the Home Column; but the thought of my inability to say anything that would be encouraging or beneficial, has stayed my pen. But to-day I have been thinking that I would cast in my mite and thus give a small compensation for the much I have received. Not long ago I was looking over the leaves of an autograph album, when on one of its fair pages I saw these words: "Every good act is a flower which will beautify our final home." What a beautiful thought! I turned and read it again—our final home, the one we are here preparing for, the one that comes after the toils and trouble of this life are over, that home for which the aching heart and tired soul is often longing. What will it be? It will be just what we ourselves make it. If by kind acts and deeds we are planting beautiful flowers in our eternal home, then how lovely we can make that home by striving with encouraging words and smiles, to help the sad and lonely on their weary pilgrimage here below.

I know a sister whose life seems devoted to kind acts. She has a kind word for all. She makes the hearts of the orphans and widows rejoice. She enters the home of poverty, and with her abundance brings peace and comfort. To the aged whose race in this life is nearly run she lends a helping hand, thus smoothing the path for their weary feet. She stands by the side of the bed of affliction, and with her gentle words and smiles she drives away pain, and soothes the suffering one. And when death crosses the threshold she is there to comfort those that mourn. Her pleasant ways and smiles are known by all who have met her. I have often thought when seeing her, what a beautiful home you are preparing for your future life! surely roses and lillies will surround that home in abundance!

Then, while we are striving for the comforts, pleasures and beauties of this life, which will in a few years fade and vanish away, let us also make some preparations for that eternal home. Why not plant some roses of rare beauty there, whose loveliness will cause the eye to kindle and the heart to rejoice forever. We can plant some lillies there, whose pure sweet fragrance will be borne on the breezes throughout eternity. And also, why not place there the snow-drop, the fuchsia, the columbine and a thousand others, whose beauty the eye delights to gaze upon. Let's border the walks with pansies, pinks and the meek-eyed daisies; and over the portals place vines of rare beauty, thus making our home one in which angels will love to linger, and our Maker look upon and smile.

I feel like expressing my appreciation of the Autumn Leaves. It is just what a magazine should be. Very often when reading the articles it contains, the tears will come and almost blind my eyes, as the truthfulness and purity of its contents are thrust upon me. How thankful we should be for such a paper. Let us each strive to do all we can to sustain it in its noble mission.

A SISTER.

GLASGOW, Iowa, September 26th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I feel sometimes like the road is rough, and the nearer the end the rougher the road. Shall I say I feel like giving up? No; such a thought never enters my heart. I have received too many testimonies to ever doubt the work. I could as soon doubt my own existence. When I first read Sister Eleanor's letter about the Prayer League I was not in favor of it; but when I read the response from other sisters the Spirit of the Lord bore testimony that the work was of God. I was taken sick in harvest; was badly discouraged; but when the Herald came with concert for August 30th, one of the subjects for prayer was the many afflicted ones that have asked an interest in our prayers. I had thought of sending a request for prayer, but had not done so. When the day came I kept the hour, with faith that I would be remembered, and on the Sunday following I got up as well as ever, and I have been well every since. We have no preaching here, as we are but three in number; but we get along very well. Though we are separated from the society of the saints, God has not lost sight of us; for he manifests himself to us by the power of his Spirit. I would say to the scattered ones, Fear not, but trust in God. We hope Bro. McKiernan and Bro. Holt will come before long. We long to see some of the elders and have some preaching here.

Your sister,
MARY DOROTHY.

Correspondence.

POMONA, Cal., Oct. 9th.

Editors Herald:—I was in hopes this Sabbath question was ended, for the present. I fear that when the Saints are gathered out from among the people, up to Zion; and God reveals his perfect law to the Saints, if the original Sabbath should be the one revealed, that our dear brethren who have contended so stoutly to establish Sunday as a Sabbath, that they may be like our Savior's disciples when he said they must "eat his flesh and drink his blood," go back and walk no more after the church, and cry out "false Prophet." Our Savior preached three years and a half to the Jewish nation, and his Apostles followed in his wake; and if there were to be a change in the day, why did none of them speak definitely of the change. Sunday is a holy day and should be kept as such, to commemorate the Resurrection. Perhaps Paul waited the seven days and called the church together, in order to transact some temporal affairs. I think he instructed the Saints to begin on the first day of the week to lay up in store, so that there should be no gathering on the Sabbath day, when he came. I for one, think that it is time to stop harping on the Sabbath question; and as the revelation says, wait till further revelation, or the Elders determine the law. Better to cry Repentance and obedience to the first principles of the Gospel. With love for peace and unity, without contention, I am, as ever, a lover of truth and righteousness,

E. C. BROWN.

[We commend Bro. Brown's conclusion, as a good one.—Ed.]

FIVE LAKES, Michigan, Oct. 15th.

Dear Herald:—It has been some time since I wrote you in regard to the work in this place. Would write oftener, but knowing your space is limited, I deem it wisdom to only write when something special takes place. This summer we have been building a church and have it so far completed that on the 13th and 14th of this month we held our fall conference in it which was well attended, and everything worked in harmony, no one striving to be the greatest, and all willing to work in the calling where God has seen fit to call them. On Sunday we had a sermon from the Bishop's agent, Bro. Barr, on the law of tithing which was good and to the point. Our prayer is that it may be seed sown in good ground and bring forth much fruit to help spread the gospel of Christ. I remain yours in bonds,

R. W. HUGILL.

SOUTHWEST CITY, Mo., Oct. 10th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have labored some in this place and also in the regions round about; and as this city is the place where the widow of Oliver Cowdery and her daughter live, and the visit I have had with them may be interesting to others as it has been to me, I write: I came here last week with Brn. Depew and Doty, and succeeded in getting appointment for preaching Sunday night. Bro. Depew and I paid sister Cowdery a short visit last week, Wednesday, and as I did not wish to be idle till Sunday, I went with Bro. Doty to Cowskin River, and held four meetings in Depew's settlement, in McDonald county, returning to this place with Bro. Doty. We commenced labors Sunday night, the congregation being large and attention good. Bro. Doty having to leave Monday and return home, which left me without help as far as an Elder was concerned, but I have not been without help of the members and the Spirit, for Bro. and sister Miles have done nobly, and by them I am now cared for. To-day has been my third visit with sister Cowdery and daughter, Mrs. Johnson. I found them clever and glad to talk upon the early days of the church; and they both hold to the original faith, although sister Johnson was only blessed when a babe by the elders. They both strongly believe what the witnesses testify to the Book of Mormon. Sister Cowdery never was cast out of the church, so she says; but she objects to the addition that was made to the Church of Christ, but she wishes success to the Reorganization, and is not prejudiced against us. She says the cause of Oliver's withdrawing from the church was mostly because he would not join the secret order of Dr. Avar. She is inclined to believe that the leading men in the church knew and sanctioned his order of secrecy; but I told her as the history of that order was published in the Times and Seasons (if we judge by that) and that as soon as Joseph learned of it he proclaimed against it, and it was broken up and Dr. Avard went out of the church. Now my judgment is that sister Cowdery is an Israelite indeed, and her daughter also, and time will tell.

The people here would be glad to have Bro. Luff visit and preach to them, and I have said he may. I hope it will be so that he can do some labor here in south-west Missouri. The effort he put forth here some time ago is remembered by the people. I shall preach here to-night and then go to Vinita, Indian Ter., and if Bro. I. N. Roberts has instructed me to come to Texas, I expect to start from Vinita about the 25th of this month, and until then Vinita, Indian Territory, will be my address. I am feeling well spiritually, but my erysipelas ankle is troubling me some. I am thankful it is no worse. Pray for me.

JOHN HAWLEY.

OMAHA, Neb., Oct. 22nd.

Bro. Joseph:—I came here on the 17th, found Bro Blair holding forth at the church; and notwithstanding it rained on Sunday, all day, there was a fair attendance, and the people were well pleased with the effort. He spoke with much liberty and power, especially at the two services on Sunday. I have been greatly blessed in presenting the word lately. I wish to say to those who have written me to come and preach, that I will get there as soon as possible. I wish that I could respond to all at once, but cannot. I go in a few days to Burt county, where I expect to be detained for some time.

In gospel bonds,

W. M. RUMEL.

LOCKHARTVILLE, N. S., Sept. 30th.

Dear Herald:—The work in Nova Scotia is advancing, though slowly. Elders Parsons and Robinson have been busy preaching the word with very little downright opposition in different parts of the province, and while they do not meet with the same experience that Philip did at Samaria, nevertheless a few have obeyed the gospel.

A few weeks ago Bro. Robinson came into our neighborhood, (we live twenty-five miles from either branch) and preached twice at our house and went away. Quite a number came out to hear and seemed favorably impressed. After he went away I thought it a good opportunity to clear my conscience, so I gave out meetings and filled the appointments as best I could and had good liberty, and my neighbors came out, quite a number regularly every night until I thought wise to rest until Bro. Parsons shall come. Now the strangest thing about the whole matter is that not one word have I heard from any one of them in any way against the work. Many of them seemed interested and pleased, and did all in their power to make the meetings interesting and pleasant, providing us with extra chairs and lamps; the young people practicing nice music and rendering both vocal and instrumental music on every occasion in true Christian spirit, although they are members of other churches. In fact, Latter Day Saints could do no better except to offer the use of the hall or church. Of course we don't expect that yet; it will be quite a while before this country will be civilized enough to allow the gospel to be preached from church pulpits. What a terrible state of affairs, and yet the world knows not that it is a solemn fact. I wonder how far behind the United States we are in this? But to return to our story; although none have objected to any thing that was preached, as I can learn, and several have said they thought it all true, yet not a word have I heard of any one accepting it and being prepared for the coming of Christ. Our conference held at Rawdon was a fair success; perhaps not quite so much so as the one held a year ago, but some features connected with it makes the outlook encouraging to those who are watching the signs of the times. Hoping for the success of the word, I am,

Yours in bonds,

PORT GREVILLE, NOVA SCOTIA,
October 18th.

Brethren Smith and Blair:—Conference of this mission convened September 14th, and continued over Sabbath, with the South Rawdon Saints, in their chapel, which was almost complete. It was expected to have been finished by that time, but only failed in getting the plaster on. This building when completed, will reflect credit on those who are called to be Saints in this land. It has been prophesied by opposers that the work here would die out, but it looks as though it had come to stay, as the Saints put in their appearance at this session of conference; as a stranger who was present said that if he was a professing Christian, he would have been ashamed to have been anything else but a Latter Day Saint.

Our preaching meetings were blessed with much power, as well as the prayer and sacrament meetings. The gift of prophecy was enjoyed to the comfort and instruction of the Saints. But the parting time came when each was made to remember that we still were mortals, and as yet subject to the changes of earth. September 20th, found the writer and wife, in company with Bro. Robinson, en route for Delhaven to hold some meetings.

Bro. Dimmock brought us to Windsor, fourteen miles away, where we took passage on the Arcadia, a steamer that brought us safely down Minas Basin, an arm of the Atlantic Ocean, to Kingsport, where we were met by Bro. Newcomb with team. We spent a fortnight there, endeavoring to enlighten those who would face the opposing element and come to hear. We preached in his house and once in the School-house, and from thence went to Banning, a small village four miles away. Some interest was manifested but not sufficient to induce the people to pay for the Hall; so we had to adjourn after delivering five discourses. We sailed for Parrsboro on the Arcadia; thence by tram to this place, sixteen miles, where Bro. and Sr. Robinson had preceded us two days and commenced a series of meetings. We threw in our little might to assist in spreading the work here as best we could, preaching at Lakeland and Diligent River; and here quite an interest was manifested. At Diligent River Bro. Robinson baptized two on last Sabbath. Others talk favorably and seem to be almost ready, while the "divines" are doing all they can to keep the people away. Still some take their chances of being expelled from society. It is no small thing to become a Saint here; since Bro. Sheehy held that discussion at Parrsboro the ministers think best to freeze us out and therefore try to make this work look as mean and detestable as they possibly can. Bro. Robinson had rented a house, or rooms to live in at Parrsboro with a store room below which the Saints were going to fit up to hold meetings in; and as soon as the people heard of it they persuaded the man that he had better not let him have it. By this time he had his things there and was ready to go to housekeeping, so he told Bro. Robinson that if he let him have that house his friends would go back on him; and left him with the understanding that he could not have it. Honesty and fair dealing is the cry; but when these whole-souled Christians (so called) come to deal with Latter Day Saints they seem to think that it does not matter what they say or do to them and that any course pursued with them is all right. Like Paul of old when opposing Christ and his disciples he thought he was doing God's service.

Bro. and Sr. Robinson will locate somewhere on this side of the Bay, while we return to South Rawdon for the winter, stopping at Hantsport to preach a few discourses. We can not get houses here to preach in like we can in the west; we therefore have to preach where and when we can get a chance. If we could get the people to see and understand that we are not Brighamites that would remove the greatest stumbling-stone out of our way. But the ministers do not intend that such a thing shall be accomplished if they can help it. By faithful and persistent efforts we hope to be able to lead some souls to Christ and strengthen those who have obeyed. We have had some grand prayer meetings. We enjoyed one to-day at which only seven were present, but the Lord was not forgetful of us.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in behalf of this field, that the powers of darkness may be removed so that we can get the truth before the people. Sisters of the Prayer League remember this benighted land. Thank God for such noble workers.

In everlasting bonds,

A. H. PARSONS.

St. LOUIS, Mo., October.

Editors Herald:—The opening of the new church located at 2518, Elliott Avenue, St. Louis, took place on October 7th, under the most pleasant circumstances. Bro. J. W. Gillen had been placed in charge by the branch, which action was ratified by the conference which convened on the 6th. The splendidly finished room had been decorated with plants, great and small, the beautiful foliage of which with their blossoms of varied tint and rich fragrance, afforded additional splendor to the scene.

At 10:30 a. m. a large audience assembled with countenances radiant with joy and appreciation of the occasion. The services opened with the beautiful anthem, "Oh! worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," by members of the choir, of which Bro. Wm. Ashton was in charge. The anthem was rendered most fittingly. The hymn, "Met in thy sacred name, O, Lord," was then sung in a hearty manner by all. The opening prayer was offered by Bro. R. Etzenhouser, and hymn nineteen was sung, after which Bro. Noah N. Cooke in well chosen remarks in behalf of the building committee, consisting of Brn. W. T. Kyte and T. Dawson and himself; presented the keys of the building to Bro. Gillen. Psalm ninety-six was then read; when Bro. Gillen, preached the sermon, observing that man's first place to worship was the forest, later on, the hut, the tabernacle and the temple; still later on, a diversity of buildings representing different faiths, and that while in the city of St. Louis there were many church buildings, and possibly enough room for all the communicants, the room occupied bespoke its necessity and the reasons for this necessity were presented in a forcible and able manner, taking within its scope the primitive apostasy and restoration of the gospel in the nineteenth century. Seldom have sixty-five minutes been used to better advantage than on this occasion. Many hearts overflowed with gladness, while the truths of the gospel were showed forth. Saints and outsiders seemed to enjoy it alike. At the close of the sermon Bro. Gillen spoke in commendation of the efforts that had been made by the Saints in their struggle to build the house, adding that offerings were still in order, and would be received from anyone; small ones thankfully and larger ones in proportion. Some of the Saints in expression of their joy stated they lived a week on that day.

At 2:30 p. m. the sacrament service was presided over by Bro. G. A. Blakeslee resulted in its portion of good, in testimony, prayer and praise.

In the evening Bro. E. L. Kelley preached an entertaining and instructive discourse on the higher life possible to man, and the means by which treasures could be laid up in heaven.

Thus ended a most pleasant and profitable day, the services being very enjoyable in their several appointments. Brethren Blakeslee and Kelley also spoke to the Saints on Monday evening, which service was appreciated. The collections on Sunday were $35.40.

ONE WHO WAS PRESENT.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia., Oct. 22d.

During the last five days I have held five preaching services in the Saints' chapel in Omaha, Nebraska, and was blest of the Holy Spirit in my labors. It is evident that good will come to that branch if wise and faithful labors are had, and that God will add to his church there such as should be saved. Patient, loving, thorough work is needed, and when it is had success will begin. I also attended their Sunday School and was pleased with the spirit and manner in which it is conducted. I hope to yet see the Omaha branch flourish and rejoice greatly. I intend devoting what time I can to preaching the word in this region till November 4th and then return home to Lamoni.

Very truly,
W. W. BLAIR.

EL DORADO SPRINGS, Mo., Oct. 10th.

Bro. Joseph:—I left Independence one week ago last Tuesday. Went to Holden and baptized one man on the 10th, and from Holden to Clinton where I found Bro. I. N. White at home with a sick family of three children down with scarlet fever who required his constant attention; so I was sent by him to this place. I am preaching every night at Virgil about ten miles from here with good attention and large audiences. Truly the Lord is blessing me with liberty greater than ever before. I am kindly treated by all and the prospects are good for this winters work. A firebrand has truly been thrown in the gentile camp which is working for our good. I expect, with God's help, to hold the fort until reinforcements come. Soon as I close this series of meetings I will hold a discussion with one Rev. Scott of the Christian Church, if he does not back down. I have the sympathy of the people and feel sure that God will confirm his word and work and therefore have no fear as to results. Pray for me all ye faithful.

WHEN DID HE PREACH?

WE have heard a great deal about the time when Christ preached to the spirits in prison. No doubt all the Saints believe that he did preach to them, but we appear to differ concerning the time that he went to them. It appears to me that the Scriptures point out the time very plainly and pointedly; but if we can not all see those points alike, we can present our views to each other until we get direct knowledge from on high. And until such knowledge is given us we should try to prove our points in such a way as to not be hurtful to other points of doctrine. It is plain to me and always was since I knew anything about his preaching to them, that it was after his resurrection. To prove this let us first turn to 1 Peter 8:18-19. "Being put to death in the flesh but quickened by the spirit." Now what was quickened? He, The body. Now read on, "by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." Notice that he (body) went and preached by the Spirit, also, as well as being quickened by it. How could he, the body that was quickened have gone and preached, if it had been in the grave? If it had been the spirit that was quickened by the Spirit, then it might also have been that the spirit went by the Spirit and preached. Again: "He that descended is the same also that ascended far above all heavens."—Eph. 4:10.

That is without doubt the resurrected body and spirit, as the spirit when it left the body only went to the third heaven, not above all heavens; (Luke 23:42; 2 Cor. 12:2-4); where it will remain until the body is raised. (Alma 19:5-6.) "O," says one, "maybe Christ's Spirit only stayed in paradise just long enough to say he was there with the thief, and then went to the prison."

Maybe's are not proofs. Jonah was alive, body and spirit, three days and three nights in the fish, but Christ's dead body was in the grave but one day and two nights. Yet as Jonah was in the whale, so was Jesus to be in the heart of the earth. In the Herald of October 6th, brother J. A. McIntosh tried hard to prove the crucifixion on Thursday in order to get three days and three nights in the grave. If it occurred on Thursday, where are the three days, seeing that it was late in the afternoon when he was put in the supulchre? Thursday would count nothing as that would only be two days and three nights.

But it happened to be on Friday that he was crucified. (John 19:3).

The Jews because it was the preparation (Friday) that the body should not remain on the cross on the Sabbath (Saturday). . . sought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away. Why was this done? Because it was the day before the Sabbath and it was their law to prepare for the Sabbath day before. (verses 41, 42). He was buried on Friday about dusk, and raised on Sunday before daylight, (John 20:1), which makes just two nights and one day. When were the three days and three nights fulfilled? After his resurrection, and before his ascension. (Eph. 4:9-10). "Oh," says one, "he could not go to the prison inside the forty days, because His apostles whom he had chosen saw him forty days after his resurrection. (Acts 1:1-4). This so-called proof is, I think, a dangerous one, and is no proof whatever that he was with them every one of the forty days, but that he was seen as late as forty days after his resurrection. He could just as well get away from them to preach to the prisoners; as to the other sheep of John 10:16. I will just ask a question: Can a man not find, and see a sheep he had lost, forty days after he had lost it; and not have seen it during any of the other thirty-nine days?

I don't think it necessary to continue this subject as much has been said heretofore. If I have erred in any point will some kind brother put me in the right way, as I am willing to be taught by the Spirit that teacheth all things.

THOMAS T. REID.

LOST ISRAEL FOUND REVIEWED.

AS I AM not of those who believe that the people of the British Isles are the Lost Tribes of Israel, I beg leave to offer a few objections as reasons for my unbelief.

I believe that Joseph Smith was called and ordained of God to set in order his church, and to declare the truths of heaven in the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in these last days. That the Book of Covenants was written for our instruction and as a rule of action; that the Book of Mormon was written by the power of God, and that the writings of those books should be an end of all disputes among us; hence we offer the following for consideration:

D. and C., 108:6: "And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence, and an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep."

This is a prophecy that is yet future. It has always been believed by the Saints that it was the lost tribes of Israel that live in the north, beyond the ice mountains, and he who would be better informed, let him read and study the whole section, and also learn in reading the third chapter of the First Book of Nephi. We learn that Nephi had a vision or was shown by the spirit many of the events yet future, and saw the coming of Columbus and also the nations of Europe and them, he tells us were Gentiles, and that many of their people came out of captivity from among them to this land. He also informs us in the seventh chapter, of the tribes that were led away and had become lost, and of what had been prophesied concerning them. In the Second Book of Nephi, twelfth chapter, eighth paragraph, he says:

"For behold I shall speak unto the Jews and they shall write it, and I shall speak also unto the Nephites and they shall write it, and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel which I have led away, and they shall write it, and I shall also speak unto all nations and they shall write it."

Again in the ninth paragraph: "And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews, and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the Lost Tribes of Israel, and the Lost Tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews."

From this we learn that all the writings of Jew, Nephite, Lost Tribes of Israel, and Gentile shall run together, to bear witness of God's dealings with all mankind. We have the writings of the Jews in the bible; and of the the Nephites in the Book of Mormon. We know that God has spoken to men among us, the Gentiles, and they have written it, and also to men among the Chinese and they have written it. If the British people are in reality the Lost Tribes of Israel, where are their writings, since they lay claim to no writings or revelations of God except the Bible of the Jews? As further proof that Lost Israel is not found, read Book of Nephi, chapter seven, paragraph three:

"And verily, verily I say unto you, that I have other sheep which are not of this land, neither of the land of Jerusalem, neither in any parts of that land round about whither I have been to minister. For they of whom I speak are they who have not as yet heard my voice; neither have I at any time manifested myself unto them, but I have received a commandment of the Father that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice."

What can be plainer than this, for surely Jesus did as he said he would; and went and visited those lost tribes; and surely they kept a record of such a great event, and when those lost tribes are found, that record they will have, and as there is no such a record had among the English people, this alone in the minds of all true Latter Day Saints is enough to condemn the theory that they are Lost Israel. They who would be further instructed had better read all of that seventh chapter, and learn for themselves all about the lost tribes. Pray tell us by what rule of reason, true charity, or brotherly love, has an elder the right to call all theories of those who honestly disbelieve his theory, "baseless notions," "theories, conjectures, and surmises of unenlightened and uninspired men? Is it because he has been inspired? If so, whence his inspiration? Is it any harder to believe the earth to be hollow at the north pole, than to believe that the earth is a ball or globe, suspended in space? Is it any harder to believe the sworn statements of men who have testified to having spoken to Hebrews in the polar regions, than to believe the sworn statements of men about any thing else that we can not obtain a knowledge of for ourselves?

Is it any harder to believe the plain facts stated in the Book of Mormon, than the theories, conjectures, traditions, and suppositions of men, no two of which agree? What would we know of the ancient inhabitants of America if it was not for the Book of Mormon? What did the Jews ever know about the Nephites? Yet they were a great nation of people. We also learn that their land was not known to the rest of the world till the time of the Lord, and so it will be with the Lost Tribes of Israel. True, who will believe the Book of Mormon in this age of learning? Many books, full of theories as to how this continent came to be peopled have been written and no two of them agree. It is supposition or surmise; they all sing the same song as Prof. Anthon, "No angels now appear to men," but their denial does not make it so, nay, but to admit would destroy their so-called wisdom and much learning. So it has ever been that when men have rejected the revelations of God they have always fallen back to the traditions and suppositions of others, and through much word-twisting and long winded argument, tried to make it appear that they knew all about it, when the fact was they were too stupid to see their own foolishness.

To believe all we read in "Lost Israel Found" would make it difficult to believe that there ever was, or ever has been any such people as the Gentiles, for the claim is there made that they are all descendants of the Jews, or rather the Hebrew race, who inhabit Europe, and the Isles of the Sea.

Now the writer of this is a Scot, and know something of that people. He can say that he never knew or learned of a Scot who claimed to have descended from Jew or Israelite. Our country's poet but expressed a National sentiment when he wrote that line, "A Scot still, I crave no higher name." The intelligent Scots do not believe that wisdom, knowledge and intelligence come through lineage, but that they are gifts from God to those who diligently seek to do his will, "for God hath made of one blood all nations of men." He is not God of a tribe or nation, but is God of the whole earth. Is no respecter of persons, and so blesses Gentile and Jew, as they obey. So the Scots are looking to the time, when "Man to man the whole world o'er, shall be brothers."

That wonderful historic stone that so much has been written about, was stolen from the Scots by Edward, of England, who did all he could to destroy the Scots as a nation. The English afterwards acknowledged that it was stolen, and agreed to return it, which they never did. That is a sample of their doings, and how those English come to hold in subjection, Continents, Territories and Isles, for their motto ever has been, "that might makes right," hence whatever they could obtain and hold by force, that they possess, and compel submission, not by mental superiority, but by brute force. For example, look at Ireland to day. There are two ways to look at it, for as the emperors, kings, dukes, princes, lords and knights, courtiers, politicians, officeholders, and flatterers see it, there is truly a grand advancement and consolidation of empire. But what of it? Are not such those who have trampled on their people, destroyed their freedom, stolen their lands, and called such things and acts gifts of God? But looking at the other side the question would not be, has Wales married Denmark, or Miss Denmark married some one else, but, what is Mr. Wales doing for the good of humanity; for redressing the wrongs of the poor; assisting the distressed, or caring for the widows and orphans? Yes, this is the only true test of human worth. For illustration: Look to-day at the riots for bread in London; but mayhap they are some of those Canaanites who must be kept in a condition of almost slavery. Yes, but there is yet a crumb of comfort in the hearts of those slaves, and that is the hope that God will right their wrongs, and comfort their distress, and then those great empire-founders will be given their just recompense. But enough of that, for truly theirs is no just claim, for God never gave one part of the sons of men the right to steal from their fellows and call it just, and can any good be expected of a nation or people with such a motto as "might makes right." True, this is somewhat aside from the question, but those people are painted in such flaming colors that it is but just to show a few facts. Let him who believes the Book of Mormon read and learn that those lost tribes have not as yet been found, and that we truly are the Gentiles, for Christ calls us such, and also tells us plainly that the truth shall come to the Gentiles in the latter day, and much instruction for him who would learn wisdom. It is the seed of the Jews at Jerusalem that is to be gathered from the four quarters of the earth, and that the knowledge of the lost tribes is hid from them, because of their unbelief. It is useless to spend time or waste paper further, all that fine spun yarn of tradition with its buts, ifs, and suppositions, goes as naught to a believer in the Book of Mormon, for the simple reason that no evidence has been produced showing that Christ ever did show himself to those so-called tribes, or Israel Found. Christ says,—mark ye the words: "Therefore I go to show myself unto them." Now how did he show himself to the Nephites? Why in person, saying, "I am Jesus Christ." We understand that he would show himself to the Lost Tribes. In order to show himself he would certainly appear in person as he told the Nephites he would, and they made a record of it after he had departed as he commanded. He further said that he should not manifest himself unto the Gentiles save it were by the Holy Ghost. Much evidence can be gathered among the British people concerning the manifestations of the Spirit, but not a line or word of the offering of Christ among them. Such a great event would have been had on record, and as it is not, this alone condemns the theory, at least so far as Book of Mormon believers are concerned. Let the world prove and conjecture as they choose; that book comes to us his Saints as a gift from God, our Father. No matter how sincere or honest a man may be in his theory, unless he brings proofs to sustain that book, we have not only the right to reject, but it is our duty to declare against it, that the world may know that God's gifts are sacred to us as a people and prized far above the traditions of men.

WILLIAM CAIRNS.

A LETTER IN DEFENSE OF THE GOSPEL.

BY SR. ELLA A. MILLER.

(Concluded).

"STAY yourselves and wonder; cry ye out and cry, they are drunken but not with wine; they stagger [they are in their sleepy state], but not with strong drink" —Isa. 29: 9. It is caused by the blood of the saints. (Rev. 17: 6).

But he is going to "judge" that great Whore which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and avenge the blood of his servants at her hand. (Rev. 19: 2). It is the wine of her fornication that causes such dreams as Isaiah alludes to,

Because they have been so wicked and unbelieving, "the Lord hath poured out upon you [them] the spirit of deep sleep." —Isa. 29: 11. This is where they think they have something to eat or drink when they harvest.

"And hath closed your eyes." They can not see the true light of God when he withdraws his Spirit and they close their eyes from revelation. "The prophets and your rulers hath he covered." —Isa 29: 10. This state of affairs is to remain just so until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in (Rom. 11: 25) and (Rev. 11: 2) Jerusalem is given to the Gentiles and it shall be trodden down, a certain length of time.

Now please turn to Romans 11: 25, and read of the grafting in again of the Olive tree (Jews) first, commencing with the sixteenth verse; the "root" and "natural branches" are the Jews and the "wild Olive" is the Gentiles. Now follow me to Revelations 12: 1, and we will find a woman (church) clothed with the sun, the light of revelation, "and the moon," the mosaic law, "under her feet." This represents the old law—Mosaic law—as done away with.

"The crown of twelve stars is emblematical of twelve apostles, and "the dragon," or unbelievers, that persecuted the woman (church) and crucified Christ, kept up the persecution after "the man child was caught up into heaven," or after Christ was crucified and had ascended up into heaven until the "woman,"—church of Christ,—"fled into the wilderness"—apostatized and will remain so until a thousand two hundred and three score days—equal to 1260 years—this is the length of time this "spirit of deep sleep" is poured out upon the nations and the length of time the "prophets and seers" are to be "covered." As the "Church of Christ is likened unto his own body, and he had hands, feet, arms, eyes, etc., it was of course a perfect body, therefore his church, or body would be a perfect church, or body; having members, ordinances and gifts attached to it, and likens them unto the members, eyes hands, etc. of his own body, as you will find in different parts of the New Testament. If he, or any one else, should cut off his ear, hand, or foot or any member of his body, it therefore would not be a perfect body, but a crippled, or changed, or deformed body; if they should cut out his eyes, inspiration or revelation, it would not be a perfect body, and he could not see to go aright or have any sure guide; but would have to trust to some one else leading him and he would not know for certain, whether he was led right or not, until he would find himself in the "mire" and not be able to defend himself. Therefore a church, or body, without the eye, light of revelation, is not whole, not right, but a crippled church or body. You allow two blind persons to go off on a long journey (we will liken it unto "life's journey") and what success will they meet with? The road, most assuredly, will not all be smooth, but they will come to gutters or ditches, and what are they going to do? They have not the light of their eyes, inspiration or revelation to guide them.

Now as we have learned that Christ's Church, the only true church, is likened unto his body, the body of Christ, and has these ordinances, faith, repentance, baptism by immersion, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Heb. 6: 1, 2), and gifts and offices set in the church, (Eph. 11: 14; 1 Cor. 12: 28), and that it fled into the wilderness, (apostatized), we will see whether it is going to be brought out, re-established or organized again, or not.

We will first see what Christ says about it, by turning to Matthew, chapter twenty-four. You may read it all, but I will only refer to the part most important, as space forbids any more quotations than are necessary.

In the fourth verse he says:—"Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name," my body or church's name, "saying I am Christ"—Christ's body or church—"and shall deceive many." This means that they will represent their bodies, churches, to be the body, or Church of Christ and they will be so successful in so doing that "many will be deceived" and think it is Christ's body, or church; and will unite themselves with some of these false bodies or churches or false Christs. This has been literally fulfilled, there are upwards of fifty denominations or bodies in the United States.

As there is but one true Christ, there can be but one true body, Church of Christ,

Now Christ says after many "false Christs," false bodies or churches, have arisen and numerous other things have transpired, the prophets or men whom he reveals his will to, shall be afflicted and killed and hated of all nations for his name's sake, and then "false prophets" also shall arise. This last prophecy has been literally fulfilled, since the above prophecy was fulfilled; that is, since Joseph was delivered up and afflicted and killed and hated of all nations for [Christ's] name's [church] sake." Brigham Young was one of the many false prophets that have since arisen (and I could name others in other denominations, but it is not necessary) and he "deceived many." (Matt. 24: 11). "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold," or cause many to denounce Latter Day Saints, you for one. "But he that endureth unto the end the same shall be saved," that is, whoever will not allow that false prophet, Brigham and his iniquities, polygamy, to have any bearing with him, the same shall be saved.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached unto all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." I understand by the above quotation that it must be the same gospel with the same ordinances, or principles, and the same confirmed in the same way, by signs following as of old, I say follow, not precede, the believer therein. (Mark 16: 20.)

You may think it strange that I said the same "gospel." You will say, "it has always been preached ever since Christ was on earth, and how could they just begin to preach it now "for a witness," or sign "to all nations." Well, to explain to you, we shall go to Galatians 1: 6, and see what Paul says: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you and would pervert the gospel of Christ." So you see it is not altogether another gospel, but it is perverted to suit the people instead of God, and this work of perverting was commenced even in the days of Paul, therefore it will have to be preached the same way it was before, and by the same authority; that is, authority from on high. We will see if we can find any evidence supporting this; we can. Turn to Revelations 14: 6, 7. John was permitted to see what was to come to pass away down the stream of time. Remember the "everlasting gospel" was then established on earth, and was being preached everywhere. What need would there be for an angel to come to bring that same gospel" to the earth, down near the end of time if it was already established and not to be "perverted" to suit the people, or flee into the wilderness or go into apostasy?

This angel which John saw was to have the "everlasting gospel" to preach unto them that dwell on the earth," after he has brought it; and after it is "preached unto all nations for a witness," the next angel will follow saying, "Babylon is fallen."

The false bodies or churches, the great "Mystery Babylon" I told you of in my last letter. You will do well to read it again in connection with this.

The angel that delivered the Book of Mormon into Joseph Smith's hands told him the "everlasting gospel" was contained in it, besides telling who the Indians of America are descendants of, etc., as I have told you, and that his (Joseph's) name should be had for good and evil among all nations; you may ask yourself whether this has been fulfilled or not.

We will now go back to Isaiah, chapter twenty-nine and commence where we left it, and we may see very distinctly by taking notice of what I have written, that it is during the time of "the spirit of deep sleep," that is, the time that the prophets, true spiritual rulers and seers are taken away from the earth, that the cry is raised: "We do not need any more revelation." "We don't need those signs." "He only gave those gifts to the apostles and they are not for us, and we do not need them." "They were to convince the Saints of former days that they were preaching the true gospel." Do we not need as much among the "staggering" and "drunken, but not with wine," when there are hundreds of gospels being preached, do we not need those very inspiring gifts and ordinances now to direct us to the right one?

When the people are in the above "spirit of deep sleep," (Isa. 29: 11), says the news of a "book" comes to them, "which words men"—Martin Harris and—I do not know the other's name, "deliver to one that is learned"—Professor Anthon, of New York City—"saying, read this I pray thee; and he saith I can not for it is sealed." "And the book is delivered unto him who is not learned,"—Joseph Smith—"saying read this I pray thee, and he saith I am not learned." "Wherefore the Lord said, for as much as this people [who want no more revelation] draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men." "Therefore behold, I the Lord will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people [whether they want revelation or not] even a marvelous work and a wonder [the translating of the book by his power] for the wisdom of their wise men [Anthon for one] shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men [commentators] shall be hid."—Isa. 29: 11-14. The next two verses show what the work of the "false Christs"—false bodies or churches—will amount to in the end; they will be of no more worth than the potter's clav.

The 17-19th verses tell what will take place after this—"Book of Mormon"—is brought forth. "It is not yet a very little while and Lebanon [Palestine, the Holy Land] "shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest. And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness."

We notice that Lebanon,—Palestine, or the Holy Land,—is to be restored to its former fruitfulness, after he has brought to pass "his act, his strange act," and done "his work, his strange work," even the "marvelous work and a wonder." People, most assuredly, would think it a "strange act," a "strange work," even a "marvelous work and a wonder," after they have said and taught for so many centuries that the Lord was never going to manifest himself by revelation or works of any kind until Christ should come at the end of the world with all his holy angels. Jerusalem has lain almost desolate for nearly eighteen hundred years, and the Jews have been scattered among all nations, and they have attempted to return times without number, but were hindered by some miraculous power, for they are not to be grafted in again until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled. (Luke 21: 24; Rom. 11: 20.) "Then truth shall spring out of the earth," God will proceed to bring to pass his "act, his strange act," by showing Joseph Smith where this "truth,"—the Book of Mormon—is hidden: "and righteousness shall look down from heaven, yea the Lord shall give that which is good and" [then] "our land [the Holy Land, Palestine,] "shall yield her increase"—be restored to its former fertility. "Righteousness shall go before him [the Lord] and shall set us in the way of his steps."—Ps. 85: 10-13.) Again; "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning, . . . let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."—Ps. 137: 5, 6; Jer. 30: 2. "I will save thee from afar," 11th verse and Jer. 33: 6, 7. "Sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem, . . . he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm" [revealed his will] "in the eyes of all the nations"—regardless of the Gentiles saying that he would not. (Isa. 52: 9, 10. . . . "And will gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land."—Ezek. 36: 24. "And ye [the Jews] shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers."—28th verse. "And the desolate land shall be tilled whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by, and they shall say, this land that was desolate is become like the Garden of Eden, and the wastes and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced and inhabited."—Ezek. 36: 34, 35. . . . I the Lord have spoken it and I will do it." "And the Lord shall inherit Judah, his portion in the Holy Land, and shall choose Jerusalem again." "Be silent, O all flesh before the Lord: for he has raised up out of his holy habitation."—Zech. 2: 12, 13. "And the Lord their God shall save them in that day as a flock of his people."—Zech. 9: 16; Zeph. 3: 20. "Be glad then ye children of Zion . . . for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain and the latter rain in the first month," [Joel 2: 23], "And shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days."—Hosea 3: 5. Perhaps you know all about Jerusalem being rebuilt and the land around "yielding her increase" since 1853, and the Jews returning and still returning, and Jerusalem again becoming a Jewish city.

In 1867 Louis VanBuren, who visited Jerusalem, wrote of it . . . "It certainly is a land of most wonderful fruitfulness, with a delightful climate. . . . It is a fact that the rain and dew are restored. Recently, in 1853, the former and latter rain were restored to the astonishment of the natives: The Jews have been returning to the Holy Land for some time, and the number is increasing; going to their beloved Canaan from many parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. They are making preparations to rebuild cities. . . . The fruit in Palestine is better than in Europe or America."

In 1886 H. G. Spafford, a Chicago man, traveling in the Holy Land, wrote to Mr. Chandler, of Chicago, the following. After telling of many things, he says: "It would seem that a sight of it, without other proofs, would be sufficient to suggest to one whether the curse which had so long lain upon this land had not begun to pass away, and whether the set time to favor Zion had not yet come. . . . In the light of sure promises of prophecy that this land is yet to rise from its desolation, such facts as those given above are of exceeding interest. A few years ago Jews were constantly liable to be treated with indignity whenever they appeared on the streets of Jerusalem. They were few in number, and owned none of the land; were a little community of despised outcasts. Now as you know, they constitute considerably more than one half of the population of the city. They control its trade and own much land, . . . and so we find that suddenly, without warning, Jerusalem has become, in fact, again a Jewish city! It is a change which has come as a thief. The busy world has taken but little notice of it—but it has come."

I quote the above from these letters for a proof to you if you happen to be one of the number mentioned as the "busy world." It came "like a thief" to the unbelievers of this "latter day work," but the Latter Day Saints were not overtaken as by a thief, by its restoration, for they were looking forward to its fulfillment from the time this "marvelous work and a wonder" was performed, for it was promised in the Book of Mormon as well as the Bible, in the second book of Nephi, 11: 18, 19. If the "busy world" would have believed Joseph Smith, they would not have been overtaken by surprise, or "as a thief."

I write to tell you that there have been deaf persons healed and heard and believed the words of this book (Book of Mormon) and that the blind have been restored to sight. Mrs. Frances Ernst, of Deloit, Iowa, had her sight restored. She has testified to that fact to me; also my grandparents have confirmed it by their testimony. This is the nearest to my knowledge that I could almost testify to myself, as I have not been among the Saints a great while, I have not yet been an eye witness to many of their administrations, but do not quote from any one that I do not fully believe to be truthful. Other people who have been deaf to the words of eternal life have been taught to "rejoice in the Holy One of Israel;" and so with others who were blinded by confusion. They have been brought to see the true light of God.

Now I will explain that quotation in Deuteronomy 33:17. Unicorns have but one horn. The Eastern Continent we will call a "unicorn," it has one horn—the "stick of Judah," the Bible. Also the Western Continent we will call a "unicorn," it has one horn—the "stick of Ephraim," Book of Mormon, so to be as a bullock there would be two horns together (as a bullock has two horns) and with the two horns (the Book of Mormon and Bible), the bullock, (America), the "land shadowing with wings" will push the people together in the unity of the faith before the great and terrible day of the Lord come or they (the Christians) might be overtaken as by a thief. These are the kind of proofs I like; they are from God and not from man. For this reason I do not care what people may say about Joseph Smith; he perhaps had his faults as others of God's prophets, but he accomplished the work that God raised him up to do; and his testimony has been sealed by his blood; and there are as many, or more, proofs to show he was a prophet of God, as there are to show that the Bible prophets were of God.

You will see by what I have written that shortly after the "book" (of Mormon) is brought forth, or the "marvelous work" accomplished, the former and latter rains are to be restored, and the Jews return and rebuild cities, and cultivate the lands; all these are being fulfilled since "the book" (of Mormon) was brought forth, and it is too late to bring to pass any other "marvelous work," or "strange work," or "acts," so what are you going to do about it? call God false and Joseph Smith a false prophet? or believe God keeps his word, and believe he has done the "strange work" through Joseph? for there is no event in history to take the place of this work in fulfillment of the above prophecies, or no one else who has done anything by the command of God to make this latter day work prove false. But I again repeat Christ is the head of it and it is on a sure foundation.

One more Bible proof and I am done.

Malachi 3:1, speaking of the second coming of Christ says: "Behold, I will send my messenger and he shall prepare the way before me." [Christ.] We find by this that there is to be a preparation for his second as well as his first coming, and then the "Lord shall suddenly come to his temple." He did not come to his temple the first time, he came to a barn, he was born in a manger. Further, verses 4, 5 and 6: "Behold, I will send you Elijah" [restorer], "the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers." This does not mean before the first coming of Christ when he came into the world like all other little children, and no one was afraid of him, it was not a dreadful day at all; besides he said, "I came not to bring peace on earth, but a sword," and to turn "the heart of the fathers against their children, and the heart of the children against the fathers." I do not remember where you will find the last quotation, but it is in the New Testament. Now as he says he is going to have the way prepared by a messenger we will turn to Nahum 2:3 and find what is going to be done in the day of his "preparation:" "The chariots, [cars], shall be with flaming torches," (the head-lights of the engines, with the smoke-stack above pouring out the smoke makes a nice "flaming torch") in the day of his preparation when he sends the "everlasting gospel" to be preached "for a witness unto all nations." "And the fir tree shall be terribly shaken." When hundreds of men go into a fir tree forest, and with their axes, are cutting and slashing here and there to get the "ties" for the railroads methinks they are "terribly shaken." "The chariots shall rage in the streets." Where trains are coming in by the hundred in cities, do they "rage in the streets?" "They shall" jostle "one against the other," [when coupling], "in the broadways, they shall seem like torches," (when we stand on the platform and watch them come up the track.) "They shall run like lightning,"—we have the "lightning express," do they travel fast? "He shall recount his worthies," (passengers.) The conductor recounts his worthies, or passengers, after each station, and ascertains whether there are new passengers on the chariot, that he may take their tickets. "They shall stumble in their walk, they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defence shall be prepared." Did you ever notice when riding on these chariots (cars), how people stumble and stagger and catch at the "wall thereof" and which with the seats becomes a defence?

Well, dear Della, the first one of these chariots, (cars or locomotives), was constructed and placed upon the track connecting the granite stone quarries with the Newport river in the year 1827, the very year the angel, having the "everlasting gospel" as recorded in Revelations 14:6, 7, delivered the plates on which it was written, in the hands of Joseph Smith; we can not help its being the very year or "day of his preparation." But it is God who worketh, and we are to obey. Some might try to "pervert" the meaning of the quotation made from Malachi, and lead you to Matthew to show you that John the Baptist was the Elijah spoken of, because he was the forerunner of Christ. Elijah, (or the restorer) will also be sent before his second coming (Matt. 17:11) And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias, [Elijah the restorer, or John the Baptist], truly shall first come and restore all things." First he puts it in the far off future as he says "shall come." Second he says, "restore all things." What is he going to restore? The gospel as Christ taught it. Then he tells what they did with John the Baptist when he came. You said that "Hermie said she believed I was a true Christian," but she denounces the Latter Day Saints church. I wish you would please give her this letter to read, also all of the papers I send you, and then have her read Matthew 23:23-39, and tell her to beware of the leaven (evil hypocrisy) "of the Pharisees," and not do as they do. She is a good hearted girl, I believe, and I would be glad to see her accept the plan of salvation as Christ taught it, and not as men presume to teach with their own wisdom.

The Pharisees would "build the tombs of the prophets," [of centuries past], "and say if we had lived in the days of our fathers, [centuries ago], we would not have killed the prophets." I presume this is what most people of to-day say, but when prophets arose in their own days they were as quick to kill, and persecute, and "denounce" them as their fathers had been in years gone by. So it is in the present day. People praise the prophets of old and say as did the Pharisees, that they believe them, but when they are put to the test they also are Pharisees, and are ready to denounce the prophets of their own days. "Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves that ye are the children," [descendants], "of them that killed the prophets."—Matt. 23:21. Christ also said to those people, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, [descendants of Pharisees who killed the prophets], how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" "Wherefore behold I will send unto you prophets, &c., and some of them ye shall" [take notice he says "shall,"] this of course means some future time, "scourge in your synagogues, and persecute you from city to city." From Kirtland, Ohio, to Independence, Missouri; from Independence, Missouri, to Nauvoo, Illinois, and from and to, and to and from numerous other places, so that we see it is being fulfilled right along. "O Jerusalem! Jerusalem! thou that killest the prophets," [I presume they believed the prophets were false ones], "and stonest them that are sent unto thee," "how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

Both of you please discuss this question within yourselves seriously, and find or ask God whether you are one of those children whom he would gather under his wings, if they would allow him.

I believe you to be sincere, and living up to the best light you have, or I should not have written this letter, and I hope you will read it and compare it with the Bible with as prayerful a heart as it has been written with; and sincerely ask God with humbleness of heart, whether it be true or not; and I believe he will allow your conscience to bear you witness that it is true. But, do not pray as the woman prayed for the mountain to be removed from the front of her house.

"Tis a glorious thing to be in the light
Which the Saints of old did see
The true light of God.
Revelations holy light, is the light,
And all else is dark as night,
Save this light of God.
Long the earth in darkness lay, without light,
But the darkness fled away
Before the light of God.
God has spoken from on high,
This the light, this the light,
And now bids the world come nigh
To this light of God."
Prophets are restored again, in the light

And the gospel gifts to men
In the light of God.
Blessings to the ancients given, in the light,
Are again received from heaven,
In the light of God.
Let us keep our spirits pure, in the light,
And unto the end endure,
In the light of God.
Then when Jesus comes again, in the light,
We shall live and with him reign,
In the light of God."

"Remove these divine tokens of heaven so dear,
What evidence have we that the gospel we hear
Is the narrow way
That we should obey?

But the prophets have said that deceivers should rise,
And with their own wisdom would teach the unwise.
Saith Paul the Apostle, the time will soon come,
When many there'll be with the beautiful form,
But denying the power, the church's own dower."

Christ did not promise to confirm a "perverted" or changed gospel with "these signs following," no matter how "faithfully" it is served or lived up to. But it was the gospel in the fulness and purity as he established it that he promised to "work with everywhere even unto the end of the world," if they kept it pure as it then was. He has verified his promise in me, or perhaps I might not be so strong to defend this work.

You asked me for my belief on baptism. I believe in baptism by immersion and fail to find a place that even intimates such a thing as baptism being performed otherwise.

I believe in all the first principles of the gospel; I will send you the epitome of our faith that you may look up the references supporting it in the Bible; and if there are not enough given in it you may tell me so in your next, and I will send you more. I believe also that these ordinances have to be administered by some one having the same authority as those who performed them in former days; otherwise they are null and void. For example, a marriage ceremony is not binding when performed by one not having authority, and of course, has to be performed by some one having proper authority from the State, county or district before it is a lawful marriage. So when these ordinances, baptism by immersion, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, are performed by one having authority from on high, these signs or gifts will be a witness following the obedience of all that are sincere. You said you wished to "lay aside differences of opinion and come to social conversation." I could not refrain from defending myself in the work I am engaged in, and still keep up correspondence with you, after you saying what you did in your last; but if you still wish to drop the subject, we will do so. To instruct others what I can in this great work is the desire of my heart.

I remain very humbly, your sister in the hope of eternal life.

SPEND WISELY.

Look most to your spending. No matter what comes in, if more goes out you will always be poor. The art is not in making money, but keeping it. Little expenses, like mice in a barn, when they are many, makes waste. Hair by hair heads get bald; straw by straw the thatch goes off the cottage, and drop by drop the rain comes into the chamber. A barrel is soon empty if the tap leaks but a drop each second. In all things keep within compass. Never stretch your legs farther than the blankets will reach or you will soon be cold. In clothes choose suitable and lasting stuff; and not tawdry fineries; to be warm is the main thing, never mind the looks. A fool may make money but it needs a wise man to spend it. Remember it is easier to build two chimneys than to keep one going. If you give all to back and board, nothing is left for the savings bank. Fare hard and work hard when you are young, and you have a chance to rest when old.

Conference Minutes.

EASTERN IOWA.

Conference convened at the Newcastle School house, near Fulton, Iowa, September 22d and 23d. W. T. Bozarth was called to the chair, J. S. Roth clerk. Branches reported:—Davenport, no change. Apostolic, 3 gained, 1 expelled. Butternut Grove, 16 removed, 1 expelled, 1 died. Jackson, no change. Fulton branch 24 members, organized June 16th, 1888, by J. S. Roth. Reports:—Elders Warren Turner, W. T. Bozarth baptized 6, J. S. Roth baptized 11, married two couples; Priests J. R. Johnson, James Bradley and J. Heide; Teacher John Sutton. Bishop's agent, Warren Turner, reported: received $82, expended $82. Report found correct by committee consisting of J. S. Roth and John Heide, and adopted. Resolved that next conference be held at Clinton, Iowa, commencing December 15th, at ten a.m. Warren Turner made the statement that Jerome Ruby could not act longer as district president, when the conference extended a vote of thanks to Bro. Ruby for his past labors in that capacity. Bro. J. S. Roth was elected president and John Sutton clerk. Vote of thanks was extended to Bro. W. T. Maitland for his labors as district clerk. Warren Turner was sustained as Bishop's agent. Preaching Saturday evening by J. S. Roth; Saints' meeting Sunday morning; preaching in the forenoon by W. Turner, in the afternoon by J. S. Roth, and in the evening by W. T. Bozarth. Three were baptized during the conference.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.

The above semi-annual conference convened at Fremont, Nebraska [date not given]. W. M. Rumel president pro tem., I. Sylvester clerk. Brethren M. W. Sampson, James Huff and Oscar Brown were appointed a committee on credentials. Minutes of conference held in Omaha, Nebraska, December 31st, 1887, were read and approved. Elders reports:—H. J. Hudson, G. W. Galley, W. Ballinger, N. Rumel and E. Boulson. Bishop's agent's report:—On hand last report $48.30, received since $133.05, total $181.35; expenses $119.25; balance $62.10. Accepted after examination by committee. Statistical reports:—Omaha 107; 4 baptized, 3 received by letter, 1 removed, 2 died, 2 ordained. Platte Valley 34; 1 baptized, 1 died. Columbus 31; 1 removed, 1 died, 1 expelled. Lake Shore 29; 1 baptized, 3 expelled, 1 died. Union 53; baptized 2, certificate of baptism 1, letter from other branches 7, expelled 4, died 1. B. W. Dempster reported by letter. Bro. W. M. Rumel was sustained as Bishop's agent, I. Sylvester as district secretary, and Bro. W. M. Rumel was elected district president. The next conference will convene at Omaha, December 28th, at 7:30 p.m. It was resolved that all elders and priests be requested to labor under direction of the district president. A two days' meeting was appointed to be held in the vicinity of Omaha; the branch president to find a suitable location and inform the district president, who would appoint the time. Also that a two days' meeting be held in Platte Valley, September 15th and 16th. The following substitute was offered by Bro. Caffall in the Rasmussen vs. Patterson case, and was adopted: Whereas, the case of Patterson vs Rasmussen, of the Union branch of the Northern Nebraska district was, by action of the body, presented to Elder James Caffall at the December session at Omaha, for his decision; and whereas, the said James Caffall was unable to decide because of a lack of documentary evidence, and the body had reason to believe that the required documentary evidence existed and would be furnished at the present session; therefore, the matter by action of the body, was deferred for further consideration by the body now in session; and whereas, after the matter was introduced and now pending for action as provided for at the last session, the necessary documents are not available, and whereas, it were injustice to both parties to decide without said documents; therefore, be it resolved, that all former proceedings in this case be declared null and void, and that both parties be looked upon as occupying the same position as they did before any proceedings were had; and be it further resolved, that the necessary labor be performed by the officers of the branch to effect a reconciliation between the two brethren involved, and between each of the brethren and the branch, and should this fail, that legal steps be taken for the holding of a trial as the law of the church provides, and that such trial proceed as if no trial had been held; and we further recommend that in the event of a trial, two or more elders be secured to form the court, knowing nothing of the matter, only as they may learn from the evidence of each party as presented at the trial. Resolved, that this district does not countenance the practice of members of this church in visiting pool and billiard rooms, taking part in such games, or aiding such by their presence, and any member persisting in so doing shall be deemed guilty of a breach of church law, and liable to be dealt with accordingly. The motion of September 24th, 1881, in regard to reporting spiritual condition of branches was re-affirmed. Preaching by Elders George Galley and James Caffall Sabbath morning; collection $7.01. Fellowship meeting in the afternoon. Preaching in the evening by James Caffall; collection $1.85.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Conference was held at South Rawdon, Nova Scotia, September 15th and 16th. Elder A. H. Parsons president, H. J. Davison clerk. Elders reported: A. H. Parsons, H. H. Robinson, John C. Burgess and H. J. Davison; Priests: J. W. Dimock and R. Newcomb; and Teacher, Alfred Wood. Branch reports:—Cornwallis 16 members, including three baptized during the year. Newport 19 members, including seven baptized during the year. Bishop's agent's report: cash on hand last conference $36.10, received during the year $47.25, total $83.35; paid out $42.25; balance $41.10. The report was received. It was resolved that E. C. Briggs represent us at General Conference. Resolved that this conference express to Elders Parsons and Robinson its entire satisfaction for the manner in which they have conducted the work in Nova Scotia since their arrival. Prayer and testimony meetings were held, and were interesting and profitable. Preaching by Elders Parsons, Robinson and Davison, and the services were well attended. Adjourned to meet at the call of the president.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.

Conference was held at Lane's Hall, Bennett, Nebraska, Sunday October 14th and 15th. President Levi Anthony in the chair, J. B. Gouldsmith, secretary. J. W. Waldsmith, C. H. Porter and John Young were appointed a committee on credentials. Report of Bishop's agent: Free-will offerings received during quarter $50.50; free-will offerings paid out $55.20; tithing received during quarter $116.50; tithing paid out during quarter 95.50; amount due Church and enlisted during quarter $882.81. The auditing committee appointed reported the statement correct. Branch reports: Moroni 20. Blue River last report 124, present number 133. 3 baptized, 7 received by certificate of baptism, 1 expelled; Palmyra last report 53, present number 58. 4 baptized, 1 received by certificate of baptism; Nebraska City last report 131, present number 137, 7 received by baptism, 1 by certificate of baptism, 2 died. A branch organized September 10th, by Bro. Jas. Caffall, and named Snow-Flake reported a membership of 12. Reports of officers: Elders: James Caffall, baptized 1, Hyrum O. Smith, baptized 5, H. C. Bronson, baptized 7, C. H. Porter, baptized 11, Joshua Armstrong, J. W. Waldsmith, Levi Anthony, Henderson Fields; Priests: A. Buchanan, F. L.

Tucker, W. Self, J. B. Gouldsmith, and Teacher John Young. By motion H. C. Bronson was granted the privilege of the conference. Committee appointed at last conference on rules of representation reported; report adopted and committee discharged. On motion the secretary was instructed to send a copy of the rules on representation as adopted to the presidents of all branches in the district. Sardin Carter was recommended by the Palmyra branch for ordination to the office of teacher; ordination ordered and he was ordained by C. H. Porter and J. W. Waldsmith. The question of changing the conferences from quarterly to semi-annual was discussed, and left over until the January conference for final action. J. W. Waldsmith was elected president and C. H. Porter secretary for the next three months. J. W. Waldsmith was sustained as Bishop's agent. Adjourned to meet at Nebraska City, January 20th. Officials present: 6 Elders, 4 Priests, 1 Teacher, 1 Deacon.

MONTANA.

This district conference met at Deer Lodge, Montana, October 13th. J. C. Clapp president pro. tem., I. R. Price secretary pro. tem., President Gomer Reese, by letter, reported that he was financially unable to attend and requested to be released from the presidency and that one be appointed that is able to devote more time to the work. After conceding the propriety of liberating him for the cause mentioned, it was, Resolved, that we sustain Elder Reese with our faith, prayers and means. Elder J. C. Clapp reported that he had labored incessantly in the mission; had baptized 6 adults, blessed 16 children and organized one branch in Oregon. Was unanimously sustained in the mission according to General Conference appointment. Reports of branches:—Deer Lodge 51. Reese Creek, not reported. Resolved, that we endorse Elder J. F. McDowell's policy of forming a Sunday School association. Andrew Hanson was chosen and ordained a priest, and John Eliasson a teacher, both under the hands of J. C. Clapp and Andrew Christofferson, J. C. Clapp being spokesman in each case. There were four preaching meetings and two Saints meetings. An enjoyable time and unity prevailed throughout. Adjourned to meet at the call of the president of the district.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Conference convened at Five Lakes, October 13th. Elder J. J. Cornish president, J. A. Grant secretary, E. Delong assistant. Met at nine o'clock for prayer. It was resolved that we consider it unwise to divide the district at present. It was resolved that we consider the organization of the Bay City branch legal, and that Bro. Cyrus Smith receive a Priest's license. It was resolved that when we adjourn that we do so to meet at Tawas City at the call of the president. It was moved and supported that J. J. Cornish act as district president, and J. A. Grant secretary. J. J. Cornish, A. Barr, J. A. Carpenter, E. Shelly and R. W. Hugill were appointed delegates to General Conference. The president of this mission was sustained. Committee appointed to examine the Bishop's agent's account reported it correct. Moved and supported that all the officers labor all they can in the district. Preaching during conference by brethren Cornish, J. A. Grant, Barr, Phelps and McKenzie.

Miscellaneous.

BORN.

FAUNCE.—At Nebraska City, Nebraska September 6th, 1888, to Bro. F. L. and Sarah Faunce, a son. Blessed October 19th, by Elder Robert M. Elvin, and named Leeman Loveless.

MARRIED.

PERKINS—TAYLOR.—On November 20th, (year not given.—Ed.), at Kennebunkport, Maine, Bro. Charles T. D. Perkins and Sr. Mercy E. Taylor, both of Saco, Maine, the Rev. S. D. Brown officiating.

DIED.

HATCHER.—At his residence Lampsville, Ohio, Bro. C. P. Hatcher. He was born near Morris-town, Belmont county, Ohio, and died September 15th 1888, aged 71 years, 7 months and 11 days. He was baptized at Lampsville, Ohio, October 31st, 1877, by Elder L. R. Devore and was ordained an elder on the 13th day of March, 1881, at Pittsburg Pennsylvania, by Elder James Brown. He died as he had lived, a firm believer in the latter day work. He leaves a wife and twelve children, (nine sons and three daughters), to mourn their loss. Funeral services by Rev. Hegar of the Disciple Church.

Rest dearest husband, thou hast left us,
And the voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled,
His life throughout was pure and good,
His character sublime;
Bright pattern of a Christian life,
His light did truly shine,
A husband, true in every sense,
A father and a friend,
He fell asleep, death had no sting,
His was a righteous end,
O, may we all prepare to meet
This faithful Saint again,
Where parting with him never more,
With Christ we live and reign.

MAXFIELD.—Eliza Maxfield was born at Kingston-upon-Hull, Yorkshire, England, February 10th, 1808; was married March 14th, 1827, to Richard Maxfield; emigrated to British North America in October, 1833; resided on Prince Edward's Island, for seventeen years; united with the Church of Christ November 24th, 1845; came to the United States September 21st, 1851; arriving at Weston, Pratt county, Missouri; residing there six years, when she removed to Kane township, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, with five children; having lost her husband, by death, on the 15th, of October, 1851. She became identified with the Reorganization in the early part of 1860, being baptized by Elder J. M. Putney. She rests in peace.

BROWNELL.—At Stockton, California, September 2d, 1888, sister Melissa C. Brownell, mother of sisters F. C. Warnky and E. Etzenhouser, of Independence, Missouri. Sr. Brownell was born in Parry, Ohio, March 29th, 1830. Her father, Cyril Call, was among the first to unite with the church. She was baptized at Warsaw, Illinois, in 1841, by Joseph Smith. She was with the church through many of its trying ordeals, but remained steadfast and faithful under all conditions of life. She went west with her family, passed on through Utah to California, at an early date in the history of that state, and spent all the later years of her life away from the society of the church; but held to her faith always. She leaves a husband, ten children, and many friends to mourn her departure. She had for years a great desire to come to Zion. A few months before her death she had that pleasure, and remained a visitor at the homes of her daughters at Independence, which place she visited with one of her sons last spring. Her fatal sickness was even then upon her; she received the administration of oil and the laying on of hands: Bro. J. W. Gillen and Bro. F. C. Warnky, her son-in-law, officiating in the rite, and received comfort. At the request of her children at Independence, a funeral discourse was pronounced by Pres. Joseph Smith, October 7th, in the Saints' Church.

JENKINS.—At Krumroy, Ohio, October 9th, 1888, Mary Anna, infant daughter of Bro. Thomas and Sr. Mary Hannah Jenkins, aged 11 months, and 27 days.

GESS.—At Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 27th, 1888, Sr. Frances Pepper, fifth daughter William Pepper, of Poynton Fenn, Lincolnshire, England, and wife of Bro. William Gess. Sr. Gess was born at Poynton Fenn, February 27th, 1813; and was at her death 74 years and 11 months old. She was a good wife, and leaves a husband in his old age to mourn his loss in her departure of this life. She came to America in October, 1850, and settled at Council Bluffs in 1856, remained there until her death, except a residence in Wisconsin for seventeen years. She was baptized into the Reorganization by Elder Z. H. Gurley, and died in hopes of life. She rests: "Asleep in Jesus: blessed sleep." "He giveth his beloved sleep."

ANDERSON.—At Independence, Missouri, October 18th, 1888, Raymond A. Anderson, aged 7 months and 8 days. Funeral sermon by Elder J. C. Foss, assisted by J. W. Brackenbury.

KEITH.—At his residence in Lamar, Missouri, October 17th, 1888, of typhoid fever, Bro. E. S. Keith. He was born in Sharon, Vermont, January 16th, 1821; being at his death 67 years, 9 months and 11 days old. He died strong in the faith; was happy and fully prepared to go. He leaves a wife and family to mourn their loss.

Sr. Frances: I would like to give a word of cheer regarding "Autumn Leaves," and think my sentiments will be best expressed by praying that God's grace and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit may be abundantly given to uphold you in so great and commendable a work. It, to my mind, is a tower of strength, whose impress will be indelibly stamped on the hearts of the youth, assisting them in moulding their lives in accordance with God's eternal plan, by which they may become elevated in high and noble spheres of action in this life and be qualified and fitted for the Master's use, reaping eternal life in the end.

May God aid you in your work,

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPILOGUE OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocletian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Especial attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

WHICH SHALL IT BE, CHRISTIAN OR HEATHEN?

WE give elsewhere a most interesting exhibit concerning the methods of so called Christian missionaries in far off lands. It is a subject of deep interest to Latter Day Saints, who believe so earnestly that the prophecy of the Divine Teacher, Christ, that "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations," must be fulfilled, to watch the peculiar processes going on in all parts of the world by which such fulfillment may be made possible. It is a never failing prayer of the Saints; "Hasten thy work, in its time, O Lord." To us who have so much at stake in the coming of the Lord, everything that will add to the evidences indicating the nearer approach of that coming is fraught with deep interest. We would be glad to hail the ushering in of unity among all classes of religionists in spirit and in form of belief, for that would mean a cessation of intolerance toward any, a step much in advance of the past, with its bigotry and superstition. "Christian and Moslems," points to the incoming of truth.

FEMALE POLITICIANS.

THE recent convention in New York of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union presented a sad spectacle when some of its leading members sought to make the "Union" a catspaw to rake for chestnuts in the red hot political ovens of our country. It is pitiful to read that some of these would be political wranglers, in their unwomanly aspirations and bickerings, "showed fight," "were white with anger," and carried on a raging "duel of words." Imagine representative temperance workers, women, gathered in our metropolitan city ostensibly to promote the interests of the great cause of temperance in all the world, a work they may properly engage in, stepping down from their high and influential position to dabble in a sly game of politics, coquetting with political parties and proposing trade and traffic with them. Can it be that the chief temperance organization of our nation will fall down to the low level of party chicanery and be shorn of its strength and its prestige, corrupt its holy mission and blast the hopes of its friends and those who look to it for succor by falling into the ruinous embrace of partisan politics!

We are glad to know that sensible, womanly, good Miss Willard was equal to the occasion, perceived the threatened evil, and made a speech intended to pour oil on the "troubled waters." The "Union," if it will have the respect and confidence of the temperance element in all political parties, should let politics severely alone and attend strictly to its own rightful, legitimate business.

In this connection we may say that, when womankind leave the sphere assigned them by nature's God and seek to meddle with what, by nature, is reserved for men to do, they excite only the pity and contempt of all sensible people. Politics does not appertain to woman's sphere. Her sex, her duties, and her natural instincts utterly forbid it. A womanly woman inspires, delights, builds and blesses society; but a mannish woman is a sort of social monstrosity—a wart, a wen, (or worse), on the social body.

Dr. Walker, of Washington, who for the past thirty years or more has been seeking to put on political breeches—also wearing men's trousers—has been and is to-day a butt of ridicule, an object of disgust and contempt to all clean minded people. Right minded persons, whether men or women, instinctively revolt at the idea that women shall mix in political affairs, just as they do at the thought that men shall intermeddle with the domestic duties which pertain alone to women. Occasionally we see women so far forget their position in society as to wrangle over party politics, seek to dominate the political views, sentiments, and preferences of their husbands, (if they by chance have any), and thus thrust their personal notions into political affairs instead of honoring the husband in his place. Such women dishonor themselves, lessen their influence for good, and should not complain when both men and women call them "female roosters." Human nature, as developed in politics, revolts when its rights are invaded, and will resent and repel, often with harsh words and even violence, those who seek to do such wrong.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has a high and all-worthy mission, but that is not in the arena of politics. Woman's mission is fully the equal of man's; but their missions differ widely at some points, and this difference is just as radical, determinate and unchangeable as the fact and the law of sex. Happy are they who recognize and abide submissively by these eternal facts.

If women will meddle with politics of parties, of husbands or neighbors, they should not complain if repelled, dishonored, and hurt through such unseemly interference.

COMMUNICATIONS AND LETTERS TO THE HERALD.

IT would be of great benefit to us, and also save much time to the office, if our contributors and correspondents in preparing matter for publication in the HERALD would look over such and read and correct it once or more. We have on hand a number of articles, some of which by reason of a lack of even ordinary care in their preparation, contain but the merest hints of the author's meaning. To arrange them for publication would simply amount to re-writing them entire, which we have not time to do.

We have also frequently noticed that persons possessing good ideas and ability to present good thought, hesitate to communicate to the HERALD columns because of a lack of education in composition, punctuation, etc. All we ask is that contributors in their communications and letters take due care and time; and that such compositions be prepared upon the theory that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well.

By re-reading an article and correcting it, it can always be largely improved; and our correspondents will greatly favor us by following this rule. Do the best you can and we will be satisfied, as we should be.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ELDER Willard J. Smith has written a pamphlet of twenty-five pages entitled "Whitmerism Unmasked" which is a brief examination of the claims of the so called Church of Christ. It may be had at this office, or by addressing W. J. Smith, Holstein, Grey county, Ontario, for five cents each or fifty cents per dozen.

Bro. E. R. Feavel, of Appleton, Wisconsin, writes that he is talking up the latter day work and distributing the printed word wherever he has opportunity to do so, and, in consequence, some are very anxious to hear the gospel preached. Bro. Feavel has not a home of his own in which to entertain an elder, but thinks ample provision would be made for any of the ministry that would put in an appearance there, and that a good and appreciative audience would greet one who would preach the gospel without making unfavorable mention of other faiths. Bro. Feavel's address is No. 1076 Gilmore street.

Bro. William Barnhart writes from Minnesota, in praise of the labors of Brn. Hansen, Foss and Smith in that state. He would like to see Bro. Hansen remain there during the winter, as he seems able to endure the rigor of that climate. The local officers in the branches are active and intend to hold the fort until reinforcements arrive. Bro. T. J. Martin expected to perform some ministerial labor there during the winter.

There is an opening for some young and enterprising man, or some middle aged man who is a fair mechanic, either wagon maker, or blacksmith, or both, at Lamoni, where Bro. Joseph B. Rodger desires to sell out his shop and mill, as see advertisement in the HERALD. It will require some $1,500 or $2,000 to secure the plant and lots.

Letters are received from Brn. A. J. Kenison, of Harlan, Kansas, and O. W. Cambridge, of London Ontario.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. C. G. Lanphear wrote from Sandwich, Illinois, October 23d:

"I arrived here from York State Tuesday evening the 16th. Found my daughter and family all quite well and comfortable. Have also called on my son and family at Plano, whom I found well. Am glad to meet with them and the friends here again, after an absence of over four years. I called on Brn. Minthorns, of Gaius, Orleans county, New York, after leaving Sandwich. They live about eighty miles west of Bro. Seeley's. They were all usually well. Blessed an infant daughter of Bro. George and Sr. Alice Minthorn's while with them. I notice a mistake in the wording of my letter. Where it says here at Greenwood, it should be 'from' instead of at."

Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., wrote from Manchester, England, in a late letter as follows:

"Our conference concluded on Sunday last at Leeds; the best we have ever had. Will try and send on particulars to Herald shortly."

A CORRESPONDENT asks:

"At what time and under what circumstances were the sacred manuscripts gathered together, now called the Bible? What man or body of men sorted the manuscripts and picked them out from the undoubtedly large accumulation of writings gathered together at that time?"

To this all the reply that can be made with any degree of certainty is the following from "Hitchcock's Analysis," in his history of the Bible, pages 1158 and 1159:

"Who decided what books should and what should not be included in the New Testament, and when, and where? This decision was not made by any man or men, at any given time or place, by express resolution or decree, as a vote is passed. It was a natural and universal public opinion of Christians; one church and another, one writer and another, spontaneously accepting the inspired books from the living force of the inspiration itself, and rejecting the apocryphal ones because they had not this living force. This process was rapid and decisive; it had in all probability become substantially complete before the death of John, the last of the apostles, which took place about A. D. 100. There is a not uncommon belief that the Council of Laodicea, A. D. 364, formally voted what books should constitute the New Testament; that before this vote there no received belief on the subject, and that it operated like a new law, and at once adjusted the question. But this council was only a small provincial synod from portions of two provinces in Asia Minor, and what it did was, in the course of its business, to pass among others a vote directing what was proper to be read in the public religious assemblies where it had authority. The canon had already been substantially fixed for three hundred years. And the very frequently received date of the Council of Carthage, A. D. 394, as the time of the closing of the canon, though this section was more influential than that of Laodicea, was only a formal declaration of existing beliefs. The New Testament grew into authority because it had the life and force to grow; no man or men voted it into a position or could have done so."

WE produce from the Chicago Tribune for October 23d, a dispatch respecting the Spiritualistic philosophy founded upon the manifestations of the celebrated Fox Girls, who in 1848 set in motion what has been regarded by many as the most wonderful movement of modern times. We hope that Mrs. Kane and her sisters will "write a book" embodying this confession now made.

"By throwing life and enthusiasm into her big toe, Mrs. Margaret Fox Kane produced loud spirit rappings in the Academy of Music to-night and dealt a death-blow to Spiritualism, that huge and world-wide fraud which she and her sister, Kate Fox, founded in 1848. Both sisters were present, and both denounced Spiritualism as a monstrous imposition and cheat. The great building was crowded, and the wildest excitement prevailed at times. Hundreds of Spiritualists had come to see the originators of their faith destroy it at one stroke. They were greatly agitated at times and hissed fiercely. Take it all in all it was a most remarkable and dramatic spectacle. There stood a black-robed, sharp-faced widow, working her big toe and solemnly declaring that it was in this way she created the excitement that has driven so many persons to suicide or insanity. One moment it was ludicrous, the next it was weird.

When Mrs. Kane appeared on the stage she was greeted with cheers and hisses. She put on her glasses, curtsied to the audience, and read slowly and in a voice trembling with emotion her confession. Her sister, Kate Fox, sat in a box with John A. Stevens, and applauded.

"That I have been mainly instrumental in perpetrating the fraud of Spiritualism upon a too confiding public, many of you already know. It is the greatest sorrow of my life. When I began this deception I was too young to know right from wrong. I hope God Almighty will forgive me and those who are silly enough to believe in Spiritualism."

Dr. C. M. Richmond, who is managing the expose, invited doctors to come upon the stage.

Three [doctors knelt down, took hold of] Mrs. Kane's big toe, and assumed a grave air. They then declared that they could hear rappings produced by the toe. Mrs. Kane finally stood up to let the audience hear. As she remained motionless, loud, distinct rappings were heard, now in the files, now behind the scenes, now in the gallery.

Before Mrs. Kane appeared, Dr. Richmond gave the audience a thorough expose of the slate-writing, mind-reading, and oil-painting tricks of Slade, Dis De Bar, and other impostors. He explained them all in detail. A fierce looking foreigner got up and denounced Dr. Richmond's tricks, saying that the Spiritualists produced their efforts by spirit power, and he would prove it if he could get the platform.

It was the general opinion of people who were in the Academy to-night that the confession of the two founders of Spiritualism and the complete exposure of the tricks of mediums end this form of swindling, and that it can never recover from the crushing blow. The Spiritualists in the audience almost frothed at the mouth with rage as they left the building, and muttered furious threats against their foes.

New York, October 21st.

THE following is from a church discussion at a church Congress, held at Manchester, England, commencing Oct. 2nd, and over which the Bishop of Manchester presided. The idea of telling the truth about the Bible, or not telling it is something novel to discuss in a congress of churchmen. We clip from the Manchester Courier and General Advertiser for Oct. 3rd:

BIBLICAL CRITICISM IN SERMONS.

The first subject for consideration had reference to the results of historical and scientific criticism, and the extent to which they should be recognized in sermons and teaching. The first paper was read by the Rev. J. M. Wilson, M. A., head master of Clifton College, who said that some might think that the question could be expressed in simpler language, How far ought the clergy to tell the truth about the Bible? Let them first lay down their principles in answering the question in this shape: Firstly, they must tell the truth. Nothing could justify the clergy in maintaining a view of the Bible which they believed or suspected to be false. It would demoralize the clergy. It would lower their whole standard of truth. Their voices would not ring true when they preached what they did believe, if they also preached what they did not believe. The pulpit must not deceive the pew, even for what it thought was for the good of the pew. The suspicion of dishonesty destroyed its influence with the pew, but, what was far more important, the fact of dishonesty corrupted and degraded the pulpit itself. They must tell the truth and nothing but the truth. Tell nothing but the truth about the Bible, said the speaker, and take pains to inform yourself about the criticism, but do not hastily impart intermediate results to people totally unprepared for them, or to any one until you have well assimilated them, until they fill the Bible with new life and power and meaning, until, in fact, the limitation "how far" becomes quite unnecessary, because you are then able to tell the whole truth. The religion of a people must rest on some authority. In theory, Protestantism takes not authority but reason for her watchword; but in fact it has substituted one authority for another. A few favored individuals may live by an individual religion of reason. But the myriads of our towns, and the hundreds of our villages, can not so live. Men soon weary in the effort involved in a religion without authority. And what authorities are there in our our religion? Speaking generally, I suppose we should reply the Church and the Bible. And hence, if the result of criticism is to weaken or undermine the authority of the Bible, we may naturally infer that it will either weaken the total sanction of religion, or exalt the authority of the Church, or both; in other words that it must lead to skepticism or Catholicism. He did not agree to this conclusion. Something, and indeed much to our own generation, depended on the promptitude and completeness with which they welcomed and occupied these new regions of human learning. When the Antipodes were first spoken of they were denounced by the Popes, and it was declared to be a shame in a Christian man even to mention them. Now we colonize them, and they even contribute to our national defence. Let us do the same, somewhat less tardily, with these new regions of learning. Everyone knew Agassiz's saying that every new scientific truth passes through three stages in its reception. First, people say it is false; then, that it is contrary to religion; and lastly, that everybody knew it before. Let us skip the second stage at all events. No scientific result can be contrary to religion. (Applause.) The mere apprehension that this could be so is itself a deep infidelity. Let the clergy make this science their own, and find in it a new power for the Bible, and a new authority and a new inspiration, which should more than replace the old. (Applause.)

IF God so cares for the laws of the perpetuation of life in the cereal principal in sustaining man upon the earth as shown in the extract below why should not man trust him to raise up the body in the resurrection as promised in the Scriptures; and of which assurance has been made in that he hath raised up Jesus from the grave.

WHEAT FROM SEED FIVE THOUSAND YEARS OLD.

Cincinnati Enquirer: A most interesting experiment culminated to-day in the raising of some wheat grown from wheat as old as the exodus. The experimenter is David Drew, who last year received from a friend in Alexandria, Egypt, some grains of wheat taken from a mummy exhumed near the ruins of Memphis, and belonging, it is believed, to the period of the ninth dynasty, which would make it grown about three thousand years B. C., or nearly five thousand years old. He planted the seed early in the spring, and carefully nursed it. It grew rapidly, and at the time of cutting measured from six and a half to seven feet high. The leaves alternate on the stalk like common wheat, but the product of the plant is the most singular part of it, for, instead of growing in an ear like modern corn, there is a heavy cluster of small twigs in place of the spindle which hangs downward from its weight, and each twig is thickly studded with kernels, each of which is in a separate husk. From what is threshed a larger crop will be grown next year, as the result proves this to exceed in quality anything modern grain can grow.

FROM "Gilmore Happenings," in the August 30th, Farwell, Michigan Register, we clip the following—it needs no comment.

"The Town Hall has been packed to its fullest capacity the last few days with people listening to some very interesting sermons delivered by Elder J. J. Cornish of Reed City, who is an able speaker in his faith. As a result of his effort Mr. Richard Campbell and wife were baptized last week Monday in the afternoon and confirmed in the evening by the laying on of hands. The services were impressive and sacred.

"There are quite a number of our citizens contemplating joining the Latter Day Saints' Church which is expected to be organized here soon, the people have been awakened to a sense of their duty lately as never before, under the gospel as preached by Rev. Cornish, of Reed City. It has been said by one poor foolish Free-will Baptist man that the Latter Day Saints' Church was of Mormon origin and has heaped injury upon insult, on both preacher and congregation, trying to make the people believe that as soon as they were full members they would be shipped to Utah, there to comply with the teachings of Mormonism as taught in that country. He has gained the ill-will of nearly every inhabitant who has listened to his foolish arguments. Mr. Cornish seems to be a man of power and eloquence, though unlearned, and all wish him success. We will say more about him next week if nothing prevents. MAUD S."

THE NEW ERA.

It is coming! it is coming! the day is just a dawning,
When man shall be to fellow-man a helper and a brother;
When the mansion, with its gilded hall, and cool and shady awning,
Shall be to hovel desolate a kind and foster-mother.

When the men who work for wages shall not toil from morn till even,
With no vision of the sunlight, nor flowers nor birds a-singing;
When the men who hire the workers, blest with all the gifts of Heaven, Shall the golden rule remember; its glad millennium bringing.

The time is coming when the man who cares not for another,
Shall be accounted as a stain upon a fair creation;
Who lives to fill his coffers full, his better self to smother,
As blight and mildew on the fame and glory of a nation.

Who heeds not if the children toil, no time for play or learning;
Who pays starvation wages that his gold may heap the faster;
Who cares not if the mothers stitch, while midnight lamps are burning;
Such men bring shame upon a State, and ruin and disaster.

The hours are growing shorter for the millions who are toiling,
And the homes are growing better for the millions yet to be;
And the poor shall learn the lesson, how that waste and sin are spoiling
The fairest and the finest of a grand humanity.

It is coming! it is coming! and men's thoughts are growing deeper;
They are giving of their millions as they never gave before;
They are learning the new Gospel; man must be his brother's keeper,
And right, not might, shall triumph, and the selfish rule no more.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Though flowers have perished at the touch
Of Frost, the early comer
I hail the season loved so much,
The good St. Martin's summer.
"The summer and the winter here
Midway a truce are holding,
A soft consenting atmosphere
Their tents of peace enfoldng."

PRAYER LEAGUE.

WE call the special attention of all interested in the Prayer Union, to the communication from Sr. Eleanor, found in this number; and can but feel glad that she has decided upon the adoption of this plan, as we feel sure that it will give more general satisfaction than any other which could be adopted. The subjects chosen are all necessary and comprehensive, and such as the heart of every Saint can earnestly pray for.

Let it be distinctly understood that these standing subjects of prayer will not prevent any branch where a League is formed from sending in subjects for the members of the League in the entire church to pray unitedly; neither will it prevent any scattered member of the League from doing the same.

Let no one be discouraged. We are gradually coming to a unity of understanding, as well as of spirit; and many testimonies cheering in their nature are coming in. One sister in writing us says: "Please tell Sr. Eleanor that I felt strongly impressed when praying over the Prayer League Text of the Jewish nation, 'That the gospel will go to them and the Lamanites just as soon as there is a people among the Gentiles who have so thoroughly laid hold of the principles of the gospel of Christ as to be in all things examples of them as well as teachers.'"

Examples of the principles of Christ's gospel! Oh, what a revelation from the Spirit is herein contained! The sweet singer of our day has written:

"Wisely and well said the Eastern bard, Fear is easy, but love is hard."

It is easy to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, aye, to contend earnestly even as we are exhorted to do; but to live for it is not so easy. Peter found no difficulty in raising his sword to defend his Master, but he yet lacked the courage to render the loving service of watching with him one hour. Alas, how few of us can say: "I have done these, and have not left the other undone"! How few of us are truly examples of the gospel of Christ?

And yet we say to you, beloved sisters, let no one be discouraged, for the Spirit of God is pleading for us, laboring with us, and let it be borne in mind when you meet together for prayer, "is making intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Be faithful in this your covenant of prayer and you shall have power to prevail with God when you come before him in faith and humility. Abraham was a man of like passions, like imperfections, as are possessed by all men, and yet he prevailed with God just as long as he continued to plead with him. Let us unceasingly plead with God for the gifts of faith and wisdom. He is not a Father who will give a stone when we cry out for bread, neither a serpent when we plead for a fish; and if we ask him in faith, subject at all times to his will, doubt not, for as sure as he is God he will hear and answer our prayers. Daily, hourly our heart ascends unto God for guidance and direction. Our name is not yet enrolled with yours in the League, from the fact that there is not of the whole twenty four hours of any day, an hour which we can call our own. This does not prevent our being with you in spirit, and praying that God will keep you very faithful to your covenant; and yet we fully realize that this is not sufficient; know that we are losers, are poorer in spirit because we cannot meet with you, and are looking forward to the time when it may be otherwise. Let us once more entreat you to be faithful, and do not suffer yourselves to be robbed of the blessings God has in store for you.

By way of explanation let us just say that in using the term "closet" we simply mean retirement or a retired place; and surely home is this, even when our children are with us. There may however be times when the soul craves to be entirely alone with God.

In this issue will be found subjects for the remaining Thursdays of November, also permanent or standing subjects for each recurring Thursday of the months. These subjects will begin to be used the first Thursday of December, 1888, and continue as long as the Prayer Union continues to be used, unless as a body a departure therefrom should be deemed advisable.

PRAYER LEAGUE.

Concert for Thursday, November 15th, 1888. Subjects: The Bishopric; that God would direct and sustain our Bishop in his arduous labors, and that his agents may be men acting in the fear of the Lord. The mission in Nova Scotia, (by request).

Memory texts, 2 Cor. 9: 10-15.

Concert for Thursday, November 22d, 1888. Subjects: The members of our families by name; that those unconverted may be saved, and those within the fold may be preserved from all influences that would estrange them from the church and the truth. For each other, and for the families of the ministry, and the youth of the church in general.

Memory texts, Isa. 43: 7; Ps. 103: 17.

Concert for Thursday, November 29th, 1888. Subjects: That God will open a way for the establishment of a school under Church control and influence, where our children may be educated in the fear of God and love of his gospel. For the aged and afflicted ones of the church; and that a home for the aged who are destitute of homes, may soon be established.

Memory texts, 2 Thess. 2: 16, 17; Ps. 9: 18.

ELEANOR.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

The prayers and faith of the League are requested in behalf of Bro. I. L. Rogers, former Bishop of the church, who is suffering with severe lameness. Also, for Bro. Henry Hedricks, that if it be the Lord's will he may be restored to health. He has been long and sorely afflicted. Also sister Eliza G. Page of Hudson, Wisconsin. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the perfect law."

TO THE PRAYER LEAGUE.

FOR EACH THURSDAY.

1st Thursday. The Church, its ministers and membership. That righteousness, love and zeal in the work, and spread of the gospel, may increase and to this end the saints with one heart and mind bring their tithes and offerings into the Lord's store-house. That God will continue to reveal his mind to his servants in the direction of the affairs of the church.

Memory texts, 1 Tim. 5: 21; Eph. 4: 30, 31.

2d Thursday. Our families. Prayer for the members of our families by name, and for the families of each other and those of the ministry. For the youth of the church in general.

Memory texts, Ps. 68: 6; Isa. 54: 13.

3rd Thursday. Missions and Sunday School work, and the church publications. Also for the poor, the sick and afflicted.

Memory texts, Matt. 28: 20; Isa. 53: 4, 5.

4th Thursday. Zion, our country, its welfare and prosperity, and its speedy purification by the reception of the truth. That the scattered remnants be gathered in, and the kingdom of Christ be established.

Memory texts, Isa. 1: 27; Doc. & Cov. 97: 4.

5th Thursday. The gathering of Israel to their land, and the restoration to them of the pure gospel in its fulness, and its acceptance by them to their everlasting peace.

Memory texts, Ezek. 36: 8-10; Rom. 11: 26.

Note. This last to be omitted when there are less than five Thursdays in a month; so that each month begins with the subject first on the list. Let no particular hour be appointed, but the entire day; so that each may take that portion of time best suited to her circumstances.

The scripture readings will be given for each subject every month. ELEANOR.

CLEAR WATER, Neb., Oct. 14th.

Dear Sister Walker:—I would knock at the door of the Home Column this morning, and ask to be admitted in the name of our aged mother, Sister Hannah P. Gamet. Her afflictions are very great, having suffered some fifteen years with cancer on her nose. It has now eaten nearly all of the right side of her nose off, and closed her right eye, and is eating into it. She believes it has been kept back in a great degree by faith and the administration of the elders, but it seems that her faith has never been sufficient for its cure, though she always received relief whenever administered to or prayed for; and now she would like the united faith of the Prayer League in her behalf, that if it is the Lord's will she may be healed; if not that the severe pain may cease, that the few remaining years of her sojourn here may be comparatively comfortable. She has other afflictions grievous to be borne, of which she would welcome relief and praise God for the blessing. She is now nearly eighty two years of age; and, as many know, has been in the church in the early days; and she rejoices yet that her lot has been cast among the people of God; and bears a faithful witness that it is the gospel, with all the attendant blessings promised the faithful believer. For her it has proved a veritable help in time of need. When nigh unto death's door it has been a savor of life; and when her afflictions have been almost unbearable, she has had grace given her sufficient for the time. She has throughout maintained great patience, and desires to cheerfully submit to the will of the Lord. Not only would I ask the prayers of the Prayer League, but that the saints everywhere would remember her at the Throne of Grace.

CAMERON, Mo., October 14th.

Dear Sisters:—As I am still deeply interested in the Home Column and through it am receiving week after week words of encouragement from others, it seems to me I would be very selfish, and ungrateful if I do not try to help encourage others, if I can do nothing more than to tell those who are at work, that I appreciate their labors.

I wish to say a few words in regard to the Prayer League, or Prayer Union. As a sister said, I should like the latter name better; for it seems to be more in harmony with our united work. I have no doubt in my mind that the work will prove a blessing to all who engage in it and faithfully keep it. Several of the sisters in our branch have met together at the house of an aged sister. We have been blessed in our meetings by the Spirit; and at one time we received words of encouragement, telling us that the Lord was pleased with the united, humble effort we were making, and that our labors should not be in vain, but that if we continued faithful we should be instruments in his hands of doing much good. Cheer up, dear sisters, for if God be for us, and is pleased with the efforts we have put forth, let us continue in the good work; and remember that great reward is only for those that hold out faithful to the end. We would be glad to have the hour changed until two in the afternoon. It would make it more convenient to go or even keep that hour at home. We also endorse sister Eleanor's views in regard to each branch in turn sending in a subject for prayer.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

G. F. SIMMONS.

Dear Sisters:—In order to accommodate our sisters of the English and Welsh missions who desire to take part with us some change will have to be made in the program, as the Herald does not reach them in time. It has been suggested that subjects be selected for six weeks, and so on; but unless our sisters everywhere come to my help more readily than they have, the burden of it will continue to fall on me, and I find it interferes with the time that I should devote to other writing. So I conclude to try a suggestion made by Sr. Frances, that a few subjects be selected to be permanent. It has required a great deal of thought and prayer to formulate such, but I think that in the list which I offer is included the principal work of the church, and also of individual need. There are five subjects, to be observed in the order in which they appear; and then to resume.

I have aimed only to give those subjects of greatest import and general interest. When anything arises in any branch that demands the prayers of the League, let those in the locality where it is, observe it in addition to the general subject for the day, but without publishing it. There is also another matter that calls for mention. Some have written me that because of having the care of little children they could not observe the rule of the League to retire to their closet for secret prayer, and I see similar mention made in the Column. I wish to say that I had not intended any such rule. I presume Sr. Frances expressed her mind when she made that suggestion in her editorial remarks. But my sentiments are in favor of observing it in the family when ever it is practicable, and especially is it desirable where the children are small.

Woman's work in the church must be chiefly among the young, and no time is so good for such work as tender childhood, and no place so good to begin as home. This, in fact, was the very idea I had in mind when I desired that each member should observe the covenant of prayer at her own home. It is impossible to lay down rules that will be applicable in all cases and widely diverse circumstances; for there are some, I am sorry to say, whose only chance for prayer is in secret. And I say to such, pray on, and our Father will reward you openly. But I believe it to be the mind of the Spirit that where it is practicable mothers ought to pray with their children as well as for them, and teach them to join in it. I am rejoiced to learn that many of our brethren aid us by joining with us of their own accord in observing the subjects.

THE ANNUAL REUNION.

It is well known that it was the custom of the church until a few years past to meet in General Conference twice a year. One of those meetings was called (as it is now) the Annual General Conference, and always convened on the sixth day of April, serving as a memorial of the day when the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was first organized. The other was known as the Semi-Annual Conference, convening on the sixth day of October. The former was generally held in the east and the latter in the west. Several years ago it was deemed wise to hold but one general conference during the year, to be held in April, commencing on the anniversary of the organization of the church. This deprived the Saints in the west of their privilege, most precious to them, of meeting with the general church and its authorities every fall. And as the Saints in the west were largely agricultural in their pursuits they could not avail themselves of the privilege of the annual conferences in the east; hence the question arose as to the wisdom and propriety of holding annual reunions in the west every fall. Brethren in the west were requested by their several districts, to meet and consider the matter. They did so, and it was thought proper to pay due respect to the voice of the church, hence a committee was appointed to present the matter at the next annual conference, expressing the earnest wish of the western Saints, in whose midst the semi-annual conference used to be held, that such privilege of holding an annual reunion be sanctioned by the whole church in conference.

The request was accordingly presented to the conference at Kirtland, in 1883. Some conservative minds looked upon it as an innovation of church customs, claimed it would be expensive to the church, and feared that the benefits resulting, if any at all, would not justify the expenditure of the necessary means. The committee appointed to present the request, urged the necessity of such annual reunions, and insisted that they would be of great advantage, not only to the western Saints, but to the church at large, and of great benefit to the world around them. And that such reunions would bear their own expenses without any draw upon the church treasury, or the hindrance of moneys paid thereto, in pursuance of God's law. The request was granted, by the general conference in April, at Kirtland, in 1883.

The first annual reunion was held at Leland's Grove, commencing on the 16th of September, President Joseph Smith in charge. The Saints manifested their appreciation of the glorious privilege by a general gathering there, and although there was considerable rain and many were poorly provided for with tents, not a murmur of dissatisfaction was heard throughout the entire session, not a single meeting was lost, and the approval of heaven was given, in the presence and enjoyment of the Holy Spirit to a very great degree, and the Saints felt amply paid for coming together to worship God, and hold sweet communion with each other. Notwithstanding the heavy rains and consequent muddy roads, it was the unanimous voice of those present to hold another reunion in the coming year. The choice was for Garner's Grove, situated in Raglan township, Harrison county, Iowa. Time of commencement, October 4th, 1884.

Accordingly, hundreds of the Saints assembled, Presidents Smith and Blair among them, the former in charge, and a noble corps of elders from various parts, and another glorious season was had and fifty souls added to the church. The desire for reunions began to spread, and the coming year one was held at Wheeler's Grove at which President Blair presided, assisted by the writer and Bro Gillen. A refreshing season was had, and many were added to the church. The annual reunion for 1885 was held at Galland's Grove; President Blair in charge. A goodly number of elders were present, and the approval of heaven was again manifest, notwithstanding the inclement weather. Twenty-six were baptized. It was now decided that the Little Sioux and Galland's Grove districts unite in purchasing a large tent. Means were subscribed and Mr. S. B. Kibler was authorized to purchase one. He did so, and at our next reunion which was held at Garner's Grove, the Presidency did us the honor of dedicating our laage canvas tent, which is capable of seating about one thousand people. I believe some twenty-five were baptized and confirmed during this reunion, and a glorious time of rejoicing was had before the Lord. Thousands of people were with us during the two Sabbaths. Another annual reunion was determined upon and a committee was appointed to select the place for the coming year. The Wheeler's Grove Saints secured another at that place for the coming year, to be held prior to the general annual reunion, which I understood was well attended and greatly favored of the Lord.

The committee on time and place of general annual reunion fixed upon Garner's Grove as the place, and October 2d as the time, on which date the Saints wended their way from their homes, some coming hundreds of miles, and a few more than a thousand miles. Presidents Smith and Blair were called to the chair and some fifteen elders broke the bread of life to all who came hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Forty-two were baptized and confirmed, and at the close every one felt amply repaid for attending these meetings.

In August, 1887, I had the privilege of attending one at Plum Hollow, President Smith in charge, which was a grand success. But our General Annual Reunion was held at Harlan, commencing September 24th, Presidents Smith and Blair in charge. Seventeen Elders here preached the word, and twenty three were baptized and confirmed.

Missouri Valley was the place chosen by the committee for this year's general Annual Reunion, and the time October 6th. The citizens of the town gave us entire control of their beautiful Fair Ground, with buildings thereon if needed. President Blair being on hand from the first was chosen to take charge. After a few days President Smith gladdened the hearts of the Saints by his presence. Bro. J. R. Lambert preached a very opportune discourse at the opening of the preaching services. Twenty-four sermons were preached by the traveling ministry, and the presidency. Seventeen were baptized and confirmed, and the Saints were greatly strengthened for their works of faith and labors of love. I must not forget to state that I also attended a glorious Reunion meeting at Plum Hollow, Fremont County, Iowa, and another at Wilber, Saline county, Nebraska. President Blair presiding at the former and Elder James Caffall of the Twelve at the latter. Twenty five were baptized and confirmed at Plum Hollow and nine at Wilber.

But grand and glorious as were the preaching seasons, they were eclipsed by the prayer and testimony meetings, in which the Spirit of God was poured out in such degree as to make every heart feel like shouting Hosannah! Hosannah! to God and the Lamb! There was no excitement, more than the gentle influence of the Holy Spirit would produce upon the humble, seeking soul, moving him to his duty, with a firm determination, born of a holy zeal for God and his truth. The gifts of the gospel were with us in power, and excepting one little ripple, which was calmed by the divine and prevailing influence of the Holy Spirit, there was the most perfect order throughout the prayer and testimony meetings; and indeed throughout all. And when the question was asked by the president, "Shall we hold another annual reunion?" the vast audience with one voice shouted "AYE!" and Garner's Grove was the choice for 1889. But my heart is made glad to know that to-day, from Maine to California, or from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, the districts and missions of the Church are holding their reunion meetings, and it is universally acknowledged that instead of their being burdensome to the Church, they are milestones in the march of progress, as well as mighty engines for the spread of truth, and the salvation of souls. There the Presidency and the Bishopric can meet with hundreds and thousands of the Saints, and while their hearts are softened with the influence of the Holy Spirit, they can teach them more perfectly the things of God. And the Saints can feed in sweet communion on the love of God, and enjoy his smiles, as he draws them nearer to him, and thus they have a foretaste of heavenly bliss.

Hundreds of souls have been brought into the Church through these reunions and thousands of Saints have been strengthened and encouraged to renewed determination to serve the Lord faithfully to the end. Let the good work go on! May every mission and district in the church avail themselves of them, and thereby extend the cause of truth! We do not come together to show our fine clothes, but to worship before the Lord of Hosts in the beauty of holiness, and enjoy sweet communion with each other in the love of God. And we extend to all Saints who can come the cordial invitation to meet with us as often as possible in our general annual reunion wherever it may be held. It is good for our physical natures as well as for the spiritual man to spend eight or ten days together, with our good canvass tents, in the open air. It makes us better acquainted with each other; it strengthens the bond of union by increasing our love; and it also presents a manifestation of the power of truth, such as has not been seen since the days of the apostles; and begets the spirit of inquiry in the minds of thousands, who otherwise would pass on heedless of the marvelous work which God is doing in these last days; but who will be led, like Moses, "to turn aside, and see the strange sight;" Saints of the West High worshipping him according to the rules ordained by him from the foundation of the world. The effect of these meetings is not confined to the numbers baptized there; but the wave of righteousness keeps spreading out, and out, increasing in power until it shall encircle the globe.

May the power and blessing of God attend every means of grace to the perfection of the Saints, and the conversion and salvation of the entire world, is the earnest prayer of

CHARLES DERRY.

WESTON, Iowa, Oct. 29th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Last night we closed a very pleasant conference at the Saint's chapel in Hazel Dell. The congregation at 11 a. m. was densely packed with deeply interested listeners, and so was that at 2:30 p. m. These meetings were said to be the largest ever held in that church. The prospects are good for very fruitful church work in this district for the future. The ministry are united and zealous, and invitations come to them from all parts of the district desiring their labors.

I preached four evenings last week in Crescent to large and most attentive congregations. Bro. Henry Kemp will preach there this week. Church work promises to be rich in good results in that place. The branch is growing, and many both in and out of the church see the need of a commodious chapel for both preaching and Sunday School purposes. Elders D. K. Dodson, W. E. Peak and John Davis, have aided the presiding elder, Benjamin Harding, and the priest, John Evans, in helping forward the work. Not a few inquirers in that place are almost persuaded to unite with the church.

I expect to assist in dedicating the Saints new chapel, in Underwood, next Sunday, and to be in Lamon soon after. We are seeking to procure new subscribers for church publications and meet with some success. The ministry everywhere should aid in this matter for the common good.

W. W. BLAIR.

CLEARWATER, Neb, Oct. 20th.

Dear Herald:—Since last writing from De Witt, Nebraska, I have visited Fairbury, preaching ten times, and left some almost persuaded. Thence to Wilber camp meeting, and from there to Beatrice, where I baptized two and preached twenty-one times with splendid interest, the house being crowded each night. And then home to see after my affairs and attend the reunion at Missouri Valley. I left home the 22d of October for northern Nebraska, and have preached once since coming here and have an appointment for to-morrow night. Many calls for preaching almost puts me to my wits end to respond to them all, so I have concluded to do the best I can and what I can not get around to do will have to go without being attended to. Twenty men could find all they could do in Nebraska and then not get around. My heart is in the work and I have felt a peaceful assurance since leaving home the last time that I was in the path of duty.

HYRUM O. SMITH.

EXPERIENCE ON BEAVER ISLAND WITH JAMES J. STRANG.

Bro. Jos. ph.:—Your favor of October 5th is before me. In reply to you I would say that many of those prophecies which Strang uttered were spoken more than twenty-five years ago, and I can not remember in detail exactly how to get at them. I will therefore state as near as my memory serves me. In the first place he proclaims a gathering at Voree, Wisconsin, where the Saints should wax fat and pleasant in the sight of their enemies. And again: "Thus saith the Lord, I will stretch out mine arm over the waters and on the banks thereof shall the choice of my house be." The place which your father appointed for a gathering of the Saints, according to his letter of appointment was mostly deserted. The Saints now began to build up a church by prophecy on Beaver Island that they might be more easily be protected from the violence of mobs. Things passed on quite smoothly for a year or two when some difficulty arose between us and the fishermen of those islands, which caused us a great deal of trouble and fear. Strang declared that he would return blow for blow and stroke for stroke until the island was made as bare as the back of his hand. I think this was quite or nearly fulfilled, for they now fled to the main lands and made war upon us. Strang then proclaimed that we should never be driven from the island; but now, says Strang, the Saints may behave themselves so badly that they would be driven from the island; but, that if we were driven we should be like a lion driven to the fastnesses of the forest, and as soon as they returned we should be upon their heels and cut them off. He predicted that the island should be very productive; that wheat would grow there that a man standing in it could not see out of it, that a man might stand on tiptoe and reach up with both hands and could not reach out of it, it would be so tall. On another occasion he said that the time was so short that whereas we only had our hundreds we should have our thousands it was not worth while to mention it. It did not come to pass, for it is true that we were scattered abroad instead of increasing in numbers. Strang was crowned king by George J. Adams while on the island. It was at a meeting held at the unfinished tabernacle, built of hewed timber to the height of seven or eight feet and a temporary cover so we could hold meetings in it. When gathered there on the eighth day of July, I think about the year 1852, there was a curtain drawn in front of the stand so as to conceal from view anything that might occur behind. But as George Adams was a play actor, we expected to see some great performance. When ready to exhibit the curtain was drawn aside and to our great astonishment we beheld Strang sitting in a large chair with a crown on his head and scepter in his hand by which he installed those whom he ordained to office. Such a scene never presented itself before nor since. Such a horror of darkness as was cast over that scene I shall never forget. It was also spoken of by others. Then George J. Adams became animated with some powerful spirit and began to testify that he knew Strang was a prophet and that if he ever denied it he hoped God Almighty would send a thunderbolt and knock his brains out, that his tongue might cleave to the roof of his mouth. The next manifestation was that he received the spirit of prophecy and used language like this: "I see that God's anger is kindled against the powers that be, and destruction from this time forth shall stalk forth at noon-day. I see the ships coming up to battle against the Saints on the island. I see them dashed to shivers upon the shores." And thus ended this scene of terror. The next thing was that some difficulty arose between Sr. Adams and Mr. Strang, by which he accused her of things she was not guilty of. At this time George was gone from the island on some business. When he returned and saw how things were going he left the island with his family. I saw him and wife after this on Mackinaw Island. He said to me, "Brother Loomis, I always thought you to be an honest man, but you are like poor dog Tray; you have been caught in bad company, and now my advice to you is to leave the island, for I tell you Strang is not a prophet of God. I consider him to be a self-confessed impostor. Strang wanted me to get a couple of bottles of phosphorus and dress myself in a long white robe and appear on the highest summit on the island, called Mount Pisgah, break the bottles, make an illumination and blow a trumpet and disappear so that he might make it appear that an angel had made them a visit; that it might beget faith in the Saints." I said to him, "Brother Adams, how is it that you deny the testimony given by you so long ago, that you knew Strang was a prophet of God?" "Well, brother Loomis, I will tell you: I was in the spirit of Strang then." I have since thought that if he ever spoke the truth it was then. I speak of these things that you may see how we were Strang led. I was in the spirit of Strang and foretold some things that would befall us which never came to pass; but I believe that myself and another brother at one time had the Spirit of God, for we prophesied that Strang would be killed, and the Saints would be driven from the island, which truly did come to pass. I shall now make some statements in regard to others who were the chief men of the kingdom. Bro. Samuel Graham, I think, president of the Twelve, declared that he and Strang made those plates that Strang claimed to translate the Book of The Law from. But they in the first place prepared the plates and coated them with beeswax and then formed the letters and cut them in with a pen knife and then exhibited them to the rest of the Twelve. The facts were Graham apostatized and left the island, taking his family and Strang's first wife, Mary, with him to Voree, Wisconsin. At this time Strang was at Detroit, Michigan. His wife never returned to him; he had four others besides and some concubines. Bro. Samuel Bacon says that in repairing Strang's house he found hid behind the ceiling the fragments of those plates which Strang made the Book of The Law from. He turned infidel and left the island. One more item and then I close: In regard to Strang's letter of appointment from your father which was received just before his death I have this to say: Your father proclaimed that the "wolves were upon the scent and he was waiting to be offered up if such be the will of the Almighty; but my heart yearns over my little ones, but I hope God will be a father to them for I can claim the fulfillment of his promises face to face, who is a covenant keeping God and faithful not to the utmost." I heard him say that God had rejected your father and his seed after him because he had sinned a grievous sin in that he had taken Law's wife and that was the reason he was killed, and God had rejected him and his seed after him as he did old Saul before David. I think he put in a very bad link here in his chain.

Now, dear brothers, I have stated from memory some occurrences of twenty-five years or more ago and you can gather from this journal whatever you want for use. I could state many more things but do not think it wisdom to do so. Our old patriarch, Father Chase, gave many blessings which looked hideous and abominable unto me, conferred upon the heads of the brethren. I am satisfied that we were led by a spirit powerful, but not good. Those who are in the Salt Land are in the same fix. I have thoughts of writing a piece to the Herald to the brethren of Beaver Island. I love them, and I know they have been deceived. O, how my heart aches for them. Great God, when will they cast off the shackles of sin and return to their Father's house where there is bread enough and to spare! Strang had a revelation to baptize for the dead on Beaver Island; to baptize in a small lake called Font Lake and did so. The Book of Covenants, page 301, says: "But at the end of this appointment your baptisms shall not be acceptable unto me and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead saith the Lord your God. And after this time your baptism for the dead by those who are scattered abroad are not acceptable unto me saith the Lord." It is plain that he was not upon the right track here but did that which God had forbidden. You had better look this matter up in regard to baptisms for the dead. See also Book of Covenants, page 243, commencing at the fifth verse. It shows what will follow in case they do not observe all of his commandments, that he would chastise them with a sore chastisement, that he would visit them with fire. This prediction has been fulfilled. Their beautiful temple was burned and the inhabitants of Zion have been under the chastising hand of the Almighty ever since. I do not wish to condemn any one for things that they are not guilty of, but I think James J. Strang has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. I can not say but what he received the letter of appointment from your father. I think perhaps that may be true, but I think if he did he made bad use of it.

CHAUNCY LOOMIS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

JUNITA, Michigan, Oct. 27th.

Bro. Joseph:—The work is still rolling on in the eastern part of Michigan. I feel greatly encouraged by the liberty that I have had in presenting the gospel, also the interest manifested by the people where I have labored. I have been making some new openings, and one is near Cairo where we are having an interesting time. Some are fighting for us (that is with the tongue), and some against us. As usual the church members are the most opposed to the work. Last evening on entering the school-house we found this inscription on the black board: "The Latter Day Saints or Mormons will be rode on a rail without fail." But that did not deter me from opening meeting; but after we had passed through our opening exercises and I had spoken about five minutes, the devil's battery began operation on the outside of the house and the stale eggs and broken glass flew about in the inside. Then the satanic troops beat a hasty retreat. As for me, I intended by the Lord's help to hold the fort, as I have received instructions that there is a people there that will obey the gospel. I intend to return there next week and I expect to make another opening three miles north in the next school district.

Yours in bonds,
LEVI PHELPS.

ODIN, Illinois, Oct. 28th.

Editors Herald:—I see in the Herald of October 27th, a letter from H. B. Case. He referred to John 14: 12. I am glad he has started on that point. I want to know something about the text found in Mark 16: 16, 19. It reads that believers shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover. Does it mean believers or the elders? I write for information.

P. D. SUBLETT.

[Read James 5: 14. This with the numerous instances of fulfillment of Christ's prediction in Mark 16: 16-19, show clearly that these blessings were bestowed through the ministrations of God's chosen and ordained ministry.—ED.]

CRANSTON, R. I., Oct. 17th.

Bro. Elaur:—I feel it my duty to praise the Lord with all the Saints for the truth and blessings I have received since I obeyed the gospel. Although a poor scholar in the school of Christ, yet I desire to live and die in it. I love to read the Herald, Hope and Autumn Leaves; they contain so much good news and spiritual food for the soul to subsist upon. I do not think I could get along comfortably without them. May the Lord bless and help us all inasmuch as we strive to do right, and help us to live that we may all meet at the great reunion that is going to be by and by, when Christ shall come to earth again to reign a thousand years. Let us trim our lamps and keep them burning. This is my first attempt to write to the Herald. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may grow in grace and a further knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus; and that we may all be prepared to meet at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Your sister,
CELIA E. SEARLE.

OLIVET, Dak., Oct. 26th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have just got back home from a trip out west. Have had a good time. Went out for the purpose of meeting Elder Allyn, of the Christian, in a theological contest. We finished one proposition and will soon commence on another. Bro. Allyn is a fair man, and is already surprised at the evidences we are able to produce in favor of our work. God was with me in power, and a great many people are pleased with our view of the scriptures. I feel greatly encouraged. I love the work and nothing shall turn me from my purpose, God helping, of offering the rest of my life for the cause of truth. I wanted to go to the Reunion, and calculated all summer to go, but things turned up so I could not go. But hope to be at the General Conference next spring.

Yours,
E. E. WHEELER.

OTHER SIDE OF THE PICTURE.

DEAR HERALD:—Reading the article of Bro. W. H. Kelley suggested to my mind the idea of presenting the other side, but not by way of complaint; for he who complains is unwise, as it neither lightens his labors nor pleases the Master. But as a change, and lest one side of the picture should grow monotonous, I will give your readers an account of a preaching tour I have just returned from.

Hearing of a place some thirty miles from here where I thought some preaching could be done, I prevailed on Bro. N. T. Fields to take me over. We lost our way and were obliged to stop in a settlement, where we tried until after dark to get a place to stop and finally gave it up, and tramp-like, crawled supperless into a haystack, with a lap-robe for covering. And be it known, this is not "Eden California!" No; the cold winds and threatening snow forcibly reminded me of that fact. But most all things have an end and so did that night, when we crawled out, shook off the hay and struck out to hunt breakfast; fully determined that some one must give us something to eat, and it should be remembered that we were not going it on ministerial cheek; we were too hungry for that. We tried the first house we came to and after considerable talk were given something to eat, for which we paid. We were at our destination, a small town having one house of worship, built by the citizens but under the control of the Methodists. However, we were favored by obtaining the use of it for that week, and next week it was to be in use. We put up notices for meeting that evening and went out in the country to find a friend and some dinner, and found him some four miles from town, but in no fix to keep us; we got dinner and took in enough for supper. At the appointed time we met a very fair sized turn out, and for once in my life I concluded to tell the congregation just how matters stood; that I was homeless, and that if I remained among them, they must provide for my wants; that I was not preaching for money, and consequently could not pay hotel bills. And I may here remark that I believe it to be our duty to make our wants known, so that people may have an opportunity to help us, and that the burden be thus less on the Saints.

After meeting a doctor offered us a place to sleep, and in the morning we went to the hotel to see about some breakfast, when a gentleman asked us to take breakfast. We then drove out into the country several miles for dinner and went without supper. That night we were greeted with a larger congregation and much of the good Spirit was given to assist in explaining the word, but no one said, "Come home with us" but the doctor, on whom we did not want to impose, as it put him to much inconvenience, so we drove out to friend number one and procured a couple of quilts and took to the hay again. In the morning we got breakfast there and drove eight miles for our dinner, and so matters went until Saturday night, when the ice seemed to break and a man came up at the close of the meeting and gave us an order for a bed at the hotel and in the morning another paid for our breakfast and several expressed their disapproval of the way matters had gone. But if any of you laborers whom the brethren always meet, and the sisters make so very comfortable every place you go, think that this being peddled around in such a manner is pleasant, the actual experience in it may, if you should chance to have a little experience of the kind, change your minds.

I like to see exhibitions of charity, but it is not pleasant coming from so many sources. But I suppose one should be thankful for it in any way that our Father sees fit to supply us.

By this time Mormonism was getting in the air, things were getting interesting, and our Methodist friends uneasy. The wolf had come and was in their house, but as the time was so near out it was deemed best to let me continue over Sunday morning. I attended their Sunday School, and at eleven o'clock spoke to a fine, orderly congregation, two leading Methodist ministers being present. The subject of our Sunday School lesson, Matthew 6th, "Beware of false prophets," which may have been selected for my benefit. At any rate I selected it for their benefit, and the Lord helped me to explain it to them. After meeting a merchant came to me and said if I would return that they (the citizens) would see that I had a house if the Methodists' refused me theirs; and that my board would be settled for just so long as I would remain. Many others also expressed themselves as highly pleased with the views we expressed and one man, a lawyer, gave me five dollars. I shall return if all goes well. I was told that the newspaper would attack us in the old way, viz., that "Joseph was a bad man," and consequently Christ's teachings must be untrue. About every other man in Oregon seems to have been a near neighbor of Joseph. He did not lack company if all these fellows told the truth.

I pulled out that evening for an appointment at the place first mentioned, but found no one there. That night I was taken sick, so I left and came here where there are some Saints. I am now feeling much better.

When I last wrote I was at Drift Creek on the coast, where I baptized two and helped to organize a branch. I left the Saints feeling well and from there came to Sweet Home and preached around in different places and baptized two more,

Bro. Lander did some good work there and I think thoroughly converted several. It requires a long time to convert people in Oregon and I have no idea how long it would take to baptize them, never having seen any converted and baptized. Those I baptized were, I think, converted by others in the past. Brn. Haws and J. C. Clapp are highly spoken of by many and some of the people want Bro. Clapp to return and tell them where to find the book "Zackamirris." He will find a warm welcome in his old fields. From the above mentioned place I came here to the John Day country, where I have been laboring for the past two months. There are some real Saints here, as in other places in Oregon. I expect to go next month into Washington Territory. I feel loth to leave here, but where duty calls, there I should be.

Bro. Lander is not with me, and I am alone, but I am feeling well in mind and have until recently been well in body. I rejoice to see the good work that has been done in Minnesota. Nobler Saints do not live on earth than those of Minnesota.

HIRAM L. HOLT.

MOUNT VERNON, Oregon, Oct. 17th.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., October 26th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Am happy to say that the work of the Lord here is onward. On the 6th inst. Bro. J. W. Gillen set our new chapel apart for worship and while he preached the sermon the Spirit of the Lord was with him in such power that all who heard were greatly blessed and encouraged. Brn. G. A. Blakeslee and E. L. Kelly also gave good instruction on the temporal law for the onward progress of the Lord's work, and it was just what some of the Saints have been wanting to hear, for some have now an understanding and are willing to obey that requirement and pay their tithing. I am satisfied that the Lord will greatly bless such. Those who have paid their tithing say the Lord is as good as his word to them. May the good Master help us all to do his will is my prayer.

I remain yours in hope,

NOAH NEPHI COOKE

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Oct. 26th.

Brethren Joseph and William:—Perhaps a few words from this part of the Lord's vineyard would be eagerly read by some, as they look forward with a desire to meet in conference where those not of our number take so much interest in securing such a gathering. I am glad to state that the Saints here show a marked degree of improvement for the better. The Spirit seems to be given in a greater measure, which causes the hearts of many to rejoice; and, as a result, a larger attendance at the meetings is observed; especially is this the case with the sisters; which I believe to be the result of the Prayer League.

I for one feel a great interest in the work; and I hope that the truth may again gladden the hearts of those who once received it; of which class we have a great many in this city. I find here about fifty persons that obeyed the truth during the Martyr's time and have since fallen away; some of whom are among the wealthiest in the city, and who belong to the Board of Trade that did so much in securing the step that was taken last April; which goes to show that they still have an interest in this latter day work. While such as those reside here, there are also some of those that were concerned in the plot to drive the Mormons from the state in 1837-8, and also others, such as the Doniphans.

On Sunday last I had the pleasure of baptizing one of those that had strayed from the fold since the days of Joseph the Martyr, but had not forgotten the sound of the Master's voice.

She is a very devout woman, and I think will make a good Saint and be worthy of the name she bears.

During the political campaign it is almost useless to try to get people to listen to anything but corruptible politics. Yes, corruptible, and I find that the less interest I take in such things the more of the Spirit I enjoy.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain yours in Christ,

J. W. PETERSON.

WEIR CITY, Kan., Oct. 23d.

Brother Joseph:—I attended the conference of the Spring River district and made many acquaintances among the Saints and was strengthened and encouraged to go on. I heard good sermons but do not remember the names of the elders. They gave good and timely advice to quite a number of Saints. I think the work is advancing in this part slowly but surely. I would like to do more than I am for the advancement of truth but it seems that I can not get started right. I hope the time will soon be when I can go and preach wherever I wish, for I know that the gospel is true and that I am called to labor for the advancement of the same. I will here state that I have had some experience in sectarianism and that there is no place among them that would satisfy me. Ever praying for the advancement of the truth, yours in the faith,

W. D. CLARK.

WINCHESTER, Tenn. Oct. 24th.

Brother Joseph:—One year ago we parted with you at Bro. Chatburn's; came here, have passed a very pleasant year; a nice climate, plenty of fruit, lovely flowers, splendid vegetables; but no church privileges. But as it was the will of the Father that we should come I am content, trusting that it may be for some good purpose. The people are kind, conscientious, very sociable in many ways; but when it comes to What church do you belong to? they are surprised and a look of pity is in the face. One lady here was raised in Ohio, and says she knows all about the Book of Mormon,—was there and knows it all. She has been matron of the Mary Sharp College for thirty-eight years, I have loaned her some of our books. She gave me a look of pity and said, "I will have brother Dulby, my pastor, call on you and see if he can not convince you that you are deluded."

There are seven churches here and it is a Babel indeed. One lady asked me for a Voice of Warning; after she had read it she said she could not understand it at all. I pray that the day may soon come when some one may be sent this way with the glorious news of the gospel restored. I send you a specimen of wood that grows on the Cumberland mountains. There has been quite an excitement about it this summer, and many comments are made about it here; such as this, that it is the very wood that the ark was built of, and that it can not be found any where else, only on the north side of the said mountains, and a small strip just across the line in Alabama. I saw some of it the past summer when in bloom. It was very nice. It was in long bunches, pure white, about a foot long, very fragrant. It is called gopher wood, by some; by others, shittim or chittim, or mountain mahogany. They are asking where did Noah get the wood? Did he build the ark here? Where was the garden of Eden? Was it here? Now is the time to investigate.

I love the work and am thankful to our father for all his mercies to me. It makes makes my heart glad when I read of the additions that are being made to the church; and I ask that when prayers are offered for the scattered ones, that I may be remembered.

In the one faith,

MARY LEE.

FLAGLER, IOWA, Oct. 22d.

Dear Herald:—While at the Reunion Bro. Blakeslee requested me to come by way of Des Moines and transact some business for him. I came to Boonesboro and stopped with the Saints over night; then on to Des Moines. I could do nothing then, on account of the branch being in a very bad condition; one for Paul and the other for Apollos. I intended to go on to my field of labor in eastern Iowa; but the Spirit directed me to go to Flagler. In obedience to its impression I took the first train for there, and found that the Saints had been praying for God to send some one there to preach Sr. Buxton's funeral sermon. I landed at the depot at five p. m., and the word soon went around that the Mormon preacher was back; and at half past seven I had a fair congregation to speak to. The next day I went ten miles farther down to Olivet to see Sr. Laughlin and family; for Sr. Laughlin had been very sick. I found her much better in answer to the prayers of the Saints at the Reunion. After a visit with them I returned to Flagler; where the congregations kept increasing at every meeting. On Sunday, at 2:30, I preached Sr. Buxton's funeral discourse. She was a Saint indeed. The evening before she died the Saints had prayer meeting at her house, and she thanked God that she felt so much better. Then she fell asleep, calm and peaceful, from which she will not awake until the first resurrection shall take place. May we all live as she did, so when our time shall come, that we may be ready to go, as she was.

There is a good interest at Flagler and I believe that a number will be gathered in there yet. While I was preaching on Sunday a man who was well loaded with anti-prohibition came into the Hall and halloed: "Hold on there, old fellow, they say the Mormons are no good!" I stopped and said, "Friend will you please be seated and keep quiet?" "No, sir!" By this time one of the brethren who sat close to the door, asked the man to go out with him. When they got out the brother asked him what he came in to disturb the meeting for? He said that he did not come in to disturb the meeting. "But," said he, "I was a Methodist class leader once; but they acted so bad that I couldn't stay with them any longer; so I left them and got to drinking a little. I want them to know that I don't go anything on them; so I came up here to help you fellows. For you fellows are all right. I thought it was Sunday School when I went in, and I only went in to give you a dollar to help the thing along, so here is a dollar for to help you fellows along." He handed the brother a dollar and walked off. After meeting he came where

I was and apologized to me and said that he was afraid he made a fool of himself.

This morning I went down to the water and conducted three more into the kingdom of God. One other was ready, but was prevented. Others are near the kingdom, and I think will soon be with us. O what a pleasure it is to labor where the Saints are trying to be Saints. Both members and outsiders desire me to continue here a week longer. I only wish that I could, for God's Spirit was with us in power at the confirmation to-day. All through the meetings I had good liberty in presenting the words of life. From here I go to eastern Iowa, for the winter. I feel encouraged and strengthened since the Reunion, and my desire is to go on in this great work. My permanent address is Sonora, Pow-sheik county, Iowa.

MYTHS, TRADITIONS AND SACRED LEGENDS.

ANCIENT historians of most all nations lead us back to a period in the world's history where we see little but myths and traditions. It has always been an interesting inquiry, "How much of fact is veiled under this mythical dress?" Labored studies, with improved methods of inquiry have of late years produced good results, confirming the books believed to be sacred by the Saints.

These fragments of history are gathered from heathen sources by men who were anxious to know what had happened in this world of ours. We notice also some discoveries that seem to confirm some of these myths.

Berosus, the Chaldean historian who lived in the time of Alexander the Great, (see Tatian), says: "In the reign of Xisuthrus there was a great flood." He gives the following account of it: "Kronos, appearing to him in his sleep, declared that on the fifteenth day of the month Daecias, men should be destroyed by a flood. He commanded the king therefore to commit to writing an account of all things, and to bury it in Sippara, the city of the sun, and then to construct a vessel and to embark in it with his kindred and his intimate friends; also to deposit therein food and drink, and to take in birds and quadrupeds, and having put all things in order to set sail. . . . He, therefore, obeying the command, constructed a vessel, whose length was five stadia, and its breadth two stadia; and after he had gathered into it all things as directed, he embarked with his wife and children and intimate friends. But when the flood came, and forthwith ceased, Xisuthrus let go some of the birds, but not finding any food, however, or any place to alight, they came again to the ship. After some days Xisuthrus let loose the birds again, but they again came back to the ship, having their feet covered with mud. But being let go a third time they returned no more to the ship. Xisuthrus then understood that the land had appeared, and passing through a certain part of the seams of the ship, and seeing that it had grounded on a certain mountain he went forth with his wife and daughter and pilot and saluted the ground. And when he had built, and sacrificed to the gods he and those who came out of the ship with him disappeared. Now those who remained in the ship when Xisuthrus and his companions did not return went forth to seek him, calling his name aloud. But Xisuthrus himself was never more seen by them; there came, however, a voice from the air, which commanded them to be dutiful worshippers of the gods; since he, in consequence of his piety, had gone to live with the gods. . . . It also directed them to go again to Babylon, and, according as it had been decreed, to take up the letters from Sippara, and communicate them to men whom they would find in the country of Armenia. . . .

They accordingly came to Babylon, dug up the letter which had been buried at Sippara, restored the temples, and rebuilt Babylon."—See Muller's Fragmental History, Vol. 2 p. 501 par. 7, and Eusebius Chronica 1, 3, p. 14-16. Also Syncell Chron. p. 30, 31, and Hist. Evidences, p. 275.

Abydenus, who is thought by Bauer to have lived in the time of Alexander, (See Gruber's Encyclopedia), says: "After Euedoreschus several others reigned, among whom was Sisithrus, whom Kronos [Chronos?] forewarned that there would be a great abundance of rain on the 15th of Daecius, and he commanded him to hide everything which pertained to letters in Heliopolis, in Sippara. Sisithrus, having performed all these things immediately sailed towards Armenia and what the gods had foretold straightway came to pass.

Now on the third day, when the rain had ceased, he let loose some birds to try whether they could find any dry land above the water; but finding nothing save a wide-yawning sea, where there was no place for them to rest, they came back to Sisithrus. He sent forth others afterwards, with the same result. But when on a third trial he succeeded, (for the birds returned with their feet covered with mud), the gods snatched him from the view of men, and the vessel, from the fragments of its planks used as amulets, furnished to the inhabitants of Armenia effectual antidotes against poison."—Fragmental History, Gr. Vol. 4 p. 280, Fr. 1 Syncel. Chron. p. 70. Compare also Eusebius Chron. 1:7; 22, Ed. Mai.

The following is the account of the deluge as rendered from the clay tablets discovered by Layard in the ruins of the palace of Ashur-bani-pal, now in the British Museum. It was read on December 3d, 1871, by the late George Smith, and was first published in the "Transactions of the Biblical Archaeology" in 1874. It was afterwards revised and republished in the Records of the Past, Vol. 12, p. 135-141. We quote from "Ancient Religions" p. 57; also Layard's, Nineveh and History of Books and Coins p. 113: "Hea spake to me and said:—'Son of Ubaratutu, make a ship after this fashion, . . . for I destroy the sinners and life, . . . and cause to enter all the seed of life, that thou may'st preserve them. The ship which thou shalt make, . . . cubits shall be the measure of the length thereof, and . . . cubits the measure of the breadth and height thereof; and into the deep thou shalt launch it.' I understood, and said to Hea, my Lord, 'Hea my Lord, this which thou commandest me, I will perform. Though I be derided both by young and old, it shall be done.' Hea opened his mouth and spake, 'This shalt thou say to them . . . (hiatus of six lines) . . . and enter thou into the ship and shut to the door; and bring into the midst of it thy grain, and thy furniture, and thy goods, thy wealth, thy servants, thy female slaves, and thy young men. And I will gather to thee the beast of the field, and the animals, and I will bring them to thee: and they shall be enclosed within thy door.' Hasisadra his mouth opened and spake, and said to Hea, his Lord: 'There was not upon the earth a man who could make the ship . . . strong [planks] I brought . . . on the fifth day . . . in its circuit fourteen measures, (it measured), in its sides fourteen measures it measured, . . . and upon it I placed its roof and closed the door. On the sixth day I embarked in it: on the seventh I examined it without: on the eighth I examined it within; plants against the influx of the waters I placed: where I saw rents and holes I added what was required. Three measures of bitumen I poured over the outside: three measures of bitumen I poured over the inside . . . [five lines obscure and mutilated] . . . wine in receptacles I collected like the waters of a river; also food, like the dust of the earth, I collected in boxes [and stored up]. And Shamas the material of the ship completed [and made it] strong. And the reed oars of the ship I caused them to bring [and place] above and below. . . . All I possessed of silver; all I possessed of gold; all I possessed of the seed of life, I caused to ascend into the ship. All my male servants; all my female servants; all the beasts of the field; all the animals; all the sons of the people, I caused to go up. A flood Shamas made, and thus he spake in the night: 'I will cause it to rain from heaven heavily: Enter into the midst of the ship and shut the door.' The command of Shamas is obeyed, and then The raging of a storm in the morning arose, from the horizon of heaven extending far and wide. Vul in the midst of it thundered: Nebo and Saru went in front: the throne bearers spread over mountains and plains: the destroyer, Nergal, overturned: Ninip went in front and cast down: the spirits spread abroad destruction: in their fury they swept the earth: the flood of Vul reached to heaven. The bright earth to a waste was turned: the storm o'er its surface swept: from the face of the earth was life destroyed: the strong flood that had whelmed mankind reached to heaven: brother saw not brother: the flood did not spare the people. Even in heaven the gods feared the tempest, and sought refuge in the abode of Anu. Like dogs the gods crouched down, and cowered together.

Spake Ishtar, like a child uttered the great goddess her speech: 'When the world to corruption turned, then I in the presence of the gods prophesied evil. When I in their presence prophesied evil, then to evil were devoted all my children. I, the mother, have given birth to my people, and lo! now like the young of fishes they fill the sea.' The gods were weeping for the spirits with her; the gods in their seats were sitting in lamentation; covered were their lips on account of the coming evil. Six day and nights passed; the winds, the flood, the storm overwhelmed. On the seventh day, in its course was calmed the storm; and all the tempest, which had destroyed like an earthquake was quieted. The flood he caused to dry; the wind and the deluge ended. I beheld the tossing of the sea, and mankind all turned to corruption; like reeds the corpses floated.

I opened the window, and the light broke over my face. It passed. I sat down and wept; over my face flowed my tears. I saw the shore at the edge of the sea; for twelve measures the land arose. To the country of Nizir went the ship; the mountain of Nizir stopped the ship; to pass over it was not able. The first day and the second day the mountain of Nizir, the same; the third day and the fourth day the mountain of Nizir, the same; the fifth and sixth the mountain of Nizir, the same; in the course of the seventh day I sent out a dove, and it left. The dove went to and fro, and a resting place it did not find, and it returned. I sent forth a raven, and it left; the raven went, and corpses on the water it saw, and it did eat: it swam, and wandered away, and returned not. I sent forth the animals to the four winds: I poured out a libation: I built an altar on the peak of the mountain: seven jugs of wine I took; at the bottom I placed reeds, pines and spices. The gods collected to the burning: the gods collected to the burning. Like Sumpe (?) over the sacrifice they gathered."

At the head of the Babylonian cosmogony stands not the flood but creation. Their account bears wonderful resemblance to the Scripture story. Muller, quoting Berosus, says:—"He says there was a time when the universe was but darkness and water, and in these were generated monstrous animals of strange forms. . . . And besides these there were fishes and reptiles, and a vast number of the wonderful animals. . . . And over all these ruled a woman, whose name was Hornoraka. Now this word in the language of the Chaldees is translated Thalath, but in the Greek Thalassa, that is, the sea. Now while all things were in this condition, Belus returned, and cutting the woman asunder in the midst, made of one half of her the earth, and of the other half of the heaven, and destroyed the animals. He says that this is allegorical cosmogony. For when the universe was in a fluid state, and the other gods mixed the blood which flowed from it with the earth, and so formed men; whence it came to pass that they are intelligent, and partake of the divine wisdom. Then Belus, divining the darkness, separated the earth and the heaven from each other, and brought the world into order; and the animals that could not endure the power of the light were destroyed. Then Belus, seeing that the place was desolate, though fruitful, commanded one of the gods to cut off his own head, and mix the flowing blood with the earth, and to form men and beasts able to breathe the air. Belus also formed the stars, and the moon, and the seven planets."—Muller's Fragments, vol. 2, p. 496, fr's. 1, 5. Compare Syncell Chron, p. 29, 30, and Hist., Evid., Lecture 2, p. 66, note 61, on page 273.

George Rawlinson in his Bamton lectures, (Hist. Evidences), lecture two, quoting Berosus, says: "At this time the ancient race of men were so puffed up with their strength and tallness of stature, that they began to despise and contemn the gods; and labored to erect that very lofty tower which in now called Babylon, intending to scale heaven. But when the building approached the sky, behold, the gods called in the aid of the winds, and by their help overturned the tower, and cast it to the ground. The name of the ruins is still called Babel; because until this time all men had used the same speech, but now there was sent upon them a confusion of many and diverse tongues."—Hist. Evi., p. 70. Thus we have from Berosus and Abydenus (heathen historians) the Chaldean version of those events mentioned by Moses in Genesis. We see in these myths the earth "without form and void" and "darkness upon the face of the deep." The dividing of the waters, the "light;" sun, moon and stars. Man created from the "dust of the ground." Xisuthrus or Sisithrus (Noah) warned by God of a deluge, is saved in the ark. The tower is built, confusion follows. Further, between the first man and the deluge "ten generations." Berosus says:—"Alorus [the first man] reigned thirty-six thousand years; his son Alaparus, ten thousand eight hundred years; then followed in succession eight others whose reigns were of equal or greater length, ending with Xisuthrus, under whom the great deluge took place. Berosus, if we trust Eusebius, makes these ten kings to have reigned 432,000 years. We may see, even in this exaggeration, a glimpse of the truth, "that the lives of the Patriarchs were extended far beyond the term which has been the limit in later ages. This truth seems to have been known to many of the ancients." Josephus writing on the longevity of the Patriarchs says: "All those who have written on the subject of antiquities, both among the Greeks and among the Barbarians, bear witness to the truth of my words, for Manetho, who wrote the chronicles of the Egyptians, and Berosus, who collected those of the Chaldeans, and Molus and Hestiacces, and besides these Hieronymus the Egyptian, and those who composed the Phoenician annals, agree with what I have said. Hesiod also, and Hecataeus, Hellanicus and Acusilaus, and besides these Ephorus, relate that the ancients used to live a thousand years."—Antiquity of Jews, 1, 3.

The authentic history of Babylonia commenced in the twenty-third century, B. C. "Sir Henry Rawlinson regards the earliest inscribed bricks in the Babylonian series as dating from about 2200 B. C."—See George Rawlinson's, Hist. Lecture 2, p. 53, and note 253, also his Herodotus, vol. 1, pp. 435, 440. "The modern Mughair (Ur) has furnished some of the most ancient of the Babylonian inscriptions. It seems to have been the primeval capital of Chaldea. The inscriptions which are either on brick or on clay cylinders and which are somewhat rudely executed, have been assigned to about the twenty-second century before Christ."—Lecture two, page 53, and note 21, page 253, and his Herodotus, vol. 1, p. 440. "This mythical history reaches back of this," (464 and 80). "The native tradition seems to be that Babylon was founded 1903 years before Alexander's capture of it, or B. C. 2234." "Great boastings have been made of the antiquity of the astronomical observations taken by the Babylonians. Josephus tells us that Berosus, the Babylonian historian and astronomer, agreed with Moses concerning the corruption of mankind and the deluge; and Aristotle, who was curious in examining the truth of what was reported relating to these observations, desired Calisthenes to send him the most certain accounts that he could find of this particular among the Babylonians. Calisthenes sent him observations of the heavens which had been made during one thousand nine hundred and three years, computing from the origin of the Babylonian monarchy, to the time of Alexander. This carries up the account as high as one hundred and fifteen years after the flood which was within fifteen years after the tower of Babel was built."—See Religious Ency. p. 163.

The Chinese, like the Hindoos, and Babylonians, carry back the history of the world for several hundred thousand years. Their own history as a nation, however, does not profess to commence till about 2600, B. C., and authentic accounts, according to the views of those who regard their early literature with most favor, go back only to the twenty-second century B. C. (See Remusat Ant., vol. 1, p. 65). He says: "The history of China runs back with certainty to the twenty-second century before our era, and some respectable traditions permit us to carry back the point of departure four centuries earlier, to the year 2637 before Jesus Christ." Compare Mailla History of China, vol. 1, and Barron Bunsen's Egypt, vol. 3, p. 379, 407. Their traditions speak of a "first heaven," "an age of innocence," "the whole creation enjoyed a state of happiness, when everything was beautiful, everything was good; all things were perfect in their kind," whereunto succeeded a "second heaven" introduced by a great convulsion. "The pillars of heaven were broken, the earth shook to its foundation, the heavens sunk lower towards the north; the sun, the moon, and the stars changed their motions, the earth fell to pieces and the waters enclosed within its bosom burst forth with violence, and overflowed it." "Man having rebelled against heaven, the system of the universe was totally disordered." See Faber's Bamton Lecture for 1801; also Horace Mosaicae, chapter 4, pp. 147, 148. Historical Evidences 267, 268.

The first king of China was Fohi. The myths surrounding him are grand. The Chinese say he "had no father." So Noah, being the great progenitor of the post-diluvians, stands in relation to them as did Adam to the antediluvians—fatherless. Fohi's mother is said to have conceived him encompassed by a rainbow; he is said to have bred seven kinds of creatures which he used to sacrifice to the Supreme Spirit of heaven and earth. The Chon King represents the monarch of China as occupied in drawing off the waters which had deluged the earth. Encyclopedia of R. K. p. 874. In common with most heathens, the Chinese believe in one original, pervading, universal God, greater than, and anterior to, the gods of their pantheon. "He whom the spirit perceiveth, and the eye can not see, is called Y." This, Faber says, "is the hieroglyphic for three in one; but here we are not to find the trace of God's trinity and unity, but of the three branches of the race." See Faber's Origin of H. I., vol. 1, and Bricks from Babel, p. 140.

"The most remarkable tradition of the Hindus: In the Bhagavat it is related that in the reign of Satiavrata, the seventh king of the Hindus, mankind became almost universally wicked, only Satiavrata and seven saints continuing pious. The Lord of the Universe, therefore loving the pious man and intending to preserve him from the sea of destruction by the depravity of the age, thus told him how he was to act: "In seven days from the present time, O thou tamer of enemies, the three worlds will be plunged in an ocean of death; but in the midst of the destroying waves, a large vessel, sent by me for thy use, shall stand before thee. Then shalt thou take all medicinal herbs, all the variety of seeds; and accompanied by seven Saints encircled by pairs of all brute animals, thou shalt enter the spacious ark and continue in it secure from the the flood on one immense ocean without light, except the radiance of thy holy companions. . . . Then shalt thou know my true greatness, rightly named the Supreme Godhead; by my favor all thy questions shall be answered, and thy mind abundantly instructed."

"After seven days, the sea overwhelming its shores deluged the whole earth, while the flood was augmented by showers from immense clouds when Satiavrata saw the vessel advancing, and entered it with his companions, having executed the commands of God.

"After a while the deluge abated, and Satiavrata, having been instructed in all divine and human knowledge, was appointed the seventh Manu, and named Vaivasioata by the Supreme Being. From this Manu the earth was re-peopled, and from him mankind received their name, Manudsha." See Asiatic Researches, pp. 230-4, vol. 1, and Faber's Bamton, Lecture for 1801; also Carwithen's Lecture 3, pp. 87, 88, and G. Rawlinson's Bamton, Lecture 2, p. 61, and note 51. Bricks from Babel, pp. 86, 87.

"The Gomerites believe in the eternity and unchangeableness of their supreme God. Loki was the evil deity, from whom sprung the Great Serpent."—Bricks from Babel, pp. 105, 106, and Mallet's Northern Antiquities. Their myth's commence with "a vast herbless seedless abyss." "A light arose, and creation came slowly from nothingness. The first people were a man and a woman who had three sons. A deluge came wherein all perished except one man and his family, who escaped in a bark. The first man's name was Askus, his wife's Embla. The Eddas had also prophecy, akin to the Apocalypse. An age of evil shall dawn—the winter of the world; the great dragon shall bestir himself, the wolf Frenris shall open his mouth; demons shall attack the gods; Hemidal shall clang his trumpet; Odin, clad in resplendent helmet and cuirass, shall lead the fray; fire shall wrap all things; a new heaven and a new earth shall be born; the just shall dwell in the city of the gods more shining than the sun; He who governs and decrees all things shall come forth of his lofty habitation, to render strict justice unto all, and shall set up kingdom which shall endure forever." McNair Wright, whom we are quoting, "This cosmogony is taken from translations of the Eddas and Voluspa in the British Museum." He adds: "If only the Edda had contained this singular prophecy, one might attribute it to some Christian teaching of the first centuries; but the untouched pages of the Voluspa hold it also, and fix it as an early tradition, warning, and promise, planted deep in the souls of the fathers of the race, in their Asian home."—Bricks from Babel, p. 106.

The Greek myths "begin with Chaos. Water came next, and being divided, earth appeared, and the firmament to over-arch earth. There came first a golden race who dwelt in fellowship with the gods. To these other races of long life—being children for a century. Men grew continually worse; justice withdrew" "the glory of her face." Eve is remembered in Pandora, the woman, who made of earth and water, impelled by curiosity, opens a jar wherein are hidden all human ills.

The flood is recorded in the story of Deucalion and Tyrrha, whom Zeus instructs to make and provision an ark wherein they should be safe, when Zeus poured waters forth to drown the world." "The ark rested on a mountain; Deucalion issuing forth adored Zeus; and at his prayer the earth was replenished with men." "The building of Babel and the dispersion has been traced in the story of the wars of the Titans."—B. B. pp. 114, 115. Keightley's Mythology and History of Greece.

The Fijis (Polynesians) have many traditions of the deluge. "Long ago, men being disobedient to the gods, Taarsa, the high god, undertook to drown the world.

One man in a canoe was spared, and landing on a mountain built an altar to his god."—See Ellis' Polynesian Researches, vol. 2.

The Fijis' have a tradition declaring the saved to have been eight, "four men and their wives."—Hardwick, part 3.

"The movements of the Ugrians in the New World (America) have been the latest of migrations; while the migrations of the Mongols in America must date back to the earliest ages after the Babylonian dispersion." See Von Humboldt's Researches in Central America, vol. 1. Compare him with the Book of Ether, Book of Mormon.

Schoolcraft "believes the Indian to be Shemitic."—See B. B., page 151. Compare Book of Nephi. B. M. 2: 1, and Charlevoix in an address to the French Academy said: "The Indian is an enigma, and the more you study him, the greater the enigma becomes."—Voyage to America, vol. 1. But what are his myths and traditions? "There are four fundamental religious ideas common to the tribes:" "First, creation from Chaos; second, the general deluge; third, a good mind and an evil mind ruling over the universe; fourth, adoration of the heavenly bodies as types of the Creator." Schoolcraft, Archives, vol. 5, and B. B. p. 152.

McNair Wright says: "The substance of pure tradition, carefully collected, is this: The Indians hold America to be a great Island, the special care of the Good Spirit;" they believe that "they came out of a cave after a general deluge and confusion." "Their ancestors came from an evil and distant land over water." "A general tradition also points to an extinct tribe—Leni Lenape—as the original people, or universal grandfathers."—B. B. 153; also Schoolcraft's Archives; and his notes on the Iroquois. "The first cycle of the earth ended in famine." "The second cycle was closed by fire; birds alone escaped the general conflagration; one man and woman hid in a cave and lived to repeople the earth." The third cycle terminated by wind storms. Hurricanes destroyed men and beasts; again two people survived, hidden in a cave. The last destruction of the earth was by a deluge, all men and beasts were destroyed, except one pair, who were saved in a hollow log of cypress wood."—Humboldt's Researches in Central America, vol. 2, edition of 1814, B. B. page 159.

"The children of these cypress-saved people were all born dumb. When they had increased in numbers, moved by the father's prayer, the gods sent birds to give them tongues. The result of the distribution was that they all spoke a different language."—Prescott's History of Mexico; Rawlinson's Historical Ill. of the Old Testament; B. B., p. 159.

The father who was saved from the deluge was called Coxcox. When deluge was subsiding Coxcox sent out a vulture for tidings, but the base bird remained to fatten on the floating corpses. A hummingbird did better, and brought back a leaf. Coxcox then left his boat on a mountain.

After this deluge a giant named Xilhua resolved to build a hill to touch the sky; he began a brick pyramid upon which the angry gods hurled destroying fire."—Humboldt's Mexico, vol. 1.

"The Aztecs had another famous tradition of Quilaztle, the woman of our flesh, the mother of all living. She was always represented with a serpent beside in converse. This woman was the mother of twin sons who strove furiously about some forgotten question."—B. B. 160.

"The Mayas of Yucatan have a tradition that their language and writing came in ships from far."—Book of Nephi, B. M. chapter 1, verse 20, and Bricks from Babel, page 168.

As for America being the special care of the Good Spirit, see B. M., Ether 1: 4. "An evil and distant land over water," says Schoolcraft. Compare him with B. M., first Nephi 1: 6, and first Nephi 5: 22. For the extinct tribe see Book of Omni 1: 10; Coriantumr is all that remained to tell the sad story of the slain of his people.

The first cycle and famine mentioned by Humboldt may refer to the famine in the wilderness that being the first famine in the history of the Nephites. (B. M., 1 Nephi 5: 15). The cycle that ended with hurricanes and storms referred to by Humboldt are perhaps the events mentioned by Nephi the son of Nephi, chapter four, verse three. The Leni-Lenape "or Universal Grandfathers" mentioned by "Sir A. McKenzie's Voyage Among Arctic Tribes" probably refers to Lehi and Ishmael, as the grandfathers of the Indian race. (1 Nephi 5: 3). Schoolcraft says the earliest and advancing race were mound-builders of much energy, and that their mounds have a close affinity to those of their Japhetic brethren in the old world. (Archives, Article on Mounds; also part first). But still he thinks the Indians are Semitic. (B. B., 151).

Humboldt, after earnest personal research in America, declares warmly for the Mongol origin of all the American tribes, except the Ugrians of the polar circle. Humboldt's researches in Central America, Vol. 1. Latham is of the same opinion. America Mongolidae in Varieties of Man; also Prichards National History of Man.

The above seem to conflict with the Book of Mormon, as that book declares with a clear voice the Semitic origin of the Indian race. Nephi says: "And it came to pass that my father, Lehi, found on the plates of brass a genealogy of his father's; wherefore he knew that he was a descendant of Joseph; yea, even that Joseph who was the son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt. (1 Nephi 1: 47; also 2: 1 and Alma 8: 1.)

The Mulek colony that was from Jerusalem a few years later was also Semitic. "Now," says Helaman, "the land south was called Lehi and the land north was called Mulek, which was after the sons of Zedekiah [son and grandsons] for the Lord did bring Mulek into the land north and Lehi into the land south." (North and South America.) Helaman 2: 27; 3: 6; also Omni. 1; 7. Thus Humboldt, Latham and Prichard seem to conflict with the Book of Mormon as to race line. But there may be no conflict after all, for their conclusions as to race line are mainly drawn from the remains of buildings discovered, and many of those buildings in North America, where the works of another race or colony who had possessed the land for fifteen hundred years or more before these Semitic colonies came from Jerusalem.

Moroni says: "And now I, Moroni, proceed to give an account of those ancient inhabitants who were destroyed by the hand of the Lord upon the face of this north country. [North America]. . . . They came from the great tower at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people."—Ether 1: 1. Moroni gives a genealogy of thirty generations from Jared to Ether. (Ether 1: 1.) "And they built a great city by the narrow neck of land, by the place where the sea divides the land [Isthmus of Panama] and they did preserve the land southward for a wilderness to get game. And the whole face of the earth northward was covered with inhabitants."—Ether 4: 7.

The first inhabitants who had covered the whole face of the land from Panama to the lakes (Ether 6: 6; Moroni 1: 7) were destroyed by civil war about 500 B. C. (Omni 1: 7.) Their capital city they called Moron: "Now the land Moron where the king dwelt, was near the land which is called Desolation by the Nephites."—Ether 3: 7. And where was desolation? "And it came to pass that I [Mormon] did cause my people [Nephites] that they should gather themselves together at the land Desolation, to a city which was in the borders by the narrow pass [Isthmus] which led into the land southward."—Mormon 1: 7.

From the above it appears that the Jaredite capital was a little north of Panama and that their colonies spread northward to the lakes; hence Central America was filled with inhabitants who built cities long before the Semitic colonies came from Jerusalem; they leaving in Zedekiah's reign, about 600 years B. C. (See Usher's Chronology and 1 Nephi 1: 2.) Usher puts the confusion at 2234 B. C. Allowing the Jaredite colony ten years for travel, they landed in Central America about 2224 B. C., so when Schoolcraft refers to "the earliest and advancing race;" and when Humboldt states that "the Mongols in America must date back to the earliest ages after the Babylonian dispersion;" and when Walker says "All the facts thus far gathered furnish unequivocal testimony to the existence in the valley [Mississippi] at a period far back in the twilight of American time, . . . of a very numerous and considerably civilized population in the valley." (See Mound Builders p. 116.) We thus see that these men are witnesses of the truth of the Book of Ether; but whether they were Mongol or not, Moroni does not say. Hence it can not be said that they are in conflict with it. If the Jaredite colony should prove to have been of Japhetic stock, science and the Book of Mormon would be in wonderful harmony. As it is, that book is not a witness on that point and can not be said to be in conflict with it.

Walker, who seems to be quoting the explorer Dickenson, says that "traditions of Indians furnish some of the proof that their ancestors were not the Mound Builders; at least they appear to have had no history to give of the mounds. If they were a branch of the ancient mound building race, they must have been almost completely degenerate."

Northern Indians had a tradition of the southern origin of the stock. (Walker's Mound Builders, Chap. 11, p. 131.) Science says that "there are dim traces of American civilization commencing in the northern parts of South America, near the Andes or among them, and in the confined regions of Central America; thence, so near as can now be estimated, emigrated a people who had made the start in social organization that bound them too closely and strongly together to permit them to fall apart in the vast spaces of the Mississippi Valley."—Mound Builders, pp. 115, 149.

Again, the same authority says: "It seems more likely that these civilized prehistoric Arizonians were more nearly contemporaries of the Mound Builders, an offshoot from the same original stock which planted nationalities with a tendency to civilization from Chili to the Mississippi Valley."—P. 567. Thus Tradition, Science and the Book of Mormon are in harmony. The Jaredite colony from Babylon and the Mulek colony from Jerusalem first settled in Central America. Lehi's colony first settled in Peru or northern Chili as we have seen above. What became of that civilized race? The builders of "one hundred thousand mounds in the Mississippi Valley" and the temples in Central America, Yucatan and Peru; that had an "ancient centralized government;" (p. 116.) With "millions of inhabitants;" (p. 138;) "Of fine culture;" (p. 143;) "That left so many evidences of civil and religious institutions;" (p. 148;) "That worked the mines;" (p. 144 and 150;) "That built military forts;" such as Fort Hill and Fort Ancient near and at Newark, Ohio? (See the plan of the forts on p. 120 and p. 153.)

Remember that what are to be seen now are what remain after, perhaps, two thousand years of waste by the elements. Think of what you read of Babylon, of Nineveh and Tyrus. What is left is but a remnant of what these buildings once were. "These forts are arranged with great mathematical and military skill."—p. 150. Our authority says on this point that this civilized race was destroyed by a barbarous race. These military forts are taken as the probable places where the great struggles for life and death took place, that is south of the lakes in western New York, north-western Pennsylvania and as far north-west as northern Wisconsin. (pp. 121, 144, 147 and 152.) "They suddenly disappeared from the Valley, [Mississippi] leaving little other trace behind save their maize, their tobacco, and a very faint and uncertain tradition."—P. 153.

Mormon and Moroni who relate the last struggles in both civil wars, locate those great armies where science "has found evidences of the great and last conflict."—p. 137. One race destroyed, (Mormon 3: 3-4; Ether 6:6.) It is described as "a land of many waters" and "great waters." The Indian Tradition of an extinct race is confirmed by science and the Book of Mormon.

The high value of all these myths and traditions, from the learned Berossus to the wild man of Ameriea, lies in the extreme improbability of an accidental harmony, and in the impossibility of collusion. Add to these evidences the fact that there are frequently found in places many miles from the sea and even in the tops of high mountains, whole trees sunk deep under ground, as also teeth and bones of animals, fishes entire, sea shells, ears of corn, &c., petrified; which the best naturalists are agreed could never have come there but by a deluge.

These things seem to confirm the flood-legends of all these nations. It is true that they disagree in details, but not in the main points; each nation has these legends as a part of their separate national history. Hence the Indian had an Indian flood; one pair saved in a hollow log. The Fiji had a Fiji flood; eight are saved in a canoe. The Greeks had a Greek flood, two are saved in an ark. The Gomerites had a deluge too; all were lost except one man and his family who escaped in a bark. The Indus had a great flood, all lost but Satiavarata and seven saints. The Chinese flood burst forth with violence and overflowed the earth. The Babylonians had a Babylonian flood; the righteous are saved in a mammoth ark. Here is room for thought by the sceptic. In the Chaldean ark (see dimensions) the Assyrians had an Assyrian flood. Their version of it has been dug out of the ruins of Nineveh, and is now in the British Museum. This kindred knowledge is proof of a common stock, and that Moses is confirmed by many witnesses. After long and patient studies on these and kindred subjects, I find myself convinced of Aristotles' philosophy, "that with the true, [truth] all things that exist are in harmony, but with the false, the true [truth] at once disagrees.

CHRISTIANS AND MOSLEMS.

TEACHERS OF THE GOSPEL IN TURKEY CHARGED WITH GRAVE OFFENCES—NATIVES TREATED LIKE SLAVES—MOHAMMEDANS ABOUT TO APPEAL TO FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

To thrust an alien faith upon a nation has at no time been an easy task. Witness the many futile attempts of English sovereigns to thrust Protestantism upon the people of Ireland. Recognizing this fact, devout Christians of all sects have of late ages attempted to convert infidels and unbelievers, not by the old time weapons of fire and the sword, but by cajolery, sweet persuasion, conciliation, and a diplomatic subservience in all non-religious matters.

Missionaries have been sent to the most savage nations, and the Gospel of Christ has by their means been made known to sun worshippers, cannibals and other unbelievers. Glowing reports of their success as evangelists are sent periodically to the parent societies, and are judiciously used to induce lukewarm Christians to pour their shekels into the societies, treasuries, and thus maintain the good work.

MANY GRAVE CHARGES.

So far, so good. But the questions arise, "Is the picture entirely true? Are these savages satisfied with this new faith? Have they no complaints to make?"

There arrived in New York recently a most distinguished Syrian, who, of all men living, is perhaps the best able to answer these questions. A Mohammedan by race, a Christian by conversion, the son of an illustrious scholar, himself a well known savant and authority on matters Oriental, a great traveller and a speaker of many tongues, this accomplished Syrian can well claim to speak authoritatively from the Mohammedan standpoint in regard to at least one field of missionary labor—that of Turkey and the adjacent portions of Eastern Europe and Asia.

Specially important is his testimony just now, in view of the somewhat bitter controversy which is being waged in London and other places on the vexed question. "Is Mohammedanism better suited to the moral and religious needs of Oriental nations than Christianity?" Mr. Gladstone, Greek doctors and Syrians of European reputation have taken part in this controversy, and as yet neither side can fairly claim the victory, the reason, it is alleged, being that neither the champions of Mohammedanism nor those of Christianity have had an opportunity to inform themselves thoroughly on the subject at issue.

Now, this opportunity the Syrian above referred to has had, and therefore what he says is worthy of a hearing. His name is not published, because he does not desire to be drawn into a controversy; but in case his statements are questioned he is perfectly willing to substantiate them.

LIVING IN PRINCELY STYLE.

"Christian missionaries have done much harm in Turkey," he said, "all eulogistic reports to the contrary, notwithstanding. Christian as I am, I feel ashamed of them. Instead of imitating Christ they imitate nabobs and rajahs. They live in palaces, keep horses and servants, feast sumptuously and spend very little time, if any, in trying to spread the Gospel. In Beyrout and Cairo there are missionaries with houses as well appointed as President Cleveland's and summer villas as comfortable as any at Newport. There they live with their wives, children and retinues, drawing handsome salaries from the foreign missionary societies and taking no pains to convert the natives to Christianity. Wealthy Mohammedans in their houses, but poor Mohammedans are not deemed worthy even of a salute or a benediction.

"Their covetousness is proverbial. As a rule each of them obtains about $150 a month salary—pretty large, considering how cheap one can live in the East. Yet out of this large salary they do not pay their servants more than a few dollars a month each. The servant may have to support a wife and family, but the missionary is not more generous on that account. 'Take what I give you or quit,' he says, and that ends the matter. Some time ago a missionary, who also practised as a doctor, cured an old man of some slight ailment and promptly sent him a bill. The old man paid the bill, minus one cent, which he did not happen to have in change. The missionary doctor met him on the street a few days later and asked him for the cent. Again the old man searched his pockets, but, though he had gold and silver, he hadn't the cent. The missionary went off in a huff and the next time he met the man he snatched the cap off his head and swore he would keep it until the cent was paid. That story, sir, went all through Beyrout and the missionary doctor has not heard the end of it.

THE LOVER AND THE SWEETHEART.

"Another missionary had a district school in which the principal teachers were two Syrians, a young man and a young woman. In due time the young man proposed to his colleague and she accepted him. The happy lover informed the missionary of his good fortune, whereupon the latter told him that he could not marry the girl, as, if she got married, she would naturally leave the school, and it would be without a female teacher. The young man remonstrated, but in vain. 'The day you marry, I dismiss you from the school,' was the missionary's reply, and the end of it was that the girl broke off the match in order to retain her position and the young man wrote such a strong letter to the Foreign Missionary Society in London that the missionary was recalled.

NATIVES CONTINUALLY INSULTED.

"Now, don't infer that the natives are hostile to missionaries. They are not. They are anxious to have good Christians among them, but they do not want men who look down on them as slaves and outcasts. Such men, ignorant as they are of Arabic cannot teach Christianity to Syrians. They preach in the East a Western, a European Christ, and Mohammedans can not understand them. The best beloved missionary in the East is the Rev. Mr. Vandyke, an American, and his success is due in the first place to his large heartedness and in the second place to the fact that he is one of the ablest Arabic scholars living. So proud are the natives of him that they are seriously thinking of erecting a monument to him—an honor which has never yet been paid to any missionary in the East. Almost without exception all the other missionaries are, as it were, strangers in a foreign land, or rather conquerors in a conquered country. Instead of preaching Christ they live and spend their time like earthly potentates, taking no thought for the poor and needy and mixing only with such natives as have wealth at their command.

PRAISE FOR THE JESUITS.

"This is true of all the Christian missionaries, except the Jesuits. They, I gladly admit, do try to learn the native language, do treat the natives, even the poorest, with courtesy, and do try to teach Christianity, their conduct in this respect forming a strong contrast to that of all other missionaries.

"What is the result? Simply that during the past thirty-five years only two Mohammedans have been converted to Christianity. That is a positive fact, and I can prove it. I don't deny that other conversions have taken place. I know Greeks who have joined the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches, and I also know Christians who have become Mohammedans. Naturally also a few Protestants have become Roman Catholics and vice versa. Such conversions are pretty numerous, as they should be, considering that whatever time missionaries spend in evangelizing is devoted to them. As for Mohammedan conversions, they are, as I have already stated, almost nil.

"This is one result. Another is that the natives are tired of getting the missionaries and are taking steps either to have them recalled or to have them compelled to live more becoming and Christian lives. The government is interesting itself in the matter, and when I was in Turkey recently I was informed on good authority that a full report was being prepared for the various foreign mission societies, and that an appeal would be made to them to send unbiased investigating committees to the East for the purpose of satisfying themselves that the statements in the report were not the fruit of prejudice or hatred.

HARD TO GET AT THE TRUTH.

"What the outcome of this appeal will be I cannot say. All I know is that only by a thorough and impartial investigation can the entire truth on the subject be arrived at. At present the missionaries have it all their own way. They can send home what reports they please, and there is no one in Europe or America to question their accuracy. They take good care to prevent any native from carrying mischievous stories to the ears of the societies in Europe. If a native tells the missionary that he is going to travel and asks for credentials the missionary will do all in his power to keep him at home, and if he cannot refuse the credentials, will delay signing them as long as possible. I knew one young Syrian who insisted on getting credentials, and happening to open them on board ship found that they described him as a tramp and vagabond, whose fame as a liar was known throughout the length and breadth of Turkey. Yet this young man was wealthy and respected, and the only reason why he was described thus was because his friend (?), the missionary, feared that he might tell some disagreeable stories to certain church dignitaries in London. The whole story was published some time ago in the native journals. And here I may add that in all the influential journals, such as El Takliyak, at Beyrout, Cario, and other places, articles are constantly appearing deploring and denouncing in the most unmeasured terms the incompetency, covetousness and general worldliness of the so-called Christian missionaries.

AN APPEAL FOR JUSTICE.

"And now, before I close, let me assure you that I am not prejudiced in this matter. Were I a Mohammedan I would not ask you to believe me, but, being a Christian, I do ask you to believe me. I have told you nothing which I cannot prove and which any Christian with a knowledge of the native language could learn after a month's sojourn in Turkey. I want true Christianity to spread in the East, and I know it cannot spread so long as its teachers despise the inhabitants of the East and their traditions and customs. Seeing the Herald in Constantinople and other parts of Turkey, it struck me that through this great paper I might be able to let the civilized world know something of which it is most shamefully ignorant and which concern it most vitally. It is a great subject and, if the Herald will ventilate it, thousands will be benefited thereby."

Ex-Consul Arbeel, of Jerusalem, was interviewed by the Herald on the subject, but while he admitted that the conduct of missionaries in the East was far from satisfactory he begged to be excused from expressing his opinion at any length.—N. Y. Herald.

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF GOVERNMENT FOR THE L. D. S. SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, OF GALLAND'S GROVE DISTRICT.

PREAMBLE.

We, as members of the Latter Day Saints' Sunday School Association of the Galland's Grove District, desirous of promoting each others welfare and improving ourselves in the service of God, do adopt and agree to be governed by the following rules and regulations:

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

This association shall be known as the Latter Day Saints' Sunday School Association, of the Galland's Grove District.

ARTICLE II.—OBJECT.

This association should organize a Sunday School in every neighborhood where there are a sufficient number of Saints, and the several schools to be under the general supervision of the Association.

ARTICLE III.—OFFICERS.

Sec. 1. The officers of this Association shall consist of a General Superintendent, Assistant Superintendent, Secretary and Assistant Secretary.

Sec. 2. The right of holding office shall not be withheld by reason of sex.

Sec. 3. Only Latter Day Saints of good standing shall be eligible to the offices heretofore mentioned.

ARTICLE IV.—DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of the Superintendent to preside over all meetings of the Association; to prepare, if advisable, a uniform course of study for the schools in addition to the regular church lessons; to have general oversight of the district; to organize new schools; to give advice as to the best method of conducting schools and classes; to inform, and to see that there is unity of purpose and concert of action.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the Assistant Superintendent to assist the Superintendent in all his duties as general officer and at other times when occasion demands; and preside in the absence of the Superintendent.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to perform the duties usually required of such an officer, and to act as treasurer to hold the finances of the Association and to pay them out upon the order of the Superintendent.

Sec. 4. The officers heretofore mentioned shall be elected annually by the Association as described in Section 6 of this article, at the spring meeting of the Galland's Grove district conference, and shall take their places the first Sunday in July following their election; provided, that those persons who were appointed by the above said conference in June, 1888, be recognized as officers of the Association the same as those regularly elected.

Sec. 5. Officers of the Association, officers and teachers of the different Sunday Schools governed by the said Association, and all regularly enrolled members of said schools are members of the Association.

Sec. 6. In election of general officers, and in amending these rules, the vote of the Association shall be taken by delegates, each delegate casting one vote for every six members, or minor fraction thereof that he represents. In all other business a majority of members present shall rule.

Sec. 5. The Association shall hold an open session at the meeting of each conference of this district and the minutes thereof shall be reported to the Sunday School organ of the church.

Sec. 8. All needful expenses of the Association shall be defrayed by the treasurers of the different schools proportionally, The Superintendent shall order payment only as provided by the Association.

ARTICLE V.—SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—OFFICERS.

Sec. 1. Officers of each Sunday School shall consist of a Superintendent, an Assistant Superintendent, a Secretary, a Treasurer, a Chorister, an Organist, if possible, a Librarian and a Janitor.

Sec. 2. Duties.—It shall be the duty of the Superintendent to preside at each session of the Sunday School, to provide lessons as instructed by the General Superintendent, to select questions, verses, etc., as may be profitable; to see that teachers follow methods advised by General Superintendent; to appoint committees; to give a report of his school at each regular meeting.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of the Assistant Superintendent to take the place of the Superintendent during the absence of the latter.

Sec. 4. The Secretary shall keep a record of the School, a record of the attendance and absence of pupils, by classes; condition of finances and collections and to read such record at each session of the school.

Sec. 5. The Treasurer shall take charge and keep account of all moneys received by the school, and pay out on order of the same.

Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of the Chorister to lead in singing during the sessions of the school.

Sec. 7. The Organist shall preside at the organ.

Sec. 8. The Librarian shall have charge of lesson books, papers, song-books, etc, and distribute the same as needed by the school, and keep a record of all reading and reference books owned or used by the school, and to distribute and receive them on demand of the members at the close of each session.

Sec. 9. The Janitor shall see to the school-room, to ventilate, make fires, and arrange seats for the convenience of the school, and to seating strangers and visitors.

Sec. 10. The above officers shall be elected by their respective schools on the last Sunday in June and December of each year, and shall take their places on the Sunday following their election. Should a vacancy occur by reason of a failure to elect, the previous officer shall hold over until new officers are elected and take their offices.

Sec. 11. The Superintendent must be a Latter Day Saint in good standing; the other officers must also be persons of good standing but need not have the qualifications first mentioned in this section.

Sec. 12. (Clause 1). Where practicable, each school shall be divided into four departments, viz: Infant, Intermediate, Bible and Book of Mormon; and there may be as many classes in each department as the Superintendent may deem necessary.

Clause 2. Another class may be formed—a Theological class for the purpose of studying the Scripture by subjects, and fitting its members for active church work; but it would be advisable to have the class meet at some other hour of the day, that teachers and others may have a better opportunity to take part.

Sec. 13. The teachers for the intermediate and the infant classes should be chosen by the Superintendent, after which the other classes shall choose their own teachers.

Sec. 14. The Inspired Translation of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, shall be the standards of reference on all doctrinal points, but other books of good character may be consulted for reference. It is desirable to have as many such books in the library as the funds may permit.

Sec. 15. All persons, five or more years of age, desiring to become members of a Sunday School may do so by presenting themselves in a class of enrollment, provided, membership in the school shall not be forfeited by improper conduct during the session, or by absence from class for five or more consecutive Sundays without good cause.

Sec. 16. The Superintendent shall appoint a committee of three whose duty it shall be to visit absent members, solicit their attendance, and also that of non-Saints and friends. The Superintendent should not have charge of any special class.

Sec. 17. The officers and teachers of each school shall meet with the committee appointed by the Superintendent for the purpose of consultation and business at least once every, three months.

Sec. 18. On the last Sunday prior to the meeting of the District Conference, each school shall choose one delegate to represent them at the General Association, and shall instruct him if necessary, how to vote upon the election of officers, or proposing amendments.

Sec. 19. The church "Rules of Order," shall be used as authority for government, and in all business meetings of the schools or Association.

Sec. 20. Every proposed amendment of these rules must be submitted in writing, and read to the General Association at a regular meeting prior to the one in which it is voted upon and two thirds of the votes cast by the delegates shall be required to adopt such amendments.

SUGGESTIONS.

1st. Great care should be taken to select Superintendents and Teachers who are apt in teaching and government, and whose hearts are in the work.

2d. Superintendents should be prompt in opening and closing each session of the school.

3d. The recitation of verses from Scripture should be encouraged.

4th. Appropriate songs, readings, essays, and recitations are commendable for evening gatherings, and they should be encouraged by the schools.

By order of Association,
FANNIE PETT, Secretary.

BISHOP'S NOTICE.

Owing to the resignation of Bro. John M. Range, my agent for Central California District, and that at a district conference held in San Benito, California, September 21st, it recommended Bro. Albert Page, of San Benito, as his successor, I therefore appoint him as such, and recommend him to the Saints, that they may sustain him by their means and prayers.

G. A. BLAKESLEE, Presiding Bishop.

DIED.

BUXTON.—At Flagler, Iowa, September 1888, Sister Ellen, wife of James Buxton. She was confied April 21st, from the sickness of which did not recover; but growing each day weaker, died on the above date. Sister Buxton was baptized at Caseyville, St. Clair county, Illinois, in the spring of 1880, and she bore a faithful testimony to the truth of the latter day work, and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. She leaves a husband and one child, and father and mother and three brothers, to mourn their loss. Sermon by Elder J. S. Roth. Text: 1 Cor., 15th chapter.

BUXTON.—At Birkner, Illinois, August 14th, of inflammation and brain fever, Iver, son of Bro. and Sr. James Buxton. Services at the house by Bro. William Jaques; text Mark 10: 15.

BUXTON.—At Birkner, Illinois, October 13th, Alline, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. James Buxton. She was born April 21st. Sermon by J. S. Roth.

WOOD.—Mrs. Emeline Wood, mother of Mrs. F. H. Fitton of Beatrice, Nebraska, died at her residence, No. 909, North Ninth street, Wednesday, October 24th, 1888, and was buried on Friday, October 26th, 1888, in the presence of her relatives and friends. Her death was very sudden. Grandma Wood, as she was most generally known, was born March 14th, 1823, at Albany, New York. Her maiden name was Kelly, and she was the eldest of a family of two children. Her parents died when she was a child of only three summers, leaving her alone in this world with her little orphan brother aged eighteen months. She was united in marriage to Mr. Kelly of Delaware county, New York, in 1841, and the fruits of their happy marriage were three children; two sons and one daughter. She became a widow early in life, and death called her two sons from her while in their prime, leaving Mrs. F. H. Fitton of this city the only surviving member of the family, except a brother of Mrs. Emeline Wood whom they have not seen or heard from for a number of years, to mourn their loss. Grandma Wood united at an early age with the Baptist Church and died as she lived, trusting in the Lord. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. E. Young, of the Dunkard Church.

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostasy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocetian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Special attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

ROTTEN EGGS AS ARGUMENTS.

BRO. LEVI PHELPS, of Juniata, Michigan, has been laboring of late in and around Cairo, in the same state, and not a great while ago was treated (mistreated) to an attack made upon the building in which he was preaching by parties unknown, who threw stones, clods, rotten eggs, and such like missiles. The sides of the building were battered, windows were broken and persons inside hit with the spoiled eggs. It is unfair to suppose that the eggs were thrown by the respectable men of the place; it must have been done by the "baser sort;"—at least this is the charitable conclusion. But, how happens it that the throwing of sticks, stones and rotten eggs are resorted to in any place to stop men from placing before those who may care to hear what is believed by the speaker to be worth telling and worth hearing. If a man appears in a neighborhood asking people to hear his views upon the way to be saved, the gospel, the mission of Christ, or subjects of a mental, moral, philosophical, or political nature, who is it that should for the safety and benefit of the people of that neighborhood be the ones to meet him in an examination of the philosophy he sets forth, welcome him if he brings truth, and expose him if he brings error and untruth; especially if that which is presented be within the domain of religion. Clearly the preachers—the churchmen of the place.

As there is no human tribunal commissioned of God with authority to sit upon trial of men and declare in judgment that they are heretics, how else shall men desirous of saving themselves and their fellows from following cunningly devised fables, and the craft of designing men, proceed, unless it shall be by an examination before the people themselves whose safety is in peril. In a land where freedom of speech and the liberty of the press is a boast, any one would seem to be justified in expecting critical and searching examination of what he might present for public acceptance; and all who seek the former should be prepared to meet the criticism. If the philosophy which a man carries is worth the presenting by him who holds it, it is worth an examination to all men of similar characteristics and conditions to the speaker. A hearing is all that is needed by the most of men for them to determine whether the thing presented for their consideration is worth an acceptance; and if the standards held by those who hear by which they propose to ascertain the character of what they hear, are the same as those acknowledged by the philosopher who is being heard and his philosophy tried, the measures of safety to community are, or should be ample; and error and falsehood could make no lasting impression on any people where such safeguards exist, as there are always men enough in any place who are sufficiently able to rightly expose error if the standards are relied upon. It happens, however, that in many neighborhoods, as at Cairo, while the standards of religious truths are acknowledged, there is a class of philosophers who are somewhat doubtful of the ground upon which themselves stand in controversy, hence the easiest way of keeping their footing before the people is to prevent what appears to antagonize them from being heard; hence the cry, "crucify him; crucify him!" As in the days of Jesus, there is now, perhaps will be till time ends, now and then a man who is not ranked among them of the "baser sort," but whose instincts and principles do not remove him far from them, who will not hesitate to not only incite the unthinking rabble to the use of the rotten egg argument, but will lead in the lawlessness which that argument demands for its exercise. It must be that there are some of this sort in Cairo. Are they among the conservators of the moral and religious conditions of the society of the place? Are they the ministers of the child whose advent into the world was heralded by heavenly music and the glad burden of their song, "Peace on Earth; Good Will to men?"

The "stick, stone and rotten egg" argument may be an effective one in the absence of better and more convincing ones; but it ought not to escape the notice of those who use it that about all the effect wrought upon those against whom it is used is to confirm them in their error, or their truth, as the case may be, of which their assailants wish to disabuse them; and its effect upon those investigating is to convince them that those who use the egg argument do so, because they can not withstand in legitimate ways what they seek to destroy by unlawful force. Error and falsehood live by being abused; truth by investigation.

Primitive Mormonism challenged the world from the start, for investigation. The elders of the church from 1830 to 1844 defended the creed of the church (if it had one) against all comers; and it was not until the dogma of plural marriage was fastened upon the faith of a portion of the believers in the angel's message, that elders were sent out cautioned and restricted as to discussion and investigation. Bro. Phelps at Cairo, Michigan, is not one of those whose duty it is to teach polygamy, or to refuse to defend all the faith of the church. Quite to the contrary, he is of those believers whose creed is the "Word of the Lord;" whose mission is to agitate, promulgate, present and defend the faith "once" for all "delivered to the Saints;" just as the primitive elders were commanded to do. One of the results following the ministration of these elders going out untrammelled by church dictation, in regard to whom they shall meet and whom avoid in debate, as does Bro. Phelps, is that some old time religious philosophies will suffer inquiry, and inquiry means defeat; hence discussion will not answer the exigency, but the rotten-egg argument may prevent the catastrophe—so far as time is concerned—whatever may occur in eternity.

Personally, we do not look for, and hence can hardly ask that men in regions where our work is newly offered for examination, will be free from bias against us, and the work. The huge dark cloud of opposition to truth entrusted to the elders of the latter day dispensation, which has risen all round the horizon by reason of polygamy and its accompanying dogmas of belief, lies over the minds of men everywhere; and while the elders are trying to tell the gospel story they have to contend against all the contumely, all the opprobrium and all the just condemnation existing in honest minds, and for which the elders are in nowise responsible, before communities will consent to hear, much less investigate. And this same prejudice, thus begotten, is added to the intolerance and bigotry existing in long established beliefs and customs so long and so persistently diverging from the truth, as it is in Christ, has made it a much harder task for the banner-bearers to obtain a footing and a hearing. It is well for us then, that the ministry in their ministrations while meeting opposition, should recognize not only the prejudice that exists in their respective localities, but the nature of it and its causes; and instead of classing all prejudice as unreasoning, give honest-minded men the credit due to them for resistance to disrupting innovations and des-destructive errors. There are not many elders in the church, local or travelling who would not at once, and seriously attempt a defence of his own neighborhood against the imposition of error; upon the people of his neighborhood, by all the legitimate means in his power; but we hope there are none who would be so led by prejudice as to resort to the rotten-egg-stick-and-stone argument.

It is time that the era of proscriptive persecution was passed. Whatever tends to foster and perpetuate the argument of force in religion, or moral ethics should be relegated to the age of darkness and human mistrust. The light that has shone into the world from Him who is the light of life should drive the dark vapors of dogma and proscription away from the horizon of human hope and aspiration, to return no more forever.

Brethren, do not fear the rotten-egg argument. It is the last, and by its employment confessedly the best your opponents have. Be honest in the means yourselves employ, and recognize worth and merit in those who oppose you when you discover them; remembering that if it is the truth you are bearing, you need have no fear of fair examination and just criticism; and if it is error that is engaging your time and talents, he is your friend who will lead you away from the error into the ways of truth. Be not hasty to strive, but turn your back upon no man in the defense of the truth.

IS IT BITTERNESS?

It has been urged against the Reorganization (the Josephites) by many of the elders and members of the Utah, polygamic church, that the former had greatly aided and urged on the spirit of persecution, to which the latter attributes the attitude of the government toward them in the valleys of the mountains; and that this has been done in a spirit of bitterness on the part of the Reorganization.

It so happens that we are in a position to write understandingly in regard to this, and we affirm unhesitatingly, that so far as all the leading minds of the Reorganization are and have been concerned, no bitterness of feeling towards the individuals of the Utah Church, has ever entered into any of the controversies upon the division of sentiment upon doctrine and church work. The divergence in belief was a wide one at the start; involving as it did a direct and positive departure from the teachings of the first elders of the church and the proclamation made by a solemn conclave assembled in regard to marriage; and this divergence has never been made less, nor consequent divisions healed by a concession upon either side. The men who composed the Reorganization at its inception, had been made members of the church upon published statements of faith which ruled for fourteen years, during the early struggles of the church and its busiest, palmiest, most successful period of propagandizing; and they felt keenly the loss of the martyrs and the introduction of new, dangerous and destructive tenets, no matter by whom they came. They had been counselled to abide by the word of the Lord, the written word. To this the Spirit had borne witness; by the testimony thus borne they were assured that they would be judged the last day. To the word, as given to the church from 1827 to the death of Joseph and Hyrum, as published to the church, contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, these men were directed by the Spirit, the same Spirit they had received in fulfillment of the promise; "Ye shall receive the Holy Ghost." This section they did not dare to disregard, nor disobey. To obey it they were under the necessity to declare against receiving the dogma of plural marriage. In this they made the issue squarely and clearly and in unmistakable terms. This was done in June 1852, two months and a half before the publication of the dogma of plural marriage at Salt Lake City, August 29th, 1852, by Pres. Young. The issue was joined in the open courts of men and of God. Upon the part of the Reorganized Church it was no child's play, no frivolous contention about words and their right of wrong rendition. It was the declaration of earnest men who had souls to save, in behalf of the written law to which they had yielded willing and hearty assent, when coming out of the various organizations with which they had been allied and accepting the New Covenant. It was not done in a factious spirit for the sake of domination or spoils, but with the intent and purpose to keep their baptismal vows and retain their right to the promise of eternal life.

When in 1860, we personally joined with this movement begun in 1851 among the scattered disciples, it was after full and deliberate consideration of all that was involved in the contest, so far as we could then see, and in obedience to direction earnestly sought and honestly received. We knew what the issue was that had been made and why it had been made. From that time until now we have done what we could, in association with the elders of the church, to maintain that side of the issue which we made our choice. We have contended earnestly, as we had the right to do. We have used the weapons available to us as skilfully and as well as we could, and have urged the conflict whenever and wherever opportunity offered; and have even sought opportunities to present the issue.

In connection with this and as a result growing out of the issue joined between the two chief contending parties, has been the effort upon the part of the Reorganization to prevent being made sufferers from legislation by Congress against polygamy. This we had an undoubted right to do. In doing it we have presented to those having charge of bills affecting those practicing polygamy, pending before Congress, the facts concerning its introduction and publication, together with the commands, revelations, and rules given of God to the church upon marriage, and the Covenants and proclamation adopted by the church as its laws of procedure, and have endeavored to so place the matter before these law-makers that, in whatever legislation Congress might adopt, the disciples holding to the primitive faith of the church should not be compromised, either as recreant to the faith or as breakers of the law. Whether this tended to add to the severity of the laws passed by Congress for the suppression of polygamy we are not informed; but we do know that it was necessary from us to show what the original faith of the church was, when the departure from that faith took place, and what it was. The men whom we sent to the capital of the United States to watch over the interests of the Reorganized Church pending legislation on Utah affairs, performed their duty well; and the representative of polygamy from Utah had ample opportunity to disprove the allegations made by our men, if they misrepresented the facts in the case. Mr. George Q. Cannon, himself, being cited before the committee of inquiry of which Mr. Reed, of Maine, was the chairman, to answer for himself, our brethren being present at the time. Then was the time for Mr. Cannon to have set his people right before the representative law-makers of the United States, if we had attacked their institutions in malice, or bitterness of Spirit. Then was an excellent time for him to have shown that those sons of some of the first elders of the church had inherited lies, if they were presenting falsehoods to heap up indignities on those people in the west.

The principles of faith and articles of belief of any people, published and promulgated by their ministers in propagation of their tenets, to gain converts or to defend against attack from without their ranks, are public property for consideration, examination, discussion, acceptance, or rejection. If a people hold that in belief which they do not wish examined, they should not present it for acceptance, or insist upon its utility and necessity. No matter what it is, if it in anywise is to affect the devotee it must be left open to examination.

"What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops;" was the counsel of the divine teacher sent of God.

This makes the teachings of the Savior for the salvation of the human family a public proclamation open to the canvassing of all minds; and no matter in what age or under what dispensation they may be presented, the same right of examination attaches. Hence we have assumed the God-given right to examine publicly, and in the law-making courts of the nation the tenets of our Utah contemporaries and have found them wanting, and as such we have decided against them. If this has added to the bonds imposed upon the transgressors against the laws of the land in Utah, it is their fault and not ours. For if there was ever an age when, or a people to whom the teaching of the apostle Paul in Romans 13: 1-5 was applicable, this is the age and the Latter Day Saints the people. Let those interested read, ponder and do better than to be found transgress-sors. "He that keepeth the law of God, hath no need to break the laws of the land."—D. C.

"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou not then be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same; for he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake."—Rom. 13: 1-5.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

In a sermon on "What is Presbyterianism," delivered by Dr. Phelps, in Council Bluffs, and published in the Omaha Bee of the 29th ult., we have the Presbyterian theory of what constitutes the true and full organization of the church of Christ. The sermon is valuable (1) as illustrating the fact of the apostasy of the primitive church; and, (2) as exhibiting the further fact, that the reformers, when seeking to organize their churches, followed the scriptural patterns only in small part and very imperfectly—putting a mere fragment of church doctrine for the whole, and that part of church organization which pertains to local churches (branches) as constituting the organization in its entirety. It would be equally proper for one to claim that our town, county, or city officials constitute the entire organization of the state or nation, as that "The officers of the church are pastors, ruling elders, deacons and trustees;" for the history of the church organization derived from the New Testament gives the following as its officers,—“priests,” (Heb. 3: 1; 5: 1; 1 Pet. 2: 5, 9; Rev. 1: 6; 5: 10); “apostles,” (Heb. 3: 1; Matt. 10: 2; Acts 15: 2, 22; Gal. 1: 17; Rom. 1: 1, 5; 1 Cor. 12: 28); “prophets,” (Matt. 23: 34; Acts 11: 27; 13: 1, 15; 32; 21: 10); “seventy,” (Luke 10: 1, 17); “bishops,” (Acts 1: 10; 1 Tim. 3: 1; 1 Pet. 2: 25); “evangelists,” (Acts 21: 8; Eph. 4: 11; 2 Tim. 4: 5), as well as the “pastors, elders and deacons” claimed by Dr. Phelps. Nor is this all, for the apostle Paul informs us that Christ, after he “ascended up on high,” gave to the church, with other officers, “teachers” also; and in 1 Cor. 12: 28, to the “teachers” and other officers he adds “helps and governments”—all of these given to the church, St. Paul says, for the all-important work of “perfecting the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying [building up] of the body [church] of Christ.” And he also says these officers were given to remain with “the saints,” “Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God,” a condition not yet attained, for the saints have never yet “all come in the unity of the faith,” much less to unity “of the knowledge of the Son of God.” Eph. 4: 12, 13. Paul was “a wise masterbuilder,” (1 Cor. 3: 10), and he well knew how Christ proposed to build and was then building his own “house”—church, kingdom—(Heb. 3: 6; 1 Tim. 3: 15; Matt. 16: 18; 18: 17; Acts 2: 47; Eph. 2: 19-22; 1 Pet. 2: 5; with Luke 12: 32; Matt. 6: 33; Col. 1: 13, &c, &c), and he mentions the following as some of the officers and means the Lord would use in his church to that end:

“But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things. And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive: but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of it, self in love.”—Eph. 4: 7-16.

“For the body is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary; and those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked; that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing’s, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?”—1 Cor. 12: 14-30.

It should be carefully noted that, herein is set forth the work of the Lord as himself hath ordained and performed; here are the officers he, himself, “gave to the church”—“set in the church”—both before and after “he ascended on high,” as the growth, development and needs of the church demanded, calling “apostles” and other officers when and where the church needed them and so long as the saints were worthy of them. And it should also be carefully observed that the Lord ordained and established this order and organization to prevent “schism”—division—also to perfect the saints “in the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God;” also to prevent the saints from being “tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine;” but that they might “grow up into him [Christ] in all things.” And it should be further observed that none of these “members” of Christ’s “body”—church—has the right to say to any of the other official members “I have no need of thee,” for all, even “those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary,” therefore “the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you.” If the greater “member” has no right to say of the lesser one, “I have no need of you,” how can the lesser say of the greater, “I have no need of thee.” Paul says, emphatically, they “cannot,” and this should end all controversy on that point with bible believers.

When Dr. Phelps says Presbyterianism dates its organization back only “two hundred years,” does he not thereby, in effect, admit the apostasy—the departure “from the faith”—of the primitive Christian Church!

And to conclude, let us ask why, if the Presbyterians had authority to organize the Church of Christ—why did they not organize it after the full New Testament pattern? Why organize with so-called “pastors, elders, deacons and trustees,” and leave out those other officers of the church the New Testament mentions? Why say “pastors, elders and deacons” are necessary and the others are not? Does not the fact that their organization comes far short of the Scripture pattern furnish clear and conclusive proof that they had no divine call or authority or knowledge to organize the Church of Christ? And, on the other hand, does not the fact that Joseph Smith organized the church after the ancient Scriptural pattern prove that he had both the authority and knowledge given him of God to do so? If the Christian world—so-called—with all its learning and wisdom has failed to build its churches on the original foundations and in harmony with the New Testament pattern, is not that clear evidence of their human origin and authority, so far as their organization and ceremonies are concerned? And, inasmuch as Joseph Smith organized the church strictly on its primitive foundations, precisely in accord with its primitive doctrines, restoring fully the New Testament rites and ceremonies, and all this in the times and seasons indicated by Scripture prophecies as those ordained for the restoration of the gospel and the Church and Kingdom of God, do not these facts prove beyond question that he was sent of God to do that work? We think so, and so teach.

Here is Dr. Phelps’ sermon:

Without announcing a text, Dr. Phelps said: Several persons have recently asked me these two questions: What is the Presbyterian Church, and what are the differences between this and other religious bodies? To-day we have the service of ordination of elders and I will take this occasion to answer these two questions. I wish to say at the outset that I have neither time nor disposition to reflect, by comparisons, upon other religious sects or their tenets. Such a thing is beneath me, and while dealing with the doctrines of our own body I shall approach all others with all liberality, fairness and candor.

I have not the time to describe fully the policy, doctrine and history of our church. Her principles are too broad to be embraced within the discourse of an hour; her policy pervades the civilization of all modern time, while her history is written in the lives and doings of men and nations for two hundred years. I can simply outline to you the distinctive characteristics of our church.

First, we are a catholic church. I do not yield the exclusive use of this word to the Romish Church. We are catholic because we believe in the whole rather than in a part. We receive members of all other evangelical bodies to our communion. Our pulpits are filled with ministers of other denominations. We receive members from other churches either directly or by letter the same as they do, and do not insist upon them a peculiar form of baptism. Members of our body are dismissed and join other churches in the same way.

True, we have a church government. It is formed by God himself and is not a production of man. God furnished us the principles upon which our government is formulated. We do not submit that the state shall control the church. Our members are not independent of the authority of the state; their allegiance is there and nowhere will you find men who are more loyal to this authority than are the members of this church. What we do insist is that no one except the Lord who made us, shall be the Lord of the conscience. We are ruled by a body of elders. This is representative of all its parts. A literal translation of the Greek word gives us the name "Presbyterian."

The speaker developed the three ideas of church government as embraced by the Roman Catholic (the pope or a dictator) the Methodist (a modified dictatorship—a bishopric) and the liberal churches, so called, who acknowledge no authority whatever. Between these two stands the Presbyterian. The organization, in its principles, dates back to Calvin. He reviewed the history of the organization and adoption of the Declaration of Independence, and showed that this instrument embodies the principles of the Presbyterian Church. That the "Declaration" copied from the church. Proceeding with strictly church history, he showed wherein other churches are patterning after this church both in matters of belief and polity.

The officers of the church are pastors, ruling elders, deacons and trustees. All of these offices find the warrant of their creation and use of the terms in the writings of Paul, who, said the speaker, was a Presbyterian and so declared himself. No man is allowed to preach who has not been licensed, and all were required to be well educated, as in no other way could the pastor teach, guide and admonish his flock. The presbytery has the power to remove pastors. Deacons are elected for life.

The congregation in its elective functions gives the session, presbytery, state assembly and general assembly. The session has charge of the music and other matters of this kind. All complaints come to the presbytery, of which, in this state, there are eight. Pastors are licensed and removed by it. The session is the veto power of the presbytery. The state assembly has charge of all the state work, while the general assembly has charge of the missionary and other general work outside the state. The power rises up from the people and not from a head down to them. It is distinctively republican. A member must be tried by a body of his peers, and not his superiors. All appeals go through the above order from the session to the general assembly, whose edict is final.

The liberality of the church was dwelt on at length. During the past year $1,000,000 has been given to foreign missionary work; nearly as much to home missionary work, while other-beneficent and charitable work receives large donations from this source. The charge that the church is bigoted caused a comparison between the religionist who believes that man was created by God and in His image, and the other man who says man came by a process of evolution from the monkey and the sea-slime. "Which view is the most liberal? Which shows the greatest bigotry?" asked the speaker.

The Presbyterian church is protestant. It protests against the authority claimed by and for the pope. It is orthodox. It teaches straight. It is pedo-baptist. It baptizes children. It makes much of the little ones and tries to bring them up in the church "in the nurture and admittance of the Lord." It believes in "the sovereignty of God" and the "free agency of man." "How do we harmonize these?" asked the doctor. "We don't. We accept the stated fact that somewhere, somehow God does it. It is a mystery we can not understand, and within the veil of this mystery we love God the more." We believe God works by a plan which embraces creation in its smallest detail. This is predestination, that in which we believe. We believe if a man is once converted he does not fall away. He is a child of God, often erring, it may be, but God's child nevertheless. This is the "perseverance of the saints" in which we firmly believe. We believe in an actual hell and an actual heaven, and that at death the human being immediately enters into the one or the other as he may choose.

We do not admit anything to dictate to the conscience. We have no liturgy, no forms. A direct communication, an intimate contact, between the human soul and the great God-head comes by human volition energized by the divine power. The needs of the individual are peculiarly his and no other one can express to the divine throne what words my soul ought to utter.

The speaker closed with showing what had been the fruits of the church for, as Christ said: "By their fruits shall ye know them."

THE North Attleboro, Massachusetts Chronicle, for October 27th, has the following notice of the brethren. Paper sent us by some good brother east.

"A service of praise will be given by the Latter Day Saints in G. A. R. hall to-morrow evening commencing at seven o'clock. Prof. H. Broadbent will conduct the music assisted by Miss Edna Broadbent, George H. Warner, Thomas Shallcross, John W. Lee, Wright Gartside and other talent. A very interesting program is promised."

FROM the Chronicle, North Attleboro, Massachusetts, October 29th, we quote:

The service of praise given in G. A. R. hall by the Latter Day Saints Sunday evening was quite well attended. The music, under the direction of Prof. H. Broadbent assisted by Wright Gartside, organist, and an efficient corps of singers, was successfully rendered. It will probably be repeated at Plainville chapel next Sunday evening.

This praise service was duly noticed in the preceding issue of the Chronicle, so that it was well advertized and hence well attended. Good news from our people there.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

HE who attempts to build up his own cause upon the defects and short comings of others, leans on a broken reed and must not complain if he falls. It is just as much out of place to make a personal war upon a supposed antagonist in defence of a principle as it is to trust to the weakness of another's cause for the strength of our own. He who spends his time and health in a public cause in a vituperative, or belittling attack upon another, wastes both, and may confidently expect to make enemies rather than friends, and to alienate the support of good men from him. The epithets, "fool," "knave," "liar," "scoundrel" and their kind spoken or written are neither kind, courteous, nor argumentative; and betray weakness, possibly malice; whoever indulges in them is not wise. Latter Day Saints of all people under the sun should avoid them.

Bro. E. E. Wheeler, of Olivet, Dakota, was to have a debate with Elder Allyn, probably to last five sessions. Bro. Wheeler affirms, "That the church of which I, E. E. Wheeler, am a member, is identical with the church established by Christ and the apostles."

Bro. J. J. Cornish, Reed City, Michigan, has a few hundreds of his Synopsis, which he now offers to sell at $1.25, single copy; three books for $3, or six books for $6.

Bro. M. R. Scott wrote that he and Bro. James M. Scott had been laboring in the vicinity of Hall's Ridge, Indiana.

Bro. J. A. Currie, Jr., writes from Stockdale, Texas, that the late conference of the Western Texas district was a time of rejoicing to all assembled. Four were baptized, the gifts of the Spirit were abundantly enjoyed and the interest was such that the meetings were protracted seven days after the conference. Bro. Currie had been challenged to discuss with a Christadelphian.

Do not send for "Joseph the Seer" at present, for this office has none on sale. It is probable the book will be thoroughly revised and rearranged at an early time; if so due notice will be given.

Bro. E. Day Bennett wrote from Santa Clara, Dakota, October 30th, as follows: "I had the pleasure of leading another precious soul down into the water last Sunday. The work moves on slowly but surely."

The associate editor, W. W. Blair, returned the 6th instant from a five weeks' tour in western Iowa and eastern Nebraska and reports the church in those quarters in prosperous condition.

Bro. Mark Foxwell of Valentine, Cherry county, Nebraska, in a late letter writes: "Nobody comes this way to preach for us." We insert for the information of the elders in that field some of whom may be able to labor there.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right for a priest to visit the house of each member according to his office and calling, in the branch in which he is a member without the voice of the branch?

Ans.—A priest in a branch is not required to make official visits among the members unless he has been regularly elected priest of the branch, for it is written that "all things shall be done by common consent." It is fair to presume that a branch will so elect any priest of their number if they desire his services; otherwise he should labor in harmony with the branch officers as called upon, seeking to build it up, and also endeavoring to preach the gospel in his own neighborhood as circumstances and wisdom permit.

Q.—Is it right for a branch to ordain a teacher when there are two in the branch already, with twenty or twenty-five members?

A.—Yes, under certain circumstances—wisdom should direct. If the present teachers of the branch are incapacitated by old age or other causes preventing them from performing their duties, and there is necessity for another being ordained, he should be so ordained; provided, however, that he possesses the gifts and callings of that office. In other words, if he is called to labor in that calling, and also possesses the gifts to fulfill it. Future and unforeseen causes may necessitate the labors of one whose present ordination may be designed to fit him for that work. Wisdom should direct in all these cases and undue caution as well as undue haste should be avoided.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"My autumn time and nature's hold
A dreamy tryst together,
And both grown old about us fold
The golden-tissued weather.
O stream of life, whose swifter flow
Is of the end forewarning,
Methinks thy sundown afterglow
Seems less of night than morning!"

CRUMBS OF COMFORT.

SHE was a mite of a woman, and her feet were no bigger than lady-slipper leaves. I could have picked her up and carried her away as readily as I could have handled a buttercup. But she taught me a lesson, my dear, which has abided with me like a song through many a night of sorrow and through many a day of gloom. We were passing through a waiting-room on our way to a train. It was a bitter cold day, and the air was lurid with blue noses, and all a-tremble with shivers.

"We will stop here just a second," said the little woman, "and warm our frozen feet."

"But we haven't time," said I.

"I always take time to catch every little crumb of comfort the Lord puts in my way," said she; "how else can I show my appreciation of His constant thought of me?"

And that was the lesson. I was young and impatient and full of expectation in that long-ago time. I looked for the good things of life in loaves rather than in crumbs, and anticipated the warmth of joy piled high within my own enclosure by cordwood measure rather than from the chance opportunity of casual fires. It had never occurred to me then that life was as full, from day to day, of winged bits of comfort as the air is full in April of returning birds, and that one had only to tarry a moment to look up and around, to discern the tender watch-care of the All-loving One.

I wonder if it might be possible to pass on this homely lesson to some other heart to-night. Some other heart that awaits the tardy coming of a great joy and a grand deliverance. That pushes a hurried way through life, always seeking comfort in full measure, pressed down and running over, and takes no note of the chance oblation and the winged offering. Does the way seem long, dear heart, and is there no gleanings left for you in all the "wide wheat plains where others drive their loaded wains?" Have the wrinkles come, and the grey hairs, and the stirless days while you have been waiting to enter upon your heritage of joy? You remind me of one walking through the land in Summer time in search of an aviary where singing birds are kept. With mind intent upon the song beyond, you take no heed of twice ten thousand larks and liquid thrushes that flit and sing about you. Or of a sick voyager across a sparkling sea, who pines for the elixir of health-giving air. His heart set upon anticipations of the future, he never stops to thank God for the pure ozone that brims his present cup. Stop waiting; call back your thoughts from the future, whither they have outrun you like fleet hounds that break the leash. Come back to the present and accept what it offers. Here is a day flashed like a diamond on the strand of time. It is yours. The king himself has no surer claim upon it than you, even though your elbows are out of doors and yours dinner a crust. It is yours to make or to mar, to hold or to fling away, to set within your crown or to play "head or tails" with, in the devil's company.

Yonder goes a funeral. Somebody is about to lay a baby in the ground, as the gardener plants a seed, that the seed may become a blossom. Is it yours? Not so. Yonder romps your household idol, the rose of health on cheek and lip, the sunshine of Paradise yet lingering in her hair. Is it not something to be thankful for that she is left? Do you dare despond when death carries in unseen lands and leaves your white rose upon the spray of life?

Across the street shambles a cripple. How about your legs? Straight, and strong and sound. Then get out with your whimpering because you can't be rich, but are forced to take your fortune in crumbs. A friend gave you a white hyacinth a moment ago, and you have pinned it in your breast, and passing up the street you lament the poverty that keeps you at home from Florida.

Why, my dear, not all the iron chains that ever were forged and cabled can keep a man away from Florida if Florida is in his heart. The scent of an orange will take him there, the laugh of a May morning, the gold on a butterfly's wing, or the sunshine imprisoned in a daffodil's cup will transport him there by a road on which no gruff conductor ever gathers up the season tickets, and from which no miserable malcontents of engineers and firemen ever go off on a strike. Imagination is better than riches if one can not have both. I would rather be the little Marchioness brewing the inspiring cup for Dick Swivelei out of lemon-peel and water than be a king drinking ambrosia out of a golden goblet if the draught signified no more to me than a mere thirst-assuager. The gods drop nectar in the cup we quaff from day to day, if we drink with a contented heart and an eager hope.

Go to, then, with your lamentations and your complaints. Take your comfort in crumbs—yes, even in fine dust pollen—if it comes that way. As you traverse the land that lies between the eastern and the western seas of mortal life, you will find a great many more birds than wolves, a great many more hand-breadth streams than bridgeless torrents, a great many more blessings than curses on the way. It is as we take it that we make it. Joy may accost us sometimes as the piper did Simple Simon, and demand an equivalent for its wares, but more often joy awaits us when we least expect it, and presses lavish gifts upon us by methods we are too blind to notice and too deaf to understand.—SeL

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Special requests for prayer are made in behalf of Bro. B. Bowman, who is sorely afflicted; for Sr. Emma Zumalt, and also for Sr. Spring who is both aged and afflicted. Let these requests receive attention the first meeting after reaching you.

HUBBARD, Ohio, Oct. 15th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I receive so much strength and encouragement in reading the Mother's Letters, that I should like them also to know how we are growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Our branch has been blessed lately. There has been such a sweet holy influence that all our members have been greatly blessed and strengthened; for the Lord by his Spirit has promised to bless us and to increase our numbers if we remain faithful. Our branch has been increased, and some are "almost persuaded." Our elder, D. M. Strachan, has been greatly assisted by the able efforts of Bro. W. H. Garrett, of Greenville, Pa. All have received strength and been edified. Yesterday, after walking to Sharon, Pennsylvania, a distance of eight miles, four of us had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Garrett and his wife. And dear sisters, it was worth the toil, for we enjoyed a grand meeting. There was the same sweet holy influence which has marked our meetings of late. We have looked and prayed anxiously for weeks for Bro. Brown to come to this place; and we have the promise that he will be with us as soon as he can get around. I feel that if there were some preaching done here, many might be made to rejoice in the knowledge of this—the pure gospel of our Lord and Savior. Many are investigating. I do what I can in a humble way to let my light shine, in lending the Voice of Warning and tracts.

Dear mothers and sisters in Zion, I feel that I can not close without saying a word of encouragement to the Prayer League. I am alone here, but I have observed the hour, from two till three; and I can truly say that I have been blessed, and have felt that it is pleasing to the Lord. I have felt the power of the Spirit many times when alone, and I would say to the lonely sisters, Take courage; press steadily forward, and our heavenly Father will bless our efforts, and keep us united in the one faith.

Your sister,
FANNIE E. RICHARDSON.

NOANK, Conn., Oct. 7th.

Dear Sisters:—While reading the letters of the Home Column this morning, my heart was filled with praise and thanksgiving to God for his goodness to me, and that I was ever brought to see the light of this latter day gospel. I thought if others can so inspire my heart, is there not something that I can say that will help some one who is struggling amid the trials and persecution which children of God have always had to pass through.

I am away from the Saints except my daughter, and not allowed to be baptized or have the elders visit us. The way seems hedged up for the truth of the gospel in this place, yet we have the promise that if we are faithful the Lord in his own time will remove all obstacles, for I believe that he is not going to keep his hungry children fed upon husks, when there is bread enough and to spare; and that he is more willing to give than we are to ask. My life has been one of many trials; and I have sometimes felt cast down, yet not forsaken, for he is my "strong tower," and I seem to hear him say, "Wait a little longer, and have patience, my child, and all will be well; for I will go with thee, and will give the grace for every trial."

Let us be faithful, dear sisters, knowing that we shall come off more than conqueror through Him who gave his life for us.

Ever praying for the spread of the truth, I am your sister in the one faith,

MRS. F. E. MERRITT.

CLARKSDALE, Mo., October 14th.

Dear Editor and Sisters of the Home Column:—Although I have not visited you of late, yet I have been greatly cheered by your presence in my home. The comforting words, the precious lessons, the "soul cheering" testimonies, and your counsel and advice are highly appreciated by me. I still feel thankful to the giver of all good, that he is so mindful of his children; that we have the pleasure of communicating our thoughts to each other, reasoning together in love; and through the influence of the Spirit of God, imparting words of cheer, comfort and wisdom to each other. Through the means of the Prayer League, we can at the same hour dedicate our souls to God in earnest prayer, that he will bless his church, imploring his special blessing to rest upon his people, that souls may be brought to repentance and the good work go on. The testimony I have received while observing the time set apart for reading the memory texts, and praying in accordance with the subjects as they have been given us by our sister is: "The Lord is well pleased with our offering, and will answer our prayers by bringing to pass much good." I have felt the power of the Spirit greatly each time during the prayer, and am satisfied this is an effort in the right direction, and that through this earnest prayer service, much good can be attained. I think that where the sisters in different branches organize and hold weekly meetings, the good can hardly be estimated that could be accomplished. Let us go on in this good work, sisters, and see to it that we do our part and God will bless us. In my opinion there never was a time when we needed to pray more or more earnestly. Our children never needed our united prayers more than they do now. The work demands that we should labor in our calling and sphere. Then let us labor earnestly together, in a grand united effort, for the present and future good, and final triumph of the church, to the honor and glory of God.

I must now bid you good-bye, asking you to come and visit me again, and hoping that many others may come, that we all may, as a band of sisters, become intimately acquainted.

Your sister in the hope of eternal life,
MARGARET J. HEAD.

Dear Sister Frances:—The words of the Apostle Paul in eighth of Romans, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit," often come to my mind. It is a question of much importance too, for Paul in his epistle to the Galatians also says: "For he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." And as I for a moment consider, the conviction forces itself upon me. How far short I come of walking after the Spirit. Too often, I fear, my mind is taken up with worldly affairs, thereby hindering my steps; and for the time I am quite forgetful of the Savior's words that where our treasure is there will our heart be also. Yes, let us walk after the Spirit. And what are the fruits? Praying and fasting our minds to engage in high, lofty, and generous thought. That, too, reminds me how clearly Paul understood human nature, for in defining charity he says, "Thinketh no evil." Oh, how far short of this many of us come! It is the want of that charity which causes us so often to put stumbling blocks in our own way. Here it is we so often err, and bring ourselves under condemnation. In looking around us at the faults of others, we too often forget our own failings, and do not realize that we are not doing as well as we might. Frequently it has come to my mind how grievous it is to the great, loving and sympathizing heart of Jesus when those of his chosen people are fault-finding and unloving one toward the other. Each one of us too can shed our influence around. And, sisters, what shall our influence be like? Shall we not try to help one another to greater perfection, thereby cultivating the Spirit of the Master, and keeping ourselves from condemnation.

Correspondence.

INDEPENDENCE, MO., Nov. 1st.

Bro. Joseph:—After five months of labor in Northern Minnesota, I am home once more. While there I baptized nine, and left many investigating the latter day glory. Twenty-two were baptized in Minnesota this past summer. Seven families of the Saints have just arrived from Northern Minnesota. They are talking of buying farms. They will stay here until a purchase is made. Others will leave soon for this country. The children of God are gathering. Among the number from Minnesota are brother Buckley Anderson, and sons, who were at Far West in the days of trouble and sorrow. He was one of the men that worked on the temple at Nauvoo; and he is always ready to converse with any one on those troublesome times; and being used to the hammer, he'll hit the nail every time.

On Saturday, October 20th, I was sent for by Bro. A. White, to go to Holden, and occupy with him over Sunday. I did so, and on Monday I baptized four. The work is gaining ground in that place.

Last Sunday I was at Rich Hill, where I preached forty-five sermons last winter. Bro. S. S. Black met me at the depot. He and Sr. Black are happy in the arrival of twin boys, whom we blessed on Sunday, naming them Joseph and Hyrum. Bro. Emsley Curtis and Abner Lloyd were with me on Sunday. They are preaching also, and have more calls than they are able to fill. I shall leave for Northern, Illinois soon after election, for the winter.

Yours truly,
J. C. FOSS.

LEOPOLD, Victoria, Australia,
September 25th.

Pres Joseph Smith:—Threats of rotten eggs at one meeting here, and they actually scattered the cayenne pepper where I stood. I discovered it, and prayed to God that it might have no effect; I did not sneeze once. Since then the attendance has been better, and the interest seems almost intense. I never had better liberty than here in the Colonies. One night at Wallsend, New South Wales, while preaching on the street, a woman of the Salvation Army interrupted, after which the Spirit took such complete control that for a time I did not seem to make an effort myself. Then it was that I felt the truthfulness of the Spirit being like a two-edged sword.

O, when will we get more help? We need at least four more elders now; two for New Zealand and two for these Colonies. Bro. Neeby and I should employ the three years in one of these Colonies which is two thirds the size of the United States, and after Bro. Smith leaves, only two of us! This is a most inviting field and would sustain at least as many as six laborers. I feel that Heman Smith and Bro. McDowell are both called to this field. If you can, send at least two next spring. The Utah people are making inroads in New Zealand. Why can't we?

Bro. Trembath and I spent two and a half days last week giving out tracts and notice of our meetings; also talking to the people as we thus visited from house to house. Much prejudice was thus removed and I believe we have been blessed accordingly. Brn. Butterworth and Craig did the same in the other part of the district. We have not yet visited Hastings and Queens Ferry but I do not believe in running away from a place where the interest is good simply to gratify our desire to see the Saints. We have been here over a fortnight now, and will stay at least another week. We have two halls engaged.

The climate so far has been remarkably fine, and we had no trouble in getting used to it; are in good health, though in spirit often saddened when contemplating the magnitude of the work, and the inability of ourselves. In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT,
Hastings, Victoria.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 30th.

Bro. Joseph:—We had a glorious time at our conference held at Santa Anna on the 19th. The spirit of unity and love prevailed during the deliberations. The Saints were encouraged and blessed by the Spirit of God which was like a fire burning within us. Bro. J. R. Badham is much afflicted with throat trouble. I trust that the Saints everywhere will join with us in praying for his recovery, because we need him in the branch. In gospel bonds,

J. MORRIS.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Oct. 28th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been in this and Vernon county about three weeks. The sympathy of the people is with us; we have invitations to preach everywhere we go. Bro. E. Curtis has been with me for one week. I have preached every night since he left me, and one week before that he came to me. He is to have a discussion with one F. Smith, of the Christian Church, to come off the 11th of December. Points to be discussed:—"Resolved that the Christian Church is in harmony with the New Testament Scriptures, and occupies apostolic grounds." F. Smith affirms; E. Curtis denies. Vice versa: "The Re-organized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the New Testament Scriptures and occupies apostolic grounds." Time to be divided as follows: Whole length of time to be five nights; first four nights to be devoted to producing evidence; fifth night to summary, time to be equally divided.

Elder F. Smith is to produce a certificate from the elders of his church, certifying that they will sustain him as their representative in the discussion.

Prospects are good for a large ingathering soon as this discussion is ended. I would be very glad indeed if I could stay in the field all winter. The people are good and kind to us. Most of them are well to do farmers and anxious to hear more of the Scriptures, as we teach them.

I am now preaching at Coal Hill School House and stopping at Bro. Chas. Schroder's. Expect to go from here to Cedar Springs if Bro. I. N. White does not direct me elsewhere. I spoke yesterday forenoon at Vanderburg School House, and here at Coal Hill at night. I left home the 9th of October for Clinton; and from there went to Virgil, Vernon county, and from thence home. My post office address will be at Eldorado Springs until further notice.

Elder Scott of the Christian Church that I wrote you of, who challenged me has backed out and told some of his congregation that he was satisfied that he could not dislodge me from my position, and he left for quarters unknown to them. Opposition is vanishing fast. My faith and hope are daily becoming stronger and brighter.

Yours in the certainty of a triumph for the church,
CLARENCE ST. CLAIR.

CASSEL CREEK, Dakotah, Oct. 10th.

Bro. David Dancea:—I am much delighted while reading the sacred pages of the Herald to find such a large ingathering into the Church. It affords me great comfort to know that God's work is onward. I am alone here in the Black Hills, though my faith and hope are firm in this work. I have been doing some fireside preaching and two men say that they are convinced and will come into the church as soon as they have a chance. May God bless all the Saints is the prayer of your brother in the one faith,

JOHN A. TAYLOR.

FIVE LAKES, Michigan, Oct. 15th.

Bro. Joseph:—Our conference is over and it was the largest and best we ever had in this district. Every one felt blessed and encouraged. I felt so glad that I could hardly hold myself within bounds when I got aboard the train and found forty of my brethren going to the conference. Some had gone before and some came after and others went by team &c. We had a grand time, not a jar or contention.

The brethren in Five Lakes have commenced to build a church, stone foundation, sided up and shingled and ready for lath and plaster. Elders Barr, Phelps, Delong, Carpenter, Davis, Baily and Hugill with myself were in attendance; also Bro. A. McKinzie of Ontario. We all felt encouraged and strengthened to labor on. About seventy three have been added by baptism since the last conference (four months).

J. J. CORNISH.

NORTH HENDERSON, Ill., Nov. 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I visited my children in Fremont, Nebraska, last month, and while there I visited the Fremont branch and attended their meetings and found some noble hearted Saints striving to do the Master's will. I trust they may be blest with the choicest of heavens blessings. Coming east-ward from Omaha I stopped at Burlington Junction, Missouri, and at Mineral Springs visited my brother, Dr. Black. He keeps a hotel and health institute combined. I saw many lame and crippled rheumatic people there, some could not walk without help. The Doctor told me that those who had not been drugged very long soon found relief by drinking and bathing in the mineral water, the use of electricity and proper food. He has facilities for giving all kinds of baths. My brother Richard Black lives within three miles of the Springs. I had not met these boys in ten years—not since I came into the Church. I talked to them of our faith and doctrine as best I could. They did not oppose me in any thing, but seemed rather favorable. They could hardly be any other way, for our father was an old time Saint, and an Elder in the Church.

But these boys never heard a sermon on our faith. I told them I would try and send them an Elder to preach the gospel to them—such as they never heard; and as we have no Elder near there, I feel obliged to write to the Herald, hoping and praying that this may meet the notice of some Elder who may be passing through near the Springs. A hack runs between the Springs and the Junction.

Dr. Black is a whole souled man, liberal and kind, making all feel at home. Brethren please call there when convenient.

Your sister,
ISABEL GLASS.

NOTTINGHAM, Pa., Oct. 29th.

Bro. Joseph:—We are few in number but I hope others will soon be added. It is two years since my husband and I came into this church and nine have come in since. We meet the first Sunday in every month; Bro. Joseph A. Stewart, of Philadelphia preaching for us. He is well liked by the people. They say they can find no fault with his speaking, for it is true, and takes the Bible to prove all things. He has a full house, the best of order, and they pay good attention to him. He always has a pleasant word for every one. May God bless Bro. Joseph for the love and kindness he has shown to this little flock. His coming is looked to as a great joy to us.

BOSTON, Mass., November 1st.

Dear Saints:—When I read the letters in the Herald my heart often rejoices, and tears fill my eyes to think that God has been so merciful and made me a member of your society, where I know He is the chief leader. O, how good it is to know that our loving Father is our friend and leader; our dear Redeemer, Jesus Christ; our Life, Light and Way. O, that we may continue to walk in the way He has planned out for us! My heart swells with gratitude to such a kind Father. The thought often entered my mind, I wish I could write a letter too, but I thought to myself, how can I, as a foreigner and stranger, who don't understand this language perfectly, write? A voice told me to try; but I feared and never made any effort until I read a brother's humble challenge in the Herald for assistance in the work of God. It grieved my very soul to think that this precious gospel should meet adversity for want of means to sustain the laborer in the Lord's vineyard. I determined, though a poor widow who has to work for her living, to give one week's wages, five dollars, as a humble offering to speed this glorious work. It is worth making sacrifices for and I wish it was fifty times the amount. But how can I say that I am poor when I think that Jesus my Redeemer had not where to rest his head? It seems ungrateful. But I am not so, I have received so many blessings from my dear Father in the five years I have been in the fold, and all through my life, so that I wish I could stand before the whole world and tell what a precious pearl I have found so far from my home. O, how my heart swells with gratitude! May I ever be faithful and trust in Him who doeth all things well.

I want to say if this should happen to be read by some of my country people who perhaps remember me, how happy I should be to hear from them, and bear my testimony to the truth. I was born in Frederikssund, Denmark. My maiden name was Theresa Steiner; my husband's name Frederik Bjerregaard who died in 1870. Here, in America, people pronounce it Bauregard.

Your sister,

HERESA BJERREGAARD.

COAL CREEK, Colo., Nov. 3d.

Dear Herald:—If practicable to crowd it in by the seventeenth, please say to my fellow-laborer, Bro. W. M. Rumel, to participate in the two days' meeting at Omaha, would afford me pleasure, but demands on the outskirts of my missionary field though prospects for success may not be dazzling must receive attention; hence the impracticability of participating.

Frequent gathering with tried friends and often lingering within home's shadow, is desirable, but some body in the moral vineyard must forego or sacrifice this pleasure. I held fourteen meetings at Sterling, Colorado; three added. Made brief visits at Denver and Hutchinson and struck this point on the 27th ultimo. Have held six meetings and was crowded out of one appointment by a political gathering.

Please say to the brethren at Yuma, Colorado, that I have not forgotten their cry. Let them help themselves all they can; and to the Saints of the Snow-flake branch in Kearney county, Nebraska: Keep the old flag fluttering in the breeze, making calculations to strike a blow at Minden if possible early in the spring or before. If your neighbors refuse to participate with you in the gospel feast, see that you diligently strive to keep yourselves alive in peace and gospel unity. Let present duties always be your aim; God will take care of results. Fear God with a filial fear and know no other fear.

The moral atmosphere of Colorado is tainted with skepticism, infidelity, intemperance through alcoholic drinks, and a drunkenness and staggering, not with wine, or strong drink; with no signs of prohibition, especially not for the latter, so that the courage of a Paul, the faith and patience of a Stephen, the moderation of a James to reach the two's of families and one's cities is needed.

JAMES CAFFALL.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 31st.

Pres. Joseph Smith:—After my work in the Dekalb County Court was over, attended a set debate between Bro. Wm. Bozarth and an independent anti-baptist man by the name of Rowser, on the question: "Was water baptism ever intended for the Gentiles." Mr. Rowser affirming the question in a negative form that it was not. I was not present the first or last evening, but saw and heard enough to know that our William won that battle in a fair, manly fight, using no weapons but those rightly wielded in the spiritual warfare.

Bro. John T. Kinneman was present and held the lines as moderator with true dignity and exactness. In the German and Pleasant Grove Churches, held a number of meetings. Bro. Henry Hindirks is very low from disease which the doctor pronounces the creeping paralysis and there are little hopes of his recovery. At St. Joseph found Bro. J. H. Merriam quite sick and advised of the physician to arrange his matters, but I thought he ought to pull through without great trouble. On Sunday evening at the suggestion of Bro. Luff, attended the "Saints Mite," at Independence, held at the home of Bro. and Sr. Hayward—there were many rooms full of live cheerful Saints, and here the hours passed pleasantly and swiftly as the young and aged improved the hours in happy song, recitations and readings. Many of the selections were well rendered. The accident to Bro. McCallum marred the enjoyment of course; the Saints greatly sympathizing with him in the affliction. Bro. Pitt had been also so unlucky as to lose his house and greater part of contents in fire, but had full courage, as do also Bro. McCallum and his wife under their trial. I was glad to see continued evidences of improvement and good feeling among the Saints. Under the direction of Bro. and Sr. John A. Robinson, I was also enabled to attend the Kansas City Exposition and listen to the music of the Gilmore Band. Here, instead of being a stranger as at Cincinnati, in most every department I found the cheerful faces of Latter Day Saints who were ever ready to pass a pleasant greeting. This shows a grand good change within ten years.

The new church is going on slowly but the work is well and solidly built, and it is hoped to finish the walls and enclose it before winter; but the treasury is low and the committee must pause or get help. In the meantime they meet in the old church lacking room.

Dear Herald:—When I sit down and take a view of the things which surround me on every hand it makes my heart rejoice in that I have been led to see my position and realize the fact that I am dependant upon the all-wise Creator for all things that I receive daily at his hands, and especially the things that I most need. And one is that His Spirit which he has kindly bestowed on me to determine which is the spirit of Christ and which is the false spirit, as I have been led to see that there are many spirits that are going about claiming that they are sent of God to preach his word and save the people, contrary to the teachings of Christ and his disciples. And when I hear men get up and say, "I am saved through the blood which Christ shed for me," and deny that baptism is needful I wonder that they are not afraid, knowing what is written in the Word for man's salvation. And these are they that take delight in persecuting and making mockery of the Saints of the Most High God. If they were of Christ they would do his work and be in line with the word, and we would all be one. There is no doubt about that, for I believe there is not another people that take more delight in serving Christ and keeping his commandments than the Latter Day Saints. I rejoice in this work, because I know by the spirit which I have received since I obeyed the gospel in its fullness and in its purity that it is God's work; and I pray that God may always guide me and keep me in the path that leadeth unto that home which he is preparing for all that desire to do right and walk in the path of duty and keep the commandments of God, that they with us may learn their duty and do it so they may have His Spirit to lead them into all truth.

When I read the Herald, especially the letters, it gives me great encouragement in the work and I have a greater desire to do right as I see that so many are trying to do so and asking for the prayers of the Saints to uphold them in the arms of faith. Although we are far apart and unacquainted with each other yet it seems to me that we know one another by spiritual things, or by the Spirit of Christ, as it is His Spirit which operates the whole body by which we know one another. I pray that all Saints may have His Spirit that when we shall be gathered home that we shall then know each other and give all the praise unto him who hath loved us and hath kept us by the power of His Spirit even unto the end of time. I ask an interest in the prayers of all Saints as I am young in the faith and have a desire to do right at all times, that I may meet with the Saints in the kingdom hereafter, is the prayer of your brother.

MOUNT SIDNEY, Va., Nov. 3d.

Dear Herald:—I left home about the 26th of September and went to Cabel county, West Virginia, in the vicinity of Milton, where I preached five times. I had several calls to go to new places in that and adjoining county which I could not attend to owing to the instructions of Bro. G. T. Griffiths, apostle in charge, desiring me to hasten on to this state. So on the evening of the fourth of October I took the east bound train for Staunton, Virginia, where after a long tiresome night's ride I arrived next morning and was met by Bro. Cleveland and conveyed to his home; and on Saturday night and Sunday I spoke in a school-house to fair sized congregations. There I was met by sister Frances Moneymaker who came thirteen miles to convey me to her home to see her mother who was badly afflicted. She is now much better. On Monday arrangements were made for me to begin a series of meetings in Liberty Hall where on Monday night I met a large crowd of very orderly, close listeners. I held seven meetings with full houses with one exception. They were the most orderly and quiet congregations that I have met. From there I was conveyed to Dayton, Rockingham county, the home of Bro. Benjamin Bowman and his son Noah, where I was cared for by them and their noble wives who are not members of the church; but I have reason to believe that they will soon be. I spoke there and in the vicinity seven times; not so much interest there. Bro. Benjamin Bowman is badly afflicted; Saints please remember him. Last Saturday I was brought back here where on Saturday night I found Liberty Hall packed, so I held six more meetings there with good interest throughout, and have baptized three, all heads of families, and others are very near. The way is opening up and calls are coming in for preaching in other parts, but for a while the people seemed rather shy. Some of them were deceived by the Brighamites at one time and it has been quite a hindrance. I am satisfied that it will take a continuous and untiring effort to establish the work here; and if it could be so, an elder ought to locate here for two or three years. I am looking for Bro. Griffiths soon and will confer with him. There are many religions here and some of them are pretty well established, among which are the Dunkards. There are also Methodists, United Brethren, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Baptists, Christians, Thurmanites, Mennonites, and there may be other ites. It is not worth while for us to come here and stay a few months and then leave. If we expect to establish the truth here we will have to stay. There is a Brighamite district fifty miles from here, but I learn there is no public conveyance near them. Was in hopes that I would get among them this winter but it is rather doubtful. This is a good country and the people are very industrious and hospitable and are friendly when they learn that a Latter Day Saint elder is not dangerous. So, all things considered, the prospect is rather encouraging and I feel hopeful. The Saints here are all earnest in the work, though there are only seven in the state that I know of. I feel a great desire to see this great work move along, and have confidence in its final success. I have had liberty given to speak the word sometimes with power; to God be the praise. I desire to be remembered by the faithful. In hope of eternal life,

Bro. Smith:—The work is looking up some here now; Saints feel strengthened. Our chapel is almost complete. Baptized two, man and his wife, at Hansport, last Tuesday, the fruits of Bro. Davison's labors. Preached five discourses and passed on to Hillsdale, and preached to a few Wednesday eve; and left an appointment to return in a fortnight. I feel some encouraged.

In bonds yours,

A. H. PARSONS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 1st.

Dear Herald:—Some two weeks ago while crossing the ferry I had the pleasure of meeting some elders from Utah who were on their way to New Zealand, their objective point for missionary labors. After being introduced to them our conversation drifted onto religious matters, and among other things I told them of a sermon delivered by Elder H. P. Brown showing the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church, and that one of their elders being present and feeling that his church had been somewhat misrepresented arose and asked permission to reply to the remarks the following Sunday night; that our branch, on motion, gave him our hall and time, also a good, full attendance that he might have a fair opportunity to defend himself and his church; and that the differences were touched upon by Bro. Brown peacefully and pleasantly. I was somewhat surprised to have the young elder—a man twenty-five or thirty years of age, born and raised in Utah, and I think in Salt Lake City—turn to me and ask, "What are the differences between the two churches?" His attention was then drawn away and I had no chance to inform him, but I thought that some of our Utah friends needed enlightening.

Some months ago I met two young men, members of the Utah Church, both born and raised in Salt Lake City, and both about twenty years old. We became quite friendly and familiar, and occasionally discussed religion in a pleasant manner. One day we were speaking of polygamy, when one of them, a school teacher in Utah, said, "You believe so much in Joseph Smith, I don't see why you oppose polygamy when he was in it." I replied, "Our church don't accept the claim that he was in it; and if he was, we believe he was in sin. But we don't believe he was in it." "Why," said he, "I never heard it questioned before." "Neither did I," said the other. I told him that for one I expected to see the day when we could prove that Joseph Smith was not in it, and that we would be able to clear him from the charge entirely. I thought, here are two more who need enlightening.

Last Sunday evening a young lady born and raised in Salt Lake City and a member of the Utah Church attended our meeting. The speaker dwelt considerably on the mission of Joseph Smith and the great latter day work. The young lady turned to the lady next to her and said in surprise, "Why! do they believe in Joseph Smith?" "Yes," was the answer. "Do they believe in the Book of Mormon?" "Yes," was the reply. "I don't see why they don't believe in polygamy then," she continued. Poor woman; she did not know that we believe in Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon and that there is nothing in the Book of Mormon, or the writings of Joseph Smith, or any of his sermons, in favor of polygamy. I enquired her age and learned that she is twenty years of age, bright and intelligent. And I thought, here is another who needs enlightening.

Just think of it; we have had missionaries in Salt Lake City over twenty-five years setting forth the claims of the Reorganized Church, and still there are people there, over that age, who seem to know nothing at all about us. They must be either wilfully ignorant concerning us, or carelessly indifferent. Our missionaries there have my full sympathy in all their righteous teaching.

All is quiet and peaceful in our branch. We are still spreading the truth. One more baptized a week ago.

Yours in bonds,

G. S. LINCOLN.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Nov. 3d.

Dear Herald:—On Sunday, October 28th a telegram came to Bro. W. H. Kelley from Krumroy, Ohio, stating that the daughter of Bro. Geo. Rosser (Sr. Mary Ann Humphrey) died that morning, and requesting him to come down. He being absent, I went in his stead and conducted the funeral services on Tuesday afternoon, and spoke in the Knights of Labor's Hall to an attentive audience. I found a branch organization at Krumroy, the result of the labors of Bro. G. T. Griffith, Bro. Rosser presiding priest. I enclose obituary notice.

M. B. WILLIAMS.

EUREKA, Cal., October 26th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have not been idle since I last wrote, but as yet I have not seen much of the fruits of my labors; nevertheless, I have tried to sow good seed and to carefully prepare the ground, and I shall look for the harvest in the own due time of the Lord, for I know by the testimony of the Spirit's sure witness that the seeds sown were good and they must bring forth good fruits unless choked by the bad weeds that have and are being sown around the good. I further realize that the harvest time is near at hand and that every seed that has or will be sown will be proven and that he that has sowed the seed will also be proven thereby. I further realize that the inmost recesses of the sower's heart will be known, whether has sown to the honor and glory of God or to his own honor. And when the inmost secrets of the heart will be revealed upon the housetops, who of us sowers will be prepared to meet our own sowing with the intents and purposes of the heart at the time of sowing and the consequences, is a very important question, and should be asked and answered and put into practice here before the great revealing time comes, that shall try every man's work whether or not he has worked for his own honor and glory, which is "wood, hay and stubble," that will not stand the fire. So, brother sowers, let all prepare for that fiery trial of our works and ways.

The prejudice that exists in this part of the country bars the people from coming to hear, and there remains but one way, that is to go into houses wherever there is opportunity and sow the good seed and get a few together in private houses and do likewise. We had quite a good time at our district conference. I there met several of the old Saints who have borne the heat and burden and trials of the latter day work for many years and who are still bearing a faithful testimony to its truth by their works. This made my heart rejoice amid the many drawbacks that are to be met in the Christian's life, dispatch of business, courtesy and good will among the brethren was another evidence of improvement which was an encouraging feature of the conference. I was farther encouraged by the return of a prodigal son who has been eating husks and feeding swine for some time. But he concluded to return to his Father's house, and came to me to help him, and I went with him to those who had been injured and he, with tears of sorrow, made repairs as far as was within his power. I hope that Bro. Lowell will continue on in the good work he has again begun, and may God bless him in his endeavors to do right. I was further made glad on my arrival at Eureka to meet our good old Father Kinzey on the wharf to welcome me. He, with Mother Kinzey, have been members of the church for over forty years. They lived in Nauvoo and were well acquainted with your father. They still bear a faithful testimony that your father was a true prophet and a good man. I also greeted many others whom it was a pleasure to meet.

As I have been encouraged, so I will try to encourage others by giving my experience upon the ocean. The first time I went upon the great deep it was very tempestuous. The billows were rolling mountains high and as we went out of the Golden Gate it was fearful to look upon. Soon most of the passengers had gone to their berths sick and I began to feel very dizzy and bad, and by the help of a waiter I got to my berth. The steamer was rolling and pitching so bad that I could not kneel down, so I crawled into my berth and there I prayed to the Lord that he would take that terrible sickness from me if it was His will. Thanks be to his holy name, the sickness was gone and I got up and went out to behold one of the grandest sights I had ever seen—the mighty ocean in its wrath. I enjoyed the trip very much while sailors and others who had traveled for years were very sick. I went up and down the coast to Oregon three times more; each time praying to be delivered from sickness and my prayers were answered. But last July I started for Eureka when the sea was not rough, but I was very sick all the way up, so sick that I fainted away and was unconscious, finding myself on the floor instead of in my berth. This was my experience from not praying, and it will last me as long as I live. I have gone down and back again on the steamers and by the prayers of my brethren and sisters and self I have not been sick, so I can testify by experience that the prayer of faith will control seasickness as well as all other kinds of diseases which I have witnessed many times.

I intend to labor in this county as long as circumstances are favorable. My address will be Eureka, Humboldt county, California. Praying and laboring for the redemption and welfare of Zion,
I am yours in gospel bonds,
A. HAWS.

KANONA, Kansas, October 5th.

Dear Bro. Stebbins:—I have just left Hill City, Graham county, where I have been holding meetings for some time past with good success. I baptized two more last Sunday, so that there are now enough to organize a very respectable branch in that place. It is a hard place,—all kinds of kickers and fault finders. Some wanted to debate, and sent away for a Campbellite to do me up. But when the champion came he got weak in the knees and went back. I expect to return after two weeks. More are very favorable and probably will soon unite with us. I have made appointments in this place for twelve nights, and prospects are very favorable. Am sure of good results. The work is beginning to open up in these parts very favorably.

G. W. SHUTE.

SHELBURG, Iowa, Oct. 27th.

Dear Herald:—There are many here who would like to hear one of our ministers, and there is a hall that I think we might get. The Adventists held their meetings there. I wish brother Roth or some other elder would come. I do what I can to spread the good work. I give my papers out to those who will read them. My little girl and myself are the only ones here of the faith, but any of the brethren coming will find a home with us.

EXPULSION OF JEWS FROM RUSSIA.

The expulsion of foreign Jews continues with increased rigor on the part of the Russian authorities. From Nicolaieff 300 families have been expelled beyond the frontier during the last month. Their case is peculiarly hard, seeing that the whole of these families have been domiciled in Russia for the last twenty or thirty years. From three to eight days has been the general limit of the official notices of expulsion. In a few cases only where the Jews had extensive business connections one month's notice has been vouchsafed. A large number of foreign Jews engaged in commerce in this city have taken alarm at the summary treatment of their co-religionists at Nicolaieff, and are hurriedly winding up their business contracts. I should add that no matter how long these Jews have been domiciled in Russia on foreign passports, they are now being expelled without the option of becoming Russian subjects. According to a paper published at Kharkoff large numbers of young Jewish women in Krementschug and in several populous centers of the Taurida have recently adopted the orthodox faith, owing to the extraordinary scarcity of marriageable Jews from emigration and other causes. The newly converted Jewesses, it is stated, readily find Russian husbands.

SYNOPSIS OF SERMON BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH, AT SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.

This world is very peculiar;
And the people peculiar too,
Some believe in Christ, the Savior;
Without Him, some say they'll get through.

Some say that angels are coming
To visit the earth once again;
Others are awfully cunning,
Saying Christ was only a man.

Some say that signs are following
Believers in this our own day;
While others say, there is nothing
To cheer the poor Saint on his way.

While people are thus speculating,
'Tis a glorious thing to know
That angels have been, and are coming
To visit the realms here below.

The knowledge that Christ is our Savior
And indeed 'is the Son of God,
Coming down from the Infinite One
Who reigns in His blessed abode.

The signs do follow believers,
We have witnessed them in our day;
That God is true to his promise,
I solemnly dare not say nay.

THE FULNESS OF THE GOSPEL.

I BELIEVE I am led by the Spirit to write a few things concerning the fulness of the gospel for publication in the Herald; and surely if I am led of the Spirit of God to write, and the editors are led by the same Spirit, which I believe they are, then my thoughts will not be recorded in vain, but will come forth to the people, and if received in the same Spirit in which they are written will be productive of good.

But a great deal depends upon the Spirit in which a thing is received. Jesus said, "take heed how ye hear;" and is it not equally important that we take heed how we read? If a servant of God has a message to deliver to the people, and we let prejudice close our ears to that message, are we not under condemnation? Jesus says, "Whosoever receiveth him that I send, receiveth me;" hence we should be very careful to ascertain whether a message claiming to be from God is really genuine or not. If it is from God we are bound to receive it; if it be not of God, it justly merits our condemnation.

But how are we to tell whether a message is from God or not? "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word [the word of God] it is because there is no light in them."

So we invite friendly criticism on what we are about to write, not in a spirit of unbelief or prejudice, but with a disposition to "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good."

Unfortunately there are some, even among the Saints, who have imbibed the idea that "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," as set forth in Hebrews 6: 1, 2, includes the "fulness" of the gospel. If that is true, why does Paul speak of something in addition to them? When we speak of a number of things which include all of their kind and then speak of something else in addition to them, we must necessarily conclude that the thing last spoken of belongs to another class of objects; so when Paul speaks of "repentance from dead works; of faith toward God; of the doctrine of baptism, and of the laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment;" and then speaks of perfection as something in addition to or beyond all these, we must of necessity conclude that either the things first mentioned do not include all the doctrine (or gospel) of Christ, or that perfection is something to be attained outside and independent of that gospel or doctrine. But this same writer (Paul) tells us in this same epistle and in the very next chapter, (Hebrews 7: 11), "for the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did." No Bible scholar will hesitate for a moment in deciding that this better hope is the hope contained in the gospel. Perfection then, sought in vain under the Levitical priesthood, Paul declares to be attainable under the gospel. He thus links the [first] principles of the doctrine of Christ, mentioned in the text under consideration, with their natural and ultimate conclusion, that is, the doctrine of perfection; thus showing that the principles mentioned do not include the fulness, but only a part of the gospel of Christ. While this is evidently true of the "first principles" of the gospel, it is just as evident that perfection must necessarily include the fulness of the gospel, for that can not be perfect of which any part is lacking, hence we see that to preach the fulness of the gospel we must preach perfection.

But how are we to preach perfection? It will not do to preach it as something unattainable, as a certain elder of our acquaintance did not long ago. To preach perfection in that way is to preach imperfection. What does Paul say in regard to the doctrine of perfection? He plainly says: "Let us go on unto perfection." He does not say, Let us go on toward perfection, or let us strive to be perfect; but in plain, unequivocal language, he says: "Let us go on unto perfection." Now suppose one of the Saints should start for Zion, as many have and should go on to (or unto) Zion, where would they be when they had fulfilled these conditions? You will say at once, they would be at Zion. Well, then, let me ask you, where would any one be who had complied with Hebrews 6: 1? Your answer to be consistent, must be, "they would be at perfection; not near it, not struggling toward it, but there. Now if this be not the fulness of the gospel, pray what does that fulness consist of? Gospel, means good tidings, good tidings of salvation; and surely tidings of a complete or full salvation is the fulness of that gospel or good tidings.

But some may doubt the possibility of attaining to perfection in this life. To such I would say that Paul claimed to be perfect in at least one degree and was seeking the highest. See Phillipians 3: 13, 14, 15.

David said, "Preserve my soul for I am holy." (Psalms 86: 2). And Christ will present the church to himself "a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing." Now is the time to prepare for that presentation. The longer we put off the preparation the longer will the presentation be put off, for Christ will not receive the Bride or Church until she is fully prepared to meet Him. O, that all could realize the responsibility resting upon us individually to prepare to meet our God, for he will not come until we as a church, are ready to meet him! The remedy has been provided by which all the stains of sin may be removed, and it is the blood of Christ. "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

Brethren, is not this the fulness of the gospel? O, I pray you, search the Scriptures and learn "whether these things be so." Do not treat this message lightly, for I believe God has dictated it by his Holy Spirit. And may that Spirit accompany it, and may it be blessed to the salvation of souls, for Jesus' sake, Amen.
A. J. DENNIS.

WHY WE WEEP.

Our Savior understood our natures perfectly when he said "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." What greater blessing could he have provided than that those who mourn should be comforted. Jesus himself wept tears of sorrow at the grave of Lazarus, and tears of pity over Jerusalem.

"No tears was Jesus weeping
For his own pain,
But for the guilty city,
They fell like rain."

We all weep at the death of our loved ones. We shed tears of disappointment, and tears of repentance for our sins that we may find forgiveness; for there is nothing else in this world so sweet as to feel and know that we are forgiven. Let our tears of shame be few.

I often shed tears over the imperfect works I have done; but I know this is all wrong and very foolish; for if we do the best we can, no one can do better; even the "Angels can do no better" than to do the best they can. But if we can correct our faults and improve our works we should do so at once instead of grieving over them.

We should weep with those that weep and rejoice with them that do rejoice; but we should not take trouble too much to heart, and never give up to despair, for Despair is not one of the Christian graces. I think it is right for us to weep and mourn; but we may not weep at improper times. A very wise man once said, "There is a time to weep."

WHEN DID CHRIST PREACH?

In the Herald of October 6th is an article by Bro. J. A. McIntosh wherein he differs from views expressed by us in a September Herald, page 566. As we believe now as we did then we propose to examine the position taken by the brother and see how it affects the conclusion arrived at in said article, namely, that Christ did not preach to the spirits in prison while his body lay in the tomb. Bro. McIntosh starts out to prove that Jesus preached to the spirits in prison before he was resurrected by giving a garbled quotation from 1 Peter 3: 18, 19. But in order to settle this question we quote these verses entire from the Inspired Translation: "For Christ also once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, that he might bring us to God, for which cause also, he went and preached to the spirits in prison."

It will be seen at once by this inspired rendering of Peter, that Christ had first to be quickened before he could bring us to God, for which cause (to bring these spirits to God) he went and preached to them in prison. Samuel the Lamanite testifies to the same effect, that Jesus had first to be resurrected before he could bring mankind back into the presence of the Lord. (Book of Mormon, Helaman, chapter five). It will be seen that Peter says that he went to prison for that cause and not by that spirit that raised his body as the brother would have us believe.

The point that the brother wishes to make in regard to the present tense in the expression, "he went" is not conclusive, as the language of inspiration often speaks in the present tense of events still in the future, as Isaiah's prophecy of Christ, (Isa. 9: 6). "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." The brother now refutes the idea that Christ went on that mission during the forty days after his resurrection. As we did not affirm this idea, we escape the judgment the brother stands ready to pronounce of having no light in us. (Isaiah 8: 20). We come now to the brother's startling discovery that Jesus was not put to death on Friday but on Thursday. He says (but gives us no authority for the statement) that a wrong rendering is given to Matthew, twenty-seventh chapter and sixty-second verse, and gives as his reason for so believing that the Priests and Pharisees would not break the Sabbath by going to Pilate on a social or state question; for, according to their law, questions of punishment, death, etc., were not executed on the Sabbath day. But the record shows that they did not go to Pilate on questions of guilt, punishment or death; but to get a guard to protect the body of Jesus from being stolen by thieves. We do not know of any Jewish law to prevent the priests from applying for police protection from thieves on the Sabbath; and if there was, their vindictiveness towards Jesus would doubtless have enabled them to overcome their scruples. But to prove conclusively that Jesus was put to death on Friday, we make the following quotation from the Inspired Translation, Mark 15: 46:—"Now when the even was come because it was the preparation day, that is the day before the Sabbath." Luke 23: 55:—"And that day was the preparation and the Sabbath drew on." John 19: 31:—"The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, for that Sabbath day was a high day, besought Pilate that their legs might be broken and that they might be taken away." The same historians agree in saying that Christ rose from the dead early on Sunday morning, but as this is admitted we make no quotations in proof. We now consider it settled as far as the Inspired Translation is concerned, that Jesus was put to death on Friday afternoon, about three o'clock. At even of that day he was taken down, wrapped in linen and placed in the tomb and lay there Friday night, Saturday, and Saturday night, and rose early Sunday morning. This shows that his body lay in the tomb about thirty-six hours. We now come to examine his quotations from the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 11: 2:—"They will crucify him and after he is laid in the sepulchre for the space of three days he shall rise from the dead." The language of Samuel the Lamanite, Helaman chapter five is identical with Nephi.

The brother appears to think that three astronomical days of twenty-four hours is meant by the above. But the mistake is apparent when we examine Samuel's prophecy of Christ's birth, same chapter. We there find what the prophet considered a day. He said: "There shall be one day and a night, and a day, as if it were one day, and there were no night; and this shall be unto you for a sign; for ye shall know of the rising of the sun, and also of its setting; therefore they shall know of a surety that there shall be two days and a night." We here see that Samuel the prophet considered from the rising of the sun to its setting a day, as there are about twelve hours from the rising to the setting of the sun, which Samuel calls a day. And as Jesus was to be in the sepulchre for the space of three days we here have three times twelve or thirty-six hours which time the Book of Mormon has Jesus laying in the tomb, agreeing exactly with the Inspired Translation, as Jesus was to be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. It is in order for some one to show how he could have filled that mission in the space of time that his body lay in the tomb. Inspired Translation, Matthew 12: 34:—"For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Question: How was Jonah in the whale's belly? By his spirit? We answer, No. The record shows that he was tossed overboard and went down alive body and spirit and stayed there a living Jonah three days and three nights. So must the Son of Man (body and spirit) be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, a living Christ. As Jonah was so was Christ to be. We trust that the above examination of the Scriptures has made it clear that Jesus did not preach to the spirits in prison while his body lay in the tomb, but that it must have taken place after he was resurrected. THE following from the Chicago Times of October 27th, gives the new phase of the Andover Heresy Controversy; and scores one for probation after death.

A CHANCE FOR PAGANS.

The Future Probation Controversy not yet Ended in the American Board.—A Council of Massachusetts Ministers Ordains a Rejected Candidate to be a Missionary.—If the American Board will not put him on its Pay-roll the Council Guarantees his Support.

BOSTON, Oct. 23d.—The new departure men on the Andover side of the future probation controversy in the American board have not been idle since their defeat at the Springfield meeting of the board last year, but have been considering whether there was any means by which they could win success. For some time there have been reports that they were to send out Mr. William H. Noyes, one of the rejected candidates for mission service under the board, as an independent missionary on his own hook. Thus they would pass by the board and stand in the attitude of succeeding in spite of the other objections of the prudential committee. They have now taken the step and Mr. Noyes was ordained by the council last night. The conservatives are disposed to complain that the council was made up by sharp practice, for the letter calling it was not sent out till last Thursday, and action upon it must have been taken on the next day and the council was held yesterday afternoon and evening. Thus, if there was any disposition to object to the calling of the council, no opportunity was offered for united action. As it was, four of the churches were not represented, and one of them sent a formal protest against the council as overlooking the American board. But one of those who accepted was Rev. Dr. Dexter of the Congregationalist, and as he is one of the leaders of the conservatives they had at least as able representation as the new-departure men. But the outcome of the council was not a triumph for either party, though it was much more in favor of the new-departure men than of the conservatives. At the end of a three hours' session of the council the following was adopted by a vote of twenty-five to one, as it is given out: "That this council express satisfaction with the examination of W. H. Noyes and that we proceed to ordain him as our foreign missionary and advise this church to endeavor to secure an arrangement by which he can work under the same direction as other missionaries of the Congregational churches, and that in case such arrangement can not be made this church assume the responsibility of his direction and support."

This vote, it will seem, brings the matter once more before the American board, and it is the purpose of the friends of Mr. Noyes to move as speedily as possible in the case. Whenever the request comes from the church for the approval of the board to the sending out of Mr. Noyes the prudential committee will doubtless give the case careful attention and see if it is possible for them to come to any arrangement by which Mr. Noyes can be sent out. For it must be remembered by the public that the board is desirous of harmony so far as possible and will go as far as any one for that end, provided it does not involve the sacrifice of what they believe to be essential doctrine. But on the face of the matter it is not easy to see how there is any reason to think that the board will accept Mr. Noyes as a missionary. He said in his examination before the council yesterday that he had not changed his views and that he had stated them to the prudential committee before as plainly as possible, though the statement which he made to the council was the most satisfactory which he had ever presented to any one.

The board occupies a stronger position in the matter than they did before the Springfield meeting last year. Then the one issue which overshadowed all others was whether the course of the prudential committee should be approved in refusing to send out Messrs. Noyes and Torrey, who had stated their belief in the possibility of probation after death for those who have not heard the gospel in this life. On that issue the new-departure men made their fight and were overwhelmingly beaten. The board by specific vote approved the course of the prudential committee in refusing to send out the men whose views were not acceptable to the majority of the churches, and now the committee are acting under positive instructions, and if they were disposed to change their course and send out Mr. Noyes the only honorable way for them to act in view of the vote of the board would be to resign and let another prudential committee come in which should respect the vote of the board. So the committee is impregnable in their position and unless Mr. Noyes has some change in his views to announce, which he says he has not, then the board must refuse to approve him as a candidate, and then, according to the vote of the council, he is to be sent out at once by the church which called the council of yesterday. There is a curious complication in this case. The pastor of the church is Rev. Charles A. Dickinson. He was elected a member of the prudential committee at the meeting of the board at Des Moines in 1887, when Prof. Egbert C. Smyth was dropped. Now Prof. Smyth is the one man of all who has made the most of the Andover controversy, and since he was dropped for his views it must be supposed that his successor was sound. But Mr. Dickinson joins with his church in sending out Mr. Noyes in spite of the disapproval of the board, and thus puts himself with the radical element. Another curious thing is that this church which proposes to send out a missionary on its own hook is not self-supporting, but draws $2,500 a year from the Massachusetts Home Missionary society. So that the $7,000 which will be given for the support of Mr. and Mrs. Noyes in the mission field really is contributed by outsiders and of course must come from those who are willing to give that amount of money for the sake of sending out a man independent of the American board. If this church does it others may do the same, and here lies the danger and significance of the whole movement. It may lead to the organization of a new missionary society not working on the same ground as the American board, and it certainly introduces elements of a "divisive and perverse" nature, to use the expression which has become famous by its use in this connection. The tendency of the movement is not for peace and harmony but the exact reverse.

There is another queer phase of this matter which is of so much interest to the denomination. This whole move for the sending out of Mr. Noyes is ostensibly based on a letter from Japan which was written last May by the deacons of a native Japanese church stating the urgent need which was felt there for more missionary assistance. The friends of Mr. Noyes in the Berkeley Street church, where he has been assistant pastor for over a year, at once proposed to send him, and he joined in the proposal. Hence the council and the ordination. But the letter was from the Japanese island of Shikoku, the southernmost but one of the four large islands which make up the empire of Japan, and from the city of Matsuyama. But this part of the empire is visited several times every year by Mr. Atkinson, a missionary under the auspices of the board, and some time ago before this movement was heard of he wrote to one of the officers of the board here in regard to the doctrine of future probation, condemning it strongly and deprecating the effect it might have upon the missions of the board. Now Mr. Noyes proposes to go directly to his own field. Here is a possibility for trouble at the very outset.

Mr. Noyes' new statement of his views regarding future probation which he gave to the council was as follows: "As to future things I believe that the supreme fact revealed is the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ in glory to judgment. Christ's judgment will not be arbitrary, but in righteousness according to the gospel. This judgment I believe is final. The wicked shall forever depart from God, but the righteous shall forever live with God. I believe that we shall all stand before the judgment seat of God and each one of us shall give account of himself to God, whose servant each one is and before whom each one standeth or falleth. Of the in-intermediate state I hold no positive doctrine. I do not know what effect physical death will have upon character. What I dread for my fellow-men is spiritual death. I am confronted with the tremendous fact that without the gospel they are dying. Character tends to fixity. The Spirit of God will not strive with man forever. Then woe is me if I preach not the gospel at once. With the gospel message I believe there goes a decisive opportunity and obligation to repent. God help me so to present the message that men will be saved by it and not lost. Those who do not hear the message in this life I trustfully leave with God. I do not claim to know God's method of dealing with them, but I do not refuse to think of them. I entertain in their behalf what I conceive to be a reasonable hope that somehow before their destinies are fixed there shall be revealed to them the love of God in Christ Jesus. In this, as in every question on which God has given no distinct answer, I merely claim the liberty of the gospel." Mr. Noyes was sharply catechised by some of the members of the council and to them, especially to Dr. Dexter, he replied that he did not hold the doctrine of future probation as an affirmative doctrine, but more as a hope from his heart than anything else which was not contradicted by his reason and was not forbidden by scripture. He did not find the doctrine in the bible, but found nothing in the bible which would forbid him to hold it. He did not hold the doctrine as a part of his working theology, nor should he make it a part of his teaching in mission work. He made a creditable appearance before the council and seems to have been thought worthy of ordination by every member except one.

THE Chicago Tribune for October 29th, has the following editorial on the address of Canon Farrar, made at the Church Congress held at Manchester, from which we have quoted elsewhere. It would seem as if the Canon was determined to test the solidity of the daughter of Catholicism in regard to creed, and all that we could wish for is that while the church dignitaries are discussing about the creeds, the people to whom they preach may be given the light of the spirit of truth, that they may see the sophistry which maintains church authority, while it ignores a great part of Christ's truth.

ANGLICAN DOCTRINE ABOUT HELL.

The Church Congress recently held at Manchester, England, and presided over by the Bishop of that See is the most memorable since the days of Pusey in the public opinion of the established Church of England, and, presumably, in that of the extensive numbers of Christians who adhere to its ancient creed. The question is becoming, however, a serious one. What is its ancient creed? The issues which have been carried from time to time from synods up to the highest tribunals in the various orthodox communions indicate that there is an intellectual activity always working toward what time shows to be a softening modification of dogmatic formularies. The "strong" men of every church having a written body of essential belief have always striven to hold the younger disciples from doing what to the latter seems squaring the dogma more correctly to the newer and clearer light which experience brings to bear upon everything human. This is true in the Anglican or Protestant Episcopalian as in every other church. The reformed portion of that body is its living witness in one direction. The Pusey episode was testimony to it in another.

Canon Farrar, author of favorite "Life of Saint Paul" and of numerous other works which find wide acceptance among his fellow creedsmen, startled the elder element in the Manchester Congress by an address on Hell. He declared the old doctrine held that the vast majority of mankind, Christian as well as heathen, dying unrepentant, passed into a lake of fire to be tortured in inconceivable agony in material flames for all eternity. "Within living memory," he said "this was the orthodox view, and any one who repudiated it or who even swerved materially from it was denounced as a heretic and unbeliever." "These views," he added, "I repudiate with all the force of conviction." He was immediately cheered loudly throughout the council, which was more numerous than any since the exciting scenes in the same town a quarter century ago. Canon Farrar was followed by Sir George W. Cox, a rector of York. He said that "half a century ago the four last things to be remembered were death, judgment, Heaven, Hell; and that, as to the last, the teaching upon it had turned religion into a hideous nightmare." He also was loudly and vehemently applauded.

While the emotional indications seemed clearly to show that the majority of the congress sympathized with Canon Farrar and Sir George W. Cox, the minority found in the Rev. Dr. Randall a vigorous and dexterous apologist. He characterized the deliverances of the two preceding speakers as "soul-destroying heresies." He, too, was cheered. Arraigned for his words in many places, Canon Farrar has pointed out that his views as pronounced at the congress are those he always held, and are, moreover, those of Dr. Pusey himself, who was practically expelled from the formal communion for extreme high church notions. Dr. Pusey went so far towards Rome as to declare that nothing stood between that church and the Anglican except the recognition of Anglican orders by Rome. Canon Farrar has triumphantly disposed of the accusation that his eschatology differs from Pusey's, although he is a low churchman, by citing a letter written by Dr. Pusey to himself, in which the latter affirms that he believes no souls are damned except those "obstinately and finally impenitent." He adds, "God alone knows."

Canon Farrar holds what would be acknowledged the most desirable place for a scholar in the Church of England—that of Archdeacon of Westminster. He is as eminent in philology as in theology. His works have been translated into the chief Continental languages. He has written a part of the standard dictionary, of the Bible, and many articles for the Encyclopaedia Britannica. He is a lecturer at Cambridge and a chaplain to the Queen. Should the conservatives in the church put him on trial, he will make a powerful defense.

Conference Minutes.

INDEPENDENCE.

Conference met at Independence, Missouri, 10 a. m., October 6th, vice president, Alfred White, in the chair, S. Crum clerk. Report of Holden branch with request accompanying, deferred. Branches reported:—Clinton 56, 1 baptized. Independence 621, 12 baptized, 6 received, 3 removed, 1 died, 1 marriage. First Kansas City 35, 1 died. Report of Officials:—Elders: A. Lloyd, F. C. Brackenbury; Priests: Will Kelly, A. J. Cox, (baptized 1), D. E. Tucker; Teachers: J. Burnham, J. F. Scott, and W. V. Frick. S. Crum being called away, E. L. Page was appointed to act as clerk. Alfred White, Bishop's Agent, reported as follows, for three months ending September 30th: Amount received, $593.26, amount paid out, $517.65, balance on hand, $75.61. Report approved. Report of Holden branch with request accompanying, was referred to the committee. Holden, Missouri, was selected as the place for holding our next conference the first Saturday in January. The authorities of the church and district were sustained. Committee on Holden branch found 21 to be the correct number of its members and recommend that the secretary so notify the clerk of said branch; and they further recommend that the request of the branch be referred to the president of the district, he to take such action as the case may demand. Report received and committee discharged. Sunday forenoon President Joseph Smith delivered a discourse on the resurrection; text, Psalms 17: 15, "I will be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." This was upon the occasion of the death of sister Melissa Brownell, one of the early Saints, who had received baptism at the hands of Joseph the Seer. Albert L. Newton was baptized by Elder John A. Robinson and confirmed by Joseph Luff and Joseph Smith; a child also was blessed by Pres. Joseph Smith and Joseph Luff. In the evening President Smith preached to a crowded house. He gave much good advice to the Saints in regard to their deportment one toward another and cautioned all against evil speaking. Adjourned.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

Met with the Mission branch September 15th and 16, Bro. F. M. Cooper president, W. Vickery secretary. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report $10 75, received since $40.00, paid out $11.00, balance $39 75. Branch reports: Plano 204, 2 baptized, 5 removed; Mission 104, 1 baptized; Broughton 18, 2 received; Streator 32; First Chicago no changes; Burlington 35, 1 received, 1 baptized. No reports from Piper City, Braidwood, Sandwich, Amboy, Pecatonica, Janesville, Marengo and Boon County branches. Officials reported: Elders: F. M. Cooper, baptized 3. Oden Jacobs, William Pender, T. Hougas, A. Hayer, J. Stanley and W. Vickery; Priests: A. Tarling, H. Worby and J. Walters, baptized 1; Teacher, A. Wilcox. F. M. Cooper was continued president and W. Vickery clerk of the district for the next four months. A two day's meeting was appointed to be held at Streator, Illinois, September 20th and 21st. The district president was authorized to appoint a committee, himself to be one of said committee to investigate and report to next conference as to the propriety of holding a convention of the Sabbath Schools in the district. Preaching by Brn. Wm. Pender, F. M. Cooper and W. Vickery. Also Saints meeting Sunday at 2:30. Two were baptized during the conference. Adjourned to meet at Plano, February 16th and 17th.

WESTERN TEXAS.

Conference convened Friday night before the full moon in October, 1888. By request of the president, Elder I. N. Roberts occupied the chair with him. Elders reported: I. N. Roberts, baptized 8, blessed some children, J. A. Currie Jr., president of district, baptized 11, L. L. Wight, baptized one, Absalom Kuykendall, J. A. Currie Sen., and W. H. Davenport. Priests: T. J. Shepard and O. D. Johnson. Branch reports: Bander, no report; Oakwood, no change; Medina City, increase of six and three ordinations since last report. A motion prevailed that the president of the district regulate services during conference. Upon motion the mission and district officials were sustained, also those of the general Church. Bishop's agent reported verbally not having made a written statement: received $20.00, disbursed $10.00. Resolved that when this conference adjourns it does so to meet at Pipe Creek Schoolhouse, Friday night before the full moon in February. Resolved that we have a two day's meeting in each branch in the district between this and our next conference, the time of the same to be appointed by the president. On motion Bro. John Barber was elected secretary pro tem. Resolved that this conference shall issue licenses to all elders, priests, teachers and deacons of this district who have not received them. A vote of thanks was tendered to the friends in this community for their kindness to this conference. The following resolutions were adopted: Whereas, There are members of the church living in Western Texas district who have not united with any branch for causes unknown to us, Therefore be it Resolved, that this conference request the president of the district to labor with said members and report to the next conference why said members do not unite. Resolved, that in the opinion of this conference dancing is unchristianlike conduct and members of this district engaging in the same be dealt with as transgressors of God's law. Resolved, that we as a church consider that purchasing, selling and drinking intoxicating liquors; horse-racing, card-playing and immoral conversation is contrary to the principles of the doctrine of Christ and shall not therefore be indulged in by the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and any member of said church practicing any of the above shall be dealt with according to the law with regard to unchristianlike conduct. Preaching during the conference by Brn. I. N. Roberts, J. A. Currie Jr. and L. L. Wight. Saints meetings were also held at which the Holy Spirit was present to cheer and bless. Adjourned pro resolution.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Conference convened at Newport, Los Angeles county, California, in the Saints' church house, October 19th, pursuant to call of Bro. D. Mills, president of the district. Opened with singing and prayer, after which, upon motion of Bro. J. F. Burton, Bro. H. C. Smith was invited to take the chair. Secretary of last conference, C. T. Howland, was sustained with Bro. Sidney Wright as assistant. Los Angeles, San Bernardino, and Newport branches reported, with a net gain of eight members. Reports of Elders Mills, Badham, Smith, Goff, Burton, Gibson, Thompson, Garner and French; Priests Morris, Pickering, Starkey and Jones; Teachers Earle and Penfold, were received, after the motion to suspend the rules in order that the officials might report verbally, was lost. October 20.—New business was called and presented, and after being disposed of the regular order was presented. No other business being before the assembly, the election of officers was proceeded with and resulted in the re-election of the present incumbents. Adjourned for meeting of S. S. Association, two p. m.

Business of Sunday School Association transacted, at the close of which, and upon motion of Brn. Thompson and Penfold the regular order of business of the conference was taken up. The officers of the church were on motion, sustained. Resolutions sustaining Brn. H. C. Smith and J. F. Burton in their present positions was carried. A resolution disorganizing the Laguna branch was lost, and the subject was referred to a committee. Evening session.—After the opening exercises, preaching by Elder H. C. Smith. The subject, "Financial law of the church," was very ably and clearly discussed. The committee to whom was referred the matter of Laguna branch reported the same not disorganized. The matter was then referred to missionary in charge. Sunday: Prayer meeting from nine to eleven a. m. The gifts were manifest and the Saints were blessed. Preaching from 11 to 12:40, Bro. D. S. Mills occupying the stand. Sacrament at two p. m., over which Brn. Mills and Smith presided. The meaning of the Lord's Supper and the duties surrounding it were most ably explained by Bro. H. Smith. The gifts were again with us to comfort and build up. Some were administered to and two were baptized on Sunday afternoon. The following officers were present: Apostles 1; Seventy's 1; High Priests 1; Elders 12; Priests 6; Teachers 2; Deacons 2. The conference was well attended after the first session and though on some points we could not see alike it ended with the best of feeling and the Saints as a district feel to obey the voice of God, telling us to "come up higher" and enjoy a higher plain spiritually. He promised to bless us, the promise being spoken in tongues, by our aged brother John Brush. How reverent and solemn; he standing on the very verge of the grave, with snow white beard, testifying to this glorious Gospel and in tongues appealing to God to keep him in his old age that he may not go astray. Preaching in evening. Adjourned to meet in San Bernardino some time in March.

Miscellaneous.

NOTICE.

Freeman L. Reid is requested to report to John Burges, Lakeland, Hants County, Nova Scotia, by January 1st, 1889; or his name will be dropped from record. A. H. PARSONS, President of Mission.

BORN.

Near Los Angeles, California, Oct. 24th, to Bro. Joseph and Sr. Dora Howland, a daughter. Mother and babe doing finely.

DAVIS.—Near Olivet, Iowa, March 21st, 1888, to Sr. Adda and Mr. D. J. Davis a son. Blessed October 19th, 1888, by Elder J. S. Roth, and named Walter.

TRUMAN.—At Flagler, Iowa, September 30th, 1888, to Sr. Elizabeth and Bro. Joseph Truman a son. Blessed October 21st, 1888, by J. S. Roth, and named Samuel.

MARRIED.

BLAIR—BURLINGTON—On the 7th of November, 1888, in St. Joseph Missouri, Mr. David H. Blair and Miss Margaret W. Burlington, Elder W. W. Blair officiating.

DIED.

CONANT.—At Independence, Jackson Co., Mo., October 28th, 1888, of quick consumption, Sr. Calista R. Conant. She was born in Chelsea, Orange Co. Vermont, July 31st, 1813. She was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Boston, Mass., by Elder Freeman Nickerson in the spring of 1842. She became connected with the Reorganized Church by vote of General Conference. She was the daughter of Frederic and Abigail Spear, who were of Scotch ancestry. Her father was the youngest one of six brothers; who with their father participated in the war of the American Revolution. Her mother, one of the early saints, died full in the faith. Sister Conant though for nearly ten years a cripple and much of the time sorely afflicted with her infirmities, bore all patiently; buoyed up by her faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ, to which she steadfastly adhered. In answer to prayer, her mind was clear to the last. She left with us her testimony to the truth of the gospel, and bidding each one farewell passed away in peace. Funeral service by Bro. Joseph Luff, assisted by Bro. E. Kelly.

DANCER.—At Wilton Center, Illinois, October 28th, 1888, George, father of Srs. Jessie and Alice, and brother of Bro. David Dancer. He was born at Half Moon, New York, October 3rd, 1812, and was at his departure from this life, aged 76 years and 23 days. He was not and never had been a member of any church, but was esteemed by his neighbors for his honesty and integrity. He leaves two daughters, Alice P. and Jessie M., both strong in the faith of the Reorganized Church. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder John S. Keir of Braidwood, Illinois, who was assisted by Elder Dickenson of the Baptists, a neighbor of the deceased for the last twenty eight years. So passes an honorable man from this life.

HALL.—At Beckville, St. Louis County, Missouri, Oct. 1st, 1888, Sr. Sarah J. Hall, aged 80 years, 7 months and 21 days.

HUMPHREY.—At Krumroy, Ohio, October 28th, 1888, Sr. Mary Ann Humphrey, daughter of Bro. George Rosser. She was born in Aberdare, Glamorganshire, South Wales, in 1859, and united with the church about two years ago, being baptized by Elder G. T. Griffiths. She lived a devoted christian life and died in hope of a glorious resurrection, leaving her aged parents, husband and two children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by Elder M. B. Williams.

SQUIRES.—Sister Jane Squires was born April 2nd, 1805, at Chelmsford, Essex county, England; married to James Squires August 11th, 1846; was baptized in 1851 by Elder James Penrice of the London district and with her husband emigrated to Salt Lake City in 1855, remained in the Church under the leadership of Brigham Young for five years, and becoming thoroughly disgusted with the teachings of his priesthood, left Salt Lake Valley in the year 1860 and came to Lexington with her husband, moving with two yoke of oxen and a wagon, suffered many hardships on the long and tedious journey and were again privileged to hear the gospel taught in its purity. She united with the Reorganized Church on the eighth day of April, 1878, Elder Robert Davis officiating in the ordinances. She has been a dutiful witness to the latter day work and by her faithfulness has done much good and led some to investigate the gospel as taught by those sent of God. The sister departed this life October 23d, in the bright hope of a glorious resurrection, leaving many friends, both in and out of the church, who will cherish her memory. Funeral services by Elders James A. Carpenter and John J. Bailey.

We have on hand about 100 copies of a book, entitled "Llyfr Hymnau at Wasanaeth Eglwys Iesu Grist, Ad-Beoleiddedig Saint y Dydd Diweddaf." There are 393 hymns in Welsh and 33 in English. It is published by the church in Wales, and sent here for sale. Sixty cents each, free of postage; bound in full leather, marbled edges.

AUTUMN LEAVES,

Prospectus for 1889.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND PATRONS.

With the next issue of AUTUMN LEAVES the volume for 1888 will close, and your next number will begin the new volume. Before entering upon our work for another year we wish to express our heartfelt thanks to you for the support and encouragement given us in our labors the past year. To this support and encouragement the periodical is indebted for its existence; and in reality, it is not our work any more than it is yours; and in the great day of reckoning there will be a sifting and readjustment of debit and credit which will upset many a nicely balanced sheet, by transferring credit to names which have not appeared thereon, and subtracting or utterly cancelling those which in their prominence have had entirely too much placed to their account. Let us thank God for this, and take courage, for we know that our God will reward each one faithfully and fully; not only for what he has done, but for that also which he had it in his heart to do.

WHILE GRATIFIED

with the success of the past year, we do not feel that the permanent success or continued life of our Magazine is yet assured. The slight advance in price which we have been compelled to make may not meet the approval of all, and yet we can not think that any friends of the work will make this an objection. Some who have had the Magazine to examine during the past year, may not be as well pleased with it as they hoped to be, and for this reason wish to discontinue it. For reasons like these it behooves those who are interested in the work and desire its continuance, to put forth an effort in its behalf. Our subscription list this year ought to reach at least three thousand. Every day the church is enlarging her borders; and this, if reached, would be a small circulation in a church of twenty or twenty-five thousand members.

We make no promise for the future, save what we have made in the past. If our work falls below your expectation, it will be because we fail after having done our best to succeed. No one can honestly pledge you more than to do their best.

ONE PROMINENT FEATURE OF THE NEXT VOLUME

will be extracts from a very rare and voluminous work, "Kingsborough's Mexican Antiquities." These articles will be contributed by Elder S. F. Walker, who during a recent visit east had access to this work and copied largely therefrom. Its author, son of the English Earl of Kingston, died in 1830, (memorable date) after having spent his life and a large fortune upon this work, which shows, beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt, that Ancient America was occupied by Hebrews. We are thankful to be able to present to the church a knowledge of the existence of this work and extracts therefrom, for by this and other kindred means we learn as plainly as facts can demonstrate, that long before the coming forth of the Book of Mormon God was providing means to establish the proof of its origin and authority, thus leaving those who reject it and his latter day work without excuse in the day of judgment.

TO OUR OLD SUBSCRIBERS

we say, that it will be a great saving of time and trouble to us to receive the renewal of your subscriptions before the 15th of December, as it will obviate the dropping of your names from the mailing list, and the replacing of them should you afterwards send us your names. All parties renewing their subscription before that date can send the money at our risk and expense, if sent by bank draft, express check or, best of all, post office money order. Send the amount of subscription, less the cost of the draft, check, or order and you will be credited with a full year's subscription. This offer does not hold good for less than one year's subscription. Do you wish to obtain

YOUR OWN MAGAZINE FREE?

You can do so by sending us a list of ten names with money (this may also be sent at our expense) and we will send you a copy for 1889 free. If you can not obtain so many names, we will allow you 10 cents for each name and you can pay the balance in money.

TO THE TRAVELLING MINISTRY.

desiring the Magazine, we shall be pleased to send it without cost, to themselves or families upon application by postal card, asking only that they interest themselves in obtaining subscribers and otherwise as heretofore helping to sustain the work. To such we will also allow the commission offered above.

There is a way by means of which

OUR FRIENDS CAN AID US GREATLY

in extending our circulation, and possibly be the means of bringing the work to the knowledge of some one who otherwise would never know of its existence. The Christmas-Tide is coming and you are in the habit of exchanging tokens of love and good will with your friends at this season. Send them this year a series of the Magazine; and what its monthly visits may accomplish, eternity will reveal. If you have no friend to whom you especially wish to send it, then subscribe for an extra copy, and either name for yourself, or ask your missionary in charge to give you the name of some worthy family, too poor to subscribe, but to whom the Magazine would be a blessing.

During the past year we have learned that the Magazine has been read by many outside of the church, in many instances removing prejudice and opening the way for the preaching of the gospel. To God be the glory, and may the means of usefulness in the church be multiplied until the kingdoms of this world "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ."

Send all moneys to David Dancer, box 82, Lamoni, Iowa; also all notices of change of address, or missing numbers etc. Remit only by one of the four methods mentioned.

Elders when remitting for subscription should always remit at our expense.

Price $1.50 per annum, strictly in advance. Parties wishing to renew who are not prepared to forward money before the January issue, must notify the office of their intention to subscribe, or they will fail to receive their Magazine.

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the bidden's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocletian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Special attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

"COME UP HIGHER."

WE have lately been impressed with the unanimity of statement in the utterances of the Spirit manifested of late unto the Saints in different places and upon various occasions. At a late conference of the Southern California district, the minutes of which are now before us, the voice of the Spirit in the gifts of tongues and interpretation was, "Come up higher." All along the line, almost everywhere the Saints are gathering in district conferences or in reunion meetings, the report almost invariably follows that their session was the "best ever held," and that an increased measure of the Holy Spirit was bestowed. The Saints at Lamoni in common with all the children of God are rejoicing in these rich tokens of the Father's love as manifested in the fruits of His Spirit. Of late they have repeatedly been promised greater measures of blessings and increased manifestations of the Lord's favor and power, and with this has been coupled the loving entreaty, "Come up higher that you may receive them." Our social service of Sunday, the eleventh instant was remarkable in the presence and visible manifestations of the Holy Spirit which rested upon the assembly like a mantle from the opening of the meeting until its close. Through the gifts of tongues, interpretation and prophecy the Saints were informed that their past blessings would be eclipsed by the greater ones that would follow. It was predicted that the church would be fully organized, and also that as in times past the Spirit had borne witness of the coming of His servant Joseph to take his place in the church, so would it witness in the north, in the south, in the east and in the west the coming of the patriarch which was near, and for which the Saints should now be looking.

The Saints everywhere who have been living and praying for the fulfillment of the Lord's purposes concerning His church are receiving the assurance that the set time to favor Zion has come. As a church we have, especially in the past few years, been merging into greater light, receiving an increased baptism of the spirit of our work, and advancing the cause of truth in the various mission fields occupied, and this is but the beginning of good things to come. We should not forget that all blessings are conditioned upon faithfulness and obedience, hence the command, "Come up higher" appeals to us to reach the requisite condition of humility, faithfulness and love for God, for his cause, and for our fellowmen and each other, that we may, in the fullest sense be one, and be agreed as touching these things. When we as a church shall become possessed in the fullest measure with love and devotion to our God and his church, and when we shall for love's sake seek the welfare of each other, when the Saints who, although they may differ in judgment, shall yet differ amicably, and justly esteem one another's good, then will the cause of truth be impelled by mighty power and we, growing in grace and in further knowledge, gradually reach a oneness of understanding as we increase in knowledge of the word of God.

Let all the Saints heed the injunction of the Spirit and come up higher by a personal, and energetic, and faithful observance of the truths recorded and thus live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. Then will Zion arise and shine and the glory of the Lord be upon her to the salvation of the nations.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

FROM November 1887 to November 1888 the average weekly issue of the HERALD was 4088; of the Hope 4555; of the Autumn Leaves 2042. This represents 5,821, 159 pages of printed matter demanding type setting, putting up and taking down, adjusting and readjusting upon the bed of the press and the turning over and over of the cylinder by which the impression of the type upon the white paper was made. Think of it, ye readers of the HERALD!

We were out of paper, is the reason why the HERALD for November 10th was delayed. Paper was ordered but did not reach the office for some reason.

Bro. Silas J. Cook, writing from Cameron, Illinois, states that he had visited the branch at Plano, that state, and had found the Saints alive and rejoicing in the truth. To Bro. Cook and others who desire information concerning the tune-book we would state, that Bro. Forscutt is prosecuting the work as rapidly as possible. He has been delayed, however, by the electrotypers, but will complete it just as soon as he can. We can not state anything more definite than this.

We are informed that an elder who is preaching in the vicinity of his home is doing great injury to the work, placing a stumbling-stone in the way of its progress and greatly mortifying the Saints by keeping his store open on Sundays and indulging in conversation unbecoming a layman, much less an elder of the church. This should not be, and whoever indulges in such practices is censurable.

Orders for the Compendium will be filled as soon as it is received from the binders.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. John D. Bennett, wrote from Cuba, Kansas, November 8th:

"I see that in the report of our late Northwestern Kansas district conference my presence was not mentioned although I conducted the sacrament service of Sunday afternoon referred to in the report. Before leaving Guide Rock I aided Elder Mahlon Smith to organize a branch of sixteen members and gave them such directions relative to their duties as members and officers as the Book of Covenants provides, and such counsel as observation and experience enabled me to give. The branch will be known as "Star Creek" and is located just south of the Kansas state line."

Bro. J. Hall, of Manchester, England, wrote October 27th:

"I now feel that I am walking in the narrow way; and I trust to God for grace and strength to keep me to the end. I have been deaf since I was seventeen; and when I had been a member about three months I received my hearing through prayer; then my faith grew stronger, and I felt that I had something to live for. One night I felt very bad; my boy was going to the Band of Hope, and I told him to ask one of the elders to pray for me; my faith was strong and I was healed through prayer."

THE following is from the Lapeer, Michigan, Democrat, of October 24th:

FIVE LAKES.

Monday October 15th, was a busy day for this place. The Latter Day Saints have got the new church enclosed. It is a handsome little building. A conference meeting was held and a time of general rejoicing was had by the members. There were two hundred and fifty of the brethren present, about two hundred coming from a distance, seven elders, the most of them good speakers, particularly so is J. J. Cornish, from Reed City, who is the presiding elder for this district, which has about one thousand members in it. Elders A. Barr, from Forester; E. Delong, Vassar; L. Phelps, Juniata; A. McKenzie, of Ontario, and besides the local talent all took part in the exercises. They are doing a good work here, and should be encouraged by all good citizens. The society is poor in purse, but rich in faith, and it would be a grateful deed of charity if the community would turn in and help complete the church. About $300 are needed. Lend them a helping hand."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right for the Saints to partake of the sacrament administered by Sectarian churches?

Ans.—Whether right or wrong, so far as abstract right or wrong are concerned, we are of the opinion that we can not so partake "discerning the Lord's body," the church. Personally we would not so partake; others must elect for themselves.

Q.—If an elder should be requested to bless the bread and wine in a Sectarian meeting, would there be anything wrong in his complying with the request?

A.—If the elder could do it and thus administer as unto the "household of faith," no; if not, yes.

We clip the following from the Los Angeles, California, Tribune of the 4th inst. We commend its statements, its spirit, and its directness:

MORMONISM.

On Friday night there was a lecture on the above subject delivered at the University Church by Rev. Selah Brown, which with your permission, Mr. Editor, I wish to briefly notice.

His indictments against the church in Utah, whether true or untrue, I will not notice, for being as much opposed to polygamy and its kindred evils as he, I do not feel called upon to defend a people who endorse them. But I will cite some points made by Mr. Brown regarding Joseph Smith and the Latter Day Saints prior to the great Utah apostacy, which will clearly show to the public that either Mr. Brown's information or his memory is very much at fault. The following points I deny the correctness of, and challenge the proof: First. That Joseph Smith ever at any time prophesied that he would be President of the United States in twelve years.

Second. That Joseph Smith ever prophesied that New York would sink.

Third. That Joseph Smith ever claimed to receive a revelation that he was not able to work, and must be supported.

I demand of Mr. Brown either the production of the manuscripts (original or certified copies) of these prophesies, or reference to the book where they can be found.

Fourth. I demand proof that Joseph Smith ever said that it was necessary for him to get drunk lest his followers worship him as God before the time.

Fifth. That Emma Smith, wife of Joseph Smith, was one of the original six members of the church organized in April, 1830.

Sixth. That the said Emma Smith denied the faith after her husband's death.

Seventh. That Joseph Smith was ever in State's prison in Missouri or any other State, or that he was ever convicted of crime before any civil court.

Eighth. That the authorities in Missouri ever furnished $200,000, or any other amount, to assist the Mormons in leaving Missouri during the troubles in 1838.

I deny these statements, all and severally, and challenge the proof. Will Mr. Brown respond?

Finally, I hereby challenge Mr. Brown to affirm in public discussion in Los Angeles what he asserted in his lecture; namely, that the romance written by one Solomon Spaulding was converted into the Book of Mormon.

We have no possible objection to Mr. Brown lecturing on Mormonism, or exposing any error he may find among those he so flippantly calls Mormons, but we wish to notify him that he can scarcely go anywhere in this country where he will not find some one who will insist upon the truth being told about the matter.

I can be addressed at Box 695, San Bernardino, Cal.

"Your hoards are great, your walls are strong,

But God is just;

The gilded chambers built by wrong

Invite the rust.

What, know ye not the gain of crime

Is dust and dross;

It ventures on the waves of time,

Foredoomed to loss!"

FOREDOOMED.

IN matters pertaining both to this present life as well as the life which lies beyond, there is a terrible reality. The attributes of God are fixed, and unchangeably a part of his being. Were this not so, He would cease to be himself. Mercy, justice, love and truth are part and parcel of the Creator of the universe. Separate these we can not; set them, or any one of them, aside we dare not. Show that one of these at any time is unnecessary, and we charge God with that which dethrones him; for if at one time he has made a mistake, is he not liable to do the same thing at another time; and where then is our faith, our confidence to find a perfect resting place? Neither in heaven where His throne is established, nor upon the earth which is His footstool can this be found; nor yet in the illimitable realms of space, nor in the depths of the sea which is His. Why is it that this solemn truth loses its reality to us? Why does it fall as upon ears that are deaf, and upon a conscience seared as with a hot iron?

Reader, has it ever been your privilege to teach a class of children in the Sunday School? If it has, did you notice the earnest face, the eyes intently looking into yours, and the whole countenance expressive of faith and wonder as you told them the oft-told story of the babe of Bethlehem? If you have, then at such a time you realized fully what faith meant. The story was to them a reality. The words in which it was clothed were to them no sounding brass or tinkling cymbal, but they were veritable realities. As each one fell from your lips they felt its meaning, and they did not try to make it mean other than just what it said. We had the privilege of teaching just such a class to-day, and we thank God that we did, for we were enabled to get a clearer meaning of the words, "Except ye be converted and become as little children," than ever we had before.

"Your hoards are great, your walls are strong,
But God is just."

Place over against God's justice every argument the human mind can invent; plead every excuse, every extenuating circumstance in your power to bring; and when you have done all, then answer the question: How can God be just and at the same time demand from another in exchange for immortality and eternal life a price which he does not demand from us? When by one man came sin and death, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

"Believeth on him!"—When the children were taught to-day concerning his resurrection, it was to them a veritable fact—a truth in which they rejoiced. Not this only, but it was a truth in which they were interested and to which their whole hearts gave assent. Is it equally so with us when we sit at the feet of the great teacher? This saving faith of the child is that which is to save us; for after we are converted we are to become as little children. Paul told the Saints in his day that they were not their own, but were bought with a price; and because of this they were bound to glorify God in their bodies and spirits, which were his. If this was binding upon them, is it less so upon us? But alas, are there not even to-day, in many of our dwellings,

"Gilded chambers built by wrong?"

Let it not startle you then to know that they are "Inviting the rust." Were this not so, God would not be a God of justice. Shall we rob God, and yet prosper? If the words have lost their force, their significance to you, then ask a child old enough to understand their meaning to tell it you. Mark the earnestness with which that child will say, "It means to steal—to take that what belongs to another."

Why do we not feel the force of this? Why do we not realize its terrible reality? Can thieves and robbers inherit the kingdom of God? Can the cause which has demanded from others the full service of both soul and body be served by us with a divided heart, and that, too, divided into such terribly unequal portions that but the smallest corner of it is given to God? Verily, never! Let us build our walls never so strongly, gild them never so finely, squander upon dress and equipage that which belongs to God in tithes and offerings. Let our tables groan with plenty while the poor go unnoticed and uncared for; but while we do this, remember that God is just; and in the night when we shall tear down our barns to build larger in order that we may have more room to bestow our goods; when we shall say to our soul, "I have much goods laid up for many days,"—even in that night our soul shall be required of us, and whose then shall these things be? Aye, whose! Who shall inherit the wages of our sin and crime? The truth and justice of God are immutable, and though all the insurance companies of all time joined hands to protect these wages

They "Venture on the waves of time,
Foredoomed to loss."

God grant that only they may be lost; that their unholy, contaminating influence may not descend with them to blight and curse the innocent children born to inherit such a legacy of dishonor.

THE friends of the Home Column Missionary Fund will be glad to see the reinforcements coming to its aid. Twenty-five dollars from the Mite

Society of Lucas! We would be pleased to have a report from this society, as well as other societies organized for like purposes throughout the church. If any have been supposing that interest in woman's work in the church is in any degree abating, let them disabuse their minds of the mistake, for mistake it surely is, as time will show. As long as one will come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty in the way the following extract indicates, let no one be discouraged, for that cause will never fail. Remember that it matters not how many are arrayed against us, "one with God is always a majority;" and we have not one alone, but a host of such ones. "As my birthday approached, not being in business now, it looked as though I should have nothing to give; and I felt sad accordingly, though I did not speak of it to any but the Lord. A few days ago a friend called upon me, and at parting left a dollar in my hand. As I had made no complaint of need, I feel quite sure who sent it and why. So I gladly give the Lord back his own."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Delaria Bates, Grant, Mich., writes: "We have been blessed in observing the hours for concert of prayer, and have received much instruction from the Holy Spirit, and the promise of many blessings if we prove faithful. The instruction of the Spirit to us was, 'Pray with and for your children, teaching them to ever put their trust in the Lord. I will bless this to them; and even though they seem not to heed it now, they will remember it in after days.' May God help us to be faithful, and to overcome, that we may have a right to the tree of life."

Sr. Mary. Lyon, Rockville, Me., writes: "We have not as yet organized a branch here, but we hope to soon. I was the first one to obey in this place; since then nine others have followed. The Spirit has told us there were many sheep to be gathered at Taborville, where preaching is now held every fourth Sunday. The instruction of the Spirit is that we keep asking in order to receive the strength we need from day to day. Sr. Roberts and I have been blessed in observing the hour of prayer with the League, and upon one occasion, when my boy was sick and we prayed for him, we received the testimony before rising from our knees that he should be healed, and it was even so. To God be all the glory."

Each one is at liberty to select the hour best suited to her own convenience. We must be very careful not to mix the divine things with the human; for while the idea of the Prayer League may have originated in the promptings of the Spirit, and if faithfully carried out will be productive of great good, especially to those who take part in it, it does not follow that either name or hour are sacred; neither that a change in either would in any sense violate the spirit of union sought to be attained.—Ed.

OAK WOOD, Texas, Nov. 5th.

Dear Sister Frances:—With a feeling of deep gratitude in my heart for the many blessings our heavenly Father has poured out upon us here, since I last wrote to you, I take my pen to tell you of some of them. Our first conference in the southwestern Texas district convened on the 12th of October, 1888, at Oak Wood branch, with Medina City and Bandera branches very well represented, and a good many from other places. Unity, peace and good will prevailed throughout the whole session. The Spirit of God was poured out upon us, speaking words of comfort and cheer through tongues, prophesy, revelations, visions, discerning of spirits, healing the sick, etc.

The elders all left about the middle of the week after conference, leaving Bro. J. A. Currie, Jr. to hold the fort. He continued the meetings on over two Sundays with large and attentive congregations. Four were baptized, one who had wandered away from the fold, Bro. A. B. Kuykendall, and three from the world, Sr. Jett, Bro. Richard Currie—Sister Katie's husband—and my husband, J. P. Neal.

These two last were baptized the next morning after the subject for unbelieving husbands was observed by the sisters of the Prayer League. Oh, what strength there is in union! Let us be faithful, dear sisters, for there are still others to follow and much more good work to be accomplished before we are ready for the Bridegroom. Let us not grow weary, but help each other in this grand preparation. There are others near the door here.

Sr. Frances, I can hardly realize the changes that have been wrought here in so short a time. Will the sisters pray for the husbands of Sister's Bennett and Gifford, who helped us in the dark hours to hold the fort here and keep the little spark from dying out.

I am yours in the faith,

JULIA V. NEAL.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Nov. 5th.

Sister Walker:—Last Thursday the sisters of the Independence branch met at the house of Sister Sellon, for the purpose of organizing a Prayer League. The attendance was not so good as we had hoped, owing to a misunderstanding with regard to time and place of meeting, but although few in number, we were made to feel the influence of God's holy Spirit, and if any had entertained a doubt with regard to the object of our meeting, that doubt was removed as the desire to unite our prayers and faith with the sisters of the League was universal. Enclosed please find list of names.

STEWARTSVILLE, Mo., Nov. 7th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Death has visited the once happy home of brother and sister Henry Hinderks of the German Stewartsville branch, and has taken away the head of the family. He was one of the noble men of the earth; industrious, kind, and affectionate. His sufferings were great, but he bore them patiently, and best of all, his faith in the gospel of Christ was firm and unshaken. The day before he died he told his brother Temme that he saw the reapers, and asked him to pray that he might have the Spirit's presence to the end. His companion asked him if he had any doubts or fears. He said, "No, no; not any." He saw the light and asked her to pray that it might continue with him while mortal life should last. When she finished praying he said, "Amen."

J. T. KINNEMAN.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 7th.

Bro. R. S. Salyards:—Yesterday was the great day of trial for political parties, and this city put on the appearance of a holiday. She is wonderfully in earnest. The day was a most beautiful one—a sharp turn from the long cloudy and rainy season just past. The streets swarmed with living, moving humanity. All night long the tread of footsteps, the blast of bugle, the sound of drum, fife, horn, indeed anything and everything that would contribute to the general excitement and uproarious demonstrations were brought into service. Once, if never before, the Quaker city is moved with the spirit of the times. Hurrah for Harrison and Morton! breaks in from every quarter. Cleveland and the "Old Roman" are overshadowed here. Even Mrs. Cleveland thrown out upon the large canvass stretched across Chestnut Street, with her charming face beaming upon the thousands packed in below, scarcely elicited a ripple of enthusiasm. Beauty and poetry seem to give place to prosy realities. "Bread and butter." The question of "protection or free trade did it." So moves the great world. In the midst of all this ado as to who shall be the lucky "ins" the next four years, we have been interested in the few witnesses left to the equally great and important cause in this part. There are some in this city and "round about" who are devoted to the latter day cause. Too few, however, to make much of a showing, and it is difficult for them to go ahead without good, reliable, constant aid. What might have been, had wiser counsel prevailed in the past, it is difficult to predict; but it is safe to say it could not have been greatly worsted. That will be a hopeful day for the church when those who essay to serve her find out that the gospel is not designed to boost some vain persons into high honors to be kept up and fed on the flattery and laudations of their admirers to the neutralizing to the good leaven and the sowing of the seeds of discord; but that it requires sacrifice and work for God and truth, in an humble way and the hiding of self. "When ye shall have done all these things which are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants." But this is so contrary to human nature that it is easy to be carried away with the wrong inspiration. The love of self-praise was so strong with ancient Herod that when the people said, "It is the voice of a god," he drank it all in and said "yes." But God punished the haughty conceit.

Brn. A. Cameron, Bacon, Harrison and others of this city, have done what they could to keep the cause moving; at least have discharged their individual obligations. We incline to the opinion that there is a future for the work of truth here. Are more hopeful than when here last. Not by reason of what is being done, but what is not being done. Thanks to Bro. Cameron and "straightway" for kind care.

I tarried over two days at Hornerstown, New Jersey at Mr. J. Hopkins; Sr. Hopkins made my stay pleasant. She is devoted to the cause. Her husband inclines to her belief. Bro. Brown and household made my short stay at their house very enjoyable. I spent an hour with Bro. Samuel Hopkins. He is hale and hearty, and expressed himself as sound in the faith. These are plants in a poor soil for spiritual growth just now. The truth remains with them, however. It is said "There is a time for everything under the sun." I had a pleasant stop over at Bro. Stillman's at Jersey City, on my way here. He is interested in the faith, and his wife and daughter incline somewhat that way. May the good Lord open their hearts to receive the truth.

Sunday, the 4th instant, I spent in Nottingham, Pa., in company with Bro. Joseph A. Stewart of this city. Meetings were held at Bro. Joseph R. Nelson's where the Saints of that section meet monthly to spend a day together in worship. Some seventeen of the brethren were present, with interested outsiders. The afternoon sacrament and preaching services were very enjoyable. We have scarcely met with a more cordial reception than we received here. It is not overstating it to say that they are a very earnest, confiding, and worthy body of Saints. May they have wisdom given to direct their labors and the love of family and gospel truth abide with them. A good work can be done in this section by dint of effort. Bro. Stewart is held in esteem by the brethren, as he has served them for something over a year. He meets them once a month, and his labors are appreciated. Thanks to Bro. and Sr. Nelson for their hospitality, and Grandma and the other good Saints for words of comfort and cheer. May the riches of Joseph's good land come to them in abundance, and choice blessings in the gospel, companions to the end.

Our conference held last month at Brooklyn, New York, and already reported by Bro. Squires, was a good one, with an encouraging side. Bro. Squires and the Brn. Potts are good defenders of the faith and work together in unity. There is an occasional increase to the little flock and the brethren enjoy meeting together. There is much to do and some encouragement in Brooklyn. I still lament over the action of the General Conference in not sending a competent and constant workman into this district, but will try and be hopeful for the future. Thanks to Bro. and Sr. Potts and household for the cheerful side extended to us while in Brooklyn. Some of the brethren think, it would seem, that we move very slowly. Well, that may be. But haste makes waste. It consumes means to travel, and I am utterly opposed to the habit of dodging from place on call of some dissatisfied, or overzealous persons, as though the world was made in a minute, and that the same inspiration should be kept up. It is wiser to do the good you can as you go along, and at best, after having traveled over a large mission, gone to and from the General Conference and met incidentals for clothing and stamps, when the end of the year is reached the sum expended will appear sufficiently large to satisfy the most sanguine. Let us learn wisdom by experience, if in no other way; keep our armor bright, let not our zeal abate and the right will be reached, truth and justice be vindicated and all will end well. Besides, no man can steady the ark, whoever he may be.

In faith and hope,

WM. H. KELLEY.

PROTON, Ontario, Nov. 9th.

Dear Herald:—I am proud to say that my wife and I were baptized one year ago and we have never regretted it, and are sure we never will, for we know that this latter day work is the work of God. When I first heard Bro. Willard J. Smith I thought he was a man going about the country out of his mind, but after hearing him a few times I found I was making a great mistake. Then Bro. Luff came and I began to search the Bible for myself. I soon began to receive light and new knowledge of the Bible. Before that I had read it through two or three times, but that is about all I knew about it. And now I thank my Heavenly Father that since I was baptized the more I read the more I can understand it. I was wandering about the world for the space of forty-five years like a lost sheep, but I thank our Heavenly Father that I have found great peace and happiness. We intend to press on and do our duty. I have seen the gift of tongues and have received the gift of the Spirit, and seen the same gift given to others of our brethren. I would like to say more now but I expect to write again.

Yours in the faith,

HENRY BIRD.

BUCHANAN, Tenn., Nov. 5th.

Dear Brn. Joseph and Blair:—Our quarterly conference closed yesterday and the business was transacted in union and love without a jar or discord. Bro. Griffin, president of the Eagle Creek branch, was present; and Brn. Seaton, Griffin and Adair all preached and gave us excellent discourses. The brethren are improving rapidly and are in the spirit of the work. Ordained Bro. Turnbow an elder and we felt to rejoice over the many testimonies that were received of his calling. He is a man that is well informed, of reputation, and temperate in all things. I believe God will make him a mighty instrument for good and an able defender of the truth. We want your prayers in behalf of him and his family as none of the latter belong to the church. Brn. Scott and Reed, of Henderson county, reported by letter. Bro. Scott has baptized one since I left and is preaching.

Bro. Griffin is improving in health and his whole soul is in the work. Bro. P. B. Seaton is keeping up regular meetings at three branches every month, doing other preaching besides. He is well received wherever he has been and is doing a good work. Bro. Adair preaches at the Farmington branch. The prospects are bright before us; the Saints are united and the work in general is looking up. There has been a great deal of sickness and the brethren have been blessed in administering as the sick have been benefited in every instance. I expect to return to Henderson county the latter part of this week; perhaps I may labor in that county this winter. I have done the very best I could under the circumstances but have been hindered some on account of lacking means to go from place to place. I am getting more and more interested in the work and expect to labor to the very best advantage for Zion's cause and the redemption of his scattered Saints.

I would like to live at least twenty-five years yet if I could have health and strength to travel and preach. Trusting that the Saints will throw away their hobbies and make the gospel their theme and praying that God will give wisdom to the ministry and the Saints and His Spirit that they may be one as Christ and God are one.

I remain yours,

JOHN THOMAS.

P. S.—My address will be Lone Elm, Henderson county, Tennessee.

RUSSELL SPRINGS, Kan., Nov. 4th.

Dear Brother:—It is nearly three years since I moved to Logan county, Kansas, I am here to stay and I like the country. I have not been sick a day, and with neighbors it is the same. The chills are unknown here, and the whole county has been exceedingly healthy, for which we ought to feel grateful. I am as strong in the faith as ever. In the past I have been a little slack in duty; nevertheless, as I went along I scattered a little seed by the wayside. I have preached some, lectured some, and talked a great deal. I think some of the seed germinated, but I don't know whether any took deep root or not. Stony ground, thorns and thistles are ever in the way, and it takes a vast amount of labor to secure a reasonable harvest. The best hearing I had was two years ago. I went into a railroad camp on a new road where there were two hundred hands. After my first sermon I had invitations to occupy several school houses. The railroaders were nearly all homesteaders who had struck out to secure a little of the needful for their families. Away from home, poorly dressed and dirty they would not go where there were well dressed ladies and gentlemen so I thought it best to follow the example of him who had gone before and eat with publicans and sinners—to first administer to the wants of the poor. Nevertheless I have seen better dressed audiences that were not half so intelligent, and far less appreciative. There were no shepherds near by to warn them of the wolf, and I hope I left them to return to their homes all over western Kansas, wiser in a knowledge of the doctrines of the kingdom than they were before we met.

I have another object in writing. There is a good chance here for a number of families to secure good homes; second hand, with a few improvements cheap, there are some preemption claims that have been abandoned, only a few, and many of them are smuggled. Those could be homesteaded. I know of two good ones at present. There are a number of persons everywhere who always want to sell and go to some other place. Some of them are here and they will sell their right of possession, say from fifty to one hundred and fifty dollars. Besides these, there are some good places with from fifteen to twenty-five acres broken with comfortable houses to rent at one quarter and one third of crop for rent and new land for the planting. Those that have been here for some time are breaking more than they can attend. We have a surplus of feed this fall—cane, cane seed, rice corn, corn, hay and fodder plenty and cheap. Corn thirty cents in field; sorgum fodder two dollars per acre and plenty has been given away, seed and all, when the seed would make twenty bushels per acre. All things considered this is the best time to move since the county was settled. Wheat was good this year, so were oats and rye. Corn middling, vegetables fair. There has been a larger area of wheat sown this fall than before. If this part of the subject is interesting to any of the Saints, old friends or strangers, write me and I will cheerfully answer. My son and I live on homesteads five miles south-east of Russell Springs, the county seat, and eighteen miles south-west of Monument, and eighteen miles south-east of Winona on the Pacific rail road. Address me at Russell Springs, Logan Co., Kansas.

Your brother,

JOHN B. GRAHAM.

No. 23, Avon Terrace, MORRISTON, Near Swansea, Wales, November.

Bro. Joseph:—I wish I was able to send you a good and encouraging report after being almost three months in this mission; but the facts and prospects seem to be rather the other way. The church here has suffered loss since I was here on my former mission; first by death and emigration to America, second by contention, factional discussion, and betrayal of trust on the part of some on one hand; while eighteen or twenty Utah elders were on the other ready to swallow whom they might devour. But thank God we have some noble hearted Saints and elders left who have fought manfully against errors of all kinds, and who are ready to work again, but the surroundings seem to be very unfavorable. This country seems to be on the verge of the experience of the United States in regard to Mormonism. The presence of so many elders from Utah, that had too many wives for the laws of that country, has aroused the slumbering thoughts of the British subjects in regard to Mormonism, whether it should be tolerated under any form or not. And in the absence of legislative power, it takes the form of mobocracy, and it seems to be determined to rid the country of Mormonism, especially in its polygamic form. And to fan this feeling into a blaze there is an apostate high-priest from Utah, named Wm. Jarman that goes through all the towns of any note to lecture against the Mormons. He gives magic lantern views of all imaginary transactions in Utah, etc., putting in the necessary characters to carry out in real life scenes of polygamy with all its evils and degradation to the "fair daughter of Zion," etc; human sacrifice and blood atonement in all their horrors are produced. The Mountain Meadow Massacre, and also the endowments with the oaths, covenants, etc., are given, he having hired tools to parade the streets for a week in each town beforehand who walk about the streets in the endowment garments, with knives, swords and pistols for the sacrifice, etc. The rage of the people knows no bounds. They organize an Anti-Mormon league behind them in every town.

I believe the Utah elders would rather go home and keep the law than stay here, and I wish they would. Very little opportunity is offered to tell the difference between us and them; all are counted the same with but very little exception, so you see our lot is not a pleasant one.

We have plenty of solid work before us, with no houses to reach the people, but we will take the streets when summer comes. We will have to publish some tracts to show the difference, and we could make use of a great many English tracts if the church could afford to furnish them. We shall do our very best as long as the church thinks proper to support us here. The bishop is anxious for us to make the mission self-supporting. I wish we could, but I think it will take some time and considerable labor. We trust the Lord to favor his work.

My wife joins with me in kindest regards to all.

J. T. DAVIS.

BELL, IOWA, Nov. 12th.

Dear Herald:—We learn from the Herald that from present indications it is probable that some of the ministry will have to be called in from the field to support themselves and families. Can we not prevent this? I believe we can. If we will all put in our mites and labor with our might we can surely do a great deal towards keeping them in the field. We may not give as much as the poor widow whom Christ said had cast in all that she had, but we can give something. We are all praying for more ministers, for more laborers in the harvest, but while we are so praying we should remember that they will have to be supported and that their families must be cared for. We can all make a freewill offering of something if it is not more than twenty-five cents. Dear Saints, let us say we will not suffer any of the ministry to be called in, for each one can do some good where he is. We can say this by our offerings. There is room in the Home Column for the names of all the Saints and let us see them there. God has called them to preach the gospel, and if we do not help to keep them when they show their willingness to labor we are not doing what we should to have the will of God done. Come, brethren and sisters, rally to the support of God's servants.

Yours in Christ,

D. M. RUDD.

OLIVET, Dakota, Nov. 11th.

Dear Herald:—Have just closed my discussion with Elder Allyn of the Christian Church. Had two propositions and four nights on each, the debate lasting eight evenings in all. The first one discussed was, Resolved, that the church of which I am a member is the Church of Christ. Allyn affirmed, I denied. It would take too long to recount the negative argument, but perhaps a synopsis of our work might not be out of place. We held, That in order for the Christian Church to be the church of Christ it must be identical in every feature with the church established in primitive times. That they were not the same in faith, and faith as a principle of power was not among them. That the church was set up under the personal ministry of Christ and not on the day of Pentecost. That they were not identical in ordinances or organization. And that they do not receive the blessings enjoyed by the people of God in all ages. We also held that the Campbellite Church was nothing but a sect organized by Alexander Campbell and his co-workers and has no more authority for its origin than any other sect. On the second proposition I was blessed of the Spirit nearly all the time and am well satisfied with the results. After the last session I was invited by Elders Haight and McNeal of the Christian faith to deliver a lecture on the book of Revelations. This was a new departure for me, but I consented and on the next night spoke to an attentive audience and had good liberty in explaining some of the symbols of the Revelations. Elder Haight would like me to enter into a discussion with him, and perhaps I will after getting over my field once more. Am doing all I can to fulfill my mission here, but am controlled more or less by my circumstances. Feel well in the work and have enjoyed more help from my heavenly Father than I did this spring, for which I am very thankful. Would like to hear from Bro. Pender either through the Herald or by letter.

Yours,

E. E. WHEELER.

DAYTON, Va., November 11th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I am still on the war path and notwithstanding there is great opposition in this locality, I baptized another noble lady into the fold yesterday, making four in all since I came to this state; others are near and will come in due time. Last week I spoke twice at the house of a good man who was once deceived by the Brighamites. He will obey when I return. He lives in Augusta county.

To-day I went to hear the Dunkards. There was a large congregation of respectable looking people, mostly members. I could tell them by the mark on their heads. I had not the mark (I did not want to buy or sell) and therefore was not permitted to speak. Three or four spoke, and one exhorted them to hear all doctrines and take the good. And as I was there for that purpose, after hearing them I endeavored to make an announcement for myself at the school house near their church. I thought "surely that was fair." So as they dismissed I stepped up to the Bishop and asked for liberty to announce for to-night. He said that he had not the control of the house. I next addressed a preacher by the name of Sanger. He said, "Do you believe in the Book of Mormon?" I replied that I wanted to announce preaching at the school house. He again asked, "But do you believe the Book of Mormon is a divine record?" I answered, "Certainly." "Well," said he, "you can't make any announcement here; I have read the book and it is false." I replied, "Will you affirm that declaration and enter into a public discussion on the merits of the Book of Mormon?" He said, "No."

I rejoice to know that I am identified with a people who are not afraid of investigation. I trust this will all turn to the praise of God. Satan sometimes overdoes things. In Augusta county where I was preaching some time ago he put it into the mind of one of his agents to go around and tell that I was not preaching out of the Bible. There was a lady who had not been to hear, but when she heard that, she said she must go and hear, and the result was that she was convinced and baptized.

After leaving the Dunkard meeting I learned that they had closed the school house against all until the session of school closes. I don't feel discouraged but rather hopeful. Bro. Bowman is doing all he can to get openings; Bro. Cleveland also.

I see in Herald of November 3rd in editorial items that I was having many calls for preaching. It should state that in West Virginia I have many calls for preaching; for there are many more calls there than here. I expect Bro. Griffiths this week, and I feel confident of the final triumph of this great work and hope to continue to the end. I desire to be remembered by the faithful that I may have success in speaking the truth.
May God bless you,

JAMES MOLER.

AMBER, Iowa, Nov. 12th.

Bro. Dancer:—I am glad that I can say that the work is onward in my field of labor. Yesterday I baptized one more, and the word comes to me from many points, "Come and preach to us." I send two names in this letter for new subscribers for the Herald. I think I can get some more. I shall try hard to do so, at least. I feel almost discouraged when I see so large and ripe a field of labor before me and no one to help me to reap. But my desire is to go on and do all I can, if it is only "one stitch at a time." May Zion prosper.

Yours,

J. S. ROTH.

STARLINGTON, Ala., Nov. 2d.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—I went from the Alabama conference in July to Florida, and found the Saints doing well and awaiting my return; and on September 30th I baptized six, three men and three women in Escambia county, Alabama, and while in Monroe county, on the 21st of July I baptized two, a man and his wife—and on September 2d I baptized a promising young man in Monroe county. From there I went to Flat Rock branch where I baptized three on the ninth of August. The church is prospering and calls for labor are numerous. I have been blessed in presenting the truth of the gospel and am still trying to thrust in my sickle and reap, preaching Saturday and Sunday at the Butler branch. We had a good conference at Pleasant Hill branch. It was largely attended with house and yard full. We had Bro. F. P. Scarcliff with us from Mississippi. His health is good and he was feeling well. He spoke well on Sunday and on Saturday night. I will remain in Alabama until after the twelfth of November and then return to Florida. My address will be Berrydale, Santa Rosa county, Florida.

TOBACCO impairs digestion, poisons the blood, depresses the vital powers, causes the limbs to tremble, and weakens and otherwise disorders the heart. It robs the poor man's family; it is averse to personal neatness and cleanliness; it promotes disregard for the rights and comforts of others; it cherishes indolence of body and mind; it diminishes the vigor of the intellect; it destroys self-control by establishing the slavery of habit; it develops the lower and animal nature at the expense of the higher; it leads into bad associations, and throws its influence into the scale of evil in all the relations of life.—*Dr. H. THE EARTH THE EVERLASTING ABODE OF MAN.—No. 1.

BY ELDER E. STAFFORD.

It is written in Deuteronomy 29: 29, that "the secret things belonging unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." In Amos 3: 7, it reads: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing until he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

It seems to the writer to be a self-evident statement made by Moses—concerning the things which have not been revealed, or the secret things of God belonging to him—for if they are secret to us they have not been revealed, consequently we are ignorant of them and can not appropriate them to our benefit. But according to Amos, the prophet, we are assured that God will not do anything with respect to the human family, the workmanship of his hands, but that he will reveal that purpose or secret unto men chosen of him, who are his servants, and those servants being made acquainted with the purposes of God, are constituted foretellers of future events, and as a consequence are prophets.

When the purposes of God concerning the children of men are made known unto them through God's prophets, they certainly belong unto them. Some of the revelations may have been limited and local in their nature, and those that pertained to a temporal salvation, such as Noah's building an ark for the salvation of his family from the flood; Lot being commanded to flee out of Sodom to escape the destruction of the wicked of that place; but those things that were of a general character were revealed for the benefit of all the human family, in whatever clime, or age of the world; as for instance, Peter's declaration on the day of Pentecost concerning the promise of the Spirit, after certain conditions of the gospel were fulfilled: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

The Lord revealed unto his servant Isaiah the purpose he had in view in creating the earth as recorded in the forty-fifth chapter of his book: "Thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited." Here was the purpose which led to the design and creation of the earth, made known unto the prophet. Surely the purpose that could engage the attention of that great and holy being, must have been considered by him of infinite importance to the human family as well as one that would redound to his own glory. But it could not be that God created or formed the earth, that the inhabitants thereof should engage in rebellion against the laws of their Creator; engage in all manner of evil, fighting and devouring each other; nation warring against nation; men banding in secret to operate in the destruction of their fellowmen, and tyranny, oppression and miss-rule the order, instead of the exception, which seems to be the state of things in the major portions of the earth at the present time. Oh, no!

Very little glory would the Creator obtain in this state of things, and very little benefit would the inhabitants of the earth receive from such a condition of things. He that is infinite in wisdom, knowledge, power, and might; who is holy, just, and true, of whom it is said: "He can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance," could not have created it to be inhabited through all eternity by rebels.

The Lord revealed to Moses the secret of His being the Creator of the earth as well as the heavens and all things therein—man included, he being created after God's own image. All things created were pronounced "good" by Him. He had provided the means by which sustenance should be had by man and beast. Man was placed in a beautiful spot of the earth, surrounded with all that could please the eye, gratifying the taste and gladden the heart; had an articulate language perfect enough to converse with his Maker who, in return, conversed with him in the same language, and gave him commandments. In the same language man named all the beasts of the field, which names they retain to this day; and yet learned men tell us that man in the beginning was of a wild, rude, barbaric nature, and that his language was of the same character, and that both man and his language has been improved upon unto this day. What a comment on the work of God, to say the least! But discussing on language is not our design at present.

Man understood what his Maker required of him in the commandments given and it appeared that there was another power who understood the language in which Adam and his Maker conversed. That power therefore chose a medium through which to converse with the woman to lead her to disobey her Creator, who after doing so offered the forbidden fruit to her husband, and he, partaking of the same with her, both were thus brought under condemnation for disobedience.

This power that brought about the fall of man, existed at one time as an angel of light, as made known in Isaiah 14 chapter; Revelation 12 chapter, and in the revelations to the Church of God in these last days;—Doctrine and Covenants Sec. 28: par. 11.—and rebelled against God and sought his honor, or power, and with a third part of the host of heaven,—who from their choice followed his fortunes,—was consigned to a place prepared for them called hell. But they were not confined there it seems, by the reading of the Scriptures, nor will be till the time comes that the Lord revealed to his servant John, when an angel will come down from God with power to bind Satan and his host a thousand years. It seems that after being cast out of heaven, Lucifer held on to his original desire to possess the honor of God and was determined in his heart to accomplish it. Listen to the prophet Jsaiah: "For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation in the sides of the North; I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High."

Under this original design as an uncompromising enemy to God, his theater of action being denied him in heaven, he seeks on earth to inaugurate a rebellion against God. And by his cunning lying succeeded in drawing our first parents from their allegiance to their rightful sovereign, and thus caused them to be banished from that blissful state and the earth to be cursed for their sin or rebellion.

"Because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded the saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

We perceive then that the Lord created the earth good for the people to dwell thereon, and when they ceased to be up to this standard, or sinned or rebelled against God and gave their service to the evil one, the earth was changed; but God did not make it good for the servants of his arch enemy to dwell upon.

It seems as though the enemy would think that if he could get the first pair away from their God, that it would be an easy task to secure their offspring. But will the Lord leave the workmanship of his hands a prey to his enemy and give up his purposes as being frustrated by Satan and not make an effort to reclaim man whom he has created? We have not so understood Him by his revealments to the children of man concerning his character and attributes.

According to Paul in 1 Cor. 2: 7-10 the Lord had revealed unto him one of his secrets, viz. that he had ordained a glory for man whom he had created before the foundation of the world. It reads: "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden mystery which God ordained before the world unto our glory; * * * But as it is written, Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of any man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit &c." We perceive by this that Paul and his brethren had this glory revealed which God had ordained before the world for all them that love him, unto them.

Glory suggests reward, and reward suggests a trial or probation to see whether man will prove himself worthy of that reward. But this glory is for all them that love God, and the test that Jesus gave when upon earth to prove that a man loved God was that he would "keep his commandments." Our first parents were banished from God's presence, died a spiritual death, because they ceased to love God, for they ceased to love him when they broke His command and loved His enemy by yielding to his temptation to break their creator's command. Lucifer and his companions by ceasing to love God were cast out of His presence; even so our first parents ceasing to love God were also cast out of His presence.

There is this difference between the two: One party had kept not their first estate and sinned against the broad light of heaven; rebelled against the power thereof and are reserved, Jude says, unto the judgment of the great day. The other having kept their first estate were allowed another trial for a greater glory, but in an unguarded moment suffered the emissary of this arch-enemy to persuade them to disobey their Creator. They did not sin in the full blaze of the light of heaven, but were measurably under a veil, and God had determined for their good a state of probation. Christ was prepared "as a lamb slain from before the foundation of the world" in the behalf of fallen man. This being the case, it is clear that it was foreknown in the mind of the Creator that man would fall, and in the provision of a ransom is shown the wonderful love of God as well as that of His Son. The wisdom of God is also manifested in the sustaining of his character for justice as well as for mercy. But the question is frequently asked, "If God foreknew that man would transgress and fall, and it was His design that he should do so, why did he punish man for so doing?" To the writer's mind it seemed very plain, but whether he will succeed in satisfying others of its plainness remains to be seen. If God had created man evil, then He could not in justice have punished him for doing evil, but having created him good and given him his agency to choose good or evil with this proviso, that he could not dwell in the presence of God if he chose to do evil, the choice that man made was his own and nobody else was to blame for the result except the tempter. Man transgressed the law of his God; "sin is the transgression of the law." The transgression of the law merited the penalty which was the loss of the life he was then living; and he became spiritually dead, and was banished from the presence of his Creator, and upon his part there must have been a fearful looking forward for the wrath of the offended one. The evil one could not render any assistance, any comfort, but would be apt to tantalize him with the reminder of what he had lost, and also try to render him as miserable as he could. Adam could appreciate what he had lost, and could impress upon the minds of his immediate posterity the magnitude of that loss.

As we said before, a glory suggests a reward to be obtained and a reward suggests a state of trial. Trial could not be had without an agency or choice being given; choice could be of no avail without at least two things to choose between. Good and evil then had to be placed before man for his choice, and if he chooses to do good, to love God and keep his commandments, he will ultimately receive the glory appointed; but if he chooses to do evil he cannot dwell with God, and must suffer the consequences of his acts.

It is recorded in the Inspired Translation that the posterity of Adam were made to taste the bitter in order that they might appreciate the sweet, for we do appreciate any good thing all the more after suffering the loss of it. The prodigal son appreciated the bounteousness of his father's house after he had tasted the bitterness of feeding on the husks that the swine ate. Men appreciate the sweets of liberty after having been under the rule of a despot.

We appreciate the soul reviving shower after the earth has been parched with a season of drouth and we have been almost tempted to despair of raising sustenance for man and beast. How glad the heart then, the joyousness thereof speaking through the smiling eyes, and we feel to speak the friendly word to everybody and rejoice in the gift of heaven. And when the dark clouds have been hovering over us and pouring their contents in a deluge, as it were, for several days shutting out the light of the sun, making all around look gloomy and chill; how we hail with gladness the rift in the clouds that lets through the rays of that glorious orb, and when it bursts forth in its splendor after the clouds are dispersed man and beast and fowl feel and act as if in possession of renewed life. If it is seen in this life that man appreciates the good after experiencing the evil, how much more will it be seen in that future life? The writer supposes that it would have been a very difficult task for any one to tempt the prodigal son to leave his father's house to go and again feed swine. And he also supposes that after man obtains the glory that God has in store for those that love him, that he will not want to exchange it for the experiences he has passed through on earth. He will, therefore, appreciate the reward the more from the trial which he has had to obtain it and render praise and thanksgiving to the Infinite One who had planned the trial and established the glory.

The secret of God's love for the world was made manifest in the language of our Savior, "for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3.

This language states that God loved the world (inhabitants) not a part only but the whole; that all who would might be restored back in his favor by obeying the conditions that he had established through Christ, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

The secret of God was also revealed unto Paul as recorded in his second letter to the Corinthians, fifth chapter, "to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself; not imputing their trespasses unto them [those in Christ], and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation." And in the previous verse he says, "and hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation." We perceive by these revelations that the Creator so loved the world that he did not propose to leave man, who had fallen, to pine away in despair; but held out a hope to him that a reconciliation on the part of man might be brought about through the word of reconciliation that God had established should be preached unto him, and that word embraced conditions to be complied with on his part. And it was through Christ the Lamb that this word of reconciliation was to be preached that would bring about this reconciliation. But there was another requisition connected with it, and that was, the ministry of this word of reconciliation must be given to mortal man; if he acted for God in the premises, the authority to minister for God must be given of him. This word and ministry of reconciliation was given to Adam to minister unto his posterity, after he had become an adopted son of God by obedience to the word. It is written in the Holy Scriptures, Inspired Translation, Genesis 6th, "And it came to pass when the Lord had spoken with Adam our father, that Adam cried unto the Lord, and he was caught up by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the water and was laid under the water and was brought forth out of the water; and thus he was baptized. And the Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit and became quickened in the inner man. And he heard a voice out of heaven, saying, Thou art baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost; this is the record of the Father and the Son, from henceforth and forever; and thou art after the order of him who was without beginning of days, or end of years, from all eternity. Behold thou art one in me, a son of God, and thus may all become my sons. Amen."

Father Adam was commanded to teach these things unto his children, and received authority to minister therein from him who was without beginning of days, or end of years; he was of the order that He was; Christ was of that order, so was Melchizedek and many others mentioned in the Scriptures. Adam lived to be over nine hundred years old, and had ample time to teach the gospel and the plan of adoption by which all of his children might become the adopted sons and daughters of God by the same process that their father had. Enoch, the historian, says, in the first verse of the seventh chapter, said, "Behold our father Adam taught these things and many have believed and become the sons of God; and many have believed not and have perished in their sins and are looking forth with fear in torment for the fiery wrath of God to be poured out upon them." Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch and Methuselah, all lived in the days of Adam and were ordained under his hands to the same order of priesthood to preach this law of adoption unto Adam's posterity and were thus great helps to him.

The history of the progress made in the reconciliation to God, of Adam's posterity, is very concise; but sufficient is recorded to show that in the days of Methuselah's grandson, Noah, that the inhabitants of the earth had become so corrupt that God revealed his secret to Noah, that he would destroy them from off the face of the earth by a flood of waters; which purpose was accomplished and the peopling of the earth left to the eight persons who were saved in the Ark. How far the face of the earth was disfigured by this cataclysm we have no history to determine, but to the writer's mind it must have been considerable, from the rushing and surging of the heavy body of waters that were over the whole earth; especially does such a supposition seem reasonable when we consider the great changes wrought by minor floods in our day. The wickedness of the inhabitants of the earth has brought a curse upon it all along down through Bible history, and thus the earth has been removed farther and farther from its original blessedness. It was so in the case of our first parents' transgression. That portion of the land where the people of Cainan [Cain's posterity] dwelt, was cursed for their wickedness, as recorded by Enoch. In the days of Methuselah, Enoch's son, the earth was cursed for the evil doings of the children of men, until finally, in the days of Noah, their wickedness culminated in their destruction, and the fair face of the earth was broken and disfigured as a consequence.

Although the Lord covenanted with Enoch and with Noah, that he would never destroy the inhabitants of the earth again by a flood of waters; he did not say that he would not destroy man any more for his wickedness.

He has cut off the wicked inhabitants of the earth, from time to time, in various ways, as seemed good to him, and their land has been cursed and left desolate for perpetual generations.

And all this God has revealed unto his servants the prophets long before it came to pass, and that too, before the nations reached the zenith of their prosperity, when it was beyond the power of human sagacity to foretell their downfall. The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, with their inhabitants, were destroyed for their wickedness by fire from heaven, and the land sunk, and is now covered by the waters of the Dead Sea. Egypt one of the foremost of the nations, in its time, enjoying a high state of prosperity, having a fertile soil that yielded bountifully, was for the wickedness of its inhabitants, to become "the basest of the kingdoms," and the land waste and desolate, as revealed by the Lord to his servant Ezekiel as recorded in the twenty-ninth and thirtieth chapters of his prophecies. In the thirtieth chapter it is written thus: "I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease, by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. He, and his people with him, the terrible of the nations shall be brought to destroy the land, and they shall draw their swords against Egypt and fill the land with their slain. And I will make the rivers dry, and sell the land into the hands of the wicked, and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein, by the hand of strangers. Thus saith the Lord God; I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of Noph, and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt."

This prophecy has had its literal fulfillment in every particular, as history records, and every traveler will attest.

WHEN DID CHRIST PREACH?

"From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day." Matt. 16: 21. That is, inasmuch as he expired on Friday, and arose from the dead on Sunday, therefore, was his resurrection literally an event of the third day after his passion.

"And when the day cometh that the only begotten of the Father, yea, even the Father of heaven and of earth, shall manifest himself unto them in the flesh, behold, they will crucify him, and after he is laid in a sepulcher for the space of three days, he shall rise from the dead, with healing in his wings." 2 Nephi 11:2. That is, allowing twelve hours to have been one day with the Nephites, (not including the night of course), and whereas three days of twelve hours each would be thirty-six hours, and inasmuch as that was just about the number of hours that the body of Christ remained in Joseph's new tomb, therefore, was it literally true that "he was laid in a sepulcher for the space of three days?"

"Then answered the Jews and said unto him, What sign shewest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things. Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." "But he spake of the temple of his body." John 2: 18, 19, 21. In other words, destroy this temple, and in the space of three days, or thirty-six hours, I will raise it up: and this was literally true, counting from the time that "the temple of his body" was delivered up into the care and kindness of Joseph of Arimathea. Nor should we forget, that amongst the Jews, as amongst us, the word day was frequently used as not including the night. For example, when we think of a certain work that may be done by one man in three days, we of course can think of no more than thirty-six hours, as the time required in hours. But when we think of a case like that of Zerubbabel's Temple, which was "forty and six years in building," we of course can only think of each year as being composed of a certain number of nights as well as days. Or, furthermore, while saying that a certain structure was built in three days, would be equivalent to saying that not more than thirty-six hours was bestowed upon it. The saying that it was three days in building, might be very justly construed to mean, that no less than three days and three nights elapsed from its commencement to its completion. "Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee. But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."—Matt. 12:38-40.

But if Jonas was in the body during three days and three nights that he was in the whale's belly, then under a fitness of things, of necessity was Christ in the body during the three days and three nights that he was in the heart of the earth. But whereas, he was not out of the body more than forty hours at most, and whereas three days and three nights are all of seventy-two hours, therefore, must he have been in the body during the said three days and nights.

"Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things."—Eph. 4:9-10. That is, as Christ was in the body when he ascended up far above all heavens, so was he in the body when he "descended first into the lower parts of the earth." But why should it be thought incredible that he should have been in the body when he "descended first into the lower parts of the earth," but very credible that he was in the body when "he ascended up far above all heavens." In other words, why should it be thought incredible that he being possessed of "flesh and bones," should "descend first into the lower parts of the earth," but very credible, that he being possessed of "flesh and bones," should "ascend far up above all heavens?"

A REMARKABLE STORY.

I HEREWITH enclose a clipping from the weekly Times, a Melbourne, Australia, paper, thinking that it may be worth reporting again if you have room in the Herald. I also give additional testimony to the recorded facts contained in the report, for as I conversed last evening with Mrs. E. Anderson, concerning her own cure by divine power through the ministrations of Mrs. E. Burton and the elders, herself having been turned out of one of the hospitals as incurable, she declared to me that the subject of the article was in the hospital under Dr. Backhouse, at the same time with herself; and from the appearances, together with all that she knew concerning the matter, the case seemed hopeless. Mrs. Anderson frequently conversed with and read to Miss Mulley, thus hoping to administer to her all the available comfort this world could afford, and often spoke to her of the time when she would be divested of her weak, deformed, mortal body, for a glorious, celestialized, and immortal body; of course referring to the world to come, hardly expecting that both herself and Miss Mulley would be fully restored to health again. In sending this I may say that it gives me some pleasure, for by this, and many more evidences of the times, we have practical proof of the restoration of the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, just as in days of old. Certainly the people around us know now that the Bible records facts that may be the greatest benefit to the children of men if we can but see restored by the power of God all the powers and blessings therein recorded, even to the power of the priesthood through which channel we expect all these blessings to flow to the race of men. Yes, doubtless, it will be seen in the by and by that men like Gland Rodger, J. W. Gillen, and J. F. Burton did not peril their lives for nothing; and that their prophetic vision took them considerably beyond the transitory view of the present; but their lives were lost according to our Savior, that they might find them again. With love to all Saints, and in the hope that Zion's stakes may be strengthened, her cords lengthened, and her converts many.

A SUPPOSED INCURABLE RESTORED TO HEALTH IN AN INSTANT.

The following singular narrative was forwarded to us a few days ago by a correspondent, and deserves a place amongst the curiosities of medical literature. Our correspondent tells the story in his own words:

"A most wonderful and miraculous instance of healing occurred at Moreland road, Brunswick, at half-past 1 p. m. on Thursday, the 23d ult., and is creating considerable sensation in and around the locality. For the past ten years the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mulley, well-known residents of the district, has been laid prostrate on a bed of sickness. At the age of five she first showed signs of declining health, and during the four years which followed, suffered from extreme debility and physical languor. Her eyesight also began to fail, and at the age of nine she took to her bed, and notwithstanding that the best medical skill was procured for her, she gradually grew worse. In addition to the debility and general prostration, it was found that she was suffering from curvature and displacement of the spine, the upper portion of which had grown into the left shoulder, while the lower portion had grown into the right hip. The feet were turned inwards, having the ankle bones protruding on the top of the instep. For the last five years her case has been examined into by the ablest skill to be found in the colony, and reported as hopeless. During the whole of this period she has been bedridden, unable to move. Her parents, unable to do more for her, procured her admission to the Children's Hospital. Here she was entered twice, and remained six months on each occasion, but was ultimately discharged as a hopeless case. Twice she was admitted to the Homœopathic Hospital, where she remained in all some seven months, but nothing could be done to inspire any hopes of cure. She was then taken to the Alfred Hospital, from whence, after thirteen months' careful treatment, she was discharged as an incurable. She was taken home to her parents in Brunswick, but shortly afterwards was admitted to the Austin Hospital for incurables. There she remained three years. In June last she was removed to her parents' home in Moreland road, Brunswick, where her case has excited considerable sympathy. She has been visited by many who interest themselves in the welfare of the sick and helpless, and the matter of the divine power to heal had been brought prominently under her own and her family's notice by Christian people. Gradually the conviction became implanted that the Great Power who, in response to prayer and faith in centuries past healed divers diseases and effected miracles of healing, could heal still. She became convinced that God could effect in her what the united skill of the medical profession had pronounced to be an impossibility. As the conviction grew upon her as to God's ability, she felt sure He not only could, but would, heal her, and raise her up to be a monument of His mercy, grace, and power. Early in the week she bade her sister prepare clothing for her, and her wishes were complied with. Several articles were put in hand and made up. (She had been in bed since reaching her tenth year, so that there was no clothing in the house to fit her). To those around her she stated that God was going to raise her up, and there was no time to lose. At length, at 1 p. m. on Thursday, the 23d ult., she told them the time had come, and she must get up without delay. Her sister went into the town and purchased what she was deficient of. On her return, after laying out the different articles of apparel, the invalid bade her sister place her arm under her, and assist her to sit up. During the last five years she had been utterly helpless, and unable to even turn in bed. Miss Alice Mulley, on doing as required, found her sister's body seemed to rise with but little pressure on her arm or hand, and while in the act of rising felt the spinal bones all move under her hand. The next moment the young girl was sitting on the bedside unassisted and perfectly upright. The mother, who was at the time engaged in prayer, on turning around, had the happiness to behold her daughter made whole. The spinal bones had gone into position, and there was nothing to show either by spine, shoulder, or hip, that they had ever been displaced. At the same time her sight came back to her, and she was able to clearly discern objects at a considerable distance observable through the curtained window. After dressing she asked to be assisted to her feet, and it was then seen that the feet were turned inwards and the toes doubled under. Some doubts were expressed about her ability to use her feet, but to such she replied that God was going to cure her altogether, not going to half do it. On assisting her as desired it was found that the ankles had shot round to their proper sockets, the final touch of the Invisible Hand had been given, and that she was entirely healed. On being interviewed subsequently, she expressed herself as feeling strong and well; her feet felt very heavy, and she experienced some difficulty in lifting them from the ground when in a standing position, but feels confident she will soon be able to walk as well as if she had never been deformed. To use her own words, she 'must learn like a child to use her feet and walk little by little.' As soon as she recovers proper use of her feet she proposes visiting the various hospitals where she has been under treatment, in order to give the medical profession an opportunity of judging of the completeness of the cure."

Such is the story as it was brought under our notice, and careful and exhaustive inquiry has been made into the whole circumstances. A representative of this paper visited the Austin Hospital for Incurables, and saw Mrs. Morely, the matron, who at once recollected the girl, who, she said, was there for about three years, leaving in June last. Mrs. Morely remembered that the girl suffered from the spine, but could not say that it was in the condition described, nor could she say the feet were as stated, but she summoned the nurse, who had been in charge of the girl for two years or more. This nurse stated that the feet were as our correspondent alleges, that there was displacement of the spine—that all the time the girl was in the institution she was helpless in bed, and could only raise her head and one shoulder from her pillow.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

The relatives of the girl having carefully perused the letter referring to her cure, declared it to be perfectly correct, with the exception that prior to the last five years she was occasionally able to sit up in bed.

A representative from "The Weekly Times" was invited to see the girl, and on entering the room in which she was, found her sitting in a rocking chair. She rose without much apparent effort, walked a couple of paces, shook hands with him, and resuming her seat, gave her concurrence to the statement of her recovery. She is very tall, thin and pale, but he could not notice any deformity whatever.

It appears from the records of the Austin Hospital for Incurables that the girl was admitted on the 4th of January, 1886, on a certificate signed by Dr. Backhouse, then the resident medical officer of the Alfred Hospital, and Mr. C. Cook, the then mayor of Brunswick. The certificate set forth that she was sixteen years of age, and was suffering from curvature and paraplegia (a kind of palsy) of eight years' duration: that she had been under medical treatment for three years—under Dr. Snowball, at the Children's Hospital, Dr. Ray, at the Homœopathic Hospital, and Dr. Backhouse, at the Alfred Hospital; that she was unable to move from her bed, and that she was entirely dependent upon her parents.

Dr. James, the medical officer to the Austin Hospital, states that he examined her when she was admitted, and that she was not suffering to the extent described by her friends, although her spine was certainly twisted, and there was loss of power in the lower extremities; that she could use her arms pretty freely, that she could not sit up, that her feet were partly turned round, but that people who lie a length of time in bed suffering from paralysis are liable to that; that she left of her own accord in June last to join her friends; that she was then in the same state, no better, and no worse, as far as he can recollect; that he only blistered her once, soon after her admission, and that as it had no effect she was continued to be looked upon as an incurable.

The nurse who had charge of the girl at this hospital states that her feet were in the condition described, and that her spine was displaced, and that she could only raise her head and one shoulder from the pillow.

Dr. Backhouse, who is now in practice at North Brighton, remembers the name of the girl and the fact that there was some mischief to the spine; also that she was of a highly nervous temperament and inclined to be hysterical, but it is so long since that he can not give further particulars. However, he adds that if she was admitted into the Hospital for Incurables on his recommendation she certainly must have been looked upon as incurable.

ANOTHER INTERVIEW

Accompanied by Dr. Dobbin, of Brunswick, a representative from this journal visited the patient on Monday. Entering the house, Miss Mulley stepped forward from an inner room, and quite cheerily greeted her visitors. She looked pale and thin, as might be expected, but yet her eyes were bright and clear, and when the fresh air has reached her cheeks, they may be expected to lose their present pallor. In conversation the girl said she had been absolutely bed-ridden for the last three years, unable to move herself, and bereft of the use of her arms above the elbows. She could move her hands freely, but could not use her legs or feet. She herself had begun to despair, when a friend visiting her one day represented to her that God had said in the Bible that he would succour those who prayed to Him. She believed that God would do as He said, and that where the skill of man availed nothing, the power of the Creator would heal her. Devoutly convinced, Miss Mulley gave her whole heart and soul to prayer. Miss Mulley confirmed in all its details the story of her cure. She says that she had forgotten how to walk, and her first inclination was to go on her hands and knees like a little child, but she soon acquired the art, and can now walk with ease and comparative freedom. Dr. Dobbin examined the spine and pronounced it to be certainly straight enough, and to have lost the traces of the double curvature which appears to have been the particular ailment, while the feet and lower limbs were allowed to be of normal shape and proportion. The girl is declared to be cured, and she has every appearance of being so. The theory of hysteria is the only one by which an unimpressionable medical man can account for the cure. The patient has never, however, been subject to hysteria, epileptic fits, or anything of that nature, and the case remains one of curious interest.

We have thus verified the facts that Miss Mulley suffered from the complaints she describes, and that she now is cured. We leave our readers to supply their own theory as to the cause.

JOSHUA AND THE SUN.

"A Modern Critical Explanation of the Apparent Miracle at Beth-Horon."—And a Living Testimony that the Sun Moves.

As this matter has again become a subject of some discussion, perhaps it may interest the Herald readers to remind them that the first person to suggest the interpretation of an extraordinary refraction, namely, causing the sun and the moon (apparently) to remain above the horizon longer than usual, was Spinoza, in the second chapter of his Tractatus Theologico Politicus.

Spinoza, whose object was to dispense with the necessity for a miracle, confuses the refraction of the rays of light by the atmosphere with their dispersion or scattering, and assumes that the appearances were strictly similar to such prolongations of daylight as we have witnessed of late years in the recent gorgeous sunsets.

"Some late writers, such as the late Rev. T. Milner, in his Astronomy of Scripture," have supposed that there really was an abnormal refraction which kept the sun (supposed to be near its setting) apparently above the horizon for some time longer than usual. A consideration, however, of the position, of the size of the battle and its vicinity, shows that any idea of this kind is untenable as well as unnecessary. Beth-Horon is to the north-west of Gibeon, so that the sun must have been in the south-east and the time of day early morning.

It was the prolongation of darkness, not of daylight that was desired, and this is evident from all the circumstances that are mentioned in the narrative. The Hebrew words, "Stand thou still," it is said means literally, "Be thou silent," and the object of Joshua's prayer was that the sun might not shine out over Gibeon, where it was just about to rise, or the moon, where it had last been seen nearly setting in the west, over the valley of Ajalon; but that the gathering tempest might so overcloud the heavens as to obscure the landscape and give advantage to the attacking force of Israelites."

This has been dwelt upon by the Rev. A. Symthe Palmer in the number of the "Church Quarterly Review," but the Rev. T. Pelham Dale, who had himself written an article taking the same view in the "Christian Advocate," for the year 1871, points out in the number of the "Church Times," that it seems to have been first noticed by the late Henry F. A. Pratt, M. D. in his "Genealogy of Creation," published in 1861. He says on page 206:—"It has been seen that Joshua's plan was a night attack and that he marched all night to accomplish it, and here is gathered the first clue towards discovering through what was required what must have actually taken place, for having marched all night he would necessarily not reach Gibeon until daybreak, or so close upon the dawn as to make it only too probable that his plan would fail through the absence of the darkness necessary to its success." The words, then, of prayer afterwards incorporated with many other pieces into the poetical book of Joshua were: "Let the sun be silent over Gibeon, and the moon in the valley of Ajalon." The word silent when applied to the sun meaning not to shine." And the end of verse thirteen, Joshua tenth chapter, is literally rendered by Dr. Pratt: "The sun remained in the clouds of the heavens and shone not on arising as on an ordinary day. The dark tempest was followed as we all know by a tremendous hail storm which completed the destruction of the routed Amorites."

In the year 1871 or 72 I was in Fairmount Park on the fourth of July. Thousands of people had gathered there for pleasure and recreation, and to enjoy the scenes that the park affords. I was standing, I think, on the hill, overlooking the grand stand where the band was, when to my astonishment my head was lifted up to look towards the sun and it spaced or traversed the heavens as near as I can judge for fifteen degrees forward and then backwards. I had been contemplating on the above subject a few minutes before. Hundreds of heads were turned in that direction afterwards, but it was too late.

Another explanation has it thus: "Now as Joshua had given his word that he would not kill the Gibeonites if he could help it, nor let others kill them, he marched all night with his army to Gibeon. God told him to fear nothing. He fell upon the five kings; they being surprised, fled on every side, Joshua pursuing. And God made it hail, and the storm fell upon them and the stones were so large and came down with such a force that they were more which died with hail stones, than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword."

The battle probably began very early in the morning and Joshua chased the five kings till the evening. And now the sun and moon were both in sight; the sun was setting and the moon was rising. But Joshua had not destroyed all his enemies, and he spoke to the Lord before Israel that the sun might stand still upon Gibeon and the moon in the valley of Ajalon, over which they both seemed to shine, and so by the day and the light holding out longer he might completely defeat his foes. "And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves of their enemies."

Respectfully yours,
WILLIAM STREET.

Selections.

WE give below one of the best expositions of the Spaulding Romance theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon we ever saw in a Secular paper from one outside of the belief. We clip from the Iron Clad Age, published at Indianapolis, Indiana, for October 20th, sent us by some good soul, who loves fair play.

SPAULDING'S MS. NOT THE BASIS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Editor Iron Clad Age:—In your issue of September 8, is an article headed "Mission of Moroni" that contains so many inaccuracies that I am constrained to reply. It is apparent that the writer is very much prejudiced against the Mormons, and that he has confined his investigations concerning the origin of the Book of Mormon, and the character of those connected with its production to the statements of the enemies of Joseph Smith, Jr., and the church he established. By way of Preface I will state that I am not a believer in the supernatural origin of the Book of Mormon, or any other book, but I am one who thinks that all religious teachers should be treated fairly and honestly. If there is such a thing as revelation there is more and better evidence in favor of the miraculous origin of the Book of Mormon than of the New Testament.

Your correspondent devotes considerable space to giving Joseph Smith a horribly ugly physiognomy, which certainly does not agree with the likeness preserved in the Mormon archives at Salt Lake and others that have been published, but this is immaterial. Neither do I believe he was such a hard youth morally as your correspondent and Christian opponents generally, who have written against mormonism, charge. If it was worth while I could quote disinterested testimony, to the contrary. That he was a young man of very limited education is admitted by both friends and foes, but that he was not capable of dictating the Book of Mormon I am not disposed to say. He became very much interested in religion when he was fifteen years of age while there was a revival craze in his neighborhood, and from that time until he says he received the plates of the Book of Mormon, was, I believe, a zealous Bible student.

The first error your correspondent makes is in the date when the "angel Moroni" appeared to young Smith and told him of his mission. He gives it as Sep. 21, 1824. It was Sep. 21 or 22, 1823. But this was not the date when he received the plates, as stated by this correspondent; he was shown them Sep. 22, 1824, but not until the same day of that month, 1827, did they come into his possession—four years afterwards. "The translation of the plates now commenced," he says, but Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, the amanuensis, both say the translation was commenced on the 7th of April of the next year, or 1828. Neither is your correspondent correct as to the size and thickness of the plates. Here he is very exact. He says they were "six by seven inches and six inches thick and thinner than tin." Martin Harris, who says he handled them, plate by plate, was not so particular; his statement is that they were about eight inches long and about four inches thick, and each plate thicker than the thickest tin. The width of the plates is not given. That young Smith read off his translation from behind a blanket, his scribe being seated on the opposite side, is probably not true. Those who witnessed the translation deny it, and Smith's mother says that they were so annoyed by the curious that a blanket was sometimes hung up across the room for a partition, but that her son was never concealed from the scribe or from members of the family. David Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery and others who witnessed the translation have given a detailed description of how Smith dictated the book.

After your correspondent has stated that Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris had certified (which they did, under oath) to the divine origin of the Book of Mormon he adds: "Here it may be stated that in later years these 'witnesses' quarreled with Smith, renounced mormonism, repudiated his claim to divine origin, declared their former testimony false and the whole procedure an unmitigated fraud."

I know not where he got that information, but a similar assertion is made in Appleton's Cyclopaedia, but no authority so far as denying their previous testimony is concerned, is given. It is not true. The very reverse is the fact. Each of these three men died protesting that what they had testified was the truth. These men did separate from Joseph Smith about the time polygamy was introduced as a doctrine of the church, but they all died firm in the mormon faith. David Whitmer only about a year ago stated over his own signature as follows:

"I also testify to the world that neither Oliver Cowdery nor Martin Harris ever at any time denied their testimony. They both died reaffirming the truth of the divine authority of the Book of Mormon. I was present at the death-bed of Oliver Cowdery, and his last words were, 'Brother David, be true to your testimony to the Book of Mormon.' He died in Richmond, Mo., March 3, 1850." And he adds, "Many witnesses yet live in Richmond who will testify to the truth of these facts, as well as to the good character of Oliver Cowdery."

Martin Harris remained separated from the church many years, but in the latter part of his life reunited with it, and removed to Utah where he died a few years ago. In a letter written by him in 1871 he says, "No man ever heard me in any way deny the truth of the Book of Mormon."

David Whitmer died last February, at Richmond, Mo., where he had resided for nearly half a century. When he saw death approaching he called the physician and his family to his bedside and gave his testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon. In a notice of Mr. Whitmer's demise the Richmond Democrat said: "No man ever lived here who had among our people more friends, and fewer enemies; honest, conscientious and upright in all his dealings, just in his estimate of men, and open, manly and frank in treatment of all, he made lasting friends who loved him to the end." The best citizens of Richmond testify to his integrity, truthfulness and veracity. The Richmond Conservator says, "There is no doubt that Mr. Whitmer is firmly convinced of its [Book of Mormon] divine origin."

Your correspondent endorses the theory first promulgated by a renegade Mormon, and afterwards a professional Christian minister, named Hurlbut, that Sidney Rigdon stole a manuscript written by a minister named Solomon Spaulding, and that this manuscript was the source of the Book of Mormon.

Your correspondent is not posted on the subject he handles so deftly, or he would know that that theory, which never had reliable evidence to support it, has been effectually disposed of by the discovery of the original Spaulding manuscript, and which is now deposited in the library of Oberlin college, Oberlin, Ohio. There is no resemblance whatever between it and the Book of Mormon; there is not even one proper name common to both. This manuscript which was discovered in 1885, has been authenticated, as being in the handwriting of Solomon Spaulding, as being the same manuscript story which Spaulding's widow and daughter claimed was the original or basis of the Book of Mormon, and which was obtained by the Rev. Hurlbut above alluded to, but which he would never publish as he promised to do, or return to the rightful owners. James H. Fairchild, president of Oberlin college, who critically examined this manuscript, wrote in 1885: "The theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon in the traditional manuscript of Solomon Spaulding, will probably have to be relinquished." And then he proceeds to narrate the particulars of the discovery of the manuscript in question.

So far as Rigdon is concerned there is not a particle of evidence, or semblance of evidence that Joseph Smith ever saw him until after the Book of Mormon was printed. Those most intimate with Smith while the translation was in progress, and before, including his mother, all declare he had never met Rigdon, and David Whitmer, testifies that of his own knowledge "neither Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris or myself ever met Sidney Rigdon until after the Book of Mormon was in print." Rigdon was a good deal older than Smith and was a noted Campbellite or "Christian" preacher, an equal of Alexander Campbell in "power" and influence some say, when he was converted to Mormonism in 1830 by Elder Pratt.

That the Book of Mormon originated in the brain of Joseph Smith, jr., I have little doubt, but that he was aided by the Spaulding manuscript, or the composition of any other person I do not believe. And I am inclined to think that the "three witnesses" and the others who were immediately connected and associated with him during its production, were honest in their belief regarding the inspiration of Smith. Certain it is that they all of them adhered to their original version of the affair all through life. It is much easier to believe they were deceived than that they were all parties to a conspiracy, of such magnitude. But whatever may have been the origin of this remarkable book of 300,000 words, as large as the Old Testament, and which was dictated orally, within a period of less than three months, the search after the truth is not facilitated by ridiculing those connected with its production, or by grossly perverting the facts.

EXTRACTS FROM SERMON BY REV. DAVID SWING

AT STATE FAIR GROUNDS, DES MOINES, SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2D.

REPLENISH the earth and subdue it.—Gen. 1:28.

Upon this most sacred of the seven days it should give us all pleasure to mark that the development which makes these State exhibitions possible is not limited to the machine and the instrument, but it invades with equal power the spiritual confines of man and makes all things new in religion. The sun, which has all summer been looking down upon new science in the field and the shop, deep, straight furrows, carved by a better plow than was known to Solomon or Cæsar, shines down on this holy day upon new forms of religious teaching and lights up the faces of a better kind of Catholic and Protestant, a better kind of Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist and Episcopalian than those were who sang their songs around Luther, or Edwards, or Knox, or Wesley. The causes which fashion for man a better wagon road, a better harvesting ability, act as constantly upon his religion; and his Sunday of worship competes with his Monday of worldly labor. All of God's laws are general and the progress which touches a plow, or a car, or a sickle, touches man's prayer and hymn. * *

Therefore it has come to pass that American progress is the most general and uniform that history has ever had the happiness to record. The thinking minds of the land have never walked around in a circle like the blind horse in the bark mill, but they have been permitted to pass here and there like eagles upon the wing, and though this intellectual abandon has brought to society many a senseless theory or injurious practice, it has also brought to this continent more great principles of life and happiness than were ever granted to any of those States which are now hidden in their stupendous graves. The symmetry of society is not yet perfect; but the phenomenon before us is that of a free movement forward—and in this unrestrained, unfolding the plow is no more fortunate than the pulpit; man is not favored as formerly above woman; the deductions in science are paralleled in truth and beauty by the deductions in worship. The trees when upon the banks of all streams all bend over the water because they have more power of light and air upon the side of the river and are symmetrical only when in the open field, thus man suffers a bad development when he is free in only one part of his nature and he enjoys a real progress only when he is on all sides unrestrained. Such an open air surrounds the American, and therefore his plow and reaper are no more excellent to-day than are his politics and his religious faith. * * *

This being the Christian theory, it must be that man is subduing the primitive wilderness in religion as well as the wild in agriculture, mechanics and art, and it must be that if there is coming along in American character, an American agriculture, American politics, and an American equality of all human beings, so there must be forming and coming an American Christianity—a religion modified by the action of a more peason and of nobler sentiments. * * *

It need not be claimed that our age is more religious or more moral than the past has been; that may or may not be true, but the religious sentiments have never cast any light upon a doctrine nor made an advance in the pursuit of truth. John Calvin was full of religious sentiments. So were the old Romanists and the old Puritans. So was Paul religious when he stoned Stephen and put men women into prison. Our fathers who held slaves were pious as we are. The pagan mother who offers her infant to the God of the Ganges is as religious as was John Wesley or Robert Hall. Sentiment alone is never a reformer. The patriarchs who used to follow a sharp stick for a plow and who ground their grain with a stone held in the hand were proud of their plow and their mill. Some of you can remember when you were proud of a new sickle, and proud of a new froe for splitting shingles from oak. But this sentiment of pride and satisfaction never made the reaper nor the shingle mill. Reason had to step in and order an advance. Thus in religion, the piety of Protestant and Catholic was great all through the sixteenth and seventeen centuries, but that spirit of worship did not discover the deeper truth of the Testament. This was the task for reason to accomplish. Reason is the faculty which subdues the wild soil and makes the rose succeed the weed, and the wheat field adorn the old desert. * * *

When telegraphs were first constructed there was an extra wire for making a circuit, but experiments did away with the wire. Thus reason has driven religion into a greater and greater simplicity. It says you may have a cathedral, written prayers and a boy choir if your heart thus directs, but Christ and God will be present where there is an old fashioned preceptor who lines out the hymns. When you call at a palace in America the occupant of that house is only a man. He talks, he laughs, he weeps, he dies. When you call at a city dwelling the inmate is the same kind of a being. He talks, he laughs, he can weep, he will die. When you come to the log cabin and pull the latch string, it is a man you meet—perhaps an Abraham Lincoln; he also talks, laughs, weeps, dies. Thus as reason has removed all the accidents from manhood so it has from religion, and you may draw near to any altar where sincere men and women kneel, and there you will find the essential Christian. The five points of Calvinism may or may not be true, but they are like the extra telegraph wire—an unnecessary arrangement.

Thus our reasoning age detects the essential doctrine or practice and demands that all churches shall make a true Christian manhood. As it asks that both the palace and the cabin shall contain a Lincoln, so it demands that each church door shall send out to us a Christian. The brain which works at the reapers works at our faith.

Reason modified the doctrine of hell, not by contradicting the Bible, but by finding its deepest import. An age can pour too much meaning in even divine words. The churches used to torture heathen, Quakers and skeptics, in order to convert them. This was carrying too far the order to convert the world.

The early Christians quit work and looked for the end of the world, but this was carrying too far the utterance that we are all on the eve of departure and that life is fading into immortality. Thus into the doctrine of punishment the past ages poured too much of fire and torture. As England studied justice until it hung children for stealing a loaf of bread, so all the churches once studied wrath and vengeance until it took the genius of Dante and the horrors of the inquisition to express the supposed desire of God toward assumed offenders. But what Presbyterian or Methodist would now want the Inferno of Dante, and rebuild that inquisition of which Rome repented, and whose wrongs the Roman Church herself brought to an end? Reason, while freeing slaves, while overthrowing the inquisition, while protecting little children, while emancipating women and planning liberty and equality for all men, could not sustain in Christianity a barbarism which it assailed in political and social fields. Thus it has come to pass that future punishment has become modified by the rationalizing process of the century.

A friend, following popular taste, bought at an old farm house a clock which stood seven feet high. When he set it up in his own fashionable home he found that its ticking could be heard all over the house, and when it struck it made its own case and works shake as though in a violent ague. It at once occurred to him that the weights were too heavy. No such thought had come to its builder or owner in the one hundred years ago. The new owner found each weight contained over twenty pounds of lead. He sawed off an end of each weight and found that sixteen pounds made the wheels still work too violently. He reduced the weight to twelve pounds and the ticking and striking were still too tumultuous. He made one more reduction, and with a ten pound weight the clock is now doing peaceful and faithful duty. Thus for almost a century that time-piece had been toiling under a most useless burden. Thus all the churches in the past carried an unnecessary amount of future torment. It was trembling under twenty pounds when ten pounds were enough.

These changes have not come through the influence of the Universalists, nor their school, nor by the attacks of infidelity, but by the co-operation of all minds and all sects. Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopalian, all have gone forward hand in hand in the one great task of subduing the wilderness.

Not only in eliminating false and useless doctrines, but also in unveiling the true, have the Christian sects gone forward. A Greek orator said the Greek cities were like oak trees in a bunch, which took away leaf and limb by grinding against each other. Thus the churches once made war upon each other. They have subdued this barbarism and are now making war upon sin, wrong, darkness and unhappiness. A hundred useless dogmas have passed away to make more room for a smile of hope. The peculiar genius and teachings of Christ are reaching out that they may emancipate women, may secure for the laborer his just reward, may sow education as the sun sows beams of light, may trample down great vices which are killing the people, may make each worthy of its Creator God and of its noble children of God, and may make death the gate of a better life.

The wilderness has not yet been wholly subdued, but the desert is slowly submitting to the rule of reason and love. If you men of the field, the shop, the railway, the orchard, the garden, and the legislature can point us to a marvelous progress in your many departments of thought and work, so the Christian church can point you to her great exhibition of cardinal ideas, of new duties, new sympathies, new efforts, new intentions new hopes. She indeed asks you to forgive their shortcomings, and asks this knowing full well that infirmity follows all human life as a shadow and a cloud, but after confessing her imperfections she asks you to behold an American Christianity—in which the one central figure is Jesus Christ holding aloft in his divine hands the sublime words: Perfect equality of race, color, and sex; perfect justice of each toward all; perfect brotherhood, purity of life; the being and the presence of God and one endless life for all beyond the grave.—The Woman's Standard.

Wakenda; last report 25, present 25; 2 dismissed by letter, 2 gained by vote. The following elders were present: J. Luff, R. L. Ware, J. Westwood, E. W. Cato, Sen., W. L. Booker, J. B. Belcher, G. W. Carter and M. A. Trotter. The Bishop's agent made the following report: Received since last report $3.35, paid out $2, balance $1.35. Bro. J. B. Belcher was chosen president for the next quarter, M. A. Trotter clerk and E. W. Cato, Sen., Bishop's agent. A motion prevailed authorizing the chair to appoint a committee of three to consider the advisability of the delegate system of representation and report the same at next conference. Brn. R. L. Ware, W. L. Booker and G. W. Carter were appointed said committee. Conference adjourned to meet with the Wakenda branch, on Saturday, the first day of December, 1888, at ten o'clock a. m.

DECATUR.

District conference convened at Pleasanton, Iowa, October 13th, 1888; H. A. Stebbins, president; A. W. Moffett, clerk. pro tem. Branch reports:—Lamoni 615; 16 baptized, 7 received, 7 removed, 1 died. Lucas, 199; 1 baptized, 7 removed, 2 expelled. Little River, 118; 14 baptized, 1 died, 2 ordinations. Davis City, 65; 5 received. Greenville, 35; 1 baptized, 2 received, 1 died. Centerville, 18; no changes. Allendale, 57; 2 baptized, 2 marriages. Lonie Rock, returned to branch for insertion of names and items of changes. The president reviewed the condition of the work in the district and reported his own labors in it. Elders A. S. Cochran, Wm. Anderson and J. McDiffett reported as presidents of Lamoni, Pleasanton and Greenville branches. D. Campbell, M. M. Turpen, John Shippy, A. W. Reese, O. J. Bailey, A. W. Moffett, H. Bartlett, and G. W. Bird reported, also Priests N. Lovell, S. D. Shippy and J. M. Brown. Elders John Watkins, R. S. Salyards, L. W. Powell and T. W. Williams reported by letter. The following resolution from the Lucas Sunday School was read: Whereas, we have in the past realized as a school the need of a closer relation between the several scholars of the church, and in fact with the church in general, and whereas we note that several districts have taken immediate action, and that some have effected district organizations; and whereas, we deplore the spirit of indifference which has been manifested by many who should have been active and pioneers in the work, therefore, be it resolved that we as a school petition our district conference to take some action in the matter towards effecting a district organization, or in connection with other districts; and further be it resolved that we request the conference to fully impress upon the minds of the presidents of the several branches that it is their duty to labor to organize Sunday Schools, and to support those already organized. The president stated that there were Sunday Schools in all the branches, five of the eight being Saints' schools and the other three being Union schools but yet with our brethren as superintendents. The following was adopted: Resolved that we recommend that each Sabbath School in the district choose one or more delegates to meet during our next session for the purpose of effecting a district organization if it is found practicable, and that the president of the conference appoint a committee of three to consider the matter in the interim, and to present at said meeting such resolutions as they deem necessary to the perfection of this design. The president appointed Bro. T. W. Williams and sisters H. E. Birchell and Marietta Walker as said committee. Resolved that two-day's meetings be held throughout the district as may be desired, the president to arrange the times thereof and to appoint the speakers. That the advisability of holding a reunion camp meeting at Davis City in the summer or fall of 1889 be considered at the March conference. H. A. Stebbins was re-elected as president and S. D. Shippy as clerk for the coming year. Duncan Campbell preached on Saturday evening, John Shippy on Sunday morning, and H. A. Stebbins on Sunday evening. They were assisted by H. Bartlett, Thos. Wellington, and A. W. Reese. Prayer meeting on Sunday morning in charge of J. McDiffett. Sacrament meeting Sunday afternoon in charge of H. A. Stebbins and Wm. Anderson. Adjourned to meet at Lamoni in March, 1889, the president to appoint the day.

TENNESSEE AND KENTUCKEY.

Conference convened Saturday and Sunday, November 3d and 4th. John Thomas was chosen to preside, S. L. Cooper clerk. Elders reported:—P. B. Seaton, baptized 5; J. H. Adair, W. H. Griffin, John Thomas, baptized 10, ordained 1 elder, 1 priest, and one teacher; H. Scott baptized 1; S. Reed. Priest W. D. Clark, teacher, S. S. Cooper and Deacon J. F. Roberts reported. Branch Reports:—Foundry 17, Farmington 25, Eagle Creek 29, 4 baptized; Haley's Creek 12. On Sunday prayer and testimony and confirmation. Preaching by P. B. Seaton, W. H. Griffin, and J. H. Adair. The sacrament was administered by William H. Griffin. Peace and harmony prevailed, and the Saints confirmed in the faith. The authorities of the church were sustained. Adjourned to meet with the Foundry Hill branch the second Saturday in March at 10 a. m.

Miscellaneous.

NOTICES.

To all concerned. Whenever I advise or suggest to others than General Conference appointees, to labor in any locality where I am permitted to hold spiritual jurisdiction, I shall invariably notify local authorities. You will therefore understand when any claim is made without such notification that such parties have not been authorized by me. Furthermore, in the event of elders or priests visiting among the Saints not known as officials to presidents of branches, you are under no obligation to recognize one claiming to be a representative, unless he produces the necessary credentials. And one who means to do right in this particular will never object or feel hurt on being asked to satisfy a legitimate demand. Last September I suggested to Bro. J. Armstrong, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, if practicable to him, to labor in some parts of the Northern Nebraska districts.

JAS. CAFFAL.

Notice is hereby given to the scattered members of the Columbus branch of the Spring River district, Kansas and Nebraska, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Sarah Ellis; Joseph Van and Pernecia Pifer; as their whereabouts are unknown to said branch, they are hereby requested to report to W. S. Taylor, presiding officer of Columbus branch, or their names will be dropped from branch record and they will be reported as scattered members of said branch.

CHAS. RANDALL, Clerk.

APPOINTMENTS IN PACIFIC SLOPE MISSION.

This will certify to those whom it may concern that until further arrangements are made Bro. Thomas Daley will be in charge of the field of labor comprising northern California and Nevada; and Bro. J. H. Lawn will be in charge of the field of labor comprising Central California. These brethren should be consulted in all matters properly coming before the missionary in charge, and they may confer with me when necessary.

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH,
President of Pacific Slope Mission.

November 10th, 1888.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

By consent of the Olive branch Saints and the desire of the Byrnsville Saints, the conference of the Southern Indiana district will meet with the Byrnsville branch, December 15th at 10.30 a. m. We hope to have a good report from the branches and elders in the district. Ministers from adjacent fields and friends are cordially invited.

M. R. SCOTT, Dist. Pres.

GOSPEL RESEARCH SOCIETY.

On the evening of December 18th, 1887, a few members of the Boyer Valley branch met at the house of Bro. A. H. Rudd and organized what they chose to call a Gospel Research Society for the purpose of studying the standard books of the Church that they might be better qualified to defend the work. They elected officers and appointed time and place for another meeting. The meetings have been continued from that time to this each week with increasing interest at each meeting. At the fifth meeting of the society after all had spoken upon the subject under consideration the Spirit of God rested upon a sister and she arose and spoke in prophecy. The Lord said that He was well pleased with their efforts, and exhorted all to continue in the work they had begun, and to be faithful, and trust in Him and he would bless them. This encouraged all to strive harder to do his will. Bro. C. A. Butterworth who was with us at first, and was a lay-member of our branch, has since been called to the ministry, and is now in far off Australia preaching the gospel. God is at the helm; and if we do our duty none of his promises will fail, for they are made on conditions. At our last meeting the influence of God's Spirit was felt, and through our president He exhorted, cheered and comforted us and calling three of our members by name told them they were called to preach the gospel. All the members say they have been greatly blessed and strengthened by the meetings of the society.

The society thinks that similar organizations should be effected in all branches, and it is for this reason that they have by a unanimous vote requested their secretary to write a short report of the success of our organization in order to induce others to go and do likewise. God will bless you if you will.

A. H. RUDD, Secretary.

DOW CITY, IOWA, Nov. 14th.

DIED.

HINDERKS.—Bro. Henry Hinderks was born in 1844, at Tichelwarf, Province of Hanover, Germany. He was baptized March 17, 1874, by John George Bauer, near Burlington, Iowa, and was ordained an elder April 10th [year not stated] by Wm. Bozarth. He died October 31st, 1888, at 2 p. m. Funeral services and discourse by Elder J. T. Kinneman in the presence of a large concourse of friends.

BARNETT.—At her residence, three miles northeast of Taylor Ridge, Illinois, November 1st, 1888, Sister Catharine M. Barnett, nee Cadman; she was born in Quarndon, Derbyshire, England, August 1st, 1834, and moved to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, A. D., 1850. She was joined in wedlock with Joseph R. Barnett, Jan. 28th, 1855, by the Rev. John McColley, of the United Presbyterian order, to which society they belonged for several years. She embraced the Latter Day work at Davenport, Iowa, Aug. 28, 1870, and adorned the profession the remainder of her eventful life. Always cheerfully willing to let the light shine, and ever ready, and ever desirous to assail the towers of error, superstition and priestcraft, she has endeared her memory to all the lively stones in the house of faith. Her presence and hopeful counsel, her courage and fortitude, her benevolence and example, her pattern and gracious life, all, all, will be missed, from the true saints, worthy friends, and family circle. She was the mother of fourteen children, two of whom died in infancy, the remainder all are living, eight were present at her departure. A fair congregation convened at the desolated home, and at the McConnel M. E. Chapel, the use of which was kindly tendered for the last sad rites of the church. The choir sang suitable music, the pastor, Rev. Green, offered fervent prayer, Bro. M. T. Short delivered the discourse from the Hebrew poet David, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints." Surely our sister had been a Saint indeed, a mother in Israel, the financial calculator of the family, the benefactor of orphans, the pioneer in church work, and a blessing to all within her sphere. Elder J. W. Terry, district president, was with Bro. Short and assisted in the services of the day.

STEWART.—Sr. Mary Stewart was born at Lanarkshire, Scotland, September 20th, 1859. She was baptized February 8th, 1885, by Elder M. H. Foscutt, and confirmed by G. T. Griffiths, M. H. Foscutt and Josiah Ellis, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. She resided at Kirtland, Ohio, until about seven weeks ago when she came to Pittsburg, where she died Nov. 3rd, 1888, leaving a father, sister and brother to mourn their loss. Funeral services by Apostle J. H. Lake.

"Tis hard to break the tender cord
When love has bound the heart,
'Tis hard, so hard to speak the word,
Must we forever part?"
Dear sister we have laid thee
In the peaceful grave's embrace,
But thy memory will be cherished
Till we see thy heavenly face.

SMITH.—Andrew Jackson Smith died November 2d, 1888. He was born January 29th, 1847, in Madison, Sandusky county, Ohio. His age was 41 years, 9 months and 4 days. He was dearly beloved and highly esteemed as a kind husband, an indulgent father, a good citizen, a worthy Saint, a faithful priest and an excellent president of the Clear Lake branch of Steuben county, Indiana. He leaves an esteemed wife and a family of excellent children, together with many dear relatives and a host of friends who deeply mourn their loss. His funeral discourse, and also that of his daughter Elma A. Smith, who died August 13th, 1888, was preached by Elder Hiram Rathbun to a very large, attentive and sympathizing audience on Sunday, November 2d.

"O weep not, bereft ones, as those without hope—
All is well with the loved ones who've gone on before;
Walk on in their footsteps; to Jesus look up;
Secure the great blessing of life evermore."

TRYON.—Arthur Justus, youngest son of Bro. Lewis and Sr. Harriet Tryon, near Galesburg, Illinois, September 29th, 1888. Just two weeks and three days before, his brother, Ralley Lewis, passed from this earth-life in the tenth year of his age. Arthur was 3 years, 11 months and 17 days old. He was a very good and bright boy and much loved by his parents and grand parents. The loss coming so swiftly and suddenly after the death of the elder one makes it a trying affliction indeed. The Lord who gave hath taken away, and yet the saddened parents are able to bless His name, for He hath made rich provision for their departed ones and to the parents given a lively hope in the gospel. Funeral services by Elders M. T. Short and E. L. Kelly, Sunday, September 30th.

ROGERS.—Bradford B. Rogers, son of Elder B. K. and Lucy D. Rogers, born at Indian River, Maine, September 25th, 1858; died of Bright's disease at Jonesport, Maine, August 17th, 1888. Funeral sermon by Elder W. H. Kelley during the Reunion.

AUTUMN LEAVES,

Prospectus for 1889.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND PATRONS.

With the next issue of AUTUMN LEAVES the volume for 1888 will close, and your next number will begin the new volume. Before entering upon our work for another year we wish to express our heartfelt thanks to you for the support and encouragement given us in our labors the past year. To this support and encouragement the periodical is indebted for its existence; and in reality, it is not our work any more than it is yours; and in the great day of reckoning there will be a sifting and readjustment of debit and credit which will upset many a nicely balanced sheet, by transferring credit to names which have not appeared thereon, and subtracting or utterly cancelling those which in their prominence have had entirely too much placed to their account. Let us thank God for this, and take courage, for we know that our God will reward each one faithfully and fully; not only for what he has done, but for that also which he had it in his heart to do.

with the success of the past year, we do not feel that the permanent success or continued life of our Magazine is yet assured. The slight advance in price which we have been compelled to make may not meet the approval of all, and yet we can not think that any friends of the work will make this an objection. Some who have had the Magazine to examine during the past year, may not be as well pleased with it as they hoped to be, and for this reason wish to discontinue it. For reasons like these it behooves those who are interested in the work and desire its continuance, to put forth an effort in its behalf. Our subscription list this year ought to reach at least three thousand. Every day the church is enlarging her borders; and this, if reached, would be a small circulation in a church of twenty or twenty-five thousand members.

We make no promise for the future, save what we have made in the past. If our work falls below your expectation, it will be because we fall after having done our best to succeed. No one can honestly pledge you more than to do their best.

ONE PROMINENT FEATURE OF THE NEXT VOLUME

will be extracts from a very rare and voluminous work, "Kingsborough's Mexican Antiquities." These articles will be contributed by Elder S. F. Walker, who during a recent visit east had access to this work and copied largely therefrom. Its author, son of the English Earl of Kingston, died in 1830, (memorable date) after having spent his life and a large fortune upon this work, which shows, beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt, that Ancient America was occupied by Hebrews. We are thankful to be able to present to the church a knowledge of the existence of this work and extracts therefrom, for by this and other kindred means we learn as plainly as facts can demonstrate, that long before the coming forth of the Book of Mormon God was providing means to establish the proof of its origin and authority, thus leaving those who reject it and his latter day work without excuse in the day of judgment.

TO OUR OLD SUBSCRIBERS

we say, that it will be a great saving of time and trouble to us to receive the renewal of your subscriptions before the 15th of December, as it will obviate the dropping of your names from the mailing list, and the replacing of them should you afterwards send us your names. All parties renewing their subscription before that date can send the money at our risk and expense, if sent by bank draft, express check or, best of all, post office money order. Send the amount of subscription, less the cost of the draft, check, or order and you will be credited with a full year's subscription. This offer does not hold good for less than one year's subscription. Do you wish to obtain

YOUR OWN MAGAZINE FREE?

You can do so by sending us a list of ten names with money (this may also be sent at our expense) and we will send you a copy for 1889 free. If you can not obtain so many names, we will allow you 10 cents for each name and you can pay the balance in money.

TO THE TRAVELLING MINISTRY.

desiring the Magazine, we shall be pleased to send it without cost, to themselves or families upon application by postal card, asking only that they interest themselves in obtaining subscribers and otherwise as heretofore helping to sustain the work. To such we will also allow the commission offered above.

There is a way by means of which

OUR FRIENDS CAN AID US GREATLY

in extending our circulation, and possibly be the means of bringing the work to the knowledge of some one who otherwise would never know of its existence. The Christmas-Tide is coming and you are in the habit of exchanging tokens of love and good will with your friends at this season. Send them this year a series of the Magazine; and what its monthly visits may accomplish, eternity will reveal. If you have no friend to whom you especially wish to send it, then subscribe for an extra copy, and either name for yourself, or ask your missionary in charge to give you the name of some worthy family, too poor to subscribe, but to whom the Magazine would be a blessing.

During the past year we have learned that the Magazine has been read by many outside of the church, in many instances removing prejudice and opening the way for the preaching of the gospel. To God be the glory, and may the means of usefulness in the church be multiplied until the kingdoms of this world "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ."

Send all moneys to David Dancer, box 82, Lamoni, Iowa; also all notices of change of address, or missing numbers etc. Remit only by one of the four methods mentioned.

Elders when remitting for subscription should always remit at our expense.

Price $1.50 per annum, strictly in advance. Parties wishing to renew who are not prepared to forward money before the January issue, must notify the office of their intention to subscribe, or they will fail to receive their Magazine.

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocetian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Special attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

THE INDEPENDENT PATRIOT,

THIS is the LAMONI GAZETTE enlarged to a seven column quarto. This enlargement has enabled us to improve the paper in many respects, and we are now pleased to have the privilege of offering to the Saints and friends as a general newspaper of good and reliable character—one which needs and is worthy of their support. We publish the sermons as before. Patriot without sermons $1 per year; Patriot with Supplement (which consists of one sermon each month) $1.25 per year.

PRIESTLY RULE.

WE give below an article written by Charles E. Penrose, whose name appears in the Deseret News, of Salt Lake City, Utah, as its editor, in defence of certain charges made by a writer in the Springfield, Massachusetts, Republican, which we take from the News for November 16th, 1888, and to which we append a review:

To the Editor of the Republican, (Springfield):—
In The Republican of October 10th appeared a temperate and a fair discussion of some points put forth by me in defense of the Mormon Church in the Forum. Coupled with them was an extract from a lecture by Elder Joseph E. Taylor on Priesthood, followed by some remarks casting doubts on the democratic character of the Mormon ecclesiastical system. Permit me to offer a few words in explanation, as I am of the opinion that the writer of the article in The Republican was not fully informed upon the subject or he would not have made those comments. It is true that the Mormons believe in the eternity of the priesthood which is spoken of in the Bible as being "after the order of the Melchisedek." They believe that Paul's instruction to the Hebrews (chapter seven) referred to the priesthood, and not to the man Melchisedek who held it, as being "without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life;" in this respect he contrasted it with the Aaronic or Levitical Priesthood which was confined to one lineage. They also believe that this priesthood is conferred and, as quoted by The Republican, it should be used as God would have it. But all this is perfectly compatible with the democratic character of the Mormon organization which holds the above theory of the priesthood. To show this let us see how "God would have" this priesthood "used." I quote from the Doctrine and Covenants, page 387:

"No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood; only by persuasion, by long suffering, by gentleness and meekness and by love unfeigned."

The re-election of certain men to offices in that priesthood is not effected "according to dictation," as stated in The Republican. There have been instances of rejection, by the body of the members, of men presented by the leaders for such re-election. And the power to reject is in the majority, according to the fundamental doctrine that "all things in this church shall be done by common consent." Every member, male and female, has an equal vote on all matters of church polity and in reference to official authority. Priesthood comes from God; presidency in any degree comes by the voice of the people, in the Mormon Church.

The intimation is incorrect that the priesthood places itself above the civil law. "Its so-called revelations," as they are styled by The Republican, speak in this wise as to the civil law:

"Let no man break the laws of the land; for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land. Wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign and subdues all enemies under his feet."—Doc. and Cov., p. 202.

The church has published for more than half a century its views on governments and laws, in which the following appears:—"We believe that every man should be honored in his station; rulers and magistrates as such, being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference." The small portion of the article in the Forum quoted by The Republican may be "an incomplete and unsatisfactory answer to the general charge of priest rule in Utah," but the whole article can scarcely be thus condemned, and I think it is unjust to call it an "evasion," as it squarely meets general assertions with positive facts and specific citations from recognized and undisputed church authorities.

There is no such autocratic rule in the Mormon Church as is generally supposed, and what is called "the rule of the priesthood" is really the rule of the people, for nearly all the male members hold the priesthood and every member is entitled to a voice in Church affairs. The people's party, which is entirely a political organization of the majority of the citizens of Utah, is separate and distinct from the church in all respects, and is regulated by democratic principles. The Mormons and their doings and doctrines have been misrepresented for so many years that it is very difficult to obtain a full hearing by the public, particularly through the press.

CHARLES W. PENROSE.

New York, October 21st, 1888.

It is decidedly unfortunate for Mr. Penrose, in the position taken by him in reply to the Republican, that the record of the people whom he attempts to defend appears to be against him. If the same appeal to the Doctrine and Covenants which Mr. Penrose now makes, to defend himself and people against the charge of being ruled by dictation of the priesthood rather than to yield obedience to the law of the land, had been made earlier in the history of the people, and the principle enunciated in the clauses quoted been adhered to both in the precept and practice of that people, there would not now be a necessity for the defence offered.

While the Edmund's Bill, the one which subsequently became the law and under which so many prosecutions of persons in Utah have been had was pending, Mr. George Q. Cannon stated to the committee, of which Hon. Reed, of Maine, was chairman, that they (the Utah Church) did not practice plural marriage because of what was contained in any book, but by reason of a revelation from God commanding, or permitting it. He admitted at the same time that the validity of this revelation was denied, referring to the presence of two representative members of the Reorganized Church who certainly questioned the nature and obligation of the so-called revelation.

Pres. Brigham Young drew the strong contrast between the rule of law quoted from the Doctrine and Covenants, and the rule of the priesthood, when he placed the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants one upon the other, Bible at the bottom and Doctrine and Covenants at the top, and, laying his hand upon them stated, that these books were like a boy's jacket which he had outgrown; they were necessary for the church in its infancy but were now no longer needed; the church had outgrown them and were now living by the living oracles. The living oracles referred to have been always understood to be the Utah priesthood. "Obey counsel," "Hearken to the priesthood," "Do as you are told," were the constant declarations and exhortations, from Pres. Young down to the remotest Bishop during the lifetime of Pres. Young; and the principle was not dormant during the rule of Pres. John Taylor.

From the organization of the church in 1830 to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1844, the church existed and thrived in states whose laws forbade plural marriages, and made the having of more wives than one, by anybody, bigamy. Both passages from the Doctrine and Covenants, quoted by Mr. Penrose, were put there in 1835, by act of a solemn assembly of the church, called for the purpose of considering the book as prepared by a competent committee with that design.

Mr. Penrose says: "The Church has published for more than half a century its views on governments and laws." Among those things thus published is "that to the laws all men owe respect and deference." Is it proper for us to assume that from this "respect and deference" obedience is meant? If so, what will Mr. Penrose and those for whom he seeks defence and exculpation do with an item of law, a rule of faith and conduct found in the same Doctrine and Covenants "published for half a century," which clearly condemns the plural marriage system, for the practicing of which the Republican charges Mr. Penrose and his fellow churchmen with being law-breakers; and that too, upon the admitted teaching of a dogma by church authorities which is contrary to the law of the land, as is well known to Mr. Penrose. This rule is as follows: "We declare that we believe, that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death when either is at liberty to marry again." This rule occurs in the Doctrine and Covenants of 1835, 1845, 1853, before the one quoted by Mr. Penrose on laws and governments, in a section by itself; and if the one quoted by him is indicative of the views of the church on law and governments of the church and authoritatively binding now, why did not Mr. Penrose quote this declaration on marriage as being the rule in the Church in Utah, as a proper defence against the charge of breaking the law of the land in regard to marriage at the teaching of the priesthood? Why should he quote a rule of the church requiring an observance of the law of the land as evidence that they were not breaking it, when he knew, as he must know, that the practice of the people was contrary to the precept. Why should he claim a freedom of action for the people, when he knew, as he must know, that the proclamation of the doctrine of plural, or celestial marriage was a dogmatic declaration of the priesthood, (so-called), in the person of President Brigham Young, who not only did not permit an examination of the document claimed as to its origin and sanction, but announced it with "You've got to believe it or be damned." The tenet was not submitted to a vote of the people; no discussion of its whys and wherefores was permitted; no voice against it was asked for or heard; it was simply enacted by a mandatory manifesto of President Brigham Young. We have reasons for believing that no one would have been permitted to lift his voice against that manifesto, or record his vote against it, when it was made, August 29th, 1852.

From 1862 to 1882 the teaching and ruling of the leaders among the priesthood in the Utah Church, have been at variance with the enactments of Congress, and the practice of many under that teaching and rule has been in violation of the law. If this were not true why should there have been any necessity for, or possibility of complaint, arrest, conviction and punishment under United States laws for practices fostered, sanctioned and carried on under priestly teaching and domination; and which even made possible the commission of perjury in the courts when inquiry was made concerning those practices; and which has made hundreds of men in spiritual good standing in that church, fugitives from the officers of the United States, while hundreds have paid fines and suffered the infliction of penalties, including imprisonment for infraction of law because of such practices.

If, as Mr. Penrose says, "nearly all the male members hold the priesthood," and this priesthood is responsible for the practice complained of, then is there less excuse, for all are under condemnation. And if Mr. Penrose and those for whom he now seeks shelter under the declaration of the church, that "he that keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the law of the land," will abandon their attitude of teaching and ruling in advocacy and defence of practices contrary to the laws of the land, they will find both the law of the Lord and the law of the land to be in harmony on the subject of the marriage relation, and there will cease to be necessity for such evasive defences as Mr. Penrose sets up against the charges in the Republican.

When Mr. Penrose states that "the church has published for more than half a century its views on laws," and that one of those published rules requires "respect and deference" to the law; and cites in support of such declaration a command of God, that "he that keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the law of the land," he would do well to remember that in New York, where the church was organized, in Ohio, where the church received the law of the Lord which he quotes, and where a temple was built by command of God; in Missouri, which was to be a blessed land to the Saints; in Illinois and Iowa, where stakes were commanded to be built, and where Joseph and Hyrum Smith did their latest work, and in one of which states they died by violent hands, the laws of the land were such that whoever married more than one woman, or lived with more than one as a wife, did so in violation of the law, therefore breaking it. This was the rule of law, both of God and of man, under which the church existed all the time during the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and until the church left Illinois in 1846; which rule indeed has not been changed so far as the voice of the church by previous notification and subsequent vote is concerned; and which was not changed even in Utah as Mr. Penrose knows, by any sort of publication till August 29th, 1852, and then by priestly domination; thus showing by the very statements of Mr. Penrose himself, with the law cited by him, that the charges of the Republican are too well founded and the people of Utah condemned by their defender.

THE OTHER COMFORTER.

WHEN Jesus was with his disciples in person there was no need for any other comforter. His personal presence, power and loving supervision were all that was necessary to provide for all their wants, and furnish them unto every emergency, direction, wisdom and power to accomplish all which they were commanded to do. At his departure the disciples were deprived of all that his personal presence had given them; countenance, courage, strength; they were and would be from that time forward helpless among men, so far as divine direction, wisdom and comfort were needful to their ministry. This Jesus knew; and in evident accord with the instruction of his Father, he told them it was needful for him to go away; he could not be present with them always; it was otherwise ordered. He assured them, however, that if he went away the Father would send them "another Comforter;" "which is the Holy Ghost," the "Spirit of Truth;" and that Comforter when it came was to "abide with them forever;" that is, if they would—the language is, "that he may abide with you forever."—John 14: 16, 17, 26; 15: 26.

There need be no question among the Saints as to who this Comforter here spoken of is, it is the "Holy Ghost," "even the Spirit of Truth."

In our own day the condition of things is changed, in this sense; Jesus, the Christ, is not with men in person; hence they are not inspired by his personal example, cheered by his voice, or led and sustained by his personal courage and wisdom. He provided for this change of conditions for all time, as stated by him; "I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter." This Comforter whom the Father would send, was to abide with them, if they would, forever; was to be to them, and all others after them who should receive the word unto repentance and remission of sins, in the place and stead of the personal presence of Jesus; until the completion of all that had been decreed of God concerning the world—and then the faithful disciple should be permitted to enter into the presence of his Lord; that where He was they might be also. "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 2, 3. When this promise is fulfilled, the office work of the Holy Ghost for the disciple will be completed; he will then be within the personal presence, direction, control and power of the Savior; hence, will not longer need the comfort and protection of the Holy Ghost, as a ministering, controlling force.

This change of conditions in which men are now placed, under the dispensation of the gospel, reverses the order in this wise. The obedient disciples received on the "Day of Pentecost," the "Holy Ghost," "the Spirit of Truth," the "Comforter;" the same as that promised in John, chapters 14 and 15, and all who receive and obey the gospel when authoritatively preached and administered, since Pentecost, receive of this Holy Ghost, the Comforter as the first Comforter to them. If they continue faithful they shall ultimately receive the "other Comforter," the one who was first to the Disciples in Jesus' day, even Jesus Christ, the righteous, into whose presence and power they shall be received when He comes to reign among his Saints gloriously.

As the disciples first knew Jesus, minis tered and wrought under his personal ministration of light, wisdom and power; and afterwards wrought by virtue of the Holy Ghost, given of God, at the request of the Christ, the Son of God; so the believers and disciples of Jesus Christ now first receive, minister and labor by virtue of, and under the direction, ministration and power of the Holy Ghost until the end of their dispensation, when they shall pass into the personal dominion and under the control, ministration and power of Jesus Christ in his kingdom thus receiving the other Comforter, making the last first and the first last.

Joseph Smith in his history states this in substance; though the language in which it is told does not leave it so clear as to be free from possible misunderstanding. If he who reads, would read in connection with the statement itself, the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters of John's gospel, he would see that Joseph Smith did not intend to contradict Jesus Christ when he says that the Holy Ghost is the Comforter; but intended to convey the idea that because of the changed conditions under which men now live, and in the administration of the dispensation of the gospel within the angels message of restoration, the Holy Ghost is the first Comforter received, and Jesus Christ the second, or the "other Comforter" to them; not the second in importance; because Christ is always first in importance to man in the plan of redemption, but second in point of the time of reception.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

PLEASE give an explanation of the following passage:

"Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen."—1 Tim. 6: 16.

This passage is regarded as one of the leading evidences and supports of the doctrines of the annihilation, death or complete destruction of the wicked; the unconscious state of the dead; and that man does not primarily possess an immortal soul or spirit. The construction placed upon it by those who so believe puts the Scripture in direct conflict with itself, a favorite method with the infidel in denying the divinity of the Bible. This passage is evidently mistranslated or miscopied as we shall show later on; but taking it literally and separately as rendered in King James' translation, it proves too much for our Adventist, Christadelphian, and other friends who rely upon it as one of their principal texts to prove their favorite theories. The passage with its context reads:

"I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen." 1 Tim. 6: 13-16.

An examination of the first clause of the sixteenth verse and its contexts as here rendered, aside from the general teachings of the Bible, clearly supports the doctrine that Christ and Christ only hath immortality. This leaves God the Father out of the question, thus making the Son far superior to Him, whereas all that the former received was bestowed by the latter. If it be claimed that God is referred to, that also proves too much, for such an interpretation robs Christ of the possession of immortality. Then the two following clauses would state that God dwells in the light which no man can approach unto, and that no man has seen or can see Him. This is manifestly erroneous, for the statement as literally rendered is too startling and discouraging to be for a moment accepted. It robs the Christian of that hope begotten of the promise of Jesus Christ, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." This uninspired theory robs God or Christ of immortality, and man of all that is worth hoping and living for; but such is all that could be expected from the doctrines of men. It is also directly opposite to the general facts recorded in the Bible. Enoch, Abraham, Jacob, Job, Solomon, Isaiah, Amos, Moses, Ezekiel, Stephen, and others too numerous to mention not only "approached unto" the God of Israel, but some of them also beheld Him face to face. (See Exodus 24: 9-11; 33: 11. 1 Kings 11: 9; 22: 19. Job 42: 5. Isaiah 6: 1. Amos 9: 1. Acts 7: 56. Genesis 32: 1-32; 35: 9. Exodus 33: 17-23. 1 Kings 9: 2. 2 Chron. 18: 18. Rev. 5: 1.)

The foregoing passages totally refute the strained interpretation placed upon the statements of the apostle Paul, which when impartially and carefully examined in connection with the general tenor of Holy Writ will be found to convey another meaning. In studying the Scriptures the whole outline of its teachings should be considered in order to rightly divide them, comparing spiritual things with spiritual. No theory should be especially adhered to that is not explicitly taught in the Bible, and which is contrary to its whole tenor, for "it is written" "that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation * * * but holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost," which is denominated "the One Spirit," and which caused all who were inspired by it to "speak the same thing;" not the mere repetition of words, but a unison of doctrine and prediction. An agreement and oneness in their statements should therefore be expected. None will scarcely be rash enough to deny that the Apostle Paul was inspired by that "one and the self same Spirit" in writing his epistles.

Briefly stated, the Scriptures teach the following doctrines which clearly refute the positions mentioned as taken by our opponents:—

1. Christ pre-existed with God: Gen. 1: 26, 27. John 16: 27, 28; 17: 5, 8, 18, 24; 1: 1. Col. 1: 16, 17. Heb. 10: 5; 2: 14. John 7: 33, 34; 3: 13; 6: 62; etc., etc.

2. He possessed a dual nature, a spirit and a body: Matt. 27: 50. Mark 15: 37. Luke 23: 46. Mark 6: 49. Luke 24: 36-39; etc., etc.

3. While his body was dead in the tomb, his spirit was conscious, active, and engaged in his mission: Luke 20: 37; 23: 43. Eph. 4: 9. Zech. 9: 11, 12. Luke 4: 18. Matt. 12: 40; etc., etc.

4. Man is the offspring of God. Gen. 1: 26, 27. Acts 17: 28; etc., etc.

5. He pre-existed: Gen. 2: 4, 5. Job. 38: 4, 7. John 9: 2, 3. Jer. 1: 5. John 1: 6; etc., etc.

6. He also possesses a dual nature—body and spirit: Job. 4: 18, 19; 10: 11; 32: 8. Rom. 7: 22. 2 Cor. 2: 13; 12: 7; 5: 5; 5: 1, 2. 2 Pet. 1: 13, 14. Rom. 8: 16. 2 Cor. 4: 16. Zech. 12: 1. Heb. 12: 9. Matt. 10: 28. Eccl. 3: 21; 12: 7. Num. 16: 22.

7. His spirit is conscious between death and the resurrection of the body: Matt. 10: 28. Gen. 35: 18. 2 Cor. 12: 2-4. Luke 16: 19-31. Isa. 24: 22; 42: 7; 61: 1. Phil. 2: 10. Job. 3: 18.

8. The bodies of unjust men will also be resurrected and each receive reward according to the deeds done in the body whether good or evil, and they will not afterwards be annihilated, but will continue to exist in a conscious state. Dan. 12: 2. Luke 14: 14. John 5: 21-29. Acts 24: 14, 15. 1 Cor. 15: 40-43. Rev. 20: 12, 13; 22: 14, 15; etc., etc.

These texts illustrate the Bible position. We now insert the passage quoted from 1 Tim. 6: 13-16, as rendered in the Inspired Translation.

"I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; which in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, to whom be honor and power everlasting; whom no man hath seen, nor can see, unto whom no man can approach, only he who hath the light and the hope of immortality dwelling in him."

This is evidently the correct rendering and is in harmony with the entire word of God. It speaks for itself and bears evidence of its divine inspiration. Further comment upon it is unnecessary.

FROM a Blenheim, Ontario, paper of a late date, we give the following notice of Bro. R. C. Evans, of London, Ontario:

"A SELF-EDUCATED PREACHER.

"Mr. R. C. Evans, the 'boy preacher' who conducted services in the Latter Day Saints' Church on Sunday, called at our office on Monday. He and the editor renewed an acquaintance of years gone by. Mr. Evans is a self-educated man, who is fully impressed with the justice of the claims which he advances, and who speaks with intense fervor and zeal. The body with which he is connected is entirely distinct from the Mormons, and their doctrines are drawn from the Bible. Mr. Evans was compelled to return to London on Tuesday afternoon, having received a telegram announcing the sudden death of his father.

INGERSOLL AND ELSMERE.

WE reproduce from the Chicago Tribune of November 19th, the following caustic editorial on Robert G. Ingersoll's religion, or rather want of it. Religionists themselves, of course, have long been of the concluding opinion that Mr. Ingersoll as a reformer of existent things in this every day, and Sunday too, world was a failure; but when religionists have expressed themselves in this way, by far too many people have said that it was but the expression of bigotry, and religious fanaticism which feared the iconoclast's attack. The Tribune, however, may say with safety from such criticism that as a "reformer" Mr. Ingersoll "is weaker than the weakest Christian against whom he inveighs."

One reason why the "weakest Christian" is in this respect stronger than Mr. Ingersoll, is that he acknowledges openly a standard of high excellence; and while he thus maintains this excellent standard, consents to be measured by it, confessing frankly that to come short of it is his own fault and not the fault of his standard. The weakest Christian strives to put himself in rapport with his model; but Mr. Ingersoll finds within himself, the only standard by which to measure himself; and by just so much as he is himself wanting in any essential the qualities of greatness and goodness as such are naturally regarded among the men of this busy, pushing, ambitious age, he is below the standard of reform, and consequently poorer than such Christian.

We love candor, and admire courage in a man; but that courage that is foolhardiness and that candor that is cynical, caviling and abusive of what others may hold worthy of attention, esteem and belief, are not commendable. Hence, while we concede to all privilege to think and speak to their convictions, we deem it to be the better part of wisdom to hold all men as amenable to the commonly received rules which govern the mass in regard to the good of the whole. In this view Mr. Ingersoll's views are disruptive, the weakest Christian views are cohesive.

ROBERT INGERSOLL AND "ROBERT ELSMERE."

"The great agnostic, Col. Robert Ingersoll, has addressed himself to the somewhat monotonous and tiresome question of the problem set forth in the fiction life of "Robert Elsmere," and his disquisition has already been printed in The Tribune. Those who read it expecting to find a criticism of the book itself or a discussion of the theological questions involved must have been greatly disappointed. Mr. Ingersoll's dissertation is not so much a statement or defense of Robert Elsmere's religion as it is of Robert Ingersoll's peculiar tenets, and consequently we are treated to a repetition of the Colonel's onslaught on Christian creeds—onslaughts which neither convince nor convict, since everything after all comes back to the individual point of view.

In discussing his subject Col. Ingersoll goes far beyond the most radical believers among Christians. The evangelical preachers have denounced Robert Elsmere without stint. The unevangelical have defended him. Agnostics have doubted whether after all his Elgood street conventicle would accomplish much, but Col. Ingersoll outstrips them all and has no sympathy with evangelical or unevangelical theories on this question. The religion of Robert Elsmere solves nothing for him, though on the whole he thinks it is a better creed than Catharine's. It is only a temporary form of relief. In this mood, and trying to find some way out, we find the Colonel landing first in some form of universal sympathy—a general slobber the world over for every creature who stubs his toe or goes to the bad, no matter whether the stub was accidental, careless, or with a purpose, or whether the person who goes to the bad is the victim of irresistible impulses or takes that course from innate "cussedness." Mankind must snivel alike over all. The step from this position into the dead level standard of life which he seems to impose is not far to take. The whole tone of Col. Ingersoll's dissertation leaves the inevitable impression that he sees no remedy for the ills we have, except by flying to the infinitely worse ills of human conditions measured and fixed by the leveling processes of State Socialism, to enforce which, of course, it is necessary to have Anarchism, for Socialism without dynamite and the torch is a theory only and not a condition, as only a small minority would ever voluntarily adopt it in practical life. This theory involves the recasting of humanity in the same mold, the cutting off or stretching out of human beings on one Procrustean bed, the destruction of the two great motive powers that move men to effort and action—self-reliance and acquisitiveness—and the substitution of their opposites—dependence and stagnation. His doctrine, if carried out, would remove all motives for advancement, ambition, self-respect, self-denial, self-reliance, and invention and progress of any sort. On such impossible supports as these hang all Col. Ingersoll's law and prophets. Carry out his remedy for present inequalities of social conditions and in place of the existing order of things all humanity would be reduced to the same condition of stagnation, "sojering," and carelessness, with but one redeeming quality, that of "sympathy," and even that sympathy of the most incongruous and unhealthy sort. He would remodel the great human menagerie, its bold lions, cruel tigers, cunning foxes, soaring birds, faithful dogs, sagacious elephants, sensitive, high-mettled horses, and patient, toiling cattle upon the model of the goody-good sheep.

"The Colonel completely ignores in his ideal scheme the patent cause of the worst evils, which he deplures in civilized nations—viz.: the demon of alcohol, the drinking of which is responsible for three-fourths of the poverty, misery, suffering, crime, laziness, and ignorance of the Christian world. He suggests a remedy many times worse than the disease. The world has had the disease and managed to get along with it since the creation, but the remedy—sympathetic Socialism—would kill it in a single generation. Col. Ingersoll is a strong destructive critic. As a constructive reformer he is poorer than the weakest Christian against whom he inveighs so fiercely."

To the foregoing we add what the Chicago News of November 1st has to say on the same subject:

POPE INGERSOLL'S LATEST EDICT.

On pretense of criticising "Robert Elsmere," the latest theological novel, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll undertakes, in a local journal, to formulate a fresh edict for the guidance of those who pride themselves on their rejection of anything approaching the supernatural order of life.

We say a fresh edict, for heretofore Col. Ingersoll has confined himself to the role of an active and persistent agnostic; that is, to specifically professing his inability to pronounce dogmatically on the being and existence of a God. Now, however, he virtually proclaims that there can be no God. The very good and sufficient reason to him (Ingersoll) for this modification of his views is that no God could exist, could be worthy of almighty power and attributes, and permit not only the perpetual strife and suffering presented by the vast mass of the population of the world, but those terrible and frightful conflicts and convulsions of the natural universe which daily and hourly produce scenes of human and animal suffering, exceeding in depth and intensity those ideal tortures which the genius of Dante has described as being inflicted on the lost souls in "the circles of hell."

It will thus be seen that Col. Ingersoll by this new departure from the former faith, or no faith, that was in him has severed the last tie, slender though it might have been, which bound him to any, even the smallest acknowledgment of the existence of the supernatural, and consequently to that coterie of modern theists represented by Voltaire, Rousseau, Paine, Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndall. Col. Ingersoll, if he does not in this latest production boldly proclaim his atheism, logically demonstrates that no one believing as he does can possibly conceive of the existence of a moral Ruler of the universe.

And to this complexion have come all the intellectually and wittily conceived brochures of the gallant and talented colonel—to a wasting and futile rage against not only the moral but the material universe; to—like some antique heathen—a lifting up of weak hands of indignation to the gods because he can not comprehend that moral order of the universe which Shakspeare never failed to vindicate, when in his sublimest tragedies he made such inquisition into the mystery of evil as convinced him that the dissonance of life is finally resolved into a clear and rapturous or solemn and profound harmony.

SAVED IN CHILDBEARING.

WE have lately been requested to explain the meaning of the Apostle Paul in the following passage where he says the woman "shall be saved in childbearing:"—"And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression. Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety." 1 Tim. 2:14, 15. We understand him to mean that Christian women, "if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety," shall pass safely through the perils and afflictions of childbearing. This is a most comforting and encouraging promise, and one that every godly woman should rely upon in that critical period, drawing near to God in humble, trustful prayer and honoring the ordinances of the Church of God. Some have unwisely claimed that Paul meant that woman's salvation in the kingdom of heaven could not be secured except she attained to motherhood. It is perhaps needless to say that such a theory is both false and mischievous; for it robs the gospel of Christ of its saving power for all faithful believers, and, making "child-bearing" a condition precedent to salvation in the kingdom of God, the ignorant and over-zealous might be blindly led into evil-doing when seeking to gain that salvation. Learned commentators have written at great length upon the above text, and while they differ no little as to its meaning, the view of the wiser ones is voiced in these words of Dr. Scott: "The gospel gives special encouragements to the woman in respect of those sorrows, (in childbearing), which the entrance of sin has entailed on her, provided she continue in faith and love, with holiness and sobriety."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE learn with regret that the Oakland, California branch, under the pressure of untoward circumstances, have rented the little chapel built by them some two years ago, to the Baptist Church; the branch being unable to meet the running expenses of occupying the building and paying the interest due on the amount borrowed to complete the building. We are informed that the branch was authorized to so rent the building by the one most heavily interested in the lot and building, and in whom the title to the property stands. We see no good reason why they should not have so done. The branch too few in number and laboring under too distressing and disturbing conditions to occupy the premises successfully themselves, it was the part of wisdom for them to do the best they could to meet the constantly accruing expense. We see no just reason to blame them for this action.

Bro. J. A. McIntosh, of Alliston, Ontario, has a few thousand of an excellent little work in review of the many objections urged against immersion, which would be a valuable assistant to any elder, or member for information and argument in the subject of baptism. For sale by Bro. McIntosh, at five cents each, or six for twenty-five cents. Direct to him, box 7, Alliston, Ontario.

Bro. F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois, preached the funeral sermon of Bro. William Whitaker, in the M. E. Church, in the town of Scott, Crawford county, Wisconsin, October 28th. One was baptized by Bro. A. L. Whitaker at the same place during Bro. Cooper's stay there, who preached eight sermons to good audiences. The labors of brethren Short and Pender are highly spoken of there.

Bro. F. C. Smith writes from Kilmanagh, Huron county, Michigan, November 16th, that he had visited Bay Port, Pigeon River, the home of Bro. Cornish, Chase, Hersey, and Five Lakes, in all of which places the Saints seemed to be doing well spiritually. Bro. Smith had made a tour with Bro. Cornish and was much encouraged to find the Saints doing so well.

Bro. F. W. Willey of Oakland, California, wrote renewing his subscription for the HERALD, and expressing kind wishes for its success.

Bro. Hiram Rathbun, of Lansing, Michigan, wrote in a late letter that the Saints there were working, hoping, trusting, and a few were obeying. The prospects were brighter and their hearts were glad.

Bro. E. W. Nunley wrote November 13th from Wheelock, Texas, that the work in that district was progressing and that two new branches had been added to the district since their previous conference. Bro. Nunley expected to be in the active missionary field more this coming year than ever before.

Bro. J. J. Cornish says that we made a mistake in noting his synopsis, by mistaking the price. It should have been single copy $1.00; three copies for $3.00, or six copies for $5.00. We beg Bro. Cornish's pardon for our mistake; and take pleasure in correcting it.

Bro. W. J. Smith wrote from Horning's Mills, Ontario, November 17th as follows: "I have baptized three here and expect more to follow on Sunday."

WHERE NEXT?

THE Chicago Tribune, of November 16th, has the following dispatch; significant, if true:

THE DOMINION GOVERNMENT DECLINES TO COUNTENANCE POLYGAMY.

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 15.—The three Mormon elders, Messrs. Card, Taylor and Lyman, had an interview with the Minister of Customs this afternoon. They sought permission to bring in machinery from the States, either new or old, free or duty; also all their agricultural implements, horses, cattle, etc., not only when they come in as settlers, but at any future time when they desired it. Mr. Bowell pointed out to them that under the law no concessions can be allowed to them which are not permitted to other settlers. They would be allowed, however, to bring in their settlers' effects free. The delegates also waited on the Minister of Agriculture and asked for pecuniary assistance towards promoting immigration to their colony in the North-west. Mr. Carling, in reply, said that he could grant no aid, as the Government has abandoned its policy of assisted immigration. It is said the delegation have asked an assurance from the Government that those who had three or four wives should be left in peace if they brought them into the country, but were quickly told they would receive no such assurance and must conform to the law.

ANOTHER CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST

We print below a local notice taken from the Clio, Michigan, Star of October 13th, 1888, which gives the minutes of a meeting held at or near Farrandville, Michigan, to which we call attention as an indication of the spirit of unrest existing among those inquiring after religious ways, and an evident desire to get back unto primitive times, doctrines and methods. It must be understood that these disciples in their organization are not members of the Reorganization; as will be seen by Bro.

Hiram Rathbun's letter in correspondence column. We pray that Bro. Rathbun's labors among them may be sanctified to their good.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST.

The conference of the Church of Jesus Christ was opened at the Thompson school house, near Farrandville, on Wednesday, October 3d, with a sermon by Elder Rathbun of Lansing. His subject was, "God's method of reform," taken from the text, Isaiah 55th chapter and 7th verse:—Let the wicked forsake his ways and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon him, and unto our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

THURSDAY.

Morning session opened with prayer; Wm. Jackson, President in the chair.

Moses DeLong, Madison DeLong and Solomon DeLong were received as members, and Silas Richardson, Madison DeLong, Moses DeLong and Solomon DeLong were ordained as Elders in the Church of Jesus Christ.

After prayer and singing the afternoon session was devoted to receiving members.

Exhortation by the President in the evening. Report of the Bishop read and accepted.

FRIDAY.

The session was opened with prayer and the following Apostles were elected and ordained:—James McAllister, J. L. Thompson, Moses DeLong, Madison DeLong, Solomon DeLong and Silas Richardson. One member was received.

The afternoon session was devoted to prayer and testimony.

A motion was made and carried that a change be made in the Articles of Association.

In the evening Elder Rathbun preached on the theme, "The Church restored; organization, doctrine, name and practice." First Corinthians, 12th chapter, 27th verse. Hebrews, 3d chapter, first to sixth verses inclusive.

SATURDAY.

Morning session. J. W. Mann was elected and ordained as an Apostle.

A motion was moved, supported and carried, that we do not receive members who belong to any secret society in legal standing.

Afternoon session. Moved and supported, that we admit members on probation for six months, and those who use tobacco; and if they do not abstain from the use of the same at the end of six months, they do not be admitted in full connection.—Carried.

Furthermore resolved, that as we have been so highly favored with the presence of Elder Hiram Rathbun of the city of Lansing, who so willingly and ably preached unto us the restoration of the everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ, and the restoration of the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ, with all its doctrines and practices, to their primitive purity, as they came from the hands of Jesus,

Therefore resolved, that we tender unto him the grateful thanks of this Conference, and recommend him to the confidence of our people and others as being a faithful and uncompromising minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Elder Rathbun preached in the evening. Subject—Obedience to the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. Matthew 11th chapter, 28th verse.

SUNDAY.

Love feast was held in the morning, prayer and testimonial meeting in the afternoon, and preaching in the evening by Elder Rathbun, on "Restoration of the gospel to its primitive purity," from the text, Revelations 14th chapter, 6th and 7th verses.

Followed by sacrament and washing of Saints' feet.

Sermon in the evening by Elder Rathbun. Subject, "The perfection of the Saints." Text, Deuteronomy 18th chapter, 13th verse.

APPOINTMENTS.

William Jackson, Chief Apostle and Evangelist. J. W. Mann, Elba and Oregon. James McAlister, Flint City, Whitesburg and Burton. J. L. Thompson, Evangelist. Charley Dankon, Evangelist. Moses DeLong, Midland, Tuscola and Owosso. Madison DeLong, Fish Lake and North Branch. Solomon DeLong, South-west Lapeer. Silas Richardson, half the city of Flint and Fenton. A. A. Link, Evangelist. Samuel E. Howard, Bishop of Flint district. J. T. Oren, Deacon. (Address, Flint city.) Alonzo Shepard, local preacher under Bishop.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Still thy love, O Christ, arisen,
Years to reach these souls in prison!
Through all depths of sin and loss
Drops the plummet of thy cross!
Never yet abyss was found Deeper than that cross could sound."

"THOU SHALT NOT BEAR FALSE WITNESS."

"Lord who shall abide in thy tabernacle; who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart . . . He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not."

Far back in the history of the past there came a time when the disciples listening in breathless awe to the words of the Master concerning the work which one of them should do, asked, "Lord is it I?" Doubtless every heart—even that of Judas—repudiated the thought that betrayal of him was to come through any one of them; and yet through one of them it was to, and did come. While we pen these lines our heart is lifted to God in earnest prayer that each one who reads them may so examine herself that after asking the same question she may be enabled to know whether indeed "It is I?"

I, who betrayed the Master to his cruel death upon the cross? Nay, not this; but, Is it I who have borne false witness? Is it I who upon bended knees have from Sabbath to Sabbath covenanted anew; aye, have partaken of the emblems of his broken body and spilled blood as a witness to the Eternal Father of that covenant—a witness that I am willing to take upon me the name of His Son and always remember Him and keep His commandments. Is it I who have been false? I who have broken those commandments? Nay more, was I a living witness against myself, that while my lips were uttering the words, my life was giving them a contradiction so overwhelmingly true that it could be seen, known and read of all men?

Is heaven a reality, or is it a myth? Did God give freely the most precious gift in his possession, the only begotten Son of his bosom, to redeem us from under the curse of a broken law? If indeed this is true, can it be true that covenant breakers are to inherit the kingdom he has gone to prepare? If so, (and may this one thought come to each heart with its truth laden message and with a weight not easily to be set aside), why then did Christ die?

Was disobedience in the Garden of Eden a greater sin than disobedience in Lamoni, Independence, San Francisco or any other place upon any of God's habitable earth? Was disobedience to the command "Thou shalt not eat thereof"—a command simply enunciated by the Father; greater than disobedience to a command not simply binding upon us because of enunciation, but also because we have covenanted upon our part, and have made the death and sufferings of Christ a witness to this covenant, that we are willing to keep all his commandments? Consider it, my sisters, for it is not of our arranging. We are but a worm of the dust, and our opinion for or against is worth no more than yours. Paul says: "He that despised Moses law (or the command of God through Moses) died without mercy, under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment suppose ye shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing; and hath done despite to the Spirit of grace?"

Does this answer the question—this declaration that a sorer punishment than death is he worthy of who sins against the blood of the covenant, and does despite to the Spirit of grace? As we look at it, it is an answer which is yea and amen in Christ Jesus.

Under the law of Moses, two or three witnesses were sufficient. As Latter Day Saints, how many witnesses appear against us? How many times have we partaken of the bread and wine in memory of his broken body and shed blood, calling upon this blood of the covenant as a witness that we would keep his commandments, and then have gone on as before in open violation of them; counting the blood of the covenant an unholy thing, and doing despite to the Spirit of grace, for the obtaining of which we entered into this covenant, that we might have it to lead and guide us always? How many times, we repeat, have we done this?

There is needed an awakening in Zion. Would God that we had the voice of an archangel; how would we sound it forth crying: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." There is a death which is one of trespass and sin, and until the church of the living God awakes from this death the gospel of Christ is hindered, his Spirit is withheld, and we are found false witnesses before God; renewing from time to time our covenant of obedience with him when the very garments in which we are robed while we covenant, like the Babylonish garment of Achan, is a witness of our disobedience and of the despite we are doing to the Spirit we covenant to follow and obey. Will any one skilled in the law of life answer us what is the difference in the binding force of the two commands, "Thou shalt not eat thereof," and "Let all thy garments be plain." We ask the question with all deference to those who have expressed opinions upon this matter heretofore, and who perhaps honestly deem it a matter of small consequence. It may be that neither Adam nor Eve had a full conception of the results which would follow the disregard of the first, any more than we have of the results to follow this later one; but their ignorance did not prevent the effects from following the cause, neither will our ignorance prevent the same law of cause and effect with reference to the last named; and while we can not tell the reason why these results should have followed that cause, we yet know that they did follow it; and while we may not understand why the Lord has commanded, "Let all your garments be plain," we yet think that we can see many reasons for the command—some of which we will strive to present in a future article. We can not however close this without asking each one who reads it to enter into communion with her own conscience, and ask herself, "How can I ever again before the assembly of His saints upon earth, the spirits of Saints departed, and angels who minister to those who are called to be heirs of salvation, covenant to keep all his commandments while living in hourly violation of this one? How can I bear witness, while I call upon him to testify—to witness for me—that I am willing to be obedient?"

SPECIAL REQUEST FOR PRAYER.

Bro. William Franklin of Flintville, Wisconsin, requests the prayer of the Prayer League in behalf of his son, who is his only support but will soon be helpless himself, unless the Lord sends relief.

SHERIDAN, IOWA, NOV. 1ST.

Dear Sisters:—As I read your many good letters found in The Herald it makes me feel as if I too would like to offer a word of encouragement. It is now almost eight years since I was baptized, and I can truly say I have never once thought for a minute I should like to turn back; for where would I turn. Although I have my trials, the same as others, yet life without them would be monotonous, and we must have some bitter with the sweet or it would be no longer sweet. I am not a mother and can not speak as one; yet, after just finishing my seventh term of school and being the oldest sister of a family of ten children, I feel that I have had some experience with little ones. And I would say to the mother and teacher, "Be patient with the little ones," for you know not how long they may be spared to your care, and you can scarcely realize the great responsibility resting upon you in training the tender plants entrusted to your care. And if mothers and teachers would clasp hands and walk the path of duty together (remembering that neither are perfect), how much stronger each would be by the union.

I want to speak of the good meetings and great interest manifested at our school-house, where Bro. John Roth has been preaching. (It is just five miles from his home. At first Bro. Wm. Bozarth came, about the middle of September and preached four most excellent sermons in my father's house with a fair number of attentive listeners. He then went to eastern Iowa, promising to return in two weeks. But he was taken sick and was obliged to go home; so he sent Bro. Roth in his place, who came somewhat disheartened because Bro. Bozarth could not be with us. He filled Bro. Bozarth's appointment in our school-house with five splendid sermons, and returned last Saturday and gave us three more. At first he remarked, "Perhaps we will have enough for a Corporal's guard;" but when the last night, the house was filled too full to be comfortably seated, (among whom were only five Saints) he thought there was some interest and also need of preaching. He has the very best of attention, and the people seem eager to hear, saying he has more Bible than they ever heard of before. Fearing I will weary you with my first, I will close.

I am your sister,

SOPHIE A. REAMS.

LAMONI, IOWA, NOV. 1888.

Dear Sister Walker:—While reading over the letters in the Mothers' Home Column, I was very much impressed by a sentence in one written by Clara —. It is this, "What matters it where our lot is cast in this life; it is only a short time at best." I can only say it matters not, if we are Saints in very deed; neither time nor distance, joy nor sorrow, poverty nor riches, can turn us from the truth, the gospel revealed in these latter days. I know this by experience. We have lived where there were no Saints, not one for miles around that we knew of; and although I now live in Lamoni, and am surrounded with those in the church, I am no better Saint to-day than I was then, years and years ago. My lot in life has not been a smooth one. In looking back over the past, I wonder sometimes that I could pass through what I have passed through and still remain unchanged and my faith unshaken in the promises of God; but it is verily so. I have never, no never doubted His word.

My husband was a traveling elder before I first saw him; and just as soon as we joined the Reorganized Church he was ordained and sent forth again, and remained faithful to his calling up to the time of his death. During all those long years of his absence from home I alone had the burden and care of the family.

Sisters, I feel for many of you; I know but too well the great anxiety of a loving mother for the welfare of her children, both temporally and spiritually. The way may seem dark at times, but rest assured that God will never forsake us if we persevere and put our trust in Him. I have tried to do my duty. My children are all in the church, all married, and some of them many, many miles away from me; yet I know that the Lord will watch over them. I feel lonely now they are all gone, and I am getting old; yet as sister Clara says, "What matter! life is but short at best." In looking over some old letters I found the last one my husband wrote to me. It suggested the following lines:

HIS LAST LETTER.

I found it to-day 'mong a package
Of letters near thirty years old;
Some of them with age are discolored
And worn out at every fold.

I eagerly picked up the missive
As though I'd received it to day;
Forgetting the years that had vanished
Since it had been folded away.

In reverie lost for a moment,
I really thought it was so,
That the letter with post-mark, "Nevada,"
Was mailed but a few days ago.

It was dated July, eighty-four,
The hand was unsteady, but true;
"I feel better, dear Mattie, much better,
And hope soon again to see you.

"I would write to my Joseph and Dollie,
But I'm tired of holding the pen;
As soon as I'm able to travel
I hope we shall all meet again.

"Tell Gland I am thinking about him.
My prayers unto heaven ascend,
That God in His infinite mercy
Will be to our children a friend."

Ah me! how the heart strings are breaking,
And bitter the tears that I shed;
On the fourth of the following August
He was laid in his cold narrow bed.

Yet we think of him still as he left us
The morning he had us adieu:
"Farewell! when this mission is ended
I'll come back to my home and to you."

O, how very brief and uncertain
Is life at its longest and best!
Our plans and our bright expectations
Are gone, and the loved ones at rest!

This world is so cold and so dreary;
For his letters nor face do I see;
Except in my slumbering hours
He comes and converses with me.

Yet my faith in the Lord is unshaken;
I never have doubted His word;
And I know that the prayers of the faithful
By our Heavenly Father are heard.

The roughest of storms may assail us;
The clouds may obscure the bright sun;
But after the conflict is over
How welcome the plaudit, "Well done."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Minnie Lemburg, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, writes: "I do not see how so many who have named the name of Christ and are called "Saints" can be so perfectly indifferent towards the work, apparently never doing anything to help on the cause. I can testify from my own experience that novel reading is not good, but rather takes all desire for active christian work out of the heart; as does also the following of vain, worldly fashions."

Sr. Mary J. Flower, Fremont, Neb., writes: "I want to say a word for this Latter Day Work. I know that it is the work of God, and there is no other which has any foundation in God's word. Two years before I united with the church I had a dream in which I saw the Son of Man coming in brightness from the east. I dreamed it three times, and believe it was a warning to me. When baptized and confirmed the spirit of love and forgiveness filled my soul, and I have never regretted the step taken. Pray for me that I may be faithful in the discharge of my duty to God and my family."

Sr. A. M. Oehring, of Newark, writes: "I often read the contents of the Column with tears of joy, the Spirit bearing witness to the truthfulness of many of the testimonies borne therein. The Prayer League has been often in my mind, for I have long felt that if the church was more sustained by prayer, it would be better prepared to buffet the storms of opposition, which burst with such fury over it. It will also be for the strengthening of the sisters and uniting them in bonds of love firmly cemented."

All names are accepted, but none are published, because we wish to avoid publicity in the matter. Your understanding of the matter is correct.—ED.

Sr. Harriet Tryon, Henderson Grove, Ills., writes:—Feeling that we are called upon to improve the talent God has given us, I wish to add a word to the Column. It has been a great comfort to me, especially Sr. Annie's letter. I had just laid away two precious boys, there being only two weeks and three days difference in their deaths. How comforting the assurance that if faithful I shall meet them again. Let us work for each other; strive to cheer and build each other up in our most holy faith. I was comforted and benefitted this afternoon by hearing Mother Tryon (now seventy-one years old) relate a beautiful vision which she had some twenty-five years ago. Hoping it will benefit some other as it did me, I relate it."

THE VISION.

She said: "I was lying down to rest, but had not gone to sleep when a voice spoke my name plainly, 'Sarah,' and I answered. Then the words came, 'Stand to your post.' I rose then, and the earth was darkened, and reeled to and fro. People began to run and scream, only the saints of God; they all stood unmolested, looking on. Then the words came, 'You will be changed from death unto life.' I felt the change; it was quick as thought. Then the flames came and burned everything as stubble. I could see for miles and miles, all became so plain. Then Christ came; and after him the Saints two by two, marching south from here. They were singing, oh, so sweetly, no mortal tongue can tell! As they kept marching on, I stepped into the ranks and marched with them; and kept marching along with them until my companion disturbed me and the vision passed away."

Sister Carrie Bohall, Eureka, Cal., writes:—"I feel that I can not say much of worth for your columns, but I yet feel that the hope of immortality and eternal life is mine, and I desire to hold out faithful to the end. There are ten of us belonging to this branch who live in town. We meet every Wednesday evening for prayer-meeting, and every two weeks for sacrament. Last Sabbath we met for Bible reading, and think of organizing a class permanently for that purpose. It is just what we need, and I pray that the Spirit of God may guide us into all truth."

Correspondence.

SCRANTON, Penn., Nov. 19th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Last night I dreamed of catching some fish; transferred them from clear running water with my hands into another place of clear water and they lived; were small but beautiful and tame. I am inclined to think it is here, or about here. The great prophet came out of Nazareth; why not good fish be caught at Scranton? The ways of the Lord are not as the ways of men. Have held five meetings here, and there are two more announced. There are some well inclined Saints here, but they have been overspread with clouds for a time and snowed under. Some of them, too, have not altogether learned to "avoid temptation," and to keep themselves "from the vices of the world." The Lord knew the weakness of human nature when He announced the cry to be made, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins." This is a preventive, "that ye receive not of her plagues."

It seems important that I remain here a few days longer; however urgent it be that something be done elsewhere. Some way and unexpectedly the Spirit lingers with me and whispers that it is required, and that good will grow out of it. I like the pith in the "Is it Bitterness?" If these men would conform to the law of the Lord and quit listening to the clap-trap of what somebody says that Bro. Joseph and Bro. Hyrum said, or did, their ire towards the Reorganization would soon abate; and they would be able to keep out of jail. "Hold the fort" until victory is won. Truth prevails and "Christ is all and in all." Very happily,

W. H. KELLEY.

FLORENCE, Colorado, Nov. 15th.

Dear Herald:—After delivering about nineteen gospel discourses at Coal Creek and vicinity, reorganizing a branch with seven members, I led three souls this morning into Arkansas River, burying them under its rolling waves, confirming at the water's edge in the presence of Bro. and Sr. Menzie and Brn. Tate and Crow, thus adding three members to the Coal Creek branch. Husband, wife and son, of good moral reputation have stepped forth amid the bigotry and frowns of the world. Coal Creek is a mining camp of considerable dimensions, having but few friendly in our cause; hence I can but admire the courage of Bro. Winship in coming over to the Lord's side, in the acceptance of the only true but unpopular gospel, for no other motive could have prompted them than a love for truth and a desire to honor their Maker and save their souls. They will doubtless forfeit friendship of former friends to some extent, but will find new and gospel friendship among the few Saints. Bro. D. Crow is presiding elder, Bro. W. Menzie deacon, secretary and treasurer. God inspire, instruct and keep the little flock. The necessity for reorganization existed through removal of original members and the incoming of new ones. The fact of the population of Colorado being prone to float, or move, makes it difficult to perpetuate organizations. Success, in view of difficulties that have beset the work in Colorado, however meagre, is gratifying. The prejudice that naturally exists towards our doctrine, with the latter day apostacy, however trying, may be met with a fair grace; but that created by the folly of our own members is different and more trying.

I go to Manitou Park, El Paso county, in response to call; where, so far as I know, our doctrine has never been preached.

MANITOU PARK, Nov. 16th. If my next advertised place don't read as above in my letter from Florence, Colorado, please make it. Please say to all wishing to correspond on church matters, to address 453 Park Avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa. Further, I will feel obliged to all, never to think of adding the prefix "Rev." to my name. I know of no guarantee for such a practice. Latter Day Saints should not be assumptive, or lack a recognition of what God does guarantee; thus let their moderation be known.

JAMES CAFFALL.

Dear Herald:—We have had a good conference meeting lasting over two weeks, and it was certainly one of the most enjoyable times our branch has ever experienced. We had four accessions to the church, all heads of families, and God's Spirit was with us in our meetings from the beginning, teaching, encouraging and comforting us; giving us strength for the battle before us. It is now some eight or nine years since I entered the church. When I came into it I had an idea that so long as I did not break any of its laws I was all right, or in other words, there was no more for me to do. I attended church whenever there was any preaching and also prayer and testimony meeting. Sometimes I would take part in them but it was always a cross to me, for I felt there were others more gifted with language, and more liable to benefit their hearers than I; so I finally ceased speaking or praying in public, and would simply sit and listen, and there I lost the spirit of the work and began to doubt. But if any professed to speak by the Spirit I would think, "Perhaps you are mistaken." I know now why this was, for the things of God are spiritually discerned, and unless we have his Spirit we can not understand his work. Things moved along in this manner with me for a long time, and I lost all interest in prayer and testimony meetings and ceased to attend them. I knew I did not enjoy myself spiritually as I desired, but I did not realize that the fault was in me. Of course I thought it lay somewhere else. I feel to thank God that he sent Bro. I. N. Roberts here, who surely had the spirit of discernment, and could understand my case, for he went to work and soon the trouble and perplexities vanished from my mind, and I could see that just where I had ceased to do my duty I got into darkness, for Satan will always find his opportunity when we grow lax in duty. I realize that we can not come into the vineyard of the Lord and sit idly down, fold our hands, shirk the crosses and trials that others are bearing around us and reasonably expect God to bless us with his Spirit. We can not all preach, but each one has a work to do that no other one can do for us. We are commanded to work out our salvation with fear and trembling. Then let us ask God to aid us to overcome this man-fearing spirit that makes us so fearful of a failure, and give us boldness by his Spirit that we may humble ourselves before him and be ever ready to do our duty in whatever way seemeth good in his sight. I have written plainly on this subject, hoping that if there are any who are steering near the rock that came so near wrecking me it may perhaps do them some good, for let me say to all, brothers and sisters, unless we improve the talent we have received it will be taken from us and given to another more worthy to receive it.

Your sister,

C. E. BARBER.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Nov. 19th.

Bro. Blair:—Our debate closes to-night. The attendance has been large, and the interest good throughout. The general opinion, so far as we can hear, seems to be that Rev. Mr. Williamson has made an entire failure on both propositions. Quite a number of the ministers of the city have attended throughout, and without an exception all pronounce the victory ours, especially the Catholic Priest and the Episcopal ministers. Our folks are satisfied with the result. And while the truth has gained a victory, we have had a fine opportunity of setting our views before a class of people we could not have reached otherwise. Thanks to Rev. Williamson.

I tell you, Bro. Blair, truth never shines out brighter than when compared with error, antagonized by false teachers.

I go to Omaha to-morrow for a series of meetings there. Yours in bonds,

H. C. BRONSON.

Bro. Joseph:—A gentleman by the name of Samuel Howard who when quite a young man some ten or twelve years ago, attended my meetings at Dimondale and obtained some correct ideas of a gospel church, has since become a preacher and succeeded in organizing a church which he calls "The Church of Jesus Christ." He also publishes a paper in the city of Flint, called "The Church of Jesus Christ Record." About the last of September I received a letter from this brother Howard, whom I had forgotten, earnestly soliciting me to attend a general conference meeting at Clio, in Genesee county, this state. I was not aware of the nature of the meeting till I got there. I learned that they had been organized about one year, and this meeting was for a more perfect organization. There were not any of them very well posted in parliamentary rules of deliberative bodies. They all seemed very honest conscientious and in earnest. I was received in all brotherly kindness that I possibly could have asked. Indeed, in my absence, they elected me to be their chief apostle and president of their church. When I was informed of this and earnestly solicited to accept, I thanked them as kindly as I could for the respect and confidence shown me, and begged to be excused. They seemed very reluctant to let me off, but being persistent in declining the honors conferred, they finally concluded to drop my name. I promised, however, to preach for them as often as they desired during their conference. The result was that I did all their preaching, and stayed one day after they had all dispersed. Conference was held through the day and preaching service held at night. The meetings were all well attended. On Sunday evening the house was uncomfortably packed full, and then not half of the people could get in. Our preaching was universally received with the warmest enthusiasm. I left with the promise to return and especially to the city of Flint, and there deliver a series of discourses.

With the above explanation I send you a copy of the Clio Star with a very short synopsis of the meeting noted.

HIRAM RATHBUN.

COAL CREEK, Colo., Nov. 19th.

Editors Herald:—We have been cheered by the presence of Bro. Caffall, and much edified by the preaching of the word through him. He came here on the 27th of October and left on November 15th, and was not without success in his labors. Congregations were small but attentive. We do not live at ease in this part of the Lord's vineyard, for we have scoffers and persecutors; also those who will not enter the kingdom, but will do all in their power to hinder those that would. However, we are very thankful that we can unfurl the banner of truth and float it high above the perverted systems of modern Christianity, so called. And we as Saints, all feel determined to press forward amidst the scoffs and jeers of this world, and protect our noble banner (truth) against the enemy's attack.

We rejoice that our band has been made three stronger! husband, wife and son, viz., Henry, Mary and Samuel Winship. Let me say, my brethren and sisters, that we believe that this is in answer to a day of fasting and prayer before Bro. Caffall came. We solicit the faith and prayers of the Saints and more especially in behalf of those three precious souls just entered the kingdom. Yours in bonds,

WALTER MENZIES.

PLYMOUTH, England, Oct. 8th.

Bro. Joseph:—I am not getting on as well as I thought I should before I came. I find that the enemy is here in great power and doing all he can to stay the onward progress of the work and many that were very near the kingdom, and saw the truthfulness of the work, and who had given their names for baptism (my oldest sister for one) when they saw how he raged through his agents—the so called ministers and leaders of the people, or in other words, hirelings, who are transformed as angels of light, became discouraged and have gone back, and are afraid to be seen with me. Our opposers watch every house I enter, and state every kind of falsehood that they can think of about me and the cause, hence I can not do much at Broadclist at the present, but I am in hopes that I shall soon. I baptized a sister eighty-three years old on the eleventh of September at Broadclist. On the following Monday, seeing that I could do no more for the present, I went and visited my brother Charles and his family at Ramsdean, near Petersfield, Hants. He is a local preacher for the M. E. church. His wife also preaches for the Army [Salvation Army?] They seem to like my teachings. I remained there until the 21st of September, but they are very anxious for my return. I think they will be baptized when I do. I then went on to London and visited the dear Saints there, and stopped while there with Bro. Joseph Tankard, who was very kind to me while there and took me around to visit some of the brethren, and with others I visited Bro. and Sr. Bradshaw, who received me very kindly, and on Sunday, the 23d, I preached in their hall in the evening. I had good liberty and felt that the Spirit of the Master was present, and that good was done. After the preaching I baptized Bro. Joseph Tankard's daughter, and confirmed her. There were others present that stated that they were convinced through my preaching. On Monday evening we had a very good meeting, better than they had for a long time and we were all made glad. The gifts of the gospel were present, and on the twenty-fifth I took leave of them for Birmingham, and stopped while there with Bro. and Sr. Taylor and they were glad to see me.

On the 27th I took my departure for Bath to visit Bro. George Hayward and friends and found them all well, but did not want the gospel. They treated me very kindly so I took the evening train for Bristol, and there I remained visiting friends until October 1st, when I took the train and came to Watchet, and remained there until the morning of the 3d. Then I came on to Broadclist and found the brethren all well but very much cast down on account of the enemy raging. I had a meeting that night and did all I could to cheer them up, and all felt good.

On the 3d I took my leave of them and went to Plymouth and called on Elder M. T. James and found that he had been an invalid for more than two years, but he says that he knows that he shall be healed. By his request I administered to him and he says he is better. I learned that there were eight members in Plymouth and Devonport, and that there was another Elder, namely, Elder Downs, but is very old and feeble. The Saints say they have had no preaching for six years, and some that have been baptized for six years have never heard any preaching and have never had the sacrament since they have been in the church. One old brother that was baptized over two years ago says that he was never confirmed. His wife stated the same; also another brother. Most of the Saints here belonged to the old church, and there are many more here.

I visited the Saints and hired a hall, and on Sunday the seventh we met together and partook of the sacrament and had a good meeting, and in the evening had preaching, but not many present. I had good liberty and know that they were hungering for the truths of the gospel. During the week I did a great deal of fire-side preaching and four gave their names for baptism. On the 15th I had the pleasure of baptizing five precious souls into the kingdom of God. One of them was the one that the hands had not been laid on and he was not pleased so I rebaptized him; although the elder said he did confirm him. On the 17th we met and confirmed them, and had the sacrament. One of those that I had baptized, aged sixty-nine years stated that she had been a member of the English Church for twenty-three years and that she had learned more in this one meeting than she had for all that time, and they all felt that it was good to be a Saint in the latter days. Three others promised to be baptized, so on the 19th I returned to Broadclist and found things much quieter and did some more preaching, and felt that it was my duty to organize them into a branch, so on Monday the 22d of October we met for that purpose, and according to the wish of those present, I organized them into a branch to be known as the Broadclist branch. Edward Tucker was chosen as elder, Henry Board as priest, Henry Wilson, teacher, Stephen Ireland, deacon; and Rhoda Tucker to be secretary. I believe them to be good men of God who will try to do right and I humbly ask the prayers of the Saints of God on their behalf for they are young in the cause. I am glad to know that they are men of prayer, and humble. I came with my little girl to Tarquay and stopped there two nights trying to find some of my wife's friends, and one night at Totnes, then on to this place, where I shall stop and see what I can do for the Master, and if I can, gather back some of the old time Saints. We are having very rough weather now, but as soon as it is fine I shall baptize those that are ready.

The Saints here are in a scattered condition and there is not proper material to organize them into a branch. Those that have given their names are sisters. Those brethren that are here are aged, and two of them are almost blind. Bro. Cauch has had about twenty thousand tracts printed and given them away in this part of the country. Brother and sister Downs desire to be kindly remembered to Bro. James Caffall.

Your brother in Christ,

THE following sharp hit at the methods of Sectarian religionists to keep heresy out of the school houses is by Bro. M. T. Short, in the Aledo, Mercer county, Illinois, Democrat, for November 9th, for which we thank Bro. Morris:

"THE INEVITABLE."

Your correspondent from Pomeroy thinks that school houses should be used for educational purposes only. He may have forgotten, or never knew that the immortal soul needs educating as well as the intellect.

Surely our morals should be instructed, while we seek to become proficient in the sciences. A brainy man without a purified heart, is a detriment to society. "For our part we think that a" home "should be used only for the purpose of" domestic tranquility, instead of nocturnal revels of a Pomeroy opposition dance, "but we may have to submit to the inevitable."

It the people would take counsel of the "Elder" they would not go nutting, or perform servile work, on the great resurrection day.

The evangelical churchmen are clever and polite to the fostering hand that will swell their numbers, augment their wealth and promote their glorious power. A rival sect of the Pedobaptist school, formerly used the wee seminary of learning for church purposes. They even had a partition removed to enlarge the room, and got the day school to discontinue for a protracted meeting—so the folks say. When they got able to build a chapel, by sacrifice and begging, then, as wont, they oppose me using the room, as they are commodiously situated, and wish to neither borrow nor loan.

Land of Bibles this, and a free country in patches, and religious toleration here if you allow popular orthodoxy to think for you and prescribe for all your spiritual wants and needs. When this "branch of the vine" (!) used the rural rendezvous they feared not that tobacco juice or dirt would be inadvertently deposited. They conjectured not that the furniture would be defaced, the house maltreated, or the books mutilated, then; but the telescope, somehow, has got turned end for end. It is owing, largely, to "whose ox is gored."

We wish to live and let live, to think and act, to give and take, to watch and wait, to pray and work.

I would sooner approximate failure in a good cause than to miserably succeed in a poor one. As a representative minister I authoritatively proclaim to all mankind that our houses of worship are ever open and always free to the use of co-religionists when not in use by the Saints.

Should it be thought incredible that we believe in a personal God; the Messiahship of our blessed Savior; the Omnipresence and Divine energy of the Holy Ghost; Original Sin; the consequent fall and the consequent atonement. Should we be pitied, blamed, scorned, ostracised, hated, persecuted, or suppressed, all because we contend for "a faith that will not shrink;" the importance of a thorough repentance; the necessity of adult immersion; the essentiality of confirmation by the imposition of eldership hands; the primitive form of church organization and government; the heavenly call and the lawful ordination to the ministry; the "signs" following the true believer; the "manifestations of the spirit" attending all the faithful; the sacredness of monogamous wedlock; the diabolism of divorce; the infamy of "the social evil;" the curse of intemperance; the blessing of the communion; the grace of feet washing as an ordinance at a proper time and place; the waning power of the nations; the apostasy of the church; the re-inauguration of the gospel; the rise of the kingdom; the second bona fide appearing, and the concomitant resurrection; the overthrow of sin, and the concurrent subjugation of the nations; the redemption of the world; the glorification of the earth; the tabernacle of Jehovah and the immaculate presence of the Sublime Ruler of the universe enthroned in might, glory and dominion. Time nor space would now allow us to catalogue further, or analyze our distinctive plea, or develop and bring forward Biblical proofs.

I would once and forever abandon a system of faith and worship that I could not maintain and defend anywhere and everywhere, on sea and on land. I crave the sympathy, esteem and love of all fair minded people; but a religious bigot I pity, condemn and abhor. To judge of a matter without hearing, or from madam rumor, is the culmination of imbecility, or downright dishonesty. To come to conclusions from a biased standpoint, is the bane of human progress. Search deep, test all, and adhere to the good. In love of truth and right.

THE EARTH THE EVERLASTING
ABODE OF MAN.—No. II.

BY ELDER E. STAFFORD.

Mr. Patterson in his "Fables of Infidelity" says: "The wretched peasantry are rejoiced to labor for any who will pay them five cents a day, and eager to hide the treasure in the ground from the rapacious tax-gatherer. I have seen British horses refuse to eat the meal ground from a mixture of wheat, barley, oats, lentils, millet and a hundred unknown seeds of weeds, and collections of filth which forms the produce of their fields. For poverty, vermin and disease, Egypt is proverbial." He then quotes Volney, whom he styles the scoffer, in vol. 1, page 190 of his book: "In Egypt there is no middle class; neither nobility, clergy, merchants nor landholders. A universal air of misery in all the traveler meets, points out to him the rapacity, oppression, and the distrust attendant upon slavery. The profound ignorance of the inhabitants equally prevents them from seeing the cause of their evils, or applying the necessary remedies. Ignorance diffused through every class, extends its effects to every species of moral and physical knowledge. Nothing is talked of but intestine troubles, the public misery, pecuniary extortions and bastinadoes."

The secret of the Lord concerning the destruction and desolation of Babylon for the wickedness of its inhabitants, was revealed unto the prophet Jeremiah as recorded in the 50th and 51st chapters of his book from which we extract a few of the most pointed predictions. "Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the sickle in the time of harvest. * * * Every purpose of the Lord shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant. * * * Behold the hindermost of the nations shall be a dry land and a desert. Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, and it shall be wholly desolate." In every volume of travels in Assyria and Chaldea, proofs in abundance are to be found of the fulfillment of these predictions. One writer says: "Those splendid accounts of the Babylonian lands yielding crops of grain of two and three hundred fold, compared with the modern face of the country, afford a remarkable proof of the singular desolation to which it has been subjected. The canals at present can only be traced by their decayed banks. The soil of this desert consists of hard clay mixed with mud which at noon becomes so heated with the sun's rays that I found it too hot to walk over it with any degree of comfort." Another writer says that "it [Babylonia] was at some period in a far different state is evident from the number of canals by which it was traversed, now dry and neglected, and the quantity of heaps of earth covered with fragments of broken bricks and broken tiles which are seen in every direction, the indisputable traces of former cultivation." Another says: "The abundance of the country has vanished as clean away as if the besom of destruction had swept it from north to south; the whole land from the outskirts of Babylon to the farthest stretch of sight lying a melancholy waste. Not a habitable spot appears for countless miles." As the desolation of the country was to be extraordinary, so the desolation of the city of Babylon was to be remarkable. We quote from Mr. Patterson's "Fables of Infidelity" concerning the desolation of the city: "When the prophet wrote, its walls had been raised to the height of three hundred and fifty feet, and made broad enough for six chariots to drive abreast. From its hundred brazen gates issued the armies which trampled under foot the liberties of mankind, and presented their lives to the nod of a despot who slew whom he would, and whom he would allowed to live. Twenty years provisions were collected within its walls, and the world would not believe that an enemy could enter its gates." Nevertheless the prophets pronounced against it a doom of destruction as extraordinary as the pride and wickedness which procured it. Tyre, the London of Asia, was to become "a place for the spreading of nets."—Ezekiel chapter 26. And the infidel Volney tells us that its commerce has declined to a trifling fishery; but even that implies some few resident inhabitants. Rabbah of Ammon, was to become a "stubble for camels, and a couching place for flocks."—Ezekiel chapter 25. Lord Lindsay reports that he could not sleep amidst the ruins for the bleating of sheep &c. Yet sheep-folds imply that the tents of their Arab owners are near, and that some human beings would occasionally reside near its ruins. But desolation, solitude and utter abandonment to the wild beasts of the desert is the specific and clearly predicted doom of the world's proud capital. The most expressive symbols are chosen from the desert to portray its desolation. "Babylon, the glory of the kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, nor dwelt in from generation to generation. Neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall shepherds make their folds there, but wild beasts of the desert shall be there, and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures, and owls shall dwell there and satyrs shall dance there; and the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant places."—Isaiah chapter 13.

Every traveler attests the fulfillment of this prediction. "It is a tenantless and desolate metropolis," says Mignon, who, though fully armed and attended by six Arabs could not induce them by reward to pass the night among its ruins, from their apprehension of evil spirits, so completely fulfilled is the prophecy that the Arabian shall not pitch his tent there. Rabbah was to be a sheep-fold; Babylon a menagerie of wild beasts—a very specific difference and very improbable. One of the later Persian kings, however, after it was destroyed and deserted, repaired its walls, converted it into a vast hunting ground and stocked it with all manner of wild beasts, and to this day the apes of the Spice islands, and the lions of the African desert meet in its palaces and howl their testimony to the truth of God's word. Sir R. R. Porter saw two majestic lions in the Mujelib, [the ruins of the palace] and Fraser thus describes the chambers of fallen Babylon: "There were dens of wild beasts in various places, and Mr. Rich perceived in some a strong smell like that of the lion. Bones of sheep and other animals were seen in the cavities, with numbers of bats and owls."

The cause of all the barrenness and desolation of the lands where these people dwelt which were once so rich and fertile in their productiveness, was the wickedness of the inhabitants, the chief sin of which was idolatry, which to the writers mind is the parent sin of all others. Let a man, using the agency that God has given him, ignore his Creator and turn that worship and service that should be his to another object, be that what it may, that man, or nation that does this, tramples upon God's laws, gives loose rein to passions, follows every avenue of sin and wickedness, and what wonder that when the climax is reached, that He who created the earth and them that dwell upon it should punish them for their folly; that when the cup of their iniquity was full He should sweep them from off the face of the earth, or cause the land to withhold its increase for the support of sin and wickedness.

The Lord revealed his secret purpose concerning the seed of Abraham and that of Ham unto Abraham, as recorded in the 15th chapter of Genesis, 17th and 19th verses: "And the Lord spake and said unto Abraham, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that shall not be theirs, and shall serve strangers and they shall be afflicted and serve them four hundred years; and also that nation whom they shall serve will I judge; and afterwards shall they come out with great substance. * * * But in the fourth generation shall they come hither again, for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." In this revelation we see the patience and longsuffering of God manifested toward the Amorites who at that time were a very iniquitous people, and who were serving strange Gods; the work of their own hands. Yet he was willing to allow them four hundred years space to repent, or fill their cup of iniquity full. He foresaw that they would do the latter, and chose the seed of Abraham as instruments in his hand to destroy them and all the wicked nations inhabiting that land, as the history plainly narrates, for he commanded the Israelites to destroy them root and branch.

They were commanded not to make a league with any of those inhabitants, to dwell with them, or give them their sons and daughters in marriage, or take any of the sons and daughters of those nations in marriage; nor serve any of their gods; but were to throw down their altars. But they refused to obey the Lord in all that he had commanded them, in that they spared a remnant of those nations. And the Lord said unto them that those notions that they had spared should prove a thorn in their sides, and their gods should be a snare unto them. They did evil in the sight of the Lord from time to time by following after the practices of those wicked nations and forsaking the service of their God and serving the gods of those people, and God suffered them to be taken captive by the surrounding nations, to be in bondage to them for a number of years, and they were not delivered therefrom until they had humbled themselves and cried unto the Lord for deliverance; then he raised up men for that purpose. But in the days of Samuel, their last judge and prophet, they refused to have God to reign over them, and requested Samuel to appoint them a king to reign over them like unto the surrounding nations. Samuel was displeased with the request but carried the matter to the Lord, who told him to hearken unto them in this matter, for, that they had not rejected Samuel but had rejected their God, that he should not reign over them. The Lord told Samuel to tell them first what a king would exact from them. And he said, "This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you. He will take of your sons and appoint them unto himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots. And he will take of your daughters to be his confectionaries, and to be cooks and to be bakers. And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, even the best of them and give them to his servants. And he will take the tenth of your seed, and of your vineyards and give to his officers and to his servants. And he will take your men-servants and your maid-servants and your goodliest young men and your asses and put them to his work. He will take the tenth of your sheep; and ye shall be his servants [or slaves.] And ye shall cry out in that day because of your king which ye shall have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day." But after all this had been told them by the man of God, of the curses, the servitude, the taxation which they were bringing upon themselves, they hardened their hearts and would have a king. Yet if they would chose to serve God, to keep his statutes, Samuel told them that He would still remember, and not forsake them "for His great name's sake."

The history shows that the majority of their kings did evil in the sight of God and forsook him, and worshipped and served the gods of the nations, and led the people of Israel astray from their rightful service of their God. In short, the climax of their days was reached, in "the latter days," as Moses the prophet of God predicted in the thirty-first chapter of Deuteronomy when they rejected the Messiah; when their house was left unto them desolate; when Jerusalem was besieged and the inhabitants slain by the edge of the sword, and the remnant carried captive among all nations. Then their land was to become a barren and a salt land, the rain of which was to become as powder and dust, and all the curses that Moses predicted have surely come upon it and upon them in their scattered condition, as their history plainly shows.

The Lord intended to destroy those wicked nations in the land of Palestine for their great wickedness, but the disobedience of the children of Israel caused the Lord to spare a few of them to be as a thorn in the side of Israel. That land was not cursed at the time when those nations that Israel put to the sword were destroyed, but was reserved for the Lord's covenant people, and was only to be preserved a fruitful and a blessed land on condition of their observing to keep the commandments of God and diligently serving him. Thousands upon thousands of the Israelites were slain on account of their rebellion against God, from time to time, both before, at and after the destruction of Jerusalem. But the Lord had declared unto the prophets that he would not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, but that he would sift the remnant among all the nations "as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." But while they were scattered among the nations their land was to remain under the curse, and it was to "enjoy its Sabbaths while it lay desolate." Moses who predicted the curses that should befall the people and their land, said: "And it shall come to pass when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee; and shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all I command thee this day, thou and thy children with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thine be driven out to the outmost part of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee. And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good and multiply thee above thy fathers. . . . And the Lord thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and upon them that hate thee, and persecuted thee."

It is a well known fact that the Jews have been scattered among all nations, and the reader of Jewish history is well acquainted with the fact that they have suffered all the curses predicted by Moses to fall upon that people for their departure from the service of the Lord their God. The biblical student is well aware that the nine and a half tribes of Israel who revolted from King Rehoboam, Solomon's son, were, for their high-handed wickedness, taken captive by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, and placed in that country. [But as it is recorded in the Apocrypha of the Bible, in the book of Esdras, they concluded to go to a far country, a year and a half's journey, said to be in the "North;" and since that time they have been lost to the balance of the inhabitants of the earth, to whom their locality has been a theme of speculation ever since. These ten (or nine and a half) tribes, may be the ones that Moses had his prophetic eye upon, as those who would be driven to the outmost part of heaven, (or earth), the balance were to be scattered among all nations. But the Lord not only revealed to Moses, but he also revealed to Isaiah, and to Ezekiel the secret that he would gather Israel (the ten tribes) and Judah back to the land that He gave to their fathers. Isaiah says in the eleventh chapter: "And he [the Lord] shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, [the Lord said that he would cast the ten tribes out of his sight] and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

To Ezekiel the Lord said: "Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. Neither shall they defile themselves with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling places wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them; so shall they be my people, and I will be their God."

Most of the prophets of the Bible as well as those of the Book of Mormon have spoken of the return of Israel from their long dispersion, to possess the land of their fathers; but we are not writing a dissertation on that subject, but are merely trying to show that the Lord, true to his practice at the beginning, has cursed the earth for the wickedness of its inhabitants, and that he has said through his servants, that Israel will be gathered back to their land, and serve their God, and the land shall again yield its increase, having the blessing of God bestowed upon it; and through Moses has declared that when this takes place, all of the curses spoken of in the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy shall be placed upon the Gentile nations which have hated and persecuted Israel.

If, then, all these curses are to be placed upon the nations who persecuted Israel, there will not be many exempt, and therefore, their lands will not yield their increase. They will take a great deal more seed in the field than they will bring out; their grain will be blasted and suffer from mildew and frosts; the insect will also assist to destroy it; they will be afflicted with peculiar diseases, &c., &c.; and this state of things will exist at the time of the coming of the Son of God to reign on the earth. The gathering of the Jews back to Jerusalem will be when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled; and when those times are fulfilled the various signs that betoken the second advent of Christ will take place. Read Luke 21st chapter.

The land of Israel on the eastern continent is nominally in possession of the Ottoman Empire, but virtually in possession of the Jews, for they hold a mortgage on it that Turkey will never be able to cancel. The Jews are gathering in considerable numbers, and the early and the latter rain has begun to fall upon the land, which is increasing in fertility. These are signs of the near approach of the ultimate assembling of Israel and Judah upon that land and we may begin to look for the curses spoken of by Moses to make their appearance to a certain degree among the Gentile nations.

But Moses said that when the Jews began to remember the Lord their God, that then He would gather them. Isaiah said that the Lord would set up an ensign to those nations, (Israel and Judah) by which he would assemble and gather them. But he said that the ensign would be set up to the Gentiles first, for them to seek to it, and this ensign was to be a root of Jesse (Christ) and his rest was to be glorious.—Isaiah 11th chapter. Jesus has said in Matthew 11: 28: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Yes, everybody, both Gentile and Jew must come unto the ensign, Christ, to find rest; and after the fulness (of the times in the order of God's providence, for the Gentiles to come to that standard) of the Gentiles has come in, then "All Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Zion a deliverer, [Christ], and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."

Sins are taken away by obedience to the gospel, and all of Adam's posterity—Abraham's included—must be saved, or have their sins taken away by that process. So that from these scriptures and many more that could be produced, the writer does not look for Israel to gather en masse until they have flocked to that standard.

The Savior in Matthew 24: 32, Inspired Translation, says: "And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked."

According to the apostle, the destruction of the wicked takes place when Christ comes: "To you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," etc. We perceive that Paul places the "rest" that is to be enjoyed by the people of God, at the time of Christ's coming, which rest is to be glorious to both Gentiles and Jews.

Then will Christ reign o'er all the earth as the prophets have declared: "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord and his his name one."—Zech 14. "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—The angel in Luke 1: 32, 33.

Christ was a descendant of David, and in this light he was David's son. David's throne was upon earth, and if Christ reigns on it he will have to reign on the earth. And Israel and Judah being gathered back to Jerusalem or the land God gave to their fathers, they being no more two nations but classed under the head of Jacob, or Israel, Christ as a son of David, will reign over them, for "the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously."—Isaiah 24. Yes, before his ancients, and gloriously too, for his rest is to be glorious. Adam, the most ancient of days, or the oldest man in time, will come to prepare the way for his Lord's reign, as shown in prophetic vision unto Daniel, recorded in chapter seven of his book: "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, [all rule of the world by unregenerated man ceases] and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like the fiery flames, and his wheels as burning fire. . . . I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people and nations, and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away; and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." If all people shall serve him, then Adam, the most ancient of all, must also serve him. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob being among the Lord's ancients must also be there, and they will be, for the Savior declared that "many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." They to fulfill the word of the Lord to them, must come to earth again, to enjoy those promises made by God to them, for it is written, "They died, not having received the promises;" and among those promises was that of inheriting the land of Palestine. And if Christ reigns in Jerusalem and they are to enjoy what God promised them there, and they are to be as some of his ancients in the kingdom over which Christ reigns, and he reigns before his ancients, they must be there.

It was revealed unto John while upon Patmos, that those who had lived on earth, even out of every kindred, people, tongue and nation, who had been redeemed to God by the blood of the Lamb; who were then in heaven, were rejoicing in contemplation of again coming to dwell upon the earth: "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue and people and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5: 9. It appears also in the twentieth chapter of the same book that when Jesus comes and brings all His saints with him to reign on the earth, that the time of the reign will be a thousand years; and that all the righteous dead will come forth from their graves; and this coming forth is termed the first resurrection: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

At this time the earthly thrones will be cast down as revealed to Daniel; (see seventh chapter); and the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ."—Rev. 11: 15. There will be but one king that reigns supreme over all the earth as revealed to Zechariah, and yet John says in Revelation 20: 4: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them," etc. These statements may seem to conflict, but they do not. Jesus said unto his disciples, (Matt. 19: 28), "Verily, I say unto you, that ye who have followed me, shall in the resurrection, when the Son of Man shall come sitting on the throne of his glory, ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." So that the thrones of wickedness may be cast down, and there may be—according to the Savior—thrones for his servants the twelve as well as others, yet His authority will be supreme over all the earth. It is to be a time of righteousness all through his reign, for only the blessed and holy are to come forth. The Savior declared in his sermon on the mount, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." To the Psalmist (as recorded in the 37th psalm) the Lord revealed that the meek whom he also calls the righteous, shall inherit the earth, and that it should be when the wicked are entirely cut off from the earth. "Yea," he says, "thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." No less than five times in the Psalm does he say that when the righteous inherit the land the wicked will be cut off; and in the thirty-fourth verse, he says, "Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." This cutting off from the earth, or destruction of the wicked takes place as Jesus says, at the "harvest, or the end of the world," or "when the Son of Man cometh."

We learn that the reign of Christ will be one of righteousness, for it was revealed to Isaiah that "He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth." Read the balance of the chapter (Isaiah 11) and you will find, reader, a scenery painted by the prophet relating to the reign of Christ that is truly grand; descriptive of the peaceful, righteous state of things at that time; the ravenous beast and the poisonous reptiles, all harmless, "nothing shall hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea." It was revealed unto Peter as follows: "And he [God] shall send Jesus Christ whom ye have crucified, which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution [restoration] of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

It appears by this that this time of the restoration of all things will be when Christ comes to reign on the earth; and all the prophets since the world began have had their eyes upon this time and wrote and spoke concerning it. Enoch was permitted to see the time when the earth should rest from wickedness, and righteousness should be extant upon it, for the sins of its inhabitants will be removed. If there were no revealments from the Lord through his word by his servants the prophets, concerning these things, it is reasonable to suppose that if for wickedness all curses or desolations came upon the earth, that for the righteousness of its inhabitants they would be removed and the earth restored to its former blessedness. Isaiah in his thirty-fifth chapter, while contemplating the time when this state of things shall be, says, "The wilderness and the solitary places shall be glad for them [whose names are found in the book of the Lord; see the last two verses of the foregoing chapter which should be joined to this] and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them who are of a fearful heart: Be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert; and the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land, springs of water," etc.

No more barren deserts, stagnant swamps, nor parched and desolate ground; for waters will break out in the wilderness, and streams in the desert, and on all the thirsty lands springs of water. The glory of Lebanon, even the luxurious growth of vegetation, in the tall cedars, the fir, the pine and the box, and also delicious fruits shall abound. "Men will sit under their own vine and fig tree, none daring to molest or make afraid."

The excellences of Carmel which consisted in the flocks and herds, in its wheat and grapes, its raisins, figs, etc; (See 1 Samuel 25); the excellency also of Sharon which consisted of flocks, and together with Carmel, was blessed with a rich and fertile soil, which produced the good things of the earth abundantly, will be restored at that time. But the earth will not only be restored to its Paraisaical state without a curse upon it, producing in its strength all the varied products of fruits and vegetables to gratify the taste, and flowers to please the eye, without the presence of those noxious weeds that have vexed and perplexed the tiller of the soil for six thousand years; but the glory of the Lord, the excellency of our God shall be seen. Yes, says the Lord in Numbers 14: 21: "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Isaiah in the fortieth chapter and tenth verse says: "Behold the Lord will come with strong hand; and his arm shall rule for him; behold his reward is with him and his work before him." And at that time he says in the fourth and fifth verses, "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain; and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Habakkuk 2: 14, says: "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord." Isaiah contemplating the same glorious theme, uses in the eleventh chapter almost the exact words of Habakkuk: "For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

HOW TO BE STRONG.

BEN HOGAN the reformed pugilist, closed his evangelist works in Indianapolis, says The Journal, by delivering his lecture on "Physical Culture." Mr. Hogan is a model of physical development, and while much of his talk was based on personal experience, it showed that he had studied his subject carefully from a scientific standpoint. He began with the sweeping statement that there were more sick than well people in the world, all because they did not take proper care of their bodies. It was the practice of people who had money to go to another climate as soon as they discovered they were diseased. "During my recent visit to California," said he, "I found thousands of people from the east there seeking health. They were living at first-class hotels, taking no exercise, and eating the richest of food. Many of them asked me what they should do to retain their health, and my answer always was, 'rough it.' In every city there are thousands of rich men and women who are ready to commit suicide because of ill-health. 'What is wealth without health?' they say. Nothing, I should say; but I do say that while every man can not amass wealth everyone can secure good health. I know a man who owns a fine horse. He employs two men to take care of that horse and keep him in condition. He is exercised, sponged, and blanketed daily. Does the owner himself have a man to take care of him? No. He possibly bathes once a week. He rises at eight o'clock in the morning, throws his breakfast down without masticating it, and madly rushes off to his business. At noon he rushes into a restaurant and eats his dinner in five minutes. On he goes, hiring men to look after the health of his horse, but never stops to think of his own body and its needs.

"A man can not digest his food unless he eats carefully. A meal should never be eaten in less than an hour. Gladstone says he bites each piece of meat he puts in his mouth twenty times before he swallows it, and that isn't too often. The men of to-day who throw their food into their stomachs are physical wrecks in fifteen years. The American doctor studies medicine when he should study nature; instead of trying to prevent disease they try to cure. There are many people who do not take a bath in two years, and they pre-naturally die from poisoning. The poison that accumulates under the first layer of skin breeds disease, and sooner or later must come death.

"There are thousands of people dying of consumption who haven't sense enough to know that they can throw it off. No man who is lazy can become healthy, for the best way to bring health is by physical development. I have seen thousands of young men apparently on the verge of the grave grow strong by following this daily routine: When you get up in the morning rub yourself with a rough towel until the blood is in circulation, and then take a cold bath. Never take a cold bath without getting the blood in circulation, for it is dangerous. After the bath rub the flesh for three-quarters of an hour. Then take a cup of tea and eat some toast, and start for an half-hour's walk. Don't plod slowly along the streets, but walk as rapidly as your legs will carry you. When you return you are ready for breakfast. Eat rice, mutton-chops, and toast, and drink tea. If you are a business man you are ready for business, but if you are training for an athlete you will again start upon the walk, and keep it up all day. A man under training is required to walk at least forty miles every day. When he returns from his walk he is put under blankets until he is cooled, and then again put in the bath-tub. He is taken out and rubbed or manipulated. Then he is ready for dinner. The athlete or pugilist would be required to eat raw ham or raw steak without salt or pepper. Pugilists are not allowed to use pepper, because it heats the blood. For men who are not undergoing training for pugilists, I would advise a dinner on rare beef, rice, and other vegetables cooked dry.

"Every man should attempt to sleep a few minutes after dinner. Sleep is the best digester. A pugilist who can sleep fifteen minutes after his dinner feels sure of winning the fight, because he knows his nerves are steady. After he awakes comes the exercise in the gymnasium with the dumb-bells and clubs. No man should be trained with dumb-bells that weigh more than ten pounds. It is not the weight that develops the man, but the movements of the muscle. There are over one hundred movements to be practiced with the bells, and when a man has attained them all he is in a fair way to become physically powerful.

"Every boy and every man, no matter what his business, should spend two hours of each day in a gymnasium. It is all a mistaken idea that a course on physical training tends towards pugilism and rowdiness. The result is quite the reverse, for the training engenders a spirit of generous manliness and nobility. Of the hundreds of men I have taken through a course of physical training I never knew one to become a pugilist. Pugilists are born not made, and if your boy wants to be a pugilist he will be one without going to a gymnasium.

"Every minister of the gospel should preach a sermon on physical training once a month. Out of four hundred ministers I saw in one audience in New York, not two had physical powers sufficient to balance their mental powers."

Referring again to food, Mr. Hogan said that a man should avoid hot biscuits as he would avoid poison. Well-cooked beef, he said, was also killing hundreds of people, and they did not know what caused dyspepsia. Referring to ventilation, he said Indianapolis was the worst city he was ever in for impure air in buildings. "I went into a church last Sunday," said he, "and the air was so foul that I had to excuse myself, because the atmosphere was enough to stagger a man. Windows should always be kept open above and below, and then a current of air is avoided. Many people have a foolish idea that they will catch cold if they sit in cool air, but cold air or fresh air never gave anybody cold."

The time had come, Mr. Hogan said, when Americans must educate their children physically. Under the present educational system the schools and colleges are turning out tramps and vagabonds.

What would he do with the women? was often asked him. "I would put them in the gymnasium, too," said he. "I would give them the broom, the flat-iron, and the washtub. The women need physical exercise fully as much as the men, and they will have to rid themselves of the idea that they can not sweep, iron, and wash, and still be ladies unless they want want their offspring to be physical wrecks."

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN MAINE.

Conference convened with Saints in West Surrey, Maine, November 3d. W. G. Pert president, U. W. Greene clerk pro tem. Officials reporting: Elders W. G. Pert, U. W. Greene, (baptized 1), priests D. S. Seavey, by letter, and Levi Gray. Teachers George Carter, V. G. Cunningham and Jasper Carter. Branch reports: Green's Landing 1 baptized, Bray's Mountains 1 received by letter. Bishop's Agent's report: On hand last report, $92.24; received since, $31.75, paid out $58.00; balance on hand $65.99. Report of district fund: On hand last report $1.65, paid out 95 cents, balance 70 cents. The auditing committee reported: "Inasmuch as Bishop G. A. Blakeslee is informed by somebody that district agent W. G. Pert had paid A. H. Parsons $100 already, which is much in excess of his stipend, we your auditors, after an examination of his accounts, report that his receipts show that Bro. Parsons has received but $46.34 to date. We repose implicit confidence in our agent who is endeavoring to strictly follow instructions in disbursing church funds, and do not approve of any man reporting hearsay stories to the detriment of officials who are trying to discharge their duties. Committee on delinquent officials continued. Sunday at 8 a. m. met for prayer. At 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. preaching by U. W. Greene. Prayer-meeting at 6 p. m. Adjourned to meet at Green's Landing on call of district president.

MICHIGAN SOUTHERN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.

Conference convened at the Saints' church, in Clear Lake, Indiana, October 13th, C. Scott presiding, D. B. Teeters secretary. The report of June conference called for, read and approved, after which the visiting brethren were invited to take part. Reports of branches: Maumee, organized January 22d with 15 members, present number 21; Coldwater 85, 19 baptized; Marcellus 15; Clear Lake 69, 1 died; Galien 94, 1 baptized, 2 received. No reports from Hartford, Dimondale, Knox or Hopkins. Bishop's agent's report read and a committee of three appointed to audit the same. Reports. Elders: B. V. Springer baptized 9, H. Rathbun baptized 4, C. Scott baptized 14, B. Corless baptized 5, W. Reynolds. Priests: Geo. Corless and Emrich, also teachers W. Lockerby and D. B. Teeters reported. The next conference was voted to be held at Galien on call of president. Brn. C. Scott, E. M. McElhenie, G. A. Blakeslee, W. Reynolds and J. B. Prettyman were chosen as delegates to General Conference. The authorities of the church were sustained. Report of committee on Bishop's agent's report was read and adopted and committee discharged. Balance due agent 67 cents. On motion H. Rathbun was chosen president of district, W. Lockerby Bishop's agent and D. B. Teeters secretary. Bro. B. V. Springer was requested to labor while detained in the district. A vote of thanks was tendered to the Clear Lake Saints for their hospitality. Preaching by Brn. H. Rathbun, C. Scott and B. V. Springer. Adjourned.

KENT AND ELGIN DISTRICT.

The fall conference of the above named district convened in the Zone branch October 13th and 14th, John H. Lake president, R. Coburn clerk. The liberties of conference were extended to visiting brethren. Branch reports: Lindsley 40, 3 baptized; Zone 45, 5 baptized, 1 received, 1 died, 1 marriage; Tilbury 27, 1 received; Petrolea 32, 1 baptized, 2 removed; Chatham 62, 2 baptized, 1 received, 1 removed; Blenheim 40, 3 baptized. R. Coburn, Bishop's agent reported: Balance on hand last report $211.44, received since $55.91, expended $197.97, balance on hand October 12th, 1888. $69.38. Examined, found correct and adopted. Elders reports: A. McKenzie, J. H. Lake, Arthur Leverton (baptized 5), J. A. McIntosh and R. Coburn. Priests: Peter McBrayne (baptized 6), Samuel H. Bacon (baptized 3). Teachers: S. W. Tomlinson and Wm. Lively. A petition was presented from the Chatham branch recommending Bro. Peter McBrayne to be ordained to the office of an elder, Bro. Wm. Lively to the office of a priest, Bro. Thomas Vince to the office of a teacher and Bro. Calvin F. Gillet to the office of a deacon. On motion the chair was authorized to appoint a committee to examine the petition and confer with the brethren named and report to this conference. The chair appointed as the above committee Brn. McIntosh, Leverton, Evans and Coburn. By separate motions the following brethren were sustained as officers of the district: Arthur Leverton, president, M. L. Blakely, vice president, R. Coburn, secretary and Bishop's agent. Bro. J. H. Lake was chosen to represent the district at the general conference. Resolved that the ordination of Bro. George Green to the office of an elder be referred to the committee appointed on ordinations. The following was unanimously adopted: Whereas, Bro. J. H. Lake has been long and faithfully in charge of the Canada Mission, and is well and thoroughly acquainted with the work in Canada, and the element of which his laborers are composed, And, Whereas, another person coming to Canada now who is not acquainted with the mission or the nature, character or ability of the ministry and general work in Canada, Therefore, be it Resolved, That we of the Kent and Elgin district of the Canada mission, hereby pray and hereby present our requests to our beloved president Joseph Smith with his counsellors (in mission appointments) that they return him to the Canada mission. Resolved, that this district be represented by delegates from branches in district conference. Resolved, that delegates from branches to the district conference be entitled to one vote for the first six members, and an additional vote for each ten members thereafter, and that the number of delegates be limited to five. Resolved, that this ruling shall not take effect till after the next conference. Committee on ordinations reported: "We your committee to whom the ordination of certain brethren was referred recommend that the ordinations of the four brethren recommended by the Chatham branch be deferred until the wisdom of the officers of the district and the necessity for their ordinations require it. We further recommend that Bro. George Green be ordained to the office of an elder at this conference. Resolved that the above report be received and the committee discharged. Bro. George Green was then ordained an Elder by R. C. Evans, J. A. McIntosh and R. Coburn. Preaching during conference by J. H. Lake, J. A. McIntosh and R. C. Evans. Adjourned to meet in Blenheim, the second Saturday in June.

FAR WEST.

The above district conference convened on Saturday, November 17th, J. T. Kinneman, president; Charles P. Paul and J. S. Constance, secretaries. On motion the chair appointed Brethren Kinney, Manzey and Lewis, a committee on credentials. On motion the chair appointed Brn. Bozarth, Summerfield and Flanders a committee on branch reports. Elders J. T. Kinneman, Wm. Summerfield, J. D. Flanders, Wm. T. Bozarth, A. J. Seely, Wm. Lewis, W. Kinney, Stevens, D. J. Powell and James Drown reported. Priests A. W. Head, M. M. Bellenger, J. C. Elvert, Frank Manzey and Chas. P. Paul reported. Reports were read from Delano, DeKalb, Stewartville, Pleasant Grove and Edgerton Junction branches. A question was asked in regard to Bro. R. Marchant's license and on motion Bro. Wm. Lewis and J. M. Terry were to confer with Bro. Marchant in regard to his license and to report to next conference. The name of Bro. J. McVay (who lives near Spickardsville, Grundy Co., Mo.) came before the conference for ordination to the office of priest, and on motion the motion was referred to the president of district and missionary in charge. Committees on credentials and branch reports, reported. Bro. Wm. Lewis, Bishop's agent, reported as follows: Received $414 50, Church in debt to agent Aug. 24th, 1888, $177 41, expended $435 41 including the $177 41, balance due agent $20 91; the report was received and adopted. Brn. J. S. Constance, W. T. Bozarth and Wm. Lewis were appointed to draft a resolution of memorial to the memory of our departed brethren Henry Hinderks and John H. Meriam.

Resolved that when this conference adjourns it does so to meet with the St. Joseph branch the last Saturday and Sunday in February next. Committee on memorial reported: "Whereas, it has pleased almighty God in the dispensation of his wise providence, to remove from our midst by the hand of death two of our esteemed brethren and fellow laborers in his cause, Henry Hinderks and John H. Meriam; Therefore, be it resolved that while we deeply feel our loss and miss their kindly counsel and companionship, we humbly bow to the divine will believing that he doeth all things well,

And, further, that we hereby tender our kindest sympathies to the bereaved families of our departed brethren and pray God to sustain them under their severe trial,

And, further, that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Herald and one to each family."

J. S. Constance, }
W. T. Bozarth, } Committee.
William Lewis }

The resolution was adopted and committee discharged. Bro. Wm. Summerfield preached on Saturday evening, at 7 o'clock assisted by Bro. D. J. Powell. Bro. Wm. Lewis Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, assisted by J. D. Flanders. Bro. J. T. Kinneman Sunday evening assisted by Wm. Lewis. Social meeting at 2 p. m. Sunday. A vote of thanks was tendered to the saints of the Delano branch for their kindness in entertaining the saints while at conference. Adjourned as per resolution.

Miscellaneous.

WESTERN TEXAS DISTRICT.

Dear Saints of the Western Texas District:—You have doubtless learned by the Herald that there is a strong probability of some of the laborers sent out by the last General Conference having to be recalled in consequence of the Bishop not being able to support them or their families. In view of this fact I make a strong appeal to each and every one of you to come forward with your tithing and let us relieve the bishop from supporting any who may labor in our district or having appointments thereto. Comparative to the work needed the force is small enough; therefore, let us be up and doing, and not be the cause of any having to be withdrawn. If you have but one dollar to send, send it along. The best you can do is all the Lord requires.

Yours for truth,

O. D. JOHNSON,
Bishop's Agent.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

Little Sioux quarterly conference will convene at Woodbine, at two o'clock p. m. Friday December 7th, 1888. It is hoped that all officials who possibly can will be present at the opening, so that reports can be made promptly and in order. Also that all reports in writing will be forwarded in ample time. Our conferences have lately been crowded for time; at this one we will have abundant time if we are all only punctual at the convening and diligent during the session. Branch reports should reach the district secretary not later than December 4th.

On behalf of the Saints at Woodbine a cordial invitation is extended to every body to come. The new church will be completed by that time, and it is expected will be dedicated at two o'clock p. m. on Sunday the 9th.

WM. C. CADWELL, Dist. Sec'y.

THIRD QUORUM.

Before issuing our Circular Letter containing names and addresses of the members of this Quorum, we give another chance for the delinquent ones to send in their addresses. We have the addresses of but little over half the quorum—we would like the address of each one. Please, brethren, give this your earliest attention, those of you who have not sent your addresses already. We will wait but a short time longer before issuing the letter, which will be sent to each member of the quorum whose address is known to us. President, J. T. Kinneman, Stewartville, Missouri, secretary, J. M. Terry, 623, Messanic Street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

DIED.

MERIAM.—At his residence in St. Joseph, Missouri, (having recently moved there from Stewartville), Elder J. H. Meriam, aged 50 years 2 months and 19 days. After a painless illness of three weeks, our brother passed peacefully away. He was twice on a mission to Canada, where he was instrumental in bringing quite a number into the church. What he did, he did with all his strength. He took upon him temporal cares and burdens too weighty to be borne by the physical man. Typhoid fever fastened upon him, and at the decisive point—twenty-one days,—he yielded, and sleeps in Christ. At the time of his death he was pastor of the Stewartville Branch. One of his favorite scriptures, 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8, was used by Eld. J. M. Terry as a text. The services were held in Stewartville, attended by a large number of the best citizens and Saints, attesting their love for him and sympathy for the bereaved. We laid him away in the DeKalb Branch cemetery, to sleep till Christ, the resurrection and the life, shall appear in his glory. He leaves a wife in poor health, a son, other relatives, and many friends to mourn his departure.

EVANS.—At Glencoe, Ontario, November 6th, 1888, William Evans, aged 66 years, formerly of this city, London. Funeral from the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. William Pugsley, 76 York street, London, on Thursday afternoon at 2:30; services at two o'clock. Friends and acquaintances please accept this intimation. Bro. William Evans was for many years a resident of that city. Born in England, he came to Canada while yet a boy, and served an apprenticeship at the Lachute Mills, Argenteuil, Quebec. Thence he went to St. Catharines, and in 1866 came to London, taking charge of the flouring mill at St. Johns. Subsequently Mr. Evans moved into the city, conducting business on Lichfield street. He was also engaged in several of the flouring mills in the city and neighborhood. Latterly, his health failing him, he went to live with his son, Mr. Thomas Evans, of Glencoe, at whose residence he died, as above stated, having reached the age of 66 years. Deceased was a worthy member of the Latter Day Saints' Church, of this city, with which he had been connected for thirteen years, and by his upright conduct and his kindly disposition had won the esteem of a large circle of acquaintances. He leaves a widow and a grown-up family of one daughter and five sons, among the latter being Elder R. C. Evans, president of the London District of the Latter Day Saints' denomination. Deceased's only daughter is the wife of Mr. William Pugsley, of York street, from whose house the funeral departed for Mount Pleasant Cemetery, where the interment took place.

FULKS.—At (or near) Noel, McDonald county, Missouri, October 16th, 1888, William Russel, son of Elder Charles and Mary C. Fulks, aged 7 months and 4 days. Blessed by Ezra W. Depue and C. M. Fulks. Funeral services by the Baptist minister.

PRACTICAL ECONOMY.

The great trouble with Iowa and western farmers generally is a lack of genuine Vermont earnest industry and practical economy. The gaudy extravagance and vain show of fictitious wealth, and disregard of the sacredness of obligations, in all the cities and towns, has long been corrupting the rural districts. Failure in business has almost ceased to be a disgrace—while men of business will stretch their credit to live in fine houses, ride in fine carriages with hired drivers, have their costly parties, hire every thing done about their homes and their families live in idleness and vain show. When pay day comes, they make an assignment, hide what they can, make as poor a show as possible, and get off with the least per cent possible as a compromise, and then go ahead in business—are credited and taken into the first circles of society again, especially if none of the family have ever worked for a living. All of this feeling and more or less of these practices are extending to the farmers. It is no disgrace to be bankrupt! It is not half as injurious to character to repudiate an honest debt as it is to labor for honest bread. In former times it was more honest to go to church on foot than to have a mortgage on the farm for fine stepping horses.

In former times it was more comfortable to have patches on the knees and elbows than to have a chattel mortgage on the cow that supports the family. In earlier times a mortgage was a disgrace, as it was understood thereby that one's creditors had no faith in the debtor's honesty, and therefore trusted the goods in preference to the man's integrity. It is now fashionable to fail. But few make gaudy show of fine horses and splendid equipages except those who have mortgages on their property.

When will the country come back to the plain economy of life, and the honest way of living, and relegate mortgages back as a disgraceful badge."—Selected.

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocetian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 243 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Special attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

IS IT A CRIME?

It was at one time an argument frequently used by the elders of the church in making their appeal for the attention of the people, that because our forefathers believed so and so, or worshipped thus and thus, it was really no more of an obligation upon us to follow in their footsteps in worship and belief, than it was incumbent upon us to plow our land with a forked stick from the forest, or carry grain to mill in one end of a sack with a stone in the other end, because our predecessors may have done so. Has time in its passing broken the force of that argument, or made the wisdom of the saying less?

We are led to ask this question because there is a class of believers in the latter-day-work who seem to be grieved at the course pursued by the sons of Joseph Smith, when upon attaining their majority and determining their own position in the religious controversies of the world, they have chosen to say that some things done by their father were, in their opinion unwise, and that some other things which it is alleged he both said and did were not only unwise but were absolutely wrong, and contrary to the Word of God, by which he and all others, his contemporaries in faith and believers after him, should have been guided and governed.

That it may be seen what it is we refer to as a principle, we state that Elder Alexander H. Smith in conversation with one of the class above referred to upon the military trappings and titles appertaining to the position of General in the Nauvoo Legion held by the martyrs, remarked: "That is one of the things in which I think our fathers made a mistake." To this his hearer replied, rather severely: "I never suffer myself to comment upon what was done by those men of God."

The principle on the one hand was, that whatever was done by those men must be accepted without question—it was right because they did it; on the other hand the principle of examination of the thing done, and determining acceptance or rejection upon the merit and claims for truth and correctness attaching to the thing itself, rather than to the individual doing it, was clearly asserted; and the right to so examine and so determine was assumed as a right conferred upon every man, and which must attach to every one upon whom the responsibility of agency and answering for himself is cast.

Joseph Smith, and his family with him, assumed the privilege of judging for themselves concerning their own action in reference to the things of eternal importance. This privilege was presented to those who chose to listen to the teachers of the new faith as attaching to all men. It was bequeathed to the sons of Joseph Smith as not only a principle but as a birthright. They deem it as essential that they determine for themselves in all matters attaching, or related to the work of their father and his compeers, as it was, or is, that men should hear, judge and determine for themselves their course in the gospel, for the reason that such work was done at the outset of a new faith, or the revival of an old one, having its warrant in the Word of God, written, as well as spoken in their day. This Word of God was renewed in its authority, the Bible and New Covenant, the Book of Mormon, being endorsed authoritatively as the Scriptures, the written law; while the revelations to the church agreeing with the Written Word were the present and accompanying authority for preaching the Restored Gospel.

One of the methods adopted by the Son of God, the great Teacher and grand Exemplar to all his followers, prophets and prophets' sons included, to thwart the evil designs of the adversary of souls and preserve his own integrity before the Father, was to answer when tempted, "It is written;" and this answer he gave in regard to the enticement to worship another than God, an appeal to personal vanity in the possession of unquestioned power, and the necessities or pleasures of the flesh;—to all of these the unwavering answer of the Son of Man was, "It is written," followed by the rule of Scripture applicable in the case.

Touching upon the point in discussion in this writing we find that "It is written" thus:

"If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them: thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and all your soul. Ye shall walk after the Lord your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye shall serve him and cleave unto him. And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death; because he hath spoken to turn you away from the Lord your God, * * * to thrust thee out of the way which the Lord thy God commanded thee to walk in. So shalt thou put the evil away from the midst of thee. If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers; namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shalt thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him."

This is from the thirteenth of Deuteronomy, and was written to Israel. We have not quoted all the terrible things which were to be visited upon those who thus enticed the people of Israel away from the commands of God. We quote so much as we have, to emphasize the peculiar conditions of the direction to keep the commandments, the law given to Israel. They were statutes not to be annulled, though even a prophet whose prophecies had been fulfilled, or a dreamer whose dreams and sayings had come true and made him famous, were to offer them a "thus saith the Lord" which would lead them from the commands. In no case would they be justified in hearkening to such a dreamer, such a prophet in his enticings—they should answer, "It is written."

A striking illustration of how this instruction in Deuteronomy should be understood "is written" in 1 Kings 13.

This is the relation of an incident in which a "man of God" had been sent by the Word of God to him to perform a certain work. When that work was performed he was entreated by a king to turn aside and eat with him, and accept reward, which invitation the "man of God" refused, because he had been commanded to "Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way thou camest." After he had successfully resisted the enticements of a king, an old prophet who dwelt in Bethel was told of the incident, and went after the "man of God" and invited him to return to his house and take refreshments with him. This the "man of God" refused to do alleging as he did to the king that he was forbidden by the "Word of the Lord" to turn back, or to eat bread, or drink water. But the old prophet told the "man of God" that he was a prophet also, and that "an angel spake unto him by the word of the Lord, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread and drink water." Then the "man of God" who could pray to God and be heard in behalf of the king to the restoration of the withered hand, and could resist successfully the pleadings of a king to partake of his bounty, yielded to the statement of an old, perhaps a well tried prophet in Bethel, that an angel had spoken to him directing him to so ask him to return, and turned back, ate bread and drank water contrary to the command of God, the Word of the Lord to him. For thus forgetting the Word of the Lord to him, though he had the saying of another prophet to take shelter under for his forgetfulness and disobedience, this "man of God" was fearfully rebuked by the very man who had betrayed him, and subsequently punished, though his sayings in regard to the cities of Samaria were fulfilled, thus bearing evidence to his character as a prophet.

The voice of the Lord to Israel through Jeremiah was: "Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well with you. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward."—Jer. 7: 23, 24.

In the days when the Lord would remember Israel and Judah, and make a new covenant with them; he would so establish that covenant that its provisions would be plain and of such a character that all could be founded therein;—it should be written in their hearts. When that covenant shall be fully come, then the office of the preacher shall be needless, as all shall know the Lord. They will have kept the law of the Lord, his word, until they shall have come nigh unto him to know him. They shall have been led to him by the unchangeable law of the Lord, in keeping of the saying of Christ: "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

This recognition of the necessity for, and perpetuity of written law, is of great force as coming from the lips of the Savior, in view of what was given to the church through Joseph Smith as the rules of procedure, and enunciative of the permanency of the law upon which the church should be built. The basis upon which the church was to be built, as stated by Jesus, was a rock; "Upon this rock I will build my church."

The most positive rock-like character is given to the revelations and commandments as found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants by the following statement:

"Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth; wherefore, fear and tremble, O, ye people, for what I the Lord have decreed in them, shall be fulfilled. . . . Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall be fulfilled."—Doc. and Cov. sec. 1, pars. 2, 7.

As the elders at the starting of their great work needed assurance, the Lord gave it to them, as above quoted, bidding them to go forward boldly, relying on the stability and permanency of his word.

Subsequently to this the Lord told the elders of the church to go to the Ohio, and there he would give them his law. The object of the giving of this law, as stated by the Lord himself, is as follows:

"And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot, and blameless; wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that you should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law."—Doc. and Cov. sec. 12, par. 7.

This command to go to the Ohio was given in January, 1831; and in the following February the law referred to was given:

"And now I speak unto the church: Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come. And again I say, thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not lie. Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are written in my Scriptures. If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments."—Doc. and Cov. sec. 13, pars. 6, 7.

"Behold the laws which ye have received from my hand, are the laws of the church; and in this light ye shall hold them forth."—Doc. and Cov. sec. 18, par. 5.

In August 1831 a commandment was given unto them whose feet were permitted to stand upon the land of Zion, almost identical with that given in the Ohio:

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind and strength, and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. . . . Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it."—Doc. and Cov. sec. 19, par. 2.

After awhile circumstances raised the question of the marriage relation. It was contemplated to send elders with a message to the Shakers, who held peculiar views on the subject of marriage. In this emergency the question was laid before the Lord from whom they had received the law to govern the church. The inquiry was met by a reply. The Lord said to Sidney Rigdon, Lemon Copley and Parley P. Pratt: "I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall go and preach my gospel, which ye have received, even as ye have received it, unto the Shakers. . . . I have sent unto you mine everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning, and that which I have promised I have fulfilled, and the nations of the earth shall bow to it. . . . And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man, wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doc. and Cov. sec. 65, pars. 1, 3.

"In this, the Lord gives the rule, the law of marriage, and the object and time of its institution; the time, was "before the world was made;" the object, that "the earth might be filled with the measure of man;" and thus "answer the end of its creation."

Founded on these rules of law to govern the church given thus, the elders formulated their belief in these words: "We declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman, but one husband, except in case of death when either is at liberty to marry again." Doc. and Cov. sec. 109, par. 4.

By making application of Paul's statement to the Galatians: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed;" and connecting the instruction contained in it to the principle found in Deuteronomy thirteenth, and 1 Kings thirteenth, we have so strong an array of the "written word," upon the virtue and lasting character of the rule of God's law to his people, that the conclusion is forced upon us that in all cases in which a clear and positive statement in relation to any one thing, or on any subject, principle, or question is found in the written word, Bible, Book of Mormon, or the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, as accepted by the church, neither the members of the church nor believers in the word, are at liberty to accept any teaching, dogma, precept, or commandment, whether from layman, elder, or apostle in the church, which in its nature contradicts, denies, supervenes, or destroys such plain statement and direction. Nay, further than this, the church is made still more secure from imposition in regard to that which may lead them away from the law of the Lord, in that not even a well accredited "prophet," nor an "angel from heaven" is to be heard and heeded, when offering precepts, or commands, reversing or denying the written word, though such angel or prophet should speak in the name of the Lord.

The sons of Joseph Smith found these principles existing in the works of their father. All that he left on record accessible to them was of this nature. As they were to act as men upon their own volition, to be judged finally for the deeds done in the body, giving an account for themselves, answering for their own sins and not for those of their father, they preferred, indeed they felt in duty bound to accept the longer line of precept and command running through the whole word of the Lord, as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, even the new covenant, and the Doctrine and Covenants, and build upon that line, no matter what might be said or done by anybody, their father not excepted, which was contrary thereto.

In doing this, have they been guilty of moral crime against God and his word? or are they in harmony with the apostle when he wrote: "Let God be true though every man be found a liar;" and within the rule of the Savior where he says: "If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed."—John 8. "Judge ye."

We have used the edition of the Doctrine and Covenants published in 1846.

BRO. HIRAM L. HOLT is having a somewhat lively time in his field in Oregon. The editor of the Long Creek, Grant county, Oregon, Eagle, attacked Bro. Holt savagely in the issue of his paper for Friday, October 9th, in a two column leader, charging all of the old evil things so often urged against the work in a review of Bro. Holt's sermons in the M. E. Church at Long Creek, prior to the date of issue. To this attack Bro. Holt sought the privilege to reply in the same paper, as we understand, but was denied. He, therefore sought and gained admission into the columns of the Grant County News, published at Canyon City, Grant county, in a four column "advertisement," in defence of his efforts at Long Creek and of the work in general. Bro. Holt's reply is somewhat bitter, but not more so than was the attack. The article makes Bro. Holt to say that there was no "Josephite Reorganized Church" in 1857, the date of the Mountain Meadow Massacre; or for three years after it. This is only technically correct. The Reorganization began in 1851, the first conference not being held, however, until June 12th, 1852, which would be practically the date of organization; but Joseph Smith was not connected with it until 1860, nor was the organization called "Josephite" until 1863, when brethren Alexander McCord and Edmund C. Briggs made the first missionary effort in Salt Lake City, where they were called "Josephite Missionaries," or "Josephite elders;" in contradistinction to the ruling church in Utah. Since that time the Reorganization has been called in the west, Josephites, while the polygamic church has been called Brighamite. Neither appellation is correct, and is only permissible in drawing the line in argument between the two peoples; the latter being adherents to plural marriage, with their central business center in Salt Lake City, Utah; the former being monogamic, with their business center at Lamoni, Iowa.

Brethren, let us all be careful that in answering those who revile us, we do not give railing for railing, reviling for reviling—"A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger."

It is hard to take railing, villification and abuse from our fellows when we know how utterly groundless their prejudice and hate are; but ignorance, real and therefore bearable, or wilful and therefore inexcusable, lies at the root of the fierce and unreasoning attacks upon the truth and its ambassadors; let us have patience, therefore, until the Lord's full day of knowledge shall dispel the darkness of the night of ignorance and evil.

The western country is full of those who have gone through Utah, either going there in faith and going from there in disgust, or as citizens of the United States enroute for the Eldorado in search of adventure or fortune. In either case, each "knows all about it;" and can tell all that he knows, and a vast deal that no one does or can know, and the elders, brethren Holt, Haws, Daley, Smith and the rest, have to meet and bear it all, true and false alike; surely they must be men of God, servants of the Lord and truth, or they could never successfully wage warfare against such a host of opposition. Pray for and sustain them, dear Saints, children of hope.

MR. W. C. White of Cordell, Alabama, writes that he has been receiving the HERALD for some time past and appreciates the teachings of the Church. He states that he would like to have some of the elders visit him and preach in that vicinity, in which event he thinks he could secure the Baptist Church, or if not would open his own house. His letter concludes as follows:

"If any of your people want to come to a milder climate I think this would suit them as we had no frost here on the mountains to amount to any thing. Plenty of land at two dollars per acre unimproved; two dollars and fifty cents per acre on three years time, one quarter down. I live three and one half miles east of Cordell P. O., DeKalb County, Alabama."

GARFIELD'S TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH SMITH.

WE reproduce the following testimony of General Garfield in answer to inquiry regarding the matter.

In the San Francisco Weekly Chronicle, November 23d, 1882, in an article entitled "Stalwarts Rebuked," signed "Gath," he in treating of the late President Garfield relates that the latter said to him, "There is a corner in my character which makes everything of a supernatural or mystical sort very fascinating to me." Gath further says; "He then told me a number of tales, all original and peculiar. For instance, he related that in his district, at a place called Kirtland, Joseph Smith, the Mormon, had gathered his first congregation, and there was a person brought to Smith, apparently possessed of a devil, with something that made the man froth, or bark. Smith, whom General Garfield described to be a fine man physically, with abundant magnetism, put the subject under his control, and finally raising his hands, shouted with a powerful voice, 'I command that you come out of him!' And the General said that it was in testimony that the man behaved like one in his right mind after that."

The testimony of Mr. Garfield is surprising only in the fact that it came from him. That Joseph Smith did, by the power of God, cast out devils, is a matter well authenticated and thoroughly believed in by the Saints, though stoutly denied by his enemies, and imputed by Mr. Garfield to magnetism. Magnetism is one thing, and the Holy Spirit is another and very different thing. Joseph Smith wrought by the latter, which is the highest and greatest of all powers.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Evening Bulletin, Providence, Rhode Island, for November 12th, contains a digest of a sermon by Bro. M. H. Bond in answer to the question, "Catholic, or Protestant, which?" delivered the evening of November 11th. Bro. Bond answers the question well, and his conclusion is that the Saints are neither Catholic, (Roman), nor Protestant, (denominational). The digest is a good one, and gives plain showing to Bro. Bond's argument. Bro. Cyriel E. Brown was in charge of the services, which were held in Unity Temple, No. 275 High street, Providence.

Bro. E. B. Monroe, of Hill City, Kansas, wants any of the Saints in Camden county, Missouri, to write him giving their Post office address, for he intends to make his home there. He had been baptized by Bro. G. W. Shute in October. Previous to becoming a member of the church he had for about forty years been a believer in Christ, but not a member of any church. He now rejoices in the faith and feels thankful to the Lord for sending Bro. Shute and Barrett to minister the word unto him.

Some time ago Mr. R. Williams, of Flagler, Iowa, sent us an account of a lecture delivered by Bro. J. S. Roth at that place. As the matter was not new to the HERALD readers it was not published. We mislaid Mr. Williams' manuscript but now thank him for his kind words.

Men of the Reorganized Church must be of repute in some localities; for one of the brethren sent us tickets of each of the leading parties from one of the neighboring counties in Nebraska, on both of which the name of Bro. Daniel Jones appears as a candidate; on one for Treasurer of Ridgely Township, and Road Supervisor of one of the districts; and on the other, for Justice of the peace. We hope he was elected; for no such unanimity of choice would exist unless the man was a worthy citizen of his township and county.

THE EXODUS.

WE present below, from the Boston Herald another notable confirmation of the Bible account of Israel's sojourn in, and exodus from Egypt. The tombs and temples and pyramids of the eastern continents; and the antiquities, traditions, and geological discoveries in the western, are disclosing their long hidden secrets and testifying for God and the Bible, for Christ and his gospel, and for the divinity of the marvellous work of God begun through Joseph the Seer. The Saints should keep well posted in all these matters for their own joy and confirmation, and to succor and save those wandering in the darkness of infidelity, skepticism, or apostasy.

"The cuneiform tablets recently taken from the Egyptian tombs, and now in the British Museum, have been arranged and deciphered by Mr. Budge, the English Egyptologist, and are found to throw unexpected light on the social condition of Egypt before the exodus, and to explain the influx of the Shemites from Mesopotamia. It was these people who had the same acuteness and masterful energy that the Jews, during the last two or three centuries have displayed in Russia. They were more enterprising than the Egyptians, and almost gained the supremacy among them. They helped build the pyramids and the great walls, and got on finely till the rise of the nineteenth dynasty, when they were so much oppressed by their taskmasters that they rebelled and began the great exodus. This is the substance of much that these tablets contain. There are also several letters which establish the pleasant social and legal relations between the Mesopotamian and the Egyptian kings, and throw unexpected light upon phases of ancient life of which nothing has really been known. This is one of the most important "finds" of recent date. It is a piece-meal addition to the slow reconstruction of the ancient world through the deciphering of the monuments that are constantly turning up amid the ruins of Egypt. The interest in these restorations is almost as great in this country as in England, and the large contributions for the work of the Egyptian Exploring Society, of which Miss Edwards is the leader in England, and Dr. Winslow has been the efficient promoter in the United States, receive substantial encouragement through the fresh accumulation of these ancient historical fragments."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—What reasons can be given for supposing a resurrected being can not propagate its species?

Ans.—The fact that nowhere in Scripture is it revealed that they shall or can. Also the fact that Adam and Eve had no children till after they sinned and became mortal. Also the further fact that Jesus says (Matt. 22:30; Luke 20:35, 36), the resurrected Saints "are as the angels" and "neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels," and the Scriptures nowhere teach that angels propagate their species. And besides this, the Lord says of marriage: "It is lawful that he [man] should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end [purpose] of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doc. Cov. 49:3. And there is no intimation in this that man is ever to propagate his species except to people this earth. While it is true that there are no scripture texts that state directly, that resurrected beings can not propagate their species, yet it is equally true that there are none that in any way teach they can. In treating this and all other questions of a theological character, we find it wisest and best to keep within the rule of Jesus,—"It is written," and, "lest some should think of men above that which is written," as advised by Saint Paul.

Q.—If a resurrected being can not propagate its species, and one "changed in the twinkling of an eye" can, which is in the ascendancy, or the nearest perfect?

A.—The resurrected Saint; for it is written: "He that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust [be buried], but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye," while of the Saints who have died it is said: "they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after."—Doc. Cov. 63:13.

And it is further written: "And in that day [after Christ comes and the sleeping Saints are resurrected and the living Saints changed; Ed.], an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious."—Doc. Cov. 98:5.

From these and similar texts we gather, that the change of the living Saints at the second coming of Christ, and the change of those who die after that event, are different, the latter only being equal to the resurrected Saints, and made so by the last "great change." This we think may be fitly illustrated by the following from the Book of Mormon in respect of the three disciples who were to tarry. Mormon says: "I have inquired of the Lord, and he hath made it manifest unto me, that there must needs be a change wrought upon their bodies, or else it must needs be that they must taste of death; therefore, that they might not taste of death, there was a change wrought upon their bodies, that they might not suffer pain nor sorrow, save it were for the sins of the world. Now this change was not equal to that which should take place at the last day; but there was a change wrought upon them, inasmuch that Satan could have no power over them, that he could not tempt them, and they were sanctified in the flesh, that they were holy, and that the powers of the earth could not hold them; and in this state they were to remain until the judgment day of Christ; and at that day they were to receive a greater change, and to be received into the kingdom of the Father to go no more out, but to dwell with God eternally in the heavens."—Book of Nephi 13:6.

Joseph Smith, the "choice Seer," who was "great like unto Moses," a church founder, a church organizer, a teacher and expounder of the first rank and authority, taught thus: "Translated bodies can not enter into rest until they have undergone a change equivalent to death. Translated bodies are designed for future missions. The angel that appeared to John on the Isle of Patmos was a translated or resurrected body."—Times and Seasons, vol. 2 p. 577.

Q.—When will those "changed" at Christ's coming be made equal with resurrected Saints?

A.—After their last and "greater change." (See Doc. Cov. 63:13.)

Q.—How long will those changed at Christ's coming be permitted to propagate?

A.—On that point we have no Scriptural evidence to give. The following is said of those "changed" at Christ's coming, and their children: "And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, they shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their Lawgiver."—Doc. Cov. 45:10.

Of that time Isaiah speaks in chapters 65:20-23; and 11:6-8. Read it.

Q.—Will the sinner be changed during the thousand years' reign?

A.—How far they will be "changed" physically—if at all—we have no available Scriptural testimony. But we have good hope that during that period a great moral and spiritual reform, therefore a change, will be wrought upon the sinners, both those on earth and in "the prison." But of these matters we have no inclination to speculate, nor inquire where there is no revelation of God's will to guide us safely.

Q.—What are we to understand by children's being "caught up" during the thousand years' reign?

A.—We are not aware that the Scriptures teach that "children" will be. But they do teach that "children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; wherefore, for this cause preached the apostles unto the world the resurrection."—Doc. Cov. 63:13. And further: "In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree; and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and [when "he is old"] shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious."—Doc. Cov. 98:5.

"Wherefore, settle this in your hearts, that ye will do the things which I shall teach, and command you"—Christ, Luke 14:28.

Could any of us to-day be assembled in a congregation, one among a vast crowd of worshippers in the assembly of His people, and the veil be withdrawn—the thin veil of partition which conceals the presence of him who has promised to meet with his Saints, and standing before us we should see Him who gave utterance to these words, and should hear his voice in tones of intense earnestness as he said: "Settle this in your hearts;" be very certain that it is true and can not be set aside, and if neglected by you, loss must follow; do you think we would, or would not listen to what should follow? Would we or would we not desire to know what it was that we must settle? Can we not then for an hour—just one brief hour out of the few or many allotted us here upon earth—put aside all the false alluring lights of time, and see this in the light of truth. They are the words of Him who spake as never man spake, who taught just what the Father sent him to teach, and who said, "I know that his commandment is life everlasting."

We can not separate these commandments; can not and dare not say this is of great importance, but that is not. He who said, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God," said also, "Let all your garments be plain." We can none of us, no not one, tell why it is that baptism in water by immersion, as well as baptism of the Holy Spirit, is necessary to salvation. We know that it is God's plan, and the fiat has gone forth that except we be thus baptized we never can enter the kingdom of God. Apart from the fact that it is the order of heaven, no reason can be assigned. Not thus however with this latter commandment—this which by many is hardly esteemed as a commandment. For this the human mind (to say nothing of deity) can assign many valid reasons.

As children of the kingdom of God it is most natural to suppose that we become amenable to the laws of that kingdom. We love it as we love no other government, and its laws are to us the perfection of every thing which bears the name of law. "Self-denial" is written over the very entrance thereto. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself."

"Rich clothing fashionably made does not make me vain," says one; "indeed I think I feel better in it, just as humble, I am sure, as I would with a calico dress on." Doubtless; but what has this to do with the command, "Let all your garments be plain?" What has it to do with the blood of that covenant which you have called upon to witness for you before the Lord that you will keep all his commandments? Strange that we can not see that the arguments with which we fill our mouths are swift witnesses against us. Feel better in rich and fashionable clothing! If the fear of God was before our eyes would we feel better? Could we wrap those superfluous, costly garments around us and take comfort to our souls, while in open violation of his command? Could we take comfort in displaying to all—yes in the very courts of the Lord's house, even while kneeling and partaking of the emblems of his broken body and shed blood—the evidence that we were found false witnesses for Christ, because in that very act we covenant anew and witness before Saints and angels that we will keep his commandments? Let us not say it is a small matter; that God looks at the heart. How dare we say this, especially how dare a minister of the gospel say it when, if every sin from the morning of creation to the present hour could be traced to its source, it is found in disobedience. He who is obedient to all the laws of God is living in harmony with God, whereas he who is not obedient is a transgressor of the law.

Yet another says, "I can afford costly clothing and therefore it is not wrong, because I wrong no one by wearing it."

Has God made one law for the rich and another for the poor? It is true that for a brief span of time he has made some men and women stewards of what is his. You nor I will have to account to him for the use which these make of the loan they have obtained; but for them as for us above the doorway is written—"deny himself,"

They may cloth themselves in fine raiment, and fare sumptuously every day; but the time will come when life for them as for us will be ended. Others will pass into our stewardships, and we shall go to give an account to the owner of that which we only held in trust. If we have made to ourselves friends of the unrighteous mammon, then will be awarded to us the true riches; but if we have been unfaithful in that which was another's, who shall give us that which is our own?

We said that even the human mind could assign many valid reasons for the command, "Let all your garments be plain." From many we select a few. Rich and fashionable clothing demands time, money and thought, all of which are given to help build up the kingdom of Satan instead of the kingdom of God. This money, this time, this thought, are all needed to help in spreading the tidings of life and salvation to others who have just as much claim upon God as we have, and he has made it obligatory upon us to help spread the gospel. Do not let us suppose that we can limit the obligation we are under. If, as the apostle says, "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price," what then have we which is our own? Our agency. And through this it is given to us in and of ourselves to bring to pass much good.

Many of the prevailing fashions of the world originated first with bad and abandoned women. Is it becoming in Saints to adopt them? We are exhorted not to conform to the world but to be transformed; and another exhortation is, "Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." Do we answer, "They should not look to us for an example?" That is very true, they should not; but they will do so, and in the judgment it will not avail to answer, "Am I my brother's keeper?" "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." By it the gospel is hindered; it takes from God's storehouse; it robs the poor; it fosters selfishness, and when carried to extremes it becomes idolatry. This latter was shown by the Spirit in a very marked manner, not long since, to one of the sisters living in Missouri. There are to-day, even in the church to which we belong, many poor Saints, some too who are sick and afflicted, who know not from whence their winter's food and clothing is coming; and yet, with their Father's money we purchase rich clothing, and walk into the house of God beside his pale, thinly clothed and suffering children, and feel better, more humble and spiritual, than we would in good garments, plainly made?

It is all well enough for the gospel to be preached. We are glad when we hear of its triumph, but as we gather our unbroken household band around us, do we think of the families who are without husband and father that the gospel may be preached; and when our costly garments brush against their threadbare robes on the way to church, does it ever enter our mind that if we loved them as we should we would have equalized matters by sharing with them such as we had to share, if by any means we could lighten the burden and help to bear that cross. Will the feeling of self-complacency which gathered around our minds as we walked to the house of God faultlessly and fashionably attired, be hovering there when we hear the judge say: "I was hungry and ye fed me not, naked and ye clothed me not, sick and in prison and ye visited me not!" In that day, remember it, we will call to mind the selfishness which caused us to consume upon our garments and the garments of our children, the means and the time which God loans to us for a better use.

WARREN, Ohio, October 29th.

Dear Sisters:—Since the Herald has come under my observation I have wished to write something for its pages; more especially since requested to do so by Elder Brown, who has been preaching in our vicinity for some time past. The short time he was with us he won the respect and love of all who knew him. There has been quite a number of elders here, all able, efficient ministers of the gospel of Christ. I had not heard many sermons before I became interested, which interest grew and deepened until I was convinced "this is the true church of Christ or he has none on earth." I was then very anxious to join, and with four others gave my name for baptism on the 30th of September, on which day the doors of the church building were closed against us. The day for baptism was then appointed for the following Sunday. The four were baptized, but my father being terribly opposed, I was obliged to submit to his authority, as I am under age. It seems very hard to be opposed in such a matter, but I must wait in hope.

There are none of the elders here at present, and it is very lonely without their preaching. The Saints here, though few in number, are looking forward with anxiety for the time when they can have a church of their own, and hold meetings unmolested, and when closed doors will be a thing of the past. We are expecting Elder Scott here in a week or sooner; he is a very interesting and eloquent speaker. I read and enjoyed the article written by him in the October 27th issue of the Herald. I think the Prayer League is a grand movement, and capable of doing great good. I ask the prayers of the sisters, that papa may be caused to relent; and not only consent to my baptism, but yield obedience himself.

Your sister in the new and everlasting covenant,
ALICE PINKERTON.

CHATEAUGAY, N. Y., Oct. 28th.

Sister Frances.—Although I do not belong to the church of Latter Day Saints I take a great interest in your welfare, and enjoy seeing the work of Zion doing so well; and I believe it to be the true church of God, and hope yet to be counted among your number, and to be able to meet you all around the white throne. I receive the Saints' Herald every Saturday, so have it to read on Sunday, and enjoy so much reading letters from the ones I have met. Am well acquainted with Elder Brand; would be pleased to hear more about him in the Herald. Where is his field of labor now?

Where I am living the Latter Day Saints have never been heard of, and the only way they speak of Joseph Smith is as a polygamist. During my four years trip in Nebraska I learned far different. Do you know of any Saints in the northern part of New York? Chateaugay has a population of about three thousand inhabitants. There are two churches here, the Methodist and Presbyterian. Of course they think theirs are the true church, and you could not convince them of anything different. I think the Prayer League is a splendid thing, and hope it will be the means of much good.

SABRA ROBERTS PATTERSON.

Dear Sisters.—As I was reading Sr. Vina's dream this morning, I could not help the thought, How can Saints help but see and comprehend how they should live and adorn themselves to be acceptable in the sight of God. While some think everything that is beautiful is put here for us, it was also put here for a purpose. When we come to a knowledge of the gospel we are not fit subjects for baptism until we say to our God that we desire to serve him acceptably, that we may with humbleness give up everything of a worldly nature, and serve Him in spirit and in truth; for where the love of the world is, the love of the Father is not, therefore I believe that if we enter into a covenant with God we will by the Spirit be able to see beauty in a different light from those of the world. We as Saints of the Most High should not admire anything that will conflict with our books, for by them we shall be judged. We are taught by them to be clean; also to be plain in our dress. I believe one command as necessary as another. If I were told to make a sister a plain dress, and should go and put yards of foolish and useless drapery upon it, I would be disobeying her order, and she would not be pleased with her dress; So it will be with our Savior. If he tells us to do anything, and we do contrary to His bidding, we certainly displease Him. And do not flatter yourselves, dear sisters; you will have to give an account of these things if they are small, for there is nothing within the lids of the three books too small for our Savior to notice. This dream of Sr. Vina's shows us our dwellings should be plain and clean, and not decorated with the brilliant and useless articles we see in the dwellings of the world. The sooner we all as Saints come to a knowledge of this fact, the sooner the time when our houses of worship will not stand half furnished, and when the treasury of the poor will not be empty, and when we will all enjoy that peaceful, happy feeling of serving God acceptably—and the world be the better for our having lived in it. I often think of what I heard a good brother say, "The good we do here will live for ever, but what we consume needlessly will die with our bodies."

I hope to be of use in the work, for I love it with all my heart, although my trials have been very hard, and with the responsibility of three little ones to care for and teach the ways of life I sometimes feel my faith grow weak. At such times I go to God for strength, and He has never failed to hear me, and I still feel to trust Him, for his promises are sure,

Your sister in faith,
CELESTIA.

DOW CITY, Iowa, Oct. 30th.

Dear Sister Eleanor.—We met September 13th at three o'clock, at Sr. L. Rudd's and organized a Prayer League, Sr. S. Rudd was elected president, and Sr. J. Baker secretary. Opened meeting with singing hymn, "My faith looks up to Thee." Prayer by Sr. Baker. The president read the texts and spoke quite encouragingly; and the sisters all took quite an active part, seeming much interested. We closed with singing, and prayer by Sr. Polly Jordan.

We have had quite interesting meetings since we organized. We have made it a rule to meet two hours earlier to sew for the sick or those that need help. I hope the sisters will not forget to pray for our little Prayer Union, that it may prove a success.

JENNIE BAKER, Sec'y.

PEORIA, TEXAS, September 14th.

Dear Sisters.—I am one of the lonely ones and feel the need of sympathy and prayer. I have many friends and neighbors whom I love, that have not heard, neither are willing to hear the gospel. To those who like me have come out of Babylon, old creeds cling, until after hard struggles they come off victorious. I for one am just fighting my battle, and sometimes I almost, or quite, give it up. Bro. Nunly was here in July, but I, for one, did not enjoy his visit, for we had been told that if another Mormon came to Peoria he should suffer, and I was so afraid he would be hurt that my life was a misery to me all the time he was here. I am nervous at best, and did not trust the Lord as I should have done. I know it now, but I do not think that I thought much about the Lord helping him at that time; although I did know that he had been called here, and my Savior had been kind enough to show me that he should do a great work at Peoria. But you see I have not rid my skirts as yet of the old Presbyterianism that had got so rubbed in before I ever knew there was a Latter Day Saint.

I wish to relate a dream I had once, that perhaps some of my brothers or sisters can interpret for me. I thought I was in Tennessee, at my father's old saddler's shop, when we heard a great cry, Come look, come look. We went to the west door, and in the south west the heavens were covered with new moons, all dancing; and all seemed in great glee. Then we looked north, and in the heavens were two swords, both unsheathed, and one was broken in two about the middle; but I saw the point that was broken off still keep its place, and not fall as I expected it would do. Then we looked south, and nearly over us was a glittering dirk, with two bright edges, pointing northward. Then I went on the east side and looked, and the whole heavens were dripping with blood. It came almost over our heads; and while I was looking at this sickening sight I heard a voice calling from the north, Come, come, come. I went to see what it was and saw a woman dressed in scarlet like an actress, decked in flowers and gold chains. Her arms and shoulders were bare, and her form beautiful; but her features were coarse and ugly. I saw men running from every direction to her and women carrying their little babes in their arms, all running as if life depended on their getting there quickly. After that the whole earth was illuminated with candles, four or five in a row, but rows of them in every door and window. Everywhere there were candles, and it was the grandest sight my eyes ever beheld, asleep or awake.

Whether this dream signifies anything or not I can not say; but I never had anything to so impress me. I have no interpretation for it. It is all a great mystery; but I believe if the Lord wants me to know, I shall yet know all about it. I have had many testimonies since and before I came into this church, many dreams and visions to encourage me to press forward; and I am so far from any Latter Day Saint church or branch that I am fearful I would fall back, but for the kind and loving finger that points me onward. I wish Bro. Peter Seton would go to Woodville, McCrackin county, Kentucky, and call on my brother, Tommy Sherrill, and preach the gospel to him. He knows nothing of our doctrine, but is hurt with me for joining the Mormons. He told me in his last letter, for God's sake and his sake to come out of such wickedness, and not lead my poor little ones astray. I want all the sisters to help me pray that this gospel may be preached to him in power, and that God may soften his heart to listen and investigate, and bring him into his kingdom. Praying for the welfare of all God's people, I am,

MATTIE FIELDS.

WHEELER, Iowa, Oct. 14th.

Sister Frances.—Like Sister Anna in the October Herald, I feel sometimes when I read some of the letters, that they were written for my especial benefit. At any rate they strengthen and help me to take up the burden of life with renewed determination to live nearer right. How often I make this resolution! And yet often I find myself getting out of patience and doing and saying things that I know are displeasing to my Heavenly Father. My children are all old enough to look to mother for example, and I would like that they would never see or hear me say or do ought that they may not do. It is one of my greatest trials to overcome self. I believe it is the feeling of a great many mothers with large families.

My prayer is that I may overcome all my failings and live so I may not be a hindrance to any from walking in the narrow way. Oh, that it may not be said of me, "You placed a stumbling block in my way;" but rather that "You have placed a stepping-stone by which I have gained the right path." May this be my happy lot, is my earnest wish.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Nov. 24th.

Bro. Blair:—The debate that ended here one week ago between Bro. H. C. Bronson and Elder Williamson of the Christian Church was a decided victory for truth, and a decided Waterloo for the so-called Christian church. Elder Williamson, in my estimation, did not make a single point. Bro. Bronson held him to the propositions, he squirmed, but it was of no use; he was cornered and there he had to stay, and the audience saw it. Bro. Bronson was often cheered, which could not be restrained. I have heard several prominent men of this city say that Williamson did not make one single point, and I believe that is the general verdict. On the following Sunday evening some of our members attended the Christian Church at their evening service. Elder Williamson preached, and he repeatedly told his members that they must study their Bibles, for the time had come when they must be ready to give an answer for the hope they had. They are badly used up, and every unprejudiced mind present at the discussion saw it. I assure you, Bro. Blair, that it was a grand thing for us. It allayed a great deal of prejudice.

Yours for truth,

J. ARMSTRONG.

SANTA ANA, Cal. November 18th.

Dear Herald:—I have often thought I would like to pen a few lines to your columns, to let some folks know where we are and how we are progressing. It is now five months since I left Australia. I came across here to California to travel in the ministry and get a general knowledge of church work, as this field offers considerable advantages to that of New South Wales. The branches in Australia are scattered and are mostly all new branches, so the recruits in the work get very little or no experience of how matters are worked, the missionaries only calling on an average of about every six months.

So the young Saints in the states have much to be thankful for, because the main tutor to the various branches in Australia is the Herald. Most of the time since I came across here I have been acting the "solitaire," studying alone in a quiet sequestered nook in Gospel Swamp at the residence of a brother in the church who has no children, so noise is no interference. I have been out on two expeditions with Bro. Mills who I find to be a wise and generous man and a man who can impart his wisdom to those who wish it, in a clear and astounding manner.

I have spoken twice at the Laguna branch and witnessed a fair share of the Spirit, for which I thank God. When reading in the Autumn Leaves a piece of brother C. A. Butterworth's composition, "What are you doing To-day," and when he quotes this passage: "Let us pray, therefore, that the Lord will send more laborers into his vineyard," I can well realize how he feels out there alone with his two co-laborers, Bro. T. W. Smith and Bro. J. W. Wight in that vast field of Australia. It seems to me that after bearing the roughs of that peculiar mode of travel out there, when at night-fall they reach one of the few branches there it would seem to them as an oasis does to the Dervish in the deserts of Western Asia. But we all have our cross to bear and we have the words of Christ to this effect: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." My heart also yearns for the day when the financial circumstances of the church will be such that it will be able to send more laborers into the various parts where the honest in heart are groping in darkness wanting light.

My exhortation to the young brethren is to let us be up and doing, and have our lamps trimmed and burning, so that when that time comes we will be ready for the onslaught and not have to stop and consider and study when we should have made hay while the sun shone. Yule is close at hand and I hope the Saints will have a joyous time.

I am yours very truly,

SID. G. WRIGHT.

DELOIT, IOWA, Nov. 5th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I enclose you the words of a song in tongues that was sung by Sr. Kate Turner, of this branch, last August. The Spirit of God that attended it in tongues as well as in interpretation, was most glorious to realize.

Yours in bonds,

W. W. WHITING.

Awake ye Saints of latter glory;
Raise your voices long and loud;
Tell the world the wondrous story—
Say, Behold the way to God;

Hear the royal proclamation,
Let your voice ascend to God,
For the mandate of high heaven
Is again to earth restored;

It was delivered by an angel
Flying through the midst of heaven;
And this glorious revelation
Was for your instruction given.

Be not ashamed to own your Savior,
Who has borne the cross for you;
He will own you before the angels
And your heavenly Father too.

Though you may have many trials,
Put your trust in him, your Lord,
For he never will forsake you,
He has said so in his word.

Keep the law, in it abiding
Ever let your hearts be found;
For to gain the nobler refuge,
In it must your lives abound.

GALIEN, Mich., November 15th.

Editors Herald:—Our series of two days meetings, beginning at Dimondale, Eaton county, and concluding at Galien, October 7th, with their immediate results, have gone. So far as seen, those result have been good. We have been able to reach a greater number of people in the vicinities of those meetings than hitherto, with perhaps two exceptions. At Dimondale where it has been so difficult in the past to get at the people because of prejudice, the audiences increased in numbers to the last, and we were informed that on Sunday evening not a sufficient number of the church going people were left in the village to hold services in any of the four churches there. The grove seemed crowded with people, who listened attentively while Bro. J. A. Carpenter poured into their midst a volley of hot shot leavened with primary gospel principles. The Saints there are encouraged, and are taking hold anew.

Brother George McClintock, priest of the branch, is enlarging his field of usefulness, and we are informed that others are to be baptized there at once. Bro. B. Casler was baptized at the conclusion of the meeting.

The grove meeting at Coldwater was well attended; indeed very well on Sunday. The greater number of those present dined at the grove and all seemed very sociable. Following the meeting four persons were added to the branch by baptism. Rain interfered with our two days' meeting at Marcellus beginning September 15th, so that the services were not largely attended except by the Saints, all of whom were there punctually, and we were edified in the hope of the gospel. Brethren J. Shook and H. Richardson of Buchanan were there to aid in the good cause. Of the future outlook at Marcellus we are unable now to foretell, but we can see no good reason why some may not be added to the little branch of good Saints at that place at no distant day, as some honest ones there are investigating the faith.

The meeting at, or near Antwerp, Ohio, September 1st and 2d was a success, some coming for miles to attend the Sunday services. Brother B. V. Springer has done much labor there and in the adjacent vicinities. He has many personal friends there who are friendly to the faith. He has baptized three there since the two days' meetings. Brother H. Rathbun, who moves along with his share of the labor like a wheel-horse in the prime of life, labored at that point under the embarrassment of a severe cold on the lungs and throat. He stood at his post on every occasion required, however, and finally wore the cold out, pulled through safely and came out sound.

Being sent for to go to Hartford, Michigan, to preach the funeral of brother George Conolly, I left Bro. Rathbun at Antwerp and from then till we met at the district conference, October 20th, we labored separately except at the Marcellus meeting. A telegram summoned our elderly brother from that meeting very suddenly, and as he left for his home, to witness the departure of his daughter from this life all the Saints felt sad, and we prayed the Lord to bestow upon the family and himself, the divine grace to enable them to pass safely through the trying ordeal. The sympathy of friends is consoling in times of sorrow, but the realization of the divinely promised consolation is infinitely more so.

We tried to fill the appointments at Knox, Indiana, and at the Osborn church, ten miles east of Knox, September 22d and 23d, and the 28th and 29th, being aided by Bro. J. B. Prettyman, with fair-sized to large audiences present and interest good. Some in those vicinities are investigating and the people of liberal minds are with us. A political rally of a republican complexion came moving into Galien on the sixth of October, and one half of our two days' meeting there had to recede from the wake of this political Jumbo and wait till Sunday the seventh to resume the line of march; but with the services came large audiences and the meetings were quite a success after all. All things considered, the services thus held in the several places have resulted in good to the cause of Christ in our district.

Our district conference held at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 13th-15th, was not so largely attended as our conferences usually are, but the meetings were quite spiritual and those present were encouraged to press on. Bro. H. Rathbun of Lansing was chosen president of the district and I heartily concur, and hope the Saints will sustain and tender him all the encouragement necessary. Other district officers were continued. On Thursday after conference, one—a very excellent young lady—was baptized, and the week following one more was added to the branch at Coldwater. The new brick church building being erected by the Coldwater Saints and their friends,—a house twenty-eight by forty feet in breadth and length—is progressing nicely and all the Saints seem willing to do their respective part. (And if they did not, in so glorious a cause, they would surely deeply regret it). All seem to be happy in the prospects before them. By building their church the Saints at Coldwater are already gaining prestige with the community around.

The outlook for the present in the district and mission is encouraging. All the appointed laborers seem to be moving along harmoniously, but our present force is not adequate to the pressing demands for labor. We would not be so enthusiastic, however, as to not recognize clouds that lower around may move across our moral horizon and darken, temporarily at least, the "bow of promise" now beckoning us so cheerfully onward.

The Saints have doubtless noticed before now that literature relating to the work,—all phases of it—is being advertized largely for by some of the large book publishing houses in some of the leading cities of the republic. By getting large files of this so-called Mormon literature, almost every book, of a general religious character, issued by those companies, contains a pretended history of the church and its faith such as suits the compilers of those books. That pretended history is misleading in every instance. Such books are spread throughout the country by agents and sold to the people and by them received as authoritative on all subjects treated of by them. The false impressions already in the minds of the people, are, by this pretended authority, confirmed,—and it is impossible, many times, for the elders in their individual capacities to meet and refute what the accepted authorities say. In some of those books, what we recognize as the apostasy from the faith under Brigham Young and others is entirely ignored, together with the Reorganization, so that we are unknown. In this connection allow me to refer to one other trick that has been played on the work: Some twenty or more years ago, a book was written, about New York City, entitled, "The Secrets of a Great City." In that book is a picture designed to represent a noon-day prayer meeting in a place of questionable repute in the great city. Now, Beadle, in his history of the Mormons, uses that identical cut, palming it off as a Mormon elder making converts! I have examined the books on this point, and know this to be a fact.

I cite these two instances to illustrate the unscrupulousness of the historians concerning the latter day work, and to urge upon the minds of the Saints the great necessity of taking the steps essential to have an accredited history of the church and work, compiled and written by a committee of one or more at the earliest date possible as one of the best means of meeting and confuting those false impressions that exist in the public mind concerning us; and of placing the work committed to us in its true light before the world. Biographies are not church histories in the full sense of the idea. Let the church for once, and for the first time by this medium, so far as we are now aware, tell its own story.

For truth and justice,

C. SCOTT.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

MANCHESTER, England, Nov. 2d.

Dear Herald:—

The Manchester district semi-annual conference held at Leeds, on the 13th and 14th of last month passed off very pleasantly to all concerned. The business session opened at Manchester on the 12th for the preparation of formal business and was then adjourned to Leeds on the following day as before stated. The sessions at Leeds opened at 7 p. m. After the usual preliminaries the reports from the several branches comprising the district were read and indicated progress both financially, numerically and spiritually. Throughout the session we enjoyed perfect unanimity in our proceedings and all present used their best endeavors to successfully do the business belonging to the conference. Many of the old faces were present. Amongst the elders may be mentioned Elders Joseph Ramsey, president of the Farnworth branch, Henry Hoole, president of the Sheffield branch, James Baty, president of the Manchester branch, Wm. Seekins president of the Leeds branch, John Austin of Sheffield, Wm. R. Armstrong of Manchester, Joseph Naylor and Thomas Paxton of Leeds, besides a host of brothers and sisters whose cheery faces and out spoken "God bless you" testified to the fact that the work of our Master was still dear to their hearts and the love of the brotherhood still strong unto death. After the termination of the proceedings an Saturday evening the visiting brethren were taken in hand by the Leeds saints and every necessary attention to both physical wants and comfort given. All met together for prayer meeting in charge of Elder Wm. Seekin. We had a spiritual season that spoke well for the meetings that were to follow; indeed it was a time long to be remembered. Adjourned until 10 a. m. when we again met together and had the pleasure, under the presidency of elder James Baty, of listening to stirring sermons in defense of the latter day work by elders Henry Hoole and Wm. R. Armstrong. Adjourned and again met at two p. m. in fellowship meeting in charge of elder Henry Greenwood, when many testimonies of a most encouraging nature were given. Spiritual strength was afforded to all of the household of faith there gathered together, and many of those present not of the faith were comforted, and we trust drawn nearer to the water through which mortals must pass before entrance can be obtained into the kingdom of God. The power and influence felt was such that some present were heard to say that "If the Bible is true, these are the people of God." And yet we had neither "tongues" nor "prophecy" in special manifestations, but we had indeed the testimony of Jesus which is the spirit of prophecy. Meeting was opened again at 6 p. m., our place of worship being well filled with saints, and anxious hearers seeking for the truth, the writer being in charge. And after the sweet singers of Israel had rendered their service of song, accompanied by one of the brethren upon the harmonium, elder John Austin was called to the front to address those present and for over an hour he discoursed upon the "Old, old story," with simplicity, pathos and force that could not fail to find lodgment in the hearts of the honest. After him followed elder Joseph Ramsey full of the Spirit of the Master with what we can conceive to have been the eloquence and energy of a Paul when arraigned before king Agrippa, and Agrippa like, there were those present with us who were almost persuaded to be Christians, in the sense known only to those who have been planted by baptism into the likeness of his death, who became the first fruits of them that slept and have again risen, and walk in that newness of life typified by his resurrection. The time at the disposal of our brother was short, far too short to permit him to review at length the array of evidence that he had at his command to prove the divinity of this glorious latter day work and the calling from God of that martyred prophet, Joseph Smith. Our brother's reasoning was irresistible, for he was indeed blest of the Lord. After the closing hymn had been sung, and benediction pronounced, the time for parting came and amid the "peace be with you" of the saints, and the "God bless you; when will you come again?" of the friends (many of whom we then saw for the first time) was rushed to the railway station and were soon all aboard rushing headlong towards our destination, Manchester, the cottonopolis of the world. A two hours journey behind the iron horse and we were, with God's blessing, deposited in safety at our homes, realizing most fully that the blessings of our heavenly Father had been with us and made successful even above our anticipations, the semi-annual conference of the Manchester district now numbered amongst the conferences of the past. The following extracts from letters since received from the brethren may be of interest to the saints. Elder John Austin, writing from Sheffield says: "We also felt ourselves much encouraged at our late conference, and Bro. Arber who was with us was greatly built up and strengthened in the cause. I believe the additional meetings provided for in the resolutions brought before conference will do much good. There does really seem to be a good outlook all around. Surely the Lord does bless the efforts of his servants. I perceive that there is a great work yet to do and that "the field is wide and white already to harvest." Elder William Seekins, writing from Leeds, says: "I am very happy to say that we have cause to think that much good has been done by the conference held here. * * * I was very sorry that Bro Ramsey had not more time to expound the gospel to the people. I have spoken to a few of them since the conference, and they all seem to be very sorry that he could not go on a little longer. Most of them said they should like him to come again before long. I thank God for the happy time we had together in conference, for all that were present seemed to enjoy the Sunday services. I am also thankful to our heavenly Father that two men have given us their names for baptism which we expect to attend to some time next week. So you see, dear brother, that we have much to encourage us in this glorious latter day work, and I trust by God's help to go on, trying in my weakness to extend the church and kingdom of God." The above extracts fully sense the feelings of the saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard. We are moving along, striving in patience to possess our souls. Within the last few weeks we have lost two of our members by death, Elder John McCue of the Manchester branch, and Sister Mellard of the Sheffield branch, both old time saints, faithful laborers, true unto death and now at rest in the paradise of God. Their works have indeed gone before them, and blessed are they for they have died in the Lord. Much more might be said in reference to the outlook here, but time and space forbid. I therefore conclude by wishing prosperity to Zion and peace and joy to her habitations and her people. As ever, your co-laborer in the gospel of our blessed Redeemer, JOSEPH DEWSNUP, SEN.

HASTINGS, Victoria, Oct. 10th.

Dear Herald:—Feeling that perhaps your readers may have a desire to once more hear from the ones who six months ago left home to come to this far off but pleasant clime, we submit the following to show what we are doing and have done since our last to your pages. At Hamilton and Wallsend we stayed for a fortnight, and at the latter place used the street corner as a place from which to tell the ones who came, the way and means that would bring them to know what to do that they might obtain that which is promised to all who are, like Paul, willing to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." In the midst of one of our sermons we were told by one who claimed to know, that she would not let us lay our hands on her head as in this day we have no need of such things.

To us, it was a time we can not forget. The Spirit that came with such power; the ones that came so near and stood as though spell-bound; the light from a street lamp near by that sent forth but a faint ray; the flow of words that came without seeming effort on the part of self, and seemed as a "two-edged sword," all made a scene that while life shall last, will be as fresh in the mind as at the time when thus "filled" with the Spirit, we were made to know what it is to have a foretaste of the world to come, and what God will do for us when we will try to do his will so far as known by us. Though years may come and go, each one to take its place in the niche that is for it to fill in the round of time, we trust that we will ever be ready to give God the praise for thus aiding with his Spirit. As we think of it now, we feel like Oliver Cowdery: "Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, . . . strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it forever from the mind!"

At the former place we preached once in the park, and a few times in a hall, but the strike was the theme that seemed to be of more import than the love of truth, hence we left them to try to plant the gospel in climes where we could find more of hope for the good things to come. Here we were called to go into the unpleasant duty of an elder's court, and all from the fact that one thought his knowledge of section 17 paragraph 9, Doctrine and Covenants should stand, though the body had said that it meant quite the reverse from his ideal. Why is it that from time to time we find those who are thus willing to say the church is wrong and they are right. As at Forster, the Saints of these two branches seemed to vie with each other in brotherly treatment, and often have the tears sprung forth when the kind and noble traits born of the gospel, have been shown us in all the places we have so far been.

We left New Castle at eleven p. m. and awoke next day to find that we were in Sydney. We change our "luggage" and find that the boat will leave the next four p. m., so we go to Bro. Ellis' and are made welcome. Our physical wants are cared for, and as we leave, a sovereign placed in the hand of each makes the thoughts of temporal wants flee as well. From the wharf we pass out through the harbor—said to be the best in the world—and I feel that this land might well be proud of it, and ere the sun has kissed the broad old blue his good night, we are once more on the crest of the waves, but this time feel that let come what will, we will not be sick. Next day being Sunday we pass the time in reading and quiet; part of which we commune with those on that far off shore, not in a verbal way but in mind and with the pen. On Monday we pass the most southern point of land, and for the first time in life are on the Southern Ocean. As we think of sending to Autumn Leaves at some time a history of the land and climate we omit here. At twelve p. m. we land at Melbourne, and at seven a. m. are taken to Yarra wharf. Some of the brethren from Hastings and Queen's Ferry are here to meet us, but as we had written that Geelong was our objective point we did not think of such a thing, and while they were looking for us, we were on our way to the west. At Geelong we were met by Bro. Trembath and Bro. Craig and sons, and were made to know that we were welcome. Here we stayed two and one half weeks, at the close of which two were baptized by Bro. Butterworth.

Bro. Trembath and self spent two and one half days going from house to house, giving tracts and talking to the people, while at the same time Bro. Craig and Butterworth worked the other part of the place. A large dose of cayenne pepper on the floor where we stood to preach one night, proved their warmth for us! Bro. McIntosh—the first one baptized in Victoria—and Bro. McGurk both showed their love by going to Geelong to see us. With the latter we came to this place last Thursday, and while at Melbourne he took us in to see the World's Exhibition.—Grand! Here we were made glad to learn that the chapel was finished, and was to be opened on Sunday. But, alas! "the best laid plans," etc. Sunday came and with it a downpour of rain. We held two services, with a fair turnout at night. This is the second chapel in the colonies; the first at Forster, built by brother Wright alone! As we stood within, I felt to thank God that, by the will of the Saints we could thus proudly point to these two buildings as a proof that the gospel is here to stay.

We gladly acknowledge the receipt of a letter from Bro. Salyards, full of cheer and hope, and while we read of the grand times in that land, we feel that while we are tried here, that in time the news from this far off continent will be just as bright.

Yesterday we went from house to house with the tracts, and each, when asked, went in and chatted. One place I was told that the tract would not be read, as it was too well known what we were, and that it had been found of late that the Plates were bought by Rothschild, and were not given to the angel at all! For just one hour

I had staid there, and at last was asked to go in, and when we left a tract was asked for, and were told to come any day we might feel like it! A man under the influence of liquor gave us half a crown "to help the cause." Met two ladies and each gave me back the tract, but I felt this would not do, and at the end of some ten minutes each asked for a tract and said they would read them. At one place Neely had the door shut in his face. So you see that while this is the spring of the year, the mercury with some gets down to zero. But, "With joy we remember," &c., and trudge on.

Bro. and Sr. Smith talk of leaving soon, so we would like the church to think of 3 000 000 souls and but two young men, with a Continent! Bro. Smith is now near 1 000 miles north! Oh! let me plead with the ones that cannot help with their voices, to help with their tithing, that the church may send at least four the coming spring. New Zealand needs two, and this land two. The Utah church sent seven last spring to New Zealand! Are we as a church to let them have full sway and not so much as lift a hand? New Zealand is some ten hundred miles long, and has as good a people as can be found. We need two young men there that will not run when the first gun is fired but stand to their post till they have done the work, and so well that they need not be ashamed. We were told by one that it was no use to say we were not polygamists, for it was well known that we were. We felt it would not do to leave till we could get a chance to show that such is not the case, so we bided our time, and when it came told that one that we would go to any court in the land and take oath that such is not the truth, and the one thus shown thanked God for it and asked us in, and we could not have been shown, by one of our own faith, a greater kindness; and all because we dealt in a meek way.

While pleasure seems to be the main theme in this land, yet there is shown a good desire to hear the truth. Those who should be saints get out of the way at times, but we think that did we all look for our own faults as much as we do for what faults there might be in others, these jars would soon be so deep from sight that they could not rise, though all efforts it were possible to make by those not of us were brought to bear with the hope that once more a breach might be made, and thus the wedge that brings schism might be driven to its very head. Those who would tear down this work are at all times alive to all that is in their power, to bring into our midst that which in time will be the means of harm to the body. Then let us each as those who should do right, put from us all that in any way will bring evil, not only to self but the work as well, and thus prove to all that we are here to do naught but good while life may last. This will be the best preaching that can be done, and we will thus save ourselves and them that hear us.

To the ones that may be sent by the church; Do not come with the thought in mind that this is the place where "all is well and all is bright," for in some ways it is much more of a trial to preach here than in that land.

There can not be found Saints anywhere that will treat the ones with more love that bring to them the truth, than the ones of this land, so long as you treat them in that way that they have a right to look for; but just try to drive them in the least sense of the term, and you will soon find them a people with a mind of their own. As a rule, the ones we have seen we have learned to love, and shall the rest part of the three years go by as fast as the time spent here has seemed to do, we will leave all too soon, and there will be left on this land a love for the ones here that time will not blot out.

Later.—The conference of this district has just closed here at Queens Ferry, and I have not been at one where a better time was had. Find the Saints here as in all this district, truly noble.

Pray for us,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI,
November 20th.

Dear Herald:—Among the many things I have had to make answer to is, "Who is the devil? What is he and where did he come from? How many are there? And is he or they personal beings?" To the first question I would refer the reader to Matthew 25: 41 and Genesis 3: 1. Compare the statements with Revelations 20: 2. We have him identified perfectly again in 1 Samuel 16: 14. Here he is called "evil spirit." The next is in 1 Kings 22: 22 where he is called "lying spirit." The next is in 1 Chron 21: 1 where he is called Satan. The next mention of him is in Job 1: 6, 21 where he is represented as holding a conversation with God concerning his servant Job. The next mention of him is in Isaiah 27: 1 where he is called "Leviathan the piercing serpent," "crooked serpent" and "dragon." The next is in Matt. 4: 1-11; here he was tempting the Savior.

If these quotations are carefully read it will not be a difficult question to solve. Has not the Bible itself answered the question plainly enough as to the origin, or where they came from. Like all other created beings they came from God; not however as devils, but as angels of light. In other words, God by his almighty power, infinite wisdom and goodness made them holy angels, but they, by their own conceptions and rebellion made themselves devils. Such is their origin. Do not the expressions or terms "devil and his angels" just as much represent real beings or persons, as God and his angels according to the laws of language of illustration? If I divine rightly, all that is said about the devil and his angels just as much represent real or personal being or persons as what is said about God and his angels, and hence philologically, grammatically, rhetorically, logically and theologically there is just as much evidence of the personality of one as there is of the other. And hence what would disprove or disapprove of a personal devil and his angels would equally disapprove of a personal God and his angels.

As to who the devils are I can only answer that they are fallen angels.—Luke 10: 18; 2 Peter 2: 4; Jude 6 and Revelations 12: 9. They are all represented as falling, warring and being cast out of heaven together; and hence if falling or fallen angels are personal and intelligent, so are the devil and his angels. The term devil is from the Greek verb diaballein, to slander; and hence signifies slanderer or false accuser. To slander is to accuse falsely or to wilfully injure another by reporting about him what is known to be false. Such is the devil. "Certainly the term devil as applied to Satan is in no sense a misnomer, for it represents his vilest traits," says Godfrey.

In closing for this time I refer to one more portion of scripture; Revelations 9: 11. I would be glad to give a more minute detail but time will not permit now. Hoping however that the texts herein given will explain themselves. In the one faith,

CLARENCE ST. CLAIR.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, Nov. 22d.

Dear Herald:—I am rapidly recovering from a long, painful spell of sickness, and I want to say to the Saints that during my affliction my daily prayers were offered with uprightness of heart, and the Spirit of my God taught me to obey and serve Him, that the place where light dwells forever might not be hidden from me. O that my thoughts and utterances were kept washed in innocency and purity, that I might be blameless before God; for I feel that whosoever shall fear and trust in the Lord is blessed. O, may I never cease praying, that my lips shall not speak wickedness nor my tongue utter iniquity or deceit. Lead me in the truth and teach me how to perform Thy wishes, for thou art the God of my hope and I love to serve thee all the day long. If I am meek and lowly in heart my Redeemer will guide me in judgment and teach me, give ear to my prayers, and hide not himself from my supplications. Grant me thy Spirit continually, my Lord; for without it the shadow of evil is over me. O, thy Spirit of wisdom which prepares the heart, invites humility, lowliness of mind, penitence, contrition and meekness. O how can a man survive in the absence of the Spirit of God! I am taught by the Spirit of Him that created me that he has been mindful of me and will bless me more and more as I increase in the delight of His commandments, through which charity and universal love comes more abundantly. God's promise is that he will bless them that fear him, both great and small; and his word and his work is glorious, and his righteousness endureth forever. His wonderful works were made for remembrance, and his statutes to be obeyed.

The children of men, with sufficient wisdom, I feel, would never sin; for it is true that we can never overcome Satan if we obey him. Therefore let us all who believe, advance the latter day work, which can be done with greater success if we keep within us the Spirit which brings charity to our fellow man. If we are Saints, let us be Saints, and God will work mighty miracles among his people, for where there are subjects worthy to receive, God is glad to manifest his power that the wisdom of the wise man may perish, and the rich who has kept many of us from sufficient clothing to shield us from the inclemency of the weather, and who also have kept the sheaf from us through which we have hungered for bread.

In conclusion, let all Saints unite together in one mind through the same Spirit, and forgive our fellow men their injustice, praying to God continually for aid that we may not indulge in pride, but dress plain and warm.

Be it even so, Amen,

AMASA A. RICHARDSON.

FREMONT, Neb., Nov. 22d.

Bro. Blair:—When about to leave Omaha, a message came from Summer Hill (about eighteen miles from there), to come and administer to Mrs. Mary Ann Taylor, who was very sick. On arriving there we found her some better, and after administering she was fully restored. The next morning we had the pleasure of baptizing her, also Mr. Thomas Winterburn. The former is an old-time Saint. She obeyed the gospel in England and emigrated to this country, expecting to find Zion in Utah. But when she got as far as Nebraska, she refused to go further, having become disgusted with the teachings and actions of the Utah elders. She has had many trials since leaving her native land, but now after many years of disappointment, and, as the poet says, "Though deceived, believing still," she again seeks refuge once more in the ark of safety. We pray God she may find peace and rest to her soul and finally be gathered with the saints.

Bro. Winterburn has been acquainted with the gospel a number of years. He has been blessed with some spiritual dreams at times. One I will give as he related it. Some time last winter two Utah elders came and presented their claims to him, and left some impression on his mind. They told him that they would return in the fall and baptize him, and then went away. The next night he dreamed he was standing in an open field where he saw a large pole, very black, standing in the field. Around this pole it was very dark for several feet; and upon the top of the pole he saw the name "Brigham," in large letters, but very dark. About ten feet from this pole there stood another one, very bright, which sent a light around it extending to where the line of the darkness came, and upon the top of this pole he saw the name "Joseph," in bright, glittering letters. He says he never saw anything more plainly in his life. If those elders return there they will find their hopes blasted.

After leaving there I went to Burt county, where I labored about three weeks, and baptized two. Others are very near the door. There could be a good work done there if the lives of the Saints there were always in harmony with the precepts of the gospel. But by the help of the Lord we are gaining the confidence of the people, for they are being convinced that the church does not uphold the unwise acts of its members and that its laws are the best in the world. I believe the name of Christ can best be made honorable by enforcing his law, and that all the charity we should exercise is in the law; and that whatsoever is more or less than that cometh of evil. If any one thinks this is putting it too strong, let them just read carefully the law to the church. If the saints would all do this and put the same into practice, the gospel would soon send its sound all the world around. We will wait in hope, trusting in the grace of God that we may triumph bye and bye.

In gospel bonds,

W. M. RUMEL.

CHRIST PREACHED TO THE SPIRITS IN PRISON BEFORE HIS RESURRECTION.

WE have read with much interest and profit the several articles on the above named subject. We like to see all things upon which the elders are divided in opinion thoroughly examined in order that the truth may be gleaned and separated from the chaff of erroneous views and wrong positions. We should be careful and deliberate in taking positions and should wait until we have prudently and considerately weighed the evidences and measured the worth of those of our opponents before doing so. By so doing the truth will not only be victorious and the church triumphant, but the primary object of gospel preaching will be accomplished, viz., the truth set forth in plainness, the divinity of its principles emphasized, and its invincible position demonstrated by showing the fallacy and weakness of the errors arrayed against it;—all this in meekness of spirit and righteousness of method. In examining all questions we should think calmly, dispassionately, and (if we be allowed to use the term) honestly; for the latter is strictly necessary if we would cast aside favorite notions and prejudices common to all. Careful thought is also necessary, for the mind trained to think correctly is the one likely to properly estimate and weigh the character of evidence. The writer has often been pained to see worthy elders and eloquent preachers at times mar an otherwise acceptable effort by straining a text beyond its evident meaning and thus, in the writers opinion, failing to deal justly with the word, although such was not intended, thereby weakening the force of the whole argument and lessening the good of the general effort among the thoughtful and discerning. We mention these things upon principle, without reference to any one who has written on the subject in question.

We like many of the points made in the several articles concerning the preaching of the Savior to the spirits in prison and shall try to present some deductions from them and also some scriptures on the subject. We think errors have been made on both sides of the question and we may also err, from lack of ability, time etc. We believe that Christ preached the gospel to the spirits in prison while his body was in the tomb, and that he did not exhibit his body to the prisoners; and further, that all the evidence of the scriptures is contrary to such an idea, and that while such at first glance has the appearance of being a reasonable and just procedure, it is erroneous and is a position that is not at all necessary to take in order to cope with Adventism, etc. What stronger evidences against the doctrines of soul-sleeping and annihilation can we ask than that the spirit exists separate and independent from the body, and that while in that state of separation it is conscious, able to minister and be ministered to and rejoice in the reception of the gospel? Bro. McIntosh ably presented some reasons against the theory that Christ appeared bodily to the prisoners as evidence of his power over death. See his arguments referring to Christ being "free among the dead," and of his refusal to show a sign to convince men of his Messiahship when upon the earth. Jesus is no respecter of persons.

In Herald of September first A. C. quotes the prophet Alma. We also refer to the same authority. See Alma 19: 5, 6: "Behold it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. * * * And then shall it come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise, a state of rest, etc., * * * they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise until the time of the resurrection." From these statements A. C. concludes that Christ remained in paradise until his body was resurrected; but this quotation proves too much for that theory. It is evident that Alma simply describes the general intermediate state of the dead, for he uses the significant term, "all men." In some respects Christ's case was not an exception to the general rule in this regard but in others it was. Christ did go to paradise after his death according to the promise made to the thief on the cross, but instead of remaining there to enjoy "a state of rest; a state of peace, where they (all men) rest from all their troubles, and from all care and sorrow, etc.," he continued to actively fulfill his mission of redemption and in so doing was anything but free from "care" and "rest," for from the book of Nephi, chapter 4: par. 6, 7, and 8, we learn that after his crucifixion, and previous to his resurrection, he pleaded with those left upon this land and importuned them to repent and turn from their unrighteousness unto him. Let the full account be read and it will be clearly seen that Christ enjoyed anything but "rest" and cessation from "care" during the interval between his death and resurrection; hence it is clear that Alma, in his record, simply gives an account of the general intermediate condition of men; and, contrary to A. C. "we feel safe" in denying that Jesus "rested in paradise" while his body was in the tomb. For proof that Jesus spoke unto the people and besought them to repent while his body lay in the tomb, see previous quotation from Book of Mormon, and also Helaman 5: 7.

We proceed to notice other scriptures:

"Wherefore he saith, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.)"—Eph. 4: 8-10.

The apostle Paul here specifically informs us that Christ before his ascension descended "first into the lower parts of the earth;" that before he "ascended up into heaven to glorify him who reigneth over all heavens," he "descended first (previous to the ascension spoken of in verse 10) into the lower parts of the earth." To the writer the thought that Jesus finished his "preparations to the children of men," proclaimed the acceptable year of the Lord, and preached deliverance to the captives, before he sat down on the right hand of the majesty on high to be retained by the heavens until the times of restoration of all things, seems to be more consistent than the thought that he ascended to glorify God before finishing the work which the Father had sent him to perform.

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."—Luke 4: 18.

Jesus was evidently anointed to do this work and left the glory of the Father for that purpose. We think it consistent to suppose that he finished that work before returning to the Father to make report to and be received by Him.

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison."—1 Peter 3: 18, 19.

A labored and (we think) unnecessary effort has been made upon the word "also" while endeavoring to explain this passage. The same argument may be used concerning the word "also" in Ephesians 4: 9. But if the word in verse nine proves that his descent occurred after his ascent, then by the same reasoning the word "also" in verse ten would prove that his ascent did not occur until after his descent. The word is merely used by the apostle to show the two acts of ascension and descent without reference to time. The word "first" settles the question as to the time and is a definite proof that he first descended.

John 20: 17: "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father" clearly refers to his bodily ascension. Any other interpretation would cause a conflict between this statement of Jesus and his words to the thief on the cross; also with the statements of Alma and Solomon concerning the spirits of men first going to God before being assigned to paradise or to prison, and the words of Paul in Ephesians 4: 8-10. See Luke 23: 47; Acts 7: 59; Gen. 7: 44, 45, 64. The last two citations are from the Inspired Translation. A careful examination will demonstrate that these statements cannot be harmonized by the body theory. Let us again notice 1 Peter 3: 18, 19:

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison."

This passage has been strained and construed to mean that after Christ was put to death he did not go to preach to the spirits until his body was quickened. The apostle does not say so, but simply states in effect that Christ was put to death in the flesh and "also" (an additional fact) that he was quickened by the Spirit. From a fair interpretation of this passage it does not necessarily follow that he delayed his preaching to the spirits in prison until after his body was quickened. The word "also" clearly refers to the work which Christ did by the aid of the Spirit, that by it (the Spirit) he also preached to the spirits in prison. Although that Spirit enabled him to preach and also quickened his body it does not follow that the quickening of the body occurred previous to the preaching to the spirits in prison. The two facts are stated without reference to time. This agrees with Paul's statement in Ephesians previously quoted. See the word "also" as used in Zechariah 9: 10, 11 with its contexts. Let us again glance at Luke 4: 18-21:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book, and gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened upon him. And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."

From this we learn that Jesus was anointed by the Spirit before his crucifixion, to preach to the spirits in prison. If he was not then anointed to preach to the spirits, he was also not anointed to preach the gospel to the poor, or the acceptable year of the Lord. Jesus received this power at his baptism, and possibly received other bestowments at the appearance of Moses and Elias, the various angels who ministered to him, etc. We read of many evidences that he possessed it before his death. He healed the sick, gave sight to the blind, cleansed the lepers, called back the spirits of the dead. Even the devils were subject unto him, and the material forces of the universe obeyed his commands. "Even the winds and the sea" obeyed him. We emphasize the thought, however, that before Christ would have a complete knowledge of all things and possess "all power in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28: 16-18) he probably became acquainted with them and descended below, as well as above all things in order to fill all things.

Matt. 12: 40:

"For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

The word "as" may be construed or forced to mean bodily, but we think there is no ground for so doing. Read from the 38th to the 45th verses. How was Jonah a sign to that generation? Evidently by the remarkable features attending his mission,—his being cast into the whale and his actual deliverance therefrom and his later labors among the Ninevites—which were matters of knowledge among the Jews. Those events were similar to the death, burial and resurrection of Christ. Jesus openly and constantly affirmed to the people that he should suffer death and that after three days he should rise again. "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up. But he spake of the temple of his body." His death and burial were matters which stirred up the entire nation and occurred in a time of great excitement ("this thing was not done in a corner") and were remembered to that extent that many of the people were looking for the fulfillment of his prediction to rise again. The leading men of the nation so feared the results which would follow such an event that they persuaded the governor to place a guard of soldiers at the tomb. His body was three days and three nights there and he was thus a sign unto that generation. The apostles as especial witnesses of his resurrection pressed these things upon the people as a sign or evidence that Jesus was the Christ. Those who believed on the Messiah and heard his statements would remember these predictions, and seeing that they were fulfilled concerning his resurrection from the grave, would also know that all must be fulfilled and that he would indeed "be in the heart of the earth," filling in its entirety the full scope of his great mission. We repeat that the well known and attested facts of his death, burial and resurrection were a sign to that generation. His going to the heart of the earth was a matter of belief—faith—with them, the basis of which was the facts which were actually fulfilled before their eyes. While his body was in the tomb he by his spirit went to God, thence to paradise, from whence he "first descended into the lower parts of the earth"—"the heart of the earth;" after which he "ascended far above all heavens that he might fill all things." If he descended to the heart of the earth after his body was resurrected, then we fail to see how that event was a sign unto that generation. They had no means of observing such a fact. But the death, burial and evident resurrection was such a sign that they were condemned by it for not repenting in the face of the clear evidences of the divinity of the one greater than Jonah, and of whom all the prophets had borne witness by foretelling many of the incidents of his birth, life and death. In the passage under consideration Jesus at three times calls attention to the condemnation that would follow them for rejecting him. No proof of the "body" theory can be adduced from the terms "Son of Man" and "Jesus" as referring to the body, for Christ was known by such names before his birth.

There is no doubt that Christ was crucified on Friday, and we accept that day as the correct one. But we do not think it is necessary to prove that his body remained in the grave three days of twenty-four hours each. It may be that three days of twelve hours each are meant as Bro. Mapes stated in a late article, but we understand that a portion of a day answers for the day in this case, provided that Christ's body was in the grave a portion of the first, all of the second (necessarily) and but a part of the third day. Such an interpretation harmonizes the Scriptures, while any other which we have yet seen fails, in our judgment at least, so to do. In law a portion of a day answers for the full day in cases in anywise resembling the one under consideration. The writer was at one time inclined to accept the body theory but after an examination of the matter, reached the conclusions above stated.

In this connection we wish to state that the general understanding among the Saints and elders has been that spirit ministers to spirit, and tabernacled spirits minister to those dwelling in the flesh, except in instances where persons have been privileged to temporarily leave their bodies, as in the possible case of Paul, mentioned in 2 Cor. 12: 1-5, and in other like instances. In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 107, paragraph 27 we have the following statement: "If they live here let them live unto me; and if they die let them die unto me; for they shall rest from all their labors here, and shall continue their works." From this we learn that those passing from this life who have been engaged in the Lord's work here will continue their works, very probably as un-resurrected spirits ministering to those in the spirit world. This does not conflict with Alma's statement concerning them. The word "here" just quoted is significant in this connection.

We now give an extract from a sermon delivered by Joseph the Martyr. We quote from the Times and Seasons, volume 4 page 331:

"Conference reassembled, and listened with profound attention to an impressive discourse from President Joseph Smith, commemorative of the decease of James Adams, Esq., late of this city, and an honorable, worthy, useful and esteemed member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He spoke of the importance of our understanding the reasons and causes of our exposure to the vicissitudes of life, and of death; and the designs and purposes of God in our coming into the world, our sufferings here, and our departure hence—that it is but reasonable to suppose that God would reveal something in reference to the matter—the ignorance of the world in reference to their true condition, and relation. Reading the experience of others, or the revelations given to them, can never give us a comprehensive view of our condition and true relation to God. Knowledge of these things can only be obtained by experience in these things, through the ordinance of God set forth for that purpose. He remarked that the disappointment of hopes and expectations at the resurrection, would be indescribably dreadful. That the organization of the spiritual and heavenly worlds, and of spiritual and heavenly beings was agreeably to the most perfect order and harmony—that their limits and bounds were fixed irrevocably, and voluntarily subscribed to by themselves—subscribed to upon the earth—hence the importance of embracing and subscribing to principles of eternal truth. He assured the saints that truth in reference to these matters can, and may be known through the revelations of God in the way of his ordinances, and in answer to prayer. The Hebrew church 'came unto the spirits of just men made perfect, and unto an innumerable company of angels, unto God the Father of all, and to Jesus Christ the Mediator of the New Covenant;' but what they learned has not been, and could not have been written. What object was gained by this communication with the spirits of the just, etc.? It was the established order of the kingdom of God—the keys of power and knowledge were with them to communicate to the saints—hence the importance of understanding the distinction between the spirits of the just, and angels. Spirits can only be revealed in flaming fire, or glory. Angels have advanced farther—their light and glory being tabernacled, and hence appear in bodily shape.

Concerning brother James Adams, he remarked that it should appear strange that so good and so great a man was hated. The deceased ought never to have had an enemy. But so it was wherever light shone, it stirred up darkness. Truth and error, good and evil, can not be reconciled. Judge Adams had been a most intimate friend. He had anointed him to the Patriarchal power—to receive the keys of knowledge, and power, by revelation to himself. He had had revelations concerning his departure, and had gone to a more important work—of opening up a more effectual door for the dead. The spirits of the just are exalted to a greater and more glorious work—hence they are blessed in departing hence. Enveloped in flaming fire, they are not far from us, and know and understand our thoughts, feelings and motions, and are often pained therewith."

We also quote some critical writers upon the subject in question. Professor Taylor Lewis says:

"We are taught that there was a work of Christ in Hades. He descended into Hades: He makes proclamation 'ekheruxen' in Hades to those who are there 'in ward'"

Alford says:

"I understand these words (1 Peter 3: 18, 20) to say that our Lord, in his disembodied state did go to the place of detention of departed spirits, and did there announce his work of redemption, preach salvation in fact, to the disembodied spirits of those who refused to obey the voice of God when the judgment of the flood was hanging over them." Hailey's Discrepancies of the Bible, p. 192.

These citations concerning Christ and others are certainly in harmony with the belief that Christ in spirit ministered to the spirits in prison. We have not exhausted the subject but believe that a careful study of the scriptures will still further substantiate the position taken.

Since writing the above the following from the conference minutes of the early church as recorded in the Times and Seasons has been brought to our attention. It occurs in the report of a funeral sermon delivered at Nauvoo, October 3d, 1841, by Joseph the Martyr on the occasion of the death of Robert B. Thompson. We quote as follows:

"He explained a difference between an angel and a ministering spirit; the one a resurrected or translated body, with its spirit, ministering to embodied spirits; the other a disembodied spirit, visiting and ministering to disembodied spirits. Jesus Christ became a ministering spirit, while his body [was] laying in the sepulchre, to the spirits in prison, to fulfil an important part of his mission, without which he could not have perfected his work or entered into his rest. After his resurrection, he appeared as an angel to his disciples, etc."

The Seer, to whom was given such a comprehensive knowledge of the future state as is recorded and in the Vision (D.

and C., sec. 76,) could certainly speak knowingly and authoritatively upon the question. We notice that the latter clauses of the foregoing extract are in harmony with what we have presented concerning Christ fulfilling an important part of his mission, viz., preaching to the spirits in prison before entering into his rest.

THE EARTH THE EVERLASTING ABODE OF MAN.—No. III.

BY ELDER E. STAFFORD.

WE have seen according to the revealed word of God unto his servants the prophets, that he had a purpose in creating the earth; viz, that it should be inhabited, and that those intellectual beings that he formed to inhabit it should do so in glory, in perfect peace and happiness, after a time allotted to them for a probation or trial to see whether they would obey the conditions that God had based the reception of that glory upon, even the gospel of the Son of God. But God revealed unto his servant John that his people would not receive a fulness of glory until the earth is celestialized or made new, when the tabernacle of God is with men and he dwells with them, even God the Father, when he that sitteth upon the throne says, "Behold I make all things new;" when the city, New Jerusalem that cometh down from God out of heaven, shall have no need of the light of the sun, nor the moon to shine in it, for the glory of the Lord shall lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof; and at that time "he that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God and he shall be my son." If they inherit all things there is no greater glory that they can inherit.

Concerning the purpose of the Lord in creating the earth, it has been more clearly revealed to the latter day Seer. In the 85th section, 4th paragraph of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord says to his servant, "Now verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead, and the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him that quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed that the poor and meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created, and for this intent are they sanctified." Here it is clearly made known that the purpose of the earth's creation was, that it might be crowned with glory, even the presence of God the Father, and that the righteous whose bodies are quickened by the Spirit of God, through obedience to the law of the celestial kingdom, may possess it for ever and ever. The glory and consequent conditions upon which it was offered to fallen man, all of Adam's posterity to the latest generation, were, are, and will be eligible to, for it is written, "God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." But the history in God's word shows that not many, in comparison to the number of the children of men who have lived upon the earth, have paid heed to the conditions of the glory offered, and consequently have come short of that glory. We have seen that in Noah's day, the rejection of the principles of righteousness which were preached by his progenitors and by him, culminated in the inhabitants of the earth corrupting their way before the Lord which brought about their destruction from the earth. In a comparatively short period from this the descendants of Noah had all gone into idolatry with the exception of Melchisedek and his city, and Abraham and his wife. Abraham's father was an idolator, hence the Lord commanded him to leave his father's house and go to a land that he would show him, and God decreed that if Abraham would walk before him and be perfect, He would make of him a great nation, &c.

Abraham did serve the Lord faithfully, and true to His promise the Lord raised up of him a great nation who, when they served the Lord were greatly blessed of him above all the nations of the earth. But through their wickedness, as we have seen, Israel was cast out of His sight and Judah scattered over all the earth. In view of this proneness of the children of men to reject the service of their God, and in consequence casting from them this glory offered by him, the writer believes that the Savior uttered the admonition, "Repent therefore, and enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. Because straight is the gate and narrow the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Not only because of the proneness of men before his incarnation, but looking down to his second coming he beheld that the majority of men would choose to do wickedly; hence, foreseeing the condition at that time he said, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man." Few found the straight or narrow way in Noah's day, or if they did they departed therefrom and acted rebelliously against their Creator; and few, in comparison to the inhabitants of the earth, will find it when Christ comes to reign on earth.

"Then you have," says my skeptical friend, "made a clear case that, although your Bible teaches that Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost, he failed, for the devil has prevailed against him in that he has secured the major part of the earth's inhabitants." From the teachings of those who have professed to be the disciples of Christ and the expounders of his word, you have, no doubt, my friend, arrived at this conclusion, and take it for granted that the Christian's Bible warrants you in your conclusion. For, if their teaching is correct that there is only one heaven, or place of reward, and one place or degree of punishment, and only one probation, then your conclusion is correct. But the revealed word of God to the children of men does not warrant them in arriving at any such conclusion. Paul did not so understand it, for as recorded in 2 Cor. 5: 10. He says: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive a reward of the deeds done in the body; things according to what he hath done, whether good or bad." If every one receives according to what they have done whether good or bad, there must be different degrees of reward according to the different degrees of good done; and different degrees of punishment according to the different degrees of bad of evil done. This harmonizes with the attribute of justice in the great Creator.

Our natures revolt against the injustice, the unwise and unreasonable teachings of professed christians who charge our God with making no distinction between a heinous crime and a petty one; between the punishment of the murderer and the petty thief; between the lecherous libertine who has wrought so much distress and woe in the various circles in which his pestilential presence has been allowed to move, and the virtuous man who, when he died, did not happen to belong to any of the various churches professing to be of Christ; and the still greater injustice and insult to heaven's King, to say that he authorizes any of his servants to teach that a man who follows his evil passions all his life until finally he kills his fellow man, and that just prior to, or upon the scaffold, with the black cap ready to be placed over his head, he can profess penitence, receive forgiveness not only for that heinous offence, but for all the devilry he may have done during his worthless life, and be taken to dwell with the holy throng surrounding the throne of God; while the man that lives a good moral life, feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, alleviates the sorrows and woes of his fellow man with a willing heart and ready hand, if he should chance to die suddenly, or from choice does not avail himself of those services aforementioned, and dies, as they say, out of the pale of the Church, he goes to hell and there suffers the same never-ending torment with the murderer, the adulterer, the whoremonger, sorcerer, idolator and all liars, &c., &c. Is there any justice in that!

They teach also that that punishment is never-ending. The writer does not wonder that reasonable, intelligent men and women should not want anything to do with, or believe there is such a God. The God of the Scriptures is represented as a far different being from that. They reveal him as possessing in perfection the attributes of justice and judgment, mercy and love. Is that judgment just that condemns all men indiscriminately to one punishment whatever the nature of the offense? Is He merciful, or of a loving character that condemns them to suffer the same to all eternity?

The gospel, or plan of salvation to fallen man, must harmonize with the character and attributes of Him who sent it to the earth; or, if that which purports to be the gospel does not we may know it is not of him. "The author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him," when sending forth his disciples into all the world to proclaim the gospel, commanded them thus: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The universal application of this gospel is clearly made known, language could not make it plainer—it is to every creature (man). Agency is well defined in the acceptance, or rejection. He that believeth the gospel when preached, and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not will have nothing further to do with it, and for that refusal will be damned or condemned. In that refusal he refuses to forsake his rebellion against God, refuses to repent of his sins—sin is the transgression of the law—and God has given commandments against all evil practices, and those who commit them sin or rebel against him. One of the principles of the gospel is repentance, as it is written that "all men everywhere shall repent," and he that refuses to repent or forsake his services to the evil one and his carnal nature, must be condemned to suffer the penalty of the broken law. There is attached to all law, human or divine, a penalty for the transgression of the same. Were it not the case, the law would be null and void, for refractory persons would take no notice of it.

Human wisdom aims to be just in affixing penalties, but may often err. Infinite wisdom can not err, therefore every penalty is commensurate to the sin committed, or to the transgression of the law.

The Lord revealed to Enoch that he had prepared for those Antediluvian sinners a prison, and affixed the time that they should be confined there, and their release would be upon condition of their repentance. "But behold these that thine eyes are upon shall perish in the floods; and behold I will shut them up; a prison have I prepared for them, and that which I have chosen has plead before my face; wherefore he suffereth for their sins, inasmuch as they will repent in the day that my chosen shall return unto me. And until that day they shall be in torment." Gen. 7: 44, 45. In fulfillment of this, God revealed unto his servant Peter that, after the crucifixion, Christ the chosen one went and preached to the spirits in prison, some of whom were disobedient in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing. Let us quote it: "For Christ also once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, that he might bring us to God. For which cause also, [that he might bring them to God] he went and preached to the spirits in prison; some of whom were disobedient in the days of Noah, etc." 1 Peter 3: 18-20. If the reader wants to know what Christ preached, the next chapter and sixth verse will enlighten him: "Because of this is the gospel preached to them who are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live in the spirit according to the will of God."

We find then in the economy of God, that he has ordained that the dead shall have the gospel preached unto them. Christ went to preach to the spirits of some who were disobedient in the days of Noah.

The phrase "some of whom" signifies that not all who were in prison, were disobedient in the days of Noah; but evidently some were disobedient before and after that time, (as we have read where Enoch stated that some in Adam's day had refused to repent and were in torment) and some after those days, showing that this preaching to the spirits in prison was a general practice ordained of God, and that it was a general practice to place such delinquents in prison. God said to Enoch that their torment should cease in that day when Christ should preach unto them if they would repent. Repentance is a cardinal principle of the gospel, indeed in the strictest sense it comprehends all the gospel, for when a man ceases to sin, he ceases to transgress the laws of his God, and as a consequence he begins to keep those laws. In this sense (the writer believes) the Lord through the latter-day Seer said, "preach nothing but repentance to this generation." Peter says that it was to bring those prisoners to God that Christ went and preached unto them. He must have preached repentance, and they must have had a chance to avail themselves of the overtures of mercy, and thus be freed from their torment.

This, to the writer, looks as though men were granted another probation after death, and to his mind, herein is the justice and judgment and mercy and love of God made manifest in their behalf.

A portion of our text says, "The things revealed belong to us." The Lord having revealed unto his servants the location of the place as well as the different degrees of punishment, it certainly was revealed that the children of men might know concerning the same and profit thereby. Unto Ezekiel, as recorded in the thirty-first and thirty-second chapters of his book was revealed the location of hell, (the prison, or pit), and that is said to be in the "nether" parts of the earth. The word "nether" is defined by Webster to mean "lower." The earth being round, the lower part of it from any portion of its circumference would be the centre.

The Lord revealed unto Isaiah as recorded in his twenty fourth chapter as follows: "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord will punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered together in the pit, and after many days they shall be visited." Here it is plainly made known that the punishment of offenders will be upon the earth, not upon any other planet or any other locality whatever.

That there are degrees of punishment is also clearly revealed in Deuteronomy 32: 22: "For a fire is kindled in mine anger and shall burn to the lowest hell." The saying "lowest" admits of comparison, and there can not be a comparison of anything without there is something to compare with it; hence when we read lowest hell, the mind grasps the idea of there being one or more not so low as the lowest, so that herein is proven two degrees, or places of punishment at least.

The mission of Christ to the prisoners in the pit, is clearly made known by the prophets. Isaiah in his forty-second chapter, sixth and seventh verses speaks of it in this wise: "I the Lord have called thee [Christ] in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles. To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house."

In the sixty-first chapter and 1st verse, he says: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

In the fourth chapter of Luke it is recorded that the Savior standing up in the synagogue to read on the Sabbath day, as their custom was when handed the book of the prophet Isaiah, read this same that we have quoted concerning himself, and closing the book, handed it to the minister and after being seated said, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." This day, or at this time, is this scripture fulfilled, for the Spirit of the Lord is upon me [the Lord gave his Spirit not by measure unto him, or it was not limited] and he hath anointed me to preach glad tidings to the meek, and sent me to bind up the broken hearted. This part of his mission he accomplished on the earth, as we hear him preaching, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," etc. But the other part he could not perform until he had fulfilled the covenant he had made with the Father, in giving his blood a ransom for all, as the Lord said through the prophet Zechariah 9: 11, 12: "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein there is no water. Turn ye to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope," etc.

Here the prisoners are admonished to turn to the stronghold (the Savior) for their hope to be realized, and that could not be realized until he had shed his blood, for it was by the blood of his covenant that the prisoners were to be sent forth.

In Hebrew 2: 14, it is written: "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, even the devil." It seems to the writer from this text, that the devil had obtained power over death, probably by usurpation, and being the acknowledged prince of those fallen spirits that represented the power of hell or the prison, presumed upon the right to hold all prisoners sent there, and therefore assumed the powers or keys of death and hell. It seems also that Christ could only obtain power through death, to release the prisoners, the death of the cross; even by the blood of his covenant, and after that he went to the prison to accomplish the latter part of the declaration of the prophet, "to preach liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." He informed his servant John upon Patmos that he had in his possession the keys of death and hell; and this too, after his decease. This being the case, he could open and close the doors at will and had thus begun the process of destroying the power of the devil in that locality, and will accomplish it when the last enemy, death, is destroyed; when death and hell are cast into the lake of fire and brimstone with the devil, the beast and the false prophet.

But the deliverance of these prisoners will depend upon the use of their agency, in choosing to repent when the gospel is preached unto them.

The Savior, according to Peter, preached to the Antediluvian spirits; and Ezekiel thirty-second says concerning those prisoners whom he was enumerating, that had gone down to hell, or the pit, that "the strong among the mighty shall speak to him [or them] out of the midst of hell, with them that help him," etc.

It appears to the writer, by this saying that Christ whom we conceive to be "the strong among the mighty," will not only speak or preach to them, but that there will be helpers—the same as there was on earth—to preach to the prisoners. The prisoners whom the Father spoke to Enoch about had the privilege of being released from prison when Christ, the chosen one, had died and was returning to Him. Other prisoners the word says, shall be released, being Christ's, or having obeyed his or his servants preaching when Christ shall come to reign on the earth, some of whom are the heathen nations and them that knew no law when upon earth; they shall come forth in the first resurrection. It does not follow that they will enjoy the same glory or power that the first fruits do; they who have abided the celestial law in their probation on the earth.

Nay, after the first fruits are caught up to meet Christ in the air at the sound of the first trump, when he shall come in the clouds of heaven with his mighty angels to reign on the earth; another trump shall sound, and then these prisoners shall come forth as recorded in the eighty-fifth section of Doctrine and Covenants, twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth paragraphs. In the following paragraph it says: "And again another trump shall sound which is the third trump; and then cometh the spirits of men who are to be judged and are found under condemnation; and these are the rest of the dead, [spoken of by John in Rev. 20th chap.], and they live not again until the thousand years are ended, neither again until the end of the earth." These prisoners have been more criminal in their acts in the body, and are deserving of greater punishment, and not being able or willing to abide the terrestrial law could not rise with those who had, but must wait till they have paid or suffered the punishment due their acts before they come forth from the place of their consignment. Concerning events after the end of the thousand years, and after the "little season," it is written: "And I saw the dead, both small and great, stand before God; and the books were open; and another book was opened which is the book of life [it was the book of life and not death] and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to his works." These were the rest or remainder of the dead, and the Lord revealed unto John that they should not live again until a certain time. That time, we see, will have come where death and hell and the sea deliver them up. The others lived again when Christ came to reign on the earth, and their living again was the uniting of spirit and body, which is called the redemption of the soul, or the resurrection of the dead. These other parties then, to live again, must be redeemed, or spirit and body be united by the power of the resurrection, and they live again to die no more; for Christ will have put down all rule that is not of Him, will have triumphed over his enemy, destroyed forever his power and consigned him to the place prepared of God the Father from the beginning. Christ will have taken away the sin of the world, which, in the writer's opinion, is summed up in the word disobedience, and every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

These (the rest of the dead) come forth in the resurrection of the unjust, or in the last resurrection, through the triumph of the Lamb, having confessed that Jesus is the Lord, the Savior, and that the ways of the Lord are just, and they die no more, but are judged according to the good they have done, be it little or much, and receive the reward accordingly.

BORN.

BROWN.—August 24th, 1888, to Bro. Elmer and Sr. Lottie Brown, a son; blessed at Providence, R. I., Sunday, Nov. 18th, by Elders M. H. Bond and E. O. Toombs, and named Edmond Myron.

BLESSED.

At Fall River, Massachusetts, Sunday, November 4th, 1888, by Elders M. H. Bond and John Gilbert; George Matthew, infant son of Esther and Richard Milward.

MARRIED.

BEARSE—CAHOON.—At the home of the parents of the bridegroom, Harwich, Mass., November 22d, 1888, Bro. Thomas W. Bearse to Miss Annie L. Cahoon, by Elder John Smith.

DIED.

FOSTER.—At Providence, R. I., Saturday, November 10th, 1888, Sr. Almira Foster; aged 82 years, 4 months and 28 days. She was born in Chester, Massachusetts, confirmed a member of the church September 24th, 1871, by Elders C. N.

Brown, Josiah Ells and Stephen H. Morse; no statement or date concerning baptism in confirmation certificate given by C. N. Brown. Funeral service November 12th, conducted by M. H. Bond. Our aged Sister's face was beautiful to look upon, signifying her departure in peace and into rest.

DERRY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, November 24th, 1888, after an illness of years, Sr. Louisa, wife of Bro. George Derry, in the sixty-seventh year of her age. She was born at Derby, England, September 15th, 1822; heard the truth and obeyed it in the spring of 1849, being baptized by Elder Charles Derry, and received the assurance of life by the manifestation of the Spirit. With her family she came to America with others to go to Utah; but circumstances, under providence, caused her to stop, and the family settled in Nebraska, where in time they heard of the Reorganization, when she renewed her covenant receiving the rite of baptism at the hands of Elder Howard Smith July 6th, 1865. She was blessed with a testimony of the work, and continued faithful to her covenant till death. She was kind and affectionate as a wife and mother; charitable and forbearing as a neighbor and friend.

TRIMMER.—Sister Elizabeth Trimmer. Born November 1st, 1805, in Staffordshire, England. She was baptized September 10th, 1867, in Alpine county, California, by E. C. Brand. She died October 30th, 1888, of old age, in full faith of the work of God. She was buried in Mottville Cemetery. Funeral services by Bro. Thomas Daley. She leaves three sons, a daughter, and a husband aged eighty-five, to mourn their loss. She also left quite a number of grand children and great-grand children. She joined the church in England in the time of Joseph the martyr. She emigrated to America in the year 1844.

INDEPENDENCE GAZETTE, A Weekly Newspaper Published by BEN. J. LUFF & ORICK, at INDEPENDENCE, MO. Price $1 per year.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church, not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to 68 to that under Diocetian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Special attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

PREACH AGAINST SIN.

A BROTHER inquires if it is wisdom for the ministry to speak against the prevailing sins and vices of the day. To this we reply heartily, yes. But they should be certain, first, as to what is vice and sin. "Sin is the transgression of law." Therefore, whatever opposes or violates the law of the Lord is sin, and should be spoken of as such and the evils thereof explained, displayed and reproved with plainness, sobriety, and in the spirit of love.

The term vice commonly means immoral conduct. It is most proper to speak against everything of this nature, for Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; therefore his ministers should seek to explain the evil tendencies and results of all immoral conduct, showing that the fruits of such are always evil and can never bring happiness in this life nor in the life to come. But the minister should be certain, first, as to what is vice, lest he magnifies a minor fault or defect into a great and malignant evil. Everything should be treated for what it really and truly is. Wisdom and knowledge and charity should rule in such matters. For what some think to be sin and vice are not so to others who are equally upright and conscientious. What the Scriptures and history and our own experiences prove to be sin and vice, we should treat as such, but studiously avoid extremes and being "righteous over much," or being of that class who "strain at a gnat."

"All unrighteousness is sin;" and whatever is immoral is vice. These things should be explained, exposed and reproved by the minister. This, indeed, is the first work in importance, as may be seen in the fact that God gave to Moses the moral law, on tables of stone, as first in rank and time; also that Christ ministered first, in rank and time, his wonderful sermon on the mount. In and on these, respectively, were based and builded the two covenants

—the one from Sinai through Moses, and the other from heaven through Christ our Lord. Therefore the minister should display "the beauty of holiness" found in the requirements of the Lord, and skillfully and lovingly expose the sinfulness of sin, and show that sin can never procure happiness and good.

Indeed, if more time and attention were given to these matters, and less to church organization, the ordinances, and technical niceties about impracticable questions, and matters afar off, which minister strife, contention, and words without profit, it would be far better for the minister the church and the world.

All mankind need to be taught that the wrath of God is kindled against men, not because, as some say, man is born into the world totally depraved, but because men sin against the laws of their being, the laws of good society, the laws of the land, the gospel law—the law of God.

Paul says: "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness" . . . and "because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. . . . Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, spiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful" —(Rom. 1: 18, 21, 29, 30, 31)—these are some of the chief reasons why God is displeased with men, and why they are sinners in his sight and suffer his condemnation. Paul says further: "But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit such things, . . . who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life; but to them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honor, and peace to every man that worketh good; to the Jew first, and also the Gentile; for there is no respect of persons with God."

—(Rom. 2: 2, 6-11. To this we may add what he says in Ephesians 5: 3-6,—"But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh Saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, which are not convenient, but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolator, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience." Here, then, are the true and Scriptural causes which awake and move the wrath of God against men. These things should be faithfully taught, in the spirit of love, with wisdom and skill and long suffering. These are matters of first importance in gospel teaching, both in and out of the church; for all men must learn to "cease to do evil, and learn to do well," otherwise they can not be "reconciled to God," but will remain in blindness and in sin, and will suffer both loss and condemnation. Yes; the ministry should preach always, at suitable times, and in proper places, against all manner of sin and evil; and the very best way to do this is to exalt the righteous requirements of God and faithfully portray "the beauty of holiness." Paul and the early Christian ministry "reasoned with the people out of the Scriptures," and to-day this is most proper. History and personal experience furnish much valuable matter, by way of illustration, to give point and force to gospel ministers' labors, and a wise, studious, spiritual servant of God will never lack for suitable texts, subjects, nor proofs with which to "reason of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," causing sinners to tremble in their contemplation and abhorrence of sin. The world greatly needs this kind of preaching, and so do professing disciples of Christ, for all should be thoroughly and constantly taught to "love righteousness, and hate iniquity."

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL?

A BROTHER asks, "What is the gospel, and what constitutes the gospel teaching which the elders should preach?"

The gospel is the good tidings of salvation in Christ Jesus, for the living and the dead, and comprises faith in God, in Christ, and in the Holy Spirit, as set forth in the Scriptures; also repentance, which means ceasing to do evil and learning to do well; baptism of water and of the Spirit; the laying on of hands for the purposes set forth in the Scriptures; the resurrection of the just and the unjust in their order and times; the eternal judgment of God upon all men according to their desires and their works; living by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; living in the Spirit and walking in the Spirit; teaching and practicing every principle of truth and righteousness in its time and place.

John the Baptist, and Jesus our Lord and his apostles, preached the gospel, a record of which we have in the New Testament. Besides this, the ancient seers, prophets, priests, and patriarchs, taught gospel principles in a large degree as may be seen in their teachings as quoted by New Testament ministers of the word, and such as enter into and are nearly related to the plan and principles and methods and administrations of salvation in Christ Jesus.

The gospel, in its broadest sense, comprehends all the principles of truth and righteousness which pertain to the service of God in Christ Jesus and to the plan of salvation and eternal life and glory in Him. It has its first principles, and it also has advanced principles which lead on and up, progressively, in exact harmony with the first, until eternal perfection in Christ Jesus is attained and the redeemed ones inherit all things that the Father possesses, forever and ever.

We teach children according to their capacity and wants, and needs; first, primary principles; then intermediate; and then the higher and highest ones. Paul was grieved that the Corinthians made slow progress in the divine life, and said: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto you were not able to bear it, [receive it.—Ins. Trans.]; neither now are ye able."—1 Cor. 3: 1, 2. Therefore, wise gospel ministers will study to rightly divide the word, giving to every one a portion of meat (instruction) in due season; for "there is a time and a season" to teach every gospel principle.

Only the word of God and the Spirit of God can give the needed wisdom, understanding and knowledge requisite to preach the gospel acceptably and in a saving manner; therefore it is written that the ministry "shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in which is the fulness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them; and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit, ye shall not teach."—D. and C. 42: 5.

By this passage we learn that "the fulness of the gospel" is in the Bible and Book of Mormon, both or either of them, and also that "the covenants and church articles" must be observed and obeyed by the Saints. It follows, then, that what is set forth in these books as the gospel of Christ should be taught as such, in their times and in their seasons, as the Spirit of God may lead the ministry, each minister officiating in his own office and calling, and not invading the office and calling of others, nor attempting to minister without due authority nor without the Spirit.

When this is done, the ministry will preach "what constitutes the gospel," the Holy Spirit will attend it, the power of God will be manifest in converting souls and confirming the word, and great assurance will be given of God to those He gathers into the fold of Christ.

SYNOPSIS OF A DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY
PRES JOSEPH SMITH AT LAMONI,
IOWA, DECEMBER 1st.

THE speaker did not confine himself to any one particular subject, but presented matter suitable both to members and non-members of the church, as many of each class were present.

The first part of his discourse was devoted mainly to the doctrine of the Laying on of Hands, concerning which he stated that when this principle of the gospel as taught by the Savior was pressed upon the attention of religious teachers by the Latter Day Saints, they were forced to admit that it was a Bible doctrine, although they ignored it and even went so far as to decry the teaching of it and declared it to be unnecessary as a principle in God's economy.

He emphasized the recorded statement that when the apostles at Jerusalem sent Peter and John unto Samaria to lay hands upon the converts of Philip that they might receive the Holy Ghost, those apostles had but just left the feet of the Savior, for it was but shortly before that occurrence that Christ had been with them after his resurrection, giving them instruction in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Hence the blindness and evident falsity of a philosophy which would deny the correctness of the teachings of those men whom the Master had so carefully educated and qualified to build up his kingdom and preach the gospel in all the world, to every creature.

In this connection the speaker made a comparison which we think will be especially interesting to the Saints, and as President Smith was about to visit California and Utah to engage in ministerial labor his utterances on this occasion were significant. Referring to the doctrine of the Laying on of Hands and the necessity of its being taught and practiced in this day he quoted the statement of the Apostle Paul, namely:

"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1: 8, 9.

Reasoning from this that no man, be he whomsoever he may be, had any right to be recognized as a teacher sent from God if he should present a doctrine that was not in strict harmony with that taught in the Word of God, he related that when in Utah upon a mission the sons of Joseph Smith had declared that, while they had never discovered proper evidence of their father being guilty of teaching the doctrine of polygamy, but that if he did so teach he did wrong; and that as their father would have to answer for his deeds, so would they have to abide the results of their own acts. To this reply was made that, "We do not propose to question anything which was done by that man of God."

Pres. Smith here emphasized in a striking manner the necessity of the people abiding in the faith as laid down in the books, stating that under no circumstances whatever would they be justified in accepting that which was contrary to that which was written; that if he should present anything unto them contrary thereto, and even declare that an angel stood by him and gave him such a revelation, they had better reply, "Well, Brother Joseph, we will wait awhile before we accept it, and be sure that we are not deceived." He here repeated a characteristic statement which he had made to a person while in Utah: A Brighamite had asked him plainly if he would not accept the doctrine of polygamy if an angel should declare it unto him. To the astonishment of the questioner he replied that he would tell that angel to go back and tell the Lord that he would not preach polygamy or anything else which was contrary to what the Lord had previously revealed, and that he should feel perfectly safe in so doing, for at the judgment bar he could open the books and ask the Lord if He could consistently condemn him for adhering strictly to what He himself had revealed and which He had acted upon on three different occasions in peopling the earth?

He called attention to the incidents recorded in the thirteenth chapter of Deuteronomy and first Kings where a safeguard to Israel and to all future generations was given in those strict commands of the Lord to govern the people in the acceptance of any revelation, or dream, or sign purporting to be from God. In 1 Kings, chapter thirteen, we have the instance of a prophet, authorized of God, who was strictly charged what to do and what not to do. Another prophet endeavored to dissuade him from strictly following God's commands. He refused at first to disobey, but finally when told by the prophet that an angel told him thus and so, he yielded, and for thus yielding to that which was contrary to what he knew to be the word of the Lord to him, he was slain and thus paid the debt of his own folly.

President Smith said that the word of God to him had been that polygamy was an abomination; the written word also thus declared. The Savior had replied to the tempter, "It is written," and he proposed to follow His example. He had called the attention of the Utah people to these things from the beginning, and expected to again do so; and if ever the Reorganization found Bro. Joseph receiving or teaching that which is contrary to the written word, they should assert themselves and flatly refuse to yield their sense of truth and liberty to any such proceedings. He did not apprehend that God ever had or ever would send an angel with a revelation to any man contradicting or conflicting with a former revelation, but that if any man, or even "an angel with a drawn sword," should make such a claim, that the people should see to it for their own safety that they refuse to receive such teaching. For Paul says that though himself "or an angel from heaven" teach contrary to or different from what he had taught and the church had received, "let him be accursed."

BRO. D. MEREDITH wrote from the Aberaman branch, Wales, October 14th. The prospects of the church there had been made somewhat difficult to predict, owing to the efforts of one William G. Jarman against Mormonism in general, and the Utah phase of it in particular. Mr. Jarman had been a member of the church in the valleys, had come out of it and is lecturing through England and Wales, with panoramic views illustrating his lectures. He is very bitter, and does not properly make distinction between the Reorganization and the Utah Polygamic church; at least, he had not done so when Bro. Meredith met him; but after that Mr. Jarman agreed as follows:

"William Jarman will now protect the Reorganization. He has it printed in his book: 'Joseph Smith, the Seer, saw and said Brigham will play the devil with the church and lead it to hell. Fallen Saints who trust in man now board and lodge in a salt land. (Jer. 17: 5, 6). The whole land thereof is brimstone and salt, and burning like Sodom and Gormorah. (Deut. 29: 23). These Josephites repudiate the polygamy, incest, murder, and crime of the Brighamite gang of infernal curs; and though I unsparingly dissect the abscess, lay bare Utah devilism, and drub the lawless banditti severely, I faithfully portray the Brighamites only, whose creed and practice defy law and order, and spare the Josephites who conform to law, and are good citizens, and well worthy of respect. Could Josephite missionaries disseminate their principles among the Utah fanatics, it would do more than anything else possibly can do toward the overthrow of this hell upon earth. See my chapter on the remedy."

Mr. Jarman is trying to present Utah Mormonism in a sensational and hard light, and uses harsh language; we see no reason, however, why the Reorganization should be made to bear, even indirectly, reproach that is due to those whose actions have shown their departure from the original faith. We are glad Bro. Meredith met Mr. Jarman, if good shall result therefrom.

WE learn by letters from Bro. Peter Andersen that he proposes to suspend publishing the Sandhedens Banner, for a time at least. The reasons for suspending the Banner are; that it has been a great task on Bro. Andersen's time, and imposed much labor to provide suitable matter, edit and prepare what has been furnished by others, in which labor, he has been almost entirely alone. The second reason is that the Banner has kept running a little and a little more behind in its subscriptions, until Bro. Andersen deemed it wise not to incur further indebtedness for it.

Bro. Andersen has done nobly, and has kept the little Banner flying under great and constant disadvantages; he was determined to succeed, so far as the literary conduct of the paper was concerned. He has incurred at times some personal expense, has provided copy and read proof while in the field, moving from place to place, and has been at times obliged to shorten his ministerial efforts to keep the work on the Banner up to time; and for his labor and patience he is entitled to commendation. He is of the opinion that the Scandinavian Saints are quite able to support a small paper, if sufficiently interested to do so. It will take more effort, however, on the part of those who care to see one published, than has been exhibited for the Banner in the few months past.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In a letter dated December 4th, from Clinton, Iowa, Bro. J. S. Roth writes:

"I find in my travels many who have bought a book which is canvassed for by Jobe Brown, entitled 'The Wild West.' On pages 436-7 it says that in 1857, while Buffalo Bill was crossing the plains, twenty Danites overtook them; that Joe Smith was their leader, and he robbed them and burned the train, etc., etc. The Saints who purchased the book are very indignant about it and want me to write to the Herald and publish the fraud, as it is sold for a true history."

Joseph Smith was never on the plains and he died in 1844, thirteen years before this alleged robbery is said to have occurred.

Bro. H. A. Rudd writes from Crawford, Nebraska, November 20th, as follows:

"Our (Evergreen) branch is not in as flourishing condition as I would like to see it, owing to the members being very much scattered; but we look forward to an increase in our membership soon. We think that perhaps some Saints looking for a home might do well here, as the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad has begun grading on their line to the mines in Wyoming and Dakota, which will give employment for men that have to labor for the first year while opening a new farm. Bro. Lewis and family, from Glidden, Iowa, have arrived and selected a claim and are very well satisfied with the country."

Bro. James Cook writes from Downs, Osborne county, Kansas:

"There are one or two here that would be baptized if an elder were here."

WE are pleased to record the following:

DECLINE OF AN OFFENSIVE HABIT.

There is one old-time habit that used to be widely prevalent in the United States, especially in the West and South—the tobacco chewing habit—that has certainly declined in the present generation. The manufacturers of chewing tobacco say the trade in it has not grown with the growth of our population, but that in many States it is less than half as large as it used to be before the war. In the New England States it has become of slight account. We think all old-time New-Yorkers will agree in saying that the chewing habit has fallen off greatly in this city and State, and that far fewer workingmen are addicted to it in these days than formerly. The States in which it now has the greatest hold are Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, and Arkansas. It is an unwholesome habit, offensive to ladies, and ought to disappear.—New York Sun.

CONVICTIONS IN UTAH.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3d.—The report of the Attorney General states that through judgments in civil suits amounting to $552,021 were recovered in favor of the Government during the year, only $132,934 was collected thereon, and that though fines, penalties, and forfeits were imposed amounting to $541,808, only $109,648 was paid on account thereof. The report also shows that since March, 1885, there have been nearly six hundred convictions for polygamy in Utah and Idaho, and the opinion is expressed that under the vigilant execution of the law polygamy within the United States is virtually at an end. The suits against the perpetual emigrating fund of the Mormon Church have resulted in a degree favorable to the Government, and the property, amounting to some $800,000, is in the hands of a receiver.

We clip the above from the Chicago Tribune of the 4th inst., and suggest that when there is added to the above sums the lawyers fees and other expenses incidental in the litigation of these cases, to say nothing of the humiliation, irritation and reproach suffered, the Utah Mormons should regard polygamy and its concomitants as like the plagues of Egypt and flee those curses by returning heartily and joyfully to the primitive doctrines of the church as set forth in the standard books of the church up to 1844.

The Lord said of wayward Israel: "Ye shall know that I am the Lord that smiteth;" and well would it be if latter day Israel would profit by the same lesson, for he says: "My people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be by the things which they suffer."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE subject of Christ's preaching to spirits in prison, time, when, and how, is being overdone, and no further controversial articles on the subject will appear in HERALD for the present. We have several in hand which will wait for future time of insertion.

Bro. R. M. Elvin has been laboring some of late at Pleasanton, Iowa, fourteen miles east of Lamoni. He delivered twelve discourses in all and baptized four persons, leaving an excellent impression in behalf of the work among all that heard the word. The interest in his meetings increased from first to last, and there is a strong desire upon the part of many that the meetings be continued. Bro. M. M. Turpen baptized two at the same place, which with fourteen others previously baptized by the local brethren gives the branch at Pleasanton an increase of twenty in number during the past ninety days.

Bro. N. N. Cooke, of St. Louis, Missouri, wrote December 1st, sending photo. of their new chapel, No. 2518 Elliot Avenue, and stating that Bro. J. W. Gillen was delivering a series of lectures on Bible subjects, Tuesday and Friday evenings of each week to good audiences. Good was being done.

Bro. J. D. Howell would like to know the address of Bro. Alma Bishop as he has something important to communicate to him. He understands that the brother has removed from Elmira, New York. Address, No. 4 Temple street, Swansea, Wales.

Bro. William Anderson and wife, of Pleasanton, Iowa, spent Thanksgiving day and the following Sunday in Lamoni enjoying themselves among the Saints and looking around our city with a view to locating among us. The Saints at Lamoni would gladly welcome them among their number.

We learn that Bro. A. H. Smith was at Burlington, Iowa, on Sunday the first instant enroute to Illinois.

GOING WEST.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH left home today, (December 6th), for St. Joseph and Independence, Missouri, going thence to California, intending to reach San Bernardino by or before the 16th instant and assist in dedicating, on that day, the Saints' new church in that city. His many friends will be pleased when we assure them that he is in fair health and most excellent spirits, and that he designs prosecuting ministerial labor in many parts of California, possibly in Nevada, and to spend no little time in Utah and Idaho from whence he has received many pressing invitations of late. We bespeak for him the faithful, fervent prayers of the Saints that the Lord may bless him abundantly, lead him prosperously, and direct all his ways.

President Smith came to the Reorganization when it was few in number, when it had neither wealth nor prestige to support it against the numerous heretical factions, nor against prejudices begotten largely by the errors and evils into which many of the Saints had been ensnared, nor against the fears and animosities of Sectarianism and the hates and jealousies of bigots. He has pressed steadily forward in the straight and narrow way, calling Saints to the proper observance of the principles of truth and righteousness contained in the standard books of the church accepted and endorsed by the church publicly in the lifetime of his martyred father, and teaching the gospel of Christ as set forth plainly in their sacred pages. His chief effort has been to aid the people to become worthy, dutiful Saints; faithful, honorable citizens living in the bonds of peace and love with all people, so that the world might be the better for having the Church of God in its midst. Steadfast and unyielding in his convictions of both right and duty, his effort has been to honor God and His laws rather than to seek to please men or win their aid and favor. If he has failed to attract some who profess to be Latter Day Saints, it may be traced to his firmness in standing for the right because it is right; and wherein the church under his presidency has been reconstructed and builded somewhat slowly, it may be attributed to his purpose to have the work done well and with the proper kind of material. His anxious care and studious labor for the church and humanity in the past may be taken as an index to what it will be in the future; for, as he said here of late in a Sunday evening discourse, when he entered in upon the work of the Lord he did so to continue in it with all his powers, without "reservation," and forever.

THE BATTLE FIELD.

WE have frequently heard our mother relate that in an early day, no one was allowed to enter the Methodist Church at the time of love feast who wore a piece of jewelry, or even a ribbon on her bonnet. Since we have grown older the question has often presented itself to our mind, what change could or would be wrought in the fitness of an individual who was stopped at the door (as many were) and constrained to lay aside these ornaments? We have long since come to the conclusion that such person was neither better nor worse, because the act was the result of outside forces and not the spontaneous workings of the heart. We are free agents unto ourselves, and God will never force us into obedience. His laws are perfect harmony, and like the Sabbath they were "made for man." Each one of them is in perfect harmony with, and from the beginning designed to bring to pass, the highest possible good for man. But over against this let us remember that the gospel is a "savor of life unto life or of death unto death."

That this subject of dress is important, it ought to be sufficient evidence to us that God has spoken of it. However, lest we be thought by some to be extremists we wish to quote a paragraph from a recent work prepared by Alex. M. Gow, A. M., for use in schools and families, entitled, "Good Morals and Gentle Manners." It is found under the general head of dress, and reads:

"School Dress:—As has already been said, the dress should always be adapted to the necessities of our occupation, whether of worship, business, or pleasure. As the school-rooms are frequently dusty from pulverized chalk, etc., the clothing, whether of boys or girls, should be of materials which can be easily cleaned, and that do not readily show dirt. It should be plain, simple, and unostentatious. According to the principles of the moral law, it is wrong to dress in such a manner as to excite the envy, the jealousy, or the covetousness of any who really can not afford to clothe themselves expensively, and yet are mortified to appear meanly clad in contrast with their more richly appareled schoolmates. Many a poor pupil is tortured with his apparent poverty, and by the excess of false pride is driven from school because he can not compete with those who have more wealth at command.

"It would be difficult to suggest any uniform method of dress that could be made practicable for the boys; but it would be very easy for the young ladies in any school to agree upon some general principles by which this difficulty could be overcome. An inexpensive material might be selected that is of a subdued color, is easily cleaned, and yet is genteel and pretty. This might be set off with a plain linen collar and cuffs; the former fastened by a small, plain pin, and the latter by pearl buttons. If, for example, the madder colored calicoes were chosen, and trimmed with simple braid, they would fill all the conditions of a neat, cheap, comfortable and becoming school dress—"cheap enough for the poorest, and good enough for the best," and with a considerable variety for the exercise of good taste in the selection. Such an arrangement is entirely practicable, and has been adopted in some schools where simplicity of manners and goodness of heart were the prevailing traits of the lady pupils."—Page 189, Morals and Manners.

Let such as are disposed to make light of the subject of dress think of this. School girls, moved by a desire to save their poorer companions mortification, lay aside the garments they might afford, and find the sweet pleasure which ever flows from obedience to that grand, fundamental principle of our common brotherhood and the Fatherhood of God:—"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." Many a woman who to-day, from the midst of a very hell upon earth lifts up her eyes and cries, Too late! too late! has been led to the first steps of her downward career by the neglect—the utter disregard—of this underlying principle of Christian morality—and that too upon the part of women professing godliness, who should have "adored themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety."

There is a cry in the midst of Zion. It is not in the strong wind rending the mountains, neither in the earthquake causing the earth to groan and the waves of the sea to lift themselves beyond their bounds, nor is it in the flash of fires playing in mid heaven; but it is heard in the still small voice of God's Holy Spirit, saying, "Come up higher." Shall we respond to this cry? Shall we arise and shake ourselves from the dust and ashes of our false swearing, from the terrible crime of our perjury before God, and put on the beautiful garments of salvation; keeping our lamps trimmed and burning, ready to enter in when the bridegroom cometh? Shall we? Let these thoughts, few and disconnected though they may be, sink deep into our hearts. Shall school girls, young and thoughtless as school girls often are, set the world a better example than Latter Day Saints who love to sing:

"Tis a glorious thing to be
In the light, in the light."

Shall they? One thought suggests itself just here; these girls must have been under excellent instruction, both by precept and example. We dare assert that no teacher of theirs ever told them it was a small offense to disobey the rules of their principal; that it was a trivial matter how others felt, so they themselves were well dressed and stylish in appearance; never said to them; "How dowdyish you will look in common calico, like a day laborer's daughter. You ought to dress as becomes your position in life."

When we sit down and reflect upon the matter—especially at such times as when the Holy Spirit troubles the waters and we are enabled to realize the full force of the words of our Savior, "Settle this in your hearts," and there comes a sadness over the soul and we cry out, "Who then can be saved"—we feel that while we have done one thing, we have left the other undone. While we have covenanted to keep his commandments, we have kept a part and the other part we have broken. Many of us are disposed to say, "We can not all see alike. We do not understand the meaning of the word plain." Let us consult Webster, who is a standard authority in the use of words, and we think this matter will not longer trouble us. We find one meaning of the word is, "Void of extraneous beauty or ornament;" another, "Not luxurious, free from costliness." Can words be plainer than these?

If time be the richest gift ever bestowed upon man, (and apart from the gift of God's Son we believe it is), then whatever helps us to save time is surely worthy of our consideration. What then shall or can be said in defense of the time consumed upon dress? If the human form was the crowning piece of God's workmanship, what can be said by a Christian woman in defence of corsets which compress, and humps upon the back which disfigure the workmanship of God? Those bodies are for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, which is meek and lowly; and just as surely as the condition of the weather is betokened by signs, so is the condition of the soul. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "Where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also."

The battle-field is there—there in the secret chambers of the soul unseen by any but the eye of God is waged the conflict of life and death, the hand to hand struggle of two opposing powers. Obedience is the watchword by which we must conquer, for the disobedient never can enter the kingdom of God. "I have kept the faith," said Paul. "To him that overcometh," said the angel of the apocalypse. "Settle this in your hearts," said Christ to all who would be his disciples. Collect what material for the building you may, but remember that he who builds upon the foundation which I have laid (and other foundation can no man lay) must keep my commandments. "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven." Let us bear in mind that we can teach by example as well as precept; and while we do insist that the law of God requires of us that our garments be plain, we know also that it requires more than plain garments. When the young man came to Jesus and asked the question, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life," to every thing which Jesus told him he could and did say, "All these have I observed from my youth." "One thing thou lackest," said Jesus. "Go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come take up thy cross and follow me."

The eye of Omnipotence which alone has power to penetrate the soul, looked upon the "unseen battle field" of that young man's soul; and looking saw the mighty tower in which the enemy of all righteousness was strongly entrenched, and seeing it he said, Destroy this tower of self-righteousness; "take up the cross and follow me." Christ loved the moral purity of his character, but more than this was necessary. Other things were to be done, and these in no wise left undone. Is there in our mind a doubt that we are living in violation of one of the commands of God, would it not be well to give our souls the benefit of that doubt instead of giving it to the Adversary? When we walk in doubt we are not walking in a straight path. Let us illustrate what we mean. If Infidelity is true, and this life terminates the existence of man, has the infidel at death any advantage over the Christian? Surely no one will say that there is or can be any advantage when both are alike but a lump of senseless clay—unconscious, incapable of feeling. But reverse this, and let the faith of the Christian be the true one, how stands it then? The Christian comes into the presence of God to receive the plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant . . . enter ye into the joys of your Lord." The infidel finds too late that his unbelief did not destroy the truth of God, and receives the sentence of justice, "Depart from me." Through faith and obedience the Christian has a title to the tree of life, while infidelity and disobedience have destroyed the title which the other might have had, and he has no right to enter into the beautiful city where they need neither candle nor light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and forever"—because these that do enter in have "been faithful in a few things" and the joy of the Lord shall be their everlasting portion.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter through the gates into the city."

SPECIAL REQUEST FOR PRAYER.

Special requests for prayer are made in behalf of Sr. Margaret Nisewanger of Holden, Missouri, that she may (if it is the Lord's will) be blessed with sight to enable her to study the word of God and gain a more perfect knowledge of the plan of salvation.

For Sr. M. Campbell, Hopeville, Ont., that she may ever have discernment, wisdom and strength to withstand the powers of the Evil One, and to understand the guidance of the Spirit of God, and to keep his commandments at all times.

Also sister Tressa T. Sears, East Dennis, wishes if it be God's will to be spared to her little ones. Is now very sick.

An afflicted sister requests the prayers of the League that she may be restored to health, and if not the Lord's will, that at least the terrible affliction in her head may be relieved.

CLEVELAND, IOWA, Nov. 29th.

Sister Walker.—There has been a request through the Herald that an account be given of our society. We as a society have felt the need of this, and as this is our second anniversary we will try and give a brief account of our work for the last two years. The sisters here met on November 29th, 1886, and the president of our branch organized us into a society, to be called the Mite and Sewing Society of the Lucas branch of Latter Day Saints. We have our constitution, bylaws and officers, and believe our society has done a great deal of good. As our members are scattered over considerable ground, we do not all meet together every week; those in Lucas meet at some sister's house, and put in a quilt there, while those in Cleveland meet with some sister there and also put in a quilt, (as quilting is mostly our work); and in this way we go from house to house among ourselves, and once a month we all meet together first at one place and then another, and pay our dues, collect the money earned through the month, and work all together one day. Many of our members do not attend on account of small children, and old age; but at our monthly meetings their dues are sent in, which helps to swell our financial account. We have cleaned and repaired our church, and assisted some who have requested it. Have helped some among us who have needed. We have by our dues and work made $270.61 in the last two years. Our brethren helped us at first to start repairs on the church; but this amount is the result of our own labor, independent of any outside help. We have a cash account on hand in case it is needed for future use, which it is quite evident will be needed.

Now we do not speak of this to commend ourselves more than other societies, for good has been done by them, and good can yet be done. It was predicted by many that our society would not live six months, but after two years labor we are just as active and energetic as at first, and are steadily increasing in our financial account. But the grandest thing about it is, it has created a feeling of love among us that did not exist before. Many who were as strangers together and felt no desire to associate, have become warm friends. This is as it should be, and reminds us of the words of the poet, "How sweet to my soul is communion with Saints."

The Lord has blessed us by his Spirit, and we have felt its influence while assembled together; and why should we not? This is only one part in connection with this great work. The sisters have a work to do, as well as the brethren; for we are all commanded to work, regardless of sex. And if we do our part, God has promised us he will assist us. Then let us, sisters, be valiant in good works; put our shoulder to the wheel and help our brethren roll on this good cause, so we may be entitled to a share of the reward for work well done. You, sisters, who have no society in your branches, do not know the good you may do until you try. Then let us persevere, and continue on in well doing. The only sad feature among us is, that death has removed from among us those who prayed for us, and one who labored with us. But our loss is their gain, and let us try to be found at our post, that when our allotted time shall come to give an account of the deeds done in the body, it may be said, "She hath done what she could."

Box 152, CLINTON, Mo., Dec. 3d.

Bro. Joseph:—Some time in September I wrote to the Herald agreeing to furnish any of the Saints with a hand-book of South-western Missouri. I have received upwards of thirty letters and cards to date asking for said book; also many questions in regard to this section of country. The hand-book has been mailed to all, and if any have failed to receive it and will let me know, I will see that they get one.

The secretary of the South-western Emigration Society told me a few days ago that there was somewhere near twenty thousand of the hand-books remaining. If others wish the book, let them send in their names and addresses at once. I wish to state to those who have asked for information that the hand-book can be relied on as far as it goes; also that much more could and should have been said in favor of this country. The book was hurriedly got up and the information it contains is too brief to do justice to the country. Do not think that in coming to this country a living can be easily made. It will take sober calculation and hard work to meet with prosperity and make a pleasant and comfortable home. This is a fine country and with the exceptions of being a little "droughty" some seasons, it would be one of the finest grain-producing countries in the United States. Land is not cheap considering the class of improvements; it is worth from twenty to forty dollars per acre, say from one to ten miles from town, or from a railroad point, and often the improvements make the difference in price. Some tracts of land could be bought from ten to fifteen dollars per acre, but often fifteen to twenty miles from a rail road point. Cheap land—say worth from two to four dollars per acre—is rough, some heavy timbered, the balance rock and brush, and could not be used only for stock, and would not be very profitable for that unless near some rail road where grain could be shipped in for feeding them for market. About one third or more of St. Clair and Cedar counties is this kind of land, the balance very fine, including most of Henry, Johnson and Vernon counties. Cattle and hogs will do well on this cheap land, requiring but little feed.

Don't ask, "Is that a watered country?" Plenty of water, wood, coal and rock, and with good management you need not be without either the year around. What we need here the worst of all is good, industrious, thrifty, enterprising, go-ahead, business men and farmers; having plenty of these, this would make one of the finest countries in the United States—yes, "Zion" sure enough. And why any should wait, thinking land would be cheaper, I fail to understand. We should learn by past experience that it does not pay to wait, as some have learned at Independence. A gentleman traveling for a wholesale firm, a few days ago told me (looking for a place to locate) that South-western Missouri was the general talk in the east and that in less than five years we would see the largest emigration to Missouri that had taken place for years. It will be but a short time until land will be worth more than it is now. Quite a number have written wanting to trade Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and California land and property for the same in Missouri. I would say there are but few if any, that want to make such trades.

Land can be bought by paying part down and the balance in three to five years at ten per cent interest. There are only four families of Saints at Clinton. South of here, about twenty-five miles in St. Clair county, is a branch of about forty members and a bright prospect for many more. About forty miles from here, in Cedar county, is another branch of about thirty-five to forty and from three to five members scattered at other points which will ere long grow into branches. We trust in a few years that every township in South-western Missouri will have one or more families of Saints.

As ever, your brother in Christ,

D. C. WHITE.

ATTLEBORO, Mass., Nov. 18th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—In reading the last issue of the Herald I was earnestly impressed by the Spirit to write a few words for the encouragement of the Prayer League. While some of the brethren are engrossed with the responsibility of preaching the gospel, administering to the sick, encouraging the faltering and strengthening the weak, how grand to think that the sisters have banded together for the purpose of special prayer. What a destitute place this world would be were it not for noble, angelic woman. To-day nearly every society, secret or otherwise, has added auxiliary organizations for women. But grander still to think that in the church of God the Marthas and Marys are doing their part. What a bulwark behind a servant of God to have one or more faithful women praying for his success in the Master's cause. Go on sisters in the Prayer League, and may heaven's choicest blessings be upon your efforts.

Yours for eternity,

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

SENECA, Illinois, November 26th.

Dear Brethren:—I am glad that I have been led to see the right. I can see how mysteriously I have been led on until I came in contact with a brother who does not miss many chances to put our faith before those he comes in contact with, namely, John Walters. I met him at Gardner, where I went to work with him and when he began to present our views before me I thought them strange views. After some time I agreed with him to examine the matter and take the Bible for our standard. I was a great lover of the Bible. I may state that I was a Baptist. We stated our points but my arguments did not prove so good when tested. I then began to inquire what I must do, and I soon found that I must be baptized and become a follower of Christ in a different manner than I had done before, which I thank God for. I know for myself that God speaks to the children of men in this age, and that he raises up his people from sickness and in other ways. I have not the chance to see the Herald now that I had a short time ago. The circumstances I need not name, but I deplore. I miss the weekly visitor that I can not afford to do without, nor can any brother do without it and keep posted on what is taking place to-day. We can see the hand of God in the things around us. The paper encourages its readers and is a great aid to them. I hope and pray that God will guide you aright in all your duties, as I know you are in a position that you need our prayers. I ask our brethren and sisters to pray for our leaders, so that they may be able to be led into all truth and that we may be led up higher.

JOHN SMITH.

LONDON, Ont., Nov. 29th.

Bro. Joseph:—Last night we were looking through the best church organ in the world. We read on page 755, your selection from the Iron Clad Age and we have good reasons for saying that we know who wrote the article headed "Mission of Moroni." We heard almost all of it from the lips of the writer before it appeared in print, and we mail you the Albany papers (where we think it was first published). Large numbers of this paper were sent to Waterford, and it was thought and fondly believed by a number of people that said article would destroy the work of God in Waterford. We did not look upon it in that light but thought, rather, that it sounded like the last yelp of the dying chieftain. We reviewed it for four nights and much good was accomplished by the efforts.

Since our debate we have baptized twenty-four in Waterford, and all of them are able to defend the work. The branch holds meetings in a nice church, the property of one of the Saints. We had the pleasure of baptizing James W. Easton, the electrician of the Reliance Electric Manufacturing Company. He is a man of talent and his whole heart is in the work of God. He was ordained to the office of priest and chosen president of the branch. His preaching is good and takes with the people. When we first met he did not have faith in the Bible. Since we left Waterford he has baptized one of the business men of the town.

We thought to have returned to Waterford ere this, but many calls elsewhere prevented us. There is a great interest there and many in that county will obey the gospel. We think we could name twenty places in that county where we are requested to go and preach. O, that Zion's children would awake to duty, that more of the priesthood could devote their time to the work of God!

Our trip through the Western district was a pleasant one. We found good Saints, kind hearts, and some good defenders of the faith. May he who has promised to reward the giver of a cup of cold water kindly smile upon them for their kindness to us. All we can say is please accept the silent throbbing of a grateful heart. I was sorry to leave that part of the mission so soon, but the sudden death of father took me from the field for about two weeks. Father has gone to rest. The smile that like a sunbeam ever shone upon his face in life was not absent in death. As I gazed upon his cold but smiling face in death I felt to thank heaven that I had not caused one line of care to be written there. He died as he had lived, a Saint of God. "His was a righteous end." How could we wish him back again? Never more shall his eyes drop tears of sorrow! Never more shall he sigh for the night of death so that he might enjoy the morning of an eternal day! We know not that a marble shaft will mark his resting place in the city of the dead; but this we do know, that his son (the lambkin of his fold) will try to live so that he will never bring reproach upon his honored sire. And when marble shafts have sunken in the debris of decay, father and son shall meet again where the sweet flowers of life will never fade 'neath the cold blast of cruel death.

About two months ago Rev. T. L. Wilkinson delivered three lectures on the subject of baptism, in St. Thomas. He challenged the Baptists to meet him in debate, but they would not. We were sent for, but we did not get the letter until he was gone. Great excitement prevailed and according to urgent request we went to St. Thomas and delivered five lectures on baptism. We delivered in all ten discourses while there, and during the last four services there was not standing room. Many were turned away from the Hall. We are pleased to say that the labors were appreciated; so much so that we had the pleasure of baptizing six persons, five of them heads of families, one of whom was a class leader in the Methodist church for twelve years, and has preached occasionally. He is a sweet singer and a good speaker. Four others have given in their names for baptism.

We hope to return to St. Thomas for December 9th. We were sorry to leave them but we are requested to attend the dedication of the Saints' church at Grand Valley December 2d. Bro. Mortimer was in St. Thomas for three weeks. We are pleased to meet such men. He is well liked and will be a welcome guest with the St. Thomas Saints.

To the Saints who are calling all along the line, we say, Please have patience. We are working every day and nearly every night, using the best wisdom we have. Do you expect us to do more?

Your brother in gospel bonds,
R. C. EVANS.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps as it pleased you to call the attention of your readers to the prodigious labor attendant upon issuing the church publications you may admit the following: An elder since the close of the last General Conference to November 28th, preached one hundred and seventy-eight sermons, encountering wind, rain, storms and mud; walked one hundred and eighty-five miles—not making an accurate account of frequent visits to post offices one or two miles distant, for mail; or of walks of one or two miles to quaff the morning air to provoke an appetite for breakfast. Rode three hundred and fifty-two miles in wagons, eighteen hundred miles by rail; held nine confirmation meetings but do not remember how many different beds have slept in, having also continuous change of diet and water, the latter sometimes bad,—very bad—, houses visited in which hospitality extended some larger and some smaller; quiet reigns in some, in others not so much; beds sometimes hard, sometimes soft; sleeping sometimes alone; sometimes with one or two others; bedrooms sometimes not ventilated, sometimes too much ventilated; sometimes lodging in a house with a number of rooms, sometimes in a room that serves as kitchen, dining-room, parlor, sitting-room and bed-room for several persons. All these and many smaller vicissitudes made tolerable through a love of heaven's imposed duty and the hospitality of faithful, loving Latter Day Saints; yet wearing on the physical system.

Think of it, ye editors, type setters, secretaries, business manager and members of the Board of Publication.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 27th.

Bro. Blair:—I felt somewhat relieved in my feelings when I read the extracts in late Heralds from the History of Joseph Smith, for they contained some points that I find are not easily received by some of the elders of the Reorganization. The extract from the 20th volume Millennial Star reminded me of memoranda which I took at the time the instruction was given which I now send you a copy of. I see the wording is verbatim with regard to the coming of the Son of Man. I give it as I have it written:

"Instructions given at a special conference held in Nauvoo, April 6th, 1843, by the Prophet Joseph Smith, as recorded in my memorandum at the time. After advising the Saints who had settled on the Iowa side of the river and on the islands on that side, he referred to the prediction of the Adventist, Wm. Miller, who predicted that the end of the world would be on the 23d of April, 1843. He then referred to the Scripture saying that that day would come upon the world as a thief in the night, notwithstanding all their reckoning and their best calculations. He quoted Paul as saying of the Saints, 'Ye are the children of the day, and not of the night that that day should come upon you unawares as a thief in the night.' As much as to say they would know about the time of this coming, and would be watching.

"He also quoted the Prophet Amos, 3d chapter, saying: 'Surely, the Lord will do nothing until he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.' He also stated that, when the Lord worked among the children of men he always had prophets to represent him. Concerning the saying of the Savior in Matthew 24th chapter and Doctrine and Covenants section 49: 'The day and the hour knoweth no man, neither the angels in heaven,' he remarked that it is evident that they had not attained this knowledge at that time, and that many things were kept hid from the angels, and that allowing this to be the case, how could they inform Daniel correctly on this point, that from [on] which Mr. Miller bases his reckoning? He related that at a time when he was praying, desiring to know something with regard to the time of the coming of the Son of Man, the word of the Lord came to him, saying: 'Joseph, if thou livest until thou art eighty-five years old, thou wilt see the face of the Son of Man,' signifying that the Son of Man would not come until [before] that time. He also referred to the angel flying through the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel, &c., saying, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come, an event which would be previous to his coming. He then referred to Scriptures to show that one day with the Lord is one thousand of our years, or somewhere near it; and that one hour was the twenty-fourth part of one thousand of our years, and would be forty-one years and eight months of our time, which would make the time longer still.

"He then referred to the Scriptures to show that the Jews would rebuild Jerusalem, its walls and temple, and be gathered there before the coming of our Lord and Savior, also that a stream of water would issue from under the threshold of the Lord's house, for the healing of the waters around Jerusalem, and that fish would live in them, &c.; also that judgments spoken of by John would come upon the inhabitants of the earth, and that there would be wars and rumors of wars, earthquakes in divers places, the waves and the sea roaring and heaving themselves beyond their bounds, famine, pestilence, perplexities of nations, &c. There shall be great signs in the heavens, in the sun, in the moon, the stars fall from heaven, and fearful sights, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken, all these will transpire before the coming of the Son of Man. Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven. As the light of morning cometh out of east and shineth unto west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be. Then will the Son of Man appear in the clouds with all the holy angels with him."

MARION, Michigan, Nov. 21st

Dear Herald:—It is a little over a year ago since I embraced the gospel, and I can truly say that I have been blessed since. I often think it is good to be a Saint in latter days. I feel thankful when I hear of this work rolling on for I know it is of God. I was a member of the Church of England, but when I saw the light of the gospel I received it. I sent twenty cents to brother L. R. Devore and received in return the photographs of the two martyr's, Joseph and Hyrum. I am well pleased with the pictures and think every family should have one.

Brethren and sisters, pray for me that I may be strengthened, and that I may press my way onward and at last meet you all.

Your sister,
TILLIE REID.

MARION, Mich., Nov. 18th.

Dear Herald:—I have been desirous for some time to bear my testimony through your pages, as I think our testimonies are strengthening to each. It is about ten years since I first heard the gospel in full. Bro. J. J. Cornish brought the message of salvation into our section, which caused a great deal of uneasiness in the sectarian lines. I was quite young at that time, about sixteen years old, and not willing to give up the world, although I became a believer as soon as I heard the message. Time rolled on until I became convinced and felt the need of a Savior. By this time I had become somewhat doubtful of the latter day work, but could see no other way. How was I to find what I needed? I knew that there was but one way, so I went to God in earnest prayer that he would show me the way I should go, if it was nothing brighter than a dream. Finally, I dreamed that I was hunting rabbits with a companion of mine (which was common to us), and for some reason I looked up toward heaven, and far up in the air was a horse and rider, each having the appearance of bright silver. They were descending toward us and when close to the earth the horse disappeared, but the rider who was the Lord Jesus Christ came and stood not far from us and preached to us the same doctrine that Bro. Cornish had preached; then he disappeared. I awoke in the morning satisfied that I had found the way and the Savior. That dream haunted me until I was baptized into the body of Christ, which took place a year ago last June.

Shortly after my baptism, one night as I laid upon my bed, before I closed my eyes in sleep I was caught away into our pasture field. There

I was shown in the vision that I had set out for home clad with the gospel armor. Saints pray for me that I may reach that home in safety. I love this work knowing that it is of God, but circumstances do not allow me to do much for its advancement, but with God's help I will do what I can.

In gospel bonds,

T. T. REID.

HOLDEN, Mo., Dec. 3d.

Bro. Joseph:—I came here one week ago last Sunday. Yesterday I baptized four persons and three more are ready for next Sunday; so the work goes on. Truth will tell with the people.

Many are investigating our doctrine, and that which was thought to be strong opposition is vanishing. The Saints are commanding respect, and it can no longer be withheld from them that walk uprightly. Bro. Etzenhouser is now with me, but I can not say how long he will remain. I shall stay over next Sunday if the Lord permits. The scene is changing now to what it was six years ago when I first came here. My children, whom I love with a father's zealous care, are becoming numerous. I feel the need of all the prayers that can be made in my behalf for I am very weak; but the Lord has been very good to me so far. I can not remain at home and be idle. My heart and soul are in the work. O, I want to see a goodly company meet me in the near future, for I am hastening to my eternal home. I am striving to gain that rest which will be sweet indeed, and now my fear is that I will lose my reward if I do not work while it is day. I feel the importance of it. Pray for me. The Christian church was obtained by us for our use; also the baptism. This is the second time that I have been so fortunate as to obtain favor with them. I wonder at it because I have been the cause of quite a number of their members coming into our church.

CLARENCE ST. CLAIR.

NORTH PLYMOUTH, Mass., Nov. 24th.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—I have been laboring in West Plymouth in a small School house to a few attentive hearers and have been blessed at times with a great amount of the Spirit. One of the ladies that I spoke to weighs about three hundred pounds, and after I got through she said she had nothing to say against it, that she was acquainted with some of the Saints in Attleboro and spoke highly of them. How my heart swelled with gratitude to my heavenly Father for giving His Holy Spirit to His children that they may be lights to the world. She objected to one view we had, that was the resurrection of the body. She said that after she had passed through so much with this body that she did not want to take it again. How I yearned to tell the glad news that we were going to put off these vile bodies and be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. (Phil. 3: 21, Inspired Translation; John 3: 2; 2 Peter 1: 14; 1 Cor. 15: 51-58; Job 19: 22-27), and many other texts show plainly that we have a fleshly body. I made a very few remarks, remembering the words of Paul (2 Tim. 2: 24) that the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient," etc., trying to become wise and faithful to his trust.

When I entered that place an intelligent lady invited me to her house, and after dinner we conversed awhile about religious matters. She said: "Here is a home for you as long as you wish to stay." This lady had heard some preaching in Fall River and has been investigating ever since. So the work spreads as the apostle said, "I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase." The lady says she believes that God sent me there to expound to her the word of God more perfectly. The Spirit says we shall find favor with the people, and the Spirit is upon me while writing, confirming the same. My prayers are in your behalf that you may be sustained of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, for I know that you have passed through many afflictions; but remember they work for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

I have been laboring among the Saints to the best of my ability, preaching unto them when called upon, and I have been more and more confirmed in the work for the last year than ever before, feeling the influence and guidance of the Holy Spirit. May God bless you and all His people.

Yours in the one faith,

N. R. NICKERSON.

PLANO, Ill., Dec. 4th.

Editors Herald:—We are holding meetings at this place with very good attendance. Have baptized one more last Sunday (a promising young man), and others are near the kingdom. I have not enjoyed better liberty and light for a long time than I do now, and I am more and more encouraged each day to go on and do my best to help cheer up my brethren and "move on, on to the victory."

I was here three years ago, and on my return to this place I found found the Saints alive in the great work of God. Bro. Vickery still presides and the Saints esteem him as a father. I see that he is dearly loved by all, which to me is good. Next Saturday and Sunday we expect to hold a two days' meeting in Chicago. My address until March will be Plano, Illinois.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

FULTON, Iowa, Nov. 28th.

Dear Herald:—On the 15th of this month our hearts were made to rejoice by the return of Bro. J. S. Roth, because he is dearly loved by the Saints and well respected by all outsiders who love the truth. He remained with us about a week, and we were much edified and strengthened because his sermons were delivered with power and were accompanied by the Spirit to the convincing of some more of the truth of the gospel as restored in these last days. On the twenty-first he led two more precious souls into the waters of baptism; one a young man of noble character; another a young lady of high standing in society, a school-teacher. Still others are ready for baptism but are hindered. The calls for preaching are coming in from every side and we hope that General Conference will return Bro. Roth and as many more as possible.

On the 22d ult., by request Bro. Roth opened a new place. The house was full of very attentive listeners. Some said it was all Bible; others that they would have to investigate. When he left, some said, "Come again."

From here I conveyed him fifteen miles south to open another place where there was an appointment for him; but if there if any show for converting benches, there is the place. There were only a few out—more empty seats than full ones. Prejudice seems at high tide there, but may the time soon come that prejudice and priestcraft shall give way to light and truth.

Of late I opened a new place three miles from my home where there are some that are interested. The work for us here seems to be encouraging and we are trying to be a light to the world.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

BAY CITY, Mich., Nov. 27th.

Bro. Joseph:—About three weeks ago I came to this place and have been holding meetings nearly every night since. Our meetings are largely attended and the prospects are good. Last week I baptized an evangelist minister living in West Bay City. He had been ordained about a year ago by the bishop of their church. He came out a few times to hear me preach, got interested and invited me home with him. While conversing on God's plan of saving mankind, the financial side of the question came up and I talked freely, showing him that we had a general church treasury, and that the Saints were instructed to place in the hands of the bishop or his agents one tenth, said means to go to aid the families of those sent out to labor for the spread of the gospel. While the elder got nothing, he could go out on those terms and take neither purse nor scrip and take no thought for the morrow. He listened with interest and soon after our fire-side chat he said, "I know I have never received the Holy Ghost. I am out of the church. What steps must I take?" My answer was that he must be baptized for the remission of sins and receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit. "Well," said he, "that is a small thing to do." Hence he was baptized for the remission of sins. We look for others to come in soon. There are twenty-eight in number in this branch, and I want to say that we are being abundantly blessed in our meetings. So let us be strong in the faith and this glorious latter day work will roll on.

Yours,

EDWARD DELONG.

FLAGLER, Iowa, Nov. 30th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have passed through many severe trials in my past life, and from 1880 until October last have had a great deal of sickness and many deaths in my family. I have buried five them in eight years; so you can see that I have had my share of trouble. I have buried three children and first and second wife, but I desire to so live that my Heavenly Father will give me strength to bear it. Two members of my family have died since September 18th.

I am, with my little girl and boy, stopping with my father-in-law and family and we have a good home, for I know that they are good Saints. Their house is a house of prayer and I ask the Lord to bless them, for they have helped me to bear all my trouble and I do pray for them.

We have been reading the Herald and found a letter written by D. M. Rudd, in which he states that the ministry will have to retire from the field if not aided. We would not like to hear of such occurring, and if every Saint in the church would give twenty-five cents a month it would keep God's servants in the field. Come, brethren and sisters, let us arise to a sense of our duty and show our faith by our works. We as a family will make a start with our brethren and sisters in the Mothers' Home Column, and we wish our names enrolled as monthly subscribers. Let us help to roll the latter day work along for we know it is of God without doubt or fear. Let us show the Lord that we love him. Pray for me that I may be made strong in the glorious gospel of Christ.

JAMES R. BUXTON.

LOTUS, Cal., Nov. 19th.

Dear Brethren:—Some years ago when breaking a rock a chip flew and hit me in the left eye, and injured the sight and it has been weak ever since, till a few months ago. I could only read a little at a time. When reading the Herald a few months ago my eye was very sore, and I was going to stop, when the Spirit told me to ask God to heal my eye. As soon as I heard it I knew that God would heal my eye; so while I was sitting with the Herald still in my hand, I said, "O, God, make my eye good, like the other." As soon as I said these words my eye was as good as the other, and I read on, rejoicing in my God. I can read now as long as I want to. Thanks be to God.

Yours,

MITCHELL ARTHUR.

GENOA, Nevada, Nov. 28th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I left Sacramento, California, immediately after conference which convened October 6th, to my mission field of labor assigned me by the missionary in charge—Bro. H. C. Smith. I went to Grizzly Flats, El Dorado county, California, where I stopped at Wm. O. Skinner's house over night. In the morning Bro. Skinner and myself started with our valises on foot across the mountains, a distance of sixty-three miles, which we made in two days. My feet were badly blistered, but we arrived about six o'clock at Bro. J. E. Johns who resides in Diamond Valley, and who took us in and made us feel welcome and treated us in a manner that that made us feel that they were friends of our Master. We commenced preaching the next night and spoke ten times and baptized eleven. We came down the Valley to Fairview and preached eleven times and baptized five, sixteen in all. We assisted in organizing a branch known as the Diamond Valley branch.

I have the use of the M. E. Church here (Genoa). The Rev. Mr. Gardner, the M. E. preacher, refused Bro. H. C. Smith the church last summer and he lost friends by so doing. I was told that some of the citizens refused him when he came around trying to raise money to buy a parsonage. They told him that he refused Mr. Smith the church, and that they would not give him one cent.

We are stopping with Sr. Gilman while here, who is a sister indeed. She is one of God's children and has the welfare of the work at heart.

There are but four Saints in this town, but I find sisters Gilman and Walker alive in the work. It made my heart rejoice to meet them and to hear them tell of the goodness of God to them. I was told in California that they pitied me and felt sorry I had to go to Nevada, for it was a very hard mission. I must say that I was happily disappointed, for I never saw better people in my life. I am either furnished with a team or carried every place that I want to go. I have plenty to eat and one of the best beds I ever had. I have had the best of liberty in preaching, and have also had the best of health and never felt better. Although my lungs have been considered weak, I have spoken almost every night, and my lungs have not hurt me in the least, for which I thank my Heavenly Father. God has been working with us and souls are converted. Four couples have been baptized, and some who were baptized by the M. E. preacher one year ago or so, I had the pleasure of baptizing them in the same place last Sunday, and more say that they will obey soon. I have a good humble brother with me, one that I baptized four years ago out of the M. E. Church. It is brother William O. Skinner who was ordained a priest and is calculated to do a good work.

Yours in bonds,

THOMAS DALEY.

BALM, Mo., Nov. 22d.

Editors Herald:—Cedar county, Missouri, has a population of about 12,000. It lies in the second tier of counties east of the Kansas state line, and the fourth north of the Arkansas line. It has an area of about 489 square miles, or 319,050 acres. It was organized February 14th, 1845; the County Seat was located where it now is, and is called Stockton; which is near the center of the county. $5,000 was voted this fall for the building of a jail, which will be under construction soon. The county is Republican in politics and has been for years, until four years ago when it went Democratic but went Republican again this fall.

The eastern half of the county is well timbered with only a few small prairies; the western part is mostly prairie, with belts of timber along the streams and beautiful groves on the high lands, all of which produce well in favorable seasons. The soil is of three classes, known here as the white ash, black loam, and red clay. The two latter are the best for all seasons and yields abundant crops of grass, wheat, oats, rye, millet, sorghum, flax and castor beans. Fruit of all kinds does well here; blackberries, gooseberries and many other kinds grow spontaneously. There are many good springs in the county and good water can be had most anywhere at a depth of from ten to thirty feet. Milling facilities are good. Native lumber can be had at from $1.00 to $1.25 per hundred. Wild land can be had from two to eight dollars per acre; improved land from ten to thirty owing to improvements. The county is clear of debt. There are many valuable bodies of timber on Sack river, which if properly managed, would pay for the land. Such is also the case in St. Clair county which lies north of Cedar, and is a larger county. Improved land is some higher, although there are a number of farms near Osceola, the County Seat that can be bought cheap. I know of one eighty acre tract that can be bought for $1,000, where there is a branch of Saints. Those wishing to purchase in that region would do well to call on or address Bro. Bud Whitlow, or Bro. S. Carroll, as they have lived there for some time; they would be able to give proper information. There are several valuable bodies of land in this county that can be bought at reasonable prices. The north part of the county is the best, take it as a general thing. North of this county lies the fine county of Henry with its extensive level prairies, just rolling enough to drain themselves, with strips of timber marking the water courses in the far distance, which makes it beautiful to the home seeker and promises abundant yield when the farmer industriously tills the soil, no difference what the seed may be, so it is good and sound. Vernon county also joins Cedar on the west, and is a border county and is fine for farming. Any of the Saints wishing information about this county who will address me at Balm, Cedar Co., Mo., and will send stamps, I will gladly give them all of the information that I can. I am in the ministry and am making nothing, and can not very well afford to furnish my own stamps. I live in the north part of the county, eight miles east of Eldorado Springs, the great watering place of south west Missouri. We have a branch here of about fifty members, presided over by Bro. C. M. Schroeder, and are in the Independence district.

In bonds,

D. E. TUCKER.

PETROLIA, Ontario, Nov. 22d.

Bro. Dancer:—The work is onward here. Four have been adopted into the fold of God, baptized by Bro. Carlton lately, and more will follow. The hand of affliction is on us and I have been laid up with typhoid fever for seven weeks. Every time I am administered to I get better able to go around; then I get it again. This is the third time. I request the prayers of the Saints in my behalf, that my heavenly Father may spare me to bring up my dear little children in the true way of life. I have been lately called and ordained to the office of a priest, and God knows I long to be in his service proclaiming the everlasting gospel of Christ to the children of men. I know this work is of God.

Your brother in Christ,

SAMUEL W. TOMLINSON.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Dec. 3d.

Editors Herald:—I send renewal for the Herald, for I can not well do without it. It is a great consolation to me in my lonely hours.

May God bless his church, is my prayer,

A WORD FOR AUTUMN LEAVES.

As the time draws near for the second volume of Autumn Leaves to make its appearance I am wondering how many of the young people are interesting themselves in its behalf. I for one would not be without its influence for I know and feel that it has done me much good. It is just what we young people need, and I am, oh, so anxious, that the good work may go on. It is our duty, my dear young brethren and sisters, that we put forth our best efforts to help extend its circulation; and not only that, but to respond to the invitation Sr. Walker has given us to help add truth, beauty and interest to its columns by contributing to the same. God will help and bless our efforts. It is our opportunity to help the elder members of the church spread His truth.

Autumn Leaves is for us and we should show our appreciation by helping to make the dear magazine a success. Let us then each and every one join our might and help give Autumn Leaves a good surprise on its first birthday by sending to it one dollar and a half with the request to introduce a new friend.

EFFIE ADAMS.

THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

CREEDS differ because they come from man. Truth is always and everywhere the same because it comes from God; we hold this truth to be self-evident. Opinions are not facts, and arguments will not create truths. If the Doctrine and Covenants is not the word of the Lord, the believing of it with all my heart will not make it true; if it is true your unbelief will not make it false. I seldom say much on this subject but when asked if I believe the Doctrine and Covenants, I reply, "Yes, I do." If asked if I receive the word of Joseph Smith as if from God's own mouth, I answer, "No, I do not; neither am I personally acquainted with any one who does." If asked if I believe the Book of Mormon, I answer, "Yes;" and if asked if I believe that the fall was in accordance with the design of God and essential to our very being here, I answer, "No; I do not." I will explain my meaning at another time. If asked if I believe that Moses was a true prophet, I answer, "Yes." I know that God spake to Moses just as well as any one else knows it, but if asked if I believe it is a widow's duty to marry her husband's brother whether she likes him or not, and if he refuses to marry her to loose his shoe and spit in his face, I answer, "No; I do not." I will not quibble around and say it was right in olden times but not now, for truth and right are self-existent and eternal as God is eternal. As God is eternal what was right once is right to-day; what is wrong to-day always was and always will be wrong under similar circumstances.

There is a construction which can be placed upon this which looks right to me but I will not give it till I find some one who believes and tries to practice it.

If asked if I believe that Jesus is the Christ, I say, "Yes." I know he is the perfect Teacher and the only perfect one that God ever gave us. If asked if I believe a disciple must hate father, mother, brother, sister, wife and children, I answer, "No; I do not." I never saw but one who took that literally and tried to practice it and I never wish to meet another. If any one but Jesus had said it I should pay no attention at all to it, but if he said it it must have a meaning. Once or twice I have seen a place where that text will almost fit, so I have an idea what it may mean. Perhaps some of you have seen a place where it exactly fits; if so, you know what it means; but unless you do it is useless to try to explain. Leave it as we are obliged to leave some other problems for the revelations of time and eternity to solve. "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live, and he that liveth and believeth on me shall never die. Believeth thou this?" Place a reasonable construction on it and I do. Place the same construction upon it that most persons place on the Doctrine and Covenants and I do not, neither would any one else, for we know that we must die no matter what we do or do not believe.

Inspiration is to the soul what the telescope is to the eye. The most powerful telescope, even Lord Ross' ten thousand eyes would show us nothing if we were blind. So the highest and purest inspiration will teach us nothing if we have no sense. Hence we submit everything, even the words of the perfect teacher, to the test of reason, and accept only what experience and observation proves to be true. Even then we often err and reach wrong conclusions.

Nearly all admit that there are grand and glorious truths taught in the Doctrine and Covenants, but they think that as the same are taught in the Bible that we do not need it. To such I say, "Be your own judge of what you need to lift you up to Christ and make you perfect in him, but allow me to be the judge of what I need."

If the Bible has taught you a perfect faith and you practice it, I am glad and shall never try to destroy nor weaken it. If the New Testament alone has made you like Christ, it is enough for you, but if it has not, no matter what you believe or can prove by argument, you need something more and need it as much as I do. Nay more, if the sermon on the mount—or even the golden rule—teaches you all you need to make you a thoroughly grand and good man or woman, my Doctrine and Covenants tells me not to contend with you and I won't. All I ask is to be allowed to be the judge of what I need, or of what I think I need.

The Bible, Book of Mormon and the D. and C., which latter teaches me to study to make myself acquainted with all good books, with histories of countries, governments, laws, customs, traditions; everything that will increase our usefulness, righteousness, or happiness here. My Book of Covenants teaches me to study, and I do so. Whenever you see a Latter Day Saint join with the drunkard, the libertine, the gambler, the swindler, the ignoramus, the prodigal, and the lowest floating scum that never had a grand, pure thought, or did an unselfish act in their lives,—if any professed Saints join such men in the sneer against any who are trying their best, in the way they think to be best to lift men and women nearer to Christ, nearer side by side, and make one little spot of earth better for their having lived in it, it is not because they understand, believe and practice the Book of Covenants, but because they do not.

"Dear God and Father of us all,
Forgive their faith in cruel lies,
Forgive the blindness that denies."

I read all books that any one hold sacred, and I learn some truths from all. I listen to every one who comes to me in the name of the Lord and take the message for what I think it is worth. I do not do like the Pharisees, ask by what authority they come. All I ask or care to know is, "Is the message true?" "Is the counsel good?" If it is, that is enough for me; if it is not, no prophet, priest nor king can make it right; no whisper, dream, nor revelation; no "thus saith the Lord" from any prophet, false or true, living or dead, can make it right to kill an innocent child or make polygamy, slavery, or any kind of injustice right. That which is inhuman can not be divine.

If my Bible taught me what Robert Ingersoll's Bible teaches him, I should hate it as intensely as he does. Place the purest water in a dirty pitcher and it becomes unfit to drink; so the highest and purest inspiration spoken from the dregs of a low and sordid heart conveys anything else than a good meaning. To illustrate: Years ago when a mere child, I was foolish enough to argue with a person who seemed to think that everything grand and good and elevating, humane and Christlike, was contrary to Scripture, and therefore wrong; while everything low and mean and sordid and bestial, was according to Scripture and therefore right. He asked me among other things to prove by the Bible that slavery was wrong. I quoted what should be, and is, an answer to everyone who has any moral sense, the golden rule, "All things, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them;" to which he replied, "Yes, that is just as I told you, if your horse strays away you would want your neighbor to bring him back; so if your neighbor's slave runs away you should help get him back." I had no more to say to that man, for there was no candle in his brain worth lighting. I can endure all sorts of absurdities in my neighbor's theology if only his humanity is sound, but when he puts a bad meaning to the most dear and sacred word of the most dear and sacred Teacher, I never wish to hear any more messages from him or from the God who sent him.

We are told, and to some it is seemingly proven, that some of Joseph Smith's prophecies failed, therefore he was either a false or a fallen prophet. Apply the same logic to other's, and every one who ever came to us in the name of the Lord is also a false prophet. When the angel announced the Savior's birth he promised peace on earth, good will to men. Was this true? Place a reasonable construction upon it and it was; place the same construction upon it that the objector places upon the D. and C. and it was not and is not true. Contending armies hurl death-dealing missiles from baptized cannon, and "Christian warriors fling their fellow Christians into flames," and "Christian love among the churches looks the twin of heathen hate." In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace." Is this true? Place a right construction upon it and it is; place a false construction upon it and you make even Jesus seem to be a false prophet, for instead of the love that should make us one in Christ we are separated by our creeds, not only from each other, but from God and Christ and truth and peace; and some of us act like children who are angered at play, who have gone into a room and locked the door.

This is where I was wounded in the house of my friends. Wounded in the house of my friends! Do you comprehend what that means? I do not care what any bad man or woman thinks, or what any hypocrite pretends to think, but when a really good person, blinded by prejudice or false report misunderstands and thus misrepresents me, it is like snapping my heart-strings one by one, and when I remember that the love I bear my friend is but the faintest shadow of the love of Christ, I can understand in part what he must feel when those who really love and are trying to lift themselves and others up to him, misjudge and misrepresent him; or, what is the same, misjudge each other, for whatever measure is meted unto one of his disciples is meted unto him. Do you believe this? Is proof necessary? Let me illustrate: I love my children with a love that is the faintest shadow of the love of Christ. Now what if a neighbor comes to me every day and says, "I love you. You are good," and then abuses one of my children, do you think I would have any use for such a friend, or feel the least bit elated by his or her flattery? But know this, friends or foes, that is just what we are doing when we mistreat each other. Were the soldiers who drove the nails in the hands and feet of Jesus his friends? Not a bit, but the disciples who forsook him and fled were, and when good and true men and women throw fetters around each other, and put stumbling-blocks in each other's way, Christ is wounded in the house of his friends.

Although the Bible promises that it shall be well with the righteous and ill with the wicked, and every one who ever wrote in the name of the Lord has told us that, yet we know that the only perfect teacher was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. Almost his last words were, "My God, why hast thou forsaken me!"

As with the Master, so with the servant; every man since Christ or before him who has made the world better for his having lived in it, has "trodden the wine-press alone." "Men know him not:"

"Men knew Him not: His garment's hem
No healing virtue has for them!"

The infidel makes short work of the entire subject: "The prophet is a fool, and the Spiritual man is mad." "The gods are always on the side of power and the fittest survive because they can and do." But the Christian, by slower methods, reasons from cause to effect, reads the history of the past and the prophecy of the future, and though he knows that the good and true must often walk in thorny paths and the innocent bear the pain of other people's sins, his counsel still is, Keep innocent if you would have peace in this world and rest in the world to come.

MORMONIA.

THE EARTH THE EVERLASTING ABODE OF MAN.—No. IV.

BY ELDER E. STAFFORD.

We have seen that "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," but that all are not made alive at the same time, but in their own order. Some are made alive at his coming, and the rest of the dead are not made alive till after the end of the "little season," or not till Christ has overcome and trodden the wine-press alone, even the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God; not till he has put all enemies under his feet, and when the last enemy, death, is destroyed. Then death will be swallowed up in victory, then we can exclaim with the apostle, "O death where is thy sting! O grave where is thy victory!" When death, the wages of sin is destroyed, then sin will cease to be. All sin will have been cancelled and all will have been made alive. But it does not follow that all will have been made alive (or saved) in the same glory, but that they must be content with that glory which they have lived for. When this is brought to pass, that scripture will be fulfilled which says, "Wherefore God hath highly exalted him and given him a name which is above every other name; that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven and things on earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus is the Lord to the glory of God the Father."—Phil. 2: 9, 11. Then will the Savior have saved all that was lost but those that the Father had not put in his power. And those that the Father had not put in his power to save were the "sons of perdition." The Savior gave us to understand who those characters are. They are those who sin against the Holy Ghost whom he said could not be forgiven in this world neither in the world to come. They are they of whom Paul spoke, or wrote, when he said, "For he hath made it impossible for those who were once enlightened and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted of the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to be renewed again unto repentance; seeing that they crucify unto themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." God had made it impossible for such characters to be renewed unto repentance. God revealed this secret not unto Paul alone, but he also revealed unto the latter day Seer as follows: "Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves through the power of the devil to be overcome and to deny the truth and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God with the devil and his angels in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves and put him to an open shame; these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone with the devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and glory of the Lamb who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made. And this is the gospel, the glad tidings, which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us that he came into the world, even Jesus, to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved whom the Father had put in his power and made by him; who glorifies the Father and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof."—D. C. 76: 4.

It may seem to the superficial thinker that inasmuch as Christ came to "seek and to save that which was lost," and that all of Adam's posterity born on the shores of time are, through the fall in a lost condition, and that some according to the foregoing will be lost, that there had been a failure on the part of Christ to accomplish his object. You will by closely scanning, reader, notice that in the sin against the Holy Ghost spoken of by the Savior, and in the being once enlightened, and having tasted the heavenly gift, and the being made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and the tasting the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, spoken of by Paul, and the knowing the power of God, and being made partakers thereof, and suffering themselves to be overcome by the devil to deny the truth and to deny God's power, having denied the Holy Ghost and the Only Begotten after the Father had revealed him, spoken of by the latter-day Seer, that it is self-evident that they have been once adopted into the family of God, having received the Holy Ghost, and by it been made partakers of all the heavenly gifts spoken of, for "the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." The Savior declared that the world could not receive the Holy Ghost, or Comforter, whom he would send to his disciples.

This being the case, these characters, to have received the Holy Ghost must have come out from the world, and been baptized into that "one body," by that "one Spirit" that all of the children of God are, as recorded by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12th chapter. This being the case, having been baptized into Christ, they were in a saved condition, as the children of God. Paul says in 1 Corinthians 1: 18, "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved, [not shall be saved] it is the power of God." Again in the same book, chapter fifteen, first and second verses, he says: "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also you have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I have preached you, unless ye have believed in vain." He declares in the first quotation that the Corinthian Saints were in a saved condition, and in the second he repeats that they are saved and he tells how they were saved, viz: by the gospel, if they kept in memory (as James says, "they being not forgetful hearers but doers of the word"), what he had preached unto them. It is plain by the language—"if you keep in memory what I have preached unto you"—that they had it in their power to do otherwise, and if they chose to do that, the inference is they would not remain in a saved condition.

This shows that by their agency, or choosing to do so, they could undo what they had done, as we have seen that these sons of perdition spoken of by the three witnesses quoted had done. It is noticeable that these characters must have made considerable progress in the divine life to have tasted of the heavenly gift and of the powers of the world to come, but who have suffered themselves to be overcome by the evil one, so that they willfully deny all the knowledge and power and light they have received by the Holy Ghost; sin against the broad light of heaven, comparatively like the devil and his angels, and have voluntarily lost themselves after they have been saved, and have thus made themselves fit companions to those fallen angels, having ignored all the laws of God, and become a law unto themselves, and "can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore they must remain filthy still." And as they can not abide a kingdom of glory, they must abide a kingdom of darkness. Having crucified the Lord of life and glory afresh unto themselves and put him to an open shame; having done despite to the Spirit of grace; having counted the blood of the covenant an unholy thing, they remain as though there had been no redemption made. "Of how much sorer punishment, suppose you they shall be thought worthy?" says the apostle.

The reader may think that this does not agree with the writer's criticism on those who teach a never-ending punishment, for the vision quoted expressly says "that these shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment; which is eternal punishment," etc. It may be asked, Is not this never-ending punishment that these suffer?"

It does not follow that it is, any more than the punishment of those Sodomites that Jude speaks about, was never-ending, who suffered the "vengeance of eternal fire." We do not read of the fire continuing but a short time, and yet it is called by the apostle "eternal" fire. God's punishment is eternal; it is endless; it is everlasting; be it of whatever nature or of long or short duration, because it proceeds from the hand of an eternal, endless, everlasting Being.

The language itself (concerning the torment of these individuals) infers an end; "and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows," etc. . . . "Wherefore the end, the width, the height, the depth, and the misery thereof, they understand not," etc.

We do not—for a moment—contemplate transcending the bounds of our text, and essay to talk about that which is not revealed; yet with all due respect and consideration to our Heavenly Father, we could not think that he would talk about an end, if there was no end.

He could as easily have said, and there is no end, as to say what he did; but when he speaks about their torment, and the end thereof, and the place thereof, it suggests both place for, and an end to; but to profess to locate the exact place, or to talk about, or define the exquisiteness of the punishment, or its duration, we would not dare. It is enough for me, and all who profess to serve the Lord, to know that it is a kingdom of darkness that they inherit.

It is the kingdom of light, the celestial glory, of which the Sun is typical that we are striving for, and there is an awful warning in the end of these sons of perdition for the professed Saint of God. They, too, were at one time striving for the celestial glory, but in an evil hour gave way to the tempter. It can not be supposed that they sinned such a grievous sin suddenly. No, it must have been by degrees that they quenched the Holy Spirit and grieved it, till it left them entirely, and then they were in the condition spoken of by the Savior in Matthew 12: 38, 39: "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest and finding none; but when a man speaketh against the Holy Ghost, then he [the unclean spirit] says, I will return unto my home from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth him empty, swept, and garnished; for the good Spirit leaveth him unto himself. Then goeth the evil spirit and taketh with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in and dwell there; and the last end of that man is worse than the first." No wonder that he denies God, and his Son, and the Holy Spirit, and enters into all that has been enumerated of him. He has willfully and voluntarily opened his house for these many evil spirits to take possession of, and they take entire command, and revel in works of darkness, leading his mind farther from all that is good. No wonder the Savior said that the last end of such was worse than the first. But we forbear to dwell longer on this gloomy picture and change the scene to one that the soul of the righteous delights to contemplate; yea, let us take a glimpse of what God has in store for those who are faithful in keeping his commandments in this probation. We quote again from the heavenly vision given to the "Seer" in these last days: "For thus saith the Lord, I, the Lord, am merciful and gracious unto those that fear me, and delight to honor those who serve me in righteousness and truth to the end; great shall be their reward, and eternal shall be their glory; and to them will I reveal all mysteries; yea all the hidden mysteries of my kingdom from days of old; and for days to come will I make known unto them the good pleasure of my will concerning all things pertaining to my kingdom; yea, even the wonders of eternity shall they know, and things to come will I show them, even the things of many generations; their wisdom shall be great, and their understanding reach to heaven; and before them the wisdom of the wise shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent shall come to naught; for by my Spirit will I enlighten them, and by my power will I make known unto them the secrets of my will; yea, even those things which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, nor yet entered into the heart of man." And now we come to a delineation of the characters who will attain a celestial glory, together with a glimpse of that glory, as shown by the eternal God to his servant: "And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just; they are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given, that by keeping the commandments they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power; and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds upon all those who are just and true; they are they who are the church of the first-born; they are they into whose hands the Father hath given all things; they are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedek, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the only begotten Son; wherefore as it is written they are God's, even the sons of God; wherefore all things are theirs, and they are Christ's and Christ is God's; and they shall overcome all things; wherefore let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet; these shall dwell in the presence of God, and his Christ forever and ever; these are they whom he shall bring with him, when he shall come in the clouds of heaven, to reign on the earth over His people; these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just; these are they who are come unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly place, the holiest of all; these are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and the church of Enoch, and of the first-born; these are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all; these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant; who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood; these are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God, the highest of all, whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical."

"How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith, in his excellent word.
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled."

"And again, we saw the terrestrial world, and behold and lo; these are they of the terrestrial, whose glory differs from that of the church of the first-born, who have received of the fulness of the Father, even as that of the moon differs from the sun in the firmament. Behold these are they who died without law; and also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to me in the flesh, who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh, but afterward received it; these are they who are the honorable men of the earth, who are blinded by the craftiness of men; these are they who received of his glory, but not of his fulness; these are they who receive the presence of the Son, but not of the fulness of the Father; wherefore they are bodies terrestrial, and not bodies celestial, and differ in glory, as the moon differs from the sun; these are they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus; wherefore they obtained not the crown over the kingdom of our God."

"And again, we saw the glory of the celestial, which glory is that of the lesser, even as the glory of the stars differs from that of the glory of the moon in the firmament; these are they who received not the gospel of Christ, neither the testimony of Jesus; these are they who deny not the Holy Spirit; these are they who are thrust down to hell; these are they who shall not be redeemed from the devil until the last resurrection, until the Lord, even Christ the Lamb, shall have finished his work; these are they who receive not of his fulness in the eternal world, but of the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the terrestrial; and the terrestrial through the ministration of the celestial; and also the celestial receive it of the administering of angels, who are appointed to minister for them, or who are appointed to be ministering spirits for them, for they shall be heirs of salvation. And thus we saw in the heavenly vision, the glory of the celestial which surpasses all understanding, and no man knows it except God has revealed it. And thus we saw the glory of the terrestrial, which excels in all things the glory of the celestial, even in glory, in power, in might, and in dominion. And thus we saw the glory of the celestial, which excels in all things; where God, even the Father, reigns upon his throne for ever and ever, before whose throne all things bow in humble reverence and give him glory for ever and ever. They who dwell in his presence are the church of the first-born; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received of his fulness and of his grace; and he makes them equal in power, and in might and in dominion. And the glory of the celestial is one, even as the glory of the sun is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is one, even as the glory of the moon is one. And the glory of the celestial is one as the glory of the stars is one, for as one star differs from another star in glory, even so differs one from another in glory in the celestial world; for these are they who are of Paul and of Apollos, and of Cephas; these are they who say they are some of one, and some of another; some of Christ, and some of John, and some of Moses, and some of Elias; and some of Esaias, and some of Isaiah, and some of Enoch, but received not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, neither the prophets; neither the everlasting covenant; last of all, these all are they who will not be gathered with the Saints, to be caught up unto the church of the first-born, and received into the cloud; these are they who are liars and sorcerers, and adulterers, and whoremongers, and who-soever loves and makes a lie; these are they who suffer the wrath of God on the earth; these are they who suffer the vengeance of eternal fire; these are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fulness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom spotless, saying: I have overcome and have trodden the wine-press alone, even the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God; then shall he be crowned with the crown of his glory, to sit upon the throne of his power to reign forever and ever. But, behold, and lo, we saw the glory and the inhabitants of the celestial world, that they were as innumerable as the stars in the firmament of heaven, or as the sand upon the sea shore, and heard the voice of the Lord saying: These all shall bow the knee, and every tongue shall confess to him who sits upon the throne forever and ever; for they shall be judged according to their works; and every man shall receive according to his own works, and his own dominion, in the mansions which are prepared, and they shall be servants of the Most High, but where God and Christ dwell they can not come, worlds without end."

Paul speaks in 1 Corinthians 15th of the three glories; of the Sun, Moon and Stars, and says that in the resurrection there shall be a difference in the glories received by those that come forth, even as the sun exceeds the moon in light, and as the moon exceeds the stars, and as one star exceeds another; but he does not state the kind of characters that shall inherit them; but only states that they shall come forth having celestial bodies, terrestrial bodies, and teletial bodies. But here it is made plain to our understanding the kind of characters who shall inherit these glories; they are clearly delineated, and the reasons why a just God could not give to all the same glory are plainly manifest, and herein is the love, the righteousness, justice and mercy of God made manifest also. For the reasons above assigned we have written the whole of the "Vision," that those who read this article, of whatever belief they may be, religious or irreligious, may see the purpose of God with regard to the human family in their creation. None can attach any blame to their God for not receiving the highest reward, for their own choice refused it; yea, all will acknowledge that his judgment is just, and though a loving Father has punished them according to the nature of their rebellion against his righteous laws, yet he has provided a way of escape from the power of him who sought their destruction for all but those who wilfully give themselves into his hands after the Lamb had redeemed them from the power of Satan. We have noticed, according to the vision of those who suffer the wrath of God with the devil and his angels and come forth in the last resurrection, that the time of their coming forth is at the fulness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, having perfected his work and presented the kingdom unto the Father spotless. And this agrees with what we have already discussed concerning the rest of the dead, when the last enemy, death is destroyed.

It also agrees with Paul's statement that "He must reign till he has put all enemies under his feet," and will deliver up the kingdom to the Father; and at that time—the time of the end of the earth in its terrestrial state—it will become celestialized or, in the language of John, there will be a new heaven and a new earth, and all will receive a fulness of the glory by which their bodies were quickened in the separate glories that they receive, as we gather from a revelation of God's purpose concerning the workmanship of his hands: "And your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same even a fulness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same even a fulness; and also they who are quickened by the telestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fulness."—D. & C. sec. 85.

It will be seen that the glory inherited will be the glory by which the bodies are quickened, that is, when they were raised first from the dead, and at that time all receive only a portion of their glory, but that at an appointed time all will receive a fulness of that glory of which they had only a part prior to it; and the time that they will receive this fulness is expressed by the adverb then. And if we are still particular as to the time, we find the answer in the fourth paragraph of this section: "And the resurrection of the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him that quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore it [the earth] must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father." And according to the Revelator, at that time there will be a new heaven and a new earth. And now, reader, we can see the propriety of heeding the admonition of the Savior, to "Search the scriptures," for God hath plainly revealed in them his secret purposes to his servants the prophets from time to time, with regard to the creation of the earth, and man to dwell thereon. The faithful student of the scriptures need not be ignorant of the purposes of God in relation to the human family; may no longer wonder at the purpose of our being, for it is plainly revealed. Fallen man need not be at a loss "what he shall do to be saved," for that is clearly revealed. He has shown himself to be a God that was and is interested in the salvation, glory and exaltation of man whom he has created, by revealing to them his will, his secrets, from time to time, to instruct, to encourage to acts of righteousness, which were for their best good here and their eternal welfare hereafter. He revealed his secret when about to destroy the inhabitants of the earth by a flood, and sent the warning voice of a prophet sounding in their ears repentance, for Noah in holy writ is declared to be a prophet, and a preacher of righteousness; but we have seen that they heeded not the warning voice, and were destroyed by the flood. He has revealed also, that "as it was in the days of Noah so should it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man," with this difference, as declared by Isaiah in the twenty-fourth chapter, that the wicked inhabitants of the earth,—who will become very corrupt,—will be burned and few men left. But the warning voice of a prophet will again be heard—or it could not be like as it was in the days of Noah,—warning the inhabitants of the earth to repent, or God would fail to live up to his regular practice according to Amos, that he would "do nothing save he revealed his secret unto his servants the prophets." And this would be a very important secret, and if he did not impart it unto some one authorized by him to declare it, but brought on the destruction unawares and without warning, it would not be like him as he is made known all through the divine record; and therefore, his character for being no respecter of persons, as well as the attribute mercy would lose some of the lustre with which his revealed word surrounds it, and many of his former revelations to his servants would be falsified. The gospel is to be again preached before the end comes; is to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations. Matt. 24. In Revelations 14th chapter it was revealed unto John in heavenly vision that just prior to the destruction of spiritual Babylon, in the hour of God's judgment, an angel would "fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

Jesus said that at his second coming, the inhabitants of the earth would be in a like condition to those in the days of Noah, showing a necessity for the gospel being preached, suggesting also a departure therefrom. He also said that, "this gospel of the kingdom [evidently referring to the same that he was preaching] should again be preached to all nations, also showing a departure from, and a necessity for its being preached again. John was shown upon Patmos, "things which must shortly come to pass;" and the word says they were "the revelations of Jesus Christ which God gave him to show unto his servants." This angel coming to the earth with the gospel, for every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, plainly indicates that in the future from John's time all the inhabitants of the earth would depart from its precepts and, therefore, the necessity for its restoration. All these testimonies agree with reference to the same thing.

Now, in view of all we have said concerning these things, is it not fair to presume that when the time comes to destroy the earth's inhabitants by fire, so that only a few are left, as quoted from Isaiah, 24th chapter, that the great secret of its near approach will be communicated unto his servant, a prophet, [which secret alone would constitute him a foreteller of a future event, which constitutes a prophet] who, Noah like, will lift up a warning voice, calling upon all the inhabitants of the earth to repent, and turn from their wickedness, and serve their God, their Creator, and they may escape the impending doom?

And now we bear our testimony to all who read this article, who are searching after the truth, that God has, by the power of that Spirit which "searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," made known unto us that the angel spoken of by John has delivered the gospel unto men chosen and appointed of God, who are authorized in his name to declare it unto all men everywhere upon the face of the earth, that by obedience to its precepts they may become the adopted sons of God, and by holy living be prepared for the coming of the Son of God, who shall come with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel.

And in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, we admonish you to turn unto him and "fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come. And worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters," and you shall receive a knowledge of the truth of these things, for "God is no respecter of persons." God stands pledged thus: "If any man will do his [the Father's] will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." And the doing of the Father's will in this life's probation will secure the "inheritance of all things;" all things will be theirs and they Christ's, and Christ's God's. Reader may this be our happy lot.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 25th, 1888.

TWO QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

FIRST—On what week day will Christ come to his kingdom?

Second—What did the Mosaic Tabernacle feast foreshadow?

Answers.—First—The Lord Jesus foreshadowed his second coming by a ride into Jerusalem on the first day of the week, when children cried "Hosanna! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest!"—Matt. 21; which is called "Palm Sunday;" as they "cut branches of palm tress and strewed them in the way." And the next Sunday or the next first day of the week was his resurrection day. The ascension of Christ was also on the first day of the week, or Sunday. He also sent the Holy Ghost down on the first day of the week, (Sunday), and the first day of the creation is also the day in which the Lord God said, "Let there be light and there was light."—Lev. 23:36. "On the eighth day," (which is the first of the next week, Sunday), "shall be a holy convocation." And in verse 39, "On the eighth day shall be a Sabbath." "Ye shall do no servile work therein."—Num.

29:34. "On the eighth, [or first] day, ye shall have a solemn assembly." Turn to Ezekiel 43d chapter where we are told that a temple will be built at Jerusalem; and where all nations will be gathered to worship the King, with Israel, in the temple at Jerusalem. This temple will be consecrated seven days and on the "eighth" (first) day "of the week," and so forward every eighth or first day, which is Sunday, will be then the rest day, or Sabbath. Hence I believe that when our Lord comes again it will be on the first (eighth) day of the week, which is Sunday.

Second—The second answer is to show what the Mosaic tabernacle feast meant: The tabernacle feast represents the millennium, or the kingdom of Christ on earth. In Zechariah 14th chapter, after the Lord hath gone forth and fought against the nations which come against Jerusalem and his feet stand on the Mount of Olives; and after the temple has been built, then those nations that are left "shall go up to Jerusalem to worship the king [Jesus] and to keep the feast of tabernacles." Read the whole chapter. Hence, the feast of tabernacles was the type foreshadowing the one thousand years Sabbath of Christ's kingdom on the earth; while the ingathering feast, also, represents the space between the eleventh and twelfth hour of the parable in Matthew 20:1-8, and is the space in which we now live.

Conference Minutes.

VICTORIA.

Minutes of conference held at Queen's Ferry, Australia, October 20th and 21st: The meeting was called to order by Bro. Rennie. On motion Bro. Wight of the Seventy was chosen chairman during conference, assisted by Bro. E. G. Jones, district president, and Brn. Read and McGurk as secretaries. Minutes of previous conference read and approved. Statistical reports: Hastings 39; Leopold 24; 4 baptized. Queen's Ferry 35. Brn. Jones, of Hastings, Trembath of Leopold, and Read of Queen's Ferry, reported favorably of the spiritual condition of their respective branches, Bro. Trembath having baptized 2. Brn. McIntosh and Rennie were appointed committee to audit Bishop's agent's report. Bishop's agent reported as follows: Balance on hand last report £5 18 10d, receipts since £61 12s 3d, paid out £5 7s 7d, balance now on hand £61 6s 6d. Report adopted. Elder E. G. Jones, district president, reported having visited the branches and found them in good order. The teacher and deacon of Hastings branch, also the teacher of Queen's Ferry branch reported. Elder John Wight reported having preached sixty times and baptized four. Elder C. A. Butterworth reported having preached ten times and baptized two. Elder McIntosh and Priests Rennie and Hailey also reported. Report of committee of audit accepted and committee discharged. Owing to misunderstanding, Bro. Hailey had not been entered on the books of any branch, it was therefore moved that the original motion as to his joining nearest branch stand. Bro. Missen's application for ordination was referred to Queen's Ferry branch. Moved that Elders Jones, McGurk and Trembath be sustained in the field. Moved that district officers be sustained until next conference. Moved that when conference adjourns it does so to meet at Hastings not later than February 28th. Moved that Bro. McGurk keep a supply of church books on hand and for sale. Preaching at 7:30 by Bro. Wight. Preaching during the sessions by Elders Wight and Trembath, Jones and McGurk, and Butterworth and McIntosh. Thus was brought to a close a very peaceable and happy season. Although no very striking gifts were manifested during the period, yet tangible evidence was given of the rapid advance of the work in Australia. Present of the Seventy 1, present of the Elders 6, present of the Priests 3, present of the Teachers 1. Elder McGurk and Priest Rennie, whose names are included in the above list, act as Teacher and Deacon, respectively, in their branch. Adjourned.

SOUTH-EASTERN OHIO AND WEST VIRGINIA.

A conference of the above district convened at Limerick, Ohio, September 8th, Elder E. C. Briggs presiding, assisted by Elder G. T. Griffiths; L. R. Devore secretary pro tem. Minutes of last conference read and approved, with the correction that Bro. D. J. Hannah be granted a Teacher's license. On petition, the newly organized branch of Washington, in Jackson county, West Virginia, consisting of 9 members, was received into the district. Branch reports: Liberty 83; net gain 3. Syracuse no change. Vinton 64; 5 baptized, 5 expelled. Union Grove 32; 3 baptized. Hocking Valley no change. Morgan no change. Milton 18; 4 baptized. Highland 33; 3 expelled. Mount Zion 14; 3 baptized. Fair View no change. Ministerial reports: Elders E. C. Briggs, G. T. Griffiths, T. J. Beatty (baptized 3), J. Moler (baptized 11), T. Matthews (baptized 2), A. W. Kriebel (baptized 1), A. B. Ervin, L. R. Devore (baptized 5), in person. By letter, D. L. Shinn and A. B. Kirkendall. Priests, W. H. Rhodes and C. Cooper. Bro. G. T. Griffiths spoke relative to Bro. D. L. Shinn taking the field, upon which the following motion was sustained: That we request that Bro. D. L. Shinn be assigned a field if arrangements can be made with the Bishop and the missionary in charge. Licenses were granted to C. Moore, Teacher, and G. Reed, Deacon. Resolved, that Bro. R. H. Ervin be ordained to the office of Priest at this conference and receive a license. It was resolved that Brn. T. J. Beatty, J. Moler and T. Matthews were to be ordained to the office of Seventy during this conference. The petition of Bro. A. B. Kirkendall asking release from the offices of secretary and treasurer of the district was rejected and he was continued. A committee consisting of S. J. Jeffers, T. Matthews and H. E. Moler was appointed to audit the Bishop's agent's report and books which they did and reported them correct. Bro. T. J. Beatty was continued president. On motion the Bishop's agent was heartily sustained. The missionaries in charge and all the officers of the church were sustained. Bro. T. J. Beatty, J. Moler and T. Matthews were ordained to the office of Seventy by Brn. E. C. Briggs and G. T. Griffiths. Brn. E. C. Briggs and G. T. Griffiths were chosen delegates to General Conference. Preaching during the conference was by Brn. Briggs, Griffiths and Matthews, in which all enjoyed good liberty. Adjourned to meet at Vale's Mills, Vinton county, Ohio, in one year or thereabouts.

TEXAS CENTRAL.

Conference convened at Cooke's Point, November 10th, E. W. Nunley presiding. Branch reports: Elkhart 29; 3 baptized. Lone Pine 18; 1 died. Evergreen 12. Texas Central 48; 13 baptized. The Live Oak and Evergreen branches were received into the district. Elders reports: I. N. Roberts (baptized 13, organized 1 branch and one district), E. W. Nunley, A. J. Moore (baptized 7, organized 1 branch), S. W. Simmons (baptized 5), B. F. Renfroe. Priests: C. C. Holcombe (baptized 1), F. C. Gough. Teachers: J. L. Wilson. Bishop's agent's report: Balance last report $13 35, received $81.05, total $97.40. Paid out $101.15. Due agent $3.75. The present district officers were sustained. Preaching during conference by S. W. Simmons, A. J. Moore and I. N. Roberts. Adjourned subject to the call of the president.

Miscellaneous.

DECATUR DISTRICT.

As provided for at last conference two-day meetings will be held as follows: Near Wirt, Ringgold county, Iowa, December 15th and 16th, Brn. J. S. Snively, H. N. Snively and O. B. Thomas engaged to be present. At the Bonnet School-house in the Greenville branch on the same dates, Brn. John Shippy and T. J. Bell to be present. Other elders who can make it convenient to attend are cordially invited to do so.

Also a meeting will be held at Pleasanton on January 12th and 13th. Other branches and places that desire such meetings can be provided for on application, stating what days would be most convenient for them. Services on Saturday will be at 2:30 and 7 p. m., and on Sunday at 10:30 a. m., and 2:30 and 7 p. m. A meeting may be held on Saturday forenoon if the local officers deem it advisable.

SOLOMON SPAULDING'S NEPHEW.

WE call attention to the account of an interview between Bro. G. T. Griffiths and Mr. D. D. Spaulding which appears in this issue of the HERALD. As will be seen, the interview took place in Conneaut Township, Crawford county, Pennsylvania, where the historic Conneaut Creek still winds its way as deviously as the story which so long lived a life of falsehood, the only available weapon in the hands of the clergy and others who sought to rebut the many and remarkable evidences of the divine origin of the Book of Mormon.

Mr. Spaulding speaks out frankly and openly concerning his uncle, Solomon Spaulding. He was personally acquainted with the author of the notorious "Manuscript Found," and from what he states it is clear that he does not spoil a true story for the sake of relationship. He certainly knows whereof he affirms, and it is evident that in addition to his personal acquaintance with his uncle, his position as a member of the Spaulding family enabled him to obtain a correct knowledge of the life, character and reputation of Solomon Spaulding. His estimate of him is that he was irreligious, crooked in his business transactions, and "lazy." One has but to read the "Manuscript Found" for a confirmation of the former and latter statements, while the moral tone of the document will support the idea expressed in the other. This interview will be of value to the elders as another and confirmatory link in the chain of evidence against the wicked plot of those who in an early day sought to bring to naught the great purposes of Israel's God in bringing to light the Book of Mormon.

We commend Elder Griffiths' effort in securing the interview. Mr. Beardsley in whose presence the interview took place, is personally known to us as a man of integrity and a lover of truth. Read the account of it.

THE APOSTLESHIP.

IN the "The Historical Record," a work edited and published by Andrew Jensen, Salt Lake City, Utah, we find it stated that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained to the Apostleship "a short time after" the revelation was given "making known the calling of the twelve apostles in these last days," ("given in Fayette, New York, 1829," See D. C. sec. 16), and that Joseph and Oliver at that time "were visited by the Apostles Peter, James and John, who according to the holy order of the priesthood ordained them to the Apostleship, or the Melchisedec Priesthood." (Page 372). This is another one of the many assertions which have been foisted upon the ignorant and credulous as historical fact, thereby darkening counsel and leading to error and confusion.

At the time the said revelation was given, Joseph and Oliver had already been made Apostles of and for Christ and his "marvelous work and a wonder;" for of Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer that same revelation said, "I speak unto you, even as unto Paul mine apostle, for you are called with that same calling with which he was called."—D. C. 16:3. This was ten months before the Melchisedec Priesthood was conferred, as we shall see in due time, which proves that Christ may and sometimes does call men to be apostles, and owns them as such, before they receive personal ordination, by the laying on of hands, to the Melchisedec Priesthood. In further confirmation we note the fact that, following soon after the before mentioned revelation, and before the Melchisedec Priesthood was conferred, this further statement was made in regard to the Apostleship of Joseph and Oliver: "Who was called of God, and ordained an Apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the first elder of this church; and to Oliver Cowdery, who was also called of God an Apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the second elder of this church, and ordained under his hand."—D. C. 17:1. And to these men the Lord said, April 6th, 1830: "Wherefore, it behooveth me, that he [Joseph] should be ordained by you, Oliver Cowdery, mine apostle; this being an ordinance unto you, that you are an elder under his [Joseph's] hand, he being the first unto you."—D. C. 19:3.

The most prominent and distinguishing qualification of an apostle is the fact of his being sent of God a special witness for Christ "in all the world." (See D. C.

104:11; 26:3; 16:5; Acts 9:15; 26:16-18; Matt. 28:19, 20; Mark 16:15, etc).

Joseph and Oliver and David and Martin and others, prior to the calling, ordination and organization of the quorum of apostles, February 14th to 27th, 1835, were special witnesses of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the restoration of the priesthood and the founding of the Church of God; and hence they were very properly called "apostles," as in D. C. 16:3; 17:1, 8; 19:1, 3; 64:7; 83:10; 92:1. And hence it is that we find in the teachings of the Seer the Seventy are sometimes called apostles; also that our blessed Lord is called "the apostle and high priest of our profession."—Heb. 3:1.

Now the only ordination of Joseph and Oliver in which Peter, and James, and John ministered, was when John the Baptist, acting under the direction of these three apostles, ordained them as is set forth in the "History of Joseph Smith," in these words:

"We still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month, (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine), we, on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us: 'Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.' He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter, and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized, I baptized him first and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded.

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger."—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 865, 866.

This ordination is manifestly the one alluded to in the revelation of September, 1830, D. C. 26: 3, where it says: "And also with Peter, and James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you [Joseph and Oliver] to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name." Note it well, that when John the Baptist ordained Joseph and Oliver, he did it "under the direction of Peter, James, and John," and did so "in the name of Messiah"—Christ—thus making special witnesses of his name—authority—to all nations.

Another noteworthy feature in the statement of Mr. Jenson is found where he claims that "a short time after" the giving of the revelation of June, 1829, relating to the calling and duties of the twelve apostles, that Joseph and Oliver were ordained by Peter, James and John to "the Melchisedec Priesthood." This is wholly without warrant, for there is not one word in the history of the church published up to the death of Joseph the Seer, June 27th, 1844, to support it. But to the contrary, the history states that the Melchisedec Priesthood was first conferred April 6th, 1830, as is seen in these several extracts:

"The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this [Aaronic] priesthood upon us said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he [Oliver] the second."—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 866.

Afterwards this promise was fulfilled in the following manner:

"We now became anxious to have that promise realized to us, which the angel that conferred upon us the Aaronic Priesthood had given us, namely, that provided we continued faithful, we should also have the Melchisedec Priesthood, which holds the authority of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. We had for some time made this matter a subject of humble prayer, and at length we got together in the chamber of Mr. Whitmer's house in order more particularly to seek of the Lord what we now so earnestly desired: and here to our unspeakable satisfaction did we realize the truth of the Savior's promise; 'Ask, and ye shall receive, seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you;' for we had not long been engaged in solemn and fervent prayer, when the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ, and that he also should ordain me to the same office, and then to ordain others as it should be made known unto us, from time to time; we were however commanded to defer this our ordination until such times as it should be practicable to have our brethren, who had been and who should be baptized, assembled together, when we must have their sanction to our thus proceeding to ordain each other, and have them decide by vote whether they were willing to accept us as spiritual teachers or not, when also we were commanded to bless bread and break it with them, and to take wine, bless it, and drink it with them, afterward proceed to ordain each other according to commandment, then call out such men as the Spirit should dictate, and ordain them, and then attend to the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost upon all those whom we had previously baptized; doing all things in the name of the Lord.

"The following commandment will further illustrate the nature of our calling to this priesthood as well as that of others who were yet to be sought after."—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 915.

And now comes their ordination in fulfillment of the foregoing promise and commandment:

"Whilst the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer we still continued to bear testimony and give information as far as we had opportunity; and also made known to our brethren that we had received commandment to organize the church, and accordingly we met together for that purpose, at the house of the above mentioned Mr. Whitmer (being six in number) on Tuesday the sixth day of April, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and thirty.

"Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father we proceeded, (according to previous commandment), to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by a unanimous vote. I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder of the 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.' After which he ordained me also an elder of said church. We then took bread, blessed it, and brake it with them, also wine, blessed it, and drank it with them. We then laid our hands on each individual member of the church present that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and be confirmed members of the Church of Christ. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon us to a very great degree. Some prophesied, whilst we all praised the Lord and rejoiced exceedingly. Whilst yet together I received the following commandment:

"REVELATION TO JOSEPH SMITH, JR., GIVEN APRIL 6TH, 1830.

"Behold there shall be a record kept among you, and in it thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of the church through the will of God the Father, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ; being inspired of the Holy Ghost to lay the foundation thereof, and to build it up unto the most holy faith; which church was organized and established in the year of your Lord eighteen hundred and thirty, in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month, which is called April.

"Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things the gates of hell shall not prevail against you: yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good and his name's glory. For thus saith the Lord God, him have I inspired to move the cause of Zion in mighty power for good; and his diligence I know, and his prayers I have heard: yea, his weeping for Zion I have seen, and I will cause that he shall mourn for her no longer, for his days of rejoicing are come unto the remission of his sins, and the manifestations of my blessings upon his works.

"For behold, I will bless all those who labor in my vineyard, with a mighty blessing, and they shall believe on his words, which are given him through me, by the Comforter, which manifesteth that Jesus was crucified by sinful men for the sins of the world; yea, for the remission of sins unto the contrite heart. Wherefore, it behooveth me, that he should be ordained by you, Oliver Cowdery, mine apostle; this being an ordinance unto you, that you are an elder under his hand, he being the first unto you, that you might be an elder unto this Church of Christ, bearing my name; and the first preacher of this church, unto the church, and before the world; yea, before the Gentiles: yea, and thus saith the Lord God, lo, lo, to the Jews, also. Amen."—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 944-5.

Thus is exposed one of the many insidious errors in history and doctrine which have been put forward as truth, and by which the Saints and others have been confused, blinded and misled. And there are other statements in the "Record" which are equally erroneous, and some of them equally harmful, which we may review and refute at some future time.

WE take the extract below from a letter written us by Bishop George A. Blakeslee the 13th instant. All hearts will be pained on reading it. Pray for him and his grief stricken family:

"It has been just two weeks to-day since my son Alma left home to go to Michigan City, Indiana, on business. Arriving in the city near five o'clock p. m., he did not get through with his business so he could leave on the 6:50 p. m. train, but intended to take the 11:20 p. m. train, as we learn from those who were with him.

"It being a very misty and dark night and his not arriving home that evening or next morning early, we feared he had met with foul play, and immediately commenced searching for him with the aid of all the police force in Michigan City. Failing in this, we went to Chicago and secured the aid of its Chief of Police, also Pinkerton's Detective force, and after a diligent search night and day for two weeks, and from evidences that we have picked up, we have all decided that he was robbed and murdered in Michigan City.

Michigan City is said to have more saloons and gambling houses than any other city of its size in the west.

"I fear we shall never obtain the body, and fear that if we do not obtain it his mother will become insane.

"My son Eddie and your son William A., are constantly working upon the case with the aid of others.

"I hand you a clipping from a Michigan City paper telling of a similar circumstance in the disappearance of a young man just two days later.

"Our investigation reveals the fact that Alma was not the first that has mysteriously disappeared, as it seems, by the hands of a well organized gang; for during the last year several have been missing and several dead bodies have been found."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. M. T. Short lately gave account of himself at London Mills, Illinois, as follows:

"Having large crowds out night after night here in the Christian Church. We may shake some of their dungeons. In love of the truth and at work in the interest of saving grace."

Bro. G. A. Davy writes from Bullion, Alturas county, Idaho, as follows:

"I have read the Herald, Autumn Leaves, and the Hope the past year, and feel very grateful for that great privilege. This region of country is a place of great spiritual darkness. There are a few Methodists and some of other denominations, but more of that class who do not believe in any God, nor any hereafter. I do not know of any Saints who live near here. I seem to be alone by reason of my belief, but I feel that the Lord is with me by the power of his good Spirit, and my prayer is that I may be faithful unto the end."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

FROM a late letter we learn that Bro. E. C. Briggs is laboring at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

Bro. Robert Davis writes from Juniata, Michigan, that by request of the district president he was laboring among the branches of the Northern Michigan district. He had baptized about fourteen in the past year.

Bro. J. B. Graham wrote December 4th from Russell Springs, Kansas, giving another account of that section of country. He thinks it a desirable place for settlers to locate. Our limited space forbids the insertion of the entire letter.

Bro. T. J. Martin wrote December 7th from Detroit, Minnesota, that he was preaching every Sunday and at times during the week. He had baptized four since their October conference, making twenty in all baptized in that district this summer, and more are expected to follow soon.

Bro. David I. Jones writes from Sheridan, Nevada, giving an account of the labors of Brn. Daley and Snyder in that section. He confirms the good report of the revival of the work in Nevada, as lately written of by Bro. Daley and asks the California brethren to aid them all they can.

Mrs. Martha Young, of Emerson, Iowa, desires to learn the whereabouts of Wiley Young, her husband.

Bro. W. H. Fender wrote December 10th from Bee, Nebraska, that Bro. Charles Porter, of Wilber, had preached at that place in answer to their requests lately published in the HERALD. The Christian church was secured in which Bro. Porter delivered ten sermons to attentive congregations. An Adventist minister had endeavored to explain away some evidences presented by Bro. Porter, but his folly was made manifest to the good of the cause of truth which was now more favorably regarded by the people of that place.

Bro. Richard Shepard, of Flager, Iowa, wrote bearing his testimony to the truth of the latter day work and expressing his joy therein.

Bro. Joshua V. Fowler recently wrote from The Rocks postoffice, Missouri, giving an account of his labors with the church at New Park which he had, by the blessing of the Lord, succeeded in reviving from a dormant condition.

UTAH TRIBULATIONS.

WE take the clipping below from the Utah Enquirer, of the 7th instant. It is from a sermon of Elder William H. Kelsey, of Springville, and serves to show how he looks upon Brighamite affairs in Utah. If he would open his eyes to the ruinous apostasy in which the Utah leaders have ensnared their fellows, he could easily answer his question as to "Whose fault is all this?" He and his people should return to the law of the Lord as taught in the sacred books of the church up to 1844, and live in accordance with them and then all would be well. Until they do this, condemnation and tribulation will follow them.

"What are we doing to stay the hand of God from allowing us to be whipped by the nations? Do we raise our voice in sincere supplication to Him for His divine protection? I am afraid not. I look around me, and I see our meetings poorly attended, and I wonder if we realize our obligations. I turn my attention in other directions, and I find nearly two hundred of our brethren occupying a felon's cell; as many more in exile; thousands of children that have not a kind father's caresses, and hundreds of our sisters who have not the counsel of a companion. Whose fault is all this? Can we say we have not helped this condition of things to come upon us? Have we lived uprightly before the Lord? Have we attended to our duties? Have we honestly paid our tithes and offerings? Do we not know that when we become indifferent in this last respect the earth will refuse to give of her support? The saloons and theatres offer more inducements now than our meeting-houses."

The following is from the Chicago Herald of December 10th:

In the hall at 213, West Madison Street a little band of worshippers was gathered together last night. Women and children were in the little band, which included not over forty persons, all told. While prayers were offered, little children toddled about the kneeling worshippers, or played around the chairs, but that disturbed no one. These worshippers belong to the Church of Latter Day Saints, the original Mormon Church. They are not polygamists, however. On the contrary, they are devout Christian people. They are happy and contented, and are lawabiding in every sense of the word. C. H. Muetze, a venerable-looking man, with a patriarchal beard, opened the services last night by announcing the 570th hymn, which he read in a decidedly firm tone, and he led the singing after in a way that would have done credit to younger men.

Elder J. C. Foss, of Independence, Missouri, preached the sermon. He is a bright-faced, cheery man, who was born in Maine and went to Missouri six years ago. He preached without notes on "The Kingdom of Christ." Regarding this sect, it is at present undergoing a decided increase in membership. S. C. Good is the president of the Chicago branch, and he is a young man of decided push and energy, with an earnest manner that is quite impressive. F. M. Cooper is the presiding elder of the Northern Illinois District, where there is now a membership of over a thousand, which is quite widely scattered.

Elder Foss, speaking of the church, said: "We believe in the same laws for our government now as were given by Christ more than 1,800 years ago. We are strictly opposed to polygamy and its kindred evils, including the blood atonement, endowments, etc. We believe in obedience to the laws of our country as well as those of God. I have been an elder of the church for more than twenty years. I belong to the quorum of seventy elders. The first president of the church is Joseph Smith, who is assisted by two counselors. We have next the twelve apostles, then the different classes of elders, which are composed of ninety-six members. We are governed alone by the laws of God, and not by these various quorums. They are merely for the diffusion and spreading of the gospel and conducting the affairs of the church. The headquarters of the church is at Lamoni, Iowa. We have the bishops and their tithes, and we depend upon the bishops for the support of the ministry. George A. Blakeslee, of Gallen, Michigan, is the present bishop. He is assisted by two counselors also—E. L. Kelley, a lawyer at Kirtland, Ohio, and Elijah Banta, a wealthy man of Lamoni. We have no prices for pews in our churches; they are free to all. We are building a new stone church at Independence, Missouri, which will cost about $25,000. There are over 600 members in that branch. The branch at Lamoni has over 600 members. We have churches scattered throughout the United States, Canada, Australia, England, Scotland, Wales and Denmark."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Has a branch the right to elect a priest as presiding officer of the branch when there are elders in the branch who will not act, or who are considered by the branch not qualified for the position?

HIRAM L. HOLT.

Ans.—To the above we reply, decidedly, Yes. First, for the reason that all organized or organizing bodies possess the inherent right of selecting their own officers. This natural right is guaranteed by church law and precedent from the very first. Joseph and Oliver were made officers of the church by vote of the Saints, April 6th, 1830, and this by the counsel and order of the Lord, (see Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 944), thus establishing the principle as fundamental in the government of the church, that the people shall select, by vote, those who are to be their officers. This principle applies not only to primary organizations, but conferences also, for the Lord commanded that Joseph the Seer "shall be appointed to preside over the conference by the voice of it."—D. C. 27:4. This principle was strictly observed in church government up to 1844, without deviation, so far as we are aware. And to this agree the "Rules of Order," chapter 1, sections 4, 5, 7, 10, 13, also chapter 14, sections 163, 164, 165.

2.—In partaking of the sacrament should the officer administering break the bread, or should each member break a portion as it is passed to them?

A.—It should be broken and blessed and administered by one having authority so to do. See 1 Cor. 11: 23-25; Luke 22: 19; Matt. 26: 26, 27; Mark 14: 22. B. M., Nephi 8: 6, page 456. D. & C. 17: 11.

2.—Is it right for any member having the interpretation of tongues, to refuse to give it, or to give a part of it and refuse to give the balance?

A.—Wisdom and prudence should govern the one having the gift of interpretation. If all of the tongue should be profitable by way of encouragement, warning, reproof or instruction, and the interpreter be constrained by the Spirit to give utterance to it, it should be revealed. But a part may be for the branch and the remainder for one or more individuals only. Those enjoying the gifts should seek for wisdom, and use discretion in the exercise of them that their gifts may become profitable to the body. See 1 Cor. 12th and 14th chapters, D. & C., sec. 46, etc.

2.—If a member moves from one branch to another and has no letter of removal, has such any right to vote on matters concerning the business of the branch?

A.—No, unless the branch receives them by vote into full membership. General Conference has—according to the law of the church—ruled that members removing from one branch to another shall in all cases procure letters of removal, and that such should be presented to other branches by those desiring membership therein. This rule should be strictly observed. When honored, confusion and labor will be saved to all concerned.

2.—Is there any harm in the Saints having festivals to procure money to buy fuel and incidentals for the benefit of the church?

A.—No; not if properly conducted.

WE clip the following readable items from the Christian Herald, (London England) for November 14th, 1888. They furnish a concise view of the topics treated as seen from a popular English standpoint and are worthy of our notice:

CURRENT EVENTS.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION

Is one of growing gravity. Not only does apprehension exist both at Constantinople and Rome of an impending insurrection in Servia, but the condition of affairs in Eastern Europe is regarded as critical. General Gourko, the provincial Governor-General of Warsaw in Poland, said recently: "Notwithstanding the peaceful policy of our own Russian Government, there is a warlike spirit in the neighboring country (Austria). Their press excites public opinion against us; their military authorities speak with scorn of the inefficiency of our army, the slowness of our system of mobilization, and our lack of able officers—in fact, they discount our defeat. They had, however, better not go too far, because in that case the Czar may give the order to march, and we shall then cross the frontier, without mobilizing, within twenty-four hours. I do not under-estimate the advantages possessed by other armies, but I maintain—not as a Russian patriot but as a soldier—that no troops can compare with our own. I do not deny that Austria has brilliant artillery and Germany admirable tactics, but the Russian has ardour and determination which vanquish all difficulties. In that respect the Turkish soldier alone can be—but only to a certain extent—compared with our own—but why waste words? Whenever the right time comes our deeds will be worthy of us. All I have to add is that we already know the roads to Vienna and Berlin." Revolutionary agents of the Russian Government are just now displaying the utmost activity, both in Servia and amongst the Roumanian peasantry.

ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES

May soon find the feeling between them become dangerously unfriendly in consequence of General Harrison, the leader of the Republican party, being elected president mainly by the Irish American vote. Mr. Blaine, who advocates the annexation of Canada, is likely to be made Secretary of State. The London Record says: "General Harrison has found his main supporters in the Irish electorate of the Eastern States, and it is not very likely that he will be allowed to forget that fact. Mr. Blaine, too, will have great claims for consolation for his defeat of four years ago; and it is very probable that this will take the form of his appointment as Secretary of State. Those who remember the remarkable foreign policy which is associated with his name, his reckless adaptation of the Monroe doctrine, and ruthless disregard for the ordinary courtesies of diplomacy, will not regard that possibility with complete satisfaction. We can not hide from ourselves that official America represents a strong force of anti-English feeling. The Republicans are anti-English from the traditions and inclinations of the most powerful section of their supporters, the Irish Americans. The result of the presidential contest, therefore, if it affords no cause for immediate apprehension, affords little for rejoicing. We must wait the course of events." Another London paper says: "From the Republican party, which has now come into power, England can scarcely expect that amount of friendliness which has been displayed by President Cleveland's Democratic party. The Republican election strings have been pulled by Mr. Blaine, who is hostile to this country, and who will probably do his best to give expression to his feelings."

UNEASINESS AS TO THE FUTURE

Prevails in political circles in France. General Boulanger has rallied in opposition to the Government a personal following, curiously made up of Bonapartists, Monarchists, and Communists. All three appear to recognize in the General the one man in France capable of overthrowing the Republic. That is what they agree in wishing done, though they do not agree as to the government to follow the Republic. An intelligent observer in Paris writes: "General Boulanger has more powerful support accorded to him than any one man in France since the time of the Prince President, Louis Napoleon. The Communists—and there are 200,000 of them in Paris alone—believe that when the General has broken down legal barriers, they will be able to rush in and revive the Commune. The Bonapartists and Royalists hope to turn him into a voluntary or involuntary General Monk, who may seat the Comte de Paris or Prince Victor Napoleon on the French throne, just as General Monk, having become head of the British Army in 1660 after Oliver Cromwell's death, recalled the representative of the fallen Royal dynasty Charles II, from exile in Holland to the throne of England. General Boulanger gains power every day, and people begin to believe that a timely appeal to the nation direct can alone save France from another revolution on the centenary of the great French Revolution of 1789."

WILL THE POPE LEAVE ROME?

It has been rumored, in quarters likely to know, that it is likely that we shall soon have the Pope living under the protection of the British flag. An eminent ecclesiastic in London has been informed that if the Italian Government persists in its present policy the Pope will leave Rome, and that he will probably take refuge in British territory. He is said to be unwilling to put himself in the power of any of the great Catholic States. Two places of sojourn have been suggested—the Channel Islands or Malta, and it is said that most probably the latter will be chosen. This rumor has not been heard now for some time, but it has cropped up at intervals for a good many years.

EXPECTED FAMINE IN INDIA.

Lord Lansdowne, the Governor-General, has a far worse prospect before him in India than any he need fear from other causes just now. There are unmistakable signs that the cry of famine will shortly be heard in many parts of the vast peninsula. Orissa, always liable to these visitations, is already suffering severely, and half a dozen other provinces will soon be in a similar case. Yet, no doubt, even if the worst comes to the worst, there will be an ample food-supply in India for all, if it can only be made available. It is not the actual want of food so much as the want of money for its purchase that causes famine. The ryots or small farmers' crops are, as a rule, pawned up to the hilt to the native usurer. When the harvest is gathered in, Shylock repays himself his advances, with liberal interest added, and sets up the ryot again with another loan for seed and maintenance. And thus matters go on, year after year, until the evil day comes when there is no harvest. Then, of course, the money-lender refuses further accommodation, and the farmer and his family are left to die or live as may be the case. With people thus circumstanced, railways for the conveyance of supplies to famine-stricken districts can do little good by themselves. To supplement their services it is necessary to start relief works, where the starving people may earn or have given them sufficient for the purchase of the imported food.

"ON Sunday morning last at Malad, Idaho, Anthony Metcalf, formerly a resident of Hyde Park, Utah, shot and killed himself. It is said he was troubled about his financial condition."

We clip the above from the Utah Enquirer of the 7th instant, and we have it confirmed by private advices.

Anthony Metcalf went to Utah a Brighamite, and about 1869 he united with the Reorganization. Moving to Malad City, Idaho, he fell into the liquor habit, lost the spirit of the gospel, became an infidel, and, sad to say, now perishes by his own hand. God pity his family.

When we first knew Anthony Metcalf, from 1869 to 1871, he was a religious, happy man, and had an interesting and pleasant family. But when we met him again, in 1880 to 1884, a great change had taken place with him, and the fruits of infidelity, intemperance and spiritualism were plainly apparent in his speech and manner. As it is, we are glad that his destiny is in the hands of a compassionate God who is no respecter of persons, and who will deal justly and lovingly with all.

We clip the following from the Salt Lake Tribune of November 22d, and invite the attention of our readers to the wise and finely expressed sentiments of editor Goodwin thereon:

NO REST.

Professor S. J. Bailey, in the course of an article in Zion's Herald, says:

"The 'Fixed Stars' are not fixed. Nothing in nature is still. It was long ago supposed that this earth was stationary and all other things revolved about us as a fitting center. Later we learned that we daily rolled around on the earth's axis, and yearly about the sun as a fixed center. But then we learned that the sun itself, so mighty and vast, is a star, a center for only our little system, and that it, too, is not fixed, but moving on. But whither? To some point in the constellation Hercules. But whither, when in the cycles of time Hercules shall be past? We can not say. As yet there are no data. We simply know we are moving on. In the September number of the Century is an article by Professor Holden, of the Lick Observatory, giving a chart by Flammarion showing the motions of the so-called 'fixed stars.' After some centuries, when by photographic means a perfect record of the stars gathered at regular intervals has long been open to the inspection of astronomers, it may be known in what vast orbit, if indeed it have an orbit, our solar system moves. With the increasing sensitiveness of the dry plates it will be possible to photograph the stars far below the limits of visibility. Indeed, already this is done. On the plates now made many stars appear which are invisible to the eye with a telescope of equal power."

Of this the editor remarks:

"Not only are the fixed stars not fixed, but nothing is. The lives of men go sweeping on, some as suns, some as satellites, some as but inert and irresponsive bodies, but there is no rest. Some fill the space around them with warmth and light, and some merely float, useless, in the void of life; some are the centers to little systems, and some are but the outer satellites that might drop into the abyss and never be missed. But it is a comfort to believe that the higher and nobler among us are held by attractions too high and sublime and too far away for the ordinary mortal to comprehend either their magnificence or power. Now and then mortals appear that do not seem to be controlled by the forces that sway other lives. They are not moved by things that influence other men; they have no such hopes and ambitions; they move in orbits of their own, and seem to get their light from some sun that ordinary mortal eyes can not see. The hope of the race is that more and more of them will be drawn under this attraction until there will be no more that is petty or mean in the world, drawn until men shall really stand in the ante-chamber of the sphere in which angels dwell. But it was not of that we meant to speak. Rather it was that this story of how even the fixed stars can not keep secure in their places, but, obeying an immutable law, are sweeping on in their spheres, so what little man hopes to accomplish in this world he must accomplish very soon, for every pulse beat is hurrying him on to where he can work no longer. So it is with communities.

What is unjust in them should be corrected without delay, for in the swift transition which is going on the quicker a wrong can be righted the easier is the task, the less the heartaches that follow. From birth to death is but a span, the years in which mortals can toil are but few; the opportunities for good are limited and then on its orbit a human life drifts away into the darkness and silence, and the scene closes. That no regrets or repinings may follow a soul out, there must be an earnest effort to finish, while here, the allotted work. It is not more than a mortal has strength for if he does not permit it to accumulate on his hands. But he who puts it off and trusts he may finish it at the close, will be found at last in a hurry and in confusion and with accounts all unadjusted. The lesson that the stars teach is that there is no rest for a man until his full work has been completed."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Awake, O listless soul! for lo,
The Christ-child waits beside thy door.
Not glorious in celestial glow,
But small and weak and sick and poor.

"Along the merry Christmas street,
Amid the bitter frost and snow,
His 'little ones,' with weary feet
And wistful eyes, neglected go.

"Oh! for the holy Christ-child's sake
Let these be fed and clothed and warm.
Awake, thou loving heart, awake!
The Christ-child calls in night and storm."

"HE WILL NOT COME UNTIL THERE IS A PEOPLE PREPARED TO MEET HIM, IF IT IS NOT FOR A THOUSAND YEARS."

—JOSEPH SMITH.

AS WE take up our pen with the intention of sending a word of greeting to our friends and to all who are laboring for the Master at this Christmas Tide, these words present themselves forcibly to our mind, and we find ourself wondering whether the church is to-day nearer that glorious time—the time of His second coming—than she was one year ago when sweet-voiced bells rang in the anniversary of the glad day, the day first ushered in by the song of the angel and the chorus of a multitude of the heavenly host crying: "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men."

Are we nearer the day for which every true saint of God is longing, praying, and best of all, working? There is a voice vibrating on the air this Christmas day, a voice sweet and low, yet attuned to the sadness of earnest entreaty. Do you hear it, oh, my soul? It tells of the glory in our Father's house; of the light, warmth, love and joy abiding there, and of One the best Beloved, the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, who hastened with joyful gladness to forsake this glory—this warmth and light—for wanderings sad and lone, for vigils beneath the midnight sky and broken slumbers upon the cold and dew-drenched earth. It is the voice of the Man of Sorrows acquainted with grief, which comes on the Christmas air this morning; and the burden of its entreaty is, "What are you doing for me?" "Went I not before you in the straight and narrow way, that my feet might be pierced by every thorn; that every rough place where your own might be wounded, mine should first pass over to show you that it was possible for yours to walk therein? Have I not trodden the wine press of the fierceness of God's wrath alone, and given myself a willing sacrifice, that you might have life and have it more abundantly? What are you doing for me? Did I not descend alone into the undisputed regions of death and hell, and there wrest from him who held them the keys of this power, that henceforth you need not fear him, but close your eyes upon life and time with the full assurance of coming forth by the power of a glorious resurrection? What are you doing for me? Gladly I forsook all the glory I had with the Father, suffered and and died; and now, Whomsoever will come, let him come and take of the waters of life freely! Salvation is full and free, and this salvation purchased with my blood, this glad tidings of the kingdom of God established for the last time among the children of men, must be proclaimed in all the world for a witness. What are you doing to help spread the glad news? What are you doing for me to-day?

"I came not to the earth arrayed in my Father's glory, and there was in me no comeliness, that men should desire me. I made not my home with the rich, but with the poor among men; and as my Father gave me commandments, so I spake and told them to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. I found no time to seek my own pleasure, no disposition to do my own will, but the will of him who sent me, and to finish the work he gave me to do. I left a work for you, and when it is finished I will come again. Do you desire to see me? Do you long for my second appearing without sin unto salvation? "Tell me what you are doing for me to-day? What have you forsaken; what have you borne for me, and what to-day did you bring in your hand for me?"

The day is past, and it is the silent watches of the midnight hour. Towards the earth an innumerable company of angels and departed saints are bending their longing gaze. Spirits longing for the reunion of soul and body, crying out, "How long, oh Lord?" One stood alone in the darkness beside the closed casement, and looking forth with earnest gaze, regarded the stars shining afar in the firmament. Doubt and perplexity brooded over him, and the very dome of heaven seemed to take on the hue of his spirit, so cold and glittering in silent luster. But there was prayer in the heart—prayer which struggled for thoughts in which to clothe itself; but like one struggling amid the waves of the ocean, was caught and carried back before escape was possible. But still the spirit struggled on, and at last the cry burst forth, "What can I do, and what is life that man should live?" Then came a voice from out of the stillness, and the words wrote themselves as upon the heart of this waiting one:

"And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever."

"As the stars forever and ever!" Language has no power to convey the new meaning the words took on, nor to express the great waves of joy rolling in upon that soul; for with this came a revelation of the power which every one who will possess, may possess, to win souls for Christ; nor this alone, but a foretaste of that joy (a foretaste never realized before) which shall be revealed in the hereafter to the faithful ones of earth. And this power was not vested in clo-quence, learning, nor wealth, but in example: and the soul of that one melted before the Spirit's power, as frost before the rising sun, and took up new courage, new strength for the battle of life; and answering the question of the still small voice said, "I will live for thee." And thus was revealed the greeting which to-day we send to you.

The angel flying in the midst of heaven truly restored the everlasting gospel, and its precepts are well understood. But alas, there is a cry sounding down from the battlements of heaven, a cry which the ministry as well as the people need to hear, "Come up higher!" The bending hosts of heaven are interested in this conflict, and souls from under the altar are crying, "How long;" and the answer comes back, "Never, never until a people are prepared to meet the Lord at his coming, if it is not for a thousand years." Will his coming be so long delayed? Nay, for verily there is yet another revelation of the Spirit, and it is that "Those who hinder the work of God he will remove." The set time to favor Zion is surely near, and the work which God will cut short in righteousness will not be hindered by an arm of flesh. Stand up therefore ye faithful ones, and gird on your armor anew. The call is for soldiers trained and disciplined, soldiers under marching orders and obedient to the word of command; faithful in that which is least, as in that which is greatest; and to these things the King will reveal himself as their Savior and friend, but unto the disobedient in flaming fire. Silently but surely the forces of God's own preparing are at work; "For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."

Not alone, hungry, weary, naked and cold are His little ones calling to the church of the living God to-day for food, rest, clothing and shelter from the storm; but far above this cry, sounding from one end to the other of our sin-cursed earth, comes the wailing cry of souls perishing for the bread of life. "Again shall this gospel of the kingdom be preached in all the world." Unto us it has been entrusted. It must be preached by example as well as precept, and when the appointed time of the vision is fulfilled it will not tarry. God has no favorites, but he will honor and spare those, and only those, who obey his righteous will.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. . . He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

SPECIAL REQUEST FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Addie Wood, who has been for years afflicted requests the prayers of the League.

A sister of Stockton, California, asks your prayers that the Lord may cause her enemies to relent and do her justice.

Sister Hannah Anderson of Henderson Grove, desires the prayers of the Prayer League as she is sick and afflicted.

The prayers of the League are requested in behalf of Sister A. Hawkins whose mind is afflicted.

Sr. Annie Chisnall of Kewanee, Illinois, has been a great sufferer—a faithful Saint from childhood—and now her only hope of relief is in God.

We beseech you earnestly to pray for her. Signed by the Kewanee branch.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Martha Burke, Farwell, Mich., writes: "When we came to this place nearly two years ago, there was not a Saint in the place. Since then fourteen have been baptized, all the fruits of Elder John Cornish's labor. Many others are believing. I wish to ask the special prayers of the Saints in behalf of myself and husband, that God would bless us with greater faith, and if His righteous will, would restore my husband to health. He has been sick for over a year."

Sr. Ella, Independence, Mo., writes:—"It is over eight years since I united with the church, and I can truly say that I have tried to live as near right as I knew how, and never have had a desire to turn back. I rejoice in the good work the Home Column is doing; and may we all let our light so shine that those who see may be constrained to acknowledge and give God the glory."

Sr. Christeena E. Morgan, Angus, Ia., writes:—"I pass many happy hours in reading the Home Column. I was baptized on Easter Sunday, 1887—a day long to be remembered because of the covenant into which I entered to do the will of the Lord. I am the mother of four little ones, and all my time is needed to instruct them. How many little questions they bring to me demanding an answer. May the Lord bless me with wisdom. Our little branch of twenty-eight members is living in peace and harmony. Bro. Wm. Thompson has labored earnestly in this place, and has been as a father and friend to us."

Sr. Martha, Kewanee, Ill., writes:—"I think there could not have been a better plan devised for the establishment of unity of feeling and purpose among the sisters of the church, than the Prayer League. Though at times our path may seem dark and cloudy, yet when the clouds break and we feel the sweet influence of God's holy Spirit, then we can rejoice and say all is well. May God bless all his faithful laborers." (Let us have your testimonies, dear sister).

Sr. Ann M. Walker, Lamoni, Iowa, writes:—"I am still enlisted under the banner of King Emanuel, and love this latter day work. I desire to tell you how God is blessing his Saints in Lamoni. My daughter's husband has for eight years been a slave to tobacco. He did not belong to the church. For four years myself and daughter have been earnestly praying to God that he might abandon the use of the vile stuff and come into the church. The first Sunday after the Prayer League prayed for unbelieving husbands he was baptized; and after he was baptized he quit the use of tobacco, and he has not touched it since. Let us not faint, for God will hear our prayers if we continue to pray."

HORNING'S MILLS, Ont., Nov. 18th.

Dear Sister Frances:—It is twelve years to-day since I embraced the gospel, and my tongue can not find words to express my gratitude to God for his mercies to me. Like one of old I can truly say, that "Goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life." When very young I remember kneeling on my mother's knee with my hands clasped while she taught me to pray. It was then that the principle of religion was instilled within my heart; those days will never be forgotten. I remember when about six or seven years old, of dreaming hearing angels singing above my bed. I thought I raised from my pillow, for I was trying to sing with them, and I wished to get nearer, that my voice might chord with theirs, for their singing filled my soul with joy. Many times in after years have I looked back and longed for the same heavenly visitation; and since I have embraced the gospel my heart has been made glad by the presence of the same Spirit that I then felt. Another time I remember, when about eight or nine years old, while reading the Bible it was shown me that baptism by immersion was required of those who were desirous of following our Lord and Master. Another time while reading in the 14th of Revelations, I saw that an angel was to bring the gospel back to earth again. To me this was grand. I was filled with rapture at the thought, and hastened to tell mother of it. I thought the ministers who were then laboring in our neighborhood were good men, but I could not realize that they were the servants of Christ; hence I hastened to tell mother of the angel who was to come, thinking she could tell me more about it, but I only met with disappointment. How gladly would mother have instructed me regarding it had it been in her power to have done so. It was the earnest desire of my parents to teach us the principles of eternal truth as far as they knew; and eternity alone can repay them for their labor of love bestowed upon their children; and we feel assured that our loving Father will not be forgetful of their labors.

I often think how great are the privileges that we now enjoy, to think that we who are mothers have the gospel in its purity and fulness, and can teach our children the ways of truth. Oh, how great is the responsibility that rests upon those who have children that are capable of receiving teaching! How careful they should be to instill into their young minds the principles of truth, that they may be the means of leading them in the paths of virtue and true holiness; that they may be examples of purity (if spared to become men and women), and instruments in the hand of God of bringing others to the light of the glorious gospel. The promise of God in the past was, if we should "bring up a child in the way it should walk, when it was old it should not depart therefrom;" and we that have embraced the gospel, and tasted of the heavenly gift, know that God the Eternal Father has not changed, and is not slack concerning his promises; for we read that "he is faithful that has promised," and with him is neither variableness nor shadow of turning.

Since I have embraced the gospel I have had much peace and comfort, even surpassing my most sanguine anticipation. I have realized to a certain extent the grandeur couched in these words of our divine Master- "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you." When clouds of darkness and sorrow have hung heavily over my pathway, those words have found lodgement in my bosom; and like pouring oil upon the troubled waters, they have calmed my fears, driven away the gloom, and turned my sorrow into joy. Words can not express, nor pen describe, the longing desire I have within to outride the storms of life, and in that Eden of love where our kind Master reigns, enjoy the rest that remains for the people of God. How glorious the thought, how cheering the hope!

May the peace of heaven buoy us up, that when the great drama of life is closed, and the radiant beams of eternal glory bursting from the throne of God shall reveal to our gaze our loving Savior, we may with shouts of triumph enter the golden gates of the New Jerusalem, where peace and tranquility shall ever reign and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Your sister in the "one faith,"

JENNIE B. SMITH.

Correspondence.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 4th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I read the Herald with great interest and try to keep myself informed upon the general progress of the work in different missionary fields, and as I read of the grand results achieved by others I feel to greatly praise the Lord of the harvest and pray that his work may be hastened on, according to his own good will and pleasure. When I read of the interest manifested in some parts, and the success of co-workers, I sometimes wish I had some of them here. Possibly they might be able to devise some way to reach the ears of some of the wandering ones in these vallies of the mountains and turn them to the Just One. It must seem to those in other parts that we are not meeting with the success here that we ought; and this is one thing that troubles me. But when I consider that the work is not of man, and that Christ says, "No man can come to me except the Father which sent me draw him," then I feel content to labor on and leave results in the hands of Him who rules on high.

Again, when I remember those who have labored, hoped and prayed for deliverance to come to the Utah people, I can only say, "Lord, thy will be done. Thou alone can draw souls to Christ."

I look over the list of workers who have labored here and I find the names of many who are equal to the best, and who are doing good service in other fields and who are kindly remembered here. We are doing, seemingly, but little in this field, yet we are not discouraged, believing the Lord will, in his own good time, bring deliverance to the honest and contrite captive. Many have withdrawn from the Brighamite church in Idaho, never to return again, and from good authority we learn that many others may soon do likewise, if that church does not fully abandon the heretical dogma of polygamy.

Hundreds, ensnared by that delusion, have been convicted and sent to prison, and hundreds more are under indictment and are hiding or fleeing from the officers of the law, while possibly a million dollars worth of property, once owned by the church, is now in the hands of a United States receiver and liable to escheat to the public schools in the Territory, after all legal claims are allowed.

It is not a pleasant thing to see a people who claim to believe in the restoration of the gospel and its grand precepts place themselves in an attitude where the Nation has deemed it absolutely necessary to lay a heavy hand on the property that has required years of labor and patient toil to procure, in order to force them to see that they have established dogmas that must be abandoned, and who by persistently teaching and practicing them have forced an issue between themselves and the Nation, and that laws have been enacted and are now being rigidly enforced to make the people see what the Lord warned them against, and asked them to see, and do, many years ago, which if they had done, all of this terrible reproach and distress would have been turned away from them.

From 1863 until now the elders of the Reorganized Church have been sent here and have raised the warning voice against the errors and evils of Brighamism, from the northern settlements to the south, and from the east to the west, also throughout Idaho and other parts, but they would not hear. I here quote the word of the Lord to them: "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief; and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion."—D. C. 83: 8.

How kind, how merciful the Lord has been! He only asks the people to do according to what he has written. To "say" was not sufficient. They must "do;" and by doing thus all wrath would be turned away.

In the Book of Mormon it is "written," "No man among you shall have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none." That was what they had to "do." And "the former commandments" teaches the same. Now the Nation only requires the same. If men will agree to faithfully keep the law of the land, they are free. But to "say" only, will not do. They must "do." Where parties have promised obedience to the laws and have obeyed them, they are free. But where they have only said, "I will," and did not obey, the "scourge and judgment" still hangs over them and several are now serving a second term for their perfidy, showing clearly that the Lord meant what he said when he warned the church to "do."

If the Brighamite people would only act in good faith upon that commandment, the "Utah Problem" would be solved at once. The Lord, through the revelations given to Joseph Smith solved the problems, at least, placed within the reach of all the very means of escaping the "judgment" that is now resting upon the Brighamite people. And the elders of the Reorganized Church who have labored here have faithfully warned the people, and with prayers and supplications have plead, with tears, that the honest might "repent and do according to that which was written," that the Lord might turn the scourge from the erring ones.

We have only done our duty by keeping up the mission here. It is God's work. He will, perchance, cause many to yet see, and grant salvation to the afflicted and despoiled. Let us pray that he will remember mercy, and that light may yet come to a downtrodden and oppressed people. Many are to be greatly pitied, and such I believe the Lord will deliver.

We are hopeful, believing the crisis is near. My heart is in this work, because it is the Lord's. Remember us here while trying to direct the wandering ones to the paths of peace and salvation.

Yours in bonds,

R. J. ANTHONY.

BROWNSDALE, Minn., Nov. 22d.

Bro. Joseph: And all Saints:—I am stronger in the faith than ever. I expect to soon see my dream fulfilled concerning two of my sisters embracing the faith. I dreamed it last spring, and last week I received a letter from one of them, asking me what to do. I sent her great encouragement and some Scripture references. She was a little girl when Bro. I. N. White and others preached at the Graves School-house, in Grundy county, Iowa, but will now make a good worker for truth. These lines will gladden the hearts of the brethren and sisters who labored there for weeks and went away sorry.

"Thou shalt love the Lord God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." These twenty words contain more doctrine than many professing Christians care to think of. All ordinances, ceremonies, thoughts, actions and feelings, must correspond to those few simple words; otherwise we may know we are in a false, or bad position for Christians. What good excuse can any one have for not knowing the truth when it is written so plainly. Any child, if it loves its father, will listen to him and obey; and surely if it be disorderly it shows he does not love him. If children can attain to many of the blessings by keeping a few simple commandments, should not we older ones be careful to strictly observe those attached? I am sorry to see many observe useless ceremonies which are not attached to, nor have anything in common with the great command. If all our actions in life reverted to it we might look back with honor and love, and the praise of all who knew us; whereas, if we fail, our lot will be sad and our name coupled with no tender thoughts even among our friends. I am not finding fault but would like to ask some of the elders who have the means, Why don't you go and feed the Master's sheep? Although, I do not think any of you have fallen into the practice of Mother Babylon by letting the sheep feed you. With love to the body of Christ, I remain,

Your brother in Jesus,

WILLIAM J. GRAVES.

ANNEX, Virginia, Dec. 4th.

Brethren Joseph and William:—The Lord is working with a part of the people here and the enemy with the rest; and the latter is stirring his part up to quite an effort against the truth. The so-called ministers of the gospel generally unite in speaking evil of that which they know very little about, and raise the cry, "Mormon, False teacher, Slick-tongue deceiver," but when asked to come out and meet us in an investigation and show the people wherein we are false, they say, "We don't believe in discussion." They have threatened to duck, whip, tar and feather, and even to shoot me; but thanks to the good Father, I continue to the present and have not lost any sleep on account of their threats; and the outlook is rather encouraging.

When I last wrote from Dayton, I had baptized four, and while I was still in Dayton, a lady came down from near Mt. Sidney, in Augusta county, stepping out of the most popular church here into the Church of Jesus Christ, among the despised Latter Day Saints. On the 23d of November went back to Liberty Hall where again I began to present the word. Notwithstanding it was Liberty Hall, when I had spoke once, the powers that be (of the evil one) said, "You will have to step down and out." I then began preaching in private houses where the interest continued good, and after preaching a few times, eight noble persons stepped out and demanded baptism; and on November 30th they were baptized into Christ. Several witnessed the service of baptism which was very impressive. One of our warm friends who at one time preached some kind of doctrine, said to one who was speaking rather lightly of the baptismal service, that the individual had never before seen a baptism; that all that they had ever seen before was only dipping.

Almost all of the people that are not identified with creeds and institutions of men are our friends, and when they closed me out of Liberty Hall, they all condemned the act. They are very anxious to build a free church house. One responsible man has proposed to give the building lot and one hundred dollars. My prayer is that those noble ones may be brought into the fold of Christ.

Sister Frances Moneymaker stood in that community alone among the religious crafts of men for five years. Now she rejoices that she has her husband and daughter and ten others in the community of like faith to mingle with.

Bro. Griffiths is not here yet, but I look for him ere long. He moves this way slowly. The Saints and friends are very desirous to see him. The Saints here are able to keep an elder here all the time if they were instructed in that line. An active elder remaining here could establish the work in this valley. On account of home duties Bro. Cleveland is not able to get out much, but he is devoted to the cause and stands for the truth under all circumstances. He is noble hearted and willing to do what he can for the advancement of the work.

Some time this week I expect to go five miles from here to hold a series of meetings where some time ago I spoke twice. I feel very confident of the final triumph of this great work and hope to continue to the end. I try to induce the Saints to take the Herald Autumn Leaves, and church books; think I will send in some subscriptions soon.

Ever praying for the spread of the work, the purity of the church, and God's choice blessings upon those at the head, I am your brother and fellow-laborer in the gospel,

JAMES MOLER.

GRAND VALLEY, Ont., Dec. 4th.

Bro. David Dancer:—The Saints here have erected a nice brick church, which was dedicated on the 2d inst. Bro. R. C. Evans preached the dedicatory sermon from Psalms 127: 1. He acquitted himself well; showing the literal and spiritual construction of God's building. The house was crowded to the doors, standing room almost at a premium. Bro. Richard's effort was well received. He is still here, having followed up his effort by preaching on Sunday night on the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, and Monday evening on Salt Lake Mormonism. He speaks again to-night on the subject of probation after death; then leaves for his home and other labors. I expect to remain here until after Sunday to carry on the meetings, as a good interest prevails. We hope to see the fruits of our labor ere we leave. There is much to be done in the Canada mission. Calls for preaching come on every hand insomuch that it seems almost impossible for me to leave here for Michigan, which comprises part of my mission-field. I would like to say to the Saints and authorities of the mission comprised of Michigan, etc., that I will be there as soon as I can in justice to the work here. I realize more and more every day the importance of the great work entrusted to our care, and hope to be able to stand the storms of life and magnify my calling to the extent that in the end I may hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done."

WILLARD J. SMITH.

LAVINIA, Neb., Nov. 27th.

Bro. Joseph:—I am still trying to do what I can towards preaching the gospel in this far off western land where the country is sparsely settled. I live nine miles from Chelsea, meet with them occasionally; preached for them three weeks ago. On last Monday went to Stuart; preached Tuesday and Wednesday nights with good liberty; left a good feeling towards the faith. A good work could be done there if one could labor there this winter; but financial matters forbid us doing so at any length, at least. If we could have some able elder with us, there could be a good work done in this part of the country.

Yours in gospel bonds,

C. D. STEVENS.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 3d.

Editors Herald:—Bro. H. C. Bronson commenced a series of meetings here on the 18th ult., and closed last night. The interest was good throughout, and on Sunday evenings the house had all it could comfortably seat. A large number expressed themselves as much pleased with the preaching, stating that it was the best they ever heard. We can not tell the amount of good done, but some are almost persuaded. The seed was sown, and some was watered that had been previously sown. We hope that in due time God will give the increase. The music was good and all seemed to appreciate what was done by the choir. Bro. Ray Potter, of St. Joseph, Missouri, presided at the organ, doing his part nobly. The writer is more fully convinced every day that prejudice is not so strong as some would at times make it appear, but that the want of a systematic way of reaching the people is what very often hinders the work. Our late series of meetings clearly demonstrated that the gospel can be successfully preached without ridiculing other religious societies or compromising the truth. "Come up higher" is the watchword, and all seems to be tending that way.

It is a great pleasure to hear of the general prosperity of the work in different parts of the world. It assures us that our time will come by and by. It seems as if a cloud, the size of a hand, with silver lining, can be seen, but whether near or far is not discernable to the human eye.

In gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE, JR.

ALTON, Ills., Dec. 5th.

Bro. Dancer:—I once more address a few lines to you, hoping that all my brethren, sisters and friends in Lamoni are enjoying good health in your pleasant town and in full assurance of life and immortality in the great work our God is engaged in for his children.

Dear brother, I often think about the pleasant time I had when I visited you. Things are moving on. God is moving his cause; and there will soon be a forward movement to more fully organize his church. The Lord will show his anointed servant many things for the good of his children, and great will be the blessings bestowed upon his little flock if they will serve the Lord with perfect hearts and willing minds.

Dear brother, I have had many precious seasons since I saw you. O, how I would have liked to have had the privilege of talking with you pertaining to the glorious work we are engaged in. But the battle for some of us will soon be over, as far as our earthly career is concerned. Be faithful, my brother, to the great work we are engaged in for the salvation of the human family, and great will be your reward. "Say ye to the righteous it shall be well with them, for they shall receive the reward of their doings." May God bless you and your dear family, and when your mission is finished, bring you home to participate in his heavenly rest with all the faithful in Christ Jesus our Lord. Please give my kind love and regards to all my brothers and sisters in Lamoni—to Bro. Joseph, Bro. William, Bro. Stebbins, and to your family and theirs, also to Sister Frances, Bro. and Sr. Landers, and brother Banta and family.

I expect to visit you next May or June if nothing happens to prevent—if the Lord will.

JAMES WHITEHEAD.

MULBERRY, Cal., Nov. 25th.

Dear Herald:—Many times while perusing your noble pages I have been blessed with the Spirit of God to such an extent that I could not refrain from tears, witnessing unto me that God is moving upon the hearts of the children of men everywhere by the mighty power of His Spirit. And I am made to realize of late, more than before, that it behooves us all, as children of God, to humble ourselves and walk more righteously before Him at all times and to let our light shine forth.

I have paid a portion of my tithing and intend to pay the balance as soon as possible. Saints, this is a commandment of God, and those who observe this law are sure of great and glorious blessings, for the Master has promised to bless all that will turn unto Him, and not rob Him in tithes and offerings. Please read the third of Malachi. Beloved Saints, it takes means to prosecute the work of God, as well as all other work, so let us respond at once, and perhaps none of the ministry will be called in from their labors of love; but, on the contrary, others will be sent out.

Father, and Bro. D. Brown, are now laboring in Tulare county, and I hope and pray the Lord will abundantly bless them and their efforts there. We have been blessed with a glorious rain of late.

I greatly rejoice in this glorious gospel, amid the trials and disappointments of this life. Ever praying for Zion's cause. JAMES LAWN.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, Dec. 6th.

Dear Herald:—The String Prairie and Nauvoo District conference met here Saturday, December 1st, and the district president being absent, Bro. M. T. Short was chosen to preside. The business session passed off harmoniously.

Saturday night Bro. Jerome Ruby preached. To say that his discourse was a timely, edifying, and instructive treatise on the moral and spiritual obligations of the Saints, but faintly hints at the merits of his effort.

Sunday morning as the Saints filed into the hall the early comers could see as each entered, first a glad look of surprise brighten each countenance, then a smile of intense satisfaction that seemed contagious. What was the cause of this? Why, Bro. Alexander H. Smith had unexpectedly appeared in our midst and was there smiling a little broader than the most of us because of enlarged capacity. To say the least, we were all happily surprised; and as we listened to the able eloquent and truthful sermon he delivered, we felt that our pleasurable anticipations aroused at meeting with him, were fully realized.

Sabbath afternoon we were blessed with a time long to be remembered. The Spirit was with us in power, and moved the Saints to prayer, testimony, prophecy, singing in tongues and interpretation, all of an encouraging character. The Saints were strengthened and renewed in spirit; and we pray that they may scatter its influence profusely in the branches of the district when they return to their homes.

Sunday evening Bro. M. T. Short presented the word in his inimitable manner and needs no comment. At meeting him and his estimable wife here, we were truly rejoiced, and bid them welcome at any time to our meetings. At the close of the evening service the conference adjoined to meet at Farmington, Iowa, the first Saturday in March, 1889. We then repaired to the river's bank and under the solemn influence of night, Bro. J. Ruby baptized Bro. Fifer who lately resolved to go with the people of God. Returning to the hall, the confirmation services were attended to.

Monday evening preaching was continued by Bro. A. H. Smith, after which Bro. Ruby baptized Eddie Matthews and Henry Schroder, one the son of sister M. P. Matthews, the other the youngest son of sister Sarah Schroder. These are the fruits of earnest prayer and faithful, motherly teaching. If the lads follow that teaching and continue to walk in the faith in which they have so early started, a bright future awaits them. This will ever be a bright spot in the memory of these "mothers in Israel."

Tuesday evening another interesting discourse was preached by Bro. A. H. Smith, and announcements made for the continuation of meetings through the week.

We think that the general outlook, from a moral and spiritual standpoint, is decidedly encouraging for this district; and we believe the larger portion of the members are striving to lead a higher life than hitherto. We pray the Lord to help them in so doing. We felt glad that we were accounted worthy to enjoy the hospitality and fellowship of the good Saints of Burlington.

We hope the Herald, one of the strongest weapons we have, will continue to increase in interest, usefulness and circulation as it so richly deserves under the hands of its present management. This is the wish of all.

Yours for the truth,

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

CENTERVILLE, Iowa, Dec. 5th.

Bro. Joseph:—Sr. Mary Burnett, of this place, fell on the sidewalk while coming home from church Sunday night the 2d inst., fracturing her limb; but at this writing she is getting along finely. Sr. Burnett is over sixty-seven years of age. Notice is given of the affair on account of her having so many friends among the Saints whom we wish to know of the account.

Your brother,

J. T. McDONALD.

SOUTH ARM, Mich., Nov. 30th.

Bro. Dancer:—I am still preaching in this place on Sundays, and there is still an interest and some will obey soon. I have baptized twenty-eight since I came here. There was great prejudice here when I came, but it is giving way for good has been done. I am holding meetings seven miles north of this every two weeks, and I found there an old-time Saint who was in the church in the days of the Martyr. He was led off to Beaver Island by the teachings of J. J. Strang, but when he got there he found they were teaching wrong things, and he could not believe them. I find him strong in the faith as taught by Joseph the Seer. He has been with us here and he did the young Saints good, for he told them of his knowledge of the work, also of the trials he passed through on the Island because he would not believe in Strang.

I love this work, because I know that it is the work of God. I want to do all I can to help it on.

Your brother,

WILLIAM DAVIS.

ROCKVILLE, Mo., Dec. 3d.

Editors Herald:—Reading in the Herald some time ago of the lack of funds and the fear of having to call in some of the ministry because of an empty treasury, I began to pray that the Lord would open the hearts of them that had plenty that the treasury might be replenished. Being poor in pocket I did not think that anything would be required of me; for it seemed to me that what I would be able to give, would be so little that it would not amount to much. But of late it has been impressed upon my mind that it was necessary to combine my faith with works, as faith without works is dead. It was given to my wife by the Spirit, while in secret prayer that the Saints here should send in something to the missionary fund as a thanksgiving offering, and that it would be an example to other branches. The impressions of my mind were that the head of every family of the different branches pay ten cents each Sunday to the president of the branch; the amount to be sent in once a month for the support of the ministry. I am sure that if the Saints would cast in their mites more freely, the Lord would bless them four-fold. Enclosed find two dollars for the missionary fund sent by the Taborville Saints as a thanksgiving offering.

Not quite a year has passed since I engaged in the latter day work. I have seen the power of God made manifest in various ways, and the work grows grander to me every day. I have been told by the Spirit several times that if I lived faithfully I should be called to preach the gospel.

Your brother,

L. A. LYON.

BAY PORT, Mich., Dec. 3d.

Bro. Joseph:—I thank my Heavenly Father that I ever heard the gospel in its fulness and obeyed it. I rejoice in this latter day work for I have been blessed many times with the Master's Spirit. I am thankful for the wisdom and knowledge He has given me. I am young in the work, but I mean to press onward and do the Master's will.

"WE ARE FREE AGENTS, WE CAN DO AS WE PLEASE."

IS THAT SO? "Yes, God has made us free moral agents; we have a right to do as we like." Well, perhaps not. What or who is an agent? An independent, irresponsible person; master of all his surroundings and circumstances; governed or influenced or controlled by no one? Nay. An agent is a servant; the employee; the representative of some superior or controlling power.

An agent is therefore not free, and the term free agent is somewhat paradoxical; a contradiction of terms. But have we not the right to do as we please? Most emphatically, No.

But does not the hymn say that God will "never force the human will?" Yes, nor will He force you to do contrary to your will. O yes, God has endowed you with will-power; you can do as you please, that is, you have the power by the exercise of your will to do a great many things just as you may choose, whether they be good or evil; you can choose light or darkness, truth or error, life or death; you are that much superior to a machine. You can shut your natural or physical eyes, and refuse to see the light of the sun; you can close your ears to any and all sounds; you can refuse to eat, drink, sleep, walk, or talk, God "will not force the human will," but you will suffer loss by your acts. You can thrust your hand into the fire, or pack your feet in ice; and you can catch the smallpox, or get the dyspepsia, or the consumption. God will not hinder you, he "will not force the human will." But if you violate the laws of nature, punishment sure and swift will follow. Are you free and independent of the operations of natural laws? By no means. You have the power—the will-power, to refuse to hear the gospel; or if you hear, you can if you choose, refuse to believe and obey it. But you will be damned or condemned (if you prefer that term) that is, you will be condemned to be damned, if you do not believe and obey that gospel. Or perhaps you may have believed, repented of sins, and have been baptized, but in the exercise of your supposed freedom to do as you please, you have persistently neglected to partake of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, or neglected to eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Lord Jesus, by not eating and drinking the emblems thereof—the bread and wine; but you will have "no life," that is, spiritual life "in you."

You can refuse to be "valiant in testimony," and can thereby fail of the celestial, and have to be satisfied with the terrestrial glory; you can neglect to do your duty as an apostle of the Twelve or Seventy, or as an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, or the possessor of any other spiritual gift; or in other words, you have the power to bury your talent in the earth, but you will hear the Master say, "Thou wicked and slothful servant," and to the angels you will hear him say, "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Yes, you are free moral agents; free to be saved or lost as you please. But are you free to be saved in your own way? Nay, but in God's way or not at all. No, not by works of your own, will you be saved, but "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Are you free to do as you please? Yes if you please to do right. You have the power, we grant, to do as you please, but you have not the right to do wrong. The Lord told Adam that he could eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, that is, that if he chose to eat he could do so, but he added these words: "But remember that I forbid it." He took his own way, he chose to do his own will, and not to do God's will and consequently he suffered in due time the threatened penalty for disobedience, namely, death.

God will not force the human will, nevertheless he will condemn every soul who will exercise their will in opposition to his will.

Men say concerning their relations to earthly governments, "This is a free country, I have a right to do as I please." It is not so; they have no rights, in or under any government under the sun, except what is given them by the government in which they live; and no government ever gave unrestricted right to any man to do as he pleased, save as he might please to honor and obey the laws of that government. In fact it would not be a government at all, where everybody could do as they pleased. It is a question whether a government has the right (it may have the power) to grant any of its citizens or subjects the right to do wrong. It may grant men liberty, or license, or privilege of doing wrong for a money-consideration; or sell, as the Roman Church once did, the liberty to commit sin; but has it the right, the moral right to do so? Has any government the right to give any man the right to deprive another person of his or her rights? Yet it is done, even in or by so-called "Christian governments." Men are licensed (or given the right, as they vainly say) to sell intoxicating drinks to men, which robs them of their reason (which is their God-given right to possess in soundness and strength), and which destroys their manhood, which God has also bestowed upon them. But the rumseller also robs the wife and children of food, shelter, raiment, health, happiness, peace, and an husband's and father's love and protection, all of which is their right, their undoubted and undeniable right to possess.

Has any government the right to permit even, to say nothing of licensing men to do these grievous wrongs? Nay, and have we, has any honorable man, any spectator of that which is right and just, the right to sustain any man or class of men in office who will license other men to do these monstrous evils? And will we not be held responsible in the day of judgment for permitting this unrighteous exercise of power (not of right) by the government? Would it be a good thing to stop completely the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage? Who will or can say that it would not? "To him, therefore, that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." And "the wages of sin is death," and "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Here is a chance to exercise our "free moral agency."

The gospel is called the "perfect law of liberty." But what is the liberty that the gospel brings us? Is it liberty to do as we please? Nay, the gospel frees us from something that was a bondage, or at least it did free those who were "under that yoke." It frees us from "the law of sin and death which was in our members;" but while it frees us from that law, it binds us, or places us under another "yoke" even that of Christ, even if it is light and easy (when compared with the other) yet it is a yoke nevertheless, and is so called by Christ himself. Are we free then? Yes, from the "law of carnal commandments, contained in ordinances." But are we free to lie, to steal, to kill, to commit adultery, to covet, etc? Nay, but we are free to live "by every word that proceedeth from out the mouth of God."

Are we free? A free man is the owner of himself. But are we our own? Nay, for as Paul said: "Ye are not your own. For ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are God's."

We belong therefore to God, and not to ourselves, and if that is a fact we are slaves, or if the term suits better, servants; however, a servant is not bought, he is hired, but not bought.

But we are "bought with a price." Christ has purchased with his own blood, his church. Therefore we are not our own either in body or in spirit.

What liberty is granted us therefore, to sell or loan or give away, or hire out our bodies or spirits to the world, the flesh, or the devil, one or all.

Is this a mere flight of fancy, a touch of sarcasm, or a matter of specious pleading? or is it a solemn, serious and an eternal truth? If the latter, and we are but agents, moral ones, if you please, yet but agents only; or stewards over those bodies and spirits, will we not have to give an account for the use we make of them?

If we defile them, they (the bodies) being the temples of the Holy Ghost, has not God said that he will destroy them? If strong drinks, if wine, if tobacco, if hot drinks, are not good, (and if not good, therefore evil), and by them we defile our bodies, what then is to be expected other than their destruction? And so of our spirits, as far as thoughts and desires can defile them, or foolish but vain reading can harm them, if they are not our own; are we free moral agents to the extent that we can by right and with impunity rob God of the use that he has for them? Nay, but for such robbery we must give an account. Are we free to use all of our worldly possessions for our own benefit and profit? Nay, for a tenth of what we possess, firstly, and a tenth of the annual increase over and above what remained is the Lord's, and we have not the right or liberty to use that only as the Lord has directed. If we ourselves are the Lord's, is not also all that we have his? How can a slave own anything in his own right? The Lord permits us to use what he has given into our hands for our own benefit, (excepting the tenth, of course). But it is only loaned us; we do not own it, and it is folly for us to try to make ourselves think so; the thought is but a delusion and a snare.

We have heard some say that rather than pay the Lord a tenth of their (so called) possessions, they would "go out of the church." What a most silly thought. Just as if that step would save them from giving an account of their stewardship to God, in the day of judgment, for stewards over God's property they are, and only that, whether they are in the church or out of it.

And if after they have been bought with a price, they would rob God of their bodies and spirits, what will they do with them after they have withdrawn from the service of God? The world, or the flesh, or the devil, either one or the other, or all combined will claim them; and what then? Why to save their money they lose both body and spirit in hell! and if they could take their money along it would melt or burn up; but they would leave it behind of course for some one to squander perhaps. Yes, brethren and sisters, you acknowledge the right of God to your bodies and spirits, because not only were you his by right of creation, but after you fell into the hands of sin and Satan, you were "bought with a price," even with the precious blood of Christ Jesus: and acknowledging this truth, you did voluntarily covenant with God that you would demonstrate that truth, by serving him, and you commenced by obeying his gospel and becoming his servants, and what then? Why, that you are not free to do as you please, but are under strict obligations to do as He pleases, and therefore whatever he says is his will and good pleasure for you to do, that is your duty to do. It matters not whether he says you shall not do thus and so, or whether he says it is not good for you to do this or that; or whether he says it is his will that you do, or do not this or that, it is all the same, for as his servants, his will and not your own is to be considered, for he does not say now, neither has he ever said that you are free to do as you please; and the reason is, because you "are not your own." Will we ever realize this fact and follow out the natural or legitimate conclusions drawn therefrom, or continue to act as if we were our own and were independent of God entirely? We are free only when we are without condemnation, by virtue of being in Christ Jesus, and by being led by the Spirit of God, and not by the flesh. We are free to do right, and have no freedom or liberty to do evil, either by doing what God forbids, or by leaving undone what he has commanded us to do. He has not given us the privilege nor the right nor the liberty nor the license to do, say, think or desire anything contrary to his will and good pleasure. Where then is our boasted freedom or our right to do as we please? The fact is, that the servant who knows his Master's will and does not do that will, is to be beaten with many stripes. God created man, he is the workmanship of his hands. And He created him for His glory; and his own best good in time and in eternity depends upon his doing the will of his Creator. Being created in the spirit, even before he was born in the flesh like his elder brother—Christ—who was "the first born among many brethren," he became partaker of flesh and blood; and in the flesh he is to work out his own salvation, but not independent of divine aid and influence, however, for God works in him, "to will and to do of his good pleasure." But while God aids man by his Spirit to do his will and good pleasure, he will not force any man against his own will, yet while this is true it is also the truth, that he will punish every man who does not do his will when he learns what it is; and he will also reward all who will cheerfully do his will. And God seeks to influence man to do his will both by promising him reward for doing it, and threatening him with punishment for not doing it. But beyond this he does not go; that is, he does not compel or force men to believe, repent, and be baptized against their will; nevertheless he does aid them by his Spirit to do all these and all other duties. At the same time there is another power, even that of Satan, who seeks to influence the human mind to not believe, to not repent, to not obey, and to not do anything that God requests man to do, and we become the subjects of either of these two and opposite powers as we prefer. Yet the fact that God holds undisputed right to our service, both of body and mind, because of our creation and our redemption through his Son, should not be forgotten; neither the fact that Satan has not the slightest claim to the least degree of service at our hands, but on the other hand deserves our opposition and detestation, because he has from the foundation of the world sought to effect our moral, mental, spiritual and physical ruin and destruction; while God has sought in every way save that of forcing our will, to bring to pass our best good in every direction, not only for this life but for that which is to come. In the exercise of the freedom of the will, we yield ourselves servants to obey sin and Satan, their servants we become, and from them we must look for reward or for our wages, but strange to say, they are unable to pay us the least measure of good; they can not give us either peace, pleasure, or happiness, nor any moral, mental, spiritual or physical benefit whatever, for God, and he alone, can bestow these things upon us. Nor can the world, the flesh and the devil inflict the punishment that obedience to their cause will expose us to; they may cause us to become subject to punishment, but God it is who will punish us for serving them, and that punishment is death—moral, mental, spiritual and physical death. The world, the flesh, and the devil, have no claim on our service; nor have we any right to serve them; for we as a church have acknowledged, that God alone has claim upon our service, by right of creation, redemption and preservation. And this being true, what right have we to take into our bodies that which God has said is not good for us, or to expose them to harm or danger and deprive them of needed rest by attending balls and parties and by partaking of late suppers or a midnight meal. If we are "not our own" whose then are we? God's or the devil's? How is it, brethren and sisters, who are we serving in our bodies and in our spirits and minds? To whom have we yielded ourselves as servants to obey? If to sin or the sinful world or to the father of sin, the devil, remember that the only wages for your service will be death. Terrible thought! and it will be a terrible reality if we repent not.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

DEAR HERALD:—I desire to talk in your columns to my brothers and sisters a little while about Autumn Leaves. We have just received the last number of the first volume of one of the best magazines in the world for the young. Has it not been a feast of good things! It seemed to me that each number, as it came, was better than the last.

I know that you are all very thankful that your loving Lord put it into Sister Frances' heart to edit such a paper, and that you have had the privilege of reading it. We often hear from friends how the magazine has entered homes where the gospel could not otherwise have entered, and how it is being read with interest wherever it has gone. Now don't you think we owe just a little to our Heavenly Father for this great blessing that he has bestowed upon us? I think we do and I feel that each subscriber ought to try to get a few new subscribers so that the good news may be spread through all the land, and souls be saved in the Master's kingdom. Surely this would not be much for us to do, and in so doing we would be blessed and the magazine would be sustained and be the means of carrying the glad tidings to many homes, and we would have the satisfaction of knowing that we had done something for the good we had received. I believe it is a duty that every Latter Day Saint owes to God to help all they possibly can, the church publications, for they are a power in the land. If we are not able ourselves, let us try and use our influence that others may subscribe. Now, dear Saints, I hope you will think about this and remember that there has been a great effort put forth to place pure reading in our homes, and it now becomes a duty resting upon us to try and keep it there, and there is no better way of doing this than to sustain the church publications.

I hope the young Saints that have had the privilege of reading Autumn Leaves the past year, will try and use their influence to get others to subscribe, that the magazine may live and do much good, for truly we would not like to do without it. I am satisfied that if the Saints would examine the greater part of the reading matter that is placed in their homes to-day, they would be more anxious to increase the circulation of such papers as Autumn Leaves.

May peace and prosperity rest and abide with you.

TESTIMONY OF SPAULDING'S NEPHEW.

WHEELING, W. Va., Dec. 6th, 1888.

BRN. SMITH AND BLAIR:

Enclosed please find an account of a short interview that I had with Mr. Daniel D. Spaulding. I am inclined to believe the statement he made, that his uncle was not a minister nor a member of any church, from the tenor of the manuscripts he wrote. D. D. Spaulding is one of those frank, outspoken men. He is very much opposed to religion of any kind, and that seems to be a characteristic of the entire family. However, he treated the writer with a marked degree of respect. When I informed him of the nature of my visit he said he would tell me all he knew about the matter. But I soon learned that he was very ignorant as to Mormonism, notwithstanding he and his son have told the people, time and again, that they knew all about it, and have thereby caused a great deal of prejudice to exist in Conneaut township, which I had to allay before I could get the truth before the people.

I am thankful to be able to state that we now have a branch of twenty members there and that many more are on the verge of coming in. I had the pleasure of baptizing three during my stay there. Several are investigating the work who were so bitterly opposed that they would not come out to hear the preaching when I first went there. The Saints are contemplating building a chapel this coming spring. I am confident that a good work can be done there in the near future.

In gospel bonds,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

An interview between Elder G. T. Griffiths and Mr. Daniel D. Spaulding, nephew of Solomon Spaulding, which took place on the 28th of November, 1888, in the township of Conneaut, Pennsylvania, in the presence of Mr. Jerome Beardsley, a prominent citizen of that township. After being duly introduced the following questions were propounded by the writer:

Q. What is your given name, Mr. Spaulding?

A.—Daniel D. Spaulding.

Q.—How old are you?

A.—I am eighty-two years old.

Q.—How long have you resided in this vicinity?

A.—About sixty years.

Q.—How closely were you related to Solomon Spaulding?

A.—He was my father's brother.

Q.—How old were you the last time you saw your uncle?

A.—Between ten and eleven years of age.

Q.—Then you remember him well?

A.—Oh, yes. He was a very sickly man, and the last time I saw him was at Conneaut Creek, just before he went to Pittsburg, where he died shortly afterwards.

Q.—What did your uncle do for a living?

A.—He was a land agent, and my father said he was a scoundrel and used to cheat the people out of their money and property.

Q.—Was he much of a scholar?

A.—No. He had some natural talent, but he was not very smart; but very lazy. Then he wrote the manuscripts that the Mormons call the Book of Mormon to make money out of it.

Q.—How did the Mormons get the manuscripts?

A.—I don't know. (Here his daughter, a lady about fifty years old replied, "His widow gave them to Joseph Smith, jun.")

Q.—Is there not a story afloat that Sidney Rigdon stole them?

A.—I had not heard that before.

Q.—Mr. Spaulding, did you ever see the manuscripts? or the Book of Mormon?

A.—No.

Q.—What did Mr. Spaulding write about?

A.—I heard my father say it was a story about the Indians.

Q.—Was your uncle a minister?

A.—He was not; neither did he belong to any church.

Q.—Then you do not know whether the Book of Mormon and the manuscripts are the same or not?

A.—No. Only what I have heard people say; have not seen either.

THE SABBATH.

REDEMPTION'S WORKING DAY.

"THE Sabbath is redemption's working-day. . . . As he [man] needs to labor more and toil harder during the six working days to obtain the meat that perishes; so he needs to improve more assiduously the Sabbath day, for the advancement of his spiritual life. . . . The Sabbath was made for man, that is, for mankind; the term man being employed generically for the human race.

Redemption's working-day, to man in mercy given;
To lay aside his earthly toil, for intercourse with heaven:
That shaking off the weight of worldly thought and care;
He may renew his spirit's strength in holy praise and prayer.

In the Antediluvian, as well as in postdiluvian times, they had divinely appointed religious institutions; for Abel and Enoch and Noah are commended for their faith. But faith implies a revelation; for faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. . . . It appears to have been usual for God's people in the ages before the law to observe the weekly division of time. And we may justly conclude that the Sabbath was known to, and observed by them from the creation down to the exode of the Israelites from Egypt. Manassah-ben-Israel, a Jewish doctor, says, that "according to the tradition of the ancients, Abraham and his posterity, having preserved the memory of the creation, observed the Sabbath also, in consequence of the natural law to that purpose." . . . We may certainly conclude, then, that the Sabbath had been strictly observed in the times before the law; that Abel and Enoch and Noah, and all the people of God of the Antediluvian age, observed it and kept it holy unto the Lord, that subsequently Noah and Shem, and Abraham and his seed, perpetuated its remembrance and delighted in its holy and sanctifying services.

Yes! blessed Sabbath morn, thy light
Is Affluent of pure delight
To those who love thy rest;
Beyond thy sun, a heavenly ray
Adds moral lustre to the day,
And shines into the breast.

The Sabbath is redemption's working-day. It way originally set apart for man's use and benefit, as necessary for the proper development of his religious and moral nature, even in a state of innocence. It became still a greater necessity after his fall into sin, inasmuch as his condition then presented greater obstructions to the culture of his inward and spiritual life. Man had to be redeemed from sin, and in the work of redemption, the Sabbath could not be dispensed with. . . . A mason wishing stone of a particular quality chooses the best he can find in the quarry, and if it stand not the test, he does not deem it necessary to try every stone separately, but rejects the whole; so God having tried one nation of men in natural flesh, has in them tested and rejected all nations. The trial of any others would only have furnished additional evidence of the fact that "flesh and blood," or men in natural flesh, can not inherit the kingdom of God. None can be qualified in natural flesh, to be kings and priests in that kingdom. This is the great truth demonstrated by the trial of the natural seed of Abraham. . . . The Sabbath was made for man. Made to promote his highest interests and sublimest pleasures. And such is the object of the Christian Sabbath; a day whose associations are of the most pure and ennobling nature, and which, if observed in faith, is adapted to secure the spiritual enlightenment and moral improvement of man. . . . It is redemption's working-day, and to this great purpose it is consecrated. Christianity is a system of religious faith and practice; one of the dispensations of grace to man, for whose benefit the Sabbath was made. . . .

"Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," is an exhortation which relates specially to the publicly assembling upon the first day of the week. . . . Few if any really love the Sabbath and rest according to the commandment, unless they have true piety. The neglect of the Sabbath is the characteristic of those who fear not God, or whose religion is sadly declining. . . . John, the beloved disciple, says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." And this signifies to us the way to profit by its holy services of prayer and praise and meditation in God's word. To render the Sabbath a delight and honorable, we must perform our religious duties in the newness of the Spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.

The Sabbath is a blessing to them who are in the Spirit. In the early morn they hail its sacred light in sweet communings with the Father of all: they walk with him all day in the ordinances of religion; and at night, with hearts overflowing with love, they linger in its departing shadow to pour out their thanksgiving to God for the sweet and heavenly peace its sacred hours distil.

"The day that God hath blessed,
Comes tranquilly on with its welcome rest.
It speaks of creation's early bloom;
It speaks of the Prince who burst the tomb.
Then summon the Spirit's exalted powers,
And devote to heaven the hallowed hours."

THE MILLENNIUM'S SYMBOL-DAY.

"Millennium's symbol-day, type of a rest to come,
When Saints, redeemed from sin and death,
Shall dwell with Christ at home;
When earth no more shall groan
Beneath the curse of pain;
But paradise shall be restored,
And peace forever reign."

The Sabbath is the Millennium's symbol-day. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world; and in making a revelation of his purposes to man, he has made the institutions and laws of one age to be the symbols and prophecies of a succeeding age. This is a remarkable and important feature of Bible truth too commonly overlooked. The Passover, while it was actually commemorative of the redemption of the first-born of Israel from the sword of the destroying angel, in the night that God brought forth his people out of Egypt, was also designed as a symbol of the redemption of the church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven by the blood of Christ, our passover, who was sacrificed for us. And the law that not a bone of the paschal lamb should be broken, was designed as a prediction that not a bone of Christ's body should be broken by the soldiers when they broke the legs of the two malefactors who were crucified along with Him. In like manner the Sabbath is not only commemorative of the rest of Jehovah from his works of creation, and sanctified as a day of grace to man in the economy of redemption, but it is also a symbol of that rest which remaineth unto the people of God. It is hence termed a shadow of good things to come. This use of the Sabbath was supralapsarian. It presented this symbolic aspect to Adam while ye in innocence; for as he was then under a covenant of works, it intimated to him, that as God had rested from his works on the seventh day, so, on condition of his continued obedience, should he and his obedient posterity rest from their works on the seventh millenary of the world. When God created man, he made him to have dominion over the earth, and put all things under his feet. Dominion, however, was conferred upon him, not absolutely, but conditionally. Mankind were to be multiplied—the earth populated, subdued and governed; and, on condition of continued obedience, he was to be confirmed in and established in the perpetual sovereignty of the earth; and his obedient posterity would in like manner have become associated with him in the government. These works would have required six thousand years, of which God's works of creation for six days was a symbol; and, then, as on the seventy day, God rested from his works, so should man have rested from his on the seventh millenary of the world. Hence Paul, in Hebrews 4: 3, speaks of that rest or Millennial Sabbath as having been designed from the foundation of the world.

The preparatory works were finished in the symbol week of creation, and the rest itself introduced in the first holy symbol Sabbath. This was the expressive manner in which God was pleased to declare or make known his purpose and plan. And as Adam was created in the image of God in knowledge, he doubtless was acquainted with the meaning of these symbolic facts. Thus, in the original constitution of the world, the Sabbath was set forth as a symbol of that state of holiness, happiness and glory, to which man might have attained by continued obedience to the divine law, but of which he fell short by transgression,

"Till one greater man Restore us, and regain the blissful seat."

Adam, the first representative man, failed to keep the law, or to continue in obedience. He sinned and forfeited all. But God's purpose has not failed, because Adam failed; nor has the symbol Sabbath of creation lost its signification. The necessity of divine interposition was foreseen, and adequate provision was determined upon for the redemption of man. Help was laid on one mighty to save. A second representative man was provided, and Christ Jesus, the Son of God, will, through the remedial system of grace, effect what Adam failed to attain through the covenant of works. Hence Jesus said: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." This was an answer to the cavils of the Jews, who said that he had broken the Sabbath by healing the impotent man who lay by the pool of Bethesda waiting for the moving of the waters. It seems intended to convey to their minds the idea that from the fall of man until then the Father had been engaged in a great work—the work of human redemption, for which the Sabbath was an appropriate day, a day set apart from secular business and specially devoted thereto—and that his work was identically the same as that of his Father's. Indeed it was by him the Father wrought in all his operations, and whatever he did was the Father's work, for he did nothing of himself; he was simply performing the work which the Father sent him to do. The entire plan was laid down by the Father, and he did nothing but what he saw in the plan. Hence he says in John 4: 34: 'My meat is to do the will of him who sent me, and to finish his work.' It was not only admissible, therefore, but absolutely right, and in accordance with the design of the day that he should be employed in doing those works of benevolence and mercy; which were not merely intended to alleviate human suffering, but to furnish unquestionable evidence of his mission, and lay the foundation of that faith in him which saves to the uttermost. In this day, and by its divine services, God is still working with men and in men to will and to do of His good pleasure, while they, by faith in and obedience to the gospel, are actively working out their own salvation with fear and trembling. Not that all men will be saved by this divine working; for all men do not believe the word of God nor obey him. Only believers are thus saved: 'For this is the work of God,' said Jesus, 'that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.' And faith in Jesus is productive of holiness and salvation." Selected by

BE FAITHFUL TO DUTY.

AMIDST the phenomena of life it is hard to measure our powers of moral or spiritual endurance, inasmuch as doubt and temptation will intrude upon us, not when we are strong, but when we are weak.

Security from failure and sin is only found in the possession of those qualifications essential in the conservation of the life of faith. That there is a higher and diviner element prevailing the lives and hearts of the members of the Reorganization who live faithful, than a mere human element, is a fact beyond reasonable doubt; and the moral and spiritual impress which this element makes upon the lives and characters of those who receive it is a happy and wonderful transformation. Its highest exhibit is charity and writing the lessons of divine love upon the soul,—love to God and love to humanity,—it purifies the heart, intensifies the appreciation of the pure and good, and fills us with earnest desire to attain to all the good attainable, and to overcome everything that is evil.

Such a life, if it continues to grow and develop, must necessarily culminate in all that heaven means or implies. We believe it is true that success to the church depends upon the practical solution of the problems of truth committed to its trust, and that individual righteousness is essential to such solution. The word of God, certified by the Holy Spirit, teaches us to move on in the work of individual righteousness, that through noble, loyal, practical effort, Zion may win her way to glory and triumph. We are not workers for personal aggrandizement or selfish ambition, but are workers for Christ, that his will (not our will) shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. The divine element in our religion should be felt every day.

Two instances of pronounced importance come to mind in which the spiritual and divine element of our religion seemed to carry its subjects up to a high state of realization. The instances referred to occurred at Streator, Illinois, during the continuance of a two-days' meeting held there about two years ago, and the late two-days' services held October 21st and 22d of the present year. The branch at Streator is small, but in the main seem earnest and indefatigable in maintaining the integrity of the work. Perhaps what gave enlarged faith to some who gathered at the time appointed was their recollection of the grand time had upon a former occasion. The time referred to can never be forgotten by those who were present. Eleven meetings were held in two days which made almost a constant meeting from first to last! Humility and love filled the hearts of the Saints, while a cloud of spiritual light seemed to cover them from the opening services on Saturday morning until the close of the services on Sunday evening. No earthly words can tell the joy and peace that prevailed as the Saints were basking in the eternal intelligence that came as waves of light and love from that grand realm where our enduring treasures are laid up. Secret prayers were answered openly; the gifts of the gospel were enjoyed in a great degree, while the powers and presence of the eternal world rested upon the people of the Most High.

These same general features were characteristic of the meetings held at Streator on the 21st and 22d of October, of this year, except on Monday morning of the 23d, when a prayer and testimony meeting was held at Bro. Perry's before the hour appointed to administer baptism to those who had covenanted to serve the Lord. This closing service was another rich repast from the table of divine grace which all seemed to share. And while conscious being endures, the happy memory of the rich experiences of those Saints who enjoyed the blessings of God's grace during the meetings referred to at Streator, Illinois, must ever be a source of strength and encouragement to them to be faithful and true unto the end.

These sublime facts bear witness that the work is of God, and that the power and intelligence that will develop and fashion the work so as to fit it for the high station which it is destined to fill, must come from the Lord. May human obstructions be removed out of the way, and the unselfish love and power of Christ's gospel prevail throughout the earth.

Conference Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.

Met at the Saints Chapel, Woodbine, Iowa, Friday, December 7th, J. C. Crabb president, Charles Derry assistant president; W. C. Cadwell and E. A. Townsend clerks. By his request Bro. P. Cadwell was released as counsellor to the district president and Bishop's agent for the Little Sioux district; said release being conditioned upon his books and accounts being found—upon examination—to be correct and properly balanced, and all funds regularly accounted for. Report of P. Cadwell, Bishop's Agent, showing monies received for the three months ending September 30th, 1888, $245 50, paid out $168 70, balance on hand at that date $76 80. A committee consisting of J. Seddon, D. Chambers and P. C. Kemmish was appointed to make the examination and settlement provided for in the motion releasing the Bishop's Agent. Said committee subsequently reported finding the report correct, and further that they had made a settlement with Bro. Cadwell; that he had a balance on hand of eight cents, being the balance due the church as shown by his books, and that he had turned said balance of eight cents to the committee and that they had receipted to him for the same. On motion a vote of thanks was tendered Bro. P. Cadwell for his faithful performance of duty, both as Bishop's Agent and counsellor to the district president. Minutes read and approved. The visiting brethren were invited to take part in conference. Branch Reports:—Willow Valley 65, 1 received. Sioux City 17. Magnolia 164, 3 baptized, 9 removed. Woodbine 26, 10 received. Logan 57, 1 removed. Spring Creek 88, 5 removed, 1 died. Little Sioux 216, 3 baptized, 12 received, 3 removed 4 died. Unionburg 39, 3 baptized, 1 received. Union Center 101. A branch was reported as having been organized near Kingsley, Plymouth county, Iowa, by J. C. Crabb and D. Chambers on September 23rd, 1888, composed of 10 members. The condition of the branches was reported good. The following ministry reports were made:—High Priests, J. A. McIntosh, J. C. Crabb, C. Derry and P. Cadwell; Seventies, W. E. Peak, (baptized 4), and John A. Davis; Elders, M. P. Berg, (by letter), D. Chambers, S. Diggle, T. Thomas, C. Downs, D. Maule, J. H. Hunt, W. Chambers, J. T. Coffman, E. Day Bennett, (of Dakota), W. C. Cadwell, E. R. Lanpher, J. Hawley of Galland's Grove district, Lehi Ellison, P. C. Kemmish, baptized 2, J. Seddon, of Galland's Grove district, R. Farmer, I. Shupe, J. Pett, of Galland's Grove district, T. Chapman, of Galland's Grove district, and Frederick Hansen; Priests, J. C. Johnson, W. T. Fallon, J. Harper, M. Hall, J. Emerson, W. D. Bullard, of Galland's Grove district, Alma Ellison, and M. Daugherty; and teachers, Allen Harper, W. R. Davison and E. A. Townsend.

A communication was read from the Magnolia branch, recommending Bro. Alma M. Fyrando to be ordained to the office of an elder. After some discussion the recommendation was adopted unanimously, and Bro. Fyrando was subsequently so ordained under the hands of Elders C. Derry and J. M. Putney. Woodbine Sunday School reported: Names enrolled 33; average attendance 22; joined the church 1; verses learned 208; collections $3 59; 20 copies of Hope taken. Logan school: average attendance 29 1-6; verses learned 113; Hopes taken 20 copies. Elder D. Chambers was, on motion, selected to be recommended to the Bishop as his agent for this district, subject to the approval of the Bishop. Brn. Peak and Davis were urgently requested to extend their labors to Sioux City and Kingsley as far as possible. Brn. Peak, Davis and Derry were sustained as General Conference appointees as missionaries to this field of labor. The matter of resignation of Bro. W. C. Cadwell as district secretary coming up, as deferred from last conference, a motion was made to amend the motion to release by substituting the word "sustain" for the word "release." After some discussion the motion to amend was carried and the motion as amended was also adopted. The matter of report of committee on resolutions as deferred from last conference being taken up, the report was, on motion, adopted and the committee discharged. The motion made at the March session, 1888, to rescind all standing resolutions was taken up and on vote being taken was declared lost. Sunday afternoon was occupied with the services of dedicating the Woodbine church. This is a beautiful building 28x46, handsomely finished outside and inside, and very comfortably seated with folding chairs, constructed of iron and perforated cherry. The building stands on one of the highest points in the village, facing the east; and was univascularly admired by the visitors in attendance. The report of the building committee showed the total cost, including the grounds, to be about $1,800, the major portion of which has been paid. A collection was taken amounting to $44 55 which leaves a trifle less than $400 still to be paid. The Saints at Woodbine are few in number and deserve great credit for their efforts made in this matter. And if any Saints who have been blessed with means feel like giving towards liquidating this indebtedness, they will feel abundantly repaid when they see the building so beautifully and so economically erected. High Priest C. Derry delivered the dedicatory sermon and also the dedicatory prayer, and was greatly blessed in his effort. A crowded house was in attendance and it is hoped that great good was done the good people of Woodbine and vicinity. W. C. Cadwell again presented his resignation and said that after mature deliberation he had concluded that he must positively decline to serve. His resignation was thereupon accepted and Alma M. Fyrando was elected district secretary to fill the vacancy. A prayer meeting was held on Friday evening in charge of J. Hawley and J. Pett. Preaching during the conference by E. Day Bennett, W. E. Peak, J. C. Crabb and C. Derry. Adjourned to meet at Magnolia the first Saturday in March, 1889.

Miscellaneous.

WANTED

To know the whereabouts of a Bro. Orr, who left Salt Lake City about 1868-9 in company with Bro. Isaiah Parks. He may learn something to his advantage by addressing this office at an early time.

MARRIED.

HEATH.—AMOS.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Wheeling, W. Va., on Monday, December 3rd, 1888, Mr. Enoch Amos and Sr. Annie Heath; Elder G. T. Griffiths officiating. A large gathering of friends met to witness the event who presented the happy pair with gifts as tokens of their esteem.

EDMOND.—SICKLES.—At the residence of Mr. John Ard. Mayetta, Kansas, November 29th, 1888, Joseph Edmond and Sarah Malinda Sickles; Elder E. C. Brand officiating.

INGALLS.—MCLEOD.—At the residence of brother E. R. Ingalls, Cormorant, Becker county, Minnesota, Wednesday, December 5th, 1888, Bro. Frank A. Ingalls and Sister Letty McLeod of Cormorant; Elder T. J. Martin officiating. After the ceremony the friends sat down to a generous feast and all went merry as a marriage bell.

"Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one."

DIED.

WHITEAKER.—William Whiteaker was born in Allen county, Indiana, June 29th, 1842; was baptized by F. M. Cooper, nine or ten years ago (have no dates) at Wheatville, Crawford county, Wisconsin. He died October 1st, 1888, at Wheatville, Wisconsin. He was a good man, and feared not to die. He leaves a wife and several children to mourn their loss, besides an aged father and mother, brothers and sister. Funeral sermon was preached in the M. E. Church, town of Scott, Crawford county, Wisconsin, October 28th, by Elder F. M. Cooper.

ELLIS.—At Glencoe, Belmont county, Ohio, September 25th, 1888, Sister Rachel A. Ellis, aged 49 years, 6 months and 21 days. She leaves a husband and eight children to mourn their loss. She united with the church in 1882. That she was held in high esteem was evinced by the large congregation that met in the M. E. Church to hear the funeral sermon which was delivered by Elder G. T. Griffiths, by request of the deceased. He was ably assisted in the services by the Rev. Ecker.

ANDERSON.—At Council Bluffs, Iowa, November 26, 1888, of spinal congestion, Nellie, beloved daughter of Mr. and Sr. John A. Anderson, aged 3 years, 8 months and 6 days. Funeral services by Rev. G. Rice.

"Toll the bells softly,
The gates are ajar;
Angels are waiting
Her soul from afar."

Welsh Hymn Book.

We have on hand about 100 copies of a book, entitled "Llyfr Hymnau at Wasanaeth Eglwys Iesu Grist, Ad-Redoleiddedig Saint y Dydd Diweddaf." There are 393 hymns in Welsh and 33 in English. It is published by the church in Wales, and sent here for sale. Sixty cents each, free of postage; bound in full leather, marbled edges.

We suggest the following to that class of men who are constantly urging the ruin of western industry by combination of eastern capital; we do it in defense of western common sense against alleged eastern rapacity:

There is an impression in the minds of many persons that owing to the low prices which have governed in farm products of late years western farmers are head over ears in debt and western farms as a rule, are mortgaged beyond hope of redemption. Mr. Edward Atkinson, the statistician and political economist, has been investigating this subject for some time past, and gives the results of such investigation in "Bradstreet's," which shows the conditions among the farming class in the west are by no means so bad as have been represented or feared. He says:

"There has been unquestionably many persons in this country who have had their doubts in regard to the condition of western agriculture during the recent period of heavy decline in prices. I therefore beg to submit certain facts, subject to addition hereafter, as further information may be obtained. And I beg any reader of this communication who may be able to give me additional statistics to do so.

"The questions put by me to the mortgage security companies were as follows:

- "1. For what number of years have you lent money on western farms?
- "2. What sum in all?
- "3. On how many mortgages?
- "4. How many have been paid?
- "5. What sum is now outstanding?
- "6. On how many mortgages?
- "7. What number of foreclosures have you made?
- "8. What losses have you met?
- "9. What number of foreclosures have you pending at this date?
- "10. What reduction has occurred in the average rate of interest charged?
- "11. Are there any signs of disaster, bankruptcy or loss disclosed by the recent conditions?
- "12. What comments have you to make?

"In reply to these questions I have received ten communications covering a term of years ranging from four to thirty-eight. A summary of the replies, disregarding fractions is as follows:

- "Number of mortgages, 200,000.
 - "Total amount loaned, $180,000,000.
 - "Average per mortgage $900.
 - "Already paid, 118,000 mortgages.
 - "Amount outstanding, $75,000,000.
 - "Number of mortgages outstanding, 81,000.
- "The total number of foreclosures is not given in all cases; in some the amount is given, in others the number. By computation on the average, the total number can not exceed 1,000. In one or two cases there has been a slight loss, but the summary of all the estimates of foreclosure gives a profit on the foreclosure account.

"The reduction in the rate of interest has been from ten per cent. annual interest and ten per cent. commission on a five years' mortgage to an average of 6½ to 7½ per cent. at the present time, without commission.

"One of my correspondents states that the business in which his company is engaged has, to a great extent, ceased in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and we might also include Iowa; but it is still conducted farther west in Kansas, Nebraska and Dakota, etc. Many of those to whom loans were first made are now lenders through the same corporation."

In reply to the eleventh question as to loss, disaster, or bankruptcy, the answer is that on the contrary the present conditions indicate wide spread and almost universal prosperity.

"As a specimen of the answers to the ninth question. What number of foreclosures have you pending at this date? I will give but one. This reply comes from a corporation which has loaned $30,000,000: 'We have two foreclosures pending at this time, one at the solicitation of the heirs of the borrower for the purpose of perfecting the title; the other will be paid off before a decree is reached. It was commenced because of the negligence of the borrower in the matter of his payments.'

"I have attempted to see if there was any difference in the conditions of the wheat growing sections, but I have found none. I send this communication to you at this time because I have not all the addresses of the various corporations or persons who are engaged in this business, and I shall be very glad to receive further communications in order that the final computations may cover the whole case."

While great fortunes acquired by farming may be scarce it is certain no business calling can show so few business failures in proportion to the number of persons engaged in it.—Farmer's Review.

AUTUMN LEAVES,

Prospectus for 1889.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND PATRONS.

WITH the next issue of AUTUMN LEAVES the volume for 1888 will close, and your next number will begin the new volume. Before entering upon our work for another year we wish to express our heartfelt thanks to you for the support and encouragement given us in our labors the past year. To this support and encouragement the periodical is indebted for its existence; and in reality, it is not our work any more than it is yours; and in the great day of reckoning there will be a sifting and readjustment of debit and credit which will upset many a nicely balanced sheet, by transferring credit to names which have not appeared thereon, and subtracting or utterly cancelling those which in their prominence have had entirely too much placed to their account. Let us thank God for this, and take courage, for we know that our God will reward each one faithfully and fully; not only for what he has done, but for that also which he had it in his heart to do.

WHILE GRATIFIED

with the success of the past year, we do not feel that the permanent success or continued life of our Magazine is yet assured. The slight advance in price which we have been compelled to make may not meet the approval of all, and yet we can not think that any friends of the work will make this an objection. Some who have had the Magazine to examine during the past year, may not be as well pleased with it as they hoped to be, and for this reason wish to discontinue it. For reasons like these it behooves those who are interested in the work and desire its continuance, to put forth an effort in its behalf. Our subscription list this year ought to reach at least three thousand. Every day the church is enlarging her borders; and this, if reached, would be a small circulation in a church of twenty or twenty-five thousand members.

We make no promise for the future, save what we have made in the past. If our work falls below your expectation, it will be because we fail after having done our best to succeed. No one can honestly pledge you more than to do their best.

ONE PROMINENT FEATURE OF THE NEXT VOLUME

will be extracts from a very rare and voluminous work, "Kingsborough's Mexican Antiquities." These articles will be contributed by Elder S. F. Walker, who during a recent visit east had access to this work and copied largely therefrom. Its author, son of the English Earl of Kingston, died in 1830, (memorable date) after having spent his life and a large fortune upon this work, which shows, beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt, that Ancient America was occupied by Hebrews. We are thankful to be able to present to the church a knowledge of the existence of this work and extracts therefrom, for by this and other kindred means we learn as plainly as facts can demonstrate, that long before the coming forth of the Book of Mormon God was providing means to establish the proof of its origin and authority, thus leaving those who reject it and his latter day work without excuse in the day of judgment.

TO OUR OLD SUBSCRIBERS

we say, that it will be a great saving of time and trouble to us to receive the renewal of your subscriptions before the 15th of December, as it will obviate the dropping of your names from the mailing list, and the replacing of them should you afterwards send us your names. All parties renewing their subscription before that date can send the money at our risk and expense, if sent by bank draft, express check or, best of all, post office money order. Send the amount of subscription, less the cost of the draft, check, or order and you will be credited with a full year's subscription. This offer does not hold good for less than one year's subscription. Do you wish to obtain desiring the Magazine, we shall be pleased to send it without cost, to themselves or families upon application by postal card, asking only that they interest themselves in obtaining subscribers and otherwise as heretofore helping to sustain the work. To such we will also allow the commission offered above.

YOUR OWN MAGAZINE FREE?

You can do so by sending us a list of ten names with money (this may also be sent at our expense) and we will send you a copy for 1889 free. If you can not obtain so many names, we will allow you 10 cents for each name and you can pay the balance in money.

TO THE TRAVELLING MINISTRY.

There is a way by means of which

in extending our circulation, and possibly be the means of bringing the work to the knowledge of some one who otherwise would never know of its existence. The Christmas-Tide is coming and you are in the habit of exchanging tokens of love and good will with your friends at this season. Send them this year a series of the Magazine; and what its monthly visits may accomplish, eternity will reveal. If you have no friend to whom you especially wish to send it then subscribe for an extra copy, and either name for yourself, or ask your missionary in charge to give you the name of some worthy family, too poor to subscribe, but to whom the Magazine would be a blessing.

During the past year we have learned that the Magazine has been read by many outside of the church. In many instances removing prejudice and opening the way for the preaching of the gospel. To God be the glory, and may the means of usefulness in the church be multiplied until the kingdoms of this world "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ."

Send all moneys to David Dancer, box 82, Lamoni, Iowa; also all notices of change of address, or missing numbers etc. Remit only by one of the four methods mentioned.

Elders when remitting for subscription should always remit at our expense.

Price $1.50 per annum, strictly in advance. Parties wishing to renew who are not prepared to forward money before the January issue, must notify the office of their intention to subscribe, or they will fail to receive their Magazine.

MRS. M. WALKER.

COMPENDIUM

—OF—

FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

A COMPENDIUM of the faith and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has now been completed and placed in the binder's hands. It must be borne in mind that this work is issued by the Board of Publication, after having passed through the hands of a committee appointed by the Board, to examine and report upon the merits of the same; said committee consisting of Pres. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. As we have before notified our friends, this work is intended to meet a long felt want in the church not only in Sabbath School work, but also for the use of all desiring to become acquainted with the cardinal principles of our faith and the doctrines held to by the church. Some features of the work commend it most highly to the ministry.

It contains 196 pages of text references to the three standard books of the church.

There are also 24 pages of HISTORICAL APPENDIX. This contains the evidences from Church historians, the early fathers, and Commentators upon the mode of baptism, the ordinance of the laying on of hands, the fact of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being had for centuries, the keeping of Sunday for the Sabbath, the Apostacy from the truth, and the Restoration of the Gospel.

Then 20 pages of EPITOME OF HISTORY. This is an outline of the progress of the Christian Church during each Century, its rise and decline, with a sketch of the ten persecutions under the Roman Emperors, from the first under Nero in 64 to that under Diocetian in 303. There is also a brief review of the chief acts and actors of the Reformation.

Then 8 pages are devoted to various things, such as the times when different translations of the Bible were made, the names of missing books of the Bible, definitions of various terms, and the dates of some of the leading events in the latter day work.

In all 248 pages besides the preface and index. Width and length the same as the Book of Covenants, but about three fourths the thickness.

Especial attention has been bestowed upon the classification and arrangement of the various subjects, and to these a splendidly arranged Index, gives ready reference. The length of this Index prevents our publishing it, which would be the best way of presenting the work to the consideration of our readers, but the crowded conditions of our columns forbid.

It will be issued in two styles of cloth binding, and leather.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - - - EDITOR
W. W. BLAIR - - - - - ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Lamoni, Iowa, Dec. 29, 1888.

BELOW we give an extract from a lengthy editorial in the Gate City, of Keokuk, Iowa, under date of the 4th instant. It is valuable as showing the malignant, mobocratic spirit that actuated the enemies of Joseph Smith and the Saints, and that priests and people—especially the priests—were as intolerant and unjust, as vengeful, un-Christian and un-American as were those who burned and hanged the Quakers and drove the Baptists into Rhode Island.

The editor (Mr. Clark we suppose) says, "our father was a minister of the church militant; a conspicuous and relentless opponent of the Mormons." This confession is good, for it reveals the leading instigators of the persecutions of the Saints in those times, and also furnishes a valuable clue to guide us to where and of whom the editor received both his inspiration and information on the question in hand. His statement is probably true that his father proposed, in public, "at a camp-meeting," to obtain "a rope and a gallows for a Mormon elder" who sought to correct "a characteristic allusion to the Mormons" made by this "conspicuous and relentless opponent of the Mormons," this "minister of the church militant," for a great amount of that kind of work was both proposed and accomplished. But why not call this "conspicuous and relentless opponent of the Mormons" "a minister of the church" malignant and rampant? This title would best accord with the facts confessed in the article.

But the blind fanaticism, the murderous bigotry, and the witless, unreasoning prejudice actuating the enemies of the Saints in those times, is exhibited in all its hideous devilishness when they maliciously sought to fasten the crime of murder upon the poor, persecuted, fleeing Mormons, because they found the dangling body of a self-murderer, one of their own number, "hanging by the neck quite stiff and dead in a barn!" The witch burners of the dark ages were very gentlemen in comparison.

But, mind you, Joseph "was ignorant; called a musk-rat, a mush-rat, and showed the usual characteristics of an illiterate country youngster!" How very awful! What a crushing indictment against Joseph and the Saints! And how very bad for the "mush-rat."

But we must make some allowance for this writer in the Gate City, for at the time of the Mormon "hegira," 1846, two years after Joseph Smith's assassination, he was an integral part of "us little ones in our country home." He then being a little one, and his "father being a leader of that sort of opinion" that desired "a rope and gallows" for an American citizen who chose to be an elder among the Latter Day Saints, no one need to expect fairness and justness at his hands.

Here is what he says:

JOSEPH SMITH AT NAUVOO.

The papers report negotiations between the authorities of the Mormon Church and the Government of Canada as the Mormons want to extend their settlements into the British dominions. Reports say they are making similar negotiations in Mexico. In America the Mormons occupy Utah, Idaho, New Mexico, Wyoming and Montana in more or less strength. We have just received the report of the Utah commissioners. Some months ago we had a long and pleasant talk with Mr. Caine, the delegate of Utah in congress, an intelligent and upright gentleman, and as sincerely a Mormon as Protestant or Catholic or Jew sincerely hold their faith. Hundreds of thousands share with him that sincere belief. So you and we have seen a religion grow from its very beginnings. Many of us live in sight of Nauvoo and know the career of Joseph Smith from beginning to end.

One of our earliest recollections is of the Mormon settlement there, and of the building of The Temple, and of the killing of Joseph Smith, and of the flight of the Saints across Iowa to Deseret and Salt Lake. There were few inns—no "hotels"—in Iowa then and the people all kept open house. Our father was a minister of the church militant: a conspicuous and relentless opponent of the Mormons. As illustrating the popular feelings of the times old settlers have told us this incident. Mr. Clark was preaching on a Sunday at a camp-meeting a few miles from Nauvoo on the Iowa side. A large congregation was present. In the course of the sermon he made a characteristic allusion to the Mormons. A well appearing gentleman arose in the audience and contradicted his statement. "What's that?" said the preacher, bristling for the fray. "I am an elder in the church of the Latter Day Saints," was the answer, "and

I deny the accuracy of your statement!" "You are a Mormon elder are you?" "Yes, sir." "Then all I want is a rope and a gallows for you." The elder dropped to his seat discomfited. Our father being a leader of that sort of opinion we recall the terror of us little ones in our country home remote from neighbors one night in our father's absence when a stranger who craved to stay all night and was admitted proved to be a high functionary of the Mormon church. And when mother went to hang up the stranger's overcoat and found it weighted with a pistol in each pocket there were two or three little folks in that house that had no doubt but here was another slaughtering Herod, who would not spare the children, even above the age of two years. That was in the midst of "the hegira." A mile away from us was a grove where a colony of Mormons camped for several months. To our thought it was uncanny as Meg Merrilies and the Gypsies. They were well-behaved and orderly and nothing was missing in the neighborhood during their stay except some grain and pairs of harness. This small pilfering was attributed to them, though the real thieves may have been in the neighborhood before they came, and were there after all the Mormons had "moved on." When one morning the country neighborhood was shocked out of its quiet by the news that a young man known and loved in the sparse settlement, who had been at every fireside and taught the winter school in the log house to which all of us who were old enough had gone, had been found hanging by the neck quite stiff and dead in a barn the evidence seemed clear that he had taken his own life. But there were some who never ceased to think that he had been killed by the Mormons; it being conjectured that as some harness was missing from the barn he had caught the thieves in the act and they silenced him. Among all the Gentiles the safe maxims of the law were reversed, and a Mormon was thought guilty of every crime until he was so clearly proven innocent that the most stubborn prejudice with reluctant and shaking head had to give up the case.

We can go on the street and in a few minutes find a dozen persons who knew Joseph Smith well. One of these showed us the last lines Smith wrote, being sent him as an attorney to notify him that he was being taken to Carthage where he was killed. Or rather it was the last Smith ostensibly wrote, for it was really written by an Englishman whom he made his secretary, Smith himself being quite uncertain as to his spelling and writing and reluctant to show his illiteracy now that he was a lieutenant general, a candidate for president and the Prophet of the Latter Day Dispensation. Mr. Josiah Quincy wrote some years ago that when he saw Smith at Nauvoo he was the most kindly looking man he ever saw. Emerson said we all have a right to our own eye winkers, so there can be no quarrel with Mr. Quincy for his use of his own eyes. But those here who knew the prophet well do not recall anything kingy in his appearance. He was a large healthy looking man with rather commonplace features. He was ignorant, called a muskrat a "mush-rat," and showed the usual characteristics of an illiterate country youngster. A great church with hundreds of thousands of adherents now think of Joseph Smith as an inspired and saintly personage. He holds a kindred place in their thoughts to Mahomet to Moslems and Christ to Christians. Yet to those here who were familiar with all his course at Nauvoo from beginning to end there was nothing mysterious in what he was or what he did. To them he appeared as little sacred or inspired—as little likely to make one feel reverence towards him as anybody they could think of.

It is said by those familiar with the Mormons in Utah and adjacent territories that apart from polygamy they are an industrious, honest, religious, sincere people with many virtues. In the Nauvoo period many of them deserved to be equally well spoken of. Yet then Mormonism was not a religion but an adventure. It stood so near its beginnings that it was yet a base and bold knavery, uncovered and ungraced by the comeliness with which the honest belief of men and women will, in time, adorn any creed.

BROWN—McINTOSH—ROBINSON.

WE herewith give an extract from a letter written from Newton, Kansas, November 18th, 1888, by one George F. Robinson, addressed to Bro. J. A. McIntosh, Alliston, Ontario. It is preceded by a letter from Bro. McIntosh and, as will be seen therein, the said Robinson was at one time a member of the Reorganization at Cameron, Ontario, and afterwards identified himself with W. P. Brown and the Whitmerites. While connected with that faction he went to Newton, Kansas, and prepared Brown's pamphlet No. 3, but afterwards fell out with Brown. His estimate of Brown and his work is tersely but significantly expressed: "Great noise but little wool." From this we learn that Mr. Robinson had rid himself of the ravelings of Brown's fleece which for a long time hung over his eyes. Some Whitmerite history is thus brought to light; for it appears that pamphlet No. 3 which was issued as the work of W. P. Brown is not altogether his production, but that while it has been issued as coming from his pen, in reality it was partly the work of George F. Robinson. What a tangled "noise" they weave who have but "little wool."

I enclose a letter from a man who once or twice belonged to the Reorganized Church; also to the Strangites and Brighamites at times. He left the Reorganized Church here at Cameron and went into rank with the Whitmerite faction under W. P. Brown. He left here at Brown's instance and went to Chicago and got broke financially. Finally Brown, of Newton, Kansas, sent Robinson the amount of his fare to come to Newton and write pamphlet No. 3, as you will see by the letter. But Robinson has split with Brown some six months ago. I suppose Mr.

Robinson was to be paid for his traducings and defamations of Joseph and the Doctrine and Covenants. I would advise you to insert a warning in the Herald notifying the Saints of this G. F. Robinson. He is an unreliable man. I am responsible for this and will give proof when needed.

J. A. McINTOSH.

"When W. P. Brown got out his third pamphlet he sent for me to come here to write it out ready for the press. I came and did the work, but since then I have separated from Brown. . . . If you have a few Heralds I should be glad of them. Have not seen one since I parted from Brown, which is now nearly six months. There is no Saints here—only Brown and wife and two old women who are his followers—and there is also three of his followers at Wichita, about twenty miles from here—Great noise but little wool.

G. F. ROBINSON.

CUPID, ever alert for conquest among the fair and the beautiful, has long been playing his artful pranks around the Herald Office. And now at last he cast his silken cords about another one of our esteemed employes, and, leading her away to the altar of Hymen triumphed only when he saw her safe and secure "in the bonds of matrimony." Sr. Margaret Annie Scott, daughter of Bro. John Scott, our "foreman," has been connected with the composing department of the Herald Office for over seven years past, and by her uniform attention to business, and her winning deportment, she has worthily won the esteem of all her associates. The office will greatly miss her cheerful presence and her skillful aid; but all join in extending to her unnumbered good wishes in all her future life, and trust that it may prove as beautiful and bright as was the evening on which she was married.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In this issue we publish a communication written by Bro. Isaac F. Scott, Sen., of Pardeeville, Wisconsin, in respect to the career of J. J. Strang among the Saints at Burlington, Wisconsin. His statements are similar to those made to us years ago by some of the old members of the church in that vicinity. Bro. Scott claims to speak knowingly, and his words therefore carry weight with them, and will go far in furnishing facts as to the methods and motives of Mr. Strang and his fellows.

We would like to obtain "The history of Caldwell county," Missouri, published in 1886. If any of the brethren possess one will they please oblige us by informing us upon what terms, if any, we could obtain it? We would be glad to also procure similar histories of Jackson, Clay, Ray and Carroll counties.

Sr. Mary Piddington, of Crescent City, (Iowa), branch, writes and says: "I wish to bear testimony to this church, for I have known for years that it is the work of God; and I hope to be enabled to again meet with my husband in the beyond. He left with us good testimony."

Bro. E. Day Bennett, of Dakota, made a short stay at Lamoni enroute to Saginaw

City and vicinity, Michigan, whither he goes to preach the gospel of the Kingdom, restored by the angel seen of John on Patmos.

Sr. Emma W. Simpson, of Holden, Mo., wrote Bro. D. Dancer, December 14th, and said, "I will not attempt to express my keen appreciation of both Herald and Autumn Leaves. Suffice it to say that I can not get along without them, and shall not try to so long as I have the use of my hands to work."

To-day (December 20th) the weather is bright and beautiful. The fall weather was unsurpassed, and the winter thus far has been autumn-like and faultless. Health abounds, and the doctors have but little to do except extracting teeth and escorting land explorers around. Farmers are happy, business men are cheerful, social circles are placid and pleasant, the political pot don't even simmer, and the dying year will cast its last lingering look on Lamoni peaceful, prosperous and promising.

Bro. L. H. Ezzell, writing from Kempner, Texas, December 8th, reports that he is soon to hold a discussion with a Campbellite minister named Gibson, and hopes he may be able thereby to get the restored gospel before the people of that region.

Bro. D. S. Crawley was at Arcadia, Kansas, December 14th; some there were interested in the word preached, and he hoped to soon baptize some.

In his letter of December 13th, Bro. P. B. Seaton, of Paris, Tennessee, says, "The work is onward here."

In a letter from Holden, Missouri, dated December 10th, Bro. C. St. Clair reports further encouraging news. He had baptized three more and others had given in their names for baptism. The people were interested in the faith and in consequence Bro. I. N. White and he expected to begin a series of meetings there on the 29th inst. He wrote the 15th that he was having excellent times, had baptized one more, expected to baptize others soon, and that the saints were in fine spirits and doing well.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right for Saints to join with other people and build a union church house and it not be deeded to any church?

Ans.—Yes, if that is found to be a sure and wise way to secure a house for the use of the Saints.

Q.—What is the proper way of deeding property to the church?

A.—It should be deeded to Bishop George A. Blakeslee and his legal successors in office as Trustees-in-trust for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In a letter dated December 16th, from Columbus, Kansas, Sr. A. J. Randall wrote as follows:

"I have not been a member very long, but I feel it my duty to write a few lines. I can say that I feel glad and rejoice that I joined this church. There are a number of Saints here. We have testimonial meetings every first and third Sunday, and preaching on the fourth one. I ask the prayers of the Saints."

The printed name on the colored label on your paper gives the date to which your subscription has been paid. If it shows you are in arrears, please renew.

Mother's Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"I fain would thank thee that my mortal life
Has reached the hour (albeit through care and pain)
When Good and Evil, as for final strife,
Close dim and vast on Armageddon's plain."

HIS WORK.

THERE is to come a time in which the Lord will do a work that will be "cut short in righteousness;" and when the Herald of Dec. 22d came to hand and we glanced over the figures of the Missionary Fund and saw the footing up of over $42, our heart rejoiced within us, and we felt confirmed in the sure testimony of the word of God relative to the hastening of his work. From the first there have been those who have earnestly desired that inasmuch as this fund was not tithing, but free will offering—aye in many cases a "covenant made by sacrifice"—that it might be set apart and held sacred for the use of certain missions. To such we wish to say that we believe that at our next conference this request will be granted, and it may be the mission will not be an extension of any now under the jurisdiction of conference. If indeed the time has come for this mission to be established, well may the hearts of those who are privileged to contribute to its support overflow with gratitude to God. Through the kindness of Bishop Blakeslee we are permitted to make extracts from a letter received from his agent in Tahiti, which will show that the Lord is moving upon the hearts of those in distant lands to help in the mighty work lying before the ministry of this reorganized church—the preaching of this gospel in all the world for a witness. The Lord is not without abundant means for the propagation of his word, and he will not always wait for unwilling hearts and slothful hands, for he has promised to cut it short.

"On the 16th of June, 1888, we assembled in Apataki to dedicate our house of prayer. His Royal Highness, king O. Pomare V., was there with us; and also the king's nephew, O. Hinaj was one of the assembly. The king expressed his great pleasure at having been invited by Tehopea to the dedication, and signified his desire to attend the dedication of our houses of prayer now being built upon other islands. When King O. Pomare V. returned from Apataki he commenced to build a house of prayer for our religion on his nephew's land. He has a great desire for our religion, and is a believer in the Latter Day Work. He inquired after T. W. Smith."

FUN AT HOME.

There is nothing like it to be found—no, not if you search the world through. I want every possible amusement to keep the boys at home evenings. Never mind if they do scatter books and pictures, coats, hats and boots! Never mind if they do make a noise around, with their whistling and hurraing! We would stand aghast if we could have a vision of the young men gone to utter destruction for the very reason that, having cold, disagreeable, dull, stiff firesides at home, they sought amusement elsewhere. Don't let them wander beyond the reach of mother's influence, yet awhile. The time will come before you think, when you would give the world to have your house tumbled by the dear hands of those very boys; when your heart shall long for their noisy steps in the hall, and their ruddy cheeks laid up to yours; when you would rather have their jolly whistle than the music of all the operas; when you would gladly dirty carpets—ay, live without carpets at all but to have their bright, strong forms beside you once more. Then play with and pet them. Praise Johnny's drawing, Betty's music, and baby's first attempt at writing his name. Encourage Tom to chop off his stick of wood, and Dick to persevere in making his hen-coop. If one shows a talent for figures, tell him he is a famous mathematician; and if another loves geography, tell him he will be sure to make a great traveler, or a foreign minister. Become interested in their pets, be they rabbits, pigeons or dogs. Let them help you in home decorations; send them to gather mosses, grasses and bright autumn leaves, to decorate their room when the snow is all over the earth, and you will keep yourself young and fresh by entering into their joys, and keep those joys innocent by your knowledge of them.—Sel.

LOVE.

MANY long years ago, in the town of Bethlehem, of Judea, in the month of December when nature wears her snowy robe and earth appears gloomy and almost forsaken, there was seen a most beautiful star in the east, of such brilliancy and size that its brightness illuminated the firmament and greatly attracted the attention of the wise men, who knowing it to be the star of the Messiah followed it until it stood over where the sweet infant lay; and they were filled with exceeding great joy. Oh, how beautiful to fallen humanity was the light of that heavenly star which then dawned upon the world, scattering the clouds of darkness and dispersing the doubt and fear that filled the breasts of many of earth's children! Yes, to those that believed it was indeed a most glorious light, a light of love, for God so loved the world that he gave his only Son to be a propitiation for our sins; and not for ours alone, but the sins of the whole world.

"God is love." What can be more beautiful, more sublime than these words? Can we measure the length and breadth, or fathom the depth of this love? or can we by searching find out its sacred bonds? Mankind in their pressed condition feel bewildered; their power of vision is too contracted to comprehend the magnitude thereof. Listen to the words of the Savior, whose wisdom and knowledge surpassed everything of an earthly nature: "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This is certainly a great command, but would an Allwise Being give his children commands impossible to perform? We think not; but if, dear readers, you or I ever arrive to that perfection, it must be through love. God is love, and his creatures must love him with their whole heart, might, mind and strength—all the powers we possess—and their neighbors as themselves. Selfishness entirely removed and love predominant, happiness would then seem almost complete. No more would the cry of the orphan go unheeded; the lonely widow be left destitute, or the sick and afflicted call for help and hear no response. Every one would be willing to assist others; the strong help to bear the infirmities of the weak lift up the fallen, comfort the tried, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, rejoice with those who do rejoice and weep with those who weep—no more hatred, evil speaking, envy nor malice; each heart filled with joy, and the light of heaven beaming upon the soul in rich effusion, raising up to a higher and nobler standard. Then the earth would seem to shout her praises, and all nature rejoice. Angels would raise their voices in songs of gladness, while the Savior would watch with loving eyes; with the Father pleading in tender compassion, saying: "My people, remember my commandments, not only to say but to do them, for this commandment I gave, that ye love one another even as I have loved you. Now stretch forth thy hands to the heavens that greater power may be received and all things which have been promised since the beginning." Love should actuate all deeds, both in keeping the commandments of God and in acts towards each other; extending even to our enemies that, from our inmost soul we could cry, "Father forgive them." This we believe to be the spirit of the gospel, the spirit of our Maker. And if once we obtain a fulness, it must be by a continual effort, day by day, that through love we may conquer all our evil passions and thoughts; with loving desires seeking the good of mankind, striving to bring to pass much righteousness; one in heart, mind and purpose, having on the mantle of charity, the pure love of God.

C. ACKERLY.

Dear Sister Frances:—For years I had been attending the Church of England. I would go from Sunday to Sunday, and I am not ashamed to say it, it never seemed to make any impression on me; but the first time I heard Bro. Burton, I can not describe my feelings. I felt that he came from God with the true gospel of Christ. After I heard him the first time Sr. Wright asked me what I thought of that preaching? I said it was grand, and I knew he would do good if he preached here once or twice more; and I thank my Heavenly Father that he sent him again, and that he was the means of doing much good. And now I can see from the knowledge I have received through pondering over God's holy word that it was not the true church I was in before; and that was the reason I did not receive any benefit from their teaching. At times I can hardly realize God's goodness unto me, that it is now in these my latter days that his true gospel was to be made known to me, and I to embrace it and I hope to ever hold fast to it.

I have received many blessings from His hands since I have become a member of the Church of Christ. I can not understand why there are so many that will hear the true gospel and then not believe it, but reject it. Alas, poor short sighted creatures!

I can say I know that my Redeemer liveth; and I can testify of the Spirit of God resting upon me for some days; for I had been most undeservingly persecuted; but when I went to my God in prayer, I felt I must and would forgive.

We have had good examples and teachings shown us of late by Bro. and Sr. Burton. They left us for their earthly home, and we miss them much; but may our loss be other's gain; for though lost to sight, they are to memory held most dear by all the Saints everywhere; for they are indeed God-fearing people, and Sr. Burton (God bless her) is a grand helpmeet in the work—her whole mind is as it were embodied in it. We all were indeed sorry, very sorry to part with them all, for they were the means of bring us from outer darkness into marvelous light. Bro. Wright's oldest son, Sydney, was ordained a priest while they were here, and he has gone with them for a season; and may God give his angels charge concerneng him, that he may be strengthened by the influence of the Spirit of God, that he may not weary in well doing nor faint by the way, and that he may heed all the instructions that may be given from time to time of the true word of God, and be the means of bringing many souls from darknes into the light of the kingdom of God.

We also have had with us for a short season two very promising young men, brethren Wight and Butterworth. We heard some able discourses from Bro. Wight. I think he will do much good. I pray God he may, and that he will be their safe-guard, to strengthen them in their faith from all the reproaches and scorns of the outside world.

Amen.

SISTER COLVIN.

TEXAS, Michigan, Nov. 21st.

Dear Sisters:—Just received the Herald, and as usual turned to the Home Column; read "Foredoomed;" then re-read it. (I often think we ought to read anything twice). Well, shall I tell you plainly what I thought? It can do no harm as I can see, and it may do good. I thought how true that is, and I felt as though I, a very weak little one—so weak and erring that I fear sometimes lest I perish by the way—would try and write to you.

My dear sisters, many of you I have never seen, and perhaps may never see until Jesus comes; yet I love you, and am interested in your welfare. How many of us have given up all for Jesus! have presented our bodies a living sacrifice unto God! Is it not our reasonable service, just as much as it was of the Church of Christ eighteen hundred years ago? Read the twelfth chapter of Romans. Aae not the the last two verses of that chapter sublime?

I am one of the scattered ones. There were two others baptized at the same time I was, and we three are the only ones in the town in which we live.

Your sister in Christ,

MINERVA J. HISCOCK.

BRECKINRIDGE, Texas, Nov. 29th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I wish to thank you and the many sisters for the strength and encouragement I receive in reading the letters in the Herald. I thank God that I have been permitted, through the kindness of my father, to read the Herald the past two years; and it has done me more good than words can express. I have never read any of the church books. My husband has never heard an elder preach, so he does not see the necessity of buying the church papers and books. Only those who live away from the Saints can know how anxious I was to go to Cook's Point to attend conference. I felt that it would do me so much good to meet with the Saints once more. They seemed so near; but I could not go. I have been waiting patiently for an elder to come this way and preach, but have failed to see any ons so far. We are not able to pay an elder's way here; but will give any brother a home with us if they will come. The most of the people here belong to the Christian Church. They think they have fine preachers, so I want some of the brethren to come and show them that there are some still better than theirs. People here seem to think all Latter Day Saints are Brighamites.

Your sister in the one faith,

ADDIE WOOD.

KANSAS CITY, Kan., Dec. 6th.

Sister Frances:—Brother Parish asked in his letter to the Hopes, if they knew of any one who put up wine for future use. I would like to give the testimony of two sisters who did. One said she was in darkness while making it. Several times she brought a half cupful to taste, and my children always wanted to taste of it. I have seven in number, one a boy of eight years, and he refused to touch it, and I resolved then that should never have a chance of refusing it again at my hands. The other sister says it is a bad example, for saints to make wine. She had an old friend, between fifty and sixty years of age come to see her, who did not belong to the church; he was so pleased with the home-made wine that he drank three or four glasses, and said he would not be without it in his house again. She felt condemned. Suppose he should become a lover of wine, and turn to be a drunkard! What excuse could she give at the bar of God for giving him the social glass? Where Samson slew thousands, wine and strong drink slay tens of thousands.

From your sister in Christ,

ANNIE HARVEY.

HENDERSON, Ill., Nov. 10th.

Dear Sister Frances:—This is a gloomy afternoon; it has been raining for two days, until everything is wet and cheerless. November has come. The leaves have fallen, which reminds us the summer is ended and harvest is past; and what of our souls? Can we truly say our souls are saved? or have we put ourselves in a condition to be saved? Methinks it is not only entering the waters of baptism and having hands laid on for the gift of the Holy Ghost, that will save us. Oh, no! we are then enlisted with the fight before us; and how hard the battle has been, how much we have suffered, and how many times have been overcome by the enemy, we can only tell when the last trump shall sound and we are called to be judged by the deeds done in the body. But I do humbly pray that all who are earnestly seeking Christ and his righteousness may be saved in his kingdom. I think the Prayer League is doing much good, and I want to add my name also; for I would not be a drone in the Lord's vineyard, but a willing worker, doing all in my power to roll on his glorious work. Pray for me, sisters, that I may receive an assurance that I am accepted of God and that I may be an instrument in his hand to do much good. I attended the Des Moines conference in September, and met with many good Saints who were strangers to me then, but who will now hold a warm spot in my heart, and who I trust will sometime think of me. Brn. Roth and Bozarth favored us with some excellent sermons, which were indeed a feast of good things to us; for it is not often we have the privilege of hearing the elders. They are good men; may the Lord bless them in their work. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am, as ever, your sister in Christ, NELLIE J. WILLIAMS.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 15th.

Bro. Blair:—I have just returned from Layton, where I held four meetings in a new brick School house built by the citizens of Layton and the Episcopal Church with the agreement that any denomination which preached Christ should occupy. Infidels were not to enter in to preach Infidelity. On last Wednesday night I spoke on the apostasy of the primitive church and referred to history at the close, to show what had been done by the church under the apostasy. I though I was very mild in drawing the lines, but I discovered at the close of the service that I had thrust the sword too deep, for a Mr. Henry Ellis, who poses as the Electric Headlight of the Episcopal Church in Layton, donned his "war paint" and came for me direct, and, like one having authority, demanded in thunder tones, "Why did you not plant the tree in your own ground?" I sought to him for light, and he gave me distinctly to understand that I was sent by the Re-organized Church to show up the evils in Utah, and that I had no business to say anything about any other church; that I should have charged the "beastly" power to the Utah church. I undertook to reason with him by telling him I could not do that; I could not charge people with things they were not guilty of. But he seemed to wax warm, and from that to hot, until he got astride his war horse, when it was impossible to even get a chance to reason with him. As a matter of course it created considerable comment, such as, "It depends on whose ox is gored," etc. We expected this storm, like all others, would develop something by the morning—either a tempest or sunshine. I was really expecting the "gate" would no longer "stand ajar." But we were "away off" out of the way. Imagine our surprise and delight the next morning, when we were told that Mr. Ellis had received a revelation or vision in the night and was looking for me. I made some inquiries of different parties to know what figure, if any, I cut in the matter, but could get nothing definite. One man told me that as near as he could learn, the revelation stated that Anthony, Weaver and Sandall, were not men of God. When tidings come from heaven we are anxious to know their import, and of course we were deeply interested in the matter. But we were not long kept in suspense. I called at the house of Mr. T. W. Sandall, and Mr. Ellis and father Sandall came. Mr. Ellis said he wanted to go to Bro. Weaver's and deliver the message to me in presence of two witnesses, and so he had selected Brn. Sandall and Weaver. On arriving at Bro. Weaver's, Mr. Ellis began by telling us he once had a revelation about a woman that was sick, and, the trouble was, that she kept open shop on Sunday, and the revelation was, that if she would shut up shop she would be made well. She gave heed to it and got well; but the temptation being great, she again opened shop and began selling on Sunday, and she died. Also, his wife was once very sick, and he and a certain lady prayed for her and she was healed. And, as he was deeply wrought upon last night, he said he went to God in agonizing prayer and agonized greatly, when, he said, the power of the Lord came upon him and almost choked him to death, and that he really did not know whether he would get out with a limb fast to his body or not. But suddenly the room was filled with a great light and the Lord stood in the middle of the room. He said he asked the Lord to show him what was right, and that if he was wrong to direct him. He said, "The Lord pointed to me and said, The gospel is true. First purge thy floor, then remove the beam from thine own eye. I am the Lord." "To me," said Ellis, "it said, Be steadfast, unmovable, abound in the work of the Lord, for thy labor is not in vain for me."

When I asked permission to copy the revelation, he readily granted it; but he made a good many verbal additions to it. He said, "When the Lord commanded me to remove the beam from my own eye, at the word 'eye' a large church appeared on my eye lid with a large cupola running up from the center, and the whole building was lit up. I asked him if he understood that to be the Church of Christ. He said, 'Yes.' I then asked him to give me his understanding of the revelation, as the brethren with myself had began to talk pretty freely on the merits of the matter, and besides, two other friends had come in. He said, 'I was to purge this floor, the church here, and get the beam out of my eye, then I would be all right.' The strangeness of the whole matter, is that a member of the Episcopal Church should become a prophet and give revelations to set us right! We, believing in immediate revelation, when in the Lord's wisdom it is essential, and he being opposed to the principle, I confess I am sceptical, not as to his having it, but as to its coming from the Lord, for the reason that Mr. Ellis told me the night before what I was sent to do. Of course the part direct to him was not revealed in the school-house.

Now this shows one of the many kind of "Spirits gone abroad in the world." They are numerous in this region.

I am to return to Layton next Wednesday to continue the meetings there. Our meetings were fairly well attended. The more experience we have here the more we see the importance of the declaration, "It is written;" and of the commandment to Joseph and O. Cowdery to "Rely on the things which are written," and also that whatever may be presented for testimony must be according to what is "written."

In my experience I have heard many and diverse testimonies, and if I had listened to them all and believed them, I would be like many of these people that have been sealed up to everlasting life but really do not fairly understand what "be the first principles of the oracles of God." A good old man two days ago, advised me to humble myself and pray the Lord for a testimony, for then I would know. He claims to have a testimony that polygamy is true, and that the church here is the true one. He also claims to know that Joseph the Seer will be resurrected and lead this people out of bondage. Another man talking with me claimed to know that polygamy is true. What was "written" had no weight with him. He too had prayed to know if it was true, and he said an angel came down from heaven—he saw him coming down—and he stood in his garden and opened his robe and showed him his garments and the marks on them, and told him it was true. And if I was to say that thousands "know what Joseph said," I would not miss the truth. And if you question their varying statments, they become indignant.

In a letter received from a sister in Southern Utah, she tells of some going to Old Mexico, and that the current saying among them now is, "Joseph prophesied that many of the church would go to Old Mexico."

In dealing with both the former and latter day apostasy, we are not safe when we leave that which is "written" for any man's testimony. In a letter written by Bro. Ethan Barrows, from Sall Lake City, and published in Herald, December 15th, the writer says: "I felt somewhat relieved in my feelings when I read extracts in late Heralds from the history of Joseph Smith, for they contained some points that I find are not easily received by some of the elders of the Reorganization." If there are some of the elders that do not believe and accept the teachings of Joseph Smith, the Seer, as believed and held forth by the Reorganization, I fail to know who they are. As for myself, and my co-workers in this field, and all who have labored in it from 1879 when I was first assigned to this mission, they are solid on the rulings of the Reorganized Church, and are capable and safe men, and have learned by experience that they must know for themselves what is "written." As for me, I confess I am not prepared to accept every man's testimony unless it is according to the accredited doctrine and rulings of the church.

In a late Herald we discover the president of the church takes the position that there is no safety where it is not "written." We have been commanded to "try the spirits," and to my mind this is the best field in all the world to try them. I wish to say in conclusion that everything that has been "tarred" with the polygamists "stick" should be carefully examined and tried as to whether it is of men's mere memory, or written history. I have had men feel heart because I have corrected their memory by written history, showing them that their memory would not do to trust. It has not been very many years since the late war, and men who passed through that have many things stamped upon their memory; but when they read of the incidents in history, things forgotten come vividly before the mind again. Should we undertake to relate incidents, we would discover many missing links; and so it is with men who undertake to regulate the ministry to-day, from memory or fragments of history. We all are liable to err, and do err. Therefore let us be careful. May the Lord be good to all and direct us in love.

R. J. ANTHONY.

UNION, Nebraska, Dec. 13th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—At this writing I am holding a series of meetings in the Moroni branch. The interest manifested is good, and the attendance fair, I find the feeling among the brethren at this place is much better than when I was here last winter. I find the work is opening up quite lively, and the calls for preaching are numerous. We are doing our best to supply the many demands made, but find the need of much patience in the prosecution of the work.

A short time ago we opened up the work at Bee, Seward county, by holding a series of meetings in the Christian Church at that place. We encountered some opposition from the Adventists but we had good attendance throughout, and were earnestly requested to return there as soon as possible.

We expect to commence meetings at the Everett School-house next Monday evening. We are feeling well in the work, and our prayers and our labors are for the strengthening of the kingdom of our Lord.

Bro. Blair, we can not close this letter without thanking you for the words of kind counsel and cheer that you gave us at our camp-meeting at Wilber. We have striven faithfully to discharge our duty as a good soldier of Christ Jesus, but have frequently asked ourselves the question, Is it possible to continue faithful unto the end? And your words of kindness and encouragement have been a source of help to me.

Yours in the gospel,

CHAS. H. PORTER.

OENAVILLE, Texas, Dec. 12th.

Bro. Blair:—I left Elkhart, Texas, in October and spent two weeks at the Central branch where I am in hopes some good was accomplished. We had a good time at our conference held at Cook's Point. I am now at Elm branch doing what I can for the work. Bro. Roberts has gone east and I trust he will do a good work there. There are many believing in Houston county. I understand W. P. Brown, a Whitmerite, is in Temple, Texas, and I wish to say to the Saints to be not troubled over the matter until you hear both sides. I am willing to meet W. P. Brown at any branch in Texas and discuss fair propositions. If he will not meet us fairly, I will go at any time and answer him and his theories. We feel thankful that the Lord has raised up some faithful workers in this mission. And here they are needed! As the work widens there is great necessity for faithful labor. Brn. E. W. Nunley, J. Currie, S. W. Simmons and J. Tipton, with others coming to the front. May the Lord bless all to do their best.

Yours,

AMOS J. MOORE.

BAY CITY, Michigan, Dec. 15th.

Dear Bro. Blair:—I am still laboring in this place and the prospects are good. Since my last I have baptized three more, and others are near. All are in unity in Bay City and doing all they can for the onward spread of the gospel. I have never since coming into the church experienced a brighter prospect for an ingathering into the fold of Christ. Last night I lectured in a hall on the difference between the practices of Utahism and the Reorganization. All seemed interested in learning the difference. I referred to President Joseph Smith's remarks in the last Herald where it states that, when asked if he would endorse polygamy if an angel was to bring it to him, his answer was, "No Sir," and that he preferred to believe what was written, "and that men or angels could not pervert God's perfect law."

People are beginning to wake up to facts, and those that are faithfully declaring God's word are being abundantly blessed.

Yours in faith,

E. DELONG.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 14th.

Dear Herald:—Since March, 1887, I have labored in the Massachusetts district under the direction of the president with the consent of the presiding missionaries. The Lord has blessed me, for which I feel very grateful. The saints in all places have been exceedingly kind to me. I am now engaged in a store in this city for a short season, that I may obtain that which is necessary. While feeling somewhat discouraged at times, I have found it very helpful to visit those who, by the various circumstances and conditions attendant upon the christian warfare, have had difficulties that have been almost unbearable. Then it is that a word of encouragement spoken in kindness helps to heal the wounded heart, comforts and cheers them on to renewed efforts toward ultimate victory. These little acts of kindness and words of comfort cost us nothing. Why then withhold them? If there is warmth and sunshine in our own hearts, let others feel its rays. If sadness casts its shadows on our brow, let us seek those whose life is imbittered with sorrows deep and crushing, and, in striving to cheer and comfort them, forget our own. Then will the warmth and light of heaven fill our souls. Dear saints, are there not some in your neighborhood, perchance in the church, who have lost some loved one whose very step sent a thrill to the heart? That home once so joyous and happy is now cheerless. Go thou and comfort them.

For the last three months, with the exception of two Sabbaths, I have been with the church in Boston. The words of encouragement and comfort in a late Herald, entitled "Come up higher," has had good effect. Numbers are seeking that oneness so necessary to a higher and holier life. Some of our prayer meetings of late have been especially blessed with gracious revivals of the Holy Spirit's love and power; tears flowing freely under the power of divine love as, in words of tender care, the good Shepherd encourages to diligence and faithfulness, promising protection to his people if faithful when the scourge should visit the land.

The year past has not been one of ingathering of souls in this city nor in the district. It seems to be a waiting time, a time when we begin to look at ourselves to see how we stand. I believe there is in the church too much pride, too much class, too much of standing aloof from the poor and weak ones. I hope Sister Frances' words in Home Column will be heeded.

We are indeed having some excellent meetings. The Lord in his mercy is remembering Zion.

Yours,

E. N. WEBSTER.

PETERSBURG, Neb., Dec. 11th.

Bro. Blair:—Since writing last I labored four weeks in the Clear Water branch and succeeded in getting up quite an interest. My meetings were well attended and I hope the seed sown will eventually bring forth fruit, as there are many noble-hearted people there. The Lord blessed me exceeding in my endeavors.

I came here November 28th and found sister Emma Randall and her eldest daughter, Ella, also brother and sister Grover, all apparently strong in the faith. Bro. Caffall will remember the latter; they used to live near Blair. There has been no preaching in these parts since Bro. Hyde and I were here about eight years ago, except three sermons by Bro. O. Beebe. I have spoken ten times and the devil is raging. I have had excellent attention and the school-house has been crowded beyond its seating capacity. Sunday night the house was full and twenty-five or thirty standing around outside, and some came in wagons and returned home again. I longed for warm weather so I could speak out of doors that all might hear. Monday night following we again met and found that some one had taken down the stovepipe, taken out the lower sash of the three north windows and pounded something into the keyhole, so we could not get into the house. A hundred or more people gathered around the outside but concluded that it was too cold to speak there and that it was not wise to meddle with the school-house as it might be an act of those who had authority to refuse us the house; but I made the statement the night previous (knowing that the director of the school district was present) that if there was any objections to me using the house any longer I would not insist on using it. But no one said a word in reply, consequently I concluded there was no objections and gave out another appointment, but found my way barred by the condition of the house as above stated.

I had intended to pass on to Stuart, Nebraska, in answer to an urgent call from Bro. and Sr. L. O. Dawson, but under the circumstances concluded to stay here and fight it out, as I was immediately informed that the Adventist church was at my disposal. If the weather permits I will hold forth there to-night. I then have three other school-houses offered me within a radius of five or six miles, and, judging by the demonstrations, I do not think I can do any better than to occupy and fight it out if it takes me a month. A minister of the Methodist Church warned the people not to come out and hear me at the school-house in Bro. Grover's neighborhood. He also said that they ought not to let me preach in the house, but as long as it was a school-house he supposed he could not help himself; but if it was a church I would not speak there. The people are mostly in my favor and God has given me the best of liberty in presenting the word. I find that it always stirs up the opposite powers to present the Book of Mormon, and this time he anticipated me and forced the fight, but it has resulted in good (as it always does where opposition is manifested) in raising up friends to the cause. Bro. Heman will remember this place as he preached here twelve years ago. My mother wrote me when she heard that I was intending to come here that she had always believed that one of us boys would have to open the work here again; why, she did not explain. I hope the hand of the Lord is in it and that good will eventually result.

It has been a trying time to me, but the promise of God in Doctrine and Covenants Section 71: 2, "Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, there is no weapon that is formed against you shall prosper," &c., has been verified to me, and the peaceful influence of the Spirit that pervaded my breast while I presented the evidence in favor of the Book of Mormon will ever remain an evidence to me of the Lord's divine goodness. I understand since that some had come there with the intention of asking me some questions and puzzling me, not for the purpose of obtaining the truth but for controversy. But I—by the direction of the Spirit, I believe,—anticipated them and told them that I would entertain no question unless submitted in writing, and would then entertain no question unless of vital importance in the salvation of the souls of men; that it was my mission to preach the gospel, and that questions leading to controversies I would not entertain. I could see that they were baffled, as they expected to create a disturbance in the meeting and thereby destroy the influence for good. They then intimated that I was afraid to meet the issue. I then challenged them to meet me on the issue in open, honorable, debate; and told them that the challenge stood open at any time they could find a man to meet it. But they acknowledged the weakness of their position by removing the windows, locking the doors, &c.

That blinding device of Satan, the Sabbath question, is keeping many out of the kingdom here. They will not hear to anything else but that and the sleep of the soul. I am almost desirous of a debate here on these questions as I think that I would remove the obstacles with those who are honest in heart.

My heart is in the work and I desire the prayers of the Saints every where.

Yours in bonds,

HYRUM O. SMITH.

THIRTEEN UNLUCKY BLUNDERS.

Under the head of Thirteen Unlucky Blunders, an exchange has the following as the list:

- To yield to immaterial trifles.
- To look for perfection in our own actions.
- To endeavor to mold all positions alike.
- To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.
- To measure the enjoyment of others by your own.
- To expect to be able to understand everything.
- To believe only what our finite minds can grasp.
- To look for judgment and experience in youth.
- Not to make allowances for the infirmities of others.
- To worry ourselves and others with what can not be remedied.
- Not to alleviate all that needs alleviating as far as lies in our power.
- It is a grand mistake to set up your own standard of right and wrong, and judge people accordingly.

JAMES J. STRANG IN VOREE.

I HAVE been a subscriber for The Saints' Herald ever since its publication, have taken much pleasure in perusing its columns, and have been often delighted and edified by the clear, scriptural manner in which the doctrines of Christ, as set forth in the standard books of the church, have been maintained and defended. I have also noted with admiration the Christ-like manner and fairness extended to all shades of professors of religion, especially towards those that have departed from the original faith of the church in these latter days.

To me it seems quite clear that history repeats itself, for as in former times, after Christ's ministrations on earth and His ascension to the Father, the world had many false Christ's and false prophets, and especially the Jews who still were looking for a Messiah to come when he had already come precisely as their prophets had predicted hundreds of years before his advent on earth. So in this last dispensation, as soon as the Seer that was called of God to open the dispensation of the fulness of times and establish the Church of Christ again upon the earth as in former days, with its glorious gifts and blessings, was taken from us, immediately there were plenty of would-be-great-ones to lead the Church of Christ, all claiming a divine call. Foremost among these leaders were the Twelve (nine of them) who went to Utah, and there they tried to build up their Zion entirely beyond the reach of this Nation, and there they promised the Saints peace and rest forever. How is it with them now? What a spectacle they present to the world, skulking and hiding away, trying to evade the righteous laws of the best Government on earth! They promised their followers rest and peace and prosperity in the vallies of the mountains, and that God would shield and protect them while desolation and destruction would fall upon this Nation and all the nations of the earth. But all their great promises and prophecies have proved an utter, disastrous failure; and in due time, after all their blind wanderings from the law of God, He sent his servants among them calling upon them, day and night, to "repent and return to the old paths" that He might forgive their sins and receive them unto mercy. And the honorable and merciful men of the Nation advise them to return to the original doctrines of the church as established by Joseph Smith the Seer and taught in the standard books and teachings of the church. But they say, "We will not return; we will fight it out to the bitter end." And like Israel of old they seem determined to pursue their headlong course of wickedness until utter ruin overtakes them.

And now as James J. Strang has been spoken of in late numbers of the Herald by some correspondents as the successor of Joseph Smith the Seer, I think that a little of my experience with this man who claimed that an angel "set [him] above all his fellows" might be interesting to the Herald readers, for I think I know as much of "the inwardness" of his organization as any man now living.

In the first place I investigated the claims of the Twelve relative to their authority to lead and preside over the church, and after the fullest and most impartial investigation that I was capable of giving the subject, and after hearing all that the Twelve could present in their own favor, I told them that they were usurpers, and that they would lead their followers to ruin. And because I would speak and carry out my convictions of right, they sought my life before they left Nauvoo. Then I turned my attention to an investigation of the claims of James J. Strang, for he and his followers were then making quite a stir in the church. And I suppose a large majority of the Latter Day Saints know that he claimed to be Joseph Smith's successor by a letter which he claimed to have received from the Seer. Now this letter I examined, carefully, and read it by permission of said Strang, and I will say that the said letter was not in Joseph Smith's handwriting, for I had often read his writing, neither was it in his style of language, neither was there a particle of clear evidence that it ever was sent by the authority of Joseph the Seer. And I say boldly, having the proof in my hands, that the whole thing was a wicked forgery and fraud, gotten up by a set of men in Voree whose sole aim was to gull the Saints by selling their lands to them at exorbitant prices and work wickedness with greediness. But their reign was short and their gains dearly earned.

And now after every effort of James J. Strang to establish himself a Pontiff or High Priest over the church, and an absolute Sovereign, King (contrary to the law of God, and the laws of the land) has proved an utter, disgraceful failure, and he has gone to his grave in reproach and shame, the victim of his own evils and outraged law, up comes some parties, old devotees of Strang, and offers a compromise to the Church of Christ! They says in substance, "Now if you will endorse J. J. Strang's [alleged] letter of appointment, and his administration up to the time of his death, we will have peace, and we will endorse brother Joseph Smith as the legal head of the church." Well; isn't this a sublime offer!

Now let us take a look at his administration and see what we are asked to endorse, for we think it includes more items of faith, and stranger kinds of faith than the Saints now have, to endorse J. J. Strang's teachings and acts.

First, we must endorse that base, forged "letter of appointment;" second, his bogus plates that he made out of Ben Pierce's old kettle; third, the disgraceful, lying manner in which he brought them forth; fourth, his pretended translation of them, in which there was not one solitary word of truth; fifth, his base covenant, which was "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell;" sixth, his temple revelation in Voree, a base presumption in the name of the Lord; seventh, his phosphorus and olive oil "endowment and illumination," that he promised his followers so often, one of the vilest impositions ever perpetrated on mortals in the name of the Lord; eighth, his system of spiritual wifery which he both taught and practiced; and ninth, his "Book of the Law." Here are nine leading items, and I can name as many more, equally pernicious and false, that were taught by James J. Strang.

Now I do not write a line of this article from any fear that the leading men of the Reorganized Church of Christ could be induced to compromise a single principle of righteousness by any man or set of men; for I would just as much expect to hear that they had endorsed Mohamed and the Koran, as that they had endorsed J. J. Strang with his "Book of the Law" and its appendages. But there are many thousands of Latter Day Saints who know nothing personally of Mr. Strang's teachings and acts, and to post these Saints I pen this article.

I will now state, briefly, what I know about some of these charges that I have made, which I think may serve as additional evidence that President Joseph Smith's answer to L. D. Hickey, in Herald of July 14th, 1888, headed, "No Compromise," is a grand, clearly defined statement of our position as a church. I have called Strang's letter of appointment a "forgery" and the plates he claimed to have found on "the Hill of Promise," by revelation "boobus," and I will now give the testimony of one of the men who assisted in getting up both these humbugs.

While I was a resident of Burlington, Racine county, Wisconsin, one mile from Voree, I met in the street of Burlington Mr. C. P. Barnes, the banker of the village, and while in conversation with him he said he wanted me to call on him at his bank some evening, as he wanted to have a friendly chat about matters that would interest me. A time was set, and I met him as agreed upon, and he informed me that he wanted to have a talk with me on matters relating to J. J. Strang, or "Jimmy Strang," as he usually called him. He said he knew that I was well posted on Strangism, but that there were a few links in Strang's matters that I had not got; and that there was no man then living who could give me those links but himself, as all the other parties were dead, and that to give me this information was his desire in having me call on him. And he charged me not to let the public know about the matters he was going to tell me of until after his death, for it would be unpleasant for him to met them right where they were gotten up. He said that some of these links I needed were as to Strang's "letter of appointment" and his "plates," and how he came by them. He said all were gotten up in Voree; that J. J. Strang, Benjamin Pierce, Wells, and himself, got up the whole thing for speculation, to sell lands which they owned where they intended to build Voree.

He said, "Strang, Pierce and Wells are dead, and I am the only one left that had a hand in the d—d mean scrape; and Voree is dead, and you are the man that knocked all our calculations in the head; and I have concluded that you might as well know the whole matter, for our calculations are all burst up and Jimmie's kingdom has all come to an end."

Mr. Barnes said their aim, in the first place, was to have Joseph Smith appoint a gathering place, or Stake, on their lands, but as Smith was killed about this time they changed their plans and concluded to make Strang Smith's successor and that would make a sure thing of building up Voree. Barnes said the four that he named got up the letter of appointment, and that Joseph Smith was dead when they got it up, also that Strang dictated every word of it. He said they made the "plates" out of Ben Pierce's old kettle and engraved them with an old saw file and made the characters similar to those on the plates found near Kinderhook, Pike Co., Illinois, but mixed up the engravings so they could not be easily detected; that when completed they put acid on them to corrode them and give them an ancient appearance; and that to deposit them under the tree, where they were found, they took a large auger, used for rafting purposes, which Ben Pierce owned, put a fork handle on the auger and with it bored a long, slanting hole under a tree on "The Hill of Promise," as they called it, laying the earth in a trail on a cloth as taken out, then put the "plates" in, tamping in all the earth again, leaving no trace of their work visible. Soon after the "plates" were deposited Strang got a revelation as to where they were, and then he got Aaron Smith, J. B. Wheeland and James Vanostrand for witnesses and to exhume them and they found them just as revealed (!) to Strang.

Strang having now got the "plates," they must be translated. Barnes said, "We tried to have him go slow, but he would rush matters too fast, and so out came the translation, and you got it and proved Strang's translation false by finding that passage in the Book of Mormon where it says 'all plates containing Holy writ shall retain their brightness and shall never be dimmed by time,' and this laid out our bogus plates and Strang's translation of them, for we did not know that there was such a passage in the Book of Mormon. And in relation to Strang's covenant, we tried to persuade him not to introduce it into the Church until the people were better prepared for its introduction." He said John C. Bennett introduced "the covenant" to Strang and was anxious to have Strang introduce it into the church and claim it to be a revelation to him from God; "so he took Bennett's advice and set our counsel aside, and from this time forth Strang and Bennett run the institution until you and your friends broke them up by exposing their devilry." "Now," said Mr. Barnes,

"what I have told you is true, and the balance of Strang's acts and teachings you are familiar with."

I will here state that I was well acquainted with C. P. Barnes for eighteen years, and I never heard any fault found with him in business matters, or his word called in question. Mr. Barnes was a silent partner in the land speculation in Voree, and very few, if any but the company, knew that he had any interest in the matter. He practiced law, and was quite successful in that profession.

And now in relation to the charges I have made against James J. Strang I will say, that I do not make them on my own individual knowledge of the facts alone, for I got the sworn testimony of many of the best men that ever walked in Voree, testifying to these facts concerning his teachings and his practices. And that the church may know who those men were who stood up so nobly for the truth, I will give a few of their names: Aaron Smith, (Strang's first counselor), Moses Smith, William Aldrich, John C. Gavlord, John Gavlord, Marvin M. Adams, Duty Griffith, Michael Griffith, and several others, who are and were well known in the Reorganized Church; but many of these old, tried pillars in the faith of Jesus have fallen asleep in hope of a glorious immortality, for they labored cheerfully, and gave liberally of their substance, for the good of Zion.

The "endowment" that I have mentioned as given by J. J. Strang and John C. Bennett, was performed in the basement of Strang's dwelling house at night, with the lights turned down; and they positively did use a mixture of phosphorus and oil to produce a pale looking blaze of light on the heads of all those who were present and received this "endowment;" and Strang said that the light (produced by this imposition) was the power of the Holy Ghost, the same as was manifested on the day of Pentecost.

To show the wicked fraud that Strang and Bennett perpetrated upon the people I went to Bishop Fuller, (Strang's Bishop) and got some of the stuff from the same bottle used by Strang and Bennett, and I gave the same "endowment" in the presence of a packed house of spectators, several of those who had received Strang's fraud being present who said it was the same, both in appearance and smell. Bishop Fuller told me the bottle that he took the stuff from was the one Strang and Bennett used and that no change had been made of it since they used it.

The Strang and Bennett "covenant" that I call a "covenant with death and an agreement with hell," was administered by Strang and Bennett to some two hundred persons, prior to its being exposed and published, who consisted of men, women and young unmarried ladies, who were all induced to take it by Strang's and Bennett's deceptive lies; for had they not "made lies their refuge and under falsehood hid themselves," not one in a hundred, I believe, would have taken it. But they boldly affirmed that it was only a covenant to carry out righteous principles; and J. J. Strang said in presence of some four hundred people in Voree that he got it verbatim, et literatim, et punctuatim, from the mouth of God, and he said the same to me in private conversation. This I copied verbatim from the bloody book where each person signed his or her name with their own blood! And I got two thousand copies of his "revelation," printed and sent them broadcast to the Latter Day Saints with plenty of certified testimony with the "covenant" which served to close out his kingdom in a hurry, for the Saints dropped him by the hundreds as they would a poisonous reptile.

And now I will give the Saints a few paragraphs of his "covenant" that they may judge of the source from whence his long "revelation" came:

Paragraph 1. "Of my own free will and accord, without any equivocation, mental reservation, or self-evasion of mind in me whatever; I do hereby covenant and swear that I will ever conceal and never reveal any of the secrets of this order that may now, or at any time hereafter be revealed unto me.

P. 2. "I further covenant and swear that I will uphold James J. Strang as Imperial Primate and Absolute Sovereign, with two vice-roys under him; and John C. Bennett as Pontiff, Premier, and master of ceremonies with his councillors.

P. 3. "I furthermore covenant and swear that I will obey all edicts, decrees, and commands issued by the Imperial Primate and Absolute Sovereign," &c. Here follows a string of oaths giving the signs, grips, and key-words of the order, by which they could be known in any crowd, day or night; which if given entire would fill about two columns of the Herald, and not one word of it having the least semblance of having been given of the Lord, but the very opposite of everything good or calculated to make men better by belonging to the order.

Here is the last paragraph of the covenant: "And should I ever be so vile as to reveal any of the secrets of this order, may the just anathemas of Jehovah, due to all like apostates and perjured villains, fall upon me; cast out by the fraternity; despised by the good; hated by the wicked; may evil men destroy me always, and disease rot my bones within me; parched and thirsty may I die, without friends or succor. With the gates of heaven closed against me may the Redeemer turn from me and remember his loving kindness no more. In witness whereof I do sign this great covenant with my own blood." Read the law of God given to Israel in Leviticus 5:4-8 on this subject.

I will here state, emphatically, that I heard J. J. Strang predict many things and times concerning the building up of Voree, the temple he commenced there, and the endowments to be given there, &c., every sentence of which has proved false. And so far as I can recollect, I never knew one prediction that he uttered, fulfilled.

James J. Strang got John C. Bennett to Voree, without the knowledge or consent of the church, and took him into full fellowship, notwithstanding he [Bennett] had done all that he could do, by public lectures and his book, "Mormon Expose," to destroy Joseph Smith the Seer and the whole church. Strang knew that Bennett had repeatedly declared his utter disbelief in the faith of the Latter Day Saints, still Bennett was a "hale fellow well met" with him. Soon after the covenant was published abroad, Bennett picked up his effects and left Voree. Strang remained for awhile, but Voree soon got to be too hot a place for him to live in, so he left for Beaver Island.

Now couple Bro. Loomis' experience with Strang on Beaver Island, given in Herald of November 10th last, with mine in Voree, and you have James J. Strang's teachings, acts, and character set before you in its true light.

LOST ISRAEL.

THE groundwork which gave rise to this question is gathered from an article in the Herald of November 3d, entitled "Lost Israel Found Reviewed." To commence with and to make this statement that I may be understood, I will state that I am not a believer in the theory that the ten lost tribes of Israel have been found in the British Isles, or that they as referred to in the Scriptures quoted will ever be found until the due time of the Lord, and then only in the way which he has determined and foreshadowed in the Scriptures. I do not believe, however, that every man or family of those ten tribes went to and were lost to mankind in the north country no more than I believe that the two families brought by the power of God to this land, who wrote the stick of Joseph, comprised all the members of the house of Joseph.

If such be the fact the first questions that arise are, Who are they and where are they? The answer is not found in the idea that the Jews or Hebrews through their curse were scattered upon all the face of the earth, because the ten lost tribes of Israel were never known to the world as Jews or Hebrews. These terms never apply only to the people of Jerusalem and their borders, the kingdom of Judah. The remainder were known as the kingdom of Israel. If after the house of Israel went into the Assyrian captivity, Ephraim, their ruling family was, according to the prophets, to become separated, lose their identity and become mixed among the nations; and as the whole of Israel are oftentimes called Ephraim in Scripture, it is reasonable to suppose that some families of the other tribes would wander off with them, also losing their identity, especially when we find that (after truth shall spring out of the earth) the stick of Joseph will be found in the hands of Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his followers. Where are they? Who are they? How did they come into possession of Joseph's stick? If these questions can be answered by historical research with the aid of a higher intelligence it would tend to prove that there is a middle channel between the extremes of one who swallows the whole of "Lost Israel Found" and one who quotes, "A Scot still, I crave no higher name" and who does not believe that wisdom, knowledge or intelligence comes through lineage, and that God is not the God of a tribe or nation, but is God of the whole earth. This may be true so far as the wisdom of the world is concerned, for God has created all men, giving them an intelligent mind with the power of progression; but the wisdom, knowledge and intelligence of the most learned scientists now living—although they do discern some truths, great ones too, as they pass along; still they can not with all their efforts and learning get down to the foundation of any truth either in nature or in God. When certain points are reached by them, they all become the subjects of "theories, conjectures and surmises of unenlightened and uninspired men."

I now take the ground that all true wisdom, knowledge and intelligence, reaching down to the foundation of things of nature and of God revealing the mysteries of His will, always have, does and ever will, come as a gift from God; not promiscuously to Tom, Dick or Harry, no matter of what lineage, tribe or nation he may be.

As this is merely an article devoted mainly to questions, I propound the following: What tribe, family or lineage were they during the patriarchal ages to whom God revealed the mysteries of his will, showing them the wonders of His creations and his intents and purposes in regard to this earth and its inhabitants down through the ages until the final consummation and beyond into eternity; of what tribe or lineage was he to whom, when the fulness of that time had come, God revealed his purposes to destroy the world by water, and also commanded to prepare the way for that event? Of what lineage was he to whom God said: "I will be a God unto thee and unto thy seed after thee. In blessing I will bless thee and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sands upon the sea-shore. And thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice." And from that time forward through what lineage, tribe or nation have the oracles of God been revealed to man? Through what lineage did Christ the Son of God come to earth? Of what lineage was he to whom the oracles of God were revealed in our day? If the answers to the above should prove that in all the dealings of God with man by which he has come into possession of all true wisdom, knowledge and intelligence, He has made use of but one line of descent from the earliest ages to the present generation, will it not also prove beyond a doubt that there is, after all, something in lineage? It is stated that wisdom, knowledge and intelligence are gifts from God; that He is not a God of a tribe or nation, but that He is God of the whole earth; is no respecter of persons, and so blesses Gentile and Jew. That is the sense in which I view that particular paragraph as the intent of the writer.

That the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof we verily believe; and that in the fulness of time He will subdue it and all things thereon to His own will. It is also acknowledged that God made of one blood all nations of men to dwell upon the face of all the earth and hath before appointed the bounds of their habitations. This, so far as their bodies are concerned, we verily believe; but what of their spirits? Are they all equal? If, in the sense in which we are examining this point—God is no respecter of persons—why is it that there is such a diversity of conditions among mankind from the highest grades of what we are pleased to term civilization down to the lowest grades of barbarism? I will ask no more questions upon this line, lest I should run into "theories, conjectures and surmises," believing that the intent of this article will be best served by quoting a little.

It is said with truth, that wisdom, knowledge and intelligence are gifts from God to those who diligently seek to do His will. He is no respecter of persons and so blesses Gentile and Jew as they obey. Mark well the provisos, for upon them hinges in their true sense the blessings mentioned. Where then do we land? Can we become heirs to the promises of these blessings in their true sense without a connection by lineage, birth or adoption into some particular family or tribe, if you please? And must not those who diligently seek to do God's will and obey, whether or not they be of that lineage or birth, submit to and obey the law of adoption to secure them the right of recognition in that family or tribe, for it is said they are not all of that family who are of that family? What tribe or family is salvation of? Into what tribe or family is it absolutely necessary that we should be adopted and become one of that we may receive eternal life? Where is the promise of salvation made to any Gentile independent of another race or tribe? If then, we must become connected with, and acknowledged of God as a part of some family that he has named, that we may be heirs of the blessings named and of eternal life in His Kingdom, what family, tribe or nation is it? If, after examination, it shall become apparent that we must form connection with some line of ancestry that we may obtain the blessings of that lineage, should we not crave some higher name than Scot, English, Welsh, Irish, German or American, and become one in that family required? And may we not rest assured that, "Man to man the whole world o'er will never be brothers," until the time shall come when all shall be found under the banner of the great King of that royal family that God requires our allegiance to? What family, tribe or nation is it?

I do not expect these questions to be answered through the Herald, but trust that all will seek the answer for themselves, which if answered correctly and in accord with the history of God's dealings with man, will establish this truth; that all questions reached after by uninspired men with regard to God or his works and intents runs them to one or other extreme, they forever overlooking the middle channel of truth. It moving along with a steady and clear course is too monotonous for them, they not being satisfied with anything—no matter whence the source—unless it coincides with their own preconceived notions of what they consider to be truth according to their own learned theories. They are “ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth.”

Praying that all who have, and all who may submit themselves to the law of adoption may, during this probation, ever crave to be found worthy of a full reception into the family of God's choice and be found entitled to that new name which awaits us, if faithful, is the heart's desire of your brother.

SERMON BY A. O. SMOOT.

[THE following characteristic sermon was delivered in Provo, Utah, at a conference of the Brighamite church, December 31, 1888, and gives an inside view of their affairs, their complications, prospects and workings. Elder Smoot is one of the old leaders of the Brighamite church and “speaks by the card.”—ED.]

“PRESIDENT SMOOT deemed it his duty, in the capacity he occupied, to talk to the people concerning several things that were on his mind. In the remarks made during conference but very little had been said about the various organizations in the church ‘for the work of the ministry, the perfecting of the Saints, the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come to a unity of the faith.’ Reference had been made to the work to be performed by the home missionaries who were sustained this morning by the conference, to carry the bread of life to the people, and kindle anew within them the flame of the Spirit as when they first heard the gospel. What a glorious day that was! How we then enjoyed the words of salvation as they flowed from the mouths of God's servants. We then loved to hear them speak,—a stranger we would not follow. In our reflections upon the driftings of the people into the scenes of Babylon we, as the Presidency of this Stake, have pondered upon what methods we should adopt to strengthen the people, and encourage them back into the path of eternal truth. We finally agreed upon having laborers in the vineyard. We wrote to President Woodruff and asked his views in the matter. He approved of our method, and as a result we sustained several brethren this morning to attend to this matter. Sunday missionaries will not accomplish the work to be done. People who need nourishment do not get a chance to hear the general home missionaries, so we have selected these six brethren to travel and preach from house to house, as the missionaries do in other countries. These men are, I believe, men of example, men who pay their tithes, men who pay their offerings, keep the words of wisdom, observe the Sabbath, and keep, in fact, the commandments of God. If we find out they are not the kind of men we expect they are, we will change them, and try somebody else. We want the Saints to receive them into their homes, and feed them and encourage them in the good work they are set apart to perform.

I also want to say to the people that Zion is struggling for a living in your midst. She needs sustaining in all her institutions and organizations. Our co-operative stores are suffering, while Jews, Gentiles, strangers and aliens are flourishing in our midst. Many of these characters fatten on our patronage, and use the means we give them to injure the cause of Zion. What a departure this is. But what use is it for me to speak of it from the stand, it only helps to make the Saints rush more to patronize them—at least it seems like it. Woe be unto the Latter Day Saints when they take of the things of the Lord and give them to the enemies of Zion. While our financial institutions are suffering, our enemies are rejoicing and saying we are weakening as a people. We have not enough interest in the things of God to poll a good vote for our delegate to Congress. We did not have energy enough at our last election to go to the polls and vote for our friend. At our municipal election, our vote was a disgrace to us, and the result was we gave our city away. We gave the city government to a set of men who opened the floodgates of intoxication to our youth and who said, when accused of it, the youth must be tried in all things. Such men as these bear the priesthood and yet endorse the Tribune doctrine that these things are adjuncts of civilization, and should exist. Shame on such men! What is the consequence? The consequence is our sons and our daughters are losing confidence in the things of Israel, and are running after the gilded toys of Babylon. But just as sure as we repent not, God will rebuke this people, and will call us to account. We have Relief Societies, Improvement Associations, and Sunday Schools in our midst, and in some instances they are poorly attended, Our ladies have so much to do that they can not meet together to enjoy the society of their sisters. But I am happy to say that it is not so much so with the children. They are more pure. They have not advanced so much as to smoke cigarettes, chew tobacco, drink whisky, visit bad houses, and do other things which to some extent our youths are guilty of.

“I want to say to those who preside over these various organizations: Wake up the youth of Zion, and raise the warning voice, teaching the sons and daughters of Zion the principles of eternal truth and exhort them to attend to the sacred obligations the Lord has placed upon them. This is the warning I feel it my duty to give to the heads of all these organizations. Wake up, and discharge the duties the Lord requires you to perform. When you fulfill these obligations you will get your reward in heaven, as well as upon the earth. There are other very important things that should be talked upon. Among us there are too many Sabbath breakers. They do not rest on Sunday nor do they give our animals rest. We have too many friends to see, too many resorts in the canyons to go to, and in consequence we neglect our meetings. In our exercises in parties and dances we are not consistent with our professions. We want too much round dancing. I don't want any one to ask my daughters to engage in round dances. I conjure you to leave these things alone. If you don't, darkness will settle upon you. The subject of theatres I will not touch upon. It is nearly time to adjourn our conference. You can now go home and criticise my remarks as much as you like. But I don't intend to cry peace and safety when there is danger ahead.”

IS MARRIAGE NECESSARY?

MYTH, parable, and instinct all point to one cardinal truth i. e., the supreme necessity of making soul as well as body, together with the blessings which—to borrow church phraseology—“do accompany and flow from” a right choice of husband or wife, and the woes attendant upon misalliance. It would be a waste of words to adduce proofs of the existence of this natural law. It is coeval with the race, and will last while time endures. In the assertion of its might, the law of love and love's union has proved stronger than policy, and when a perverted piety has withstood it, mightier than a superstition which is mistaken for grace.

Thus stands the Eternal Truth. It may be tolerable, but it is never good for man to be alone. The highest form of human happiness, and that which tends most surely to the symmetrical development of character and disposition, is to be found in a right marriage. Thus far all is plain sailing, and our talk euphemistic, truthful, and platitudinal.

But—

“I wish I could meet with one ideal married couple, such as we read of in fiction and in biography!” sighed a young matron in my ear but yesterday. “So many, even among those who made love matches, seem but moderately happy, so many others but half contented, and some are miserable. Where is the blunder?”

Unquestionably and fundamentally, in expecting too much of human nature and of circumstance. Imagination, heated and colored by love, makes of the wedded state an impossible Eden, such as was guarded from sinful man by the flaming, whirling sword.

“After to-morrow,” exclaimed an ardent youth on the eve of marriage, “I shall have no past, and expect no future. I shall live in one blissful, eternal Now!”

That man was doomed to disappointment with the inevitableness of the downward plunge of the rocket-stick. If people will stake life's happiness upon the staying power of pyrotechnics, they have only themselves to blame when the blaze goes out in sulphurous smoke.

MARRIAGE IS NOT TRANSFORMATION.

John will be as cross when he is hungry, as g'um when distraught with business anxieties, as uncomfortable when his collar chafes his neck—in a word, as human and as fallible a John, wedded, as single. He is a good son and brother, yet betrothed Mary has heard him speak impatiently to his mother and tartly to his sister. He will, upon what he reckons as sufficient provocation, be both curt and petulant with his wife when once the new-ehy has worn off. Were this not true he would be an angel, and angels do not wear tweed business-suits and Derby hats, or have dyspepsia and smoke more than is wholesome for nerves and pocket. Bills are never presented to cherubim at most ingeniously inconvenient times, and seraphim have no natural but thin-skinned conceit that will not brook wifely criticism.

True, the lover never lost his temper or spoke ungently to the affianced maiden, but he was on his promotion in those days. What would you have? It is one thing to risk one's prospects and quite another to take safe liberties with one's possession.

An angel might not be quite content with Mary's occasional lapses into untidiness and fretfulness; with her tears and exactions, her streaky cakes and curdled mayonnaise. Husbands are men, and wives remain women through the exorcism of the ceremony and the enchantment of the honeymoon. There is no need that these truisms should form the burden of the cynic's song, or the fact they embody be the motif of the lampooner's composition.

Mother—home—heaven—are a triad of the sweet words in the English language. Yet the last is the only one that has never deceived, and will never disappoint the trusting heart. The gentlest, least selfish of mothers has moods and whims, which are, with difficulty, tolerated by dutiful children.

EVERY HOME HAS ITS CLOUDS

And thunder-showers, and each individual heart its hidden bitterness. There are as many "ideal marriages" as ideal associations between parents and between brothers and sisters.

When one takes into consideration the strength of blood ties in these last named relations, and of habits of toleration continued from infancy to maturity in the household, as contrasted with one, by comparison, slight acquaintance which has been formed and prosecuted under flattering conditions between the young couple indissolubly united, the miracle is that they ever get on or even "rub on" so comfortably together. Courtship has been defined as "a period of varying length, pleasantly spent by two people in deceiving one another." Let us consider for one instant their differences in breeding, education, and habits, the abrupt change from the drawing-room-courtship aforesaid to the working day intimacy of bread-winner and bread-maker, and marvel that love, hope, faith and joy do not go down quick into the pit of disenchantment within a fortnight after the day which was to begin the "eternal Now."

The apostle of matrimony may well tighten his hold upon the everlasting verity pronounced by the Creator in the earliest marriage ceremony.

Heaven forbid that one written or spoken word of mine should go to confirm the vulgar prejudice against spinsterhood! Sweet and holy souls there are in every community—almost in every home—living for, and in others that highest form of mortal existence, the blessedness that transcends happiness. The household

IS HARDLY PERFECT

Which has not in it and of it an old maid who is everybody's aunt or cousin. She may be said slightingly to have been sent into the world "to fill up a chink," but it is much to have her always at hand with trowel and mortar.

Borrowing the theory of our benevolent spiritualistic mystic, we congratulate in anticipation the predestined spouse who will draw her into his arms in the world that sets this right.

Nevertheless, when all this has been frankly said, our lovely spinster is defrauded in this life, whether she knows it or not. There are chambers in the woman's heart that remain unfilled, if she never have husband or children of her own. By a reverent travesty of the sacred text, we may read: "He that giveth away his life shall have it." The man who puts his hopes and chances of earthly happiness into another's hands, and accounts the gift of himself as nothing for the great love he bears her, dignifies his nature as much as he honors her by the act, and deepens his capacity for high and generous deeds. Love is an ennobling influence, so potent that it elevates the commonplace into the heroic. The thought, devotion, and planning bestowed by husband and father upon those dearer than personal comfort and gain, when concentrated upon the bachelor's individual self, make him hard and selfish. He loses his eye for perspective and proportion. Wise women call him "set in his ways." It might be better said that

HIS WAYS ARE SO SET

In and upon him that they can not be extracted. His personal advantage is paramount among all objects of contemplation. If not sour, he is apt to be sad. Often he is both, inhaling and inspiring cynicism as he does the breath of life.

The old maid can knead her personality into the daily bread of the household, and, in many cases, become the gentle leaven that makes light and palatable the whole lump. The confirmed bachelor can not be mixed in anywhere. He may have "apartments"—luxurious and æsthetic beyond what his income, shared with wife and baby, would warrant him in keeping up. "Society" may claim his evenings, while he can preserve a show of youth, and his club dinners be all his epicurean soul desires. The best appointments of his habitation, be they expensive or simple, can only convert it into a place in which to stay. He lives nowhere. It was never intended by the beneficent Father of us all—He who knew what was in man—that anybody with heart, soul, and mind, should dwell forever upon the circumference of home. In the deliberate forfeiture of his birthright to be the center and founder of a household, he narrows and belittles himself. He becomes a wanderer in the wide spaces of creation, an asteroid shivered from the parent planet, gathering nothing by accretion or fusion—a spark of humanity, whose place and name are alike unimportant in taking stock of the forces of society and the world.

MARION HARLAND.

ENGLAND'S CHIEF VICE.

Is there, then, any one dominant vice of our nation? To answer this question let us ask:—

1. Is there any vice in the United Kingdom that slays at least 60,000 people, or, as others believe and affirm, 120,000, every year?
2. Or that lays the seed of a whole harvest of diseases of the most fatal kind, and renders all other lighter diseases more acute, and perhaps even fatal in the end?
3. Or that causes at least one-third of all the madness confined in our asylums?
4. Or that prompts, directly or indirectly, seventy-five per cent. of all crime?
5. Or that produces an unseen and secret world of all kinds of moral evil, and of personal degradation which no police-court ever knows and no human eye can ever reach?
6. Or that in the midst of our immense and multiplying wealth, produces not poverty, which is honorable, but pauperism which is a degradation to a civilized people?
7. Or that ruins men of every class and condition of life, from the highest to the lowest, men of every degree of culture and of education, of every honorable profession, public officials, military and naval officers and men, railway and household servants; and what is worse than all, that ruins women of every class, from the most rude to the most refined?
8. Or that, above all other evils, is the most potent cause of destruction to the domestic life of all classes?
9. Or that has already wrecked, and is continually wrecking, the homes of our agricultural and factory workmen?
10. Or that has already been found to paralyze the productiveness of our industries in comparison with other countries, especially the United States?
11. Or, as we are officially informed, renders our commercial seamen less trustworthy on board ship?
12. Or that spreads these accumulating evils throughout the British Empire, and is blighting our fairest colonies.
13. Or that has destroyed, and is destroying the indigenous races wheresoever the British Empire is in contact with them, so that from the hem of its garment there goes out not the virtue of civilization and of Christianity, but of degradation and death?

There is not one point in the above questions which can not be shown by manifold evidence to meet in one, and one only, of our many vices. Of what one vice, then, by which we are affected can all this be truly said? Is it not the language of soberness to say that if such a vice there be, it is not one vice only, but the root of all vices? Mr. Gladstone has said, in words which have become a proverb, that the intemperance of the United Kingdom is the source of more evils than war, pestilence and famine; and to this it must be added that the intemperance that reigns in our nation does not visit us periodically like war, but is year by year in permanent activity; that its havoc is not sporadic but universal; that it be not intermittent but continuous and incessant in its action. It is no rhetoric, therefore, nor exaggeration, nor fanaticism, to affirm that intemperance in intoxicating drink is a vice that stands head and shoulders above all the vices by which we are afflicted; and that comparing the United Kingdom, not only with the wine-growing countries of the south, which are traditionally sober, but with the nations of the north, such as Germany and Scandinavia, which are historically hard drinkers, we are pre-eminent in this scandal and shame; and that intemperance in intoxicating drink may, in sad and sober truth, be called our national vice.

But these evils might, perhaps, have been brought by legislative and moral authority within some control were it not for two causes which have lifted it to its fatal preeminence. The first cause is the enormous capital of one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty millions [pounds] which is annually employed in the supply and sale and distribution of intoxicating drink; and the other, the complicity of Government in raising more than thirty millions of revenue from the same trade.

JAFFA TO JERUSALEM.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS OF TRAVEL IN PALESTINE.

WHEN a railway is built from Jaffa to Jerusalem the journey will be made with greater ease, certainly, than at present, but will lack much of the interest that now attends it. Some time ago the writer, in company with some friends, traveled from Jaffa to Jerusalem and the Jordan. Preliminary arrangements were made at Alexandria, where a contract was entered into with an experienced dragoman, who agreed, for a fixed sum per day each, to furnish transportation, supply guides, pay all back-sheesh and hotel bills—in fact, take entire charge of us during our stay in Palestine. He left Alexandria some days before us, and when we stepped from our boat at the landing in Jaffa was there to meet us; the energetic way in which he drove back the beggars, rescued our baggage from the clutch of the importunate Arabs, and cleared a way through the narrow, crowded street, inspired a confidence which did not diminish in the least during all the days he had us in charge. At the hotel in Jaffa saddle horses were provided for such of the party as desired them, and for the others a large, comfortable, covered wagon, drawn by three horses. It was about one o'clock on a day in April that we left the city, headed by our dragoman on horseback, gorgeous in his dress, wearing on his head the gay colored silk keffiyeh of the Bedouin shiek, and carrying at his side an immense Turkish sword.

The outskirts of Jaffa are exceedingly attractive. On either side are fine residences and beautiful gardens, while groves of orange and pomegranate, palm, lemon, and fig cover all the region. Many of the trees are in blossom as we pass, and the air is delicious with perfume. Emerging into the plain we come out into an open, treeless country that extends for miles. Here and there cattle are feeding, as in the time when the herds of King David were pastured in this same vale of Sharon; husbandmen are busy in the fields, some of them plowing with camels harnessed to rude plows, such as were used hundreds of years ago; everywhere wild flowers are growing in rich profusion and wonderful variety. This road must have presented a busy appearance in the time of Solomon, when thousands of men and camels were engaged in transporting over it to Jerusalem the cedar wood that Hiram, king of Tyre, sent in floats to Jaffa. About an hour out a road branches off to the left leading to a cluster of white buildings in a grove of orange and palms. In that town it was the paralytic lived who kept his bed seven years, to whom, one day, the Apostle Peter said: "Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole; arise and make thy bed."

The town of Lydda, where Peter was staying when the two men came from Jaffa, a distance of ten or twelve miles, to tell him that Dorcas was dead. The first stop is at Ramleh. As we alight we are approached by a company of beggars whose loathsome condition and horrible appearance cause us to turn away our faces as we toss them some coin. They are lepers, just such repulsive looking creatures as Jesus often looked upon, and to whom he not unfrequently spoke that word of power which filled their souls with joy and their limbs with strength. Beyond Ramleh the road is exceedingly rough, getting worse and worse as the hill country of Judea is approached. We begin to understand now why it takes so long to go from Jaffa to Jerusalem, a distance of less than forty miles, and why our dragoman advised camping by the way. As night draws on the thought of the camp is rather pleasant, and we begin to wonder what kind of a bed the dragoman will give us and what sort of a dinner he will provide. It is dark when the camp is reached. We find it pitched near a spring, just to the right of the road. Approaching it, we are surprised and pleased to see the whole place cheerfully lighted with hanging lanterns. There are fine large circular tents, three of them arranged as sleeping rooms, one as a dining room, another as a kitchen. In each sleeping tent are two camp beds—steads comfortably furnished, a dressing table on which are basins and pitchers, and candles burning in silver plated candlesticks; an Oriental rug covers the ground and camp chairs stand invitingly about. Each tent is covered on the inner side with a lining of dark blue, on which figures are wrought in Oriental designs in white and yellow and red. The dinner, when announced, is a new surprise. A table brilliantly lighted, covered with the whitest of cloths and furnished with a service that would do credit to any hotel, stands ready to welcome us. The dinner is served hot and in courses. There is soup, meats of various kinds, vegetables, fruit, nuts and coffee, and a merry meal it is. At six in the morning we are called to a breakfast of hot rolls, broiled chicken, eggs, ham and coffee. On coming out of the tent when breakfast is over, we are surprised to see that three of the tents have already disappeared, and by the time we are started on our way every vestige of the camp is gone. It will be many a day before we forget the time when we camped so delightfully in the Bab-al-Wady or "Gate of the Valley."

The road now is steep and rough and we are often obliged to walk. Occasionally we meet travelers mounted on camels, sometimes whole families with their household effects moving from one habitation to another, and it is curious to notice how invariably the women cover their faces whenever they come near a foreigner. From the few glimpses we get, however, we are not much inclined to find fault with the custom. But what is this place to which we are coming on the right? It is Kerjah-jerim, and on the hill, where are the houses, rested for forty years the "Ark of the Covenant." It was after it was brought from Bethshemesh, whose inhabitants sent messengers to Kerjah-jerim, saying: "The Philistines have brought again the ark of the Lord; come ye down and fetch it up to you." Kerjah-jerim was one of the cities whose inhabitants were spared by Joshua because of the peace which they had beguiled him into making when their messengers came to him with moldy bread and travel-stained garments, pretending that they had come from a far country. The houses are built of stone, but have a very dilapidated look. Among them is a deserted Latin church, the lower portion of which is used as a stable. The building is interesting nevertheless for the beauty of its architecture and the venerable appearance of its crumbling walls. Just here, where we stand now, David once stood with thirty thousand of his chosen men of Israel, and in these hills was heard the music of harps, psalteries, timbrels, cymbals and cornets on that day when, with impressive ceremonies, the ark of the Lord was brought out from the house of Abinadab. Carefully it is carried down yonder hill, reverently it is placed in that new conveyance, built, no doubt, for the purpose. This vehicle, or cart as it is called in the Bible, is in charge of Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab. Amid strains of music the procession moves, but suddenly occurs that awe-inspiring death of Uzzah, that death which carried fear to the heart of David and caused him to leave the ark in the house of Obed Edom, the Gittite. The house of Obed Edom stood, it is supposed, on the small round hill to which we are now coming on the left. Here three months later another imposing ceremony took place. Oxen and fatlings were killed and along this very road, probably, moved that stately procession in which King David figured when with sound of music and loud-swelling hymns of praise the ark of the Lord was carried up to Jerusalem.

Mountains now are all around us, and as we toil slowly up, climbing higher and higher, we realize the force of the expression, "Going up to Jerusalem." An hour or two later we look down into a beautiful valley, one to which a tradition—some-what doubtful it must be confessed—lends considerable interest. If that tradition be true, then on this hill, down which our path zigzags, once stood the Philistine host; on the mountain opposite was encamped the army of Saul. The hills form a natural amphitheater, and the distance between is not so great but that the voice of Goliath might have been distinctly heard, as day after day he strode to the front and defied the armies of the living God. Before beginning the opposite ascent we cross the almost dry bed of a brook, where we are told, David selected the five smooth stones when he went forth to meet the giant. When one is traveling in the East it is hardly worth while to question traditions too closely. Just as we are wondering if it is not almost time to get the first glimpse of Jerusalem the dragoman directs attention to a high point off to the north. It is Bethel, where Jacob slept with a stone for a pillow, and where he saw in a vision the ladder on which angels of God were ascending and descending. Later on some one exclaims, "See, what building is that on the hill-top yonder?" and the guide answers, "Church of the Ascension, on the Mount of Olives." And now the last mile on our hard but delightful journey is ended, and Jerusalem, with its numberless domes and slender minarets, bursts into view, looking as familiar as if we had at some time seen it before. Leaving the horses outside the walls, we enter the city by the Jaffa gate. —New York Times.

THE GROWTH OF JERUSALEM.

The Neuesten Nachrichten aus den Morgenland, a German Newspaper published in Palestine, states that the City of Jerusalem is growing in size and population at a remarkable rate. Its growth is all the more surprising because neither its situation nor its trade is favorable to a rapid increase; it lies among a not very fertile group of mountains; it has next to no commerce, and it has no manufactures. Nevertheless, new buildings are rising daily; churches, gardens and institutes of various kinds are filling up the formerly desolate neighborhood to the distance of half-an-hour's walk beyond the old limits of the city. The Jews are to the front as builders. Their houses spring out of the ground like mushrooms, uniform, ugly, one-storied, plentifully supplied with windows, but with no manner of adornment. The Rothchilds have completed a new hospital. Close beside it there is a new Abyssinian Church. The Russians are also great builders. They have erected a new church, consulate, lodging-houses for pilgrims of the Orthodox national churches, and a hospital. Near to the Russian group stands the "German House," for German Roman Catholics, from whose top the German and the Papal flag float side by side. The Russians have also built a high tower upon the Mount of Olives, from whose summit the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea can both be seen. The Greeks and Armenians are also busy builders, but they provide for the bodily rather than the religious demands of the pilgrims. The former build cafes and bazars and the latter set up shops.

MOTHER SHIPTON'S PROPHECY EXPOSED.

THE extreme difficulty of framing a prophecy which shall prove accurate, may be seen in that familiar but crude rhyme known as "Mother Shipton's Prophecy." Some years ago it appeared as a pretended relic of a remote day, and claimed to have predicted the invention of steam as a motive power, diving suits, balloons, and a threefold revolution in France, the rise of D'Israeli the Jew, a figure in English politics, the erection of a crystal palace, etc. After its first appearance it was almost forgotten. Years later it reappeared, with a few very slight changes in the rhyme, such as to be scarcely noticed, and yet so including recent events as to make this "prophecy" seem more startling. At times in arguing with sceptics I was met by the statement that here was an old ignorant woman who lived four hundred years ago, and who had written an "un-inspired prophecy which was of undoubted antiquity, and however rude in shape, containing several remarkable predictions." So for years I have been trying to unearth and expose what seemed to me a huge imposture, and having succeeded, here record the result. My first clue to the forgery was the discovery that at least three separate and different versions had been put before the people. The changes or variations were slight and sly, adroitly accommodating the pretended prophecy to the new developments of current history. At last the whole thing has been traced to Charles S. Hindly, who acknowledges himself the author of this prophetic hoax, which was written in 1862 instead of 1448, and palmed off on a credulous public. It is one of the startling proofs of human perversity that the very people who will try to cast suspicion on prophecies two thousand years old, will, without straining, swallow a forgery that was just published twenty years ago, and not even look into its claims to antiquity.—Dr. Arthur T. Pierson.

WARNED OF GOD IN DREAMS.

Mr. G. W. Clarke, of the China Island Mission, writing from Ta-li-fu, says: "God warned me twice in a dream some time before the birth of our son that I should have to carry my wife's corpse down stairs. I fought against this, as against other dreams, but now that the fact has come to pass, I see that I was warned of God. Two or three days before her death, my wife knew that she was going home. Another remarkable thing about her departure is that one of our late schoolboys had a dream in which he saw an angel leading my wife to heaven. The little fellow came the next day to see if my wife was ill. My dear wife fell asleep in Jesus at 5:5 o'clock p. m. on October 7, just as the sun was setting on the mountain tops. Her testimony for Christ was most joyful and triumphant. In the afternoon two days before her departure, she knew that she was going home, so we had the Lord's Supper together for the last time on earth. We reconsecrated our dear boy to God, and with my tears I christened him. My dear wife's soul was joyful in God, she so often repeated 'I am washed in the Blood of the Lamb,' 'Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.' She said, 'Oh, read to me about the New Jerusalem.' When I read, 'There shall be no thirst there,' she said, 'I shall soon be at the river of the water of life, and I will drink.'"—Christian Herald.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

GALIEN, Mich., Nov. 28th.

Sr. M. Walker.—While we appreciate, beyond our ability to express all our dear church publications, no one of them is more welcome to the home of our little family circle than that neatly adorned, intelligent, encouraging little visitor, Autumn Leaves. I know of no monthly magazine that, in my estimation, equals it; nor am I aware of any other church that publishes a paper occupying a similar position, or relation. Your enterprise has our most hearty approval, and our most earnest prayers for its success.

MORAL IMBECILITY.

A youth gives way to temptation—is untruthful, indulges in little falsehoods and deceits; his integrity is lax; he goes into bad company; he drinks; he is impure; the consequence of which is that vague suspicions gather round him; he fails to produce a good impression; people do not feel quite sure about him; a loose texture of character becomes manifest; he can not get on; men fight shy of him; the eligible situation is given to someone else; he becomes a waster—a byword; he hangs on to his circle of life precariously—miserably. "Was ever anybody so unfortunate as I am?" "There came out this calf." So parents bring up their children—neglect instruction, discipline, training of principle and habit. Their children grow up vagrant, indolent, flabby; without fixed character, without self-control, perhaps vicious. "Was ever anybody so unfortunate in his children?" And yet they have developed precisely according to the preparation. "There came out this calf." So a tradesman neglects his business; is tricky with his customers, and finds them fall away; or is too sanguine, and adventures beyond what his capital warrants, hoping that the rash speculation may turn out well. But the toss turns up tails instead of heads, and he finds himself ruined—the victim of adverse fortune. So an artisan spends all that he earns in wasteful living or habit, perhaps in joviality or drunkenness. He makes no provision for bad times, or sickness, or old age; he puts nothing into the savings bank; he belongs to no provident club.

When depression of trade comes and employment fails, or he is disabled by sickness, he has no resources. Almost at the first pinch he has to appeal for charitable help—to beg for bread—and, to his surprise, finds that people are but little disposed to help him. He thinks himself the hardly-used victim of adverse circumstances and selfish feeling. "There came out this calf." All this is simply the working out of wholesome, eternal law. For pure misfortune all will feel sympathy, and few will refuse help. But, for the most part, men prepare their own miseries. They do not prepare for success: they do not qualify themselves for the use of opportunity. They trust to chance: "Something will turn up." They are indolent, disorderly, wasteful or vicious. They do not seek qualification; they take no precautions against disaster. They sow wild oats and expect a harvest of wheat. So with a thousand other things in social, moral, or religious life. The moral imbecility of the wondering and complaining at the issue is as great as in Aaron. The calf does not "come out:" it is made; the mould is prepared for it. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." It is the natural, inviolable law of things—thank God. Without its orderly, wholesome, and beneficial working, life would be an inextricable tangle. He who prepares the mould and pours into it the molten metal, will inevitably have the shame, the sin, the retribution of seeing come forth of it the molten calf.—The Rev. Dr. Allon in "The Quiver."

NIGHT-CLOTHING.

Never wear a single article of clothing which has been worn through the day. It may seem hardly necessary to speak thus upon this subject to intelligent people, but some most absurd notions relating to clothing have been spread broadcast in the newspapers, which need to be counteracted. It has been asserted that the clothing should not be changed too often, not more often than once a month, on the ground that it is supposed that the clothing in some mysterious manner accumulates vitality from the body, which is wasted when the clothing is changed. This is a most absurd notion, since the only thing that the clothing accumulates is dirt. On retiring at night, remove every garment which has been worn through the day, and don a sleeping garment of wool, or mixed fabric, according to the season of the year or the climate. In very cold weather the night-dress may be of wool; but, in general, a cotton night-dress is to be preferred. Wool is much the best for day wear, but a change to cotton at night is often very grateful to the skin, which is sometimes overstimulated by continual contact with wool, causing itching, and not infrequently a very annoying eruption. Wearing a cotton garment at night gives the skin a rest. Persons who are much troubled with cold feet and legs at night may be able to correct this unpleasant and unhealthful condition by wearing warm bed-socks or leggings. This method of keeping warm is much to be preferred to the common one of taking to bed a hot brick or a hot-water bag, or even, as in one case known to the writer, a small stove. If necessary the cotton garment may be worn as the lining of a woolen one added for warmth.—Good Health.
