WHAT OCULISTS SAY ABOUT DEFECTIVE EYES.

"ABOUT forty per cent of the people need to wear glasses nowadays," said a New York optician to a Mail and Express reporter. "But not all these people wear them. Four people in ten have some trouble with their eyes. It may be nearsightedness, it may be simply weakness, it may be an inequality between the eyes; but whatever it is, there is a way to help it with glasses.

"A great many people have trouble with their eyes and do not know what it is; they attribute it to overwork of the eye sometimes, and sometimes lay it to headache or neuralgia, while it is merely the protest of a defective eye, that has been forced by will power to work beyond its strength, or to keep up with the other eye.

"But people are learning now to take care of their eyes, and resort to artificial aid more promptly than previous generations did. A proof of it is the number of young people and little children who are wearing glasses. This does not at all indicate that the race is growing degenerate, but simply that it is learning to take care of itself, and these children in glasses will grow up to have better vision, that will also last them longer for it.

"It often happens, too, that children's eyes are cured of imperfections by glasses worn at an early age. The lens enables the eye to work normally, and a fault in formation sometimes is entirely remedied by it, and the child in later years is able to dispense with glasses altogether."

According to the statement of a Chicago optician, as many as nine out of every ten persons have something wrong with their eyes. Black eyes and brown eyes and blue eyes are all afflicted to about the same degree, unless it be that blue eyes are troubled with nearsightedness a little more frequently than those of darker hue.

The troubles commonest with children and young people are myopia or nearsightedness and hyperopia or farsightedness, and the latter predominates. But many are farsighted who are not conscious of it, and hence the trouble is seemingly less common than nearsightedness, which is made apparent by the person so afflicted endeavoring to overcome the defect of vision by holding the object close to the eye.

HOW DEFECTS MAY ARISE.

The Chicago Journal says that nearsightedness and farsightedness result from the improper focusing of the object by the lens of the eye on the optic nerve. The focal point falls before or back of the nerve center, and thus by an additional lens the defect of the lens of the eye is corrected. Sometimes but one of the eyes is defective, and again they are impaired in different degrees, and in either case a pair of spectacles in which the lenses are of the same power will not remove, but may increase the trouble.

By far the commonest defect of the eye is what is known as astigmatism, which, properly speaking, is the irregular curvature of the cornea or "watch crystal" portion of the eye. This defect may exist independently or be combined with other troubles.

Astigmatism may be of a vertical or horizontal form—that is, the eye may be perfectly rounded from top to bottom, but irregularly formed from side to side. To such an eye a perpendicular line would appear uniformly clear and distinct, while a horizontal line would look otherwise. By pasting black strips of paper representing the spokes of a wheel on a white surface and viewing them from varying distances, with either eye and both eyes at a time, anyone can learn something of the condition of his or her eyes. As a matter of course, oculists all have various charts for determining defects of the eyes.

NATURAL IMPAIRMENT OF SIGHT.

The natural impairment of vision by age usually begins at forty or forty-five. Any unusual trouble with the eyes during youth may cause the decay of sight to set in earlier, but ordinarily the impairment is uniformly regular, and the age of the person is the chief guide in the selection of proper spectacles.

The marvelous stories of "second sight" are misleading. What is known as "second sight" is the result of a change in the form of the eye by which the defect which caused nearsightedness or farsightedness is corrected and the sight thereby improved. But the second sight is not the regaining of a lost power, but means the coming into the fuller possession of a function that in earlier years existed in an impaired condition. This is why persons who have been accustomed to wearing spectacles sometimes lay them aside in advanced years or old age.

It is probable that the sands of the seashore will be numbered and the leaves of the trees correctly counted about as soon as will be ascertained the number of cases of headache caused by nerve irritation arising from defects of vision. The stomach has had to endure a world of bitter medicine to remove troubles for which the eyes were wholly to blame. But it is easier to swallow any concoction that may be handy than it is to make an exhaustive study of the optic nerves and their remarkable influence on the health of the whole system. It is easier and cheaper to snuff camphor or smelling salts than it is to be examined for a pair of spectacles.

CURING "CROSS EYES."

Strabismus or "cross eyes" are now safely and almost painlessly corrected. The desired result may be obtained by the wearing of proper spectacles in early youth, but if the evil is not then corrected, an operation, later on, will be necessary.

The removal of a "cataract" from the eye is one of the most delicate operations performed by the oculist. A cataract is formed by the lens of the eye becoming opaque so as to appear grayish or otherwise, when it shuts out the light from the optic nerve. The oculist of to-day cuts into the ball of the eye and removes the darkened lens, and the optician supplies the defect by artificial lenses that make good the sight.

The demand for glass eyes is increasing as the character and quality of the eyes improve. Unsightly eyeballs are now removed in part, leaving enough of the muscles to rotate the glass shell that is placed over them. Where the work is properly done the possessor of the glass eye can move it about with all the naturalness of a real optic, and in many cases it is very difficult to tell the manufactured article from the genuine.

All the wild stories about substituting rabbits' eyes for human eyes, or the statements to the effect that oculists can take eyes from their sockets, wipe them on a coarse towel and restore them unimpaired to the happy patient, are all moonshine, and any one who is called upon to listen to any such tales is perfectly justified if, under such circumstances, he should wink the other eye.—Scientific American.

SOLVED THE PROBLEM.

Miss Strongmind.—"Pardon me, but if I am not mistaken, you are one of the poor, underpaid working girls whom our Emancipation Society tried to benefit—or at least you were two years ago?"

Fair stranger.—"That is true."

"Then our society has evidently not been without influence, for you look very prosperous now."

"I have everything I want and never was so happy in my life."

"Thank heaven! You must have solved the Women Problem."

"I have."

"Glorious! Tell me how you managed."

"I married a nice young man."—New York Weekly.

ESSENTIALS IN A HEALTHFUL HOME.

THE site for a house should receive careful attention of the tenant, purchaser, or of one proposing to build. A good site may mean life and happiness, and a bad one disease, suffering, and death.

First.—It should be dry. Avoid, as you would death, a damp location. In a town or city carefully ascertain whether or not it is on "made ground." Avoid it. Avoid ground underlaid with clay, for it will always be damp.

Second.—Elevated on a hillside or gentle knoll, never in a hollow. The hillside is warmer and drier than the hollow.

Third.—Not close to a swamp or slow river, milldam or land which is overflowed a portion of the year, nor in such a place that the prevailing winds will bring to the house pestilence from a milldam, etc.

Fourth.—In as good a neighborhood as possible, away from factories, saloons, etc., and near schools and churches.

Fifth.—In a village or town build on as large a lot as possible, thus securing air and sunlight. Build back from the street, thus avoiding the dust of the dry season and the curious gaze of every passer. Secure a yard in which trees and plants will furnish both exercise and health.

Sixth.—In the country build back from the highway, giving an abundance of room for trees and shrubbery about the house. Do not select a place where your family will be isolated from all social intercourse, so necessary to the health of mind and body.

For the aspect, let the house be so placed that it will receive the most sunlight and fresh air, especially from the summer winds. Avoid, even if offered rent free, a damp, dark house, with no chance of the free air of heaven to sweep through it. If the house is only one room deep, it does well to face it to the south or southwest; but if it is two rooms deep, those on the north side never receive any sunlight, and are apt to be damp. For a double house it is best to face it to the east. Then the morning sun will warm up the front and the afternoon sun the rear of the house, and thus all the rooms will be bathed in light and warmth. The living rooms should always be warmed by the morning sun. This hint is worth a great deal as a health matter. For when the sun cannot enter, the doctor must enter. If the cold winds from the north and west are severe in the winter, they may be broken by a cluster of evergreen trees planted on those sides. In country places a good aspect should be secured without reference to facing the house square with the street.—Pacific Health Journal.

HE'D HAD NO SHOW.

Joe Beall 'ud set upon a keg
Down to the groc'ry store, an' throw
One leg right over t'other leg

An' swear he'd never had no show.

"O, no," said Joe,

"Hain't hed no show."

Then shift his quid to t'other jaw,
An' chaw, an' chaw, an' chaw, an' chaw.

He said he got no start in life,
Didn't get no money from his dad,
The washin' took in by his wife Earned all the funds he ever had,

"O, no," said Joe,

"Hain't hed no show."

An' then he'd look up at the clock
An' talk, an' talk, an' talk, an' talk.

"I've waited twenty year—let's see—
Yes, twenty-four, an' never struck,
Although I've sot roun' patiently,
The fust tarnation streak er luck.

"O, no," said Joe,

"Hain't hed no show."

Then stuck like mucilage to the spot,
An' sot, an' sot, an' sot, an' sot.

"I've come down regerler ever' day
For twenty years to Piper's store:
I've been here in a patient way,
Say, hain't I, Piper?" Piper swore,

"I tell ye, Joe,

Yer hain't no show:

Yer too dern patient"—the hull raft
Just luffed, an' luffed, an' luffed, an' luffed.

VACCINATED LAND.

Impoverished land is now "vaccinated" on the Continent of Europe. It is generally known that land is enriched by planting it occasionally with a leguminous crop like clover or lucerne, the roots of which absorb more nitrogen than they take from the ground. Where the nitrogen came from was the problem. Messrs. Hellriegell and Willfarth have discovered that the absorption is due to minute organisms, a sort of disease in the roots, which, when the supply of nitrogen in the soil begins to fail, appear as an excrescence, draw nitrogen from the air, and so enrich the soil again. Experiments have been made in France and Germany to hasten the growth of the disease by sprinkling the fields with soil in which tuberculous crops have been grown or with water in which they have been steeped. In Prussia a field was sown with lupins; one part of it was then treated in the ordinary way, the other inoculated from an old lupin crop; the yield in the latter part was five and a half times as great as in the other.

JOSEPH SMITH - - EDITOR.
R. S. SALYARDS - ASSISTANT EDITOR.
JOSEPH LUFF CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, JAN. 2, 1895.

A SAD CASE.

THE following from the Nauvoo Rustler, for December 18, 1894, is a moral landmark that may call to mind an allusion of a Nauvoo journal to the solicitude of Joseph Smith for the morals of Nauvoo, to which solicitude the said journal objected, as Nauvoo could take care of its inebriates and the saloons that helped to make them. We have known Nauvoo when it had fifteen thousand inhabitants, under "Mormon" rule, and not a saloon, or other place where liquor was sold, to the time it had less than fifteen hundred inhabitants and twelve saloons, and while solicitous for the welfare of the old town, it was only the solicitude that any man should feel and be exercised by for the common good of his fellow men everywhere; and especially those places where he has dwelt, or now makes his home.

SHOULD BE DONE IN NAUVOO.

The saloonkeepers of Canton are furnished a list of confirmed drunkards by the authorities to whom they are not allowed to sell liquors. It is raising a great "howl" from that class of drinking men who are not willing to be classed as "confirmed drunkards." The Register says there are men in that city who have not drawn a sober breath in five years who would feel insulted as characterized thusly. The order is a good one and the wives and mothers and sisters who are the principal sufferers, and who are responsible for its promulgation, can feel now that an effort will be made to some extent at last to right the wrongs that have been inflicted upon them. It is hoped that those who have been put down as habitual or confirmed drunkards will be brought to their senses and be made to realize that the hands that are being raised against them in this matter are the hands of their friends and not the hands of those who would persecute and oppress them."

The same should be done in Nauvoo. There are many of the above class in our city, and it were better that such fellows were not sold any intoxicants, and in the long run the saloonkeepers would be better off.

It would seem that Nauvoo with its municipal license system is not exempt from the usual consequences of habitual dram drinking—the crop of confirmed drunkards.

The respectability of the city of Canton, alarmed at last, now essays to control the appetites of those whose nickels and dimes have paid the saloonkeepers' licenses; thence built the sidewalks, helped to fill the city prison, paid the police, furnished the town trustees cases of want and misery to look after, paid the town officers' salaries, and in far too many instances spoiled the intellects of fine citizens and pauperized their families; and at the same time to cut off the saloonkeepers' income. Can such a thing be done? Query?

And Nauvoo, also needs such restraining influences; a public notice to be served on the keepers of the saloons, public drinking places, that John Jones, James James, George George, and William Williams, and others, honorable men of the town are confirmed drunkards, and must not be permitted to buy and drink liquors of the men whom the town has received money from and licensed to sell. This is to say, that after the saloonkeeper has succeeded by the help of the town authorities in making men to be drunkards, then the appetite must not be gratified—excellent municipal logic. But will it be effectual?

Once there was a good woman who lived in such a town as Nauvoo. Her husband was one of the brightest minded men that ever come to the place. He was a lawyer, born and raised in the State of Maine, and from there to the great West to build a home and make a fortune. He married a western girl for a wife, a sober, virtuous, industrious woman. He grew apace with the town, and became one of the convivial heroes of the place, a good practitioner with a good practice. Any office in the town he wanted he could get, a "hail fellow; well met" for everyone. The time came when, if he was wanted, week day or Sunday, he was to be found at a saloon with roystering boon companions. He went once to the State Legislature, so well was he liked. But fortune never came, or if it did, it was absorbed. The appetite for strong drink fostered, fastened upon him; and by and by, he was a confirmed drunkard. His wife deprived of his just support, tried to restrain him; gave notice to those whose drink bills had impoverished her family, and finally sued the drunkard makers—but, strange to relate, boon companions, everyday keepers of his company, respectable, and non-respectable citizens, went into the court, and with consciences seared by the drink habit and its cursed sophistry, swore that they never saw him drink and pay for drink, or drunken, and so the poor wife went out of court, a victim to the rum habit and its advocates and sustainers; and finally followed a worn out, broken down, shattered, gray-haired, and palsied man to a drunkard's grave. And still in the same town there are men who have in the same way become the slaves of the tipping shop—and the public and the saloons must be warned that their manhood is gone and they must no longer be trusted to maintain their standing in society as good citizens. And Nauvoo too has them. An object lesson for the Saints, surely.

APPEALS FOR AID.

PUBLIC appeals through the HERALD, by individuals, branches, or societies, in which a request for specific aid for individual necessities; or for help to build church buildings for local use, are seldom of any practicable value to those who make them. Personal appeals in letters setting forth trouble and disaster as the cause for making such appeals, may and do excite pity, and sometimes a desire to help with some; but the persons making such appeals are unknown to the readers, with very few exceptions; hence, whether the aid asked for would be worthily bestowed or not, is not known, and so only a very few care to respond. And, so frequent calls, and so many, blunt the sense of pity, as it is impracticable for the average reader of the HERALD to respond to all, or to a majority of the calls, no matter how imperative the necessity of the one who seeks it may be.

Requests for help to build local churches published in the HERALD from time to time, from different places, fall without effect, as a rule, for the same reason.

The Board of Publication instructed the editor to decline to publish appeals of the kind, and this may account for the exception that has from time to time appeared in the HERALD.

The appeal from Pleasant Grove, Utah, for aid to help build the chapel there, was made an exception to the rule because of the peculiar conditions of the case. The HERALD readers will therefore understand why the exception is made. There are many who will feel the necessity for the building at Pleasant Grove, because of their having been in Utah and deprived of a suitable place in which to hold public worship, and be interested there for that reason.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

QUES. If a member of the church steals and the offense is known to the world and Saints, is it the duty of the branch officers to labor with the accused and demand that he come before the church and make confession? or are they justified in letting the matter alone, giving as the reason that it is the duty of the party from whom the goods were taken to prefer charges?

Ans.—The Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, requires that such an offender shall be dealt with, and if he will not repent, he shall be cast out. The duty of the branch officers is to see that such an offender be labored with and reclaimed if he can be.

Paragraph 22 of the same section requires that such an offender shall be delivered up to the law of the land if he will not make proper acknowledgement and restitution by church labor.

Q.—Are the branch officers justified in giving the sacrament to a sister that is married to, and living with, a man to whom baptism has been refused on the ground that he had another wife living from whom he had not been divorced?

A.—No. Such an offender is liable to prosecution before the courts of the land. But the officers should be sure of their ground in every alleged case of the kind, and know that the evidence of guilt is good.

Q.—If the facts in such a case are that the man has another wife living from whom he has no divorce, is the woman worthy of membership in the church in his name?

A.—No. In case the first wife has married before the man and last wife were married, the case is altered and she should be allowed to remain; or in case the whole affair occurred while the parties were out of the church, then the church cannot insist on a separation.

Q.—If it comes to the knowledge of the branch officers that a brother has two wives living from whom he has no divorce, are they justified in reporting him as in good standing?

A.—No.

Q.—What steps should be taken in such case?

A.—Proper inquiry should be made to ascertain the facts in the case; and if the parties are really living in disregard of the law of the land, and will not repent and do what is right and proper, the officers of the branch should report the facts to the proper officers of the law of the land; first using every justifiable effort under the law of the church to have the wrongdoing rectified.

We dislike to answer questions that have, or may have personal application, and it must be understood that these answers are not the decisions of a judge, nor the basis of an accusation or charge against a supposed offender.

Q.—Is it right for an elder to leave an appointment or bring a series of meetings to an abrupt close in order that he may run to some other part of the district, where he may have heard there was to be some baptizing, in order to get to do the baptizing, when there are plenty of good local men to attend to it, or even run over into an adjoining district for said purpose, where some regular conference appointee was holding a series of meetings, or perhaps a conference of that district?

A.—Such a course might not be criminal, or directly contrary to law, but would subject the one doing it to the charge of being unduly anxious to secure prominence in doing work that could be done by others at less trouble and expense. No elder should leave his appointments for any merely selfish end, or for any trivial reason.

Q.—Would it be right for an elder as he is traveling about and gets acquainted and finds some nearly ready to unite with the church to privately request them to wait until he comes again or to send for him when they get ready, there being good local men handy, or to request Saints at different places to privately solicit baptisms, marriages, funeral sermons etc., for one?

A.—The same reply made to the preceding question might be made to this. Such course would inevitably give rise to the thought that such an elder was too solicitous for prominence in such affairs, and would hurt his influence with many. The Saints as a rule do not like the exhibition of selfishness. However, we know of no specific clause of the law forbidding such.

Q.—In a branch where the presiding elder is the only officer in the branch, is it not his privilege and duty to visit the branch from time to time as wisdom may direct?—D. C. 17: 10.

A.—Decidedly it is both the privilege and duty of such presiding elder to visit the members, and do for them all he can to keep them in the paths of duty and virtue and faithful to church relationship.

THEOLOGICAL SCHOOLS NOT EFFECTIVE.

GRANTED that churches have the right to build colleges and educate men for the ministry, there are some good grounds for the belief that Rev. Dr. McConnell, of Philadelphia, was right when he said to the Episcopal Congress lately held in Boston, as appears in the Literary Digest for December 8, 1894. It is reported that he said that

He had three objections to urge against the present system of education for the ministry in the Protestant Episcopal Church, any one of which, if it could be maintained, would be nothing less than fatal. These were, that it does not secure the right men, that it does not train them effectively, and that it is altogether too costly.

To which may be added 1 Corinth-26: 29.

BRO. H. H. ROBINSON, of Independence, Missouri, laboring in New York and Pennsylvania, wrote from East Pharsalia December 16, 1894. He had been laboring at East Pharsalia for a time; and was to meet Rev. F. J. Jones, of the M. E. Church, in debate to begin December 26 present year. The propositions are as follows:—

Resolved that (a) the Book of Mormon is of divine origin. (b) The Doctrine and Covenants is of divine origin. (c) The constitution and authority of the Church of Latter Day Saints are of divine origin and entitled to the confidence and respect of all Christian people as the only true Church of Jesus Christ on earth.

Bro. Robinson to affirm.

Resolved that the M. E. Church is a branch of the true Church of Jesus Christ.
(b) That its tenets and ordinances are valid.
(c) That its consistent members are candidates for eternal life.

Rev. Jones to affirm.

FROM the North Attleborough, Massachusetts, Evening Chronicle, for December 14, we learn that Brn. G. H. Hilliard and F. M. Sheehy were at Plainville, and preached in the chapel the evening of the 13th. Of his sermon for that evening the Chronicle says:—

Elder Hilliard's sermon last night was from Hebrews 2: 6, "What is man that thou art mindful of him and the Son of man that thou visitest him?" He ably showed the powers of man and causes for a visitation from God to man.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

MR. L. L. BOOTH, Vernon, Fremont county, Idaho, the 10th ult.:—

I wish some of the elders could come amongst us. Most of the people are Brighamites, but not strenuously so; some few, but not many; some Methodists, Baptists, etc.; a few nonsectarian. I believe there is a fair opening at least; a good speaker would do much good. Rooms can be had for the asking I am sure, not only here but at the county seat as well. President Ricks and some of his tools would meet whoever attempted to speak, but rest assured no harm would come to the speaker, as there are too many opposed to the other faction of Latter Day Saints. Should an elder come amongst us properly endowed, I wish to receive baptism so soon as is practicable. The river up here is always open; never freezes over. Send some one prepared to stay, if possible.

Bro. William Gibson writes from San Bernardino, California, December 20:—

The work is moving on in Southern California. There have been more added to the church since last conference than for some years before. Sixteen to the San Bernardino branch. I have baptized ten; two more are ready when I can get around to it. I am holding meeting in San Bernardino county where I can open new places; and in the hospital once a month. All is going well in the San Bernardino branch. Peace prevails and good meetings are being held

Bro. J. E. F. Smith writes from Higginsville, Missouri:—

The Saints have very generously responded to my appeal for literature, for which the Lord will bless them. They have sent several hundred papers, so that the supply at present is greater than the demand. In this place the old papers are as good as the new, and they have done a work already that cannot be undone, only by the unfaithfulness of the Saints who live here in the future. The people here like the Herald and Ensign very much.

Of the late discussion held at Eagle Grove, Iowa, Bro. J. F. McDowell lately wrote:—

The discussion here with Rev. A. J. Eychaner, of the "Church of God," closes this evening after a nine evenings session upon the questions of setting up of the kingdom and the sleep of the dead. The Lord has blessed, the presence of his Spirit being recognized by the Saints, and points gained receiving the approval of the audience quite emphatically. Attorney Pillsbury, Mayor of the city, served as chairman. He is one of Iowa's leading lawyers. Congratulations have been extended by himself and others upon deportment of disputants. Will send items later.

Sr. Christina Rasmussen, Weston, Iowa, December 20:—

Bro. Anderson has been laboring in our branch and I trust we will heed his many good instructions. Some outsiders attended our meetings and I believe much good has been accomplished. As I find many of the Saints make the excuse that they cannot get time to read the Herald, I will tell you of a little instruction that was given me in a dream when I was careless. I saw the Herald held up by an invisible hand, and my sewing at the bottom, and it began to move upward on the page till it covered the whole page. Then I heard a voice saying to me, "You must not let your sewing take up all your time; you must take time to read your Herald. From that time I have done so and I have felt blessed in doing it. I should like to have Bro. Blair or some one who can write an article on the early rise of the Reorganization, Bro. Joseph's call, etc. Many of the Saints are inquiring about it and there are few who are in possession of the desired information.

Bro. H. Sparling, Burnham, Missouri, the 25th:—

The work is on the move in this part; letters every day say, "Why don't you come and preach for us?" I would like to see every place have a preacher but there are eleven counties and only three preachers. Bro. B. A. Atwell and Son Harry came to our assistance. We thank them for help. Elder Wedlock of the local ministry is doing all he can; and so is Elder C. M. Bootman. Though aged, his zeal is strong. He baptized two on the 16th. I leave for Vera Cruz, John's Mills, and other points.

Bro. J. W. Gilbert, Papeete, Tahiti, October 31:—

Our division conference is over, which we think was a successful one. Bro. Devore's health being poorly, he desired that I should come to Papeete to meet the Evanelia and the new missionaries, he and Sr. Devore remaining in the Tuomotus. I arrived in Papeete a few days ago, but the Evanelia had not arrived, nor has it yet arrived; but the mail ship came in Sunday with the news that she would leave America about the 8th or 9th of October, so I do not look for it until about November 10 or 12. Yet vessels often come down in fifteen to twenty days, and small ones at that. I mean small vessels. The work is moving along nicely here, and, so far as I can tell, the natives are coming up higher, and are learning the necessity of moral rectitude as well as theory and doctrine. They seem to be greatly pleased to have us talk to them in their own tongue. I have not got the tongue yet, but I preach to them anyway; and when I am blessed to a good degree, I preach with nearly as much ease as in my own tongue. Since last writing to the Herald I have baptized six. I am considerably encouraged now to what I was some time ago. For a long time I was not satisfied with my own work and progress, and I began to think that if I could not do better than that, I had better give up the field. So I made a different move. I began to humble myself down in fasting and prayer to get more help from on high, and have kept it up every week since; and from that time my work has been marked with success. And it is the only period in which I have been any ways near satisfied with the results of my labors. I can tell you I have been tried here. Converging circumstances have brought to bear a heavy pressure against me in this mission, and my experience has proven the blessing which was given upon my head to be true and faithful. The warning to "watch the pathway of your feet," and to "beware of seducing spirits from whatsoever source they may come," have proven to be pertinent. Also, "be faithful, and you shall have every qualification necessary to make your work a success," has proven true, or at least is in process of being proven true. God is able to give me yet one blessing more that I desire, and then I would be perfectly content to stay and labor in this mission. Since writing the above I have baptized eight more; three last Sunday, five to-day. This is the 11th of November and no Evanelia yet. My eyes are nearly sore looking for it.

Bro. H. Hart, Broughton, Kansas, the 24th:—

I preached in the Goshen branch on the 23d. Good house full of listeners. Think we are making fair progress. Times very hard.

J. M. Stubbart, Octavia, Nebraska, the 17th:—

Prospects not as bright here as I could wish. If a more energetic elder could labor here, I would be glad to see him. Business and family cares have hindered me. Expect to resume operations after the holidays.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. C. A. PARKIN, writing from San Francisco, December 17. The Saints at Santa Rosa had two new additions by baptism and a spiritual feast at confirmation, followed by like experiences rich in manifestations of God's power and love, and in admonition and promise. Bro. Parkin and others rejoice to know their labors have been accepted. He exhorts to faithful performance of duty.

Mr. F. A. Pattee of the Land of Sunshine, published at Los Angeles, Southern California, has again put us under obligations by sending us that monthly for June to December, inclusive. It is a descriptive journal devoted to the advancement of Southern California, profusely illustrated with the finest engravings, of scenery, places, buildings, and fruits and flowers that are found there. It is only one dollar per year and every number is a gem.

Sr. Margarette Hicks, Deep Creek, Washington, writes of manifestations that have given her comfort and confirmed her faith. Bro. H. L. Holt was doing good work in that region of country.

Bro. Joseph Ward was at Rogersville, Missouri, on Christmas day, holding a discussion with one Elder Cowan. Bro. J. P. Benson reports the result as favorable so far. The people were being reached by the truth.

Bro. William Dowker, Bayport, Michigan, an elder, has been visiting the branch membership in the absence of a priest and has been blessed and seen others blessed because of such efforts to feed the flock. He has also been trying to introduce the HERALD and other church publications in the families of the Saints. Bro. J. A. Grant was helping by preaching. The work was onward. Bro. D. expected to resume field labor after the holidays.

Letters from Bro. William H. Kelley, Temple, Ohio, state that the home of Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths is quarantined on account of two of his children having the scarlet fever. This will explain Bro. Griffiths' not writing to his correspondents. The fever has been quite bad at Kirtland and vicinity this fall and winter.

Bro. S. W. L. Tomlinson, writing from Exeter, Ontario, gives evidences of having success in his efforts. He baptized two and organized a Sunday school at Riverview, and moving on to another point baptized another and organized another school. He enjoyed the hospitality of Saints and the kindnesses of friends.

Bro. G. M. L. Whitman reports continued advancement being made at Omaha. Ten have been added by baptism; others are near. Whatever in the past has been a hindrance the Saints are seeking to correct.

Bro. T. E. Thompson, Beeler, Kansas, writes of labor done in that field by Bro. J. M. Brown, already reported. Bro. G. E. Deuel had also held a series of meetings in the branch. Traveling ministers are asked to do likewise. He requests some experienced minister to write a tract or article on "the judgment."

Bro. F. C. Smith, of the Michigan force, baptized three at Empire City, December 21, and seven on the 23d. He was feeling well, and would be at East Jordan, with the Saints at that place.

Bro. T. C. Kelley wrote us from near Chattanooga, Tennessee, and sent us a copy of the daily Times of that city, for December 3, into which he succeeded in getting a very fair notice of the position, faith, and belief of the church. It is quite an able article.

Six have been baptized into the church at Leon, county seat of Decatur county, Iowa, the results of labors done there of late by Brn. J. R. Lambert and others.

Bro. M. H. Bond was at Jeannette, Pennsylvania, December 21, preaching to small audiences, with some greatly interested, however. He reports the branch at Pittsburg as booming. His health is not just what seems necessary to his comfort, but spiritually he has been unusually blessed of late.

THAT CURATIVE COLD BATH.

People who have nervous prostration, headaches, the blues, or dyspepsia, who take cold easily, who are subject to irritability, who lead sedentary lives, who need their wits about them all the time, and who are not making the progress they desire, should get addicted to the cold bath habit. It is not only cleansing, but curative, stimulating, encouraging, and invigorating. It is brain-brightening, nerve soothing, blood-quickening, and the best treatment ever taken for the complexion, digestion, and disposition.

Col. Ingersoll once called upon the Rev. Phillips Brooks, and the great preacher received him at once, although he had declined to see many distinguished preachers. "Why have you shown me this marked distinction?" inquired the Colonel. "The reason is simple," replied Dr. Brooks; "If those preachers die I'll be sure to meet them again in heaven; whereas, had you gone away and died I should never have met you again. I thought I had better take no chances."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Gladness true that shall abide
When the mirth of Christmastide
Has passed away—
Quiet pleasures, sweet content, Countless blessings Heaven sent,"
Is our wish for you always.

ON THE THRESHOLD.

A FRIEND who has greatly helped us in our work upon the church publications during the past year writes us recently: "I love this work, and during the year I have felt that God has greatly blessed me in many ways, and I trust that the coming year will have yet other blessings in store for me. Of course I know that every work has its disappointments, and I have felt that so few seemed to care to help, and how strange it is! But it is still more surprising that some should regard the work as of small moment. This discouragement I have felt at times very deeply, but afterthought brings to me the feeling, cheering indeed, that if God be pleased with our efforts—if he approves, it matters little how they may appear unto others. It must be they do not yet comprehend the work to be done that a people can be prepared by understanding the truths pertaining to both this life and the life to come."

How fully we appreciate and understand this feeling of discouragement, and to-day as we stand upon the threshold of a new year, looking over the past with many an unspoken regret for our failures, and earnest prayers for strength to overcome in the future, there is borne in upon us the thought that loving encouragement is what the world most needs. God's word is full of it and he is repeating it to us in a thousand different ways. Every morning his mercies are new. Every evening he places around us the encompassing arms of his protecting love. The returning verdure of spring invites us to remember the life which lies beyond and into which shall never enter the frosts and snows of this.

Let us not forget, however, that man is human and craves human sympathy. And while toward God his aspirations may go out until he can truly say with the Psalmist, "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God," yet the Lord himself has ordained that love should be given out just as freely to our fellow man as to him, hence the demand which exists in the heart for it.

A word of encouragement may seem a small matter, but it is not. Remember it never is small when the heart is behind it; but if the power to add to the word of encouragement the act which would help to lift the burden weighing down our brother, our sister, or any fellow traveler to eternity, is withheld when it is in our power to do that act, then indeed the words are vain and are only an empty sound.

There are many things to which our eyes need to be opened as we stand upon the threshold of the new year. But among them all perhaps none are more needful than this that we speak the kind word and do the acts of kindness which it is in our power to do. To us—to many—they may seem small indeed, but never mind the seeming. The power to multiply belongs to our God and we can trust him.

No word of this is spoken on our own behalf, for we have always felt that the encouragement received by us was far in excess of our deserts, and if hours of despondency come they are temptations to be resisted, and if ever indulged in are a sin; but all around our pathways are the weary, disheartened, struggling ones of earth, staggering under burdens too heavy to be borne. Let us put our shoulder to the wheel and help these and forget not our missionaries toiling in foreign lands, neither those laboring in our midst, but as we have opportunity let us do good unto all men.

HAVE YOU AN HOUR TO GIVE?

At the opening of the new year the Home Column asks this question of its readers: If you have will you give it to the church? Just one hour if you have no more, but as many more as your heart prompts you to lay upon the altar.

You have never yet put forth an effort in behalf of our magazine, Autumn Leaves? If you answer, "Yes, I have," then we say to you, "Don't be weary, in well-doing." Above all, don't let this be the time when your efforts slacken or you fail altogether to exert them. It is a time of trial to the poor and to many who heretofore have been in comparatively comfortable circumstances. During the two past years many who have from the first sustained the magazine have been compelled to discontinue it though they were very sorry to do so. With another year the pressure of the present hard times may lighten, and in the meantime there are those in the church who could afford to subscribe for one or more extra copies to be sent to friends. They may need reminding of this, however. Will you do it? Will you see how many one-dollar bills you can gather up from those who already take the Herald to send in payment of one year's subscription to the Leaves, and also from those who can afford it for themselves?

If you answer that you never have put forth an effort to help extend its circulation, then we ask, will you not? Remember that it is now a church work; that it takes a place in church literature not occupied by any other church publication, and that it has a claim upon you for every bit of encouragement you are able to give, not only by supporting it financially, but also sustaining it by literary contributions. Will you do this? God has give to each man and woman as it has pleased him, and to you who have the ability to help in sustaining the magazine with contributions from your pen, we put the question, Will you?

Don't read and then rise up to forget this request, we beg of you; but consider it, make it a subject of prayer, that in this direction you may do your whole duty.

Not long since the question was asked of an active worker in the church, "Is Autumn Leaves worthy of being sustained and published?"

"Yes, most decidedly!" was the prompt answer. "It would be a positive loss to deprive the church of the splendid matter that it offers from month to month."

Every subscriber to the HERALD can now obtain the magazine for $1 a year by paying for both in advance. Is there a subscriber to the HERALD who can afford to miss this opportunity?

Dear Sisters:—Having become very much interested in your talks with regard to rearing children, may I give my opinion on a few points?

Example, dear mothers, is the thing. How quickly the child, especially the little girl, will notice her mamma's position at the table. If it is rather dignified and mannerly, with careful handling of dishes and graceful dishing of food, how this grows on that child, how soon you will see her imitating mamma. If on the other hand it is careless and lounging we notice the same in the child. If mamma powders her face it won't be long until we find the little tot in the flour chest or any other substance that will answer the same purpose. If we bake bread, prepare washing for Monday, clean rooms, and black stoves on Sunday, and stay at home instead of going to church, when our little girl becomes a woman she will do the same. There will be no system about her work. It will not do. Being connected with school work for twelve years besides training schools and kindergarten work, I found the only way was to rise early in the morning, have certain things to do on certain days, get my work systematized. I find I can do the same in my home; in fact, housework is much easier systematized than school work, and how my children watch every move I make; and as I heard one say yesterday:—

"Is this the day for mamma to tell us about the great musician who had so many warts on his face and he was proud of them?"

"No," said the other, "that will be next Tuesday, but to-day we will hear about the man who made such a rash promise and was so sorry about it."

Now, for instance, in telling small children such stories as Jephtha and his rash vow, I do not give the name of the man, at first, and things they cannot understand. These things come later on when the story is repeated, and these stories are repeated very often and discussed from first to last, but each time something new is added. I begin by asking if they ever thought how wrong it is to make a promise before having time to think about it. That we should think before we speak, and to make a promise and not keep it is very bad, etc. Then the story of Jephtha is told in its simplest form, being careful to use words in their proper places as regards laws of language.

One thing I think above all others, if there is ever a time when father or mother should have unpleasant words, children should not hear them. Our boy, when he becomes a man, will treat his wife with respect and will be thoughtful and kind because father was. Our girl will be much more careful about hurting her husband's feelings because she never heard mamma bring up unpleasant subjects. Practice what we preach and we get our child's confidence.

To be careful about spending money is another. If mamma spends money needlessly when it would make some poor child so comfortable, so will our child. Keep book accounts, teach children to do the same, and that a receipt must always be given when a standing account is paid, and if our children do go astray while under the parental roof the day will come when they will be careful and honest because the example in childhood they cannot forget. No mother can keep house cheerfully unless she reads her Herald through every time it comes.

MADALENE MARIE.

PERSIA, Iowa.

Dear Sisters:—The Home Column is cheering and a great help to those who have little ones to care for. The instructions are good, but can we all follow the advice given therein? It is easy for those who have only one or two (and such are plenty), but with a large family one is not able to do so much for them or teach them as much as one with only one or two, and those, as Sister Wight says, so far apart that they are hardly any trouble to care for. I often wonder what reward we can expect in the kingdom of God if we do not fill the place appointed to us here on earth. It is but little that we do otherwise. Of course it is a great work to raise a family of little children, but what makes home more happy and pleasant?

Some few years ago I did not see things as I do now. I used to think it was all right to have one or two and no more, and I felt somewhat troubled, and prayed to God about it. One night I had a dream, and it was very plain to me then. I dreamed I was climbing a hill with a baby in my arms, which was hard work. On reaching the top of the hill I came to an office with a window looking towards the east. It was open and a man who I knew to be the Lord was at the window, and each one paused at the window as she passed. Each one with babies passed to the west, and those without any came down the hill which I had gone up. When I reached the window I too stopped and the Lord said to me, "You shall have many children, and they shall rise up to be a blessing to you."

These words cheered me, and I too passed on through a turnstile out onto a broad, level plain where I could see all was clear and level before me, and so I awoke. It has never troubled me since as regards my duty. As I saw in my dream, those who had none were going down the hill where I had gone up, and where you do not find children you do not find happiness and comfort. There is always something missing there to make up true happiness of home. All mothers should read that helpful book, Tokology.

Dear sisters, we have many trials to bear if we would live and do right, but God is ever ready and willing to bless and help us to bear our trials. I have had many, for which I feel thankful, for it has taught me many a good lesson, and I am glad he has counted me worthy to bear these trials. I have gone to him in secret prayer in the hour of trial and my heart was made glad.

This is a glorious work and I know it is of God. I have had many testimonies of it. When I first joined this church I had no evidence of its truthfulness, only I knew it was as Christ taught it when he was on earth. I never read one of the church books or papers until after I joined the church. Then I felt enlightened, and so I read, and the more I read the more I loved the work, and I have never felt tired of it yet. I still have a desire to run to the end of the race and do my duty while I live. I have found and still find the greatest comfort in secret prayer to God. My prayers have been answered many times; and in marvelous ways more than I ever expected, so I know he is a hearer and answerer of prayer. I hope you will remember me in your prayers that I may be worthy of eternal life in the kingdom of our Father.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sister Mary Gard requests your faith and prayers that she may be restored to health, and live to take care of her two little ones if it be God's will.

LONGING.

BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

I would that I might lay aside
This weary care, this strife of thought,
And on thine own good time abide,
O, thou who hast my ransom brought.

I would that I might feel once more
My spirit full, and light, and free,
With strong limbs run thine ark before
And bring an olive branch to thee.

I would that I might make again
My life a glory as of old,
And weave the strands unseen of men,
That bloom from umber into gold.

I would that I might tear away
The snares that cunning men have set,
And help the fallen, day by day,
Break through the meshes of the net.

I would that I might come and sing
My heart's sweet music to thine own;
O thou whom I have crownèd King
The longing of my life hast known.

I would that I might keep unblamed
My soul, that in the stilly night,
When thou shalt look at me, unshamed
I may not tremble in thy sight.

That when at last I stand alone,
My years' worn garments cast away,
Thy hand shall robe me, and thine own
Sweet voice shall bid me come and stay.

BEELER, Kan., Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I have been laboring in Ness and Lane counties the last six weeks, and have found good help in Brn. Thompson, Sawyer, and Ebert; all good helpers in the ministry. I held a protracted series forty miles east of Beeler. Bro. Ebert conducted the singing service to good advantage. There was a good interest, and friends were made to the cause. We went to the Stone settlement. No Saints there, but many friendly to the cause. We stopped with Mr. Stone, a prosperous farmer, who was a schoolmate of Bro. G. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric. Mr. and Mrs. Stone said their door would always be open for any of the elders. We had a good audience and the best of order, and unusual liberty. The Lord must have a people there.

Have been holding meetings of late at the Richland schoolhouse, near Brn. Sawyer and Lunn's, but have been storm-bound for nearly a week. Preached twice yesteday; will close meetings here to-night. The Saints are anxious for me to stop and labor in this vicinity all winter, but my family is calling me home. This is a beautiful prairie country, thinly populated, adapted well for stock raising. The people can well boast of never having had a failure since the country has been settled. Buffalo grass is the staple product, the only production adapted to the climate without irrigation, and all those utilizing it with herds of cattle are prospering. Many of the settlers have made a grand mistake in trying to raise wheat, but are now beginning to learn the adaptability of the climate, and ere long these broad prairies, now comparatively vacant, will be spotted with herds of cattle that will add greatly to the prosperity of the country. The few Saints in this locality are good, upright citizens, which speaks well for the cause.

J. M. BROWN.

BOOMER, Iowa, Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—At the request of Sr. Emma Elizabeth Gittins, who is afflicted with a chronic disease, I write to ask for her an earnest interest in the prayers of all Saints, realizing that the fervent, faithful prayer of the righteous availeth much. I administered to her the healing ordinance last evening. Let us remember the divine injunction, "Pray for one another," and remember our sister in connection with all the afflicted in the household of faith.

During the last week I preached in Crescent, and came here to preach on Saturday night; but storm prevented. I preached in the Parrish and Mackland schoolhouses yesterday. Hope some good was accomplished.

The Saints here and in Crescent love the work. Will all the Saints please remember our sister in their prayers.

Yours fraternally,

C. DERRY.

FAIRBANK, Iowa, Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I baptized one more at Powersville, Floyd county; a young lady school-teacher of good report. I organized a branch there, "the Powersville branch," with Bro. Frank Horn president, Sr. Myrtle Harvey clerk. The branch consists of fifteen members, alive in the work, both spiritually and temporally. They always remember that an elder can't ride free on the cars no more than they, and therefore provide for him. So also did the Brush Creek Saints. But when I came to Waterloo on my way here I was met by Bro. James Goodrich, delegate from Grove Hill branch, who took me into a clothing store and in behalf of the branch made me a present of a thirty-dollar fur overcoat. O, how it made my soul swell with gratitude to my heavenly Father and to his Saints for the kindness shown to me! It makes me rejoice to know God blesses me in my ministry and that my labors are appreciated by the Saints. God bless them for their kindness; and may he enable me always to labor and live that I may never forfeit the esteem they have shown.

Yesterday I baptized three more here; the young lady I spoke of in my last, two young men; one a graduate of the Waterloo Commercial College, who, if he proves faithful, will make a noble defender of the gospel of Christ. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather there was a large crowd at the water, and a very large congregation to the confirmation. When we consider that two years ago they were going to tar and feather me in this town, how changed it is now! Yet some are still very prejudiced, so I cannot get any of the churches, but had to use a hall. There are some more here who are very near the kingdom.

May the time soon come when God's will will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. May Zion prosper. I have been told that one of the hireling shepherds warned his flock faithfully last night not to go to hear every new preacher who comes along with new doctrine of revelation and spiritualism to lead the people astray, that those were led astray yesterday by them. You see they don't do like Paul, tell them to "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

J. S. ROTH.

SCANDIA, Kan., Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—After our preaching at Minneapolis, also six miles south of the town, we met for the consideration of the organization of a branch. The branch, of nineteen members, was organized, the Solomon Valley branch, with Elder Henry Resch president, Bro. Frank Resch secretary. Bro. W. Evans was chosen and ordained priest, and Bro. Frank Resch was chosen and ordained a teacher for the branch. Some others will unite with the branch as soon as they can obtain letters. After the organization, the time was profitably made use of in prayer and testimony, the Spirit bearing witness of our acceptance.

On the evening of the 17th I met with the Saints at this place for a similar purpose, and after doing all we could for the time being, we proceeded and organized a branch with fourteen members, Bro. M. Reynolds president, Sr. Lillie Bonner secretary. Several others will unite as soon as they obtain certificates. I will tell the ministry that there are inviting places to preach in this vicinity at several points; but I cannot further occupy now, owing to "Christmas preparations."

J. T. DAVIS.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I am in this old historic town, founded ere the blue law days, when the sanctity of the Sabbath would not permit even the kissing of one's child, or traveling, cooking victuals, the making of beds, sweeping of houses, cutting hair, or shaving. Remembrance of those days has long since lost its power over the minds of the good people of these parts till you would not know but what you were in some other part of the United States, so far as observing the Sabbath is concerned.

I came here on the 14th and found Bro. William Hobson, an energetic, wide-awake worker, doing what he could to let the light of God's truth shine; carefully wielding his influence to bring the work before the people. With him I visited Bro. Buttery, who enlisted some four months ago. He is wielding a good influence in the Sunday school, having a class of boys, teaching them the gospel as best he can. He wife is near, so are others. Bro. Hobson and I spent the 15th scattering tracts through the village, advertising our meetings in the schoolhouse, as the brother had not been able to get an answer from the committee for use of the "Union chapel." I attended their Sunday school yesterday and at the close made a statement which brought a large audience to hear. Some of the people are indignant that I am not permitted to preach in the chapel. The refusal will prove beneficial to the work, I think.

On the 18th I visited Bro. and Sr. Stone, of New Canaan. His health is very poor, and he is losing his mental powers. He asked to be remembered by the Saints in their prayers. To-night I preach in Silver Mines, then return and deliver two more sermons, thence to Brooklyn for Sunday. Bro. Kent was with the Brooklyn Saints last Sabbath. He returns to Philadelphia this week. They think Bro. K. is the one, and I am pleased to hear my brethren praised. May success attend their efforts. We have an extra effort in mind for Brooklyn, which we hope to reach after the first of the year, if all goes well. May truth prevail.

A. H. PARSONS.

FLORA VISTA, N. M., Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Henry C. Smith, that noble and worthy ambassador of God, paid us a short visit, delivering eight astounding discourses to fair and more than attentive audiences, removing a vast amount of prejudice, again establishing an earnest desire in many honest hearts to seek after the truth; in some who had almost banished all hopes of finding it. Many remarked that they had learned many useful things that were beyond their ability to appraise in value. One was baptized, while others are convinced and investigating. The good seed has been well planted, in good ground, and already is sprouting, and it is our intention to strive to keep it well irrigated that its maturity may be hastened with a bountiful yield.

On the 8th Bro. Smith bade all adieu, leaving many of the warmest of friends and no enemies, all regretting to see him go so soon, the writer taking him fifteen miles on his journey, leaving him by the wayside, trusting that kind Providence will provide for his comforts and a safe and pleasant journey to his next field, praying that his efforts may meet with equally as good results elsewhere, and that demand and reward will warrant a speedy return. Bro. R. H. Wight intends a continuation of preaching here.

E. N. BEACH.

LEBECK, Mo., Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—Again the people of El Dorado Springs are treated to the melodious sound of the "fog horn" of Clark Braden. He began lecturing on "infidelity" the evening of the 13th inst. It seems that the correspondence between Braden and Co. and Bro. I. N. White, relative to a debate at El Dorado, had not just suited Mr. Braden, so he runs in and gets the preachers of the various churches of El Dorado to meet and send an address to the Latter Day Saints Church demanding that certain terms be complied with, in connection with the debate.

We were waited upon by a committee bearing the important document, but we kindly informed them that Elder White was conducting the arrangements. What their future conduct may be is yet to be seen. Will write further soon. In bonds,

C. R. DUNCAN.

EAST PHARSALIA, N. Y., Dec. 16.

Editors Herald:—I have assisted Bro. Parsons some in his work, preaching in Bank, Maryland, Hornerstown, New Jersey, and Brooklyn, New York, with good interest. Brn. Parsons and Kent are doing good work, and should be continued in that field. I have visited the Saints in Eastern Pennsylvania, and find the work improving. The Saints are receiving more of the good Spirit, and are making friends for the cause as well as being confirmed in the work themselves. My brother at Meshoppen was shown in a dream that the Book of Mormon was true and that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of the Lord. He has given up the use of tobacco and is rejoicing in the restored gospel. God has planted the work here, and, we think, to stay. Bro. Henry Smith baptized five here last June, some of the best people of the place, and they are alive in the work. Through their efforts I am to meet Rev. F. J. Jones, of the M. E. Church, in debate, the 26th of this month and continue about two weeks if all goes well. Prejudice runs high, but we hope to remove some of it before we are through. I expected to have reached St. Marys, Pennsylvania, before this, but have been detained on account of the debate, as it will last till the first of the new year, and perhaps longer. My permits will have to be renewed so I can't tell what points I will make next. Regards to all Saints and friends.

H. H. ROBINSON.

HIGGINSVILLE, Mo., Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—I came here a year ago to dig coal. I found only one man who had heard of the doctrine, but he did not believe, although friendly to the cause. I soon tried to tell the glad news of the restored gospel; but few would listen, and with little interest. Nevertheless, from that day until this I have been sowing the seed, endeavoring to establish righteousness here, not being afraid to have the reproach of Christ upon me. To my surprise the miners nominated me for justice of the peace. I was not elected, but this proved that the poor here respect me for attending to my Father's business.

Bro. J. H. Wells spent a few days with us last summer and preached several times, doing good work. I feel like continuing in the good cause, and that victory is perching on our banner. Our nearest neighbor says he believes the doctrine. I distribute all the church books and papers I can get my hands on. I also go from house to house, leaving papers and speaking encouraging words; and the people show their friendship by reading, and by listening to every word with interest, asking me to return. We make friends to the cause almost every week. I wish I could spend more time bringing souls to Christ. I have lived in Kansas City, Denver, and other places, but never saw people thirsting for truth as here. The Spirit of truth is working with us. We hope to have an elder here in time. There is not much financial encouragement in a little town where the people make a living from a seventeen-inch vein of coal. But a good many of the people are glad to get bread and butter without meat. I believe they are the poor to whom the gospel was to be preached. Whatever good we do let us give the glory to our Father. If elders or Saints pass this way, please call and see us.

J. E. F. SMITH.

WOODEND, Vic., Nov. 20.

Editors Herald:—After long delay, the deputation was introduced to the Minister of Education by Mr. Downward, member of the Legislative Assembly, on the 14th inst. I am pleased to report that our visit was not in vain. The minister stated that upon examination of our publications he was prepared to say that the prevailing misapprehension concerning our church had been removed from his mind. He said further that if we had entertained any fear that the department intended to interfere with the religious liberty of members of our church who were teachers, he wished at once to remove that apprehension from our minds. Our people would be treated with the same consideration as other churches.

Bro. Leyland was one of their best teachers; had been in the service over twenty years, and his character was above reproach. The restriction, temporarily imposed by his predecessor in office, would be removed. The department did not consider that speaking privately to friends and giving or lending tracts and books was violating the school law, provided it is done out of school hours and with discretion and care. The department would not tolerate active, aggressive proselyting. He did not think Bro. Leyland had committed any real offense.

As usual, the plain facts were not sensational enough for the reporter, and the evening Herald of Melbourne presented it under the caption, "Extremes meet; A Bachelor Minister, and Latter Day Saints." In the report following, the deputation is referred to as "the gentlemen prepared to accommodate two or more wives." The reader was left to infer that we wished the privilege of teaching our tenets in the state schools. A correction was immediately written and sent in by myself, which they honored by publishing and calling attention to the letter in another column, with these words: "It appears that Latter Day Saints are not necessarily polygamous. A letter on the subject in this evening's Herald." That part of the letter explaining our position on religious instruction in state schools was omitted, however. The letter was similar in matter to many others under like circumstances, so will not burden your space with it.

The mischief resultant from the perversion extends to many country papers, who will be more ready to quote the mistake than the correction. One, the Kyneton Guardian, near Woodend, has announced that we have asked permission to teach our tenets in the state schools, but was refused. Have sent in a correction to this which I hope will appear this week.

I learn that a real Mormon elder from Utah has been operating in South Melbourne. Bro. McIntosh was on the "still hunt" for him Sunday, and intended to cause him uneasiness of mind when he found him.

It was gratifying to find evidences of a change of sentiment toward our faith, in and around the Hastings branch, lately. The Band of Hope, composed of old and young, invited me twice to make a short address on temperance. They pressed me into service with a clarinet at a concert, and asked me to pronounce the benediction at a lime-light lecture. The leader, a Church of England "lay-reader," thanked me warmly and said: "I shall not forget you." Nine years ago some of these same people were muttering threats against the Saints, and Bro. Burton in particular. Hastings Saints should be grateful for this change of feeling, and renew their diligence, trusting calmly in Him who is at the helm.

Australians usually look with horror on the "big" wrecks and disasters in America; but several have occurred at home lately. A passenger steamer lately ran ashore on New Zealand coast, and became a total wreck besides losing one hundred and forty lives; yet the captain was "confident of his course" up to the moment of striking on the rocks. About the same time two passenger trains collided at Sydney, causing the death of thirteen, and forty wounded. The record of crime is also "big." Within four months there have been five murders in Melbourne alone. And now, in order to raise funds to complete St. Patrick Cathedral in Melbourne, an immense "fair" is being held. Dancing, racing, and other competitive amusements are on the bill, not to forget a lottery prize of twenty-five hundred dollars at a shilling (twenty-five cents) per chance. That is surely a "big" enough gambling game for a church to indulge in. Can America produce a "bigger"? The fair is under the management of Archbishop Carr.

I shall try to do what little public and fire-side preaching I can in this vicinity within the next month.

Editors Herald:—When I last wrote you I was holding forth at the Lane schoolhouse, four miles west of Agnew, Lancaster county, Nebraska. The interest seemed to increase from the start and we continued the meetings for three weeks, and some are believing our report. We divided one week ago; Bro. Self came over here, and commenced at the Oak Grove schoolhouse, and held four meetings, and then we exchanged; I came here and held three meetings. Had a good hearing; the last two meetings had crowded houses. Several present of the Baptist order, of the H. S. type. Bro. Self will continue at the Lane schoolhouse as long as the interest will justify.

EAST DENNIS, Mass., Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—My last letter was from Stillwater, Rhode Island. From there I went to Cranston and Fiskville, in company with Bro. Blanchard, holding meetings at both places. Saturday, October 27, went to Fall River, to attend district conference. Business meetings were a little spicy, but we got along after a fashion. The prayer meetings were spiritual, and I think the conference resulted in good to all. I remained in Fall River over Tuesday night, to visit the Religio Society, and enjoyed the session. Before going to the Religio a number of the Saints, myself being one of the number, went down to the dock, to see the palatial steamer Priscilla, finished but a short time ago, at a cost of half a million of dollars. She is four hundred and forty feet over all. To attempt to describe the steamer would be folly, as she must be seen to be appreciated. We can only say the half was never told.

Saturday, November 3, found me in the city of Haverhill, where I was entertained by Bro. William Frost. I held several meetings remaining over two Sundays. Bro. Frost is doing what he can, holding meetings every Sunday in a neat little hall; is also superintendent of the Sunday school; being assisted by Mr. George York, a young man much interested in the work. Others of the brethren and sisters are doing what they can. Sunday night I took a peep at the Boston Saints. Found Bro. Sheehy in town; Bro. Gunsolley did the preaching.

Met with the Providence Saints on Wednesday evening, at Cranston on Sunday morning, and in Providence at night. Remained in the vicinity of Providence until November 27, then went to Stillwater and held two meetings at the house of Mr. Hopkins, whose house he says is always open for meetings. Thanksgiving found me trying to do justice to a good dinner at Bro. Fenner's, prepared by Sr. Basset, who is young and bright at eighty-four, and does the work for a family of three. Friday I took a quiet tramp in a snowstorm, and filled an appointment at Fiskville. Sunday preached in Providence. Wednesday, December 5, I was called to preach the funeral sermon of Mr. Joseph Waterman, of Johnston, Rhode Island. Quite a number attended, and I trust good was done. Friday I boarded a train and soon was whirling along toward the great cape of Massachusetts, where turkeys of a peculiar pattern are said to be served occasionally, although I have not been served that way myself; for of all places that I have ever been, east or west, Cape Cod is the place for a hungry man, and if he can't be satisfied here he never will. I arrived at South Dennis and took the historic coach for East Dennis. I was carried quite a ways past my destination, and had the pleasure of walking back, besides paying extra. In the evening I talked to the Saints and friends. Saturday night I preached in Brewster, and Sunday in Dennisport. Returning to East Dennis in the evening, I obtained the hall at North Dennis and preached there Tuesday night. The weather was very stormy and prevented many from coming out, but we felt well and appointed services for Sunday as the hall was engaged other nights in the week. On Wednesday and Thursday preached at Sr. Teresa Sears' to a small but appreciative audience. Friday, at Brewster again, and Saturday at Sr. A. W. Chace's where I have been kindly entertained as well as at Mrs. Teresa and Nettie Sears', the two last mentioned being daughters of Bro. Wellington Bearse, a noble man and a faithful elder who has gone to his reward, or is resting in the paradise of God until the resurrection. On Sunday morning we held a prayer meeting, in which the Holy Spirit was present in a marked degree, preached in North Dennis in afternoon and evening to good audiences; and to-night (Tuesday) I am to break the bread of life there again. We have labored under some difficulties here, but feel thankful it is well as it is. With the missionary spirit still burning,

Yours, as ever,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

MANTI, Utah, Dec. 21.

Editors Herald:—I have labored in this and Sevier counties for a few weeks past, having preached here and at Richfield, Elsinore, Brooklyn, Glenwood, and Redmond. At the latter place the Bishop, H. Rasmussen, told Bro. L. P. Hansen, of this place, that he would furnish me a house and make an appointment for me if I would notify him beforehand of my coming. This I did, and when I arrived there last Wednesday evening found he had been true to his word. I make special mention of this because it is the most liberal act that I so far have met with in this mission. There was a goodly number in attendance, the Bishop himself being present. I asked him to open the meeting by prayer, but he preferred to take no part whatever. I would have stayed and preached oftener, but found the house was engaged.

I had very good attention at Glenwood, where Bishop Bell also treated me respectfully; but there too I could only obtain the house for one night. At the other places the attendance was small; but a few friends to the cause are found now and then, and some whom I trust may receive the truth.

Bro. L. P. Hansen conveyed me with team from here to Salina, and Bro. Clawson from there to Richfield, and on my return Bro. H. Lorensen took me to Redmond and otherwise assisted me in a way to indicate his love for the cause. For all such help to the missionary may the Lord reward.

I cannot report great prospects for the work in this mission. The people seem to be wedded to their idols, and, as a rule, care not to investigate. They think that if after all they have gone through and sacrificed they be mistaken, it is no use to seek further. I am satisfied that if ever any considerable number of these people be converted from their errors it must be by God's interposition in some way to them more effectual than by the preaching of the word. Polygamy is believed in the same as formerly, and practiced too, though perhaps at the present time no new marriages of that kind are contracted. I can see a marked contrast in some respects in the people since I first labored in this part of the country, now almost twelve years ago. At that time, when I first came into this valley, I stirred up, as it were, a hornet's nest. Men were ready to fight for their cause almost everywhere; but their experience together with the late instruction from their Presidency has taught them that to let us severely alone is for their cause the best policy. In another regard time has wrought a remarkable change. The men who were my most bitter opponents have disappeared. One of them, a Mr. Jacob Jacobsen, who was among their ablest young men I have met with, died suddenly while in the temple here in Manti, a few years ago. Another, Peter Lauritzen, who was my most bitter opponent and who insulted me most shamefully, is no more. He was attacked by a vicious bull and gored to death a few years ago. Cyrus H. Wheelock with whom I had a debate at Mount Pleasant has also passed away. He died last fall with a cancer in his throat, being literally starved to death, as he for a long time was in a condition to receive no nourishment whatever: so I was informed. I do not mean to say that these evils came upon these men because of their opposition to me and the cause I represented; for I do not know. I only write of the facts as I find them; and while I do not wish to rejoice in the misfortunes of others, I have cause to feel grateful to God whose preserving care has been over me. One of my then opposers is still here, a man by the name of Aaron Hardy, with whom I had a debate at Moroni. He is still among the living, but he has since then served three terms in the penitentiary for the practice of polygamy. I found him quite a changed being now. At that time, after his miserable failure in debate, he became so that he would not speak respectfully to me, but when I now met him he hailed me as a friend not seen for many years. Truly I cherish no ill will to any of the people here, but some of them seem to think we are their worst enemies. It seems hard to think that it is so, when we are laboring to do them good. But when we think of the Master's reward from those whom he came to save, we have reason to be content and labor on, committing all to the hands of the Lord.

Yours for truth,

H. N. HANSEN.

LEIGHTON, Iowa, Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—Bro Fred A. Smith and I came to this place from Des Moines, December 1, and began a series of meetings on the evening of the 2d in the Christian church, holding fifteen meetings. Bro. Fred had to do the work, as the writer was laid up with a severe cold settling in his eyes. The Lord was with us; Bro. Fred had wonderful liberty. The people seeing the great contrast between his preaching and that of their ministers were seemingly taken by storm, and each night the house was well filled with eager listeners. The speaker gave them the written word without any apologies whatever. The Christian people here have treated us royally, making up the greater part of our audiences, inviting us out to meals, chatting friendly, and even defending us against the attacks of members of other denominations.

The skeptics of the burg have also taken a great interest in our meetings, to the surprise of many who have failed to get them to attend their services. Many are the wars of words they are waging against the other denominations, using our powder. One, a Mr. Barnes, a merchant of the place, known as a rank infidel, attended our meetings regularly, excepting possibly the first night or two, and talks our side freely in his store, and has urged opposers out to hear what we had to say before judging us. He also urged his clerks to attend, one night closing his store, dismissing the crowd, that all might go. We have baptized none; nevertheless we can't help believing that several are convinced, but they haven't the moral courage to break the ice and come out. At the close of the last service the general talk was, "Am sorry you are going to quit;" "Come again;" "God bless you;" "Hope we will meet again," etc.

With the exception of two sermons preached here by Bro. Fred last August, this is all the preaching ever done at this point by our people. We have six noble Saints living three miles south of town, who are living their religion at home and abroad, and their influence is felt wherever they are known. Would to God this was the case wherever Saints are living!

Sr. S. E. Laughlin (a sister of Elder J. F. McDowell) with her two sons, have given us a splendid home during our stay in these parts. May God bless them in store and in spirit, for they surely deserve it. We will probably spend Christmas here, and meantime hold a number of meetings at Evans and Oskaloosa, five and ten miles east; then probably work our way westward.

VIOLONA, Ark., Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—This leaves me well and trying to get the everlasting gospel before the people that never heard it. I left Texas the 2d of this month for Faulkner county, Arkansas, arriving at Otto the 5th, and commenced meetings the 7th at Ingleside for the Saints, where we have a branch of about thirty-six members. I organized them the 28th of September. Others seem to be near the kingdom.

I came to Violona this morning to open up to-night, and will continue to labor in these parts mostly for the Saints at Ingleside until Christmas. I expect to start back to Texas the 26th in order to meet a Missionary Baptist in debate the 9th of January, at Lydia, Red River county, Texas. The debate involves the questions of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, the Reorganized Church, and the Baptist Church.

I do not know how long it will last. The time will be agreed on hereafter. My opponent, C. H. Worby, is an attorney and debated with A. J. Cato years ago and with Heman C. Smith at Manchester in 1882. I presume Brn. Cato and Smith will remember him. He is the first man I ever went to school to. I heard him tell one of his brother Baptist preachers that Jeff—that is, I—was a good boy, but had gotten off on the wrong track. I told him in reply to prove it to me, then would be time enough for assertions. This will be my eleventh debate, and I never heard an argument against this marvelous work that would stand the test. I am thankful for a theology that will bear investigation. Pray for me.

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio, Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—On November 30, Bro. R. B. Jones, president of the Middletown branch, conveyed me to Seven Mile, where Bro. A. L. Yingling resides, whom I had promised a series of meetings while homeward bound. We held eighteen services with variable weather and conditions. Like that G. H. H. arm of the Bishopric, we set sail regardless of weather. Never in fourteen years did I see such variations in an audience, without at some time what might be called a full house. We had men only, then ladies only, or nearly so, in quite a fair number. About all would be supplanted by a new set, and so on.

William H. Kelley had preached once there some years ago, and then L. W. Powell had spoken several times during last year. Who knows but they got the people in such a fix?

Bro. Yingling having paid during this year, if I remember aright, about three hundred dollars in tithing, I was of the opinion that his family's interest should have demand at least upon the preacher for what Bro. Roth would call "the minimum dose" (he says twenty to forty sermons). Contrary, too, to those who pay in prosperity, Bro. Yingling had done so when adversity had dealt seriously with him; but 'twas duty, and that is the line he decides on. So mid hope and fear, and yet in faith, we toiled on, chiefly in the interest of Ives and Edna, two excellent daughters of Bro. and Sr. Yingling; they two having been alone in the faith at Seven Mile for years. How we three rejoiced, as interest began, and then intensified with the girls, under forbidding conditions. But O, the joy when like brave soldiers of the cross they donned the gospel armor, notwithstanding the inveiglements and surrounding conditions. I was never happier over the baptism of two, and that because such fine points of decision were asserted under what to many would be crushing conditions.

The baptism and confirmation were fraught with peace and comfort. The girls having seen four admitted into the Methodist Church from the platform of probation (where does that come from?) to full membership, and the preacher, Rev. Hamilton, reading twice only that part of the service pertaining to finance, and taking pains to lecture all present a little on money, I trust realized fully ere this writing the wide difference between the gospel and a sham.

The expense of the meeting first and last (I judge about fifteen dollars) Bro. Yingling cheerfully bore alone, beside having remembered the preacher's necessities. He also had a dollar to be forwarded to Mr. H. B. Jordan, recently burned out. Two weeks while fraught with anxiety, at times sore, at the general attitude of the people and their bearing, were never surpassed by the pleasurable atmosphere of the home where we dwelt, Grandma's pleasant cheerful way, and Ruth's juvenilities in variety adding their full share. May the sunshine of gospel peace yet find entrance and radiate from grandma's mind and heart. The preacher was reluctant to depart; 'twas hard to say good-bye. In memory's retrospect I shall often linger there and return when possible. A brief call was made at Middletown, and away to Highland county next.

In bonds,

TURKEY, Ohio, Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—I love this work. God knows my heart's desires, though I come with stammering words. God has seen fit to take my husband home to the spirit world and I am left a poor cripple with only one foot to tread through this cold world alone; though I cannot weep as those who have no hope. God had chosen him and he tried to honor the calling. I feel that if I can live faithful to the end I can clasp glad hands where parting will come no more; and all will be joy instead of blinding tears.

Dear Saints, let us each strive to honor the work in which we have started, and the blessed Master will come to our rescue if we trust him. How often the text comes to me: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."—Numbers 23: 10. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may live faithful to the end and receive a crown of life, an inheritance in the celestial kingdom of God.

MAYSVILLE, Mo., Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I have just filed for record deed to lot on which our new church will stand, three miles east of this city, on a very beautiful spot; it can be seen for miles around. We have been preaching every night for a week and quarrying out rock for exercise during the day; four teams hauling rock today for the foundation. Everybody anxious for the church to be built; four hundred dollars subscribed, besides free labor almost sufficient to erect the building.

The interest in the preaching is increasing daily; house crowded each night; prospects are very encouraging indeed. The donors for this church are rejoicing in the fact that it shall be free for all denominations when not occupied by us.

CUNNING CRAFTINESS.

As a people we are accused of imposing upon the credulous of mortality. We send you the following taken from an issue of the Herald-Presbyter, a "Presbyterian family paper," published at Cincinnati, Ohio, May 8, 1894. The formula is by Rev. D. L. Lander. It was published at his request, and is intended as an offset to "this continual harping upon the scripturalness of immersion" by "Baptists and Campbellites."

But we have sufficient warrant in the Bible for our mode, (sprinkling,) and we ought to make use of it.

The candidates may kneel or sit while the following questions are asked:—

Do you unfeignedly repent of all your past sins, and renounce the world, the flesh, and the Devil, and all their evil works and lusts, so that you will no longer follow or be led by them?

Do you heartily believe and profess the Christian's faith, taking God to be your Father, his Son to be your Savior, his Spirit to be your sanctifier, his word to be your guide, his people to be your people?

Do you dedicate your soul and body, your time, talents, and possessions, to the Lord, freely, deliberately, and forever?

Do you promise subjection in the Lord to the constituted authorities of this church, and to walk in brotherly love with the brethren?

(These being answered in the affirmative, the minister will say:—

"Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" (Acts 10: 47.)

(An elder presenting the font [a bowl?] will say:—

"See, here is water." (Acts 8: 36.)

(The minister will say:—

"And now, why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.)

(Candidates arise, and the minister continues:—

"Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean." (Ezek. 36: 25.)

"I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

This is a specimen of "the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive." The reverend says he has "no thought of a copyright; any brother is at liberty to use it in toto, or amend it to suit himself." He says:—

I have used it with good results in my own ministry.

When we consider the audacity of the daring, the imbecility of incongruity found expressed in the above, is it not more than passing strange that these same "doctors of divinity" will, everywhere, charge upon the Latter Day Saint Church the practice of deception in matters of religion among the people, when nothing, approaching even the shadow of such a delusive fraud as herein shown, is entertained by us; much less seeking to palm off anything as a God-ordained and sanctioned method not clearly and forcibly stated in God's word?

We send for publication, thinking it well the elders have it in their possession.

Respectfully,
J. F. McDOWELL.

December, 1894.

SYNOPSIS OF SERMON BY ELDER E. L. KELLEY

At Downey Reunion, California, 1894.

You will find my text this morning in the eleventh chapter of Mark, beginning with the twentieth verse. You all remember how the disciples passing along saw the fig tree which was cursed dried up from the roots, and how Peter called it to remembrance saying, "Master, behold, the fig tree which thou cursedst is withered away," and Christ answered, "Have faith in God."

Christ tried constantly to instil faith in his disciples, but their faith was very weak; and while on the Western Continent he said that the lack of faith on the Eastern Continent prevented them from receiving the counsels, messages, and blessings they ought to have received. Many, like spoiled children, cry for the things they ought not to have, not being willing to exercise faith in God. Christ tried to instil, to inspire more faith in God. We cannot always attain perfection by putting confidence in a man of God, and if he fails should we lose our faith in God? Have we not sufficient confidence in God to obey his will because of faith?

After having obeyed the gospel, put off the old man, and put on the new state, what shall we do to establish the kingdom of the Lord? If we read Christ's instructions to his disciples in the Sermon on the Mount we find that he told them to do. Many pray for a new coat when they have just received one from the Lord. Many after receiving the baptism of the Holy Spirit ask for more blessings, instead of undertaking to do something for the Lord. They want to receive all the time instead of doing. We should be lively stones, workers, doers of the word. The elders have to perform the same laws the laymembers observe, none are exempt, not even the President. Some say, Wait, Father, till I have saved five hundred dollars, bought a home for my family, for my duty is to my family, and then I will go. What is the best way to take care of my family? Let me have faith in God, and if I do his will he will take care of me and mine. God's laws are material as well as spiritual, and he will take care of us both materially and spiritually. The disciples were told to give alms and then to pray. Some pray a month or two for a blessing instead of doing. We should go and do, then pray, and show by our works that we are worthy. When a child learns to walk he must first make an effort; so must the children of Christ's kingdom. We will gain a little strength and by putting forth fresh efforts finally reach the stature of men and women.

God's Holy Spirit working in our hearts will not only show us what to do, but direct us how to do it. God will use us for his service, just as soon as we are prepared, and would use us much sooner, only we are so faulty. Let us have faith in all trials and darkness that God will direct his work aright, and it is only a little while till we shall reach the other side. God does not require different things from his children; all are treated alike, though tried in various ways to develop their characters, that they may be able to minister to the poor and sympathize with the sorrowful. The elders need the same wise and loving trials that their characters also may be strengthened and developed.

Some think it is not necessary for them to do anything in the church, like the man who said that the Latter Day Saints Church was the best one he was ever in, for it had only cost him 25 cents in three years. He did not understand till he was shown that by giving freely the kingdom of God could be advanced. After that he gave over two hundred dollars in one year. Other churches say that ours is the right way of giving, but their churches would never be sustained if they adopted our method. If a person gives to be seen of man, he receives his reward here; and on the other hand, if he gives of the fulness of his heart, God will reward him.

When the young man came to Jesus asking, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" did he tell him to be baptized? No, he had something to do first: "Sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor." He was to return what did not belong to him. He was very sorrowful for it was something to do.

Christ came to fulfill all righteousness, for he said, "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." So must we obey all the laws of God's kingdom; and this law of giving was before Moses' time, for Abraham gave to Melchisedek, who was greater than he. The law was enforced away back there and even before. Each individual must render an account for himself, and if he obeys the law his conscience will stand acquitted before the bar of God. If we do God's will, he will never forsake us, if on the Lord's business, he will direct us. If we have faith, he will guide and direct all our paths.

NOTES ON BRADEN-SCOTT DEBATE.—No. 2.

BY ELDER S. W. L. SCOTT.

MR. BRADEN'S exegesis of "the more excellent way" was somewhat amusing. Appearing before the audience with blackboard, and written upon it as follows, was his translation and idea:—

But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet show I unto you a more excellent way [than the exercise of these best gifts].

I immediately drew the attention of the people to the craftiness of the interpretation. That Mr. Braden would make them think that the word "covet" of Paul referred to Braden's word "exercise." His theory enjoins the "coveting" the seeking for, the asking, and really admitted the receiving of all the spiritual gifts, but absolutely forbids the "exercise" of them after getting them. Of what use is it, Mr. Braden, to so sacrifice for them and obtain, but never exercise them? Are they like Christ and God to your church, silent partners? We never had occasion to look at the blackboard any more.

What a scholarly presentation! Pray tell me what philological relation does the word "exercise," sustain to the word "covet," that will with any degree of consistency harmonize with the demands and provisions of the entire Christian system? But suppose we abide by Mr. Braden's interpretation forbidding the "coveting" and "exercise" of all even the "very best gifts,"—in what a hopeless, starless, rayless, and cheerless condition have our frail barks cast anchor. Let us ask Paul with reference to his writing that letter down to Rome:—

For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Rom. 6: 23.

Here is the chief jewel in the Christian's crown—eternal life, by way of preëminence, the gift of God—the "best"—the greatest gift of God, but Mr. Braden's interpretation says we cannot covet or exercise even the "very best" gifts. Mr. Braden did not want to see this, but we stopped long enough for the audience to take a good look at him.

With reference to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, Mr. Braden was pushed into the position of appropriating to his church the unmodified statement:—

Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God.—1 John 5: 1.

1. We informed him of our gladness of this position for it virtually conceded all that I had been contending for that evening—that there are two baptisms in the Church of Christ; whereas he had argued only one, and that of water. Now, then, he had helped me out by his quotation and argument in admitting two, one of which baptisms, was in the act of belief, the second baptism a burial in water! Verily, a genius and a flint that wont strike fire is no better than a piece of punk wood.

2. I asked Mr. Braden if he accepted that statement of 1 John 5:1 face value—in an unmodified sense—would he admire the company he was in. Calling his attention to James 2: 19 I read:—

Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe, and tremble.

Are they born of God? Moreover, Mr. Braden and the “father” of those Jesus addressed eighteen hundred years ago (John 8: 44), were not alone, for we read:—

He ran and worshiped him, and cried with a loud voice, and said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not. . . . And he asked him, what is thy name? And he answered, saying, my name is Legion: for we are many.—Mark 5: 6-9.

A legion born of God!

3. I asked Mr. Braden what is the necessity of water baptism as administered by his church and without which no one could be identified with it, if people who thus “believed” were “born of God”? But he made no reply. I then addressed myself to the audience in the following terms: “Mr. Braden’s theory has people ‘born of God’ in the act of belief prior to water baptism—they are recognized of God, but can’t get into the Campbellite fellowship. They are ‘born of the Spirit’ for ‘God is Spirit’—are sinless, are pure, are justified, are saved, are good enough for God, angels, and heaven; but not good enough for the Campbellite Church till water is administered in the rite of baptism.” The ripple of laugh-waves that surged through the audience caused Mr. Braden to look down his nose.

4. Mr. Braden was asked if he would accept of two more Scriptural citations of like import unmodified, namely:—

Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God.—1 John 4: 2.

That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.—Rom. 10: 9.

The former texts are not to be considered less modified than the latter. If the latter text be taken apart from its modifiers, then repentance and baptism for the remission of sins are out of the question. And if the text-in-chief, relied upon by him, is to be considered apart from its connections, then a holy, moral, upright life is not a necessity in order to the favor and salvation of God.

On the question of “signs following the believer,” my opponent confined every word of the commission, that involved the idea of miraculous powers, to the eleven apostles alone; and by a strained grammatical analysis exhibited less knowledge of the laws of language than a ten year old schoolboy.

Go ye [eleven] into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth [that refers to anyone] and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not [anyone] shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them [the eleven] that believe; in my name shall they [the eleven] cast out devils; they [the eleven] shall speak with new tongues; they [the eleven] shall take up serpents, and if they [the eleven] drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them [the eleven]; they [the eleven] shall lay hands on the sick, and they [the eleven] shall recover.—Mark 16: 15-18.

The above is, verbatim, Mr. Braden’s “fixing” of the great commission, given by the Lord just previous to his departure into glory. In rebuttal of the foregoing position, we offered the following: In considering a statement or letter, three items will be observed as eminently essential to a correct elucidation of the subject involved, 1. Who is the speaker? 2. To whom is he speaking? 3. Of what is he speaking? In this case Mark is the speaker, and he is quoting the utterances of Jesus. It is Mark who says in verses 14-17:—

eleven as they sat at meat . . . And he [Jesus] said unto them [the eleven], go ye [eleven, second person denotes the person addressed] into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He [generic term, he who, or anyone who] that believeth [of every creature] and is baptized shall be saved, but he [generic term, he who, or anyone who] that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe [of every creature].

Now Mark says in these statements that Jesus is the speaker, the apostles are the ones spoken to, and “them that believe,” of “every creature,” “in all the world,” are the persons spoken of. With this idea, please consider another rule applicable to universal language: “A pronoun must agree with the antecedent in gender, person, and number.” See Harvey, Holbrook, Brown, Swinton, et al. We now move upon the main battle ground, and on this line open fire.

In my name shall they [third person denoting the person spoken of, not YOU, second person, the ones addressed, but they, the believer,] cast out devils; they [the believer, third person, not you, second person] shall speak with new tongues; they [the believer, third person, not you, second person] shall take up serpents; and if they [the believer, third person, not you, second person] drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them [the believers, third person, not you, second person]; they [the believers, third person, not you, second person] shall lay hands on the sick and they [the sick, third person, not you, second person] shall recover.

This is all a quotation from Jesus, by Mark. Mr. Braden tried hard to establish the “them” of verse 17 to be the antecedent of the “them” in verse 19, but at a single glance, anyone can see that Mark drops the quotation of Jesus made to the eleven and of all believers, at and with verse 18, and takes up the relation of facts in verse 19 and proceeds to tell the reader just what followed the commission direct to the apostles and the promises to those who in all the world believe the gospel involved therein. Suffice it to say Mr. Braden thought it wise to abandon Mark 16.

He demanded a sign. He clamorously contended for one. He had previously denounced the system we teach as an “abominable fraud,” “a wicked, lying imposture,” and a “damnable delusion.” But the next evening in his unholy effort to force a “sign” to the front, he said, “If you Latter Day Saints will show a sign, we Campbellites will believe and be Mormons right away.” Taking advantage of the opportunity in my next speech, I put the question direct: "If we will produce a sign, you will all be Mormons right away, will you? Will you; speak out, anyone." Braden replied, "Yes, sir;" then all over the audience, "Yes, sir," "I will," "Me too," "Here's one."

"All right, have you not denounced the system as 'a wicked, lying fraud'? 'A damnable delusion'? And now, then, 'working a miracle' or showing a 'sign' will cause you to embrace 'a lying fraud' and 'a damnable delusion'! Sirs, I would not value your faith the price of a single mill." It will be a cold day when Mr. Braden and the Campbellites at South Scott fall into this trap again.

But in the debate there, Mr. Braden learned that "it was hard for him to kick against the doctrinal goads," and never made the brisk assault upon doctrine at Knox that he did at the former point. But one thing he will have unlimited time in showing, and that is, through what process of ledgerdemain would "a consummate fraud," "a wicked lie," have to pass, in order to cast off the law of its nature and change to untarnished truth. The facts still remain, and the inspired words are still in the Bible,—

Our gospel came not to you in word only, but in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.—1 Thess. 1:5.

Mr. Braden hurled his battered lance at John 20:30, 31. He endeavored to prove thereby that Jesus wrought miracles to produce faith, but the text will not, and did not sustain him in the endeavor. The text reads as follows:—

And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.

His attention was drawn to the fact that instead of miracles being wrought to produce faith, "these are written" to produce faith. Faith is a consequent of testimony, and the above statement is the testimony of one of those for whom Jesus prayed, Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word.—John 17:20.

As a result of this written testimony or word, faith is begotten. While we are willing to admit that belief followed the performance of some miracles, we want chapter and verse containing the fact of God ordaining miracles to produce that belief. And it would require some pains to definitely ascertain just what degree of faith dwelt in the minds of those of whom it is asserted believed on him after the miracle, previous to its manifestation; for in John 2:22 it is recorded:—

When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them, and they believed the Scriptures and the word which Jesus had said.

Would Mr. Braden infer that these disciples of Christ were infidels, prior to this wondrous miracle? or that they were disciples, believers, all along, and this manifestation of divine power simply confirmed them, increased their faith, and established them? We incline to the latter.

In the investigation of the second proposition, during which the claims to divinity of the record of Joseph was submitted to the people, one thing was conspicuously noticeable, that is, the Spalding Romance was as silent and mute as a sepulcher!

Not a drum was heard, nor a funeral note.

Whether it was because of the two books having been held up to the audience by myself in the opening, or Mr. Braden's reformation (for he is old enough) and conviction, we will not affirm; but he confined his criticisms to the internal, the supposed inconsistencies, the linguistic incongruities, the grammatical punctilios, and the mathematical accomplishments. The affirmative evidence, drawn from the prophetic and monumental, was never touched by this annihilator, and in his estimation, went down into the basket of rejected matter. As for instance, the patriarchal prophecy of 1689 B. C. foreshadowing the development "into a multitude in the midst of the earth" (Gen. 48:16) of the two chosen lads. When we located ourselves in the sacred region where the Spirit of the Most High gently descended upon and regathered and rekindled the forces of good old Jacob's life, and hurriedly threw the equator around and divided the earth into two equal parts, then following that meridian running down between Alexandria and Cairo to the "great circle," and from that point, traveling 180° east (half of the equator's length) or 180° west sets us down in the southern regions of North America and the northern parts of South America approximately, as the "midst of the earth;" here in "the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills," with arms made strong by the hand of the mighty God of Jacob, was Israel's name and Jehovah's glory to shine along the ages and be perpetuated in the millions of posterity whose bounds were set here, in the day the "Most High divided to the nations their inheritances;" and, moreover, when it was shown that the work intended to be done of God, through these two boys, Ephraim and Manasseh (Deut. 33:13-17) was never done on the Eastern Continent, but that they were to be used as "the horns [power] of unicorns," in the great "restitution," or "dispensation of the fullness of times," to gather in one all things in Christ, or "push the people together to the end of the earth," these thoughts fell weightily into the minds of the people, but Mr. Braden was totally oblivious. It is a Scriptural fact, that the posterity of Joseph while dwelling in Palestine were rebellious, following after other gods,—"Ephraim is joined to his idols,"—and failed to receive, at that time, and in that place the choice blessings of heaven" or "the precious things of heaven." (Deut. 33:13.) But at a subsequent time and in "the midst of the earth" they did receive the "word of God," the Holy Spirit, the administration of angels, the gospel of Christ, as the choice, "precious things of heaven," and to this the "stick of Joseph in the hand of Ephraim," and the "great things of my Law" written therein, abundantly bear witness. They were to have an abundance of revelations, and written ones too, for the Lord says:—

But the word of the Lord was unto them, [Ephraim] precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little and there a little.—Isa. 28:13.

Again:—

I have written to him [Ephraim] the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing.—Hosea 8:12.

We might say the Book of Mormon is yet considered a strange thing as well as the "work," immediately following its revelation. (Isa. 29:14.)

Mr. Braden was puzzled with the plain case of an illustration: Should he reside in Middleton, Indiana, and

I should write him a letter, (Middleton being his permanent address,) should I direct the letter to Rome in Italy? Well, then, if God should write the great letters of his law to Ephraim, he being "in the midst of the earth," "to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills," "over the wall," "over the sea," would he not direct these laws to the land of America? He would do so in order to reach Ephraim with "line upon line, precept upon precept," and the "precious things of heaven;" and the Book of Mormon is evidence that the God of Abraham was controlling the postal service, and mail matter on the celestial-terrestrial route was never missent! This was truly amazing, but Mr. Braden, with all his boasted erudition, could not render it ineffectual.

Mr. Braden tried to make it appear that the "sticks" mentioned by Ezekiel 37: 16 were the same as the "rods" (Numbers 17) possessed by each tribe of Israel, and were "scepters" of authority. But the learned do not agree with him. Young's Analytical Concordance informs us that the Hebrew word translated "rod" in Numbers 17 is nowhere translated "scepter"—does not mean "scepter" at all. There was a "rod" for each tribe, and it did not refer to the scepter of rule at all. The Hebrew word translated "stick," in Ezekiel is not translated "scepter." Here are two sticks which the Lord directs Ezekiel to write upon "for all the house of Israel," and their union was to be followed by the "restoration" of Israel to their homestead as two nations nevermore. But,

Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.—Ezek. 37: 21, 22.

Mr. Braden attempted to apply this prophecy to the period between the return of Judah from the Babylonian captivity about 536 B. C. (K. J.) and the overthrow of the Romans A. D. 70. But Luke 21: 24 was a millstone around the neck of his application, together with the fact that the tribe of Judah represents but about one twelfth part of "all the house of Israel," which was to return, after the revelation and union of the "two sticks." And when the following "sure word of prophecy" was tongued and grooved into the fabric of future work,

Neither will I cause men to bear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God.—Ezek. 36: 15,

Mr. Braden collapsed. He thought to sustain his position by reference to the tense of the language used in verse 21 of chapter 37: "Whither they be gone;" but the following quotation in connection with facts, seemed satisfactory:—

(As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations,) before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were.—Rom. 4: 17.

The fact also of the ancient writing on parchment, and rolling the same on "sticks," was strenuously denied, but in so doing the testimony of eminent scholars and divines, who have forgotten more than Mr. Braden ever knew, was flatly contradicted; as for instance:—

"Stick," a piece of wood for writing upon, as illustrated in Ezekiel 37: 16, 20, the use of which was a frequent practice for primitive nations.—McClintock's and Strong's Encyclopædia, Article Stick.

Also:—

A roll or book in ancient times consisted of a single strip of paper or parchment, which was usually kept rolled upon a stick, and was unrolled when a person wished to read it.—Smith's Bible Dictionary p. 566, Peloubet Edition.

And still more; speaking of the days of Josiah and the writings of those times:—

The king being impatient to know the contents, the scribe begins to read immediately; and as the books of the times were written upon long scrolls and rolled upon a stick, the latter part of Deuteronomy would come first in course.—History of the Holy Bible, by John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A., p. 403. (Foot-note.)

When these statements were presented, Mr. Braden had business with some little "use of language" in the Book of Mormon. Mr. Braden asserted that there were thousands of blunders and mistakes in the original edition of the Book of Mormon, but when we insisted that he produce some affecting doctrine, theory, or sentiment, he failed to do it. He failed to produce even one. There may be epics in men's brains just as there are oaks in acorns, but the tree and the bark must come out before we can measure them.

The Book of Mormon was objected to because the word "immortal" is used therein before Christ. But who said the word "immortal" was used? Words are the vehicles which convey ideas as their passengers. They are signs of ideas and if the idea of immortality was had before Christ, it does not necessarily imply that they had the same vehicle or word we use to convey it. A black man may be a passenger in the chariot of old Pharaoh, then he may be a passenger in an English coach, but it is the same passenger in a different vehicle; he may then get aboard the "lightning express," of America, but he is the same passenger in a still different conveyance.

That the idea of immortality was entertained by the ancient people of God before the advent of Christ is very evident from the following:—

Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead.—Acts 26: 22, 23.

Does the resurrection of the dead involve the idea of immortality? Let us see:—

Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.—1 Peter 1: 10, 11.

Here the idea that attaches to the atoning work of Christ, including three degrees of "glory," and the stupendous work of the world's redemption, is stated to have been revealed to those of primeval times:—

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.—2 Peter 1: 21.

WORTH KNOWING.—A spoon in a glass filled with hot water prevents the breaking of the glass, because the metal easily absorbs a large part of the heat.

The South produced $86,607,692 worth of lumber in 1890. To make this output 5,784 mills were operated and 71,650 hands employed. The product in 1880 was worth $38,116,000. It more than doubled in ten years.

SPECIAL CONFERENCE.

To the Saints in Florida, Greeting:—After consultation with several of the brethren I have concluded to call a special conference for Florida district. I therefore, hereby announce that there will be a special conference for Florida district convene at Coldwater, Florida, at two p. m., Friday, February 1, 1895, and will probably continue until the Sunday night following. The purpose of this conference is to reorganize and "set in order" the district. As you are aware, there has been no conference held in this district for a long time, and none of the branches are in working order. I hope every member of the church in the district will take an active interest in this conference, for you all certainly desire to see a better order of things obtain. Allow me, then, to urge that every one of you make special effort to so arrange your business that you can be present promptly at the beginning and remain until the close. Do not think you are not needed. Every one of you is needed, not only a part, but all of the time. So come, and come praying that the spirit of wisdom and power may rule in our assembly; and that success and peace may attend us. Either Bro. Turpen or myself, and possibly both, will be in attendance. I have the honor to subscribe myself,

Your colaborer in the vineyard of the Lord,
HEMAN C. SMITH,
In charge of Southern mission.

AN APPEAL TO THE SAINTS.

Dear Saints:—We once more appeal to you for assistance to complete our church. By a great sacrifice of time and means we have the walls nearly ready for the roof, which we expect to have on as soon as we have the material on the ground, except the shingles, and when the roof is on our funds will be exhausted; and unless we get some help we will have to gaze at a vacant church without doors or windows, and think as the monkey did when he could just all but reach the basket of apples, "So near and yet so far." But being anxious to keep right at it until we get it ready to be dedicated, we write this appeal to the Saints. So far the burden of buying the lot, furnishing the material for the walls and for the roof, paying the masons and tending them, and to put the roof on, will be borne by a few of us, all poor men who have large families of mostly small children. Owing to the hard times this makes it very hard for us. But inasmuch as this is a day of sacrifice, we have sacrificed to accomplish this work; and had times been good we could and would have built our house without any outside assistance. But as it is we will have to let our house stand unfinished until we are able to finish it, unless the Saints come to our assistance.

Now, dear Saints, think that if two hundred of you who read this will send us fifty cents each (and there will certainly be that many who will read this that could send us that much each), then we could finish our house and have the good of it right away in place of having to feast our eyes on its vacant walls. Those thus contributing would hardly miss so small an amount. We appeal especially to branch presidents and ask them to present it to their branches and collect what they can and send to us, and should we receive more than we need to finish our church by using the strictest economy, we will turn it over to the Bishop for the good of the church in general. Every person's name and the amount he contributes will be published in the Herald when our building is finished.

Our undertaking this building has been by the earnest request of nearly every elder that has been here on a mission, and it is what we very much need here, as we haven't any suitable place to meet in. But we still hold regular meetings and Sunday school and the Saints as a general thing are alive to the work, though some are a little slothful.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, will you come to our assistance in this hour of need? We are living out here where there is not only a hard struggle against visible and tangible foes, but there is a strong spiritual and unseen foe who contests strongly every forward step that the glorious gospel of God's dear Son takes. The very heavens seem encased in brass, so to speak, as I have heard many of the elders say, and many is the one who has left here with a far sadder heart than he came with. If anyone wants to know how it is to live here as an apostate just refer to the Autobiography of Elder Glaud Roger in the Autumn Leaves of a year or so back. Of course it is not as bad now, but we have had similar trials to those that he passed through and we still have many trials and hardships that our eastern brethren and sisters do not know. When we have asked the leading men of the church about moving away their advice, one and all, has been to stay. That we were doing as much good here as an elder could do, and were doing missionary work as much as an elder. It is therefore with confidence that we appeal to the Saints, knowing their generous and charitable disposition and inasmuch as the Lord in a recent revelation has advised the Saints to give more diligent heed to the ministry that their calling may be honored and more peace, and love, and harmony prevail amongst the Saints, and inasmuch as we are acting under the directions and advice of accredited servants, (for it was under the management of Bro. Joseph Luff that the agreement was made whereby the lot was bought and the building is the result of his labors while here, and the Bishop admonished us to not encumber our house with a debt,) and as we desire to follow his advice, and have exhausted our means, and as we are not selfish and look upon all Saints as having an equal interest in advancing this glorious work, therefore we are willing to share with them the expense of this building and the blessings to be bestowed by our heavenly Father for so doing. Therefore, dear brethren and sisters, come to our assistance, please. We especially appeal to those who have advised and urged us to undertake it. All the outside help that we have so far received is as follows: Bro. John Grimmett, Lander

Wyoming, $5; two other brethren of the same place whose names I have not, $3 each; Bro. and Sr. Thomas Gammon, Provo, $5; Bro. S. A. Wannenberg, Provo, $3.70; Elder H. N. Hansen, Weston, Iowa, $5; Sr. H. N. Hansen, Weston, Iowa, $2; Bro. John A. Hansen, Weston, Iowa, $1; A sister from Illinois, $1.50; Bro. and Sr. D. F. Nicholson, Lamoni, $5; to all of whom we extend our heartfelt and sincere thanks for their liberal donations. Who will be the next to assist us?

Address all letters to the undersigned.
Your brother in the gospel,
H. B. STERRETT.

NOTICES.

The following motion was passed upon by the London district conference held at St. Thomas, Ontario, October 27-29. It was sent with the rest of the conference minutes to the Glad Tidings for publication. All the minutes excepting this motion were published in the Glad Tidings. Circumstances which the editor, Bro. Hardy, could not hinder compelled him to leave out the motion. Therefore by the advice of the district president I send it for publication in the Saints' Herald. Here is the motion:—

"Be it resolved that we as a conference exonerate Bro. J. H. Lake from all that appeared against him in the Glad Tidings of September 1, 1894, written by E. K. Evans."

After the ceremony and an early dinner the happy couple started on a tour to Canada, the former home of the groom. They will return and make Lamoni their home.

DIED.

WEST.—Owen, son of Joseph B. and Elizabeth West, was born April 15, 1852; baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ February 8, 1887, by Elder L. R. Devore; died November 6, 1894. He was an elder, and president of the Highland branch. He was forward in every good work, and his absence from the prayer and testimony meeting was an unusual occurrence. During his last illness his thoughts were of the church. Several times during his latest moments he bore a strong testimony of his spiritual condition, saying that he was ready to go, and asking his friends to be prepared to go when called. A wife, one brother, two sisters, numerous relations, and a host of friends mourn. Funeral sermon was preached by Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, from Numbers 23: 10.

HEGWOOD.—At his home near Piper City, Illinois, November 28, 1894, Bro. William H. Hegwood. Bro. William was born in Peoria county, Illinois, October 3, 1861. Was married to Miss Mary Epperson, in July, 1883. He united with the church January 1, 1891, and always stood in defense of the glorious gospel of the Son of God. He was highly respected by all. He was kind-hearted and good-natured. He found a warm spot in the hearts of us all. Was a kind, loving, and affectionate husband and father. He leaves a loving wife, two children, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Funeral sermon by Elder F. G. Pitt at the house November 29, 1894, to a large, attentive audience of mourners and friends.

COFFEE.—Dora E., daughter of Joel and Isabel Coffee, was born August 6, 1878, in Washington township, Grundy county, Missouri; died December 7, 1894, at the home of her parents near Spickardsville, Missouri. Sr. Dora was baptized August 1, 1894, by J. T. Kinnaman, and lived a devoted Christian life from that time until death, loved and respected by all who knew her, which was manifested by the very large attendance at her funeral. She was gentle and kind in her life, obedient to her parents, and loving and patient with her brothers and sisters; strong in faith, and left a testimony with her parents that will never be forgotten. While engaged in secret devotion a light came down from heaven and completely enveloped her and she was given to know it was from heaven, and told her parents while death was upon her, she would go to that bright home.

HAWLEY.—At the home of her Son Gideon, near Defiance, Shelby county, Iowa, December 24, 1894, at 6:30 a. m., Grandma Hawley quietly and peacefully took her departure for the paradise of God. Her maiden name was Sarah Schrader, and she was born in Knox county, Tennessee, June 3, 1800. She was married to Mr. Pierce Hawley July 4, 1822, and they lived happily together for thirty-six years, when Bro. Hawley died. Of this union ten children were born; seven sons and three daughters, five of whom are still living. Grandma Hawley remained a widow thirty-six years, always cherishing her first love. She was baptized into Christ in Will county, Illinois, March, 1835, by Elder Morris Phelps, and renewed her covenant by baptism in Shelby county, Iowa, July 16, 1861, Elder John A. McIntosh officiating. Sr. Hawley was injured by a fall July 23, 1894, but suffered little or no pain after she was administered to by President W. W. Blair and others. She went to sleep on Friday, December 21, and continued to sleep until her spirit took its departure for its place of rest. She was a faithful witness of the godly, virtuous, and loving deportment of the Palmyra Seer toward his family and all others who were at his home during the time she worked for the family at Nauvoo, Illinois. Was this why she was permitted to remain with her family so many years? Funeral services were conducted at the Saints' chapel, Galland's Grove, Iowa, December 25, by Elder C. E. Butterworth, assisted by Elder John Pett. After the discourse which was preached from the words, "Let me die the death of the righteous," Bro. John Hawley spoke feelingly for a few moments, of the loyalty of his mother to the truth during the persecution of the church at Far West and subsequent to that time. Her remains were borne by three great-grandsons and three great-granddaughters, and nicely laid to rest in the Holcomb cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

AGAN.—At Allegan, Michigan, November 3, 1894, Bro. Ira Agan, aged 75 years and 3 months. He was born at Brunswick, New York; was baptized and confirmed November 14, 1842, at Utica, New York, by James Blakeslee; was ordained a priest July 12, 1862, by Walter Ostrander, in Berrien county, Michigan. In 1842 he was married at Utica, New York, to Harriet A. Atwell, of Herkimer county, by James Blakeslee. To them were born twelve children, two sons and ten daughters. His widow and seven daughters survive him. Bro. Agan was a faithful Saint, both in his duties to God and to his fellow men. Though poor in this world's goods he was rich in faith and in those fruits and graces that should adorn the lives of all of God's people. He rests in the paradise of God, after a life of much toil and privation. His last illness was of a year's duration, and he suffered much during that period. Many Saints about Fox River, Plano, and Sandwich will remember Bro. and Sr. Agan; and she deserves to still be remembered in their petitions, for she is aged and feeble, as well as being distant from all society of the Saints. The funeral sermon was preached by Mr. Martin, Congregational minister.

MOLYNEAUX.—At his home, St. Louis, Missouri, January 15, 1890, William, eldest son of Bro. John Molyneaux. Deceased was a dutiful son, affectionate brother, exemplary husband, a loving father, and though not a member of the church, he was ever ready to assist its advancement in every way within his power, and his close adherence to the golden rule set a good example to many professed Christians.

When sorrowing o'er his grave we bend,
Which covers all that was our friend,
Forgive, dear Lord, the tears we shed,
For thou didst weep o'er Laz'rus dead.

At a meeting of the Chronicle carriers, January 16, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted: "Whereas, Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst into his kingdom, our loved friend and coworker, William Molyneaux, therefore, be it resolved that in his death we feel that the world has lost an honest man, society one of its most valued members, and we a friend whose place in our hearts will not be filled. Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be signed by his associates in business and sent to his widow and children."

The two Congregational churches at Galesburg, Illinois, have decided to unite.

A NOTABLE SCIENTIFIC DE-FENSE OF RELIGION.

THE old subject of the relations between science and religion is taken up from a somewhat new standpoint by Prof. A. Jay Du Bois, of the Yale Scientific School. As the utterance of a scientific man of acknowledged reputation, his article in the Century, December, merits especial attention. He takes as his text the sarcastic assertion of Huxley that modern Christianity is laying aside "every inconvenient matter of fact in Christian history," while continuing "to pay divine honors to the residue," and that the logical conclusion is "faith no longer in contact with fact of any kind." This assertion, Professor Du Bois thinks, rests upon an assumption that religion is based solely upon certain records, and must stand or fall with them and their scholastic interpretation. Professor Du Bois then points out that "the only basis upon which any religion can stand, or has a right to stand, is at bottom identical with that upon which science rests; viz., the basis of universal experience, the testimony of universal consciousness, the result of daily verification." This basis, he thinks, science cannot ignore, and it must be considered before Professor Huxley's conclusion can be accepted, for it is a basis that lies outside of the Scriptures. "We do not accept it," he adds, "because of the Scriptures; we believe the Scriptures because of it. They are the record of a fact, but they are not the fact." The Professor then proceeds in the following strain, similar to that pursued by him in a notable article published several years ago in the same magazine on the subject of immorality. He says:—

"It is admitted as an undoubted fact of science that the universe is so constructed that any change of position or arrangement of any of its parts must affect the entire system. This is indeed but a statement of the law of gravitation itself. If the motion or position of so much as a single particle of matter is changed, the motion and position of every atom in the universe must be thereby affected. Every one will admit this as one of the most certain conclusions of science.

"It is also an admitted fact that within our bodies matter itself is subject to mind—moves and is moved according to the dictates of mind. But since it is already admitted that to change the motion or position of even a single atom of matter must affect the entire universe, we are at once obliged to admit as a necessary conclusion, on the basis of the most certain facts of science itself, that the entire universe is so constructed that mind not only can, but actually does, affect its every part. The action of human volition is thus a force in the universe. A complete survey of the universe must deal with this force.

"But everywhere in nature we observe motions that are not due to human volition. What can we say of such? Evidently we can only legitimately conclude, in harmony with what we already know, and in terms of the rest of our knowledge, that since some of the phenomena we observe are beyond doubt due to mind, and since such mind action affects the entire universe, thereby proving that the universe is of such a nature that throughout its whole extent mind can and does affect it, therefore, all the action and motions we observe, whether due to human volition or not, must likewise be referred by us to the action of mind. This is the only conclusion in terms of the rest of our knowledge that we can frame. It is the direct conclusion from admitted facts.

"We arrive, then, directly from admitted facts, at the conclusion that the universe in all its parts is the visible manifestation to us of underlying mind, and hence all interpretation by us of the phenomena of nature should be guided by the assumption of underlying purpose."

Professor Du Bois then points out, that in the light of this view of the universe, "uniform action" is but the necessary result of unchanging purpose acting under unchanging conditions. But as conditions continually change, and can never be duplicated, uniformity is never absolute. Hence the possibility of miracle, which "is simply the unique result of unique conditions." He continues:—

"Once admit the possibility of unique conditions, and science must admit the certainty of unique results.

"What we call 'natural law' is thus the result of purpose acting under duplicated conditions. What we call 'miracle' can only be the result of that same purpose acting in view of unique conditions.

"In this view we need not go to the Bible for miracles. We find them in the history of the earth and man. The beginning of life, the origin of consciousness—these are the well-established miracles of science. As the unique result of unique conditions they are miraculous, and yet they are strictly natural.

"Again, our view alone fills the gap between mind and matter, which is otherwise impassable to science. In the light of our conclusion, 'persistence of force' resolves itself into existence of mind. We start with mind in nature, with purpose back of force. We are compelled to start thus, as the necessary conclusion from admitted facts.

"The same also holds true as to the introduction of life and consciousness. No life without antecedent life, no consciousness without antecedent consciousness, no mind without antecedent mind, become necessary conclusions.

"This view is admitted by Herbert Spencer when he says that the universe implies an infinite and eternal energy from which all things proceed. . . .

"In the light of our conclusion the standing quarrel between religion and evolution disappears from sight. A sentence disposes of it. It is no longer a question between divine foresight and divine interposition. There is seen to be no 'interposition' possible. It is a question simply of divine method. . . .

"Such is the view of the universe to which we are directly conducted by admitted facts of science. It is a universe of purpose governed by mind. It is not a wreck drifting hither and thither, and the sport of chance. It is framed in wisdom, instinct with purpose, headed toward a port—and the hand of a Pilot is at the helm."

After discussing, in the light of this conclusion, the past history of the earth and the purposes for which man was placed in it, Professor Du Bois points out that "the end of the whole mighty process" is: "for the race, continued progress in spiritual attainment and moral advancement; for the individual, self-struggle, self-mastery, self-conduct in obedience to law—not compelled but voluntary obedience—conscious coöperation, with the promise of continuance of such coöperation sanctioned by reason, justice, love, hope, and faith."

"But man cannot attain this end alone. He is handicapped by nature—by heredity. Here religion gives its aid, substituting a spiritual environment for the physical environment which has become a hindrance, now that progress is to be chiefly spiritual. This, he thinks, is the real mission and message of religion to man under all garbs of doctrine and by whatever books proclaimed.

"Religion in this sense [he concludes] can no more be attacked by invalidating portions of the Scriptures than science can be impugned by invalidating portions of the synthetic philosophy—not so much so, for the latter is a chain of reasoning where flaws may well exist; the former rests on the basis of a simple statement of fact, which invites and challenges universal test.

"Religion, then, challenges scientific recognition upon the very grounds of scientific demonstration, as the verification by daily experience of a fact of daily life—the verification of the spiritual in human life and action, even as science itself is the verification of the spiritual in nature. The fact of gravitation rests upon no firmer basis. . . .

"Thus we see that faith, instead of being 'no longer in contact with fact of any kind,' is daily coming into line with the known facts of nature and man. But however conflicting and diverse the views of theology, back of all lies the solid fact of human experience. This is the basis of religion—the verification of the spiritual in life. Doctrines of theology, like theories of science, have their day, and give place to better, but the basis of both is the same. Faith is thus not a dream; it is not merely the substance of things hoped for: it is the evidence of things unseen."—Literary Digest.

POLITICS AS A CAREER.

W. D. McCrackan, A. M., one of the ablest of contemporary writers upon the principles and institutions of representative government, and the author of several valuable works on the development, history, and workings of the Swiss Democracy, contributes a thoughtful and forcible paper to the January Arena on "Politics as a Career." Among the encouraging conclusions reached by this lifelong student of every form of democracy, ancient and modern, is that no honest man can enter political life in America to-day except as a reformer, and that as a reformer he will be treated with scorn and contumely and have little or no influence. As a means of making and executing laws our politics have reached the lowest stage to which they may safely go; although things may drift on for many years to come without any dire or final catastrophe. As a game, politics in this country could not well be improved. There is more uncertainty, gamble, and scramble with us in one election contest than all the effete monarchies put together can show in a whole year. The reforms needed in our political machinery to make government by and for the people possible are direct legislation by means of the initiative and referendum and proportional representation that will leave no body of voters practically disfranchised, as under existing gerrymander rule.

A German Evangelical Deaconess Hospital was dedicated at Jerusalem July 3. The edifice with the lot cost three hundred thousand francs. It has accommodations for fifty or sixty patients. The sick of any religion or nationality are to be admitted.

Nineveh was fifteen miles by nine, the walls one hundred feet high, and thick enough for three chariots to drive abreast.

CORBETT'S ADVICE TO WOMEN.

Mr. James J. Corbett, whose physical achievements entitle him to consideration when he speaks of exercise and training, tells what he thinks women ought to do to attain health and beauty. He has not too high an opinion of the development of modern women, and he compares them with the women of Greece and Rome, greatly to the advantage of those ancient dames.

A cold dip is the first feature of Mr. Corbett's regimen for women. He admits that it may require some courage on a morning in winter, but he intimates that after a few trials women will become wedded to the practice. It will waken and invigorate them as nothing else can; it will clear their skin and strengthen their muscles, the great champion says.

After the cold dip he recommends some simple exercise with one-pound dumbbells to bring the muscles of the upper part of the body into action, loosen the sinews, reduce superfluous flesh, and develop muscular tissues. Then a rub down with a Turkish towel follows and the body is prepared for its day's work. Mr. Corbett also recommends hot water drank some time before breakfast or hot tea. Coffee bears the weight of his disapproval.

Mr. Corbett believes thoroughly in lawn tennis, but he does not believe at all in the way women act after they have been playing. They should not stand around, often in draughts, the great man says, and run the risk of taking cold, but they should speed at once to their rooms and take a sponge bath, followed by a vigorous rubbing down. A cold bath, he thinks, should end the day.

ANCIENT RELICS FROM COPTOS.

Kuft is the ancient Coptos. It is four hundred red miles from Cairo and a hundred and ten miles from the Red Sea. It is believed by Egyptologists that the descendants of the Kings of the twelfth dynasty established themselves at Coptos and thus kept up communication with other countries by means of the Red Sea. Dr. Flinders Petrie has been at work at Coptos and has discovered there many objects of historical importance. It is even believed that Coptos was the place whence came the Egyptian families of Kings. Under the ruins of a Ptolemaic temple statues have been found with figures of elephants and ostriches. Dr. Petrie writes: "The whole evidence, internal and external, points to these colossi and the carvings on them being long anterior to the rise of historical monuments." The date of these relics is supposed to be somewhat earlier than B. C. 5,000.

The north coast of Egypt has been guarded by a lighthouse since 300 B. C., when Ptolemy Philadelphus, a Greek King of Egypt, and one of the successors of Alexander the Great, built the so-called Pharos of Alexandria. This was a lofty tower placed at the entrance of the harbor, with a great fire blazing on its summit during the night.

The cross-mark instead of a signature did not originate in ignorance. It was always appended to signatures in medieval times as an attestation of good faith.

"THREE DAYS AND THREE NIGHTS."

WE are asked how the prediction of the Savior found in Matthew 12: 40 is to be understood.

For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

This is the text of stumbling. We may not remove it, nor even satisfy any; but to us it is quite sufficient to know what the preponderance of scriptural evidence may be on the point.

In the relation of the Prophet Jonah's attempt to avoid fulfilling the mission to Nineveh, given him of God, chapter one closes with the statement:—

And Jonas was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.—Jonah 1: 17.

The prediction, or statement found in Matthew 12: 40 is substantially this, that in the same manner that Jonas was three days in the belly of the fish, so was Jesus in the heart of the earth, or in the grave, the tomb.

There is no better method of getting an understanding of a question of this sort than to take correlative texts of Scripture and from a consensus of their meaning determine what is the most likely rendition of the one an understanding of which is sought.

In the one under consideration, the Scribes and Pharisees demanded a sign of the Savior. In his answer he virtually told them that the historical fact of Jonas being cast overboard from the ship into the sea, and then being caught by a fish and his life by that means saved, he being thrown up on the land by the fish, was a sufficient sign to them if they were honest in their intentions. But in like way would the Son of man, meaning himself, lie in the grave.

Following history, the Savior after he had been with his disciples for some time began to explain unto them what was to occur in regard to himself; the following being found in Matthew 16: 21.

And from that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised the third day.

In his sermon of instructions to his disciples, occurring in Matthew 20: 18, 19, he said to them:—

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

Mark relates the statement thus:—

And he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.—Mark 8: 31.

In the ninth chapter the same writer, Mark, gives it in this way:—

For he taught his disciples and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.—Mark 9: 31.

Again Mark 10: 34, after reciting the instruction about going to Jerusalem Jesus says:—

And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him; and the third day he shall rise again.

Luke, the most learned of the four evangelists whose writings we have, after reciting that thrilling episode in which Peter by the evidence of the Holy Ghost declared Jesus to be the Christ, states:—

And he straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing; saying, The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.—Luke 9: 22.

Further on:—

Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished. For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on: and they shall scourge him, and put him to death; and the third day he shall rise again.—Luke 18: 31-33.

The same historian relating the story of the resurrection of Jesus, states that the angels who stood near the entrance to the empty sepulcher said to those who sought the risen Savior:—

He is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.—Luke 24: 6, 7.

Jesus at the time he went up from Capernaum to Jerusalem and drove the money changers out of the temple, was beset by the Jews who asked him a sign, in the sense of an authorization of his act, and he gave them this answer:—

Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up.—John 2: 19.

And when the Jews, surprised at his answer, questioned how he would raise again in three days what it took forty-six years to build, did not understand that he Spake of the temple of his body.—John 2: 21.

From what is here given, it is very clear that Jesus himself understood this his own prediction, as recorded in Matthew 12: 40, would be fulfilled by him if he rose or was raised from the dead on the third day after his burial.

Every one of the writers, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, every time the subject is named, puts the rising in the third day; except the single instance of Mark 8: 31, in which it is given thus, "After three days." This, Mark himself corrects in 9: 31, and 10: 34, where he states it, "And the third day he shall rise again;" agreeing with Matthew 20: 19, and the other texts given in Matthew, Mark, and Luke.

The angels refer to it as a fulfilled statement in Luke 24: 7, after the resurrection of Jesus: "And the third day rise again."

Paul, acquainted with all the ways, customs, and laws of the Jews, one of the ablest of the New Testament writers, if not the ablest, wrote to the Corinthians of the same event, the rising of Jesus, and says of it:—

And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.—1 Cor. 15: 4.

Jesus, after his resurrection, appeared unto Cleopas and his companion on the way to Emmaus, opened the Scriptures to their understanding, as appears in Luke's account, chapter 24, verse 27; after which he walked into the presence of the eleven disciples and others at Jerusalem; and eating with them.

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures. And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day.—Luke 24: 45, 46.

It would seem to be sufficient for us that Matthew, Mark, and Luke, acquainted with the circumstances of the death and resurrection of Jesus, and who must have known what the Scriptures were that referred to the life and mission of Jesus Christ, hold that Jesus rose on the third day after his burial, and that this fulfilled those Scriptures.

If any further confirmation is needed there is the statement of the angels at the sepulcher, and the declaration of Jesus himself to his disciples after his resurrection. Of what avail is the cavilling of anyone over the prediction in Matthew 12: 40, in the face of such testimony as we have here presented and so much of it.

In direct harmony with all the foregoing is the fact that among the Jews the current day was the evening and the morning; that is to say, the day was reckoned from the foregoing night inclusive. Thus anything occurring on one day the time of which was to run three days, would terminate on the third day from that day, both the first and the last day being included in the three days; no matter how late in the hours of the first day the occurrence began, or how early in the last, or third day it concluded. In the "Comprehensive Commentary," edition of 1887, page 123, the comment on Matthew 12: 40 is:—

Three days and three nights. It is a received rule among the Jews, that a part of the day is put for the whole; so that whatsoever is done in any part of the day, is properly said to be done that day. . . . 1 Kings 2: 29. When eight days were accomplished for the circumcision of the child, etc. . . . Yet the day of his birth and of his circumcision were two of these eight days. . . . Since, then, our Savior was in the grave all Friday night and Saturday; seeing he was in the grave all Saturday night, and part of the morning of the day following, . . . he may, according to the Hebrew computation, be truly said to have been "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."—Whitby in Scott.

Three days and three nights. The very same quantity of time, which is here termed three days and three nights, and which in reality was only one whole day, a part of two others, and two whole nights is termed three days and three nights in the book of Esther: "Go, neither eat nor drink THREE DAYS, NIGHT OR DAY," etc., chap. 4: 16. Afterward it follows, chap. 5: 1: On the THIRD DAY, Esther stood in the inner court of the king's house. This, as Lightfoot amply shows, was very common among the Jewish writers.—Dr. A. Clarke.

Matthew states that the rising of Jesus occurred on the morning of the first day of the week. Matthew 28. Mark states that it was on the first day of the week. Mark 16. And Luke so states also. Luke 24. It was the third day from his crucifixion and burial. This would make it on Friday that he was crucified. This Friday would be counted from Thursday evening until Friday evening; Saturday would be counted from Friday evening until Saturday evening, and Sunday, on the first day of the week, from Saturday evening until Sunday evening, making the three days. It is perfectly safe to conclude that the actors in the great scenes related by the four evangelists, were acquainted with the prophecies concerning the Messiah; and that Jesus himself knew how to fulfill his own prediction; and that the term of time covered by him in the grave, must have been similar, or identical with the period in which Jonas lay in the belly of the fish. And if the Jewish method of computing time, as given in the commentary quoted from, is correctly stated, there is no reason whatever to conclude that Jonas was in the belly of the fish seventy-two hours, three whole days, but that he was cast into the sea, as it were, at some hour on Monday, and was released from his imprisonment by the fish at some hour on the Wednesday following; or some other days of the week to correspond.

To insist that Jonas lay in the belly of the fish three whole days of twenty-four hours each, the full complement of three whole days and nights, and that Matthew 12: 40 must be construed in a similar way, is to insist that Jesus was crucified on Wednesday, and lay in the grave all day Thursday, all day Friday, and all day Saturday; for as he was raised Sunday morning, counting backward, to Saturday morning, one day; to Friday morning, two days; and to Thursday morning, three days, which, according to Jewish computation, would be five days; a part of Wednesday and a part of Sunday included.

We are of the opinion that the exercise of our best reason would indicate that the preponderance of evidence should settle the matter, with the straightforward inquirer; and as we have already seen that preponderance of evidence is to the effect that Jesus was crucified on Friday, was laid in the grave the same day, that he lay in the grave until Sunday morning and then rose, using part of Friday, all of Friday night, all of Saturday and Saturday night and a part of Sunday, making the three days according to the then custom of computing time; which it is evident from the Scriptures, the disciples, and the Savior himself understood.

There is no sort of use for anybody to worry and fret, brain or heart, in endeavoring to fathom or work out questions like the one under consideration in this article, upon statements like the one from which the question is stated; upon modern technical methods; for no man can do it. He may speculate in regard to it, pile up computations until the brain is bewildered, and be brought back to the original proposition by the querulous, "But the text says 'three days and three nights;' how are you going to reconcile it?"

We have given what we believe to be the correct explanation of the text, with its correlatives; and are fully satisfied to be content with the belief that Jesus knew what was necessary to fulfill his own prediction; how long Jonas was in the belly of the fish; how long he would have to let his body lie in the grave; how and when to raise it up to make the prediction and the fulfillment agree; and that the historians knew, as did Jesus, when the resurrection of Jesus took place that the prediction had been fulfilled. We believe it to be the part of wisdom to accept the Scriptures as they are, and be satisfied to say as the Apostle Paul wrote:—

For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.—1 Cor. 15: 3, 4.

THE LAW SUPREME.

LAW, whether human or divine, has for its object the preservation of the peace and safety of society. Speaking of the latter, the apostle says:—

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, etc.

There is still found sufficient of the first Adam within the church to make written law a necessity and to the supremacy of that law we all virtually bow when entering into the body. Our respect for the law grows in proportion as its operation secures for us the enjoyment of our liberty while in righteous pursuit of what the church holds out as an inducement to us.

No good man or woman can long respect either the law or the church, if they shall be found so flexible in character as to become a cover or a shelter for sin. Even the transgressor, who has a spark of manly principles left within him, though his pride suffer under the penalties imposed, will in his heart admire the law that makes no distinctions in his own favor. Discipline and not vengeance is the law's intent, and by that discipline alone is the credit of the church maintained and its claims vindicated, when iniquity is discovered. Should the law prove so flexible as to accommodate itself to the proclivities of one who lapses from virtue, it thereby extends an equal encouragement to all who may wish for like advantage. It cannot be otherwise than arbitrary without sacrificing the dignity of the body.

Love for a sinner does not imply sanction of his sin. The mission of Jesus was to "save his people from [not in] their sins." Hence the processes within the church must aim at a separation of sin from the sinner, else there is no guarantee of final redemption. In this connection the will of the subject must be consecrated, for salvation is impossible to any man whose will has not been reconciled to the will of God. The will of God is revealed in the law, and a consecration of human will thereto, implies a willingness that that law shall be executed until it shall have consummated its disciplinary work within us and left us without blame before its author, having separated us from our sin. The good-will and peace designed through Christ can only prevail where absolute consent is accorded to his law in all its details. He who is unwilling to yield unreservedly to that need not expect peace and has no claim for safety or protection against the ills that follow a violation of the same law by others.

If we all should live at once and forever by the love principle which found complete illustration in Christ, there would be no evil to suppress and no discipline to enforce; but unfortunately we have not all attained to that altitude of holiness, hence are under the necessity of occasionally making appeal to the law that has been designed for the protection of the church and of its members one against another. Where that law obtains universal consent, as to its spirit and letter, adjustment of irregularities and suppression of evil are matters within the realm of possibility. Where the divinity of that law is not consented unto, the objector should seek another church and a superior or more flexible law.

For the righteous execution of the law the elders are held under a divine obligation. In January, 1831, they were commanded to go to the Ohio to receive the law (see Sec. 38: 7, D. and C.) and it was told them that it would be given to preserve the church without spot and blameless—a righteous people. After they had gathered according to command, they were told (see Sec. 41: 1, 2) that by the law about to be given they would know how to govern God's church and have all things right before him. The charge is very forceful, Ye shall see that my law is kept.

Also that he who kept not that law was not Christ's disciple and should be cast out from among them. Still more expressive and terrible are the preceding words:—

Ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name with the heaviest of all cursings.

What then is the law which was prefaced in its giving, by such startling words of warning and exhortation? Read carefully the revelation that follows, in section 42, and it will be seen that theft, lying, murder, polygamy, evil speaking, covetousness, and all manner of iniquity are to be proceeded against and the guilty ones cast out, unless repenting. It is further exacted that the transgressor shall be turned over to the law of the land, thus helping to protect the dignity of the laws of the land and maintain the peace and good order of society. Those who repent are provided for in mercy, but how are they to be known?

In the Book of Mormon, page 195, paragraph 16, we have the following words of Christ to Alma, relating to the church:—

Whosoever transgresseth against me, him shall ye judge according to the sins which he has committed: and if he confess his sins before thee and me, and repenteth in the sincerity of his heart, him shall ye forgive and I will forgive him also.

In section 58 and paragraph 9 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we have explained how we shall determine the genuineness of a man's repentance, thus:—

By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins. Behold, he will confess them and forsake them.

This is manifestly true, for if a brother or sister loves the church better than his or her own disposition to sin, the evidence of that fact will be seen in the humility with which confession of the sin is made and reform is inaugurated. A general and indefinite admission of possible failure does not comply with this requirement. We have sometimes heard Saints who had been convicted of wrongdoing, when called upon to make restitution, rise and admit the possibility of having made mistakes as they were not perfect. They have stated that if they had offended they wished to be forgiven. In some instances the idea of mercy of the church has led to an acceptance of such statement as though it was a compliance with the law. We have wondered at such times whether or not the author of the law had not been ignored in the effort to keep an evader of its requirements within the church. We have also been led to fear that nothing had been gained by the one so retained, for invariably at such times the words of the proverb would rise before us:—

He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.—Prov. 28: 13.

True humility and genuine repentance seek no evasion; but frankly confess the wrong done and ask help to avoid its repetition. No Saint ever thinks less of another because he has frankly confessed his wrong. It is an acknowledgment that he has fallen below the standard he hoped to occupy. It is an announcement that beneath that standard he does not wish to remain. It is an exhibition of nobleness that instantly enlists the sympathy, the prayers, and coöperation of all. Every member of the household of faith feels him or herself called upon to rally for the support and restoration of such a one. Evasions, on the other hand, beget distrust as to the sincerity of the repentance professed, and sometimes even provoke disgust.

In Matthew 6: 14, 15 we are told by the Master to forgive all men or God will not forgive us. In Doctrine and Covenants we are informed of Christ, that the greater sin remains with him who will not forgive an erring brother. (See sec. 64, par. 2.) It is also there enjoined that we forgive all men and leave God to forgive whom he will. In the same paragraph the Lord promises to forgive all who "confess their sins and ask forgiveness," who have not sinned unto death. But it will be well that we note the remainder of the words in the same paragraph. Here they are:—

And he that repenteth not of his sins and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the Scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the low, that ye may not offend him who is your Law-giver. Verily I say, for this cause ye shall do these things.

From this it is clear that while the word exacts forgiveness of us as individuals it nevertheless demands that the law be honored and fully executed. We may forgive as individuals, but we cannot forgive for the body. The church requires confession of the sins committed, in evidence of sorrow and repentance, and that, too, regardless of who the offender may be. To ignore this rule or modify it for the sake of persons will be, as we once heard an elder say in preaching, "to attempt to bring God down to man, rather than man up to God." It will not result in good either to the individual or the body.

When the Master was once approached by bystanders and notified that his mother and brethren stood without desiring to see him, he replied thus:—

Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

He thus intimated that those who obeyed his Father's will were nearer to him than his own earthly kin. It was a lesson from which we gather the thought, that we should honor the divine law, even though it should operate as against those nearest in the flesh. It was harmonious with the thought that he who loved father and mother more than him was not worthy of him. Our love for him is shown by our respect for his law.

In the Inspired Translation we are favored with an explanation of the words:—

Wherefore if thy hand or foot offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee; for it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee; it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.—Matt. 18: 7, 8.

The explanation referred to is given in the following verse and reads as follows:—

And a man's hand is his friend, and his foot, also; and a man's eye, are they of his own household.

Apply this individually or to the collective body and the principle still holds the same. It is ours to obey, maintain, and enforce the law without regard to the fact that our dearest friends may be separated from us or be condemned thereby. Truly the lines are closely drawn; but it is better that the church and the divine law be honored, even at the loss of valued associates, than that both the church and the violator of its laws should perish together.

It is always better, perhaps, to err on the side of mercy where we are in doubt; but where the cases are clear and the law is plain in its bearing thereon, our first allegiance is to the law. We should be as charitable as the spirit of the law indicates; but we should remember that unto us has been delivered the charge, "Ye shall see that my law is kept." To save the transgressor, if legally possible, should be our motto; but we are not required to sacrifice the good name of the church in our efforts in that direction. Extremes are to be avoided in every instance, and the golden rule should be in the minds of the law executors.

Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do ye even so unto them.

None should desire other than the triumph of right, the vindication of the body, and the salvation of the offender if possible.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

A LETTER from Bro. C. J. Spurlock, Rogersville, Missouri, December 31, reports thus of the Ward-Cowan debate:—

The discussion between Bro. Joseph Ward and Rev. G. J. Cowan, of the Christian Church, closed on the 28th. Not only Saints but most all present said Rev. Cowan's arguments were overthrown. He (Cowan) challenged Bro. Ward to a discussion of the Book of Mormon, which was accepted, to begin next Wednesday.

Bro. E. F. Shupe, Denver, Colorado, December 22:—

Two were baptized on the 16th by Bro. McConley, in the baptistry of the First Baptist Church. We were quite surprised to get the use of one of the most prominent churches of the city for the purpose. We are indebted to Sr. M. E. Jamison for the above favor. We have the promise of the baptistry any time we may need it. The Baptist congregation also baptized four at the same time. We noticed quite a difference in the baptismal ceremony. Bro. McConley said: "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ," etc. The Baptist minister did not inform us whether he had any commission or not, and we doubt very much if he had any. One of our converts was asked in the dressing room to what church she belonged prior to this baptism. She replied, "To the Baptist Church," and was leaving it to join the Latter Day Saints. I guess some queer thoughts arose in their minds. We had a very pleasant time indeed; the Spirit was present in the confirmation. The Sunday school will give an entertainment on Christmas eve. The sisters have been serving merchants' dinner in the Charles Block, Fifteenth and Curtis, this week, to increase the building fund; were not as successful as we had hoped.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, Ayrshire, Iowa, December 29:—

Have been holding meetings near Curlew of late. Will hold forth near here for a time. Calls come from many places, "Come and preach for us."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. T. W. WILLIAMS, of Council Bluffs, has many requests to visit different localities outside of his field; and as he cannot accede to them, he desires all to understand that his place of labor is Council Bluffs and vicinity, and he must be excused from accepting the invitations, as he cannot do so consistently. Bro. Williams says: "Gladly would I respond to every call if I could, but it is impossible."

Bro. S. Reed, writing from Chesterfield, Tennessee, the 24th ult., reports growth being made in that portion of the field, though much and determined opposition in the form of mob violence had been aroused against Bro. C. F. Snow's efforts. Bro. Seaton, T. C. Kelley, Hilliard, Thomas, Scott, and others had done good work. Missionary Baptists had challenged Bro. Snow and, failing to meet him in discussion, some had tried to drive him from the country. As a result the people rallied to his support and the truth was planted to remain, at several new places. We are obliged to omit Bro. Reed's letter because of its length.

Bro. W. S. Taylor, Sherwin Junction, Kansas, requests aid from the ministry who traverse that field. Saints are united and would like to get the word before the people.

The North Attleboro, Massachusetts, Evening Chronicle commends by special mention the Christmas exercises at the Saints' chapel, also the helpful work of the sisters at the local prayer union. Bro. A. B. Pierce, who sends clippings, wishes to notify the traveling ministry that meetings have been resumed at Attleboro weekly on Wednesday evenings, also on Sundays at Foxboro; and requests those passing to and from Boston to stop and aid, notifying him at North Attleboro; or Mr. Allen, at Foxboro.

A letter from Bro. James Caffall, dated at Stafford, England, December 21, 1894, states that he had been at Hanley, Staffordshire, where he spent two weeks, preaching ten sermons. He would remain at Stafford over Sunday, December 23, and then go on to London, thence to Wales. He adds: "My health is good, but I long to see sunny days, as so often seen in America. But it is fog and rain, rain and fog; oh! so dreary, so dull!"

Sr. N. V. Pearson renews a request made for missionary labor to be performed at Haman, Texas, where she distributes the printed word.

Bro. Albert Haws was at home, Oakland, California, December 31; obliged to return there because of a severe attack of pneumonia and partial paralysis. The goodness of the Lord and the kind care of friends while in the field had enabled him to recover sufficiently to reach home, where he was slowly improving. He asks prayers for his recovery. He desires to resume labor as soon as possible.

Letters are received from Bro. Charles Hicks, Hicks, Michigan; and Bro. B. Chapman, Persia, Iowa. The latter relates a manifestation that gave him personal comfort.

Labouchere says he is enabled to state on most excellent authority that for some time after Mr. Gladstone's resignation he was bent upon taking holy orders, and it was with a view to that step that he announced his intention of retiring from the House of Commons at the dissolution. If Mr. Gladstone's health remains good, and if his eyesight is not further impaired, it is quite likely that he will be a candidate for ordination.

HELPING HAND.

SYNOPSIS OF READING, CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE. HINTS ON CHILD-TRAINING.

NEVER PUNISH A CHILD IN ANGER.

It is always wrong to punish a child in anger. However much a child may need punishing the parent ought never to administer the punishment while angry. Yet, probably nine tenths of all the punishing of children by parents is done in anger. This is one of the wrongs suffered by children through the wrongdoing of their parents.

Punishment is a judicial act, calling for a fair considering of every side of the case in hand. Anger unfits one to exercise the judicial faculty. No person is competent to judge fairly when angry. The impulse of an angry man may be in the right direction, and the punishment he would inflict may be a fitting one; but again the punishment may be one that is not merited. He is not in a frame of mind to decide what is wise to be done. It is his duty to wait until he can view the case dispassionately. No worthy judge decides a case without examining evidence on both sides; and no parent acts worthily who jumps to punish a child while in an angry mood.

Many a child's conduct gives strong provocation to anger, especially to quick tempered parents. Then when punishment seems merited, and while the parent is angry, the temptation is to punish the child; but that temptation ought not to be yielded to, or if yielded to it is not without sin. Punishment may be needed but to be sure to have it a just punishment, and to have the child recognize it as being just, it must be well considered, and must be administered in a manner to show that it is not the outcome of passionate impulse.

A parent ought to administer no punishment at any time, which he would not administer when he was cool, and calm, and deliberate, and after he had had a full and free talk on the subject with the child, in the child's best frame of mind. What punishment is fitting can be better decided after looking at the matter from the standpoint of fuller deliberation.

One father spoke for many parents when he said, "If I must never punish my boy when angry, then I should hardly ever punish him at all. It is when I am thoroughly exasperated with him that I feel like taking hold of him smartly. If I should leave it over night, I would sleep off all my feeling in the matter and he would escape punishment. The punishment is the result of the parent's passion and not of his sense of justice; and the child knows this whether the parent does or not.

How many boxings, and shakings, and slappings, and sentences of doom are now received by children which would never be given if the parents waited until free from anger and entirely calm before deciding whether to or not. It is not easy for a parent always to control himself in his anger so as to refrain from acting on the impulse which his anger gives, but he who has not control of himself is the last person in the world to attempt the control of others. A parent ought to gain perfect control over himself before he judges and gives the sentence in his child's case of evil doing.

Instant action is often a necessity in controlling a child's conduct, whether the parent be calm or excited, but it is action in the line of protection or preservation, not of punishment. A child may be in the act of bringing disaster upon himself or another, or of destroying property. Prompt action is called for. A rap on the fingers or a clutch at the child's arm may be the surest means of preventing disaster. But this is the action of the peacekeeper rather than of the minister of justice. For the moment the parent fills the place of policeman rather than that of judge. The question of punishment is yet to be considered, and ought to be delayed until the parent's mind is free from anger. Hot indignation may, on an occasion, be proper for a parent to exhibit. In a few cases of outrageous and shocking misconduct an explosion may be wanted. But this is apart from questions of punishment as punishment.

A child knows when punishment is administered in anger and when in a purely judicial frame of mind, and he estimates accordingly the punishment and the one who administers it. Years ago in a city mission school with a wild set of boys, it was often necessary to use force to hold them in check, but even at such times the teachers were swayed by love and the boys knew that it was so. But, at one time the young superintendent's name was rudely linked in ridicule with that of a lady teacher, and, as he took hold of the boy thus offending, he showed that he had lost his self-control. The boy, surprised, exclaimed reproachfully, "Trumbull, you're mad; and that's wicked." The lesson which that superintendent there learned could be learned to advantage by all who have children to deal with. His power over those rough boys was a moral power and depended on his retaining power over himself. If they could succeed in getting him angry he was a failure and they knew it.

A child is readier to perceive the justice of a punishment given only in love; and he is not tempted to resent passion with passion. A child came to her father, on his return home, telling him that she had done a thing for which he said that he must punish her if she did it. He expressed sincere regret for it. "But you said that you would punish me for it, papa." "Yes, my dear child, and I must keep my word," was his answer. He drew her lovingly to him and told her just why he must punish her. In tearful trust she looked up and said, "You don't like to punish me, do you, papa?" "Indeed I don't, my darling," he said earnestly. "It hurts you more than it does me,—doesn't it, papa?" she asked, as if more troubled for him than for herself. "Indeed it does, my darling child," was his loving reply. And under these circumstances the punishment caused no chafing between the two, but brought gain to both, as no punishment given in anger can ever bring.

As a rule, a child ought not to be punished except for an offense for which he knew at the time of committing it that he was deserving of punishment. If a child understands when he does a wrong that he is to expect a certain punishment for it, there is little danger that he will feel wronged if he receives that punishment.

Both parent and child are injured by punishment given by the parent when angry. Yielding to the temptation to give way to anger against a child is a harm to the parent. Knowing that his parent has done wrong harms the child. This he knows without teaching, while he can be taught to know when he deserves punishment. A child ought never to be punished except with a view to the child's good. And to this end a parent must religiously refrain from punishing while angry. C. B. S.

OWEN'S HILL, Tennessee.

Dear Sisters:—This beautiful Sabbath evening I shall endeavor to drop a few thoughts for the perusal of those who, like myself, have not the privilege of meeting with those of like faith. To-day (the second Sunday) has been our regular day of meeting for years, but the interest in our little branch has gotten so poor with Saints and others also, and the church is needing some repairs, too, that the brethren thought best to discontinue preaching until spring. When I look back upon the past and realize the many grand blessings and privileges I have enjoyed with the Saints and friends at our humble little church, and to think that now we meet no more till spring (which means never to some of us), my heart is sad; for to me Saints' meetings, though few in number, are more pleasure than the grandest assemblies of earth. Christ said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation," "but in me . . . peace;" and, dear Saints, I have found it even so. I sometimes think if it was not for the blessed hope of happiness in the world to come I would most surely fall by the way-side, for I long ago found that there are no lasting pleasures on this earth. Life is but sorrow and disappointment from day to day. But though all our friends forsake us, yet there is One who is even near in every time of need if we will only try to trust him in faith. I don't see how anyone who has obeyed the gospel and received a knowledge of the same can go back to a cold, friendless world for pleasures. I know not what I may do in the future, for there are many temptations along my pathway, but I hope I may be able to overcome to the end, and I shall ever pray for the erring ones that they may be brought back to the fold of Christ and be saved with the righteous of earth.

Letter Department.

MINNEAPOLIS, Kan., Dec. 25.

Editors Herald:—I was ordained to the office of priest February 26, 1893, and preached my first sermon in this neighborhood March 19, and continued preaching every two weeks, distributing tracts and loaning the various books published by the church, until in April, 1894, when several expressed themselves as satisfied and said they were ready for baptism if an elder could be secured to attend to the confirmation at the same time.

I wrote Bro. R. L. Ware, presiding elder of the district, to hold himself in readiness to accompany me home from our quarterly conference convened at Blue Rapids, May 18, 1894. He did as requested, and preached a few sermons, when opportunity was given those that desired to obey. Thirteen were baptized by the writer in the Solomon River May 27, and confirmed by Bro. Ware, and the sacrament administered in the afternoon, in the presence of a full house. Preaching was continued by Bro. Ware, and on June 4 six more were baptized by the writer, and confirmed by Bro. Ware. Meetings then closed, Bro. Ware going to other appointments, the good will and prayers of the Saints accompanying him, with invitations to come again, which he promised to do.

The above proceedings raised the ire of his majesty, the enemy, and the question of old might be asked, "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" For behold, there were all kinds of stories rife in a few days. But we moved quietly on, preached every two weeks, and organized a Sunday school and weekly prayer meetings, administered the sacrament once a month, and thus the work moved on.

In September Bro. R. W. Davis and S. C. Andes passed through and preached timely sermons, which encouraged and strengthened the Saints, endearing themselves to the household of faith. We continued on in the usual way until in November, when Bro. J. T. Davis was solicited to come and hold meetings in Minneapolis, which he promised to do. In the meantime I had written to the Herald and Ensign for Voice of Warnings, tracts, and papers for distribution, and the supplies came in due time, for which the brethren have our thanks.

Bro. Davis arrived December 5, and filled an appointment that evening that had been well advertised, preaching to an audience of about thirty, besides the Saints that went from here. The second evening there were five or six present, and the third evening we had the room all to ourselves, so we dismissed sine die. But in advertising the meetings we had distributed some tracts and epitomes, which caused some inquiry to be made afterward, and may be the means of giving us a better hearing in the future. There were two revivals, and several entertainments in progress at the time of our meetings, which militated against us. After closing meetings in town Bro. Davis preached several sermons to the saints and others here, which were well received and have set some to thinking, reading, and investigating. He also organized the Saints into a branch while here, and gave us good counsel and encouragement; and when the time came for his departure he had gained the love and respect of the Saints, also of some not of us, and took leave with cordial invitations to come again.

Yours for the cause,

HENRY RESCH.

ROGERSVILLE, Mo., Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—I came here last Sunday night to meet Rev. Cowan in discussion. We commenced the battle for truth, and since Christmas eve have been occupying with house well filled each day, notwithstanding the snowy weather. We are discussing church propositions. We closed our affirmation yesterday.

I find Rev. Cowan a much nicer man in discussion than I expected, though he boils over at times and says some hard things about the Saints; but I treat him so well that he soon cools down again. But he is to commence his affirmation this morning and I predict that he will get in a stew when he is driven to the wall, and then I fear he will not be such a nice man as he was in first proposition. The Saints are rejoicing; they say they are proud of their name. No telling when or where this discussion will end. Rev. Cowan says he has come to stay a dry month. The good Master has stood by me thus far, and I can truly say, to him be all the glory both now and forever. Amen.

Your colaborer,

JOSEPH WARD.

FOUNTAIN GREEN, Ill., Dec. 31.

Editors Herald:—I read in the Herald, December 19, a call to raise funds to put up a monument at Haun's Mills. Now would it not be better to put that in the Bishop's hands to send more elders into the field to preach the gospel to the living who are dying for the bread of life to be broken to them, and who have never heard the true gospel preached? Don't I read in nearly every letter from the elders, "Send us more help;" "we have more calls than we can fill;" and to pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the field; for the harvest is great, and the elders are few, and the calls come from every direction?

That money won't do the dead any good. I do believe that it would be wicked to spend money on a monument for the dead who have lain in graves over fifty years when there are so many calls for help. The Lord knows where they lie, and they will come forth when Gabriel sounds his trumpet, without a monument. I know of some who were slain for their religion, and because they believed the gospel and in these last days preached it to the people. No stone marks their resting place, neither do I want one; for I do believe they will come forth in the morning of the first resurrection; and there I hope to meet them.

And now, brethren and sisters, I say, and those I have talked with, put that money into the hands of the Bishop to send more elders into the fields and to help their families to live while they are gone. That money used right might be the means of saving many souls and giving the elders a better chance to fill more calls, because they would be more in the fields. If I had the means I would give it freely to spread the glad tidings, but I have none. I have written this under the impression that it will do good; and I could not rest till I did write. When I read the good news in the Herald I feel to thank the Lord that we live in these days when the gospel is preached in its purity.

Your sister in the gospel,

CATHARINE SALISBURY.

PRAIRIE DU CHIEN, Wis., Dec. 26.

Editors Herald:—In company with my wife I came here to spend the holidays. My wife is about again. She was sick seven weeks with the typhoid fever. I have preached but one sermon since we were married, October 17, as she took the fever soon after arriving here and is just able to be around again. Am anxious to get to work, for calls come from all sides.

My proposed discussion with Elder J. L. Gardner, of the Christian Adventists, is still on. We are trying to bring things to a focus through the county papers. Though I have not been able to do any preaching, I have kept my pen busy whenever opportunity offered. Have been having a written discussion with an M. E. minister. Some of the Saints at Bratville have joined the M. E's. The work is new at that place and we have scarcely proven to the people there that we are a separate people from the Utah faction. When we held a reunion there last year we left a favorable impression and agreed to meet there again this fall but by some means the conference went back on what it had previously agreed, which has caused a lack of confidence all over that section, and not alone among the outsiders. At other places the work is onward. In bonds, LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 28.

Editors Herald:—I left Antonito, Colorado, December 21, enroute for Flora Vista, New Mexico, etc., and after cutting all the curves, angles, and triangles in the letters of the alphabet and climbing to the height of 10,015 feet, our narrow gauge iron pony landed us in the thriving little city of Durango, one hundred and seventy-one miles from Antonito; and, to say the least, our ride was a pleasant one and full of interest, considering the wonders of nature and the achievements of humanity.

Durango is said to have a population of several thousand inhabitants; it has two large smelters, and is the trading point for much of the territory south of it for at least one hundred miles. I now left the railroad for my point fifty miles south, down the Las Animas (lost soul) River. The route crossed an Indian reservation fifteen miles, and then comes the line of New Mexico. Indians, ponies, donkeys, sheep, goats, and jack rabbits are the only part of animal nature worthy of mention. After crossing a succession of low hills covered with scrub cedars, one enters the head, the improved part of the valley, that appears to be about two miles wide by seventeen long, dotted with farms and comfortable improvements. At the head, with a commanding view of the entire valley, stands the domicile of Elder R. H. Wight, uncle to Bro. Heman C. Smith. I found him truly founded on a rock. He has chiseled into a sandstone ledge and planted the four corners of his building upon it, while the rocks on two sides tower above the dwelling, the face of them cut and carved in curious forms by the action of the elements. Here Uncle Samuel honors the brother by intrusting him with the United States mail. The name of this post of honor is Cedar Hill, thirty-one miles from Durango.

After being kindly entertained over night I resumed my journey down the valley. This tract of land is capable of supporting a thickly settled population, being very productive wherever water can be turned onto it; grain of nearly all kinds, also apples, peaches, pears, plums, and grapes, seem to be at home. The elevation is about 5,000 feet and the trade winds protect it from extreme heat or cold.

Coal of excellent quality is found by drifting into the bluffs on the west side of the valley, also timber on the foothills for fencing and fuel. Gypsum is also found here, and answers in place of lime. It was my privilege to visit the ruins of an ancient people situated nearly in the center of this portion of the valley near a little town called Aztec. This building at a distance has the appearance of a block of earth, and covers perhaps two acres of ground, but is so far demolished that it more fitly resembles a mass of debris. Walls of stone however project above the dirt in some places, and through irregular shaped holes in these walls I made a descent. The building is three stories in height at least, the walls being laid up and faced with a fine quality of sandstone; the rooms were from eight to sixteen feet in dimensions, square, round, and triangular in shape, and from seven to ten feet high. The timbers for the floors to rest on were cedar logs, about eight inches through, with splints and barks of the same kind of wood for floors. The timbers were perfectly sound notwithstanding the many, many years since the structure was formed. It is said that there is no timber in the country like it, and no stone of the kind used less than fourteen miles from the ruins. The principal building material now in use in this valley is adobe (sun-dried brick), and it answers a good purpose indeed. It is said to be very healthy here, especially for those suffering from pulmonary troubles.

Flora Vista is simply a name for a post office, and here Bro. E. N. Beach keeps a country store, and here is the schoolhouse where I was expected to sound the gospel trump. The people seem quite willing to listen, and I tried to bless their hearts with the pleasant story of eternal life, having good liberty and the very best of attention for eight or ten discourses; people coming from one to fifteen miles to hear. The local papers eulogized my efforts and think them of "no little advantage to our creed." Quite a good many of the listeners seemed honest in expressing their convictions that "This is the truth indeed." Several spoke to me about entering the fold, but I discouraged haste in the matter, advising the most serious reflection and the study of the word that their convictions might be well supported and their faith well grounded. Elder R. H. Wight was also to continue regular services here and would respond to all lawful demands made upon him by the interested ones. Allow me to say that Bro. Wight has been relieved from the cloud and burden that have obscured his mental pathway, and is now rejoicing in the sunshine of liberty and is determined to unfurl the gospel banner as far as opportunity offers. He is highly respected by the people of this country, so far as I could learn: is a man with capabilities suited to positions of honor and a respectful support by the church or state. I am satisfied that this brother should be placed in the harvest field and sustained in his efforts by the body.

Bro. E. N. Beach is also a faithful worker and furnishes his customers with not only the elements and luxuries of physical life, but also places in their reach the introduction to spiritual life. Has been instrumental in calling to this field the worthy brother, James Caffall, whose words of truth have taken root, and only needed watering that the truth might send forth the tree with its fruits.

On the 7th of December I tried to redeem the stream passing through this valley from the fearful cognomen given it, by baptizing in its waters. I was now ready to start for Gallup, which is only about one hundred and fifty miles by survey, but by rail about six hundred miles away. I passed through a desolate, unsettled region nearly the entire distance. Gallup is about eighteen miles from the line of Arizona; is a mining town of about two thousand inhabitants; is surrounded with cliff mountains covered with low, scrub cedars, otherwise a barren desert, no water being available for irrigating purposes. The elevation being from seven to eight thousand feet makes it too cold for fruits, even if water was had. Here I found a little body of Saints numbering six. The town was soon notified of meetings to be held, but alas! a fire broke out in the business center and soon destroyed over $50,000 worth of property; a storm of rain and snow also set in; and fire and mud combined so paralyzed the minds of the people that it was impossible to get a hearing, and after five or six efforts it was mutually thought best to postpone the effort indefinitely.

Brn. Farley and Baily of this town are faithful, zealous workers, are highly respected by their neighbors, and are doing a good work in advertising the claims of the gospel to their surroundings. Bro. Isaac Bailey has a half interest in a coal mine here that bids fair to pay well, and these brethren believe in the law of tithing, and I was assured that as soon as circumstances would admit the Lord would receive his demands to the favor of the church. I was now ready to start for home, as my railroad permits had nearly expired, with no voucher for their renewal. These brethren responded nobly to the wants of ye lone missionary, and with many others of like faith and works will occupy a tender place in my affections.

And now, if any of our good Saints feel to deprecate so expensive and short a mission, please permit a request or two from the writer; viz.: First, do not censure those encouraging the effort, for it was a personal offering by the writer, expecting the mission to sustain itself. Second, do not reproach the Bishop, for nothing has been received as yet from the church treasury, the mission being prosecuted on the "single tax" principle; but if you wish to enjoy the social felicity of those saved in celestial glory through the effort made, then please do not find fault with those chosen of God, and intrusted with the prosecution of his work, but labor faithfully to hold up their hands and relieve them of the embarrassments now troubling them, and do not compare dollars and cents in value with souls redeemed.

HENRY C. SMITH.

CREIGHTON, Mo., Dec. 22.

Editors Herald:—I have closed a protracted effort at the Smoky Row schoolhouse, a place where our faith had never been preached before. I preached there every Sunday in November; in all nineteen sermons were delivered to congregations varying from seven to one hundred; but the average was about thirty-five or forty. Prejudice is rather high, but I believe has fallen considerably. I felt well in preaching; had the very best of attention, except one night. Some are investigating. I distributed the tracts Bro. Dancer sent me to eager callers. I believe much good has been done. To God belongs the praise and glory.

I loaned my Book of Mormon to a man who only a few weeks before had joined the Baptist Church, who acknowledged before six or eight people that the Bible was on our side. Others are investigating. One man said he had waited twenty-five years to hear just such a sermon as I preached on "Authority." Brethren, I am never so happy as when I am at the work constantly, and I pray that a way may be opened that I may forever go into the vineyard and devote all my time to this glorious work.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Nov. 26.

Editors Herald:—Brn. Butterworth and Kaler are about returning from Nambucca by way of Camden Haven, Tuncurry, and Manning River, to conference, to be held in Sydney at the commencement of the new year. It is a great pity the church has not a good talented speaker in Sydney, a city containing four hundred thousand souls. I am of the opinion that if we had such an elder here much good would be done.

The Adventists had a reunion held here and had seventy tents on the ground with representative men from all the Colonies, and some from America, Mr. and Mrs. White. Their reunion lasted three weeks. They passed a resolution to hold one alternately every year in the Colonies. The next will be held in Western Australia. There were seventeen baptized. They appear to be fast increasing in number. If we had a man like Elder Forscutt, who was sent to Tahiti Islands, I think much good would be done.

The Saints in Sydney are alive to have a church building of their own. They have already collected over ten pounds towards purchasing the ground to build one on, and Bro. John Wright, of Tuncurry, will give ten pounds worth of timber; so I hope we shall succeed in having a place to worship God in of our own. Renting halls to preach in runs away with a great deal of money. It won't cost much to have a wooden building of about forty feet by twenty-five, as it will cost but little to build it. Bro. Seeburg, my son, and self, will do all the woodwork free of cost. So I hope God will help our endeavors in the near future to have it built, as we are saving all the means we can to that end.

Your brother,

RICHARD ELLIS.

BEEVILLE, Texas, Dec. 16.

Editors Herald:—From the drouthy, dusty regions of the West, and through the busy streets of towns and cities, and over the jostling broad ways, I have elbowed my way through the busy crowds of men and women who are rushing heedlessly down the broad way, not stopping to notice the straight gate and narrow way, careful and troubled about many things, not choosing the one thing needful, the which all men should be securing to themselves, and more to be valued than the riches of this world,—that of eternal life. When I look beyond and see the beckoning hand of the Master, who says, "Follow me;" "I am the way," I find myself seated comfortably at my home, reflecting upon the scenes of life and wondering that while the way is so plain that the way-faring man though a fool need not err therein, the world is still rushing heedlessly on; and I wonder, too, what kind of a scourge it will take from the hand of the Almighty to cause the people to pause and look to see the awful gulf into which they are heedlessly plunging. The warning voice is daily in storm, fire, water, and blood; yet the world will heed it not; and what troubles me still more is that I quite often find Saints—members of the Church of God—who seem almost as careless as the world. It does seem to me that after we have heeded the warning voice of the Master, so far as faith, repentance, and baptism are enjoined; and then, claiming as we do, that we have the promise of the Spirit to guide us into all truth; and we then understand him to say that he is "the way, the truth, and the life;"—that we as Saints of God do not more seriously consider our approaching fate. And as we have entered in at the straight gate and become the way-faring man, that we will not walk carelessly any longer, but assume a more steady, firm, upright attitude,—a walk that will convince the world that our lights have not gone out; that seeing our good works they will fall down and worship, saying that of a truth God is with us.

When I read Ephesians 4: 18-20, I see the condition of the world as they are drifting down the broad way; then Paul turns to the church and tells them, "But ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus."

Have we had the Spirit of Christ in our walks and conversations? Have we not let our lights go out? Have we had that light to accompany our pathway that will guide us into all truth, that will renew us in our minds and keeps us thoughtful, guarded, and watchful in all our thoughts, words, and deeds? Remember that while all may be hidden from the eye of man, yet the all-seeing eye of Him who sits upon a great white throne looks penetratingly into the innermost recesses of our hearts, and he it is who has promised to reward us for good or for evil. Then let us read from the twenty-second verse to the ending of the chapter, and learn how necessary it is for us to practice that teaching while the elders are away among strangers trying to place before the people the everlasting gospel as it has been restored to earth; and as the angel has flown and the hour of God's judgment has come, warning them to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, let us also remember that over yonder we have a kingdom or church organized after the order of God. (Eph. 4: 11; 1 Cor. 12: 28; etc.) How necessary it is for us to keep the house clean, swept and garnished, that when the elders return, should they bring fruits of labor, they could point them with pride and say, "There is the house we have been telling you about." Then the elders could return time after time with the greatest of confidence as they both go and come.

While I am glad and rejoice in my very soul that this is the case in a great many branches, yet it is with a blush on my cheek that I must say it is not in every branch. Then, O how long will it be until we all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ! Not, I shall say, until we learn to heed the injunctions of the Savior and live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. Yes, it is written, "Man . . . shall live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God;" and this is what we promised to do when we sought and found the kingdom of God. And further, as it is written in another translation, we surely started in to help build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness.

Brethren, I once entered into a covenant with my God, while standing upon the bank of the Medina River, about or a little over six years ago; that if he would forgive all my former transgressions through obedience to the ordinances of baptism I would serve him to the best of my ability, and the grace given me. Since that time I do not claim that I have not been rebellious at any time, but I do think I am safe in claiming that I have from time to time canceled my debts with him; and that although it has been my lot to sometimes be troubled with a thorn in the flesh, his grace has been sufficient, and I am yet fully determined to carry this gospel of the kingdom just as far as my feeble limbs will take me, and proclaim the glad tidings of the restoration of it so long as my feeble voice can be heard, and never lose an opportunity of wielding the pen in its defense. And in all this I thank God for a noble helpmeet, who has ever been willing to make any sacrifice for the cause of Zion and the spread of truth. She and our daughter, Sr. Sophia Ferguson, have not been idle nor thought it derogatory to them to help in the good work, but have ever dared to face the finger of scorn; and while I have been absent they have endeavored to do a good work at home. Sr. Hattie Minear, our eldest daughter, and the first of the family to embrace the gospel, has ever since been a faithful and persistent defender of the work.

Of my work this year, I have only to say that I have been constantly in the field; and while I can say that I have had good success in getting a hearing in many places where the gospel according to our claims has never before been preached, I am sorry to say a very few have been persuaded to obey. Of late I have been very much encouraged, and will here mention some places wherein we are warmly invited to hold meetings and offered good homes while we do so. This is outside of any membership. Mr. S. H. Davenport, Willow City, Texas, has recently asked me to have it published that his house is open to the reception of any of our elders; and I will say that he and his good lady are fully competent and will make it pleasant for them should they be pleased in coming that way to stop with them. Then Mr. J. R. Cabenes, late of Jasper county, Missouri, and his family, are located at Blanco, Blanco county, Texas. He is a warm friend and invites us to stop with him. Mr. Lackey, one mile below Ingram on the Guadalupe River, Kerr county, Texas; Mr. Lewis Nelson, seven miles above Ingram. This man is a son of the Nelson that was associated in the Missouri troubles of 1833 to 1836. There are other places, and quite a number, where we have been well treated, but not authorized to invite others.

Hope the time may come when I can repeat my travels in the northwest, in company with more competent and efficient material than myself. As for the membership in this district, while I could and do wish the condition was far ahead of what we conceive it to be, my heart swells with gratitude to God that it is no worse than it is. There are quite a number who are Saints indeed and striving with all their might against the powers of Satan.

In hope of eternal life,

L. L. WIGHT.

DENNISPORT, Mass., Dec. 29.

Editors Herald:—I am still in the faith and at work. The weather is very bad here now. It has been fine since I came to this district until lately. I have visited Boston, Providence, Plainville, Sheldonville, Little Compton, Fall River, New Bedford, and Dennisport since coming; and I go Monday to Brockton, then to Plymouth; and expect then to leave this district and go by Brooklyn and Philadelphia. I had intended to go down into Maine, but the weather is so bad I could do but little there; so unless I am especially directed shall not go now.

I find quite a number of excellent Saints in this district, but some are very careless, and do not realize their own condition. In some places jealousy and division have seriously injured the work, and are still retarding its progress. It does seem strange that men whom we believe love the work, and are intelligent, will allow the enemy to use them in sowing the seeds of discord and division. It is very strange that we cannot make allowance for the imperfections of others, while we are so very imperfect ourselves. I pray God to help his children to lay aside their own likes or dislikes and work together harmoniously for the building up of his kingdom.

I spent Christmas Day in Fall River. The Sunday school there had a tree for the children, with very appropriate exercises. Many presents were distributed, and among the rest one to the writer, consisting of a letter from the brethren and sisters containing four dollars and fifteen cents, for which I herewith extend thanks to all.

I have been well received everywhere I have been, and the Saints generally seem to understand the law, although some have not complied with it. The hard times have been seriously felt here, this being a manufacturing country; strikes, and mills closing, being the cause. I trust all Saints may see the necessity of putting themselves in harmony with God's law, so they may have claim on him for his blessing and protection in those troublous times. I will try and write again when I get through in this field. Praying that God may bless all departments of his work, and every effort put forth by his children to establish truth and build up his kingdom on earth, to this end I hope to remain,

Your colaborer,

G. H. HILLIARD.

BIRDSEYE, Ind., Dec. 29.

Editors Herald:—In company with my brother, Charles Barmore, I attended Thanksgiving services at Kibbie, Illinois. We met Brn. Henson and Slover and assisted them in a series of meetings which had resulted in three baptisms by December 8, the date of our departure with Bro. Slover. We came to Beall, Indiana, and held a funeral service on Sunday, the 9th. On Tuesday night, the 11th, preached in the Washington branch. The interest and attendance were fair. The death of Bro. J. T. King, branch president, has left the Saints there in a forlorn condition; but I think Bro. Solomon Rayl, by the encouragement of the Saints and the Spirit's aid and comfort, will be able to revive the work and prevent the branch from languishing. There are some good members among them, but Jesus Christ's parable in Matthew 13: 47, 48 has been demonstrated here as elsewhere.

We began services in the Plainville branch on the 13th. No accessions were made, but I am satisfied some good was done. Interest was manifested by those without and within as an average-sized and attentive audience greeted us for nine successive evenings, also on Sunday the 16th. December 22; at Oakland City, where I stopped, while my brother went on home. I staid near there until the 24th. I met Bro. I. P. Baggerly, who was tarrying a short time while homeward bound, with Mr. James Edwards, who, with his wife, is a friend to the work, but as yet without the fold.

While at Plainville, Brother Charlie and I attended church at the M. E. chapel. A Methodist evangelist was conducting a revival, and when we entered he and the local pastor were talking about how to excite the people and create a sensation. The pastor urged the preaching of the doctrine of justification, the evangelist that of holiness. The latter remarked; "We must have holiness." I saw it was either holiness or hell with me. At this juncture he shrugged his shoulders and with a grin of self-satisfaction repeatedly said: "I got it," "I got it." In the meantime the pastor had become partially convinced and with an acquiescent sigh, "just anything to get the people saved." What a contrast between this and the teachings of Paul and Peter in Romans 1: 16 and 2 Peter 2: 2. Presently the time came for preaching. He read for a basis Christ's sermon on the mount, and placing his thumbs in his pockets talked of holiness again. In his estimation Christ placed special stress upon three things; namely, holiness, hell, and heaven; the inference from which is, get holiness, keep out of hell, and gain heaven. To his mind the work of salvation was instantaneous, as it was but one step from total depravity to holiness. At the close of the service he took care to tell the people his discourse was not original, it was not his, but Jesus Christ's. Nevertheless, Jesus said nothing about total depravity, neither did he approbate any of the sophistry of those who teach "for doctrines the commandments of men." God's word, contrasted with such as the above, is like towering mountains with diminutive mole-hills.

Saints, thank God for the restoration of the blessed, glorious gospel of Christ. Christmas day; at home where I shall remain awhile and then assist Bro. V. D. Baggerly in doing some necessary work. A trip to New Harmony will be necessary ere our district conference of February 2. There are several new places where I have been that I desire to revisit, but some things in the New Harmony branch need attention, and it is just as essential to hold old forts as to take new ones.

The missionary in charge, by assigning the elders their work in different parts of the district, has succeeded in extending the field of labor. His plan has worked well, though I have not acted in harmony with it as I should. The effort in missionary work to depart from the old, time-beaten track from Wirt to Lily Dale by Scottsville and Marietta has been crowned with success. Bro. George Jenkins once had a dream in which the work in this part of the harvest field was represented by a field of oats; in some places the seed had never reached, while in others the oats were too thick to thrive. It is the case everywhere. May God speed the work until the seed is everywhere thoroughly sown and returns realized. In bonds,

NOTES ON BRADEN-SCOTT DEBATE.—No. 3.

BY ELDER S. W. L. SCOTT.

WHO shall say that when that idea is translated into the English language from the "sealed book" of ancient Israelitish America that the word "immortal" will not intelligently and properly impress and express it? The same, to my mind, is true of all like words. Omitting the translation of the same ideas, from the book of the Brahmin religion, by the same words, as the work of the learned, we pass on to notice two or three criticisms which are considered as sweltering ones. Mr. Braden had a list of objections hung up to the wall and immediately back of the pulpit, over his moderator's head. From among the list we select a few. First, the words of Alma, recorded on page 286, Book of Mormon, reasoning with a skeptic to convince him of the existence of the great First Cause, deduces an argument from the harmony and revolutions of the universe, as follows:—

The Scriptures are laid before thee, yea, and all things denote there is a God; yea, even the earth, and all things that are upon the face of it, yea, and its motion; yea, and also all the planets which move in their regular form, doth witness that there is a Supreme Creator.

From this Mr. Braden inferred that the Copernican system of astronomy was known to the Israelites on the American continent. He adds:—

And it is a modern discovery.

Just here, his moderator posted him in a whisper,

The Copernican system is about three hundred years old, as to discovery.

We thought the Holy Spirit was as wise six hundred years B. C., or 6,000 B. C. for that matter, as it was in the fifteenth century of the Christian era. But we took occasion to inform him that Plato went to school in Egypt and taught that the earth was a globe and, "its motion the artificer of day and night;" and that according to Berosus, Abraham was Skilled in the knowledge of the heavens.

It was only seventy-four years B. C. when Alma made the statement. It was only six years B. C. when Helaman said,

It is the earth that moveth.

That Galileo was not the first to teach the Copernican philosophy, the following is in point:—

The ancients discovered the rotundity of the earth, and the difference of local time, and of the hour of the day between places of different longitude; knew the causes and laws of eclipses, and constructed tables which give the motion of sun, moon, and stars, and the annual motion of the earth. The annual revolution of the sun was mapped out and divided into twelve signs known as the zodiac; was preserved in the Almagest, of Ptolemy; a work which remained authority for sixteen hundred years.—Johnson's Universal Ency.

You see, the Nephite learning came from Egypt, and is in harmony with it. And this objection falls harmless, and I turned to Mr. Braden's moderator and told him he had misinformed his champion, and to make one more effort. The question of the manufacture of glass, as the Book of Mormon records its use, came up, with other objections, to be noticed; but a quotation from Smith's Bible Dictionary and the following extract settled it:—

The origin of glass dates back less than three thousand years before the Christian era. All modern authorities unite in the statement that it was known to the Egyptians many centuries before our era. Such was the skill of the Egyptians in glassmaking that they counterfeited the amethyst and other precious stones worn as ornaments. Glass was used by the Egyptians even for making coffins. They employed it for drinking vessels and mosaic work, figures of deities, and sacred emblems, in which they attained excellent workmanship and surprising brilliancy.—Hist. Great Inventions, F. B. Wilkie, M. A.

Strange, not a criticism will stand the test of even modern research and discovery. Once more we approach one of those crushing and withering (?) objections that display profound scholarship! Samuel's prophecy of the first coming of Christ, his suffering and agony recorded on page 147 of the Book of Mormon. The damning statement is,

For behold, blood cometh from every pore.

"There," say our opponents, "is the circulation of the blood mentioned hundreds of years before the Christian era. Harvey discovered the circulatory system in 1619." I was really surprised, dazed, at Mr. Braden, and simply told him to consider what a spectacle he would make of himself should he be called up before a corps of physicians or professors of physiology and required to describe the circulation of the blood and he would proceed to describe a "capillary congestion." The people began to lose confidence in Mr. Braden's ability as a scholar when this came out like a thunder peal. Mr. Harvey makes the discovery in 1619. Did God know anything about the "venous" and "arterial" systems of circulation previous to that time? Our opponents argued that he did not. Now, let us see if the prophets on the Eastern Continent knew of the manner Christ was to suffer when in the garden.

And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.—Luke 22: 44.

And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer.—Luke 24: 46.

Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all things the prophets have spoken: Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory.—Luke 24: 25, 26.

What was the manner of this suffering or its intensity? So intense that "great drops of blood" exuded from the "pores." What was it that was written of this agony?

Thus it behooved Christ to suffer.

Who will now say that the prophets did not understand the outward effect of this agony by the "Spirit of Christ which was in them" on the Eastern Continent? And if on the Eastern, why not Samuel by the same Spirit, on the "land shadowing with wings?"

Mr. Braden tried the strength of his erudition on Isaiah chapter 29. That the vision referred to in the eleventh verse "was the vision of the prophet." But the prophet emphatically says:—

But the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed.

He also tried to apply the entire prophecy to Jerusalem or the Jews, but Isaiah applies it to "the multitude of all the nations" that should fight against the Jews or Jerusalem. (Verse 7.) And Luke 21: 24 records Jesus as denominating the nations engaging in this opposition, "Gentiles." Moreover, this prophecy of Isaiah was to be accomplished in the day when creeds were to be the popularized standard of religious conduct and their framers unwilling to leave man free with the pinions of his genius untied by ecclesiastical red tape. And the work outlined in this prophecy was to register itself above that; for at the time

Their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men.

Again, it was to receive accomplishment after John's day, and at a time when the temperance cause would be popular.

They are drunken, but not with wine, they stagger, but not with strong drink.

The revelator's inspired vision rested on the same mass of conglomerate, meaningless, senseless, formal, spiritual drowsiness and stupefaction. "The spirit of deep sleep" has locked the nations in. (Rev. 17: 3, 6; 18: 3; 14: 18.) This great poisonous "vine," grew upon the soil adapted to its culture, carefully watched and nurtured by zealous friends, developed with ominous rapidity, fertilized by darkness, superstition, and abomination, until its far-reaching branches, lengthening age by age, threw their shadows all over the world; its roots struck deep and widespreading into the earth. The parent trunk sent forth its supports, and the odors of its blossomings lulled to sleep the vigilance and conscience of the "inhabitants of the whole earth." It was at the time the religionists of the age were inhaling this miasmatic and apostasy-charged atmosphere, that the heavens break the midnight state of intoxication and the earth bursts beneath them, that the revelation of the "marvelous work and a wonder," was to apply. It is the mission of the grand movement here predicted to tear up old formulas by the roots, and scatter to the winds the fetters which have bound the human mind in ruts and channels. The chariot wheels of its divine warfare conducted in peace, and holy power, and light, break down old barriers; and the thunder and "trumpet" blow of its battles summon from the deepest recesses of the heart its best and purest feelings and emotions.

Mr. Braden was given to understand that the time or age for this work to strike the earth is definitely fixed, by the same God who fixed "the bounds" of man's "habitation," and the times when, he should "seek the Lord" (Acts 17: 26, 27); that verse 10, and Isaiah 29: 17-24 were index fingers on the great "guide board," along the prophetic highway; that the prophetic chapter almost entirely passed into the current of the world's history. The restoration of "the house of Israel" since 1853, and the resurrection from the dead of their land since 1846-47 is so universally regarded as a prelude of some great event by the general masses (though to us is an interlude), that we revert for a moment. First, during the first forty years after Jesus uttered the prediction (Luke 21: 24), over eleven hundred thousand Jews came to a miserable death in Jerusalem by famine, pestilence, or the sword. Nor were their sufferings confined to Jerusalem; for wherever a Jew could be found he was treated with contempt, his sufferings made general and intense. The Roman sword and fire did their awful work of death. Famine reigned in the city with such rigor that mothers cooked their children and ate them. Devastation reigned. Added to that, Josephus says that ninety-seven thousand were taken prisoners and sold, until the markets were literally glutted. Herzog's Encyclopedia says:—

Truly the history of the world knows no greater catastrophe than the death struggle of the Jewish nation with the Roman powers.

History states that in A. D. 116 where a great number had been carried captive in all North Africa, troubles with the Romans broke out and did not end until multitudes of the Jews were put to death. And still later, in A. D. 135, another bloody struggle broke out with the Romans in which five hundred and eighty thousand were put to death. But brevity forbids that I should follow the Jews farther in their calamity, except to state that under pagan Rome their lot was hard, while under papal Rome it has been harder. In A. D. 1290 they were expelled from England, and were not allowed to return for about four hundred years. In 1395 they were expelled from France. In 1492 they were expelled from Spain, by Ferdinand and Isabella, under circumstances of atrocious cruelty, which will ever cover the names of Ferdinand and Isabella with inextinguishable infamy. (Kellogg, p. 28.) Slaughtered by war and otherwise by the million, they were reduced in numbers from eight millions to two and one half millions and held in no more respect than the most unappreciable beast of the field, made to pay in France the same toll when crossing a bridge or passing a gate that would have to be paid for a donkey to pass the same place. But the tables have been turned. The French government has been made to take off its hat and make a low bow to the Hebrew bankers. In 1290 the Jews were expelled from England but history says:—

The first act in the modern emancipation of the Jews was the enfranchisement of the Jews in England in 1753.—Kellogg p. 160.

It is further stated that where the victories of the French began, Jews once more were accounted men.—Kellogg p. 141.

In the year 1755 Moses Mendelssohn, a student of great culture and almost boundless influence over his people, published the first of his writings, which prepared his people for the great change that was about to dawn upon them. In 1784 Louis XVI. of France abolished the "body tax," which reduced the Jews as far as possible to the level of beasts. In 1787 Frederick William of Prussia repealed many of the oppressive laws against the Jews. In 1788 Louis XVI. appointed a royal commission to remodel on principles of justice all laws concerning the Jews. When the French revolution arose the emancipation of the Jews in France became complete, and as it spread over Europe there went with it everywhere the proclamation of liberty to the Jews. (Kellogg, p. 198.)

In 1805 Alexander I. of Russia revoked the edict by which the Jews had been excluded from the dominion of the Czar. In 1809 Baden, in 1813 Prussia, also Denmark, followed the other states of Europe. We might carry this train of thought into a volume of pages, but I believe, reader, that you can see the great hand of God stretching out (Isaiah 29) all over the century. Ah, the prophet-bards of Israel are about to take down their harps from the weeping willows and intone their sweeping hallelujahs of jubilee and thanksgiving because of release from bondage and woe! Reader, Isaiah predicted that "a little while" after the record of Joseph should come forth to be united with that of Judah, that Jacob's face should lose its paleness consequent on "transgression" and "captivity." (Isa. 29: 22; Ezra 9: 6, 7.)

The Jewish Rabbi of London, in a sermon, 1851, said:—

We are happily emerging from the darkness into which transgression, persecution of unparalleled intensity and duration had banished us. Our domestic social, and political life is assuming a brightness which we feel assured will become more and more cheering.—Hand of God in Hist., Hollis Reader.

The little leaven working in the Gentile dough begins to crack open the casings, and the prayers of holy prophets on bended knees and with tear-dimpled cheeks, of centuries ago, are blooming in the "golden censer" "before God;" are being answered on earth.

Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake, as in the ancient days as in the generations of old.—Isa. 51: 9.

No marvel that Prof. Gratz, an eminent Jewish historian, should break out,

Can a nation be born in a day? or can a nation be born again? Yet in one nation a new birth appears.

He adds:—

Such a miracle deserves the closest attention of every man.

And Mendelssohn,

At the beginning of this period my nation was kept at such distance from all culture that one might think the impossibility of any improvement, and yet she arose with such marvelous quickness out of her abasement as if she had a prophetic calling unto her. Arise, arise, shake off the dust; loose the bands of thy chain, O captive daughter!—Kellogg, Reader.

He whose word is "forever settled in heaven" says that this wonderful transformation was to be preceded "a little while" by the establishment of "a marvelous work and a wonder" that should effectually throttle the "creeds" and nullify "the wisdom of the wise." And though moving along in the majesty of the power of God, Mr. Braden won't open his eyes to see it. We told Mr. B. that his efforts to overthrow it had all proven futile; and that the identical points at which his unholy and unjust warfare had been waged were populous with genuine, whole-souled, honorable, pure, and dignified Latter Day Saints, who from the lofty heights were looking down on him and his efforts with pity and contempt; that his colossal bulwarks of slander, vituperation, and obloquy, were no more durable barriers against the invincible and onward march of the cause than are the babe's sand heaps to stay the tides of the mighty Atlantic; that the cause of Christ stands to-day with brow uplifted facing a magnificent future. With loins girt for the race, with unfettered hands and fountains of unmeasured light, it stands as the representative of God.

With what precision, then, does the record of Joseph join hands with the prophecy before us:—

Wherefore the Lord God will proceed to make bare his arm in the eyes of all the nations, in bringing about his covenants and his gospel, unto those who are of the house of Israel. Wherefore, he will bring them again out of captivity, and they shall be gathered together to the lands of their inheritance: and they shall be brought out of obscurity, and out of darkness: and they shall know that the Lord is their Savior and their Redeemer, the mighty one of Israel. . . . And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord.—Book of Mormon, p. 50.

And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel [people of Israel], . . . that distress her, shall be as the dream of a night vision.—Isa. 29: 7.

Are they not a unit in their testimony? And as the Israelites are now gathering home, may we not look for an answer in Hebrew?

Again, the New Testament was the standard for eighteen hundred years before the Book of Mormon was translated and given to the world, and the Book of Mormon is right in coming out and maintaining it now.

And the angel spake unto me, saying, These last records which thou hast seen among the Gentiles, shall establish the truth of the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.—1 Nephi 3: 43. (See also 3: 26.)

Is there not strength in their united testimony? Can it be condemned, then, by the rule,

He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son?

Does it not harmonize with,

Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God?

Mr. Braden asserted that thirteen chapters of the book of Isaiah were copied into the Book of Mormon "word for word," with King James' imperfections; notwithstanding the book claims that the people possessed not only the writings of Isaiah, but also the writings of the prophets, and the law, down to the third chapter of Jeremiah. We demanded to have a committee appointed, composed of parties selected by both speakers or both moderators, to examine into the matter, but Mr. Braden would not and did not agree. It is simply false, and that may be the reason he failed. But how will we satisfy him? If the Book of Mormon is in harmony with the Bible in teaching, in doctrine, and in sentiment, it is stolen from the Bible; if it differs any in phraseology, but contains the same thought as the Bible, it is plagiarized; if it contain some words that our opponent thinks are not as old as the ancient originals, why, it originated in the brain of Solomon Spalding, or the "one brain" as his language appeared. It reminds us of Lorenzo Dow's perplexity when considering "predestination,"

You shall and you shan't,
You will and you won't,
You can and you can't;
You'll be damned if you do,
You'll be damned if you don't.

You are gone, any way you turn; so the Book of Mormon is a fraud any way we fix it!

But once more on the question of "agreement." Ezekiel was commanded to write upon one stick:—

For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick.

From this it is evident that not only the sacred writings of the inspired prophets of Joseph's tribe, as by Manasseh, were to come forth and unite, but the records of the residue of the ten tribes must come to light and be joined with the writings of Judah.

Thou fool, that shall say, A Bible, we have got a Bible, and we need no more Bible . . . Know ye not that I, the Lord your God, have created all men, and that I remember those who are upon the isles of the sea; and that I rule in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; and I bring forth my word, unto the children of men, yea, even upon all the nations of the earth? Wherefore murmur ye, because that ye shall receive more of my word? Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another? Wherefore, I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another. And when the two nations shall run together, the testimony of the two nations shall run together also. And I do this that I may prove unto many, that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and that I speak forth my words according to mine own pleasure.—2 Nephi 12: 7.

Is not this a striking harmony? The two books join hands; they are one in describing these things, and can we longer wonder that this chimes in so beautifully with Isaiah 29 to cause those "that murmur," to "learn doctrine"?

The great God is represented in the above to be "no respecter of persons," the same as he taught the Apostle Peter (Acts 10:35). That he designs or "wills" their salvation wherever they sojourn and in every age. There being no other name under heaven nor among men through whom this salvation is given save the name of Christ (Acts 4:12), is it unreasonable, or incompatible with the character of the impartial and unchangeable God, to "reveal" that name not only to those who dwelt upon this American soil in the ages far gone by, but in "every nation"? Is it unreasonable that such a revelation of the name of Jesus to them should be written? Is it unreasonable that such words should be preserved?

The words of the Lord are pure words: as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times. Thou shalt keep them, O Lord, thou shalt preserve them from this generation for ever.—Ps. 12: 6, 7.

Is it unreasonable to believe that such a revelation or "words" should be brought to light? In the great "restitution" is it unreasonable to believe that the records of all nations will burst out of the labyrinth of obscurity, when we consider the teaching of Jesus that "nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest; neither anything hid that shall not be known and come abroad."—Luke 8: 17?

The solution is rendered easy. These considerations take the Book of Mormon so far out of the reach of the Presbyterian brain of Spalding, or any other brain, aside from inspiration, that it is wonderful how any person could so conclude, after examination. These words, then, were to come abroad at the time fixed by divinity; viz., the restoration of the land of Palestine and of the Jews, or a "little while" before. Please look at that land for the last eighteen hundred years through the tubes of history.

Eighteen centuries of war, ruin, and neglect, have passed over it. Its valleys have been cropped for ages without the least attempt at fertilization. Its terraced walls have been allowed to crumble, and its soil has washed down its ravines, leaving the hill-sides rocky and sterile. Its trees have been cut down and never replaced. Its fields have been desolate. Its structures pillaged and all its improvements ruthlessly destroyed. A land of ruins without man or beast. Everywhere on plain or mountain, in rocky desert, or on beetling cliff, the spoiler's hand has rested."—McClintock and Strong's Ency., Art. Palestine.

Quite different from the condition it was in when God through Moses sought to lead the children of Israel to it "as a land flowing with milk and honey." (Ex. 4: 8. See also Lev. 20: 24; Deut. 6: 3; 8: 7; 11: 11, 12; Josh. 5: 6.)

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field?

Now look at the land through this:—

A. D. 1868. The Jews have been returning to the Holy Land for some time, and are increasing, going to their beloved Canaan from many parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. . . . I have seen much good country in Europe and America, but none to compare with Palestine. Its fruitfulness is uncommon.—Louis Van Buren. (Traveler to Jerusalem.)

Again:—

Everywhere, from Dan to Beersheba, I saw evidences of Jewish return and the renewed energy and activity of the Jewish race. As a people the Jews are flocking back to the land of their forefathers in great numbers and from all parts of Europe. In Jerusalem and its neighborhood particularly, every plot of ground for sale is eagerly bought by them.—Correspondent of the London Times, 1875.

The products of the soil range from peas, beans, wheat, and barley to grapes, figs, olives, and apricots. Lemons, oranges, dates, and melons are abundant. Average annual rainfall at Jerusalem is sixty inches. (Our own Atlantic seaboard is only forty-five inches. Pacific, same climate as Palestine only twenty-five.)—Herzog's Ency., Art Palestine.

As regards the industrial arts, souvenirs for the pilgrims, rosaries, carved work in olive wood, and mother of pearl are produced at Jerusalem and exported.—Brit. Ency., Art. Pal.

Truly the "withered fig tree" of Jewish nationality begins to bud and bloom. The clouds remove from off the eastern horizon. Ah, Israel, thy land has been invaded by one who is changing thy service from the slow swinging censer of ancient and eastern into the quick healing measure of modern resolve!

One more little criticism, and we will conclude notes. The manufacture of "brass" came up for a share of the polishing in the furnace of Mr. Braden's criticism. It, too, is a modern development:—

The ancients knew nothing of its manufacture. Where the Bible speaks of "brass," it is a mistranslation. It means copper.

Well, could not the Book of Mormon writers manufacture and use the same material the Bible writers used? Could it not be called by the same name in their language which when translated into English would express our idea of brass, the same as the translation of the Bible from the Hebrew into English gave the translators the idea of brass, and they so put it?

But notice whether the ancients knew nothing of brass and its manufacture.

"Brass," an important alloy consisting of copper and zinc. The proportion in which the two metals are combined differ considerably in different kinds of brass. It is malleable and ductile so that it can be easily rolled into thin sheets, or hammered into any desired shape. This alloy was known to the ancients and was made by them, before they had any knowledge of the metal zinc as such. It was well known by Strabo, who describes the mode of manufacture from the zinkiferous ore (calamin) and calls the alloy, "orichalc." Again, brass was certainly made long before anything definite had been learned in regard to the metal zinc, and it is not at all unlikely the same was the case with bronze and one of its constituents, tin.—Century Dictionary.

Now, friendly Herald, we have hastily jotted you a few notes on the recent conflict, and if they should do some warrior the good they did me, I shall be satisfied. The objections to our faith are frivolous. They vanish before examination and facts like mists before the rising dawn; like the shadows nursed under the brow of the mountain in the empire of night fade away before the king of day, so do the objections to the Book of Mormon fade before the rays of truth.

The report of the Mission to Lepers states that in India alone there are 100,000 lepers; in Japan, 200,000; and in China probably 300,000. Cheering results have followed the spiritual ministry carried on in its numerous hospitals.

The Nawab of Rampur, India, paid two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for occasional visits of an English army surgeon during a period of three months.

Miscellaneous Department.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT FOR DISTRICT OF NEVADA.

The Saints of the district of Nevada will please take notice that Bro. D. I. Jones, the former Bishop's agent for said district of the Reorganized Church, has resigned the agency on account of moving out of said district, and upon recommendation of the agent and Bro. Hawkins, president of said district, Bro. David R. Jones, of Sheridan, Douglas county, Nevada, has been appointed Bishop's agent and is duly authorized to act in behalf of the said Reorganized Church as such. Please remember the address of Bro. David R. Jones and aid him as it is possible so to do, in his work.

The thanks of the Bishopric are hereby extended to Bro. D. I. Jones for his faithful and wise service as agent of said district, and we trust he may be able to continue in service for the Master's cause in his new residence. In behalf of the Bishopric,

Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 2, 1895.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To whom it may concern:—As times are very close as to money matters in this part of the Lord's vineyard in consequence of the protracted drouth of last season, and in order that the gospel may be preached and the poor cared for, it behooves each and every Latter Day Saint to do what he can possibly do in the way of contributing to the church fund to relieve the distressed and care for the families of the active ministry. I hope that missionaries and branch presidents of this the Southern district of Nebraska will see to it that all who can will so contribute by way of tithes or offerings; and if they know of any of our members who are in distress, to be prompt in reporting the same to me, so that we may be able to look after them in proper time.

Respectfully,

J. W. WALDSMITH,

Bishop's Agent.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska,
December 31, 1894.

NOTICES.

We hereby give notice, by order of the Second Quorum of Teachers, that we shall present a resolution at the April conference of 1895 to amend the Rules of Representation by inserting therein as follows:—

Resolved, that all teachers are, ex officio, entitled to voice and vote in General Conference.

N. W. SMITH, Pres.

A. K. ANDERSON.

D. D. YOUNG.

To the Elders of the Eastern Michigan District:—There has been neglect by some of the ministry in reporting some of the marriages in this district, and it has caused Bro. Stebbins and the writer a considerable loss of time and expense in trying to rectify the same, which could be avoided by a little care on their part. Also branch clerks will please make their reports as plain as possible, for sometimes a name or date by not being plain will be put on district record one way and at headquarters another, which in after years may cause considerable trouble.

Respectfully, your brother in Christ,

A. E. HICKS, Sec.

RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE ON SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOK.

Editors Herald:—On reading from Bro. F. G. Pitt, chairman of committee, in last issue, complaining of the slow progress of the work intrusted in the hands of the committee on Sunday school song book, it made me feel somewhat sad, as I am one interested in this feature of the work and anxious to see it pushed to completion. This thought moved me to respond to Bro. Pitt's call on all lovers of music, urging them to devote some of their time on winter evenings for this work.

The proper question should be applied to all concerned in this matter, Why is it that the contributions are so few in proportion to what they should be? Is it because the gifted talent in our church is slothful, or not interested? Are those able willing to devote some of their time and talent to our Sunday school song book? These are questions of vital importance, especially to our church musicians.

I don't wish to directly answer why it is, or what is the cause, or reason the committee has not received larger contributions for the book. I will, however, venture to answer and give my reason for it; and probably other musicians have the same reasons, hence my answer will apply to other composers of music.

It is impossible to build a house without the proper material. The carpenter who contracts to build a house will first wait till the material is brought on the location; he then goes to work and builds. The same rule can be applied to the musician as the carpenter; the composer of music cannot compose without the material—the words; hence, like the carpenter, is waiting for the material—the words. When the words or hymns are furnished him, he goes to work and composes music to them.

The writer has written to the committee on song book long ago for hymns or words adapted to our faith, and the answer comes back, "We have none to send you." I am at a loss to know who is to be blamed, whether the committee or the poets of our church, in not sending original hymns suitable to our faith. I am forced to the conclusion, however, that the main cause of the slow progress of the Sunday school song book should be rested mostly on the poets, and not on the musicians, as stated by Bro. Pitt. What has become of our poets? The musicians are on a strike for want of material—poetry. This is the musicians' demand, and when it is furnished they will go to work with all their might.

I wish to state before I close, a promise made by one of our most noted and able missionaries. He promised faithfully to send the writer some original hymns for the song book. I happened to meet him in his travels, and heard him preach a powerful sermon on the priesthood. This brother will remember his promise when he reads this. Let us all work in connection with the music committee. Its members urge all musicians to come to the rescue, and states that some of our best musicians have not been heard from. Let us have a system to work by.

How many poets are willing to furnish the committee with original hymns, adapted to our faith? Let us show our faith by our works. If all the poets and musicians go to work in harmony with the music committee, then Bro. Pitt will not have cause to complain and urge the coöperation of the gifted talent of the church from time to time. Hoping the few thoughts presented will be received in the same spirit as written and intended by the writer; and further promising to devote some of my leisure time with yours for the completion of our Sunday school song book,

A WORKER.

FIFTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

The year 1894 has just left us. As we start on 1895 let us use every opportunity to preach that presents itself; and if none presents itself, then make one. See the many calls on every hand; honest souls starving for heaven's truth. Let us keep pace with and help the rapid spread of light. About the 1st of March I will send you blanks to report your work for the conference year. If you have changed your address and have not notified me of it please do so at once, so that the blanks may reach you. If you fail to receive a blank report, send items anyway. My permanent address is Courts, Montana.

J. H. WELLS, Pres.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

We hope every branch in the district will send in a full report of the branch, also every officer of the district, so that a complete report can be sent to the Church Secretary. Send all reports to John Heide, Fulton, Jackson county, Iowa. The trains will be met at Maquoketa on Friday, the 1st. All come on early train who possibly can. Those coming from the north come on the early freight to Center Junction on Thursday, then go to Bro. W. B. Thomas' till the Friday morning train leaves for Maquoketa. All come who can. Bring God's Spirit and the love for his cause with you, then we will be blessed. The Sunday school officers will send in their programme.

J. S. ROTH, Pres.

Decatur district conference will convene at Lamoni, Iowa, Saturday and Sunday, February 9 and 10, 1895, at ten a. m. All branch presidents are requested to have their branch reports made out on regular blanks and sent to Bro. E. L. Page or myself at Lamoni, no later than February 5, if practicable. Eleven branches of the twelve in this district reported to last October conference, but we want the twelve to report this time. As it is our yearly business conference when district officers will be elected, and delegates for the General Conference, come, Saints, every one of you that can, and assume your share of the responsibility that attaches to you in these gatherings. Live Saints who love this work do their duty and then they can with confidence trust our Father that he will guide his work to a glorious triumph. All the ministry should have written reports, and those who live at a distance and cannot bring them should not forget that it will only take a two-cent stamp to send their report. Are there any in our district that have not that much interest?

Campbell, was born September 29, 1885, at Pleasanton, Decatur county, Iowa, and died at the same place, of inflammatory rheumatism December 29, 1894. The funeral services were conducted at the home by Elder A. W. Moffet, and the interment took place in the family burying ground.

TWITCHELL.—Jasper H. Twitchell was born in Meigs county, Ohio, September 1, 1820; was baptized in Monterey county, California, September 7, 1873, by Elder J. R. Cook, confirmed by Elder C. W. Wandel; was ordained to the office of priest September 21, 1873, by Elder C. W. Wandel; died October 26, 1894, near San Juan, California, where he had lived for thirty years. He was a man well respected in the community in which he lived, and the funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends, not of the church. The funeral services were held in the Congregational church, which was well filled. Funeral sermon by Elder C. W. Hawkins; subject, Resurrection and eternal judgment.

LEWIS.—Maggie, daughter of Bro. Joseph R. and Sr. Susana Lewis, died at her home, Kansas City, Missouri, November 17, 1894. She was born January 30, 1890. She was sick but a short time and her loss is mourned by many. Funeral service by William Lewis, of St. Joseph, and A. Allen.

KOEHLER.—Grace Sophie, daughter of Bro. George and Sr. Julia Koehler, died at her home, Kansas City, Missouri, December 12, 1894, aged 4 years, 2 months, 3 days. She was sick but four days. She was the youngest of ten children; loved by all who knew her. Funeral service by Arthur Allen.

ROTH.—Monday at two p. m. occurred the funeral of Elsie Grace, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Roth, aged 15 months. She was a bright, promising little girl, the pride of the home, the joy of their hearts. A large company of neighbors and friends were present to extend sympathy and help. The services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Kight from their home and the body of little Grace was laid to rest.—Grinnell Herald, December 4, 1894.

She was the grandchild of Elder J. S. Roth.

BURNS.—At Machias, Maine, November 24, 1894, Bro. John W. Burns, of gunshot wound received the night of October 17. Bro. Burns was born in Manchester, England, in 1852; in 1870 he came to Machias where he married, and has since resided. As a business man his integrity and jovial disposition won for him a host of friends all over Washington county. The shock was terrible which his family and friends sustained, when this news reached them that, while walking the town road that beautiful moonlight night, through the carelessness of a man he had been mistaken for a bear, and shot. He was alone on the road nearly two hours before help arrived. Bleeding freely, growing numb with cold, he prepared to die; but weeks of suffering were before him ere the death angel came. When he knew that the end was near he said, "Is it possible that God is taking me home?" His thoughts were of the wife and seven little ones left behind. In 1886 he was baptized by Elder F. M. Sheehy and lived an exemplary life. Bro. Burns was a Master Mason, and was buried by the order. Sermon by Elder U. W. Greene.

BLODGETT.—Myrtle May, daughter of Bro. Hyrum L. and Sr. Doria A. Blodgett, was born May 1, 1891, and died December 28, 1894. Funeral services from the Christian chapel, Edgar neighborhood, by Reverend Evans, of the Baptist Church. Interment in the Edgar cemetery.

COOK.—Alice A. Cook was born at Sutton, Canada, November 17, 1841, and died December 21, 1894, at her home near Marathon, Iowa. She was married to Harris Cook, October 22, 1864. There were born to their happy union seven children, six girls and one boy, all of whom survive her. Sr. Cook was baptized in 1867 by Joseph Smith at Plano, Illinois, and remained firm in the faith. She passed peacefully away to the life beyond after an illness of two weeks. The sister was a cheerful and dutiful wife, a loving and affectionate mother, joyous in prosperity and hopeful in adversity. Funeral was conducted at her home, December 22, by Elders C. J. Hunt and Edmund Ford. The family have the sympathy of Saints and friends.

MANSFIELD.—At Jonesport, Maine, November 26, 1894, Mr. E. A. Mansfield, after an illness of about five years. He was born in Portland in 1817, was married to Miss Lois Sawyer in 1836. Nine children were born to them. He was one of the principal business men of the town for over fifty years. Of excellent moral habits, sympathetic with those in distress, the companion and councilor of his own children till he lost the power of speech. He is greatly missed by all. One beautiful feature of this family was that during those years of suffering his children and grandchildren watched by his side every night; with their own hands ministering to his every need. A believer in the gospel. Funeral in the Congregational church in the presence of many friends. Sermon by Elder U. W. Greene.

MILLER.—At Blenheim, Kent county, Ontario, December 18, 1894, Sr. Mary Miller, aged 75 years, 7 months, and 27 days. Funeral services were conducted in the Saints' church, Elder J. H. Tyrrell in charge; sermon by Elder S. Brown, after which the remains were interred in Evergreen cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. A goodly number of friends and neighbors turned out to pay their last tribute of respect to her. She was born in Derryoghill, Tyrone county, Ireland. Her maiden name was Mary Dilley. She was married to Thomas Miller December 3, 1840, and with her husband emigrated to this country in 1842, and settled in the township of Seneca, Haldimand county, and endured many of the hardships common to frontier life. They moved from there to West Tilbury, and from there to this locality in 1868 or 1869, and since 1883 have resided in the town of Blenheim. Nearly two years ago she had a paralytic stroke which left her almost helpless, and a little over one year ago a second one, and on the morning of the 18th a third and fatal one. She was a member of the Church of England a number of years, but when she heard the true gospel preached by Brn. J. H. Lake and Joseph S. Snively she obeyed it. She was baptized October 31, 1871, at Buckhorn, Ontario, by J. H. Lake, and confirmed by Joseph S. Snively, and was always a faithful attendant at church as long as she was able to go, and died strong in the faith. She reared to womanhood and manhood three daughters and two sons, and leaves a husband, two daughters, and one son to mourn. She was a faithful wife, a kind mother, and a devoted Christian woman.

BELL.—George, son of Mr. A. C. and Sr. Bell, died December 26, 1894, aged 18 years, 4 months, and 16 days. He was afflicted from childhood, and as he grew older his affections for home and his parents increased. He was confined to his bed six days at his last sickness, when death released him from his sufferings. At his request Elder William Johnson preached his funeral sermon from Hebrews 2: 1-6.

INTELLIGENCE OF MICROSCOPIC ORGANISMS.

In the infancy of the race, as with races still in their infancy, we find all human motives and sentiments attributed to the whole animal creation; even trees and plants are credited with consciousness; and now apparently we are coming again to the same point. Some scientists are beginning to ascribe will, consciousness, choice,—in fact, all the attributes of mind,—to the microscopic organisms of some of which it is hard to say whether they belong to the animal or vegetable kingdom. The subject is treated by A. Pettit in an article in the Revue Encyclopedique, September 15. He says:—

“Although the microscope does not enable us to detect, in microorganisms, the least rudiment of organization, the study of their biology forces us to admit the existence of a directive principle, an obscure consciousness: The simplest types of animal life afford evidences of a complex mentality, such as at first sight appears wholly incompatible with the simplicity of their physical structure. Their rapid and incessant movements are not ascribable to chance. In the presence of varied conditions they exercise choice with astonishing precision. An ingenious German physiologist, M. Engelmann, has afforded us a very admirable proof of the exercise of will by these animalcules. Like all organized beings, bacteria require oxygen. Under ordinary circumstances, this is in sufficient supply in the ambient medium in which they float, but when the supply is restricted, the bacteria are not slow to move to points in communication with the exterior, where oxygen is abundant. The experiment may be varied by placing the same microbes in contact with green algæ, which disengage oxygen on exposure to light. In this case also the animalcules group themselves around the points of disengagement of the gas. If the light is obscured, the microbes abandon the grains of chlorophyl which no longer give off oxygen. This is not the only observed fact in this connection. M. Bolbiani, who has devoted the greater part of his life to the study of the lower animals, observed that in a silkworm disease (febrine) the pathogenic bacteria disposed themselves around the fragments of leaf in the intestines of their host because, where these are decomposed, oxygen is given off in the greatest abundance; the interest of these facts is not merely speculative, it is quite possible that it may afford a clew to the origin and nature of certain germ diseases. In the blood, the microbes group themselves around the corpuscles, for their function is to carry oxygen to different parts of the body. . . . The bacteria are equally capable of appreciating the different colors of the spectrum. They invariably place themselves on the parts illuminated by the red and the violet.

“With the amœba we pass to a higher stage in the series of being; the structure is not a whit more perfected. The gelatinous mass of protoplasm which constitutes the animal is microscopic, and shows no sign of differentiation, but it is capable of putting out filaments called pseudopodes, and of going in quest of food; moreover, it is capable of distinguishing between nutritive and inert substances. At the same time that it incloses the former in the tissue of its pseudopods, where it is rapidly digested, it rejects the others. In his quest of food the amoeba goes straight for certain substances with a precision so remarkable that it looks as if the creature were furnished with a membrane, so fine as to be invisible, which affords indications of everything in its proximity. . . .

“The infusoria consist of a small protoplasmic mass prettily designed, often elegant. They are covered with a great number of movable hairs, which enable them to perform their curious evolutions in the water. There is nothing more wonderful than the organization of these microzoa. Notwithstanding their insignificant size, they attain an organic perfection not surpassed by even the highest animals. They possess a mouth, the rudiments of an alimentary canal, eyes, and even offensive arms. If the admirable perfection of these muscles excites our attention, their perpetual activity deserves it still more. Infusoria are never at rest. Their life is a symbol of perpetual motion. They do not even repose at night as plants do. . . . At the moment of reproduction, one species of infusoria (the Stentor) splits into two parts, forming two new individuals of which it is impossible to say which is parent and which is offspring. The separation is very gradual; for a time the connection is very slender, but the two individuals move in such perfect unison as to suggest something akin to a common nervous system.

“Infusoria in general are quite capable of selecting their food. Those which live fixed lives, and these are the minority, have to content themselves with a selection from what comes their way. Those which are free show a well-developed taste, and are continually on the hunt for its gratification. M. Maupas has very successfully devoted himself to the study of these creatures. He has found the hunting species in possession of most redoubtable weapons: a portion of the body is covered with a considerable number of darts, probably venomous, which they are able to discharge at will upon the enemy or their prey. The victim when shot is at once arrested in its course, but not immediately rendered motionless. The hunter turns and returns slowly to the place as if surveying his victim. The absence of organs of sense frequently hinders him from recovering his prey, in which case he at once proceeds on a fresh hunt. Incessant activity is necessary to the gratification of his imperious appetite.

"One of these redoubtable hunters (Didinium nasutum) merits special notice. It is an infusorian, shaped like a barrel, rounded at the bottom, the top end level, with a horn rising from its center, and furnished with slender but solid darts. It devotes itself entirely to the quest of one species of infusoria which lives ordinarily in company with the numerous other animalcules. The didinium swims about capriciously until one of his chosen victims comes within range, when the observer is surprised to see the beating of its ciliary appendages cease; the prey lies inanimate, pierced by the fatal darts of the Didinium. The latter approaches rapidly, projects its horn, fixes it upon his prey, which it incloses, distending the mouth into an enormous funnel. In some cases it appears that some of these animalcules unite their forces for a joint assault upon larger game. The little flagellates, the Bodos, invariably feed on infusoria (Colopodes) a hundred times as large as themselves, uniting in troops of forty or fifty for the attack."—Translated for The Literary Digest.

BELLAMY ON HUMAN LOVE.

Jesus Christ did not come to teach any new or special doctrine as to the family relation, nor yet to lay fresh emphasis on the old one, writes Edward Bellamy in the January Ladies' Home Journal. There was no need that he should. Nature taught men to love their children. Christ came to preach not the love of kindred, but of humanity. He came not to teach men to love the children of their own bodies, but the children of God's Spirit, their brothers by virtue of the breath of the one Father in their nostrils, their fellow men. So far was Christ from seeking to lay an added emphasis on the duty of family devotion that again and again by example and by precept he warns us not to permit the ties of the lesser family to interfere with our duty and devotion to the greater family of mankind. That gentle reminder of the boy to the doting mother as to the superior importance of the great Father's business even to a mother's claims, gave the note of his subsequent teachings on this matter. Always Christ was seeking to call men out of the narrow paradise of selfish loves and interests, and make them realize the larger ties and greater duties that were theirs as sons, not of men, but of man, as brothers, not of this man or that man, but of all men. What perversion of the meaning of Christmas could then be more curiously complete than the consecration of the day to a family feast with curtains drawn against the world without?

There hangs upon my study wall a picture—a copy of an old print of the nineteenth century—representing just such a family feast on Christmas Day, save that the curtains not being closely drawn permit to be seen two beggar children, with gaunt and pallid faces, standing without, covered with the falling snow as they peer in with longing, hungry eyes at the festival. It is a picture that tells the whole story and typifies the age.

The January Review of Reviews, in its "Progress of the World" (editorial) department, discusses present problems in public health administration, municipal reform in the United States, the movement for deep waterways from the great lakes to the Atlantic Ocean, the Nicaragua Canal question, the proposed arbitration of the boundary dispute between Venezuela and Great Britain, the payment by our government of damages to Canadian seal poachers, the prospects of civil service reform, the demand for a bank-note currency, the change in the Canadian Premiership, the disposition of English visitors to instruct Americans, and the recent action of the American Federation of Labor; among foreign topics receiving treatment in this department are the Armenian question, the war in China, the approaching Parliamentary contest in Great Britain, the London School Board election, South African affairs, the French in Madagascar, and the death of the Princess Bismark.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

IN the October number of the Contemporary Review, Mr. A. N. Jannaris, a Greek scholar, who has devoted his life to the study of his native language, declares that the translation of the Lord's Prayer, as printed in the authorized English version, is not correct. He discusses the subject very learnedly, and indicates with much elaboration of detail, wherein the translation differs from the original recorded in St. Matthew. The appended doxology, as is well known, is spurious. Leaving that out of consideration, and supplying the appropriate diction to give effect to the translation, the prayer would, under his treatment, read somewhat as follows:—

"Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name; thy dominion come; thy (fixed) purpose be done; as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our mere (or simple) bread, and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtor's their's; and let us not fall into a tempter's snare, but deliver us from the evil one."

This translation avoids the words "lead us not into temptation," which have been productive of so much discussion, and which set in the teeth of the words occurring in the epistle of James, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted by God." Altogether the article furnishes quite an addition to biblical literature, but the discovery of so many alleged errors in the translation of such a brief but important connection, does not encourage renewed confidence in the literary accuracy of the remainder of the work.

Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii, sent us the foregoing clipping, which has also appeared in a late issue of the Literary Digest. In the Inspired Translation by Joseph Smith we have these renderings of the Lord's prayer:—

And suffer us not to be led into temptation but deliver us from evil.—Matt. 6: 14.

And let us not be led into temptation; but deliver us from evil.—Luke 11: 4.

The reader will note the harmony between the translation of Mr. Jannaris and that of the Seer, Joseph Smith, and the superiority of both to King James'. The Palmyra Seer produced his translation about sixty years ago. Learned men, Biblical scholars and critics, have made re-translations and corrections in later years that have confirmed the correctness of some renderings of the Inspired Version, though their translations as a whole bear no general comparison with the translation made by inspiration through Mr. Smith, in moral, historical, and doctrinal consistency. It bears internal evidence of divine inspiration in its production.

FACTS AND FIGURES OF 1894.

THE Chicago Tribune statistician presents the following summary of happenings for the year 1894. It is worthy of some study.

As accurately as can be estimated 6,804 lives have been lost upon the ocean, 77 upon inland waters, 3,648 by railroads, 25,071 by disasters abroad, 7,716 by disasters at home. Adding to these 82,570 by battle and 179,910 by pestilence makes a total of 305,790.

The number of legal executions in 1894 was 132, as compared with 126 in 1893, and 107 in 1892.

The total number of persons who have committed suicide in the United States during 1894, as reported by mail and telegraph is 4,912, as compared with 4,436 in 1893, 3,860 in 1892, 3,331 in 1891, 2,640 in 1890, and 2,224 in 1889. The total is considerably larger than of any of the last twelve years. Of this number 3,876 were males, 1,036 females. Physicians still head the list, as compared with professional men, forty-five of them having taken their lives as compared with seven ministers. The causes of suicide were as follows:—

Despondency.....	1,999	Ill health.....	270
Unknown.....	1,310	Domestic infelicity....	241
Insane.....	457	Disappointed love.....	232
Liquor.....	281	Business losses.....	122

In these cases of self-murder 1,729 poisoned themselves, 1,504 shot themselves, 720 hanged themselves, 373 drowned themselves, 347 cut their throats, 83 threw themselves in front of trains, 72 stabbed themselves, 51 threw themselves from roofs and windows, 24 set themselves afire, 5 starved themselves, and 4 blew themselves up with dynamite. The novel feature in this horrible business is that in 1894 poison took the place of the pistol for the first time as the agency of self-murder.

The record of dishonesty continues to be appalling. Embezzlers, defaulters, swindlers, and bank wreckers have succeeded in stealing $25,234,112 of other people's money, as compared with $19,929,692 last year. This is an average of about $2,100,846 per month.

Out of 629 cases reported forty-four stole over $50,000, thirty-seven over $100,000, four over $500,000, and four over $1,000,000.

The summary of defalcations by years from 1878 to 1894 is as follows:—

1878.....	$ 2,784,000	1888.....	$ 2,240,000
1879.....	2,754,000	1889.....	8,600,000
1880-'81.....	4,888,000	1890.....	8,622,956
1882.....	2,900,000	1891.....	19,720,249
1883.....	2,350,000	1892.....	8,837,547
1884.....	22,154,000	1893.....	19,929,692
1885.....	3,475,000	1894.....	25,234,112
1886.....	3,780,000
1887.....	4,550,000	Total.....	$143,809,801

As an offset to the black record of rascality we give the white record of the generous bestowal of money upon churches, colleges, charitable institutions, museums, art galleries, libraries, etc. amounting to $19,697,116, as compared with $33,319,866 last year.

EXPLANATION OF SCRIPTURE.

PLEASE explain Isaiah 38: 18 and Mark 9: 42, 43.

The texts, found in Mark 9: 42, 43 are sufficiently explained, as we think, in the Holy Scriptures (Inspired Translation), to which it would be unnecessary for us to attempt to add.

Isaiah 38: 18, is a part of what Hezekiah, king of Judah, wrote after the reprieve granted of God to him and prolonging his life for a term of fifteen years. His words in this text evidently refer to his body, which would have been consigned to the grave but for the signal goodness of God to him. It is quite true that the grave, the place where men's bodies are deposited, "cannot praise" God; and that death, the separation of the body and spirit, cannot celebrate the glory, fame, honor, or greatness of God. It is equally true that the bodies of men, that part of them that goes to the pit or grave, cannot hope for the truth of God. It was Hezekiah, the living man, that had hope in God's truth outside of the grave; but if he had been cut off when Isaiah said to him,

Set thy house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live (Isa. 38: 1), the years of his probation would have failed; and whether he was wise or foolish in so thinking, he evidently believed that had he then been taken he would have suffered infinite loss, and have lost what he hoped by reason of the fifteen years of prolonged probation to securely gain. This is expressed in the words,

I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.

PROGRESS.

A LITTLE while ago, Rev. David Swing was preaching at the Central Church, Chicago, with a large congregation and glowing prospects, as such things go. But Prof. Swing was taken by death from his work, and after a few trials, Rev. Hillis who had been preaching at Evanston, was called and took Rev. Swing's vacant pulpit, expressly stipulating, however, that he would not try to lead his congregation into Presbyterianism, the church to which he belonged, and from the pulpit of which he came to Chicago to follow in the theological footsteps of Prof. David Swing. It could not be expected that so noted an arrangement as this would pass without some comment from coreligionists, who might, or might not agree with the ways and manners of it. The first we have seen is from Rev. Dr. Hiram W. Thomas, of the People's Church, also of Chicago. His comment came in the course of a sermon, preached in McVicker's theater, the theater of occupation of the People's Church. It is of interest to all who are keeping an eye to the changes and developments in religious affairs in the world; and the conflict now being waged by Dr. Thomas, himself not long since a "Methodist of the Methodists," and others like him to smooth the wrinkles out of theology, and make it easy for unbelieving minds to get to heaven, without the bonds of doctrine. Here is what the Rev. Doctor said, as reported in Chicago Record.

Dr. Hiram W. Thomas yesterday morning awakened his congregation to enthusiasm when he preached the liberal doctrine of nonorthodoxy. It is rare that Dr. Thomas' congregation breaks out into applause, but that which followed his arraignment of some of the members of the Presbyterian assembly yesterday was both hearty and spontaneous.

It was near the close of his liberal and hopeful New Year's sermon. The preacher was speaking of the great men who had died during 1894. Among them he chanced to name Prof. David Swing. The mere mention seemed to awaken certain bitter memories, and he began to attack narrow-minded theologians. He said:—

"Great as was Professor Swing and liberal and hopeful as was his doctrine, it yet did not meet with the approbation of the presbytery, but the great work of Prof. Swing will live without the approbation of Dr. Herrick Johnson and of the presbytery."

INDORSED THESE WORDS WITH APPLAUSE.

He had scarcely concluded his sentence when applause which was as loud and hearty as it was spontaneous broke out from all parts of McVicker's theater. Dr. Thomas continued his arraignment of the presbytery.

"Then, at that memorable meeting at which Dr. Hillis of Evanston was allowed to take charge of the late Prof. Swing's church, Dr. Herrick Johnson said that he regretted the presbytery, with all its theology, could not satisfy the people of Chicago, and that through the channels of that church did not come an equal opportunity for Dr. Hillis. The fault is not with the quantity; it is with the quality. This is a sanitary age. Some people are becoming a little careful what goes into their minds as they are as to what goes into their stomachs."

At these words of the preacher there was another short outbreak of applause.

"Another regret of Dr. Johnson was that from his condition Dr. Hillis, in his new church, would be shut off from preaching sectarianism. I never preach sectarianism. The new preacher of Central Church can preach the love of God and man without preaching sectarianism. And Dr. Johnson thought that before they could consent to Dr. Hillis' appointment the basis of Central Church should be made one of evangelization; and that means the fall of man, original sin, eternal punishment, infant baptism.

"Is it any wonder that such a theology can't satisfy the demands of the people of Chicago? Orthodoxy is an anachronism. It's out of time. We here can sympathize with one part of the pathetic speech of Dr. Johnson—that Presbyterian orthodoxy cannot satisfy. Our regret is that the theology has not kept up with the growth of the world, and that independent churches are not our choice but our necessity. They are a result of reason and conscience in religion."

THE PROGRESS OF THE WORLD.

Dr. Thomas' sermon yesterday morning dealt mostly with the new year and a resumé of the achievements of the last year and of the last century. During the course of his remarks he said:—

"The years always move one way. The years of man move from childhood to youth and to manhood, and finally to death and what may be beyond. Very often we would gladly stay the hand of time to prolong the more happy hours. And yet we would not go back if we could. We would not give up the wealth of experience for the sake of the rose and the dimple in the cheek. Never sing that imaginary song, "Turn Backward, O Time, and Make Me a Child again." One lesson is being emphasized now. There is something lying back of and beyond our western civilization which is worthy of study. There must be something in the religions that were old before Christ was born. A returned missionary once told me that his bishop would not allow him to tell the exact condition of affairs in the heathen countries, for fear that it would influence the collections. We believe that something in the western civilization would help the eastern civilization. With the close of this year the western civilization believes that the eastern man is no longer to be regarded as a poor Heathen. It would be a heavenly gift if some of their missionaries would come over here. The time will come when missionaries will go over there, not to break into their religions as if they were no religions, but to teach them a little of ours.

THE PROGRESS OF THEOLOGY.

"Each year now brings us toward the close of the greatest century of time. This is the more impressive, as with the study of this time we see in it all a growth of humanity, of the thinking as an elevation of the feeling, as a divinization of the whole life of man. The old theology has had to give way before the new; the six-day world has given way before geology, and the belief that this world was made, is and is being kept up like a machine has given way before evolution. A higher criticism has come in and read the Bible and given us a new Old Testament, a new and progressive literature.

"I say to you that never a century on earth rose with so many powerful agents in the field as we see at the close of this century. Never before opened a year so full of promise as will the year 1895. There never was such a year as 1894, and greater will be 1895. Never so many workers in so many fields. Never were the foundations of the useful and the true so firmly laid beneath the feet of man, and never his grasp on nature so wonderful. We are beginning to see why nations live and die: we are getting hold of the great truth of mind and spirit.

THE TROUBLE WITH OLD RELIGIONS.

"Is it possible for any awakened mind to be satisfied with the old answers of religion? They are too small; they go down before the reasoning of this great age. The fact is before us in another light. This century closes with a wonderful growth everywhere and in everything except religion. Everywhere else truth and reason is free and unmuzzled. Science is not only free; it rests upon its own foundation and authority. In religion, only, is the truth bound and an effort made to keep it bound to the creeds of the past. I tell you that the lesson of the year is that religion ought to be made free. Let it ask no authority but the authority of truth. Put it on this basis and we can face the world of things and of books. Do that and there will be no longer a cry for theology."

The promise made by Dr. Hillis in taking charge of the congregation left without a pastor by the death of Prof. Swing, that he would not seek to lead them to Presbyterianism, was a singular one. By some it will be considered strong, by others weak. It is in effect one of two things; either a confession that there is really nothing in Presbyterianism of sufficient value in itself to be worth the while to seek after and accept, or that Methodism, the doctrine of the Baptists, Congregationalism, or any other "ism," or an entire absence of either or all of them is just as good, and as likely to save men with the salvation promised in Christ; and this last may be correct. But, if it is, then there is but one step further to go, and that is to discard the Christ idea in religion entirely, and contend that every man, and all men, may be saved without allegiance to any form of worship, and without belief, either formulated or without precept, every man being a law unto himself. This would relieve the Central Church, and the People's Church, as well as all the so-called orthodox, or evangelical churches, against the creeds of which Dr. Thomas wages such smooth though insistent warfare.

Of the two antagonists to true Christianity, the rule of Christ's word in religion, the smooth apologist who seeks to evade strict interpretation by recourse to the "higher criticism," is more to be feared than the outspoken disbeliever. The attitude of Dr. Hillis who takes charge of a promiscuous congregation of all sorts of religious and nonreligious worshipers, the sharp criticism of Dr. H. W. Thomas, upon the methods of Dr. Herrick Johnson and Prof. Patton, in eulogizing Prof. Swing, may hurt Presbyterianism, but they must and will hurt other denominational religions as well. The blow that is aimed at one will be sure to hit all.

WORLD NOTES.

CZAR NICHOLAS of Russia is said to have run his pen through the "religious belief" column of the list of military officials presented to him for promotion at the opening of the New Year, remarking that a man's religious convictions were matters of no interest to him in that connection.

The United States Bureau of Labor will make an exhaustive investigation of the effect of improved machinery or the industrial world, with special reference to its effects on labor.

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston has issued a letter to all the churches of that archdiocese, forbidding all Catholics from joining the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, or Sons of Temperance; and admonishing those already members thereof to withdraw, on pain of denial of the sacraments. The order is made because of instructions from Rome to the Apostolic Delegate. Two thousand people at Tacoma, Washington, members of various societies, met and protested against the order.

A CORRESPONDENT of a Chicago newspaper writing from Battle Creek, the central city of the Adventists in Michigan, under the lead of Ellen G. White, gives the following vivid description of the annual giving festival, held on New Year's day:—

The big platform on which the altar sits was cleared when the speaker had finished his discourse and the congregation was informed that the donations could be laid on the platform. Contributions that followed were never equaled in the history of the church and probably never in the history of any church. Those who had money gave it. Those who had not the ready cash did not falter, but gave what they had in the shape of personal property. It mattered not what was given. It neither mattered to the donor how great the sacrifice was or what tender memories lingered around the article to be contributed. Old family relics were offered up on the altar by these people, who love far more the cause which they preach than any tie of home. Old men gave their coats and watches. Women gave their rings, girls their brooches, and boys their bicycles. The donations consisted of nearly everything in the shape of personal property that you can imagine. Almost everything that could be sold for money was placed on the altar. The contributions of money were large and the donations ranged from five dollars up.

When the giving had ceased and the immense crowd had filed out of the tabernacle the altar which held the gifts looked more like the back room of a second hand store than the platform from which the gospel was preached. It is estimated that the gifts of last night will exceed in value thirty-five thousand dollars. The personal property that was donated will be sold and the proceeds devoted to sending out printed matter telling of the Sabbath. Beside the donations of last night toward the church these people give one tenth of what they earn each week toward the support of the church. They never tire of giving for the church or some worthy charitable purpose.

BRO. C. G. LEWIS, of East Jordan, sent us a slip cut from some paper, which is a digest of a sermon preached by Rev. J. Matthews, on Future of the Jew. It is so good we give it to the HERALD readers:—

Rev. J. Matthews told his Baptist brethren this morning in a formal paper what he thinks of the claims of the Jews upon modern Christians. The first great fact is that we are indebted to the Jews for the first Democratic-Republican government of history. The Jews, unlike all other peoples, started as a full-fledged nation with fully organized government and a moral law as perfect as God himself. There was no monarchy, no oligarchy, no aristocracy, but republicanism. Their progress was a degeneracy from these early conditions.

Secondly we have received from the Jews the word of God, even the gospel itself. Jesus was a Jew, born king of the Jews. Salvation is of them; the first apostles were Jews; the first Christians were Jews.

Thirdly, they are made of God a peculiar people, appointed of God for a special glory.

Fourth, their wonderful preservation in the light of their ancient persecutions entitles them to respect. Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, and all their old persecutors have disappeared, and they remain.

Again, in the purpose of God, these people have a future. It is a mistake to think that all the divine promises concerning them were conditional; some were absolute. These promises made to Abraham must be carried out irrespective of what Jew or Gentile may do. Look at six facts: (1) The clannishness of the Jews; (2) their care and love for their own land; (3) it is a land for which nobody else cares for; (4) there are single families among them who are rich enough to buy the whole of the promised land; (5) their separateness in blood from all other peoples; (6) their two thousand years' wandering because the fullness of the Gentiles has not yet come in. God has not ceased to have an interest in them; neither ought we. He doubted not that God entertains marvelous purposes for the world through these people.

Most of the brethren fell in with the paper, and spoke kindly of the Jewish people. Rev. Dr. Conley thought the Anglo-Saxon race are the lost ten tribes. The Lord will literally return to earth to complete his kingdom, and then the Anglo-Saxons will, in part at least, return to Palestine. The Jews will then look upon the Lord whom they pierced.

Rev. Dr. Welton said that God's purpose concerning this world centers in this people. It is a mistake to suppose that this world will ever come to an end. Prophecy does not call for an ending of this world; only for a termination of the present age of the world. God's purpose for the world is unlimited.

GIBBONS HITS AT COL. INGER-SOLL.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 7.—The cathedral was crowded in every part Sunday, it having been known Cardinal Gibbons would preach, and many who heard the sermon agreed that his Eminence must have had in his mind the eloquent Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. The text was from Isaiah: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." The Cardinal said:—

It is fashionable as well as profitable to cast odium as well as ridicule on Christianity and on the Scriptures, which are the basis of the Christian religion. A man of limited capacity but of fluency of speech and shafts of wit may propose objections and difficulties in a half hour which may take a learned man a month to answer. I would ask you, my brethren, to have three answers ready in your mind when you are confronted by any difficulties against Christianity. 1. Ten thousand difficulties do not destroy a single fact of revelation. 2. The Christian religion has been in possession for 2,000 years and has been cherished by the wisest and best of men in every age and country, and it is stronger to-day than it was ever before. 3. All of the civilizations of the past and all existing civilizations to-day worthy of the name have been based on the doctrinal and moral principles of the Bible. It is time enough to surrender our Christianity when some better system is brought forward to supplant it. The Christian religion not only gave man a sublime idea of his Creator but gave him also a rational idea about himself; it gave not only light to his understanding but peace as well to his heart. It brought him that peace of God which surpasseth all understanding. The Christian religion has now, as it ever had, a message for the capitalist and workman. It admonishes the employer to compensate the laborer by fair and just wages, and, what is more, to bestow upon him kind and considerate treatment, and to keep in view the golden maxim of Christ, "Whatsoever you would that men should do to you do ye to them."—Chicago Tribune.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. W. WATERMAN of Lamoni, hands us the following letter for HERALD, as indicative of the good spirit prevailing at Keb, Iowa, and the influence the work has there:—

It is nigh unto two years since by the authority of God you came this way preaching Jesus Christ and the things pertaining to the kingdom. I find that after almost two years it does not grow monotonous but rather more attractive. Lizzie and I and the little one took a trip to England last summer. We left here June 9 and got home again August 22. We were eight days on the water going and five coming back. We were at your old place, London, but did not see much of it; we were at Waterloo and St. Pancreas Stations. When we got back to Keb the baby was sick. She grew worse. We had a doctor from Ottumwa, but she got no better, and we gave up in despair; but I sent for the elder, Father Watkins and E. B. Morgan. They came, and Mary Wood said: "Neither the elders, nor anyone else could do that child any good, for she was dying." But they administered to her, and we telephoned to Ottumwa that we did not need the doctor. We quit giving medicine. After the elders had gone, I asked Lizzie what she thought about it now, and she said, "I believe she is going to live," and I said, "So do I." "According to our faith" so was it unto us; for the little one began to get better right away. Brother, she was so near death that if I said she was dead I would not miss it far. Lizzie and I were sleeping, Mary woke us up; she said that it was all over, the baby was dying. But she is alive to-day, and Mary has nothing to say. "To God be all the glory." The older persons around here are healthy, but a great many little ones are down.

Those who have plenty may read with profit the following letter from a brother in Kanona, Decatur county, Kansas:—

We are sorry to tell you of our deplorable condition. We have raised nothing for two years. We would be glad to pay our tithing and help carry on the good work. We rejoice when reading the church papers to see what progress the church has made the last year, but feel sorry we cannot help on the good work. Hope the time will come when we will have some way of getting a few dimes that we don't have to use to keep soul and body together. We will pay for the Autumn Leaves as soon as we can, but it is impossible now. Would be glad to take it but rather you would stop it for the present. Will send one dollar to apply on the Herald. We praise God that we have such able defenders of truth that error has to give way before it. This is the last dollar, and don't know where the next is coming from, but trust there will be some way provided.

Bro. J. S. Parrish, Kirtland, Ohio, January 6:—

Elder W. H. Kelley departed east on the 2d inst., for his field of labor. Elder J. H. Lake is to go soon, he says; probably the 8th. Elder G. T. Griffiths, however, will be confined home for some time. I am on the way to Wheeling, where I shall make headquarters to labor in that region in new places mostly. If any scattered Saints thereabouts would like a visit they may address me at at No. 4728 Jacob street. I am not, however, begging for opportunities. I have more of them in sight than I can improve at present; but shall be glad to do all I can to help the scattered flock. Our town does not look nice now, but in June it is a perfect fairyland, an Eden. I know of no spot which seems so nice to me, much as I love my native Iowa and Missouri. It has a bright future. Bad as scarlet fever and diphtheria were in surrounding towns only two families in and around Kirtland were troubled; in all four cases. I consider this remarkably good. Elder Bond says he will leave for Conneautville and neighborhood this week, so that all are busy; but then, when at home we are busy; and it is quite important, it appears to me, that Kirtland be well sustained. It is my private opinion that the general church has expected too much of the Kirtland Saints. They know what the circumstances are, and are striving. Of course they might do more, but who is it of whom that cannot be said?

Bro. G. L. Rathbun, East Pharsalia, New York, January 7:—

Elder H. H. Robinson was here last week and held a debate here with Rev. F. J. Jones. The best of feeling prevailed throughout. Mr. Jones is a gentleman. He declared in public and in private that he believed Bro. Robinson was a Christian, but thought the other churches were just as good as ours. I hope we may see good from this effort. Bro. Robinson has left for Wellsville. May God be with him.

Bro. W. H. Kelley, writing from Kirtland, Jan. 7, says:—

Yesterday was a warm, foggy day here, and there was a heavy fall of rain. There was a respectable audience out at the evening service, however. Some of the brethren are reported as being sick. There is to be a business meeting this evening which will likely bring out the members. Bro. A. H. Parsons is expected here to-day and Bro. Hilliard to-morrow. Bro. H. H. Robinson has recently "done up" an M. E. preacher, a big one, according to report, up about East Pharsalia, and has returned home to recuperate and enjoy the boon of victory while watching for another liar to come out of his lair. The new year starts in fairly with us.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. L. L. BOOTH, of Vernon, Idaho, requests the name of party who wrote to the HERALD from Mill City, Oregon, over the signature of W., letter published in issue of December 19. Bro. Booth also desires labor by some of the elders at Vernon. He says much good could be done. No church has yet been erected at St. Anthony, the county seat, but a hall or schoolhouse could be secured, and the work could be permanently established, he thinks.

Bro. F. and Sr. A. Leverton, of the Flint, Michigan, branch request the local and traveling ministry to remember that point as a promising field of labor. The few Saints there, like others similarly situated, are seeking to maintain the faith by unity of spirit and concert of action, in which good work the Lord acknowledges and encourages by blessing, and the promise of extending until they become larger in number, etc. They are laboring hopefully to that end.

Lamoni now has a Sunday mail service, and by hack to Bethany Junction, two and one half miles east, passenger connection with Sunday trains both north and south on the main line. Who shall say that Lamoni is out of the world so far when the Chicago morning papers may be had there at twelve noon of the same day of their publication, including the Sunday issue. Even this time is to be shortened; so says rumor.

Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths, of Kirtland, has lost three of his children by the visitation of scarlet fever, which is raging in the region in a malignant form. He and his wife have the sympathy of the Saints in their bereavement.

Those who remitted for Autumn Leaves before the reduction in price was announced will be credited the amount overpaid on their Leaves subscription, as stated, and not on any other account. This is rendered necessary because of the system of keeping accounts at the office.

Bro. G. R. Wheeler invites ministerial attention to Belle Plaine, Sumner county, Kansas. He will meet the visiting laborer at the train, if notified.

The Manchester, Texas, branch has had some additions of late that strengthen it for good work; so wrote Bro. E. A. Erwin, the 5th inst. Brn. A. B. Moore and J. D. Erwin had labored there of late with good results following.

It may be that we were misled, or overrated the facts in stating that there had been much sickness in the region of Kirtland, Ohio, as referred to by Bro. W. H. Kelley; but the death of those of Bro. and Sr. Griffiths' children, and of the devoted young woman who helped Sr. Griffiths in caring for them, and the death of a child removed to Cleveland to escape the contagion are rather strong evidences that the disease was virulent in its attacks. We had no intention to mistake, or exaggerate to facts.

Bro. J. H. Wells, of Knobnoster, Missouri, was at Reese and Willow Creeks, and doing a good work. Bro. Wells is reported by some to be the best preacher that has yet represented the church in that region. May God bless him, and his shadow never grow less while his capacity and usefulness to the cause continue to enlarge.

Bro. William Hart, West Oakland, California, reports that branch doing well, with "good meetings."

EVANELIA SAFE.

By telegram from Bro. C. A. Parkin San Francisco, to Bishop E. L. Kelley, dated January 14, we learn that the Evanelia had arrived safe; telegram as follows:—

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 14.
E. L. KELLEY, Lamoni, Iowa:—
Evanelia arrived November 30, all safe; passenger sailors baptized.

LOOK ON THE BRIGHT SIDE.

BY GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

Should we find in life's hard measure,
Nothing to us giving pleasure;
All the beauties of the daylight
Giving place to gloom of midnight.

And our loving hearts grow colder,
All the good within us molder,
Passions dark and fiercely striving,
All the brightness from us driving;

Think of Him who came to save us,
What he suffered, what he gave us;
His life, his all, his honor; dead,
The King of Glory sadly said;
"Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachani?"

Turn then from the dark and dreary,
Look then on the bright and cheery;
For temptations coming to us,
Should not from our duty lure us.

The darkest cloud that ever hung
Before the bright and glittering sun
Will soon pass by, and nature sweet
With power of song and music clear, Make us shout through the glad new year.

"Praise ye the Lord."

Lack yet the heart's divine perfumes.

WORKERS IN ZION.

THIS morning upon sitting down to our table, among the first letters taken up was one containing this sentence: "I pray for and send my earnest greeting to all workers in Zion." It arrested and fixed our attention and we said, "It is too indefinite, for Zion has workers of different kinds."

We know that our correspondent meant those who were honestly working for the upbuilding of Zion in righteousness; but even that is too indefinite, for many are (we believe) honestly working to this end who are yet falling far short of it, because they are not working wisely. And just here the thought comes to us, Since God has promised to give wisdom to all and upbraideth none for asking, surely such have failed to ask or they are working outside of that unto which God has called them.

Yesterday, while sitting in the testimony meeting our attention was arrested by a little child who had slipped down from his mother's knees, and being attracted by the stone base which sustained the pillar upon which the floor of the upper part of the building rested, the little one with busy, cunning fingers was trying hard to pluck it up. How hopeless the task! It is equally hopeless, our heart responded, for man in his puny strength to overthrow the truth of God.

It is founded upon the rock of revelation and is a part of God himself, for that which he has said cannot fail. Why then concern ourselves? Why burden our hearts and minds with the work?

Why? Simply this: God has called upon his people to work with him. But while this is true he has not delegated to us his part of the work, but has commanded us to "Make straight paths for" our "feet lest that which is lame be turned out of the way."

In the life experience of every one there will come times when they will exclaim, "O, if I only knew what was right, knew just what I ought to do, how gladly I would do it!" but we believe such occasions will be rare in any ordinary life, and the only way in time of such perplexity is to walk in the best light we can get by faith and prayer. But while such a time may come, we know that hour by hour and day by day we have the privilege of walking in a straight and narrow way, lit by the lamp of God's word, filled by the oil of his Holy Spirit.

Upon the occasion referred to above the room was filled with worshipers, nearly all of whom were church members, and as testimony after testimony was given in quick succession, we thought, What power for good ought to go forth from this building when these hundreds go out to mingle with those who live in Lamoni, but are not here to day! Yes, ought, for this is our part of the work, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Is it done? Do we do it? We answer, No, all of us do not, for if we did there could not, there would not be in our midst the sin and wickedness which there is to-day. "It is not yours," said the voice of the Spirit, "to judge," and we answered, "No, Lord, and we thank thee it is not." But we cannot shut our eyes to that which we see nor close our ears to that which we hear, neither can we help being pained when we know that Christ has been "wounded in the house of" his "friends."

"I wrote to my father," said a friend of ours from a distant city, "that there was little chance to go astray in Lamoni, even if one wanted to, for there is little to tempt anyone."

"There you are wrong" we answered, "for human hearts are alike the world over, and you remember all the evil things which Christ warned us come out of the heart."

They are here in our midst, in the church and out of the church. Those who represent Lamoni as a model town make a grave mistake, and those who represent it as a town where rascality abounds and where men stand ready to pounce upon and fleece the poor and unwary Saints who come here are, we think, misrepresenting our town worse than those of the opposite belief. It is our firm conviction that in Lamoni is to be found a band of as honest, kind-hearted, spiritually minded Saints as ever lived in any age upon the earth. Among them are men, and women, too, who would scorn to do a mean or unkind thing, and who prove by their works from day to day the truth of the testimonies they bear on the Sabbath day. There are others not so strong but who are yet honestly striving to reach higher ground and earnestly trying to obey the gospel law in as far as they understand it, and there may be some even among those called to be Saints (we do not know there are any such, but there may be) who are not honest and would take advantage of others. We are led to say so much as this, because we have lately been shown letters sent out from Lamoni, denouncing most bitterly a certain class of citizens here, and we knew that the writers were further from the line of truth and charity than the ones they denounced. We do not believe in robbery of any kind, but there is such a thing as robbing a man of that which is of more value to him than his money. There is such a thing as pronouncing harsh and unjust judgment without having understood the case sufficiently to justify us in passing judgment at all. There is also a representation of our town which is overdrawn upon the side of virtue, and yet another which is equally overdrawn upon the opposite side.

It comes to us with force, that what we most need is unity. If the Saints here were all united in heart, purpose, and spirit, there is no power for evil strong enough to stand before them. The weak would be shielded and strengthened, the wandering reclaimed, and the light of this branch would truly be as a city set on a hill.

Are you, dear reader, coming to Lamoni? Have you any thought of making your home here? If you have, let us in all sincerity assure you that you will find here those who are striving indeed and in truth to be "fellow workers with God," and you will also find those who are not striving, and yet others who are seeking most energetically to build up the kingdom of Satan.

Upon which side am I? is a question of far more importance to you than to discover upon which side your neighbor stands. If you are coming to labor with God, you will find company in Lamoni; if the opposite you will not go amiss for associates. This battle between the forces of truth and error, light and darkness, is to continue until the last enemy is subdued; and how much that might be hastened if we as a people were united the Spirit of God itself is from time to time striving to impress upon us. Perfection is not found upon earth, neither in individuals nor in communities, but we are called upon to "work out" our "own salvation with fear and trembling," without reference to our surroundings, whether they are good or bad.

BUFFALO, Iowa.

Dear Mothers and Sisters:—I have been in poor health a great deal the last year; but now, thanks to our Father in heaven, and the tender care of good children, I once more greet you with returning health. During those days of disquiet and unrest my mind was active and awake; and I thinking (you know we are thinking beings). I wondered and marveled at the wisdom of God in our creation, redemption, and preservation. And I gave thanks, too, that I lived in this age of the world when gospel light and truth are shining broadcast all around me. In the language of the Book of Mormon I often exclaimed: "O, the wisdom and knowledge of God; how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

While the heated term lasted and during my indisposition, the Herald, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign came regularly, and were a great comfort to me. From these papers I learn of the gospel winning its way among the people and how the servants of God are received in their different fields of labor. I learn also of the various organizations for good among the Saints and I am glad.

O ye Daughters of Zion! be faithful, be humble; because humility well becomes Latter Day Saints; and especially does it adorn the female character. I would advise my dear sisters to seek for wisdom. O yes,

"Wisdom divine! Who tells the price,
Of wisdom's costly merchandise?"

Would that we could all say,

"Wisdom to silver we prefer,
And gold is dross compared to her."

A day or two since I was reading Bro. Joseph Smith's sermon which he preached at the Logan reunion. I think Joseph is like Paul; he says some things that weak minds cannot understand. But I will give it one more careful reading, then perhaps I can better comprehend. I know that I do not fully understand or comprehend the height and depth of this glorious latter-day work. But as far as I do, I glory in it, and rejoice that I ever obeyed it, in its elementary principles.

I realize that my letter is too long; but I desire to tell you before I close, that I gave Bro. Joseph's sermon a careful, thoughtful rereading, and I liked it—I enjoyed it. But perhaps I don't know—

"For, after all,
He's much like Paul."

Wishing all a pleasant and merry Christmas, I must say farewell.

Your sister in the covenant,
MARY RUBY.

WEBB CITY, Missouri.

Dear Sisters:—There has been much said about what kind of literature should be read. The Lord commanded the Prophet Joseph to read all good books. We are also commanded to search after knowledge and wisdom that will impart things to our understanding and will bring us nearer the kingdom and cause us to understand more perfectly the ways of our blessed Savior. If we gain a knowledge of evil what will it profit us? There is a very great responsibility resting upon each mother to care for the soul of her child as well as the bodily health. We should guard the mind of the child as carefully as we would the body from some contagious disease, that their minds do not become corrupt or poisoned with the vice and sin that are abroad in the land.

The first thing is to retain the confidence of your children, so if anyone offers them anything that will be to their hurt they will not be afraid to go to mother. Teach them to shun the very appearance of evil; for if the spiritual influence becomes corrupt it is then easy to yield to temptation, but if the conscience is kept clean it will always dictate that which is good. The conscience should be kept the same as the sense of taste or smell, and it will not partake willingly of such things as are distasteful or unclean. If we have a conscience clear before God we need not fear partaking of such things as lying, stealing, cheating, and other sins of vice and disgrace. How necessary it is for mothers in Zion to implant the seeds of truth and uprightness in the minds of their children, and if they come in contact with sin they will have more courage to overcome. Do not be afraid to talk to them on delicate subjects, for there is a way to approach a child. Some you can trust when very young, while others must be older and have to be trained and approached in different ways. If they learn to confide in mother it will beget confidence in themselves. It makes children feel that they are trustworthy when they are not afraid to tell mother all their troubles. Think what full confidence the babe has in all mother does or says! If mothers would only set an example so the babes would grow up and retain the same confidence, and as they grow up teach them to trust in the Lord and gain that faith in God that will cause them always to put their trust and confidence in him, then should temptations surround their path in life and lead them astray, the seed is planted that will cause them to stop and reflect and turn to the Lord although they may be on the very brink of ruin. I do not believe the prayers offered by parents in behalf of their children are forgotten by our heavenly Father. I have felt they have been verified in my behalf, for when I was among strangers and my children small, without help or relation near, it has been a solace to my mind to think that the blessings of my parents would not leave me, and have said from the depths of my heart that the Lord had promised that he would not forsake my father's children. I know my parents never turned away anyone empty from their door, and this has been a great comfort to me in the dark hours of trouble and need.

O that we had the power to say something to awaken parents to a sense of their duty, those who do not realize what a great responsibility is resting upon those who have the little lambs of the fold to raise, and it becomes their duty to impart the seed in their minds which will spring up and grow unto life eternal, or the opposite, which is death. Only think how the fashion of this life fadeth away as the dew before the morning sun. If they possess beauty and can dress tastefully and are admired for their good appearance, yet if they lack the one thing most needful, the spiritual culture, they are in danger, and a mother's work has been neglected. The world is full of sin and vice, and are not the greatest evils practiced where there are fine clothes and fashion? If the vail was torn aside I fear there would be many a home shadowed in blackness. But there is one who can penetrate the vail and who knows the intent of the heart. O that we could adorn our children with those principles of love towards God, that we could arm them with faith, for without faith it is impossible to please God! O, that each child would first seek the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness! Then all things needful would be added, if we live in harmony with the law of the Lord.

I hope I may have dropped some word that will aid some of the daughters in Zion and that we may all grow in grace and the knowledge of the Lord and learn to do our duty and set a good example before our children as well as those of the world. I feel that the Prayer Union and the Daughters of Zion have a great work before them and that many will receive help and strength by their aid and assistance. Sisters, do not become discouraged. We all have our trials; but let us lift up our heads and rejoice that we have begun this good work; that we are accounted worthy to lend a helping hand; and let us try to run with patience the race set before us, ever looking to him who has said there is not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice, is the prayer and desire of your sister,

R. M. BRADLEY.

BORDEN, Indiana.

Dear Sisters:—I became a member of the church in 1870; was baptized by Bro. Blair, being among the first who united with the church in Southern Indiana, and can truly say that I never have regretted the step, although I have had many trials to endure, Satan tempting on every hand. At times I have felt my trials were more than I could bear; but the Lord has been with me and blessed me in many ways, for which I am thankful.

Bro. Short was with us a few weeks ago and preached several interesting sermons. Bro. Daniel was here also, but spoke only once. People seemed to be very well pleased with the sermons. I am sorry to hear of Bro. Short's misfortune. Hope he will soon be well again. We would like to have other elders call while passing; would also like to see Bro. Blair and hear his voice once more. My greatest desire is to see this work prosper, for I know it is the work of God.

SARGENT, Mo., Jan. 5.

Editors Herald:—The writer and Bro. Sparling are at present at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. Savage. This is my first visit to these Saints, and I assure you I felt at home with them. They came from Nebraska. If more such Saints would like a home in this part of Missouri we would gladly welcome them. There are forty acres joining Bro. Savage that can be bought for fifty dollars, by writing to Bro. Savage.

I noticed Bro. Sparling eyeing the strawberry bed and making inquiries as to the time the berries ripened, no doubt calculating in his mind the proper time for his next visit.

On our way here we called at Bro. and Sr. Tucker's and found them as usual, glad to see the elders and to again have their names on the tithing list. Though he is a working man, they are doing nobly in that respect. A few more such and the work would move along much faster. At Bro. Tucker's we meet Bro. Harry Atwell, who will commence meeting to-night and if favorable continue as interest holds.

We are just from the field of battle with a Methodist preacher. He came into our part and commenced a regular tirade against us and challenged any of our men to debate. Hearing of Bro. Sparling being at home I wrote him and he came forthwith, although was suffering with sore eyes. The battle began in earnest and lasted not quite ten nights, and our opponent was completely driven to the wall. I never saw a man so completely taken down. He could not say another word on his affirmative. He then commenced to throw mud, but was called to order. Bro. Sparling then challenged him on church proposition; but he denied ever challenging and would not meet us further. One of his big brethren flew in a passion and for a few minutes I thought we would be devoured, as we were the only Saints present, and had bearded the lion in his den; but a few honest-hearted interfered and our lives were spared. I think we did some good, as I was asked for some reading matter.

I hope the Lord will bless our efforts to spread the truth. We expect to debate with a Lutheran in the near future. Bro. Sparling will go into Douglas, Ozark, Taney, Christian, Green, and Webster counties, then home for our conference at Sargent on the first Saturday in March. From here I shall return home feeling better for my visit. Wish I could spend all my time with such noble defenders of the faith. Shall try and arrange affairs so I can spend as much time as possible in the ministry.

Yours in bonds,

THOMAS HAMILTON.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Dec. 26.

Editors Herald:—Elders will find a welcome in the vicinity of Phoenix at the home of Bro. and Sr. Isaac and Ann Moore, as we have just moved to this, to us, lonely spot, from Southern California. Some of your readers may imagine how we feel, as we have just left the association of brethren and sisters in Christ and come here, not knowing whether there was a Saint in the Territory or not. We sincerely hope our elders will not forget this part of the Lord's vineyard, as we know of some who would receive baptism if opportunity was offered.

Brethren and sisters, pray for us that God's Spirit may ever be with us to guide in this time of loneliness and much tribulation.

Yours in Christ,

MRS. M. A. MOORE.

KINGSLEY, Iowa, Dec., 31.

Editors Herald:—From Maple Landing I came to Onawa and vicinity and labored with some success. At the former several were left almost persuaded. I look for an ingathering there. At Onawa the cause is moving steadily onward, four having been baptized of late, a Sunday school organized, and social services held. I began preaching there November 22. On the evening of the 23d I was meditating upon my labors and praying to know if I should continue when there appeared an open vision of a residence in the neighborhood, which I recognized; then followed the appearance of a stream of light resting in front of it. I felt that God was working with that family. It consists of husband, wife, and two small children. They had never heard our preaching before, and the wife had had her mind poisoned by false stories so that she was quite prejudiced. On the next evening, after the sermon, the man presented himself for baptism. This only exercised the prejudice of the wife and she tried to persuade him to change his mind; but he could not, for the Lord's Spirit was striving with him. I visited them, and ere I left the wife was quite well satisfied, and on Tuesday consented to be baptized. On Thursday I baptized them and Sr. Anna Vincent's two daughters, Florence and Pearl, after which they were confirmed and the children of this new brother and sister were blessed. So was completely fulfilled that shown in vision, and all within a week, to the wonderment of neighbors and friends. One thing done by this family of Saints is worthy of emulation by many older in the work of God. The family altar was erected before they were baptized, and now night and morning is shown forth the humble faith of two fervent seekers for the celestial glory.

I have met with much studied opposition within the last three weeks, but have not been called anything worse than "the Devil." I came to this place a week ago Saturday. Was called on Sunday to administer to Sr. Bennett, near Cherokee, where I remained till Wednesday morning, preaching each evening. Since then I have been preaching here, with but small audiences. Yesterday I tried to get the M. E. church, but was refused by some of the trustees, the pastor, Rev. Carver, seeming more favorable than many others of like faith, but thought it would make contention to permit us the use of the church contrary to the wishes of all. He called the attention of his congregation to our appointments at the schoolhouse in the neighborhood.

J. F. MINTUN.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Jan. 7.

Editors Herald:—Under heading of "Editorial Items," in January 2 number of Herald, you say: "The fever has been quite bad at Kirtland and vicinity this fall and winter." Now exactness should be the essential feature in giving news, and the editors have been misled in regard to Kirtland. The above statement is not correct. There has been but little or no sickness in Kirtland "this fall and winter" until quite recently, when scarlet fever was introduced there by parties from Cleveland, into the home of Bro. G. T. Griffiths, and in a very virulent form. Two of his children have died since and one other is past recovering from it. Miss Inez Makepeace, who volunteered to help care for the sick at Bro. Griffiths', is now prostrate with it. This is all except the two children sent from Cleveland to avoid the fever came down with it and were returned to that city, one of whom has since died. The mischief was done to the family of Bro. Griffiths before he was aware of the nature of the cause of their trouble. Otherwise and Kirtland has been exempt from any unusual sickness.

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

SPOKANE, Wash., Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—There is a little band of Saints here which is striving amid difficulties and storm to hold its head above water. We were made to rejoice a few weeks past by our dear brother, H. L. Holt, who slipped in upon us and spent some two weeks preaching and teaching the Saints; and as for myself and wife, I can say it was a feast of good things. He organized a branch, and we placed our worthy brother, W. T. Hicks, at the helm. Times are very dull, money is hard to get, and work is almost out of the question. We are looking for Bro. John Davis soon, who will be a most welcome visitor.

We were looking over the columns of the Herald of December 5, 1894, and our eyes fell upon the article, "Wise counsel." We found it in our opinion a masterpiece for Saints to heed. Would to Him who ruleth all things that there were more of the same kind spread abroad. If the Saints would think more of how best to spend their time for the advancement of Christ's cause, rather than how to have a good time at a game, let it be ball, checkers, or any other game, there would be more lasting good done that would brighten the future prospects of all who come in contact with them, and then our cause would grow; but alas! how different.

I read in the Herald of December 19, 1894, under the head of "Proper amusements and recreations," of harmless games. I have seen many games, but none were harmless to me; but they are all enticing and misleading, and if persisted in will lead us away from duty.

The word says: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation;" and is not the world looking on? Do they not note every step of a Saint? And as for a Saint being gloomy, why, if anyone on this earth should be merry it is the Latter Day Saint, having the restored gospel at his hand. The word says: "If any be merry, let him sing psalms;" and the poet says to "sing the song of Moses and the Lamb."

The writer referred to says: "The religion of Jesus Christ is one of hope and happiness." I agree with him in that, therefore I don't think we need any games to complete our happiness; for it is said: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin;" and we also read that the children of Israel "ate and drank, and rose up to play;" and what came of it? "Ye shall know them by their fruits."—Christ. I will admit that bodily exercise is profitable, but checkers, dominoes, cards, and whist, are a very poor substitute for exercise; and it is written that we are to "abstain from every appearance of evil;" and to visit those places of resort is to lend one's influence in their favor. Some amusements are but decoys to lead us from duty we owe to Christ. Hoping we may all watch and pray so as to be able to enter in with the Master,

Yours in Christ,

J. MONROE HOOKER.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 4.

Editors Herald:—Continuing at the Brown schoolhouse the interest of those in attendance increased, while the attendance somewhat diminished, due largely to the cold weather. The assistance of Brn. F. E. Cohrt and R. A. Ballantyne in opening and closing meetings was duly appreciated. Made some further effort at Moorhead, the branch officers duly assisting, and then moved farther down the Soldier, where a series of services were held at the Jones schoolhouse, Brn. Lane, G. Shearer, J. Dickey, C. Vredenburg, and M. Jensen assisted, the latter preaching twice, during which times the writer was called to Moorhead to join in wedlock R. A. Ballantyne and Mary Bartholomew, and George Bartholomew and Susan Henderson, all of the church, the latter being my niece.

At the above schoolhouse the attendance was so large that on different occasions many were standing. On the last night some returned home, the building being overcrowded on their arrival. Miss Minnie Peck, her mother a Catholic, and she christened in that faith, selected the hymns and presided at the organ, and had I have selected they would not have been more in harmony with the subjects. Staid one night at their place and was very hospitably entertained, with a pressing invitation to call whenever opportunity afforded. Stayed one night with a daughter of Mrs. Peck—now Mrs. A. Gamut—she having been christened in the Catholic Church and her husband blessed by the elders; and while we talked freely in exchanging views, there was not a particle of feeling, injurious to the most sensitive, manifested by either. In fact after an all-day's visit and very plain talk she told me that whenever I returned to that locality, to consider that place as a home—her emphasis. One fact that pained me was that preceding me one of our elders had publicly berated other churches. What business have we to do such a thing? If C. Braden and others attack us, how quickly and warmly we resent it; should we not feel that others are just as sensitive and as much attached to their church as we to ours? The sooner we realize that attacking the faith of others is not preaching the gospel, and that we should extend to them the same courtesy we ask for ourselves, the better it will be for us and the progress of our work.

Leaving for Logan, a contrast was noted in the attendance, but the interest was very marked, and some prominent outsiders are since inquiring relative to a return. On to Woodbine, where for a week the Saints' church there was crowded night after night, and a very marked interest shown. From here also comes a desire for a return and completion of a good begun work. In all these places Saints and friends vied with each other in caring for me. In bonds, Editors Herald:—I preached here yesterday in the Swedish Lutheran church. The attendance and attention were good. The minister kindly gave me the privilege contrary to the general rule of his church, saying that he wanted to be liberal. His kindness was appreciated all the more as in this mission one learns to value small favors. I am to speak in the county courthouse next Sunday if all goes well. As I try to scatter the seed here and there, I often wonder what the harvest will be. God only knows, but time may reveal. If faithful I can afford to wait.

MARYVILLE, Mo., Dec. 31.

Editors Herald:—The new year brings with it the thought, What have I done the past year for the advancement of the cause of Christ, the lifting up of mankind to that standard, and how have I applied myself to the commands of God? As I look backward I see the path is crooked, but looking ahead I see the path is straight. The questions then arise, Will I be able to walk that straight path? Must I undertake the journey? Yes, by the grace of God.

In my lonely and melancholy hours I have oftentimes resorted to the perusal of the Herald, and can say that it has been a welcome visitor from the first. I attended the General Conference last spring, and such a feast I never partook of before nor since. I heard the blessed truth as it fell from the lips of the ministers of God, also great blessings promised, which to a great extent have been fulfilled before our eyes. I felt encouraged when I saw how determined all were to do the will of God.

I am now attending school in Maryville. We have a very nice school, but I would the day might be hastened when there will be a school erected by the Latter Day Saints, where purity may be more earnestly regarded as the king of society. In this town I find religion represented by nine different faiths, all different from the pure and unadulterated religion of Jesus Christ as taught by Latter Day Saints. There is but one other of our faith here. I have fireside discussions with different individuals, one the Christian minister. He promised to read the Voice of Warning, also tracts. I had another with a cousin, a high churchman in the Presbyterian Church, at other times with schoolmates. The results I hope will be in accordance with the will of God. I attend church wholly at the Christian church. I am given opportunity to speak, which I do occasionally.

My intentions are to always do God's will to the best of my ability, and to stand in defense of his cause when he gives me strength. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and as we continue to fear him we will grow in wisdom; therefore my prayer is that we all may come up higher in the fear and admonition of God. Let our resolve be that we will try to do better in the new year.

Your brother,
W. B. TORRANCE.

HUTCHINSON, Colo., Dec. 28.

Editors Herald:—I wish I had a more encouraging report for your columns that are constantly filled with so much good news to cheer the weary ones and give encouragement to those who may be disheartened through the pressure of hard times, and the scarcity of money, which seems to be lacking among the poor Latter Day Saints; but we hope and trust and pray that a change may soon come for the better, notwithstanding the dark clouds of poverty may be hovering around us, and we feel that God is able to burst those clouds asunder, and that they will flee away as the dew before the rising sun on a midsummer morning. The Lord has said that it is his business to provide for his Saints, therefore let us trust in him, let come what may, weal or woe. We must not lose confidence in God.

I have visited the eastern, southern, and western portions of this State this summer. I find much prejudice in the former places on account of the Utah Mormons; but notwithstanding all that has been written and said in regard to the difference between us and them, the people still persist that we are all the same. In one place in Mesa county called Plateau Valley, I held a series of meetings at a schoolhouse for seven nights, and notwithstanding the people were mostly Methodists, they turned out well and paid the best attention to what we had to say, and some of them said come again.

Bro. D. B. Tomlinson, of Fruita, took me to the former place, where we camped out over a week, he doing the cooking and I the preaching. We found a few families that had left Utah some years ago, and they received us very kindly, and believed all we said in regard to the Reorganized Church, and expressed themselves as being glad we came and found them. They liked the preaching so well; they said it sound'd like old times. I left and have sent them reading matter, and believe that when visited again some will be ready to join the church.

It was very cheering to hear the testimony of one old Sr. Deme, who lived in Nauvoo in the days of Joseph the Seer. She went to Utah in an early day and was acquainted with all the leading men of the Utah Church. She heard many of them say Young Joseph would be the man to lead the church. Her husband, now dead, was an elder in that church.

Prosecuting the missionary work in Colorado is something like a man clearing up and grubbing out a farm before he can get to plant the seed. So it is with us; we have to break down and clear away a great deal of rubbish (prejudice) from the minds of the people before we can get them ready to receive the gospel. So we have been trying to clear off some new ground and have had to do considerable pulverizing to get the soil in a fit condition to receive the seed. We hope what has been sown will be like that cast upon good ground, that it will spring up and bear much fruit to the glory of God.

I think the work of the Lord is onward in this State, notwithstanding we have not been blessed with so many additions as in some other States. We are trying to push the work ahead to the best of our ability under existing circumstances and we trust all will try to come up to the help of the Lord with their tithing and offerings as the Lord has blessed them, as the coffers of the church are now empty and need replenishing. I trust the Lord will crown the efforts of all with success.

Yours in hope,
JAMES KEMP.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—I am greatly pleased with the Herald. I am glad to say that I have been greatly edified and strengthened by the good counsel and words of cheer and comfort it has afforded me. I am not yet a year old in this latter-day work, but it seems to me I have made more spiritual growth in that period of time than in any ten years of the thirty last past. I account for it upon this hypothesis; that like a plant, I must have light and heat to grow.

The doctrine I had been trying to derive spiritual life and growth from was lacking in the elements that promote rapid spiritual growth, having been taught to believe that God operated on the heart only by the word, it being "spirit" and "life," and that he manifested himself in no other way to enlighten the human mind. O, how I prayed for light during all these years, and my soul cried out to be led in the old paths! When at last I obeyed the gospel and hands were laid upon me, God in answer to my prayer so enlightened my mind and enlarged my understanding that I was surprised that I had not sooner come into this blessed relation with God's Spirit. It was like one passing from the cold and silent solitude of the arctic region to a land of eternal warmth, sunshine, and flowers. The Scriptures are no longer clothed in a dark and somber mystery, but, blessed be God, he now gives me the power to comprehend the truth and discern it spiritually. I only wish I had the power of tongue or pen to tell of the joy and peace it has brought to my poor heart. I am no longer filled with doubts and fears, but have the assurance that this latter-day work is of God, and that all the combined power of men and devils shall not prevent its onward progress, until, like the little stone, it covers the earth with the glory of God.

In bonds of love,

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 3.

Editors Herald:—Since my return from Western Iowa (about two and one half months ago) I have labored in the interests of the good cause whenever able. My special effort has been at Leon, our county capital, where the interest and prospect are better than heretofore. We have had much to contend against at that town, since the organization of the little branch. Now, thank God, the prospects are brighter.

In all, I spoke thirteen times at Leon, spending three Sundays and between two and three weeks time. On December 22 at 2:30 p. m., I had the pleasure of baptizing six persons, the youngest being a young man of nineteen, the oldest a man of sixty-six. Some doubts were entertained with reference to two of them—one in particular—on account of previous reputation. I felt troubled over the matter until the way out of the seeming difficulty was clearly and forcibly impressed on my mind. I stated my convictions to the president of the branch, who heartily approved of them and told me to carry them into effect as I saw fit. Accordingly, when preaching time came, I laid aside my subjects and at once proceeded to treat upon the obligation of membership in the Church of God, the marriage covenant as set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants, etc. At the close of this effort, in which I was signally blessed, and which did not consume more than thirty minutes time, I requested all who had presented themselves for baptism, and all who were willing to obey, to take the front seat. I also requested the members of the branch to remain with the candidates, after the dismissal of the meeting, stating that others could remain if they chose. I then spoke a few words to the candidates, reading Doctrine and Covenants 17:7:—

"And again by way of commandment to the church concerning the manner of baptism:—

"All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."

I then called upon the candidates, if they were willing to honor this covenant as God should give them strength, to manifest it by rising to their feet, which they did. I then presented them to the branch, and they were passed upon individually by vote. All were unanimously accepted. The calm, melting influences of the Spirit of Him who is "meek and lowly in heart" filled the room, and the Saints rejoiced.

The elders of the Christian Church were very kind to us, as they permitted us to use their baptistry free of charge. They also helped to get everything ready and make the occasion as pleasant as possible. They have our sincere thanks. Why can we not learn to avoid the two extremes of being too exclusive, or of compromising for the sake of unity when there is a principle at stake? These baptisms were not wholly due to the labors of Lambert, Scott, Stedman, and Thomas; Elder E. A. Davis in Southwestern Missouri, Elder Payne in Nebraska, the labors of other elders at Leon and Davis City, with the reading of tracts, papers, etc., all entered into the account. None should be discouraged, nor is there any real grounds for it, so long as they are doing the best they can to honor their calling in the church. The "model minister," as I view it, is the one who is the most diligent, wise, and humble in his ministrations. We must also be courageous, loyal to God and his truth, and full of that same kind of love which dwelt in the heart of the Master. The number of baptisms performed, or of supposed conversions made, does not determine the degree of merit possessed. Like Paul we should be willing to give the glory to God. Some of us have "planted," some "watered, but God gave the increase." I thought as I had just baptized a few it would be an opportune time for me to express these few thoughts, for, you know, we are so liable to be misunderstood. May the good work move on to victory, is my ardent desire.

DRAIN, Oregon, Jan. 3.

Editors Herald:—At last writing I was at Malheur Oregon. From there I went to Spokane, Washington, to settle some church affairs and do what preaching I could. I found a noble little band of Saints there, which I organized into a branch, the Spokane branch, the growth of which will depend on the efforts put forth by its members. I trust they will realize this and do all in their power to bring others into the fold with them. In company with Bro. W. T. Hicks I held meetings at Deep Creek, fifteen miles from Spokane, near Cheney, where we met and were cared for by Bro. Williams, formerly of Sweet Home, whose family is still alive in the work, manifesting the same in getting out appointments and doing all they could. In fact, the Saints in this mission have generally done all they could, not only in saying "God bless you," but in putting up coin to help one do so. Surely it is good for the world and the elders that the Saints are scattered. I find that Bro. John Davis is well thought of in these parts, many desiring his return. It is a pleasure to follow after men who leave such good impressions.

Washington is a cold, desolate, dreary country. Some may like it, but I don't admire their taste or their country. I know one sin I will not be punished for; that is, coveting these people's property. It is not suited to a sensitive Californian. No, no; excuse me; I prefer it farther south; am somewhat of a tropical bird myself. Why, the sun hardly ever shines here! They get a kind of a reflection from California for a few hours, when it gives place to the cold, black night. Ough! One thing will result from a man being here; he will have a greater horror of the other prison house, which may tend to keep him out of it.

From Spokane I turned south, not reluctantly, going with Bro. Tripp to his home at Rockford, where the Presbyterian meeting-house was secured for three evenings, when we were very cleverly cheated out of it; but through the efforts of the editor of the town and others the band hall was secured, where we held three services, but found the hall too cold to continue. Good was certainly done there as time will prove. I hope it will be possible to follow up the opening there made. Then on to Bro. Story's, real Saints of long ago, whose hospitality I enjoyed over night, spending the evening at a brother's near by, where we had meeting; then on to Portland, where I met and enjoyed meeting Bro. and Sr. Bishop so well known to the Saints. The rains of Oregon have not washed the business out of him nor the goodness out of her, nor the fogs their generosity. Also met Sr. Springer and family, and Sr. Smith, an old-time Saint of Nova Scotia, whose son-in-law and daughter are near the kingdom. I do hope they will soon enter in and share its blessings. They are worthy. There is not much chance to do anything in Portland.

From Portland came on to Hudson, near Drain. Found a few real Saints who are not only in the faith, but are in the work. They talk, buy everything that the church publishes to loan and give away, pay tithing, and help the elders. What more could they do? Have held two meetings here; go this evening to another place some four miles distant, not a very desirable undertaking considering the condition of the roads, that cannot be described. Am billed to speak at Drain in the Methodist meetinghouse twice on Sunday. Some miracles being wrought in this mission. It is an unfavorable time to hold meetings in Oregon on account of weather and roads.

Considerable talk is being indulged in in these parts among Saints concerning the "Lamoni boom." The timely, wise, and lawful observations in recent issues of the Herald will no doubt have a wholesome effect upon many. Such remarks may not be gratifying to "land boomers," but were to me and to many others. Thank God, some are moved by a higher, grander motive than to make money.

Saints in these parts are lamenting the action of the Board in taking out of the Herald the "Items of Interest." I am of the opinion it was a mistake. The poor Saints feel it most, for the reason they are able to take but one paper, and hardly that; so they are obliged to do without the news of the world, or the Herald; and as that of the world is almost indispensable, or so considered, some will no doubt do without the Herald, be obliged to, or live in ignorance of the affairs of the world. — Out of consideration to the poor the "Items" should have been continued. Many prized that part very highly, because they could get all the news of the world that concerned them, condensed. Of course to those living in cities taking "dailies" it was so much waste waper. It may favor them and help the Patriot, but be of no help to the poor Saints. It may be said that space is too limited. Let me suggest that some of those long "rigmaroles" in back of Herald called "Original Articles," that are seldom read or admired, be shortened a little, in mercy to the people.

Yours,

HIRAM L. HOLT.

GROVE HILL, Iowa, Jan. 10.

Editors Herald:—I am now preaching at a schoolhouse in Blackhawk county. The attendance is not very large, but we live in hopes of a better turnout before the close of this week; for the people in Dunkerton where Bro. J. S. Roth did some baptizing about two weeks ago, we understand will attend our meetings. Prejudice, that large monster, I fear is prevailing in the hearts of mankind here as in many other places.

I have been blessed with good liberty in my ministerial labor this winter, though my throat has troubled me considerably. Having been blessed by my heavenly Father, I am now free from any bronchial trouble, for which I am thankful, indeed.

We can say the work is onward in these parts, though it moves slowly. My traveling is done altogether with my horse and buggy; have not spent one cent for car fare this winter. There is more exposure attached to ministerial work done in this way during the winter season.

Having learned the financial condition of the church, I think it stands the ministerial force in hand to be as economical as possible; for we should be examples.

The Saints of this place will organize a Saints' Sabbath school on the 13th of this month. They all feel strong in the faith and have done what they could to help the church financially and God's servants with freewill offerings. Bro. J. S. Roth has done faithful work in these parts of late. May Zion prosper.

Your brother,

J. R. SUTTON.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, Jan. 7.

Editors Herald:—Our work moves along slowly in this district. Our numbers increase gradually; four were baptized in Hamburg a few weeks ago by Bro. Frank Durfey. Bro. Heide did a week's work in that place, and your humble servant has preached from ten to fifteen sermons there this fall. A good interest is manifested both by Saints and friends.

There are some faithful souls who have stood by the work in that town and vicinity for years; and now thank the Lord, they see the fruits of their labors. Those who have lately taken hold have done nobly. May they continually do well is our prayer. Bro. Heide also preached in the hall in Riverton and had a fine audience every night for about a week, and we trust good was accomplished.

We are moving along in the line of duty, endeavoring to keep pace with this great work, and filling its demands as made upon us as best we can. I speak the same for the rest of my brethren. Bro. H. Bronson has helped us out in Shenandoah for a few Sundays past.

In hearing from my colaborers of the Nodaway district I find they are up to the mark, plodding along, striving to do the best they can. I think they are the right men in the right place.

The local brethren of that district are also coming up to the help of the Lord. The work moves somewhat slowly there, but we believe effectual work that will count for good in the near future has been done. They are a faithful band of Saints in Nodaway district. To my brethren and fellow laborers: Let us try to make a brighter and clearer record in this coming year than in the past.

May God bless his work and Saints and inspire all with renewed energy, fervent zeal with good works, stronger faith, and greater power, is my earnest prayer.

HENRY KEMP.

WELLSTON, Ohio, Jan. 8.

Editors Herald:—Bro. H. R. Harder and I are now engaged in holding a series of meetings at Fluhart's schoolhouse near this place. I began the work on the 3d inst., and was joined by Bro. Harder on the 5th. We are having fair attendance. Quite a work has been done here by Bro. A. W. Kriebel, president of our district. He is not engaged in the general ministry, but labors locally as circumstances permit. We find that he has already baptized twelve persons during the conference year. He works during the week at the coal mines, and on Sundays preaches to his fellow laborers and all who come to hear; and we observe that he has the confidence of all, both in the church and out. Through his efforts they have organized a Sunday school and are now using the Gospel Quarterlies.

On last Sunday we had the pleasure of seeing Bro. Kriebel baptize one more. I will continue here with Bro. Harder till the latter part of the week, and then go to Vale's Mills over next Sunday, and from there to Ritchie and Calhoun counties, West Virginia, where I will labor the remainder of the conference year, unless directed otherwise.

We were made sad to hear of the loss by death of the two little boys of Bro. G. T. Griffiths, our missionary in charge. May the Lord bless him and his family that they may bow to the inevitable, and have strength to survive this severe blow.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED.—No. 1.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

THE Book of Mormon was published in 1830, and, since then, perhaps has been the least understood by the masses, and the most glaringly misrepresented by its enemies, of any book in the English language. This is easily accounted for when we consider the nature and object of the book, in connection with the perversity of human nature as recorded in all the history of the past. The book purports to be an inspired record, and to have been brought forth and translated by direct inspiration of God. Not only does it claim divine inspiration, but its grand object, the main cause of its being sprung upon the world at this time, is to establish a truth; a truth of such great importance to the human family, and so destructive to the Devil's work upon the earth, as to make its promulgators and defenders the special objects of vile slander, intolerant persecution, and unrelenting hatred in all ages of the world.

Before telling you what particular truth I have reference to, I shall tell you, in as few words as possible, what the Book of Mormon is. The main body of the work is a history of a colony of Israelites who came out from Jerusalem about six hundred years before the coming of Christ. Their leader's name was Lehi, a descendant of Joseph who was sold into Egypt. After leaving Jerusalem the colony divided. Those who were wicked and rebellious followed Laman, the oldest son of Lehi; and the righteous followed Nephi, one of his younger sons; hence they were called Lamanites and Nephites. The Lamanites became idolatrous, while the Nephites worshiped the God of Israel. The Book of Mormon gives the history of this people, their wars and their contentions, their righteousness and their wickedness, their prosperity and their adversity, with the teaching of their prophets and leaders, down to four hundred years after the coming of Christ, making a consecutive history of them for one thousand years. It tells us that Christ came to this continent after his resurrection, showed himself to the people, preached the gospel to them, and organized a church among them; that the church he organized here, the gospel he preached here, the ordinances he taught and practiced here, were the same as the church he organized, the gospel he preached, and the ordinances he taught and practiced on the Eastern Continent, at Jerusalem.

In addition to the history of this Israelite colony the book gives an account of another people who came from the tower of Babel at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people and scattered them abroad "upon all the face of the earth." This people were led by Jared and his brother, and were called Jaredites. They came to this continent under the direction of the Lord, rose to be a powerful people, were wonderfully blessed; both spiritually and temporally, turned from the Lord in their prosperity, and, when fully ripened in iniquity, were destroyed from off the land just before the landing of the Israelite colony. The Book of Mormon does not pretend to give those records in full. The Israelite or Nephite record was abridged by Mormon, one of the Nephite prophets. To this is added a brief synopsis of the Jaredite record by Moroni, the son of Mormon. The bulk of the work, however, was written by Mormon, which accounts for its being called "The Book of Mormon."

Some four hundred years after the coming of Christ, Moroni, the last of the Nephite prophets, being directed of the Lord, took those records and hid them in the earth, having been promised of the Lord that they should be brought forth in the last days, and translated by the gift and power of God. This promise has been marvelously fulfilled in the present century. Many have rejected the work without examining it, simply because of its marvelous nature, because of the peculiar strangeness which attaches to it. Such people should remember that "truth is stranger than fiction," and that the works of God are generally "counted as a strange thing" by the human family.

The Book of Mormon was brought forth, translated, and published to the world, by Joseph Smith, Jr. That he was divinely inspired for the accomplishment of this work will surely appear to all who will lay aside their prejudice and, in the light of God's word and the signs of the times, make a critical examination of his claims and the work he did. From the history of Mr. Smith we learn that he was born December 23, 1805, in Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont; that in 1820 he lived with his father's family in Manchester, New York; that during this year he attended a religious revival and became very much interested in his soul's salvation; and that the question of questions which then and there confronted him was, "Which of all the churches is right?" He was a boy, without education, and only in his fifteenth year; but he clearly saw (what any boy of even ten years ought to be able to see) that it was impossible for all the churches, differing as they do in organization, in doctrine, in teaching, and in practice, to be right. He thought some one of them was right; but he was unable to decide which one it was. In his perplexity he was told to read the Bible. He did so and, among other things, he found this:—

If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him.—James 1: 5.

Was it wrong for him to read this? You say, no. Was it wrong for him to believe it? You say, no. Well, if he reads it and believes it, would it be wrong for him to obey it? Again you say, no. So say I; so says every Bible believer; and so he thought. He was seeking the kingdom of God, and was perplexed and in doubt as to which of the many ways presented for his consideration was the straight and narrow way: he really lacked wisdom. He read this scripture and believed it. You say he did right. He found that those who lack wisdom are commanded to ask of God, and, having read and believed, he felt that he should obey. He tells us that after he decided to ask God, he went to the woods, and, kneeling down, poured out to God the fervent prayer of his soul, asking the Lord to show unto him which of all the churches was right. All agree that in this there is nothing wrong, nothing unscriptural. But there is a promise, in connection with this command, to those who ask for wisdom; and that promise is, "and it shall be given him."

Now if this boy had gone back to his religious teachers and told them that this text was false, that he had asked God for wisdom and did not get it, they would have told him that he had not asked in faith, and that if he would only believe, God would hear and answer his prayer. Reader, haven't you heard the sinner encouraged in similar words time and again?

But this boy did not return with murmurs on his lips, and disappointment written on his countenance. When he returned he declared that while he was pleading with God for the coveted knowledge a "pillar of light," "above the brightness of the sun," descended from above and rested upon him; that he saw "two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description," standing above him in the air; and in answer to the question, "Which of all the sects is right and which one shall I join?" he was told to "join none of them, for they are all wrong;" that "they teach for doctrine, the commandments of men; having a form of godliness; but denying the power thereof;" and that "their creeds were an abomination in his sight," that is, in God's sight.

This was too much for his religious instructors. The idea of the Lord telling a poor, ignorant boy that all the creeds and fine-spun theories of the scholastic divines of the nineteenth century are an abomination in the sight of God, was too much for their human pride to bear. To them it was blasphemy; and, like the self-righteous bigots who stoned Stephen, "they stopped their ears," and "with one accord" declared it was all of the Devil; that visions, spiritual manifestations (of this kind), and angelic ministrations, were all things of the past; and that God did not reveal himself in miraculous power now as he did in the days of Stephen, Paul, and John; thus confirming the truth of what Mr. Smith says the Lord told him in the vision; that is, that they have a "form of godliness," but deny "the power thereof."

On the night of September 21, 1823, Mr. Smith was visited by another heavenly messenger and of him he says:—

He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God unto me, and that his name was Moroni; that God had a work for me to do; and that my name should be had for good and for evil among all nations, and kindreds, and tongues, or that it should both good and evil spoken of among all people. He said there was a book deposited, written upon plates of gold, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that the fullness of the everlasting gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants; also, that there were two stones in silver bows—and these stones, fastened to a breastplate, constituted what is called Urim and Thummim—deposited with the plates; and the possession and use of these stones were what constituted seers in ancient or former times; and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book.

Without commenting on the foregoing, I shall ask the reader to examine it carefully, as it will be of help to him as he progresses with his investigation. But if any should feel that the appearance of Moroni, (a prophet who lived upon the earth fourteen centuries ago,) as an angel, is unscriptural, I would respectfully read this, concerning the angel that appeared to John upon the isle of Patmos:—

For I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.—Rev. 22: 9. (Also, Rev. 19: 10.)

These texts, in connection with the fact that Moses and Elias appeared unto Christ and those of his disciples on the mount, (Matt. 17: 1-8,) are sufficient to show that the claim here made is in harmony with the history of the past.

In 1827, the plates referred to above were delivered by the angel into the hands of Mr. Smith, who, with the Urim and Thummim and the help of the Spirit, proceed to translate them into the English language. The translation was completed in 1829, and, in 1830, it was published to the world as "The Book of Mormon."

I have given the foregoing outline of what the book purports to be, and of how it was brought to light, as briefly as I could consistent with clearness. Now I am prepared to tell you what grand truth the book was brought forth to establish, and, if you know nothing of this book only what you have heard from its enemies, you may prepare yourself for a surprise; for, as stated above, it has been the most glaringly misrepresented of any book in the English language, or in any other language. The book is so plain and pointed in regard to its mission that I shall let it speak for itself. The preface to the book says it shall come forth to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, manifesting himself unto all nations.

Again in speaking, prophetically, of the relation the Book of Mormon shall sustain to the Bible, it says:—

These last records which thou hast seen among the Gentiles shall establish the truth of the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, and shall make known the plain and precious things which have been taken away from them; and shall make known to all kindreds, tongues, and people, that the Lamb of God is the Son of the eternal Father, and the Savior of the world; and that all men must come unto him or they cannot be saved; and they must come according to the words which shall be established by the mouth of the Lamb.—B. M. p. 26.

The book referred to here as the "first records" is the Bible, more particularly the New Testament part of it; hence the "last records" (the Book of Mormon) are to establish the truth of the Bible, and make known to the people that they must obey the gospel, as taught in the Bible, or they cannot be saved; also that the Lamb of God is the Savior of the world.

Again it says:—

And for this cause I write unto you, that ye may know that ye must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ; . . . and also that ye may believe the gospel of Jesus Christ, which ye shall have among you; and also that the Jews, the covenant people of the Lord, shall have other witness besides him whom they saw and heard, that Jesus whom they slew was the very Christ, and the very God.—B. M. p. 487.

Again:—

Now these things are written unto the remnant of the house of Jacob; . . . and behold they shall go unto the unbelieving Jews; and for this intent shall they go: that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.—B. M. p. 490.

The grand truth, then, that the Book of Mormon was brought forth to establish is, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and the Savior of the world. Do you think it strange that a book of this kind, with such a grand mission, should be hated, despised, and misrepresented? Well, it is true; not only in this, but it is true of men also. Those who have accepted the Christ and contended for a full acceptance of and compliance with his teaching have shared a similar fate in the past, and his followers are taught to expect the same in the future, as is witnessed by the following:—

By faith Moses, when he had come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; . . . esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt.—Heb. 11:24-26.

Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them which showed before of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers.—Acts 7:52.

And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake. . . . If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household.—Matthew 10:22, 25.

Yea, the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.—John 16:2.

It is not necessary to multiply quotations. The foregoing are sufficient to show, that at least as far back as the days of Moses, people had to suffer reproach because of their faith in Christ; that he, when he came in the flesh, was slandered and misrepresented by his enemies, misunderstood by the masses, and finally crucified as a criminal; and that those those who were sent to tell the world that he was the Christ were told that they, in like manner, should be hated, spoken evil of for his name's sake, called Beelzebub, and even put to death by men who would think that they were doing God service. And Paul, after several years experiences in preaching Christ, says:—

Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.—2 Timothy 3:12.

Please do not imagine that the world has grown so wonderfully good since those Scriptures were given that they have become untrue. No, that will not do, for the last quotation is a prophecy of that which shall be "in the last days." And the verse following the one quoted says:—

But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.

Reader, do you believe the Bible? Do you believe the foregoing quotations from the New Testament? If you do, come, let us reason together. The Book of Mormon comes to us as an inspired record. Its avowed mission is to prove that Jesus is the Christ, and to convince both Jew and Gentile that they must come to him, and obey his gospel, or they cannot be saved. It comes to us to confirm the truth of the Bible. In the Bible we have the testimony of God's children on the Eastern Continent, that Jesus is the Christ, and in the Book of Mormon we have the same testimony from his children on this continent; and, as the testimony of a second witness in court confirms and makes doubly strong the testimony of the first, when they agree, so the testimony of the Book of Mormon confirms and makes doubly strong the testimony of the Bible. Now, do you think that Satan would sit still and allow an inspired book to go to the world, on such a mission as this, without making a strong and persistent effort to destroy its influence for good? Would he not do all in his power, by slander and misrepresentation, to poison the minds of the people, prejudice them against it, and thus keep them from investigating and examining its claims? All this he has done, and is still doing. Bad as the Devil is, I believe he has never been accused of being lazy, nor of neglecting his business. He is represented as a "roaring lion" walking about "seeking whom he may devour." As to his servants, however much they may disregard the Bible as a whole, there is one saying of the Savior that they have incorporated into their creed and to which they adhere with strict fidelity, and that is,

Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?

And their father's business is described by the Savior in the following language:—

He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.—John 8:44.

It must be said for his servants that they have attended strictly to their "father's business," so far as the Book of Mormon is concerned. They have told the people that it "supplants the Bible;" that it is to "take the place of the Bible;" that it "supercedes the New Testament in the same sense that the New Testament supercedes the Old;" that it "teaches a new gospel;" "does away with the work of Christ;" "puts Joseph Smith in the place of Christ;" and many other lies, of a similar nature, too numerous to mention. Thousands of honest people have been deceived by those falsehoods, and thus kept from reading the book for themselves, and also from hearing its claims presented by those who believe and know it to be true. Satan has left no stone unturned in his efforts to destroy this book, and the work connected with it. He has chosen men and women of all professions, and of all classes and shades of society, to carry on his nefarious work; but, as in the days of our Savior's ministry in the flesh, ministers of religion have been his special favorites. Don't be startled. Look to the history of the past, and learn wisdom. Remember that Cain was religious, and offered sacrifice to God; but his brother offered a different kind of sacrifice, and God accepted it, while Cain's offering was rejected. We all know the result. The false prophet, and man-made priests and teachers of Israel were the most bitter enemies with which the prophets of God had to contend, from Moses down to Christ. Was there any change, then? No. The Pharisees, Saducees, scribes, priests, high priests, D. D's., and LL. D's. were the most bitter, the most persistent and unrelenting, in hating, misrepresenting, and murdering both the Savior and his immediate followers. Those people were very religious, but, like Cain, when they saw that God had more respect for the offering of those who dared to worship different from them than he had for theirs, it was too much for their pride to bear. Human nature is the same now that it was then. The same class of people that murdered the Son of God—man-made priests and religious bigots have been the loudest in reviling, ridiculing, and misrepresenting the Book of Mormon. This, too, is in fulfillment of prophecy. Listen:—

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, . . . false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good; . . . having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof. . . . Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth.—2 Tim. 3: 1-8.

There are two points in this prophecy that I want to impress on the mind of the reader. The first is, it is to be "in the last days;" the second is, those "false accusers" who "resist the truth" and are "haters of those that are good," are to have "a form of godliness but denying the power thereof." If you will go to those who are so bitter against the Book of Mormon and ask them, Is the power of God with his people on the earth now, as in the days of the apostles? Do the angels visit them now? Are the sick healed, devils cast out, the blind restored to sight, and the lame made to walk? Do they have the gifts of tongues, prophecy, discerning of spirits, and revelation? They will tell you No; that these things are all done away, and are not for us. Now, if Paul's prophecy concerning the "last days" is true, wouldn't you expect this class of people to "resist the truth," be "haters of those that are good," and also false accusers?" The very fact that they teach that those blessings are not for the children of God now, is positive proof that they don't enjoy them, that God "had not respect" unto their offering; hence they desire, Cainlike, to put to death those whose offering God does respect. There is nothing strange, then, in this class of people opposing the Book of Mormon. It is just as predicted. It is just what would be expected by anyone who understands and believes the Bible.

Now, reader, are you prepared to lay aside your prejudice, examine the evidences in favor of the Book of Mormon, and then weigh them impartially? If so, please come with me to the Bible, the standard by which we are to try all that comes to us as inspiration. That standard says:—

Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.—1 Thess. 5: 21.

For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning.—Rom. 15: 4.

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.—2 Peter 1: 20, 21.

The disciples of Christ, in proving the divinity of his mission, appealed to those things "written aforetime," as witnessed by the following:—

Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.—Acts 8: 35.

For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was the Christ.—Acts 18: 28.

Saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come.—Acts 26: 22.

I believe the Book of Mormon, and the work connected with it, are things "which the prophets and Moses did say should come," and shall, therefore, appeal to them for proof. I shall also try and refrain from putting a "private interpretation" upon God's word, believing that truth needs no sophistry nor deceit to help sustain it. If I cannot prove from the prophecies of the Bible that such a book, and such a work, were to come forth in the latter days, in the manner and at the time, of the coming forth of this work, then I shall not ask you to accept it.

Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.

CHARITY.

WHAT a blessed thing it is to have charity! No matter what our natural inclinations may have been, when charity takes up its abode in our hearts and diffuses itself through our souls, a wonderful change takes place. When the charitable soul sees its brother sin, harsh condemnatory judgment it entertains not. It may sorrow, it may mourn for the harm done to the individual and the church; but with faith and hope, one on either side, charity seeks to reclaim and save.

O charity, thou pure love of God, how thou hast blessed the world! and glorious thought, how thou wilt bless it!

And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.—Rom. 5: 5.

We obey the gospel that we may receive the wonderful gift of the Holy Ghost:—

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 38.

O power to live, precious boon given to the humblest of saints! O stream of eternal life, nothing shall check thine onward flow! For God is love and would have all men know that live. Jesus said:—

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—John 10: 10.

Because I live, ye shall live also.—John 14: 19.

O, followers of Jesus, ye are rich, ye have received the love of the truth into your hearts, ye have been born of incorruptible seed; eternal life is yours! "In your patience possess ye your souls," for nothing can separate you from the love of Jesus. The fountain that supplies oil for the vessels has an unfailing source.

Followers of the risen Lord, willing to suffer reproach and persecution for his dear sake, ye are partaking of the divine nature, ye are being cleansed and sanctified by the influence of the Spirit of life! Saints of God, what lack ye? Not opportunities or power to do good! For, with the banner of love floating over you, ye will be welcomed by thousands of earth's suffering ones; peaceful, blessed your mission, because you shall bless others; for your light will not be hid.

O, ye Saints of God, who love the truth, who bask in the sunshine of his love, among whom the power of godliness has been manifested, rejoice and be glad, work and labor, a rich harvest awaits you, a glorious reward is assured!

Conference Minutes.

TAHITIAN DIVISION.

Kaukura Island, October 6, 1894. Conference opened at eight a. m. by choosing J. W. Gilbert president, Loui (native) and L. R. Devore assistants, Tetuarere secretary. The arranging of the priesthood followed. Reading of minutes of last conference. Thirty-four elders reported personally, six priests, six teachers, and five deacons. Only four branches reported; viz., Tikahau, Niau, Panau, and Avatoru. Report of standing committee: L. R. Devore reported that he had met Captain Hoffman and interviewed him concerning the passage fare of Bro. T. W. Smith and wife from Papeete to Kaukura; found it had never been paid, and went with Bishop's agent, Metuore, and saw him pay the debt ($20) and received receipt therefor. Report received and committee discharged. New business. A request was read from the Aratua branch desiring the conference to ordain Bro. Tapu to the eldership. The request was accepted and his ordination left in the hands of missionary in charge.

Sunday, 7th. Preaching by L. R. Devore (in the native tongue) at seven a. m., by J. W. Gilbert (in the native tongue) at ten a. m.; Sunday school at eleven a. m. in charge of Sister Devore. A couple were married by Bro. Gilbert. Sacrament service at three p. m., Loui and Tepoaitu preaching at Tapu at seven p. m.

Monday, 8th. Eight a. m., a request was presented by the Panau branch requesting the ordination of Alfred Sanford. Request received, considered, and adopted. He was ordained under the hands of J. W. Gilbert and L. R. Devore, the former mouthpiece and using the Tahitian tongue. On motion it was decided to move the missionary dwelling at Papaua to Tarona and place it on land belonging to the church. As it has no occupant, is going to decay, besides we have no deed for the land it stands upon. On motion it was agreed to divide the amount to be raised to purchase a printing press ($500) equally between the two divisions, giving to each $2.50 to raise. On motion the amount to be raised by this division was divided among the branches according to their numerical strength. A petition was read requesting this conference to dispose of material which had been obtained for the purpose of erecting a church house in Moturara branch (disorganized by last April conference). The conference decided to donate the material to the Arutua branch to aid them in the erection of a church house. On motion Bro. J. W. Gilbert was chosen president of the division for the coming year, Loui and Metuore his counselors. Bro. Tuarere was elected secretary of division. On motion it was decided to hold the next division conference October 6, 1895, at Tikahau. The conference was one of the best ever held in the mission, and the first one since Bro. T. W. Smith first came, over which an American missionary has presided unaided by an interpreter. We feel to thank the good Father that the day has come when we are not dependent on interpreters as before. We feel assured that the work is onward. The Sunday school is one of the leading influences strengthening the church in this island mission.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

The Northeastern Missouri district Sunday school convention will convene Friday, February 1, 1895, at 2:30 p. m., at Bevier, Missouri. All school workers kindly requested to be present. The election of delegates to General Convention will take place at this meeting.

J. A. TANNER, Supt.

Miscellaneous Department.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

I would like to remind the Saints of the Southeastern Illinois district that the conference year is drawing to a close and we have but little to report as Bishop's agent from this district. We would urge those who expect to pay some this year to do so as soon as they can so it will appear in the report. We know it is very hard to get money now; but if some of the Saints do not make the sacrifice the elders will have to go home and work to support their families.

Some in the district have paid in some to Bro. Hilliard. This will not be in my report. Perhaps others have paid to some of the elders who have not reported yet. I would like for us all to pay in a little if it is so we can't pay much, and it is so with many of us. A dollar or two from each one would make quite a little sum and do a great deal of good. We understand that it is those who are willing to make a sacrifice, who will receive the blessing. So let us all do what we can and God will do for us that which is for our good.

Yours for truth,

W. A. KELLEY.

WARNING.

To the Saints:—One E. L. Mull, last spring, pretended that he would like to embrace the gospel. He was baptized by Bro. T. J. Shepard; afterwards courted one of the young sisters and succeeded in winning her hand in marriage. He lived with her until last November, during which time he went in debt to all he could get in debt to, and then took his father-in-law's horse and left one night, and has not been heard of since. If he has not repented he is a bad man. He has two little boys with him, aged eight and ten years. He is about thirty-five years old, of light complexion, and very talkative. Weight about one hundred and thirty-five pounds. Warning to all Saints.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Northwestern Kansas district conference will convene with the Goshen branch, Clay county, Kansas, Saturday, February 8, 1895, at 10:30 a. m. Come Saints, all that can, and bring with you the Spirit that will make it a time of profit and rejoicing to all. Let each branch send in a full report. If you have no statistical report to make send in a written report of the condition of your branch that the condition and prospects of the work of the district may be known to the conference. As this is likely to be the last conference before General Conference, it will be necessary to appoint a delegate or delegates to represent the district at the General Conference, and if you have any requests to make of General Conference, this will be the time to make them known.

Yours in bonds,

H. RESCH, Sec.

The Northeastern Missouri district conference will convene Saturday, ten a. m., Feb. 2, 1895, at Bevier, Missouri, continuing over Sunday. All are cordially invited to attend so that we may have a profitable time. Priesthood, please prepare written reports. We also kindly request the presidents of the Huntsville, Missouri River, and Hannibal branches to make an effort to have their branches reported this time, for this is the last meeting before General Conference, and would like to note all changes if any.

T. D. WILLIAMS, Pres.

J. A. TANNER, Clerk.

Conference of the Southern Indiana district will convene with the Hope branch, February 9, 1895, at 10:30 a. m. All branch clerks will do well to note the resolution of last conference as published in Herald with minutes and fill out their reports accordingly. Reports of branches and the ministry may be sent to V. D. Baggerly, Derby, Indiana. Will the clerks of Birdseye, West Fork, and Lily Dale branches be so kind as to send me items of names, births, baptisms, confirmations, ordinations, marriages, etc., so that items may be entered on the new district record correctly. There appears to be a great many mistakes on the old record. Some branch records have items which have never been reported to the district recorder or General Secretary and Recorder, as I am informed by him. This should not be. Let us take an interest in this part of church work with others, so that all records may agree.

M. R. SCOTT, JR., Sec.

Conference of the Northern Wisconsin district will convene at Valley Junction with the Saints of the Evergreen branch the first Saturday and Sunday in February, 1895. Branches, please send reports for the quarter past, and let all make an earnest effort to attend.

MORTIMORE.—To Bro. Ed and Sr. Minnie Mortimore, of Riverton, Iowa, October 9, 1891, a daughter, and named Alta. Blessed December 17, 1894, by H. Kemp and J. Comstock.

MARRIED.

LOOK—CHANDLER.—At Addison Point,

Maine, December 24, 1894, Mr. Shadrack W. Look to Miss Lizzie I. Chandler, both of Addison, Elder S. O. Foss officiating.

DIED.

MILLER.—Violet Francis, eldest daughter of Bro. Ebenezer and Maggie A. Miller, was born September 17, 1887, and died December 26, 1894. She took sick on December 3, which sickness turned into scarlet fever, then ulceration of the throat. She was conscious of her approaching death and told her mamma she was going and not to worry for her. We buried her in Kirtland cemetery. Bro. John H. Lake offered prayer. The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh what seemeth good to him. We all have faith to say, "Thy will be done."

STEVIISON.—Mary Hazel, daughter of Mr. William and Sr. Ida Stevison, was born September 13, 1893, and died December 21, 1894. Funeral December 23, 1894, in the Methodist church at Coalton, Ohio, by James Moler, assisted by the pastor, Rev. Miller. The choir kindly furnished the music. She was interred in the cemetery at Coalton.

FLEET.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 2, 1895, Ethel, daughter of Mr. B. D. and Sr. Nellie Fleet, aged three weeks. Its mortal experience was sad, and it was soon exchanged for the blessed place where the innocents "do always behold the face of the Father." By request of the parents Bro. H. A. Stebbins had charge of the funeral services. He spoke briefly upon the beautiful assurances found in Christ's words, concerning the little ones and their future is the spirit state and in the resurrection; also of the hope for parents who prepare themselves to dwell where these emblems of the heavenly land are forever happy.

KAPLINGER.—At Freesoil, Michigan, December 8, 1894, Bro. Charles E., son of Jacob and Margaret A. Kaplinger, aged 25 years and 10 months. He was top-loading logs on the railroad cars, and was trying to stop a log, but could not. He turned to jump from the car, but the log caught his foot, and instead of jumping he fell headlong, striking the ground on his head and shoulders; and the log fell across his shoulders. He was killed instantly. He was married about thirteen months previously. Funeral sermon by J. J. Cornish.

GARD.—At Hamburg, Iowa, January 2, 1895, Sr. Mary Gard. She was born July 25, 1869; Baptized by James Badham August 19, 1883. She was a great sufferer, but bore it with patience. She was strong in the faith of the gospel and trusted in her Savior to the last, and hoped for a part in the resurrection of the just. Father, mother, brothers, sisters, a host of kind friends, and two small children mourn. Funeral sermon by Elder Henry Kemp in the Saints' Hall to a large and very attentive audience of Saints and friends, many of whom kindly administered to her comfort in her sickness. Her remains were carefully laid away to rest in the Hamburg cemetery.

JONES.—At her home in Dickinson county, near New Chillicothe, January 5, 1895, Sr. Nellie M., wife of Bro. Samuel Jones. For some six or seven years Sr. Jones has been a sufferer from cancer; and near the end the dropsy set in, causing great distress. She was of a sociable and kindly disposition, which made her many friends as was shown by the large attendance at the funeral. Although a bitter cold day, the large Dunkard church was filled from the door to the pulpit. She leaves besides the husband four daughters who will long cherish the memory of their mother.

MCCOY.—Sr. Rachel A., wife of Bro. H. A. McCoy, died Dember 27, 1894, at her home near Tama, Iowa. Her maiden name was Mitchell. She was born in Eden Prairie, Hennepin county, Minnesota, September 1, 1856; moved with her parents to Des Moines, Iowa, in 1869. From there she came with the family to Powsheik county in 1872. She was united in wedlock with Bro. H. A. McCoy, at Richland Creek, January 13, 1878. Their union was blessed with five children, four of them living, two sons and two daughters, one daughter preceding her. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church when the gospel was preached in the neighborhood. She received and obeyed it in 1884, being baptized by W. C. Nirk. In both churches she was a faithful and exemplary member. She loved her Lord and Master and followed him through evil as well as good report. All feel the loss of a loved one from our midst. Her funeral was held at the Haven Methodist Episcopal church. Elder W. C. Nirk spoke. The remains were laid in Haven cemetery.

RASMUSSEN.—Near Beatrice, Nebraska, December 8, 1894, Lewis, infant son of Bro. Michael Rasmusson and wife. Born September 19, 1894. Funeral sermon by Elder Hughes of the Christian church.

SCHOOL HYGIENE.

"There is no longer any doubt that the contagious diseases of childhood are largely spread through the instrumentality of the schools. In cases of epidemics, it has been proved time and time again that, if the schools are closed, the epidemic dies out, or that mainly the children who attend the schools infected contract these diseases. Children who are suffering from consumption in a pronounced form should not be permitted to attend any school. In no case should either pupil or teacher spit upon the floor or into the hot-air registers.

All children should be vaccinated before being admitted to school. All pupils or teachers suffering from diphtheria, scarlet fever, small-pox, varioloid, measles, or contagious diseases of the eye or skin ought to be excluded from school until pronounced cured and innocuous to other children. When any of the above diseases are in a family, all the children of that family should be excluded from school so long as danger of communicating the disease exists. Teachers should be required to report all cases of contagious diseases in their schools to the health officer or burgess. When any of the above diseases are epidemic in a community, the school ought to be closed until the disease subsides. The books which have been used by sick children will be infected, and should be burned."

A PRESBYTERIAN VIEW OF APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

THE Lambeth Conference, representing the Church of England, lately proposed four articles as the essentials to the organic union of the many sects and denominations of Christians. One of these articles is what is called the "Historic Episcopate," or Apostolic Succession, with all that this term signifies as interpreted by the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. This view of the Episcopacy denies the validity of all non-Episcopal Orders; and, more than this, refuses to accept any Episcopacy, such as the Methodist Episcopal, for instance, that cannot show a succession from an Episcopacy that reaches back to Apostolic times. As was doubtless anticipated, many denominations will not for one moment consider the Lambeth propositions. They, in general, deny the "Historic Episcopate," or, at least, deny that it is essential to church government or doctrine.

In the Presbyterian Quarterly, October, the Rev. Dr. J. A. Waddell comes out vigorously as an advocate of the "Historic Episcopate," but not in the sense in which the Church of England holds it. Accepting the inspiration of the Book of Acts and the Epistles of St. Paul, and finding in these "venerable documents" that the primitive Churches had "rulers called episcopoi, or elders," and that "hundreds of these bishops, which is the English for episcopoi, were ordained by the apostles and their assistants," Dr. Waddell is "as sure that the primitive church was episcopal as that the Bible was from God." He institutes a comparison between what he calls "the episcopate of uninspired history, or tradition," and "the episcopate of inspired history." The first, he says, is "a priestly aristocracy as unlike the elders of Paul's churches as an elephant is unlike a mouse;" while the latter was "a body of select men in a congregation of believers." Inasmuch as the Presbyterian Church holds that its ministers are elders or bishops, Dr. Waddell says: "I maintain that the most consistent Episcopalians in the world are the Presbyterians," and proceeds to justify his position by the following argument:—

"There is no reason whatever for rejecting the 'Historic Episcopate' if sacred history is allowed its due weight in the scales. The observant inquirer will be astonished to find that prelaty is, in the light of the New Testament, nothing less than an abandonment of the parochial episcopacy so carefully instituted by Paul. . . .

"If we understand the prelatist, he wishes to convey, by the terms he employs, the notion that his episcopate is 'historic,' in the sense of original and permanent. But, with the exception of the word itself, the whole institution is the fruit of development. 'Bishop' means different things in different times and localities, and 'historic' belongs to events rather than institutions. The episcopate of these gentlemen is no more historic than the pyramids. It is a fine specimen of lucus a non lucendo. . . .

"The advocates of this institution propound it as a part of an ultimatum for organic union with other Protestant sects, and seem to assume that it is perfectly definite and intelligible. But, on inspection, it is found to be a vanishing quantity, presenting occasion for a limited difference of opinion. And yet its advocates treat it as a fundamental article of religious belief, no more to be surrendered than the sacraments. . . .

"We are not rationalists, and admit the truth of many religious propositions, however mysterious, when proved from Scripture. But this proposal is that all Christians shall accept in faith the inexplicable mystery of a spiritual pedigree descending to us through eighteen centuries of ecclesiastical evolution, as validly in Abyssinia, Russia, Italy, and Spain, as anywhere else, but totally wanting among those Christians who respect the Bible most and are doing most for the kingdom of Christ. . . .

"But one of the strangest phenomena is the unwillingness of Christian men who appeal to history to give due weight to the only history that is infallible. . . . If one of their own prelates should ordain elders or bishops in every parish in his diocese, the act would be denounced as an outrage by the whole hierarchy; and yet it would be in close conformity to Apostolical example, since Paul instructed both Timothy and Titus so to do. The elders of Ephesus were bishops (see Acts 20:28, Revised New Testament), but this fact is too historical for the hierarchy. They refuse to recognize an episcopacy fifty or a hundred years older than their own, not only as improperly ordained, but as not historical! They positively forbid the Christian congregations under their care to be organized after the model of Paul's churches, and require them to be governed by an episcopate of later date and far more extensive jurisdiction. . . .

"Parochial episcopacy was undeniably instituted by the Apostle Paul. From the time of the English Reformation, a governmental party in that country, always associated with the court and the aristocracy, has maintained a desperate controversy against this form of episcopate, seeking by every device of priestly ingenuity, to substitute for it the opposite hierarchical system. So far as Protestants are concerned, it is a purely English idea, as little countenanced by Continental churches as any other insular peculiarity. But it has been fighting ever since, not only against the letter of inspired history, but against the sacred fellowship of the gospel."

Dr. Waddell, in referring especially to the Lambeth Conference propositions, says:—

"A catholic basis of union is proposed, in which all members shall concur in the maintenance of two dogmas which are irreconcilable. . . . The demand is clearly that all the constituents of this united church shall hereafter agree in submitting to a government, in parishes by a priesthood, and in dioceses by 'historic bishops;' whereas the very Scriptures, which they have just received as the word of God, declare, in so many words, that the original primitive churches were governed, under the apostles, by a body of elder-bishops in each congregation."—Literary Digest.

CAN THE HEATHEN BE SAVED?

THERE are comparatively few Christians who believe in the damnation of the whole heathen world, and many are the attempts that have been made to reconcile a belief in the ultimate salvation of all good Heathens with the clear scriptural statements, "He that believeth . . . shall be saved," and "He that believeth not shall be damned." The subject is approached with great boldness by the author of "The Gospel in Pagan Religions." There is no attempt to escape the clear teaching of scripture that salvation is only through Jesus Christ, but the writer takes the ingenious position that the Heathen who are conscious of sin, and believe in the mercy of God, will be saved by Jesus Christ as the embodiment of divine mercy, even though they never heard the name of Jesus. He says:—

"The faith that is the gospel condition of salvation is not the mind's belief in the theology of the gospel, but the soul's trust in the living Theos that is back of the gospel. The creed is a body of which the gospel is the soul; the body is of time and varies in thought and expression, but the soul is immortal and immutable. Man has made many systems of theology, but God has given only one gospel—the divine provision for mercy to sinners. "Hence," says the apostle, if any man sin, we [the human race] have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.' If Jesus Christ is the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, then it must be possible for any sinner in the world to be saved through that propitiation. It is not necessary that the historical name of Jesus should be known, as the invariable condition on which a soul can trust in the all-embracing mercy of God through his only begotten Son, who has given himself a ransom for all, and as a propitiation for the sins of the whole world. A soul can be saved without knowing how the salvation has been made possible in the divine reconciliation of the grace of mercy with the law of justice. How few among Christians understand intellectually the deep mysteries of the divine plan of human salvation! Multitudes in Christian lands trust in the mercy of God and are saved without knowing, or being able to know, how mercy reaches them in consistency with the demands of justice. And likewise, numbers in non-Christian lands may trust in the mercy of God and be saved through the propitiation of Jesus—a Savior unknown to them by name. . . .

"The living God, unknown by name in the Greek Pantheon, had ordained that all nations should seek him, feeling after him through the dark, if haply they might touch him whom they could not see. He is not far from any man, for in him we all, Pagans and Christians alike, live, and move, and have our being. Men exist in God spiritually, as they do physically in the all-enveloping atmosphere, and their souls are conscious of the presence of the spiritual element in which they live, just as their bodies are conscious of the material element in which they exist. The body does not see, but always feels the presence of the air, and it would die if all air should be removed from it; so the soul does not see, but always feels the presence of God with it, and it would die, if God should wholly withdraw his Spirit from man.

"Paul tells us that men seek God by feeling for him in the darkness around them, and that by feeling after God they may touch him. . . . Even in the most brutish and barbarous of the African tribes, there is the idea of one Supreme Being, and even the most ignorant and degraded do not regard the fetish of their worship as their God, but only, as the converted African prince, Momolu Masquoï, informed the people at Chicago, as the visible mediator between him and his unseen God, too holy and exalted for sinful man to approach except through the mediation of an intervening object or person. This is the explanation of nature-worship and of all forms of idolatry. Man conscious of his sin dares not approach the immaculate throne of the God of consuming holiness directly, and in his own person, and so he seeks to draw nigh through the objects of nature, as the sun, the moon, or stars, or fruit-bearing trees, towering mountains, or flowing rivers, or through the images of gold, iron, wood, or stone, graven by art and man's device. Thus, in idolatry itself there is a dim shadow of a great Christian truth, the need of a mediator between God and man, of one who shall propitiate God and open the way for mercy to sinners. . . . This salvation is not apart from the propitiation of Jesus; but is through that propitiation, dimly and distortedly apprehended by the feelings of the heart rather than by the conceptions of the mind. . . .

"He forgets the infinitude of God's mercy who assumes that the plenitude of the creed of the gospel implies the gospel-emptiness of all other creeds. It is not a new gospel that we preach; but we do preach that the old gospel of God's mercy for sinners is so full and overflowing that it cannot be contained within the limits of any creed, but is found as a life-giving element in all creeds that hold out the hope of divine mercy to sinful men."

WONDERFUL EFFECTS OF THE KOLA NUT.

The State Department has been calling upon United States Consuls in Africa for specific information respecting the marvelous kola nut, which by its peculiar action upon the muscular system enables the negroes to make long journeys bearing enormous loads under tropical suns and across difficult country without food. Cases authentically reported prove that an old negro may carry a 176-pound bag of coffee four leagues by chewing a single nut slowly. Robert P. Porley, Consul at Sierra Leone, has sent in the first report on this subject, treating of the means of growing and preparing the nuts. He says the natives eat the nuts in the early morning as a stay against the want of ordinary food while traveling and in the evening to induce sleep. Altogether they consider that a general benefit to the human system is derived from the consumption of the kola.

A weak lye is a useful and perfectly safe tree wash. Also old soap suds that stand a few days after clothes are washed, will keep the bark smooth and the borers off, if trees are washed two or three times in summer. If one pint of crude carbolic acid is added to fifteen gallons of old soap suds or lye, it will keep insects off for months.

SALVATION ARMY WEDDINGS.

BRO. GEORGE W. ROBLEY sent us a clipping from the Boston Herald, of interest to the ministry, as it involves a question that in its consequences may affect themselves:—

The legality of Salvation Army marriages by Brig. Brewer in this city is being considered by City Registrar Whitmore.

This question came up when the certificate of a marriage performed by him Christmas night at the Pine street headquarters was filed, several days ago. In the opinion of the city registrar, Brig. Brewer is not "a minister of the gospel, ordained according to the usage of his denomination," as required by the statutes.

A sensational story published in an evening paper yesterday regarding this Christmas marriage by Brig. Brewer does not please the city registrar, who makes the following comment:—

"The report of the interview between Mr. Brewer and myself is grossly exaggerated; nothing but the most courteous and civil language passed between us. It was fully understood by Mr. Brewer that I asked only officially, as I did in the case of the Revere clergyman that came before Judge Bolster of Roxbury, in order to secure a settlement of the law in the matter; and when Mr. Brewer departed, my last remarks to him were that if my lawyer decided that I was mistaken I should at once write to him so as to relieve him from any possible anxiety or worry.

"I have been considering the matter, as I stated the other day to you (The Herald reporter), and my view of this important subject is as follows:—

"Conceding that the defendant 'resides in the commonwealth and continues to perform the functions of his office,' if he have one, the remaining qualification of Public Statutes, chapter 145, part 22, is that he be 'a minister of the gospel, ordained according to the usage of his denomination.' Beyond doubt, 'the gospel' means the New Testament; hence Pagans, Mohammedans, and Jews are excluded. In fact, the rabbis or Jewish ministers are now specially empowered by acts of 1894, chapter 461, which I succeeded in obtaining from the Legislature.

"Clearly, then, the minister must be of the Christian faith, and of this faith only two great divisions are known, both claiming to be founded on the gospel; viz.: Trinitarians and Unitarians. The former includes Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, and all others who hold the doctrine of the Trinity. The second includes Unitarians and those who believe in any degree the doctrine of a single God and of the more or less divine nature of Jesus.

"Our contention is that such alone are ministers of the gospel, excluding, therefore, all sects which deny the divinity of Christ or the authority of the New Testament. We also contend that by the word 'denomination' is meant a recognized body of persons holding a similar opinion on matters of religious faith. Following the standard dictionaries we find the word means 'a sect, class, or division, particularly of Christians.' We claim that the word as used in this law means a broad and general division on theological grounds, and not a sub-division. We contend that an Episcopalian of the Church of England and a Separatist like Increase Mather both belong to one denomination, viz., the Trinitarian, although each regards the other as a sect or sub-division of the general faith.

"Although the word 'denomination' may have had a greater limitation in 1773, when the Church of England seems to have been called a 'denomination' as distinctive from the congregational form which was then the established church in Massachusetts, we contend that this distinction became obsolete from the date of the rise of Unitarianism in this State. Then a broad distinction was made between the supporters and opponents of the doctrine of a Trinity. These two great divisions cover the only possible ones which can claim to be ministers of the gospel. Our laws show this most clearly.

"In 1786 the clergyman authorized to celebrate marriage is to be 'a stated and ordained minister of the gospel' (chap. 3). In 1817 (chap. 141) he is to be 'any stated ordained minister of the gospel.' But in 1834 (chap. 177) he is to be 'a minister of the gospel, ordained according to the usage of his denomination.' In the Revised Statutes of 1836, the General Statutes of 1860, and the public statutes of 1882, the same words are used.

"It is a notorious fact that the Unitarian denomination rose to prominence between 1817 and 1834. We claim that this act of 1834 recognizes only facts, and if 'denominations' meant 'sects,' it refers only to such as then existed.

"It was proved in the case recently decided by Judge Bolster of the Roxbury court that the Congregational Trinitarians and the Congregational Unitarians were two distinct bodies, and that the usage of one was not binding on the other. It is also a matter of common knowledge that certain divisions of Christians—notably the Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, and Methodists—had a form of ordination prior to the year 1834 by which ministers were ordained by bishops. The Congregational Trinitarians had another form, which was defined by Judge Bolster as being essentially one which required the coöperation of a council of churches.

"In the present case we contend that the Salvation Army is not a denomination or even a sect. Its theological tenets are Trinitarian, and any new features introduced into them are not of a theological order. It is essentially a philanthropic association, and its main feature of seeking out the fallen and degraded classes for the purpose of making Christians of them is in no wise distinctive in principle from that of all other Christian denominations. No Christian church will allow that this object is denied or slighted in its creed. The particular method employed is old and not especially peculiar. The missionaries of the Roman Catholic Church have for centuries risked torture and death for exactly these objects. The Methodist sect was founded by a desire to revivify the zeal of the English Episcopal establishment.

"And as every Christian church has at times tried to adapt itself to the ever-changing conditions of modern civilization, so this Salvation Army, with its semi-military organization, is not a church, a denomination, or even a sect, theologically, but merely a society of Christians using popular methods to extend Christianity and a belief in the tenets of the Trinitarian denomination. To take parallel cases: The creation of Sunday schools did not make a new denomination, nor the establishment of foreign or home missions; nor the founding of the order of deaconesses.

"In this case one Ballington Booth, recently admitted to citizenship here, assumes the power at his discretion to ordain ministers of the gospel. He tries in the nineteenth century to assume the function of a pope, and to assume powers which have hitherto been supported only on the theory of the apostolic succession. This assumption is contrary to the whole traditions of New England, and will undoubtedly be carefully scrutinized by the courts before they decide in favor of it.

"Without being uncharitable it would seem as if this special phrase, 'ordain you to be a minister of the gospel' was put into Mr. Booth's proclamation for the express purpose of meeting, and if possible, circumventing existing laws. If he had said, 'hereby commission you' or 'authorize you to go out and preach,' it would have been preposterous, because everybody has that power; but his use of the technical words, 'ordain you to be a minister of the gospel,' can be explained, as I have said, on only one of two theories—either that he assumes now to create himself a pope, whose powers were exercised only on the theory of the traditional authority of St. Peter and his successors, or else he must have had in mind the desirability of evading the marriage laws of some of the States in this country.

"To sum up the matter, my claim is that ordination either as understood in 1834 or as understood in the present year, is a certain definite and well understood institution. A man may be ordained by a bishop, or by a council of churches in this State. If he be a Unitarian he may doubtless be ordained by a church; but if a Trinitarian he cannot be ordained by a church, and Mr. Brewer's associates, the body of them who are here in Boston, even if they were an ecclesiastical body constituting a congregation or parish, could not ordain him themselves, nor could they transfer that power to anyone else. If it be contended that they have a denomination which transfers that power to somebody else, just as that power is exercised by Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, or Methodists, my reply is that it is reversing the entire chain of history. Priests are ordained by bishops who were created before the parish or congregation. The bishop claims to hold his commission by divine authority transmitted through a continuous line of bishops from the time of Jesus, and the priest, when so constituted, went out to seek and to form his congregation.

"It would be beyond precedence to claim that if the process was reversed and the congregation created the bishop, that was any denomination created or thought of in the year 1834 when these particular words were put into the laws of Massachusetts.

"As a charitable institution the Salvation Army undoubtedly is doing good work. Personally, from what little I have seen of Mr. Brewer, I believe him to be honest, sincere, and devout; and inasmuch as Mr. Brewer, if he be a citizen of Massachusetts, can in the easiest possible manner obtain the power of justice of the peace to solemnize marriage, there seems to be no reason why he should try to put a forced and unreasonable construction on the laws when there is no exigency which demands anything of the kind.

"My only object, of course, is to have the laws passed upon by some court, so that I may have a proper guide for the discharge of my duties, because, as the records of the city clerk or city registrar are made by law to be prima facie evidence of a marriage, it is of the utmost importance that whatever purports to be a marriage, and is entered on the records, should be without any legal doubt or flaw upon them.

"I must protest that any decision against Mr. Brewer's authority will in any way effect the validity of any marriage heretofore performed, as in the Revere case. The exact contrary is true. A marriage where either party believed it to be valid is valid, and though any informality is bad, like a cloud on a title to real estate, it does not really make the marriage illegal, and it can always be corrected and made beyond a doubt while the parties live."—Boston Herald, January 3, 1895.

It is well for all to take notice of this controversy and note results, for it is possible that in some place, in the United States, the question whether the Reorganized Church is a religious denomination coming within the meaning of the statute, as it did on a late occasion in Canada; in which case it is quite safe for all to be informed on the subject.

The traveling ministry will do well to ascertain what the statutory enactments are in the respective States where the scene of their labors may lie; and if those statutes require that they be registered, or that they obtain a certificate from a judge of any court of record, in order to be qualified to celebrate the marriage rite in the State, then make sure to secure the requisite recognition and authority before officiating in the ceremony.

It is necessary that we be not only lawabiding, in that we are peaceable and good citizens in not breaking the law by overt acts of wrongdoing, but that we observe those items of the law by which we are authorized to perform the special duties devolving on us as ministers of the gospel, and of which the legislature takes cognizance.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

DID the Levitical priesthood exist prior to the days of Levi? If so by what name was it called?

Ans.—Undoubtedly the priesthood, the authority by which Levi and his sons performed the duties and celebrated the rites of their office, existed before Levi, as it is hardly to be supposed that God would invent or create a priesthood for Levi.

It was called the Aaronic priesthood, before Levi, and for a similar reason that the line of duties performed by those holding it were by Aaron and his sons.

It would almost appear from Doc. and Cov., Sec. 104, that at the beginning the different callings, or offices in the priesthood service were all recognized under one head, and called "the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God;" but subsequently, to avoid the too frequent use of the name, which might tend to improper, light, and irreverent treatment of the name, a separation of duties occurred and one class of officers was designated to one set of duties and another class to another; the one was called the Melchisedec, the other the Aaronic, or Levitical; the one being called the higher the other the lesser priesthood; the one appertaining to spiritual the other to temporal things. The terms Melchisedec and Aaronic or Levitical priesthood apply rather to the right to officiate in specified rites and duties, than to any distinction of individuals.

The Doctrine and Covenants states that there are in the church two priesthoods, which freely rendered will mean that the offices to be performed in the administration of the affairs of the church are classified into two lines; the one being specifically designated to attend to the spiritual order of things, with the authority to act in the temporal order if necessity should require, the other designated to officiate in the temporal order of things; this last named being styled an appendage, or needed addition to relieve the pressure on the other. All grades of office in the church are ranged under these two divisions, no officer in either holding any higher priesthood than any or every other officer in the same division. The priest holds no higher priesthood than the deacon, though in his grade of office he may perform duties and celebrate rites that the deacon, or teacher may not. The apostle holds no higher priesthood than the elder, though in his grade of office he may do what the elder may not; their priesthood is the same.

Q.—Does the "one baptism" mentioned in Ephesians 4: 5, refer to the baptism of water, or of the Spirit, or to both?

A.—The language of the apostle in the text quoted is used in a general sense and was intended to apply to the completed baptism into Christ. It cannot mean either the baptism of water or the baptism of the Spirit alone, unless violence is done to the text found in Galatians 3:27 written by the same apostle.

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

SR. MARY HOAGUE, writing from Fulton, Wisconsin:—

Now have we not great reason to rejoice and be thankful, for a year ago there was not a Saint outside our family nearer than fourteen miles; now a nice little band meets from house to house each week, and once a month on Sunday for sacrament; and best of all, God meets with us? I hope we may prove more worthy of the blessings and many more may be added till we have a nice branch and church building of our own.

This is the result of labor bestowed in that locality by Bro. W. S. Pender and others, chiefly Bro. Pender. Sr. Hoague says of it:—

We prayed that there might be a few near us; but did not look for over four or five, and hardly dared hope for that. He [Bro. Pender, Ed.] came back, preached a week and baptized two; then a few more sermons two weeks later and baptized five. O, how we rejoiced to have Saints near us! Then he was away for a few weeks and to district conference, and when he came back four more were ready for baptism; after that two more were added to our number. We started prayer meetings every two weeks, Thursday evenings, and were so happy, for they are the best people in the community, and others are near the kingdom. October 6, had conference here and organized the Southern Wisconsin district; had the tent here, and a series of meetings in the tent after conference. Much good has been done.

Bro. F. G. Pitt, writing from Chicago, January 14:—

All goes fairly well with us here. I spoke twice at Carbon Hill last week. I expect to labor at Piper City from the 17th to the 24th; Peoria and vicinity from the 25th to the 31st; Kewanee, February 1 to the 5th, and Sandwich, 7th to the 12th.

Bro. G. M. L. Whitman, Nebraska, January 15:—

Discussion between Bro. C. H. Porter and F. C. Watkins, Christian Adventist, commenced last night and closed the first proposition to-night. So far all is well. God is speeding the right. Second proposition is the kingdom spoken of in Daniel (Dan. 2: 44) set up 1830-35; Latter Day Saint affirms, Adventist denies.

FEEDING THE LAMBS.

THIS is a significant command. We have not yet fully grasped its meaning. If we consider the Lord who gives it, the apostles who received it, the duty imposed in it, and the tender subjects of it, we may form some idea of its import.

1. It is the Chief Shepherd who speaks; with a knowledge that reaches to the bottom of all things and a concern that embraces all the interests of every creature he reveals his will. From the beginning of his career his love for little children and his interest in little children are everywhere manifest; as a child he is ushered into the world, as a child he is worshiped, as a child he grows and develops in the household of Joseph and Mary. He teaches the world for the first time the significance of childhood.

Go outside of the Bible and what do you learn of childhood? What position has the child in the mythologies of Greece and Rome, in the pagan religions of the world to-day? Read the sacred books of India, China, Egypt, Persia, and you find hardly an indication that there are children in existence. Study the histories of the ancient Berosus, Herodotus, Xenophon, and childhood's deeds and influence are scarcely mentioned. Examine the poets Homer and Virgil; there are few lines about children. Study the ethics of Plato or Confucius; there are few precepts for the child. In the highest civilization of the past little children weakly and unpromising were put to death. How is it with the Bible? Here is the history of two shepherd boys almost from the cradle until one becomes lord of Egypt and the other the singing King of Israel. A little outcast child—a foundling from the flags of the Nile—has even his baby history carefully written until he becomes the lawgiver of three millions of people. A little maid is the heroine of a great general's restoration from leprosy, and a little lad is the means of a great multitude being fed. Children in the palace, in the temple, at the knee of mother and grandmother, in the priesthood, in the miracles of Jesus—children everywhere. The greatest of the prophets prophesies: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful." The greatest of the poets sings: "Come, ye children, hearken unto me; I will teach you the fear of the Lord." The greatest of visions heralds the birth of a child at Bethlehem. And Christianity saves the weakest child. Byron, the clubfooted; Sir Walter Scott, who was called "a pining child;" Sir Isaac Newton, who could be put in a quart pot; Charles Sumner, weighing but three pounds and a half; Pope, Descartes, Kepler, Gibbon, Lord Nelson James Watt, John Howard, Washington Irving, Wilberforce; thousands that under heathen teaching, as weakly little ones, would have perished, Christianity has saved. Christ teaches: "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." Christ places his hands on the children's heads and says: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." Christ receives the hosannas of little children. It was Bethlehem that taught the wise men that a child's face was a grander study than the stars, and it is the incarnation of divinity in a little child that proclaims the highest divinity of childhood. So, in giving his last counsel to those who are to represent him on earth, Jesus says: "Feed my lambs;" the Head of the church commissions his body to care for the children.

2. This, then, is a service considered worthy of the ambassadors of the King of heaven. Peter, and James, and John receive these orders; myriad-minded Paul can do nothing better than to teach childhood; David, king of Israel, does not regard such work as beneath him, but is ready to say: "Come, ye children, hearken, I will teach you." There is no office higher than that of a teacher of youth, for there is nothing on earth so precious as the mind, the soul, the character of the child. The teacher is compared to the switchman who holds the key to the switches on the railroad tracks. If he does his duty faithfully the train will reach its destination in safety; if he neglects it disaster and ruin will follow. A misplaced switch, a wrong signal may send hundreds unprepared into eternity. The teacher is as a gardener who cultivates choicest flowers and fruits for his Master. A certain philosopher was always talking very much to his friends about the garden in which he was in the habit of walking and carrying on his studies. At length one of his friends came to see him and found his extraordinary garden a patch of ground about twice the size of his own room. "What!" he exclaimed, "is this your garden? It's not very large." "No, it's not very large," was the answer, "but it has a wondrous height; it goes up to heaven." And so of the teacher in the Sunday school; the work in the class may not be a very large one, but it's a very lofty one; it reaches up to heaven, it reaches out to eternity.

Is it strange, then, that the Scriptures declare: "They that be teachers shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever?" Is it remarkable that the old colored brother prayed for the good Christian woman who taught them: "O, Lord, bless the teacher who come so far to 'struct us in de way of heaven. Rock her in de cradle of lub. May she have souls for her hire and many stars in her crown in de great gittin' up mawnin' when de ginerall roll is called. And when all de battles is ober may she fall kivered wid victory, be buried wid de honors ob war, and rise to wear de long white robe in glory and walk de shinin' streets in silver slippers down by de golden sunrise, close to the great white throne, and dere strike glad hands wid all her dear scholars, and praise de Lawd for ebber and ebber?"

Should any man or woman feel it a small distinction to teach little children the way of life? Is a dignity which the Lord of heaven accorded to his chosen, inspired apostles beneath us? Does not the command come to the sternest of the apostles—Peter, hardly a child-loving man—one of those who would rebuke little children for crowding upon the Master, and is not the command to you, however great, or learned, or harsh, or unsympathetic you may be? Is it not a test of our love to the Master? "Lovest thou me?" Then "Feed my lambs;" prove your affection by this work for the little ones that I love.

And who shall say that the proudest, and wisest, and grandest may not learn the Master himself by this service for childhood, as in no other way? A child is a grander study than geology, as John's study of the jasper and pearl of the New Jerusalem was grander than his contemplation of the rocks of Patmos. A child is a grander study than botany, as the living lilies at Jesus' feet were more beautiful for thought than the carved lily work of Solomon's temple. There is no machinery known to engineering so curious as a child's hand; no dome of St. Peter's, or the Capitol, so wonderful as a child's head; no instrument known to the science of optics so marvelous as a child's eye; and when the study is the child's soul, all sciences, and literatures, all arts are as nothing, for all sciences, and literatures, and arts, spring from the soul, and the soul itself is, therefore, greater than them all.

"Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings God hath perfected praise." A number of gentlemen visited a school in France in which was a deaf and dumb boy. One asked him, "Who made the world?" The boy took his slate and wrote: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." "How do you hope to be saved?" was the next question. The child wrote: "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "How is it God made you deaf and dumb, while all those around you can hear and speak?" The boy was puzzled a moment, then quickly recovering, he wrote: "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

A child five years of age was brought by her majesty's request into the presence of Elizabeth, Queen of Frederick II. of Germany. The father brought the artless little one into the royal palace. She approached the Queen with a graceful courtesy and kissed her robe. The Queen was dining with the ladies of her court and they watched with interest to see the effect of so much splendor on a simple child. She looked carelessly upon the costly dresses of the guests, the gold, and silver, and porcelain upon the table, and the pomp in which all was conducted, then folding her hands she sang with a clear, childish voice:—

"Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
Are all my ornament and dress;
Fearless with these pure garments on,
I'll view the splendors of thy throne."

Tears filled the eyes of the ladies, and the Queen said: "Ah, happy child, how far we are below you!"

Did not Christ take a child and set him up in the midst of his disciples as an example of the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? May not a child teach its teachers and bring them nearer to heaven, by its influence, its lessons of tenderness and trust, and does not the Master intend this when he says, "Feed my lambs"? Did not John, the apostle, who would call down fire from heaven upon the enemies of his Lord, thus learn meekness, and the learned, self-confident Saul of Tarsus become as a little child, saying, "What shall I do?" and reaching out hands to be led, and becoming so tender that he besought men night and day with tears?

3. But observe the command here: "Feed my lambs." Feed them, shepherd them, nourish them. He calls them his, "my lambs," members of his flock. Feed my lambkins; not simply give them food, but take care of them, guide, govern, defend, tend them. Christ himself is represented as the great and good Shepherd carrying the lambs in his arms. It is said of him: "He shall feed his flock as a shepherd." Peter, the great missionary preacher, may in his great popularity and usefulness overlook the needs of little children, and so Christ reminds him of this great duty. And this was as old as Sinai. God said to Israel: "These things I command thee this day shall be in thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children." "Gather the people together, men, women, and children, and the stranger within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn and fear the Lord thy God, and observe to do all the works of this law, and that their children which have known anything may hear and learn to fear the Lord your God so long as ye live in the land."

Children to-day are fed on everything save the food Christ would give. Corrupt books and papers are everywhere. Tainted meat, poisoned food, such as the press vomited out upon the land from the Capital of the nation during the Breckinridge trial, is spread every day before the children. Is not the call imperative to every Christian to use his influence to gather in the young to the table spread by the Son of God and feed them upon the bread of heaven? It is this way the world is to be redeemed. In old days, says some one, there were angels who came and took them by the hand and led them away from the city of destruction. We see no white-winged angels now, but yet men are led away from threatened destruction. A hand is put in theirs which leads them forth toward a calm and better world, so that they look no more backward—and that hand may be a little child.

We ask so constantly: "How shall we reach the masses?" The answer comes from Galilee. Christ has a multitude of five thousand hungry men to feed, and a lad is there with five loaves and two fishes, and Christ blessed them and gave to the multitude, "and they did all eat and were filled." There are multitudes around us hungering for the bread of heaven. How shall we reach them? Bring the children, by our missions and Sunday schools, to the side of Christ, enlist their prayers, gifts, and sympathies, and send them forth with the Savior's love in their hearts to the homes that our preaching does not reach, and all shall be fed.

In a Western home there were father, mother, and little Mary seven years old. The child had been to Sunday school in the East. The father was taken sick. Thinking he was going to die and knowing he was not ready he became greatly troubled. One night he awoke in such great distress he begged his wife to pray for him. She said she had never prayed; she didn't know how to pray. "Oh! what shall I do for my poor soul?" cried the man. "Perhaps," said the wife, "our little Mary can pray, for she has gone to Sunday school. "Go, call her at once." The mother went up stairs. The child was fast asleep. The mother awoke her, wrapped her in a shawl, carried her downstairs, and seated her upon her father's bed. "Mary, my child, can you pray?" asked the man. "Yes, father, I can." "Will you kneel down and pray for your father?" "Yes," said the child, and kneeling and putting up her little hands she prayed: "Our Father who art in heaven," and then she asked God in her own way to have mercy and pardon him, teach him to love Jesus, and make him well. "Mary, will you read me some from the Bible?" "Yes, father; and the child opened the Bible and read the third chapter of John, and came to the words, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." "O Mary, is that there?" "Yes, father, it is as Jesus said," and she read on, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "O! that is for me, a poor sinner like me," cried the penitent, "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life!"

A father, a hard un-Christian man, kissed his sleeping boy good night. The kiss awoke the child, and looking up half conscious, he repeated his Sunday school verse: "The Lord is my Shepherd. I shall not want." Then fondly stroking his father's chin, he said: "Papa, you say it—the Lord is your Shepherd, you shall not want." The man who had crushed out all religious feeling gave his heart to God by the bedside of his child. Did not the prophet say: "A little child shall lead them?" "Did not a star lead wise men to the heavenly Child to teach us that a child can lead men to the stars?" "Brethren," said Malancthon, when the Reformation seemed about to be defeated, "Brethren, take courage, the children are praying for us!" Childhood's hopes, childhood's prayers, childhood's sympathies, childhood's loves, childhood's lessons, childhood's faith, are mighty to help in saving the world.

A Christian woman dreamed during a great revival that standing on the shore of the ocean she saw a vessel going to pieces in the breakers. Passengers and crew were clinging to the ropes and hanging on the sides of the ship, crying, "What must we do to be saved?" As she watched she saw a cable just above the breakers. A minister lifted it and pulled it a little way. Then men and women took hold of it with him and drew with all their strength, but they were unable to move the vessel from the bar on which she had struck. At length came the children, who were standing by, and put their delicate little hands by the side of the strong hands of the older people, and then again they all pulled together and the vessel came off and all on board were rescued. Do we not need the little hands to pull with ours?

So the Master commands: "Feed my lambs." Shall the church be indifferent? Would it not be well if the whole body of Christ would give its whole attention not to old hardened men and women seared and fixed in sin, but to the children, the blessed boys and girls, and crowd our sanctuaries with the bright faces and fresh hearts and receptive minds of the young, and thus prepare the kingdom for the coming of the King?

And when we think of the value of the child's soul! Ah then! "Jimmie," said a wise grammar school boy to his little brother of six, "Jimmie, come here and tell me what you've got inside of you!" "Nothing," said Jimmie. "Yes you have. Listen! You have a whole telegraph stowed away in your body, with wires running down to your very toes and out to your finger tips." "I haven't," said Jimmie, looking at his feet and hands. "You have though; and that isn't all—there is a big force pump in the middle of you, a pumping and pumping seventy times a minute, all day long, like the great engine down at the locomotive works." "There ain't no such thing." "But there is though; and besides, a tree is growing up in you with over two hundred different branches, all tied together with ever so many bands and tough strings." "That isn't so at all," persisted Jimmie, about to cry. "I can feel myself all over, and there ain't no tree, and no engine, and no telegraph, and nothin' else 'cept flesh and blood." "Oh, that isn't flesh and blood, that's most of it water," said the smart brother. "This is what you are made of—a few gallons of water, a little lime, phosphorus, salt, and some other things thrown in." And Jimmie wept as he thought of the combination.

But if the body is so wonderful, what of the soul? what of the mind that God has created to apprehend great truths of nature and revelation; of the future, big with great interests that may affect society, that may influence whole nations; of the spirit, that is to blossom for heaven or be blasted for the pit! Ah, not one of these little ones should perish. The child's sighings are for God. The child's homesicknesses are for heaven. Let them be satisfied. Let nothing take the place of God and his gospel in the development of the child's soul. O the value of a soul!—your soul!!

4. This brings us to the last point—the subject of this command. What is the value of a child? It was said of a babe in a cradle: "This child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel;" and if we had the power of prophecy we too could see in the little people around us, in the potentiality of childhood, the rise and fall of nations. Saving a man we save a soul; saving a child we save a life. Here is a tiny boy in a small basket made of papyrus and daubed with pitch floating on the bosom of an Egyptian river and kept by an unseen hand from the jaws of the crocodile, and a princess finds it and says to a Hebrew woman, "Take this child and nurse it for me," and he becomes a mighty lawgiver and leader of millions. Here is another boy, in the great city of Rome, one thousand nine hundred years ago—a beautiful child, saved again and again from deadly peril in the time of war. He is wrapped in purple, taught in a palace, becomes one of the worst men that ever lived—Tiberius, under whom Christ was crucified. Here is still another. One day there is a cry of fire in an English village; a preacher's house is in flames. Everybody escapes from the burning building, when it is discovered that one little boy has been left behind. A ladder is placed at a window, a man runs up and the child is brought out and placed unhurt in the father's arms. How much the world would have lost had that child perished; it is John Wesley. Who can tell what a little child may be? "Like arrows in the hands of a giant, even so are the young children." The boy may grow up to be like Moses, a great statesman and reformer; like Newton, to weigh the far-off stars in a balance; like Shakespeare, to sing sublime thoughts in the ears of all ages; like Luther, to scorch what is cruel and false by a word as by a flame; like Beethoven, to lift the soul by the magic of melody to the seventh heaven; like Napoleon, to be the greatest of butchers. You may never know but that the child you meet in rags and pitiful squalor in an alleyway of some great city may have in him gifts that will lift up thousands and tens of thousands, or degrade and destroy them. It is related of old John Trebonius, the German schoolmaster and instructor of Martin Luther, that he always appeared before his boys with uncovered head. "Who can tell," said he, "what may yet rise up amid these youths? There may be among them those who shall be learned doctors, sage legislators—nay, princes of the empire." Even then there was among them "the solitary monk who shook the world."

In all our educational institutions, our literature, our home services, our Christian enterprise, we are learning the value of the child, and that a nation, a church, as well as a man, is blessed which has its quiver full of them. We think sometimes of the cost of a child. If you want to know, says some one, what a boy is worth, go and ask his mother. By the time she goes into the jaws of death to give him birth and then takes him, pure as the lilies, to grow as the lilies grow, and puts into him her days of life and her hours of ease, her prayers and tears, and toil and anxiety, and he stands before her strong, and clean, and tall at twenty-one, she can tell you what he is worth from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet; and when the legaliz'd dram shop takes hold of him, tears him down fibre by fibre, and puts oaths on the lips she used to kiss, and crushes out his mother's hopes and blackens with darkest night his future, it is no wonder she makes outcry.

"How much that little girl costs," said a mother, as she passed a child leaning against an iron railing eagerly watching some boys playing marbles. "Costs?" asked her friend, "what, her shoes and stockings, her plaid dress and gay ribbons, her hat and feathers?" "That is the least cost," answered the mother. "I was not thinking of that, but what pain and suffering she costs, what fatigue and watching, how much of a mother's anxiety, how much of a father's toil, how many prayers, fears, yearnings, how much patience, how much responsibility, how much instruction, how much correction, how much love, how much sorrow, how many teachers, sermons, Sundays? She costs, too, a dying Redeemer."

But how vast the profit! The prattling babe pays for itself a thousand times over. There are some poor families here, but you could not get one of them to sell "the baby" for all the money in the treasury of the United States. The wisest man finds the child the grandest of all sciences. Darwin acknowledged himself sold when his little niece asked him seriously what a cat has which no other animal has. He gave it up after mature deliberation, and then the sly little puss answered, "Kittens." To the little ones evil thoughts are "my naughty think;" heaven is "the thunder's home;" ice is "water that went to sleep in the cold;" dust is "mud with the juice squeezed out;" the rainbow is "God's smile;" an overcast sky is "when the lights have covered themselves up and gone to bed;" stars are "the eggs which the moon has laid;" and snow is "rain all popped out white;" love is "a kiss in the heart." One, when she saw kittens the first time, cried: "Mamma, O Mamma! here are little pieces of cat all around; pussy is all shook to pieces." And another seeing a monkey around a hand organ exclaimed: "O Mamma! here is a little boy with a tail," and taking a penny to the monkey, she said gravely, pointing to the organ grinder: "Take it and give it to your fader."

Here they are beautiful and valuable, but out of these days of innocence they come. They make nations; they make the world. A great soldier of to-day—Lord Wolseley says: "The Chinese are the coming nation; They will overrun the world. The battle of Armageddon will be fought between the Chinese and the English-speaking races. Some day a great general or lawgiver will arise in China, and the Chinese, who have been motionless for three centuries, will begin to progress. They will take to the profession of arms, and hurl themselves against the Russian Empire; Russia will go down. Then they will march westward and overrun India, sweeping England into the sea. Asia will belong to them; and then, at last, the English, Americans, and Australians will have to rally for a last desperate struggle."

I do not believe that. The children of America and England are the coming power. The heathen world is going down before the sweep of Christian forces. Old faiths of the East are going to decay before the work of missions. A recent Brahmin tract says their ancient religion is in danger. Speaking of English missionaries, the writer declares: "They have cast their net over our children by teaching them in their schools and they have already made thousands of Christians and are continuing to do so. If we continue to sleep as we have done in the past, not one will be found worshiping in the temples in a very short time. Nay, the temples themselves will be found converted into Christian churches."

You know how Germany conquered France? I'll tell you. It was long before the war was begun that she won it. A young man named Wolff was a lieutenant of engineers under Von Moltke. One day he was ordered to report in civilian's dress at the railroad station. He went, reported, and was given a bag of samples. With his commanding officer he went from city to city as a commercial traveler selling by samples. They went from merchant to merchant. At one place they visited several houses. Then the commander said: "We will take a walk and go across the bridge. We will not return together. On your way back you will pace the bridge, and going and coming keep your eyes open to observe all points of the bridge." The officer did as he was bidden, returned to his hotel and wrote out a full description of the bridge and sent it in and thought no more of it. War came and the whole German army marched to the frontier. As the advance drew near this same bridge was blown up and fell in a mass of ruins. The army halted; a train of freight cars came forward and from these cars was taken the prepared material from which a new bridge was put together in a few hours. Every timber and every metal was ready for immediate use. A new bridge had been constructed for that particular crossing, based upon the officer's report, and in a few hours the army marched over the bridge and into the enemy's country. So in the culture of childhood, we prepare the way for the conquest of the world. So the rivers shall be crossed, and the mountains be overcome, and the King's highway be cast up, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.—*F. D. PRAISE.

Tune: EVAN.

BY JOHN CHISNALL.

My God, how shall I come to thee,
That I may offer praise
For all the good bestowed on me
While yet in darkened ways.

Thou didst send me thy radiant light
That my poor feet might tread
Into the ways of life and right,
As my loved Savior led.

Thy line on line and precepts rare,
In promise made of old,
Lead me with gentle hand and care,
And doth new hopes unfold.

My ebbing life is in thy hand,
I feel 'tis better there,
If only now thine angel band
Thou chargest with my care.

My soul would fain new tribute bring
As incense to thy throne,
If I might only to thee sing,
Thou great, thou allwise One.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Jan. 15.

Editors Herald.—This writing finds Bro. Fred A. Smith and myself in this capital city, holding services evenings and twice on Sundays at Webster Hall, corner Tenth and Center streets, with interest fair to good, though the attendance is not so large as we desire, or as we can accommodate. Brethren here give one dollar and fifty cents per day for the hall. We are endeavoring to set forth "the signs of the times," and "the gospel restored," including the coming forth and divinity of the Book of Mormon. We contemplate opening up in Highland Park, near the college, when through here, and will, if possible to arrange.

Was called to Eagle Grove last week by telegram, and found Bro. J. F. McDowell prostrate, seemingly, from overwork. He was administered to, and when I left on Saturday he seemed to be on the high way to recovery. Preached twice while there to fair-sized audiences. Saints there seemed alive in the work, and were encouraged by the discussion between Bro. McDowell and Elder Eychaner, Restitutionist Adventist, which was largely attended, and it was generally conceded that while Eychaner was the more rapid speaker, Bro. McDowell had the better argument, and was therefore victor. Saints at Eagle Grove met my expenses to and from this city to theirs, though having to pay full fare, owing to not having clergymen's railroad permits for 1895.

I was at Runnells a few days between the holidays and spoke a few times to large and interested crowds. Met the missionaries of our field while there, a little surprise party to us all, I think, as no prearrangement had been made for the meetings. Had a good time. Saints at Runnells are arranging to build a church, soon. Those outside are subscribing quite liberally to the enterprise. And so the work seems moving.

Hoping for its success,

C. SCOTT.

Editors Herald.—We have just laid to rest David, the eldest and last of Bro. and Sr. G. T. Griffiths' boys. Three bright, lovely, promising boys have all been taken within a month; first Willie, then Frank, and now David. Truly our brother and sister are passing through a fiery furnace, and need the prayers and sympathy of all the Saints, that our heavenly Father will sustain in this trying hour and comfort their hearts as he only can do. Lulu, their eldest child, has been very ill, but thanks to our Father, is now convalescing. Little Hattie also seems quite well. No others, so far, are down, and we are hopeful we will be spared additional cases.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Dec. 12.

Editors Herald.—With pleasure I let your readers know that we have reached our destination, after so long a journey, being thirty-six days from the time we left San Francisco until we cast anchor at Papeete. Our little boat rode the waves like a duck. Being so light in a heavy sea, she tossed about so much it was quite uncomfortable in the cabin, especially for Sr. Case; who was sick all the way across, but none of the rest were sick enough to speak of, and the writer never learned what seasickness meant only by observation. I can truly say we had a pleasant journey, and on arriving we received a very warm reception among the natives. We feel that the Spirit of the Master is with them as with those of our brethren and sisters at home. I believe there is a great work to be done here, as the natives seem like children, willing to learn, and very very kindhearted, desirous of knowing the truth and willing to take care of the servants of the Lord. Bro. J. W. Gilbert assisted them in moving the house Bro. T. W. Smith lived in, to this place for us, and the sisters presented us with the most beautiful straw hats I ever saw. The natives have a written language and are much more enlightened than I expected to find them.

I can find no language to describe this place, but will say I made a mistake in thinking California the garden spot of the world; for I was very much surprised to behold this island with its mountain peaks towering over seven thousand feet in the air, and the lowlands covered with the most beautiful trees, flowers, and shrubbery of every description and kind known in the tropical climate, and such fruit as my eyes had never beheld. You will find a description of our journey in the Autumn Leaves by Sr. Burton. We are going up to the Paumotos, a group of isles about a hundred and eighty miles northeast of here, to see Bro. and Sr. Devore, and spend Christmas with them. I think Bro. and Sr. Burton will go back to California about January 12 next. We will be very lonely without them, as they have been so kind to us, and always striving to do and say the right thing, thus setting an example worthy of imitation. I wish Bro. Burton could stay here, as I believe he would do much good. He would learn the language in a short time. We have taken a few lessons of Bro. Gilbert, and believe we will all soon learn to speak the language.

We expect some hardships in this mission, and feel to ask the Saints to pray for us, that strength may be given to us all, and power to do good as days pass and opportunity presents itself. Your brother and coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

NORMAN, Ok., Jan. 9.

Editors Herald.—The work in this field is growing a little brighter; more calls now for preaching than last summer. My next point will be Tecumseh, where I will remain a week or more, thence to Jay Post Office to call on Bro. E. B. Mullin and do some gospel work.

Our debate with L. H. Havill passed off without personal injury to any, notwithstanding the bottle of strychnine that was flashed over the stand by our Campbellite opponent. Friends were made for the work, and we have no reason to regret the results. There are more clouds in the sky, and it would be no surprise to hear of another storm in the theological world in the near future; but by holding on with a firm grasp we hope our little bark will ride safely o'er the waves and steer clear of shoals and breakers and land safely in the harbor on the golden shore.

My address will be Norman, Oklahoma, till March 1, then Webb City, Missouri.

Yours in Christ,

R. M. MALONEY.

ROGERSVILLE, Mo., Jan. 14.

Editors Herald.—The Ward-Cowan debate has closed. The results remain to be seen in the future. Several have expressed themselves as being satisfied that Elder Ward won the victory. Some have manifested considerable interest in the doctrine, and when the tracts were announced for distribution by Elder Spurlock quite a number came forward and took them with eagerness. As one saw the hungering and famishing for truth it reminded an old veteran of the late war, of his comrades rushing up to receive their rations.

Bro. C. J. Spurlock was here during both discussions, rendering very valuable and timely aid, also preaching some sermons of the highest grade. Bro. J. R. Wedlock, of Ozark, Missouri, was also here. Both these brethren are full of the Spirit, a very necessary prerequisite that should always accompany God's ministers. Bro. C. J. Spurlock is a very meek man, and the casual observer would conclude he could not preach at all; but when he begins it is simply grand until the close. The writer has heard him several times, and all his sermons seemed to be of the highest grade; and his sermons during the debate were a little the best I ever heard from him, and were so estimated by all Saints who had heard him before. I am sorry to note his loss; while here he lost a fine horse, and what makes his loss so very great is, he is a weakly man and now has to go afoot. He left here last Sunday morning with Elder Ward for Ozark, to hold a meeting.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—After a thirty-five days' passage from San Francisco we found ourselves, in the Evanelia, off Point Venus' light on the 29th of November, but being too late to get a pilot we did not get into the harbor until next morning. We then were made welcome by Brn. Gilbert and Metuaore, and on going ashore received a gracious welcome by the brethren and sisters here in Bro. Devore's house, in which also Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith formerly lived. After the necessary business of transferring the Evanelia from the American to the French flag is accomplished we expect to visit some other islands and to meet Bro. and Sr. Devore, who are at Niau or Kaukura.

Bro. Gilbert has preached twice in Tahitian since our arrival and seems to speak fluently, and the brethren here say he speaks very correctly in the native tongue. I felt much pleased on Sunday as I listened to him, so earnestly and fluently, by the influence of the Holy Spirit, teach in Tahitian the Saints the principles of the gospel; and I felt more than ever the beauty of this great latter-day work, that our elders preach, to teach. Here it must be done. He is an excellent young man, and has the inspiration of the mission work in these islands with him, and is an earnest, faithful worker.

Bro. and Sr. Case are "going to school" to him, and have learned their "letters" again and are moving easily along in the pronunciation and knowledge of the Tahitian language. Sister Case will soon speak it. Brother Case will be only a little longer before he will be able to converse with our native brethren. The young man—a stranger, now Bro. William McGrath—who came on board a few days before we left San Francisco, and who was baptized the Sunday after our arrival here, by Bro. Gilbert, is also learning the language and probably will enter soon into the missionary work. Bro. Gilbert is an excellent teacher and renders very valuable aid to these brethren and sisters in learning the language.

The Saints here have meetings most every evening of the week, some of them schools in which Bro. Gilbert questions and instructs them. On Sunday they have preaching at seven o'clock in the morning, and again at ten, and at two p. m. testimony meeting, and 7:30 p. m. preaching, and Sunday school after the ten o'clock meeting. Their singing is peculiar; to us it sounds plaintive and melodious.

The Evanelia coming here has caused quite a commotion, as some persons of influence have demanded the enforcement of a hitherto obsolete law, perhaps hoping to prevent us from using the Evanelia in these waters. The law demanded that vessels wishing to visit places in these islands must be owned by Frenchmen—one half at least. The enforcement of this law will not cause us much trouble, but it puts the majority of the leading merchants to considerable trouble, as they have trading schooners and must also, by January 1, comply with the law. The American Consul says they feel that we are responsible for this enforcement of the law, yet without malice upon our part, consequently we are not to blame. So the gospel in its methods and workings keeps people and nations stirring, and the Evanelia has caused our faith to be spoken of where our elders could not have been heard. Yesterday before the Notary the difference between our church and the Utah people had to be shown. Roll on, truth, and grind to powder all error!

I expect to return to San Francisco on the packet which leaves here January 12, and hope to get to San Francisco by February 12. I feel desirous of getting to work in my proper field of labor again, and will be glad to see America's shore once more.

I wish all of the ministry who desire to work in the missionary field in the Pacific Slope mission next year to write me concerning it, and state the amount needed for the family, and what part of the mission you desire to labor in, and whatever else you desire the Twelve to know concerning your appointment. I wish to know this by March 1, so I can send your request to the Twelve in time for their consideration according to their request. Address me No. 3010, Sixteenth street, San Francisco, care C. A. Parkin. In bonds,

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Jan. 8.

Editors Herald:—The work in Southern California is onward; not so much as I would like to see, but as we cannot always have things as we would like, we should interest ourselves in trying to better them. I have done what I could for the advancement of the work (in my weak way) since I took the active field a year ago last October. I have tried not to be burdensome to the Saints and have furnished my own conveyance till now, when I find myself in circumstances where I have to put my horse to work, which leaves me afoot without a dollar to pay car fare; so those who may think that Bro. Harris is devoting too much time in one place will know why. While at home I did some repairing to my house. Part of the lumber I had ready two years ago; I sold an old wagon and one horse. I mention this as one brother was so good as to say I was rich, and thinking possibly others may think I had made a big thing out of the ministry, I make this explanation. I am trying to get away to other places. A friend (not a member) told me yesterday that he could let me have a horse, but was afraid he was too poor, as I have sometimes to make very long drives. However, I shall go and see him, about eighteen miles distant. The Saints here, as elsewhere, are having a hard struggle financially and I believe all are bearing it patiently.

I have not written this in a faultfinding spirit, but am ever praying for the success of the truth.

Your humble servant,

D. L. HARRIS.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—The long looked for Evanelia has arrived at last. On the morning of the 30th of November the signal post showed that there was a two-masted vessel out at sea, carrying the American flag, and signaling for the pilot, from which description we knew it must be the Evanelia; but not being yet in sight from the place where we stood, Bro. Metuaore and myself went up the coast a little ways to where we could get a view of her. Gazing upon the craft for a moment to make sure it was the Evanelia, we hastened back to make ready to receive and make comfortable the new arrivals. The pilot led them safely into harbor at about ten o'clock. They anchored her a short distance from shore, and when the health officer made his usual inspection of the crew, the writer stepped to the water's edge and shouted to the captain, "Bro. Burton, lower your boat and send ashore." "All right," came the good-natured response, and soon we were borne on board the Evanelia and greeted, with a swelling of the heart, her precious passengers. We had looked so long and anxiously for them, that meeting them seemed almost too good to be a reality. We are all so very thankful that they have come, and that they had such a prosperous journey across the sea. It is almost like a new dispensation to me to meet so many Saints from America in this far-off land. Really, my sleep almost entirely left me for a night or two following their arrival.

We are all delighted with the Evanelia, although we think we could make some improvements in her plans, but in general it is just what we want; and I hereby extend my sincere thanks, so far as I am interested in the matter, to all the dear Saints who have aided in any way in having it built and sent here. And if anything may be judged from actions, the native brethren are also overjoyed. They are all "mauruuru" (well pleased) with the Evanelia. When in the snug and well-arranged cabin I feel more at home than in any place I have been for a long while.

On Sunday we had a time of rejoicing. After preaching at ten o'clock by the writer in Tahitian, he baptized three precious souls; two Tahitians and a young man who came down on the Evanelia from San Francisco, Bro. Wm. McGrath, he hearing the gospel message for the first time on board the Evanelia; so she has already begun to be a blessing to men, according to the signification of her name, which we think is a very appropriate one. At the confirmation of Bro. McGrath, Bro. Burton being spokesman, the Spirit said that if he would be faithful he would be a chosen vessel of the Lord; that the Melchisedec priesthood was his by right; that thousands should hear his words; that the righteous should rejoice under the sound of his voice, and the wicked should tremble. He will remain with us to assist in the good work, and has already commenced to learn the language. We had announced that there would be preaching on Sunday evening in English, so Bro. Burton filled the stand and gave us a good sermon, but only a few white people came.

The new arrivals have commenced to learn the language. I give them a lesson every day at ten o'clock, when nothing prevents. From what I already see of them I believe they will all learn the language readily. I calculate that they will learn in half the time I spent in learning it. I shall surely assist them all I can in so doing. I want them to be preaching by the April conference.

Since last writing to your columns I have baptized in all seventeen. I feel encouraged in the work and determined to do the best I can in all things. As the language becomes easier for me from day to day, I become more interested in this mission. I feel that I should stand by the work here, although I would by far rather labor in America, should I make my own choice.

Bro. and Sr. Devore are in the Paumotu islands. We will probably set sail sometime next week on the Evanelia with all who came down with her for the Paumotus, to visit Bro. and Sr. Devore and hold a missionary council. Will probably all spend Christmas together and have a general good time and reunion before Bro. and Sr. Burton return.

Up to date the process of changing flags on the Evanelia is not completed, but we think we will have no trouble about it. As the mail leaves this morning, we cannot send all the news of transferring the flag of the vessel, as it is not finished.

In bonds of truth,

WILMER GILBERT.

FLINT, Ind., Jan. 14.

Editors Herald:—I am eight miles east of Angola. Have been since Saturday evening, January 5, and held ten meetings with large attendance. Last night we were privileged the use of the Christian church here, and an audience of four hundred persons showed appreciation of the truth. Hitherto we were refused this church building, also the one at Angola, on the great ground that I had "torn up their church at South Scott." On last Sunday the M. E. divine at this point refused us the use of their church one night even. A good Campbellite sister stationed herself in the aisle after Sunday school and made herself very officious in telling the audience individually, including the trustees, that "Scott ought not be allowed to occupy the churches, for he just tore our church up at South Scott."

The minister told Mr. Kiles that we were "Joe Smith Mormons and polygamists; that he had a sermon on that subject prepared to deliver at Orland, and to come over and learn it; that he would stand by the proposition." As soon as I learned this, I followed him out into the vestibule and said: "Bro. Foster, do I understand you have a proposition with reference to us being polygamists that you will stand by?" He replied, "I have not time to stand by anything; I learned you were here to hold a series of meetings and we don't propose to allow you, sir." He then dodged out. I said: "Hold on; let us reason on this matter and part Christians." He said "Excuse me, sir," and would not listen. His eyes looked daggers, for he was "rosy." I turned to the little crowd which stood on the church landing and said: "I am sorry he should get angry at me for asking a favor. I am trying to establish a religion which incorporates the "golden rule" and should I get angry in talking my religion to you, what would there be in my religion to commend it to you?" This statement provoked a smile from the crowd and they were friends for us.

We occupied the schoolhouse on Sunday and Monday evenings when the key was turned. We then went to Mr. Merritt's hall, and the people cannot be seated or even get into the hall, and last evening the Christians wilted sufficiently to let us in for one night, to accommodate the people.

This town is ripe for the truth, and the people are drinking it down as "good news from a far country;" and the news is spreading like Samson's firebrands in the Philistine cornfields. We resume in the hall to-night and until the latter part of the week, thence to Angola and South Scott, to return to this point in a few days. Father Stroh, aged seventy-eight years, is with us. His son-in-law lives here, and his excellent family are strictly in the work, and I believe that with others they will come into the truth in fact. Pray for us. Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Editors Herald:—I am in this city in the midst of bad weather, la grippe, etc. Doctors say la grippe has become epidemic here. Bro. Parsons goes to Norwalk, Connecticut, to-morrow, where he and Bro. Hobson have created quite an interest to hear the word, and some are to be baptized when he arrives there. Bro. O. Owens has just called. He is well; shows but little change in appearance; is full of his old-time fire and missionary zeal, and desires to continue in supporting the gospel message as being the greatest work that mortal can engage in. Bro. Hilliard is expected by Fall River boat next Saturday.

The Saints are trying to go ahead here with a pretty good show of success. There are many things at work, as in most places, to hinder progress and defeat good intent, however; but with perseverance success will crown their efforts. The dull times in business and trade still make it hard for the common toilers, and the end is not yet.

WM. H. KELLEY.

WELLSTON, Ohio, Jan. 11.

Editors Herald:—With gratitude I am trying to do our heavenly Father's will. My desire is onward unto the end. I love the work; am glad I ever embraced the gospel. What few Saints are here are scattered, though we hold meeting from house to house. In this way we find the Lord blesses us according to his promise. I love to read the Herald; the more I read the more I desire to read it. I cannot see how any of the Saints do without it. I hope the Lord will direct his servants to organize a branch here; nevertheless, his will be done. Dear brethren and sisters, let us always watch and pray and be found doing our duty. This is a time of sacrifice, and according to the admonition of the Lord in the recent revelation warning his people to come up higher and live better in the future. The promise is to them that endure to the end; so let us humbly go before the Lord in prayer and ask for his Spirit to lead and guide us into all truth and show us things to come, and bring all things to our remembrance whatsoever he has commanded us. Let us also ask him to increase our faith and contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the Saints.

The Spirit comes upon me in power sometimes and makes me rejoice in the great latter-day work. I know this is God's work, and am thankful for it. Let us walk in that straight path that leads to life everlasting.

DAVID WILLIAMS.

LESLIE, S. D., Jan. 5.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place last November to teach some white children, whose parents have located here among the Indians for the purpose of trading with them. This is north of the Cheyenne River on the Sioux Indian reservation. It is about seventy miles northwest of Pierre, that being about as near here as any white settlement.

There are three churches here which have been built for the Indians. They are the Catholic, the Episcopal, and the Congregational. I do not think these Indians comprehend the difference in belief of the various churches; at least not many of them. I am told that most of them are Catholics because the Catholics make most display in dress. I saw them march to the Catholic church twice during the holidays. The Indians each wore a regalia. They were red and heavily decorated. Those the women wore were of different color; each wore a blue veil. On Christmas the white people were invited to take supper with the Indians at their soup house. We all felt like going, as we did not like to hurt their feelings by staying away; so about five o'clock they sent word that their feast was ready, and we all, I think about thirty of us including the children, went over not expecting to eat much; but when we saw how nice their tables looked we could not help but relish their food. I believe their food was as nice as white people would have cooked, and their trees were trimmed much nicer than white people would have done them. They also had a large Christmas tree at the church with many valuable presents; so I am told; I did not see that. These Indians and their women had worked I think over one week to prepare their feast, and seemed very pleased to know that the white people would come and eat with them. How I pitied them, and how much I wished I could do something in return just to let them know I appreciated their efforts! I cannot help liking them, regardless of their loathsomeness, and although these are said to be almost the wildest of the Sioux tribe, yet they have made long strides toward civilization.

As the younger ones are being sent to school they are learning how to use their minds, and when they come home through vacation they do very good missionary work at home; so the Indians are learning to think or to cultivate their minds, and although I believe there are very few who would be capable of understanding the gospel, yet I think there are a few who would if it were preached to them in their language, and I know God is able to make them all understand in his own due time. The Indians have great faith in God, but are very superstitious. I must say that life among the Indians, to me, is not unpleasant, and only for the prospects of meeting with the Saints at General Conference I should look forward with sadness to the time when my school will be out the 1st of April.

There is only one person here besides myself of like "precious faith;" that is, a lady who has not yet been baptized, having had no opportunity since believing. There are about one thousand Indians who come here to draw rations and although I cannot talk to any except those who have been to school and learned how to talk English, yet I like to see them around with their smiling faces and friendly ways, and shall look back to the days spent here as being those of pleasantness.

Yours in the faith,

SARAH A. DAKE.

DRAIN, Oregon, Jan. 5.

Editors Herald:—We are all strong in the faith, and doing all we can for the spread of the gospel by paying our tithing and circulating church literature, and sometimes telling what little our knowledge will permit, which is not much; but we pray that our knowledge may be increased; and I believe that if we are faithful in doing our duties it will be. I sometimes feel as though we could serve God better if we were where there were more Saints, and am almost persuaded in my mind to move to where there are more. But when I remember that the Savior said that whosoever is faithful over few things he will make ruler over many, I feel that it is not best to be in haste to gather together, but to remain here and try and bring others into the kingdom and await God's own appointed time for gathering, feeling that every Saint should rally, and be alive to every duty. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be found faithful in mine. May the kingdom ever be found on earth.

"Very few nations in the world," says a sagacious historian, "produce better soldiers than the Russians. They will endure the greatest fatigues and sufferings with patience and calmness. And it is well known that the Russian soldiers are from childhood nourished by simple and coarse vegetable food. THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED.—No. 2.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

A STRANGE WORK.

FOR the Lord shall rise up as in Mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord God of Hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.—Isa. 28:21, 22.

This prophecy, like many others, is somewhat obscure when taken alone, but becomes quite plain when examined in connection with other prophecies relating to the same thing. There are three points in this that demand careful attention. The first is that the Lord, at some time, purposes to do a "strange work" upon the earth. The second, "a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth," is to follow this "strange work." And the third is the warning given to the people of that time, "be ye not mockers."

There is a strong probability that the people will be "mockers" at this "strange work," or this warning would not be given. It also appears that the "strange work" is to enable those who accept it to escape the "consumption." The obscurity, in the foregoing prophecy, is in regard to the time of its fulfillment. But we can locate the time of this "consumption" by the following, from the same prophet:—

The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God. For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall return: the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness. For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land.—Isa. 10:21-23.

This consumption, then, is to be when the "remnant of Jacob" shall return unto the mighty God; and, as the "strange work" is to precede the consumption, it is evidently designed to bring about the return of this remnant. Paul makes this quite clear in the following:—

Esaias also crieth concerning Israel, Though the number of the children be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved: for he will finish the work and cut it short in righteousness: because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.—Rom. 9:27, 28.

According to this the Lord will make a "short work" upon the earth, in saving the "remnant of Israel." Isaiah says he will "do his strange work." We have also learned that the "consumption" is to be at the time the "remnant" returns, and that the "strange work" is to be at the time, or just preceding the "consumption." We notice too that Paul says of this work that the Lord will "cut it short in righteousness," while Isaiah says the consumption "shall overflow with righteousness." And as "the righteousness of God" is revealed in "the gospel of Christ," it is evident that the preaching of the gospel is to be, at least, a part of this "strange work." As further proof on this point I quote again from Isaiah on the return of the "remnant" of Israel:—

And it shall come to pass at that day, that the Lord will set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people. . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isa. 11:11, 12.

From verse ten of this chapter we learn that Christ is to stand for an ensign for the people in that day. Christ is presented to the people through the gospel. Hence, when the Lord shall set up an ensign (Christ) for the nations, he will have the gospel preached to them. This is in harmony with the Savior's statements:—

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matt. 24:14.

As to how this work of preaching the gospel is to be introduced in the last days, John says:—

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice Fear God, and give glory to him: for the hour of his judgment is come.—Rev. 14:6, 7.

When this angel brings the "everlasting gospel," it is to be the hour of God's judgment; when "this gospel of the kingdom" is preached in all the world, the end shall come; when the Lord does his "strange work," he will make a consumption upon the whole earth; this consumption is to be when the remnant of Israel returns to the mighty God; and, in recovering this "remnant of Jacob" from the four corners of the earth, Isaiah says the Lord will set up an ensign for the nations, while Paul says he will make a "short work" upon the earth, a work cut short in righteousness. Surely those prophecies all refer to the same time, and the same work. The Lord has said:—

For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little.—Isa. 28: 10.

A little here and a little there; that is, a little light through one prophet, and a little more through another; a little light through one apostle, and a little more through another. Now, by so arranging the reflectors as to bring all the rays of light bearing upon any one subject to a focus, we find that what was obscure or indefinite, when viewed in the light thrown upon it by only one writer, becomes clear and definite; and the more nearly we succeed in getting all the reflectors properly adjusted, the more brightly does the word of God shine. I frankly admit that I am not sufficiently wise to bring out all the light bearing upon the subject in hand, but I have surely brought out sufficient to make it clear that the Lord will do a great work upon the earth in the last days,—just before the end.

"But," says one, "We have been taught that the day of angelic ministrations is past; that there will be no more prophets, and no more revelation; and here you are telling us that an angel has come from heaven and committed the everlasting gospel unto men; that an angel has delivered certain plates into the hands of a young man, and that he has been inspired to translate the characters on them, and thus give to the world an inspired history of the ancient inhabitants of this continent. This all seems very strange to us."

Yes, reader, I am willing to admit that it seems strange—it is strange. He will "do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act." "Be ye not mockers."

A SEALED BOOK.

In the 29th chapter of Isaiah the prophet speaks again of this "strange work." He here calls it a "marvelous work and a wonder," and speaks of a "sealed book" coming forth in connection with it. In the first four verses of this chapter the prophet says:—

Wo to Ariel, to Ariel, the city where David dwelt! add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices. Yet I will distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow: and it shall be unto me as Ariel. And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee. And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust.

The word "Ariel" is defined, "the altar, light, or lion of God." Here it evidently refers to the people of God dwelling at Jerusalem, and to their descendants; for it is explained by the prophet to mean "the city where David dwelt." In the margin this is rendered "of the city where David dwelt." But whether it be rendered "of the city," or simply "the city," it refers to the people, and not to the inanimate material of which the houses and streets of the city are built.

It has been claimed by some who oppose the Book of Mormon that the tribe of Judah, and that tribe only dwelt at Jerusalem, but the Bible says:—

And in Jerusalem dwelt of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, and of the children of Ephraim, and Manasseh.—1 Chron. 9: 3.

All these dwelt at Jerusalem and helped to make up "Ariel, the city where David dwelt."

The sentence, "add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices," signifies that "Ariel" would be permitted to go on, for many years, offering their sacrifices, as they were then, before this prophecy would be fulfilled. But that they might be assured of its fulfillment, at the appointed time he adds: "Yet I will distress Ariel." And among other calamities, he says they shall be "brought down and shall speak out of the ground," and that their speech shall be "as of one that hath a familiar spirit," that they shall "whisper out of the dust. This prophecy was delivered B. C. 712. About one hundred and twelve years later, 600 B. C., the Book of Mormon informs us that a portion of this "Ariel" (the leader and his family being of the tribe of Manasseh, the son of Joseph) were directed of the Lord to leave Jerusalem, and were led to this continent. Here they became a powerful nation, finally sunk into wickedness and were destroyed, as predicted in the foregoing prophecy. But they had kept a history of themselves from the time they left Jerusalem, and that record was taken by one of their prophets and hid in the earth, and from there it was taken, in 1827, as already stated. The Book of Mormon purports to be that record. It comes forth "as of one that hath a peculiar spirit, out of the ground." It whispers out of the dust" to this generation. This people were "of the city where David dwelt," and are, therefore, legitimately called "Ariel." Their words, being the words of the dead, and being brought forth by one called of God for that purpose, are indeed as the voice "of one that hath a familiar spirit." Thus it is that "Ariel," "of the city where David dwelt," has spoken to us "out of the ground." True, the speech of this people is "low out of the dust;" but, like the still small voice that spoke to Elijah, God is in it and he will cause it to be heard.

The next few verses of this chapter (Isa. 29) portray some of the calamities, also the spiritual darkness, that should come upon those nations that were instrumental in helping to bring the foregoing calamities upon "Ariel." Beginning with verse 7, he says:—

And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision. It shall even be as when a hungry man dreameth, and behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion. Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered.

Notice that the foregoing applies to all nations that "fight against," or "that distress," "Ariel." They are to be "as a dream of a night vision," like a hungry man that dreams of eating, but awakes disappointed and hungry. They are drunken and staggering, but not from the effects of strong drink. The Lord has closed their eyes and put them to sleep; he has taken away, or covered their prophets and seers, and left them to grope their way in the dark.

If any are curious to know how they are made drunken without strong drink, they will please read Revelation 17:1-6:—

And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters; with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon the scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: and upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

This woman became drunken by the blood of the saints, and then made the nations and kings of the earth drunk with the "wine of her fornication," her false doctrine and corrupt teaching. This applies to the whole Gentile world, and was literally fulfilled during the dark ages. Of this the Church of England, in one of her homilies, says:—

Laity and clergy, learned and unlearned, men, women, and children, of all ages, sexes, and degrees, of whole Christendom, have been at once buried in the most abominable idolatry (a most dreadful thing to think), and that for the space of eight hundred years or more.

During this time they were told that they could not understand the Bible; that it was not for the common people to read; that they were to follow the counsel of their spiritual leaders. They did so, thinking they were doing right, and that their teachers were feeding the flock upon the pure and unadulterated word of God. They "dreamed that they were eating" but, when the Reformation dawned, and the Bible was translated into different languages and put into the hands of the people, they soon saw they had been fed upon husks, instead of the "bread of life;" that they had been drinking of the "wine of . . . fornication," instead of the "water of life;" hence they were drunken and staggering but still hungry and thirsty. No prophets and no seers. "As with the people, so with the priest;" all in spiritual darkness.

Are they to remain in this condition? No. Let us turn again to Isaiah 29:11, 12:—

And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed: and the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

This part of the chapter had a remarkable fulfillment in the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. "The vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed," shows that all will be so blinded that they will fail to understand the Scriptures containing the revelations of God to the prophets of the past. A book is referred to "that is sealed." The "words" of this sealed book are delivered, by "men," to "one that is learned." The book itself is delivered to one that is "not learned." It is in a strange language, for neither the learned nor unlearned are able to read it.

Now, take the history of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and notice how minutely every part of this prophecy was fulfilled. Not only was it sealed up in the earth, but some of the plates were sealed, and remained so. Those that were not sealed were written in a strange language—the Reformed Egyptian. Some of the "words" were transcribed by Joseph Smith, and with his translation of them, were carried by Martin Harris to Dr. Mitchell and Prof. Anthon, of New York City. At the risk of being tedious, I shall here give the testimony of two of the principal actors in the transaction. Martin Harris says of this visit:—

I went to the city of New York and presented the characters which had been transcribed, with the translation thereof, to Prof. Anthon, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments. Prof. Anthon stated that the translation was correct; more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those that were not translated, and he said they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyrian, and Arabic, and he said that they were true characters. He gave me a certificate, certifying to the people of Palmyra that they were the true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been translated was also correct. I took the certificate and put it into my pocket, and was just leaving the house when Mr. Anthon called me back and asked me how the young man found out that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered that an angel of God had revealed it to him. He then said unto me, "Let me see the certificate." I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces, saying there was no such thing now as ministering of angels, and that if I would bring the plates to him he would translate them. I informed him that part of the plates were sealed, and that I was forbidden to bring them. He replied, "I cannot read a sealed book."

E. D. Howe and Co., in getting up their work against the Saints, wrote to Prof. Anthon in regard to the foregoing, thinking no doubt to score a point against the Saints. They received an answer, and from it we copy the following:—

Some years ago a plain, apparently simple-hearted farmer called on me with a note from Dr. Mitchell, of our city, now dead, requesting me to decipher, if possible, a paper which the farmer would hand me, and which Dr. Mitchell confessed he had been unable to understand. When I asked the person who brought it how he obtained the writing, he gave me, as far as I now recollect, the following account: A gold book consisting of a number of plates of gold fastened together in the shape of a book, by wires of the same metal, which had been dug up in the northern part of the State of New York, and along with the book an enormous pair of gold spectacles [Urim and Thummim]. These spectacles were so large that if a person attempted to look through them, his two eyes would have to be turned toward one of the glasses merely, the spectacles in question being altogether too large for the human face. Whoever examined the plates through the spectacles was enabled to not only read them, but understand their meaning. All of this knowledge, however, was confined at that time to the young man who had the trunk containing the plates and spectacles in his sole possession. He put on the spectacles, or rather looked through one of the glasses, and deciphered the characters in the book, and having committed some of them to paper, handed copies to a person outside. This paper was in fact a singular scroll. It consisted of all kinds of crooked characters, disposed in columns, and had evidently been prepared by some person who had before him at the time a book containing various alphabets, Greek and Hebrew letters, crosses and flourishes. Roman letters inverted or placed sideways, were ranged in perpendicular columns, and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle, decked with various strange marks, and evidently copied after the Mexican calendar given by Humboldt.—E. D. Howe's Work, p. 272.

This puts it beyond doubt that the "words" of the book were actually delivered to the "learned." According to Mr. Harris, the Professor said, "I cannot read a sealed book," almost the very words, and exactly the sentiment the prophet said the learned would utter. Prof. Anthon tries to make light of this document, calling it a "singular scroll," "crooked characters," etc., etc.; but he admits that the "words of the book" were delivered to him as testified by Mr. Harris, and also as predicted by Isaiah. There is nothing in the prophecy indicating that the "learned" will accept the book. The inference is that they will reject it, and so they did.

There is sometimes an objection raised here like this:—

Isaiah says that neither the learned nor the unlearned could read the sealed book of which he wrote, while the Saints claim that the unlearned did read the Book of Mormon.

The position of the Saints is that neither the learned nor unlearned could read the book, but that the Lord himself had to take the matter in hand and, by the Spirit of revelation, inspire the unlearned, into whose hands the book was placed, to read it. This position is sustained by the following from the same chapter:—

Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us? Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay; for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?—Isa. 29:13-16.

Yes, the Lord is to be the power behind the throne in this work. Man is the instrument through whom he works, but the Lord is to be with him, and is to be the fountain from which the man is to receive his light and strength. Notice here that this is to be "a marvelous work and a wonder;" that it is to commence among a people who are without any prophets or seers, whose eyes are closed, who worship God with their lips and mouths, but who, in reality, are "taught by the precept of men." "The wisdom of their wise men [who fight against this marvelous work] shall perish." Here is a hint that the

of God, as they always have, but that they shall not prevail against it. So it has been. Since the coming forth of the sealed book the wise and learned have done all in their power to destroy it, but it has stood the storm and, like gold, shines all the brighter, because of the rough handling it has received at the hands of its enemies.

The Book of Mormon, as already stated, claims to be this sealed book, and the work inaugurated in connection with it claims to be the "marvelous work and a wonder." So far, we have found its claims and history in exact harmony with this remarkable chapter (Isa. 29). Let us turn to it again and read verses 17 to 19:—

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest? And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness. The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

Verses 22 to 24 read as follows:—

Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale. But when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.

These two quotations will test the claims of the Book of Mormon and this latter-day work. They will either set the stamp of divinity upon the work, or brand it a fraud. By examining them we find that when the "sealed book" is brought forth, and this "marvelous work" of the Lord is commenced, it is to be "a very little while, and Lebanon [Palestine] shall be turned into a fruitful field;" that the ears of the "deaf" shall "hear the words of the book," which shows that it is to be read; that the "poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel," because of this marvelous work; that shame and paleness of face shall begin to be taken from the "house of Jacob" and they "shall fear the God of Israel."

The Methodist annual conference in Germany has been fixing the salaries of all preachers within maximum and minimum figures. The largest sum given to any preacher is eight hundred dollars and the lowest one hundred and fifty. There are gradations according as the preacher is married, unmarried, or has children.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints scattered throughout the British Mission; Greeting:—There may be other than pure motives prompting addresses, oral or written. On this matter I will leave the reader to judge as to motives prompting the following thoughts; and will say with Paul, "I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say."—1 Cor. 10: 15.

"Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: for by faith ye stand."—2 Cor. 1: 24.

I count the months of my sojourn among you with a pang of regret, for the meagerness of good accomplished, though essaying to utilize time. My travels may not have been so fleet and extensive as desired, for it has appeared to me that direct might be at least more economical than circuitous travel.

Our cause affords no guarantee of worldly emoluments or benefits, because of its popularity, but the reverse of this; and the admonition, "Seek first to build up the kingdom," etc., should ever be uppermost in our minds, which cannot be construed to mean an indifference in the several avocations of life to secure the bread which perishes, necessitating diligence and push; but in reading the pleading of the editors of the Herald and Autumn Leaves—the best of church papers—for money due, the necessity for which should never have existed to such a wide extent, I thought the above injunction might be thus applied. Were I paying for secular papers, and unable to pay for both them and the Herald, I should discontinue the former and stick to and pay for the latter. Of course this may seem a small matter, but 'tis ours to look after small matters, for big matters belong to our heavenly Father. Moreover, were there to come a spontaneous and full response to the pleading of the above editors, it would to them appear no small matter.

Again, I find in this country the holding of feasts, fairs, football matches, etc., etc., are frequent, and that participation therein necessitates an outlay of money and the consumption of precious time. For instance, a fee of sixpence to secure the right of entrance to an inclosure to gaze on stalwart men, kicking a football about. "I speak to you as wise men." Is the outlay of that sixpence economical? Is it compatible with our profession to squander the little aid it is possible for sons of toil to contribute to aid the latter-day work for that which profiteth not? How can you be consistent Latter Day Saints and hold from the church the little aid you might give, and lavish it on that which is is naught? While at — vacant seats were visible where meetings were being held, on a certain night. I learned that the absentees graced some public gathering by their presence, leaving the preacher and the rest to take care of themselves. As to the character of the gathering, I cannot speak, but suffice it to say it was something in which the modern Babylonians delight, where Latter Day Saints should not want to go, especially not to neglect a meeting of their own, lest they be suspected of loving pleasure more intensely than their religion. But if there are those who cannot, or will not withdraw their affections from modern Babylon and its allurements, preferring to spend their leisure hours with its devotees rather than in the congregations of the Saints, it were better, perhaps, they follow the bent of their mind, being zealous for the master they chose to serve, and no longer make themselves ridiculous in essaying to serve two masters, which they cannot do. And if choosing to serve his Satanic Majesty, when they shall have fed on husks sufficiently long, the way may be opened to return to their Father's house, or it may not. At any rate they will have the satisfaction of knowing they pleased themselves.

Though far from perfection, I have been made sad in witnessing the demoralizing effects the use of intoxicants is producing, in which many of the fair daughters of Eve without shamefacedness indulge, and not infrequently little distressed and uncared for boys and girls dodge in and out the drinking parlors, as they are styled, inquiring for father or mother, or both. Fine, healthy-looking young women may be seen lingering within the precincts of these modern sinks of iniquity, as if they would fain enter the interior and lift the fatal cup, and thus jeopardize their virtue, honor, and reputation. Yet I am disposed to believe there are many that have been accustomed from their childhood to beer or ale as a beverage, strictly temperate. And I am glad to know that there are Latter Day Saints that are total abstainers, and correspondingly striving by precept and example to call men and women from the evil practices, pointing them to the Lamb of God. May the good Lord greatly bless and encourage them.

The branch once flourished with a Band of Hope; but alas, its once brilliant light is dimmed! And I hereby suggest to all concerned, especially to presidents of districts and branches, to move cautiously in ordinations, which are to be fraught with so much good or evil. Do not overlook the necessity for and adaptability to contemplated ordinations. And when satisfied as to the legitimacy of appointment, do not lay on hands suddenly or with undue haste. Take sufficient time to charge and instruct the recipients with a solemnity compatible with the thought that the acceptance of a legally tendered position in the church of the living God is tantamount to covenanting with God to acquit one's self of the duties attaching to the accepted position. It is distressing to see a branch drifting towards disruption because of official incompetency arising from a nonunderstanding of duty. Sensationalism may feed the many, but our progress must be the result of intelligent acts, for knowledge is power, therefore an auxiliary to progress and peace.

The right of six or more members to be brought into an organized capacity cannot be construed to mean to organize irrespective of some prospects of its continuance after its organization. It would certainly be proper to consider to some extent the prospects of its continuance, which will necessitate labor, consisting of teaching, reproving, visiting, etc., as preventives of extremes, which will ever cause strife, and prevent peace.

Should an elder, to illustrate, anticipate the needed qualification without due study with a godly life, he would make a sad mistake; and if on the other hand, one's expectations should be raised to a constant development of mysterious matters from the mere fact of one being elevated to the office of an elder, that would be a mistake, and with the extremists there might be a constant friction, leading to serious results. Such matters should be thought of and descanted upon in the inception of the work of organization, that all concerned may have some conception of the responsibility assumed by being brought together in an organized capacity. Much is made to depend upon a right start. No religious body enjoys greater liberty than the Latter Day Saints, but it is possible to construe this liberty to mean license, and when that is done, we may say good-bye to good fellowship, peace, and gospel unity. As if to meet an exigency, caused by an abuse of liberty, Paul said: "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another!"—Gal. 5: 13-15.

"Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit; are ye now made perfect by the flesh?"—Gal. 3: 2, 3.

Let all branch members study well on these matters, and they will learn that business in "the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth (1 Tim. 3: 15) is not to be conducted after the manner and style of the political arena, with an improper conception of liberty. Too frequent branch business meetings will be fraught with evil, especially so if efforts are made to adjust difficulties at such meetings. Officials and nonofficials, especially the former, will do well to study instructions the following reflect: Matthew 18: 15-17; 18: 7-10; Doctrine and Covenants 32: 3; 42: 6, 7, 21, 23; 46: 1, 4, 7; 50: 1, 2, 3, 7; 59: 2; 64: 2; also Book of Mormon p. 535, Plano edition, and the method of adjudication will be made plain; and you may learn how far the Mother Grundy method will be permissible in giving publicity to that which would create mischief, destroy confidence, and so become peacebreakers instead of peacemakers.

To the careful and Godfearing student nothing is more apparent than the fact of the success of the body being effected by the legitimate activity of the several integral parts thereof; hence the following: "I say unto you, . . . teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me."—D. C. 38: 5.

"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence."—D. C. 104: 44.

I see nothing puzzling in the above, hence nothing to prevent anyone learning and performing duty (and if there is a warrant for appointing and deposing a branch president and appointing a successor every three or six months, 'tis hid from mine eyes), acting in the office appointed, thereby doing his part to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." (Eph. 4: 3.)

The time past in which misunderstandings have occurred tending to disunion, should suffice, with a resolve in God's strength to strive in the future to be men and women in understanding, and children in malice; so shall we grow in grace and live to do good, which should be our highest ambition.

There should be a proper understanding and unity of action between presidents of districts and presidents of branches, for the best good of the work; and perfect unanimity should exist with branch officials. To illustrate; the teacher should not fold his arms and rest at ease in Zion, but should be on the watchtower, for supervision means diligence, and readiness, and activity proportionate to the responsibility, and the gifts and callings of God. If any official knows that a prevention to unity exists because of a failure to make concession, advise concession. If evidence exists of actual violation of law, advise a law-imposed procedure with a view to an adjustment.

Diligence as circumstances admit may greatly assist to open a way for more extensive labor. Laborers in the great harvest field are greatly needed. The general law provides that elders shall travel and preach as circumstances may allow. Why should this be omitted because the way is not open to do greater things. Its more compatible with the spirit and genius of our religion to wear out than to rust out. Let us not hide ourselves in the time of warfare lest we be passed by in the day of reward. God gives no promise to lazy men. Why should he?

In conclusion, I respectfully and softly suggest that the long established custom of big dinners on Sunday is burdensome to wives and mothers and a great hindrance to Sabbath worship. Would it not be possible to break away from this long-established custom and survive in spending less time in cooking, thus caring more for the soul and less for the body, on Sunday.

One Sunday, at —, I found the branch president present at Sunday school with six scholars. He was a son of toil. He also did deacon service for morning and evening service. Other brethren and sisters live in the same place and I wondered why some others were not present to assist in the very important work. We can accomplish little without a thorough, proper, and continuous coöperation. Shall we not therefore be found coöperating as ability and circumstances may admit?

Where it is not possible to secure a public place for worship, and a cottage is available, utilize the cottage. And if two meetings in addition to a Sabbath school on Sunday are not practicable, have one preaching or one social meeting, and a Sabbath school. If sickness or untoward circumstance prevent, be patient, while the ordeal lasts; but don't designedly waste the time of Sunday. Carefully read 59: 2, 3 Doctrine and Covenants, and let us never overlook the fact that we are largely what we desire to be.

May God's peace, the source of joy, and an effective preventive to strife, ever be your portion. In gospel bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

APOLOGETIC.

I was invited to be present at the dedication services at Edgerton Junction, Missouri, by Bro. T. J. Mauzey, the president of the branch there, and promised by letter to be there. This promise was made under the impression, and with the understanding on my part, that Elder Thomas W. Chatburn had or was to have the matter in charge; and learning from him that he could not be present on the 11th, supposed that the dedication would necessarily be postponed, and therefore wrote Bro. Mauzey on November 7 that I could not be present on that day, and did not attend.

Since the dedication I have received information from Brn. J. T. Kinnaman, William Lewis, Temme and Caspar Hinderks, and T. J. Mauzey that makes it to appear that I was laboring under a misapprehension in regard to the circumstances, and not justified in failing to be present according to promise; such absence putting the brethren to inconvenience, and causing them much chagrin.

I hereby confess to the fault complained of, and ask the brethren having charge and the Saints and others interested to grant me pardon.

I cannot recall to mind another instance in all the thirty-four years of ministerial labor, in which I have failed to keep a promise definitely made; and appreciating the awkward position the absence of an invited principal actor in such a service put the brethren in, I sincerely regret having failed them.

SECOND QUORUM OF SEVENTY.

To the brethren of the Second Quorum of Seventy; Greeting.—At the last General Conference your President and Secretary were authorized to issue a circular letter, but existing conditions have made it impracticable. It is to be hoped that the matter can be attended to at the coming annual quorum meeting. It is necessary that we have the full name and permanent address of each member of the quorum at once, also the date of birth and baptism, date of ordination, where it occurred, and who officiated. I need the date of birth and baptism of all the members of the quorum save W. A. McDowell, T. C. Kelley, J. W. Jackson, Samuel Brown, and Edward De Long. I need the items of ordination of all the brethren whose ordinations were provided for at last General Conference. The place where Bro. M. P. Madison was ordained is unknown to me.

Please respond to the above request at once, brethren, as I need your address in order to mail you a blank annual report. When you write do not forget to send your annual dues of twenty-five cents.

MARRIED.

LAIRD—MUSIC.—At the home of the bride's parents, near Moore, Oklahoma, Mr. V. C. Laird to Sr. Mollie Music, Elder R. M. Maloney officiating. The happy parties with their friends were soon at the festal board, where a bountiful feast was prepared. After the feast the happy couple bade adieu to their friends and kindred for a few weeks' sojourn in the sunny land of Texas.

May God govern and direct
Their footsteps o'er the plain,
Their minds be guided to the truth,
To comfort and sustain.
While foaming billows dash the spray,
And gathering clouds appear,
Be firm and strong, for just beyond
The sun is shining clear.

TILLERY—CONSTANCE.—Near Cameron, Missouri, at the home of the bride, December 12, 1894, Bro. William Tillery and Sr. Leah Constance, Elder J. T. Kinnaman officiating, near relatives only being invited. After the ceremony all partook of a bounteous repast, followed by the usual conversational topics on such occasions. Many good wishes, and hearty congratulations by all, go with the young couple on life's tempestuous sea.

DIED.

GRIFFITHS.—Frank Edward Griffiths, second son of Gomer T. and Hattie E. Griffiths, died at Kirtland, Ohio, December 26, 1894, of malignant form of scarlet fever, after a short illness. He was in charge of a physician almost from the beginning of his sickness, but of no avail. His little body rests beside that of his younger brother in the Kirtland cemetery. His death being caused by a contagious disease, he received a private burial; his father, mother, and Brother David being present; also Elders J. H. Lake and W. H. Kelley, and a sufficient number of neighbors to properly dispose of the remains. Frankie was a beautiful and bright boy and the entire neighborhood sympathize with the bereaved and feel grieved over the loss.

GRIFFITHS.—At Kirtland, Ohio, January 8, 1895, after an illness of forty hours, from the effects of scarlet fever, David Welcome, eldest son of Bro. and Sr. G. T. Griffiths, aged 8 years, 9 months, and 10 days. Services by Elder W. H. Garrett.

Three very bright, promising boys have been taken from the evil to come, all in the short space of a month, and while recognizing the fact that a loving Father's care has placed them safe within his own fold, naturally the loss of their companionship seems a hard blow and a heavy trial to the family. David was a noble little fellow, who seemed to love to do right. At his earnest request he was baptized in the early part of 1894, and was very faithful. He was a general favorite, and with Frankie and Willie will be very much missed in the Sunday school where they were always found on the Lord's day. But their absence will be painfully felt in the broken home circle. May the Father's loving care be manifest upon them all in this dark hour until they can say, "Thy will be done," and they can with calmness and patience look beyond unto the time when Davie, Frankie, and Willie will welcome them to the mansion the Savior is preparing for them, where no painful experiences will mar their happy reunion. W. H. G.

CARLTON.—In Petrolea, Ontario, January 5, 1895, Sr. Martha Matilda, wife of the late Elder Edward Carlton, and youngest daughter of Capt. N. and Martha Tomlinson. Deceased was born January 29, 1860, at Calross, Ontario; was baptized in Petrolea, September 30, 1883, by James N. Simmons.

THOMPSON.—At Beaver, Utah, December 26, 1894, Ann Mariah, wife of Bro. William Thompson, aged 73 years, 7 months, and 11 days. Sr. Thompson was born in Carning, Norfolk, England. Was the mother of eight children; was baptized at Norwich, England, in 1850. With her husband and family left England for Utah in 1853, and arrived in Salt Lake City, October 11, 1853. Moved to Beaver, in 1858, and there resided until it pleased God to call her away. She was respected in life and honored in death by a large number of friends.

MILES.—At Columbus, Nebraska, Florence S., youngest child of Harvey and Sr. Marianne Miles. Born March 12, 1892; died December 17, 1894. Funeral service at cemetery by Bro. H. J. Hudson.

MILES.—At Columbus, Nebraska, George E., oldest boy of Harvey and Sr. Marianne Miles. Born April 30, 1887; died January 11, 1895. Funeral service by Bro. George W. Galley at cemetery. Two young spirits called into the paradise of God ere sin's taint had marred their lives, carrying with them the seal of Christ's blessing upon the little children.

JOHNSTON.—Sr. Mary Ann, wife of Bro. Gustave A. Johnston, and daughter of Elder William Newton, died at Kansas City, Kansas, December 17, 1894. Deceased was born at Lefton, Devonshire, England, December 1, 1868. She was baptized by Elder J. J. Cornish in April, 1881. She leaves as chief mourners a husband, one son, two sisters, two brothers, a father, who is now on the South Sea Islands as missionary for the church. She was a faithful, devoted Saint, and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. She made her selection of her pallbearers and the one to preach her funeral sermon. The Armstrong branch feel the loss of one who has long borne her testimony to the truth of the gospel as revealed in these latter days. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder R. May to a large and attentive audience of mourners, kind brethren and sisters in the faith, and many friends.

PRACTICAL VALUE OF EDUCATION.

PRESIDENT John M. Coulter of Lake Forest University, spoke on the "Practical Value of Education" as follows:—

Pioneer conditions need men of indomitable purpose and endurance, but not so much those of fine intellectual equipment; for the early battles are largely physical. But an intricate civilization demands talents of a far different order, and the battles become intellectual. The civilization in which our activities lie has passed through the pioneer stage with wonderful rapidity and the age of intellectual domination is upon us. This vaunted nineteenth century has been essentially a materialistic one and as a result of its marvelous material development has raised many more questions than it has settled. In view of new conditions that are before us of the great necessity for multiplying leaders of sentiment, let us analyze the structure of the man of power and seek to discover those constituent elements which, when brought together, generate force.

I would mention enthusiasm, the motive power that means persistent effort. The enthusiasm which is content to do what it can, which can work and wait and work again, which regards the better as progress toward the best, is the enthusiasm which presently generates influence and its possessor becomes a leader.

A second quality of the man of force to be mentioned is preparation. A genuine enthusiasm may be ill directed and spend itself aimlessly. Mind as well as heart must be trained, for there must be aim as well as power if there is to be an effective result. The ideal man, the man of greatest possible force, is the one who has brought body, mind, and spirit into healthful and beautiful activity, interdependent and mutually stimulating.

The man of power is also one who has cultivated the habit of observation and knows first hand whereof he thinks and whereof he speaks. The world is full of second hand opinions concerning all subjects; but theorizing in the absence of any personal knowledge of the facts is nowhere more rampant than in those subjects which deal with the general interests of mankind.

A fourth element in leadership is the power of adaptation. Nothing is more certain than that the world of thought and practice is slowly shifting its point of view.

The last element of a forceful life to which I would refer and one that deserves separate and special emphasis is that of growth. The man who continually teaches what he was taught in college, who preaches forever what he learned during his theological training, who has no other conception of business than that caught from predecessors not only cannot lead, but has let the world move past him.

DO OUR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES EDUCATE?

AN answer in the negative is given by Henry Lincoln Clapp, Master of George Putnam School, Boston, who pours hot shot into the cramming system of our educational institutions in a paper in Education, September. The special interest of his article lies in the backing which he furnishes for his opinion in the views of distinguished men. He says:—

"In a 'protest' against examinations signed by many eminent men, and among them, Prof. Max Müller, Mr.

E. A. Freeman, and M. Frederic Harrison, occurs this significant statement: 'Again and again, brilliant young men, once full of early promise, go down from the universities as the great prize-winners, and do little or nothing afterward.' Such deplorable results are ascribed to examinations.

'Even the lack of a university education itself is not an insuperable obstacle to a liberal education, in the case of young men otherwise favorably conditioned. Professor Wesley Mills says: 'We develop in spite of bad methods. The boy develops out of school, if not in it. The great mass educated by their work and other associations that make up their everyday life. Some of the best educated people have never been inside of a school.'

'President Gilman says: 'It is obvious that a liberal education is not to be limited by the period devoted to a college course or a course in technology. I may go further and say that liberal culture may be acquired without seminaries; scholars may appear in the walks of business, in the solitude of rural life, on the boards of a theater, in politics, in philanthropy, in exploration; but they cannot be produced by a narrow, cramping, servile training.

'Nearly eighteen hundred years ago, Epictetus said, 'It is one thing to hoard up provision in a storehouse, and another to eat it.' . . .

'It should be the supreme art of the university to further such conditions of learning, to train young men to make the best application of traditional learning as they go along, and to give them the widest opportunities for the development of their individual and original powers.

'Such is the distinguishing work of the German universities. 'The workshop and the training school of scientific investigation' are the most potent factors in them. 'According to the German conception, the university professor is both teacher and investigator; and he is the latter in the higher degree, so that we may say in Germany, the scientific investigators are at the same time the teachers of academic youth.' 'An account of the advance of science turns out to be mainly an account of university work.'

'Professor Paulsen, of Berlin, says of the universities of Germany, 'Their real value is not in perfect learning of their teachers, nor in the ever-growing learning of their students: if we should name this as their distinction, a mirror would often need to be held before us to our shame. It is rather this: in them is given a scheme wherein every important educational talent finds its development, and every lively susceptibility of the student its satisfaction, through which every advance of science finds easy and rapid entrance.' . . .

'Professor Henry in The Educational Review, pertinently exclaims, 'How many noted English investigators are inconceivable as professors at Oxford or Cambridge?' Professor Guthrie, in The Journal of the Society of Arts, in speaking of the universities of England, says, 'It does not admit of a shadow of a doubt but that on the whole these opportunities (for science teaching) have been greatly wasted, these means wrongfully applied, and these duties wantonly neglected. In the matter of chemistry, the record of what we owe to the universities is shamefully short. While the intellectual world was ringing with the discoveries of Priestly, Black, and Lavoisier, the universities were concerned with the insignificant squabbles of philologists. While Faraday and Dumas, Liebig and Darwin were at work, what was, say, Oxford doing? Future generations will scarcely credit it. The leading lights in the university had nothing better to do, apparently, than to issue and discuss tracts on the difference between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee.' Possibly he may refer to such matters as have come out in the discussions and pamphlets of our own university professors,—the correct (?) pronunciation of Latin, 'Is Greek dead?' the second Aorist, the Doric dialect—all of which may be interesting to a literary antiquary and serve to keep students busy; but it is proper enough to consider whether the transmission of such obsolete learning forms any part of the supreme art of the university.

'Even as late as February, 1894, Dr. N. M. Butler had occasion to write, 'The Oxford and Cambridge dons are beginning to recognize that they ought to take an interest in education. It is not easy for them to overcome the habits built upon centuries of exclusiveness and narrow educational ideals.' After all, Englishmen have been the severest and most numerous critics of the English universities.

'Herbert Spencer speaks to the point when he says, 'The vital knowledge—that by which we have grown as a nation to what we are, and which now underlies our whole existence—is a knowledge that has got itself taught in nooks and corners, while the ordained agencies for teaching have been mumbling little else than dead formulas.'—Literary Digest.

LONG-LIVED AMERICANS.

WELL-AUTHENTICATED are cases of mission Indians in Southern California who reached the ages of 120, 130, and 140. In that equable region all the great functions of nature go on with regularity, so as to induce a long running of the machine. But besides this, these old men were probably free from care, from religious doubts, and skepticism, and political worry and ambition, and it is testified that they were simple in their habits, temperate, and even abstemious, drinking only water and eating little but corn, which they fitted for digestion by the vigorous action of their own grinders. Lieutenant Gibbons found in a village in Peru one hundred persons over the age of 100, and either he or another credible explorer there reports another man aged 140. He was a very temperate man, ate his food cold, never ate meat except in the middle of the day. In the highlands of South America the habit of old age is a long-established one. In Ecuador centenarians are common. The census of 1864 found in the town of Pilaquin, 11,000 feet above the sea-level, about 2,000 inhabitants, among whom were 100 over 70 years of age, thirty about 80, eleven over 90, five over 100, and one who was 115. Not many years ago there died in Ambato a woman named N. Cucalou, who was 114, and one Don Jose Soto, aged 120. In the year 1840, in the town of Banos, died old Morales, a vigorous carpenter to the end of his life, who was well on in years and the steward of the Jesuits when they were expelled from their property in 1767. In 1838 a witness in a judicial trial was proved to be 140 years old, having been born on the night of the great earthquake which destroyed the old town of Ambato in 1698. How much longer this man lived, who was cradled by the earthquake, is not reported. Mexico, notwithstanding its revolutions, is equally favorable to longevity. In the State of Vera Cruz there died a man in 1893 who was 137 years old. That he was carried off prematurely we have reason to suppose, for a Teluca, where the register is officially and carefully kept, there died only a few years ago a man aged 192.—Sel.

There is a sort of religious pantheism abroad that esteems all denominations of Christians as alike good and has a preference for none. They are all doing a good work, and the pantheist of this order pats them all on the back, but never troubles himself with inquiry into the tenets of any. He who would as lief be a Methodist as a Baptist, an Episcopalian as a Presbyterian, holds truth with a loose grip and is not likely to prove of much service in any denomination. We should rue the day that brings about Christian unity founded on the indifference that regards the different denominations as peas in one pod. A heap of driftwood gathered by the current of a stream is a poor illustration of the ideal church.—The New York Observer.

At the recent National Congress in India there were gathered at Madras some seven hundred delegates from all parts of India, Afghanistan, Nepal, and Scinde. They spoke nine different native languages, but the English was the only medium through which the proceedings could be satisfactorily conducted. This is a striking illustration of the wide diffusion of that tongue. English has been so widely spread by England's colonial enterprises that it promises to become the missionary language of the world. Even in Java, where England has no control, the knowledge of English is steadily growing.

The fire in a Boulder county, Colorado, coal mine, which has been burning for thirty years, now covers an area of about three hundred acres, and spouts flame, cinders, and smoke through numerous outlets. It has destroyed property worth millions of dollars.

Iceland is pronounced by a writer in the current number of the Quarterly Review but a burnt out cinder, more akin to a bit of the moon than anything on this planet.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of the United States has 57,350 members according to the latest statistics.

ALL HAVE OPPORTUNITIES.

POVERTY is not necessarily detrimental to refinement, its strong, underlying virtues, and accompanying graces. The poor man may not be able to surround himself and his family with luxuries, but he can adorn his home with the sturdiness of manly integrity and the graces of patience, cheerfulness, and true gentility; and so teach and so see reproduced in his children the true riches—the hidden manna of the heart. No one in God's kingdom is so unfavorably placed that he is denied opportunity of growth in goodness, in worth, in trueness of life, in beauty of character. The fault lies, the mistake is generally made, in failing to accept the opportunities that are open before all while sighing or hoping for better, or for fanciful ones, in which it is supposed that difficulties will largely disappear. Poverty is not to be desired, but life's surroundings are such, especially in this favored age, that there is much of general good open to all; much to be learned by observation and to make one's own by imitation and cultivation.

Humanity is too apt to look without instead of within; too prone to neglect the richness possible to be developed and treasured up in the inner recesses of the soul where lies that that has capacity to become attuned to nature's harmonies and appreciate her highest teachings and to imitate the Christ, the perfection of beauty; to itself become a manifestation of God in the flesh. We too often forget the deeper, the truer meanings of life and become absorbed in its phantoms. In our pursuit of the supposed material we secure the perishable while often we fail to discern and make the lasting, the eternal, our own.

It is certainly the work of the Spirit of truth to awaken and cause the spiritual life of God's children to unfold, to choose "the better part that shall not be taken away," "the more enduring substance." Within, above, and all around us are treasures within our grasp; and we have but to see to appreciate, to desire, to "hunger and thirst" for them, to make them our own. Earthly riches may but exhibit the poverty of a soul. He who has but them in the day of death will not be "rich toward God," will be unprepared to inherit the true riches; while he who is rich toward God will secure an eternal inheritance.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of that which he possesseth." "Godliness with contentment" to endure and to make the best of present life conditions, where one is diligently doing his best, "is great gain."

The poorest Saint can have the Christlike manliness or womanliness of true culture; of nobleness of nature, of goodness of heart, of the virtues without which no life is attractive, no personality influential for good, if he will. They are not, however, attainable by the untrue, the ignoble; indeed, the insincere, the untrue heart cannot sufficiently desire as to really receive and possess them—to use, to assimilate them.

One may hear a statement of a truth with the outer ear, may read its presentation by the organ of vision, but fail to lodge it, to fix it in the heart; indeed one can only appreciate truth and goodness and all they include by having, by developing an appreciation, a love for things of that character.

Intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light, etc.

This, as we understand it, is the only true theory, the only true method of practical growth. It recognizes the personality, and right, and agency of the individual. It calls for the use of his own powers; it guarantees their proper, their normal direction and exercise. It proves that those whom God would help are those who are willing to accept and use his help; and that, having tasted the good things "of the world to come" in contrast to the evils of this world, that God expects, as he has reason to expect, that there shall be a manifest, a sincere appreciation of them, a striving for larger possessions in the true riches, the virtues, the adornments of true character.

We repeat the thought as worthy of more than mere emphasis, that truth and goodness must be loved, must be appreciated to be received, to obtain lodgment in the heart. We read of some who failed to receive "the love of the truth," hence though formally accepting first principles, they failed to "continue" in them.

Religion as it came from God was the grandest system known among men; indeed the only true system of education possible to man. It was and is a perfect system. But, religion as perverted and distorted by the enemy of righteousness and those blinded by him, has become the very opposite of what God designed it, hence popular ideas of religion are as wide of the mark, in some respects, as possible to conceive. True religion comprehends and includes all that pertains to the life and duties of man; of the lives of men and women in all their phases. It includes rules of conduct, of life that cannot at any time be set aside, cannot be evaded without transgression of law. A perfect law, a true principle is never abrogated; it cannot be. It is not possible for the Lawgiver himself to nullify, to set a principle of truth aside. He would "cease to be God," we are told, did he pursue such a course. Individuals are, then, at all times and under all circumstances placed within the pale and under the influences of law, panoplied by truth, at all times under the responsibility of honoring law by conforming to it.

And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore they must remain filthy still. . . . All beings who abide not in those conditions are not justified, etc.—D. C. 85: 8, 10.

Both the goodness and the wisdom of Deity are manifested in this system of divine government. While the consequences of evil done are sure to follow proportionate to the violation of law, so are the results of righteous doing equally sure to the obedient one who honors law. There is, therefore, the beneficence of God made manifest in the constant, the never ceasing development, advancement guaranteed to men and women in the daily routine of life duties; at home, abroad, anywhere, everywhere.

Some persons fret and fume under restrictions from which they are powerless to release themselves. Others accept the statement and believe that with the workers, the faithful souls, "all things work together for good to them that love God," etc. They accept what opportunities they have, and, casting away the shadows of despondency, of complainings and repinings, freely let in the sunlight and enjoy its rays that shine upon and illuminate the soul.

Persons have trials, have difficulties to meet and surmount, but are not necessarily "doomed" thereby to lives of unnatural gloom and despair. God created men and women, we believe, to be useful, to be happy; but they cannot be either without a reasonable amount of those normal life currents circulating in their home lives that call out and normalize their intellectual, moral, and social natures and heart activities. We have, therefore, thought to call attention, though in hastily written words, to a few things as suggesting what may be helpful to us all, in our pilgrimage through this world of lights and shadows. We believe the shadows fall too often where they ought not; that they exist often in imagination rather than in reality; that the Master meant what he said when he declared that individuals who lived in him had already passed "from death unto life"—unto life. Life is normal in action, healthful in tone, encouraging in its spirit. The gospel is designed to produce such conditions in the hearts and lives of its devotees.

We once read of a woman who for some time made a practice of writing down and preserving a record of her apprehensions, her fears, etc., and who years afterward confessed that they had proved groundless; that her life had been free from anything calculated to produce well-grounded cause for trouble. This we believe to be true of most lives; that it ought to be true, as a rule, of all whose trust and hope are in God and who cheerfully strive to do his will.

We return, then, to the thought that the home however plain its furnishings, however frugal the fare of its members, can be and ought to be a place where truest heart cultivation is the daily care of its members, the strong and normal example set before the children who there form habits of life and character. We believe all this and much more is included, contemplated in the injunction to "set thy house in order" given to some of the early elders, and binding upon all. Our heavenly Father, as we have understood the spirit of his law, does not expect his children to await open commandments before action is determined upon. He "writes" his law in the heart and "engraves" it upon the mind, hence desires that all shall discern the truth "shall know the truth," and shall act according to the promptings of illuminated minds and disciplined goodness of heart.

After all, personally, we would not care, at least in this world, to be placed under conditions where there were no troubles to surmount, no difficulties to encounter, no opposition to prevail against. There would be no promise, no encouragement, no hope of development in such a life.

The struggle of the race is a struggle against unseen as well as seen evil influences, against its own perversity and lack of knowledge as well as the workings of Satan; and, Satan can and does take advantage of ignorance or fear, as well as of perversity of heart. However, the promise is that God's people shall, if they will, be free from his power, on conditions of being wise and faithful. The life prescribed for a child of God is a course of education in the truth with that end in view, to escape, to avoid, to live above evil, and so be free from it. It requires a real effort, a genuine interest, a determined, devoted application to do this.

With all that one may learn of first principles and other special features of the gospel economy, we believe that the object designed and the point to be kept in view by God's people personally, individually, is that personal knowledge of the truth that shall enable them to cultivate the moral and spiritual precepts of the gospel; those elements of strength and trueness of character without which no life can be "enriched;" that such men and women can and do and will "bear witness unto the truth;" that they can, by God's grace, be lights to the world wherever they are and can stand in behalf of the work, wielding influence for good and building up the various branches of the church throughout the world by "good works."

Let us not forget that the restoration of the gospel contemplates a reproduction of its fruits in us; in us all; that if "purged" by trial and beset by difficulty it is but because God loves and would have us "bear more fruit." "So shall ye be my disciples," said the Master.

MINISTERS' HALF FARE PERMITS.

THE half fare permit privilege, hitherto granted by railroad companies to ministers of the gospel, has been and is a helpful one in the extension of the missionary work of the church, enabling those who labor in distant fields to be present at the General Conferences of the church as representatives of their constituents, and as servants of the general body to reach those fields and to make the yearly return of labor done, as well as to attend the local conferences and visit the various portions of said fields promptly and easily, without the expense to the general church that denial of the half fare permit privilege would entail. This privilege and courtesy the general lines of road have more freely granted, especially in late years, as our work and its distinctive character has become generally understood; and the resultant benefit to the traveling ministry and the interests of the general church has been considerable. However, with the opening of the present year there seems to be a disposition on the part of most roads in the United States to restrict the ministerial privilege to some extent, hence as a result, some of our brethren have been refused permits, which has hampered them in their work.

We think there is a misapprehension of what the roads are really seeking to do, and, possibly, in some instances a latent prejudice against our work, resulting in most cases from a misunderstanding of us as a church; while in some instances—and very few we hope they are—it results from an evident sectarian prejudice.

With a view to aiding the brethren in their work and as suggesting a means of personally overcoming the difficulties in the way of obtaining the usual ministerial half fare privilege, we present the correspondence and comments that follow:—

RUNNELLS, Iowa, Jan. 14.

Editors Herald:—I thought I would write you and inclose a couple of letters received from the Des Moines and Northwestern railway company. I first wrote them for blank application form for half fare permit, which I got in a few days, and filled out, and had our local agent O. K. it, when I sent it in and in a few days got a refusal, as see by the inclosed letter. After my '94 permit had expired I sent it in and thanked them for it and told them I would have liked one for '95, but was perfectly willing to abide their decision without a word of complaint, and inclosed one of my cards with the Epitome of faith on the back, and told him we believed in going out as Christ sent out his ministry, etc., giving a few references.

I explained that our families were cared for by the church and we went trusting in the Lord to open up the way and in friends giving us means to travel with, etc. If you can make any use of it, go ahead. I am the only one of four in this district so far, that has more than one permit for 1895. The roads are getting very particular, and justly so, too, I think. As Mr. Tittlemore said I do think it an injustice and all the roads are kicking on that ground of injustice. They say they are imposed upon. We will have to before long have a complete explanation of our system printed and sent with each application, I believe, of course, indorsed by the proper ones or General Conference. Have been bound up for want of permits until now, and need some others before we can go where we want to. I have received permit from Mr. Tittlemore.

Yours,

F. M. WELD.

Here are the replies of Mr. Tittlemore, General Passenger Agent of the Des Moines, Northern, and Western Railway Company:—

DES MOINES, Iowa, Nov. 23, 1894.

Rev. F. M. Weld, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir:—Replying to yours of the 16th inst. I beg to state that it is not consistent for us to furnish you with half fare permit for 1895, as you are not located on the line of our road. If at any time you desire to take a trip over our road, please call at this office, when we will furnish you with one half rate trip ticket.

Yours truly,

J. N. TITTEMORE.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1895.

Mr. F. M. Weld, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir:—Yours of the 3d inst. received. I am against giving reduced transportation to ministers of the gospel who are salaried. A great many of them receive much more than the average working man receives for his work, and they should pay their railroad fare when circulating through the country. Besides this men of that kind generally get more good out of it than the community.

Under the circumstances we are only too glad to favor you with half fare permit, and hand it to you herewith. There are some cases where it almost seems proper to give free transportation but as this cannot be done, I do the best I can, and send you a half fare permit.

Yours truly,

J. N. TITTEMORE.

We understand there has been general complaint by railroad men against the too free granting and, in many cases misuse, of clerical half fare permits. Not long ago we read an account of a reputed interview with Dr. Chauncey M. Depew, president of the New York Central Railroad, in which he stated that the half fare privilege had been applied for and granted almost indiscriminately; that about four hundred clerical permits had been issued by various roads to parties residing in the city of Buffalo alone. This, we understand, the railroads are seeking to correct, to restrict the granting of the half fare privilege strictly to those who under their rules are entitled to it. In this they are right, and should be encouraged. However, it is necessary that the brethren devoting their whole time to ministerial labor should see that proper explanations accompany their applications for clerical tickets.

In the foregoing correspondence the result of such full statement is seen and it is apparent that the Spirit of sacrifice and consistency under which our missionary forces are sent out was recognized and appreciated, the permit being forthcoming, a disposition to grant a still greater privilege, had such been possible, being manifest.

We do not blame Mr. Tittlemore nor others who may share his opinion that the work of some so-called evangelists and revivalists is of more personal benefit to them than to the communities where they pose as attractions and from which they depart with well-filled purses as payment for their sensational and unreliable efforts, leaving nothing substantial, and often doing harm to the cause of religion among the thinking classes—if not among all.

It is also true that some ministers are high salaried and well able to pay the usual fare. Our plea is in behalf of a deserving class of men who have taken up the ministerial work, leaving home, wife, and children in the spirit of sacrifice, and who go forth with their families supplied or provided for on a strictly economical basis—"the ministerial basis"—while they "prove the world," trusting the Master for the supply of their daily recurring wants.

We believe that so long as the brethren continue to honor the terms upon which permits are granted and the facts stated are known to the railroad authorities, the half fare privilege will continue to be granted them. We understand that steps will be taken in their behalf to present the facts referred to to the various passenger associations. As it is, brethren in various fields have been hindered by the delay in granting permits. An explanation will doubtless hasten removal of difficulties.

"LET US GO FORWARD."

BRO. MAHLON SMITH, in his article on Foreign Missions, makes an allusion to the proposed college to be built at Lamoni, which is in our view unfortunate. He writes:—

No need of waiting until a church college is built, endowed, and established at Lamoni, or elsewhere, in order to let the light of the great truth through the scales of Israel's eyes. I sometimes wonder just how much that college will do away with the necessity for the light and knowledge that come by the Spirit of God through the gospel; and yet I affirm that not even the preaching of the principles of the gospel is all that is necessary in making our missions to other lands successful.

The missionary work attempted to be done, and now being done, has been undertaken and carried on without reference to the academic or collegiate education of the ministry; and so far as we now comprehend the situation, the further work of the missionary field will be conducted and carried on without reference to the church college at Lamoni, or other-where, if one be built elsewhere.

The college at Lamoni has been contemplated, its erection designed, and will be carried to completion without reference to it as a factor in educating men for the ministry. The object of the college is to provide a suitable institution among the Saints where their youths and maidens may avail themselves of an opportunity to secure such an education as the ordinary seminaries of the period among the Gentiles afford the youth of the country.

There has been as yet no thought indulged by the committee suggestive of the idea of endowing a theological chair, or of making a theological department a part of the curriculum. Nor do we think that the present committee is likely to attempt such a change in the avowed and understood intention of their appointment; neither do we think any future committee will undertake it.

It is quite time that the prejudice against learning, in layman or minister, should be done away. There was a time when God winked at the ignorance of a nation; but that day is past. He not only commands men everywhere to repent; but he also commands the church, especially the ministry, to seek for and obtain information,— words of wisdom: yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith.

If this injunction is to be heeded, then the sooner our young people may be put in the way of acquiring the habit and the method of securing information, the better for us whom those of our children coming after will succeed and represent us and the work.

All other things being equal, the educated man, whether his education is scholastic or self-obtained, is the better representative of his class and his associates, and the more likely to succeed in his work either as principal or agent.

It is true, education is not force, nor ability, nor power in itself; but it is an admirable help, a shining weapon in the hands of a skillful man to be used in force when needed. While this is true, no amount of learning has, will, or can take the place of the Spirit of the Master, whose called and chosen servants the ministry are and must be to accomplish the great work, the redemption of man.

When Napoleon faced the Alps in the depths of winter, he asked of the guides, "Is the route practicable?" The answer being given, "It is barely passable." He turned his horse's head toward the heights and said, "Let us go forward then."

The time is come for the church to go forward. Let captious fault-finding, feeble, querulous misgivings, and personal ambitions and pet philosophies stand aside, and men prepare themselves for the onward march in the service of the soon-coming great King.

THE LOG OF THE EVANELIA, ETC.

THE forthcoming February issue of Autumn Leaves will contain a full, detailed account of the voyage of the Evanelia to the Island of Tahiti, from the pen of Sister Emma Burton, whose "journal" recounts the daily experiences of the journey, giving a faithful "log" account of the momentous passage. Readers of the HERALD have watched from beginning to end the development of the Gospel Boat project, with earnest solicitude; and its crowning triumph in the successful passage of the Evanelia, a full description of which Sr. Burton gives, will be read with deep interest.

The account is lengthy, covering over one third of the magazine's pages. It will prove a treat to all interested in the mission and work of the Evanelia and her crew and voyagers.

Those who have not subscribed for the present volume of the Leaves should do so at once and secure this number; or, better still, begin with the January number, which can still be had, the January issue remaining on hand in sufficient number to accommodate those wishing the complete year's issue.

Single copies of the February number of the Leaves may be had at fifteen cents.

The Evanelia has but entered upon her cruise in gospel work, and the story of her future missionary voyages among the tropical islands of Oceanica remains to be told and will doubtless also appear, in its descriptive details, in the Leaves. It promises to be highly descriptive and interesting. We know but little of many of the islands in the Society group because not hitherto having suitable means of reaching them; but now the transportation problem has been solved, and our missionaries will probably soon extend the field of their operations; and with an increased force at work the church will soon become better acquainted with her missionary possessions in those islands. The Leaves and the HERALD will endeavor to present full reports of all items of general interest concerning future voyages of the gospel boat and the work of the missionaries, together with the growth and development of the native membership.

The building and launching of the Evanelia was a new departure in our missionary enterprises. However, other societies have used mission boats, and some in neighboring islands of the Pacific. The results of the effort will be closely observed. We trust it is not the first departure of the kind to be made, but that other missionary vessels will in time cast the bread of life upon the waters in behalf of dwellers upon other islands of the sea. The Scriptures are rich in prophetic promise to them, and they are to "hear" the gospel proclamation and "see" the "ensign." As time and conditions permit, the church will doubtless find other and abundant opportunity to meet other demands for swift messengers upon the sea as well as by land. Hitherto we have had an army of the Lord and have sung "God is marshaling his army," etc.; but it now seems that a beginning has been made toward launching a navy. Should the movement continue (and who shall say it shall not), we may have seamen as well as soldiers, commodores as captains, etc., etc. We are not merely speculating. To us it looks like a practical question; and, as in the past, our volunteers have shown "grit" and manifested courage in their devotion to the cause; for the long voyage of the Evanelia required it.

Times are hard, it is true, but life is incomplete without its spiritual food for the soul, with the bread that perishes for the body. A sufficient supply of each is evidently an absolute necessity to symmetrical, harmonious growth and development, and

"though our outward man perish" the mental, spiritual growth remains and abides forever. Our plea, then, for support of the church's literary publications is one on behalf of the personal interests of the church membership; for in their columns we have a reflex of the life currents and movement of the general work, and are given a presentation of the dealings of God with his people and with the world, in which we ask the coöperation of all concerned in the behalf of all, hence solicit subscriptions and renewals.

The price of the HERALD alone is $2.00 per year, six months $1.00; of the Leaves $1.50 per year, the HERALD and Leaves together, $3.00 per year if paid in advance.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. C. CLAPP has been preaching and baptizing at San Jose, California, now his home, whence he wrote under date January 14, as follows:—

Our work here, in the city, is onward. Quite a lot of strangers attend our meetings, and I have the best of freedom in presenting the word.

Bro. S. Orton, Tabor, Iowa, January 21:—

On the 16th inst., in company with Bro. George Kemp, the writer went to Egypt to visit the Saints and friends and hold a meeting with them. They were glad to have us come and talk to them, and wished us to return, so we made arrangements to go every two weeks and hold meetings. This is our old home where twenty years ago I was baptized.

Bro. W. A. McDowell, Janesville, Wisconsin, January 16:—

Bro. C. H. Burr and I have been holding meetings in the Grange hall, near this place, to good crowds and good attention, and some are near the kingdom. Will continue over Sunday. I met with the Saints at the Wilder schoolhouse last Saturday and Sunday, and on Monday baptized one; others are near the kingdom.

Bro. J. L. Boyd, Grouse Creek, Utah, January 13:—

I am alone here: have not heard a sermon for two years, and have seen but two Saints in that time. I give the Herald and Ensign to all I can get to read them, and they have made some friends to the cause, showing the difference between us and the Utah Church. I feel my weakness, and have a poor education, and cannot understand the meaning of the word God has written; but when they try to talk to me I always blunder onto something that sets them back. I was asked to show where Bro. Joseph was ordained by his father to be a prophet and seer. I replied that I would if they would show me where Brigham Young was ordained by the seer to take his place.

Bro. R. W. Davis, Angola, Kansas, January 21:—

R. H. Davis and the writer just closed a series of meetings at Caney, Kansas. We succeeded in arousing quite an interest. Some expressed themselves as being almost ready for the water. The work is progressing nicely here.

It will yet return to you."

UPON THE WATERS.

THERE went forth in the HERALD of January 16, a brief paragraph, announcing the safe arrival of the Evanelia at her port of destination. But brief as that paragraph was it was hailed with gladness by thousands of anxiously waiting hearts. A few days later there came to us from Sr. Emma Burton her journal of the voyage, and after mature deliberation we have concluded to publish it in the February issue of Autumn Leaves as its length exceeds the space of the Home Column, and when its perusal is begun no one will wish to lay it down until the end is reached. It is replete with interest from first to last, and will enable the Saints to understand as perhaps nothing else would, that the sacrifices of the gospel are not an empty name, but a stern reality; and, if in connection with this, you and I learn that they are required at our own hands as well as at the hands of our brethren and sisters, then would it not be wise in us to question, "What must I do?"

Sr. Burton incidentally remarks in her journal that in some respects the voyage was a new experience to Bro. Burton, for upon other voyages as Captain, he never stood watch, and was not upon deck at night at all, except in case of a storm or other emergency. We thought as we read that in those other days, those other voyages, our brother was a stranger to the pure gospel of him who said, "I am among you as he who serveth."

There is in it a lesson for me and a lesson for you. Humility, yes, even the preferring one another in love, is the grand keynote of the gospel of Christ. Bro. Burton's service upon deck was demanded because of scarcity of hands, and no thought entered his heart but to take his share of labor.

In the days of Christ there existed this same scarcity of laborers, and it exists in the church to-day. Can we afford to sit idle while others are toiling and bearing the heat and burden of the day?

The Gospel Boat, thank God, is an accomplished fact, and the sisters ought to be glad that the Lord designated the Home Column as the medium through which it was to be brought into existence. Why, is not ours to inquire, but it is ours to accept the fact and to be glad that when he called upon us for service we were ready to respond by doing what we could. Other demands are pressing upon every hand and we must work while it is called to-day, if we expect to receive a reward. Let us not be weary in well-doing, but renew and double our diligence. For some reason the Home Column Missionary Fund has lately fallen below the average to which it once attained. We know that times are hard and the financial pressure is heavy upon many of the Saints and they too, many of them, the most willing ones. This should be an incentive for those who possibly can do so to add to instead of diminishing from what they have been accustomed to give. Into this fund since its first inception has been paid the sum of $4,933.67, which has gone into the Bishop's hands for the purpose of sustaining our missionaries whether at home or abroad. And this is exclusive of the amount furnished towards building and equipping the Evanelia, and also of the sum of $4,319.21, which has been received through the Hope as Christmas Offerings. And while we thank God that so much as this has been gathered up, as it were, of the fragments, let us not be content with that which has been done, but let it incite each one to put forth a stronger effort in the future.

The Bishop had to advance quite a large sum at the last for the completion of the boat. Let us not be satisfied until it has been replaced in full. There is still on hands in the Herald Office about 375 volumes of Afterglow. This collection of selected poems should be in the home of every Saint who can afford to purchase a copy, as apart from its intrinsic worth all the accruing profits go to the Evanelia fund.

This has seemed to us an opportune time for referring briefly to some features of the Home Column work. Let us not be weary in doing that which our hands find to do, for the uncertainties of life surround us and we need to labor while the day lasts.

ALAMEDA, California.

Dear Sisters:—We, the Prayer Union of the Alameda branch, have been recalling the many answers to prayer that have come from our heavenly Father, and feel we would be very ungrateful to God if we did not send a few lines to try to encourage others as their letters have strengthened us. We have only recorded a few answers to prayer that have been under our own eyes, but they amount to many. How good God is! He has healed our sick, sent the Comforter to those who have asked our prayers, taken away the desire of tea, coffee, and tobacco from those whom it was injuring, and in many ways manifested his loving kindness. Jesus tells us to testify of him, and at the close of this another year we feel we must testify, and O how grateful we feel! Would it not be encouraging to the Prayer Union if those who ask their faith and prayers and receive a blessing from God, would let it be known to them? We have many times felt the witness that God has heard and answered us before we have raised from prayer.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

SR. EUNICE SEE, of Mayfair, Illinois, writes us that she rejoices to know such good advice is given to those raising families of children. She united with the church in 1844, the spring before the prophet was killed. She had a witness of the truth then and has never regretted what she did, nor given up, though she has seen many a dark day and in thirty years has not heard more than fifteen sermons. She raised a family of fifteen children. Seven are dead. Four sons were in the late war, and five years ago she buried her husband, and is now a cripple from a fall which broke her hip. Bro. Pitt has been to see her several times and has preached once in the place. She is often lonely and would like to correspond with some of the sisters. Here is a good work for those who have time to cheer this aged handmaiden of God. Address, Eunice See, Mayfair, Cook county, Illinois.

SR. C. C. UASTE, of Fairchild, Wisconsin, earnestly desires your faith and prayers that she may be restored to health, also that God will be pleased to bring her husband and father to a saving knowledge of the gospel of Christ.

Sr. Cora Miller, of Charles City, Iowa, requests your faith and prayers in her behalf.

Bro. Hobson, of South Norwalk, Connecticut, earnestly desires your faith and prayers in behalf of his wife, also his father and mother, that they may be brought to a knowledge of the truth and led to obey the gospel. (The above request was mislaid or it would have appeared sooner.)

Sr. Smith, of San Lucas, California, earnestly desires your faith and prayers in behalf of her sister, Sr. Ella Holmes, who is sorely afflicted, but earnestly desires, if it be God's will, to live to raise her little family.

E. W. Anway, Dickens, Nebraska, asks your faith and prayers in behalf of his wife, feeling that help can come only from God.

Sr. Flora Abbott, of Warsaw, Nebraska, asks your faith and prayers in behalf of her mother, Mary E. Nosker, of Shelburn, Oregon, that if it is God's will she may be healed.

A brother who does not give name or address, but who is afflicted, earnestly requests your prayers in his behalf.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 14.

Editors Herald:—I have not lost interest in this grand gospel work nor failed to appreciate the communications that appear weekly as information, instruction, or counsel. My life is a busy one, and much that I would like to do, lack of time and opportunity are the only preventing causes. There are those in this district who would perhaps write once in awhile, but lack of confidence in their ability to write anything worth putting in print is their excuse, forgetting evidently that in this department as well as all others pertaining to this work, practice means improvement.

Bro. Hilliard has been in the district a few weeks, but left for Brooklyn, New York, on the 10th. He has done the Saints much good by his timely words of counsel and admonition. He is an able exponent of this grand work, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." "The law of tithing" becomes an inseparable part of the everlasting gospel to those "who have ears to hear," after he has handled that subject; and if the Saints will heed and respond to what he, through the aid of the Spirit has so plainly and forcibly taught us upon this important subject that response will find an echo at No. 2710 Washington street, Boston, in the shape of some receipts, forwarded to the address of those whose ears have heard, for tithes and offerings received. "So mote it be." "For the love of money is the root of all evil," wrote the apostle. Then may those Saints who have not only loved, but have wedded themselves to it, cease to love it for the luxury and worldly enjoyment it brings them through selfishness, and divorce themselves from at least one tenth part of it; and cease to rob God by longer withholding from him that which is his.

The work in this city has an upward tendency morally, intellectually, and in many instances spiritually. In our darkest experiences here our Father promised to take care of his work and raise up from this branch useful instruments for the carrying on and spreading of the gospel. Long and earnestly we have prayed for its fulfillment, and now we see how wonderfully our kind Father raised up from among the young of this branch "vessels of honor," and has sent us help from afar. First, came Bro. Edmund H. Fisher, followed by his brother, Myron, whose work and presence among us is appreciated. In August last Bro. Gunsolley came to help us, and he just rolled up his sleeves and has worked like a gunner ever since, firing away whenever occasion and duty called. His good-natured face and manner have won for him the esteem and love of us all. There is a wide field for him in this district. "May his shadow never grow less."

Brn. Arthur L. Crocker and Arthur Phillips are noble young men, and growing in wisdom and knowledge rapidly, prominent workers in our Sunday school and Religio-Literary Society. Our young ladies are not a whit behind in activity, purity of life, and as witnesses for the truth; among whom are Sarah Mortimer, Susan Blanchard, Ruth Sheehy, Josie Gerrish, Maud Lawrence, Ella Rich, Clara McFee, etc. May they be made strong for good and noble deeds. The work never shone so fair to me as now. I have been blessed far beyond expression in presenting and preaching the gospel. The Herald gets better every week. May its circulation double this year.

Hastily your brother in Christ,

RICHARD BULLARD.

ONO, Wis., Jan. 17.

Editors Herald:—I am now at Ono, Pierce county, Wisconsin, holding a series of meetings in a hall that has been prepared especially for us: Liberty Hall, so named on account of the M. E. brethren having control of all the halls and schoolhouses in the community and closing us out of every place; hence a 1776 spirit arose among the liberty-loving people and they made a strike for liberty, and Liberty Hall came into existence like magic. It is filled every night with people anxious for the words of life that proclaim freedom to the captive and strike off the bands of superstition, priestcraft, and sectarianism.

We are holding the fort alone. Bro. Pender, I am sorry to say, is still unfit for duty. Is now at Porcupine, and will probably soon go home to Kansas for a rest, which he stands much in need of. The work in Pepin county is in good condition. Saints at Porcupine have just obtained a deed for their new church, in a splendid location. All the lumber is paid for; size of the church 24x40, sixteen feet studding; gallery across one end and one half way up the sides; seating capacity three hundred and fifty. Many people are near the kingdom here and by spring I hope for a large ingathering. We refused to debate the Sabbath question with a man that claimed to be a preacher of the Church of God, headquarters at Stanberry, Missouri, because he held no license or credentials from that organization as a legal representative. I have since learned that he is completely out of harmony with them and, I guess, everything else but his own personal opinions, and changes them every time the wind changes. It is all we can do to attend to responsible parties, let alone irresponsible persons. The weather is splendid for missionary work, and I hope we are all improving our time. May Zion's standard ever wave and victory be for the boys that carry it.

H. P. CURTIS.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Jan. 13.

Editors Herald:—Resting awhile at home, away from the work and toil of the field, enjoying home and the comforts it brings, and as on the morrow we shall be packing our grip for the field again, going to Sullivan county, Missouri, by order of Joseph Luff, to look after some interests there as represented by Bro. Petree,—in moving out for the new year, it causes us to take a retrospect of the one just fading away in the dismal past. The year 1894 has gone. Whatever its losses, its gains, its failures, or its successes, they are now matters of record; and any opportunities lost or not fully occupied during the receding year are now irredeemably lost, never to be recalled; hence lost forever. Yet barren indeed must be the soul that cannot recall some good achieved during the past year, and in looking back to such achievements and recalling the impressions upon our soul in consequence of the Spirit's presence, they form green spots in our memory which we love to contemplate, and give us cause for happy reflection and some reasons for congratulations; and in our heart we firmly resolve to have written on the page of the virgin year just dawning more patience, more evidence of diligence and care, bringing a greater hope of more abundant grace, well used to the overcoming of self, subduing every passion or appetite, bearing more fruit for the Master's use; telling of more mercy, hearts made happy by our administrations, more forgiving, with more charity for the weaknesses of others, with a disposition to offer and extend that mercy to others, as we ourselves expect and have received at the hands of our heavenly Father; and thus proclaiming the Christ in our walk and work among men, as well as in the testimony we may bear from our lips.

Divine indeed must be him or her when conscience works with memory and brings us face to face with the past record made, which is now in the hands of the great Judge, which we must meet sooner or later, that has no cause for regrets; for the failures and follies, for the commissions and omissions, for the falling downs and the consequent struggles in rising agala. O God, forgive us and give grace during the coming days and increasing strength of the infant year, to finally overcome, that we may endure and receive the crown!

I can truthfully say in glancing back over the field that advancements have been made all along the line; and although not so many baptisms, yet the seed has been sown over a greater area than ever before. The laborers given me by the General Conference have worked nobly and done all they could consistently. Bro. Terry, of St. Joseph, has worked incessantly to make his field blossom like the rose; and taking all things into consideration and the difficulties of his charge, he has done very well, indeed. He has gained the love and admiration of all. Brn. Summerfield, Faul, and Dice have stood by their posts and each done well, and have always been ready and willing to supplement my efforts in spreading the work throughout the district. These brethren have the work at heart and are willing to sacrifice for its onward march, all of which loudly speaks of the lingering love each bears for the gospel; and as we say good-bye to 1894 we all fully realize that no regrets nor joys can ever change its showing, but with open arms and hearts we bid the new year welcome. Whatever its unfoldings may be we cannot now discern, but with a hope and an ardent desire that as it unfolds we may be ready to occupy and place upon its pages a record that we may not be ashamed to meet in the sweet by and by, on the morrow we shall again turn our face to the foe, praying God to bless in the struggle and battle all the servants of God; and with a happy new year to all, we are,

Yours in bonds,

TECUMSEH, Okla., Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—Will you allow me space in your columns to express an opinion and make a confession of haste? Man may be well informed in regard to the road, but when he attempts to leave others or gets beyond the rays of the lighthouse, he is apt to get lost in the fog. Referring to Herald of April 18, 1894, you will find a letter written by your humble servant, which mentions "repentance," "tobacco," etc., and as that letter excited some criticism, those who read it concluding that I would refuse to baptize anyone who used tobacco, I would like to say a word in my own defense.

First, allow me to confess to you and to the readers of the Herald, that while laboring at Seligman, Missouri, I came in contact with the "tobacco habit," or those addicted to that habit, in a most peculiar manner. While holding meetings at the New Salem schoolhouse I had in the congregation both men and women who used tobacco. Some were quite favorable, and it was my impression that they would request baptism. Whether it was my individual opinion, or from the disgust that I have for the tobacco habit, I do not say, but this I confess, that I told them in plain and positive terms that I would not baptize anyone unless they repented of that evil habit.

Now I confess that I was unwise in taking a stand that the church had not yet taken. While laboring under that state of mind I wrote to the Herald, and stated these words: "Not saying I will not [baptize anyone who uses tobacco unless they repent of it], but earnestly hope I may not."

I say that now. For it will be my effort to get every one to confess who uses tobacco before I baptize them, that it is wrong and that they repent of it. But as the church has taken no move regarding the repenting of the tobacco evil before baptism, then let it be understood by all that your humble servant will endeavor to work in harmony with the body.

Now I venture my humble opinion, whether it be right or wrong I do not say—in fact I do not know. But as the church is now making more rapid strides toward the goal of perfection and we can see the stir among its members moving out in response to the voice of God to “come up higher,” why should it be extravagant to believe the time is near, if not now, when the elders of Israel will draw the lines of repentance so that when others come forward to join themselves with the church of the Firstborn that this evil of tobacco will be left on the outside with all other evils unbecoming in the children of God?

We are looking forward to the day when the church will be gathered in Zion. I have wondered after reading the words: “None but the pure in heart shall dwell there,” if the filthy habit of tobacco will then be made a “test of fellowship.” I have answered yes. That is my opinion.

While I remain in this mundane sphere I hope to serve the church as God desires I shall, and that long will I try to hold myself in harmony with its rules, for I have confidence that the rules will be right. We are told that the church is the “bride of Christ.” Well, judging from nature and what we see in this world, and learning from our Master, to use parables and comparisons, we look to the future for the marriage of the Lamb to come. And according to Revelation 19, the bride is to be robed in “fine linen clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of Saints.” Righteousness is right doing; tobacco using is not right doing. Now at that day the bride of Christ—the church—will have divested itself of all unrighteousness and uncleanness according to Revelation 19:8. Tobacco, with other evils, will have to get where they more properly belong—out of the church. At present the church or bride of Christ is not full grown; she is more like the giddy schoolgirl. She is chosen, however, as the affianced bride of Christ. Those who become component parts of that bride or body now will be supposed to adapt themselves to her conditions. Later on, when she shall be developed into womanhood, the same requirements will be made. A more strict observance of the laws of adoption will be required. She is now weaving the cloth to make her bridal robe. After the robe is made she will be more dignified than now. Then as we see her finish the robe and it is complete, she begins to robe herself, knowing that the day is drawing near when she shall meet the bridegroom, and as she stands dressed in her bridal robe, in the stately and dignified attitude of the bride of the Son of God, it is my opinion, brethren, that they who join her then will be required to be free from the contaminating evil of tobacco.

But of those who use it now I make this request, and I make this promise: That I will show you the same degree of consideration that is shown to those who say sprinkling is the true mode of baptism, and ask you to grant me the liberty of teaching the law of God touching the subject of tobacco. However, I hope to use kindness and wisdom; but I cannot use a compromise. In my “opinion” tobacco is not only an evil but is a disgusting sin, and should be repented of. It may be wisdom to say it is only an evil, but we are informed that “sin is the transgression of law,” and what I have read from different works of science on the tobacco question it is agreed by all that the use of tobacco is a “violation” of physical “law,” and no one will deny that it is in violation of the divine law. If it had not been, God would not (my opinion) have told his people to “abstain from” it. Therefore, brethren, abstain from it and prove the Lord. Take him at his word—be obedient to the voice of God as it whispers in pleading tones to “come up higher.”

Let us look forward to the day when the church will be the waiting bride of Christ, standing with head erect, dressed in glory and splendor, listening with bated breath for the sounds of the approaching footsteps of the bridegroom.

May God help us to make a complete surrender and present ourselves a “living sacrifice” unto God. I hope to meet you all in conference assembly.

In gospel bonds,
R. M. MALONEY.

BLAIRSTOWN, Mo., Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—Some two weeks ago Brn. Frank Sawley and J. H. Thomas opened up at the Dunham schoolhouse about ten miles east of here and held a few meetings with small attendance, but found a good, warm-hearted people there. They went from there to the Oak Grove schoolhouse, which is located in a good settlement and about fifteen miles right south of Warrensburg, commenced meeting. The interest continued to increase and they sent me word to come and help them, which I did, preaching Saturday night, Sunday morning and night, January 19 and 20. On Saturday evening one lady, Mrs. Wade, rose for baptism, and on Sunday morning Mrs. Lingo rose for baptism. They are two fine people and each a mother of a family. We felt well in their confirmation and think they will make noble Saints.

Sister M. Rockhold, of Cornelia, Missouri, heard of the meetings and in company with her daughter, Mrs. Bell Weitzel, of Rock Island, Illinois, attended Sunday morning services, also remained to the baptism. Her daughter informed me she wanted to be baptized, but had no change of clothing with her. She is here on a visit. Will some of the brethren who live in Eastern Iowa see that she has an opportunity to be baptized. Her address is Mrs. Belle Weitzel, No. 1618 Second avenue, Rock Island, Illinois.

The work is moving on through this section and the “good news” is coming. Bro. Philemon Pement is doing some faithful work for the Master. May the Lord send more laborers into the field.

Yours in Christ,
D. C. WHITE.

STRAITSVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 21.

Editors Herald:—Last night I closed a series of meetings which I began Saturday night, January 12, in a Methodist church near here. The weather was very unfavorable at the beginning and continued bad all the while. I began with a small congregation, but it gradually increased as did the interest until the close. I baptized one, and others told me they expected to obey in the near future. The sons and daughters of Bro. Barstow, of Coal Gate, exhibited commendable zeal during the meeting, walking three miles through mud and snow and the speaker was cheered and blessed by their presence and assistance in singing. I expect to return to this locality sometime in February. Brn. H. R. Harder and H. E. Moler did some preaching near here something over a year ago. I learn they had a good hearing.

This is in the coal mining district and work is very dull, consequently times are very hard, and with many it is just simply a struggle for bread. Thousands are reported as in want. While some strive to obtain and are careful with the little obtained, others are very unwise and make their condition worse than it might be. My prayer is that the Saints may be wise and strive to glorify our Father in heaven. I am still in the conflict for the right, and hope to abide.

JAMES MOLER.

SANTA CRUZ, Cal., Jan. 2.

Editors Herald:—I was born and bred a Roman Catholic, and partially schooled for holy orders, or, in other words, the Catholic priesthood; and while under such a course of preparation I discovered that the holy fathers, so-called, had no authority to confer that priesthood that was conferred upon our Master by his Father before the world was. I found that that priesthood was taken from the earth centuries ago, and that the Catholic Church had no more the power and authority of the holy priesthood than did the heathen nations. And as far as the different sects of Protestantism were concerned, knowing their origin, they had no rights that I felt bound to respect. So under those conditions I rejected the counsel of my kindred, also the teachings of the holy fathers, so-called, as I could not find that priesthood which was after the order of the Son of God. I did not accept the priesthood after the order of the Catholic Church, consequently was willing to let all creeds and sects go their way, but I claimed the right to go my way.

And so it was until last April, when I had the pleasure of meeting Elder A. Haws, here in Santa Cruz, claiming to be of the Church of Jesus Christ. I thought the name was good and I received some tracts from him, also a small book called the Voice of Warning. I read them and asked myself the question, Can it be possible that that angel has come and restored that which was lost to the children of men (Rev. 14:6)? Soon after this Elder J. H. Lawn came and I went and heard him preach a gospel sermon at a private house, and suffice to say he was the porter that led me and my wife into the kingdom of our God and his Christ. “And now for a reason for the hope that is in me. Since I have been "born again," "This is life eternal to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou has sent."

Since the decline of the science of theology a mystery dark and deep has shrouded the human mind in regard to the person and nature of the eternal Father and his Son Jesus Christ. Councils of the wise men of Christendom have assembled again and again in order to solve the mystery of godliness and fix some standard or creed upon which all parties might rest and be agreed. This, however, was not in their power. It is impossible for the world by its wisdom to find out God. "Neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." The key of theology, to my understanding, is the key of divine revelation. Without this key no man, no assemblage of men, ever did or ever will know the eternal Father or Jesus Christ. When this was lost, the knowledge of God was lost; and as life eternal depended on the knowledge of God, of course the key of eternal life was also lost, and man has been left in the dark to follow the desires of the lusts of the flesh; and the different, conflicting crafts and creeds of men which have grown and multiplied among sectarians since the loss of the above-mentioned knowledge have almost grown beyond number. Among these theories I will mention one which is perhaps more extensively received by the different sects than any other, and one that I was taught to believe in my early life, as follows: "There is only one living and true God, without body, parts, or passions, consisting of three divine persons, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

This was the cause of my first investigation, for this was a hard pill to swallow—to place the Son and Holy Ghost into the body of the Father, and he a being without a body. Such a God could never be seen nor felt by any being in the universe. The old god of Egypt, the crocodile, could be seen, felt, and could do damage. The idols of different nations could be seen and felt; the Peruvian god, the sun, could diffuse warmth and light; but not so with the god without body, parts, or passions.

It is written that "without faith it is impossible to please God." Now, how could you have faith in such a god as the above-mentioned one? If it is impossible to please God without faith, we must have some correct knowledge of the deity. Jesus Christ, a little babe like all the rest of us have been, grew to be a man, and was filled with a divine substance or fluid called the Holy Spirit, by which he comprehended and spoke the truth in power and authority, and by which he controlled the elements and imparted health and life to those who were prepared to partake of the same. This man, being put to death by wicked men, arose from the dead the third day, and appeared to his disciples and ate with them, and they could see, feel, and handle him, and see the prints of the nails in his hands and the print of the spear in his side. And after he was with them for forty days, walking, talking, eating, and drinking with and instructing them how to carry on his work until he would come again, he then ascended up, in their presence, towards that planet where dwelt his Father and their Father, his God and their God, and while he was yet in sight in the open firmament and they stood gazing upward, behold two men stood by them in white raiment and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven. This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Here, then, we have a sample of an immortal God; a God who is often declared in the Scriptures to be the express image and likeness of his Father, "being the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person." He differs in nothing from his Father except in age and authority, the Father having the seniority, and consequently the right according to the patriarchal laws of eternal priesthood, to preside over him and over all his dominions forever and ever.

If this should come under the notice of any Roman Catholic I further cite you to the advice of the Apostle Peter in Acts 2:38. It means you, but be sure he has authority from on high to perform the ordinance.

WALTER SCOTT.

RICHMOND, Mo., Jan. 21.

Editors Herald:—I last wrote from Kansas. Since then I have returned home on account of my health failing me, and I did not deem it wise to return to my field, Northwestern Kansas; so I wrote to Bro. Luff that I would like to labor as my health permitted, in Far West district. I took a trip to the Missouri River branch two weeks ago, in Northeastern Missouri district. I preached four times there in private houses, held one prayer meeting and had to quit further service on account of poor health. But I am feeling better now, and Bro. John Rounds and I are holding meetings at Wakenda branch. Some are almost persuaded to obey. I think some will be baptized. I will do what I can as my health permits.

R. L. WARE.

BYRNEVILLE, Ind., Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—Just closed a series of meetings at the Baker schoolhouse. I baptized two more precious souls—eleven at that point—and others are near the kingdom. The interest seems to be increasing. One night the thermometer registered fourteen below zero, but this did not stop the people from coming to hear the gospel. One lady and her girl came a distance of two miles during the coldest of weather; others were equally interested.

The Lord has crowned my efforts this year with success, notwithstanding when I started out last spring everything seemed discouraging, as my work would be altogether in new places, with them to hunt up, this being a very hard field. But the Lord has raised up many friends to the cause, and the outlook is flattering for many being added to the church if work is continued here as during the past year. The school-teachers in many places object to us using their houses during school, while the patrons are willing.

praying for the elders to go forward in the discharge of duty in order that the work move on and souls be won to Christ, and I am glad we have their prayers; but if we pray for a thing let us put with that prayer our works, then we can look for something to be accomplished. I learn when I pray for the work to be built up that prayer does not have the desired effect until I make my strongest effort to bring the thing to pass. Let us then labor together in love and union that the kingdom of heaven may be built up.

As we are now entering upon a new year let each of us strive to live better than in the past year, and when questions arise that have a tendency to destroy that peace and happiness God designed, let us not use the spirit of contention to settle them, but the spirit of counsel. As one of old has said: "Where no counsel is, the people fall; but in the multitude of counselors there is safety." There is no place nor time in the kingdom of heaven for contention; everything should be done in the spirit of meekness and holiness.

The Apostle James would have us to understand (James 3:2) that "if any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man and able also to bridle the whole body." Let us keep in subjection the tongue, not going about and telling the faults of this brother or that sister; for when we do these things we are not doing what James says: "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge."

If a brother has offended me, my duty is to go and tell him, not to go and tell it to some one else; for that some one will tell it to some one else, and it will thus go on until the world gets hold of it, then it comes back to the Saints from the world that we are no better than the world, where if we go to the offending party the breach will be healed and we not lose the saving power the Lord gave us. Let us live in union and love, that we may be the saviors of men, ever looking unto Jesus Christ the author and finisher of our faith.

May the Lord of glory bless all.

EAST PHARSALIA, N. Y.,
Jan. 21.

Editors Herald:—I saw in the Herald of January 16, on page 36, in a letter written by Bro. W. H. Kelley, that Bro. H. H. Robinson had done up an M. E. preacher up about East Pharsalia and had returned home to recuperate and enjoy the boon of victory while watching for another liar to come out of his lair. Now we don't understand this. I have never seen anyone called a liar by our people since I have had anything to do with the church before. Mr. Jones is a gentleman. He treated us all in respect, and I never saw two men so friendly as Bro. Robinson and Mr. Jones were. Bro. Robinson said he never was treated better in his life by his own people.

As to the victory, there is a difference of opinions. Bro. Robinson did well for our church. The Saints here are not Methodists nor ever were, nor ever will be; but we are friends of Mr. Jones, and he has many friends here, and if anyone calls him a liar they are doing us a wrong as well as him. I do not know who was to blame for putting it in the paper, but certainly it was not using Mr. Jones right, and we do not uphold it in any one.

Yours truly,

GEORGE L. RATHBUN.

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—I will give you a brief synopsis of what has come under my observation since our October conference, which was interesting, spiritual, and profitable. The first portion of my field I visited was Niagara Falls. I found the few Saints there in unity and having good branch meetings. Bro. Place, who was called and ordained a priest at St. Thomas conference, had just preached his first sermon of forty minutes duration, and a merchant present said he would give considerable to have it in print. There was some outside interest, but not sufficient to justify a prolonged stay. Some were instantly healed under administration. The Spirit spoke blessing and encouragement, and we left for other fields leaving the Saints breathing as the sentiment of their hearts, "Nearer my God to thee."

At Chippewa I was permitted to occupy the Lutheran church only once. The two trustees were willing, but a member of the Church of England, who had formerly been a Lutheran and a trustee of the building, obtained the key under false pretense and locked us out.

At Fort Erie I had the use of the Methodist church for a week on my return from General Conference, and afterwards baptized two of their members, so I could not have it at this time. But the colored people gave me the use of their church, and several prominent Methodists as well as many others attended, so I left a full church and good interest in hope that some other elder or myself can soon return there. I called here for a few days on my way home for Christmas. My wife, family, and I formed part of a family reunion at my old home, near Shelbourne, Ontario, on New Year's day.

I returned here January 3, and on the evening of the 4th the Sunday school here had a tree laden with presents and a nice entertainment for the children; and all present, so far as heard from, pronounced it good. On that night Mr. J. H. Johnston, husband of Sr. M. J. Johnston, of St. Joseph, Missouri, came to the home of his son-in-law, Bro. S. D. Wilson, No. 9 St. Patrick Square, and not finding anyone home he went to a hotel and told the host to call him at six o'clock in the morning, as he wished to see his daughter before going on to Enterprise, Ontario. When called there was no answer, and as the smell of gas was escaping from his room, the door was forced open. He was still alive, but unconscious. A doctor was called who did all in his power to restore him. Bro. and Sr. Wilson were notified and they with other Saints were constantly at his bedside. On the afternoon of the 6th he was removed to Bro. Wilson's. On the 7th he first regained consciousness sufficient to say "lemonade" when asked what he would have to drink, but slept again before it could be got. He was conscious occasionally, just for a moment at a time, and would take some beef tea and medicine, till the morning of the 10th. The doctor who had declared him to be "improving nicely" called in another. As a result of their consultation they said his wife and family had better be summoned. He passed away at 4:30 that afternoon. Sister Johnston arrived on Saturday morning. His sister from Enterprise arrived Friday morning. On Saturday the 12th inst. the remains were taken to Enterprise where his parents are buried, where his remains will be kept in a vault till spring.

Why I have said so much on this case is because of the sequel to follow: About eight years ago Sister Johnston, her son-in-law and daughter, Bro. and Sr. Brooks, now of St. Joseph, also one or two of her other children were baptized into the church. The husband who had never permitted himself to investigate in any measure the doctrine of the church, began to complain to his neighbors, and through their influence became so much prejudiced against the work and his family as to order them to leave home, which they did, and though his family have written to him and sent him tracts, the first token of reconciliation toward them was manifest in seeking to find his daughter on the night of his misfortune. Once he said he knew her and wanted her to talk to him, but at once slept off again. We understand he was on his way to his sister's at Enterprise when arrested by the angel of death. We did not feel any liberty to administer to him, but the Saints all prayed for him, and Elder Hattey and I prayed in his room the morning before his death.

Some are interested here but may not obey at present. I expect to leave the beginning of next week.

In bonds,

Horace Bushnell expressed a great thought when he spoke of the expulsive power of the new affection. Morbid, idle life is always a dangerous life. It is not enough to say, "Thou shalt not;" the human constitution requires employment for its every function of it would rise to its most healthful development. Viciousness and studiousness are incompatible. They do not exist in the same student's room. The young man who keeps his appointments, who performs regularly and faithfully the duties which devolve upon him as a student has no time for the importunities of evil.

A bust of Herod the Great, believed to be authentic, was recently discovered at Jerusalem. It has been bought by the Russian Government for the Hermitage Museum at St. Petersburg.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

I WOULD be glad if I felt free to tell the church all I believe and know to be the truth in regard to sending the light of the gospel to the people of other nations and to foreign lands. I read and consider the testimony of many competent writers, including the cardinals of Rome and the best posted divines of the different branches of the Protestant Church, including, especially, Talmage and Seist of our own country, who publish the tidings broadcast to mankind that the period of toil and sin and wickedness and of error and darkness and blindness is past; that it is gone, and that now after six thousand years, of which he has most sorrow who knows its history best, we step forth at last into a thousand years throughout which Christ and his jewels shall be the light of the earth, and the throne and kingdom promised to be restored to Israel shall bring to it its peace, its safety, and its righteous government.

Some of the Latter Day Saints, taking the rise of the church in 1830 as the end of the period of one thousand two hundred and sixty years of church apostasy, and again as 1860 marking the close of the one thousand two hundred and ninety years of Israel's scattering and the removal of the world-wide political disabilities which had for so many years attached to the known descendants of Abraham,—we, I say, look forward to a third period ending only a dozen years hence, seventy-five years after the first and forty-five years after the second, a period spoken of by the prophets as,—

Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days.

The Prophet Daniel, who spoke of these periods, was promised by a messenger who stood in the center of the swift current of the Tigris River that he should stand in his lot at the end of these days. Whether these figures and conclusions are logical or not, one fact is evident, that the Bible itself teaches us that the end of all the present order of things is at hand, and the chronology of the Bible, a dial proved tardy by science by a hundred years, also teaches that a millennium is at hand during which the elect of God shall receive as a free gift a home and an inheritance which millions of the best purchase money would fail to buy. The church therefore is called upon to consider the brief period allowed for it to finish all the work it is called into existence to perform, and nothing is of perhaps greater importance now to consider than its carrying forth the gospel to other lands and to other people.

I believe it is a fact that the Reorganized Church has its first successful and satisfactory foreign mission to inaugurate. For years in England the balance in loss and gain has first been in favor and then against an increase of membership. In Australia the showing annually is generally a little better, but progress is slow. Many of those sent to these important fields have labored wisely and well, no doubt, and have been to some degree successful in their labors. Others have abandoned their work, discouraged and unsuccessful, and some perhaps under censure and disgrace; while still others have been appointed to those missions and have been overtaken with sickness and death before they reached their appointed field of duty. Under these circumstances if the humblest and most obscure member of the church should have any light or wisdom or knowledge of any practical plan or line of action, why not advance it at this time?

In the present times in which we live I apprehend that the Gentile nations and races of mankind have reached the summit of their achievement, and that the desirable portions of the earth are taken up and filled with the advance of the earth's civilizations. Wherever there are countries not yet made use of wholly for colonization and settlement the uncertain government of those countries makes life and property unsafe and debars them from occupation by civilized man. This condition of affairs which so affects society and mankind generally with uneasiness and unrest, is due to the fact that the "fullness of the Gentiles is come in." Now, if this be the case, it also marks another still more important event and condition which would ensue when the fullness of the Gentiles came in; and that is, that the blindness which has happened to the house of Israel should be dispelled. The reader is well acquainted with the single paragraph of scripture which declares these great events and covenants are not only to dispel this blindness which has blinded Israel, but also to take away their sins.

Now I believe that history and the Scriptures are calculated to dispel this blindness that is spoken of, if the church will let them. No need of waiting until a church college is built, endowed, and established at Lamoni or elsewhere in order to let the light of the great truth through the scales of Israel's eyes. I sometimes wonder just how much that college will do away with the necessity for the light and knowledge that come by the Spirit of God through the gospel, and yet I affirm that not even the preaching of the principles of the gospel is all that is necessary in making our missions to other lands successful.

Now permit me in this brief article to refer to that which I believe to be a part or all of Israel's blindness. The country lying from Lake Flevo [Lake Flevus, the modern Zuyder Zee? —Ed.] to the Baltic Sea presents a very long coast line. There are more coasts of the earth represented in that part of North Germany than perhaps any other portion of the earth. I refer to this country from the fact that if we are of the English or Anglo-Saxon race, as the most of us are, this country is our ancestral home. Not only us, but also the two Scandinavian nations and the Danish race also sprang from the same identical stock in that country that we did. They are of us; the English, the Norwegian, Swede, and Dane are all of one race and once inhabited the same country. Their forefathers are our forefathers; their history for centuries was our history, their language was our language; their fatherland was our fatherland. I make this statement on the authority of many writers, the work of Edward A. Freeman on this subject lying before me at this time.

I will now go further and make another statement of what I feel I know to be a fact; viz., that these very races and nations are the same referred to who should be involved in blindness, God covenanting that that blindness with their sins should be removed when it becomes proper and necessary. I am prepared to furnish scriptural and historical proof of this statement, a line of proof never yet advanced by any writer on this subject, which I am certain is positive and irrefutable, and which will have to be accepted by the most blinded and most skeptical of all this peculiar and favored race. After a long exile from their primitive seat the forefathers of us all took possession, first of those northern courts of the earth, and then of the islands of the sea, and gave to them the foremost power and intelligence and dominion of all the nations of the earth. Now, allowing this to be a historical fact susceptible of clear and positive proof as before stated, it begins to dispel the blindness which has long attached to the identity of that people. That blindness in this respect may be appreciated when we consider that these very nations have suffered most from the loss of expensive expeditions fitted out to penetrate the frozen and dark regions of the far north in search of the north pole and themselves.

I wish to make a further statement. When the ancient Assyrians completed the captivity of the ten choicest tribes of Abraham's descendants and deported them with military power through Damascus into a region of their great empire they had allotted to them, they alluded to them as the "Beth Khumry," the Assyrian language for "house of Israel." The Beth Khumry was with them for a period of time before they commenced their long and devious wanderings and their great achievements. But this name by which they may be traced for a short time, was changed again and again and again. They finally, however, arrived in the low countries of North Germany as "Saca Semi" and gave to those northern courts their own name; viz., Saxony.

Now I wish it understood that when the history and great achievements of our forefathers is written from the time they entered Assyria as a captive nation under the name of Beth Khumry until they arrived in North Germany as the Saca Semi, when that history is written I say, it will, I believe, dispel the balance of the "blindness that has happened unto Israel" save only gospel blindness. The latter it is of course the work of our missionaries to these nations to dispel. I will go further and state that when that history is written it will dispel your blindness, ye missionaries who aspire to carry tidings to the nations of the earth. In this connection I will also state that while the achievements of the only well-known branch of the house of Israel in the earth have been silent, intellectual and unobserved, that the history of this larger and more important though not so well-known branch of the covenant and chosen people has been filled with the greatest and the grandest of the earth's achievements. The sword of Israel has been the sword of the whole earth, of every land, of every time. In its principal commotions and revolutions, in its great sieges and invasions, and in the birth and death of nations, O how this branch of the Israel of God has played the most important part! I mention these achievements simply to say that the predictions of the prophets concerning the conquests of the chosen people and the destruction of their enemies, even the universal destruction and conquest of all their enemies, has been verified and that when we understand these events fully, instead of our present blindness we shall know as we ought to know God and his elect people better. To be plainer, let me say that our forefathers have been busy from the earliest times in fulfilling the prophecies, in Media, in Scythia, in Nisea, in Saxony, in Parthia, and in Indo-Scythia and Median Saxony, and in all countries and among all people known to history. To not know of these prophecies and their fulfillment is to be and to remain blind or partially so, and to teach the nations our blindness is to become blind leaders of the blind.

I have written the above for various reasons, and one good one is to express my convictions in regard to what soil is best in which to sow the seed of the gospel. The great nations to which I especially allude are to-day as different from others in this respect as the East is from the West; and one condition may be mentioned to show this, and that is that they, like their forefathers, worship the God of Israel; while in the churches and temples of, I think, all other nations and races may be found images and likenesses of things in heaven and on earth to which they are continually addressing their worship. The same difference marks them now that distinguished their ancestors in ancient times; one the faithful and the children of the faithful, the other idolaters and children of idolaters.

Before leaving the foregoing branch of this subject, treated very strangely no doubt in the estimation of many, I will explain that any absolute statement or fact it contains I make on the authority of history, as I believe it to be verified by the prophets. These great histories I have studied for many years for light on the career of Israel. These histories may be in error and I also with them; but let me say that I believe that a history may be gleaned from history that is true and reliable that will fully dispel the blindness that has happened to Israel save only that blindness of the gospel, which then may be carried with success to them. I can now but mention another important consideration in connection with my subject; that is, I don't believe the gospel can be preached with the success it should be to these nations without a sincere, disinterested, honest, and clear statement of the change that awaits these nations in the resurrection of the dead. The resurrection, a principle of the gospel, an event imminent, at hand,—perhaps not twelve years away,—what tidings? And if so, we are in duty bound to awaken the desires and the longing of all Israel anew to that land which will become their inheritance and their home! Why would not this be a practical incentive to obedience to the gospel? To me all that land from the cataract of Syem to the Stehlawivet River seems full of the most wonderful incentives to all Israel to enter into that covenant by which they may be given inheritance and an immortal home therein. Did anyone in all this church consider this in going forth to gather into the gospel fold the inhabitants of those coasts and countries and islands lying in either direction from it? Let me ask, Did any favored son in all the church investigate the wonders of that tongue of the Egyptian Sea which will at that time be destroyed, its groves of great seaweed now covered and incrustated with variegated coral that now gives its depths the appearance of glittering groves and gardens, its pearls and mother of pearl? Do we consider that in that land immortal, the beautiful of lands, there grows the feathery palm tree in all its alluvial gardens? Do we consider that there the tree of life will grow, and even that there the water of life will flow? Did anyone in the church consider it his duty to spend his time in considering these features that will make that promised land indeed calculated to become a land immortal, even to that lake which once became a lake of burning and of death to a whole race and city, and which may yet become by its peculiar constituent elements a lake of fire and destruction to the wicked of all mankind? I sometimes think that an investigation of all the peculiar futures of that distant land would bring to light many truths essential in making plain and clear even the principles of the gospel,—those especially of "death, the resurrection, and eternal judgment."

It occurs to me that if you once show to any people that they are of Israel's race that they certainly must take an intense interest in those glorious holy mountains unto which God by the Prophet Ezekiel says he will gather the "house of Israel, even all of it." To me, whenever the resurrection is spoken of I look forward to that great scene in that valley which for centuries was the cemetery of the righteous inhabitants of Jerusalem, and people of all nations gathered there; when Christ shall appear upon the Mount of Olives above them and then plead for his people Israel, whom they have treated as bondmen and captives and outcasts, as enemies and outlaws throughout all their history on earth. People of all races and nations will meet there face to face no doubt with resurrected and immortal beings—beings once in bondage and under tribute who toiled along those primitive gardens which border the inheritance of Israel, the Nile and Euphrates valleys. Ah, millions, millions will be there!

And now if the gospel of Christ is indeed a gathering principle, let me say that the preaching of that gospel to foreign lands and to other nations, even the nations of Israel, may be a very different thing than preaching the same gospel in our own land. Latter Day Saints, is there anything blind or narrow about us in our conception of the very first and most important purpose of God revealing himself first to us? Did an angel of God indeed ever appear to Joseph Smith with the message "Palestine, Palestine, Palestine, will soon be restored?" And if so, shall we always continue to go to Palestine or to other foreign lands where the very people are to whom and their ancestors Palestine was given and recommend to them some center of the church in America as a gathering place? "But," some one may object, "to now gather to Palestine is not expedient." Well, dispel the blindness that has darkened Israel's eyes and understanding for thousands of years, then preach to them the gospel, and if this does not make the gathering to and restitution of the land of Israel expedient and desirable, then Christ will undoubtedly come in his own due time and make it so himself without the help of the church or of the gospel.

MAHLON SMITH.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED.—No. 3.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

PALESTINE AND ITS CLIMATE.

LET us now turn to the land of Palestine and notice the wonderful changes that have taken place there since the publication of the Book of Mormon, in 1830. But lest some should doubt that "Lebanon" is the land of Palestine, I shall ask you first to read Jeremiah 22: 6:—

For thus saith the Lord unto the king's house of Judah; thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

Also Zechariah 10: 10:—

I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them.

The "land of Gilead and Lebanon," then, being the land to which Israel is to be gathered, settles the question as to "Lebanon" being the land of Jacob, Palestine.

Now, please read the following in regard to the present condition of Palestine:—

It has the same bright sun and unclouded sky, as well as the early and latter rain, which, however, is diminished in quantity, owing to the destruction of trees.—Chambers' Encyclopedia, vol. 7, p. 11.—Palestine.

The result of Dr. Barclay's observations is to show that the greatest fall of rain at Jerusalem in a single year was 85 inches, and the smallest 44, the mean being 61.6. These figures will be best appreciated by recollecting that the average rainfall at London during the whole year is only 25 inches, and that in the wettest parts of the country, such as Cumberland and Devon, it rarely exceeds 60 inches. As in the time of our Savior (Luke 12: 54), the rains come chiefly from the south or southwest. They commence at the end of October or beginning of November, and continue with greater or less constancy till the end of February or middle of March, and occasionally, though rarely, till the end of April. Between April and November, there is, with the rarest exceptions, an uninterrupted succession of fine weather, and skies without a cloud. During the summer, the dews are very heavy, and often saturate the traveler's tent as if a shower had passed over it. The nights, especially towards sunrise, are very cold, and thick fogs or mists are common all over the country. Thunderstorms of great violence are frequent during the winter months.—Dict. of Bible, by William Smith, p. 686. Art. Palestine.

In D. A. Randall's Handwriting of God, page 19, occurs his introduction to Dr. Barclay of the Disciple Church and missionary to the land of Palestine, and resident of Jerusalem twenty years, but resident of Joppa at the time of Randall's visit:—

The country about Jaffa is certainly a most delightful one. Extensive plains, covered with luxuriant vegetation, stretched along the shore of the sea, and far into the interior. Large orange groves were just yielding their luxuriant harvest of golden-colored fruit. Such oranges I had never before seen, and had no idea they ever grew to such great size. The ground was dotted with flowers of every hue, and the air was vocal with the music of birds.—Ibid. p. 23.

Was this the condition of Palestine in 1830? Please read the following for an answer:—

I know not whether you are aware of the fact, but it is one that is fully authenticated, that the "latter rain" returned last year to Mount Zion—a rain that had been withheld, so far as our information goes, ever since the dispersion of the people. And he who has brought back the "latter rain" in its season, will also give the "former rain" in its season; and these returning showers of earthly blessings are the harbingers of returning showers of spiritual benediction from on high.—Rev. Hugh Stowel, in Scottish Presbyterian Magazine, 1853.

Louis Van Buren wrote, only a few years ago, an account of his sojourn, and observations in Palestine:—

I arrived in Indiana a few days since, from the Eastern Continent. I stopped at Joppa nearly the whole winter. For my part I was well pleased with the country. It is certainly a land of most wonderful fruitfulness, with a delightful climate, producing everything, if properly cultivated, and from two to three crops in a year. They have grain, fruit, and vegetables all the year round; in fact I never was in such a country before. I have seen much good country in Europe and America, but none to compare with Palestine; its fruitfulness is uncommon, and the climate the most delightful; even in winter I did not see the least sort of frost, and vegetables of every sort were growing in perfection in gardens. It is a fact that the rain and dew are restored; recently, in 1853, the former and the latter rain were restored, to the astonishment of the natives.—Louis Van Buren, Sen., November 14, A. D. 1867.

Mr. Stowel says the "latter rain" returned in 1852, and he was confident the "former rain" would return also. Mr. Van Buren says that in 1853 Palestine received both the "former" and the "latter rains" and that, too, to the "astonishment of the natives." Why were the natives astonished? Because, as Mr. Stowel says, it was "a rain that had been withheld, so far as our information goes, ever since the dispersion of the people"—the Jews.

Does not this set the stamp of divinity upon this "latter-day work?" Isaiah says, "is it not yet a very little while [after the "sealed book" is brought to light and the Lord commences his "marvelous work"] and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field." Only twenty-three years after the publication of the Book of Mormon the clouds pour down the "former and the latter rain" (which had been withheld for centuries) upon Israel's land, and it once more becomes a "fruitful field."

But this is not all. The prophet says that "Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale;" but that he shall see his children "in the midst of him," and "they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel." Not only is Jacob's land to be blessed, but his children also are to be partakers of "spiritual benedictions" from on high, when the Lord performs this work. Look now at the condition of the Jews, as compared with what it was a few years ago, and you will see that this part of Isaiah's prophecy, too, is being fulfilled in a most liberal manner.

In support of this, read the following from the "Hand of God in History" by Rev. Hollis Read, A. M., published in 1870. Page 348. "There is much at present in their civil condition that indicates the returning favor of heaven. Nothing decisive or permanent was done to remove the disabilities of the Jews till the beginning of the present century. . . . In England, a single ray of light darted above their horizon, but was soon extinguished. An act passed in Parliament (1753), in favor of the Jewish emancipation, but was repealed the next year; and not till the year 1830 was the question renewed, and then only to be lost. Yet in the same year a bill in their favor was carried in France."

On page 352, he says: "Fifty years ago every Jew in the Turkish Empire might have been slaughtered, and no great sensation produced anywhere. But now, so changed is public feelings towards the Jews that let the foot of oppression attempt to crush them, or the bloody mouth of persecution to devour them, and ten thousand voices are raised in one general remonstrance."

"The 'pillar of cloud and of fire,' has long turned its dark side towards them, and God has treated them as aliens and enemies; and now that the light side is beginning to shine on them, we may indulge the delightful hope that God's former love is about to return. . . . Recent religious and intellectual movements among them indicate that the day of their redemption is near. The Jewish mind is everywhere awake. Never was there among them such a spirit of inquiry. A few facts will illustrate. . . . Some are anxiously looking for the speedy restoration of their nation to the beloved Palestine; others expect the immediate advent of the Messiah: others doubt whether he be not already come."—P. 353.

"The late Prussian Ambassador at the court of Rome, declared that 'throughout the vast dominion of Germany and Poland, there is a general movement of inquiry, and a long-expected expectation abroad, that something will take place to restore them to the land of their fathers.' Rev. T. Grimshawe says; 'A vast number of Jews are preparing to emigrate from Germany and Poland to settle in Palestine; while throughout the whole of Europe and Asia a general expectation is raised among them that the time of their deliverance is drawing near. Throughout Italy the same uneasiness and expectation may be observed.' This movement of the Jews towards Palestine, whatever may be thought of it as an evidence of a literal restoration, is at least indicative of a state of mind not to be overlooked in our present discussion."—P. 356.

"Rev. Mr. Bellson, a converted Jew and missionary in Posen, and late candidate for the Bishopric in Jerusalem; 'I am more than ever,' says he, 'impressed, that the Jews are hastening to a great crisis. It must be evident to any common observer that there is a great movement among them. This wonderful people, who for eighteen hundred years remained unaltered, have undergone a marvelous revolution within the last forty years, especially within the last twenty."—P. 357.

"Rev. R. H. Hershall, by birth and honor a Jew, having extensively visited his brethren in Europe and Asia, and heard in their synagogues, their confessions of sins and their earnest cries unto the Lord in the land of their dispersion, says:—

"I found a mighty change in their minds and feelings in regard to the nearness of the time of their deliverance. Some assigned one reason, some another, but all agreed in thinking the time is at hand."—P. 360.—Saints' Herald.

Please notice the dates of the foregoing. All this change has been brought about since 1830. Surely "Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale."

This should be sufficient on this point, but as there is so much that is later than this, I cannot forbear quoting some of it.

In 1837 the situation of our co-religionists was still a very unfavorable one. . . . The only countries in which, half a century ago (1837), the Jews enjoyed full and integral equality of rights are France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and the United States of America. At present, if we except Russia and Rumania, the constitutions of all countries of the civilized world guarantee civil and political equality of rights to the Jews.

Let it be borne in mind that in repealing the disqualifications of the Jews, all those countries to which we are referring have had to do away with a state of things that had lasted over 1500 years.—Prophetic News, 1887.

A Jerusalem correspondent writes that the Holy City is fast becoming again the city of the Jews. In 1880 there were not more than 5,000 Jews there; now there are more than 30,000.—National Tribune, May 17, 1888.

Mr. F. G. Carpenter, writing from Jerusalem, June 15, 1889, says:—

At present the Jews are coming here by the hundreds. . . . A half a century ago there were only thirty-two Jewish families in all Jerusalem, and the number in Palestine was only 3,000. Now there are nearly 50,000 in the Holy Land, and three fourths of the population is made up of them.—National Tribune.

Dr. F. De Sola Mendes, editor of the American Hebrew, New York, wrote September, 1889:—

There are between 40,000 and 50,000 Hebrews in Palestine to-day, three fourths of them in Jerusalem, where they of course form the largest share of the population. Turkey's unwise restrictions on immigration have been tardily removed by the present Sultan, urged by the pressure of the powers of Europe, joined by energetic American consuls.—Independent Patriot, 1889.

Bishop Blythe, the Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem, asserts in his annual report that "about 100,000 Jews have entered Palestine during the last few years, of whom 65,000 have come within the last seven years, and the arrival of a vaster host is imminent." "No one can," he says, possibly forecast the extent of Jewish immigration to Palestine within the next seven years."—Saints' Herald, May 16, 1894.

One more:—

Last Sunday evening it was our privilege to listen to a very interesting sermon by Rev. A. Ben Oriel, a converted Jew, late from Palestine. His subject was, the fulfillment of prophecy concerning Jerusalem and the Jews. . . . He says that in the year 1883 there were about 20,000 Jews in all Palestine, of whom about 8,000 were in Jerusalem. He now places the number at about 100,000, of whom about 40,000 are in and about Jerusalem—a greater number than at any time since the second century. According to the rate of the present increase, it is estimated that the present century will witness one million Jews in Palestine.—Zion's Ensign, May 26, 1894.

In connection with this I quote from the "sealed book" itself, Book of Mormon, pages 106, 107:—

And now, I would prophesy somewhat more concerning the Jews and the Gentiles. For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written; and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed. . . . And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ, shall also become a delightful people.

Reader, do you believe the Book of Mormon to be the "sealed book" of Isaiah 29? If not, how do you account for the foregoing evidences in its favor? Did Joseph Smith just happen to make the claim that it was a sealed book? Did it just happen that he sent the "words" of the book to the learned? Was it only a "happen so" that the learned said, "I can't read a sealed book?" Was it a mere accident that Mr. Smith was "unlearned"? Did it just happen that the "former and latter rains" were restored to Palestine, so soon after the publication of the Book of Mormon? Did Lebanon just happen to become a "fruitful field" in such a "very little while" after the commencement of this work? Was it only a "happening" that the nations removed the social and political restrictions against the Jews from their constitutions? Did Turkey just "happen" to remove her restrictions on Jewish immigration to Palestine? Did the Jews just "happen" to begin to gather back to their beloved land? All these prophecies were to be fulfilled at, and after the coming forth of the sealed book and the commencement of the Lord's "marvelous work;" they have all been fulfilled in the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and since then; and, as it is too late for the commencement of that work now, if you do not accept the Book of Mormon, what do you think of the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah, anyway? Why not tear it out of your Bible, and throw it away? Those prophecies and their remarkable fulfillment prove not only the divinity of the Book of Mormon, but also the inspiration of the Bible itself.

I now call your attention to Psalms 85: 4-13.

Turn us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger toward us to cease. Wilt thou be angry with us for ever? wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations? Wilt thou not revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee? Show us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy salvation. I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints: but let them not turn again to folly. Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

The Psalmist first bewails the cast-off condition of Israel, and then he prophecies that Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven.

What is truth?

Thy word is truth.—Jno. 17: 17.

And thy law is the truth.—Ps. 119: 142.

All thy commandments are truth.—Ps. 119: 151.

God's word, his law, is the truth; hence it is the word of God, his law, that is to "spring out of the earth;" and at the same time "righteousness shall look down from heaven." Paul says:—

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. . . . For therein is the righteousness of God revealed.—Rom. 1: 16, 17.

If the righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel, then the gospel, "the power of God unto salvation," is to come down from heaven at the time the word of the Lord springs "out of the earth."

Now, the Book of Mormon claims to be the great things of God's law written to Ephraim (Hosea 8: 12), the word of God to the people of this continent, hence the "truth." It came "out of the earth," as predicted by the Psalmist, and Joseph Smith, who was the instrument in the hands of God of bringing it forth, says that an angel came from heaven and ordained him to preach the gospel, containing the righteousness of God, and to administer in the ordinances of the same; hence righteousness looked "down from heaven." And this is in harmony with the testimony of John, in Revelation 14: 6, 7, that an angel was to fly "in the midst of heaven," at the hour of God's judgment, "having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth."

But, as in Isaiah 29, there is a test in connection with this prophecy of David which absolutely prevents imposition. It is found in the 12th verse:—

Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase.

As already shown, only twenty-three years after this "truth," which sprang "out of the earth," was published to the world the Lord gave "that which is good," (the "former and latter rain,") and Israel's land began once more to "yield her increase."

The Psalmist adds in verse 13:—

Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

Now turn to Isaiah 32: 13-17:—

Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers; yea, upon all the houses of joy in the joyous city: because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the forts and towers shall be for dens forever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks; until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever.

Notice in these texts that it is righteousness that is to bring about the happy conditions there described; and, as righteousness is not found outside of the gospel, and as those conditions have already obtained, in part, it is evident that the gospel has been restored,—that the angel has come.

Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.

Why?

Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

Will this remove the shame and paleness from Jacob's face?

And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever.

REDFIELD.—At Brownville, Nebraska, to Bro. Oscar A. and Sr. Nora Redfield, a son, and named Frank W. Blessed January 6, 1895, by Elder J. W. Waldsmith and George Z. Redfield.

MARRIED.

REESE—JENKINS.—In Bridger Canyon, Montana, January 16, 1895, J. D. Reese to Miss Melva Jenkins. Elder J. H. Wells tied the knot. A nice time and everybody happy.

HARDER—FITZPATRICK.—At the home of the bride's mother, near Radcliff, Ohio, December 23, 1894, Bro. Herbert R. Harder and Sr. Emma Fitzpatrick, Elder H. R. Harder officiating.

ARCHIBALD—KRAHL.—Elder Russell Archibald, of St. Louis, Missouri, and Sr. J. Pearl Krahl, of St. Joseph, Missouri, were united in matrimony at the Latter Day Saints' church in St. Joseph, Missouri, at eight p.m., January 15, 1895. The church was prettily decorated with flowers and palms, the fragrance filling the whole house. Mr. George Krahl, brother of the bride, of David City, Nebraska, was best man, and Sr. Tena Archibald, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor; Brn. John Terry, Jr., and Rollin Isleib were ushers; Sr. Grace Gardner presided at the organ, and little Josie Isleib was flower girl, bearing the ring on a beautiful basket of flowers. The bride was dressed in cream corded silk with lace and flowers in train; and looked queenly. The groom in his conventional black looked happy, as well he may in gaining such a "Pearl." Many useful presents were received by them, and a handsome and toothsome supper was prepared by the parents of the groom. St. Louis will be their future home. Elder J. M. Terry officiated in the ceremony.

DIED.

CLEAR.—near Burtville, Missouri, July 19, 1894, Sr. Julia Clear, aged 19 years and 7 months. She was baptized by Bro. Gomer Wells May 27, 1892. She remained faithful to the end. She was afflicted nearly four years, but bore her afflictions with patience. Funeral sermon was preached by Elder S. J. Madden to a large concourse of people.

TOWELL.—At the home of his parents, Snyder, Oklahoma, January 16, 1895, John Irvin, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Towell, aged 23 years, 10 months, and 1 day. Besides parents he leaves a wife and one child. Funeral services conducted by Elder Thomas J. Smith.

BROWN.—At the home of his daughter, Sr. Clara Young, in East Somerville, Massachusetts, Elder Cyril E. Brown, aged 75 years and 7 months. He was conscious until the last, and passed away peacefully in the faith of the Redeemer. Bro. Brown had long been connected with the church. He was a seventy in the old church, and had to do with getting together companies of Saints for the westward march, but the abominations following the death of the Martyr disgusted him, and he again turned his face to New England, where he lived when he received the gospel, and when he heard of the commencement of the work by the Reorganization in Fall River soon after the war, he visited the branch and was again baptized into the church, and remained with it until death. He was a man who permitted his generosity to go beyond his ability, yet nothing moved him from his faith in Christ, and no matter what occurred, he could be found following the even tenor of his way, and his "moderation was known of all men." He will be remembered as the person who built the little engine Ephraim which did the work so long in the Herald Office. His rest is well earned for his life was one of hard work and labor, and those who knew him will feel that he has gone to a well-earned peace. Services at the home of his daughter in Somerville, January 9, 1895, by Elder John Smith, where were gathered his children and grandchildren, who mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate parent. On the 10th his body was laid to rest in Millbury, Massachusetts, to await the resurrection. "One by one we are marching home."

GARLICH.—Alma Oliver, infant son of Bro. Robert Garlich, St. Joseph, Missouri, was born September 13, 1894; died January 12, 1895. Funeral services conducted by Elder William Lewis; sermon by T. T. Hinderks. Interment in the Saints' graveyard at the Pleasant Grove church.

DIXON.—James Dixon, husband of Sr. Elizabeth Dixon, was born March 18, 1832, at Staleybridge, England; died of apoplexy at Fall River, Massachusetts, January 1, 1895. Funeral service was held in the Saints' chapel, January 11, and was largely attended. The deceased being a member of Post 46, G. A. R., having served during the civil war as private, first in the Third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, afterwards in the Fifty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, many of his surviving comrades, together with the post, attended in a body. Bro. John Gilbert pronounced a eulogy upon the character and life of the deceased comrade, recounting his heroic service and devotion to his adopted country. He was a faithful husband, a kind father, a patriotic citizen. By his comrades he was tenderly laid to rest in Oak Grove cemetery.

JONES.—At Malad, Idaho, December 26, 1894, Morgan T., son of Bro. Morgan M. and Sr. Eliza J. Jones. He was born at Malad, July 3, 1887. Also at same place, Adah T. Jones, daughter of above-named parents, who was born June 17, 1892.

PLATO AS A FORERUNNER OF CHRIST.

PASSAGES in Plato's writings which some of the early Christian Fathers attributed to divine inspiration, and which others attributed to a supposed acquaintance with the Hebrew Scriptures, have not lost their interest with the lapse of years. The latest defense of his right to the title, "the forerunner of Christ," appears in Danskeren, of Denmark. The more striking similarities between Plato's writings and the teachings of the Bible are set forth as follows:—

"If we say, with Pressense, 'Greek Philosophy was a preparation for Christianity, and we do not seek in it a substitute for the Gospel,' we shall, as he also said, be in danger of overstating its grandeur in order to estimate its real value. . . .

"In a general way we say that the propædetic office of Grecian philosophy was to destroy the polytheistic notions of the nations and to substitute the theistic idea in a spiritual form. Plato contributed very much to this end by enforcing and enlarging the Socratic 'know thyself.' That maxim introverts the mental gaze. In consciousness are revealed the universal and necessary principles. From these absolute ideas Plato ascends to an Absolute Being, the author of all. This absolute being is Goodness, God. Plato will not tolerate images of God. He will not even allow the education of youth to include 'the stories which Hesiod and Homer and other poets told us.' God is the 'Supreme Mind,' 'incorporeal' and 'unchangeable,'

'eternal' and the 'source of all order and beauty.' . . .

"But Plato goes much further. His teachings awaken and enthrone conscience as a law of duty, and that involves the elevation and purification of the Moral Idea. To aspire after perfection of moral existence, to secure assimilation to God, is Plato's aspiration. He has justly been called 'the great apostle of the moral idea.' Such teachings were startling to a corrupt society, where all faith in a beneficent overruling Providence was lost. Such a society had need to be 'called to order' preparatory to the coming of the Lord. And Plato was its John the Baptist.

"He affirms again and again that man cannot by himself rise to purity and goodness. 'Virtue is not natural to man, neither is it to be learned, but it comes to us by a divine influence. Virtue is the gift of God in those who possess it.' That 'gift of God' was about to be bestowed in fullness of power and blessing through the coming of Jesus Christ, 'the desire of the nation.' We clearly see 'the feeling after God' in these longings of Plato. From him the 'desire of the nations' spread to all Greece, for all looked to him as a prophet of the new, though they did not understand him.

"Plato went further yet. Indeed the idea of an incarnation was not unfamiliar to the heathen mind. The incarnations of Brahm, particularly that of Vishnu, the second person of the Hindu trinity [trinity] were known far and wide. Greek mythology abounded in metamorphoses. It was, therefore, quite natural that the people of Lystra, when they saw Paul and Barnabas, should say: 'The gods have come down to us in the likeness of men.' The idea of incarnation had become so common that we find it in poetry. Virgil, the Roman poet, who was contemporary with Christ, seems to reëcho the prophecy of Isaiah:—

"The last age decreed by the Fates is come,
 And a new frame of all things does begin;
 A holy progeny from heaven descends
 Auspicious in his birth, which puts an end
 To the iron age, and from which shall rise
 A golden age, most glorious to behold.'

"Plato contemplates with sadness the fallen state of man. In the 'Phædrus' he describes man's original purity and happiness, and laments 'this happy life, which we forfeited by our transgression.' To restore this lost image of holiness is the work of God; man cannot do it himself. 'Virtue is the gift of God.' Plato thus discovered the need of a Savior; he saw clearly the desire of the human heart for a Savior. But he did not predict his coming; at least not in very emphatic terms. He hints at a conqueror of sin, an 'assuager of pain,' an 'avertor of evil.' . . .

"Since the time of the Fathers it has been customary to read the story of the crucifixion in Plato's 'Republic,' where is discussed the question, Which is the happier life, that of the just man persecuted as a criminal, or of the unjust man honored and apparently successful in all his undertakings? 'There will be no difficulty,' said Glaucon, 'in ascertaining what life will be the lot of either. It shall be told, then; and even if it should be told with more than unusual bluntness, think not that it is I who tell it, Socrates, but those who prefer injustice to justice. These, then, will say, that the just man thus situated—considered as a criminal—will be scourged, tortured, fettered, have his eyes burned out, and, lastly, suffering all manner of evil, will be crucified; and he will know, too, that, in the common opinion, a man should desire not to be, but to appear just. . . . The other, on the contrary, holds the magistracy in the State, . . . marries . . . succeeds, etc.' There is no real reason to believe that Plato had read the prophecies of Isaiah. . . .

"When we consider this delineation of the Son of God, and Plato's declaration that man should assimilate himself to the Deity; that God is the source of good, but not of evil, and that regeneration is a gift of God; that the soul is immortal, and that there is a future retribution for all, we are justified in calling Plato a forerunner of Christ."—Translated for the Literary Digest.

ARCHBISHOP RYAN ON AGNOSTICISM.

ARCHBISHOP RYAN, of Philadelphia, severely arraigned the agnostics in an address recently delivered in that city at the Academy of Music. The occasion was a benefit for the Antietam Monument fund of the Philadelphia Brigade, and the address was reported for the Catholic Review, December 23.

After dwelling for some time on certain incidents of the Civil War, the speaker congratulated himself on having such an audience as he had long desired—an audience composed in great part of people not connected with his own church, but believers in the truths of Christianity, though he presumed there were unbelievers present.

He then led up to the main theme of his address, and having characterized agnosticism as the last phase of unbelief, he proceeded:—

“Atheism can never become general, for no element of our nature, constant and universal as that of religion, can die. This the atheists felt and fell back on deism. It admits, indeed, the existence of God, but denies his providence, asserts that he created the world in which we live and the other worlds around us, gave them a system of law, and then, as it were, rolled them into space from the hollow of his hand, and takes no further notice of nor interest in them; that he dwells in infinite peace inconsistent with the care of the little things of creation. But deism could not stand the test of reason, and to be logical should end in atheism itself. It satisfied not the yearning of the human soul and supplied no object for the religious element within. Many men professed to be neither express atheists nor deists, but simply skeptics. At length an idea and a name for it were found which seemed to obviate many of the objections to atheism, deism, and skepticism, and that is agnosticism. . . .

“Man’s life on earth is a warfare. If he follow passion he has to fight conscience, and if he obey conscience he must battle with passion until he descends into his grave. Now, to fight successfully this battle for the right against the wrong, the true against the false, the pure against the impure, he needs all the aid which reason and religion can supply him. If agnosticism sweeps away the most powerful factors in this assistance, it is most dangerous to the individual and to human society. Three of the most potent influences that act on the human mind are those of fear, hope, and love. We find that they have always been associated with the religious elements in our nature and have had God for their object. . . .

“Conscience fears to offend the Supreme Being by violating his law, and causes man to tremble when he has done so. In view of seductive temptation it uses fear and says to man, ‘Beware. God is not mocked; his laws are not violated with impunity. They are not sanctionless. He will strike like a God, and your punishment shall be in proportion to the gravity of your offense.’ This motive must be strong and certain, for the pleasure of sin, to which temptation invites, is strong and certain, as the tempted man knows by experience.

“He struggles with the temptation. Let the agnostic whisper in his ear, ‘How do you know there is a God at all—perhaps these are vain terrors?’ This is perhaps enough to turn the scales, and he falls—an adulterer or a dishonest man—and with him fall the peace and honor of a family!”

The Archbishop then referred to the number of suicides traceable to the demoralizing influences of agnosticism, and alleged that in the Catholic and Lutheran parts of Germany, where faith exists and is acted upon, suicide is very rare; that it is almost unknown in Ireland; and that statistics will prove that self-destruction increases with unbelief. In continuation he said:—

“Let us look at some other sentinels that guard society from destruction. Look, for instance, at the sanctity and importance of an oath. Washington in his celebrated Farewell Address calls attention to this point when he shows the necessity of religion to maintain the young republic he had gloriously founded. A man’s life, property, and character may be stricken down by a false oath. What maintains the awful responsibility of an oath but the fact that God is called to witness the truth of what is said and will punish the perjurer though the law may not discover him? With the Bible in his hand the man is about to call God to witness, but the agnostic whispers to him, ‘Perhaps there is no God—you cannot know it—you shall be only lying, which indeed is not honorable, but brings no divine vengeance.’ Why is it that perjury is becoming so common and why is it that the law does not punish it as severely as of old? Simply because faith in its true moral guilt is decreasing.”

The speaker next reviewed and lamented the baleful influence of the spirit of anarchy now threatening the world, and argued eloquently for respect of law. We quote from his concluding remarks:—

“And now I may ask, What does agnosticism substitute for these preservatives? What are the great motives for the sacrifice necessary to overcome our passions? We are told, indeed, that in the long run it will prove more pleasant and more useful to be good. Pleasure and utility are the chief factors. Are these sufficient? Will not men differ about what is pleasant and what is useful. . . . If pleasure is the criterion of good and each one is left to be the judge of the pleasure, where is the line to be drawn? Utility is no fixed standard. A thing should not be deemed good because it is useful, but useful because it is good. What one deems useful another will reject as useless, and we are left simply in a state of ethical anarchy without principles.

“The work of agnosticism is to destroy, not to build up, to rob a man of faith and hope and love in robbing him of his God and leaving him in supreme desolation and helplessness without a motive to live! . . .

“There is no genuine cause for agnosticism. The immense mass of the human race are believers in God. Theism is in possession and has been from the beginning of the world. There is unity in the great fact that there is a God and a provident God.”—Literary Digest.

A MORAL AND SOCIAL HELP.

An indulgence in intoxicants of any sort has never helped a man to any social position worth the having; on the contrary, it has kept many from attaining a position to which by birth and good breeding and all other qualifications they were entitled. No young man will ever find that the principle of abstinence from liquor is a barrier to any success, social, commercial, or otherwise. On the other hand, it is the one principle in his life which will, in the long run, help him more than any other.—Edward W. Bok in January Ladies' Home Journal.

THE PROGRESS OF PRISON REFORMS.

The Rev. Samuel J. Barrows, D. D., the editor of the Christian Register, and a member of the Board of Prison Commissioners of Boston, contributes a paper to the February Arena on “Penology in Europe and America,” that will be widely read by all who appreciate the value of educational work in prison discipline and reform as an important factor in the social problem. Dr. Barrows is one of the leading authorities in this country on the department of sociology known as Penology, and this paper is the result of a year’s travel in Europe, completed in the winter of 1893, during which he visited all the representative prisons of England, France, Germany, Italy, Hungary, and Greece, and so it embodies the latest European data on the subject, as well as that which is obtainable from American reports.

THE COUNCIL OF WOMEN.

The Countess of Aberdeen, the wife of the Governor-General of Canada, contributes to the February Arena an article outlining the platform and purposes of “The Coming Triennial Meeting of the Council of Women of the United States at Washington.” This council has become necessary to bring into common relations the different organizations of women that are working along various lines without knowledge of each other. The council is committed to no one propaganda, and no federated society can be interfered with or committed by any act of the council. It includes representatives from all sections, from all classes, from all creeds and churches and organizations holding conflicting views. Its aim is to find a common platform for social progress.

Lake Erie was named by the Iroquois Eriquo, from a fierce tribe living on its shores. The French call it Raccoon Lake, and on various old maps it appears as Lac de Conty, Lac Herrie, Lak Erie, Lac Erocioise, or Eriez.

Lake George was called after the second English King of that name. It was also designated Lac St. Sacrement, by Pere Isaac Jaques, while the Mohicans called it Andia-taroete, “Place where the Lake Closes.”

CHURCH DEVELOPMENT, INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL.

FROM advices from the brethren in the Australian mission, with the clipping that follows, we learn that our force of general and local missionaries are alive to the interests of the work in that far-off land. With public discussions, pulpit preaching, and the education of the public mind by means of the press, the way is being prepared for a more extended presentation and more general reception of the gospel. Our brethren appear to be alive to their opportunities and are evidently making use of every means possible to reach the people. This is encouraging. It means that in future years we shall have hundreds if not thousands of brethren and sisters in that land where now we have but tens, and twenties, and fifties.

Patient toiling will bring what we look for. With the God of Israel and the Master supervising, controlling, and overruling, success is certain. We believe the outlook is encouraging. With all the difficulties that have hindered and all that may, it is, after all, the most difficult and the most hopeless task the world ever undertook to seek to thwart and frustrate the purposes of God. Opposing forces may seem to hinder for a time, but the wrong must inevitably give way to the strength and power of truth.

Truth endureth and is always strong; it liveth and conquereth forever more.

Yes, truth lives; it lives in force, in power, and cannot be entirely or permanently suppressed. It may for a time seem to be crushed to earth and the wrong seemingly hold sway, but even then God is at work, teaching the people to learn better by the things they suffer under the rule of wrong, prompting them to assert themselves in behalf of the right; to cast off the yoke of spiritual, and moral, and intellectual bondage that wrong entails, that oppression enforces. Truth enlightens the mind, makes free the conscience, and nerves the arm to action. Men and women moved upon by truth assert themselves and are valiant in its behalf, in emphasizing it, in declaring it to others.

Hence gospel truth planted in the hearts of men and women has made all—ministry and laity—a missionary force in behalf of humanity. There is "leaven" in the work—the Spirit of truth. It is constantly at work. It is God's mind, God's will, God's love, God's Spirit forcefully at work in behalf of man; his eternal, unceasing purpose in execution to redeem, to exalt, and to perfect the race; inspiring, energizing, and qualifying his people for the work before them by the spirit of power. The gospel has come in word and in power, and none need be fearful that God will fail to bring about his purposes. With a proper conception of his character and a faithful performance of duty no one has ever failed, nor can fail. The toiling missionary and the lonely, isolated Saint, and all, find substantial, tangible ground for encouragement in this permanency, this potency of the gospel economy. Its Spirit is life, power, it is strength; it is steadfast, it is sure to those who abide and endure. Of Christ it was said:—

He shall not fail nor be discouraged.—Isa. 42: 4.

He did not fail; he succeeded, and is still succeeding. His work is going on. He is completing it, and extending to men and women the opportunity of working with him. He is enlarging the spheres and increasing the usefulness of those who labor with him. He is bringing out, and developing, and sanctifying their powers, their abilities, sanctifying them to his service, as they devote and consecrate their hearts to his service; as they seek to know, to understand their "gifts and callings" and places, and stand in them reliably, truly, constantly.

Christ, the Master, was beset by every evil, every hindrance, every trial calculated to "discourage;" but he was pure in motive, was faithful and prayerful in spirit. He abode in the truth. He was humble and meek in spirit, and was prayerful; hence he obtained power. He obtained, he received understanding of the principles by which power for good was bestowed, and observed the conditions under which only power could be obtained, hence he was made strong. Help was laid upon one who was "mighty," because he loved the truth supremely, perfectly, truly.

The true life of the follower of Christ is a life of strength, of faithfulness. Abiding humility, and meekness, and care will bring to each an endowment of the Spirit of truth. We repeat it, an endowment—a personal endowment of grace and power for good. Weakness is not the spirit of the gospel; strength is the normal, the natural outcome of a life in Christ. We do not mean personal strength independent of the power of the gospel. There is no such strength in reality.

In him was the gospel, and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men.—John 1: 4.

We mean the strength of love of the pure, of the good, of the true; the strength of strong, rugged devotion to principle; that meekness of spirit that manifested the strength of Christ, that was peculiarly manifest in the character of him who was "God manifest in the flesh."

The man or woman who after developing in usefulness allows himself to become lifted up in "spiritual pride," in self-consciousness, etc., is weak, is shallow indeed. He makes poor return for the grace bestowed upon him. He halts on the way and prevents the Lord from taking him farther. Some go so far, and stop, because the Lord cannot take them farther under such conditions. Let us go all the way; let us move forward and upward and prevent not the full advancement that God would have us make. Then we shall be fitted for all the Master would have us do; we shall do our work and please the Lord and benefit others and ourselves. This we understand to be the end designed in receiving the work of God.

God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.—1 Tim. 1: 7.

Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.—2 Tim. 2: 7.

The more one truly grows in intelligence, the more humble, the more loyal he becomes to God. He who becomes self-exalted, wise in his own conceit, is not really intelligent. Blindness, partial blindness must be the cause of such folly. No one who really perceives and retains a knowledge of his obligations to God gives way to self-exaltation, to personal ambition. He cannot do that unless he steps from the right, unless he gives way to that which is contrary to the Spirit that dwelt in the Master—the Spirit which prompts the giving of all glory to God.

We plead for loyalty, for the beauty of strength of devotion; for the grandness of the true in character, the noble in spirit, that shall make God's people worthy of him and of Christ—worthy of their exalted mission to mankind, and successful in the doing of it. Until men and women thus attain, they are not, as we comprehend it, fully redeemed, fully reliable in the service of God. It is a pitiable spectacle to see man or woman blessed of God give way to the folly, the weakness of taking credit to himself.

For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.—2 Cor. 10: 18.

For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith.—Rom. 12: 3.

The truest, the only true representation of Christ, is seen in the principles he taught and himself observed. He was the Son of God because he was like God. He is the type of service, of manhood, of Godliness. In proportion as we approximate, approach him, become like him in spirit, in strong adherence to truth; without weakness, without vanity; without worldliness in manner, in thought, in dress, and in speech, will we become qualified for the great work before us as the people of God. Let us meditate upon these things; let us ponder them and root them deeply in our hearts by earnest devotion and prayer; let us "come up higher." Then we shall have power; then we shall move in unison, in unity; then each one will be in the path of safety, the way of truth and of life; then evil will not have power over, or among us.

If we have repeated these truths from time to time we make no apology for so doing. Truths are not comprehended or fully received at once. We need to frequently hear them, to read them in order to even mentally understand what they mean, and then they are often but imperfectly understood. Truths, precepts, principles do not exist in word—in mere writing or in printed statement. A principle is potent, powerful, forceful. Jesus Christ was the Word in that sense; and, the human heart is incapable of knowing, of feeling, of fully realizing the power of principle until it is purified, until it becomes free from evil, from ignorance, from blindness, and from fear. It requires a course of "preparation of the heart of man" before he can receive the truth. A man must literally be "born again," both of water and spiritually, before he can "see the kingdom of God." The Pharisees could not see the kingdom because of their perversity of heart, their evil and blinded natures. No more can a professed follower of Christ fully perceive and enjoy the power of life unless his ways be "true and righteous altogether." We receive and advance in proportion to what we are prepared to receive; that much and no more. Hence the need of intelligent faithfulness.

The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord. All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes; but the Lord weigheth the spirits. Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established.—Prov. 16: 1-3.

Until a man comprehends a truth, until he really receives it and by actual use of it demonstrates its worth, in himself as well as in others, he is ignorant of that truth. He may hear it stated and know it in part, but not know it fully. Truths bear restatement, repetition.

We started out to say something about the work in Australia, and it may be asked what this has to do with that work, with mission work in general. Our humble opinion is that it has a great deal to do with it. What is missionary work? It is simply a work of education, the beginning of that work among the people; the teaching that shall bring them within the influences of the kingdom of God, in which they are schooled for the life that now is and for the life to come. It comprehends all that. While the church reaches out to the world she must herself be advancing, and the more she advances and becomes fitted for self-government under the ministrations and provisions of the law, the more will she receive of the spirit of sacrifice, the more completely her love go out to humanity and extend a helping hand. This is her missionary spirit; this the spirit that moved the Father to give his only begotten Son, and the Son to come into the world and give his life for fellow man.

The church also must attain spiritual growth that she may receive and carry forward her converts to higher life, to greater advancement. She is to assimilate them by changing them through the leaven of light and power. They have begun at the A B C of spiritual life; it is hers to nurture and to teach them. The church is not to be conformed to the fashion of this world, but to "overcome the world," becoming a "habitation of God through the Spirit." It is the hope and the preserver, the savor of the world.

The success of the missionaries and Saints in foreign lands is our success, and ours is theirs. With the gospel standard and the church well planted in the English-speaking colonies, the way will doubtless open for its extension to other nations; this in its time, when the Lord sees fit to so direct; when the church has sufficiently advanced in understanding and in unity to make permanent her own welfare and such extension possible, reliable. When she walks in firmness at home she can reasonably expect to extend abroad, as the Lord opens the way among the nations and so directs.

The English language is becoming more and more the language of commerce, of art, of science, of civilization, of the world's progress. Its use is becoming so general and increasing so rapidly that it bids fair to become practically universal.

The Anglo-Saxon has long been to the forefront in civilization, in progress. He has been the leading civilizer of the world, the strongest contender for, the sturdiest maintainer of civil and religious liberty, with its accompanying benefits. He has maintained a progressive supremacy in these lines of effort. His influence has been very great for good, and it is still widening, extending. Missionary effort among his possessions throughout the world, in South Africa, in British India, in New Zealand, etc., will doubtless tell for good in its time, as God's hand has evidently been with him, also with his Teutonic brethren, the German and Scandinavian races, in the peculiar special developments of modern civilization. Western civilization and western ideas of government and religion are penetrating and leavening the masses of mankind universally. Convert the Anglo-Saxon and the Teuton and the way is open almost universally. It is not a day's work, however, nor one to be accomplished without great difficulties and much hardship, and until the wisdom and power of God opens the way and says move forward.

We appreciate the efforts being made in Australia by coworkers, and would encourage them, also the church, for the preparation to be made for the evident extension of her efforts in the time to come.

Indeed, while the Anglo-Saxon and the Teuton have been in the advance in the latter-day developments of the world, there is that unity in the spirit and needs of man universal that makes the oneness of the race in Christ the natural result of the preaching of the gospel; for in it all become one in Christ Jesus.

There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.—Gal. 3: 28.

What therefore we have written in behalf of the spirit of unity of development, of completeness in the individual and general membership, is in harmony in this connection with this missionary work in Australia and in general, in all its phases. The Anglo-Saxon and Teuton are placed foremost in the work of the latter-day dispensation, in the providence of God; but, in behalf, in the interests of the entire race. All the world—all races—are one.

Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us?—Mal. 2: 10.

The Apostle Paul evidently realized this spirit of oneness, in completeness. The Jew, the Greek, the bond, the free, the male, and the female were one, all one within the spirit of the gospel economy—the law of life; all to work in harmony, in unity, in behalf of the internal development and extension of the kingdom and family of God. Unity, oneness in the diversity of talent, of power, of gift, of sex, and condition; all growing together “unto an holy temple in the Lord.”

The thought, the idea is suggested by the passage quoted of the oneness of man and woman, of their cwork, coassimilation, and cooperation in the work of God. This phase of work the Spirit has brought to light and is emphasizing in the church. God is moving, and the church is to move with him.

The growth of the kingdom of God, the development of truth in the world, the manifest supremacy of right over wrong, of truth over error, of good over evil,—the superiority of light in contrast with darkness, furnishes the sublimest spectacle, the grandest epoch in the history of mankind. The latter-day glory is to culminate in such a scene. The work before us furnishes the only practical hope for the race; the only tangible ground for hope of life here and hereafter.

Let us sanctify ourselves and consecrate our temporal means to the storehouse of God that the cause may prosper, that glory may be given to God, and salvation come to man, and we lay up treasures of richness of soul that shall secure to us an eternal inheritance among the sanctified in heaven—on earth. This means a consecration of powers of body, of mind, and of earthly possessions. It also means the perfection of bliss that results from sanctification and perfection of heart and intellect—a perfect life—with the treasures of earth and heaven perfected by the Almighty.

But, let us work and give for the love of God, for the love of truth, and of humanity. God speed the church in the work of internal and external development.

TEMPLE LOT SUIT BEFORE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS, IN ST. LOUIS.

THE cause represented in the courts at the “feet of the judge,” by the “Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,” on the one side, and the “Church of Christ,” on the other side, was called in the United States Court of Appeals, at St. Louis, Missouri, before Justices Caldwell, Sanborn, and Thayre, January 23, 1895, but did not come up for a hearing until the afternoon of the 25th.

The “Reorganized Church” was represented by Attorneys L. Traber and Frank Hagerman, of Kansas City, Missouri, George Edmunds, of Carthage, Hancock county, Illinois; Smith McPherson, of Red Oak, Iowa; P. P. Kelley, of Glenwood, Iowa; and Bishop E. L. Kelley, of Lamoni, Iowa. The “Church of Christ,” was represented by Attorneys C. O. Tichenor, of Kansas City, Missouri, and Col. John N. Southern, of Independence, Missouri.

The editor of HERALD was there, as a sort of witness and coadjutor in a way; and the son of Elder Granville Hedrick, of Independence, was in attendance in a similar capacity, for the “Church of Christ.”

Messrs. Tichenor and Southern made the argument for the “Church of Christ,” appellants, and Messrs. Hagerman and E. L. Kelley for the “Reorganized Church,” appellees; Mr. Southern closing at 1: 30 p. m., of the 26th.

The cause is now with the Court. What the decision may be it is not necessary to state, as it could be only a supposition, at best.

The newspapers of St. Louis and elsewhere have published various statements in regard to the case, all of which vary somewhat from the facts; but in a way showing the interest taken in the cause as presented to the court.

The judges are men of good repute as lawyers and citizens, as men who sit in the United States Courts should ever be; and we expect that they will give the cause that careful investigation that a cause of its importance should have. And, as the case was submitted on the evidence heard in the court below, it would seem to be rested fairly for all concerned. We have now done our part and must be contented to let the matter rest "at the feet of the judge."

ERROR AND APOLOGY.

IN the HERALD for January 16, page 36, the editorial note of a letter from Bro. W. H. Kelley, who wrote from Kirtland, Ohio, will be found, in which letter extract the following language occurs:—

Bro. H. H. Robinson has recently "done up" an M. E. preacher, a big one, according to report, up about East Pharsalia, and has returned home to recuperate and enjoy the boon of victory while watching for another liar to come out of his lair.

This does great injustice to Brn. Kelley, Robinson, and the preacher with whom Bro. Robinson discussed at Pharsalia and who both Brn. Robinson and Rathbun declare to be a pleasant and fair man.

The injustice to Bro. Kelley lies in the fact that he did not write the word "liar" at all; it was "lion;" and the whole reference was a playful one, not intended to be taken in any other than a playful sense in allusion to Bro. H. H. Robinson's return home so soon after the debate.

Bro. G. L. Rathbun, of East Pharsalia, refers to it in a letter published in HERALD for January 30, by reason of which our attention is specially called to it.

We do not wait to hear from Bro. Kelley, for the reason that we know that Bro. Kelley did not use the offensive term, nor intend to use it. The mistake was made here in not reading Bro. Kelley's writing correctly, both in typesetting and proof-reading, for which we apologize and crave pardon of all concerned.

THE following is clipped from the Omaha Bee for January 28:—

PRINTER OF THE MORMON BIBLE DEAD.

PALMYRA, N. Y., Jan. 27.—Major John Gilbert died this evening, aged 93 years. Major Gilbert was known from one end of the country to the other as the man who set up and corrected the proofs of the first Mormon Bible. Prominent Mormons from Utah have made trips here for the purpose of interviewing Mr. Gilbert and visiting what is called Mormon Hill, where Joseph Smith alleged he dug up the golden plates from which the Bible was printed. Mr. Gilbert was until recently the possessor of the first Mormon Bible, disposing of it a short time ago to Hon. Pliny T. Sexton of this place.

Major Gilbert has long been before the public, as one who helped to get the Book of Mormon into print, and it is with regret that we learn of his death. So far as we know Major Gilbert was an unassuming and peace-loving man, one who minded his own business and leaving others to attend to theirs.

In this iconoclastic age the breakers of images are fast overturning legendary and traditional theories and things; and with the passing of Major John Gilbert, it may be, by and by, that it may be denied that the Book of Mormon was not printed by Gentile workmen; so we hope the Saints will remember this notice of his death, and be able to point to it as an acknowledged evidence that the book was so printed.

FROM AUSTRALIA.

BRO. GOMER succeeds in reaching the general public in the report of his letter which we give below:—

LECTURE ON MORMONISM.

According to announcement, Mr. G. R. Wells, Latter Day Saint evangelist, delivered his lecture on "Mormonism" at the Mechanics' Hall on Monday evening last.

After a sacred solo on the clarinet and Bible readings, the lecturer began by correcting the Star's notice wherein he was called a "Mormon evangelist." He was not a Mormon, was not from Utah, and produced papers to show that he resided fifteen hundred miles east of Mormondom, in the heart of the United States of America. His church repudiated the name Mormon. It was the Church of Jesus Christ, composed of Latter Day Saints. The term "Reorganized" being prefixed to distinguish them from the Latter Day Saints of Utah who delighted in the name Mormon. Like the word hell, the word Mormon was once an innocent expression, but the teaching and practice of Brigham Young, as well as popular usage, had changed the meaning of the word. Mormonism now was synonymous with Mohammedanism; it was Brighamism. A hurried historical sketch of the church was given, from its organization in 1830 to 1844, in which period two hundred thousand souls were baptized. Polygamy was unknown then. In the lecturer's estimation there must have been something reasonable and worthy of belief, since whole congregations were baptized in England. After the assassination of the president, Brigham Young, an aspirant spirit, led away about one fifteenth of the church to Utah, where, eight years after (1852) he foisted polygamy on the people.

About this time the true Latter Day Saints were reorganizing in the State of Wisconsin. Polygamy was not the only feature of apostasy; many thought that was the only difference between the two bodies. The lecturer proved five points of difference: 1. Polygamy. 2. Adam-God Worship (the doctrine that Adam is our God). 3. Blood-atonement. 4. Absolute obedience to counsel. 5. Living oracles (the doctrine that they had superseded the Bible and standard church books). Blood-atonement was shown to be a horrible doctrine. The speaker's own grandfather was detained with others in Utah, while traveling through, and sentenced to be shot without a trial. They were liberated by United States soldiers. Even the faithful might be slain by their brethren if it were suspected that they would not hold out faithful.

The lecturer denounced these five doctrines in severest tones. Latter Day Saints had their Judas Iscariot; but that made the true faith no less worthy of respect. When the Reorganized Church sent missionaries to Utah, they were told by Brigham Young that he would not be responsible for their lives for twenty-four hours, but they fearlessly prosecuted their mission. The speaker said: "We were the first church to send missionaries to Utah, and opened the way for others. There are now eleven churches, besides the Mormons in Salt Lake City today. They had also sent a committee to Congress, and materially assisted in the passing of the Edmunds-Tucker law against polygamy. Books, tracts, and pamphlets by the score had been printed against the apostate church. So potent was their work that Utah representatives were "instructed" from headquarters to let the ministers of the Reorganized Church "severely alone." They refused to meet the latter in public debate. The lecturer cited three high court decisions in matters of church property, substantiating his position re the Utah faction being an apostate church. One of these was from the Queen's Bench, Dominion of Canada, in which the Reorganized Latter Day Saints were declared to be a Christian body of believers. Various papers and petitions were cited, showing that public sentiment was changing, and the odium was being placed where it rightly belonged. He admitted that many histories, magazines, and cyclopaedias, contained much unfavorable comment; but the information was always from a Brighamite source. Some progress was being made by the Reorganized Church in getting these articles corrected. They claimed the right to represent themselves, and protested against being represented in the light of Utah Mormonism.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

A BROTHER writes us from Peoria, Illinois, the 28th ult., as follows:—

We now number twenty-six active members. We hold regular meetings every Sunday and at nearly every service there are a few strangers, although it seems hard to create much interest in so large a place. We hand you herewith a clipping from the Peoria Journal which will show you that our president is not altogether idle when not engaged in preaching the word. You will see that the clipping is in answer to assertions made by the General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. here. We find the papers are very liberal and willing to publish articles handed to them by members of our faith, so we feel that in that way we may possibly be able to create an interest after awhile.

Bro. R. Coburn, Blenheim, Ontario, January 22:—

The Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians have been holding a union revival meeting here for the past few weeks. They have an evangelist here named Brown, from Chicago. He tells some great stories about the people he has been the means of converting, especially infidels. The Saints are all well.

Bro. Columbus Scott, writing from Runnells, Iowa, the 29th ult., says:—

Bro. F. A. Smith is at Perry and Angus, Dallas county; Bro. D. M. Rudd at or near Grimes, Polk county; Brn. George Shimel and Jerry Miller at Jenkinsville, in Warren county; with good openings. Bro. W. C. Nirk was at Richland, near Tama at last accounts; Bro. C. E. Hand, where? I preached twice here Sunday and last evening. Weather cold. Try to keep moving.

Bro. I. M. Smith, writing the 25th:—

Am at Chester, Michigan. Am feeling well; have good liberty in presenting the word, have full house, and think there is quite an interest. Some opposition, but nothing out of the usual line—only a few falsehoods by ministers and professors of religion.

Bro. E. F. Shupe wrote from Denver the 29th, of the Chatburn-Johnson discussion:—

Two sessions of the debate between Bro. F. J. Chatburn and Rev. B. F. Johnson are past and the Saints are feeling well at the results. The question of the immortality of the soul was the subject under examination. Mr. Johnson made the poorest defense I ever heard; he did not answer half of Bro. Chatburn's arguments, and Bro. C. got about twice as much in his half hour and was never ready to quit when time was called. Mr. Johnson could hardly fill in his time, and in his last speech he quit before time was called. Two of the sisters are shorthand reporters, began to report the debate and succeeded pretty well till Bro. Chatburn's last speech. Last night one of the reporters said the best stenographer in the country could not have reported him. I don't think I ever heard as much said in thirty minutes. To-night Rev. Johnson begins to affirm the Seventh-day Sabbath, then follow the two church questions. We are perfectly satisfied with results so far.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BY LETTER from Sr. Emma Hailey, Avenue City, Missouri, we learn that Bro. — Evans, of Lucas, Iowa, had preached there and at various points near by to the evident satisfaction of the people. Friends were made for the faith.

Bro. F. A. Atkinson reports well of labors of Brn. A. Kent and A. H. Parsons, of Bank, Maryland. Sr. Parsons is superintendent of their Sunday school, in which she does good work. Bro. Atkinson was taught the faith by his parents in the early days of the church, and never forgot the precepts thus instilled in his mind. With other children of the early Saints he values the truth delivered to him by faithful parents and rejoices in its light.

Bro. L. L. Wight, writing from Beeville, Texas, the 21st ult., reports a successful effort in preaching at Mineral Point, Texas. His announcement at a Baptist meeting so provoked the ire of the minister that he denounced the Saints in unmeasured terms, but which brought out the people to hear Bro. W's reply, resulting in a widespread interest in the faith. Bro. Wight reports himself and family at work, using every means at their command for good.

Three new places have been opened for preaching by Bro. R. M. Maloney; card dated Jay, Oklahoma, the 25th.

Brn. Kaler and Butterworth have baptized three at Taree, and Bro. Henry Broadway "one of best men of New Castle," New South Wales. This the latter wrote from Hamilton, December 23. A number of local brethren are doing good. The outlook was fair, with the usual opposition at work, however, the great difficulty there as elsewhere being that of getting men to accept the truth instead of the creeds, to which they adhere tenaciously.

We dislike to omit good letters from sisters and brethren, but the best we can do in many cases is to summarize them. Sr. M. T. Taylor, Poplar Bluff, Arkansas, writes that, living in portions of the State where no preaching had been done, she had "done what she could" to get the faith before the people. In answer to prayer Bro. C. R. Duncan had visited there and baptized five, leaving others investigating. She asks prayer, also the aid of the ministry in behalf of what she is striving to do.

Bro. E. A. Erwin, writing from Manchester, Texas, January 15, informs us that in the late discussion held at Lydia, Texas, with C. A.

Worley, of the Missionary Baptist Church, Bro. J. D. Erwin gained a complete victory. The propositions included the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, the Reorganized Church and the Baptist Church. Mr. Worley was an able lawyer and an experienced disputant, and had discussed with Brn. H. C. Smith and A. J. Cato in former days, but failed to do more than misrepresent, producing the usual tales written by enemies of the Saints. This Bro. Erwin successfully set aside, while he maintained the scriptural correctness of the faith and proved that the Baptist faith was not in harmony with the Bible and unable to trace its succession from the apostles.

Mr. J. L. Shaw, of Alcona, Michigan, writes an account of the labors of Bro. David Smith in that region and of the opposition encountered. It appears that the local churches were "on the outs" until Bro. Smith began preaching and baptized four and was making friends, when local churchmen united against him and have continued to oppose and misrepresent the work. Bro. Smith is now absent, but Mr. Shaw, who is a friend of truth, is seeing to it that the faith is not misrepresented. He sends for the HERALD and promises to see that fairness is done among the people in behalf of the church. We thank him for this, on behalf of our people, and we thank God for men who love right and are fearless and frank in affirming it. Crowded columns prevent insertion of Mr. Shaw's communication.

Bro. Hiram L. Holt will spend the remainder of the conference year in Southern California, for reasons in which it seems proper to coincide. Those wishing labors may address him at San Bernardino, California. The appointment elsewhere made is with the understanding that it is approved by Bro. J. F. Burton, in charge.

From efforts being made at Peoria, Illinois, one would naturally expect to see the church well established in due time and a growing force for good among the people of that city. A branch was organized some time ago and placed under charge of Bro. A. J. Keck. A late issue of a local paper reaches us containing a lengthy article from Bro. Keck setting forth some phases of the faith of the church. And now comes the Peoria News, of January 26, with a lengthy communication from Bro. F. G. Pitt in affirmation of the faith of the church in contrast to the divisions and errors of modern Christendom. Both articles are temperate in tone and will evidently do good. Success to the brethren. We may at sometime reproduce the articles referred to, if space permits.

Pres. Joseph Smith and Bishop E. L. Kelley arrived in from St. Louis, Missouri, on the 30th, both well and in good spirits. Services were held by them in the city. Local brethren are alive and progress is being made. The city press published extensive references to the Temple Lot Suit and gave fair accounts of the faith of the church and of the causes that have led to public misapprehension of it.

Bro. J. E. Ballinger, at Marshalltown, Iowa, Soldier's Home, desires the prayers of the Saints for relief from an affliction of long standing.

The United States Senate has passed a bill guaranteeing $70,000,000 of the bonds to be issued for construction of the Nicaragua canal.

Sr. Ella Leabo, Independence, Oregon, asks prayers in behalf of her father, who has been ill for many years.

In a late speech before his nobles the Czar of Russia pledged himself to maintain the autocracy. It is to be hoped, however, that his manifest liberality of sentiment will lead to liberal reforms during his reign and the principles of autocracy thereby be undermined and prepared to give way to republican ideas, as they must, in time, inevitably do. The Czar has assigned a large sum for the yearly pensioning of scholars and authors.

Influenza is epidemic in Lyons, France. The death rate is over one hundred weekly. Scarcely a family in the city is exempt from the disease.

With the loss of the Ohio River steamer State of Missouri, the lake steamer Chicora, and the ocean liner Elbe, with hundreds of lives, it seems that the destroyer is indeed upon the waters, doing terrible execution. Steamship and railroad casualties seem at times to run in "streaks" or series.

Bro. R. C. Evans writes from Selkirk, Ontario, that he has been defending the mission of Joseph the Seer and the latter-day work founded by him against the attacks of one Rev. Keffer, of the Campbellite Church, and has won favor among the people in the effort. Two were baptized on the 25th ult., and prospects for church work for the future were good. Bro. Evans bears testimony to the remarkable manner in which he had been sustained thus far and is full of faith and hope and zeal to continue carrying the battle to the gate.

The Decatur district Sunday school association held its regular winter session at Lamoni, February 2 and 3. Interest in the general exercises was good, giving evidence that progress and improvement are to continue. A large delegation was appointed to the April General Convention, at which there will doubtless be a large attendance and the same deep interest that has brought success to this important arm of the service.

OBSTACLES.

WITH pleasure we give to our readers in this issue a letter from Sr. Emily Davis, which has in it the pathos and depth of feeling always accompanying the truth when earnestly spoken from the heart. If it touch other hearts as it has touched our own, there will be responsive throbs from those who love the Lord Jesus Christ, whether they are or are not in harmony with the work undertaken by the Daughters of Zion.

There is one point, however, which Sr. Emily has not adverted to in her letter, which, however, is perhaps chief among the many obstacles barring the way to the reclaiming of thousands of our erring sisters from the path of misery, sin, and eternal ruin upon which they have entered. This is the damnable heresy that there is no possibility of reforming or reclaiming such a woman. And because of this even the ministry of the last dispensation have stood, as it were, doubtful and trembling before this mighty evil—this evil which ungodly men have licensed—as if it must not be fought, must not be mentioned, but must be consigned to the regions of darkness and oblivion. Would that it might be consigned there, if only it could be separated from its human victims!

Another obstacle to be overcome is the different standards of morality which men and women have erected—have in times past subscribed to and are subscribing to to-day. Dare the Saints of God do this? Dare they say the one is fallen—fallen beyond the hope of being reclaimed, but the other—yes the other equally guilty, equally fallen, need not be cast out, he is a man, there is hope and repentance for him?

Among the ten commandments, binding alike upon man and woman, does the seventh form an exception? "Let him that is without sin among you," said Jesus. Not without this particular sin, but without sin "first cast a stone at her." Let us thank God that he has reserved unto himself the right of judgment, but let us beware that while we look upon the sins of others and perhaps brand them as mortal sins for which there is no forgiveness, we are not guiltier in the sight of God than those we consign without the pale of mercy and free forgiveness.

There is yet another prominent barrier in the way. The old song has it,

"Man's inhumanity to man, Makes countless thousands mourn"

Of course our author included both men and women. But the experience of many who read this will lead them to exclaim that upon this score it might well read, "Woman's inhumanity to woman!" We cannot, we think, put this subject in a stronger light than by quoting the words of one of our correspondents. He says: "I have always been impressed with the idea that women as a rule are very much lacking in charity for their own sex who fall. Lately my opinion in this direction has been strengthened, and I tell you I don't take much stock in women as saviors of their sisters. I find those who otherwise are broad minded and charitable, who upon this subject are narrow, uncharitable, and very much afraid of doing anything."

It is perhaps a hard, but perhaps a just judgment. It ought not to be so. We expect to inherit eternal life, and there is in this day, as there was in the days of our Savior, a class most highly esteemed and respected, who yet are preceded in entering the kingdom of God by the publicans and harlots; for, oh! thank God because of it, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth . . . from all sin." Within the pearly gates will be only those "Who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." There are no shades of difference in that cleansing—it is from all sin. If charity be the greatest of God's gifts to man, how shall we enter if this love of God be not in our hearts?

Mothers, how far are those of you who have reared sons responsible for the girls who have been led astray because you failed to teach your boys that God required of them the same purity of thought, word, and deed which he required of their sisters? The same question might be asked of fathers; and let each one of us who has named the name of Christ, be admonished by the words of the apostle declaring that he watched over his flock as one who should give account in the day of judgment. The same measure of responsibility does not rest upon us, but there is a measure of responsibility which none of us can escape. It is a day, thank God, when men and women are beginning to feel this responsibility, not only for their own, but for others. May God intensify the feeling and within his church may it grow until it becomes like a fire shut up in the bones, purifying the heart and consuming out of the life of each Saint the last remnant of selfishness or the disposition to feel that there is inherent in us anything which makes us better than our neighbor save as God's mercy has inwrought it, and his grace helped us to develop it.

HOLLISTER, California.

Dear Sisters:—I went to the Salvation Army tent and listened to one of their leading women talk about their rescue work, their efforts and success in persuading many fallen girls to turn from their ways and lead lives of virtue; and their work of providing them with a home secure from temptation,—the Rescue Home,—where they are taught to work in various branches till they are able to support themselves honorably, then helped to find situations: and I wished our church, too, would take up this work, and try to reach this class of people, and I felt almost sad about it, when the work of the Daughters of Zion flashed through my mind with such force that it almost startled me, as I realized as never before, the magnitude, the beauty, the grandeur of their calling, and felt to raise my heart to God in thanks and adoration. Why, here is work in the very same line, reaching deeper, farther, of a surer foundation, their efforts being to prevent these crimes, beginning with the purity of children and teaching them to remain pure, that there may be no need to reform.

I have been shocked and grieved as I have learned how widespread this social evil (as I understand it) so much written about in our columns has become. There is work—plenty of it—for the Salvation Army, for anything that can be brought to bear against this special sin.

Only last week we were pained to hear that a beautiful young girl of our acquaintance had been tempted, and tried, and had fallen. She is sweet-tempered, quiet, lovable, helpful, just the one to grace a home and make it a happy one, and the archenemy hurled at her his sharpest darts. We believe that men, fiendish almost as their master, deliberately laid a trap for her, and she could not resist their power. Oh! sisters, mothers, Daughters of Zion, pray for this one, that she may turn from her ways and do what she knows to be her duty—obey the gospel.

Last evening the Army people were trying to persuade a young girl to forsake her sins and lead a Christian life, and were using their strongest influence. Some of them had lately been her companions, and they, too, plead with her to come out and stand for the right. But these same vile men were there, their numbers increased to nearly a dozen, using their strongest influence in the opposite direction, their eyes fixed on her face, their gestures, their lips saying, "Do not go." It was a pitiful struggle between right and wrong; she hesitated, almost yielded to the right, but believing she could not stand the temptations that she knew would be thrown around her, she turned away from the virtuous life held out to her. Her early training had not been of the kind that would make her strong against these evils and she had no fortitude to bear her up. She is to be pitied more than blamed. Had she been warned in time against sin, had she been taught to scorn, to loathe wrong, she would have grown to be a lovely woman, for she, too, is bright and of an affectionate disposition.

Daughters of Zion, be not weary in well-doing, or discouraged in your God-given work, but press onward and upward, for yours is a mighty calling, reaching to eternity. Surely there is great need of such work as long as the enemy of souls is employing agents for the purpose of luring young girls to their ruin; as much need to teach our boys, yes more, that they may not become these agents, but our girls must not be neglected, for as long as time is there will always be some willing to be used as instruments for evil and try to lead astray the virtuous ones.

I have three little ones intrusted to my care, and sometimes my courage almost fails when I think of the grave responsibility resting on me. Will I, can I raise them up to a pure manhood and womanhood, teaching them to walk in the narrow way? I realize that only as I live as becometh a Saint, trusting in God for wisdom, and then heeding the admonitions of the Spirit, not forgetting to profit by the counsel and wise instructions we young mothers are so blessed with through our church literature, will I be able to accomplish the desires of my heart in this direction. Surely, with so much being written and taught through the promptings of the Spirit, by those rich in experience and wisdom, the way seems opening for a righteous generation to be raised up to prepare for the coming of the Son of man.

WOODEND, Victoria, Dec. 6.

Editors Herald:—Since writing my last have had to correct misstatements regarding the deputation in three other papers: the Melbourne Argus, the Kyneton Guardian, and Melbourne Punch. All published them, except the latter, and as that is a "funny" paper, I hardly expected it would. However, the editor may profit by it.

Since coming here have done some house to house work in neighboring towns of Macedon and Kyneton, scattering tracts. At the "village settlement" near by, preached once in private house. Attended one of their cottage meetings, but I was treated in an intolerant manner; they were "saved," and had the Spirit. I was accused of "putting the water before the blood," yet was not permitted to explain. Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them," but from this kind of fruit, I doubt the vaunted claim of "saved."

In Woodend on the 3d inst., I delivered a lecture on "Mormonism, what it is, and what it is not," in the Mechanic's Institute. It was advertised in local paper, and today's issue contains a synopsis of lecture. Attendance was small for the size of the town, yet not a failure. Was interrogated at the close by Bro. Wight's whilom foe, whom he answered in the local paper. He appeared anxious to have a similar debate with me (in print).

Have been abundantly cared for by our Bro. Leyland who, with his wife, show their faith by a willingness to assist the work in this locality in a material way. He sends me to Bendigo, where I go this week.

Have received the sad news that Bro. Burton Wooley, of the Hastings branch, dropped dead in his boat while fishing, in Western Port Bay.

G. R. WELLS.

CAMP CREEK, Iowa, Jan. 23.

Editors Herald:— "The righteousness of God" is still revealed in the gospel to every humble soul who believes and obeys its truths, if they make a reasonable effort to live "godly in Christ Jesus," though like Paul of old, they may have their enemies, even in the Church of God. But it should be the desire and prayer of every true Saint that God in his "wisdom and love might extend mercy to all those who, after having known the truth, have so far forgotten the teaching and example of Christ as to permit enmity to dwell in their minds and hearts. Surely they need pity, as they are the losers, and must suffer the punishment of God unless they repent. However, I am glad to say that as a rule the Saints are a Godfearing, loving, obedient, charitable, and good people. I believe that in real godliness the Saints as a body have no superiors. Thirty-three years as a believer and over twenty years as an active minister of the gospel enable me to know fairly well the people among whom he has worshiped and labored. The writer is not in the habit, as he views it, of overestimating anything; yet if the editors think any of the statements in this letter are extravagant, they are at liberty to expunge the objectionable words, if they think the remainder of the letter is worth publishing.

This district has in it much of that religious element who talk so much about being "justified, sanctified, saved, and satisfied;" and while they no doubt desire to be and think they are God's peculiar people, I have learned by experience that it is extremely hard to get them to even listen to the gospel of Christ as it is taught in the Bible. I have read something about the "Dark Ages" when the Bible was kept chained to the wall and when only the priests were permitted to read it; and yet I think that in some respects at least the condition of many people is worse to-day than it was then, for now the Bible is within the reach of even the poorest family in the land, and is seen on the center tables and shelves, and cannot be destroyed or chained to the wall by those who might desire to do so; though it now seems to me that the hireling shepherds have succeeded in effectually chaining the minds of their devotees to the "traditions of the elders." One may, if he can get the opportunity, read to them some of the plainest statements found in the sacred book or preach in plainness and power the truths of the gospel in their hearing; and yet they have been so continually taught that every word must be spiritualized, that it seems very difficult for them to understand that the word of God has just the same meaning now that it had when it was spoken or penned by inspiration. It is hard now to make people believe that God said what he meant or meant what he said. To my mind this latter condition or chaining is worse than the first. Surely the time is here when "darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the [minds of the] people." Nothing but the power of God, the truth and the light of the Holy Spirit, can reach the heart and penetrate the mind and convert the soul, or break the chains of darkness and liberate the soul from the grasp of the enemy.

How we should rejoice in God and thank him for the light and truth of the restored gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation!" O Lord, soften the hearts of the people, and give thy servants and Saints more favor with God and man, and richly endow thy ministers with wisdom; goodness, love, faith, perseverance, and the Holy Spirit, that they may be enabled to fully accomplish thy work in thine own time! Amen.

The work in the Galland's Grove district is moving along fairly well, all things considered. When last heard from Elder J. F. McDowell was at Eagle Grove sick, but I presume is well before this; at least I hope he is. Elder C. J. Hunt has been busy with gospel work in the northern part of the district. The following local elders and priests have been quite active this winter and good is being done by them: W. W. Whiting, J. T. Turner, A. Jackson, E. Ford, J. M. Baker, John H. Young, R. Wight, and N. V. Sheldon. Without doubt there are others who are working just as zealously for the advancement of the truth, but I am not in possession of the necessary information, and therefore cannot mention them at this time. I am thankful to both ministers and members for their efforts to sustain the good work.

While holding meetings at Arion in connection with Bro. J. M. Baker, Elder Ira Goff showed his willingness to assist in the good work by acting as janitor and helping to defray the incidental expenses. Bro. Robert Ballantyne and family, who live at least ten miles from any branch, were glad to make the writer welcome at their home while he was holding meetings in their neighborhood, and did everything they could to make our meetings a success. At this point a few seemed interested, as they attended all our meetings and were willing to receive and read printed matter. It is to be hoped that the seed sown will bring forth fruit to the glory of God and the salvation of souls. At this writing I am staying with Bro. M. B. Skinner and family and holding meetings in the schoolhouse near by, where there is some interest but not as much as we would like to see. Perhaps the fault is with the preacher.

O Lord most dear, our heavenly King,

How little do we know
Of all thy wisdom, love, and power,
Revealed the sun below.

But in the gospel we have found
Thy will revealed more clear
Than in the precepts men have formed
And taught to people here.

Hasten the day, the glorious day,
When all shall know thy will;
And rich and poor, and small and great,
Shall haste to do thy will.

When the Spirit of God shall rest on all,
With glory all be crowned
And we shall know as we are known;
When all our Lord have found.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 23.

Editors Herald:—Just in from Springfield, the late seat of war. The battle closed at 9:30 p. m., January 22, after an eight-night or sixteen-hour fight. How many dead there were we were unable to learn, though we were assured quite a number of the enemy were wounded, some mortally. If it be true that they are "wholly mortal," how any of them will survive is a mystery. "Truth is mighty, who can stay it?" says the poet. Echo answers "Who?" The result of the late battle answers, "Not a Watkins, for he is laid in the tomb forever." Victory for us on all propositions, so say the people.

G. M. L. WHITMAN.

ROCKLAND, Maine, Jan. 23.

Editors Herald:—On January 3 I commenced a series of meetings on Little Deer Isle. The house was well filled with attentive listeners. I met with them through storm and sunshine and preached twelve sermons, and baptized three. Some who for years have been hard against the church are now among the friends and well-wishers of our cause. God bless the people. I also preached seven times at West Ellsworth. Some will obey there after awhile. The Saints are feeling splendid and are making friends to the cause.

Some said: "J. C., you beat the Devil." I answered, "That's just what I'm trying to do, and God is going to do that, too."

Dear Herald, I am so glad when you come to me, for you tell us so much good news. How glad I was to hear that the gospel ship, Evanelia, had arrived safely at her destination. May our heavenly Father guide her with safety from island to island, with those noble missionaries who for the cause of Christ are making such sacrifice. May God bless the far-off lonely ones.

We have snow, rain, ice, cold, fog, and sunshine on the coast of Maine this winter. I leave on Saturday's boat for Cranberry Isles, once more to try my gospel powder.

Yours truly,
J. C. FOSS.

TUNNEL HILL, Ill., Jan. 21.

Editors Herald:—The debate which has taken place between Bro. T. C. Kelley and W. R. Lee, of the Missionary Baptist Association, at their chapel, about four miles north of Tunnel Hill, January 15, lasted five days, with two and a half days on each proposition. The propositions were, Resolved that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the Church of Christ. Resolved, that the Missionary Baptist Church is the Church of Christ. In the discussion of the first proposition Bro. Kelley endeavored to show that this church had come forth in fulfillment of prophecies; also that it was in harmony with the Bible in organization, doctrine, practice, etc., and that the ministers must be called of God as was Aaron; that they must be in possession of the same Spirit to enable them to preach the same gospel; that he who was in possession of that Spirit would be enabled to perform the same works as they did anciently; that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever: and that he will give of his Spirit now and enable his children to possess the same powers as in former years.

He showed that the church organized by Christ was accepted of him as long as it remained on the rock, but when it got off the rock and went into apostasy, it ceased to be the Church of Christ; that the church was driven into the wilderness to remain there twelve hundred and sixty years; that when she came out she would have the same organization as when she went into the wilderness; that the glory of the sun would be above her and a crown of twelve stars on her head, etc. He showed that Elias must first come and restore all things, and that the gospel was one of the all things spoken of; that the angel had flown through the midst of heaven and committed the everlasting gospel unto the children of men again; that the angel had spoken to the young man telling him that Jerusalem should be inhabited as a town without walls; that to-day the Jews are returning and rebuilding the old waste places, the "desolations of many generations."

I cannot give a minute account, but suffice it to say that Bro. Kelley was well equipped and did his work nobly and honorably as a minister of the gospel would. But, upon the negative side,—well, it was a total failure as far as argument was concerned. He would hardly try to reply to any of Bro. Kelley's argument, but took delight in trying to find faults in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, which was out of order; but he was allowed to bring them in and kill time. One of his most noted objections was that a prophet could not die out of Jerusalem. (Luke 13: 33.) Therefore "Old Joe," as he would say, was out of harmony with the Bible as he did not die at Jerusalem. But this was made very plain to the people by showing them that many prophets had died out of Jerusalem, and that that prophet referred to was Christ;—that he should not die out of Jerusalem.

Another objection was the amount of brass it would have taken to have made the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. He confounded the plates taken from Laban with those from which the book was translated, and from his mathematical calculation obtained a piece of brass six inches square and nineteen and one half feet long. "Quite a miracle for Joseph Smith to carry it." But this was made plain by showing from "Baldwin's Ancient America" that the people that settled in this country understood a phonetic system of writing, and did not write altogether in Hebrew. This was one of his favorite objections, as he thought shorthand was a modern invention. Another objection was that the language of Jared and his brother was not confounded. These with many more objections were explained away by Bro. Kelley to the understanding of all intelligent and unbiased people.

But O, that hole in Jared's boat! The poor fellow would get on board almost every speech, and with no pump to pump the water out, he would go down with all on board.

When the Baptist Church was under discussion, Mr. Lee took up the first day showing that Christ set up a church, which was not denied by anyone, as Bro. Kelley informed him. The next day was spent by the affirmative trying to show that the two witnesses (Rev. 11) that are to arise were communion and baptism. Bro. Kelley read this to his heart's content, using the words "communion and baptism" where the witnesses were spoken of. This only left him one half day to set up his church and bring in historical evidence, notwithstanding Bro. K. had been telling him all the time that time was precious and asking him to set up his church or he would bring something out for him, which he did. Bro. K. traced his church through the Novatians, Waldenses, Wickliffites, German Baptist Philadelphia Association, etc., showing that part of those societies practiced infant baptism, sprinkling, etc., showing that they worshiped a God without body, parts, or passions; showing also that their teachings were unscriptural, and that the Missionary Baptist Church did not believe their teaching; but that to make out succession they must claim all with their defects. He compared him to the Irishman who wished to marry the rich widow in slavery times, who owned negroes. "When the minister asked him if he took the woman whom he held by the hand to be his lawful and wedded wife," he said, "Yes, begorra, and the negroes too." So Mr. Lee, in order to make out "succession," must take the churches before-mentioned with all their practices, good or bad, to prove identity as being the true successor of early Christianity.

Mr. Lee spent his last two speeches in reading historical extracts from D. B. Ray's "Baptist Succession." In his last speech he got so near out of anything to talk about that he had to go back and rehearse that old threadbare tale of Joseph Smith walking on the water. But he added a new flavor to it: he said that when Joe (as he called Joseph all through the discussion) fell through, he jumped up and said, "Just like Peter;" that when faith failed him he began to sink.

At the close I invited Mr. Lee or any other minister to come to our church and preach for us. Arrangements had been made for us to preach at their church once a month, and as I was Bro. K's moderator, I took the liberty of making the announcement. When Mr. Lee heard this he informed his Baptist brethren that they had gone beyond Baptist rules, that the house should not be let out without the vote of the members. So we called in our appointment until they could take a vote. Whether this says no preaching there or not, I am unable to say. It had been said by some of the Baptist brethren that the discussion was not a fair test, as the disputants were not of equal talent. It was suggested that they furnish William Throgmorton or Mr. Danbury to defend their doctrine and for the Latter Day Saints to furnish a man and have the discussion at Tunnel Hill. I took the liberty to inform them publicly that we were ready to put Bro. K. against Mr. Throgmorton or Mr. Danbury, or any man they would bring.

Everything went off pleasantly, and I think good was done for the cause of Christ. A vote of thanks was given to those who had kindly and hospitably entertained us while among them. May the victory won be of great and lasting good to the cause which we sustain.

In gospel bonds,

COURTS, Montana, Jan. 14.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from a trip to South Boulder. Three gave their names for baptism. I preached ten times, also eight times at Willow Creek. Had full houses all the time, good order, and interest. Saints are feeling fine and determined. Expect to organize a branch at Willow Creek soon. Was called home to marry my nephew, hence my trip was cut short. Our Sunday school at Reese Creek is moving along fine. We will adopt constitution and by-laws of General Association soon and thus be a part of the big school. We had a fine time Christmas; had a tree, cross, nice programme, Santa Claus, and crowded house.

We hope to be able to open the work in Bozeman next month; the place seems to be getting ripe, as there are several inquiring after truth. Bro. Anthony has gone south to Idaho Falls, Idaho. The foxes were barking in a couple of places down there and he went down to see if the fur is worth taking. R. J. don't make much noise, but he makes them hunt their dens.

We have had a fine winter so far.

J. H. WELLS.

ONEKAMA, Mich., Jan. 23.

Editors Herald:—We are trying to do what we can to help on the cause in Michigan. The weather has been against us somewhat of late, but previous to that we have had a nice winter. We come across one now and then who has had parents who belonged to the Saints in the Seer's lifetime, and who are in the belief of the true gospel so far as they understand it. Bro. J. H. Peters and self passed through this part about a month ago on our way to organize a couple of branches, and we put in one sermon with the promise that one would return and give them a few discourses in the near future. One gentleman was there whose parents died in the faith, and what little he knew of it then, though young, stuck right by him until now. He told the neighbors that that was the only true gospel.

According to promise I returned and have given them more discourses, but I found that the gentleman mentioned had died, but while he was sick his whole talk was about the true gospel. He died without the privilege of obeying it; but gave the people to understand that he would have the privilege to obey, and of course, on my return an understanding was desired by many to know concerning the hope hereafter, etc. I explained, as best I could.

One strange thing occurred before the man died, which was on this wise. Said he, "Now to prove to you that this gospel is true, I will count three, and you will see a bright light come on the wall; now look! One, two, three;" and the light appeared on the wall. There were four persons in the room at the time; his wife, her mother, and brother, and another person, who testify to the truth of seeing the bright light on the wall. "Now," said he, "I will count three and you will see the light disappear; one, two, three;" and it disappeared.

Those people say they think the gospel he believed in must be true, whatever it is; and I am trying to explain it to them and that community, but as usual, I hear the old, old stories too often told to meation here, together with "I won't go to hear them;" "Don't you go;" "We ought to close the school-house against them;" "They run all over the Bible;" "They don't believe in the Bible;" and, "Just wait until they preach a little more, you'll see." We are gaining ground wherever we go.

Bro. Peters and I organized the Joyfield and Burnham Saints into a branch; also those of Inland and Lake Ann. Several other places need organizing; several are coming into the church. I expect to visit my people in Canada soon, whom I have not met for years.

In good hope,

J. J. CORNISH.

MILTON, Fla., Jan. 16.

Editors Herald:—Please publish in the Herald that if any of the Saints should look over their old Heralds and see if they can find the minutes of the last conference held at Eureka branch to about six or seven years ago, they will oblige by sending copy.

ELDER ED POWELL.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 28.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps a few items in regard to the Decatur district would be of some interest to some of your readers. This district embraces eleven counties. Eight of them are in Iowa, and the other three are in Missouri. We have twelve branches, including about eighteen hundred membership. Lamoni branch alone numbers over one thousand.

This last conference year we have had two General Conference appointees; namely, Brn. J. S. Snively and William Thompson, who have labored faithfully and done much good. The faithful labors of these brethren may never be known to the church, but the eye that never sleeps will not pass them by unnoticed. Our local ministry have done some excellent work. I am afraid to commence to name them lest I should overlook some worthy ones. Bro. H. N. Snively has been more than a local minister this last year, having offered to go wherever sent in the district. He has done some very acceptable work and come considerably to the front as a minister. Bro. H. A. Stebbins contributed much towards making our conference at Allendale very interesting last June. The well-known war horse, Bro. R. M. Elvin, has not been idle by any means, although confined to local work by the long continued sickness of his wife. He has done some effective work for the church. May the good Master remember the wife of his youth and enable him to take a more extended field in the near future. We have had valuable help from Bro. J. R. Lambert, especially in the Leon branch, where he has done good service this winter. Possibly because he held a debate there about four years ago with Elder Watkins, of the Christian Advent Church, he seems to be in more demand there than any of our elders. We have had no more willing and cheerful laborer than Bro. J. W. Gillen this last year, always willing, and he made himself ready when we needed help for district work.

We have been relieved from some care and anxiety by the ability of the brethren of the Lucas and Cainsville branches in taking care of themselves under their circumstances. The brethren of all the other branches have no less endeared themselves to me by their coöperation in seeking to maintain the work and bring it up to a higher standard than it has ever before attained. In looking over the past I have no fault to find with any, but trust that the experiences of the past may prove useful to us all in our future ministerial labors for our heavenly Father and his truth.

I repeat the sentiments I expressed in a letter to the Herald about three years ago, in regard to the Saints who are coming to locate in and around Lamoni, that they should transact business on business principles with Saints the same as with sinners. The old maxim still remains good, that "it won't hurt an honest man to watch him, and a rogue needs it."

I still see the necessity for an advisory committee being appointed here and indorsed by the church, that those coming to locate in and around here may confer with and receive needed advice before investing their means, especially those with limited capital.

Doctrine and Covenants section 107, paragraph 11: "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me."

I have learned some things since I have had charge of this district that I did not know before, and one of them is that one is often placed in a false light and at the same time one can scarcely help himself. For instance, a request comes from some branch to send them an able elder with the statement not to send Brother so-and-so because he will not do any good, and stating their preference which elder they think would be suitable. Of course it would be no use to send the one that would do no good, so you make the best selection you can from the available elders or priests as the case may be; then the unpopular ones feel slighted, and that you are partial, and have favorites; when the real facts in the case are that you would to God that all the brethren were popular and in demand wherever a minister is needed. It is not a pleasant thing to tell a brother who thinks he is a preacher that they have no use for him for some of the occasions that we have mentioned. While all may be suited to labor in some places, all are not suitable for every place, so while very often we have little choice in the case, we stand censured in somebody's eyes all the same, and if you commence to excuse yourself for the work you are doing, then some one takes it for granted that you feel a guilty conscience, and you make matters worse. So the only safe course that I have learned is to move right along and do the best you can and be satisfied with the silent approval of the Master that speaks peace to the soul, without which I am persuaded I long since would have grown weary and laid down my ministerial weapons, and sought rest and comfort in some other occupation; but with the personal evidences I have of the truth of the latter-day work I feel determined to be found in the ranks of the noble men and women whom I know are in the church battling for the triumph of the truth.

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

EUSTIS, Neb., Jan. 23.

Editors Herald:—I left O'Fallon's Bluffs in Lincoln county on the 7th and came to Stoddard, where I preached to the people once; thence to North Platte and preached once, thence to Cottonwood Springs and held one week's meeting with very profitable results; thence to this place, where the interest seems very good. I will hold meetings here over Sunday the 27th, then go to my home in Kansas to make some provision for the family and do a little ministerial work near home for a few days; then return to North Platte and Cottonwood Springs, where I expect to water the seed already sown. The work is onward, steadily progressing. God has blessed me wonderfully beyond my expectations, through all my exposure, and colds, and coughing, at times when ready to give up; yet I am on my feet and ready to do battle for the Master. Prospects are good.

Yours in bonds,

GEO. W. SHUTE.

EAGLE GROVE, Iowa, Jan. 23.

Editors Herald:—Eight hours sleep is the required rest time for the writer, but latter part of September and October last this "regulation" was broken in upon and brought on a semi-insomnia trouble, and continued labor in church work with a sprinkling of facial neuralgia has at last resulted in nature calling a halt for a time. When I came here to enter upon discussion I was feeling poorly, but not an hour had elapsed after arrival until, as I believe, in answer to prayer, did I feel a remarkable change physically for the better, and during the discussion I was blessed. Tarrying here for a few days for special discourses, and waiting also for certain mail, I laid me down to rest. To-day I venture homeward, as the doctor advises rest for a time.

Hopefully,

J. F. MCDOWELL.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—I am holding meetings nightly in this place, with crowded houses so far; and expect to continue at least the balance of this week, and longer if the interest keeps up anything like it is now. The brethren here and at Keb have assisted nobly in carrying on the good work at this place. I preached last night north of here by invitation, where a protracted effort is being made to save souls, on the undenominational route. How they will succeed, may not be fully determined until the great judgment day. However, I bear them witness, that they "have a zeal."

J. C. CRABB.

HILLSDALE, Wis., Jan. 19.

Editors Herald:—I am here at work. We have good crowds and they seem anxious to hear the gospel. I have been here but a few days. Had an invitation to go to another schoolhouse, but cannot at this time, but promise to go some other time. O, I wish there were more laborers to meet the demand! I have been battling for the truth at Twin Lakes and Tillinghast for over two weeks past. Some there are near the kingdom. I will have to return there next week to look after some branch business, and perhaps baptize some; I will then have to go to Valley Junction to look after the affairs of the branch and attend the conference there February 2 and 3. Then I think to spend the balance of the conference year in Monroe county if not otherwise advised or led, as there are several places open for preaching.

It is nice weather here and good sleighing, so the folks have no excuse for not coming to church. I hope next year we can have about four elders in Northern Wisconsin. There is a large field here. May the Lord send more laborers into the vineyard is my prayer. The work is moving nicely along in Wisconsin. Speed to the work in every place.

THE EMBLEMS—WHO MAY CONVEY THEM?

BY W. W. BLAIR.

AS THE records of the church now stand, and as the usages of the church from 1830 to 1844, and from 1852 to 1893 are known, also as is shown in the history of the primitive Christians, a serious and irreconcilable conflict has existed in the Reorganized Church since the annual conference of 1893 in respect to who may, and who may not, convey the emblems, the bread and the wine, when the sacrament of the Lord's supper is administered. (See minutes of conference for 1893.) This conflict should not be; and it is with the purpose of discussing this matter, of conveying the emblems, in the sight of the facts of Scripture and history that I now write, hoping thereby to aid in setting it in order as the Lord wills it to be done.

In the Herald for 1890, page 55, the editor (the President of the Church) presents us with the following question and answer:—

Q.—Is it lawful for the elder or priest, in administering the sacrament, to call upon the teacher or deacon to pass the emblems to the communicants?

A.—If there is no priest present, the teacher or deacon may assist the elder or priest,—not in the blessing the emblems, but in the passing them. However, should there be objections to such action among the members, the elder or priest blessing the emblems should pass them—trouble is unseemly.

Two years later, in Herald for 1892, page 470, the following question is found, and answer given by the same editor:—

Q.—Has a teacher the right to pass the sacrament to the congregation, when asked by the presiding officer to do so?

A.—Yes. If occasion requires; no more available officer being present.

Ten years prior to the latter date the same editor presented this question and answer, Herald for December 15, 1882:—

Q.—Has a teacher or deacon the right to bear the emblems and pass them to the partakers at sacrament services?

A.—Yes, if necessary in assisting the priest, as it is stated that they shall assist the priest in his duties.

In the month following (January, 1883), on page 17 of Herald, the editor defends the above teaching after the following very consistent manner:—

PRIEST AND DEACON.

The answer that we gave in the Herald for December 15, respecting the deacon assisting the priest, has drawn upon us letters and articles from several of the brethren, who call the answer in question, one of whom goes so far as to write: "I suppose you will at once see the mistake you have made and correct it."

All we have to add is this, that the law to which these various brethren cite us, states in reference to the duties of a priest that he is to assist the elder in all the duties laid down "if occasion requires." One of these duties is to take the lead of "meetings in the absence of the elder." The very same provision is made in regard to the teacher, for "he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires." In this it must be clearly observable that when the occasion may demand in the absence of the elder, the priest who may be in charge may be assisted in his duties by the deacons; and in such circumstances the only question that may possibly rise is to cavil about whether the invoking the blessing on the bread and wine is the administration of the sacrament, or whether the passing of it is the administration of it. We believe in a correct rendition and teaching of the law, and the revelations; but we dislike to see overstrained construction of any law. Section 17, paragraph 22, gives us to understand what is called in the law the administration of the sacrament. "And the elder or priest shall administer it; and after this manner shall he administer it: he shall kneel with the church and call upon the Father in solemn prayer, saying," etc. The form of the prayer follows, and not a word of teaching as to how the bread and wine are to reach the members; whether the officer is to take the plate and cup, and sitting in a convenient place have everyone come to him and take of them as he holds them for their acceptance; or whether he shall carry them to them in person each one in succession, or pass the plate and cup from hand to hand. The teaching of Moroni is the same, and the testimony there given is that they "administered it according to the teaching of Christ." Precisely the same formula is given; and no instruction as to who will pass it. The relation of the taking of the sacrament at Christ's visit to this land, by Nephi is simply that Christ brake and gave to his disciples and they to the multitude, he gave them the wine and they to the multitude. He told them then that one should be ordained who should break bread and bless it, and give it unto the "people of my church." But no further instruction as to how the bread, or wine should be passed.

The church has met in the various branches and the elders have usually contented themselves with blessing the emblems, and have called priests to the duty of passing them to the people, if the congregation was large several of them; and we believe that when the priest should be left in charge, or be under the necessity of administering the sacrament, when no elder is present, he may with equal propriety as he might act in passing the emblems to the people when blessed by the elder, call a deacon to his aid "if necessity requires."

It should be borne in mind by those who have volunteered to teach us the revelations on this point, that we distinctly stated in answer to the question that "if necessity required" the deacon might do so and so. If there is no necessity, and can be none, no possible harm can come to the law. David ate the shewbread contrary to law, the disciples violated the Sabbath in plucking the ears of corn and rubbing them in their hands, and Jesus plead the necessity as the law and it is still good law.

Now, inasmuch as the President of the Church is called of God to be the chief teacher of the revelations given to the church (D. C. 43: 2; 122: 1, 2; 23: 3), and to be the leading instructor and counselor of the Saints and the ministers (D. C. 19: 1; 87: 2, 3, 5; 104: 42; 105: 7, 12; 107: 13, 18; B. M. Mosiah 9: 9; 11: 12; Alma 3: 9, etc., etc.), should not great weight be given to his teachings; his opinions and counselings, in respect to doctrine, government, ministration, order, and everything pertaining to the building up of the Church of God? And when he has repeatedly, and publicly, and uniformly taught on a given subject, are not his teachings more likely to be correct than those coming from other officers of the church? And when there are conflicts in opinions and judgments and decisions occurring in the church, whose teachings are to be preferred? Whose are safest to trust? Whose should be first honored and observed? And when the President of the Church is laid under the highest, weightiest responsibilities to God and man, is it at all surprising that he feels deeply humiliated when his teachings and ministrations are antagonized and rendered void and condemnable?

That President Joseph Smith was justified in teaching that the act of conveying the emblems to the communicants is not necessarily any part of its administration as commanded in the law in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22, 23, is seen in the fact (1) that the said law is silent upon that point; (2) that the usages of the church under the "choice seer" for fourteen years, and under his successor for thirty-three years, show that even lay members, in crowded congregations, passed the emblems from and to each other; (3) that the Christians of the first three centuries after Christ frequently, and generally, received the emblems directly from the hands of deacons, as the history of those times shows; and (4), from the fact that each communicant at last, and finally, conveys the emblems to himself or herself—all of which shows that administering the emblems, and conveying them to the communicant, are two different acts, as has been repeatedly and uniformly taught by President Joseph Smith. And shall not the President of the Church lead in these, as in all other doctrinal matters? And is it not wisest and best for the Saints to “hear and heed” the counsels, and directions, and interpretations of law, given by the first and highest officer of the church? Has the Lord called and set apart others to regulate and lead and teach, officially, the chief leader and teacher of the church? Inasmuch as the Saints—ministers and all—profess that the Lord has called and set apart President Joseph Smith to “lead” the church—each and all of the church—is it not safest and best to let him lead, and not attempt to lead him? Think of it.

In further proof that others than elders or priests may convey the emblems when the sacrament is administered, I add the following historical facts, and commend them to the prayerful consideration of all in any way concerned in that matter. Here is what Moshem says:

The prayers of the first Christians were followed by oblations of bread, wine, and other things; and hence both the ministers of the church and the poor, derived their subsistence. Every Christian who was in an opulent condition, and indeed every one according to his circumstances, brought gifts and offered them, as it were, to the Lord. Of the bread and wine presented in these offerings, such a quantity was separated from the rest as was required in the administration of the Lord's supper; this was consecrated by certain prayers pronounced by the bishop alone, to which the people assented by saying, Amen. The holy supper was distributed by the deacons.—Church History, part 2, chap. 4, par. 7.

In Buck's Theological Dictionary this is said on the same subject (see Eucharist):—

And then the bishop or presbyter [elder], having sanctified the elements by a solemn benediction, broke the bread, and delivered it to the deacons, who distributed it to the communicants, and after that the cup.

Justin Martyr, one of the most intelligent, faithful, and experienced of the Christian writers after the apostles, has this to say on the matter in question:—

There is then brought to the president of the brethren bread and a cup of wine mixed with water; and he taking them, gives praise and glory to the Father of the universe, through the name of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, and offers thanks at considerable length for our being counted worthy to receive these things at his hands. And when he has concluded the prayers and thanksgivings, all the people express their assent by saying, Amen. This word Amen answers in the Hebrew language to so be it. And when the president has given thanks, and all the people have expressed their assent, those who are called by us deacons give to each of those present to partake of the bread and wine mixed with water over which the thanksgiving was pronounced, and to those who are absent they carry away a portion.—First Apology of Justin, chap. 65.

Justin repeats the same facts in chapter 67 of same book, as may be seen by consulting the text, and as may be found in “The Christian Sabbath,” by C. Scott, page 101. His statements are fully confirmed by Bingham's “Antiquities of the Christian Church,” chapter 20.

Eusebius, who is said to be the chief of church historians, states in book 7, chapter 9, Ecclesiastical History, that at times and in some places communicants standing at the table . . . received the sacred elements . . . of the body and blood of our Lord and Savior Christ; and a footnote on the passage adds this:—

In the primitive church the faithful communicants came to the altar with their hands carefully washed, and when they were about to receive the body of our Lord, they stretched out their right hands.

These last extracts are in general harmony with the teaching of President Joseph Smith, January 13, 1883, as before quoted, which please read again. Indeed, all the historical quotations presented in this article, as also the usages of the church, from 1830 to 1844, and from 1857 to 1893, are found to be in essential harmony with President Smith's teachings on the matters in question up to the Annual Conference of 1893. And is not all this suggestive of the important fact that President Smith is, by the grace of God, competent and qualified to “set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom,” as provided for in the word of the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5, and elsewhere?

And is it not best for all concerned that the church shall teach and build in harmony with the pertinent facts of history, the usages of the church from 1830 to 1893, and the interpretation of church law given repeatedly and uniformly by President Smith, and thus avoid conflict with primitive church history and the usages had in the church from 1830 to 1893? In a word, is it not wisest, safest, and best, to follow the counsel, advice, teaching, and direction of the chief leader of the church in all matters pertaining to church work? Is it not best to follow this chief leader in all church work unless it is known he leads contrary to the law and order of God and the ruling precedents of the church? Is it not probable, nay, is it not almost certain, that by the grace of God, his foresight, and insight, and spiritual perception touching all matters of doctrine, church government, church polity, and usage are, and should be, by virtue of his office and calling, superior to that of any other officer in the church?

From my personal knowledge of President Joseph Smith's administration from April 6, 1860, to the present, I am prepared to say that his counsels and instructions in respect to the gathering, locating Saints in large bodies when and where lands were cheap and available, also in respect to building chapels without incurring vexatious debts; ordaining high priests strictly as provided in Doctrine and Covenants 17:17; also the ordination of high priests and filling up the high council; the ordination of seventies; also in respect to districts and district presidents; the distribution and the management and disposition of church properties; the right of presidency in branches, districts, and conferences; locating the Order of Enoch and the business center of the church; the management of the Board of Publication and the literary concerns of the church until of late—all of these and more have been found wise and prudent, time and experience fully vindicating him, as a large majority of the Saints heartily admit. This is just as might be expected of him from the position to which the Lord and the church has called him; and these facts should inspire renewed confidence in the safety and uprightness of his leadership, not only in respect to his teachings concerning the administration of the sacrament, but in all matters that legitimately pertain to his office and calling in the Church of God. Had the ministry and the Saints been more ready to seek his counsel in respect to all matters falling under his official watch-care and presidency, and then been prompt and faithful in honoring and upholding it, the church, including the conferences, would have been spared many needless, hurtful conflicts, far greater unity would have obtained, and far greater progress would have been made in all the interests and departments of the church.

God and his Saints have made President Joseph Smith the visible "head" of the church on earth—its first minister, teacher, and leader—therefore the law of the Lord, the order of church government, and the plainest dictates of reason, demand that the church "let him lead" in all matters of church doctrine, church policy, and church government.

In conclusion, I suggest that, to officially "administer" the sacrament as provided for in Doctrine and Covenants 17:22, 23, is to act, manage, direct, or superintend in that service just in the "manner" set forth in the commandment. He who is called to "administer" the government of a nation, State, county, city, or an estate, calls to his help others as needs and occasions demand; yet he is the administrator, as President Smith has taught from the first and repeatedly.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED.
NO. 4.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

THE "STICK OF JOSEPH."

HAVING shown that a "sealed book" would come forth, that the truth would "spring out of the earth," and that "Ariel," of "the city where David dwelt," should "speak out of the ground" just before Palestine should become a "fruitful field" and the Jews should begin to return to it; and having shown also that the Book of Mormon (and the work connected with it) literally fulfills those prophecies, both as to the manner and the time of its advent, I shall now try to show you that the people of whom the Book of Mormon gives a history are the very people that the Bible says shall inherit this land—the land of America.

On page 231 of the Book of Mormon you will find this:—

And Aminadi was a descendant of Nephi, who was the son of Lehi, who came out of the land of Jerusalem, who was a descendant of Manasseh, who was the son of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt by the hands of his brethren.

Lehi was the leader of this Israelite colony from Jerusalem, and the writers of the Book of Mormon are his descendants; hence of the tribe of Joseph, the son of Jacob. Now, that the tribe of Joseph is to have a history, and that it is to be brought to light and placed with the history of the tribe of Judah, just before the Lord gathers Israel and makes them "one nation," is proven by Ezekiel 37:15-23:—

The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these? say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwellingplaces, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

In ancient times people wrote upon strips of parchment or skins of animals. Hitchcock in his "Analysis of the Bible" says that the parchment upon which the Pentateuch was written was sixty-six feet and six inches long and two feet and two inches wide. Those strips of parchment were kept rolled upon sticks, in order to keep them straight and to preserve them from wear and tear, and were called "rolls," "books," "histories;" and here in Ezekiel they are called (very properly, too,) "sticks."

One of those "sticks," or histories, is to be for Judah and his companions, and evidently has reference to the Bible, that being the history of the tribe of Judah. But the other "stick" is for Joseph and is to be brought forth by the Lord and put with the Bible, the "stick" of Judah, just before Israel is gathered. That those "sticks" represent histories is evident from the fact that he is told to write upon them for those two tribes. Then the Lord says:—

I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

Notice here that the stick of Joseph is to be "in the hand of Ephraim," at the time the Lord does this work. The two "sticks" are to be one in the hands of the Lord—one in their testimony, one in their teaching, one in doctrine. But why not take the "stick of Judah" and put it with the "stick of Joseph?" Because the Lord knew the people would be in possession of the "stick of Judah" at the time the other would be brought forth, hence he says he will take the "stick of Joseph" (Book of Mormon) and put it with the "stick of Judah"—the Bible.

In verse 21 the Lord says:—

Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, . . . and bring them into their own land.

Now, when the "sealed book" comes forth the Lord is to perform a "marvelous work," turn Lebanon into a "fruitful field," and take away shame and paleness from the face of Jacob; when the "truth shall spring out of the earth" the Lord is to "give that which is good," cause Israel's land to "yield its increase," and set Israel "in the way of his steps;" and when the "stick of Joseph" is brought forth and put with the "stick of Judah," the Lord is to "gather Israel," make them "one nation," and "cleanse them" from their sins. Hence it is clear that David's "truth" that "shall spring out of the earth," Isaiah's "sealed book," and Ezekiel's "stick of Joseph," all refer to the same work—the same book. And, as the Book of Mormon came "out of the earth," was a "sealed book," gives a history of Joseph's posterity, and came forth just in the right time, we are forced to believe it to be the book referred to in those prophecies.

Remember that the "stick of Joseph" is to be "in the hand of Ephraim" when this work is done. It is not to be written by him, neither is it necessarily a history of him, but it is to be in his hands. This harmonizes with the testimony of Hosea, 8: 11, 12:—

Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be made unto him to sin. I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing.

The great things of God's law are written to him, and the stick of Joseph is to be in his hand, hence the great things of God's law are to be in the "stick of Joseph," as well as in the Bible.

The fact that the Book of Mormon has been "counted as a strange thing," from the time of its publication until now, is in its favor, as is also the fact that it contains the "great things" of God's law. The work of God, for the salvation and gathering of Israel in the last days, is to be a "strange work," "a marvelous work," "a wonder;" hence it is only natural that the great things of God's law written to Ephraim should also be "counted as a strange thing."

But, is there any evidence in the Bible that the posterity of Joseph would come to the land of America? The Book of Mormon claims to be the "stick of Joseph," claims to give a history of his posterity who came from Jerusalem and settled in America; but is there anything in the Bible to substantiate this claim? We think there is.

In answering this question I shall notice, first, the general supervision of God in locating and settling the nations of the earth in their inheritances. Paul says of this, Acts 17: 24-27:—

God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation: that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us.

Deuteronomy 3: 8:—

When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.

Acts 10: 34, 35:—

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

We learn from the foregoing some important facts, among which are these:—

1. God made all nations of the same blood.
2. He made them to dwell on all the face of the earth.
3. He determined the time when, and the place where they should dwell.
4. He commanded them all to seek after him.
5. He promised that they should find him.
6. He "set the bounds of the people" at the time he "separated the sons of Adam."
7. He chose Jacob as the "lot of his inheritance."
8. He declares that he is no respecter of persons, but is willing to bless all who work righteousness, regardless of their nationality.

Not only did the Lord choose Israel as the "lot of his inheritance," but he gave them a land and "determined . . . the bounds of their habitations," as is witnessed by the following:—

And the Lord appeared unto Abraham and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land: and there builded he an altar unto the Lord, who appeared unto him.—Gen. 12: 7.

For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever.—Gen. 13: 15.

Also Genesis 15: 18-21:—

In that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates. The Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites. And the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaim, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites.

And Exodus 23: 31:—

I will set thy bounds from the Red sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river.

For a more minute description of the "bounds of their habitation," see Numbers 34: 3-12.

But Israel is not to remain within the bounds of his habitation. He is to be scattered all over the earth:—

My people hath been lost sheep. . . . Israel is a scattered sheep.—Jer. 50: 6, 17.

Yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth.—Ezek. 34: 6.

Thou hast increased the nation, O Lord, thou hast increased the nation: . . . thou hadst removed it far unto the ends of the earth.—Isa. 26: 15.

Yes, they were to be scattered "upon all the face," and to "all the ends of the earth;" and, in this scattering, Joseph's posterity are to find a home in America.

Of Jacob, just before his death, it is said:—

And Jacob called unto his sons, and said, Gather yourselves together that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days.—Gen. 49: 1.

Notice the time. It is a prophecy of what shall be "in the last days."

And when he comes to Joseph he said of him:—

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall. The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: but his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel;) Even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb: The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.—Gen. 49: 22-26.

Before commenting on this I shall quote the blessing that Moses pronounced upon Joseph and his posterity, as found in Deuteronomy 33: 13-17:—

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh.

If you will notice those two blessings carefully you will find the history of that tribe marked out about as follows:—

1. Joseph is to be a "fruitful bough"—among or of the tribes of Israel.
2. He receives a greater blessing than Jacob's progenitors.
3. His posterity are to "run over the wall"—their "bounds."
4. To receive a land that is wonderfully blessed in its productions, both in the mineral and vegetable kingdoms.
5. This land is to be at the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills," from the one given to Jacob's progenitors—Palestine.
6. They are to be blessed with the "blessings of heaven above," or the "precious things of heaven."
7. Those blessings are to be on the "crown" or "top" of the head of Joseph.
8. Ephraim and Manasseh are the two "horns" of Joseph, hence the "crown" of his head.
9. "With them" (Ephraim and Manasseh) the Lord is to "push the people together to the ends of the earth," in the "last days."
10. Ephraim is to be greater than Manasseh, in this work, as ten is to one.

The blessing of Jacob's "progenitors" is sufficiently pointed out in these texts:—

And Abram passed through the land unto the place of Sichem, unto the plain of Moreh. And the Canaanite was then in the land. And the Lord appeared unto Abram, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land: and there builded he an altar unto the Lord, who appeared unto him.—Gen. 12: 6, 7.

And Isaac went unto Abimelech king of the Philistines unto Gerar. And the Lord appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt; dwell in the land which I shall tell thee of. Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee: for unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy Father.—Gen. 26: 1-3.

Isaac in blessing Jacob said:—

And God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be a multitude of people; and give thee the blessing of Abraham, to thee, and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the land wherein thou art a stranger, which God gave unto Abraham.—Gen. 28: 3, 4.

Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations; even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac; and hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance; when ye were but few, even a few, and strangers in it.—1 Chron. 16: 15-19.

Palestine, then, is the blessing which Jacob's progenitors received and handed down to him for an inheritance. But Jacob's blessing which he pronounced upon Joseph, "prevailed above" that of his "progenitors," extending "over the wall," even unto the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills." And his blessing upon the two sons of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh, is quite as remarkable as the one he pronounced upon Joseph. The record tells us that Jacob was old, his eyesight very dim, and that he was sick. Joseph and his two sons visit him, and he asks Joseph to bring his two sons to him and let him bless them. This blessing, and the peculiar manner in which it was given, is recorded like this:—

And Joseph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand toward Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand toward Israel's right hand, and brought them near unto him. And Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the firstborn. And he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, the angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac, and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth. And when Joseph saw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head. And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father: for this is the firstborn; put thy right hand upon his head. And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it; he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations. And he blessed them that day, saying, In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.—Gen. 48: 13-20.

From this blessing we learn:—

1. Manasseh is older than Ephraim.
2. The custom, with those old patriarchs, seems to have been to put the right hand upon the head of the oldest son, and give to him the chief blessing.
3. Jacob ignores this custom, and puts his right hand upon the head of the younger—Ephraim.

4. He puts his name (Israel) upon them—both of them.

5. He says they—both together—shall "grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth."

6. Manasseh is to "be great," but Ephraim is to be "greater than he."

7. Ephraim's seed is to "become a multitude of nations."

8. "He set Ephraim before Manasseh."

9. The blessing of Israel is to be: "God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh."

Now, reader, come with me and we will stand, in our imagination, upon the land of Palestine, the blessing of Jacob's progenitors; then we will start on a journey, "run over the wall," and on, on, on, even to the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills." Where do we land? On the continent of America. What kind of a land do we find? We find a land "above" or superior to the one given to Jacob's progenitors; a land that is wonderfully blessed in variety of climate, adapting it to all kinds of animal and vegetable life; and a land that is rich in its productions, both mineral and vegetable. Hence, it is just the land that Moses said Joseph should have. It is in the very place, "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills," where Jacob said that Joseph's posterity should be blessed with the "blessings of heaven above," and where Moses said he should be blessed with the "precious things of heaven." What are the "blessings of heaven above," the "precious things of heaven?" Jesus says:—

I came down from heaven.—John 6: 38.

Peter says:—

By them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.—1 Pet. 1: 12.

Did any blessings ever come from heaven more precious than Christ, the gospel, and his Holy Spirit? We think not.

Now we take up the Book of Mormon and it tells us that some of Joseph's posterity, led by Lehi, did actually leave Jerusalem, "run over the wall"—"the bounds of their habitation"—cross the sea, come to the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills," and became a great "multitude;" also that Christ visited them here, after his resurrection, poured out his Spirit upon them, gave them the gospel, and blessed them with the same "precious things of heaven" that he bestowed upon his saints at Jerusalem.

Then, when America was discovered by Europeans, four hundred years ago, a multitude of people lived upon this continent whose customs, dispositions, and languages, mark them as being of Israelitish origin.

NOTICES.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 31, 1895.

For reasons we deem sufficient, Elder Hiram L. Holt is hereby released from his mission to Oregon, Washington, etc., and is appointed to labor in Southern California until the Annual Conference of 1895, subject to missionary in charge.

JOSEPH SMITH,
W. W. BLAIR,
Presidency.

The missionaries of Southern Indiana are hereby notified to report to me at Derby, Perry county, Indiana, their final reports for the present conference year. Brethren, please be prompt to have your reports to me by the first day of March.

Yours in bonds,

I. P. BAGGERLY

LAMONI, Iowa, February 1, 1895.

BRANCH REPORTS.

As the time to close and balance the books or the year is now not far distant, it will be necessary that all branch statistical reports should be in the hands of the General Church Recorder as early as possible, the limit of time when they can be used not being later than March 15 to 20. As it is the wish of the church that it should be properly represented, according to its membership, in the annual report of the Church Recorder, to do this, it is needful that the names of all should be upon record to as late a date as possible, that the general record should be as complete as the branch records are.

Therefore district presidents and clerks will serve the cause if they will at once send in all reports that may now be in their possession, and all others as soon as they can after themselves recording them. This may hurry matters in March with some, but with attention it can be accomplished.

Also branches where no conference is held will do a favor if they send corrections since they last reported, names and items of those added, and names and how and when lost of those no longer in the branch. I will add that throughout the church there has been very good attention paid to forwarding reports, so that many districts are placed on record up to the October and December reports. Some few have forwarded none since the June sessions. These should attend to it soon. Also the districts in England are requested to send reports early, the original reports of branches if possible.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 26, 1895.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS.

According to the order of General Conference delegate credentials to General Conference should be made out and sent to the Church Secretary before April 1. Therefore will district officers see that this is attended to as soon as possible after the close of the last conference you may hold prior to April 1?

As some conferences were held before January 1 such districts may make credentials at any time and send in; and those holding in February or March should be made out in good season, that a roll may be made before conference convenes and business begins.

Remember the rule, that for each twenty-five members one vote is allowed; also that no delegate can cast more than twenty votes. Consequently the district having more than five hundred members must send more than one delegate in order to have the full vote cast. If desired there may be a delegate appointed for each vote the district is entitled to, or one delegate may be sent for each twenty votes or part thereof.

Each branch not in an organized district is entitled to one vote and one delegate, no matter how large or how small the branch is.

If it is the wish that the delegates present at conference should cast the entire vote then they should be so instructed by vote of the district, otherwise, in case of a division, the whole vote cannot be cast by a part of the delegation.

H. A. STEBBINS,
Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1895.

MINISTRY REPORTS.

Blanks upon which to report to the next General Conference have been sent to the ministry who hold appointments from the conference of 1894; also to those who have been appointed during the year by the First Presidency; or by ministers in charge if such appointment was known to me. Of a few brethren the exact address was not known, and in such cases blanks were sent in care of some one supposed to know their post office, that it might be forwarded. But if any fail to receive please notify me at once. Instructions are given on the blanks as to their being returned in time to publish in pamphlet form before conference convenes, as provided at the session of 1893.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 28, 1895.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Let each branch send in a full report, that the condition and prospects of the work of the district may be known to the conference. As this will be the last conference before General Conference it will be necessary to appoint delegates to the General Conference, and if you have any requests to make of General Conference this will be the time to make them known. Those coming by rail should get to Cornwallis on the 8th, and will be met at station if they notify B. Beall or J. B. Russell, of Goose Creek. EVOLUTION TRUE AND FALSE.

THE Duke of Argyll and Professor Huxley have often crossed swords in intellectual conflict and generally to the edification of a wide public. The latter, in a recent issue of Nature, had an article entitled "Past and Present" with which the former, in the Nineteenth Century, December, takes issue. Professor Huxley gave a generalized view of the triumphs of science over its opponents during the last half century. He spoke disparagingly of Lord Bacon's division of the realm of knowledge into "two worlds" (we quote Professor Huxley), into one of which the human intellect can penetrate by "strict adherence to scientific methods," and into the other of which it can penetrate by "quite other mental processes." The nature of Professor Huxley's criticism, as interpreted by the Duke, is that Bacon's "one world" is that of physical science and that beyond that the intellect cannot penetrate, and that the other world or sphere of thought, which is not subject to physical methods of attaining knowledge, must soon be abandoned. The Duke takes issue with the Professor, declares that the habit of confining the word "science" to the physical sciences alone is "as a habit incapable of defense," asserts that "all the highest relations of things which are accessible to us are relations which lie altogether outside the methods of physical investigation," and that "neither love, nor justice, nor mercy, nor benevolence, nor obedience to legitimate authority, nor, indeed, any other moral or spiritual truth," is approachable by the methods of physical science.

He quotes Professor Huxley as saying that even if Darwin's "Origin of Species," and all the conceptions that it has given rise to were swept away, the theory of evolution would not be shaken. The Duke assents to this, but attaches his own interpretation to the statement as follows:—

"The only doctrine of evolution that is indisputably true is simply this—that throughout the universe of nature, so far as we know it, everything happens through the operation of definite causes, which are so managed as to cooperate in the production of certain definite results. This general doctrine has nothing whatever to do with the theories about the ultimate nature of those causes, or about the conditions of time under which they have worked. It has nothing to do with the denial, for example, of so-called cataclysms in geology, or with the denial, in biology, of mind and will as the controlling agency in the direction of every kind of method. The wonderful steam engines which are now common for the storage and distribution of energy in forms which economize to the very utmost all the materials employed—these are all strictly cases of evolution from the simplest steam kettles which suggested the original idea. It is true each machine has been separately made, but only by a strict continuity of inventive thought developed according to natural laws governing the structure and operation of the human mind. The same doctrine of evolution is unquestionably applicable to the still more wonderful machines which are the abodes of life, and Mr. Huxley is right in a far higher sense than that which he intends when he says that the doctrine would remain wholly unaffected by the sweeping away of all the peculiarities of the Darwinian theory, or of every other theory similar in kind.

"But unfortunately, this is not the doctrine of evolution as it is understood, and quoted, and applauded by Mr. Huxley. That doctrine is simply and crudely this, that all life, as known to us in animal and vegetable organisms, has been evolved by the processes of ordinary generation, 'and no other.' Darwin's special theory was a step beyond, or below, this general assertion, because it specified a particular sequence of causes by which the results of ordinary generation were governed, which sequence was chiefly remarkable for its apparent reliance on pure fortuity in the development of new forms. This was the element in the theory which undoubtedly commended itself to many minds; because it was the element which got rid of what they call the supernatural, or, in other words, of the agency of mind in mind in nature. Mr. Huxley has never, I think, committed himself to this idea, except in so far as the emphasis he places on processes 'purely natural' seems to be inspired by that idea, and is certainly the favorite antithesis of those who have adopted it with passion; but Mr. Huxley has in this recent paper committed himself to the idea that life as we know it in nature has never been produced by another method than that of ordinary generation. Yet we may affirm with confidence that this idea cannot possibly be true. Ordinary generation is an organic process—a function of organic life for its own perpetuation when once begun. But it cannot have been its own origin. In this doctrine, therefore, Mr. Huxley seems to deny one of the most far-reaching conclusions of his own science, and the teaching of one of its very chiefest apostles. No one knows better than Mr. Huxley the doctrine of the great John Hunter, that life is the cause of organization, and not its consequence. Somewhere, and somehow, and at some time, organic life was really originated in our world, and the first organism was not its own originating cause, but, contrariwise, life was the cause of the first organism. It cannot therefore be true that science affirms of organic life that it begun by ordinary generation and 'no other way.' But if life must have been at least once introduced into our planet by some 'other way' than ordinary generation, evolution as conceived by Mr. Huxley ceases to hold the place which he assigns to it. If organic life has certainly been otherwise begun, we cannot possibly decide on any safe a priori grounds that the other—the originating—process, whatever it was, may not have been many times repeated since organisms were first created."—Literary Digest.

BRANCH REPORTS.

As the time to close and balance the books for the year is now not far distant, it will be necessary that all branch statistical reports should be in the hands of the General Church Recorder as early as possible, the limit of time when they can be used not being later than March 15 to 20. As it is the wish of the church that it should be properly represented, according to its membership, in the annual report of the Church Recorder, to do this, it is needful that the names of all should be upon record to as late a date as possible, that the general record should be as complete as the branch records are.

Therefore district presidents and clerks will serve the cause if they will at once send in all reports that may now be in their possession, and all others as soon as they can after themselves recording them. This may hurry matters in March with some, but with attention it can be accomplished.

Also branches where no conference is held will do a favor if they send corrections since they last reported, names and items of those added, and names and how and when lost of those no longer in the branch. I will add that throughout the church there has been very good attention paid to forwarding reports, so that many districts are placed on record up to the October and December reports. Some few have forwarded none since the June sessions. These should attend to it soon. Also the districts in England are requested to send reports early, the original reports of branches if possible.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 26, 1895.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS.

According to the order of General Conference delegate credentials to General Conference should be made out and sent to the Church Secretary before April 1. Therefore will district officers see that this is attended to as soon as possible after the close of the last conference you may hold prior to April 1?

As some conferences were held before January 1 such districts may make credentials at any time and send in; and those holding in February or March should be made out in good season, that a roll may be made before conference convenes and business begins.

Remember the rule, that for each twenty-five members one vote is allowed; also that no delegate can cast more than twenty votes. Consequently the district having more than five hundred members must send more than one delegate in order to have the full vote cast. If desired there may be a delegate appointed for each vote the district is entitled to, or one delegate may be sent for each twenty votes or part thereof.

Each branch not in an organized district is entitled to one vote and one delegate, no matter how large or how small the branch is.

If it is the wish that the delegates present at conference should cast the entire vote then they should be so instructed by vote of the district, otherwise, in case of a division, the whole vote cannot be cast by a part of the delegation.

H. A. STEBBINS,
Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1895.

LATE LITERARY NEWS.

General Lord Wolseley makes a most important contribution to the literature of the China-Japan war. In an article for the February Cosmopolitan, he discusses the situation and does not mince matters in saying what China must do in this emergency. Two other noted foreign authors contribute interesting articles to this number. Rosita Mauri, the famous Parisian danseuse, gives the history of the ballet, and Emile Ollivier tells the story of the fall of Louis Philippe. From every part of the world, drawings and photographs have been obtained of the instruments used to torture poor humanity, and appear as illustrations for a clever article, by Julian Hawthorne, entitled, "Salvation via the Rack." Mrs. Reginald de Koven, Anatole France, W. Clark Russell, Albion W. Tourgée, and William Dean Howells are among the story tellers for the February number of The Cosmopolitan.

THREE KINDS OF SUFFRAGE IN CANADA.

A curious feature of the Canadian political system is the lack of uniformity in the franchise. There are in fact three voters' lists, with different qualifications for each. One is for municipal elections, another for elections for the Provincial parliament and the third for elections for members of the Dominion parliament at Ottawa. A Provincial elector must earn $300 a year or be a property holder, a householder, or a farmer's son. Women are excluded, although, as already shown, they have the right to vote in municipal elections. The Dominion suffrage lists are made up by the officers of the general government and the elections are held under the supervision of that government. The qualifications of a Dominion elector are rather complex. He must own real property in a city of the value of at least $300, or in a town of the value of $200, or in a rural district of the value of $150; or he must be the tenant of real property at a monthly rental of at least $2 or at an annual rental of at least $20; or he must be the bona fide occupant of property of a value such as is specified in the case of ownership; or he must be a farmer's son; or he must be able to show that he is in receipt of an income of at least $300 in cash or its equivalent in board and money. A man may vote at a general election in all the election districts in which he is able to qualify; that is to say, he may vote in one district and take a train and go and vote in another. If in a city where there are a number of polling divisions he may record his vote in one and walk to the next one in which he has qualified and record it again. This system is not much admired by the Manitoba people, and there is at the present time an agitation to have it changed, the rallying cry of which is "one man, one vote."—From "Canada's Prairie Province," by E. V. Smalley, in February Review of Reviews.

A PLEA FROM ONE WHO IS BLIND.

To my many friends, and those who sympathize with one who cannot see, I desire to state that because of the loss of property and also my eyesight, I have concluded to make this request of all who can afford it, to send forty cents for one box of my toilet soap, or twenty-five cents for one bottle of my great crystal cement with printed directions accompanying each bottle, both of which are very useful articles, and highly recommended by hundreds of the Saints and those who have used them in the past.

The object I have in view is to build me a little house that I may avoid paying rent. I could make a living if I could stop house rent. I am not asking charity, but simply ask patronage of those who may deem me worthy of the same. I hope that each one who shall read this will carefully consider the matter and decide to send in your order at once to J. H. McMullin, Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, and it will be promptly forwarded, postage prepaid. United States stamps or post office money order taken.

J. H. McMULLIN.

[BRO. McMULLIN is an energetic toiler, who, by selling his wares, earns a living for himself and family, preferring to so do, rather than cast himself upon the church for support. He is deserving of all he asks in the above plea, and those who respond will encourage a laudable ambition in one who labors under terrible disadvantage.—ED.]

ON THE SACRAMENT.

WE have published an article by Bro. W. W. Blair, upon which both he and the editor agree; but, lest some may misunderstand the motive, we state that it is expected that the article will be met with replies, reviews, opposition, etc.; so that no surprise will be experienced at the office when they come in.

We do not intend to attempt any answers to what may be received; and shall take the liberty, if two or more articles reviewing the one published referred to are sent in, to select the best and publish it, leaving the rest out, as it has not been the intention to start a controversy, but simply to state our view on a subject of more or less importance and there let it rest.

QUESTION ON JAMES 5: 15.

1. AND the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he hath committed sin it shall be forgiven him."—James 5: 15. Question. Is there any evidence of the remission of sins in the case of death of the one administered to? Or is the fact of him being raised up the evidence of his sins being remitted, or forgiven him?

2. Why did not Philip confirm those baptized at Samaria? If the answer is he did not have authority to do so: Then by what authority did he cast out devils, heal the sick, and do mighty miracles?

The proposition in the text quoted providing for the forgiveness of sins is distinct from the statement, "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." It would seem that the promise of forgiveness of sins made authoritatively ought to be sufficient, resting as it does on the power and divine goodness of God; and should be taken for granted without a present testimony of yes, or no, to either the sick, or the well interested in them.

The promise that the "prayer of faith shall save the sick," is too frequently taken to mean the working of an instantaneous miracle of healing; and in some cases is this sentiment so strong that the sick man and his friends set about puzzling their brains to find out and fix the sin that prevents such immediate healing. Ordinarily, persons who employ a physician are contented to take the physic prescribed and wait patiently for the medicine to have its desired effect. Yet when applying to the Great Physician, the expectation seems to be that there is to be no waiting, no patient enduring in trust, but instant relief and permanent cure.

That the Great Physician can, and at times does at once answer to these expectations, is plain to all; but the question admits that some die; and the question then is, Is there evidence in case of death that sins have been forgiven?

To our way of thinking, recovery is not necessarily an evidence of forgiveness of sins; and by a parity of reasoning, neither would death be an evidence that sins were not forgiven.

The man who being sick has the will and courage to put himself into the hands of his God by a compliance with the law given him to observe in the case of being sick, does by the act of obedience witness his trust, and the rule of law which prescribes his duty also states what shall ensue; hence we conclude that in either event, recovery and life or death, the forgiveness of sins is assured. This position is forced by section 42, paragraph 12, of the Doctrine and Covenants.

And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me.

The inference fairly deducible from this is that whatever the issue to the sick, whether life or death, the observance of the rule given effects a forgiveness of sin and the "prayer of faith" saves the sick.

We therefore answer, the death of the sick after administration of the ordinance of anointing with oil and laying on of hands, is not an evidence that sins are not forgiven, nor recovery of the sick an evidence that sins are forgiven; forgiveness results in either case, where faith is present, as provided in the command.

It is not safe to build too strongly upon the evidence of the headings of chapters six and eight of the Acts, that Philip was only a deacon, as we now understand the term of deacon.

There is nothing in the text to determine positively what office the apostles ordained Philip and the rest of the seven unto; but it is clear that he had authority to baptize, which we understand our law not to give to deacons.

It has been a supposition that the apostles ordained the seven chosen to wait on tables to be deacons, but the text does not so state. That they were something more than this is shown by the fact that the first one chosen, Stephen, was a man so full of faith and power of the Holy Ghost that he wrought great wonders and miracles. Philip was of the number, and as he also wrought wonders, he was equal in calling to Stephen. Our law does not provide that deacons have authority to lay on hands; but Philip evidently did both lay on hands and baptize. Smith in his Dictionary calls Philip the Evangelist; and states that,

Whether the office to which he was thus appointed gave him the position and the title of a deacon of the church, or was special and extraordinary in its character, must remain uncertain. The after history of Philip warrants the belief, in any case, that his office was not simply that of the later diaconate, (deaconship.)

It is supposed that Philip was Bishop of Tralles at his death; and it is within the range of possibilities that his ordination as an Evangelist carried with it, or was succeeded by an ordination to the office of Bishop, at the time referred to in Acts 8. It is, however, safe to believe that he was more than a deacon, and had authority to lay on hands.

The reason why the record does not state whether he laid on hands for confirmation and the conferment of the Holy Ghost, rather than to send for some of the apostles, must be a matter of conjecture. Our own idea of it is, that he was alone. The record does not tell us of anyone being with him. "Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ unto them," is clear enough to infer that at the scattering he was alone. It was but the natural and lawful result of his allegiance to his brethren that he joined with others of the newly baptized disciples to send to the apostles, and have them come to confirm his work. Or, it may have been that the apostles hearing of the work being done, of their own accord sent Peter and John to aid Philip and complete the work. We are inclined to believe the first named proposition.

BROTHER JAMES CAFFALL IN LONDON, ENGLAND.

ELDER JAMES CAFFALL (of America) will lecture on the following subjects: Eleven a. m., "What is Mormonism?" 6:30, "Why I am a Latter Day Saint." Samaritan Hall, West Arbour-square, Commercial-rd., E. Go to hear him.

Such was the modest notice given of the services of our brother, minister of the gospel at the seat of the "court of St. James." Of the visit of Bro. Caffall to the largest city in the world, see Bro. Tubb's letter elsewhere in this issue.

We believe what this friend of Bro. Tubb so tersely stated, that the leaven of the doctrines authorized by the angel's message, as the same was stated by the Palmyra Seer, has been and is permeating the circles of thought and reform.

BRO. AMOS BERVE wrote from Burnham, Michigan, January 27, and sent a clipping from the Detroit Free Press, which we give below:—

WEST BAY CITY, Michigan, January 17.—A colony of about one hundred men and women, calling themselves members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, have located in this city. The supposition that they are Mormons is said to be a mistake. They claim to believe and teach every principle that was taught by Christ and his apostles as contained in the Scriptures. They stoutly deny the claims of Brigham Young that a man should have more than one wife and claim that the doctrine of polygamy was first introduced at Salt Lake City by Brigham Young eight years after he left the true church. The Saints further claim that there has always been a vast difference between the Mormons of Utah under the leadership of Brigham Young, and the [Re] organized church of Lamoni, Iowa, under the leadership of Joseph Smith, a son of the Joseph Smith who claimed to have found golden plates in the State of New York. The Saints in this city are about to erect a church.

This speaks well for our Bay City folks.

It may be satisfactory to many of the readers of the HERALD to see something of the argument made before the Court of Appeals in the Temple Lot suit, as the same was reported in the local press. We therefore give a digest from the daily Globe-Democrat for January 26, the day the argument closed. We submit the report without comment:—

The Mormon case was taken up by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday afternoon. The title of the case is, The Church of Christ at Independence, Missouri, appellants, vs. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, appellees. In the trial Court, before United States District Judge Philips, the title of the case was reversed, the "Reorganized Church" being the complainant. The controversy is over the possession of a portion of certain property in Independence, Missouri, known as the "Temple lot," and so-called because it has been understood ever since 1830 [1] that it was designed for a Mormon temple. The Reorganized Church has a fine temple on a part of this property, and they brought suit to eject the "Church of Christ," which had bought a small portion of the land, and which has a small church thereon, where its members worship. The latter resisted the suit on three grounds; the statute of limitations; that they have a title by purchase; and they claim it on the ground of being the true church.

The "Temple lot" is about two and a half acres, being part of sixty-three acres bought by George [Edward] Partridge of the Government in 1831. Partridge was a prominent adherent of the (then) new Mormon Church, and the controversy largely hinges on whether he did not acquire this land in trust for the church. The little church, which is now fighting to retain its property, denies this proposition, and it exhibits what seems to be a straight line of title from Partridge to the present time. The "Reorganized Church" on the contrary, holds that Partridge took it in trust for the church, and with that distinctly in view, they base the right to the property on a deed made by Partridge to the "Cowdery heirs" in 1839, and on which the trust is confirmed and passed along. A mystery attaches to this deed. It is first heard of in 1870, when it was put on record. Where it had been all the intervening thirty years, and who put it on record, no one seems to know. The "Little Church" holds that the statute of limitations runs against this deed, in view especially of its own possession of the property since 1831. And it denies that Partridge could have taken the property in trust for the church, because it was not until 1834 that the church crystallized and had any articles that were binding.

Another objection to the proceeding is based on the fact that the "Reorganized Church" is an Iowa corporation, and as such it cannot include among its membership all of like faith wherever found; nor can it, as such, maintain an action of this character in Missouri.

Judge Philips found for the "Reorganized Church" on all points, and made a decree ejecting the "Church of Christ" from the property. He held that Partridge acquired the property as a trust for the church. He found that the deed of Partridge to the Cowdery heirs was a good conveyance and perpetuated the trust. Lastly he finds that the "Reorganized Church" is doctrinally the church, essentially contemplated under the Partridge trust. Beaten at all points the Church of Christ appealed to this court.

The argument yesterday afternoon was begun by Mr. C. O. Tichenor, of Kansas City, in behalf of the appellants, the Independence church. He laid particular stress on two propositions: Granting the existence of a trust to Partridge, there must be a reasonable limit to such a trust; unexecuted, it cannot remain on the property forever. Secondly, the statute of limitation should run against the deed from Partridge to the Cowdery heirs, which had been in concealment for nearly forty years. He concluded with a brief discussion of the proposition that a foreign corporation cannot hold or entail church property in Missouri.

Frank Hagerman, of Kansas City, continued the argument. He spoke for the appellees, the "Reorganized," or the Iowa Church. It was not, he said, a question of a little church being dispossessed of its property, but a question of which of these bodies was the true Mormon Church. Mr. Hagerman started with a revelation in 1831 that there should be a Mormon temple in Independence. In pursuance of this revelation Partridge bought the property with money given him by Mormons in the East for that purpose. And Joseph Smith, the founder and head of the church, held services on the property, and dedicated it as the spot where the Mormon Temple was to rise and shine. That Partridge took the property in trust for the church appeared plainly enough in the Cowdery deed, where he solemnly set forth that he bought the property with funds intrusted to him for that church's uses. He gave that deed to the Cowdery children. Why? Mr. Hagerman recited with impressive force, the hatred which the Mormons had excited as the years rolled on until, in 1838, the Governor of Missouri issued the famous order of expulsion and extermination. This order was on the point of being executed in March, 1839, when Partridge made this deed to the three children of Cowdery, a magnate in the church, in order to preserve the property to the church; and he conveyed the property to these small children because, in the existing state of public feeling, it would not have been prudent to convey it to a man—no man dared accept such a trust. From the fact that the Mormon newspaper printed that Partridge had accounted for his trust, Mr. Hagerman concluded that the deed found its way to Nauvoo, and thence was carted with the rest of the Mormon archives across the continent to Utah.

Mr. Hagerman spoke in a lively and brilliant manner for nearly an hour, and held the close attention of the Court and the audience. A more interesting presentation of a case has seldom been heard in this court. He will resume this morning, and will be followed by Bishop Kelley, a Mormon leader and one of the dignitaries of the Utah [Reorganized] Church. Col. J. N. Southern, of Independence, will close the argument for the appellees.

BRO. C. F. WOODS, of Syracuse, Nebraska, sends us the Post Express, of Rochester, New York, for January 30, 1895, from which we clip the following, to make it a matter of record:—

PALMYRA, Jan. 28.—Major John H. Gilbert died Saturday at his home. Major Gilbert was the first printer in the village. Born in 1802 at Richmond, Ontario county, he came to Palmyra when twenty-two years of age. He learned the printer's trade and was at one time editor of the Wayne county Sentinel.

In the year 1827, Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon Church, discovered in the side of a hill called Cumarrah, now known as "Mormon Hill," a stone box. He was not permitted, he claimed, to remove the box for a period of two years. He then found that it contained plates on which, it is claimed, were written the Book of Mormon and God's will, as therein revealed. These plates were removed to Manchester, Ontario county; thence to New York City, where they were taken to Professor Anthon for translation. He replied that he could not translate them, that they were written in "a sealed language, unknown to the present age."

Smith soon afterward announced that an angel had appeared to him in a vision and promised the true revelations of a gospel that should supersede all other forms of religion and that it could be had from the plates. He translated them and brought his copy to the Wayne Sentinel Office in 1830. The translation was turned over to Major Gilbert to set up and five thousand copies were published.

He resided with his daughter, Sarah Gilbert. Mr. Gilbert was married in 1827 and twelve children came of the union, five of whom are still living. They are William Gilbert, of Rochester, Charles Gilbert, of Detroit, Mrs. J. C. Williams, of New York, Miss Belle of the same place, and Miss Sarah of Palmyra.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. DAVID CHAMBERS, Persia, Iowa, writes January 31:—

Some two weeks ago in connection with Brethren William Smith and William Bullard commenced a series of meeting seven miles west of here. The Spirit of the Lord attended the efforts and the people seemed strangely moved to repentance. Men, not of the church, and some in, who have held hardness against others for a long time, are now reconciled to each other. Five have been baptized and quite a number believing that we hope will obey the gospel soon. Brethren Smith and Bullard did well in their efforts in presenting the word; and I think I never saw happier men after they had done their duty and the Spirit of the Lord rested upon them.

Sr. Mary Hoague, Fulton, Wisconsin, the 30th ult:—

The Saints here seem to be growing in grace and faith daily. We had two added to our number recently; one my husband, the other his youngest sister. Bro. W. A. McDowell baptized a fine young man about two weeks ago. His wife is already in the kingdom.

Bro. W. H. Kelley writing from Brooklyn, New York, states that he wrote "lion" and not "liar," as we have already written. He further states:—

The child referred to on page 37 of Herald for January 16 was exposed to the fever in Cleveland and was sent to Kirtland with the hope that she would escape it; but she was taken with it and was returned to Cleveland where she died. She and her sister had played with Bro. Griffiths' children; and it is thought, but it is not certain, that it was through them the scarlet fever was introduced into Kirtland. There was an opportunity for it to have so occurred, none other is known. Kirtland has enjoyed unusual immunity from sickness this last season up to the scarlet fever influx into the home of Bro. Griffiths. There were no other cases, I am quite sure, even in the township. Kirtland is all right.

Kirtland seems to have been sufficiently vindicated; and we let it rest here.

Bro. C. E. Butterworth, Auburn, Iowa, January 31:—

I had the pleasure of baptizing two worthy people, a gentleman and lady, into Christ this noon in the North Coon River near this place. All goes well.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ERRATUM.—The word "sight," page 91, first column, 17th line of article "Emblems—who may convey them?" should read light.

Sr. Margaret Smith, of Alpena, Michigan, the daughter of Bro. John McGue, who was a member of the old church and was baptized into the Reorganized church, some fifteen years ago, desires to secure service in some family of Saints as a housekeeper. She is a widow, is fifty years old, and still strong and healthy. Her children are married away from her and she believes she would be more contented if she could live among the Saints. Anyone knowing of such a place where a housekeeper is desired address Sr. Smith at Alpena.

Sr. Mary M. Thomas, of Grindstone, Michigan, has a little boy, born February 9, 1891, for whom she wishes to secure a home with some family of the Saints. The little fellow is short and stout, weighing thirty-eight pounds, fair complexion, eyes and hair brown; and his name is Edward A. Hawn. Anyone wishing to adopt such a lad, will address Sr. Thomas, at Grindstone.

Saints in the drouth-stricken regions of the West are proffered help by sisters and brethren of branches in the Far West district. See notice to that effect in Miscellaneous Department, this issue. We conclude that the Saints wish no special commendation of their offer, but prefer to do for the sake of doing, hence we offer none, simply referring to it that the spirit manifested may be noted and cultivated.

The Governor of Kansas has signed the anti-lottery and anti-gambling bills passed by the State Legislature.

Episcopalians in the United States are said to be taking steps to secure the appointment of an archbishop in this country.

Pres. Joseph Smith went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, for a brief stay, on the 6th.

Please address communications for publication to the editors; business matters to David Dancer, Business Manager.

Sr. S. J. Ross writes from Moorehead, Iowa, January 30. Bro. J. F. Mintun had been with the branch there and baptized two. Saints were active; though sickness had prevailed, blessing had resulted generally from administration by the elders.

Sr. R. E. Metcalf, Porcupine, Wisconsin, writes a good letter expressing her faith in Christ—the Christ of the gospel. She relates her experiences in sectarianism, her earnest seekings for light and satisfaction of soul; her dissatisfaction, her cravings for spiritual truth while in various religious organizations which with what good they have, failed to bring to her a knowledge of the truth. This knowledge she has consciously received by obedience to the gospel.

She thus testifies, and as a competent witness, having examined and tested what she earnestly affirms.

Bro. Thomas E. Eaton, of Little Deer Isle, Maine, writes of Bro. J. C. Foss' labors in that region. Hearing and rejoicing in the gospel, his heart is stirred in behalf of those who have not heard and who remain unsustained and unblessed by its light and comfort. He pleads for observance of the law of tithing by every member of the church that other laborers may be sent into the vineyard and souls be gathered into the spiritual garner of God—the church. The manifestation of such a spirit is commendable, is more than that,—it is a strong proof that a degree of the "divine nature" is implanted in the heart. One cannot love humanity and God sufficiently who fails to give what the spirit of the law requires. One who receives the spirit of the gospel receives the spirit of sacrifice and of service. In this connection we commend a general reading of the address of Bro. William Lockerby, Bishop's agent of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district, published in this issue of HERALD.

Bro. A. H. Parsons was at Norwalk, Connecticut, January 31, where he had held meetings three weeks and baptized five, adults. He sends names of the new members that sample copies of the HERALD may be sent them. We request the ministry local and general to do likewise. Those who enter the church do so to grow in knowledge of the truth and should have the church publications to further acquaint them with the work and inform them of its progress.

Bro. L. M. Tracy, of Drain, Oregon, wishes to correspond with Bro. — Savage, the one referred to by Bro. Thomas Hamilton, who wrote from Sargent, Missouri, January 16, concerning some land. Bro. Tracy desires tent work at Drain, where Brn. Holt and Haws could not obtain a place to preach.

Bro. George Hicklin, Kansas City, Kansas, is doing what he can locally, though hindered some by affliction. He writes in humble, earnest spirit, acknowledging the goodness of God and the help received in performance of duty.

Bro. C. K. Preston, writing from Springfield, Nebraska, goes somewhat minutely into the merits of the Porter-Watkins debate. From his account it appears that Bro. Porter pursued a consistent ministerial course and won the victory, while his opponent resorted to ridicule and often failed to fill in his time. Bro. Watkins has been one of our persistent opponents—in pulpit and press—but thus far the cause has been benefited by discussions held by him and our elders. The Congregational minister at Springfield acted as moderator, tendering his pulpit to Bro. Porter at the close, which he occupied.

A bill has been introduced in both Houses of the Minnesota Legislature appropriating $50,000 to construct a building and carry on a department for girls at the State Agricultural College, where domestic duties may be taught in a school of housewifery.

Sr. M. M. C., Vincennes, Iowa, writes for information concerning the statements of Mrs. Spalding-Davidson and Mrs. McKinstry, wife and daughter, of Solomon Spalding, also of Miss or Mrs. Ellen Dickinson a niece of Spalding; especially the statements of the latter as published in Scribner's Magazine for August, 1880. We think some of the brethren made specific reply to the magazine article in HERALD, but do not remember the date. However, the statements in general are answered in the "Braden-Kelley Debate," in tract No. 36, The Spalding Story Reexamined, also by the "Manuscript Found,"—all published at the Herald Office; see catalogue. Bro. E. L. Kelley's late article showing the whereabouts of Sidney Rigdon during the time of translation and publication of the Book of Mormon, also proves that collusion between Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon in the production of that record was impossible.

Grand Rapids, Michigan, a city of ninety thousand inhabitants, has been receiving ministerial attention from Bro. Levi Phelps for the past few weeks. He is encouraged by the interest of some.

Bro. J. C. Clapp is laboring at the old State capital, Monterey, California, where he is the first preacher of the primitive gospel. "I have a big excitement stirred up," he writes.

Sr. M. Russell, of Goose Creek, West Virginia, writes, bearing witness to blessings of health received in answer to the prayer of faith. We make note of her letter with others for which we lack space.

Sr. Amelie Self writes from Bennet, Nebraska, stating her deep interest in the work, recounting her efforts to teach the truth, and the limited privileges peculiar to scattered members of the church.

It is reported that Queen Lilioukani, of Hawaii, has agreed to formally abdicate, thus surrendering all claims to the throne. Whether justly or unjustly dethroned is considered a purely political question by some. We mention the abdication simply as showing again the forces at work for the destruction of the rule of so-called royalty. These are the days that try the souls of kings and queens. The spirit of the age demands a shaking up that shall reveal the underlying principles upon which all things stand. It will evidently eventuate in the supremacy of merit, of truth only; in the honoring of those only who represent and emphasize true principles. Such only should stand preëminent in the political, moral, religious, and general governmental system of the world. Principles are greater than woman or man. They stand eternal as sentinels to the race; rugged monuments, landmarks for the guidance of those who have the general welfare of fellow men at heart; as adamant, immovable agencies of destruction to those who would ignore or do violence to them. They preserve the right, they make manifest the wrong. The written word of law is based upon principles. To understand principle is to have power to discover the truth and be made free by observing it.

SYNOPSIS OF READING, CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE, HINTS ON CHILD-TRAINING.

SCOLDING IS NEVER IN ORDER.

THERE may be times when it is right to strike a child, but there is never a time when it is right to scold one. To "scold" is to assail or revile with boisterous speech. "Scolding" has always borne a bad reputation. Now, as in days of old, "a common scold" is recognized in law as a public nuisance.

Scolding always shows a bad spirit and a loss of temper. This is true when a lovely mother scolds her child for willfully breaking his playthings, or for soiling successive dresses by playing in the gutter after having been forbidden to do so, as when one apple woman yells out her abuse of another in a street quarrel. In either case the scolding is in the multiplication of hot words expressive of strong feelings, which, while natural, ought to be held in better control. The words may differ greatly in the two cases, but in either case it is scolding; and scolding is never in order.

If a child has done wrong he needs talking to; but a parent ought not to talk until he can speak in a natural tone of voice and with carefully measured words. If the parent is tempted to speak rapidly and with excitement, to multiply words without weighing them, the parent's first duty is to gain entire control of himself. The loss of self-control is for the time being an utter loss of power to control others.

Mr. Hammond advises the dog trainer to keep perfectly cool and show no sign of anger or impatience; "for if you cannot control your temper, you are not the one to train a dog." He further advises, "Never speak to your pupil in any but your ordinary tone of voice. Exercise unwearied patience; and if you feel your nerves becoming strained, leave him and do not attempt to teach until you are perfectly calm." This is good counsel in either dog-training or child-training, for in either scolding—loud and excited talking—is never in order.

In commanding or censuring a child, the fewer and more calmly spoken words the better. A child soon learns that scolding means less than quiet talking. There are times when it is best to speak at length to a child of the nature and consequences of his offense and the reasons why he should do differently in the future; but the words should be spoken in gentleness and self-controlled earnestness.

Few children, even among those of the gentler and kindlier parents, can say, "My parents never scold me." Many a child is well trained in spite of being scolded. Many a parent who scolds his children is still a good parent. But no scolding ever helps or benefits a child. Scolding is not always ruinous, but it is always out of place.

If scolding has any good effect at all the good is to the scolder and not to the one scolded. It may give physical relief to the one in whom strong feeling has been provoked and which struggles for the mastery, but it never benefits the person scolded, nor those who are its outside observers. If, therefore, the parent must scold, let the scolding be indulged in alone, in a room away from others, where no one may be harmed. As an element in child-training scolding is never, never, in order. C. B. S.

TRUE REST.

Rest is not quitting
The busy career,
Rest is the fitting
Of self to its sphere.

'Tis the brook's motion,
Clear without strife,
Fleeing to ocean,
After its life.

'Tis loving and serving
The highest and best,
'Tis onward unswerving;
And this is true rest.

EXTRACT FROM LETTERS.

SR. STERRETT writes from Pleasant Grove, Utah. She was converted and baptized by Bro. Anthony in 1884, which binds her very strongly to his memory. In confirmation Bro. Joseph Smith told her that the word of God should be made very plain to her. This has often in its fulfillment been the source of great comfort to her. She rejoices in the fact that she "knows her Redeemer liveth" and accepts trials as a part of that which is necessary to the Christian race. The sun shining on the snow has made her eyes sore and of this she says: "They are just as sore as my heart is when I think of what Utah's people are and what they might be if they would accept us as friends instead of enemies. I am not yet discouraged."

HARDY, Nebraska.

Dear Sisters:—I have just been reading your words of cheer in the Herald. This has been a beautiful day, but about six o'clock the wind suddenly changed and is blowing a perfect gale from the northwest and the heavens are becoming overcast with clouds. Such an abrupt change in the weather reminds me of the change in regard to the presentation of the word since Bro. Porter was here, just before Christmas. He preached eight sermons and baptized three in the Republican River, being, I believe, the first baptism in Kansas. He had a house full of attentive listeners every night, and I think seed was sown which will bring forth fruit in the future. Good order was kept during the meetings.

Little did I think when I wrote for papers and tracts to distribute that I would receive such an abundance. All seemed willing to do all they could in that line, and for over a month I received packages of papers. I also received several very good letters, and I wish all who were so kind in answering my request to accept my sincere thanks. We took the Heralds, tracts, and sermons to the school-house, and told all who wished to take them. I think nearly every family got some of the papers. I have given others since meetings closed and still have a good supply. I did not answer all the letters for I was too busy at the time I received them, but will say to the sister of N. V. that I did not receive any Autumn Leaves and would be pleased to receive hers. Bro. Porter thought he could be with us again this winter. We trust he will, and anxiously await his return. Asking you to pray for me that I may remain steadfast, I remain, your loving sister,

JENNIE BARRETT.

ASHMONT, Ohio.

Dear Sisters:—There are only a few Saints in this place. We often feel rather discouraged that more do not heed the truths of the gospel which have been so plainly set forth by God's chosen ones, from time to time in this place. But we realize that God's ways are not our ways and we hope and expect all the honest in heart will eventually be gathered in. We are trying to live as becometh Saints. It has been nearly four years since I was baptized, and I can say with many others, I have never regretted it; but feel to rejoice that I ever heard and obeyed the gospel, which is unadulterated by the creeds of men. I wish I was able financially to help spread the dead reviving news of the angel's message.

The Daughters of Zion are truly doing a noble work in helping us young mothers to realize the responsibility resting upon us and giving us aid in this time of need. May God speed the work.

CHELSEA, Mass., Jan. 29.

Editors Herald:—In reading recent "original articles" in the Herald—"The Book of Mormon Vindicated," by Elder I. M. Smith—I believed it should be preserved either in book or tract form. If the last will be like the first, it will be as good in its place as the Voice of Warning. What think ye?

J. S. LAWTON.

WELLSTON, Ohio, Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—We were pained to learn of Bro. Griffiths' sore afflictions and pray that the good Spirit may strengthen them to endure. We have been blessed in the last two weeks by the presence and preaching of Brn. H. E. Moler and H. R. Harder. Bro. Moler came on the 3d and Bro. Harder on the 5th. Bro. Moler commenced preaching on the 3d and Bro. Harder on the 5th; on the 6th Sunday school at ten a. m., preaching at eleven a. m. by Bro. Moler. The afternoon service was held at Bro. Hiram Arms', service in charge of Bro. Harder. The Spirit was present to comfort and edify. After service the writer baptized John P. Boyd, making twelve since I reported to my quorum on the 6th of last March. At the confirmation the Spirit was present in power, Bro. Moler speaking under the influence of the Spirit, telling of the reward, if faithful.

Bro. Moler started for home on the following Friday, Bro. Harder continuing until Tuesday night, the two last nights being on the Book of Mormon. Good seed is sown. The brethren made friends for themselves and the work. Come again, brethren. The people are inquiring when they will be back.

Yours,

WHEELING, W. Va., Jan. 24.

Editors Herald:—The local ministry here have decided to try to maintain two missionary meetings; one at Martin's Ferry and one at Bellaire; the former to be held Sabbath morning, and latter Sabbath afternoon. These are in addition to the meetings here, to be kept up as formerly.

This is a step in the right direction. It is moving out, thus giving the ministry here, not directly in charge, opportunities to show themselves approved. These new points have offered me effectual doors in which I am trying to labor, though met by some discouragements.

The folks here have started a singing class, and their literary society is prospering, and is instructive.

Bro. Ullom and I are visiting all, administering to the sick, blessing children, holding prayer and preaching meetings both on this and that side of the river, and are blessed. As to visiting the Saints, we have some of the sisters who have volunteered to assist. This is commendable for God's people always have the cause of the spiritual and temporal needy at heart, thus showing the degree of faith by the amount and kind of works.

CORMORANT, Minn., Jan. 25.

Editors Herald:—I left home December 10, and have been preaching in the vicinity of the Union and Friberg branches, with good congregations and splendid interest; feel blest in preaching the gospel. I had the pleasure of baptizing two on the 19th; Bro. Morton's sons. I am now staying at Bro. McLeod's. Will spend the rest of the winter in preaching if the Lord wills.

I love this work, and would be willing to spend my whole time in it if I was able to do so, for the harvest is ripe and the laborers are few. May God bless his servants that they may be faithful.

I would like to hear from the President of the Fourth Quorum of Elders. My address is Alexandria, Douglas county, Minnesota.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 31.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you last I have made two trips to Leon, preaching in the Saints' chapel eight times, and once in the country, five miles out of town, near the home of Bro. and Sr. Tibbetts and family. Bro. and Sr. Tibbetts, and their oldest son are among the late converts, and they are making a good start. Had it not been for the coldest snap of the season, and the horrors of lagrippe, I should have enjoyed my visit with them very much indeed.

At Leon I was ably and willingly assisted by Bro. J. W. Gillen, who preached for the people four times, three of which discourses were delivered while I was in the country. His effort on Sunday morning was a good one.

The Leon Saints are feeling well, as a rule, and are being more and more encouraged in this great and good work. Why should they not? The new converts are taking hold nicely; and were it not for the tobacco habit and a few other things, the Leon branch would be in an excellent condition. However, we recognize with pleasure and gratitude the marked improvement of the last few months. There are several others believing the truth, and the good Spirit is working with them. Through the efforts of the Saints there, assisted by one of the missionaries, together with the good management of the district president, the little chapel is now quite well seated, which makes it far more commodious and gives to it a much better appearance.

Have just read Bro. Maloney's remarks on the tobacco habit among the Saints as contained in last Herald. (Do Saints use tobacco? If so, should they use it?) He makes some good points, though his previous statement (referred to in his letter) was evidently a little radical. But if those who have had good opportunities for knowing that the tobacco habit is wrong, and therefore sinful, and who have been in the church for years, and whose duty it has been to keep pace with the onward and progressive movements of the church, continue to indulge in the forbidden practice, young men, middle aged, and aged, branch and district ministers, how can we wonder that some are not able to see, at the time of their baptism, that the foolish, filthy habit should be abandoned forever? Repentance does not have its sole application at the time of our first obedience; but whenever and as fast as the Spirit of truth reveals to us our wrongs and imperfections, it becomes our duty to lay them to one side. And if we live right, the Holy Spirit will continue its unlimited work of searching, revealing, and reproving till we are made perfect.

I think, too, that the Sunday school has an important work to do in this direction, which work of reform should begin among its officers and teachers. The idea of a man teaching boys and girls to do right, believe God and obey his word, in the class on Sunday, and then, on Monday, meeting them on the street or in the store, puffing away at the cigar or pipe, or chewing and spitting tobacco, is, I think, inconsistent and wrong. Such teaching is largely a failure. Let us "come up higher."

Your brother,

J. R. LAMBERT.

LEBECK, Mo., Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—I have just been looking over an old volume of the Herald of 1884 in which I find many things of importance recorded. The thought comes to me, "The Herald contains the history of the church." I read of the labors of our departed brother, T. W. Smith, and of others associated with him. I read of the Braden-Kelley debate, and am made to realize that other men have had this trickster to deal with as well as the elders of Southwestern Missouri.

When I thus read the history of the past I ask myself the question, "What have I done that is worthy of record in the columns of this 'church history' which is being made each week. I began the ministry nearly seven years ago. I have devoted my time constantly to the work since that time. I had so much to learn and so much of self to overcome that it seems I have done little else. My record of baptisms in seven years is probably less than thirty. I certainly hope that my reward in the next world will not be based on the number of baptisms. In every year of the seven spent in the ministry I have had from one to several very serious trials to meet; and when General Conference would assign me another field I would ponder in my own mind, "Will I be able to stand another year?" I have seen dark hours, in which I have for the time being even doubted the existence of a God; but when I turned this gospel work over and gave it a thorough examination my faith was just a little stronger than ever before. I am thankful that I can record the fact that these doubting periods are a thing of the past. I have not witnessed miracles like some men, in fact, never sought after the marvelous to any great extent. I would rather enjoy good liberty in preaching than to speak in tongues in prayer meeting.

I might fill pages with evidences of this work, but then what great good would it do? I have seen this evil under the sun, and it is common among men (and women too) that the person who says the most sometimes does the least. I have noticed that it is easy to pen a few words of advice to others but hard to take it home and make a practical application of it. Burns very fittingly remarks,

O that some power the gift would give us,
To see ourselves as others see us.

James observes, "The tongue can no man tame."

My experience in associating with the Latter Day Saints leads me to conclude that James was about right. If I were to guess I would suppose that more people will fail of celestial glory on account of a too liberal use of the tongue than anything else. I once saw a motto on the wall, "Mind your own business." I thought it beat "Home, sweet home" two to one. I think every home should be decorated with it, as also the following: "Don't talk about your neighbors."

I had intended, when taking up my pen, to speak somewhat of my labors the present year. I have endeavored to labor in Spring River district, but much of the time I have been in other parts as the work demanded. By request of Bro. M. S. Frick, of Webb City, I went with him to Poplar Bluff in Butler county, and on September 6 officiated in the marriage ceremony that made him one with our worthy sister, Belle Johnson, of that place. I remained to hold meetings for two weeks, during which time I baptized five. This is the first and only preaching ever done in Butler county. We left several near the kingdom who will no doubt obey when another elder goes that way. A good branch can easily be raised up there if some one will go and labor who can endure the climate. Malaria is abundant and the writer is not adapted to that kind of climate. I never enjoyed a series of meetings better than the one held there. I hope Bro. Sparling will see that this point is worked, as it is nearer his field than any other. My labors since the reunion have been divided between points in the northern part of my field and the vicinity of El Dorado Springs.

We have had to entertain his Royal Highness, Clark Braden, most of the fall and winter, and it has taken up much of my time. I have done my utmost to make arrangements for a contest "without gloves" between the reverend gentleman and Elder I. N. White, but so far we have only debated over rules, etc., to govern. Bro. White has demanded full and complete indorsements from the editor of the Christian Evangelist. Braden has therefore been on the anxious seat for some time awaiting the indorsement. The best he can do up to date is a telegram which may not fill the bill with Bro. White. Mr. Braden is not taking very well with his church at El Dorado, and they are tired of his presence, even now. He has a copartner in business, one J. H. Jones, of Appleton City, who would fain be a "Mormon eater." Unfortunately, however, he is compelled to depend upon Mr. Braden for brains. Their trickery and scheming, if written up, would fill one issue of the Herald. The following conversation was recently heard between Mr. Jones and a citizen of El Dorado:—

Citizen: "This man Braden is a pretty big man, ain't he?"

Jones: "Yes, one of the ablest we have."

Citizen: (After some moments silence) "These Mormons don't amount to much anyway, do they?"

Jones: "No, there is only a handful of them here and there."

Citizen: "Well — me if I know what you want to fetch that big feller down here to jump onto them fur. I never did like to see a big dog jump onto a little one." (Silence with Mr. Jones.)

The clergy of Southern Missouri seem to be on the war path generally. The work is onward. My health has been much better this year than last, though I am at present unfit for active preaching, owing to a severe attack of hemorrhage of the lungs. I hope to be in the field soon again.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Jan. 31.

Editors Herald:—A ten-days' stay in Philadelphia impressed me that a forward move in the work has been made there in the last year. There is a commendable little society of cheerful and warm-hearted Saints at work and they are endeavoring to make the church a first consideration. The young people and new beginners especially are to be commended in their efforts to keep the interest alive.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard did an excellent service while there, as he did also at Brooklyn, New York, which helped the Saints, and he has gone on his way well remembered by them. We parted company on the 24th and Bro. Hilliard went to Baldwin, Maryland, to remain a few days and then proposed to return to Illinois. It is the wish of the people that he call again, except a possible few who are willing to take their chances on the question of, "He that is tithed shall not be burned."

Bro. A. H. Parsons is well commended for industry and zeal in the work, and has a full share of the confidence and affection of the Saints. He is still in Norwalk, Connecticut, preaching nightly, and thrice on the Sabbath days. Local men are brightening up and exhibiting more of an effort in the cause. But Bro. A. Kent seems to be a favorite with all. He is warmly commended by the Saints, and although he has returned home, or is on the way, they hope for and request his return. Bro. Kent has been active, discreet, and faithful, and is thus worthy of commendations. Indeed, Mr. Editor, one's soul fairly blooms with joy and his nerves grow quiet and his pen runs smoothly when he can truly commend a fellow laborer and praise his work. What must be the effect, then, on the human heart of the words of the Master when it shall be said for merited effort, "Well done." To be a faithful laborer in the Lord's work is an attainment of the highest rank. But we often chide ourselves because we cannot do more, but having the world, the flesh, the Devil, and sectarianism to contend against, with some considerable looking after self, it may be at least hoped that at the summing up there will be much standing to all of our accounts; and certainly he that is able to make his virtues to really shine and labors prized should be praised.

Preaching in the church here to-night. I think of going to Fall River, Massachusetts, next Saturday if nothing prevents.

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

JASPER CITY, Mo., Jan. 25.

Editors Herald:—For upwards of thirty-four years I have been either directly or indirectly connected with this grand and glorious latter-day work; and while I regret sorely that my movements have not at all times been according to the ways of wisdom, nor my life's career in the church without mistakes, yet I deem the work of sufficient importance to myself and others to struggle on and if possible profit by past sad experience, having this assurance foremost in mind, that peradventure I should overcome, salvation is sure, as well as the crown; and to this end I take comfort in laboring for myself and mine, as well as the Saints and world at large.

A little over a year ago we made this place our home, among strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, and as soon as it became known that we were Latter Day Saints, (or Mormons, as they thought,) fear and dread came upon them; but after some preaching by word as well as by precept, some have expressed themselves as being glad we came, and we are glad to state that much prejudice has been removed and some are investigating.

Since coming to this county have opened up the work in a number of new places. Last week I labored in connection with Bro. A. M. Baker (the boy preacher), of Cedar county, at Nashville, Missouri, in the Christian church. We preached to apparently interested congregations, and the Christian brethren treated us with all due respect, for which they are to be commended. The sexton showed his respect for us by lighting up, kindling fires, sweeping, ringing the bell, etc. The above acts of kindness will be held in fond remembrance, while they reap the reward. The place is the home of Bro. B. F. and Sr. Miles, the only Saints there, who kindly cared for us. They have lived here twenty odd years, and by a godly walk and conversation have preached sermons louder than words, and have gained the love and respect of the entire community.

I left the boy preacher (who is doing finely, considering his small experience and youth) in charge of the service at Nashville, and went to Galesburg, Missouri, to fill previous appointments. There, as at the former place, I had splendid attention, but the congregations were not so large. However, some have become considerably interested. There was at one time a flourishing branch of the church here, I am told, but it is now disorganized. This sad state of affairs has been brought about by removals and the bad conduct of some who were at one time numbered among the Saints, and only about four or five families of them have been left, but who still hold fast to the rod of iron, hoping to outride the evils of life, and gain favor with both God and men. The Saints and some not of the fold did all in their power to make me feel at home, hence I found it a harder matter to part than to meet. One not of the faith said: "I will care for and feed you and your team a week if you will stay and preach for us." But circumstances prevented.

Inclosed find the name of one more subscriber for the Herald. I now and then find some who are not able to take the church papers. "Hard times" is the cry; but in some cases tobacco, coffee, and tea come in, without taking any notice of the signboard, "hard times." I will do all I can in the interest of the church and her literature.

ANOTHER PROPHECY FULFILLED.

While at Weir City, Kansas, some time ago, Elder Herke furnished me with the following bit of now valuable history:—

"It is not the will of the Lord to print any of the New Translation in the Star [Morning and Evening Star, printed by W. W. Phelps at Independence, Missouri, 1831 and 1832]; but when it is published, it will all go to the world together, in a volume by itself; and the New Testament and the Book of Mormon will be printed together."—Millennial Star, vol. 14, p. 422, History of Joseph Smith.

J. C. C.

LONDON, England, Jan. 16.

Editors Herald:—I send you a copy of the Morning Leader, of the 5th instant, containing an announcement of Elder James Caffall's lectures in our hall on Sunday morning and evening, 6th inst., at eleven a. m. on "What is Mormonism?" and at 6:30 p. m., "Why I am a Latter Day Saint." The latter lecture, to which I had the pleasure and privilege of listening, was a most cogent and masterly effort; characterized by a depth of insight and a breadth of theological acumen that made me wish that the congregation had been doubled, nay trebled. Indeed, it could easily have been quadrupled without great inconvenience to those present, and without, I am sure, provoking any protest from the lecturer.

Bro. Caffall is not only a most conscientious and cogent reasoner, but a most indefatigable worker. He delivered three more lectures on various phases of the latter-day work, on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday following the lectures hereinbefore alluded to.

Elder Caffall arrived in this city on Thursday, December 28, and left for the Sheffield conference on the morning of Friday, the 11th of January. He has thus been with us in London just a fortnight, and we look with sincere pleasure for his re-appearance in our midst later on. Would he might remain in England alway! and may our heavenly Father, in mercy to his church, increase and multiply the number of such ardent, painstaking, and humble laborers in his vineyard!

While I am writing, may I be permitted to correct an error I made in my last letter to you, to the effect that Elder J. D. Howell had, during the past two or three months, baptized six young souls into the kingdom here. I should have said that Elder Thomas Bradshaw baptized the first two, and Elder Howell the remaining four.

It has been well and truthfully said that, "one soweth and another reapeth." Probably in no place more than in London, (otherwise Babylon,) has the justice and veracity of this assertion been made manifest. The good seed sown by my brethren and myself on the highways and byways of this great city in open air preaching, and the sending of your beloved pages to the great libraries, together with the Autumn Leaves and Zion's Ensign, has borne a fruit and affected a result utterly dissimilar to what I at least anticipated.

I fondly hoped that the steps taken would have eventuated in large accessions of outsiders to swell the ranks of this branch of the church and kingdom of our God.

I once expressed my disappointment on this head to a gentleman of high scholastic attainments who belongs to no church at all. His reply was characteristic of the man, and well worth repeating to the larger circle of my beloved American brethren and sisters, among whom I feel so insignificant a unit:—

"How can you possibly say that you are 'laboring in vain' when the very highest pulpits in the land, from St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey downwards, are absolutely ringing with your doctrine?"

"Not mine," I humbly venture to remonstrate.

"Well, the doctrine you preach," he said.

"It is not nine years ago since I first saw and heard you preaching, in company with an elderly gentleman at Stoke-Newington, and at Clapton. At that time no preacher in the land but yourselves dared to raise a voice against the doctrine of eternal torment; or dared to predicate the least hope for the moral and upright-living man, hereafter, save and except he has embraced the popular religion of the day, and has become, (as they term it), 'saved' at once.

"Now listen to the soul stirring sermons of the venerable Archdeacon Farrar? The Rev. Canon Knox, . . . Little; Rev. Archdeacon Holland, at St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey; and you will find their sermons full of the 'larger hope' of ultimate salvation even for the vilest.

"Then read the splendid and masterly works by Rev. Canon Plumtree, D. D., on the 'spirits in prison,' and 'the eternal judgment;' also Rev. T. Farrer on the 'larger hope' (that is, if you have not read them already), and you will find it and them full of the very doctrine you and your brethren have been advocating from the very first time we heard you preach here, at Stoke-Newington; and I can only say that you must be singularly modest and self depreciating men if you fail to see that this wonderful change in the direction of theological thought and prelection, is in very large degree due to the preaching of your colaborers for years past, and the constant dissemination of your literature."

I feel particularly anxious about the site of our new building in this city; for while it is written, the "poor have the gospel preached to them." it is in no place that I am aware of, at least, declared that the rich shall NOT have it, and, as I pointed out in a letter to your columns of some time back, there are nearly ninety large districts in the west, northwest, south, southeast, and southwestern portions of this great Babylon which have not as yet heard from the Reorganization, the message of the "true Evangel" of these latter days.

I humbly and sincerely hope that the proposed building will be erected in a central portion of London; where these teeming thousands may know where it is and how to get there.

Your brother in Christ,

F. TUBB.

POLLOCK, Mo., Jan. 29.

Editors Herald:—Baptized three here on Sunday; waded snow eight miles to the river against a zero wind sweeping down from Iowa's plains; immense crowds—our fame has run from Pollock to the ends of the woods. Calls from every side. Have preached in three different churches, and others waiting me, with the promise of fuel and lights as long as we will stay. Ordained one priest who will keep the camp fires blazing; others have given their names for baptism.

Came here by order of Joseph Luff, and can say I never felt better in my life preaching the word, and can say I am fully in accord with the late revelation, and that we will all do better and feel better in our work when we more nearly fulfill the law.

CLARKSDALE, Mo., Feb. 4.

Editors Herald:—At our regular union meeting of the four branches in this vicinity; namely, Pleasant Grove, German Stewartsville, DeKalb, and Stewartsville, held at Pleasant Grove, on the 3d inst., the following resolution was offered and adopted:—

"Resolved that the undersigned be requested to write to the Saints' Herald that those Saints who are located in the drouth district of the west who are suffering for the necessaries of life will please notify us and we will do what we can for them."

Signed, CHARLES P. FAUL, Secretary.

IRVING, Minn., Jan. 31.

Editors Herald:—I am now at the above-named place, holding a series of meetings. It is a new place for our faith; I am the first one that has ever been here. The schoolhouse was full last night, although it is very cold weather now. It has been twenty-eight degrees below zero the last week. Some have walked four miles across the prairie to attend, then would have to walk home again. The interest at present writing is splendid and the indications are that good will be done. I dreamed the first night I was here that I went to the water to fish and all I had to do was to step into the water and throw them out with my hands. When I went to the water I found one man there and he had caught a few fish, but did not have very good success after I got there. It seemed to me that the fish were those just waiting to be caught. A Methodist preacher had been holding a protracted meeting where I am now holding and had four or five caught, I suppose by guile, but he will not get any more at present at least. He is attending the meetings and with the rest of the congregations is on the anxious seat, for I have not told them in full the church I represent. No one ask me at first, and I did not think to the first night, so I have let them guess.

I was out visiting yesterday and some of the other neighbors were invited in and I told them that I represented the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. Will tell them in full the next meeting, then if they stay away it will be pure prejudice that keeps them at home. Some are attending who have never been known to attend church before. Some say they like to hear a man preach the gospel that believes it himself, and who is not afraid to preach the truth let it hit where it will. I believe I have never preached plainer than I have here. I gave polygamy a wiper night before last which set me right on that question. The M. E. preacher was present and gave me a lot of amens that night but did not give me any last night. I am of the opinion that they will be few and far between from now on. I am not feeling very well bodily but the Lord is with me in preaching and I feel to rejoice and give thanks to him for his goodness and for the aid he is giving in presenting his word.

While laboring in the city of Minneapolis I had a little experience that is amusing at least. I had an appointment out for Tuesday night and several spiritualists attended, and among them were two mediums, and they had agreed among themselves that they would unite their power and bring it to bear upon me and compel me to stop preaching and sit down. I had not been feeling well that day and had not decided when I went to meeting what subject I would present that night. When I went in the house was full and I saw that some were spiritualists and decided then what to speak upon. But I knew nothing about their conspiracy. I had the Spirit from the first and spoke with increased light and power for over an hour. During this time the mediums were working with all the power at their command to stop me, and were telegraphing each other by secret signs, but the harder they worked the stronger I preached and the greater light I had. They told some of the Saints afterwards that they made a failure of it, and that there was something about it they could not control. Some of them are now reading the Bible and may in time receive the truth. Shall stay here for a few days yet and see what the result will be.

IS FAITH INHERENT IN MAN?

To the readers of the Herald I wish to present a few thoughts on the principle of faith as I understand it. I am aware that it is taught by some that faith is a special gift of God to some that have become citizens of his kingdom, by the same rule that the gift of tongues, gift of interpretation, or prophecy is given. Now, we believe that all persons to whom these manifestations have been given have possessed these faculties or powers of body, humanly speaking, but when they became obedient to the gospel they received the Holy Ghost, and when wrought upon by this divine Spirit they spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance or dictated. This Holy Spirit was to continue with them, to remain with them as a monitor and guide.

We also believe men have faith in themselves, and that it is improper and unwise to ask God to give us faith or to increase our faith. The great Teacher taught the people to have faith in God. He nowhere taught them to ask God for faith, but for them to exercise the faith they had in God. He evidently knew that the principle of faith was implanted in man; but man in consequence of transgression has failed to understand his powers for good, and when he prays that God will give more faith he asks for that which God intends we should, individually, or as a church, cultivate ourselves.

We believe that in every rational and accountable being there exists the principle of faith. Without it man is not capable of carrying out his destiny and fulfilling the conditions of his creations. It is said that God created man in his own image or likeness, and he possesses in a limited degree all the attributes or qualities of the Godhead. Without these he could not be expected to battle with and overcome the obstacles strewn in his pathway; he could not be expected to become perfect as his heavenly Father is perfect. But as soon as reason begins to dawn and assert itself we begin to see the attributes develop that combine to make up the man.

The love manifested by the mother wakes up the principle of love in the child, and upon this principle every faculty of the mind is brought into an operative condition. Its thinking and reasoning powers should then be properly and wisely cultivated and trained, so that it shall be led to love that which is pure and good. The child soon understands a mother's love and care, her unremitting attention, and returns her caresses with a smile. Thus the principle of human love is developed; and as the child grows to maturity, if wisely taught, he will be led to understand that the love and affection which are to him a wellspring of joy, have been planted in his soul by a wise and benevolent Creator; and that beyond and above his love of self and friends should be cultivated a love for God who is the author of all the good that comes to humanity. And as the child grows step by step the principle of faith has been developing, he has witnessed his fond mother's care and attention, and because of this love he has believed or had faith in her rules of treatment; her admonitions were all conducive to his happiness and comfort, and if she warned him not to touch the hot stove he found mother knew best and acquired faith in her judgment.

So it is with the children of the kingdom; they have all the qualifications necessary to become the children of God and heirs of salvation, all that it required is intelligent obedience to the rules given by the great Teacher. One of the first and most important qualifications is to have faith in God. Do you ask, How can I have faith in God of whom I know but little and whom I cannot comprehend? I reply, We have seen that we can have faith in man and rely upon his promises. Let us go a step further and believe in God, in his word, and in his servants; so shall we be established. You need not hesitate because of the mighty achievements said to have been wrought by faith in bygone time; the mountains have been removed, the sick have been healed, the blind made to see, but faith is just as potent now as then.

Reader, you have the germ of that faith, and by it you have accomplished everything in life that has made your work of any benefit to yourself or your fellow men. All the mighty changes and revolutions by which mankind has been elevated and blessed have been brought about by man's faith in himself or some superior intelligence. Therefore we say, Exercise faith in God; trust his word; believe his promises; do what he has commanded; so shall our faith increase, and joy will abound, and we shall realize in our lives an abiding and increasing faith in God; we shall find the rules he has given us for self-government, not merely arbitrary to keep us in check, but for our greatest good.

Remember, all the men of renown, whose names have been handed down to us in the sacred records, have been men of like passions with ourselves; but they were constant in their love for God and truth, they acquired an abiding faith by obedience to law. This world is full of manifestations of God's love and good will to the race. We see them in the family circle; we see them in all the provisions made for the comfort and happiness of man in every condition in life. In all these varied circumstances our love and faith are called into lively exercise; and now the question is, Shall we appreciate the gifts our Father has so kindly bestowed upon us?

My thoughts are thus led out as I reflect and ponder on what I read and hear, and the various petitions which are offered as prayer, and the repetitions referred to in Herald of June 6, Editorial Items, with a view, as I suppose, to correct some of these habits. And that I may not appear to be assuming or dictating I will state that I understand it is my duty, as a parent, to properly teach and practice before my family good morals and correct habits. Desire for the present and future welfare of my children demands this, respect for myself as a parent urges this as my duty. And it seems to me there should be in our organizations or branches a corrective power, some one or more authorized to teach, to correct, and reprove in meekness and mildness, that all may be taught wisdom.

Some of the children that are brought into the church have need to learn the first rudiments of prayer and how they should behave themselves in the church of God. Others have been brought in from the various societies and have formed erroneous habits, customs, and forms of prayer that need correcting; and proper training, both by precept and example, is a necessity. And it seems to me as I read the revelations given to us as a people and the law given of God to govern the church that we are behind the times, that we are slow to perform and observe the law appointed of God and given to the elders with a positive command that they shall see that his law is kept. Section 17 D. C. clearly points out the remedy for all these failings and imperfections. Public criticism is not nor ever will be as satisfactory to the erring ones as an observance of the law regarding these things. Let the elders, priests, and teachers be wise and learn their duty as pointed out in the sacred books. There we find a system of government that is equally as binding to-day as when first given. Read sections forty-one to forty-six Doctrine and Covenants. These rules and laws are our only safeguards; as soon as we begin to neglect or fail to carry out the rules of the great law-giver, we confess our unbelief in the necessity for such laws, or we think some other mode will do.

The same cause will produce the same effect to-day as was produced in 1832. The elders and those to whom the watchcare had been given became darkened in mind because they had treated lightly the law which God had given and vainly thought a substitute of man's invention would do. The church was not charged with apostasy, nor idolatry, nor any grievous sin, but with treating lightly or with indifference the things God had given; and this vanity and unbelief brought the whole church under condemnation and it was to remain until the church as a body was willing not only to say but to do according to that which is written. See D. C. section 81.

Just in proportion as we fail to recognize the law, whether officials or members, we lose the guidance of the Holy Spirit. If we as a church profess to have greater spiritual light, let us walk in the light, let it be reflected in all our acts and dealings with men whether in the church or out, let the law of God be our standard and rule of action. I am fully satisfied it is only by a practical application of gospel principles in our lives that we can ever realize the blessings promised, not being forgetful hearers but doers; these are the ones that are to be blessed and their faith and love will increase day by day. Life will be worth living because in accord with the law of God.

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.

This admonition has been ringing through the centuries since the days of Enoch and neither the wisdom of man nor the cunning of the adversary has been able to change the decree. Let us be wise; obedience is better than sacrifice.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED. NO. 5.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

THE "STICK OF JOSEPH," CONTINUED.

ON this please read the following, from Bancroft:—

The theory that the Americans are of Jewish descent has been discussed more minutely and at greater length than any other. Its advocates, or at least those of them who have made original researches, are comparatively few; but the extent of their investigations and the multitude of parallelisms they adduce in support of their hypothesis, exceed by far anything that we have yet encountered.—Native Races, vol. 5, pp. 77, 78.

Joseph Merrick, Esq., a highly respectable character in the church at Pittsfield, gave the following account: That in 1815, he was levelling some ground under and near an old wood shed, standing on a place of his, situated on Indian Hill.

He ploughed and conveyed away old chips and earth to some depth. After the work was done, walking over the place, he discovered, near where the earth had been dug the deepest, a black strap, as it appeared, about six inches in length, and one and an half in breadth, and about the thickness of a leather trace to a harness.

He perceived it had at each end a loop of some hard substance, probably for the purpose of carrying it. He conveyed it to his house and threw it into an old tool box. He afterwards found it thrown out of doors, and he again conveyed it to the box. After some time, he thought he would examine it; but in attempting to cut it, found it as hard as bone; he succeeded, however, in getting it open, and found it was formed of two pieces of thick raw-hide, sewed and made water tight, with the sinews of some animal; and in the fold was contained four folded pieces of parchment. They were of dark yellow hue, and contained some kind of writing. The neighbors coming in to see the strange discovery, tore one of the pieces to atoms, in the true Hun and Vandal style. The other three pieces Mr. Merrick saved, and sent them to Cambridge,—where they were examined, and discovered to have been written with a pen in Hebrew, plain and legible.

The writing on the three remaining pieces of parchment, was quotations from the Old Testament.—American Antiquities, pp. 65, 66.

Of the Indians, Priest says:—

Their Jewish customs are too many to be enumerated in this work.

Hebrew words are found among the American Indians in considerable variety.—American Antiquities, pp. 56, 63.

Prescott says:—

When the Indians make their feasts they remove all fire, . . . and rekindle it before the food is put on to cook, so as to be sure and not have anything unclean about the feast. For my part I am forced to believe that these feasts have been handed down from the children of Israel.—Ibid. 241.

Boudinot says:—

Their language in their roots, idioms, and particular construction, appear to have the whole genius of the Hebrew; and what is very remarkable have most of the peculiarities of that language, especially those in which it differs from most other languages.—The American Indians, pp. 98–101.

In connection with the foregoing, please note the following remarkable tradition:—

Dr. West, of Stockbridge, relates that an old Indian informed him that his fathers in this country had, not long since, been in the possession of a book, which they had, for a long time, carried with them, but having lost the knowledge of reading it, they buried it with an Indian chief.—Ant. of America, by Priest, p. 67. (Quoted from "View of the Hebrews," p. 223.)

The prophecies of the Bible, the claims of the Book of Mormon, the discoveries of scientific men and his torians, as well as those peculiar traditions of the Indians, all agree. The Bible tells where Joseph's posterity should go, and how they should be blessed. The Book of Mormon tells us they went just where the Bible said they would go, and that they were blessed with the very things the Bible said they should receive. Then science, history, and tradition come along and confirm both records.

In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.—2 Cor. 13: 1.

But science, history, and tradition are not the witnesses I design to use. Others have written on those subjects of late, proving that this continent was once inhabited by a highly civilized, enlightened, and religious people, and that the main facts as stated in the Book of Mormon have been confirmed by scientific discoveries since the publication of that book. That line of thought is very interesting, and also highly instructive; but my object in this article is to prove from the Bible that the Book of Mormon is true. With the Bible, therefore, I shall stay, adding only such historical proofs as may be absolutely necessary.

Returning to the blessing of Jacob, upon Ephraim and Manasseh, I shall ask you to notice more particularly some of the points brought out in that prophecy. When Israel blesses they are to say: "God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh." But why should they wish to be like them? Because they are the "crown" of Joseph's head; they are his two "horns," and are "like the horns of unicorns"—strong and powerful; they (both of them) are the instruments that God will use, in the last days, to "push the people together to the ends of the earth." This is often quoted, "from the ends of the earth;" but that is wrong. The people at one end of the earth are to be pushed together to the "land of Jerusalem," the blessing of Jacob's progenitors; at the other end of the earth they are to be pushed together to Zion, upon "Joseph's land." Moses was right; they are to "push the people together to the ends of the earth."

Ephraim's seed is to "become a multitude of nations." This might be done in either of the following ways: they might divide up into a number of separate and distinct tribes; or they might mix in with other nations, lose their own identity, and thus "become a multitude" of all, or nearly all, of earth's nations. But, as God's word must harmonize with itself, we think the latter is the only way in which this prophecy can be fulfilled; although, at first thought, we would no doubt think the former the more plausible way of the two. For proof of this position, please read the following texts:—

Thus saith the Lord God, it shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass. For the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin; and within three score and five years shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people.—Isa. 7: 8.

Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people; Ephraim is a cake not turned. Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not.—Hosea 7: 8.

Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit; yea, though they bring forth yet will I slay even the beloved fruit of their womb. My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him:

and they shall be wanderers among the nations.—Hosea 9: 19.

They of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man. . . . I will sow them among the people.—Zech. 10: 9.

Now, as it would be impossible for Ephraim to "be broken, that it be not a people," "mixed among the people," "wanderers among the nations," and, at the same time, be a multitude of distinct Ephraimite nations, it seems clear that the only way for him to "become a multitude of nations," in harmony with these prophecies, is to become very numerous but be "mixed among" a multitude of other nations. The Book of Mormon says (p. 231) that Lehi was a descendant of Manasseh. But there is Zoram (p. 9), Ishmael and his family (p. 12), and some, at least, of the people of Zarahemla (p. 137), whose genealogy is not given, neither are we told to what tribe they belonged. But in view of the fact that Ephraim and Manasseh together were to "grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth;" and also that they are the two "horns," whom Moses said should inherit "Joseph's land;" and in further view of the fact that Joseph's "branches" (plural number—his branches) were to "run over the wall" and, together, go to the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills;"—we are forced to believe that some of those who come to this continent, whose tribal name is not given, were of the tribe of Ephraim; that they were "broken," "mixed among" the descendants of Manasseh, and thus lost their national identity.

But this position, whether correct or incorrect, does not affect the truth of the Book of Mormon. The Bible says that Joseph's "BRANCHES" shall go to a land corresponding, in its geographical position, with this continent. The Book of Mormon tells us that one of his branches (Manasseh) did come here, and become "great." And now I shall try, and I think successfully, too, to trace Ephraim to this continent (whether he came with Manasseh or not), and show that he is indeed the "greater," because of the greater work he shall perform in pushing "the people together."

But, first, I shall show his superior position over Manassah, and also over all the tribes of Israel, in the accomplishment of this work. Jacob puts these two sons of Joseph on an equality with his own sons, as stated in Genesis 48: 5, 6:—

And now thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt before I came unto thee into the land of Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon they shall be mine. And thy issue, which thou begatest after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of thy brethren in their inheritance.

In the 16th verse he says:—

And let my name [Israel] be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac.

We see from these texts that Jacob adopts them as his own sons, puts his name on them, and makes them as his other sons. Hence it is that we have the tribe of Ephraim and the tribe of Manassah, Joseph's other children being called Ephraimites or Manassahites in their inheritances. This places them simply on an equality with the other tribes. The following, however, places them above the other tribes.

Now the sons of Reuben the firstborn of Israel, (for he was the firstborn; but, forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel; and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright. For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's.)—1 Chron. 5: 1, 2.

The "birthright was given to the sons of Joseph"—not to his son, but to his "sons," Ephraim and Manasseh. But how can they both have the birthright? I can give you only my understanding of that, and you can take it at what it is worth: Joseph was Jacob's firstborn son by his legal wife, Rachel, and was therefore entitled to the birthright—"the birthright was Joseph's." Manasseh, being the oldest son of Joseph, after the flesh, is entitled, by his birth, to the birthright. Being the firstborn of the family, he kept the family records, the history of the tribe, and wrote the "stick of Joseph." Hence, "he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great." But, when the Lord shall "save thy people, the remnant of Israel," and make a "new and everlasting covenant" with the house of Israel, Ephraim will be the "firstborn" into this "new covenant," and be entitled to the "birthright" in the "kingdom of God," which he is to set up "in the last days." Then the "stick of Joseph" is to be in the hand of Ephraim, and "the great things of my law," "written to him" (written by his brother, Manasseh, who kept the family records) are to be "counted as a strange thing," hence he "shall be greater" than his older brother. For proof that Ephraim will be the "firstborn" at this time, read Jeremiah 31: 6-9:—

For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. For thus saith the Lord; Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn.

This is to be when the Lord saves "the remnant of Israel," when he brings them "from the north country" and "from the coasts of the earth." It is then that Ephraim is to be the Lord's "firstborn"—not Jacob's firstborn, nor Joseph's firstborn, but the Lord's "firstborn." Do you remember what the Lord is to do at the time he "saves the remnant of Israel?" Paul says:—

A short work will the Lord make upon the earth.—Rom. 9: 27, 28.

Isaiah says:—

The consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness.—Isa. 10: 20-23.

Also that the Lord will do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act.—Isa. 28: 21, 22.

Now, as Ephraim is to be the Lord's "firstborn" when the Lord makes this "short work," does "his strange work," and saves the "remnant of Israel," it will be interesting to know just where he will be, at that time, and this will help us to find out where this "strange work" is to commence.

Keeping in mind, now, that Joseph was blessed "above the blessing" of Jacob's progenitors, that his "branches run over the wall," go to the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills," receive a "land" that is wonderfully productive, and that they are there to be blessed "with the blessings of heaven above," the "precious things of heaven,"—I call your attention to the following in regard to Ephraim—one of Joseph's "branches:—

FROM THE WEST.

I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim; for I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee: and I will not enter into the city. They shall walk after the Lord: he shall roar like a lion: when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria: and I will place them in their houses, saith the Lord.—Hos. 11: 9-11.

IN FAR COUNTRIES.

And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the Lord. I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased. And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again. I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them.—Zech. 10: 7-10.

"OVER THE SEA."

The lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof: . . . her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea.—Isa. 16: 8.

The "principal plants" of Israel are evidently the chief "branches" of the "fruitful bough," the ones who have the birthright, hence Ephraim and Manasseh, Ephraim being the "greater," the "firstborn." And "in far countries," "over the sea," "west" of Jerusalem, at "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills" would bring us again to America, as the place where Ephraim is to "remember the Lord," "turn again," and "live;" the place where he is to "tremble" when the Lord "shall roar like a lion," "place them in their houses," and cause them to "walk after the Lord."

There is another expression in Zechariah 10: 8, as quoted above, that I want to call your attention to, and that is, "I will hiss for them, and gather them." At the time of the gathering of Israel, then, the Lord is to "hiss for them"—"they of Ephraim"—and they are to "live with their children, and turn again." Isaiah says (Isa. 5: 26) that the Lord will "hiss unto them from the end of the earth" and "lift up an ensign" "from far." "From far," would be in "far countries"—where Ephraim is to remember the Lord. "From the end of the earth," would be "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills"— where Ephraim is to receive the "blessings of heaven above" "in the last days."

The reason that Ephraim is not known is because he has been "broken," has been "sown among the people," has "mixed himself among the people," become "wanderers among the nations," and thus lost his national identity. His genealogy is lost, and he does not even know himself. But "in the last days" his posterity are to be made known, and they are to be "among the people," as is witnessed by the following:—

But ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the Ministers of our God. . . . I will make an everlasting covenant with them and their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people.—Isa. 61:6, 8, 9.

This, of course, is spoken of Israel, but it is to be in the day when God shall make an "everlasting covenant" with them that they "shall be known among the Gentiles," and, as Ephraim is to be the "firstborn" in this "everlasting covenant," his seed will be the first to be made known "among the people." How they are to be made known is not so plain. But as God is the "same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," it is to be presumed that he will always act like himself; and if he does, he will "cause to stand up," in the gathering of Israel, "a priest with Urim and Thummim" through whom the genealogy, not only of Ephraim but of all the tribes of Israel, shall be made known.

These [children of certain priests] sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found; therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood. And the Tisshatha [governor] said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.—Ezra 2:63. (See also Neh. 7: 63-65.)

From this we see that a priest with the Urim and Thummim was the means through which the genealogy of the priests was made known in ancient times. And, as the children of Israel are to be "named the priests of the Lord" in the last days, and are to be "among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people;" and, as Ephraim is to be the "firstborn," he will be the "chief priest," hence the first whose seed shall be "known among the Gentiles," and this, to be in harmony with God's dealing with his people in the past, will be done by someone standing up "with Urim and with Thummim."

JOSEPH SMITH AND OLIVER COWDERY OF THE TRIBE OF EPHRAIM.

As already stated, the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon and the work connected with it—organizing the church and preaching the gospel—claims to be the "short work," the "strange work," the "marvelous work," that the Lord is to do in the gathering of Israel. Now, if this claim is true, the "firstborn" into this work, this new covenant—the gospel covenant, must be of the tribe of Ephraim.

What are the facts in the case? Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were the "firstborn," as is witnessed by the following, from the pen of Joseph himself:—

We still continued the work of translation [the "sealed book" by the aid of Urim and Thummim], when in the ensuing month, (May, 1829,) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins, and this shall never again be taken from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter, and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized, I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded.

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, 1829, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 726.

This quotation is quite lengthy, but as there are a number of points in it that I want to call your attention to, expecting to have a use for them before finishing this article, I thought best to give the entire quotation. I ask the reader, however, not to think that I am trying to prove this work true by the writings of its own leading advocates, for such is not the case. I present those statements simply to show you the nature of the claims made for the work; then, if I succeed in proving those claims to be in exact harmony with the predictions of the Bible, it stands as an evidence in its favor; but, if it can be shown that those claims are in opposition to the teaching of the Bible, it will, of course, be an evidence against the work. The points I wish you to notice in the foregoing extract are these:—

1. A "messenger" from heaven visits Joseph and Oliver.
2. This "messenger" claims to be John the Baptist.
3. He ordained them to the Aaronic priesthood.
4. He said this priesthood should never be taken from the earth again "until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."
5. He promised them the Melchisedec priesthood.
6. He commanded them to go and baptize each other.
7. They baptized and ordained each other as directed.
8. Joseph is recognized as the first elder and Oliver as the second elder.

Here, then, are the first two born into this kingdom, and they may, therefore, be recognized as the "firstborn" in this latter-day work.

As further proof that they are recognized as the "firstborn," I call your attention to the following from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:—

Which commandments were given to Joseph Smith, Jr., who was called of God and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the first elder of this church; and to Oliver Cowdery, who was called of God an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the second elder of this church, and ordained under his hand.—D. C. 17: 1.

This makes it clear that they are recognized as the "firstborn" in this work, being the first baptized, the first confirmed, and the first ordained.

They claimed also to be of the tribe of Ephraim, as we learn from the revelations given through Joseph. The following from the Doctrine and Covenants is clear and pointed:—

And they who are in the north countries [the ten tribes] shall come in remembrance before the Lord. . . . And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. . . . And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy. Behold this is the blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the richer blessing upon the head of Ephraim and his fellows.—D. C. 108: 6.

Notice that the "richer blessing upon the head of Ephraim and his fellows" is that they, by being the "firstborn" and thus becoming "the servants of the Lord," are to have the privilege of crowning the other tribes "with glory, even in Zion."

Again we read:—

And the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out.—D. C. 64: 7.

We see from these quotations that the "servants of the Lord," the first elders of this church, were recognized as being "of the blood of Ephraim." And (reckoning from Jerusalem) they were in "far countries," "over the sea," "from the west," at "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills"—just where the Bible says Ephraim is to be when he "remembers the Lord" and "lives." They had the "stick of Joseph" (Book of Mormon) in their hand with the "stick of Judah" (the Bible), just as the Bible says. They were "mixed among the people," as declared by Hosea, and were made known "among the Gentiles," as predicted by Isaiah, by one standing "up with Trim and with Thummim," in harmony with the teaching of Ezra and Nehemiah.

Reader, can you believe that the remarkable claims made by this unlearned boy, and the work done by him and his associates, just happened, by accident or chance, to be in line with all those peculiar prophecies? Can you not see the hand of God in all this?

California sent two hundred and eighty carloads of raisins eastward during September, against forty carloads during the same month last year. Of other dried fruits, including prunes, there were eleven hundred carloads, against seven hundred last year.

BISHOP AGENT'S NOTICES.

To the Saints of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district:—As Bishop's agent I feel not only impressed but impelled, by the force of circumstances, to make this appeal to you in behalf of the financial department of the work in this district. As a people, as a church, we believe and teach that "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God."—Luke 4:4. Also "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me."—John 14:21. "If a man love me, he will keep my words."—Verse 23. "He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings."—Verse 24. "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments."—1 John 5:3.

We also profess to believe this: "He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple."—D. C. 41:2. And this, too: "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him."—1 John 2:4.

Saints, do you love him? Are you his disciple? Do you "know him"? Before answering these questions please stop and "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."—2 Cor. 13:5. The Lord has said to this church, and that, too, by way of commandment, that those whose duty it is shall "execute the law of tithing."—D. C. 114:1. And this "law of tithing," as expounded by those whom the Master has called to teach and execute it, and also as taught in the law of God, requires the Saints to pay "one tenth of their interest annually" (D. C. 106:1) for the support of the work. One tenth of our income over and above necessary expenses. Is that a hard law? If the Lord blesses you with health, strength, ability, and opportunity, to make six hundred dollars a year, while your necessary expenses are only five hundred, you have a net income of one hundred dollars. Now, do you feel oppressed because the Lord asks you to give ten dollars of that for the support of the gospel? The Lord has furnished the earth, the sunshine, the rain, the health, the strength, the intelligence, the opportunity—all the capital—and you have put in your labor; you get five hundred and ninety dollars and the Lord gets ten—if you don't "rob God," and take his share too. Surely, "His commandments are not grievous."—1 John 5:3. "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."—Matt. 11:30. Are you willing to bear it?

I imagine I hear some of you saying: "O if it was only to pay the tenth of my net income from now on, I should not mind it; but I have worked hard, lived economically, and have succeeded in laying up, in money and property, some two thousand dollars, which I want to live upon, while here, and then leave for my children; and now, if I undertake to comply with this law of tithing, I must pay one tenth of that, too, as well as one tenth of my net income from now on." Yes, that is correct. And one tenth of two thousand dollars is two hundred; so, if you have two thousand, that has not been tithed, you justly owe two hundred dollars tithing. "But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions."—Matt. 19:22.

But, if you think this falls heavy upon you, just stop right here and answer, to the complete satisfaction of your own mind, this question: If you were starting out in the world to-day, and had your choice, which would you rather have, eighteen hundred dollars with the assurance of God's blessing upon it, or two thousand without his blessing? Now, don't tell me with your tongue that you would rather have the eighteen hundred with God's blessing, and then tell me by your actions that you would rather have the two thousand without his blessing, for that, you know, would be inconsistent, to say the least. But, if you say you would rather risk the eighteen hundred, then I say, show your faith by your works—pay your tithing. If you say you prefer the two thousand, and take your chances, then I have this to ask: If you, who have been in the church for years; you, who have received the Holy Spirit, the gift of tongues, prophecy, and revelation; you, who have received a knowledge of the truth, and have seen the power of God manifest in healing the sick, your own children, your own selves; if you, who have received, seen, felt, and known these things, have no more confidence in God than that, how can you have the cheek to ask others to give up their popularity, their good name, their friends, their all, and cast their lot with us? Let us try to be consistent.

How much of your property did you bring with you when you came into this world? "For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out."—1 Timothy 6:7. Where then did you get it? "The living God who giveth us richly all things to enjoy."—1 Timothy 6:17. "Seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."—Acts 17:25. God gave you everything you have—it is all net income. Have you paid the "tenth of your interest annually," since the Lord commenced increasing your goods? If not, you have taken that which belongs to the Lord and appropriated it to your own use. "Will a man rob God?"—Malachi 3:8. Do you think a man—a Saint—would "rob God?" "If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, . . . he shall surely live."—Ezekiel 33:15. Will the Lord require less of his Saints than he does of the wicked? If we have taken, in the past, that which, according to the law of God, belonged to him, must we not "restore," "give again" that which we have taken? Sometimes people take and use that which belongs to the Lord so long that their hearts become calloused, and they think they have a right to it, that it is their very own—that the Lord's claim upon it has expired by the law of limitation, but I trust this is not the case with us.

Brethren, the finances in this district are low. We have but few laborers in this district, it is true, but there is not means enough coming in to support their families. What shall be done? Calls are coming from all parts of our field for preaching. Prospects for preaching the word were never so encouraging before. The elders are willing to go, but their families' wants must be supplied. That part of the work is committed to us. "All are called according to the gifts of God to them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all."—D. C. 119:8.

The work does not rest upon the elders alone—it is "entrusted to all." The family of the traveling elder is as dear to him as yours is to you. Some of their families are hard run, even now. They are calling on me for the allowance promised them by the church, but I have not got it. It is due them long ago. Brethren, will you come to the rescue? If those men have to quit the field to provide for their families, the condemnation rests upon those who refuse to make their part of the "sacrifice," those who refuse to bear their part of the "burden."

Some of you have been in the church for years, and I hear you say from time to time that the Saints don't enjoy the Spirit as they did fifteen or twenty years ago, don't have as good meetings as they had then. Is it any wonder? Then, perhaps, the Saints were living up to all the light they had, and God accepted their work and blessed them in the same. He continued to give them "precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little," asking them, pleading with them to "come up higher." But alas! many have stood still, others have gone backward, while but few have gone forward. What could we expect, brethren? "But whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath."—Matt. 13:11, I. T. "But from him that hath not obtained other talents, shall be taken away even that which he hath received."—Matt. 25:30, I. T. The Lord says that this is "a day of sacrifice and a day for the tithing of my people."—D. C. 64:5. Have you complied with that law? No? Is it strange, then, that you don't enjoy the gifts of the Spirit—the talents committed to your trust—as you did before you rejected this additional light? When God blessed you with these gifts he expected you to make greater sacrifices for his work, for, "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required."—Luke 12:48. If we refuse to do his will, when we know it, we "shall be beaten with many stripes."

Brethren, is there anything in this world that you love better than you love this work? You say, "No." Then let us all "put our shoulders to the wheel," and use the strength, the wisdom, and the means which the Master has committed to our trust, in helping to build up the kingdom of God. Let us live so that it may be said of us, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, be thou ruler over many."

Tithes and freewill offerings may be sent to me at Coldwater, Branch county, Michigan. Your brother in the gospel,

WM. LOCKERBY.

To the Saints of Northern Michigan:—The finances of our district, as represented by the efficient Bishop's agent, J. H. Peters, are exhausted. These hard times will test our fidelity to the work of the Lord. Let us all do something by sending means to our Bishop's agent at Coleman, Michigan, and keep the missionary forces in the field. Now is the time for all, ministry and laity, by mutual effort and personal sacrifice, to contribute to the support of the work in a substantial way. Let all money be sent to J. H. Peters, Coleman, Michigan.

Submissionary in charge of Northern Michigan.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Far West district conference will convene with the St. Joseph, Missouri, branch on March 9, at ten a. m. All branches in the district should send a report to this conference. Come prepared to elect your delegates to the General Conference.

The Sunday school association will meet at the same place on Friday the 8th. Let all attend these gatherings and bring the Spirit of the Master with you that we may have an enjoyable time.

TEMME T. HINDERKS, Pres.

CHARLES P. FAUL, Sec.

The Southern Missouri district will meet in conference at Sargent, Missouri, Saturday, March 2, at ten a. m., and will hold over two days. Parties coming from the southern portion of the district can come on freight train No. 54 the same day conference convenes and be there at the opening session, as it leaves Thayer at 4:35 and arrives at Sargent at 9:50. Branch presidents and clerks, please take pains and see that there are no mistakes in your reports before you send them to the district clerk as there will not be time to send them back for correction, and we desire a complete report from each branch as it is the last report for this conference year. And as there was an action taken at a previous conference requesting each one holding a license to report their labor to each quarterly conference, we therefore insist that each elder, priest, teacher, and deacon send in a written report of his labor, be it much or little, so that our journal will show a correct report of all the labor done in our district for this conference year. Please send your reports to me at Sargent, Texas county, Missouri, in care of John O. Savage, and send them as much as a week ahead, if possible.

JOSEPH WARD, Clerk.

The Pottawattamie district conference will convene at Underwood the last Saturday in February, 1895. As this will be the last conference before the convening of the Annual Conference at Independence we request that branch presidents will see that branch reports are properly made out, and sent to the district president, J. P. Carlile, or secretary, Thomas Scott, Underwood, Iowa, not later than February 21. We urge upon every official who has labored in the district to come in person, but if this is impracticable, to send a written report to the district secretary as there will be business of importance, such as choosing delegates to the General Conference, and such other business as may come before the conference. We kindly ask your presence. Come with the Spirit and let us have a profitable waiting before the Lord.

J. P. CARLILE, Pres.
T. SCOTT, Sec.

SINGING BOOK.

In a few numbers of the Herald back I noticed an earnest appeal from the committee of the General Sunday School Association on song book, for contributions of music, etc., suitable for such a work. Such a request has been made by the committee once or twice before. Little attention has been paid to these efforts by the musicians of the church. The need of such a work as is contemplated, is admitted. The association has put forth its best effort in the appointment of a well-qualified committee for the arrangement and editing of such a work, and now the success of the project rests with you who are acquainted with the composition of music. Do you believe the church is in need of such a work? If so the result of your best efforts, in the line of compositions and selections is earnestly requested by the association. Attend to this duty at once and forward your productions to the music committee, so that they may be enabled to submit a satisfactory report to the April convention, the work properly issued, and the church receive the benefit of your talents. In bonds,

E. A. BLAKESLEE, Supt.

GALIEN, Michigan, Feb. 2, 1895.

NOTICES.

To the Saints in the Rocky Mountain mission, Greeting:—It becomes our duty to call upon you again to assist us financially with your tithes and offerings. We have been compelled to call upon the [Bishop? Ed.] for aid this season when really we ought to have met all the obligations of the mission work here ourselves. The treasury with us is depleted and we are greatly in need of aid at this present time. Let me appeal to you all, my dear brethren and sisters, to come to our assistance with all the tithes and offerings you may have to spare, whether it be much or little. The Lord has promised to bless you in so doing, and we feel sure he will bless you all. Send all money to R. J. Anthony, Box 1123, Salt Lake City, Utah, and I will receipt you for the same. Please be prompt, and may God abundantly bless you.

Yours in hope,

R. J. ANTHONY.

I wish the elders of this field to report to me, giving the number of times they have preached, number baptized, in fact, a condensed report of their labors for the past year; also the amount it will require to sustain them in the field the coming year, etc. Brethren, be sure and start your report to me by the first day of March.

A. J. MOORE.

RIDER.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 23, 1895, Mrs. Jane Reid Rider, wife of Bro. T. L. Rider, aged 63 years, 7 months, and 14 days. Mrs. Rider was of English birth and parentage. The deceased professed religious conversion many years ago as a disciple of Methodism, and that she was sincere in her convictions of religious duty was evidenced in a consistent deportment and kindly disposition toward other faiths, yet firm in the adherence to her early predilection until quite recently, when she acknowledged a superior excellence in the religious principles adopted by her household—the latter-day gospel, and expressed a desire that she might be so far restored to health as to enable her to obey the ordinance of baptism. She will be remembered by many who have shared the hospitality of her household, as one who did not withhold the cup when asked in the name of a disciple. The funeral obsequies were in charge of Elders J. D. Bennett; J. W. Wight assisting, and R. M. Elvin pronouncing the discourse from 1 Corinthians 15: 22, 23.

Rest, tired one, within thy narrow bed;
The wintry storm—the chilling blast
May pass above thee and o'erhead,
But ne'er disturb thy peaceful rest.

CHAPMAN.—Harriet Chapman was born August, 1815, at Wiltshire, England. She was married to John Chapman May 6, 1838. United with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints sometime about 1854. Hay was born at Nauvoo, Illinois; baptized at Bandera, Texas, September 3, 1865, by Elder Hugh Lytle. He was a kind husband and father, a consistent Christian, and died in full faith of the latter-day work. His wife and four small children mourn. Bro. Hay's parents were among the first to join the church in Scotland. They came to the United States and went through the troubles in Illinois. With his mother, Bro. Hay came to Texas with Lyman Wight when a boy. His funeral discourse will be preached the third Sunday in February at Saints' church near Medina City, by Elder L. L. Wight.

ASHER.—A son was born to Mr. F. S. and Mrs. A. Asher, at Beeville Texas, January 24, 1895, and named Calvin Asher. Died same day. Funeral on the 25th, conducted by L. L. Wight. SAWYER.—Elma Leona, youngest daughter of Bro. Demira D. and Rebecca J. Sawyer, was born September 24, 1887, and died January 13, 1895. Funeral discourse by Rev. A. Hunter, of the Campbellite Church. She was a bright and good child. Father, mother, four brothers, and five sisters mourn.

He came to Laporte county, Indiana, in 1852; was there about a year and a half and then came to Illinois, where he was married to Eliza A. Knox, September 20, 1862. He joined the Latter Day Saints in September, 1868; moved to Decatur county, Iowa, in April, 1869; died January 26, 1895. Funeral services at the house, conducted by Elder A. W. Moffet.

POSSIBILITY OF LIFE IN OTHER WORLDS.

CONJECTURE about the actual existence of living beings on the planets or their satellites is of course futile; but it is quite otherwise with speculation regarding the possibility of such existence, and this has long been a fascinating subject for the curious. The latest word upon it is said in The Fortnightly Review, November, by Sir Robert Ball, from whose article we make the following extracts:—

“Regarding our Earth as a globe which constitutes a member of the solar system, it can hardly be said to possess very extreme attributes. It does not appear to be marked out in any specially distinctive manner which would qualify it rather than certain of the other globes for becoming suitable abodes for life. The qualities which the Earth possesses are, generally speaking, conferred upon it in degrees intermediate to those in which other globes of the system are endowed with similar qualities. As the Earth was inhabited, it would seem only reasonable to assume that in this respect also it was not exceptional.”

Sir Robert goes on to express the opinion that while recent research has in some respects impaired the argument for the possibility of life on other planets, yet on the whole it has strengthened that argument. For instance, it is now regarded as practically certain that the elements that enter as component parts into the framework of living creatures are as abundant upon some other planets as upon the Earth. He then speaks as follows of an instance in which the argument has been impaired:—

“It seems to be generally true that the larger the dimensions of a planet, the greater is the internal heat which it still possesses. Into the reasons of this we need not now enter; suffice it to remark that the great globe of Jupiter in this respect offers a very marked contrast to the Earth. It seems to be highly probable, if indeed it be not certain, that Jupiter is at the present time heated to a temperature, at its surface, greatly in excess of the temperature of the surface of the Earth. We cannot indeed assign an actual value to the temperature of Jupiter, but there seems little doubt that it must be so great as to preclude the possibility of that globe being the abode of any types of life like those which flourish on the Earth. It is no doubt just conceivable that living beings of some strange and unknown fashion might endure the conditions which Jupiter appears to present; but I do not know anything which would make such a view likely. What we have said about Jupiter may, with certain modifications, apply also to Saturn, and in some degree to Uranus and to Neptune. It seems impossible that any of these great planets are at present abodes of life in any sense which is comprehensible to us. There is reason to think that, so far as internal heat is concerned, the planet Mars, as well as Venus and Mercury, occupy much the same position as the Earth.”

So far as these last-named planets are concerned, therefore, Sir Robert thinks that climates and land distributions appropriate to certain organic types on the Earth are quite possible; but he thinks it would be impossible for us to form any conception of the biological characteristics of creatures adapted to residence in other worlds.

He speaks, however, of one “merely mechanical matter” on which we can form some intelligent idea; namely, the weight of the several planets, and the effect of this weight upon the framework of living creatures. Calling attention to the fact that we are able to weigh the different planets, he proceeds as follows:—

“If, for instance, a globe the same size as the Earth possessed double the mass of the Earth, the effect would be that the weight of each animal on the heavier globe would be double that on the Earth. A horse placed on the heavy globe would be subjected to a load which would oppress him as greatly as if while standing on our Earth, as at present constituted, he bore a weight of lead on his back which amounted to as many stones as the animal itself. Each leg of an elephant would be called upon to sustain just double the not inconsiderable thrust which at present such a pillar has to bear. A bird which soars here with ease and grace would find that the difficulty of such movements was greatly increased, even if they were not wholly impossible, on a globe of equal size to the Earth, but double weight. It would seem as if flying animals must be the denizens of light globes, rather than of heavy ones.

“It is also easy to show that in general, other things being equal, the size of an animal should tend to vary in an inverse direction to that of the mass of the globe on which it dwells. . . . Generally, we may assert that, regarding only the point of view at present before us, the limbs of smaller animals would be better adapted for vigorous movement on great planets than would those of large creatures.

“It is, however, proper to bear in mind the point to which attention was, so far as I know, first called by Mr. Herbert Spencer. He has shown that there are excellent biological reasons, quite independent of those mechanical considerations to which I have referred, why it would be impossible for an efficient animal to be constructed by simply doubling every dimension of an existing animal. The support of the creature's life has to be effected by the absorption of nourishment through various surfaces in the body. But if all the dimensions are doubled, the bodily volume, as we have already mentioned, is increased eightfold, and therefore its sustenance would, generally speaking, require eight times the supply that sufficed for the original animal. On the other hand, supposing the same scale to be observed throughout the animal's body, the available surface area for absorption of nourishment has only increased fourfold, and therefore each square inch would have to do double duty in the large animal. If, however, the surfaces are at present at full work, it would seem impossible that they should efficiently undertake double the work they now get through. On this account, therefore, a live animal would seem impossible on a simple specification of dimensions twice those of any existing animal. Great structural modifications of pattern would have to accompany the enlargement of bulk. This, be it observed, is wholly independent of all questions as to gravitation.

"No reasonable person will, I think, doubt that the tendency of modern research has been in favor of the supposition that there may be life on some of the other globes. But the character of each organism has to be fitted so exactly to its environment, that it seems in the highest degree unlikely that any organism we know here could live on any other globe elsewhere. We cannot conjecture what the organism must be which would be adapted for a residence in Venus or Mars, nor does any line of research at present known to us hold out the hope of more definite knowledge."—Literary Digest.

JEWES NO LONGER HATED.

Dr. E. G. Hirsch preached at Sinai temple, Chicago, yesterday morning, on "Rome and Jerusalem." He said in part:—

"Knit into a new appeal, the pledge of the ancient singer wakes new sentiments within the breast of the modern Jew. We feel that the gloom of hatred is lifted from us. The gusts of ill wind which now and then still blow around us are the dying energies of a dying storm. Jerusalem spells for us not a distant hope but an immediate duty. It is emblematic of a country which we would call our own, or a religious sacerdotalism which we would have reestablished. The Jew has no Jewish national aspirations [?].

"Roman individualism spells exploitations of the weaker by the stronger. The last days of the republic and epoch of the Cesars are the judgments pronounced on a society founded on the clamor for individual right which was death to social duty. Jerusalem would mold the individual along the lines of responsibility. This is the fundamental tone of whatever goes forth from her. Character is a sacramental appeal of Judaism. Here is the freedom predicted by it of the individual soul. Rome knew only masters or slaves; Jerusalem called together brothers. The law of Zion was the proclamation of humanity. Rome demands obedience. Medieval Rome is in this the successor of the imperial. Ancient Roman religion is the materialism of form; medievalism is the materialism of authority. The religion of Jerusalem is the duty of private judgment and individual responsibility. Conscience, not law or custom, is the final tribunal. The prophets would persuade, not coerce. Religious persecutions are unknown in their system. Lessing in making the Jew Nathan the mouthpiece of tolerance gave body to the spirit of Jerusalem. Rome is intolerant. When Rome has spoken there is no appeal. Yea, Edom shall be destroyed, but Jerusalem, the true Jerusalem, cannot be forgotten. It is the hope of the redemption of the race from Roman wrong, selfishness, and brutality, by the power of love and the spirit."—Ex.

A FAMOUS MOUNTAIN.

Mount Kineo, which rises precipitously seven hundred feet out of Moosehead Lake, is wholly composed of hornstone, and is the largest mass of that mineral in the known world.

There is no true flint in the United States, but hornstone so closely resembles it that it takes an expert to tell the difference. This rock supplied arrow heads to Indians hundreds and thousands of miles away. The discovery of these arrow heads in the Mississippi Valley has led to the belief that a system of commercial exchange must have existed among the red men in former centuries.

According to an Indian tradition the mountain is the body of a monster moose that was slain by a giant.—Elsworth American.

A PLEA FROM ONE WHO IS BLIND.

To my many friends, and those who sympathize with one who cannot see, I desire to state that because of the loss of property and also my eyesight, I have concluded to make this request of all who can afford it, to send forty cents for one box of my toilet soap, or twenty-five cents for one bottle of my great crystal cement with printed directions accompanying each bottle, both of which are very useful articles, and highly recommended by hundreds of the Saints and those who have used them in the past.

The object I have in view is to build me a little house that I may avoid paying rent. I could make a living if I could stop house rent. I am not asking charity, but simply ask patronage of those who may deem me worthy of the same. I hope that each one who shall read this will carefully consider the matter and decide to send in your order at once to J. H. McMullin, Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, and it will be promptly forwarded, postage prepaid. United States stamps or post office money order taken.

J. H. MCMULLIN.

[BRO. MCMULLIN is an energetic toiler, who, by selling his wares, earns a living for himself and family, preferring to so do, rather than cast himself upon the church for support. He is deserving of all he asks in the above plea, and those who respond will encourage a laudable ambition in one who labors under terrible disadvantage.—ED.]

AMERICAN PLACE NAMES.

Muskegon means "plenty of fish."
Nebraska means "shallow water."
Oconee signifies "a water course."
Okeechobee means "Grassy Lake."
Penobscot signifies "A Rock Place."
Nansemond, the name of a Virginia river, signifies the "place from which we ran away."
The Juniata, in Pennsylvania, was named from a tribe of Indians living on its banks.
The St. Croix River, in Maine, was named from the cross made by two rivers at its mouth.

The Pend d'Oreille Lake, in Idaho, took its name from its shape, which resembles that of an earring.

La Rigolets, in Louisiana, were originally Les Rigolets de Bon Dieu, "Straits of the Good God."

The Atchafalaya River, in Louisiana, was so named from two Indian words, meaning Long River.

Ocklowaha means "Muddy Place." The name was given by the Seminoles to a Florida River.

Cape Lookout is said to have been thus named by sea captains, who, when they saw it, began to look out for Cape Hatteras and its storms.

Cape Canaveral, in Florida, was named by the Spaniards from the abundance of flowers in the vicinity. The name means "Land of the Rose Tree."

The name of Lake Ontario was first noted as Skanodairo, "Beautiful Lake." It was also, at various times and by different men, denominated Lac the Frontenac, Lac de Iroquois, and Lac de St. Louis. The Mohawks called it Caindaracqui.

The Rocky Mountains were first called Montagnes de Pierres Brilliantes, "Mountains of Sparling Stones;" then came Montagnes Rocheuses, and finally the designation now in common use. The Indians called them "The Crest of the World."

Oneida was the name of an Indian tribe. The word means the "People of the Beacon Stone," there being a tradition that in all their wanderings they were followed by a certain great stone that took up its station on the highest hill in the neighborhood.

Adirondack was a nickname, applied by the Iroquois Indians to their enemies, the Algonquins. The name means "people who eat tree bark." The territory now known as the Adirondacks was called by the Indians Coughsavage, "the Dismal Wilderness."

ANDOVER HERESY.

THE wedge of dissolution was introduced a few years ago into the Congregational and Presbyterian Churches in the United States, by a few thinkers who urged the necessity for the acceptance by the church of a tenet, or dogma providing for a probation after death; and for the revision of the creed and elimination therefrom of certain obnoxious features to which strong objections were made. This wedge was called the "Andover Heresy," because it had origin or support among the theological students at Andover college.

The principles involved in the controversy have again unheaved and broken the crust of a patched up peace, and Denver, Colorado, is made the seat of conflict, Dr. Coyle, of the First Congregational church, being the agitator. This doctor of Congregational divinity was lately installed as pastor of the first church, after a spirited contest in the council who considered the call; the points of objection being that Dr. Coyle held views not warranted in the confession of faith; the divinity of Christ and the authority of John's Gospel being rejected by the reverend doctor.

Of the controversy, the daily Denver News for January 28 has much to say, the following clipping showing the trend of opinion. Rev. Paddock, one of the council, said:—

I am frank to say that I have no sympathy with the views of Dr. Coyle. Judging by the doctor's answers to questions by the committee, I would infer that he elevates man to the position we have ascribed to Jesus Christ, and also that he rejects the authority of the Gospel of John. I do not profess to be a metaphysician, and Dr. Coyle disclaimed being classified as such. Nevertheless, I never heard so much metaphysics as was brought out last Thursday.

Rev. Addison Blanchard thus expressed himself:—

It is impossible, said he, to reconcile the views of Dr. Coyle with the accepted doctrines of the Congregational Church. I shall present the matter to my church, and it may be that we shall feel obliged to withdraw from fellowship with the First Congregational society. I fear that there is a falling away among our clergymen, and the result of the vote seems to support my opinion. A Unitarian has no right in the pulpit as a missionary of the Congregational Church.

Mr. Willsea, a prominent layman, stated the tenets of the faith to be:—

A belief in the divinity of Christ, his death and redemption of mankind as an atonement, his resurrection and the necessity of regeneration for any human being to attain the abode of the blessed. As to eternal punishment, Mr. Willsea thought it not a necessary tenet of belief. He had attempted in vain to reconcile Dr. Coyle's orthodoxy to the Nicene creed, which the Doctor stated in reply to inquiries of the council that he accepted. The Nicene creed was formulated in the year 325, A. D., by the first general council of the church, and reads as follows:—

"We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, maker of all things, both visible and invisible; and in one Lord, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, begotten of the Father, only begotten; that is to say, of the substance of the Father, God of God, and light of light, very God of very God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made, both things in heaven and things on earth; who for us men and for our salvation came down and was made flesh, made man, suffered and rose again on the third day, went up into the heavens and is to come again to judge the quick and the dead; and in the Holy Ghost."

Rev. Blanchard of the Second Congregational church in his sermon on the Sunday after the installation of Dr. Coyle, among other things said:—

The common faith of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is involved. The very foundations of Protestant Christianity—of Christianity in any true form, are at stake.

Mere denominational peculiarities have little interest for us in the church, and are not discussed in this pulpit. But there are certain great, well-recognized and fundamental things that have always belonged to any Christianity that has ever had any power in the world. They have been regnant in all the periods when the religion of Christ has swayed mankind.

These doctrines scarcely need to be mentioned: The absolute authority and the full inspiration of the Holy Scriptures; the full divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, his supernatural birth and his resurrection, the absolute need of the new birth, the putting away of sin by the sacrifice of Christ on the cross, salvation by faith alone, accepting him as Savior and his finished work for man as the ground of our acceptance with God, and thus a gospel which is really good news because it has in it the power of God unto salvation and not the strivings of self that can never satisfy.

These are among the things that have always been recognized as forming the very substance of the gospel message. Paul's epistles are full of them. They are, and always have been, the doctrines of power, and the Spirit of God has always borne witness to them when preached in faith by godly men. When rediscovered by the church reformation has always been the result. The loss of them has brought apostasy. It may be indeed that the time has come when men like to hear something else; when they turn away their ears from hearing the truth. The time predicted, when, having "itching ears," they "heap to themselves teachers," but these are unquestionably the old landmarks—as old as Christianity. It is not a question of creeds. It is a question of the authority of the very New Testament itself. This talk against creeds is made a bugbear to scare people with. No one of us would fight for them. Let men study the word of God for themselves. Let them treat these writings reverently, at least, and studiously and humbly, instead of listening to their own philosophy, and we will not fight for any creeds however ancient. But now when it comes to pass that a majority vote of a Congregational council inducts into the pastorate of an honored Congregational church a man who, whatever his abilities, and whatever his personal worth and genial character, denies the universally recognized foundations, it is time for any church involved in that fellowship and feels itself called for the defense and confirmation of the gospel to declare itself. It is due to the truth, and it is due to all concerned. An equivocal position in such times as these helps no one.

Fellowship is not a thing of good nature. We must fellowship the truth. When business men sign petitions carelessly and in the kindness of their hearts that lead to entrapping our youth, they rightly come in for a good scoring at our hands. When church people and ministers as carelessly give their names in fellowship with a denial of God's truth, they, too, should see their sin. We are not to be liberal with what is not our own. God's truth is great. He holds the shepherds of souls responsible for giving it. We are to fear and tremble at his word.

What, then, is needed? First, on the part of the churches and the ministry, a coming back to a real, devout, earnest, painstaking study and preaching of the Bible. It at least deserves a reverent handling. There are indeed so-called students that are trying to throw doubts on the Bible. They are trying to teach our ministry so. Let us be aware of this and let the churches say what they propose to do about it. "Take heed" what "ye hear."

Second, we need to get back to faith in God as distinguished from the little philosophy of men. Again and again it is coming to pass, as is written in Paul's letter to the Romans, "Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools." O the conceit of this unbelieving philosophy of our day! It tries to make gods out of men and is not humble.

Third, we need to know that the great things of God and his gospel must be taught to us by his Spirit. There is the "flesh and blood" way of learning as suggested in our Sunday school lesson to-day, and it leads, as it did long ago, to confusion as to the person of Christ. Some say this and some say that, and the opinions are none of them worth anything. When Peter came to that great confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus said unto him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." "No man can say that Jesus is Lord but by the Holy Ghost." What a restless humanity and an equally restless church needs to-day is to humble themselves before Almighty God and be taught of him. Our Lord was a great Teacher, and when he went away he sent one who should lead us into all truth. The trouble now is that man in his wicked conceit is refusing that and determined to work it out in his own way. If they become ministers they are, as one layman in the late council said, "blind leaders of the blind and both together fall into the ditch."

The statements made by Rev. Blanchard in regard to the authority and inspiration of the Scriptures, the divinity of the Christ, his birth and resurrection, will be cordially accepted by the most of the HERALD readers, with but slight modification; and the necessity for a new birth and a righteous life in Christ, by the putting away of sin will receive commendation; but, and here difficulty begins, that such change is wrought for man "by faith alone" as suggested by Mr. Blanchard himself, is disputable and opens the way for a contest, not for creed but for the dissolving of the creed that states it, or supposes it.

The world, including creed makers and creed speakers need to get back to faith in God, and in his word, as being the best means ever devised to reach and walk in the way to heaven.

When will the world, the religious teachers and those whom they teach learn that when "the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe"?

DISCLAIMER OF INTEREST IN TEMPLE LOT SUIT.

THE Deseret News, Salt Lake City, Utah, for January 25, 1895, has the following disclaimer of interest in the determination of the suit for the Temple Lot:—

A dispatch from St. Louis announces that the long-pending suit between the Reorganized Church, commonly known as "Josephites," and the so-called "Hedrickites," has now been called in the United States circuit court of appeals. It will be remembered that the suit was brought concerning some property at Independence, Missouri, known as the Temple Lot, and claimed by both litigants. The case was decided by Judge Phillips in favor of the "Josephites," and the "Hedrickites" appealed.

In the decision of the lower court questions were considered which seemingly were entirely foreign to the matter at issue, as for instance when doctrinal differences and the relation of the contending factions to the main church were brought up. This had a tendency to mislead the general public as to the only matter involved, that of the title to the property mentioned, and some Eastern exchanges continue to labor under the misunderstanding that the Saints in Utah are in some measure a party to the controversy. The News has on former occasions endeavored to correct this misunderstanding, and inasmuch as the case is again brought before the public, it may be proper to state once more that the Saints in this Territory have an interest in the controversy only as everybody else has, who desires to see justice administered in the courts of this great Republic. In addition to this it is but natural that the suit should be followed with some interest by the majority of the people here, to whom the property involved is associated with sacred memories of important events in the early history of the church, but beyond this the church itself is not an interested party, and cannot be affected by the decision that may be rendered. For the sake of justice, it is to be hoped that the controversy will in the higher court be settled on its merits and not on grounds that can have no conceivable connection with the matter at issue.

Whether the News correctly reflects the sentiment of the Utah Mormon Church in regard to the contest for the Temple Lot, at Independence, Missouri, or not, the manner in which disclaimer of interest is made is singular.

There was but the one course of procedure upon the question of church doctrine and practice as a means to identify the church really in interest in the matter in dispute, open to the Reorganized Church, and that was to show a departure from the faith and doctrine of the original church, if it could be done. The necessity for this course was emphasized when Mr. C. A. Hall, the acting President of the "Church of Christ," attempted by the calling of witnesses in Utah, to fasten the burden for the dogma of plural marriage upon Joseph Smith, and upon the Reorganization, as a result; or to divert the point of controversy in regard to the succession in church unity and identity from the Reorganized Church to the church in Utah, should the claim to succession by the "Church of Christ," be disallowed by the court.

In either of these cases there was an eminent propriety in raising the question as to when and where a divergence in doctrine and church practice had occurred, who were responsible for such divergence. And, while it may be that the News may succeed in raising such a dust of disclaimer and semi-righteous protest as to blind some to the real issue, it is evident this is a dilatory process sure to fail sooner or later.

The fact is, all classes of believers in Mormonism have a direct and spiritual interest in the question whether the church organized April 6, 1830, has had an interregnum of departure from the faith, or has had an uninterrupted and continuous existence from that date until now. There are those who in good faith are asserting both of these statements, and are willing to stand or fall upon the proofs of the issue being made.

INTELLIGENT CO-OPERATION IN THE WORK OF GOD.

THE life of an elder in the field is a busy one as may be seen from the following extract, which we take the liberty of making from a personal letter from one of the brethren:—

Yours of the 10th ult., directed to me at Galien, Michigan, came duly to hand and in reply I will say that I am willing to do all I can for the work by pen, as well as by preaching. It is not "modesty" that has kept me from using my pen, it is more the lack of literary ability than anything else. It takes me so long to write an article, and get it in anything like fit condition to go into print, that I have left that part of the work for those more competent than myself. But I will promise to do what I can and, if my articles are thought to contain sufficient merit to entitle them to place in our church publications, all well and good. If they go to the waste basket, all well and good. I shall try and not infringe upon my other work. This has certainly been the busiest year of my ministerial life. Being submissionary in charge and president of the district has made quite a bit of extra correspondence for me; the Braden affair at South Scott also caused me quite an amount of correspondence. Our district is large, calls coming in from all quarters for preaching, and only a few to respond. My health has not been the best, especially during the hot season and, altogether, it has kept me about as busy as I care to be.

At present I am feeling quite well. Came to Chester last evening. Expect to remain here till the first of February and then return to Coldwater, Clear Lake, South Scott and—I know not where. Am trying to complete my article on "The work of Christ in the Creation and Redemption of Man" but it is slow work, indeed. If an elder has to visit eight days every week it don't leave much time for writing. The work in this district is gaining some, but the Saints are not alive to the needs of the work and the responsibility resting upon them, as they should be.

Thanking you for your words of encouragement I am, as ever, your brother, etc.

We bespeak for the laborers in the field the hearty coöperation and intelligent support of the Saints. It must be apparent to anyone who gives thought to the subject that the work of God must be carried on intelligently if it be successfully prosecuted. God is law, God is manifested in law, in order, in system; hence systematic orderliness in the prosecution of the work is essential.

The elder's life is not and cannot be a life of leisure, of misdirected or half-hearted effort. He must be alive to a businesslike prosecution of it if he would be effective in work. He must be a student, a thinker, a worker, and must arrange to do his work in that way.

Many people who live in comparative leisure or quiet and who have abundant time at their disposal do not realize that the elder must have certain portions of his time for uninterrupted study and attention to the details of his work. True, they are glad to see him, to spend the time in social chat, and he to so see them, without doubt; but his time is not his own, nor all of it theirs. Hence those who aid him by respecting, by regarding his need of some "daily quiet hours," coöperate with him in the interests of his work, the interests of the Master.

The minister should also be permitted to make his headquarters at some suitable central point in the region of his labor. There are several reasons for this. He is commanded to do so by the Lord, and evidently that he might be advantageously located to do his work; to be, all things considered, situated under best conditions to accomplish that work. Men whose minds are so constantly at work, with brains active in the evening hour, are not the soundest of sleepers, especially when frequent change of bed and surroundings conduce to wakefulness. Many a man becomes wearied and worn out in mind and body because his unduly active brain is not recuperated and his body not reinvigorated by sound sleep. For this reason it is, in most cases, unwise and detrimental to his success for an elder to make more changes in his stopping places than necessary.

It takes a certain amount of time, too, for the man to adapt himself to new surroundings, to accustom himself and become at home, at ease, in his new conditions. Men differ, physically and mentally, and in the degree of health enjoyed. Each is best qualified to know his needs and, within the scope of his sphere, the better methods to be adopted in carrying out the work before him. It requires an iron constitution, too, to sleep in a feather bed and warm room one night and in a cold room and "spare bed," if an unused one, soon afterward. It also tries a man's soul and body to sleep on feathers during the warm seasons.

We know our people are peculiarly hospitable and free-hearted, and we are glad to know that the lines of the traveling elder often fall in very pleasant, homelike places, and that they appreciate all that. It is not this we refer to, but to the tendency in many cases to require too much moving about and too much of the minister's time in mere passing social life. A man who talks in the pulpit cannot put in the day in social chat without wearing out bodily, nor without failing to keep up in information. He must think if he would preach effectively; must learn "by study" and by prayer, "by faith," as enjoined in the revelations of God, if he would teach.

The man, too, will be edified by hearing others at times offer "family prayer;" for instance, the man or the woman of the house. It will relieve him of the wearisomeness of hearing his own voice so often, and will encourage him by seeing the evidence of spirituality and devotion in others; their interest in the Lord, and his work, and in his servant. Then, too, it will help him to sense, to measure, to know the spirit of those among whom he is abiding for a time. His discernment of their mental and spiritual makeup may be a great encouragement, a mental and spiritual stimulus to him; for all good natures inspire, and lift up, and conduce to good.

Then, too, in these busy times men and women under the growing spirit of the latter-day work find it necessary to rightly direct their conversation, to use all their time to advantage, that none be lost; that in social, in spiritual, in intellectual life there be progress, advancement, attainment. Thoughtless, listless conversation, or idling away of time in any way, is wrong, is harmful, is a loss. It fastens upon and encourages unprofitable, harmful habits. It is destructive to growth, to spiritual and bodily industry—to general industriousness—that contemplated in the spirit and word of the gospel.

If the gospel work means anything it means energy, growth, order, execution. It demands of all, in all departments and phases of the work of God, that intelligent application that shall insure the best execution possible—the completeness of perfectness in system and in execution. Its spirit requires the proper economy, the right directing, the active, complete coöperation of all forces, of all branches of the service. No one is his own; we are Christ's, and "have been bought with a price," hence are to glorify God in our "bodies and spirits, which are his."

Constant improvement is our watchword, the principle of safety that guarantees our success in service to God. It is peculiar to the work of God, when work is prosecuted as he would have it done. If it is not made manifest, if it fails to appear in our work personal and general, it is simply because we fail to fully comprehend and to meet our obligations to God.

We might do much more than we do; we might do it better, if we would. The moment any people content themselves in spiritual ease with the thought that "we have the truth," that moment they "sleep on their arms" and become a prey to the Satan of their own indifference and carelessness.

We have the truth, but we have not reached the point where we have fully understood and fully obeyed it. Growth in anything is gradual, if natural; and growth in vegetable, in mineral, in physical, in spiritual,—in all forms of life is contingent upon right adaptation to conditions, upon assimilation, etc. As plant life flourishes by contact with soil, sunshine, and rain; so the human mind grows by contact with the spiritual and general powers of the church; its soil prayer and study, observation and effort bringing its sunshine and dew of spiritual comfort and enlightenment.

With an intelligent conception of what we are as members of the church, of what God is, and of our relationship to him, we can readily foresee what the present and the future give promise of to the faithful people of God; what understanding, what richness of grace, what beauty and strength of character, what largeness of life and of hope are to be enjoyed by the people of God; of what attractive and strong forces are to be marshalled and called together and to be planted in the various cities and hamlets of the world in behalf of the sons and daughters of the common brotherhood of man.

Is there room for selfishness, for faultfinding, for pettiness, for querulous misgivings, for blindness, for trifling, for personal ambition and vanity with such a work before us? Can it be that anyone will permit himself to fail to step forward and fully rise to the occasion in such a work? Shall not weakness be overcome, perverted tastes and appetites be surrendered and corrected, higher ideals and nobler purposes inspire in this the "hastening time," the day of preparation for the coming Bridegroom?

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, . . . that publisheth peace; . . . that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth.

How beautiful, too, shall be the lives, how strong the characters of God's children who shall shine forth in the development of truth and goodness and strength.

"Let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably;" let us have "power to overcome all things;" "power to become the sons" and daughters "of God" by making faithful preparation in intelligent discerning, and doing, and upholding of all that conduces to the general good.

With inspiration and growth contemplated in the law it will be difficult if not impossible for anyone to love the wrong, to selfishly withhold his substance in failing to pay his portion to the Lord in tithes and offerings, or to accept evil and fail to appreciate good in anything. May we reach and maintain the standard. God means that we shall, he says that we must. Let us earnestly strive heart and soul to do it.

Could we see the intelligent harmony and coöperation of the heavenly hosts "that do his pleasure" as ministering forces for God we would doubtless realize the unity of spirit and concentration of powers essential to the prosecution of the work of the Lord. It will be to the credit of of all who so observing and so working learn to do the will of God upon the earth "as it is done in heaven"—meekly, intelligently, faithfully.

AT a Chicago celebration of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, General Peck, one of the orators, presented some striking epigrams that we think are worthy of note and of thought; hence give them here. He said of Lincoln that he "ennobled common blood." He "was great without knowing his own greatness." In him "common sense blossomed into fame." He had "the art of leading while seeming to follow." "The only great man in history who seems like one of the plain, every-day people." "Granite for the right, but yielding as water when common sorrow touched his own sad heart." "No ruler had more dignity, no laborer more true humility." "As Abraham Lincoln he never forgot he was President, and as President he never forgot he was Abraham Lincoln."

With Latter Day Saints there is so much in common in the spirit of our national institutions and the spirit of the gospel that we readily recognize it in General Peck's interpretation of the nature and purposes of the great emancipator, whom God evidently "raised up" for the work he was instrumental in accomplishing. Men who have elements of true greatness in them are Christlike in spirit—noble in nature—"tall men, sun-crowned." They are worthy of mention as those in whom right principles find expression. True leaders of the people in every age have been those who have adjusted themselves to the real elements, the correct principles of government that proceed forth from the only Sovereign, "who rules in the midst of all things."

Some of the grandest elements in the character of Lincoln were his humility and simplicity and his devotion to the interests of the masses, among whom he existed, moved, and lived in the grand manliness of lowliness of heart. It is consistent with the statement of the revelation, that God caused the constitution of the United States to be framed by wise men for the preservation of the liberties of the people, that he raised up a man in whom there was much of the divine nature as the chief instrument in maintaining those liberties. We constantly have reason to thank God for such principles, such liberties, and for worthy instruments chosen by him to maintain them.

CHOPPED THE LIST.

A GREAT many people in St. Joseph who have been riding on half fare clergymen permits issued by the various railroads, will not do so this year. Instead they will pay full fare, walk, or mayhap, if they are fortunate enough, manage to get a free ticket. The published list of the Western Trunk Line Passenger Committee in which district St. Joseph is located, was received by the officers yesterday and shows that in the territory embraced by that association alone over fifteen thousand names have been stricken from the list.

The great abuse of the privilege is what has occasioned the reduction in numbers. As an official who once in a year or two attends church himself, and does not care to be known as an objector, said yesterday:—

"In the first place, there is no good reason why clergymen should not pay full fare as well as mechanics and clerks. They draw larger salaries than the latter classes and do not travel any oftener. A few years ago the practice of making reduced rates for clergymen was inaugurated by one railroad, and all the others hastened to follow suit. Year by year the privilege list has grown until it would seem that the clergy of the country outnumbered the laity. The railroads have not raised serious objections to granting the concessions to recognized ministers of the gospel—the trouble has been in the abuse of the system. Men professing to be clergymen, but having neither church nor congregations, insisted on obtaining half fare permits and so did camp meeting exhorters and street preachers. Anyone who sang a hymn at a religious meeting felt entitled to a half fare permit. We did not know where to draw the line, and that is still our difficulty."

The above from a St. Joseph daily may serve to explain to some of the brethren why delays are experienced in issuing half fare permits. As has heretofore been stated we think the brethren who explain their position—that they are out preaching without salary, dependent upon their ministry for personal support—will have little or no difficulty in obtaining the half fare privilege.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. I. M. SMITH, Ray, Indiana, February 11:—

We are overwhelmed with work; more calls for preaching than we can possibly fill. Am reasonably well.

Pres. Joseph Smith was still at Council Bluffs, on the 15th inst., whence he wrote, as follows:—

Have held meeting every night since coming here. Will continue over Sunday. Meetings here quite well attended. Had the fullest house Sunday night that they have ever had, so they say.

A personal letter from Bro. C. R. Duncan, from El Dorado Springs, Missouri, February 14, gives account of the White-Braden discussion. We make a few extracts:—

Braden is down flat. I am almost afraid to try to tell you the extent of his defeat for fear you may think I exaggerate. He was completely routed on the first proposition. . . . At its conclusion a lawyer, A. W. Sunderland, wrote up a paper expressing his views of the debate about as follows: "Braden has failed to dislodge Elder White in a single position taken; on the other hand Elder White has shown that Braden's objections to the Book of Mormon are entirely groundless," etc. This paper is being circulated by this gentleman and those attending debate are signing it. This was done without a suggestion from any of our people. Am writing up a history of the discussion. Will send for publication. You can rest assured that the work has . . . won from the first.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. JAEES COCKS, of Brooklyn, New York, writes from Wadebridge, Cornwall, England, January 5, where he then was on a visit. He finds the people bound fast in the creeds of the day, and has tried to bear witness to them of the truth. He appreciates the faith and Saints the more he is absent from them.

The Omaha Sunday World-Herald of February 10 contains a full column report of an interview with Pres. Joseph Smith, who has been at Council Bluffs and vicinity of late. The leading points noted by the interviewer are correct in statement of the faith of the church, etc. The press is certainly doing much to place us before the people in our true light.

Bro. L. L. Booth commends Vernon and St. Anthony, Idaho, for the consideration of missionaries in the Rocky Mountain mission.

And now comes a member of the Wisconsin Legislature with a bill which prohibits women from wearing high hats and "balloon" sleeves at public assemblages. Surely these are days of reform and even Dame Fashion may be obliged to yield to the demand. She will probably evade it, however.

It is said the Mexican Government will soon establish a complete public school system that will reach every corner of the republic.

Various State legislatures are discussing bills which if passed will reduce rates for sleeping car service.

A Berlin dispatch reports negotiations for the construction of a railroad from a port on German East African Littoral to the Victoria Nyanza and Lake Tanganyika.

In addressing an assembly of ministers at Toronto, Ontario, February 11, General Booth, of the Salvation Army, claimed he was the successor of John Wesley, and also compared himself to Moses; this according to a press dispatch.

Navajo Indians near Defiance, New Mexico, are eating their horses, of which they have large herds. They raised no grain last year and have had a hard time to exist this winter.

The severe winter weather has prevailed throughout the entire Southern States. The loss to growers of small fruits and other products amounts to millions of dollars.

Bro. J. B. Russell, Goose Creek, West Virginia, writes that the conference of West Virginia district will convene March 9—not February 9 as announced.

Letters are received from Brn. C. Scott, James Caffall, John Kaler, James Kemp, and others, and will appear in next HERALD, according as space permits.

A STUDY OF CHILD-NATURE.

THE INSTINCT OF IMITATION, OR THE TRAINING OF THE FAITH.

THE instinct of imitation is one of the most important factors in a child's education. This instinct is universal, although the power to imitate varies with different children. By universal instinct is meant one which manifests itself in all races and conditions, and not one which is the result of some peculiarity of inheritance or environment in any one class.

Imitation is the unconscious effort of a child to understand life, by doing as the people about him are doing. It is his natural impulse to test the actions of people about him. The value which the world places upon this line of conduct is shown by the adage, "Put yourself in his place," which is often used when an appeal is made for charity of judgment or even for justice. It is only when we ourselves imitate any line of work that we get into real sympathy with other workers in the same direction. "It takes a hero," says Lessing, "to write the biography of a hero;" only a man of equal or greater power can rightly understand the hero. Christ applied this test when he told his disciples that they could know the will of his Father in heaven by doing it. We shall find that this instinct is used as an aid in human affairs, from the teaching of the tiny babe to wave his hand, "By-by," on through all intermediate efforts of mankind, to that class which takes as its ideal the highest injunction given to man, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

We see the manifestation of this inborn impulse in children of all stages of growth. The child of two years is filled with delight when his mother teaches him to say "Bow-wow" like the dog, or "Moo-moo" like the cow, or shows him how to swing his ball like a bell, or to make it spring like a cat. The girl of the same age, or a little older, will nurse her doll and tenderly sing it to sleep, or shake it and scold it, according to the treatment she has seen given to children by mother or nurse. Often in my twilight walks I have seen the various activities of a great city mirrored in the imitative play of the street children. Here is a mere speck of humanity, toddling along with a dilapidated toy wagon with stray bits of wood in it, and calling in a high childish treble some indistinguishable words which an older sister explains as intended for, "Kindling for sale." There, rushing up the street, comes a boyish form, with arms swinging, and voice shouting rapidly, "Lang, lang, lang, lang!" and the imaginary fire-engine has flashed by. Again, if it be near election time one may meet a flaring torch-light procession consisting perhaps of but three small boys; the torch-lights may be an old broom, a picket from a fence, and a crooked stick, still the commanding spirit is there, usually imitating a drum major, and the loyal legion are marching close behind him as if inspired by the strongest party feeling. In yonder vacant lot a handful of boys are stirring up the feeble blaze of a bonfire, zealously adding to the flame such stray fagots and shingles as the neighborhood affords; listen to their talk, and you will perceive that some embryo Daniel Boone among them is carrying out his day-dream, and has led his comrades into the hardships of pioneer life in as exact an imitation of the hero of some tale as he can attain unto. The real or ideal world in which these children's thoughts live is going on in mimic representation of the older and fuller life around them. Sad is the story which the student of childhood reads in the tell-tale play of children in the poorer districts. There is the drunkard who is unwillingly reeling home, escorted by the would-be policeman; here is the daring robber who can outrun or outwit the pursuing officers of justice, for which overreaching of the law he receives the vociferous applause of his companions. A five o'clock morning walk in one district showed me three wrecks of womanhood standing with dejected lassitude, waiting for the low grogeries to open their doors to them. An evening ramble over the same ground presented a score of ragged little girls playing with zest the part of scolding and threatening mothers, belaboring their children, who in turn squirmed and twisted, cried and begged for mercy. A mother needs but to watch the unguarded play of her own nursery to see copied the gracious manner of some visitor, the sincere welcome from the kindly hostess, the wise remark of the school-teacher, the courtesy bestowed upon the milk-man or grocer's boy, or oftentimes the opposite of all this—the affectation of the visitor, the insincere welcome of the unwilling hostess, the putulant reproof of the irritated school-teacher, the lack of courtesy to the tradesman. The child is but learning the life about him and by imitating it he comes into close sympathy with it.

The kindergarten games are based upon this instinct of imitation and its reaction upon character. In the game called "Bird's Nest," two children act the part of father-bird and mother-bird, and others take the part of birdlings in the nest. The former prepare the nest and feed the baby birds, and finally teach them how to fly. I think no one could witness this game and not feel that the parental love was being surely and rightly trained, and that no amount of word explanation could give the child as sympathetic an understanding of the relationship between parent and offspring as is established by such simple imitative play. We have another game in which several children, each with his hands upon the hips of the child in front of him, creep along the floor, in imitation of a worm, until finally they curl themselves up into a cocoon which lies quite still upon the floor, while the rest of the children sing, "Good-bye, till you come out a butterfly." Then comes a pause in which there is sometimes represented rain or wind, or other phases of the weather, through which the cocoon remains undisturbed. When the song takes up the words, "O, there it is! O, see it fly, a lovely, lovely butterfly," the head child creeps out and on light tiptoe, with arms waving in the air, flits about the room in imitation of a butterfly. A morning or two after the introduction of this game into my kindergarten, a child full of life and animal spirits came running to meet me with a face which proclaimed some good news that he was eager to tell. He began, "I saw a truly little worm this morning."

"Did you? Did you watch him crawl?"

"Yes, and I picked him up and put him over in a yard, so he wouldn't get stepped on, cause I knowed what a nice butterfly he might be some day!"

All the glow of intense and tender sympathy was in his face and voice; he was indeed at one with God's creation; the worm and he had become brothers, through his having imitated its form of activity. As I looked down into his soul-lit eyes, I wondered if this childish sympathy would not some day help him to save, for the sake of the glorious possibilities which lie in each of them, the little worms of humanity which crawl about the streets and gutters of our larger cities. In another game, in which one of two of the children imitate scissor-grinders, and the others the owners of the scissors and knives that need repairing, we are accustomed not only to play that we pay the household benefactors, but usually thank them quite courteously for their services. At one time I called in a real scissors-grinder, and had him sharpen and tighten some scissors, in order that the children might see the operation and the more perfectly imitate it. After he had completed his work, I paid him his money and opened the door for him to go out, when one little girl exclaimed in astonishment, "Why, you forgot to thank him, too!" She had in play been a scissors-grinder, and knew that recognition was due as well as money.

The parts enacted in all games of the Kindergarten are of an ennobling kind. The attraction which the role of the wild and reckless robber, who places himself outside the pale of the law, has for the child, is changed in the Kindergarten to a higher phase of the same daring spirit—for example, that of the brave and self-controlling knight, who is above law. All that is beautiful in nature—birds, bees, flowers, running water, fishes, even the stars themselves—is personified by the children: all that is useful or noble among the activities of man—the farmer, the miller, the baker, the cobbler, the cooper, the grimy blacksmith, or the lordly mayor of a city—is reproduced in childish play in the Kindergarten. The children's hearts are put into harmony with all that exists, save wrong alone. One year my own study was concentrated upon Homer, and, as is natural with the true Kindergarten, that which delighted me was made into childish story and given again to my children. We had stories of the young Achilles, who, though so strong and brave, could yet control his temper, and at the bidding of the goddess Pallas Athene could put up his sword and leave the angry Agamemnon. Thrilled and enraptured, the children listened to the story of the tender and true Hector, who could put aside his baby boy, and leave his wife that he might go and defend his country. With an interest akin to that of the child-race to whom the story was first sung, they listened to the wise Ulysses and his plans for capture of the Trojan city and the rescue of beautiful Helen; truly were our days heroic, proving to me that all really high and great literature holds that which is wholesome and good for the little child, when one knows how to give it aright. Truth is always helpful if wisely given. Great books live through centuries of time because of their authors' insight into truth.

Over and over again did my children ask for the stories of those old Greek heroes. At last a child said, "Let's play Troy!"

"How can we?" said I.

"O, don't you see?" was the ready answer. "The chairs can be the walls of Troy, just so," (arranging them in a circle, backs turned outward,) "this table with four legs can be the horse, ever so many of us can get in under it and be the Greek soldiers while the rest can push us into the city, then we can get the beautiful Helen and take her home."

So eager were all to attempt the dramatizing of the stories told, that chairs and tables were soon arranged, and the various names of the heroes to be represented were selected. One chose to be the strong Achilles, another the good Diomed, whom the gods helped in the fight; another was Ajax, the brave; another was Hector, and so on, until all the more heroic characters were chosen. The beautiful Helen was to be represented by a dear little fair-haired girl of four, a favorite of all. To test them I said: "Where is Prince Paris? Who will be Prince Paris?"

There was a dead silence; then one boy of six, in scornful astonishment exclaimed: "Why, nobody wants to be him—he was a bad, selfish man!"

"Well," said I, "the tongs can be Paris," and from that time forward whenever they cared to play their improvisation of the old Greek poem the royal Helen was gravely led into the walled city of Troy, with the tongs keeping step at her side, as a fit representation of the inner ugliness of weak and profligate young princes. I merely relate this incident to show that when children have been led to represent the good and true, they do not wish to play a baser part. I firmly believe the school of the future will see the noisy, boisterous, lawless "recess" of the primary departments replaced by lively, active impersonations of historic scenes, or of the early life of our own country, which the children are beginning to learn. Playing these heroic parts strengthens the heroic element within, and aids in the building of that inner wall without which no child is safe.

That a mother may know how she can rightly begin the religious as well as the secular training of her child, Froebel uses the following incident, which is an example of this instinct of imitation:—

A child is taken out for an airing on a windy day, and notices, as he naturally would by the law of recognition, the moving objects about him; among them a weathervane, a very common object in Germany. He sees that it moves from side to side, and instinctively imitates it so that he may understand it. The mother, whose insight tells her that this is a critical moment in the child's life, playfully aids him in his attempt to turn his hand upon his wrist as the weathervane turns upon the rod, and sings some such ditty as this:—

"As the cock upon the tower
Turns in wind and storm and shower,
So my baby's hand is bending,
And his pleasure has no ending."

To show the deep meaning which lies in childish play, Froebel has used an incident of common everyday life for each song in his "Mutter und Koselieder," carefully choosing those which are the most helpful to the mother. The earnest student will find imbedded in each incident a lesson for the child which may be eternal in its influence upon him. Thus, in this seemingly insignificant attempt to imitate the weathervane, Froebel, with his prophet's eye, sees that the child is attempting to find the invisible cause back of the visible moving object; sees, too, that it is the mother's opportunity to begin to impress upon him the great lesson that behind all visible manifestations of life is a great Invisible Power. Science may call it Force; Art may call it Harmony; Philosophy may call it World Order; various religions have called it God, but Christianity calls it "Our Father." This is an important moment in a child's life, this first groping after the unseen. Are not the great, the powerful, the lasting things of life all invisible? To again turn to nature for illustrations, the great attractive and repulsive forces have thrown up the vast mountain ranges and cleft them in twain; gravitation has settled their crumbling fragments into level plains, and caused the water-courses to sweep in given directions; capillary attraction has drawn the water up into the seed cells and caused plant life to germinate and vegetation to cover the plains; chemical action and assimilation have changed vegetable and animal food into human blood; appetites have caused the human being to seek food and shelter and the opportunity to propagate his kind; parental instinct has given rise to family life; public sentiment has maintained the sanctity of the marriage tie and the safety of family possessions; business credit has made trade life possible; patriotism has banded these communities of civic life into national life; religion is yet to unify the nations of the earth into common brotherhood. All these are invisible forces. What is the tribute paid to character, over and above wealth and beauty, but a tribute to the unseen? Without friendship, sympathy, love, aspiration, ideality, what would life be worth? No wonder that he who lives only in the visible, tangible things of this world asks the question: "Is life worth living?" Fill the soul with the realization of the invisible, and the question needs no answer; that soul knows that life is worth living. Why are the battles with doubt, the struggles with death, the agonies of disgrace, so awful, so terrible, so soul-wrecking? Is it not that the visible side of life has gained an undue foothold in the sufferer's mind? Fill a life with noble deeds, with the joy that arises from unselfish activity, and the scales will re-adjust themselves, the "light afflictions" will be seen to work out a far more and exceeding weight of glory.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

PACIFIC COAST, December 12.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union:—My earnest desire is that my husband and son may repent and seek a knowledge of the Lord that the evil habit of tobacco, strong drink, and gambling may be overcome, as I believe the Lord is striving with them, but they are stubborn.

A SISTER.

TUNNEL HILL, Illinois, Feb. 10.

I write to ask the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of my baby boy, two years old, who has been afflicted most all his life with what appears to be a scrofulous breaking out on his face. I have had him administered to several times but without permanent relief. Have also tried simple remedies but nothing so far has effected a cure. The other day it was forcibly impressed on my mind in some way, to ask the sisters of the Prayer Union to make it a special request in their prayers that he may be healed.

Your sister in Christ,

EGREMONT TOWNSHIP, Ont., Jan. 20.

Editors Herald:—As I read the editorials, articles, and correspondence that fill your columns, my thanks ascend to the Giver of every good and perfect gift. The Herald to me is and has been a grand help, for when but a babe in the church and isolated from true worship, it fed and nourished me in my weakness, giving me instruction and comfort still fresh in my memory.

I wish and pray for the progress of every help to the church, and believe as a people we would be furthering the work more rapidly were we to take advantage of every help to benefit others as readily as we do to advance our own interests. May God speed the day when every house of the Saints shall be a house of prayer and every heart a temple of the living God.

The work is not advancing very rapidly in this part. The Saints are holding fast to their hope, but those outside the church are so blinded by the god of this world that they take no interest in the work we so much prize. Winter has set in with vengeance, which to some extent hinders the work of the writer; but while visiting has been the chief labor, we do not despair of having done good. In other parts lately visited a greater interest was taken, one being added and several others consenting to be baptized. I hope for brighter prospects as I pass along my line of labor.

In bonds of everlasting truth,

FREDERICK GREGORY.

SHERIDAN, Nev., Feb. 4.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Thomas Daley and his son George have been preaching in Nevada since October last, but both left lately for California. They baptized six while here this time. Stormy weather set in and deep snows made the roads impassable. They preached in a number of places and had very attentive audiences, and left many believing.

Bro. Daley is getting quite popular in this part. He labored hard to convince his hearers and has a way of getting around with other societies in a friendly way. He gains considerable influence among the people in general. He is very sincere and energetic and firm and pointed, as well as posted in the doctrine of the gospel, and can show things in their true light, and has a great memory, of a wonderful store, and such an argumentative way that cannot be overthrown.

The latter-day work in Nevada is improving gradually, the Saints are sincere and sound in the faith and the outlook is better than it has been before. Nearly all the old members who were here at first—that came from Utah many years ago—have passed beyond and they that remain are of a different people in some respects. We had some very remarkable manifestations of the power of God since the last Annual Conference in the East, which we hope will encourage the members in the path of duty as well as bring others to investigate the gospel as it is preached by the Reorganized Church. Times are very hard on everybody; many families are suffering for the necessities of life. There is very little doing in mining; all waiting for some change; all believing a change of administration would give silver a boom or free coinage or something to that effect. But Saints understand these troublous times are such as being foretold. Let us put on the armor and battle for the right and be persevering to the end.

Yours in truth,

D. R. JONES.

WILBER, Neb., Feb. 12.

Editors Herald:—The conference of the Southern district of Nebraska, was held at this place the 10th and 11th. Considering the very cold weather, we had a very good time—good spiritual meetings throughout. The local ministry was not so well represented on account of cold weather. The work in our district seems to be moving along nicely considering the very few that we have to labor here; but the way seems to be opening up all along the line for the preaching of the word. We have succeeded in opening up the work in several new localities this last year and with a fair prospect for good to be done.

Your brother,

J. W. WALDSMITH.

FLINT, Ind., Feb. 11.

Editors Herald.—Last evening we held the twenty-second service in Flint, and if excitement was ever excited, it is now. We dealt the subject of the Book of Mormon to a jammed audience estimated at four hundred or four hundred and fifty people. Our service is conducted in a large storeroom fitted up for the purpose, by Mrs. Crandall. Sleigh load after sleigh load went away not being able to get in the building last night. I have written Bro. I. M. to come to the rescue, I cannot fill the places now opened. Salem, Orland, Applemansburg, Hamilton, Lake Gage, Silver Lake, and other points. "Tearing up the Campbellite church at South Scott," has been more serviceable than a thousand commendations; people are attending these meetings from ten to fifteen miles away, and in fact two or three loads from La Grange county were in attendance last evening. In my limited career I have never seen such an interest—so general. The building begins to fill up by five o'clock on Sunday evenings. A great work is imminent here. I wish Bro. Dancer would send me a bundle of tracts to Flint, Indiana. Weather is beautiful here now.

More anon,

SPANISH FORT, Texas, Feb. 6.

Editors Herald.—A few of the sweets and sours of an elder's life in this part. During the year I have done considerable preaching in different places, in both Indian Territory and Texas. I came to this part of Texas two weeks ago. I preached two evenings in a schoolhouse, when it was closed against me. Then I made an effort to get the use of the Campbellite house, where I held a debate with one of their Goliaths last August; but was frankly told I could not get it. But I will tell you what I did get; I got a good tongue lashing. I was then offered a private house, which I accepted, and announced meetings to begin next night, and held five meetings in the private house. Then I was invited to go three miles east to a small house that had been seated by two brothers—one a Campbellite, the other a Baptist. I held three meetings there; then I was sent for to go south four miles, so made my way to that place last Saturday and preached two sermons. But snowstorms have stopped my meetings. I am requested to go to another schoolhouse, which I will do. I have made many friends and they are standing by me nobly, and, lots of enemies; for the Devil is raging. His main instruments here are preachers of the most cowardly sort. How many good ones do ye elders find? I haven't found one yet in all my travels. They seem to think they are doing God's service when telling big yarns on Joseph and the Saints; but let me tell you I am after them with the truth. It does me good to see them stack their arms and take leg bail for safety. I pray God to send more laborers in order that the last enemy may be driven from the field.

The Lord is blessing me in a wonderful way in speaking to the people. There are eight or ten here who will be with us soon.

One man gave me the use of a storehouse a year to hold meetings in; another gave a stove, and others are to seat it; so we see the promise, "I will be with you," is being fulfilled in this part of the harvest field, gladdening our hearts and encouraging us onward.

I am to begin a series of meetings at the storehouse on the 15th. Am expecting Bro. A. J. Moore to assist me. He was at Rogers, Bell county, Texas, when last heard from. I have been called upon to go to Wise county, but on account of the scarcity of means have not been able to reach that place. I am also anxious to visit the Saints at Jack and Young counties, but poverty prevents. Brethren, my will is good; I feel an interest in the Saints and friends in Wise, Jack, and Young counties, and will be with you as soon as possible. I have a horse, and Bro. F. M. Parsons, of Oscar, Indian Territory, furnished me a buggy; so I can travel some in that way. It seems out of the question to reach points at a distance. Brethren, I haven't been inside of one of Nahum's chariots this year, all my traveling being done by private conveyance furnished by myself.

If anyone reading this in my part of the mission field desires preaching, please write me at Oscar, Indian Territory. Mail will be sent by my wife. I will also say that if I am to reach you by rail my fare must be paid. Is that fair?

O, brethren and friends of this great Lone Star State, wake up and come to the help of the Lord! I firmly believe that if all Saints will do their part the elders will do theirs; but Saints, we must have your cooperation in this great work of God. Brethren and sisters of this part of the mission field, I pray God to inspire all with more zeal, wisdom, knowledge, charity, and brotherly love. If we put ourselves in condition to receive the Spirit that produces those blessings, no sacrifice will be too great for us to make. I hope to be remembered by the good Saints everywhere.

S. W. SIMMONS.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Mo., Feb. 9.

Editors Herald.—You will no doubt be anxious to hear how the debate is progressing. It began Wednesday evening, Braden having been delayed by a train not being on time, consequently could not commence on Tuesday evening.

Bro. White is making a grand defense of the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith. I doubt if a more able defense was ever made. He is using a chart of his own make, representing the parable of the vineyard being let out to husbandmen in the various dispensations. Braden never saw the chart before and he is at sea. Every dive he makes at it he "gets his foot in it." He (Braden) uses or rather reads from manuscript previously prepared without regard to the affirmative argument. In his first speech of one hour he only devoted ten minutes to the examination of the affirmative argument. He relies mainly on the "beauties" of the Book of Mormon, all of which is familiar to you.

His moderator is Mr. Armstrong, a lawyer. The chairman is Attorney James Perriman.

They both seem like nice men. Our people are rejoicing over the results so far, but with the Campbellites it is not so. Bro. White has not lost a single position, but has run Braden in from a number of his posts. Braden has a great big job on his hands. He is down, and shows it badly. What will be the result later on when he takes the affirmative? Poor Braden! I can't help feeling sorry for him, bad as he has acted.

The El Dorado people certainly appreciate Bro. White's efforts, and with many the prejudice is all against Braden and in favor of Bro. White. Braden laid around El Dorado too long, and they found him out too well.

We have not forgotten the prediction Bro. Joseph made while here, "The work here will be assailed." We are doing our best to heed his advice not to let the bull butt us off the track. Prospects look encouraging now, but at times things have looked dark to us. Pray for us that we may humbly trust in Him who has called us into his vineyard.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Feb. 5.

Editors Herald.—Elder I. N. Roberts has been preaching here in the church for a week or so, until last Sunday night. He left for Wilbur, Nebraska, to attend district conference. He is a good man and preacher. I hope success may attend his labor.

I read Elder James Caffall's pastoral letter with great interest. Truly his instructions should be valued by all Saints and complied with. I pray the Lord to bless his work; that God may bless both minister and member in their various trials and sorrows.

Your sister,

ANNA NIELSEN.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, Jan. 12.

Editors Herald.—We took a trip through Keystone, preached four sermons, visited the Saints, and had good liberty; also preached twice in Emerson to very attentive though not very large congregations. Some have manifested a belief in our doctrine in both these places, and we hope they may be led to obey and obtain the reward.

On Farm Creek, near Henderson, eight sermons were preached. The Saints turned out exceedingly well. The weather was very cold, but it made no difference to either Saints or friends. We had the best of liberty and a fair turnout, and were well cared for and assisted financially, for which we feel grateful, as it came in a very opportune time; for the times are just as hard for the weary traveling elder this season as for the most of the Saints. And O, we lift our hearts in prayer to God for his blessing to rest upon those who help in time of need, and feel that all such will be richly rewarded by the blessed Master, as he said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Our Sunday school convention convened on Thursday night, February 7; but on account of the severe storm the exercises were not so complete as otherwise would have been. On Friday the 8th we met morning and afternoon, receiving reports from the various schools in the district, sustaining the officers, and electing delegates to the General Convention, General Conference, with other business. At night we had a fine entertainment conducted as previously arranged by the superintendent. All moved off harmoniously and pleasantly.

Our conference held Saturday and Sunday, February 9 and 10, was never better. Our business was transacted without a jar. Our social meetings were excellent, and preaching services well attended. The hearts of all made to rejoice in the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, and the pure love of God shed abroad in the hearts of all. We start now for Bedison, Missouri, to attend district conference. For the service of God,

SAN JOSE, Cal., Feb. 7.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from the historic city of Monterey, where I spoke fifteen times, it being the first time the true gospel as we understand it was ever preached in the old city. I was made more than welcome at the nice little home of Bro. and Sr. Voshell, who are very exemplary Saints. I also found Sr. Jorgenson and her husband, who treated me with much kindness. I feel confident that all the seed that was sown will neither be carried away by the birds of the air, nor choked out by brambles; for it is sown too deeply and the soil is too good for such a thing. Some of the clergy showed what they would do if they dared, by closing the church doors against us; but these are very light afflictions compared with what others have suffered for the kingdom of God.

I made warm friends who treated me with marked consideration, and others who were very kind to me, and to whom I owe a great debt of gratitude. The familiar "come again" was heard many times.

We got permission to preach in the First Presbyterian church, and published appointments in the paper for two discourses; but alas! sectarian intolerance, the fear of losing something or learning something (I know not which), prompted the pastor to come and tell us we could not have the house. Of course we were not offended, for I for one expected it. Well, it is a hard matter for the clergy to decide, and I am almost tempted to say that I never will apply for the use of a sectarian meetinghouse again, for two reasons; one is, I don't like to preach in them; the other, they don't like to have me do so. I have noticed that when some good souls become favorable to our doctrine and apply to their pastors for the use of their churches for us, it is like putting the man in a straight jacket. He is afraid to let us have the house lest some of his flock be drawn away, and afraid to not let us have it lest the ones asking become offended and leave him.

I had intended to write up the old, historic city, for Autumn Leaves, but I learn that it has been written up for some of our papers, so I will only say that Monterey, which means "king mountain," is one of the oldest cities on the coast. It is situated at the head of the bay bearing the same name, and was the capital when California was a state of Mexico. Don Pio Pico, the governor of the state, lived at Monterey when California was ceded to the United States at the close of the Mexican war.

Father Juinperro Sirria landed at Monterey on the third day of June 1770, and planted a cross in the little nook into which he ran his vessel, and celebrated mass under an oak tree close by. The tree and cross still remain. This brave man founded the Carmelo mission and many others within the next few years, and lived to see thousands of the wild Indians won over to his faith.

General John C. Fremont took the place and hoisted the stars and stripes in 1848. His old rifle pit is still plainly to be seen and the people preserve the pole upon which the flag was raised.

Madam Bonifacia (The Maid of Monterey) is still living, and notwithstanding her great age still retains some of the beauty that so won the heart of the brave Fremont; and the story is that the General on leaving, gave her, as a token of his love a rosebush to plant, and it was to be a prophecy of their future; if it lived, he would return to her and they would be happy and prosperous. The rose still lives and has grown into a goodly tree, which is still cared for by the faithful Bonifacia, who is still waiting for the gallant officer's return.

The old city of Monterey has not made as much improvement or progress as other towns on the coast. New Monterey and Pacific Grove are two beautiful villages lying from two to three miles southwest, and are most delightful places to live.

I intend going to Gilroy next week, and from there perhaps on to Merced and Fresno counties.

Respectfully,

J. C. CLAPP.

Editors Herald:—The work in this part of the vineyard is still slowly moving onward. I am busy every Sunday and parts of the week days with more calls than I can fill. Am preaching at four different points, from three to twenty miles from home. Bro. I. N. White held a series of meetings about one week in all and baptized seven. He left a good impression on the people. Pray for us. Love to all.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Feb. 7.

Editors Herald:—After returning from Denmark last fall I spent some time in this vicinity, preaching to the Scandinavian people. In the month of November I went to Hills, Rock county, Minnesota, where resides Bro. O. H. Midgorden. The population in and about Hills are nearly all Norwegian and hold to the Lutheran faith, there being two churches of that denomination in the town. Bro. Midgorden obtained the use of the town hall and on Sunday evening, the 11th, I commenced preaching, and at the close announced that I would continue on Tuesday night, Bro. Midgorden having obtained the promise of the hall for several evenings. But on Monday we learned that the minister and one of his faithful adherents had grown uneasy about it and thought it their duty to do something against us, wherefore they used their influence with those in charge to have the hall closed. However, this act was disapproved of by many, among them the editor of the paper, who denounced it in the following language:—

"Elder Anderson, a disciple of the Mormon faith, held forth at the town hall Sunday night. It was announced that he would hold a series of meetings here, commencing Tuesday evening, but some of our good brethren objected to the deal and the elder was unable to receive the hall. The Crescent [name of paper] does not think that was hardly a square deal. If there is anybody in Rock county who is foolish enough to want more than one wife we believe he should be given permission to get over it, which he would do about the time three or four of his dearly beloved helpmates got tangled up in each others' hair and fingernails. No, sir! We say give the Mormon a chance to see if there are any such fools in the township."

I then wrote an article for the paper, including the articles of our faith, which when handed to him by Bro. Midgorden he read carefully and coming to article on marriage he frankly confessed that he did not know that there were two classes of Latter Day Saints. Bro. Midgorden explained to him, and he was quite willing to publish the article, as also to correct the above statement, which he did in the next issue of the paper. Thus instead of hindering, this little difficulty only gave our faith a larger circulation.

I then held some meetings in Bro. Midgorden's house and blessed five of his children. We enjoyed the Spirit of the Master and feel confident that if Bro. M. continues to let his light shine he will in due time have the satisfaction of seeing his family and others with him in the faith. Before I left he sent for tracts and several copies of the Voice of Warning, by means of which he intends to keep up the work. May God bless his efforts.

Will the authorities of Southern Minnesota please send me their addresses? If continued in my present field I expect to visit and spend more time in that country.

During the month of December I labored some in Hazel Dell, also in the vicinity of Oakland; Bro. George Needham assisting me in the latter place. After the holidays I again went east and spoke ten times in the church at Wheeler, thence to Oakland, where I held forth for several evenings in Bro. Snider's house. Bro. Needham also spoke once. We then occupied the Christian church for three nights. Several at Oakland seemed to be interested in the preaching and we would have continued had the church not been occupied. We then obtained the use of the Christian church at Carson and spoke there three times, but by this time Mr. Lagrippe had got hold of me to such an extent that I had to quit, and returned home. I hope, however, that he will not be able to detain me long, as I wish to continue in the Master's work.

For the information of Bro. Kelley let me say that last year while in Denmark I baptized a man who was eighty-three years of age on June 27 last, making him a little older than the sister you mentioned having been baptized by you some time ago. He is a bright old man, too, having been in the service of the government for over fifty years.

Yours truly,

PETER ANDERSON.

POMO, Missouri, Feb. 2.

Editors Herald:—Through the influence of Bro. John R. Wedlock and a Mr. Wells, a prominent citizen of Ozark, we obtained the Presbyterian chapel to hold a meeting and commenced immediately after the Rogersville discussion. Bro. Wedlock is a good speaker considering the amount of practice he has had, and has talked his religion in the stores, on the streets, and in his shop; and by being charitable with others, considering their feelings as well as his own, has attracted the attention of some good people to the gospel and effected an opening where no longer than last April the writer could not get a place to hold a meeting. And as Bro. W. had endeared himself to the people of his town, we thought we would give him charge of the meetings, and I must say he rendered valuable service, while Bro. C. J. Spurlock and I were the principal speakers.

The first two times I appeared on the rostrum the brethren accused me of using a little theological soft soap, but the crowd and interest continued to increase and it fell to my lot to preach the last two sermons, one of them on the Book of Mormon, one on the signs of the times and second coming of Christ. We had hundreds out to hear and many invitations to come again, and the brethren said they would never so accuse me again. I believe in using strategy in our warfare, but our weapons must be spiritual.

We held thirteen meetings at Ozark and left a good interest in the care of Elder J. R. Wedlock. He is fully competent to take care of all we gained. I look for an ingathering. I did not enjoy the meetings as I usually do, because of illness. Since I came home I have been ill, but when Bro. Spurlock came I received a great blessing through the ordinance of the gospel, and think I will be able to take the field again in a few days.

Although glad to see Bro. Spurlock, it grieved my heart to learn that he had walked about forty miles of the way on the ties, for want of a few dimes to pay his way. Brethren should remember that Latter Day Saint preachers are not beggars, and if we are void of observation or too timid to inquire into their financial circumstances, we are liable to let some poor, weakly brother walk off with his books and clothes when it is more than his physical strength is able to endure, and when he reaches his appointment he may be so overcome with fatigue as to be unfit for work for a week to come. I trust no one will think I am finding fault; I am only calling attention to one of the indispensable duties we owe to the work of the Lord and his servants; and while we are thanking and praising our Father in heaven for sending the glorious gospel to us, we should remember that somebody has made sacrifice of time, money, and pleasures of a happy home that we might rejoice in the knowledge of the restored gospel; and that we should be willing to bear our part and send the good news to others as fast as we can. And now while our country is almost a network of railroads they will prove to be of very little help to the work of the Lord if his ministering servants are not supplied with money enough to pay their way on the train from one appointment to another, when the trains run by the door. Then let us all watch, and work, and pray for the advancement of this holy cause, that the bride may be adorned for the second coming of the Bridegroom; for then we will receive our reward.

Bro. Oliver Rounds also lives at Ozark. He and his family are well respected by the people. Sr. Addie Hull makes her home at Bro. Rounds', and I am glad to note that her influence is good. Although she is weak in body, yet she is strong in faith, and has a zeal that is commendable. Sr. Wedlock is also in the work and willing to make every reasonable sacrifice. The work at Rogersville and Ozark (only twelve miles apart) seems to have a sure footing, and if it can be taken care of, I believe will yield a good harvest.

Your colaborer,

JOSEPH WARD.

Editors Herald:—The work here is moving onward. It seems slow to us, but God blesses us in doing our known duty. Last August Brn. Fred Smith and D. M. Rudd held tent meetings, since which time five have been added to our little branch, with good prospects for more.

Bro. John Barnes, priest, and the writer, teacher, have been holding preaching services at Carbonado, three miles east of this city, with good results. Bro. Barnes baptized a good and worthy lady who has children to bring up, which we are sure she will do in the fear and admonition of the Lord as she is an earnest and faithful servant. Her people are indeed very nice, accommodating people, for which we are very thankful, as they have aided us very materially through their kindness. Bro. Geo. and Sr. Mary Langdon, two worthy Saints of that place, have rendered the work very efficient service, for which may God bless them; and, indeed, all the Saints of the branch have been laborers together, which makes it very pleasant for the officers. Our prayer is that God may abundantly bless them.

WONDERFUL EXPERIENCES.

I WOULD like to relate some strange manifestations which have occurred in my past life, and if deemed wisdom, they may be put in print. I have related the experiences to several outside of the church, but could get no light on them.

In the month of November, 1872, my wife and I went to California to visit relatives residing some six miles from the city of Vallejo. After a day of rest my brother-in-law, George Highson, with his wife took us to view the country round about their home. One day, having returned from our excursion about three o'clock in the afternoon, we were sitting in the front room of my brother-in-law's house talking over what we had seen, when, happening to turn to a corner of the room where some pictures were hanging, to my great surprise I beheld my eldest boy who had been left at home, two hundred miles distant, with blood all over his face and saturating his clothes, crying, his hand up and seeming to be in great agony. It made me jump in my chair and gave me great uneasiness for some time, because of thinking there was something wrong at home.

The conversation went on for about twenty minutes when I turned again and looked in the same direction. My boy again appeared to me, but in a different form; he was washed, had on a change of clothes, and a white cloth bandaged about his head. I immediately experienced a feeling of rest and calmness in regard to what had happened at home. We had left my brother and his wife and a hired man to take care of things while we were gone. Upon our arrival home about ten days afterwards, they related an accident that befell the boy at the very time he appeared to me while sitting in George Highson's front room at Vallejo. My brother and the hired man had come home with a load of wood, and while in the house eating a lunch the boy climbed on top of the load and part of it fell down with him, a limb striking him on the head, and making an ugly cut in a dangerous place. They had quite a time with him for about twenty minutes when they got him washed and bandaged as was shown me. My boy was about ten years old.

Now here is the secret of the matter. By what power was this made known to me? Who can say? It appears to me that there is a science yet to be revealed, and perhaps is already to some, but who are they, and what kind of life must they live? If I am allowed to answer, A godly one. I had been in the church only a short time then, my faith in God was never so strong as it was at that time of my life; all my trust was in him in those days, and has been since.

Eight years ago last November I had the following vision. At that time we lost a son by death who was a member of the church. For several nights during his illness I lost my sleep which caused me to be sick several days after his death. In the midst of my affliction I had this remarkable manifestation: I saw myself standing about five miles from shore on a vast deep in the ocean. By me stood a large tree, like a great pine, with thick limbs on it and one of them supported me from drowning. As I looked towards the east, I saw on a rising ground on the distant shore, a large city with towers and palaces, the grandest sight I ever saw, and my feeling and desire was to go there; but I had to wait until a boat would come after me. This boat could not come until sundown. I looked west and the sun was shining bright and clear, and by appearance it was about the middle of the afternoon. My age was then fifty-five. I hope, if faithful, the boat will come when my sun goes down. This is another testimony to the latter-day work. Lord, help us to hold to the tree of life until the appointed time when the lifeboat will come and land us in the city of rest, where there is peace and joy evermore.

In the year 1873, a man, in our neighborhood, was taken sick with typhoid fever and the doctors gave him up to die. He was a man well to do, had a large farm, and was friendly to the church. His wife's parents lived in Utah and at that time were members of that church, but since have united with the Reorganization. When the man was given up by the doctors, his wife sent to Utah for her mother, and she came immediately. She found her son-in-law very sick, and inquiring about church matters and whether any elders could be had, was informed of two who lived at some distance, but she was satisfied to have one as she thought her son-in-law was dying. The writer was sent for and arrived about six in the evening. I administered to the sick, as commanded, in a short and simple way, but in accordance with the direction of the Spirit of the Lord. Immediately after I was left alone in the room with the sick man. The doors and windows were all open, when I looked around me, I beheld the room full of what, to me, appeared like black looking men standing around me and accusing me of being alone. They said I had no right to officiate alone and they would destroy or annihilate me. I could see their teeth gnashing at me as they made wicked threats, and I began to feel fearful of the situation as they stood between me and the door. In the midst of this I lifted my voice to God in prayer, and instantly a personage dressed in white stood between me and them holding in his right hand a white garment done up. This, I was informed, should be put on the sick man when he would obey the gospel. As soon as I saw my protector and comprehended the circumstance, I was left alone in the room with the sick man and wondered at what had transpired. I walked out of the house and meeting his wife she asked me what I thought of him. I answered her, "He will be all right." In a week he was able to walk from the house to the barn. If necessary, I can give place and names. The place is about two miles from here. I live in Carson Valley, Nevada.

DAVID R. JONES.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED.
NO. 6.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

AN ENSIGN TO BE REARED.

THERE is another thought we must not overlook, and that is that an "ensign" is to be lifted up to the nations as a part of this "strange work." As proof of this I shall call your attention first to the prediction of Isaiah:—

And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly: none shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber

nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken: whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent, their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind: their roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions; yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.—Isa. 5: 26-29.

Notice here,

1. An ensign is to be lifted up to the nations.
2. It is to be lifted up "from far."
3. When the Lord shall "hiss" for his people it will be "from the end of the earth," reckoning from Jerusalem.
4. They are to "come with speed swiftly."
5. "Their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint and their wheels like a whirlwind."
6. The "roaring" of their horses "shall be like a lion."

We have already shown that "from far" would be "in far countries," where Ephraim is to "remember the Lord" at the time he is gathered; and that "from the end of the earth" would be "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills," where Ephraim is to be blessed "with the blessings of heaven above" in the last days. The words, "they shall come," etc., show that this too is to be at the time the Lord gathers Israel. And, as horses of flesh and blood do not have "wheels," nor hoofs "like flint," it is evident that the prophet refers to the "iron horse"—the steam engine, with "wheels like a whirlwind," and whose roaring is "like a lion," as the means of conveyance the Lord will use in bringing Israel back, "with speed swiftly," to their own land.

Now read Isaiah 18: 1-3:—

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled! All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.

The seventh verse makes it clear that this too has reference to the time that Israel shall be saved from his scattered condition and "brought unto the Lord of hosts." It reads as follows:—

In that time shall the present be brought unto the Lord of hosts of a people scattered and peeled, and from a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, the mount Zion.

We ask you to notice in this,

1. The Lord is to "lift up an ensign" and "blow a trumpet"—the gospel trumpet.

2. "Swift messengers" are to be sent to "a nation scattered and peeled," etc.,—that is, to Israel.

3. They are to be sent from a "land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia."

4. "All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth" are commanded to see and hear when the Lord does this work.

5. Then "shall the present be brought unto the Lord of hosts of a people scattered and peeled, . . . to the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, the mount Zion." There are one or two points in this that I wish to call your special attention to, now; others will be noticed in their proper place. By a comparison of this chapter with Isaiah 5:26, we see that both refer to the same time and the same work. Both speak of the ensign, both speak of the swift means of travel, both speak of the return of Israel; one says the work shall commence "from far"—at "the end of the earth," while the other says it will be in a land "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." Ethiopia at present is a little country almost due south of Jerusalem, but in ancient times it took in a much wider territory, as will appear from the following description:—

Originally, all the nations inhabiting the southern part of the globe, as known to the ancients; or rather, all men of dark brown or black color were called Ethiopians (Gr. aitho—ops, sunburned). Later, this name was given more particularly to the inhabitants of the countries south of Libya and Egypt, or the upper Nile, etc.—Chambers' Encyclopedia, Vol. 4, p. 142.

"Beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," "as known to the ancients," would be "over the sea" in "the west," or southwest, of Jerusalem; and, as the ensign is to be lifted up at the "end of the earth" from Jerusalem, we find ourselves again landed in America (the land of Joseph), as the place where this work is to commence. And when we come to this land we find that both North America and

South America, in their shape, resemble the wings of a bird; also that the American eagle with spread wings is used as the emblem of liberty; hence it may truly be termed a "land shadowing with wings."

For further light in regard to lifting up this ensign, I now call your attention to Isaiah 11:11-16:—

... "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth: and the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

This puts it beyond question that the ensign is to be lifted up at the time the Lord commences his work for the salvation of Israel; at the time he shall gather the "outcasts of Israel" and the "dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth;" when he shall save "the remnant of his people." Also that the power of God is to be made manifest in such a remarkable manner, in the performance of this work, as to make it indeed "a marvelous work and a wonder."

Now please remember that when the Lord saves "the remnant of his people" he is to make "a short work" "upon the earth" (Rom. 9:27, 28); that the "consumption decreased" is to follow immediately upon the heels of this work (Isa. 10:20-23); and that just before the "consumption" the Lord is to proceed to "do his strange work." (Isa. 28:21, 22.) And, now, we have just learned that in saving "the remnant of his people" he will "set up an ensign for the nations," making it clear that the "short work," the "strange work," and the setting up of this ensign, all refer to the same work: and that this work is to commence in "a land shadowing with wings," "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," and at the opposite "end of the earth" from Jerusalem. Remember also that it is to be when the Lord shall "save his people, the remnant of Israel," that Ephraim is to be "my firstborn." (Jer. 31:7-9.)

If any are in doubt as to what is meant by the ensign, please read the following:—

There shall be a root of Jesse [Christ], which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek.—Isa. 11:10.

Christ is the "ensign," and he is held up to the nations by preaching the gospel to them. Peter says:—

This is the word [the living word, the word that was made flesh, the Christ] which by the gospel is preached unto you.—1 Peter 1:25.

Hence it is that we find the expressions, "preached Christ," "preached the word," "preached the gospel," used synonymously in the Scriptures. If Christ is the ensign, and if he is presented to the nations through the gospel, then, when we read that God will "lift up an ensign to the nations," we are to understand that he will preach Christ unto them, proclaim the gospel to them, and that the lifting of the ensign in the last days is simply the restoration of the gospel of Christ. This being true, we will now hear how this work is to be commenced:—

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.—Rev. 14:6, 7.

The gospel then is to be brought from heaven by an angel. Jesus says:—

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matt. 24:14.

When the gospel is thus restored, it is to be to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people;" when the ensign is lifted up, "all ye inhabitants of the world and dwellers on the earth" are commanded to "see" and "hear;" and when "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world," it is to be "a witness unto all nations."

When this angel brings the gospel he is to declare that "the hour of God's judgment is come;" when the ensign is lifted up, "with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." (Isa. 11:4.) And when "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world," "then shall the end come."

This connects the restoration of the gospel by an angel, and its being preached "for a witness unto all nations," with the setting up of the ensign. Hence the claim of Joseph Smith that an angel came from heaven and gave him authority to organize the Church of Christ, preach the gospel, and thus build up the kingdom of God, is found to exactly accord with the predictions of the Bible as just quoted.

For further evidence as to how this work is to be commenced and carried on please read the following:—

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3: 7.

And, in connection with this, please turn and read the prophecy of Zechariah. In chapter 1: 18–21 he relates a vision, in which he "beheld four horns." The angel that talked with him told him that "these are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem." Then he sees "four carpenters," and the angel tells him that they have come "to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which did lift up their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it." This is a vision of the redemption of Jerusalem—of the time when the "horns of the Gentiles" shall be cast out of her. The prophet then proceeds to describe how this redemption is accomplished. He says:—

I lifted up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein. . . . Ho, ho, come forth and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord. . . . Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord.—Zech. 2: 1–10.

The prophet here, in telling how the Lord will proceed when he redeems Jerusalem, says that an angel shall be sent to speak to a "young man" and tell him that Jerusalem is to be inhabited again. Some think that "this young man" is Zechariah himself; but we must remember that the prophet is telling what he saw and heard. He tells us that the angel talked with him, and tells what he said—that he spoke of casting out "the horns of the Gentiles" and taking the measure of the city. Then he says the angel left him and went and talked with another angel, and he listened to the conversation; and that one of them said to the other, "Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited," etc. Now, it hardly seems that one would tell the other to run and speak to Zechariah and tell him certain things, and him standing by listening to the conversation. Besides this, the angel is to tell "this young man," not only that Jerusalem is to be inhabited, but that Israel must come "from the land of the north"—that they must "flee," come at once; and the reason assigned is, "for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee." Hence, when the time comes for Israel to "flee from the land of the north" and inhabit Jerusalem again, an angel is to be sent to a "young man," and is to tell him that the time has come.

Now, reader, please read a short extract from the history of Joseph Smith. Of the angel's message to him he says:—

He quoted the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying that it was about to be fulfilled. . . . He also quoted the second chapter of Joel, from the twenty-eighth verse to the close. He also said that this was not yet fulfilled, but was soon to be. And he further stated that the fullness of the Gentiles was soon to come in.

Joseph was a "young man," a mere boy, at this time. Hence we see that in his claim, as to what the angel told him, and also in his age, he is in exact accord with the prediction of Zechariah.

A PREPARATORY WORK.

That this work of setting up an ensign is a work of preparation, preparatory to the coming of the Savior, will appear from Isaiah 59: 19, 20.

When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord.

Also Isaiah 62: 10, 11.

Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people. Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

His work is to go before his coming; this work is to "prepare ye the way of the people;" and this is to be done by lifting up a standard, "for the people" "against" "the enemy." And, as "his reward is with him," this is evidently at "the hour of his judgment;" hence, the work that is to go "before him" is the preaching of "the everlasting gospel."

I now call your attention to Isaiah 40: 1–10.

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. . . . And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. . . . Behold, the Lord God will come with a strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

We are told here, as in Isaiah 62: 10, 11, that when the Lord comes "with a strong hand," to reward his servants and reign over them, "his work" shall go "before him." We are also told that the object of this work is to "prepare ye the way of the Lord."

Some object to our using this prophecy on the ground that it was applied to John the Baptist; but, before answering this objection, I wish to call your attention to Malachi 1–5.

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment.

This, too, refers to the time when the Lord shall come "to judgment;" and, as in the other prophecies just quoted, a work is to precede his coming. "I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me."

Before deciding that these two prophecies refer to the work of John the Baptist before the first coming of Christ, I ask you to notice carefully what they say, and note the following points:—

1. The Lord is to come "to judgment," "with a strong hand." "His arm shall rule for him;" "his reward is with him;" "he is like a refiner's fire;" and the question at that time is to be, "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?"

2. He is to send his "messenger"—"the voice of one crying in the wilderness"—to "prepare the way before me."

3. This messenger is to "speak ye comfortably unto Jerusalem," is to "cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins."

4. He is to cause the sons of Levi to "offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."

5. "Then shall the offering of Judah be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old."

6. "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together."

Now, was the Savior's reward with him when he came the first time? No.

For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matt. 16:27.

And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.—Rev. 22:12.

It is yet in the future, "when the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels," that "his reward is with him."

Well, did they comfort Jerusalem? Did either John the Baptist or the Savior tell Jerusalem that "her warfare is accomplished," and that "she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins?" Please read the following for an answer:—

Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.—Matt 23:38.

For there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.—Luke 21:23, 24.

This is too plain to need any comment.

Did the sons of Levi "offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness," and was the offering of Judah "pleasant unto the Lord," at that time? "To the law and to the testimony."

Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.—Matt. 21:43.

It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles.—Acts 13:46.

The Lord did not accept their offering at that time.

Was he "like a refiner's fire?" and was the cry then, "Who shall be able to stand?" No; that was to be in the future from John's day, and is to be at the second coming of Christ.

And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?—Rev. 6:16, 17.

The wicked stood when Christ came the first time. They beheaded John the Baptist and crucified the Savior. But when he comes "with a strong hand," "to judgment," and sits "as a refiner's fire," then, only those who have "clean hands and a pure heart" will be "able to stand."

One more question: Did the Lord come in his glory, the first time, and did "all flesh see it together?" No. He said then,

I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.—Matt. 15:24.

This prophecy refers to his second coming, as we see from these words of the Savior:—

And then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.—Matt. 24:30.

It is then that "all flesh"—"all the tribes of the earth" shall see his glory. Hence you see it is ridiculously absurd to undertake to apply those two prophecies, and their fulfillment, to the first coming of Christ.

Matthew, in speaking of John the Baptist, says:—

For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.—Matt. 3:3.

For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.—Matt. 11:10.

Here is proof, positive, that John the Baptist is "the voice of one crying in the wilderness," and also "my messenger," referred to by both Isaiah and Malachi; and I assure you, reader, I have no disposition to dispute the record.

But there are two persons referred to in those prophecies. One is the Savior, who is to come in power and glory, and "sit as a refiner's fire" in judging the world; the other is the "messenger" who is to "prepare the way before him." Jesus of Nazareth is the Savior, and John the Baptist is the messenger. And, as the Savior did not do the work here predicted of him, at his first coming, but is to do it when he comes "in the glory of his Father, with his angels;" so John the Baptist did not do the work here predicted of him, when he was here the first time, but is to come again before the second coming of Christ to "prepare the way before him." For proof of this please read the following:—

Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.—Matt. 17:11-13.

Jesus says here that he has come, and that the Jews have done by him just as they will do to himself; that is, they have put him to death. But he also says of him, "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things." He says that "he is come," and that he "shall come." Now, did he "restore all things" when here before? If so, what does this mean?

Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.—Acts 3:21.

The "times of restitution of all things" was yet in the future, and when they come, Elias (John the Baptist) is to be sent again to "prepare the way"—"restore all things."

Let me call your attention once more to the claims of Joseph Smith, as already quoted:—

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood [Aaronic priesthood] upon us, said that his name was John, the same that was called John the Baptist in the New Testament.

Also this:—

And this (priesthood) shall never be taken again from the earth until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.

Again, his claim is in harmony with the Bible. The claim has been scouted and ridiculed, but the fact remains that Jesus says he "truly shall first come [before the Son of man] and restore all things;" and Joseph says he did come. Also notice that he says that the priesthood which he conferred upon them, should not be taken from the earth until the sons of Levi offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. Just what Malachi says they are to do after the Lord sends his "messenger." We see therefore, how it is that John the Baptist is the "messenger" referred to in those prophecies, and yet they refer to the second coming of Christ. He prepared the way before the Savior at his first coming; he has also been sent to prepare the way for his second coming. Hence, the statement of his father, Luke 1: 76:—

For thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways.

His ways—plural number.

TO THE QUORUM OF APOSTLES.

To my Brethren of the Quorum of Twelve; Greeting:—It is with a degree of pleasure I assume the duty, as the present mission year is drawing to a close, to issue a call for our convening at as early a date as the 25th of March, that we may consult and arrange our work, and get it before the conference at as early a session as possible. There are a few important matters to be considered besides the missions, and in the consideration of missions, the hard times and financial pressure should be considered, and as few changes made as can be consistent with the welfare of the work.

A word of counsel to the mission force may not be amiss. In the present scarcity of funds in the church treasury, unless the expense of attending conference (that is, going to and returning to field of labor) can be made very light or without immediate draft upon the Bishop, the burden could be lessened by a little sacrifice of the pleasure of attending conference, especially so by those who have a long distance to travel to be present. The duties falling upon the Quorum of Twelve make it imperative upon them to attend, hence, it is expected that at least all the members who can, will be present. For reasons thought to be good and sufficient, it will be best to meet in Lamon, Iowa, on the 25th day of March, 1895, at ten a. m. in the room usually occupied in the Herald building.

I am glad that I can report, so far as the mission fields have been reported to me, there is a steady increase and improvement in the work all along the line, and the reports from our foreign missions are more encouraging than ever before. Many events have occurred in the twelve months just past, which emphasize the work as being all we claim for it, and comforts the prayerful, watching Saints, assuring them the final time of triumph is hastening on.

Our ministry have been challenged in various fields and met their opponents, and in every instance reported victory has crowned their efforts, and their testimony is, "God and his Holy Spirit have been with us." For this we have reason to be thankful, but the year has not passed without leaving its share of sorrow and grief in the homes of the Saints. The angel of death has visited our homes, and hearts have been touched with sorrow and weeping. The old, the middle aged, and the young alike have been called from our midst, but what a comfort it is to us to have the assurance the separation is not eternal but transitory, and soon we may meet our loved ones again. Let us rejoice that each year as it dawns upon us is full of promise, and as time advances and grows old the events transpiring make assurance doubly sure that we are the children of the great King, and we can already see the rays of light which mark the coming of the day of our reception at home by our Lord and Savior, to be ever with him. So let us prove ourselves worthy. Amen.

ALEX. HALE SMITH,
President of Quorum of Twelve.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

The Independence branch has appointed a committee on reception and accommodation for those attending the General Conference. Board will be furnished to those who apply at the rate of $3 per week. All who desire accommodations furnished are requested to address, with inclosed stamp, as early as possible, either member of the committee, at Independence, Missouri.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Montana district conference will convene at Reese Creek, March 16, at ten a. m. We earnestly request all branch presidents and secretaries to send in a full report of their respective branches, and that all holding the priesthood send in their reports. Let us hear from you (where you are unable to attend), and let the conference know what you are doing for the cause, and what you intend to do. An invitation is extended to all to attend.

J. E REESE, Pres.
GOMER REESE, Sec.

The Independence, Missouri, district conference will convene at Independence, Missouri, March 9, 1895, at 10:30 a. m. All branch clerks, and also the ministry, are requested to send in their reports before the day appointed for conference. Come all who can, and let us have a profitable time before the Lord. Considerable labor has been done in the last quarter and we expect more can be done in the next; therefore let us come together and adopt the best possible measures for carrying on this great latter-day work. If we are the light of the world we ought to lead the world and not let the world lead us. Among the most important business to be done at this session will be the selection of delegates to General Conference.

R. MAY, Pres.

The conference of the Northern district of California will convene at Sacramento, March 1, 1895. Saturday afternoon, March 2, will be devoted to the work of the Sunday school convention. A full attendance is desired, as delegates to General Conference and to the General Sunday School Convention will be elected. Take notice that all officers' reports are required to be made in writing, and that all branch reports must be made upon the authorized blank statistical reports, or in their form to entitle them to acceptance. Let us hear from all the branches, and in proper form. Blank statistical reports may be had of Chas. A. Parkin, 3010 Sixteenth street, San Francisco, so that none need seek excuse for neglect.

M. H. FORSCUTT, Pres.
MARY SAXE, Sec.

The Texas Central district conference meets at Texas Central branch, March 9. District Sunday school association meets on the 8th at same place. Let us have full reports from all branches and schools in the district. Let everybody come who can.

E. W. NUNLEY, Pres.

As this will be the last conference before General Conference it will be necessary to appoint delegates to the General Conference, and other important business will come before us. Let all that can, come, and bring the Spirit of our Master along so that we may have a season of rejoicing and our spiritual strength renewed.

DIED.

WHEELER.—At Los Angeles, California, January 31, 1895, Melvin Wheeler, son of Sister and stepson of Brother Bowlby, aged 14 years and 10 months. He was born at Rockport, Missouri. His mother, one brother, two or three sisters, and stepfather mourn their loss. Elder C. W. Earl preached the funeral sermon, assisted by R. R. Dana, to quite a large attendance of Saints and friends at the home, on Buena Vista street, Los Angeles, February 1, after which his remains were buried in Evergreen cemetery.

LINNELL.—Joseph D. Linnell died at his home near Powersville, Iowa, December 27, 1894, aged 59 years, 6 months, and 14 days. Bro. Linnell was born at Depauville, New York. When seven years of age his family moved to Henry county, Illinois. In 1857 he was married to Miss Mary Linnell, of Dellona, Wisconsin, who died July 30, 1866. They had three children, of whom one son, Fred, still survives, and resides near Powersville. October 15, 1867, he was married to Mrs. Sarah J. Bowman, at Reedsburg, Wisconsin. In 1883 Bro. Linnell moved to Pleasant Grove, near Powersville, where he resided at the time of his death. Bro. Linnell had eight children by his second wife, four of whom, with their mother, survive him and mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. Bro. Linnell became a member of the Reorganized Church May 13, 1894, being baptized by Elder J. S. Roth. The funeral sermon was preached in the hall at Powersville, February 3, 1895, by Elder J. R. Sutton, from Hebrews 9: 27 with 2 Corinthians 2: 1-10 to a large concourse of sympathizing friends and relatives.

LANE.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, February 10, 1895, Dora, daughter of Bro. O. S. and Sr. Mary Lane; aged 5 years. Funeral services conducted by Elder R. M. Elvin. Interment at Lamoni cemetery.

ARKELL.—Sr. Charlotte Arkell died January 13, 1895, at the residence of her daughter, Sr. Tyson, Brooklyn, New York. She was born August 7, 1823, in Ross, Herefordshire, England. Her maiden name was Robinson. When about twenty-two years old she was married to John Arkell. A family of nine children was born to them, three only of whom survived her. She was left a widow fourteen years ago and has lived with her daughter the greater part of the time since, where she had a good home and considerate care. When about thirty years of age she joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and has always entertained a fixed faith in that belief. In 1870 she came to America with her husband and family and has lived in Brooklyn since. About three years ago she united with the Reorganization, Elder W. H. Kelley officiating. She was a woman of industrious habits and force of character and her home was a resting place for the Lord's servants, where they received sympathy and aid. She lived to a good old age and died honored and respected by all for her many virtues and devotion to the right. Funeral services by Elders Geo. H. Hilliard and Wm. H. Kelley.

BRADLEY.—At his home near Bradtville, Wisconsin, December 22, 1894, Mr. Joshua A. Bradley. Deceased was born near Kirtland, Ohio, February 2, 1831. He was married to Sarah A. Carpenter March 16, 1854, near Mentor, Ohio. In September of that year he moved to Grant county, Wisconsin, and settled in Wyalusing township, where he has since resided. His wife died October 18, 1876, since which time he has lived a widower. He reared a family of seven children, six of whom are now living. He died a firm believer in the latter-day work, though not a member, his sickness preventing him since he became convinced. Elder J. W. Peterson preached the sermon from Matthew 16: 27.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

Three additional chapters describe American Antiquities, and Hebrew Relics, one containing the statement of Dr. Lederer, a converted Jew, etc., all corroborative of the claims of the Book of Mormon.

PRESIDENCY AND PRIESTHOOD; THE APOSTASY, REFORMATION, AND RESTORATION.

By Elder Wm. H. Kelley. New, Revised, and Enlarged Edition. It contains 421 pages of closely written matter, with autograph and likeness of the Author and is printed in good, readable type, with neat binding. The work is a library within itself; a marvel of trenchant criticism and logical deductions from historical facts; a key to the right understanding of the Bible and modern diverse systems of faith and worship. It discusses the issues of theology that are to the front to-day. It treats largely of Ministerial Authority as associated with the Melchisedek and Aaronic Priesthoods, and the Ideal Church of New Testament times is conspicuously set forth in striking contrast with the creeds and systems of church building since the days of the Apostles. Also the claims for the Restoration of the Gospel at a later day than the Apostolic age are critically examined in the light of prophecy and history, which is a subject of great moment to men of every faith. A historical resume or brief is also inserted of the rise and development of the "apostate church," and an exegesis of the 29th chapter of Isaiah, the revelation of the "sealed book." Also the origin of modern churches and creeds, etc.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archæology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

JAPAN'S WONDERFUL TRANSFORMATION.

THE transformation, political and social, which Japan has undergone within the last thirty years reads almost like a fairy tale. If the Pope of Rome were to lay aside all the trappings of Papal rank and the insignia of office, and take his place as the first citizen of Italy, eager for civil and military reform, and for the restoration of Italian unity and greatness, it would constitute nearly an exact parallel to the great reformation which has been wrought in Japan within the memory of even middle-aged Americans. It is true that, being of a different race, we are not in full sympathy with the Japanese, and do not attach precisely the same weight to their doings in peace or war as we would to similar events among Christian nations. Still the story of "the land of the Mikado" is a fascinating one, wanting in none of the elements of romance, and its salient features are well-sketched in outline by J. Castell Hopkins in a paper in The Engineering Magazine, November. Mr. Hopkins presents us first with a rough sketch of Japan under the feudal system, intensely hostile to foreigners, down to the British bombardment of Kagosimea in 1864, and then continues.

"During this very time, however, the volcanic action must have been preparing, which in a few years was to cast off with lightning rapidity the garments of medieval institutions, the power of a ceremonious and superstitious priesthood, the influence of an invisible and infallible head, the authority of sanguinary and uncontrollable chiefs, the government of crafty and faithless leaders. How it was done is not known to this day. The great revolution does not seem to have had its great leader. No master mind appears as having directed the masses and controlled the classes. Yet in 1868 a coalition of turbulent nobles and princes united in offering to consolidate the Mikado's power by yielding up to him their feudal and immemorial rights and revenues. A body of men who had instigated or allowed the murder of foreigners and attacks upon British and other consulates, issued a manifesto declaring that their object was 'to enable their country to take its place with the other countries of the world.' The bitter opponents of external trade and foreign intercourse overthrew the Tycoon and his whole elaborate system of commercial monopoly. The Mikado, after having passed a life of enervating idleness, luxury, debauchery, and absolute seclusion, came suddenly to the front, assumed his place as the secular as well as the sacred head of the nation, clothed himself in European garments, went out into the light of day to be seen by all his subjects, and commenced the task of receiving addresses, opening public undertakings, and representing the empire in the eyes of the world, as if he had all his life been a constitutional monarch, grafted upon an Eastern despotism.

"It was the most marvelous, interesting, and peculiar episode in the political history of the world. There has been nothing to compare with it anywhere. All the ancient landmarks of Japanese policy, statecraft, and administration were thrown down as by one of those volcanic shocks for which the islands are famous. They were replaced within half a dozen years by elements of Western civilization and government which have elsewhere been the product of centuries of slow and stormy development. Old and new were commingled, and forty millions of people of Asiatic stock dropped almost in a moment from the feudalism of a thousand years into a system of modern monarchical government with a gradual but steady approximation toward the 'popular' government of the present moment. It was in the strange realization of the fact that these latter institutions could not be had all in a year that we recognize a quality in the people, equal to that hitherto unrecognizable one in the four thousand nobles of the country who had a short time before voluntarily thrown off their mantles of despotic local power. . . .

"It is a land of paradoxes and anomalies. Thirty years ago everything seemed to Sir Rutherford Alcock, the British minister who spent three years of danger in the country, to be in reversed order. The people wrote from top to bottom, from right to left, in perpendicular instead of horizontal lines, while their books began where ours end. Their locks, though imitated from Europe, were all made to lock by turning the key from right to left. The old men flew kites while the children looked on; the carpenter used his plane by drawing it to him; the tailors stitched from them; the horses were mounted from the off side and stood in the stables with their heads where we would place their tails. The ladies blacked their teeth instead of keeping them white, and then as now, the sexes mixed freely in public bath houses without a thought of immodesty, but piled on clothing when they went into the street. And to-day the natural habits of the people are in constant and amusing contrast with the national and western ideas of the time.

"They are, as already stated, wonderfully adept at imitation, and if at all possible will never allow a foreigner to excel in anything. Indeed the only possible explanation of the great revolution is that the nobles saw the superiority of the foreign systems and practices and made a sudden resolve not to let that superiority be felt or known. In the early days of the English legation a lacquer ware man was given some spurs, curb chains, and stereoscope cases for repair, and finally a lock was given him to fix on a box. He had never seen such things before, but some time after the necessary work had been done it was discovered by the merest accident that many of the articles returned were counterfeits and the lock and key imitations! Corkscrews, glass shades, and other things were easily and quickly copied.

"Another curious feature in their character which seems to have largely disappeared under new conditions was the tendency to act as spies and the entire absence of any consideration of dishonor in such a position. Everybody from the Tycoon down was watched, and watched some one else in turn. When the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine arrived upon his mission they could not understand who was watching him! No one in his suite seemed to have note books for that particular purpose, and there was certainly no one specially appointed, as would have been the case with them. So, seeing the double name in his signature, the conclusion was come to that the Kincardine, who seemed to be nowhere visible, was in some way 'keeping his eye on Elgin.'

"It would be hard to say just what the present religion of the Japanese is. There are all kinds of sects, Buddhism probably predominating. Since the Mikado renounced his infallible and sacred character considerable looseness in religious thought or superstition prevails—leaving, of course, all the more room for the advance of Christianity. The temples are very simple structures, the chief internal feature in many of them being a looking glass, supposed to be emblematic of the soul's purity. Near it is a font containing water. In this the worshiper washes, then proceeds to the looking glass and prays for what he wants, and after leaving a few coppers in a box near by, rings a bell at the door thrice as he goes out. . . .

"The empire may therefore be said to have fairly established itself and the people to have earned the reputation of being the most remarkable nation in Asia. What may be ahead of them in the way of development or misfortune no one can predict, but whatever it is they have given to Asia a beacon light of civilization from which much should be learned. Within twenty-five years they have achieved what European peoples have taken centuries to do. The monarch has thrown away his imperial robe of seclusion and the halo of religious veneration which were his by right of two thousand years of precedent and power. The feudal system and oppressive oligarchy have been swept away in favor of a free government and a foreign scheme of rule. The once hated foreigners are given ample freedom, welcome, and even employment. Where the shores once bristled with dangers to navigation, lighthouses are now everywhere established. In the capital where the British minister twice nearly lost his life, twelve foreign powers are now represented. Where the highway of Yeddo once threatened him with death, the foreigner now rides his bicycle, with the whistle of the locomotive in the distance, and the sound of the telegraph operator at given intervals.

"Well, therefore, have the Japanese earned the right to call themselves a progressive people and to speak of 'new Japan, the land of the Rising Sun.' And whether right or wrong in the present war, whether finally victorious or defeated, we cannot but hope that they may remain a light in the Eastern sky until the day of a final and better dispensation dawns upon the nations of Asia."—Literary Digest.

A PLEA FROM ONE WHO IS BLIND.

To my many friends, and those who sympathize with one who cannot see, I desire to state that because of the loss of property and also my eyesight, I have concluded to make this request of all who can afford it, to send forty cents for one box of my toilet soap, or twenty-five cents for one bottle of my great crystal cement with printed directions accompanying each bottle, both of which are very useful articles, and highly recommended by hundreds of the Saints and those who have used them in the past.

The object I have in view is to build me a little house that I may avoid paying rent. I could make a living if I could stop house rent. I am not asking charity, but simply ask patronage of those who may deem me worthy of the same. I hope that each one who shall read this will carefully consider the matter and decide to send in your order at once to J. H. McMullin, Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, and it will be promptly forwarded, postage prepaid. United States stamps or post office money order taken.

J. H. McMULLIN.

[BRO. McMULLIN is an energetic toiler, who, by selling his wares, earns a living for himself and family, preferring to so do, rather than cast himself upon the church for support. He is deserving of all he asks in the above plea, and those who respond will encourage a laudable ambition in one who labors under terrible disadvantage.—Ed.]

CHANGE OF FEELING.

THE Deseret News of Salt Lake City, for February 1 has an editorial note stating that Elder William G. Patrick, of the Utah Church, returning from a mission in the Southern States, reports that there has been an entire change of feeling toward the elders since the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple, mob violence having become a thing of the past.

The News attributes this reported change to the wrong source; the change of sentiment in the States, either north or south, wherever it has occurred, is not traceable to the dedication of the temple at Salt Lake City, but to the belief based upon report, that the Utah Church has abandoned the dogma and practice of plural marriage. The public and reiterated statements made by President Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, and others, that the church had renounced the practice, and would submit to and observe the laws of the nation on the subject of the domestic relation, are being accepted in good faith outside of Utah, and it would be just as well that our Utah friends do not mistake the fact, and build a false theory to suit their convenience about it.

PROBATION AFTER DEATH.

THE following has been lying on our scrap pile for some time waiting editorial leisure, or the spirit to write to give it notice. The contest over the subject written of having broken out anew, this time at Denver, the time is opportune for the HERALD readers to see how the Missionary Board disposes of the responsibility of deciding the mooted question. As it has been for a good many years, so it is now, church conservatism fearing for the creed and denominational unity dodges the issue and leaves the door open to heresy, if the individual conscience dares to determine it.

HELL AND THE HEATHEN.

The Congregational board of missions has voted by a large majority in favor of offering to the Rev. Mr. Noyes an appointment as missionary to Japan, but at the same time it has taken the precaution of avoiding any responsibility for the doctrine of future probation, which has been the sole cause of the discussion concerning his fitness to teach religion and theology to the Japanese.

Mr. Noyes thinks that the doctrine of the damnation of the Heathen because they do not believe in Christ is grossly inconsistent with divine justice. He resents such treatment of them as unfair, asking how can they be culpable for not believing the gospel when they are ignorant of it? The thought that the vast majority of mankind now and in all times past were doomed to everlasting torment by the Divine Master before all time is revolting to him. He is not made of the stuff which enabled Jonathan Edwards to rejoice in the conviction that thus the justice of the Supreme Ruler would be satisfied and vindicated. The more general the torture the more the absolute power of God is displayed, he argued, and hence the more terrible the wholesome fear of the wrath to come. If hell were not so horrible the disobedience to the will of God would be greater, he thought. People in his congregations fainted when he pictured the horrors of the lake of fire and solemnly declared the probability that some of them would be undergoing its tortures before another day. Whether a million or a million million people went to hell seemed to him of insignificance as compared with the necessity of the logical execution of the Divine will.

Mr. Noyes cannot stomach that doctrine, though it is a legitimate conclusion of Calvinism. At any rate he thinks the Heathen should be excluded from its operation. Hence his tenderness has suggested that because they do not know of Christ here they will have the chance to learn of him hereafter through heavenly instruction.

If this theory be sound, says Charles A. Dana, of course the motive for efforts to convert the Heathen to Christ on earth is destroyed. The propagation of the Christian faith among them by human missionaries is not necessary to their salvation if in a future probation they will learn heavenly doctrine from angelic teachers; and hence there is no longer any imperative need of a missionary society. It may serve the ends of temporal philanthropy and infuse a better spirit into heathen civilization, but it is not essential to save the Heathen from everlasting damnation, and only belief in that necessity has induced the self-sacrifice which has expressed itself in the construction and organization of a vast missionary machinery and the enormous contributions of money and religious zeal for its maintenance.

If then the view of Mr. Noyes becomes generally accepted the time will have come when the Congregational mission board may as well begin to wind up its affairs. Undoubtedly it can last for a considerable time yet, going ahead with the momentum it already has, but when the congregations are finally imbued with the conviction that the Heathen will not be in any danger of going to hell, even if unconverted to Christianity in this life, the sources of the supply of money and zeal for missionary enterprises will dry up. Accordingly this board accepts Mr. Noyes, but dodges responsibility for his doctrine. He is to be allowed to teach the Heathen that they will have a future probation, but the organization which sends him to Japan will not take the risk of teaching the doctrine to Christians.

It may be that Christians do not need that the doctrine should be preached to them; but it is fairly certain that the churches do, and equally certain that the average pastor either has no conviction upon the point, or has not the courage of his conviction. The doctrine that there is to be a chance for the Heathen hereafter, who do not in this life hear of Christ, his gospel, and his salvation, is in the spiritual atmosphere; and will not out at command of synod or presbytery, vestrymen or missionary boards. It has been started on its evangelizing work by a higher power, and in accord with divine writ will not return to him who authorized it void. The ministry of the divinely instituted church to whom the doctrine is familiar will not be the ones to say that its course should be stayed, and will risk the issue of a charge for heresy if it be made against them, for they trust him who has said to the anointed One, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance."

If the gentleman of whom Bro. F. Tubb wrote in a late letter to the HERALD is correct, and London pulpits are being made the mediums whence the mercy of God to all, through Christ, is being sounded as an onward rushing wave of religious thought rising from the teaching of Bro. Tubb, his associates, and his predecessor brethren, it may easily be taken for granted that in America the burdens of the angel's message are also being heralded, though it may possibly be from pulpits openly denied to a chosen ministry, and in churches closed to the freedom of gospel themes—the doctrines of Jesus.

“Let the good work go on.” Keep the themes of salvation before the world. Encourage those whose convictions lead them to the field. Set our hearts and faces Zionward, remembering that he that “endureth to the end” is he that is saved. “Proclaim liberty to all the world,” and salvation for the Heathen, in the own due time of the Lord.

We sincerely trust that Dr. Noyes will staunchly stand for the doctrine of the equal justice of God to all mankind, though the Board of Missions which sends him may not have the courage to say, The Heathen may receive salvation through Jesus in a probation after death.

It is one of the privileges of the teacher to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the other officers of the branch; and in the discharge of this duty of taking the lead he may “teach, exhort, expound, and invite all to come to Christ.”

This is in effect preaching, or so close to it that it would be out of the province of a court of elders, to tell the difference; hence we conclude that a teacher may preach.

The language of the eleventh paragraph of section seventeen, Doctrine and Covenants, is very much like that of paragraph eight, defining the duty of the elders; and we see no good reason for believing that the teacher may not preach, when occasion seems to require.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. L. L. WIGHT, from Beeville, Texas, the 15th inst.:—

Such a snowstorm as we have had in the last two days has never been known in Texas—six inches on a level, in many places drifted to a depth of seven and eight feet. This is in the extreme southern part of Texas. Men and women raised here never saw the ground white with snow. Imagine the excitement! They would have looked upon one with suspicion had he told them the like sometimes happened in Iowa! A new gospel, a new kind of winter, all come pouring down at once. I fear they will become superstitious.

Bro. W. H. Kelley, of New Albany,

Indiana, wrote as follows, the 13th inst.:—

Some time ago I wrote that I had baptized, as I thought, the oldest person ever baptized into the church, but have since baptized the lady's husband, who is four months older,—born May 22, 1811. I also baptized a Mrs. Keithly, who was the most prominent lady in the M. E. Church where she lives, after she heard two sermons. While at dinner she was wrapped in vision, and was told what to do. It was not a dream, but an open vision. She sent for me and then notified all her friends of her determination. I baptized her and two others, the people coming from quite a distance to witness the rite. O, I did rejoice that I was a Latter Day Saint. She told the people it was the happiest day of her life.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser, Cleveland, Ohio, February 14:—

By direction of Bro. Griffiths I have recently done service at Jeannette, Pennsylvania, where a few are very busy deciding whether to remain out or come in. Pleasant days were spent at Pittsburg with that band of noble Saints. Bro. Griffiths was there, tried sorely by the recent loss of bright boys; but his faith is still in the ascending scale. Tried and true, he will labor on, supported bravely by his noble wife. Am in Cleveland, seconding the efforts that have preceded. A noble few here try to keep the gospel unfurled.

Bro. Henry Sparling, writing from Burnham, Missouri, February 14:—

Weather cold and schoolhouses poorly fixed, is the cause of my being at home, though I am preaching at private houses, trying to build up the Saints. The late frosts have destroyed the greater part of the peach crop here, and many are discouraged. There is a great deal of suffering, much stock dying. Last year the crops were poor and the Saints are feeling the hard times with the rest of mankind; still some have done well with tithing, and others had the will but not the means. Bro. Ward and writer are contemplating coming to General Conference, but stand a fair show to walk. I see in Ensign the committee has set the price of board at $3 per week. I would like to know if there is any proviso for elders that don't happen to have the $3; for $5 will exceed the amount in cash that I have received for traveling expenses for the year. I hope the committee will have a special clause inserted to cover such cases.

Bro. Emsley Curtis, writing from Springerton, Illinois, February 15:—

District conference passed pleasantly. The Campbellite brethren here started to hold a protracted effort with us, but gave it up on Wednesday night. We have had full to crowded houses all the time, seemingly the interest was never better than now. So far we have had good liberty in the presentation of the word. Eighteen months ago this branch numbered fifty-six, now one hundred and one. This is in fulfillment of a statement made by the Spirit. The work is in a prosperous condition throughout the district so far as I know. Bro. T. C. Kelley held a successful discussion at Tunnel Hill with the Baptists, and now arrangements are being made between him and Rev. W. J. Moore, whom I met last September at Wallpole. They expect to hold it about March 15.

Bro. Hubert Case, from Papeete, Tahiti, January 15, 1895:—

We expect to go from here this week to some of the other isles to join Bro. and Sr. Devore. Bro. and Sr. Burton are here yet and expect to stay until February 12, when they leave us for their home and mission in California. They are both liked by the natives, and in fact by all the Saints here. The natives would like them to remain in this mission, but of course that is impossible under the circumstances. Bro. Burton has done us much good in the boat affairs which we hope now to be settled. Bro. Gilbert is a zealous worker in the cause. He has greatly aided us in thus far learning the language. We think as does he that we are getting along nicely and hope to soon begin our work of teaching. We are much pleased with the mission so far, but have not been to any other island yet. We are feeling well in body as well as in spirit, and feel that the Lord has truly cared for and blessed us all. The natives are childlike, very teachable, and desiring to learn. They take much pleasure in talking to us, and when we say a few words to them they are much delighted.

Bro. E. W. Nunley, from Cook's Point, Texas:—

It is the coldest weather I ever saw in Texas, and has been for some time past. There are many detriments to the good cause in Texas not in many sections. Our State is made up of all nations nearly, and every State in the union is represented, all kinds and classes, and all religions. The people are prejudiced. We cannot get to preach in many places, and where we can are far apart. Our own people are scattered, and as a rule are weak having much opposition to contend against. It is difficult to keep up branch organization in many places, because of the members moving from one place to another. Notwithstanding the drawbacks, we have some good Saints in Texas, who discharge their duty and by the help of God we are moving along still hoping for the better. I learn that Bro. Cutler, of East Texas, is doing good work in that section.

Of the White-Braden and the Chatburn-Clark debates we have this from Bro. C. R. Duncan, dated Virgil City, Missouri, February 19:—

Your readers will all no doubt be interested to learn of the outcome of the White-Braden debate. One almost hesitates to write up the facts in the case for fear it will sound too loud. In many ways this debate was very important; probably as much so as any ever held by the church. The victory was complete. Braden, with all his cunning craftiness could not stand before the avalanche of truth hurled at him by our “cyclone” debater. The tide of public opinion is turned our way, and no doubt our cause will move forward at El Dorado, if the Saints live humble and faithful. While all rejoice over the grand victory, they recognize in it the hand of God, and to him be all the glory and praise. The Chatburn-Clark debate began here last night. Bro. T. W. is in good trim and started out well. Will send particulars of both debates as soon as I can write them.

Bro. W. H. Kephart, from Brush Creek, Iowa, February 12:—

I came here January 26 from Grove Hill, where I preached a few sermons at the Orin Center schoolhouse. I found the Saints feeling and doing well, having cut loose from the Union Sunday school and organized a Saints' school with thirty scholars enrolled and a prayer meeting of their own. They have been treated with contempt by the Free Methodist preacher, who told them plainly that he had no sympathy with the Saints, and the Saints have wisely said, "We will come out from among them." I have been preaching here since I came, to a good congregation, and with the best of attention.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE editor returned from Council Bluffs, Iowa, February 20, after assisting Brn. A. H. Smith and T. W. Williams, during the closing week of a four weeks' series of meetings held in the chapel there. Bro. Williams baptized seven on the afternoon of Sunday the 17th. The attendance was good throughout the session, and the attention could not well be better. It was quite intense, and interested. The brethren feel well as to the result. The work being done by Bro. T. W. Williams at Council Bluffs is having most gratifying results. Bro. F. A. Smith is to have charge at Omaha; and it is expected that the work there will proceed harmoniously under the impetus given it from the Williams-Savidge debate. Certainly the editor has not preached at Omaha, for the last twenty years, when so good a spirit prevailed as on the morning of the 17th of February, during the visit and effort at Council Bluffs. We pray it may continue.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Galena, Indiana, reports "fair crowds and good liberty" at the Byrneville branch lately.

Bro. John H. Lake, from Appledore, Ontario, February 6, reports heavy snows, but the work is being urged on as energetically as possible. R. C. Evans had baptized some since his debate with Kepper at Selkirk. Bro. Lake had held some meetings in Zone and Wabash branches, and had appointments at Appledore for three meetings, at writing. It was rumored that Joseph Musser, a priest, at Gladwin, Michigan, had renounced the faith, and proposed to prove it a delusion, etc. Bro. Lake seems to think that if the turning away from the faith by some (few or many) necessarily makes that faith false, there is, cannot be, any true faith on the earth. We shall await further advices on the matter.

Srs. Alvira Vernon and Sarah Arbaugh, Hemlock, Ohio, request prayer; the former for strength in duty, the latter for help in bereavment—the loss of husband and entire care of her family. These sisters report the worth of prayer, and activity in the mothers' and other meetings.

Bro. George Barrett, writing from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, makes a plea for the church publications—that they be circulated in every family of the Saints and sustained financially.

Bro. L. G. Gurwell gets after one William Kirby, in the Troy, Kansas, Chief of the 7th inst. Mr. Kirby had resumed lectures against the faith, hence the public card referred to. Bro. A. L. Gurwell reports the Fanning branch united and blessed in its work. The Saints of Fanning have built a house of worship.

Bro. G. F. Barraclough orders tracts for distribution at Eagle Mills, Sherman, Texas. Four of our people reside there. Bro. J. D. Erwin was expected on the 20th to begin work among a population of thirteen thousand.

Bro. A. M. Fyrando, of Magnolia, Iowa, replies to criticisms on the faith made in a local pulpit,—in a late issue of the Logan Observer. The reply made many friends he says. Our people are becoming more and more alert. That is right; an attack on the faith furnishes opportunity to make it more widely known.

Bro. H. E. Moler wrote from Haulp, West Virginia, February 18. He had been laboring in the Mountain State since January 16, in Calhoun county, also in the vicinity of the Fairview branch. Had baptized four. Bro. G. H. Godby had joined him on the 13th. The latter had baptized three. They were to labor jointly for a time. Bro. D. L. Shinn was to meet a Disciple minister—Ira C. Moore—in discussion. Bro. Moler reports much work to do and much destitution among the people, especially those who have not been industrious. He would return to Ohio in March.

Sr. S. Jasperson, writing from Independence, Oregon, the 16th inst., bears witness to answers to prayer in healing and other blessings. She unites with the increasing numbers of those who have personal evidence that the Father above has sympathy for his children in affliction and comforts with healings, with peace, with strength and resignation to bear what is necessary to be borne. Some are healed, some are not healed; but all are remembered, and compensated, and fitted for present or future service as they trustingly endure and have faith in God in trial, in affliction; knowing that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Sr. Abbie Rounds furnishes further news from Ozark, Missouri. Some were baptized, others promise to be when a branch is organized. Bro. J. R. Wedlock preaches on Sundays.

The El Dorado Mascot has some striking original notes on the White-Braden discussion. We await a fuller report before attempting to publish a statement of it.

Bro. R. M. Maloney was to be at Union Grove, Oklahoma, February 12 to 17, and would go thence to Snyder, thence on to Keighley, Kansas, until March 7; thence to Webb City, Missouri, to attend conference of the Spring River district. He says: "This field becomes more interesting the longer I remain. No doubt a good work will be done here next year by those appointed."

Bro. B. W. Pack has been laboring in the region of country adjacent to Sacramento, California. He has baptized some, and has numerous calls for preaching. He exhorts the local ministry to activity.

Sunday schools and district associations can obtain new and improved blank forms—four in all—as follows: For reports of schools to districts; for districts to General Association; credentials of delegates to district associations; credentials from districts to General Association. On sale at Herald Office, each ten cents per dozen.

Bro. T. J. Martin, from Minneapolis, Minnesota, February 13, reports the labors of himself and Brn. Swenson and P. W. Premo, as having been productive of great good at Girard, where Bro. Swenson baptized one; and at Detroit, Lakeview, Cormorant, Audubon, Friberg, Clitherall, and Minneapolis. Bro. Premo baptized two. Northern Minnesota conference held at Luce.

An extra supply of letters this week. We make notes of a number—the best we can do.

Bro. E. M. Wildermuth was at Valley Junction, Wisconsin, the 19th, suffering from lagrippe but preparing for labor.

Bro. John Weaver reports an applicant for baptism, an opportunity to do good, and a home for the traveling elder at Layton, Utah.

We have received about a dozen newspaper clippings from papers published near Norwalk, Connecticut, from which it appears that Bro. A. H. Parsons had been preaching and baptizing, to the disquiet of some of the local churches, and had been attacked from one of their pulpits. It also appears that while Bro. Parsons was denied further use of schoolhouse or church, "the church troubles at Broad River, which have caused widespread comment, have now reached a climax by George W. Mills offering to donate land for a chapel for those interested in the Latter Day Saint faith."—Local paper. We notice that others are standing by Bro. Parsons, hence conclude that the people are being awakened to hear his message and that things are moving aright.

Pres. Joseph Smith arrived home from Council Bluffs the week of the 17th and Bro. Heman C. Smith from the South during the preceding week. Bishop Kelley went to St. Louis on the 21st inst.

Sr. Amelia Self, Bennett, Nebraska, to whom we referred in a late item as one who with others sought to teach the word as occasion permitted, thinks we said too much for her. She feels the need of being taught.

Amigration society has been formed in Chicago for the purpose of aiding homeseekers by furnishing reliable information concerning boomed and other lands. Branches are being formed in other cities.

National House and Senate committees have reported a resolution providing for appointment of commissioners to act with Canadian commissioners in providing for a deep waterway for ocean vessels to connect the Atlantic Ocean with the Great Lakes.

Sr. Myra G. Steele, Cranberry Isles, Maine, writes of cheering prospects for additions to the church there, because Bro. J. C. Foss had succeeded in interesting the people by his preaching. She longs for larger association in the bonds of the covenant, and labors to extend the truth with that end in view. There is not completeness of life, of entire congeniality and assimilation of spirit without the gospel; for in it is the "life and the light of men." It is not strange that Saints do not find other associations entirely satisfying; that they desire others to know its comfort, its peace.

Brn. Joseph and Heman C. Smith addressed the Lamoni Saints on Sunday the 24th. Bro. J. R. Lambert preached at Leon, the county seat, on that date.

Sr. M. A. Sylvester, of Omaha, Nebraska, asks prayer in her interest. She is afflicted, but desires that her life be prolonged.

Brn. R. W. Davis and A. M. Baker had been laboring at Weir City, Kansas, in February. They were to continue at points near by.

Bro. Henry Winship and family report an opening at Crenshaw, Pennsylvania, in a union church, also a home for an elder with them. Who can respond?

Battle Creek Adventists in General Conference decided to sell their South Sea Islands missionary vessel Pitcairn and obtain a larger one.

While Milwaukee ministers were discussing the question of separate, individual communion cups one of their number advocated the use of a wine-laden wafer.

Eighty persons died in London during the recent cold spell, whose deaths were caused by the extreme weather. Many lives were lost in Northern and Central Europe. Wild animals and birds perished in great numbers because unable to procure water.

Anarchists have threatened to assassinate Czar Nicholas.

Fred Douglass, the noted freedman, orator, and diplomat died at Washington, D. C., February 20.

The German Reichstag has passed a bill repealing the act by which the Jesuits were expelled from the empire, in force since 1872. The Bundesrath is not expected to sanction the repeal.

A STUDY OF CHILD-NATURE.

THE INSTINCT OF IMITATION, OR THE TRAINING OF THE FAITH.

FROEBEL, believing as he himself expresses it, that "these first impressions are the root fibres of the child's understanding which is developed later," calls the mother's attention to this early interest in moving things manifested by the child, and tells her that by aiding his attempt to imitate the movements of external objects, like the weathervane, she helps him to understand them, and to know that as an unseen force in him turns his hand so an unseen force must turn the attractive weathervane. This knowledge Froebel would have her aid by word and song; for long before a baby can distinguish words, much less understand them, he gains impressions of his mother's meaning by repeated association of word and act. That the little thinker does see that like effects are produced by like causes, is evident to anyone who has made a study of children. The lisping two-year-old baby in the family of a friend of mine was taught by the older children to solemnly bow his head up and down several times to each person present, when he was brought into the breakfast room, and to attempt to say: "How do you do?" with each ceremonious bending of the little head. The effect was absurdly droll to the other children, who with like solemnity would slowly and repeatedly return the salutation. One breezy morning he chanced to be left alone upon the veranda. The branches of the maple tree in front of the house were slowly swaying up and down, and soon attracted his attention. With puzzled interest he watched them for a short time; then a light broke over his face, and he began to bow his head in like manner, and to say, "How-do! How-do!" He had logically and to his satisfaction solved the mystery; the outside world was giving him a morning greeting. Another friend was walking along a street in a city with her child of three years. As they approached a railway crossing an engine passed. "Mamma," said the child, "what makes the engine go so fast?" The mother explained, as well as she could, that it was the steam inside of it which caused its rapid motion, and asked him if he did not see the clouds of white steam coming out of the top of the smoke-stack. After walking a block or two farther, a girl ran swiftly across the street; the little investigator looked up questioningly into the mother's face, and said, "Mamma, I didn't see any white steam coming out of the little girl's head,"—inferring that if steam caused one thing to pass rapidly across his path, it must cause another like rapid motion. That children's minds attempt to work logically, needs no other proof than to watch their grammatical errors, two-thirds of which are attempts to make their native tongue logical.

In the childhood of the world, when men tried to express their ideas of God, the first characteristic recognized and represented was power. So, too, we see that the child's first recognition of the unseen is ordinarily the force of the wind. With what delight do all children, when out on a windy day, test this manifestation! "See!" exclaimed a little child, "the wind can make everything do as it likes. Where does it come from?" Each mother has had like questions put to her. "Mamma, what makes the smoke go up?" "Mamma, what makes the trees grow?" Thoughtful, indeed, should be the answer given, for it is the searching of the young soul after the unseen power. Then is the mother's best opportunity for developing a reverence for the Great Unseen, bearing in mind always that increased reverence is increased capacity for religion. So great and manifold are the opportunities afforded by nature for such lessons, that the home and the kindergarten should bring as much of the outdoor life as they can to the town-imprisoned child. Right education, in the largest sense of the word, cannot go on unless that great teacher, Dame Nature, is employed with her gloriously illuminated textbooks of field and forest, of sea and sky. From her the child should learn its cradle-hymn of whispering breeze, its nursery song of running brooks, its childhood's chant from throat of bird and hum of bees, in order that maturer life may catch the grander, fuller harmonies which can come only to well-developed, reverent natures who are ready to worship God in truth. The study of history shows us that the battle is not always to the strong nor the race unto the swift. In olden times the forms of gods and goddesses were seen to fight first upon this side and then upon that. Old Homer tells us that "The shout of Juno filled the Greeks with courage, and caused dismay to spread throughout the Trojan ranks." Through all history an invisible power has been felt, working for victory or defeat, until in our own times a Frederick Douglass could exclaim: "One with God is majority!" We scarcely need to turn to Scripture, the climax of whose revelation is summed up in these words: "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

In speaking of social contact with others, Froebel says: "There is something else which early awakens in your child a respect for goodness, and a feeling of emulation and aspiration to attain unto goodness,—that is to say, to be good. These feelings are aroused in him, not by the respect and acknowledgment which you show to goodness in the abstract, but by the amount which you show to goodness in others around you; every sign of respect shown to others, which appears to the child just and merited, and above all attainable by effort, spurs him on by awakening a generous emulation." The standard of character which the child will strive to attain to will be that of the people whom he meets in his home. Let the child see that in dress it is the suitability, both as to occasion and size of purse, rather than the beauty or richness of material, which is to be emphasized. In gifts, let it be the pleasure given, instead of the price of the present, which is mentioned. In charities, let it be the childish effort to do and to give, rather than any sum of money given by the parent in the child's name. In school work, let it be the effort put forth and the real mastery of the point in hand, rather than the per cent gained, which is praised. In science-lessons with a little child, such books as Hooker's "Child's Book of Nature" are of inestimable value. Not only are the facts told, but that wonderful side of science which is beyond all explanation is always present. In story-telling, avoid moralizing, but emphasize the invisible power instead of the visible manifestation. Let me illustrate with a story always a favorite in my own kindergarten:—

Once upon a time, in the middle of a small village, by the side of the great ocean, there stood a little stone church; on the top of the church stood a tall spire; on the top of the spire stood a gilded weathervane. Most of the men of the village earned a living for themselves and their wives and little ones by going out in sail-boats to the deep waters of the sea, and catching fish, which they took to a neighboring city and sold for money. Each morning these fishermen would come out of their huts, and shading their eyes from the bright sun, would look up at the gilded weathervane on the tall steeple of the little stone church. If it turned towards the sea, they knew that the wind was favorable and would fill their sails, and would help them to get out to the deep water where there was good fishing. If, however, the weathervane turned towards the land, they knew that the mighty wind was blowing away from the ocean, and that it would be useless to try to get out that day. So they would turn their boats upside down and stop up the leaks which had begun to let in the water, or they would otherwise occupy themselves on land until the wind changed. The little gilded weathervane noticed that each day the fishermen looked up to him to see whether he pointed out to the sea or in towards the land, and that they seemed to obey his slightest direction; so he began to feel that he was the most important thing in the village. Therefore, one night when the great wind came rushing down from the high mountain-tops and over the hills and plains, and reached the little weathervane, it said, in a deep, strong whisper, "Turn, turn to the sea." "No," said the little weathervane, "I am not going to mind you any longer. I am the most important thing in this village; why should I mind you? I shall turn which way I please." The great strong wind blew stronger still; there came a crackling, snapping noise, and in a moment more the little gilded weathervane was lying broken on the ground below, and the mighty wind had swept far out on the ocean. The next morning when the fishermen came out, they looked as usual to the top of the church spire; but the little weathervane was gone. So then they looked at the boughs of the trees, and saw that they were all pointing towards the deep waters of the ocean. Then they got into their boats and went off to fish, and the foolish weathervane was left unnoticed on the ground."

As we never leave a story with a sad ending, because the effect upon the child is unwholesome, we usually add that the sexton came along by and by, and picked up the little weathervane, mended it as best he could, and after a few days put it on top of the steeple again, and that forever after the gilded weathervane was very glad to be of use by showing the fishermen which way the great wind was blowing. Here the story ends. No moral is pointed out. The invisible soul within such stories, which has caused them to be handed down from generation to generation, will speak of itself to the child in the exact degree that he is ready to comprehend it, and will make him feel that the great invisible cause is more than any special manifestation, no matter how prominent. In a dim way at first, it will show him that the importance of any life comes not from its prominence, but from its usefulness. Such truths are life's great lessons, and it lies in our power to give them to the child.

The problem before every earnest mother is how to so train her child that the unseen things in life shall be as real to him as the seen. First of all she must fill herself with this truth, must be satisfied with no line of study or of thought which deals simply with the external facts. If she is studying history, it must be to her not a mere compilation of dates, of kings and conquests. "Of what significance to me," exclaimed Carlyle, "are the births, marriages, and deaths of a few petty mortals who chanced to be called kings and queens!" And truly, what is the significance, unless we seek to see the slow dawn of freedom in the rise and fall of nations,—a spiritual gain in the struggling steps of the race forward? Is literature to be studied for the sake of the beauty of style of this writer, or of the polished diction of that one? Why have the great books of the world lived, while thousands of rival productions have sunk into oblivion? Has it not been because giant brains have lived and labored amidst their puny contemporaries, striving to portray Truth so that the dark labyrinth of life might seem less dark to some poor soul? Why is Homer still the world's great poet? Not from beauty of expression, not from tenderness of thought, not from power of imagery. Many have equaled and surpassed him in these respects; but who has given to us, so powerfully as he, the great Soul struggling against the restrictions of authority? Who has so well portrayed the pitifulness of uselessness, of all great Achilles sulking in their tents, even if their own followers are around them, when greater and more universal causes are calling them? Mighty indeed are the lessons which the old bard has taught us. So it is with every other great book; it is not its form but its soul which has made it immortal. It is not the establishment of the Roman Catholic doctrine of hell, purgatory, and paradise; not the fierce punishment of his enemies, not even his fiery imagery, which has made Dante the shrine at which great hearts still worship. It is rather the awfulness of sin, the mighty struggle out of sin, the glory of the redeemed, pictured with such grandeur and majesty that the human soul which has approached the magnificent temple of the Divine Comedy feels that it has renewed its own dignity and worth. Why is it that a Carlyle cries out to the souls struggling in the hell of materialism, "Close thy Byron, open thy Goethe"? Has Goethe the literary polish and beauty of style of Lord Byron? Is it not that his strange and unsurpassed creation of a Faust has proclaimed that all the culture and erudition, all indulgence, all activities, cannot make life desirable until the great secret of living for others has been discovered? How much grander and more helpful becomes mythology when we cease to study it as a source of certain facts which every cultivated person should know, and begin to realize that it is the far-off voice of nations calling after God? Of what use are the stories of the labors of Hercules, of the wings of Mercury, of the transforming powers of Circe, or a hundred other tales of a childish race, save that we see portrayed in them the dim feeling of the human heart that man must become the master of creation, must control the forces of nature and make them serve him, must be able to transfer himself with little hindrance from place to place,—aye, must govern his appetites or become beastly; in a word, that the God-element must conquer all the material outer world! Such truths are of value, though put by the child-race in such crude form; they are the more serviceable to the mother from the fact that they are expressed in simple, mythical shape, as the child-mind is better able to grasp truth in its poetic than in its abstract form. With thorough preparation within herself, any mother will naturally and almost without effort lead her child to value what she has learned to value. Mothers who are deprived of the general culture which books bring, can yet keep alive in their hearts the intense realization of the all-importance of the unseen side of life; they can seek real people for their friends. Over and above all other avenues of inspiration they can keep their religion far beyond its mere external, visible side. They can make it the sweet and holy impulse from within which shall control the inmost thought as well as the outmost act. They can make their lives such that religion is to them not the mere going to church, the reading of the Bible, the performance of any religious duty, but that nearness to God which renders all these things a joy. Not until the mother has reached this state is she ready to lead her child beyond the petty temporal things of life, into a realization of the great and everlasting things. Truly her office is priestly, and great is the reward—the greatest on earth. "A life gift" Froebel calls this work of hers for her child; and well may it be so called. Let her once teach him to see the difference between the great and little things of life, and she has placed him where no outside storms can trouble his serenity, where no sickness nor poverty nor lack of success nor lack of popularity can give him one inward pang. He is master of his own life. The petty aims of shallow people do not divert him from his great purpose, and the world exclaims, "Truly a great soul! Let us draw near and gain strength from it!"

Does any mother-heart crave more recompense than this?

NAIU ISLAND, Oceanica,
Nov. 8, 1894.

Editors Herald:—As the work moves on, I feel it would not be amiss to report our status now and then that you may learn of the work being done in behalf of the cause in this mission. To hear often from the missionary force here individually is out of the question, but I will say that so far as I have been able to learn they are all at work. From the Tahitian division conference held October 6 on Kaukura Island, my wife and I came here and have been here up to the present. I have been assisting the secretary of the mission to get the records in as good shape as we are able to do at present, and by and by we hope to forward a list of the membership entire, so far as it is possible to obtain particulars; but, after all, it will be incomplete, because some of the branch clerks have failed to keep a correct record.

The work done by Sr. Devore in the Sunday school cause has entirely revolutionized this school and placed it in a position far in advance of its former standing. They have been awakened to understand the design or main object of the Sunday school; viz., to teach and lead the children into the truth and the church. When we came we found the children had been and were still being greatly neglected, and it required quite an effort to get the officers to see their proper work and do the same toward the children. As she has the Sunday school work in charge, I left it in her hands to move forth as she might be led, and when my help was needed that I would aid what I could. She was somewhat discouraged at first over the condition of the school, but began holding teachers' schools, and by earnest endeavor overcame the obstacles which stood in the way at first, and by forming more classes and choosing suitable teachers, and her careful oversight over each class, the result is a school worthy of praise.

The choosing of one sister to take charge of a class composed of little girls gave new life to the whole school. The second Sabbath after she was chosen, Ella was standing behind her watching her manner of teaching. A vision passed before her, in which she saw those children marching two and two, and singing as on a celebration day. She afterward related the vision to me, but did not know how or when it would be fulfilled. Two weeks from that day I laid down to rest awhile, and during the time she was reading the Herald, and read concerning the "Children's Day" in Independence, the Spirit of inspiration rested upon her then, and showed her in what way to proceed to have a day of rejoicing and exercises for the school here. It would have to be done speedily, as we knew not when a vessel might call to take her to other isles. She laid her plans before me and asked if I could approve of and assist her in the undertaking, to which I assented. In the teachers' school that afternoon she told them what she desired to do. They had hitherto known nothing about such a thing, but after explaining the manner of procedure to them they seemed anxious to have it take place, and set the following Friday for the exercises to be carried out. It was a very short time in which to prepare for such a day; to divide the school into appropriate classes, from the little prattlers to the aged sires, and give each their portion to perform, the Bible alone the text book for all, save the various singing classes, and was no small undertaking; but there was no delay, and as soon as each one knew his or her work they began with earnestness to prepare to perform their part. In the evenings, and up to nine and ten o'clock, the various classes could be heard drilling. Some were to read from the Bible, others were to commit portions to memory, others to sing. On Thursday afternoon the various classes came before us in the little Niau church, that we might hear them recite, and we gave them still further instruction, also a drill in marching, after recitations were over, which they seemed to enjoy greatly. A beautiful banner was made without a yard of ribbon (because none to be had here) with the following printed on it: "Niau Haapii raa Tapati 1894," which is, in English, Niau Sabbath school. There were badges to make to designate the offices each held in the school and also the banner bearers—two young ladies. Sr. Devore made by request for each small scholar a beautiful star as a badge for them, placed in front above the heart.

All were in readiness by Friday morning. At an early hour all were up and preparing to go to the city, some three or four miles distant, where the church house was large and the streets wide. Five boat loads crossed the Niau lake, or lagoon, but as Sr. Devore and the writer wished to feel well, we took passage in a two wheeled cart, drawn by the only horse on the island, as seasickness would likely have overtaken us on the lake.

At 8:30 the bell was rung and all appeared in full dress, clean, and some very beautiful, in front of the church. A hymn was sung by the children standing in order, arranged by their teacher, a young native brother, followed by a prayer by L. R. Devore. The marching was controlled by Sr. Devore and two teachers. The banner bearers were in front, dressed in blue, with the superintendent, D. M. Pohemiti, and the oldest man present, one at the left, the other at the right. The little girls came next, all dressed in red; then followed the little boys clad in blue and white. After them the sisters dressed in white from youngest to oldest, then the men dressed in black and white. A native elder and the writer brought up the rear, bearing the French flag. After marching awhile on the beautiful grounds in the city, we repaired to the church. Then the exercises were continued by a hymn by the entire assembly, followed by a prayer by the superintendent, after which L. R. Devore addressed the assembly in the native tongue, on the design and object of the Sunday school.

For about three hours the exercises continued; every one took a part and acquitted himself honorably. There were three native elders; viz., Hiva, Tamai, and D. M. Pohemiti, who delivered addresses, which were good. Benediction by the oldest man present, after which privilege was given for anyone to state what he thought of the proceedings. Quite a number expressed their minds, approving of the work done, and the presence of the Spirit was sensibly felt, and they were able to see the utility and benefits to accrue from the Sunday school.

It is evident that Sr. Devore has found the key to reach the latent talents of many here; her method of conducting teachers' schools serves to reach the ability of all who participate, and various elders ask permission to attend them, as well as the Sunday school officers. When she goes to an island first, she finds them dark-minded, thinking they have not ability to do much; but she encourages them, and gently leads them step by step until they attain to quite a measure of confidence in themselves; and it is gratifying to note the progress they make in a short time. She has been traveling among various isles in the interest of the Sunday school for the last six months alone, and if the Lord will, will continue up to April conference.

I desire to go to Kaukura soon, while if the way opens, she will visit Tikahau, Makatea, and Rairoa before conference. We think we can accomplish more for the time being, to thus labor, as the missionary force is limited, and she needs no interpreter now. Our health is improving, and if the General Conference deems it wisdom to continue us here another year we shall try to do what we can, and by that time the late missionary force will have attained a sufficiency of the tongue to move out with effect.

The omens are brightening, indicative that this people have ability to "come up higher." A brother and sister in the church here were lately married by the Governor of the island. We were present at the feast, which would for style and beauty not fall far below many such occasions in America, while the ornaments attendant, made by native hands, from nature's own storehouse, would attract any eye for beauty. On the following Sabbath I married the same couple in the church.

I feel a great desire to have the work spread out, but hitherto we have been bound within certain limits. We still hope and pray. We have had no mail for over three months, hence know nothing of the happenings in the church, or the world. With much anxiety for the cause we love, I remain, as ever,

PORCUPINE, Wis., Feb. 15.

Editors Herald:—Having done no preaching for some time previous to Thanksgiving, it might be well to explain for the benefit of those concerned and who may not know the cause of my prolonged inactivity. Just before Thanksgiving Day I was attacked with severe pleurisy, which was followed by lung fever. The fever continued about two weeks, leaving the left lung so affected that I could neither read nor speak, for a time, without immediate distress and injury; in fact, it is only within the last few days that I have been able to read even a chapter in the Bible with ease. Under these circumstances it has been impossible for me to do anything in the ministry this winter. This is much to be regretted, as there has been an unsupplied demand for preachers in the State, and especially in this "north country." Bro. Curtis has done nobly, but has needed more help than he has had. Brn. A. L. Whiteaker and A. V. Closson are expected here soon.

I have attended two sacrament meetings and enjoyed evening prayer services, which were kindly held at residence of Sr. Patton, where I find a home. Expected to go to my home at Hallowell, Kansas, long before this, but have been unable to travel. If not unexpectedly hindered, will go home sometime next week.

The brethren had better send their quarterly reports ending February 28, directly to Bro. A. H. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

I feel thankful to God for the influences of his Spirit which I have enjoyed from time to time, but more especially of late. Long will I remember the kindness of the families of Mr. Hooker and Mr. Shaver. For long weary weeks they anticipated my wants and supplied them, while I was sick at Ono. I am similarly indebted to Sr. Patton and Bro. Will Edwards for care during sickness. I hope to be ready for missionary work again in a few weeks and be prepared to do more effective service than heretofore.

Yours faithfully,

W. S. PENDER.

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 16.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from a four weeks' trip through a portion of my mission field—Northern Illinois. On January 17 I went to Piper City in time for evening service and found the schoolhouse well filled with Saints and others who seemed anxious to learn of our doctrine. I preached with fair liberty each evening till the following Friday, including three sermons on Sunday. We had a variety of weather; first it was mud, then wind and snow, then bitter cold; but in spite of all these hindrances the people turned out in good numbers, listened with close attention, and seemed to accept what was presented as true, though none came forward in obedience. Piper City is about one hundred miles southwest of Chicago. The branch is located about four miles from the city. The members are mostly farmers and comfortably situated, and by a godly walk and conversation have earned for themselves and the church a reputation for good that makes it easy for the minister to declare the work to be of God. A good interest is manifest, and we were impressed that some will obey when sufficiently instructed.

From Piper we went to Peoria. Preached twice on Sunday and assisted in Sunday school and in their business meeting. We rejoiced to see the little branch, three months old, in fine working order, moving forward nicely. Last October they were organized with twelve members; they now number twenty-five, all apparently good members. In organizing, the matter of finance was not overlooked. Each member was requested to subscribe something per week—if ever so little to agree to pay something. This was done willingly, and as a result we found that this little band had purchased an organ, paid their hall rent, assisted their pastor quite liberally, and were out of debt; and I need hardly add, were alive in the work. My experience has been that where there is a branch of people who are liberal with their means there is a live branch, but where the members console themselves that the gospel costs them nothing, there is a dead branch. It is not what a person has, but what he puts to proper use that benefits him. If this principle were understood there would not be so many dead members. Bro. A. J. Keck makes a good pastor, judging from what the members say. He labors for Bro. Ordway through the week and serves the branch on Sunday and as opportunity offers. Bro. Ordway has been remarkably successful in business and has made for himself a good reputation. His heart is in the latter-day work, and though he works quietly, it is in a way that counts. It makes one rejoice to see such men prosper. All things considered, prospects for the work in Peoria are good.

From Peoria we drove into the country about ten miles and held four meetings in a schoolhouse at Orange Prairie. It was fearfully cold; the first two meetings were poorly attended, but a fine audience attended the third and fourth services. The people received the word gladly; some bore testimony to its truth. Sr. Epperson's family are the only Saints here, but they are good, substantial people whose influence is felt for good in the community. One daughter has been superintendent of the Union Sunday school there and is well received. It would have been a pleasure to have remained longer, but the Kewanee conference convening on Saturday made it necessary to defer further services. We have reason to believe that if the work is properly presented it will obtain a good foothold.

Conference at Kewanee passed off very pleasantly. This district is gaining ground. The local brethren as well as the general missionaries seem to be actively engaged, working together in a spirit of unity. Brn. E. E. Wheeler and M. T. Short are the two general missionaries in this district now. Both were present at conference. One indication of advancement is the fact that steps have now been taken to organize their Sunday schools into a district organization. Their next conference will be held at Peoria the 1st of June. Money for a gospel tent is secured and it is likely that the tent will be used for holding next conference.

We were glad to find Kewanee branch alive and active. A glance at the Bishop's agent's books reveals the secret of their active condition. They live for others as well as themselves. I never hear them boast about how little the gospel cost them, but they seem to take delight in giving where they can do good; and though comparatively poor people, the agent's record shows they are rich in good works. Our only regret is that Bro. Chisnall, their president, district president, and Bishop's agent, cannot get out in the district more, so as to instill the same business principles in the other branches as he has in his own. Another pleasing feature in the work at Kewanee is the activity among the young men. Several, I understand, are developing into good preachers. This is as it should be. What we need everywhere is good local preachers and pastors.

From here we came to Sandwich to attend our own conference. The weather was very cold, therefore many were prevented from attending. Our Sunday school convention was poorly attended, especially by members of the Sandwich school. Reports were received in good form from the different schools (thanks to our active and efficient secretary, Bro. Elma Johnson), and a profitable season enjoyed. We had a pleasant conference session. The prayer and preaching services were well attended and the good Spirit prevailed throughout. All the former officers were sustained. Conference adjourned to meet at Mission on the second Saturday in June. Preaching meetings were continued after conference, and if the interest keeps up it is proposed to continue them every night next week. I to return there to assist Bro. Roush, who is now conducting them while I minister to the branch here over Sunday. I wanted to say a few words in reference to our work in this city but my letter has already grown too long so will defer to a future time. I am feeling well in the work. May God continue to bless and sustain it.

In bonds,

F. G. PITT.

SYDNEY, Australia, Jan. 10.

Editors Herald:—Our annual district conference convened here the last Saturday and Sunday of December. The attendance was fair and all went pleasantly until the choosing of a place to hold the next conference was considered, when it was said that two branches (who have a majority delegate votes in district) had already settled the matter as to where the next conference should be held, by binding their delegates to vote for a certain place. This made some feel a little indignant to think the matter had been taken out of the hands of the conference and settled beforehand in branch business meeting; but all ended well, for the vote was taken in the ordinary way, the "yeas and nays" not being called.

Some may think the delegate system is faulty, but the fault was not in these branches appointing delegates, but in binding them to vote in a certain way regardless of the interests of the work or the guidance of the Holy Spirit. If branches are going to settle a matter in their business meetings prior to convening of conference, then what use is the conference? It cannot pray for wisdom to direct, for it must yield to whatever the delegates (who hold the balance of power) are instructed to do by the branch. I hope these mistakes will be avoided in the future and the Lord be accorded the right to direct his people in conference. Branches should not bind delegates to vote for or against, only in matters of "grave importance affecting the faith of the church." (Book of Rules, page 161.)

Elder C. A. Butterworth, our worthy missionary in charge, has been laboring with me the past three months, during which time he baptized ten and made many friends to the cause, and also strengthened the Saints. Although young and inexperienced when sent here, he has developed into an able defender of the restored gospel. Surely the Lord had a design in sending him. May his light ever grow brighter that many more may be brought into the kingdom through his efforts.

Things seem to look brighter now for the work than heretofore. Two of our city branches hope to have houses of worship in the near future. O, how I would rejoice to see their desires realized! May the Lord give them wisdom to do the very best in this direction.

Bro. Gomer Wells was again chosen district president, and I expect him to return from Victoria soon to assist in meeting the demands of the work in these parts. Calls for preaching are many, more than we can fill, and money is scarce; but I have determined ere now to travel and preach, money or no money. And this can be done by carrying a tent, blankets for bed, food, etc. I have found this way of traveling to work splendidly, as the climate here is well suited to "camping" nearly all the year.

We need more missionaries here; young, healthy, and active workers; and I hope the next conference will send us at least two more. New Zealand is a good field, and ought to be looked after; but we have more than we can do here, there being only three of us who are doing mission work regularly in this large field; so that chances for opening New Zealand are slim, unless more help is sent us.

Elder Thos. Dixon moved to New Zealand some time ago, and he writes that he is striving to make known the faith by preaching, talking, and scattering the printed word. He would welcome a missionary in that part of the great harvest field and thinks a good work could be done there.

I feel good in the work and hopeful for the future, believing the Lord will raise up more laborers for the harvest, even here in this far-away continent of the sea. My permanent address is Tuncurry, New South Wales, Australia.

HUTCHINSON, Colo., Feb. 11.

Editors Herald:—Just closed a ten nights' debate here with Elder G. W. Admire, a representative of the Church of God. The questions discussed were the church, the Sabbath, and the immortality of the soul. I took the affirmative on the church and the soul question, and Bro. Admire affirmed the Sabbath.

We had a good attendance all the time, and our cause did not suffer by the examination of those questions. I believe good will result to the cause, both here and at Denver; for Bro. Frank Chatburn discussed the same questions at Denver with one Mr. Johnson, a member of the Church of God. It lasted eight nights and I believe some were convinced that we were right and ere long will be ready to cast in their lot with us. I am feeling well in this great latter-day work and am determined to push it ahead to the best of my ability.

Yours for truth,

JAMES KEMP.

PERRY, Iowa, Feb. 14.

Editors Herald:—The series of meetings held at the Webster Hall, Des Moines, referred to in my last, closed on Sunday, the 20th ult. A large, interested attendance. Bro. O. B. Thomas came along during the meetings, by request stopped over one Sunday, and delivered a nice, clear, and forceful sermon on the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Bro. F. A. Smith delivered an able lecture on the distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah faction, and with such power attending that some not of the faith wept tears—of joy, I think. At the concluding service, I enjoyed an unusual degree of liberty and power while presenting some of the evidences of the prophetic calling and divine commission of Joseph Smith the Seer.

Many regrets were expressed that the meetings should close with such interest manifest, but we concluded the Saints had borne the financial burden so well and nobly that right would demand no more of them at the time, and so reluctantly closed; but expect to hold meetings there again before going to the General Conference, if all goes well. Hope the Saints of Des Moines will be ready for the series by March 7.

On January 23 Bro. Fred left Des Moines for Perry, Dallas county, where and in vicinities he kept the work moving till the time of our district conference. On the 24th I went to Runnells, and for two days the snowstorm and blizzard held us in "durance" and their vigils ceased not. Indeed, such experiences as the world has witnessed this winter, with the snow and storm, cause me to think seriously of the Lord's "reserved" forces of "battle and of war." (Job 38: 22, 23.) The battle has raged by land, lake, and ocean. He has "his way in the whirlwind," says the prophet.

After having held a few services at Runnells, on the evening of January 31 I began a series of services at Hartford, Warren county, in the Presbyterian church. The attendance was good, and increased almost to the last, and had not the weather been so severely cold the audiences would have been larger and we would have continued the meetings two evenings longer; but the renewal of the blizzard on the 6th inst. cut our efforts short there. I will not soon forget how the Lord sustained me by the aid of his Holy Spirit while setting forth the claims of the gospel restored, at Hartford. I do not believe all doors will be readily closed there against our elders again. Some who hitherto have heard reports only of our people and faith expressed great surprise, exclaiming, "It's the Bible;" "I'm astonished;" "I can bid you God speed." The Lord is opening wide the door for the proclamation of the word of life, in Warren county and in some other parts of this district.

Our soul swells with gratitude to God, as we contemplate the increasing calls for the preaching of the word of life, and the query, "Where shall the laborers be found to respond to the calls?" presses itself home to our hearts. We can only pray for more laborers, and labor on, and wait.

Bro. D. M. Rudd, after leaving Knoxville, battled with blizzard and other circumstances northwest of Des Moines during the cold snap till the week before conference, when he came on to Perry, where he is at this writing, aiding in a series of meetings we are holding here.

Bro. F. M. Weld is well reported of where he has labored; for, besides preaching when the way opened to him, he takes hold and aids branch officers, as only those of experience in that department of the work can.

We all felt sad to have Bro. F. A. Smith leave the district, as the needs of the work of the district are increasing all the time; but we shall try to be reconciled with the belief that the loss of his labor here will prove to be the gain of the work at Omaha, Nebraska, whither he went last Sunday, the 10th inst., to steady the gospel plow. May God give him success there. His labors here have been approved.

I arrived here too late on the 8th inst. to attend the session of the Sunday school convention, but learned that the business was done in a satisfactory way. I was here to attend the entertainment in the evening. The children acquitted themselves splendidly. The concluding exercise scene of the evening, the eight little, four little, one little white-gowned, white-capped, candle-bearing, "good night, March," little "tots"—girls,—was a very pretty and impressive closing scene.

I made a few remarks on the nature and importance of the Sunday school work, urging upon the party the necessity of strongly sustaining it, as its influence is one of the strongest safeguards to the young that could possibly be thrown around them; because its developments of them is morally strengthening, thus preparing them to resist the increasing evil influences of these evil times—the increasing power of intemperance, floods of fictitious books and papers, the general moral indifference and religious laxness of the age. So many sins are being liveried in the garb of innocent pastime and being exalted to the sphere of etiquette! Some of the young present, not of our people, stated afterward that the counsel given was better than their mothers had ever given them! We can never know till the "sweet by and by" what an infinite power for good the Sunday school under the gospel may become. Toil on, ye young Sunday school workers; your cause is among the noblest conceivable. Let it have first place in your life's work. Sow gospel seed in the untrammelled soil of young, pure, and innocent hearts. O, what shall the harvest be?

Bro. C. Nirk, the district president, was called away from Perry on Friday evening, to conduct the funeral services of Sr. Batty, at Colfax, did not get back to attend the conference held the 9th and 10th inst., so the brethren placed the burden of presiding on me. Business was done in an affable way, considering the cold weather, and so far as I was able to learn, to the satisfaction of the attendant Saints; so my part of the work was quite easy. The Bishop's agent's report indicated quite a lively interest in the work, notwithstanding the hard times; and ministerial reports showed that the local laborers had not been idle since the previous conference.

The conference was not so numerously attended as it would have been had the weather been more moderate. But O, those frosty Dakota northwesterners, how they paralyze business and ideas, and frustrate plans and the best of intentions, sometimes! But we must learn to yield to the inevitable; cannot do otherwise.

Bro. Rudd and I are here doing what we can to set the claims of the latter-day work before the people. Saints have rented the town hall for the time; attendance on the services moderate. So we labor and wait, sow the seed, and "have long patience," till the early and latter rain descend upon the labor, that fruit unto life eternal be gathered in. But few Saints here but they are workers in the cause; and with persistent effort what may not the results be for good here? Bro. William Johnson and J. W. Morgan have the work here and at Angus in charge, and are faithful and vigilant, endeavoring to improve each opportunity for getting the gospel before the people. I believe the work is onward and in fair condition throughout the district. Expectantly,

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, Feb. 11.

Editors Herald:—The Saints at this place are striving faithfully to complete their church building, which is now nearly ready for the plastering. They will have a neat little house in which they can worship without hindrance, and where they can feel at home.

Great credit is due their untiring efforts, and I wish Saints in other parts who could do so would take hold in good earnest, and imitate their example, and erect houses of worship where the missionary would be free to preach the word without fear of the doors being closed against him. The churches of other denominations here are securely barred against us, and the ministers seem to hate us worse than they do the Mormons here.

I recently called on the Presbyterian minister at American Fork, Rev. A. J. Livingstone Smith, who for some time has been lecturing against Mormonism each Sunday night. When I had introduced myself he told me I was the very man he wanted to see, but his action and manner of speech soon revealed that I was the man he did not want to see. He at once began his tirade against Mormonism root and branch, but gave just time enough for me to state that the church I represented did not indorse the false doctrines of the Utah Mormons. He broke in by asserting that Joseph Smith Mormonism was tenfold worse than Utah Mormonism. He especially condemned the Book of Covenants because it says that unless a man is baptized by immersion in water he cannot be saved. I proposed for him to open his church doors and we would go in and canvass the matter before the people, I to affirm this doctrine. He said: "Rather would I give poison to the people." I then asked him to let me hold a meeting or two, but he told me he would sooner have his right arm severed than permit me or any of our elders to occupy a pulpit under his control. I found him to be one of those kind of men who think they know it nearly all, and what they do not know not worth knowing. He is a would-be Braden, but lacks in ability. I obtained the use of the city hall, where I preached twice to a fair attendance of men, but not one woman honored us with her presence. Mr. Smith attended one meeting.

An elder cannot preach many sermons a year in this field, as he is often compelled to wait a whole week, and sometimes longer, to get a house to preach once, and in many places cannot get a house at all. I preached in this place yesterday, and may continue during part of the week. I am to be in Provo for Sunday, and from there may go to Spanish Fork and other places in that region.

Yours, hoping for the triumph,
H. N. HANSEN.

MOOLAP, Australia, January.

Editors Herald:—In penning a few lines with reference to the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard I am pleased to inform you that recently there are slight indications of an improvement among the Saints where I have been laboring, for which we feel very much pleased, and trust that it will be permanent, and that the forthcoming conduct will be fraught with examples which will prove to the world that our lives are hidden with Christ in God. For I have learned by observation in the past that although a man may be possessed with great abilities, and speak as it were with the tongues of angels, if the Christlike life is not made manifest in his daily intercourse with his friends and neighbors, his influence for good would die a natural death. 'Tis not a day of many words, but a time of sifting and critical examination, when all shades and forms of hypocrisy are sure to be made manifest by the Spirit of truth, to those who are found walking in the light of the gospel.

Some three months ago I went to New South Wales, joined Bro. Kaler, and spent one of the most pleasant and profitable seasons it has been my lot to enjoy since coming to the Colonies. We lost some time in traveling as we had several hundred miles to go, and that by horse and vehicle; so we took along Bro. Kaler's new tent, and like the gypsies camped by the way when night overtook us. We found this plan a cheap way of traveling, and we could stop when, where, and as long as we liked, with but little expense. We were in the regions of the Nambucca branch for one month, and were greatly pleased to see the union and persistent endeavor to keep pace with the onward march of Zion's cause. They are somewhat scattered, and therefore take their dinners with them on Sundays, and spend the whole day together in the different departments of church work. Zion's Religio, prayer and testimony, Sunday school, and preaching at three and seven p. m., make up the day's exercises. There's no danger of rusting out or of falling into the background, as long as such grand opportunities and privileges as are here given are improved upon. May they never grow weary in well-doing is our earnest desire, for their influence for good is sure to be felt by others in days to come.

We held services at several places in the neighborhood, with some interest; but no one felt ready to obey the truth, although some were quite satisfied that Saints have the pure gospel as it is in Jesus. On our way home we called on the scattered Saints, by the way, and talked of the good things pertaining to the kingdom of God, to comfort and cheer them on in the warfare of life as much as possible. Stopped at Taree; upset the "disciples" nest, which had no bottom in it, gathered a few of the starving nestlings into the ark of safety, and went on our way rejoicing, knowing that the Lord will give liberally and sustain those who approach him in faith believing, nothing wavering.

Tuncurry, "that downy nest of the taffy elders," was the next point in line, where we stopped but a short time for fear some of the Saints might think we had fallen into one of "Rip Van Winkle's" twenty year sleeping fits and would not be along to turn the world upside down in time for the conference. However, the few days spent there were enjoyed and well spent; for it is indeed a home to the wanderer, a friend to the widows (the elders' wives), and a real sample of what we expect in the paradise hereafter. May the peace of the Lord ever abide there.

Here I left Bro. Kaler to drive overland to Sydney, as he is no lover of the sea, and I trusted to the gentle breezes which soon wafted me to my destination. The Saints gathered in from different parts of the country, and an enjoyable time was spent at their annual conference, which seemed to put new life into all present and give them greater desires to run with patience the race that is set before them. Three were baptized at the conference, making eleven in all during our few weeks' travel together. I find Bro. Kaler to be kind, upright, and always ready to raise a warning voice in defense of the restored gospel.

Arriving home, in Victoria, January 4, I found wife and little one quite well, but sorry to hear that Bro. Jones, president of Hastings branch, was very ill with jaundice; but upon calling I found him improving slightly, for which we are thankful. Haven't seen Bro. Wells since arriving, but hear he is well. Hoping for better times and greater prosperity in this noble work, I am,

CO-OPERATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Industrial coöperation has met with many backsets, and has often taken a wrong road, yet it is making substantial progress in England. In twenty years ending with 1891 the number of coöperative societies in Great Britain increased from 746 to 1,656, their capital from $12,607,000 to $86,111,170, the annual sales from $47,318,000 to $244,608,485, and the annual profit from $3,331,000 to $23,571,490. These figures seem to stand for an assured success, and to indicate a broad future for coöperation in the United States.

There are enrolled in the public schools of our country 13,484,572 pupils, who are taught by 373,210 teachers.

A SHORT SERMON.

COME UP HIGHER.

THE Christian life may be divided into three stages; namely, infancy, youth, and mature manhood. Every child of God passes through these stages if they ever attain to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

The growth of the spiritual is, in a sense, similar to that of the natural man. The babe in Christ may not fully realize its absolute dependence upon its heavenly Parent, any more than the natural babe realizes its dependence upon its earthly parent; but like the latter it turns to the bosom of that divine Parent to seek the nourishment it needs; and in its simplicity drinks in the "sincere milk of the word," and is nourished thereby and grows in grace until it has attained to the youthful stage.

While in the infantile stage, just born "into newness of life" and nourished by "the sincere milk of the word," we are apt to be childlike, humble, and full of meekness, and reciprocate the love of our heavenly Parent; but as we approach the second stage we are more exposed to the evils and temptations of the world and the snares of the evil one, and are in danger of being deceived by the flatteries of Satan who is ever seeking to blind us as to our own weakness and absolute dependence on God, and as the natural youth is apt to imagine he no longer needs the watchcare of his earthly parent, so we, on entering into the youthful stage of our spiritual life, are in danger of thinking we can dispense with the care and instruction of those whom our heavenly Father has appointed as our guardians and teachers, and when this thought is indulged it is an easy matter for the enemy to persuade us that we do not need the care of the great Shepherd of souls, that we can dispense with his guiding hand, and walk alone. This fact renders the youthful stage the most dangerous one; for we neither know our weakness nor our strength, and are apt to be overconfident in our ability, and are in danger of treating with contempt, alike the infant in Christ and the veteran warrior who has grown gray at the post of duty. In such conditions we act as if we thought we were the men and "wisdom" would "die" with us. We become lifted up in the pride of our hearts, and thus become heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; forgetting that the wise man hath said, Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall.

I do not say this condition is common to all in this youthful stage, or that even a majority of the Christian youth fall into this error. I rejoice to know that many see the dangers and avoid them; but there are too many who become the victims of self-conceit because they have not studied their own natures, nor examined their own hearts; neither have they properly learned the gospel of Christ. If we continue to cultivate this pride, we shall grow up in ignorance of our real nature and become regardless of God and his word, and while we may profess to be the children of God we shall be as thorns and thistles in the vineyard of the Lord, wounding the hearts of the faithful laborers therein, and while, for the time, we may escape the pruning knife of the husbandman, the fruit we bear will be as described by Paul in Galatians 5:16-21 instead of the fruit of the Holy Spirit as mentioned in the same chapter, verses 22 and 23, and we shall eventually be plucked up and cast into the fire. Are our hearts filled with pride and unholy ambition for place and power? If so, with this spirit, the spirit of rebellion will unite as surely as two drops of water; in fact, it is the spirit of rebellion, and we shall become restive of all rule but our own and despise the authority God has given, and thus become rebels against God and his truth. Hence how necessary that by the light of the gospel we should learn to know our own hearts and seek to cultivate the disposition that was in Christ Jesus, that we may become like him and grow up unto him in all things, in righteousness and true holiness; for this reason the voice of the Spirit is given, "Come up higher!" So also the inspired language of Paul, Hebrews 6:1-3, exhorting us to "go on to perfection;" and the voice of God through Peter:—

And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.—2 Peter 1:5-9.

God hath in these latter days emphasized this instruction, speaking to the laborers in his vineyard.

Faith, hope, charity, and love with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.

Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

Then he closes with the promise,

Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Amen.—D. C. 3.

Reader, let us ask ourselves if these are the fruits we are bearing. If so, then we are obeying the divine injunction, Come up higher! and he has decreed that "no good thing" will he withhold from them that love him. Let us then go on from one degree of grace unto another until we have Come unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED. NO. 7.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

AN ENSIGN TO BE REARED.

HAVING thus digressed, in order to remove all doubts in regard to Isaiah 40:1-10 and Malachi 3:1-5 referring to the second coming of Christ, I now return to this work of preparation. I have shown that the Lord is to "set up an ensign for the nations," or "lift up a standard for the people," just before his coming in power and glory, and that the object of this is,

Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people.

The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord.

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.

Now, this latter-day work claims to be this preparation for the coming of the Savior. Has it come to us at the right time? We can soon determine, for certain conditions are to obtain at the time of this preparation that never obtained in the world's history before.

I will call your attention first to Nahum 2:3-6:—

The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in scarlet: the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings. He shall recount his worthies: they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defense shall be prepared. The gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved.

Reader, could you describe our present railroad cars more perfectly, with the same number of words the prophet has used? Do they not "rage in the streets?" Do they not "jostle one against another in the broad ways," when stopping? Don't their powerful headlights "seem like torches"? Do they not "run like the lightnings"? (They are often named, "the Cannon Ball," "the Lightning Express," etc., etc.) Does not the conductor "recount his worthies," those who have paid their fare, between every station? Don't they "stumble in their walk," when the train is running? Do they not "make haste to the wall thereof," both in getting in and getting seated, and also in getting off? Is there not a "defense prepared" to prevent them from falling down between the cars? And do not "the gates of the river"—railroad bridges—open to let the steamboats pass? And, mind you, this is to be "In the day of his preparation." Did such a condition of things ever obtain before the inauguration of this work in 1830? Never.

Now turn again to Isaiah 18:1, 2, and there you will see that when these ambassadors were sent out from a "land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," at the time the Lord "lifteth up an ensign on the mountains," it is to be said to them, "Go ye swift messengers." Then turn again to Isaiah 5:26-29, and you will there see that when the Lord shall "lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth," that Israel "shall come with speed swiftly;" also that "their horses hoofs shall be counted like flint and their wheels like a whirlwind," while "their roaring shall be like a lion." Did any horses ever have "wheels like a whirlwind" until the invention of the "iron horse," in the present century? Never. Did any horses ever make a roaring "like a lion," except the "iron horse"? Never. Was there ever a time, then, until the completion of the railroad from Jaffa to Jerusalem, in 1890, that it would have been possible for Israel to return to their beloved city as here described? Never.

Let me now call your attention to the testimony of Mr. Dana:—

MODERN JERUSALEM.

Editor Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun, has been to Jerusalem and reports his impressions in an interesting contribution to McClure's Magazine. Mr. Dana landed at Jaffa, the ancient Joppa, where Peter prayed from the housetop, and took the new railroad to Jerusalem. The road was built by the French, but uses American locomotives. The ascent from the sea to Jerusalem is two hundred and forty-eight feet in elevation, and fifty miles by rail. The train requires three and one half hours for the trip, and the fare is two dollars. There is one round trip daily, the train leaving Jerusalem at nine a. m., and on returning starts from Jaffa at two p. m. The traveling is therefore much more convenient in Mr. Dana's time than in the time of Peter and John who called the trip a two days' journey.

The Oriental Jews have a notion that the coming of the railroad is to precede the coming of the Messiah. The idea is based on the last chapter of the prophecies of Isaiah, where the return of the Hebrew exiles is thus predicted: "They shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord."

The word "kirkaroth," which is translated "swift beasts," literally means, it is claimed by Dr. Mendes, "a swaying furnace." This is the only instance of its use in the entire Bible. The word is not used for dromedary, camel, or asses, or any other known species of animals. The early translators knew of no other meaning and therefore supplied "swift beasts." As Mr. Dana mentions, the phrase fits the locomotive exactly. The swaying furnace is a better term for the locomotive than the present term. The prophet could not have used a more appropriate name had he seen the swaying locomotive with its flaming furnace in full blast swinging on its way down the desert, over the hills and chasms, from Jerusalem to Joppa. The swaying furnace has not yet brought them a Messiah, but it is bringing them the fruits of Western civilization, whose message is almost Mesianic.

Traversing the plains of Sharon and Jerusalem, from which Abraham was driven by bad crops, the traveler reaches the railway terminal one mile from Jerusalem's gate.—Saints' Herald, March, 1894.

Now, remember that we had already quoted,

And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people.—Isa. 11:16.

Prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway.—Isa. 62:10.

And, in connection with these texts, read the following from the sermon (previously referred to) of Rev. A. Ben Oliel, a converted Jew late from Palestine:—

He also referred to the railroads in that land being a significant fulfillment of prophecy, especially of Isaiah 35:8, which reads: 'And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness.' The literal meaning of the term 'highway,' he says, means an 'embankment road.' On account of the floods, they had to raise the road upon an embankment to avoid it being washed away. At first the road was not raised high enough, and part of it was destroyed by the overflow of waters, and they had to elevate it still higher. Jerusalem is called, in that land, 'The Holies,' and the road, 'The road to the Holies.' Thus, the very name is given in prophecy.—Zion's Ensign, May 26, 1894.

The reader will please bear in mind that when Joseph Smith received his first visit from the heavenly messengers, in 1820, there was not a railroad in the world; that when he received his second visit, in 1823, there was not a railroad in the world; that when he published the Book of Mormon and organized the church, in 1830, there were only thirty miles of railroad in the United States, and the cars made only eight or ten miles an hour. They didn't "seem like torches," nor "run like the lightnings." There was no highway "to the Holies," and no returning "with speed swiftly;" no horses with "wheels like a whirlwind" and roaring "like a lion;" no returning of Jews to Jerusalem "by the hundreds," and no "former or latter rains" to make glad the heart of "his [God's] people Israel." All this was to be brought about in "the day of his preparation."

All this has been brought about since the commencement of this work. Did it all "just happen"? No; there is a God that doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, "What doest thou?" And he has brought about those wonderful changes in nature, and in the condition of things among men, to confirm the word and work of his servants, and to leave all who reject this work without excuse in the day of judgment. "Be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong."

OTHER PROPHECIES AND HISTORICAL STATEMENTS OF THE BIBLE FILLED IN THE COMING FORTH OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

There are a number of other prophecies and historical statements found in the Bible that I wish to notice in connection with the Book of Mormon. I have already shown that its mission is to establish the truth of the Bible, and make plain some parts of it that otherwise might remain obscure. And, if it helps us, in the investigation of God's word, to understand more fully his plans and purposes in regard to man, it should be recognized not only as a work of interest but as a veritable godsend to the human family. The first quotation I shall introduce under this head is found in Genesis 11:1-9:—

And the whole earth was of one language, and of one speech. And it came to pass, as they journeyed from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar; and they dwelt there. And they said one to another, Go to, let us make brick, and burn them thoroughly. And they had brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar. And they said, Go to, let us build us a city, and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth. And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded. And the Lord said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do. Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech. So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city. Therefore is the name of it called Babel; because the Lord did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth.

This tells us that God himself scattered the people from the tower of Babel "upon all the face of the earth." Do you believe it? Was America a part of the "face of the earth"? Did anyone come to America from Babel? The Book of Mormon says they did. On page 501 we read:—

And Kib was the son of Orihah, who was the son of Jared; which Jared came forth with his brother and their families, with some others and their families, from the great tower, at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, and swear in his wrath that they should be scattered upon all the face of the earth; and according to the word of the Lord the people were scattered.

On page 510 we are told that this colony, who were called Jaredites, landed on this continent, where they lived until about six hundred years before the coming of Christ. During their sixteen hundred years' residence here they multiplied and spread over the greater part of North America, developed a high degree of civilization, and became very wealthy. But they had also become very wicked, and, about the time that Lehi and his colony of Israelites landed on this continent, they were destroyed in a war of extermination, having previously divided into two great factions. And, as those two parties destroyed each other in war, they left much of their wealth scattered over this continent.

Now, the Bible says the people were scattered from the tower of Babel "upon all the face of the earth." The Book of Mormon confirms that statement, and also tells us who came to this part of the "face of the earth," how they came, how long they lived here, and why they were destroyed, thus confirming the Bible narrative, and throwing a flood of light upon ancient American civilization.

But this is not all. About the time this people were destroyed, leaving their wealth scattered over this land, the Lord delivers a command, a prophecy, and a promise, to certain ones in the land of Palestine, which is recorded in Jeremiah 49: 30-33 and reads as follows:—

Flee, get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith the Lord; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you. Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation, that dwelleth without care, saith the Lord, which have neither gates nor bars, which dwell alone. And their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil: and I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners; and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the Lord. And Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever: there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it.

At this time Nebuchadnezzar was king of Babylon, and his dominion and authority extended over the entire eastern continent. But the command here is to, "flee, get you far off;" and the reason assigned is, "for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you." The object, then, of their fleeing was to get out of reach of the king of Babylon, which they could not do on the eastern continent. Not only was it impossible for them to get out of his reach there, but, so far as we know, there was no "wealthy nation" on that continent that "dwell alone," "without ease," "which have neither gates nor bars."

Then the Book of Mormon tells us that the same year that this command and promise was given to this people by Jeremiah (B. C. 600) the Lord told Lehi to leave Jerusalem, and promised him this land of America, which is indeed "far off," as the land of his inheritance. They did "flee," and got themselves "far off," even to this continent, out of the reach of Nebuchadnezzar.

When they got here it was just as Jeremiah had predicted. The Lord had scattered this "wealthy nation," those who were in the "utmost corners," into "all winds;" had brought "their calamity from all sides thereof," and their wealth became a "spoil" and a "booty" to this Israelite colony. One of their writers, in Book of Mormon page 43, says:—

And it came to pass that we did find upon the land of promise, as we journeyed in the wilderness, that there were beasts in the forests of every kind, both the cow, and the ox, and the ass, and the horse, and the goat, and the wild goat, and all manner of wild animals, which were for the use of men. And we did find all manner of ore, both of gold, and of silver, and of copper.

It is sometimes argued that the "inhabitants of Hazor" were not Israelites and, therefore, Jeremiah could not have had reference to Lehi and his company. But the Bible in speaking of those nations that dwelt in and around Jerusalem at the time they were conquered by Joshua, (that is, the Canaanite, the Ammorite, the Hittite, the Perizzite, the Jebusites—and the Jebusites dwelt in Jerusalem—the Hivite, and others,) says that "Hazor beforetime was the head of all those kingdoms." (Josh. 11:10.) It also says that all this land, of which Hazor was the head, was taken by Joshua and given to Israel "for an inheritance." (See Josh. 11:23.) Hence, as Hazor was the "head of all those kingdoms," the children of Israel who had taken possession of all those countries, and were inhabiting them in the days of Jeremiah, could very properly be called "inhabitants of Hazor." The prophet could not have referred to the ancient inhabitants of Hazor, for the Bible says Joshua smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them: there was not any left to breathe: and he burnt Hazor with fire.—Josh. 11:11.

As further evidence that those inhabitants of Hazor were not to stop on the eastern continent I now call your attention to Jeremiah 48: 32, 33:—

O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer: thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer: the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer fruits and upon thy vintage. And joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab; and I have caused wine to fail from the winepresses: none shall tread with shouting: their shouting shall be no shouting.

"Thy plants are gone over the sea." Notice in the thirty-third verse the Lord speaks of two places, the "plentiful field" and the "land of Moab."

In connection with this please read Isaiah 16:8:—

For the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

The Lord in those two prophecies is speaking of "the vine of Sibmah," and he says that the "branches" or "principal plant" of this vine are "gone over the sea,"—speaking prophetically,—and that they first "wandered through the wilderness."

That Israel is this "vine of Sibmah" is proven by the following:—

For of old time I have broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands; and thou saidst, I will not transgress; when upon every high hill and under every green tree thou wanderest, playing the harlot. Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed; how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?—Jer. 2: 20, 21.

Turn us again, O God of hosts, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved. Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt; thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it. Thou preparedst room before it, and didst cause it to take deep root, and it filled the land. The hills were covered with the shadow of it, and the boughs thereof were like the goodly cedars. She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river. Why hast thou then broken down her hedges, so that all they which pass by the way do pluck her? The boar out of the wood doth waste it, and the wild beast of the field doth devour it. Return, we beseech thee, O God of hosts: look down from heaven, and behold, and visit this vine; and the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, and the branch that thou madest strong for thyself.—Ps. 80: 7-15.

The word "Sibmah" means coolness, and you will notice in this last quotation that the "shadow" of this vine covered the hills, "and the boughs thereof were like the goodly cedars" making it indeed a vine of "coolness" and pleasantness. Notice too that this is a "noble vine," and that it was brought "out of Egypt;" that she (Israel—this vine) "sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river," and that there is a "branch that thou madest strong for thyself." We have already learned that Ephraim and Manasseh are "like the horns of unicorns;" that they have the "birthright," and are therefore the "principal plants" of this vine; also that Ephraim is "like a mighty man," "greater than Manasseh," the Lord's "first born;" hence "the branch that thou madest strong for thyself," that is, in the day when the Lord shall "visit this vine."

We have just seen that the "branches," "principal plants," of this vine "wandered through the wilderness," "they are gone over the sea."

Turning now to the Book of Mormon, page 36, we learn that this Israelite colony, under Lehi, "wandered through the wilderness," eight long years; they then built a ship and went "over the sea," just as the Bible says, got themselves "far off" out of the reach of Nebuchadnezzar, and found the "booty" and the "spoil" left by the "wealthy nation" whose "calamity" came "from all sides thereof," just as predicted by Jeremiah, —thus confirming, and proving the statements of the Bible to be literally true.

It will not do to say the "vine of Sibmah" is Moab, simply because the principal part of those two chapters are devoted to the calamities that were to come on that people. We have already noticed that Jeremiah 48: 33 speaks of the "plentiful field" and the "land of Moab;" while Isaiah 16: 8 speaks of the "fields of Heshbon" in connection with the "vine of Sibmah." Now Heshbon was not Moab, nor any part of it, Numbers 21: 25.

And Israel took all these cities: and Israel dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites, in Heshbon, and in all the villages thereof.

Deuteronomy 2: 9 tells us that the Lord would not give Israel the land of Moab. In verses 13, 19 we learn that they were to pass through the land of Moab, and also the land of the Ammorites, and not molest them. But in verse 24 we read:—

Behold, I have given into thine hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land: begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle.

Hence we see that Israel dwelt in the "plentiful field," the "fields of Heshbon;" and that Israel is the "vine of Sibmah" that sent out her "principal plants" "through the wilderness" and "over the sea," unto the "wealthy nation," "far off" out of the reach of Nebuchadnezzar. And here in this land of America, "far off" from Jerusalem, the descendants of this Israelite colony lived at the time the Savior was here in the flesh. And he gives us to understand that he not only knew of them, but that his mission was to them, as well as to the Jews at Jerusalem. In John 10: 16 he says:—

And other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

This evidently refers to Israelites, for the Savior said, Matthew 15: 24:—

I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Now, if he was sent only to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," and had "other sheep" which were "not of this fold," they must have been Israelites who did not worship at Jerusalem. And they were to hear his voice, and, in time, become one fold with those at Jerusalem. We take up the Book of Mormon again and there we learn that he had "other sheep," and that too "of the house of Israel," on this continent, to whom he appeared after his resurrection. We learn also that they heard his voice, and, through obedience to the gospel, became one with him and the Father, —thus again helping us to a better understanding of the Bible.

It has always been supposed that those "other sheep" were the Gentiles, but, as already seen, Jesus was sent only to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," and we are told,

He came unto his own and his own received him not.—John 1: 11.

And when they rejected him he said:—

The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.—Matt. 21: 43.

And Paul says:

Through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles.—Rom. 11: 11.

Again he says:—

And thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them.—Rom. 11: 17.

The Gentiles, then, were not his sheep at the time he made this statement, neither did they become his until after "his own" had rejected him. Then they were taken as a "wild olive" and "grafted in among" those who "did receive him," and, although they were not the "natural branches," they were made partakers "of the root and fatness of the olive tree." And herein is fulfilled the prophecy,

I will call them my people, which were not my people.—Rom. 9: 25.

But the "other sheep," "which are not of this fold," are of the "lost sheep of the house of Israel."

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island, Feb. 15, 1895.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

As there seems to be some misunderstanding upon the subject of the ministry reporting to General Conference, and as a resolution was adopted in 1892 (minutes page 73) that defines who may and who may not report to the annual sessions, therefore I cite all concerned to it, reading as follows:—

"Resolved that we instruct the elders of the church who are not under general church appointment to not report to this body, unless the labor performed has been outside of all districts and branches; and that the Secretary of the Church be authorized to reject all ministerial reports which do not properly belong to the General Conference of the church."

Several elders have sent for blanks upon which to report, yet their names are not in the list appointed by the conference of 1894, nor have I received notice from the First Presidency, or from the members of the Quorum of Twelve, that such appointments have been made. In cases where official notice has been received from the above authorities blanks have been sent, but, under the above rule, it would do no good to send them to others, much as I might like to accommodate all the laboring brethren; and this notice will explain why. I am not acting for myself in the matter, but according to the order of the body, and any and all reports sent by those not under appointment will have to be subject to the rule quoted, so far as my action is concerned, and I hope that no one will be offended by reason of failure to receive a blank.

In this connection will say that if members of the Twelve have appointed any other missionaries than those whose names have been sent in, they should notify me at once so that blanks may be sent in time for reporting before March 15.

No reports are needed by me from those not under appointment, except that those not in quorums may apply for enrollment, stating when born, when baptized, when, where, and by whom ordained, and what labor they are performing as ministers, in branches or districts, whether presiding, preaching, teaching, or otherwise seeking to advance the cause of truth.

Such statements will be placed with quorums where vacancies exist, and each quorum will by vote accept the men it desires to have enrolled as members thereof. It does not rest with me to enroll any, only to see that they are placed in the hands of quorum officers, on their call.

H. A. STEBBINS, Church Secretary.

FIFTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Brethren of the Fifth Quorum will please send their reports with usual dues to the secretary,

WM. WATERMAN.

LAMONI, IOWA.

NOTICES.

Pacific Slope Mission; Brethren.—By reason of unlooked-for hindrances I will not be able to get back to California in time to receive and forward to the Twelve the reports of the missionaries of this mission. I therefore hereby request them to forward their reports, with their preferences of field of labor, the sum needed for their families, etc., to Bro. Heman C. Smith, secretary of the Quorum of the Twelve, at Lamoni, by March 15.

I hope all who have been in the field will report ready for another year of toil and anxiety, joy and blessing. Those who may be in a position to offer their services I hope will send in their names, with the necessary information. The harvest is great, the time is short, and laborers needed everywhere.

I ask pardon of my brethren for unintentionally causing them to write double reports. However, I expect to be in San Francisco by March 20, and will immediately forward to the Twelve whatever reports may have been forwarded to that place to my address, 3010 Sixteenth street.

In bonds,

J. F. BURTON.

PAPEETE, January 10, 1895.

Having changed my address since notifying the Saints of Southern California district, I will once more request, if they have anything which they desire to have recorded as matters of history, which will stand as evidences of the remarkable dealings of God with his people in these latter days, to please remember that the writer was chosen by the October conference to be your historian, and will take pleasure in fulfilling his duties as such, if you will send them to him at University post office, Los Angeles, California. Some person make a beginning, so we may hope for more to follow.

CARTER.—At Charlestown, Maryland, February 1, 1895, Sr. Elizabeth Carter, aged 76 years. She was baptized November 18, 1892, by A. H. Parsons. She had stood aloof from church fellowship till she heard the gospel, which gave her great consolation after obedience. Funeral at Bro. J. V. Carter's house (the oldest son). Discourse by A. H. Parsons, assisted by Rev. Mr. Valliant, Methodist pastor. Peace be to her ashes until the trump of God shall call the just to come forth.

PETHOUD.—Near Pickrell, Nebraska, January 27, 1895, Rena Ethel, infant child of Claud and Nellie Pethoud, aged 2 months and 7 days. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

SHERWOOD.—At Dunbar, Nebraska, December 28, 1894, Bro. George Sherwood, aged about 72 years. He was a member of the Nebraska City branch. He was an inoffensive man, always tried to be at meetings, at times bore testimony to the truthfulness of the work, and died in the faith. Peaceful be his rest.

in Newton, Iowa, in 1868, Elder G. E. Deuel officiating, and has ever since manifested a Christian spirit. In her affliction she was patient and willing for the Lord's will to be done. A good, exemplary Saint has gone to rest. Elder William C. Nirk delivered the funeral sermon.

HARVEY.—Bro. Hiram Harvey was born in the Province of Quebec, Dominion of Canada (then called Canada East), on October 3, 1807, and he died at Wilton Center, Will county, Illinois, January 24, 1895. He had been feeble for several years, and his death was expected to occur before that of his daughter, Sr. Rosalia H. Dancer, but he recovered enough strength to survive her several months. Bro. Harvey's character was of that sweet and gentle nature that more commonly dwells in womankind. The writer of this was acquainted with him nearly twenty-five years and admired that kindly spirit which manifested ever a tender care for both his family and those who came within his gates, whether personal friends or the stranger traveling that way. Indeed he seemed to have a regard for all that possessed life, for dumb and helpless creatures, as well as for man, and no intentional harm was done by him in word or act. He also possessed a most cheerful disposition, ever looking upon the brightest side possible and inclined to pleasant jest that made himself and others cheerful under depressing circumstances. He accepted the gospel in 1868, being baptized May 10 that year, by Bro. David H. Smith. His wife passed on before him in 1876, and he has since resided with his son and wife, Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Harvey. He has one other son living, Mr. Jabez Harvey, of the same place.

ARBAUGH.—At Hemlock, Ohio, February 4, 1895, Bro. Wm. Allen Arbaugh, aged 45 years, 11 months, and 20 days. He was born at Arabia, Ohio; was married to Sarah E. JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

Three additional chapters describe American Antiquities, and Hebrew Relics, one containing the statement of Dr. Lederer, a converted Jew, etc., all corroborative of the claims of the Book of Mormon.

PRESIDENCY AND PRIESTHOOD; THE APOSTASY, REFORMATION, AND RESTORATION.

By Elder Wm. H. Kelley. New, Revised, and Enlarged Edition. It contains 421 pages of closely written matter, with autograph and likeness of the Author and is printed in good, readable type, with neat binding. The work is a library within itself; a marvel of trenchant criticism and logical deductions from historical facts; a key to the right understanding of the Bible and modern diverse systems of faith and worship. It discusses the issues of theology that are to the front to-day. It treats largely of Ministerial Authority as associated with the Melchisedek and Aaronic Priesthoods, and the Ideal Church of New Testament times is conspicuously set forth in striking contrast with the creeds and systems of church building since the days of the Apostles. Also the claims for the Restoration of the Gospel at a later day than the Apostolic age are critically examined in the light of prophecy and history, which is a subject of great moment to men of every faith. A historical resume or brief is also inserted of the rise and development of the "apostate church," and an exegesis of the 29th chapter of Isaiah, the revelation of the "sealed book." Also the origin of modern churches and creeds, etc.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archæology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

HIGHER CRITICISM OF THE HEXATEUCH.

PROF. L. W. BATTEN, of the Protestant Episcopal Divinity School, Philadelphia, has an article in The Arena, Boston, June, the object of which is "to present to the intelligent public a specific problem of the higher criticism of the Bible." Professor Batten takes for his subject the Hexateuch, not the Pentateuch; because, he contends, the Book of Joshua is inseparably bound up with the books which precede. The conclusions of the modern higher critics in regard to the Hexateuch are summarized as follows:—

There are four chief documents in the Hexateuch. The first is the so-called "Priest's Code," which runs through the entire Hexateuch, including the whole of Leviticus. It is the most complete of all the documents, as it was used by the compiler as the basis of his work, very little being omitted. This writer is particularly interested in the origin of the great religious institutions, such as the Sabbath, circumcision, and the pass-over. This document is indicated by the symbol P.

The second document is found in all the books except Leviticus, and is characterized by the use of the name

Jahveh. To this author we owe the second account of the creation, the story of the Garden of Eden, that of Cain and Abel, and much of the patriarchal history. This writer is called the Jahvist, and his work is indicated by the symbol J. His stories are primitive and interesting. His religion is intensely anthropomorphic.

The third document was once confused with P, because the same name was used for God; but it was discovered that in literary characteristics this writer was much more akin to J than to P. He is called the Elohist (E). From his interest in the northern tribes he was probably a resident of the northern kingdom. In style, J and E are so much alike that it is difficult to separate their narratives.

The fourth document comprises the main part of the Book of Deuteronomy, and is indicated, therefore, by the symbol D.

Our author then presents some of the evidences by which these results are reached, and affirms that "the critical analysis of the Hexateuch is not based on mere speculations, but upon facts." He says: That there are different documents in the Hexateuch appears from double narratives of the same events. The most complete example is the duplicate of the creation. The first from P. (Gen. 1: 1; 2: 3), the other from J (Gen. 2: 4-25). A careful study of these two narratives will show that they cannot possibly have come from the same writer. P represents the creation as accomplished in a cycle of days, J on the other hand is not concerned with time. In P, the world in the beginning was a chaotic mass, and was covered with water. The water was drawn off from the land, and then vegetation springs forth. J represents the earth at the beginning as barren for lack of water and of cultivation. The rain falls and man is created to till the soil, and then vegetation appears. In P, the last act of creation was man, and that not an individual, but the race, and of both sexes. In J, the first creature was an individual man, and the last was the woman, the animal creation coming in between. P's account includes the universe, J's only the earth. The conception of God in the two accounts is very different. In P, the Almighty fiat is sufficient. God only needs to say, "Let be," and the creation is accomplished. In J, God fashions the man out of dust, breathes into his nostrils, puts him to sleep, takes a rib, and fashions it into a woman. God is represented as experimenting. The interest of P lies in the institution of the Sabbath day. In J, the chief interest centers in man.

The story of the flood is an interesting case in which the two accounts are woven together, though each is tolerably complete in itself. According to P, two animals of each kind were taken into the ark; according to J, seven pairs of clean animals and one pair of unclean. According to P, the flood was caused by the breaking up of the great deep as well as by the opening of the windows of heaven. "Some great terrestrial commotion is thus implied" (Ryle). According to J, the flood was produced by a rain-storm which lasted forty days and nights. According to P, the flood lasted over a year; according to J, there were seven days' warning, forty days' rain, and twenty-one days' subsidence,—sixty-eight days in all. The same differences of style and theology are found as in the creation stories, and indeed run all through the Hexateuch.

The burning question concerning the documents from which the Hexateuch is compiled is in regard to their respective dates. It is best to begin with Deuteronomy, because there is the surest ground. If the critical results with regard to that book cannot be maintained, nothing else can. We read in 2 Kings 22, that in the eighteenth year of King Josiah, Hilkiah, the high priest, sent word to the king that he had found the Book of the Law in the Temple. What was this Book of the Law? Prof. William Henry Green and others, who hold the traditional view, maintain that it was the entire Pentateuch. The following evidence shows that it was the Book of Deuteronomy. 1. The Pentateuch could not have been read twice by Shaphan in one day. 2. Josiah's reformation was based wholly on the laws of Deuteronomy. 3. A careful study of Jeremiah's prophecies after the reformation of Josiah, shows that his thought was permeated by the ideas of Deuteronomy. But the question still remains whether the book had been really lost, or was first produced at this time. It seems clear that, whenever the book was written, it had never before seen the light.

On the question of authorship, Professor Batten says:—

If the Hexateuch is composite, Moses was not the author, and no modern critic pretends to know who the various authors were. Like most of the other writings of the Old Testament, these documents are anonymous.

The denial of the Mosaic authorship is the sore point with traditionalists. It seems strange that they should be aggrieved if one examines the basis of the venerable claims that Moses was the author of the Pentateuch; for the Pentateuch does not make such a claim for itself. Indeed, the Pentateuch itself contains statements which exclude the Mosaic authorship. Moses is constantly spoken of in the third person, and from what seems to be a distant point of view. Moreover it is expressly stated that Moses wrote certain laws. In saying that Moses wrote a part of a book it is clearly implied that he was not the author of the whole.

If these reasons persuade any one that the traditional view of the Hexateuch is wrong, it need not persuade him that the religious value of the books is in any way impaired. Other authors were inspired as well as Moses. But, after all, it is not a question of consequences but of fact. If these things are so, we must accept them. That they are so is the verdict of a very large proportion of the men who are now devoting their time and talents to the study of the Old Testament Scriptures.—Condensed for the Literary Digest.

NOTICE.

The Independence branch has appointed F. C. Warnky, A. White, W. Roberts, and A. H. Mills, a committee on reception and accommodation of those attending General Conference. Board will be furnished at $3 per week. All who desire further information, or to have accommodation furnished, are requested to address with inclosed stamp,

A PLEA FROM ONE WHO IS BLIND.

To my many friends, and those who sympathize with one who cannot see, I desire to state that because of the loss of property and also my eyesight, I have concluded to make this request of all who can afford it, to send forty cents for one box of my toilet soap, or twenty-five cents for one bottle of my great crystal cement with printed directions accompanying each bottle, both of which are very useful articles, and highly recommended by hundreds of the Saints and those who have used them in the past.

The object I have in view is to build me a little house that I may avoid paying rent. I could make a living if I could stop house rent. I am not asking charity, but simply ask patronage of those who may deem me worthy of the same. I hope that each one who shall read this will carefully consider the matter and decide to send in your order at once to J. H. McMullin, Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, and it will be promptly forwarded, postage prepaid. United States stamps or post office money order taken.

J. H. McMULLIN.

[BRO. McMULLIN is an energetic toiler, who, by selling his wares, earns a living for himself and family, preferring to so do, rather than cast himself upon the church for support. He is deserving of all he asks in the above plea, and those who respond will encourage a laudable ambition in one who labors under terrible disadvantage.—ED.]

NO REDUCED RATES.

WE are informed by the committee appointed to secure rates for the General Conference of 1895 that the Western Passenger Association has again refused to grant our request, as they did in 1892 and in 1894.

The committee wrote the chairman of the association and he sent a blank form. Upon this a regular application was made in the specifications desired and returned to them on January 22. There followed correspondence, and some of the passenger agents of the chief lines offered their assistance. Twice tidings were received that our application was being considered, but a final answer was not received until February 25, and then it was found that a majority of the roads in the association had voted against us, whether from prejudice or other causes we are only left to conjecture, no reasons being assigned in the letter received.

Some of the roads have been very kind this year in issuing half fare permits to our missionary force. In other cases our active and diligent men have been refused. But we think that in many cases the success or failure in this respect has been according to the friendliness or otherwise of the local agents who have had to write out replies to the series of questions sent out by the association. For this year the association has had the final decision as to granting permits by any of the roads within the combine, instead of each road by its passenger agents making the decision on the applications received.

However the committee are now trying to obtain rates over the chief roads that will be used by our people in going to Independence. As the Burlington last year gave rates after the association had refused them, therefore it is hoped that it and others may do so this year; and, if the number who must travel over each line is not set too high, then many of the Saints may be able to attend who cannot otherwise do so. The committee has done the best it could, using its influence locally at Council Bluffs, St. Joseph, and Kansas City, as well as with the general authorities by correspondence, and whatever may be the result of it all we must submit as cheerfully as possible.

PATRIOTIC PROGRAM.

THE west side Grammar and Intermediate school, at Lamoni observed Washington's birthday, February 22, by presenting to the patrons and visitors the following program:—

Music by band. Saluting the flag. Response, "Our Nation's Colors," followed by song, "Red, White, and Blue." Oration, "Our National Flag," Heman Broliar. Recitation, "George Washington," Laura Kelley. Solo, "The Sword of Bunker Hill," Clara Dudley. "The Story of Washington," Arthur Smith. Recitation, "A Scene at Sumter," Ethel Banta. Song, "Rally Round the Flag," School. Reading, "The Responsibilities of Our Country," Herbert Barto. "Iowa's Eagle," Walter Hammer. Duet. Recitation, "Washington," Albert Hazelton. Recitation, "I, Like Washington," Clifford Broliar. Quartet, "Out of the Old Home they Wander," Mabel Blair, Coral Smith, Clifford Broliar, Arthur Smith. Recitation, "The Ship's Colors," Clara Dudley. Song, "America," School.

The exercises were of an excellent character, tending to foster the spirit of patriotism, love of country, and devotion to its institutions; which was to be commended, and beyond praise.

The flying of the flag that day on the schoolhouses of the land gave ample token that the love of country was by no means lost, or overshadowed by the meaner things of the life that now is.

BRO. J. M. BROWN, of Leon, Iowa, laboring in Oklahoma, reports the following circumstances: Sr. B. A. Hall, who with her husband, not in the church, settled in county N, Oklahoma, was bitten by a sand viper, a species of snake, while gathering sand cherries; of this occurrence she herself writes:—

RICHMOND, Oklahoma.

Dear Saints of God.—I feel like writing my testimony to the glory of God. I was bitten by a sand viper snake to-day, and I took it to the Lord in prayer and he has healed me. O, I cannot praise him enough for it! I want to shout to the world for him. I want to live true to him forever. Amen.

MRS. B. A. HALL.

Bro. Brown writes further:—

This letter should have appeared in the Saints Herald instead of the Gospel Trumpet. Mrs Hall is a member of the Saints' Church. . . . Sr. Hall tried to persuade her husband to obey the gospel when she did, but he thought that the responsibilities were greater than he was willing to assume. I am pleased to learn that he is now ready to take upon himself additional responsibility, and requests me to come and labor in that vicinity; thinks good can be done. He also states that upon his farm is a beautiful lake of clear water and he desires to be buried there; "buried with Christ in baptism."

RESPECTFULLY referred to the committee on American Archæology.

Prof. Warren K. Moorhead delivered an illustrated lecture yesterday afternoon at the Field Columbian Museum on "Prehistoric Man in Ohio." The lecturer spoke of the Hopewell group of mounds in Ross county, Ohio. It consists of twenty-three mounds which have recently yielded valuable archæological treasures. The excavations reveal that the pre-Columbian man was the manufacturer of rough grades of cloth, copper utensils, and carried on trade with California, Yellowstone Park, Lake Superior, and Florida. One pyramid in Southern Ohio is only sixty-five feet lower than the highest Egyptian construction. Gravel appears to have been an excellent preservative of the human body. One cranium was found in which every tooth was sound. Valuable pearls were buried with the more notable persons, and separate graveyards were assigned to men, women, and children.—Chicago Tribune.

Victoria letter in San Francisco Examiner. A remnant of a once powerful and numerous Indian tribe has just been discovered by Franz Boaz near the head of Portland Canal. Dr. Boaz has devoted his life to the study of the Indian race in America. In the interest of the Berlin Museum and the British Association he came here from Chicago a few months ago, having heard during the World's Fair that one of British Columbia's Indian tribes possessed many of the distinct characteristics—physical, religious, social, and mental—of the ancient Egyptians, from which their legends would indicate that they had descended.

On arrival the investigator learned that the tribe he sought, now almost extinct, had a home somewhere in the Naas River country, whither he hurried. He found that the tribe had once ranged the great extent of country from Behm's Canal in Alaska to Cape Fox, and extending down to the Naas River, but that unable, by reason of their more peaceful disposition and pursuits, to oppose the inroads of Indians from the coast and from the Rockies the tribe had grown smaller and gradually smaller, until now but twelve souls remained of what was once a great people. They have even lost their name, the present tribal name, Tsotsout, being taken from the Naas River language, in which it is synonymous for slaves.

These Indians differ in appearance, measurements, history, and customs from any other Indians of America and are apparently a distinctive family. Dr. Boaz does not, however, agree with those who have pronounced them ancient Egyptians. Their sociology possesses much in common with that of the Pharaohs and their legends also are all of the "Great River." But the expert does not consider this sufficient to establish anything in view of physical dissimilarities. He has taken careful and voluminous notes, however, which he will study and compare on his return to London and Berlin. The language of the Tsotsouts is, he says, remarkable in its likeness to the Egyptian.

ELSIE, Mich., Feb. 16.—Five cases of a unique pottery which is said to have been taken from mounds in Mecosta and Isabella counties have reached here. From one of the caskets were taken pipes, lamps, and vases said to be of the time of Pharaoh; from another, stone amulets and smaller gold nuggets, and from a third, brass and stone coins and stone type. On the outside of another casket is the representation of the pyramids of Egypt and figures of a mound builder with a spear upraised, and an American Indian with tomahawk upraised. Among the curiosities also are two tablets, one said to represent the ten commandments and the other the flood.—Chicago Tribune.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. L. L. BOOTH, Vernon, Idaho, February 13:—

I know whereof I stand, but may not be able to convince others who stand where I have stood. It has been purely force of circumstances that has brought me where I now am identified. Strictly speaking, I am an outcast; my views, religiously speaking, are in line with the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, as I have read and talked them up, especially read them up. Hoping in due time I may be admitted to full fellowship and be a beacon light wherever I may be placed is my desire.

Bro. Booth has been under the harrow and plow of convincing forces, for some time, and has been singularly patient in it all; so that sympathizing with him we can safely write, Be patient, suffering soul, let the wisdom of God's dealing be manifest in your complete triumph in due time.

Bro. Thomas W. Chatburn sends card from Virgil City, Missouri, February 21:—

I came here last Monday to engage in discussion with one J. M. Clark, a Presbyterian. Discussion is held in a union church in this city, four hours each day; one to three and seven to nine p. m. House is crowded to repletion. I am feeling well in the fight and like it splendid for a change.

Bro. Charles Derry, Underwood, Iowa, February 25:—

Have just closed a profitable conference at this place; good interest manifest among the brethren. We were favored with the presence, counsel, and instruction of Elder A. H. Smith. I am now holding meetings for three nights. Hope some good may be the result.

Sr. Mary Hoague, Fulton, Wisconsin, February 21:—

In Herald of 13th ult. I am made to say: "We had two added to our number recently; one my husband," etc. It should read: "One baptized by my husband, his youngest sister; the other by Bro. W. A. McDowell, a fine young man," etc. Please correct or I fear the Saints will hardly think me truthful, as my husband has been baptized over two years and ordained an elder over one year ago. I have already received one letter asking what I meant.

Bro. E. A. Stedman, North Minneapolis, Minnesota, the 25th:—

This leaves me in fair health, still trying to push the work along. Bro. T. J. Martin, president of the Northern Minnesota district, is now with me in the city. I baptized three last Friday, the 22d; one married lady and two young men. The water was cold, but had a good day. Bro. Martin said it was the nicest baptism he ever saw. Will go back to Irving, the new opening, the last of the week. All is well.

Bro. J. R. Evans, Lucas, Iowa, February 26:—

I arrived home Friday. We had an excellent conference on the 16th and 17th at Guilford, Missouri. All are hopeful of the work in the district; the Lord is certainly blessing his people. I have been greatly blessed in my labors the last year. May the Lord continue his kind favor.

Bro. W. C. Cather, Percilla, Texas:—

There seems to be more or less spiritual distress among the people, and possibly a little suffering on their part will cause them to look more earnestly for the "perfect law of liberty." I am very proud that I am a member to this "marvelous work and wonder" in these latter days. Trials will come to us all, to test our faith. We should not magnify them, but go to God in prayer, remembering that God will have a tried people.

Bro. Levi Phelps, Grand Rapids, Michigan, February 27:—

I baptized two last Sunday who have been seeking truth for years, but were not satisfied until they heard the restored gospel. By what I have been told I expect we will soon have to trouble the waters again. The interest is increasing and we feel encouraged to continue the work here.

Bro. W. S. Macrae, Okarche, Oklahoma, the 27th ult.:—

Bro. J. D. Erwin is to meet Rev. J. M. Hendrickson of the M. E. Church in an eight nights' discussion of the faith of the two churches, at El Reno. Great interest is being taken and we expect much to be gained.

Bro. C. Scott, Eagle Grove, Iowa, March 1:—

At the late conference of the Des Moines district, their committee of inquiry on location of reunion for Southeastern Iowa was continued. I would suggest that if other adjacent districts have appointed similar committees, the members of such committees as may attend the General Conference arrange to hold a meeting while there to take the matter under advisement. I came here from Perry the 16th ult. Have held services at Head Grove church and the Fountain schoolhouse. Much sickness among the children—whooping cough and mumps, but notwithstanding this and the muddy roads (from melting snow), the interest has been fairly good. The baptismal waters have been troubled twice, four having been added to the church here; all from the Lutheran Church. Bro. Eli Hayer baptized three of them, I the other. I go south in the district after Sunday, March 3.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In this issue we begin a report of the White-Braden discussion, written by Bro. C. R. Duncan. We wrote Bro. White before the discussion began, requesting a report of the main features of the debate. He has put it in good hands and the report promises to be full of interest throughout. We are glad the right was victorious and we thank Brn. White and Duncan for the account. We take this opportunity to renew request of the brethren to furnish us news, and promptly, that the HERALD readers may be kept posted on what is transpiring. Accounts should be brief or full, according to their importance. The main points, without unnecessary detail, are all that are necessary.

Bro. E. N. Beach, of Flora Vista, New Mexico, writes requesting us to state that there is a favorable opening there for any of the brethren with means to erect a merchantable grist mill. It would be patronized by a large farming country well populated, whose people are now dependent on Durango, Colorado, for their market, and who are obliged to haul their grain thirty to one hundred miles, sell for low prices, and pay high prices for flour, etc., with a long haul home, etc. Address Bro. Beach if interested.

Bro. J. C. Crabb is in the Nauvoo and String Prairie district doing work for the cause. His righteous soul is moved to strong disgust by the acts and speech of one Dr. Bronson of the First Methodist Church of Burlington; with but a small chance to refute the reverend gentleman. Patience, Bro. James, patience, the Lord's time will come by and by.

We are obliged to epitomize many of the letters we receive, and to leave out many others, so many are being sent us. All are in their way interesting, but we cannot print all, when received; and the next mail crowds them further out of date.

Bro. J. A. Stromberg, writing from the Alms House, San Francisco, February 7, is of the opinion that it is almost, if not quite useless to spend labor at that institution, people are so set in their ways "learned aforetime." He has pleaded by voice, the word, and tracts to awaken an interest, but all to little or no purpose; and will now move on to some other spot, where possibly he may have better opportunity.

Bro. J. I. Young was at Merwin, Missouri, the 23d ult. He had failed to get an opening at La Cygne, Kansas. The people did not need "doctrine;" old things had passed away and all things "become new." Some prospect of a discussion there with a Christian minister. Bro. Young has been laboring constantly in new fields since last October.

By clipping from the Woodbine, Iowa, Twinner of the 23d inst. we learn that Bro. J. W. Wight had been holding meetings there "with the best of interest." He had been called to Moorhead by the death of a relative.

Bro. John Pottorff writes from Eldon, Iowa, some twelve miles down the Des Moines River below Ottumwa. He has been requested to get an elder to come there to preach some. Will Bro. J. C. Crabb please take notice.

Bro. Thomas G. Whipple, Norwich, Connecticut, writes February 6, breezily. Prospects good in that region but not dazzlingly bright. It is all right, Bro. Whipple, the Lord's will only will be served at the outcome.

Bro. D. L. Harris, of San Bernardino, California, was rained in at Fall Brook, California, and reports the few noble souls settled there and at San Jacinto as being strong in the faith.

There is a little band of Saints at Grand Rapids, Michigan, whom Bro. Levi Phelps has been aiding since last November with the result that some have been baptized and others probably will be. Of this Sr. Z. M. Stephenson wrote the 24th inst., a good letter that we regret to omit.

Bro. F. J. Updyke, Greenwood, New York, writes of "many friends" made to the cause by Brn. Robinson and Powell. Certainly very many are becoming friendly to the church, and that friendship is telling and will continue to tell in its augmenting strength for good.

Those interested in the Ohio district conference should read the notice of Bro. Chas. Cooper, this issue.

President Joseph Smith left home on the 28th ult., for Webb City, Missouri, to attend the March conference of the Spring River district.

Honolulu papers sent us by Bro. G. J. Waller show that the government is dealing promptly and effectively with those who opposed it in the late uprising. Affairs were somewhat disturbed but were daily becoming more settled.

Bro. Heman C. Smith held services at Leon, Iowa, on Sunday, the 3d inst.; Bro. J. R. Lambert at Davis City, Iowa; and Brn. J. H. Hansen and M. B. Williams at Lamoni, the same date.

A dictionary holder is almost a necessity to the average student or literary worker. While one can get along without it, it is certainly a loss of time and an inconvenience to do so. Mr. L. W. Noyes, 12th Rockwell, and Fillmore streets, Chicago, manufactures an excellent, substantial holder with book shelf, that we find a great convenience. It is strong, made of iron, and saves much wear and tear upon that heavy volume—the Dictionary. Price $3.00 each. Address the manufacturer as above.

Negotiations are said to be on foot in Italy and Germany to obtain Russia's adherence to the triple alliance.

Li Hung Chang has been empowered to conduct peace negotiations for China with Japan.

HELPING HAND.

SYNOPSIS OF READING, CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE, HINTS ON CHILD-TRAINING.

DEALING TENDERLY WITH A CHILD'S FEARS.

THE very best of children may be full of fears; and in order that his fears may not gain permanent control of him the child who is thus fearful needs careful handling. Fears are of a child's very nature, and the question of how to deal wisely, firmly, and tenderly with these fears is an important one in child-training.

Fears are no sign of weakness in a child. As a rule, the stronger a child is in all that will make a well-balanced and admirable character, the more fears he will meet in the exercise of his character. Hence, a child's fears are worthy of respect and call for tender treatment instead of ridicule or severity.

"Fear" is not "cowardice." Fear is a keen perception of dangers, real or imaginary. Cowardice is a refusal to brave the dangers which the fears recognize. Fear is a moral attribute of humanity. Cowardice is a moral lack. A brave child or man may have more fears than the veriest coward. The one is successful in striving against many fears; the other yields to the first fear that besets him.

To say truthfully of a child, "He does not know what fear is," is not to the child's credit. A child ought to know what fear is. The soldier who is not quick to see and recognize danger on every hand cannot fully realize the necessities of the hour and the demands upon him. Hence, the best soldier is likely to be the most fearful. The apostle said, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." It might be said, Let him who has no fears have a care lest he fall from lack of fears.

A child has different kinds of fears and they need to be differently dealt with. Some of a child's fears come by reasoning, some are apart from any reasoning, and some are in the realm of fancy and imagination. Every child has some measure of each kind of fears, but one has more of one kind, another more of another kind.

A child who has fallen or been otherwise hurt in making some attempt, is liable to be afraid to make another effort in the same direction. "A burnt child dreads the fire." That is a reasonable fear. Again there are fears which have a basis of reality, though they are not the result of reasoning. A child shrinks from trusting himself to strangers: he trembles at a loud noise; is fearful of sounds made by the wind; of thunder and of lightning, even though he knows nothing of harm from the electric bolt. Again a child is afraid in the darkness, or of "ghosts" and "goblins" of which others have told him. In this case his fear is caused through his imagination. It would be absurd to think that all these fears call for exactly the same treatment. It is necessary to consider how to deal with each class of fears by itself.

If a child had no fear of falling, no fear of fire or water, of edged tools or machinery, or of a moving vehicle, he would obviously be lacking in sense. Yet some children are much more timid than others in the presence of personal danger. One child is unduly cautious, another unduly venturesome. The timidest child can be brought to overcome largely his fears of physical harm. Among primitive peoples, children are taught to swim before they can walk; to climb as soon as they can stand. Also, circus managers train civilized children to feats of daring agility. How to train a child to master his feelings in this line, without the cruelty of savages or professional athletes, is worthy the attention of every wise parent.

Fears which are the result of reasoning ought to be removed by a process of reasoning. A child ought not to be beaten or threatened or ridiculed into overcoming his fears, but rather encouraged and directed through showing him that they can and ought to be overcome. His fears are not unworthy of him. The meeting and surmounting of fears is worthy of a child. He ought to be helped to see this, and kindly cheered and sympathized with in his efforts to overcome.

Many a child has been trained to intelligent fearlessness, as far as he ought to be fearless, through the wise and tender treatment of his parents in showing him that he could overcome, and stimulating him to strive to do so. And many another child has given up the attempt to overcome his fears because of untimely ridicule. If he must be a laughing stock while struggling to overcome he will give up the struggle to evade the ridicule.

Instinctive fears are common to the brightest and the dullest children. They are given to humanity as guards for its own protection. It would never do for a child to trust all persons alike. He needs to be capable of starting at a sudden sound, and of standing in awe of the great forces of nature. A child must learn to meet these fears through understanding what is their reasonable limit, and by acting accordingly. It is the parent's part to train the child to know how far to overcome and how far to give play to his fears. And for this the parent needs tenderness, patience, and wisdom.

When a child shows fear at the rattling and moaning sounds made by wind on a winter's night, it is not fair to say, "O, nonsense! What are you afraid of? That's nothing but the wind." That does not help the child, but it may harm him from lack of sympathy. If instead the parent says, "Does that sound trouble you? Let me tell you how it comes," and then goes on to show how the wind drives away sickness, and that it sometimes makes sweet music on wires stretched for it to play upon, the child may gain a new thought about the wind, and learn to listen for its changing sounds.

To quiet his fear of thunder, a little boy was told by his mother that it was the voice of God. At the next peal he cried, "Mamma, baby doesn't like God's voice." He was not old enough to find any comfort in the thought and his mother did not rebuke him. A father whose little daughter was afraid of thunder carried her out on the piazza during a thunderstorm to see something very beautiful, as he said. He told her that the clouds were making loud music, and that he wanted her to watch for the music and for the light that always flashed just before it. His tender way and his enthusiasm made the little one forget her fears to think of the wonders of nature. Soon she could listen with reverent gratitude to the thunder as if to the voice of God. Children would have fewer unmastered fears to trouble themselves and others if parents dealt with them with more of such loving wisdom.

Fears of the imagination are the hardest to control; and they call for the greatest tenderness of treatment. The most sensitive children, those of largest imagination, will suffer most from these fears. Cold-blooded matter of fact persons are scarcely able to sympathize with them. Hence, these fears are less likely to receive consideration though they need it the most.

These fears cannot be removed by reason. They are of the imagination and must be mastered through imagination. It is children who suffer from them most keenly, but manhood is not always free from them.

A child may be trained to go alone in the darkness, or to sleep away from others without overcoming his fears. He may remain as timid as ever and suffer in silence because his fears are always regarded as being unworthy of him. In most cases it would be better not to send a sensitive child for a lonely walk in the evening, nor to force him to sleep beyond easy call of others of the household. It is always right and wise for the parent to sympathize with a child in his fears.

The best of helps to a child in overcoming fears of imagination is found through the imagination in a sense of the constant presence of a Divine Protector. A little child awakened in the night and called to her parents in another room. When her father came to her she told him that she was afraid. He did not rebuke her, but told her of a verse in the Bible which he said was meant for her at such times. It is what David said to the Lord, his Shepherd: "What time I am afraid I will trust in thee." He told her to say it over as a loving prayer whenever she was afraid, and the Good Shepherd would hear and take care of her. She repeated the words and then her father prayed and she was helped to realize how near God was to her in her time of fear. She never forgot the verse and it always helped her in her fears.

A child's imagination should be shielded from unnecessary fears through foolish stories told by others or read from improper books. But whether a child's fears be few or many, they should be tenderly dealt with; not ignored nor rudely overborne.

WILMETTE, Illinois.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—Though I think I will address more particularly those who are apart from any branch of the church. I want to tell you of a meeting I have had at my house recently.

For a long time I had thought I would invite some who were interested, and have a mothers' meeting, and perhaps there would be those who would like to meet once a month afterward. I talked with some about it, and all thought it would be pleasant as well as profitable; so we had the meeting the last week in January. Both the ministers announced it for me, and I spoke to any I saw, and there was a very good attendance, though the weather was extremely cold.

Dr. Marie Olsen, a physician with whom I am acquainted in Chicago, came out and gave an informal talk on "social purity," after which the ladies asked questions, and all took part in a discussion of the subject. All were quite pleased with the meeting, and it will, I hope, lead to more meetings later.

If a speaker is not available for an opening meeting, there are many good articles in the Home Column, Autumn Leaves, and the leaflets that will do just as well. The "Christmas Talk with Mothers" I thought very good indeed, and it would make an interesting reading. Most mothers will take an interest in a meeting of this kind, though there may be some few who do not see the importance of serious thought on these questions. A great many have not thought much about it at all, and only need an awakening to a realization of the importance of teaching their children in this direction.

A lady who has been a school-teacher said to me: "Any school-teacher knows that children learn twice as much at school as at home; so why should they not be properly taught at home, instead of hearing things in an improper and an impure manner, away from home. I think that if children were taught at home to look upon these things as sacred, they would be less apt to talk about them to their playmates."

Mothers say to me that they would not know where to begin, or what to teach, and I felt that way at first; but I concluded only to answer each question as it was asked, and then only so far as I thought they would be able to understand, and later to explain to them more fully. Some of the helps that I have had, are, "The Song of Life," by Margaret Warner Morley, and "A Father's Advice to His Son," and "A Mother's Advice to Her Daughter," little leaflets from the Murray-Hill Publishing Company, Boston. These I have read to the boys, and some of the sweetest experiences I have ever had with them, have been in these little private talks, and I am sure every mother will find it so.

I long ago came to the conclusion that life is too real, too earnest, not to be doing something to help; and let me tell you that the very best way to get interested in any work, is to have a part in it.

"The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," and each must work for the advancement of righteousness wherever he is, as the children sing, "You in your small corner, and I in mine."

I think wherever there is a branch of the church there ought to be an organization of the Daughters of Zion. Where there is no organization, try these mothers' meetings. I am sure much good can be done in this way.

Something is always to be gained by an interchange of ideas on any subject, and I know mothers can be a great help to one another, if they are earnestly desirous of being useful in this way. You will certainly feel happy and blessed in putting forth an effort to help mothers, and for the advancement of purity among children. Your sister,

HORTENSE SELTON CRAMER.

LAMONI, Iowa.

On Sunday, evening February 3, Bro. Joseph Smith addressed the branch on the duties of branch officers and members. He said that the principle underlying the duty of each was that of service, of doing good to each other.

After defining the duties of each branch officer and giving much good instruction by which all might be benefited, he said that one great mistake which the church had been making for the last thirty four years was in waiting to be commanded in everything. The Lord has placed in man the power to do good, and he ought to exercise this power.

Besides the officers "set" in the church, there are "helps and governments." Among the helps we have the Sunday school. It has been thought by some that because he (Bro. Joseph) had not said a great deal about the Sunday school work, that he did not approve of it. He said, "I indorse it from first to last. Anything that is for the benefit and instruction of the children is good. It seems to be the impression with some that there was no Sunday school in the old church. I stand here as a witness that there was. I was a member of a class of sixty boys, taught by Bro. Almon Babbitt, and I there gained some wholesome instruction. Let the brethren and sisters who are engaged in this work of the Sunday school, labor with zeal, and do all they can toward establishing righteousness.

"I also indorse the Zion's Religio-Literary Society. I indorse the Daughters of Zion.

And to those who think that there is no commandment for these things, let me say that there is. They are provided for in the spirit of the law. The power is in you to do good, it is your privilege to exercise it, and it is expected of you that you will do so. As a matter of course, put forth your efforts to keep out evil and to build up righteousness."

ONE WHO IS ANXIOUS TO HELP.

THOSE BABY FEET.

NO SOUND is sweeter to the parent's heart than the patter of baby feet. No silence is more oppressive than that unbroken by accustomed footfalls. And yet, how baby's feet are neglected and abused. I am speaking not of the infant in long clothes, but the toddler of one year and up to seven, but especially under seven years of age.

One need not be very observant, nor have a wide field to see illustrations of what I saw not very long since:—

A mother warmly clothed, thick, arctic overshoes encasing her feet and ankles; by her side, a dainty mite of humanity, possibly four years old, well cloaked, well capped, but on the tiny feet only the soft kid baby shoes. Nothing between the tender feet and the ice-cold pavement but a paper sole. And hark! hear that hollow, hacking cough. Dire omen that a breach has been made in the loved one's health. It entered through the feet for otherwise the little one was well protected, unless perchance there should have been a veil over face and ears, for the day was bitter cold, though sunny.

Many a catarrh, many a severe deafness, many a consumption, many a case of croup, many an acute attack of lung, throat, or bowel trouble has this cause, and this cause only to thank for its existence.

Let this be your maxim who have the care of young children, wherever economy must pinch, let it be elsewhere than on feet and limbs. Let it be a calico dress summer and winter if needs must, but let wool encase the body from ankle to neck, and let warm though mayhap coarse footwear protect the feet.

True, many a child of poverty goes with nearly bare feet in the depth of winter and perhaps escapes consumption and catarrh, but one exception does not make a rule. The child of poverty is short lived as a rule, and forms no guide for those able to care for their children as they should be.

While the question of children's footwear is under consideration another point comes to mind; namely, the matter of fit.

While the question of warmth and wearing qualities no doubt deserve first consideration, the fit should be as near perfect as possible. Corns, ingrowing toe nails, bunions, enlarged big toe joints are many times started by ill-fitting shoes bought by our elders, when our protests that "they hurt" were entirely disregarded or laid to childish petulance.

Hardly one person in fifty reaches maturity without some deformity of the feet. This is sad, nor is it necessary, for it is avoidable even though few can afford shoes made to order, if only a little care be taken. Whatever other failing the shoe may have, secure three points: let it be long enough, wide enough, and just right around the ankle to insure a little support without in any degree interfering with the circulation.—A. A. Whitfield, M. D.

NOTICE.

WE hereby remind the local societies of the Daughters of Zion that we desire to hear from each at the convention to be held at Independence during the time of the General Conference. To this end please instruct your secretaries to report before April 1, to Sr. Callie B. Stebbins, Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

A SISTER who, for good reasons does not wish her name to appear, earnestly requests your faith and prayers in behalf of her daughter, who has become cold and indifferent in the work, that she may return to her former faithfulness and be fitted to do the work she was told by the Spirit she should do, if faithful.

Sr. L. M. Walters, of Denver, Colorado, requests your faith and prayers in behalf of her husband, who is sorely afflicted.

Bro. J. R. Cook, of Sacramento, California, asks your faith and prayers in his behalf that his health may be restored so that he may be permitted to enter the ministry.

BEGINNINGS OF CANCER.—Dr. Robert Boyce (London Lancet), calls attention to the relationships that exist between irritation and cancer. The precancerous stage of cancer itself often due to some local irritant, is something too much neglected. Especially is this true in reference to lingual irritation from defective teeth which form a simple psoriasis but too often ends in cancer. Dr. Boyce suggests that animal parasites may arouse by their long irritating presence, pre-cancerous, and even cancerous changes, giving as examples coccidia, distoma, bilharzia and the echinococcus.—Nat. Pop. Review.

SHEFFIELD, England, Jan. 28.

Editors Herald:—I was much stimulated this morning in reading the Herald for January 16; for a traveler might as well be in—well, hades, as deprived of reading the Saints' Herald.

How cheering to learn that the Evanelia had glided over the bosom of the great deep and safely arrived at her destination! And how many hearts will be drawn out in fervent prayer to God as the conference minutes from the Tahitians are read, for the enduring, patient, and persevering Bro. and Sr. Devore, who have suffered so much for the gospel's sake; not forgetting Brn. William Newton and J. W. Gilbert, nor the brethren who are battling for the right amid many difficulties in far-off Australia!

But while the Herald brings so much comfort, it not infrequently conveys sorrowful events, but how can it be otherwise in this lower estate? I readily and freely offer my condolence to Bro. and Sr. Griffiths in their great bereavement and distress, and I am sure I may so speak in behalf of the Saints in England and Wales. God bless and keep them, that after life's struggles they may enjoy a blessed reunion with their loved ones in the resurrection of the just. And, though it may not tend in this the time of their distress to effectively assuage their grief, yet the thought that in the interim their departed ones will be safe, and better cared for, may greatly tend to make their inexpressible grief tolerable. May it be so.

On Sunday, January 20, the rain poured down, and during the ensuing week cold, with snow squalls, slippery streets and sidewalks, or causeways. The 27th: snow, snow, so that the hills and vales of Sheffield are covered with a snowy garment, and the streets present a lively scene with householders, shopkeepers, etc., scraping and sweeping sidewalks, some of whom for the benefit of pedestrians spread salt and sawdust in front of their several doorways, that their feet slide not. Yet while perambulating the hilly streets of Sheffield there have been many slips and not a few falls measuring the sidewalks at full length quicker than ye editors could wink. Whether I write understandingly on this point or otherwise, to the reader it mattereth not.

My visit to Wales has been deferred, to attend a Sheffield district gathering; but all being well I set my face thitherward on the 31st. Snowstorms in England are general, Wales not escaping. The necessity for a vigorous prosecution of the work this side of the Atlantic, whether men hear or forbear, is apparent. He who is untiring in duty's path need not worry as to results, for God is at the helm, and all is well and will so remain in Zion, with all who mean well.

Thanks to Bro. Scott for his report of the Braden-Scott debate. It was both cheering and instructive. May he, and all our rising young men, be blessed with prolongation of years, many of whom are coming nobly to the front in the stupendous latter-day work. Thank the good Lord, both England and Wales have some such who are now thrusting in the sickle as circumstances admit with effect; and I believe that when finances will permit some will be ready to devote their whole time in the great harvest field. But I must stop.

MENOKEN, Kan., Feb. 16.

Editors Herald:—I am here, acting as moderator in a discussion between my son, J. Arthur Davis, and Mr. R. L. Moody, of the Christian Church, on the indentification of their churches with the New Testament church. We have had four sessions in which our church was under trial, and came out all right. We have four more sessions to try the Christian Church.

The circumstance that led to this is, Bro. G. W. Shute came here to visit his daughter, and obtained the Christian church to preach in, which resulted in the baptism of three—his daughter, her husband, and the deacon of the Christian church. Forthwith they "dug up the hatchet" and were on the "war path." We put the matter off as much as we could in order to get the gospel before the people. They hoped we were afraid to meet them and they urged the matter the more. Finally we turned around and gave them battle.

Both Mr. Ingalls, pastor of the Christian church at North Topeka, and Mr. Moody refused to accept Clark Braden as authority on the doctrines of their church, stating that he was not in harmony with the Christian Church. What will the editor of the Christian Evangelist say to this? A house divided against itself will not stand.

The Disciples here kick fearfully; they are not used to the harness. They will cool down and feel better we hope. All we aim at is to give the gospel of peace to mankind. Our conference at Netawaka on the ninth and tenth inst. passed off peacefully.

In best of bonds,

J. T. DAVIS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Feb. 23.

Editors Herald:—Our meeting has closed for the present, and Bro. Joseph has gone home, and the visible fruits of the meeting have been encouraging and seed sown that I think will bring a rich harvest in the future.

Our worthy President during his short sojourn here has left an excellent impression on the minds of those without, and the branch has received a fresh impetus to stand by its noble young pastor. I hardly know wherein lies Bro. Joseph's power. That God does bless him in preaching, there can be no doubt; but there is an indefinable power about him that impresses the hearers that he is sincere and has their welfare at heart. While his oratorical power is not great, yet there is a peculiar power about his preaching which brings his hearers, so to speak, en rapport with him, so that he holds them at close attention until the close of his argument. Bro. Williams also possesses this power in a very marked degree.

Now, dear Saints, another thing we should remember is that our beloved President is no longer the strong, virile man of a few years ago, but is growing old, and the natural powers are growing feebler, and he needs in increased measure our love, prayers, and support; and as he goes down the western slope of life, let us hold up his hands and pray God that he may yet be spared to us very many years.

Our prospects in this city are bright, and if we can only keep Bro. Williams this year we will almost take this city for the blessed Master. I pray God that this may be a fruitful year for the latter-day work, and for this let us all work and pray.

Yours in hope,

J. S. STRAIN.

CENTER JUNCTION, Iowa, Feb. 22.

Editors Herald:—Quite early last spring the attention of the people some eight miles west of Osterdock, in a vicinity known as "Updegraff Ridge," was called to our work by a brief series of meetings held by Brn. William Kephart and J. W. Peterson. Quite an interest was awakened, as also in a neighborhood near known as Elk Creek, by the former of these two brethren following the meeting referred to. At the latter place, and others near, the writer visited again in June last. The interest taken in the work warranted a promise of return, which was made good in October and November, Bro. J. R. Sutton joining in the work for a short time, the first series of length being in Edge-wood, some twenty miles west of Osterdock. At the close of this (a tent meeting) the writer returned to the Elk Creek neighborhood, where he was a second time kindly received by the good people who ministered to his wants and made their houses his home while among them; holding there a series of twenty-five meetings. From here we were invited to the ridge, the place of Bro. Peterson's effort in the spring, and held a two weeks' meeting, with an increasing interest. At this several were in attendance from an adjacent neighborhood known as the Wagman Valley, who were so anxious to have meetings there that by vote of consent on the part of the people of the ridge, willing to share the spiritual feast with their neighbors, the remaining time till the holidays was given to the new field. Here also the Lord blessed his work, and the little schoolhouse was filled to overflowing, thirty-eight listening outside in a mild evening in December. At both places the meeting was closed with a promise to return.

On the night of January 31 Bro. J. S. Roth, missionary in charge and presiding elder of the Eastern Iowa district, with the writer, began the third series in the schoolhouse on the ridge.

The congregation and interest increasing, we were soon invited to occupy the M. E. church one mile east, whither we removed with our congregation, holding a little over two weeks with a spacious house, well seated, literally packed. There will certainly be an ingathering of souls in this region ere long. Many from the valley were again in attendance. Many who had not attended any of the previous meetings were present and seemed much interested. Again the meeting closed too soon, as we were called to administer to the sick; and again a promise to return directly after our district conference. Thanks are due to the good people of both ridge and valley for the kindness received at their hands, in which the friends in Edgewood and at Wood Center should not be forgotten.

We confidently expect to see a strong branch organized, including members all the way from Osterdock to Edgewood. God speed the day.

Yours in gospel work,
O. B. THOMAS.

MILLERSBURG, Ill., Feb. 15.

Editors Herald:—Our conference at Kewanee on the 2d was one of the very best it has been my good fortune to attend. Unity of the Spirit brought order, peace, happiness, intelligence, and multiform blessings in the various sessions. The district appears to be in a better condition than for many years heretofore. This healthy growth and steady development is largely due to the efficient labor and wise counsel of our worthy brother in charge, F. G. Pitt. The next term is to convene at Peoria the first Saturday in June, as per urgent request. The few Saints in that great city feel encouraged I believe.

There are many places in this vast domain, that should receive attention and labor. Effectual doors seem ajar, but laborers are "few and far between." The Saints are sacrificing not only their means somewhat, but evil habits are being eliminated. More patience and forbearance, more pity and pardon, more faith, hope, and charity are in active demand and forthcoming; therefore all along the line we are blessed.

With gratefulness for all mercies past and with confidence for returning good, we feel to press on in order to obtain the prize. I haste to close for the afternoon mail but not till I pray the Lord to bless the children of the holy covenant.

M. T. SHORT.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 16.

Editors Herald:—We have attracted some attention at Silver Mine, Broad River, Norwalk, and South Norwalk, Connecticut. After three weeks labor and the baptism of five adults at Broad River, Rev. Robbins, the Baptist minister, undertook to correct my theology under the announcement "Rebaptizing and laying on of hands;" advertising his subject in the papers, which drew a large audience, as well as the Parsons to hear this matter treated from a Baptist-gospel-position. Assertions outside of the lesson read were all we were privileged to hear. I submit a few of his sayings, although nothing new:—

"I have come to look after my sheep." "A disturber is among them." "He has sneaked into my back yard and stolen some of my sheep, preaching false doctrine." "I have the Holy Ghost without the laying on of hands." "Such nonsense; he would have you believe that the thousands of Christians have not the Holy Ghost, because they have not hands laid on them!" "The one hundred and fifty I have converted; he says they are not converted; must be baptized again; if not they will go to hell." Many other things he said, but this will suffice.

After he concluded I asked the privilege of speaking a few words for myself, but was informed I could not in that house. However, I challenged the Rev. Robbins to meet the proposition of the "laying on of hands" in a public discussion. He treated it with silent contempt. I announced that I would review him, in the schoolhouse just across the street. He closed his criticism by saying, "Let him [Parsons] into my church? No! Sooner let the itch in."

I inclose extracts from the different papers which indicate which way the wind blows in that section. A lot is offered free to build a church on, and some money; and a number are ready for baptism, so I am informed. A better opening for gospel work I have not found for some time. I have reviewed the last two articles that came out in the Sentinel and News, daily papers, and asked them for space to be heard; and am waiting results.

Conference convenes here to-day week; after which I return to Norwalk, where I expect to continue the conflict. Bro. Kent is missed very much, especially here in the city where he had endeared himself to them by his wise, fatherly counsel. "May he be returned," is the cry of the Philadelphians.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, Feb. 16.

Editors Herald:—This is an evening long to be remembered by the Saints at Pleasant Grove, as Bro. H. N. Hansen preaches the first sermon in our neat little chapel which we have struggled so hard to build, that God's word may be taught without having a concert or monkey show going on in the adjoining room. Our little church is not yet finished, but it will answer the purpose until the Lord opens the way for its completion. We have received with thankfulness, all donations from Saints and friends scattered through the land. It is surprising to see the sacrificing some of God's children are willing to do. One sister, a widow with seven children to support, sent in her mite. Also a sister whose husband was paralyzed, and all depended upon herself. May the Lord stand by them in every hour of need, is the ardent wish and the fervent prayer of the Saints here. May he richly reward all those who have remembered us here among rebellious Israel. We have need to be remembered in more ways than one. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters, while there is yet hope for this people here, among whom the writer has many dear relatives and friends. Sometimes I think the ice is melting, although Jack Frost is doing some artistic work these days—I mean the Brighamite ice.

February 6; Sister Permelia Sterrett's birthday. The old people had a party in the schoolhouse; she was invited, as she had been every year before. This time, however, she felt impressed to go, so accepted the invitation. The Bishop's brother came after her in his sleigh. Bro. H. B. Sterrett was called upon for a speech on which he was complimented several times, they saying it was the best of all. Srs. Charlotte Richins and Lizzie Sterrett were doing their parts well in their respective committees, and altogether were treated the very best by our Brighamite brethren and sisters, and an enjoyable time was had all the way round, the crowning feature being that Bro. Hansen was placed at the head of the long row of tables spread with necessaries and delicacies of life, and asked the Father's blessing upon all. Now comes the funny part. All those above sixty years of age were presented with a sack of candy. Perhaps Bro. Hansen will explain to you how he came in possession of one. Bro. Anthony was expected here to-night, but for some reason failed to come. With best wishes for our weekly visitor, Your sister,

HELENA STERRETT.

HUTCHISON, Colo., Feb. 20.

Editors Herald:—Since our debate at Denver the Kemp-Admire discussion has been concluded. Bro. Kemp produced an abundance of scripture to prove our position on the three propositions; viz., soul and Sabbath questions, and church identity with New Testament Scripture. Both disputants were courteous and polite throughout the debate. Elder Admire has had considerable experience in debate and is quite adroit in presenting his side of the question. The Saints are strengthened in the belief that Sunday is the Christian Sabbath and that the soul is immortal.

At a business meeting, held February 18, the Rocky Mountain branch was fully organized as follows: President, James Kemp; priest, Thomas Nutt; teacher, Peter Case. Bro. Joseph Kemp was ordained to the office of deacon. Six were added to the branch, others are to follow. This branch is now in good working order and our meetings are well attended.

Bro. James Kemp and I have been holding meetings in Evergreen. Mr. Frank Hines, a merchant and Justice of the Peace furnished a commodious hall, lighted and seated, free of charge. The interest is good. We shall endeavor to supplement the work begun with a series of meetings. I think the work in Colorado is in fair condition. The Denver branch is prospering nicely under the care of Bro. Shupe.

Yours respectfully,
F. J. CHATBURN.

FREDONIA, Ind., Feb. 21.

Editors Herald:—After a brief sojourn at home during the holidays, I bade adieu to family and friends on the 5th inst., and returned to my field of labor, where I arrived on the 7th, my first objective point being Derby, where we held our district conference, February 9-11. This is thirty miles from Eckerty where I left the train, and over the ruggedest, rockiest, and hilliest road that I know anything of in the State. Having no conveyance and no money to hire a rig we started on foot with our grips facing one of the worst blizzards that ever swept over this country. (This will just meet the mind of some Saints I heard in the prayer meeting at Lamoni before I left home.)

Bro. L. F. Daniel was with me on this journey. The second day out at three p. m., I was overcome with fatigue and stopped with Bro. Isaac Sardage till next morning, seven miles from the place of conference. Bro. Daniel being possessed of more physical endurance pushed on and reached the conference ground shortly after sundown, accompanied by Bro. Columbus Maymon. I was out the next morning early and reached the place of meeting in good time.

The attendance was small,—four of the missionaries and the nearest local officers being present; but quite a good report by letter of both elders and branches. Nothing of importance occurred except the ordination of Bro. C. S. Barmore to the office of priest. One or two parliamentary questions were discussed and delegates chosen to represent the district in General Conference. We met in peace and love and closed in the same. After conference Bro. L. F. Daniel took Bro. Chas. Barmore and went to Rome where they broke the bread of life nearly a week with good results. I took A. C. Barmore and went to Derby. Here we had a splendid time, many being interested. We parted yesterday, Bro. Daniel going back to his field in Central Indiana. He will preach on his journey at Lilly Dale and Oakland City and at some points in Davis county. Bro. A. C. Barmore going to Winslow and surrounding country. I and James Baggerly came here last evening where he had effected an opening early in the winter. We have the use of the brick church, the only one in the place. This is the place where twenty-five years ago I taught vocal music. Many of the friends of former days have moved away, but there are a few here now. There seems to be quite a good spirit of inquiry manifest among the people, as prejudice and tradition are certainly on the decline. Sr. Henrietta Baggerly is convalescing and I soon hope to see V. D. out in his field.

At work,

I. P. BAGGERLY.

BELL RIVER, Mich., Feb. 14.

Editors Herald:—On the 8th inst. by direction of J. A. Grant, district president, I came to this place to assist Bro. William Davis. On my arrival I found him hale and hearty, with gospel work booming. The whole surrounding country here is ablaze with the gospel. For the last week the schoolhouse has been packed to its very utmost capacity, with sleigh loads going away that could not obtain even standing room. This is a new field, and to my mind means a rich harvest of golden sheaves. The Presbyterian people at Grayling have offered to pay my fare to their little city and give me their church to preach in if I will come; I expect to go. The Saints at North Branch have been so fortunate as to rent a suitable church building for forty dollars a year. All these places are new fields for the gospel as restored by the angel.

ADMINISTERING THE SACRAMENT.

IN April, 1893, the Twelve and Seventy adopted the following resolution:—

Resolved, That we go upon record as believing that the act of conveying the emblems to those partaking forms a part of the work of 'administering the sacrament,' and under the law, neither teachers, deacons, nor laity, have right to serve in that capacity.—Conference Minutes, pp. 68, 71.

This action was had by each quorum in its own capacity, after which it was reported to the body. It had been referred to the Twelve from England. The First Presidency were invited to be present and take part in the discussion, and they were present and took part. No disrespect was intended, and I believe none was manifested. I call attention to the foregoing facts lest some should be misled because of the lack of needed information.

It should be borne in mind also that up to the date of the passage of the above resolution, no official decision had been rendered on the matters involved, either by President Joseph Smith, or by the First Presidency as a quorum; but even if there had been such decision rendered, would that exclude the Twelve, or First Quorum of Seventy from the privilege of taking the matter up and deciding upon it for themselves? I think not. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.) President Joseph Smith's answers to queries, as cited by a late writer, reflect the views held by the editor of the Herald, but must not be regarded as official decisions of the President of the Church, as the First Presidency have informed us.

In a communication from the First Presidency to the Twelve, dated at Lamoni, Iowa, March 29, 1890, occurs the following plain statements:—

It must be borne in mind that the editorials of the Herald are the acts and opinions of the editor of the Herald stated and done at the time of their occurrence according to the place, condition and circumstances obtaining, and are not the official declarations of the Presidency, either one or both; and that the editors are responsible for their editorial utterances as editors of the Herald, for which they are ready to answer.

JOSEPH SMITH,
W. W. BLAIR,
Presidency.

The above quotation is sufficient to show that there was no impropriety in the Twelve and Seventy passing upon the matter involved in the resolution referred to at the head of this article; and that when the resolution was adopted no opposition was had to the President or First Presidency of the church.

If, as it is claimed, conveying the emblems to the communicants is not necessarily any part of the administration as commanded in the Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22, 23, then, clearly, there is no law providing how, or by whom the emblems shall be dispensed. This is directly and virtually conceded. Is it correct, then, to say that the expressed belief of the Twelve and Seventy, in the form of a resolution, conflicting to some extent with previously expressed opinions of the editor of the Herald is "a serious . . . conflict?"

Let us look at it in another way. We are acting under the light and authority of the restored gospel. If there is no provision in the law which has been given to us for the government of the church, stating by whom the emblems shall be dispensed to the members, then, evidently there was no such provision in the law given of God for the government of the primitive church. And if God gave no direction in this matter, neither then nor now, does it not prove that he was not at all particular as to how, or by whom, the emblems should be dispensed? In this case the practice which is said to have been general in the first three centuries of the Christian era, viz., the deacons carrying the emblems to the communicants, rested solely upon the authority and wisdom of men. Indeed what more do we want if it forms no part of the administration of the sacrament? Surely if all this be true, we do not need the inspiration of a seer to inform us that the deacon "may" pass the emblems. Let every branch use its own judgment in this matter, being governed wholly by the proprieties and necessities of the occasion.

Further: In the light of the above deductions and the virtual admission that conveying the emblems to the communicants forms no part of the administration provided for in the law, is it not rather inconsistent to affirm that the passage of the above resolution, which is expressive of a different belief, is a very serious matter? Why so serious? It is not with this church as it is with the church of Rome, that is, that "the word of God and tradition" are the proper standards of evidence. I have been laboring under the impression that the grand and practical doctrine of present revelation removed the necessity for being controlled by any other standard, in the government of the church, than the word of God. Am I right?

A careful reading of what the editor of the Herald has said on this subject should convince anyone that the conflict between him and the Twelve and Seventy, on the matter referred to, is not near so great, or serious, as might at first glance appear. He does not claim that it should become the rule for teacher or deacon to dispense the emblems, but that they may if there be a necessity for it. He says:—

It should be borne in mind by those who have volunteered to teach us the revelations on this point, that we distinctly stated in answer to the question that "if occasion required" the deacon might do so and so. If there is no necessity, and can be none, no possible harm can come to the law. David ate the shewbread contrary to law, the disciples violated the Sabbath in plucking the ears of corn and rubbing them in their hands, and Jesus plead the necessity as the law, and it is still good law.

As to what has been the usual custom of the church, the editor of the Herald says:—

The church has met in the various branches and the elders have usually contented themselves with blessing the emblems, and have called priests to do the duty of passing them to the people, if the congregation was large several of them; and we believe that when the priest should be left in charge, or be under the necessity of administering the sacrament, when no elder is present, he may with equal propriety as he might act in passing the emblems to the people when blest by the elder, call a deacon to his aid "if necessity requires."

If the claim made is a correct one, that the Christians of the first three centuries after Christ frequently, and generally, received the emblems directly from the hands of the deacons, as the history of those times shows, then either the Herald editor is wrong in his statement of the usual custom of the church, or there is a conflict between the primitive church and the church of our day. Which is it? And if there is a conflict of practice between the two churches which one shall be our guide? Or, in other words, where shall we go to get our "ruling precedent?"

But it is possible, I think, if not probable, that the title of deacon as used in primitive church history, was applied not only to those whom we call deacons, but also to priests and teachers. The fact that primitive church history is almost silent about those whom we know as priests and teachers, favors such belief. The title of "bishop" is used in this general way, and why not that of deacon? Priests, teachers, and deacons belong to the lower order of priesthood which is an appendage to the higher. They are, therefore, in a general sense, assistants to those holding office in the higher order. The word "deacon" means "ministrant," or "a runner, i. e., servant;" and it is quite likely that when we read of the deacons dispensing the emblems, reference is had to those whom we designate by the specific title of priest. This view makes the history harmonize with the law contained in D. C. 17:11, 22. However, if the history cannot be made to harmonize with the language of the law, it is simply unfortunate for the history.

Now, as to the necessity for teacher or deacon dispensing the emblems, it will, in the very nature of the case, seldom if ever occur. It is admitted that the sacrament cannot be legally administered except by an elder or priest. Very well, such elder or priest can easily distribute the emblems if the branch be small, and if it be large there will more than likely be other priests and elders present. Or, should some unusual event (which is not likely to be the case) leave but one elder or priest at the place of meeting on sacrament day, the celebration of the ordinance can be deferred for one week. Why go beyond the authority and provisions of the law when attempting to define it by resolution, and especially so when even the necessity for such a step is not at all likely to occur?

But, the pertinent and important question is, Is the resolution referred to above, in harmony with the plain statements of the law? The language of the law is,

And the elder or priest shall administer it.

But neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands.—D. C. 17: 22, 11.

The act of administering baptism is not completed until somebody is affected thereby, and the same is true of the laying on of hands; nor can the sacrament be administered until the communicants are affected thereby. Three things are essential: first, an administrator; second the emblems; third the communicants, or those who are to be administered unto. Therefore the administration is not completed until the emblems are distributed to the communicants. We might as well talk about the administration of justice where no individual is except the administrator, as to claim that the blessing of the emblems is a complete administration of the sacrament.

Let us simplify so that the poorest intellect cannot fail to comprehend. Suppose that at the time set for sacrament, no one comes but an elder or a priest, he bringing the emblems with him. Can he administer the sacrament? If not, why? He certainly could bless the emblems.

I am not talking now, about who shall administer, for the law settles that question by confining it to the elders and priests; but the question just now is, What is a complete administration of the sacrament? Can it be had without a distribution of the elements to those partaking? I think not. The words "and after this manner shall he administer it," no more prove that blessing the emblems alone constitutes the administration referred to, in full, than do the words "concerning the manner of baptism," found in the first sentence of paragraph 7, of the same section, prove that a person can be baptized without being immersed; for not one word concerning the mode of baptism is found in this paragraph. If it be said the word "baptism," found in the last sentence, covers the whole ground, I reply, yes, in precisely the same sense that the word "administer" covers the whole ground. The second definition of Webster is the one which properly applies to the word administer. It reads as follows:—

To dispense, as to administer justice or the sacrament.

When the divine Spirit gave this law to the church, God evidently intended to inform us how, so far as necessary, and by whom the emblems were to be blessed and given to the members of the church; and to me, the evident reason why he said nothing about the manner of conveying the emblems to those who were to partake, is because he is willing to leave this to us, as it comes within the easy range of our ability and can in no way affect the efficacy of the administration; but the manner of blessing the emblems, and by whom the whole administration is to be performed, are stated in the law.

It will avail nothing to say that the one who administers frequently has other agents as his assistants, for these other agents must have authority, or permission under the law; and in this case the law says that "the elder or priest shall administer it," but that teachers and deacons have no authority to do so.

The resolution adopted by the Twelve and Seventy is certainly in harmony with all the law we have in the sacred books of the church on the points involved. It is a formal statement of belief which does not say what may or may not be done outside of the provisions of the law, for the necessity for any such statement was not made apparent. It is in harmony with the general usages of the church, so far as I know. I have attended nearly all the General Conferences since 1873, and have been a missionary for the same period of time. Have been present in large and crowded congregations when the sacrament was administered. Have labored more or less in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Dakota, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, and Mississippi; and yet I cannot recall a single instance where either teacher, deacon, or member conveyed the emblems to the communicants! But if these exceptions have occurred, which I do not deny, they establish nothing, and should cut no figure in the passage of a resolution the purpose of which is to aid the church in the administration of the law.

The main position of the editor of the Herald is that "if necessity requires" others than the elder or priest may dispense the emblems; and this position was assumed not in passing a resolution in his quorum, but in answering some queries as editor of the Herald. I am inclined to the belief that such necessity has seldom if ever occurred. When the "necessity" comes upon us it may be well enough to attempt to provide for it; but until then it is better, I think, to confine ourselves to the language and sentiment of the law.

In an "Address to the Priesthood," delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, April 14, 1893, Bro. Joseph Smith stood in his own place as the President and first minister to the church, the place to which God has appointed him, and in which the Saints by vote, all along, have agreed to sustain him; and under the head of "The Sacrament," he made the following statements and gave the following advice:—

WHO MAY PASS THE EMBLEMS.

The Quorums of Twelve and Seventy have passed upon the question whether teachers, or deacons, and laymen can pass the emblems, and we bow in acknowledgment of what they have done; that the partaking of the sacrament consists in the blessing and administering it to the people; and as a consequence that neither teachers nor deacons are recognized in the matter, nor those who are laymembers in the passing of the emblems. This will settle the matter so far as any controversy is concerned, and I advise the brethren to conform to this resolution. It settles the controversy if we do not raise it and urge it ourselves. There is no necessity for that; there is not enough involved in it to have any trouble over. Therefore I accept their finding, and I believe that it is better that we should do it just as it is, and accept it, and act in accordance with it. If the priest blesses it and he is the only officer present, let him take it to the individuals and minister to them. So with the elder if there is no priest present to assist him.—Supplement to the Saints' Herald for July 22, 1893, p. 160.

Who has been the first to "raise" and "urge" this question contrary to the official counsel and teachings of President Joseph Smith? Who, if anybody, is standing in the way of a legitimate exercise of authority by President Joseph Smith? Who is or has been opposing the light given of God through President Joseph Smith as he has ministered in his important and exalted calling? Who?

And shall not the President of the Church lead in these, as in all other doctrinal matters? . . . Is it not safest and best to let him lead, and not attempt to lead him? Think of it.

J. R. LAMBERT.

THE DAUGHTERS OF ZION AND THEIR WORK.

THE only social peril is darkness.—Victor Hugo.

Therefore, not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, etc.—Paul.

Whether or not in the mind of St. Paul the "dead works" referred to included only the dogmas or ritual of the Pharisees, the term as applied to the work now lying before this "organization for good" in God's church we shall use as a text with larger meaning than we have been accustomed perhaps to place upon it in the past.

Solomon said:—

Through wisdom is a house builded; and by understanding is it established; and by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches.—Prov. 24: 3, 4.

If the home is right, society, the church, the nation, must be right.

"Wisdom," said this wise man also, "is the principal thing," and "with all thy getting get understanding."

Wisdom is said also to be the right use of knowledge; but we must possess knowledge before it can be translated into wisdom.

"My people perish for the lack of knowledge," was the announcement of God concerning ancient Israel. We have not outgrown the necessity for hearkening to this warning.

Is the term "salvation" to have a more practical illustration in our homes, in the church of God, than in the past? Is there a way to escape the disasters that have wrecked society in the past? and shall knowledge, wisdom, and discretion preserve us from failure?

"Preach the first principles" and after you have done that, "preach them over again," is advice and saying accredited to Bro. Joseph Smith, and that was just what I was about to do, commencing with the very first principle; viz., repentance from dead works. But if we are to use this term, "first principles," in a dogmatic sense only and as generally interpreted, then I would say upon my own responsibility, alone if need be, to the Daughters of Zion, using the words of St. Paul, "Let us go on unto perfection," not to "go on," I repeat, in the circumscribed round of formal preaching and proselyting altogether; but to earnestly and seriously take up the discussion as to what road or roads give most reasonable assurance of leading us up and on "toward perfection" or a standard of physical, moral, and spiritual attainment of Christian character that shall render us less liable to defeat at the hands of disintegrating forces of the enemy of souls and of the kingdom of God among men.

To seek for cause or causes of the failure in human governments, is the prime necessity before any remedy can be applied; and, indeed, a cause, when found, often logically carries with it suggestion for remedy. Man, in his planning by the great Creator, and in his organization, is a creature of law, and is made or unmade, rises or falls, is "saved" or "damned" by obedience or disobedience to law; and the provisions of grace or atonement or of mercy at best but takes cognizance of our innocent ignorance.

For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin.—Hebrews 10:26.

"Come up higher" is now frequently quoted. What are the steps by which we are to ascend?

"Innocence" is too often but another name for ignorance. A child is innocent because it is, and has the natural right to be ignorant; but a child that is fifty years old may be counted a monstrosity. We have said it before, and we repeat that "honesty and intelligence combined are Satan's deadliest foes; but separated, may become his most powerful allies." We have said also that man in his beginnings and endings is always a creature of law.

The most wonderful and interesting thing in all this world to us is ourselves, ourself, the center of this vast and illimitable universe, reaching out and into the abyss around, above, beneath, yet always the creature of law. "There is no space where there is no law."

The first lesson then to be impressed upon the life is by the discovery of its susceptibility to the environment of law. The first lesson to be impressed upon the budding, growing, and developing possibility and capacity of youth or a maiden is that of the tenors and blessings that come to the race through knowledge of, and being in alignment with, law,—of the dangers of a willful or even ignorant transgression.

Edward Atkinson has said that "he is freest who is most governed." As Latter Day Saints, with the rest of the world, we are too often governed by, or through ignorance and false conception of duty or propriety as regards custom, "state custom," which has passed, and does pass too oft for virtue, and the great, the very great danger in many cases lies in making this mistake.

Under this rule and false education children are, to use the words of a noted English clergyman, "Not born but damned into this world," and the children, too, sometimes of virtuous fathers and virtuous mothers, virtuous if at all too oft but because they are ignorant, but with the effects upon the innocent which society deplures, regulates, condemns, but cannot or does not prevent.

Said a good mother, "If I can only keep my daughter good and virtuous and pure until she is married!"

We wonder, sometimes, why young men of respectable parents go away so easily and so quickly; or why it is but a step of a generation or two from the home of a praying father or mother to that of the brothel, for scores of young girls. We condemn the state for issuing license to the brothel while it issues license and privilege to break and to prostitute the highest and holiest laws of our being and of God under the plea and title of "marriage." Marriage, as defined under laws that govern our whole being, "is ordained of God." A marriage that breaks or controverts any of these, is by so much not a true marriage.

The contract which the state and church demand for the protection of individuals, for offspring and for society, is all right so far as it goes; but it has not gone deep enough into the protective system. It has not—it does not go far enough to permit the establishment of the kingdom of God among men.

The first, and I believe all important, right to be conceded to humanity and to the world is the right of our children and the coming generation to be well born. Once more I repeat, To be "respectably" born, to be born according to the pharisaical code, is not enough for our time and need, not sufficient to correct the evils of society; and yet, as yet among Latter Day Saints, this is largely the highest standard of thought and of action with regard to the sublime and awful responsibilities involved in the union of the sexes and propagation through the awful responsibility and importance of that act which brings men and women nearer to the act of a God and of a Creator than any, or I liked to have said, all the other acts of their lives placed together.

For shame! oh! forever for shame upon that false and dangerous modesty that permits such crimes against the innocent that hinders society and thwarts the progress of the church in its growth toward better conditions and power for accomplishment. During the sessions of the late W. C. T. U. convention at Cleveland, Ohio, one only which I was permitted to attend, Frances Willard talked to a vast audience about "how to rear children," and her plain speech was not considered "immodest" by people of intelligence and sense. I heard, however, a sarcasm indulged in by an unthinking person, concerning the idea of "an old maid teaching married people how to raise children." I here repeat something of my reply: That the sneers at "old maids," were too oft ill-timed, that there are children of whom I know, under the fostering and savingly intelligent discipline of "old maids" and women who are "mothers" to them in a far larger sense than the women who gave them physical being even dreamed of, and the hard task of curing the evil, through the trying service rendered, which an intelligent prevention might have rendered unnecessary, is the vicarious work laid upon these later "saviors" of the unfortunate born.

That the foster mother may become through employment of higher agencies than indulgence in an animal instinct and passion far more the real mother, need hardly to be stated.

The unwelcome child, the child of sensuality and lust, whether upon one side or the other of the consent of the state, the prayer of the priest, or the marriage vow, is not, and can never be by the decree of God, naturally speaking, a child of legitimacy or of a Godly heritage. The badge of fatherhood and of motherhood should mean more than that chance order and happening of things which in this world are credited to animals and human beings alike.

May God bless our young people's endeavors toward the pursuit and possession of necessary information regarding duty, obligations, privilege, and attainment. May God bless the Daughters of Zion, and may their power and opportunity for doing good be enlarged. Their efforts unhindered by unwise or unintelligent criticism, while seeking new and needed reforms in the church, or by a prejudice unwarranted.

May God bless the young men like Bro. V. W. Gunsolley, and let him talk to us again, not only about "Scientific Courtship" but a scientific union and subsequent life under the rule of not one or a few conventional laws of men, but of that whole compendium of law which reaches out in safe direction and guidance for the employment of all of the agencies of the soul of man.

"The Daughters of Zion and their work," what is it?

You are banded together, if for anything—for the improvement of the race.

Let mothers, and fathers too, be impressed with the importance of the duty of being the first to instruct their girls and boys with the awful danger of misunderstanding and misuse of the strongest forces of their soul.

Let something of the nature of a lectureship, a library of opinion and information, be inaugurated among the various societies, so far as practicable. Especially in cities or places where there are larger branches of the church.

Your bodies are "the temple of God," literally speaking from a gospel standpoint. They are your own, as is your spirit, your soul. To God alone must you finally answer for their use, and there are no rights more sacred than the right to their best use. Shall we "come up higher"? high enough to learn that modern conventionalism,—the world of fashion, in thought and habit, permits most violent outrages against the laws of nature and of God? And if Zion is ever to become "the perfection of beauty" through our help or effort, we must learn to build wiser than have the generations of the past.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED. NO. 8.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.
PROPHECIES IN THE BOOK OF MORMON.

AND now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.—John 14: 29.

Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he.—John 13: 19.

But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them.—John 16: 4.

When, therefore, he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them; and they believed the Scriptures, and the word which Jesus had said.—John 2: 22.

Prophecy and its fulfillment were the chief evidences in the hands of Christ and his apostles, to prove the divinity of the mission of the Savior. They could show that the prophecies of the Old Testament, which point to the birth, life, death, and resurrection of the Christ, were literally fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth; then they could take up the predictions of the Master himself and show that they, too, were literally fulfilled, making the evidence doubly strong.

It is just so with the Book of Mormon. We show first, that it literally fulfills the Bible predictions pointing to the great latter-day work, and then we show that certain predictions in the book itself have had a remarkably literal fulfillment since its publication. And, having called attention to the exact fulfillment of the ancient prophecies in the coming forth of this work, I wish now to call attention to a few of those in the book that have been fulfilled right before the world, and by the world, since its publication.

The first prophecy I shall ask you to notice will be found in Book of Mormon, pages 104, 105.

But behold, . . . when I shall proceed to do a marvelous work among them . . . my words shall hiss forth unto the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel. And because my words shall hiss forth, many of the Gentiles shall say, "A bible, a bible, we have got a bible, and there cannot be any more bible."

And sure enough, when the book was published the people began to cry, "A new Bible;" "the Golden Bible;" "Joe Smith's Bible;" "the Mormon Bible;" "We have one Bible, and we don't need another," literally fulfilling the foregoing prophecy, and in their blind zeal to destroy the work, helping to prove the Book of Mormon true. Why do the enemies of this book, with this prophecy right before their eyes, go on blindly fulfilling it every day? As well ask why the enemies of Christ gave him "vinegar to drink," or why they "parted his garments among them," or why they valued him at "thirty pieces of silver," or why they "pierced his hands and his feet."

And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

The second one I shall notice is on page 103.

Yea, and there shall be many which shall teach after this manner, false, and vain, and foolish doctrines, and shall be puffed up in their hearts, and shall seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord; and their works shall be in the dark; and the blood of the saints shall cry from the ground against them.

Also page 496:—

And it shall come in a day when the blood of the Saints shall cry unto the Lord, because of secret combinations and the works of darkness.

Here is a book, claiming to be inspired, containing prophecies of what shall transpire when it comes forth to the world. It is published by a people who claim to be saints of God. It is published in 1829, in free America—"the land of the free and the home of the brave"—where the constitution guarantees to every man the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience. And yet it comes out and boldly predicts that when it comes forth the "blood of the saints shall cry from the ground, because of secret combinations and works of darkness." Who would have thought of people's blood being shed, by religious fanatics here in the United States, because of their religious principles? Human wisdom would never have made such a prediction in this land of religious freedom.

And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

The third one is found in Book of Mormon page 106:—

For after the book of which I have spoken [the Book of Mormon] shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written.

During the first fourteen years after the publication of the Book of Mormon between one hundred and fifty thousand and two hundred thousand souls were converted to the faith, a thing most improbable at the time the book was published, looking at it through human wisdom alone. The leaders in the work were poor and uneducated; the world, as the book predicted, was arrayed against them; and yet it comes out plainly and says that "many" will accept it. So they did; and so they have been doing ever since, and are doing now. How did the author know that "many" would accept it?

And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

The fourth one is on page 107:—

And it shall come to pass [when this book comes forth] that the Jews which are scattered shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ, shall also become a delightsome people.

This is indeed a startling prophecy. The Jews had been scattered from their land for more than fifteen centuries; the rains had been withheld, and the land was a den for wild beasts, as had been prophesied by Israel's prophets long before the dispersion of the Jews; and there was nothing to indicate, at that time, that a sudden change was at hand. But, in the face of all this, the book declares that they shall begin to gather back to their land. What are the facts? As already seen, the former and latter rains have been restored, the land is again yielding its increase, a railroad has been built to Jerusalem, and the Jews are returning "by the hundreds," and that too "with speed swiftly."

And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

The fifth prophecy I shall notice will be found on the same page, and in the same connection, Book of Mormon, page 107:—

And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall commence his work, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth.

According to this, the work of the Lord is to commence "among all nations" shortly after this Book of Mormon comes forth. Again we look for the facts in the case. And we find, as already noticed in another part of this article, that in 1837 there were only four governments in the civilized world that allowed the Jews equal rights with other citizens; but now, all nations in the civilized world, except Russia and Roumania, have so framed their constitutions as to give the Jews equal rights with other citizens. (And Russian persecution of the Jews is evidently bringing about the restoration of thousands of them to Palestine every year.) Turkey, compelled by the combined pressure of the governments of Europe and America, has removed the restrictions on Jewish emigration to Palestine, while societies of wealthy Jews have been formed, backed by some of the crowned heads of Europe, to help the Jews back to their own land. And, as already seen, the nations in making those wonderful changes "have had to do away with a state of things that had lasted over fifteen hundred years." If the Book of Mormon is not inspired, please tell us how its author knew of, and was able to foretell those radical changes in the governments of the earth, so favorable to the restoration of the Jews?

And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

The sixth, and last that I shall notice is not a prophecy, but a simple historical statement. But it was in direct opposition to the wisdom of the world, at the time the book was published, and has been substantiated, since then, by scientific discoveries, making it a genuine proof of the inspiration of the book—Book of Mormon page 43:—

And it came to pass that we did find upon the land of promise . . . the ass and the horse.

Book of Mormon page 133:—

And it came to pass that the people of Nephi did . . . raise all manner of grain . . . and also many horses.

Remember that all the historians and scientists, at the time this was published, were agreed upon the theory that the horse had never lived in America until brought here by the Spaniards. More than one enemy of the Book of Mormon has held this up to ridicule, and pronounced its author an ignoramus. But time makes wonderful changes both in science and in history. Prof. Winchell says of this:—

It is a curious fact that so many genera, now extinct from the continent, but living in other quarters of the globe, were once abundant on the plains of North America. Various species of the horse have dwelt here for ages, and the question reasonably arises whether the wild horses of the pampas may not have been indigenous. Here too the camel found a suitable home.—Sketches of Creation, p. 210.

Again:—

Its fossil remains, chiefly molar teeth, have been so frequently found, especially in the Southern and Western States and in South America, and have been so carefully examined by competent Paleontologists, that no doubt can remain of the former existence of the horse on the American continent, at the same time with the mastodon, and that man was probably his companion. — American Encyclopedia, article Horse.

Will some of the enemies of the Book of Mormon please tell how it happened to be so far in advance of the times in which it was published? Or did it "just happen" at all? No, reader, it didn't "happen." That record is true. Scientific discoveries are being made on every hand, proving it to be inspired.

Many other prophecies in the Book of Mormon have been fulfilled since 1830, and others are now in process of fulfillment; but these few must suffice for the present.

In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.

I have noticed only a few of those that were most unlikely to be fulfilled, when the book was published. It is just possible, too, that I have sacrificed clearness for brevity, but those prophecies are so clear and pointed, and their fulfillment so literal and complete, that it seems like a waste of time to do anything more than simply call attention to them. If the immediate followers of Christ in Jerusalem could look back to his prophetic statements, and point with pride to their literal fulfillment as an unanswerable evidence of his inspiration, why may not the Latter Day Saints point to those prophetic statements in the Book of Mormon, in connection with their fulfillment, as an evidence of its inspiration?

And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

Several books of the second and third centuries have leaden leaves. One such, in the British Museum, has six leaden leaves, with hinges and a clasp.

George Sanderson recently struck a vein of cement near Williamsport, Pennsylvania, which New York assayers say is the best in the world.

school association, with Charles Allen, of Valley Junction, superintendent, Clayton Weeks, of Twin Lakes, assistant, Sr. Eda Wood, Necedah Junction, secretary and treasurer. W. S. Pender and A. V. PRIMARY LESSONS.

The first edition of the primary lesson helps has just been published, a copy of which will be mailed to each of the schools now using the Quarterlies. While examining this, the latest publication of the General Sunday School Association, my heart rejoiced to realize the wonderful advancement that is being made for the proper instruction of the young in the word of God. The schools of the church, now, have a series of lesson helps which surpass, to my mind, any others published. The Senior and Intermediate Quarterlies have proven to be of great value and demonstrated their worth, and this latest production is a gem in itself. It points out the way and suggests the best methods of beginning the teaching of the kingdom of God to the little children. The primary teachers will find it to their advantage to get these Quarterlies at once and begin as soon as possible to get in working harmony with the whole work. There are but few schools, now, where the Quarterlies are not used, and prejudice is fast giving away to confidence and belief in the efficacy and utility of the gospel helps in Sunday school work. By their use the work is systematized in the local schools and strength and order given to the methods of instruction. This may be questioned by some, yet the experience of years has demonstrated that the human mind reaches a more complete and satisfactory development by systematic training and cultivation than is possible by wandering or haphazard methods of instruction or study.

If we as a people have the true religious philosophy of this age, and I believe we have, then it follows, as night the day, that we should have the very best methods of presenting these truths to the minds of our fellows, whether they be old or young. This has been the object labored for, in the editing and publishing of this series of "helps" by the General Sunday School Association. The Intermediate and Senior Quarterlies have proven their worth and adaptability. The primary help is now submitted for your inspection and criticism, with the firm conviction that it has its work to do and will do it well if given a fair trial.

Ever praying for the rapid advancement of the truth,

I am, in bonds,

E. A. BLAKESLEE.

TO THE MINISTRY IN THE FIELD.

The Presidency send to the ministry in the field, greeting:—

The difficulties attending the obtaining of railway permits for some of the elders in the field, the failure to obtain a concession of rates from the Western Passenger Association, over the roads centering at Kansas City and Independence; together with the fact that in many of the districts and fields where the ministry are at labor there is an unusual scarcity of means with which elders dependent on those districts may reach the session, and the further fact that there does not seem to be an exigency demanding a full attendance of the forces in the field, and upon which important action is necessary at the coming session of conference at Independence, the Presidency deem it best to advise that the eldership in their respective fields where opportunities for labor are good, and good interest is manifested, shall remain at their posts, foregoing the pleasure of fellowship and conference association, thus saving to the church at large as well as the treasury, the expense attendant upon presence at the conference.

The Presidency has no important measures to present requiring general consideration and action aside from the matter of mission appointments the manner of consideration of which is provided for; nor is the Presidency informed of any matters proposed to be presented from others of such nature as to require imperative action. Should any be presented in the course of the session of such importance that wisdom, or necessity would demand a more complete representation present, the Presidency will favor deferring them, and will use all proper effort to that end.

LAMONI, Feb. 27, 1895.

THE WAR AT EL DORADO SPRINGS.

El Dorado Springs has been the center of attraction, so far as the Latter Day Saints of Southwestern Missouri are concerned, ever since it became known that it would be the place for the reunion of the mission to be held in 1894. While there is a large branch of Saints on each side of the town, there had never been any extensive ministerial work accomplished there. The presence of the large tent from Iowa, the numerous camps of the Saints, the presence of President Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and others, had a tendency to attract the attention of the the people. An interest was created among the people and hundreds heard the word gladly.

About this time the preachers of the city became alarmed, as "Jerusalem" seemed to be filled with this doctrine. Such preaching was never done in this country before. No other church ever attracted such large congregations. Something must be done, as "our craft" is in danger.

Braden was accordingly sent for, and scarcely had a week passed after the close of the reunion until he was "exposing Mormonism." Elder I. N. White and others attended his lectures, taking notes of what was said. Braden flaunted challenges for debate, but had his propositions unfairly worded, and took good care to prevent anyone from presenting a counter challenge to him before the congregation, specifying that all such propositions should be presented at his private room at the hotel. This would keep the facts from the public, of course, and Mr. Braden could blow as loud as he pleased. But alas for Braden; alas for Campbellism; I. N. White had "been there" before! When the lectures were closed, and Braden was about to chuckle to himself that he had won a victory, the house was called to order and a request presented for the use of the church in which to reply. The "official board" had a short conference, and replied that we could not occupy the house except in joint discussion. I emphasize this to call especial attention to it, as they afterwards denied having had any hand in the matter of originating the discussion. They claimed that the debate was forced upon them. The other churches of El Dorado made similar replies, but finally we secured the pavilion in the city park in which to make reply.

As Braden's propositions were unfair, Elder White prepared propositions clearly stating the issues between the two churches and presented them to representatives of the Christian Church, who accepted them, and appointed El Dorado Springs as the place to hold discussion. Although Mr. Braden afterward claimed that the Latter Day Saints had appointed the place, we exposed him in this statement before a large congregation, and made him admit it.

This acceptance and agreement was made at the close of the Lowry City debate, and Mr. J. H. Jones, who was representing the Christian Church as "district evangelist," immediately wrote to their church paper about the proposed debate at El Dorado, giving the propositions just as agreed upon. Scarcely had his letter been printed till he wrote Bro. White, wanting to change the order and wording of the propositions. Bro. White refused to do so, and as Mr. Jones was on record in his own church paper, the only thing was to meet the issue or back out. Then follows a war over rules to govern in debate. Finally a code of laws was arranged and signed by both parties. One important provision was that evidence should be subject to the rules that govern before the courts of law. Mr. Braden did not seem to realize just what that meant till later on. He probably won't sign that rule again. Another important provision was that the disputants each furnish "equivalent indorsements" from the "chief editor" of their respective church papers (the Saints' Herald and the Christian Evangelist) at least ten days before debate commences. Braden, Jones, and Co., had simply put their foot in it. They had agreed to something that was hard for them to comply with. Braden's past record has been such that Mr. Garrison could hardly indorse him. Something must be done. Jones writes an insulting letter to I. N. White, inclosing a letter from Mr. Garrison, which he attempts to bluff through as an indorsement. Bro. White refuses to accept it as such.

About this time Braden and Jones visit El Dorado and delivered a long series of lectures. They bluff and blow until the public are disgusted. They want a debate and want it bad, right away. Even the pious pastors of the town partake of the spirit of the hour and join Mr. Braden in an epistle to C. R. Duncan and others demanding that they set the time for debate on propositions as agreed upon at Lowry City; also that we join them in appointing a mutually chosen committee to decide as to whether the indorsements were good or not. Of course if they could get the Latter Day Saints people here to sign such a contract it would serve to bring on the debate without that much dreaded indorsement. But, fortunately the Latter Day Saints have some system about their work, and quietly drop these gentlemen a note that their letter "has been referred to Elder White, who is conducting the arrangements, and who will, no doubt, give due consideration to the communication." Braden's scheme again defeated. No breach in the ranks of the Saints. He is compelled to deal directly with that much hated I. N. White.

About this time there appeared this item in the Christian Evangelist: "At last report I. N. White had backed out of his own challenge for debate at El Dorado Springs, Missouri, Clark Braden is having everything his own way at present in this part of the State." The writer should have added, "except an indorsement from ye editor, which would be very acceptable about this time."

January 15 was appointed as the date for discussion. Braden and Co. were informed that unless the indorsement was forthcoming there would be no debate. The indorsement did not come as per agreement, but on January 14 Braden came to El Dorado. The threat had previously been made that unless I. N. White came that he would be exposed on the 14th. A meeting had been called at the Christian church and a congregation was ready to hear Braden blow, but no Braden came. A messenger was sent to the hotel and returned with the news that the lion would not be present. No reason was given for the disappointment, and it seemed that Braden and Co. were rather at a loss to know just how to proceed. Next night found a large audience present to see what would be the developments. Braden pawed the dust and looked ugly, but had no antagonist. Elder White had written him plainly that unless the required indorsement be presented according to contract he would not be present. At this juncture we distributed circulars to those present, containing correspondence, rules of agreement, etc. This struck like a clap of thunder from a clear sky. Braden was in a pen; but, by the way, frequently gets there. He invariably asks that a committee be appointed to help him out. You can always know that Braden is cornered when that committee is called for.

First he demanded of the Latter Day Saints to join him in selecting a committee to examine his indorsements. We informed him that we preferred to transact our own business. That if he had indorsements in harmony with the contract all he need do was to furnish us a copy of the same and debate would begin at once. He then appealed to the congregation to make selection of such committee, which was finally done. Braden Jones and Co. work and rustle for three days to get things in shape, and finally get a committee to report favorably on their indorsement. This did not have the desired effect, however, and J. H. Garrison, who is traveling in Texas, is communicated with. Braden and Co. are on the "anxious seat" for indorsements. The people of El Dorado discuss the matter "pro and con," and finally a telegram comes from Garrison. Braden takes courage. Another committee is appointed, and a big noise is made. In the mean time Elder Love, of El Dorado, writes Mr. Garrison (a copy of which we would like to see), and in a short time Garrison sends the required indorsement. Braden has it examined by a committee who pronounce it "A No. 1." Braden brings resolutions before the congregation condemning "I. N. White" for "backing out." But the said committee discovers that the contract provides that the indorsement must be presented ten days before debate begins, so Mr. White has ten days in which to back out or accept. The committee chop off five days, however, and Braden awaits the appointed date, no doubt hoping that Elder White will be absent from home so as to prevent an answer in the time allotted. But the answer comes back before the date expires, "Indorsement accepted." Mr. Braden suddenly has business elsewhere. Rumors are afloat that he has gone to Texas, etc. When Mr. Love forwarded Braden's indorsement to Elder White he said, "Set your own date." Bro. White designated Tuesday, February 5, and wrote all parties to that effect. Braden refused and wrote him twice, positively stating that he would not be on hand unless he (White) would give a bond of two hundred dollars for his appearance. One would think it strange that a man so anxious for debate would attempt in this way to "crawlfish." Bro. White came as per appointment, and informed the Christian Church that he was ready for business. They telegraphed Mr. Braden to come, and he responded, arriving too late, however, to begin debate on the 5th. All preliminaries were arranged and the much talked of debate actually began on February 6.

The writer was selected as moderator for Elder White, and Thomas Armstrong, a lawyer of El Dorado, was selected by Mr. Braden. Attorney James Perriman was chosen as chairman.

A severe blizzard was raging the evening of the 6th, probably the worst storm ever known in the history of this country, but it did not prevent a large attendance. Everybody was determined to hear the debate. The attendance was probably five hundred and fifty the first night and continued to increase until the last, when fully eight hundred persons crowded in and many had to return home. Such an interest is rarely seen in any place as was manifest from first to last in this discussion.

NOTICES.

Zion's Religio-Literary Societies:—You are hereby notified that a change has been suggested in Section 2 of Article 4, constitution of local societies. It now reads, "Committees are to be appointed by the president." The suggestion is that this be so changed as to leave it discretionary with the society whether the committees shall be chosen by vote of the society or whether they shall be appointed by the president. This notice is given in accordance with Article 7 of constitution for locals.

J. C. HITCHCOCK,
General Secretary.

Hoping the Saints will avail themselves of this opportunity of getting church literature, and thus become better acquainted with the laws and doctrines of the church, I remain, in bonds,

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

The Woodmen were in attendance (her husband being one of that order), as were also the pupils of her Sunday school class, the latter wearing white dresses, as she had requested them to do. It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPTS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

THE oldest extant manuscripts of the New Testament date from the fourth and fifth centuries. It is not to be wondered at that the original manuscripts of the apostles have been lost, but rather that manuscripts have been preserved through the long period of thirteen or fourteen hundred years. The character of these manuscripts, the sources whence derived, and the methods by which their genuineness is determined, form the subject of a popular lecture by A. F. Hort, and published in The Monthly Packet, London, from which we quote the following:—

"In speaking then of a New Testament manuscript we mean generally a codex, that is, a large parchment book, the papers divided into columns, and written on both sides. Many of these parchments called 'palimpsest' are parchments used after the first text has been imperfectly removed by scratching, and in many cases valuable manuscripts have been restored by treating the later writing with chemicals. . . .

"Our text of the New Testament—I mean of course the Greek text adopted by the English translators—is derived from a comparison of documents such as I have described, parchment codices for the most part. The evidence thus obtained is of two kinds—direct and indirect. By direct evidence is meant that supplied by Greek manuscripts of the New Testament books; by indirect, the testimony of early translations into languages other than Greek, which are called versions, and further by quotations, either from Greek, or from a version, occurring in the works of early Christian writers. Of each of these three sources of our Greek text, I wish to give some description.

"1. Greek manuscripts. These are of course by far the most important, and it will be well to get a clear idea of their character. None of them, I need hardly say, is, or professes to be, in the handwriting of the evangelists or apostles, or we should be able to dispense with the study of copies. They vary in date a great deal, the oldest being assigned to the fourth century. The oldest Greek manuscript which we possess is then, probably, the result of repeated copyings, made through a period of some three centuries. Now our texts of classical Greek and Latin writers are, with few exceptions, derived from copies made not earlier than the eleventh century. So that the direct evidence for the text of the New Testament is by some centuries older than most of the direct evidence for the text of the classical writers. It is well to remember that there is a gap in the direct line of evidence for the New Testament text, but this gap is partly filled by the indirect evidence. Greek manuscripts are of two kinds, uncials, and cursives or minuscules, that is, of capitals and small letters. All manuscripts written in small hand are called, for convenience, cursives. The uncial manuscripts of the New Testament are generally speaking, the oldest. One hundred and fifty of them are in existence. They are important as being the primary authority for the New Testament text. I will select five as in different ways representative—the Vatican Codex, the Alexandrian, the Sinai, and those called after Ephraim and Beza. Of these, the first four are also the most important of all, and none of these was available for the translators of 1611, a fact to be reckoned with by those who are inclined to deny the need of a revised translation in our day.

"The Codex Vaticanus, designated B, was written in the fourth century, and has for many centuries belonged to the Vatican Library at Rome, where it was very jealously guarded till quite recent times. It was only in the papacy of Pius IX. that it was rendered accessible. The whole has been inked over by a careful scribe, but some parts of the manuscript which he omitted to retouch are still quite legible. The manuscript is defective at beginning and end, and omits the last twelve verses of St. Mark; a blank, however, is left at the end of this gospel, indicating that the scribe apparently knew of the existence of these verses.

"The history of this magnificent book, probably the oldest, and certainly the most interesting manuscript in the world, is obscure for the period before the establishment of the Vatican Library. Recent opinion inclines to the view that it, as well as the Sinai Codex, was written in the West, perhaps at Rome itself.

"The Sinai Codex (designated by aleph) closely resembles the Vatican and has the same omission at the end of St. Mark's Gospel. The exciting story of its discovery by Dr. Tischendorf, less than fifty years ago, is tolerably familiar. It now rests at St. Petersburg.

"By an odd coincidence, while the Roman Church possesses one of the principal codices, and the Greek another, the third belongs to our nation (England). The Alexandrian Codex, A, lies open in the British Museum for all to see. It was presented to Charles I. by the Patriarch of Constantinople, a few years too late to be used in the English version. It is thought likely that this was written in Alexandria in the fifth century, when Egypt was still Christian. Of the remaining uncial manuscripts, none seems to have belonged to a complete Bible.

"The cursive manuscripts are very numerous, amounting to perhaps three thousand, and ranging in date from the ninth to the fifteenth century. Many of them have not yet been collated, that is, critically examined, in order to compare their readings. Besides these, there is a subordinate class of documents called 'Lectionaries,' books of extracts from the New Testament, chosen to be read in the Greek Church. They are mostly in uncial or capital letters. None perhaps are earlier than the eighth century.

"2. Of the second great class of original documents—the Versions, or ancient translations from the Greek—their value is due to the fact that translations of the Bible were made before the date of the earliest Greek manuscripts now extant. The celebrated Latin version, the Vulgate, is the result of a revision of the existing Latin texts, accomplished by Jerome in 385.

"3. The third class of documentary evidence consists of quotations from Scripture in the works of the early Fathers. This class of testimony is third in order of importance, but has considerable tributary value. The Fathers in whose works quotations are most valuable are, of course, the oldest, as they quote presumably from purer texts than those available at a later date. But quotation even from inferior texts is invaluable as evidence for the history of the text."—Literary Digest.

THE JEWS' CREED.

IN the Eleventh Century, Moses Maimonides compiled a summary of the religious views of the Jews, and it has since then been the confession of the orthodox Hebrews. Maimonides holds a most exalted position among the Jews. In the thirteenth century they said: "From Moses (the Lawgiver) to Moses (Mendelssohn) there is none like Moses (Maimonides)."

This is the Jews' creed, as given in the Danskeeren, Copenhagen:—

"I believe, with a true and perfect faith, that God is the Creator, Governor, and Maker of all things; and that he hath wrought all things, worketh now, and will work forever.

"I believe, with perfect faith, that the Creator is one, and that such a unity as is in him can be found in no other, and that he alone hath been our God, is, and forever shall be.

"I believe, with perfect faith, that the Creator is not corporeal, nor to be comprehended with any bodily faculties, and that there is no bodily essence that can be likened unto him.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, the Creator to be the first and the Last; that nothing was before him and that nothing which now is shall last forever.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that the Creator alone—whose name be blessed—is to be worshiped, and none else beside him.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that the words of the prophets are true.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that the prophecies of Moses, our Master—may he rest in peace—are true; and that he was the father and chief of all wise men that lived before him or ever shall live.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that all the Law which we now possess was delivered by God himself to Moses, our Master.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that that Law will never be changed nor substituted by another from God.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that God understandeth all the works and thoughts of men, as it is written in the prophets, He fashioned our hearts and understandeth our works.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that God will recompense all that do good and keep his commandments, and that he will punish those that transgress them.

"I believe, with a perfect faith, that the Messiah is to come. Though he retard his coming, I will wait till he come.

"I believe, with perfect faith, that the dead shall be restored to life when it shall seem good for the Creator, our God, to do so."—Translated for the Literary Digest.

CRISPI'S REAL CREED IN POLITICS.

CRISPI is a man born to rule, if any man is. Of inflexible character, and of uncompromising patriotism, his defects are those of strength, not, as is generally the case with Italian public men, of weakness and irresoluteness, if not of corruption; and to the program he laid down twenty years ago he is still inflexibly tenacious. As the principal objection raised against Crispi has been his supposed tendency to the assumption of dictatorial powers, the quotation of this program may serve to show his real creed in politics. It is contained in the program letter of 1865:—

"Reduction of the bureaucracy by one third; and to the servants of the state, chosen amongst the intelligent and honest, a living assured with fair pay, and the future guaranteed against arbitrary dismissal.

"Emancipation of the public administration from its dependence on the executive power, and conferring on the magistracy that authority which it is deprived of by the government, by the system of transfers and conferring of honors.

"Transfer of the police to the municipalities.

"An income tax on all who reside in the kingdom, according to their possessions, only those being exempted who live by the labor of their hands or brains.

"Organization and arming efficiently of the militia, and when Venice is free, its substitution for the standing army, and abolition of the conscription.

"Independence of the universities, and assignment of the primary instruction to the provinces and communes, with free and compulsory instruction.

"Together with provisions for the extension of the petty banks and means of communication in the peninsula.

"This is for internal affairs. For the reform of the central powers he proposed the following:—

"Absolute separation of the legislative from the executive, and therefore exclusion of the government employees from the Chambers.

"Prohibition of the members of parliament to accept public offices, and ineligibility of all who have taken contracts in which the State is concerned.

"A Senate elective, as in Belgium, and not an emanation of the Prince.

"The electoral franchise to all Italians of twenty-one who can read and write, and eligibility of all as Deputy at twenty-five, and to the Senate at thirty, with payment for service, to enlarge the accessibility of citizens to the legislature."—From a character sketch of Francesco Crispi, in the March Review of Reviews.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR.
 R. S. SALYARDS - ASSISTANT EDITOR.
 JOSEPH LUFF - CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, MARCH 13, 1895.

DEDICATION AT BLENDVILLE, MISSOURI.

By the invitation of Brn. Stephen Maloney, and others of the Saints resident at Webb City and Blendville, of the Webb City branch, the editor went to that place, arriving on the evening of March 1. After spending Saturday, March 2, in a visit of inquiry at Blendville, we met the Saints and their neighbors in the little church by the roadside in the village, a suburb of Joplin, near by, a city of some sixteen thousands of inhabitants, on Sunday, March 3, for the purposes of dedication.

A brief statement of what we found before reciting the routine of services will be interesting to all our readers, and encouraging to many. Some two, or three years ago, Bro. Parker, formerly of Independence, came into the neighborhood, prosecuting his business of making and selling soap. He not only bought and sold the wares of his trade; but he talked the gospel story as told in the angel's message to man in these last days. He awakened an interest, and was followed by Elders A. H. Herke, S. Maloney, C. R. Duncan, Fred A. Smith, R. M. Maloney, W. S. Macrae, and others of the local and district ministry, who preached first in the house of Bro. G. A. Hiser, then of the M. E. fold, afterwards in a small hall in the village, but ill suited to the business in hand. These efforts resulted in the baptism of a number, Bro. Hiser and wife, their son-in-law, F. L. English and wife, and Mother English being of them. The interest increased, until under the spirited preaching of the young missionaries, Maloney and Macrae, the need for a better house to worship in was seen. A Mr. Thomas Cunningham, an enterprising citizen and business man living in the village, made the statement to one of the brethren that if they wished to build, he would himself donate a suitable lot on which to put the building and give $25 towards the expense of it.

The brethren deeming the time propitious met to consult over it, and G. A. Hiser, James J. Calkins, Wm. Hunter, and F. L. English were constituted a committee of ways and means to build. Mr. Cunningham was visited and readily headed a subscription, and in a short time a sum sufficient was raised. The following presented and read at the dedication service shows the sums used, how raised and how expended:—

 F. L. ENGLISH, Treasurer.
 BLENDVILLE, Missouri, March 2, 1895.

The effort to build began in May, 1894, and the work was prosecuted without let or hindrance, jar or discord until completion was reached; the house, twenty-four by forty feet in size, located on an eligible lot fifty by one hundred and twenty feet, walls of suitable height with arched roof, well lighted and seated at cost of $635.20, deed secured, bills all paid and some money in hand, is the final result.

The "Sisters' Aid Society" referred to, is a local organization of some nine members, of which Sr. Mary, wife of Bro. F. L. English, is the presiding leader, having been in existence about two years. It will be seen that these few women contributed over one half the actual cash used in the erection of the building and nearly one third of the entire whole cost, including the donated labor and the estimated cost of the lot. We doubt if this record has been beaten in the church; and it shows what a few can do though they are of the vessels called the weaker by Paul, when their energies are directed and driven by a forceful manager such as Sr. English has proved herself to be. The efforts of the society include seats, chairs, lamps, carpet for platform, and matting for the aisles.

The hour set for the dedication was at eleven a. m., March 3. At that hour the house was packed, the day was splendid, warm, and clear. The services were under the charge of Bro. Stephen Maloney, the venerable president of the Webb City branch. The song service was in charge of Brn. Thomas Haighton, of Prosperity, and Z. Decker, of Webb City, assisted by Sr. Edda English, at the organ, and Bro. W. S. Macrae, with his clarinet.

Brn. W. S. Macrae and R. M. Maloney, missionaries, were by reason of the good fortune that seems to attend the editor, present, and gave good help; the former with the singers, the latter by his kind and staid deportment and voice.

The services began with the use of Bro. M. H. Forscutt's hymn,

While afflicted, tossed, and driven, sung with feeling and effect, the audience standing. The opening prayer was offered by Bro. R. M. Maloney, and was appropriate and full of pathos. The choir then sung,

We dedicate to thee this house we have reared, and Bro. Stephen Maloney in charge introduced the editor, who read the statement of the building committee; accepting on behalf of the church the deed of the property made to the church and to be delivered to the Bishop in custody for the congregation at Blendville; and then proceeded to the sermon, which was based upon and in answer to the question: "What shall be the doctrine to be presented and advocated by those who had built the house and erected the altar there?" The editor's answer was to the effect that it must be the doctrine of Jesus Christ, which the Scriptures declare to be the doctrine of the Father. The answer was satisfactory to Saints and the preacher whether it was to others or not.

The editor offered the prayer of dedication, the song,

An angel came down from the mansions of glory, was sung; Bro. Stephen Maloney invoked the divine blessing, and the audience was dismissed.

Saints and their friends were present from Prosperity, Webb City, Joplin, Galena, Jacksonville, near Oronogo and Columbus, all of the Spring River district, and all the region round about. Bro. O. P. Sutherland, president of the district, was not present, being confined at home by temporary illness.

The audience was orderly, respectful, and attentive; the Saints from near and far were much interested, the exercises were impressive from opening to close, and we doubt not that the day will be followed by good results to the cause. Prayer, testimony, and sacrament meeting was held in the afternoon in charge of Brn. Macrae and R. M. Maloney, and the evening was occupied by the editor from John 5, closing part of the chapter.

Whosoever doeth the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my sister, my brother, my mother.

Congregation was good, interest excellent. So passed Dedication Day at Blendville, Missouri.

SEPARATE VESSELS AT THE COMMUNION.

THE pulpit may learn from the pews if it is not too strongly entrenched in self-will and bigotry; and now and then a layman may read the preacher a lecture that is healthy in tone and has the ring of sense in it. The secular press with a religious turn, will be at times an excellent judge of the proper attitude toward sacred things that the clergy should take and maintain. In the extract below from the editorial columns of the Cleveland, Ohio, World, there is a good show of worldly wisdom, a portion of wit, and good food for serious thought:—

THE HOLY COMMUNION.

At the last supper which Jesus ate on earth he took a cup of wine and blessed it and passed it to his disciples, saying: "Drink ye all of it." This, together with the breaking of bread, is taken by theological authorities as the establishment of what is called "the communion," one of the most significant and beautiful ordinances of the church.

The significance of the ordinance was undoubtedly that all should be placed on a single or "common" basis. In fact, that is exactly what the word "communion" means. For more than eighteen hundred years this ordinance has been celebrated in one form and another by the Christian world.

Near the close of his ministry Jesus also girded himself on one occasion with a towel and proceeded to wash his disciples' feet, telling them that as he, their Master, had washed their feet so should they wash one another's feet. This act is also commemorated by some Christian denominations, but most of them depend for fellowship upon the simple communion by drinking from a common cup of wine.

This act brings rich and poor to a single or common level. The man who pays five hundred dollars per year for his pew drinks from the same cup with the poorest man who sits in the "free seats."

For more than eighteen hundred years this has gone on with success and satisfaction, but at length there are certain highly "scientific people" who are beginning to object to this common drinking. They hold that it is not healthful and that it is not clean. It is to be presumed that the principal object held in mind by the Savior when he established the ordinance was exactly that he might administer a severe rebuke to this very squeamishness and assumption of one disciple that he is better and cleaner than another. He was very emphatic to instill the idea that it is not that which goeth into a man's mouth which defileth him but that which cometh out of the mouth in the form of backbitings and blasphemings.

If the pseudo-scientists could point to any well-authenticated instances where contagious diseases have been communicated or any other real damage has been done there would be much more sense in their remarks and their so-called reform would be likely to be much more readily accepted.

The peculiarly funny suggestions that have been made in regard to this matter in some of the eastern papers show what an utterly ridiculous position the reformers occupy. The original innovators proposed, of course, individual or separate cups for each communicant, but it has taken much wider range than this, as will be seen by the following communications clipped from the New York Sun:—

TO AVOID THE POISON IN THE CHALICE.

To the Editor of the Sun; Sir:—Permit me to offer a suggestion on the chalice question.

If religious sentiment or belief requires that, in order to carry out our Lord's order, separate chalices should not be used, it seems to me that the scientific objection to the single chalice might be removed by providing each communicant with a glass tube through which to partake.

Anyone objecting to this method on the ground of worldly association could hardly possess a mind pure enough to entitle him to the privilege of the holy ceremony.

Yours very truly, A.

NEW YORK, August 25.

COMMUNION WINE THROUGH A STRAW.

To the Editor of the Sun; Sir:—I was interested in the editorial in this morning's Sun in reference to large congregations taking communion from a common chalice. It occurs to me that those communicants who fear contagion could find a simple remedy by carrying a private straw. G. F. T.

NEW YORK, August 24.

Now it would seem much more sensible to abolish the cup altogether than to go into any of these ridiculous modifications. It is the height of absurdity to understand the words of the Master to mean that the wine should either be sucked through a straw or a glass tube, or that each communicant should have his own special glass. If there is any significance in the ordinance it is destroyed by these proposed modifications.

It is well understood by the Latter Day Saints, of all kinds, that from the time of the first baptism performed by the first elder until the last rite known to have been celebrated, no one has ever suffered harm to health by the administration of the rite, no matter how robust or how delicate the person administered to has been, or what the season of the year or the temperature of the air or the water at the time of immersion. It would seem that the divine giver of the command to baptize and to be baptized had so ordained that the fact that no physical harm comes to those who hear the command and obey it should be a testimony to the correctness of the command and its power to save.

The sacrament, or communion, service, having been instituted by the same divine authority as baptism, it is but right to believe that through the same excellent economy by which the delicate machinery of the human life of the flesh is preserved from harm while passing through the ordinance of baptism under conditions that otherwise would be trying and dangerous, has also provided that no harm should come to any child of the common Great Father while eating and drinking at that Father's common table.

That some communicants are not so cleanly in person as a proper sense of cleanliness demands, may be true; and that the nice distinctions in this regard which prevail among the better classes (so-called) of society, are not fully observed, nor enforced among religionists while participating in the communion is certainly true; but where a studied or careless disregard of the rules of personal cleanliness which godliness dictates is persisted in, it is subject to correction under the discipline of the laws governing good fellowship. A possible stranger sojourning for an hour with the family of the Lord at the communion table, might be tolerated if he were not washed, or shaved, for reasons that might be obvious; but the dweller within the precincts should be clean, though his garments might be poor, or coarse. The sacrament at stated periods known to all, should be provided for by a due preparation to be clean at the time of partaking.

That there is absolute uncleanness in persons putting out the hand to take from the passing plate the piece of bread which they eat in remembrance of the Lord's body, it is hardly proper to claim, as it seldom happens that anyone taking bread from the plate touches any of it except the piece taken; hence the bread if made unclean by any touch of human hands is made so by the hands of him who, as commanded in the instituting of the rite, breaks the bread before it is passed to the communicants. But it does not appear that the objection of uncleanness is made in this point. Whether it is supposed that the hands of him who breaks the bread in the act of offering it in blessing before the Lord are of necessity clean, or that he is more observant of the rule of cleanliness than his neighbors in the pews does not appear; it is conceded, however, that he should be clean, in keeping with the command, "Be ye clean who bear the vessels of the Lord."

The cup in which the wine is passed by him who bears it from communicant to communicant is, of course, for the time the common drinking vessel for all participants; is it unclean from contact of many lips, necessarily?

This is the query which is so deftly placed in view by the Cleveland World man in the editorial given above. The editor well states that in the communion there is, as it was evidently intended there should be, an equalizing of all, the poor and the rich, the peasant and the peer, the noble and the ignoble, the leader and the follower, all on the level of one common brotherhood in Christ Jesus, the "lowly Nazarene" the "Lord of Life and Glory." There is, there must be an uplifting of them that are lowly in human conditions, a stooping down of them that are lofty in human high places in the "bonds of the covenant;" for they are "one in Christ Jesus." Hence the common table, the common plate, the common cup. The questions of cleanness and uncleanness are largely conventional, and take their significance from the surroundings of the devotees away from the associations in the house of prayer and the table of the Lord. There are, however, conditions of personal cleanliness which should be impressed upon all. To come to the home table with uncombed hair and face and hands unwashed, is not permitted in quite all classes. It is an offense to even ordinary good breeding, and there are none so poor, none so ignoble but they can yield to this common requirement. Decency, the courtesy of kindness that should characterize all, demand this. What reason is there for supposing that any less should be required of the family that gathers at the communion table to commemorate the sacrifice which by a life of righteousness and a death of shame was complete in one, an obedience to the will of the Father who sent him that man might have life and that more abundantly? If cleanliness may be required of him who sits to eat at his own table, or that of his citizen friends, why should not he be clean that eats at the Lord's table? All other considerations of condition being disregarded, this should be observed. It follows then, that he that goes to the communion table, and who expects there to meet with the brotherhood at the service where all are equal, should so prepare himself so far as lies in his power, to eat and drink acceptably, both to the Lord in that he eats and drinks worthily, discerning the Lord's body; and to his associates, in that he eats and drinks in cleanness of heart, manifested in cleanness of person.

There have been agitations of the question of separate service of plate and cup in the celebration of the sacrament among the Saints; but the trite argument used by this secular writer in a secular journal, and the argument absurd presented in the "glass tube" and "private straw," are cogent to show how out of character the display of human lines of distinction and separation in the communion would be. The fear of contagion, the dread of apparent defilement, are but makeshift arguments to hide distinction of class and caste and ought not to be allowed place in the discussion; the command, "Drink ye all of it," displacing all class distinctions.

The conclusion is easily reached; it is the duty of all to see the communion of the Lord's supper, as he saw it who instituted it, the Father's board, round which disciples of every shade of life and occupation may meet in common devotion to one Lord, and in common forgetfulness of the poor distinctions having their seat in human weaknesses and idle and vain imaginations which must all vanish before the great Giver of the life that now is and the life which is to come. As he was pure in heart and ate with singleness of heart, and administered with clean hands and purity of intention, so must the administering disciple here go to the Lord's table and break the bread and pour the wine with clean hands, in purity of intention and worthiness of purpose, himself partaking with cleansed lips, and beard washed clean (if he has one) that he may not defile the cup that he passes to his brother that he may drink therefrom. It is the duty of the disciple, of whatever calling or avocation in this life, to appear in the house where the Lord's table is to be spread in clean apparel, with clean hands and face, cheerfully observing the common requirement of cleanliness of person, that he may justify himself before his Lord, and commend himself to his associates in the family circle.

Uncleanness is too often the badge of physical laziness, for which there is little excuse in this world and will likely be none at all in the world to come. Physical laziness is too frequently the result of habits from the thralldom of which every disciple should free himself as by them he is made to try to serve two masters, the command to be clean on the one hand, the vicious habit of yielding to indolence on the other. "No man can serve two masters," is aptly said; and the saying is plainly illustrated by him who tries to be a good disciple, demands his place at the Lord's table with his brethren without prejudice, but neglects or refuses to "cleanse himself and be clean," because too idle or too indolent to wash.

"Be ye clean," will apply to them who administering at the Lord's table break the bread and pour the wine; but it will apply with equal force to those who from the ranks of either priesthood are called to pass the emblems to those who partake, and to those who gather to the place appointed to eat and drink together of that which is blessed unto them as the household of faith—all alike should be sufficiently godly to be clean.

ENTERTAINMENT AT INDEPENDENCE.
DURING the coming General Conference the building committee of the Saints' Church, at Independence, will give an entertainment entitled, "An Evening with Amateurs," for the benefit of the stone church building fund. Tickets for said entertainment may be had by addressing Brn. Wallace N. Robinson or Bro. Roderick May, Independence, Missouri. They are also on sale at the Blair Mercantile Co's. store and at the Racket Store, Lamoni, Iowa. Gentlemen's tickets $1.00, Ladies' 50 cents.

The character of the entertainment is advertised to include "The beautiful in art, music, and literature." The branch has labored diligently to complete its church edifice and desires the presence and aid of those present at the conference, with the assurance that those who purchase tickets will be entertained and also give them needed help in behalf of the work there.

PRIMARY GRADE LESSONS.

The Gospel Quarterly, Primary Grade, edited by a committee of three appointed by the General Sunday School Association, has been added to the Sunday school lesson literature, and will hereafter be issued regularly from the Herald Office.

The price is 20 cents per year, five cents for single copies.

These lessons complete the list by furnishing a separate grade for each department of the schools—Senior, Intermediate, and Primary. This is another step forward, and will be appreciated by all who labor in the interests of the children. It is well known that very young children, especially, require very simple, plain, and careful teaching in order to bring the lessons within the scope of their understanding. The issue of a Primary Grade Quarterly has been made to aid in meeting this demand and will prove helpful to teachers of primary classes. All intelligent instructors recognize the importance of primary teaching. The Constitution and By-laws of the General Association call attention to it. The publication of the primary lessons will evidently stimulate growth in that department of the service. They are carefully prepared and well arranged.

Sample copies of The Gospel Quarterly, Primary Grade, have been sent out. Subscriptions are solicited. The association hopes to see the primary work extended and desires a large subscription list.

Address orders to David Dancer, Business Manager, Lamoni, Iowa.

MINISTRY REPORTS.

BRETHREN in the field under General Conference appointment doubtless remember the rule requiring that ministry reports be in the hands of Secretary Stebbins not later than March 15, for publication before the conference convenes. This rule applies only to those under conference appointment.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. FRANCIS EARL, Pullman, Illinois, March 2:—

For the advance of the work, in my surroundings, I am trying to do what I can, although hardly perceptible. At Harvey, a few miles south of here, a man and his wife are deeply interested in the work. What the result will be I can only leave with them and the Author of the faith. While I love to see men and women come into the work, I have no inclination to coax, boast of testimony, or in any way offer other inducements than to present the word as plainly as possible and only such testimony as is necessary to show where we stand as a people, comprehending that if they are honest they will receive the truth because they love it, because they wish to be in harmony with God, and, individually, I would rather be an instrument in our Father's hands, of leading one such into the work than scores otherwise.

Sr. Alice M. Joslyn, Greenbush, Michigan, February 26:—

Bro. David Smith was here about a week and a half and during that time baptized four, some of the most highly respected people here. There is a far better feeling toward the work than when he presented the word at other times. Of course there are some who fight against it, but that only makes it all the stronger.

Bro. David Chambers, Persia, Iowa:—

The work in this district was never so prosperous as now. It is on the boom and would move still more rapidly if we only had laborers. Expect several to be baptized with more to follow soon. Bro. A. H. Smith has done us splendid service in this district the few days he was with us. He is the most spiritual-minded preacher we have had. He is feeling O. K. Our quarterly conference was extra—the best we ever had.

President Joseph Smith, writing from Webb City, Missouri, the 8th inst., says:—

Full houses, good interest here; have spoken two nights now and continue to-night. Conference begins this evening. Bro. T. W. Chatburn here, fresh from the Virgil City discussion, and feels well. He reports well of the situation at El Dorado Springs. One baptized here yesterday. Good spirit of inquiry manifest. Am feeling quite well.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE learn that Bro. G. H. Hilliard is locating his family at Independence, Missouri, which point he now makes his headquarters. The Saints there will no doubt appreciate their society and the ministerial help of Bro. Hilliard.

Word from Bro. T. W. Chatburn, dated El Dorado Springs, the 3d inst., reports good resulting from his discussion with Rev. Clark, at Virgil City, Missouri; also a great demand for preaching at El Dorado. Bro. C's letter will appear next week—received late.

Bro. A. M. Aldrich, Burlington, Wisconsin, writes that his aged mother, known to many of the older Saints, and now in her eighty-second year, is in good health. His uncle, John O. Aldrich, is also well.

By letter from Sr. Abbie Rounds we learn that none were baptized at Ozark, Missouri.

Letters are received from Sr. Kate Shadden, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Bro. Jerome Wildermuth, Springdale, Nebraska.

The Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, assisted by other scientific associations, is arranging for another Arctic expedition.

Bro. L. F. Daniel has made a new opening at Oakland, Indiana. Ten meetings have been held, with much interest. Two have been baptized; others will follow. Bro. Barmore was with him.

Bro. W. W. McLeod, Bishop's agent, Cormorant, Minnesota, writes very encouragingly of the work there, though times are very hard.

Bro. W. W. Blair addressed the Saints at Lamoni on Sunday, the 10th inst. Bro. Heman C. Smith was the speaker in the evening hour.

It is reported at St. Petersburg that the Czar has abolished the use of the knout among the peasantry.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Sow ye beside all waters,
Where the dew of heaven may fall,
Ye shall reap, if ye be not weary,
For the Spirit breathes o'er all.
Sow ye beside all waters,
With a blessing and a prayer;
Name Him whose hand upholds thee,
And sow thou everywhere.

Dear Home Column:—"Come, let us live with the children!" How strange it seems to me that there are persons who dislike children! Persons who can find no sympathy for their little sorrows, no smiles for their tiny joys. And to find among such persons women who wear the crown of motherhood is beyond my comprehension. How can such mothers think and feel in the way they do, has always been, is, and always will be, I presume, a mystery to me. They check the shouts of laughter, they silence the sobs of pain, and extinguish each spark of individuality by a firmness, a sternness that has no relenting poignancy. They feel their children to be tiresome burdens, in the way, bonds to keep them "tied down" at home, and their rebellion against this restraint finds expression in countless little impatient acts, unkind words, and, too often, little tingling blows which should cause their cheeks to mantle with the indignant blood, shamed into insurrection!

And often the mother is utterly careless and indifferent to her duties as a child-trainer. "If I clothe and feed my children I have done my duty by them," has dropped from a mother's lips and perhaps has been an unacknowledged thought in many another's mind. But the dear neglected children feel that they need something far better than simply food and raiment. There is, in every child, an intense yearning and longing to be loved and treasured and cared for. Why this is so marked in childhood is rather mysterious. The thought occurs to me, that as they are purest, being latest from the hands of their Creator, may it not in their natures be but typical of the desire that lies in the Divine question, "Lovest thou me?" or, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," showing that God longs for us to love him just as a little child yearns for affection from us?

Some mothers lead a social life and in it find no place for their children. What an empty existence must be that which has no care for the children! What a false circle of friends one must have who finds no place, no welcome for her children! What does a fashionable mother think is the aim of life—the end of this existence? If it is to be gained by a series of calls, teas, and receptions, why, she is not fitting her children for even that? There is no recognition for them or of them in the social world. Not until they have left childhood far behind do they "come out"—of obscurity, or pass from non-entity into sentient beings!

But ah, mothers! Let me warn you that this is life very very falsely estimated! A life passed amid a whirl of social cares and obligations is but carrying out human laws and duties; while she who seeks the best interest of her husband, her children, and, yes, herself, by gladly, thankfully accepting these gifts from God will at life's eventide be tranquilly prepared to lie down to rest, trustful that her day has been spent in the faithful performance of that which her hands found to do and to whom may be said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

"MAY JUNE."

LAMONI, February 6, 1895.

MAKE CHILDHOOD SWEET.

Wait not till the little hands are at rest,
Ere you fill them full of flowers;
Wait not for the crowning tuberose
To make sweet the last sad hours;
But while in the busy household band,
Your darlings still need your guiding hand,
Oh, fill their lives with sweetness!

Wait not till the little hearts are still
For the loving look and phrase;
But while you gentle chide a fault
The good deed kindly praise.
The word you speak beside the bier
Falls sweeter far on the living ear;
Oh, fill young lives with sweetness!

Ah, what are the kisses on clay-cold lips
To the rosy mouth we press,
When our wee one flies to her mother's arms,
For love's tenderest caress!
Let never a worldly bauble keep Your heart from the joy each day should reap,
Circling your lives with sweetness.

Give thanks each morn for the sturdy boys,
Give thanks for the fairy girls;
With a dower of wealth like this at home,
Could you rife the earth for pearls?
Wait not for death to gem Love's crown,
But daily shower life's blessings down,
And fill your hearts with sweetness.

Remember the homes where light has fled,
Where the rose has faded away;
And the love that glows in youthful hearts,
Oh, cherish it while you may!
And make your home a garden of flowers,
Where joy shall bloom through childhood's hours,
And fill your lives with sweetness.—Sel.

VALLETON, California.

Dear Sisters:—I so often feel impressed to write to you; in fact, my conscience upbraids me whenever I pick up the Herald, and many times about my work, when I think about the gospel and how little I am doing for its advancement, I feel guilty. But then, the thought that always comes next is, How can I interest those who are able to do so much better? Yet if they do not come forward, Shall I not strive to help? It is such thoughts that give me the courage to write.

We are living thirty miles from the nearest branch of the church, and I have not been there to attend meetings for over two years owing to sickness in my family. I am the only one of all my family in the church, though I have a husband and seven children. This does not speak well for me, I know, but they have had no church privileges, of any denomination whatever. Some of the elders have visited us but did not find it very encouraging, as the people living about through the mountains care little for religion. They seem to think they have no time for such things. So I read to my family from the Bible and our papers and talk to them whenever opportunity offers. I have tried to be careful in this, not to do as the children of one of my dear sisters in the work told me their mother had done; namely, That she had talked her religion to them so much that she had talked it all out of them. This sister has gone to her rest. I begin to fear I have gone to the other extreme by being too careful. Yet I do not despair, for I know God's word is sure, and also from the assuring presence of the Spirit, that they shall be brought into the kingdom, for this was said plainer than anyone could have spoken to me while engaged in earnest prayer in their behalf. O, what a glorious friend we have, dear sisters, to think we can go to him in all our troubles, and just as sure as we do we will be comforted. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

There is one thing a good sister taught me, and she had the greatest faith of anyone I ever met. She said, "If you do not get an answer to your prayers, examine yourself and see if you are in a fit condition to receive the blessings." If there is anger, jealousy, envy, or hatred in our hearts, are we in a condition to receive the answer? She said, "Search your hearts, and when you have purified yourselves of everything that is not of God, you can then receive the blessing." I am afraid I am making this too long, so will close, hoping some of the sisters of my acquaintance, seeing my poor effort, will improve on it, for I know of none who are so incompetent as myself. Praying God's blessing on all who are trying to serve him, I am,
Your sister in the one faith,

Letter Department.

NORMAN, Neb., March 3.

Editors Herald:—We are having a Nebraska blizzard to-day, which suspends meetings for the present. The crops were almost an entire failure in this mission, which includes about two thirds of the State, yet we find the Saints firm in the faith and willing to do all they can for the advancement of the truth. While times are hard, food and clothing scarce, they welcome the elders and assist them in such a way as to cause our souls to rejoice that our lot is cast among such noble people. Truly the gospel brings men and women "up higher." We should never tire in trying to bring our lives in harmony with its grand principles and teaching them to others.

This mission has its drawbacks in common with others. The Saints are scattered over such a large territory that a great many of them cannot be visited more than once a year, if at all; but it is with pleasure I record the fact that their conduct agrees with their profession, and when we visited them, good congregations greeted us at our meetings. There are several localities where quite an interest was awakened, and good will be accomplished if the efforts can be continued; but it seems almost impossible to do it till another crop is raised. I find the scattered Saints and those in weak branches need care and encouragement, and when visited by the missionaries occasionally are greatly strengthened.

If we could confine our labors to a smaller territory no doubt more could be brought into the fold, but in the present lack of missionaries it seems best to take care of those we already have as well as labor to bring others in. With all the disadvantages of dry weather, short crops, hard times, and few missionaries, I think I am safe in saying we have baptized more this mission year than any previous one. The difficulties existing and that have arisen have, as a rule, been singularly removed, so we can safely say the work is progressing slowly but surely all along the line. May it continue, is my prayer.

WARREN E. PEAK.

BALA, Kan., February 26.

Editors Herald:—I appreciate the Herald as it comes weekly on its mission of love and good will to all. I bear my testimony that your late editorials have been truly inspiring to my soul in point of doctrine and instruction to the Saints of God abroad in the earth. May we all take heed to the same while it is called to-day.

When reading it occurs to my mind that there are so many things for us to learn, to purify ourselves "even as he is pure," that in our own limited strength and wisdom we are sure to fail. But the echo comes from heaven, "My grace is sufficient." How is it possible that we can ever come up higher in spirituality and grace unless we first examine ourselves? We have our weaknesses to overcome; we are to walk in newness of life, putting off the old man and his deeds. Only the other day a brother wrote me that he had not a great amount of the Spirit of God, "but enough to drive away the evil one." I have thought a good deal upon that statement, and if it be true that "By their fruits ye shall know them," is it not for us to see to it that we produce the proper fruits as enumerated in the Holy Scriptures? Then after finding that our lives do abound in those divine graces and adornments, we can more readily concede to the priceless fact of being born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible.

I wish to say that your humble brother is well pleased with Elder I. M. Smith's able and pointed article on the evidences of the divinity of the Book of Mormon. They are brimful of intelligence and are supremely instructive to the truth seeker.

The majority of the people residing in this community are Welsh, and the writer's heart goes out in deep sympathy with his own nation and kindred, as he is alone among them in the precious faith. There exists such prejudice and hatred toward the name of Joseph Smith, Book of Mormon, and the idea of God sending angels in this period of time to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation. I realize that God blesses me with the Spirit of truth when contending with them upon different points of doctrine. Would to God they could see. I believe there are honest souls among them, but they seem to be tangled up in the many creeds and traditions of men that are so prevalent, and have such a strong hold on the minds of the people. That we may all be able to stand and abide the day of the coming of our Lord and King, is my fervent prayer.

FRANK J. PIERCE.

BLAINE, Ky., Feb. 23.

Editors Herald:—I was raised by Methodist parents and was taught to fear God, but after I came to mature age I joined the Baptist Church and was ordained an elder in 1883, and did all I could for the building up of that church; but at the same time there was a division with us on the doctrine of the Bible. I contended if it was Christ in the first age it is Christ in this, and if this was the true church as was set forth in Corinthians 12 and Ephesians 4 that the same blessings would follow; so at last I withdrew from that body with perfect peace between myself and them.

The next object was to search all the record of church history to see if I could find the church above-mentioned, and if I could not, I intended never to join another formulated government or system of man; and just when I was ready to give up all hopes of ever finding that church a minister who belonged to the same church that I did passed through Iowa and was given a tract, and in the same was embraced the doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. After perusing the same I said if that was not the Church of Christ it was not on the earth, and I wrote a few lines to the Herald; and I will say to all that wrote to me in my bereavements, you have my prayers; for I never was so comforted and encouraged, for inside of ten days after I wrote I received from fifteen to forty letters from the Saints. Then I said, Of a truth, this must be the church.

In the meantime Bro. Odell wrote me from Centerville, West Virginia, stating that he and Brn. B. Beall and James Brown would be at my house at such a time; so I had an appointment for preaching. Bro. Brown, who has now passed over the river, did some of the ablest preaching ever done in this part at that time. I did not obey, for I wanted to know I was right. Three months later Brn. G. H. Godbey and Odell came to my house, and Bro. Godbey did some excellent work. Myself and my wife were baptized and confirmed on the following night. I felt no change, only felt I had obeyed the truth. My sleep was sweet the following night, but when I awoke the next morning I never was so happy in all my life. My wife and children and all the surroundings seemed to be praising God. Then I realized what the apostle meant when he said that old things had passed away and all things become new.

So I was ordained at the last West Virginia conference—ordained elder—by Brn. G. T. Griffiths, James Moier, and G. H. Hilliard. Since that time I have been preaching the restored gospel as restored through the Prophet Joseph.

Brethren, pray for me that I may ever be faithful to my calling. I have been preaching at Red Bush, sixteen miles west of here, and promised to go back. Have also been holding services all week at E. J. Moore's school-house and have promised to preach Thursday night on the plan of salvation and Sunday on the doctrine of the church. The members of the furious mob who at one time threatened and came to this house to whip me and Bro. Godbey are as calm as lambs and say that God has forgiven them, and we must too. They are free to attend meeting and say, "Go on, Bro. Moore; your cause is just," which by the grace of God I will do, and if there is a place and means for me I am willing to spend and be spent in this work the remainder of my time. I am expecting Bro. G. H. Godbey here on or about the 1st of April. The community, or at least a great many, is anxious for him to visit this part once more. May the blessings of Israel's God rest on all the honest in heart.

Yours for the success of the Master,
G. V. MOORE.

BLAKE'S MILLS, Ohio, March 5.

Editors Herald:—A very pleasant and profitable conference of the Pittsburg and Kirtland district was held at Wheeling, West Virginia, Saturday and Sunday, March 2 and 3; Apostle G. T. Griffiths presiding, assisted by Elder Rudolph Etzenhouser of the Seventy. Goodly delegations from Pittsburg, Cleveland, Kirtland, Blake's Mills, Fairview, and other points to the number of over fifty were present. The business sessions were interesting and encouraging. Reports from all the branches were read. On Saturday evening a lecture on the Book of Mormon was given by our rising young brother, C. Ed. Miller, of Pittsburg, which was profusely illustrated by stereopticon views of Scripture texts. This lecture was confined to biblical evidences, and while being interesting and instructive, was convincing in force and application. The church was packed, and great interest was manifested by the Saints and those not of the faith.

On Sunday the 3d the Saints assembled in fasting, and the time from 8:30 until 9:30 was spent entirely in prayer service. The Sunday school convened at the latter hour and under the direction of our young brother Serig, the superintendent, a profitable and enjoyable session was held until 10:30. At 10:45 Bro. Etzenhouser discoursed in his usual earnest, forceful manner to the edification of a large audience. Promptly at two p. m. a communion and social service was commenced. The Lord poured out his Holy Spirit, and all were made glad in its revelations, many comforting assurances being given to the Saints.

Bro. M. H. Bond was the speaker of the evening, which to those who know him is evidence that the discourse was clear, logical, and spiritual,—suited to the occasion. At the close of this service conference adjourned to meet at Blake's Mills, Ohio, September 7 and 8, 1895.

On Monday about twenty-four of the visiting Saints were invited to take dinner with Sr. Mary Brewster and Bro. and Sr. Liston, and at about two o'clock concluded they could not better employ the time than in a parting prayer service, which was organized with Bro. G. T. Griffiths in charge. A most gracious fulfillment of divine promise was realized in the season of prayer and testimony which followed. Five different manifestations of the spirit of prophecy were given in admonition, cheer, and promise. All were enlivened and renewed in the desire to live worthily. The only regret expressed before beginning was that announcement had not been made and the service held in the church so that a greater number could have participated; but it was not thought that so many would remain over, so many had already departed for their homes. But we trust none will feel aggrieved on this account. Most gladly would all those present have welcomed all to this service had it been known in time to give notice.

In the evening Bro. Miller gave us another illustrated lecture on the Book of Mormon, treating of the archaeological evidences in a highly credible manner. His views were clear-cut and served to make the points of the lecture convincing. The Wheeling daily papers very kindly and generously noticed the efforts at length. The good Father was pleased on Sunday afternoon to commend the work of this young brother, and he was told to continue working and studying in humbleness of mind and the Father would cause him to do a great work in this field unto the convincing of many. Bro. Etzenhouser was to occupy on Tuesday night, which would probably close his labors in this mission prior to the Annual Conference. Altogether it was a time not soon to be forgotten, and should be an encouragement for renewed efforts all around; for the adversary is always busy, especially so now.

I am here in the interest of the work, stopping at the kindly shelter of the home of our genial brother and sister, Robert Robson, formerly of Washingtonville, Ohio. God speed the truth.
W. H. GARRETT.

MT. GROVE, Mo., March 6.

Editors Herald:—Our quarterly conference at Sargent has just closed and all have returned home after an enjoyable time. All business was transacted in a brotherly way and the voice of the Spirit was to the effect that the gospel would soon sweep the earth like "a fire sweeps a dry stubble."

I have been laboring in Douglas county for some time, making many friends for the work. The people in the rural districts here have been educated to believe in the old time-worn stories of Beadle, etc., and it necessarily takes quite an amount of preaching to correct their ideas. The work is not making rapid strides in this locality from the fact that laborers are few, the country rough, and at this time of year the Saints are pressed in money matters; but we look for better times.

Bro. Sparling will be at John's Mills on the 14th, Bro. Ward at Stony Point on the 11th; Bro. Spurlock is in Arkansas.

Your brother,
HARRY M. ATWELL.

THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED. NO. 9.

BY ELDER I. M. SMITH.

SUMMARY.

It is frequently urged, by opponents of the Book of Mormon, that the prophecies which we quote as proof of its divine origin are too obscure— indefinite. This may be true of some of those prophecies when taken alone—disconnected from the others; but not when taken as a whole, and properly connected. Is there any one prophecy in the old Bible, which, taken alone, would prove Jesus of Nazareth to be the Christ? If there is, I am not aware of it. But the prophecies pointing to him are so numerous, and their fulfillment so literal, that when connected and combined, they make a chain of evidence (each prophecy and its fulfillment being a link) that cannot be broken. Please allow me to call your attention to a few of those prophecies to give you an idea of the line of proof I should use, and to prepare your mind for a summary of the proof already adduced in favor of the Book of Mormon.

1. For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.—Isa. 9:6.

This shows us that instead of coming first in power and great glory, he is to be born into the world, simply a child; one link in the chain.

2. Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.—Isa. 7:14.

This tells us he shall be born of a virgin; another link.

3. But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, . . . out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel.—Micah 5:2.

This tells us that the Ruler of Israel, he upon whose shoulder the government shall be, is to come forth out of Bethlehem; another link.

4. And when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.—Isa. 53: 2.

This teaches that he will have no extra beauty, but be so much like a man that the people would not admire nor worship him; another link.

5. He is despised and rejected of men.—Isa. 53: 3.

6. A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.—Ibid.

7. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth.—Isa. 53: 7.

8. And he was numbered with the transgressors. [Crucified between two thieves].—Isa. 53: 12.

9. And made intercession for the transgressors. [Father forgive them; for they know not what they do.—Luke 23: 34].—Isa. 53: 12.

10. Behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.—Zech. 9: 9.

11. And they shall look upon me whom they have pierced.—Zech. 12: 10.

12. They pierced my hands and my feet.—Ps. 22: 16.

13. They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.—Ps. 22: 18.

14. And in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.—Ps. 69: 21.

15. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.—Zech. 11: 12.

16. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord.—Zech. 11: 13.

No single one of these prophecies proves that Jesus is the Christ. It is by connecting and combining them—taking them as a whole—that we prove him to be the Christ. We read these prophecies and, then, taking up the history of our Savior, we find that he came into this world a child; that he was born of a virgin, born at Bethlehem; was not desired on account of extra beauty; was despised and rejected of men; was a man of sorrows; opened not his mouth when accused before Pilate; was crucified as a transgressor; prayed for them at the time of his death; rode into Jerusalem upon an ass; his side pierced by a spear; his feet and hands pierced by nails; the soldiers divided his garments and cast lots for his coat; gave him vinegar to drink while on the cross; Judas betrayed him for thirty pieces of silver; and they took the pieces of silver and gave them to the potter for a field in which to bury strangers. And, when we read those prophecies in the Bible and see how literally they were fulfilled in the birth, life, and death of the Master, we say, Surely he is the one of whom the prophets wrote.

Reader, if you will now follow me I will try and reproduce, as briefly as I can, consistent with clearness, the main evidences already presented in favor of the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. Not, however, in the order in which they occur in the body of the work.

1. Salvation is of the Jews.—John 4: 22. Unto them were committed the oracles of God.—Romans 3: 2.

To whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises.—Romans 9: 4.

2. When Israel “shall build the old wastes” they are to be the Lord’s ministers.

But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord: men shall call you the Ministers of our God.—Isaiah 61: 6.

Israelites were chosen for “the service of God” in former days, and it is to be the same in the days when “they shall raise up the former desolations.”

3. When Israel is gathered from the “north country” the Lord’s firstborn of all the tribes of Israel is to be of Ephraim.

For I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn.—Jeremiah 31: 9.

4. Ephraim, at that time, is to be a great distance from Jerusalem.

And they shall remember me in far countries.—Zechariah 10: 9.

5. Ephraim is to be west of Jerusalem.

When he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west.—Hosea 11: 10.

6. “In the last days” (Genesis 49: 1) Ephraim is to be at the opposite end of the earth from Jerusalem.

The blessings of thy father hath prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills.—Genesis 49: 26.

7. They are to be among the people.

Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people.—Hosea 7: 8.

8. Wanderers among the nations.

Ephraim is smitten. . . . My God will cast them away, . . . and they shall be wanderers among the nations.—Hosea 9: 16, 17.

9. They are to be made known in the last days among the people.

And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people.—Isaiah 61: 9.

10. This was done by Urim and Thummim in former days.

These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood: and the Tirshatha said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.—Ezra 2: 62, 63.

11. The Lord is to set up an ensign for the nations (not for Israel alone) when Israel is gathered.

And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isaiah 11: 12.

12. This is to be just before the coming of the Lord to judge the world.

Lift up a standard for the people. . . . Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.—Isaiah 62: 10, 11.

13. It is to be lifted up at the opposite end of the world from Jerusalem at the place where Ephraim, the firstborn, is to remember the Lord.

And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth.—Isaiah 5: 26.

14. Christ is the ensign.

And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.—Isaiah 11: 10.

15. Christ (the word—the living word—the word that was made flesh) is presented to us through the gospel.

And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.—1 Peter 1: 25.

16. Hence the lifting up the ensign to the nations is preaching the gospel to them, and this is to be brought from heaven by an angel at the hour of God’s judgment.

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

17. This angel is to speak to a “young man” and that, too, just before Israel comes from the “North country” and the Redeemer comes to dwell with them.

“And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein.—Zechariah 2: 3, 4.

Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord.—Verse 6.

For, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord.—Verse 10.

18. This work is to be considered very strange.

For the Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act.—Isa. 28: 21.

19. This "strange work" is to commence just before a "consumption," from the Lord, spreads over the earth.

Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.—Isa. 28: 22.

20. This consumption is to be at the time that the Lord gathers Israel.

For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant of them shall return: the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness. For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land.—Isa. 10: 22, 23.

21. It is to be a short work.

Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved: for he will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.—Rom. 9: 27, 28.

22. It is to be "a marvelous work and a wonder."

Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder.—Isa. 29: 14.

23. This "marvelous work" is to be commenced in the midst of a people who have no prophets nor seers.

For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered.—Verse 10.

24. Also among a people who worship God with mouth and lip service.

Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men.—Verse 13.

No inspired teachers, no revelations, no prophets; depend altogether upon uninspired leaders.

25. A "sealed book" is to come forth in connection with this work.

And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed.—Verse 11.

26. The words of this book are to be delivered, by men, to one that is educated.

Which [words] men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed.—Verse 11.

27. The book itself is to be delivered to one that is not learned.

And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.—Verse 12.

28. The Lord then proceeds to do his "marvelous work," and causes the book to be read.

And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness.—Verse 18.

"The book"—the book referred to in the preceding verses.

29. This is to take place only a short time before Israel's land is blessed from on high.

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?—Verse 17.

30. And, just before Jacob's face shall cease to wax pale.

Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.—Verse 22.

31. This work is to cause rejoicing among the honest in heart.

The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.—Verse 19.

32. The Psalmist David, referring to the same time, and, no doubt, to the same book, says it shall come out of the earth.

Truth shall spring out of the earth.—Ps. 85: 11.

Thy word is truth.—John 17: 17.

Thy law is the truth.—Ps. 119: 142.

33. We know it is the same time and the same work because the same results are to follow it.

Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase.—Ps. 85: 12.

34. This is to take place at the time the angel brings the "everlasting gospel" (Rev. 14: 6) containing the "righteousness of God" (Rom. 1: 17); for, Righteousness shall look down from heaven.—Ps. 85: 11.

35. And this gospel, in the which is "the righteousness of God revealed," is to prepare Israel for his coming.

Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.—Ps. 85: 13.

This is why "Jacob shall not now be ashamed," and "the meek shall increase their joy in the Lord," for

The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever.—Isa. 32: 17.

36. Isaiah calls this record a "sealed book;" the Psalmist speaks of it as the "truth," and says it "shall spring out of the earth;" Ezekiel refers to it as "the stick of Ephraim" or "the stick of Joseph":—

Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions.—Ezek. 37: 16.

37. The stick of Joseph is to be brought forth and put with the Bible—the stick of Judah.

Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick.—Verse 19.

38. These two sticks or histories are to be one, in the hand of the Lord.

And they shall be one in mine hand.—Verse 17.

39. This is to occur just before the Lord gathers Israel.

Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, . . . and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation; . . . and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.—Verses 21, 22.

40. The stick of Joseph is in the hand of Ephraim.

Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim.—Verse 17.

41. So also are the "great things" of God's law.

I have written to him [Ephraim] the great things of my law.—Hos. 8: 12.

42. And these "great things" are to be a mystery (a "strange work," a marvelous work") to the world.

But they were counted as a strange thing.—Verse 13.

43. The power of God will be manifest, in the accomplishment of this work, and there shall be a highway.

And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty mind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smight it in the seven streams, and make men go over dryshod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.—Isa. 11: 15, 16.

Cast up, cast up the highway.—Isa. 62: 10.

And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness.—Isa. 35: 8.

44. The Lord will plead with Israel as he did "in the wilderness of the land of Egypt."

And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord.—Ezek. 20: 35, 36.

45. He plead with their fathers through a prophet.

And by a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved.—Hos. 12: 13.

46. That is the way he always works.

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3: 7.

47. Lifting up the ensign is a work of preparation—the same as the truth springing out of the earth.

Go through the gates, prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.—Isa. 62: 10.

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple.—Mal. 3: 1.

48. "The day of his preparation" is to be known by the peculiar nature of the chariots.

The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.—Nahum 2: 3-4.

49. Hence the messengers are to be termed "swift messengers."

Saying, Go ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled.—Isa. 18: 1.

50. And Israel is to return swiftly.

And, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly.—Isa. 5: 26.

51. Their horses are to be as peculiar as their chariots.

Their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind; their roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions.—Isa. 5: 28, 29.

Now please notice how literally the claims and historical facts of this latter-day work, and also the signs of the times and the remarkable inventions of the age in which it was brought forth, all harmonize with these inspired utterances. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, who were the "firstborn" in this work, took the same position as Christ and Paul in regard to "salvation" and the "service of God" being "of the Jews" or Israelites. They are in line with Isaiah in claiming to be Israelites; in line with Jeremiah in claiming to be of the tribe of Ephraim; they were in "far countries," "from the west," and that too at the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills" at the time they remembered and "turned to the Lord."

They were "mixed among the people," "wanderers among the nations," and their nationality was made "known among the people" by one standing up "with Urim and with Thummim."

The ensign was lifted up and the work commenced "from far"—"from the end of the earth;" and this lifting up the ensign was done by preaching the Christ as revealed in the gospel.

The claim that the gospel was brought from heaven by an angel, and that the angel spoke to a "young man" telling him that the time is at hand for Jerusalem to be inhabited again, are found to agree with the inspired word.

It has been considered a "strange work," and has also been followed by the judgments of God—"a consumption"—being poured out upon the people. It is a "marvelous work and a wonder," was brought forth among a people who had neither prophets nor seers, and yet they worshiped God with their mouths and lips.

A "sealed book" was offered to the world; the words of the book were delivered by men (Joseph and Martin Harris) to the learned (Professor Arthon), but the book itself to the unlearned, even to Joseph Smith. Neither the learned nor unlearned were able to read the book, so the Lord took the matter in hand and by inspiration caused the unlearned to translate it into our language, and then men did actually "hear the words of the book." Twenty-three years after this, (only a "little while,") and the land of Israel received the former and latter rains, and has since then been fast becoming "a fruitful field." The political and social restrictions have been removed from off the Jews, by the nations of the earth to a wonderful extent since then, and they have been and are now gathering back to their beloved land "by hundreds." "The meek" also are rejoicing "in the Holy One of Israel."

This book came "out of the earth," and was the speech of the dead "whispering from the dust"—"out of the ground." It is a history of some of the posterity of Joseph, hence "the stick of Joseph." It came forth "in the hand of Ephraim," was put with the Bible, the "stick of Judah," and became "one" with it in bearing testimony of the Christ; this, too, just before Israel began to gather back to their land. It claimed to be the great things of God's law, written to Ephraim, and has been "counted as a strange thing." A "highway" (railroad) has been "cast up" and it is called "the way to the holies." Iron horses have been invented with

"hoofs like flint" and "wheels like a whirlwind," and "their roaring is like a lion." The "chariots," drawn by these "iron horses," with their powerful headlights, "seem like torches" and "run like the lightnings," jostling "one against another in the broad ways" and shaking not only the "fir trees," but everything else near them. The "ambassadors" are sent out on these "chariots" and on steamships, and are indeed "swift messengers." The "highway" upon which these chariots run, is cast up to Jerusalem, and the Israelites now "come with speed swiftly."

"What more can he say than to you he hath said" to convince you of the divine origin of this work? Do you think it possible for an unlearned boy to get up a fraud, an imposition, and make it so completely harmonize in every respect with the word of God? The Lord says:—

And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.—Ezek. 33: 33.

When we look over the prophecies so literally fulfilled in the coming forth of this work; when we look at the literal fulfillment of the prophecies in the book itself; when we look at the literal fulfillment of the prophecies pointing to events, conditions, and inventions that were to immediately follow the commencement of this work; and, when we look at the signs of the times, socially, politically, and religiously; we are forced to the conclusion that the Lord has indeed commenced his "strange work," his "marvelous work and a wonder," among this people. We are forced to admit that a prophet of the Lord has been among us. Reader, "Whatever things were written aforetime were written for our learning." I ask your prayerful consideration of those prophecies to which I have called your attention in this article. May the kind Father bless you in your search for truth.

MISSIONARY WORK.

St. Paul was, in his example and teaching, a most worthy representative of the missionary arm of the church, in his time. History shows him to have been ever on the move to open up new fields for the propagation of the religion of Christ; and of this work he says:—

Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation; but as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of they shall see; and they that have not heard shall understand.—Rom. 15:20, 21.

The Lord Jesus said to Ananias concerning Paul:—

Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel.—Acts 9:15.

And Paul said to the Jews at Jerusalem, and afterwards to the Gentiles at Cesarea, that the Lord said to him,

I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.—Acts 22:21.

And,

I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee.—Acts 26:16, 17.

Paul was faithful to his calling. He idled away no time. He let slip no opportunity to preach and teach Christ to Jew and Gentile, whether of low or high degree, seeking new and untried fields as he testified to the Roman Saints in the text heretofore quoted. In all this the Lord blessed him mightily; for he fulfilled his office and calling with fidelity to God and the church, propagating the religion of Christ, thereby building the church of Christ rapidly and solidly as "a wise master builder," and the special favor of God ever attended him. The Lord called him to missionary work. His field was the world. When he had preached Christ in Jerusalem and in Judea he sought other and new fields, and so continued on until his mission closed in martyrdom at Rome.

What was true of Paul in respect to his missionary work, was largely true of all the apostles of his times, and likewise of all the missionaries of less authority in the church. Therefore it is not surprising that in this latter-day dispensation—"the dispensation of the fullness of times"—that the Lord calls men to missionary work and requires them to labor in a similar manner as did they of the first centuries of the Christian church. When missionaries faithfully confine their labors where the Lord has appointed, in "their own office and calling," the Lord will abundantly bless them and their work, for he says:—

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.—D. C. 81:3.

The foregoing quotation is exactly true. The principle taught therein is essential to the government of God. God's servants must obey God or they forfeit all claim on his blessings. Man must obey or suffer. The church must obey or suffer. Every officer of the church must obey or suffer; and to obey, he must learn his duty and then do it.

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so. Amen.—D. C. 104:44.

From all the foregoing it follows, that those called especially to missionary work, should "act in the office" of a missionary and prosecute it in "all diligence." If he does this, he, like St. Paul, will strive "to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named," lest they "should build upon another man's foundation. But as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of they shall see; and they that have not heard shall understand."

Confirmatory of what I have written is the following word of the Lord.

The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great—that the Twelve and the Seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they will but now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past.—D. C. 122:7.

It is highly gratifying to read such testimonies from the missionaries as is found in the letter of Bro. T. W. Chatburn, in Herald, page 104, last paragraph of the letter, as also in communications from other missionaries to us, some of which are published and some not, all of which bear witness for God and his word, that when the ministry are careful to fulfill their own duties, work in their own field, labor in their own particular office and calling, and not seek "beyond their measure" nor attempt to do those duties assigned of God to other and different officers, then the Lord blesses and prospers their efforts, and gives them success, and joy, and favor with all and in all concerned.

The writer was, from 1858 to 1873, an active missionary, leaving family and business, and going from one new field to another in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Indiana, Ohio, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Michigan, Missouri, New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, California, Nevada, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Colorado, Kansas, also laboring in the churches to some extent since 1873, opening some new fields, and he is therefore competent to testify from personal experiences as to the special favors and providences bestowed of the Lord when faithfully engaged in missionary work. This work must and will be done, and be done as God wills it to be done. Happy are they who are called to this work if they prove faithful to that trust. Such as are called and fail in duty, "shall not be counted worthy to stand."

Sunday School Associations.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION SECRETARIES.

Last year we were unable to report the full strength of the General Association because some reports from district associations and schools were not sent in. We want to avoid this this year, and you are, therefore, urged to send me your reports immediately after the last district convention, if you are organized into a district; and if not, then after your last regular school business meeting preceding the General Association meeting to be held April 4 and 5, 1895. Try and have them in by March 20, as it requires some time to make a comparative report. This fact will explain the necessity for promptness on your part.

Also, send me the list of names of delegates appointed to the General Association meeting. Give each delegate a separate credential. Call the attention of each delegate to the program as published in the Herald so that he may be prepared for work when called on.

It is the intention to have each delegate a scholar in the training class for Thursday night, April 4, and we ask you to urge him to prepare himself for it. The text-book for this lesson, Trumbull's Teachers and Teaching, can be found at the Herald Office, as well as all blanks referred to in this notice.

Artificial clouds were recently made for the protection of vines from frost at Oaeleain, on the Swedish-Norwegian frontier. In carrying out this novel innovation liquid tar was ignited in tin boxes placed along the vine rows, and large sections of solidified petroleum were fired at various places in the vineyard. From these combustibles large clouds of smoke arose and thoroughly protected the particular vineyard in which the experiment was being tested, although vines in the immediate neighborhood were badly injured by the frost.

Miscellaneous Department.

THE WAR AT EL DORADO SPRINGS.

The first proposition, "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?" was affirmed by Elder White. He used a chart representing the parable of the vineyard, in which the Lord sent out servants in the various dispensations. This worried Braden, and every time he tried to refute the argument he would get into a trap. The prophetic calling of Joseph Smith was ably maintained, inasmuch that people began to question on the streets, "Does Braden believe it too?"

Elder Love, pastor of the church at El Dorado, seemed to think that he ought to run the debate on general principles. He had a great deal to say about the expense of the house during the discussion. Finally the moderators took the matter in charge and personally obligated themselves to see that the expense was raised. It only amounted to ten dollars. The plan agreed upon was to raise the same by public collection each evening. If the collections amounted to more than the expenses it should be divided between the disputants. But now a wail goes up that the Latter Day Saints are not paying their part. Rev. Love arose and made a personal attack upon us, misstating the facts in the case. He was followed by the moderators, who showed him up in his true light as a chronic grumbler and disturber of the peace of the assembly. About this time Elder Rich of the Christian Church arose to mingle his melodious voice among the disturbers. The chair declared him out of order. He refused to sit down until he was about to be taken in custody by an officer.

The "Official Board" demanded of the moderators in writing that the collections be taken for the Latter Day Saints one night and the Christian Church next night, etc. The document was in Braden's handwriting and was evidently intended to stir up a rivalry between the friends of the two disputants to bleed the people. This Elder White and the moderators sat down on, and refused to make any more public collections, preferring to raise the money by private subscription, notwithstanding the "Official Board" demanded that their plan should be adopted or the house should be closed. The house closing demands continued to bob up all along the way, but were always in Braden's handwriting.

Braden's main effort was upon the "Beauties of the Book of Mormon." He only devoted ten minutes of his first speech to an examination of the affirmative argument. His speeches were always in manuscript form, and if he said anything in which he was cornered he would deny having said it, and appeal to his manuscript and ask for a committee. We have no evidence that he always stated just what was in his manuscript, but one thing was plain, Braden regarded it as better authority than the Bible.

Mr. Braden stated that "If a counterfeit bill should be discovered it would not be asked, 'Does it resemble the genuine?' but, 'Who issued it?'" "Proving that the Book of Mormon harmonizes with the Bible don't prove it to have been issued by the proper authority." Elder White replied, "This is just what I intend to prove, that it was issued by the proper authority. If a bill is so issued, no matter if a mistake should be made in some minor point, it does not follow that it is counterfeit."

Braden goes back on his own logic and proceeds to hunt for a mistake in the bill. Elder White proceeds to show that the proper authority issued the bill.

Mr. B. next finds fault with Latter Day Saints for examining revelations given through the prophet, saying, "Who ever sat in judgment on a revelation of an apostle or prophet of the Bible?" He was referred to 1 Corinthians 14:29: "Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the others judge." Prophets have been known to transgress as did King Saul, David, and Solomon. Would Braden receive a revelation from one of these men while in transgression? Does it prove all their revelations to have been frauds because they did so transgress? If so we must tear out part of our Bible.

Elder White presented the parable of the vineyard about as follows: The time represented as "one day" covers the whole period of the kingdom of heaven from creation to the second coming of Christ. Early in the morning was Adam's time; about the third hour was Noah's time; about the sixth hour was in the days of Moses; the ninth hour was in the days of Christ; and the eleventh hour was the days of Joseph Smith. God would do nothing but what he did through his prophets. (Amos 3:7.) The servants last hired would labor but one hour. The angel was to come in the hour of God's judgment. He came at the eleventh hour or just one hour from midnight, the time Christ is to come. The feast Christ ordered prepared when here in the flesh at the ninth hour was called dinner. (Matt. 22:4.) The guests invited refused to come and then another invitation was to be made to those out in the hedges and byways, and this would be at supper time. (Rev. 19:7-9.) After the husbandman sent servants demanding fruit, etc., and received none, he sent his son. They killed the son and then the vineyard was again to be let out to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

Mr. Braden did not like the parable because the length of the hours were not the same. He was shown from good authority that the term "year," day, hour, etc., was used in a variety of ways by the ancients, and represented periods of time rather than a definite portion of duration. He used Ingersoll's argument showing the discrepancy in the wording of the parables, without giving proper credit to Ingersoll. He was informed that the several parables all pointed to certain central truths concerning the kingdom of heaven, whether the parables themselves were worded the same or not. The various scriptures bearing on the restoration of the gospel in the "dispensation of the fullness of times" were brought in and forcibly applied in their proper order. The chart seemed to give extra force to the application of these texts, and the people wondered in admiration. The great Goliath Braden could not pull up a single peg.

Mr. Braden insisted that Joseph was a false prophet because he appointed his successor, to keep it all in the family, but he said no more after that he was informed that Moses would by the same argument be found a false prophet, as he also appointed Joshua to be his successor.

When crowded to give an exegesis of the angel flying to earth with the gospel (Rev. 14: 6), Mr. Braden quoted Revelation 22: 10, "The time is at hand." Said it was all fulfilled in that age; but when his attention was called to the fact that the Book of Revelation spoke also of the coming of Christ and the judgment, he again turned to the "Beauties of the Book of Mormon."

As this seemed to be the main object of attack Bro. White set forth clearly the evidences concerning its coming forth. He showed that Israel was to gather back to their land and again receive the favors of heaven; that the Book of Mormon will be the main witness in convincing the Jews that Jesus is indeed the Christ. What effect would Braden have preaching out of the New Testament to the Jew? The record says, "These signs shall follow them that believe." Braden says, "We admit they don't follow." would that kind of preaching convert the Jew? No, sir; you must appeal to the old Bible in which they believe, and show the divinity of the Book of Mormon, which testifies of Christ. You must present a gospel of power to the Jew, a gospel of inspiration and communion from heaven.

Mr. Braden discovers "something rich" on page 72, a quotation from Watts, "Am I a soldier of the cross?" Elder White turned to the quotation and read, "They who have endured the crosses of the world and despised the shame of it shall inherit," etc. "Now," said the speaker, "all who heard 'Am I a soldier of the cross' in that hold up your hand." Not a hand went up. "Braden, put up your hand." Braden roared "liar," etc., amidst the deafening applause which followed.

Mr. Braden galloped along through the Book of Mormon stating his objections rapidly, sometimes giving the right page and sometimes the wrong one, scarcely ever stopping to read the passage, knowing of course that if he did the very text itself would spoil his argument. He therefore went rapidly along making assertions without giving proof.

He attempted to score a point by asserting that the book was full of anti-Freemasonry. That their grips and passwords were referred to and they even had the white apron of the Masons. When demanded to show the reference to the white apron he denied having said it, and claimed to have said "lambskin apron." He was even driven to the wall on that, as the text says, "and they had a lambskin about their loins" (p. 428), and it was dyed in blood. The word apron does not occur at all. Next night Braden appeared on the stand robed in a Masonic apron, and vainly attempted to show it to be just the thing referred to, yet persisted in denying having called it "The Masonic white apron." All about the apron was then dropped and no more said concerning it until Mr. Braden began to recapitulate on the first proposition. He seemed to have on a full head of steam, and was running at full speed through the Book of Mormon, stating the objections he had sustained, and when he came to the lambskin, it came out "white apron," as before. The audience saw the point and roared with laughter.

Moroni with his "rent coat" on the end of a pole came in for a share in the controversy, but when it was read in all its connections it went back on Mr. Braden like a boomerang.

Everybody wanted to see the Book of Mormon and read for themselves, and several copies could have been sold if they had been obtainable at the time. It was the principal text-book for awhile on the streets of El Dorado.

Braden next discovers a loophole in the chart. Says it makes no mention of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, consequently can't be right. That the time covered by the parable begins with Moses and ends with Christ. He was informed that the gospel was on earth and the vineyard supplied with laborers in the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that God only went out to hire laborers at those periods when the church had gone into a state of apostasy, as in the case of Noah, Moses, Christ, and Joseph Smith. That the time could not end with Christ as the "wicked husbandmen" (Jews) were to be destroyed (which took place A. D. 70, when 1,364,000 perished by the sword, 600,000 by famine, and 97,000 were taken captive) and the vineyard let out to others, in consequence of their having killed the only son.

The movements of the planets was a great stumbling-stone to Mr. Braden, but his objection was easily overthrown by plain and positive proofs that the ancients were in possession of knowledge of this kind.

Glass was a modern invention, too, argued Mr. Braden, consequently the Book of Mormon was a forgery; but, fortunately, Dr. William Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible traces it back as far as Joseph in Egypt, to begin with. This was rubbed in on the gentleman.

Mr. Braden took three different positions on the kingdom during the debate. 1. The kingdom of heaven referred to in the parable of the vineyard (Matt. 20: 1) extended from Moses to Christ. 2. The kingdom will never be on earth till Christ comes again in glory and drinks wine anew with his disciples. 3. The kingdom was the church which Peter opened on Pentecost day, and into which Paul was afterwards translated. Just what the audience thought of this change of front we do not know, but "a drowning man will catch at a straw," we are told.

He vainly endeavored to make the expression, "Master Mahan," found in Genesis, Inspired Translation, to mean Master Mason. It is sufficient to say that he got enough of his Masonic dodge before it was ended.

And now we are informed that Isaiah, twenty-ninth chapter, was fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem. He gives us a hasty analysis of the chapter in which he denies several of the plain statements of the text and then informs us that this settles it.

Bro. White took up the line of argument in general use among the ministry and showed plainly that the prophecy had been fulfilled in our day.

The revelation on the rebellion was introduced in proof of the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith. Its literal fulfillment in every detail was pointed out. Braden asserted that Joseph was only prophesying of something that had already occurred a few days before; that South Carolina had already seceded by "passing the nullification act," but "Old Hickory Jackson" spoiled the fulfillment of "Joe's" prophecy by sending gunboats down there. Mr. Braden had no more to say when his attention was called to the fact that the Southern States were not divided against the Northern States in "Old Hickory's" time, neither did "Old Hickory" prevent the fulfillment of the prophecy.

No such things as plates of metal were used by the ancients for writing material, argued Mr. Braden, but the following historical proofs came in quite handy about this time:—

"Tablets, and sometimes several tablets formed into a book, like the wooden tablets, consisting of plates of lead, copper, brass, and other metals, were anciently used, either to form leaves on which the wax might be spread, or else for the writings to be engraven upon them. The latter process is exceedingly ancient. Pliny mentions that leaden sheets or plates were used for important public documents. This we learn also from other sources; and brass was also employed for inscriptions intended to be very durable."

"Montfaucon purchased at Rome, in 1699, an ancient book entirely composed of lead. It was about four inches long and three inches wide: and not only were the two pieces that formed the cover, and the leaves, six in number, of lead, but also the stick inserted through the rings to hold the leaves together, as well as the hinges and nails. It contained Egyptian gnostic figures and unintelligible writing."

"Brass, as more durable, was used for inscriptions designed to last the longest, such as treaties, laws, and alliances. These public documents were, however, usually written on large tablets. The 'style' for writing on brass and other hard substances, was sometimes tipped with diamond."

"The leaves of these tablet books, whether of wood, metal, or ivory, were connected together by rings at the back, through which a rod was passed, which served as a handle to carry them by."—"Pictorial Illustrations of the Bible," by Robert Sears.

"Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever."—Job 19: 23, 24.

"They wrote unto him in tablets of brass, to renew the friendship and league which they had made with Judas and with Jonathan, his brethren."

"And they decreed him liberty, and registered it in tables of brass, and set it upon pillars in mount Zion."

"And they commanded that this writing should be put in tables of brass, and that they should be set up within the compass of the sanctuary in a conspicuous place."—1 Maccabees 14: 18, 26, 48.

"The earliest mode of writing was on bricks, tiles, oyster shells, stones, ivory, bark, and leaves of trees, and from the latter term 'leaves of a book' is probably derived."

"Copper and brass plates were very early in use, and a bill of feoffment on copper was some years since discovered in India, bearing date one hundred years before Christ."—Condensed Cyclopaedia (W. S. Trigg, Pub., N. Y.), vol. 3, No. 231, p. 57.

"Among the Greeks and Romans, books of wood were common. For the more important purposes they also employed ivory, as well as bronze and other metals."—American Cyclopaedia, Art. "Book."

"The materials generally used by the ancients for their books were liable to be easily destroyed by the damp, when hidden in the earth; and in times of war, devastation, and rapacity, it was necessary to bury in the earth whatever they wished to preserve from the attacks of fraud and violence. With this view, Jeremiah ordered the writings which he delivered to Baruch to be put in an earthen vessel. (Jer. 32.) In the same manner the ancient Egyptians made use of earthen urns or pots of proper shape for containing whatever they wanted to inter in the earth and which without such would have been destroyed."—Watson's Bible Dic., p. 171.

Here Mr. Braden jumps the Book of Mormon and gallops along, stating his objections, giving page, etc., so rapidly that I could not get all the references. My memorandum shows fifty-five, all given in less than ten minutes. He finally settles down on the darkness which prevailed at the crucifixion of Christ where they could "feel" the darkness, according to Mr. Braden. He was informed that the Book of Mormon said nothing of the kind, but that they could feel the vapor of darkness. (P. 438.) Also that the Bible in Exodus 10: 21, actually makes this "rich" blunder Mr. Braden tries to find in the Book of Mormon. It was not the darkness that prevented their dry wood from burning, but the mist.

Next comes Braden's big snake story found on page 518, in which he says the snakes all rose up on their tails and drove all the cattle to South America, from the great lakes to the gulf, and the Atlantic to the Pacific. All the refutation necessary in this case was simply to read what the text says and to remind the audience that it was about like Braden's Masonic apron, or "Am I a soldier of the cross."

Another "big yarn" is discovered on page 530, in which ten millions of people are killed in a seven days' fight. Hold, says Elder White, your estimate as to the number may be about right, but the seven days' time should be about fifteen years. Page 527: "In that same year which he [Ether] was cast out from among the people, there began to be a great war among the people, for there were many who rose up who were mighty men, and sought to destroy Coriantumr. . . . Wherefore he gave battle unto them," etc.

Paragraph 3: Shared gives battle to Coriantumr, and in the third year takes him prisoner. In the fourth year the sons of Coriantumr beat Shared. Coriantumr is wounded in a battle and rests two years to cure his wounds, during which time the war goes on. Shared dies and his brother Lib takes command of the army and has a long war with Coriantumr. Lib is killed and Shiz takes his place. Shiz is leader long enough to win a great reputation. The text says the war had been "long," also "great and lasting." Even after this expression is used great battles are recorded between Shiz and Coriantumr before the the number of the dead is summed up.

Braden discovers "something rich" again on page 531, where he says they armed a lot of babies in their war. Elder White informed him that the word "babies" was not found there but the term "men, women and children" is used. Common sense would show that only those children were armed who were able to fight, and the record plainly says so on page 354, "as many as were able to use a weapon of war."

And now he strikes the final scene of the war in which he says "they fit and they fit and they fit." This old musty chestnut was used so much the people referred to it as "Braden's fit." He represents Shiz as running around after his head has been cut off. No such thing is represented in the text when examined, and the people of El Dorado know it quite well too. But then, a man has to have something to say when he has a reputation at stake and is indorsed by his church.

And now the Doctrine and Covenants comes in for a share of Braden's wrath, to prove Joseph Smith to have been an impostor. Forty-seven references appear on my notes as fast as I could put down the number of the page. He attempts to show that Joseph teaches the Saints to "go in debt and pay when they please." To "lay low till the Saints are increased in numbers and the army of Israel very great, and then raise up and drive these Missourians out." Elder White exposed his misrepresentation, showing that the Saints were forbidden to shed blood, and that they must pay their debts. That the "armies of Israel" are the preachers of the gospel, and that one of the enemy's towers (Clark Braden) was now being badly thrown down and demolished.

He again discovers "something rich" on page 131. Enoch's "heart swelled wide as eternity, and his bowels yearned, and all eternity shook." Says Mr. Braden, "This was a case of stomach ache for you."

Elder White showed this expression, "his bowels yearned," to be a Scriptural term, and Braden's argument applied to the Bible would simply make it ridiculous. Isaiah 16: 11, says: "Wherefore my bowels shall sound like a harp." "A regular string band in this man's bowels, but that is in the Bible, you know. If found in the Book of Mormon it would be called a 'beauty.'" "

And now Mr. Braden attempts something cute. He has kept still on the subject of polygamy until the last night, and now springs it the last five minutes of his first speech. The rules prohibit the introduction of new matter in the closing speech, so he just sets the subject afloat and waits to make his main fight until the last speech. But Bro. White was "loaded for bear" on that subject, and Braden suddenly wakes up to remember that he signed a rule which provides that all testimony shall be subject to the rules governing before the civil courts. Here Judge Philip's decision comes in and plays a nice part much to the discomfiture of Braden. Other evidences are speedily arrayed and Braden's charge of polygamy on Joseph Smith falls flat.

He next attacks the Inspired Translation of the Bible; accuses Joseph Smith of interpolating words, sentences, and paragraphs; winds up by pronouncing it a "blasphemous fraud." Elder White calls his attention to the fact that he (Braden) had used the Inspired Translation by Joseph Smith in lecturing against infidelity, at Holden, Missouri. Of course Braden denied it, but responsible parties assert that it is true.

It was clearly shown that the New Testament makes quotations from the Old, which are not found in King James' translation, but which are found in the Inspired Translation and Book of Mormon. The New Testament writers speak of Christ and the gospel being known among the old prophets. The King James' translation of the old Bible tells nothing about it, but the Inspired Translation and Book of Mormon frequently speak of it. Matthew 27: 9 is a quotation by Christ from Jeremiah, but is not found in Jeremiah, showing that he had writings of Jeremiah not found in King James' version. Acts 26: 21, 22, 23, shows plainly that Christ had been taught by Moses and the prophets just as restored in the Inspired Translation and Book of Mormon. John 5: 39 also shows that the old prophets preached Christ, also 1 Peter 1: 9-12; Luke 24: 25-47.

The foregoing are some of the principal points presented in the discussion of the first proposition. As to the general drift of public opinion concerning the question, the following, written by a prominent lawyer and signed by some of the leading citizens of El Dorado, speaks for itself:—

"El Dorado Springs, Missouri, February 12, 1895. We the undersigned, not members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, having heard the White-Braden debate on the proposition. 'Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?' hereby assert that in our judgment, the argument of Elder I. N. White supported by him by Biblical proof, was unrefuted by Elder Clark Braden; and we further assert that the statements made by Elder Braden as to the contents of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Covenants were refuted by Elder White, by the reading of the passages referred to in said statements."

Will each member forward to the Secretary, at Lamoni, Iowa, his dues for the current year, as well as what he may be in arrears. EDWARD L. PAGE, Sec.

DISTRICT REPORTS.

As some statistical reports of districts have been received for presentation to the coming Annual Conference, this is to again call attention to the fact that the session of 1892 declared that such reports were no longer required. But, as heretofore notified, the total number of members in each district should be stated upon the delegate credentials sent in. The majority of those that have come in this spring have not contained a statement of the membership. This lack makes it necessary that I should insert the numbers, according to the General Church Records.

Although no annual report is necessary, still it would be well for each district secretary to keep in his minute book a series of columns containing the name of each branch and a complete account with each branch, whereby it may be known at any time, and particularly at the end of the year, just how many have been baptized, received, removed, died expelled, married, and ordained, in each branch and in the whole district, according as such changes have been entered on the district record. When any gain or loss or other change is made the fact is so entered in these columns. It is the system by which I keep a full credit and debit account with every branch and every district throughout the world, so that the standing of any branch in any portion of the church can be known in an instant, and how it stood one, two, or more years ago. It is easily kept, and I think it would be well for each district secretary to adopt the system and thus know from quarter to quarter and from year to year how every branch in their charge stands or has stood. They can then know whether the branch clerks begin their reports correctly or not, and at each conference may know whether a report is correct or whether it should be referred back for correction.

If time may allow I am willing to assist any district secretary towards thus keeping a tally account, whereby they need not permit imperfect reports to pass conferences, and thus cause so much correspondence to bring about a harmony in records, as has been the case these many years past.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Secretary.

FIRST QUORUM OF SEVENTY.

The First Seventy will meet in the north room of the basement in the Saints' chapel, Independence, Missouri, on Wednesday, April 3, at nine a. m. On the part of those under general appointment, their report to the conference will be accepted as a quorum report, unless they have something special to bring before the quorum. Those not under general appointment will send their reports, as heretofore, to the secretary, Bro. R. S. Salyards, Box 128, Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa, ten days before the convening of conference.

MARRIED.

CHRISTIANSEN—RILEY.—At the home of the bride's parents, No. 615 Seventh avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Bro. George C. Christiansen and Sr. Clara May Riley, T. W. Williams officiating. The house was thronged with friends and loved ones who had come in response to a neatly printed invitation. Bro. E. E. A delightful supper was served at nine p. m. to nearly a hundred guests, after which the Hawkeye band of Lodge No. 184 I. O. O. F. serenaded the bridal pair with a number of beautiful selections. Bro. George is secretary of the local Z. R.-L. S. and an efficient Sunday School worker, while Sr. May is a modest yet earnest Latter Day Saint. JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

IN WORDS OF ONE SYLLABLE.

THE strength which lies in words of one syllable has been often demonstrated, and no doubt the simple directness of this address delivered to a graduating class at Fort Wayne impressed itself on the minds of the listeners with a force that made them remember it. The President of the Board of Trustees was Mr. A. P. Edgerton, afterward National Civil Service Commissioner, and his advice, given eleven years ago, is still worth preserving. The greater part of it is here quoted:—

“This day we close for the year the Fort Wayne free schools, and we now part with you, the girls and boys we are no more to teach.

“I say girls and boys, for when three-score and ten years have come to you you will be glad to have your friends say that health and peace of mind have kept your hearts warm; that you wear no brow of gloom; are not borne down with age, but still, in heart, are ‘girls and boys.’ When these years come, and I hope they will come to all, the tide of time will roll back and tell you of your school-time days, when the fair, the kind, and the true found love, but the false heart found no friends, no tongues to praise. These days bring rich gifts to age, and when you shall cease to think of them your fire has burnt low, and your light has gone out. You have been here taught in the hope that the free schools of Fort Wayne would help to make you of use to your friends and to the world; would give you faith in all that is good and true, and lead you to seek work; for this you must seek and do if you would have a good name, wealth, a home, a charge to keep, or a trust to serve. Go forth with a bold, true heart to seek the work for you to do.

“Keep in mind that the hours of work run through each day, and that God’s great law of life is, ‘In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.’

“Now for you, young men, this truth is told.

“Go where you will through the world, and you will find on the front door of shops and mills, of stores and banks, and on ships, on farms, on roads, in deep mines where men toil for wealth; where laws are made that make some men too rich, and men of worth and work through all our land too poor; where men by law are taught to plot with sin, to spurn the right, that charge and cost and spoil may make old ‘Quirk’s’ law firms rich; where law is so plead that the Judge must guess to find what’s law; where quacks most fight o’er sick men’s pains and dead men’s bones; where types are set, and none to mind the proofs; where priests do preach and pray, and where schools are taught this sign: ‘Brains Will Find Work Here.’

“Don’t fear. Step up and ask for work; brains will get it. Don’t let ‘I dare not wait or I would’—like the cat that loves fish; but dares not wet her foot.

“If it be said ‘What can you do? Will you learn a trade?’ say ‘I have none, but I can learn one and put brains in it.’ When you go to a place where brains should hunt for work and will be sure to find it, it may be said to you, ‘Do you see that plow? Can you hold and drive it deep?’ That plow, in its wise use, gives all men food.

“Do you see that wheel and that crank and those shafts and that press and do you hear the rush and the hiss of the steam which moves them? Can you make and hold and run them? Can you build and drive the works and wheels which make the wealth of the earth and cause it to roll and to float to and fro from place to place where it is best for man to use it?

“Can you spin the thread and weave it, which makes robes for kings, and silks for the rich and vain, and dress for the poor, and all that skill and art have wrought by loom and hand for man’s use?

“These things are all shot through with threads of light—the light of mind and art and skill which shines each day more bright and dims all the old by some new found light, as the years go on.

“If you say that you do not know how to do all this work, but you will try to learn some of it and to do it well, then will be said to you, ‘Can you and will you work? And will you speak the truth and in all things strive to do no man wrong?’ If you say ‘Yes,’ then all the doors where man’s good and great work is done will swing for you to pass in to do your part; and thus you will see how God rules, in all his ways, in man’s good works and deeds. Some may hope for fame, but if they doubt that God rules, have not trust and faith, they well may fear their fate. New books, not old coins, keep charge of fame. Look well to books, for through them the world’s best thoughts and deeds now speak.

“To you, young girls, I must say a word, not to chide nor to praise. You can plant the rose which shall bloom and give its sweets to all; or you can grow the thorn, which shall pierce and tear the hearts of those who love you, hope for you, pray for you.

“The turn your minds now take will fix your life to come. If you are led in a just way to pure thought and deed, you will be sure to find joy and peace and health in all you do. You each hope, some day, to be a good man's wife. It is well to be this; but take care that you be not a fool's drudge.

"What should you bring to a good and true man to make his and yours a home of joy and peace? I can tell you: Good health, a mind rich in stores of thought; a pure heart, full of love and truth and trust in God.

"It is not a curl, nor a bang, nor a smile, nor a dress, nor art in a sigh or a tear, that can win the worth you need to bless you; but it is the right sense to know the way to a good man's heart; to know how to be true to your own self; to be at your own home and in all you do the girl that pure and good men seek; the girl that knows such men when she meets them, and finds the worth that dwells in them, and does not drive them from her to hear the praise of fools—and thus to make all her life a dream, or a woe.

"In all the walks of life good men are found. They own the world and do all its best work.

"The man with the hard hand of toil can press a heart as true—can lift the babe he loves in a way as soft—and at its smile will kiss its cheek, and at its pain will wet it with a tear—can sing the song that doth please as well—and can strike with his strong arm as quick and sure the blow that makes men free—as judge, or priest, or king.

"The right choice at first, in all things, is all there is to 'well done' at last.

"Our words of 'well done,' here we now give you, with the hope that they may help to guard your way to the end of a well spent life."—Ex.

FOR DIVORCE REFORM.

THE National Divorce Reform League is a simple organization of Protestants of leading faiths, with some Catholics, the object of which is to promote an improvement in public sentiment and legislation in the interest of the family, especially as affected by existing evils relating to marriage and divorce. The latest annual report states that the league intends to point the way to the protection and improvement of the most fundamental and far-reaching institution of the family by its touch upon the resources of religion, education, law, and industry, and presents a summary of legislative acts tending to this improvement which have been passed in the last two years.

Arkansas has enacted a law regulating the distribution of property after divorce. Colorado makes failure to support a wife a misdemeanor. Illinois makes it a misdemeanor to abandon a wife or a child under twelve years of age. Kentucky has clearly defined the degrees of relationship within which marriages are forbidden, prohibited marriage between a white and a negro or mulatto, enacted that a marriage is not lawful unless solemnized in the presence of an authorized person or society, and has reenacted with clearer definition a former law requiring a bond with good security in the penalty of one hundred dollars on application for a license in case the applicants are personally unknown, with the condition that there is no lawful cause to obstruct the marriage. The new law in that State (Kentucky) reduces the number and more carefully guards the causes for divorce, allows judicial separation as under the former statute, and provides that there shall not be granted to any person more than one divorce, except for living in adultery, to the party not in fault, and for the causes for which a divorce may be granted to both husband and wife. Maryland imposes a fine for performing the marriage ceremony without a license, and also for failing to make a return within thirty days. Massachusetts requires that notices of intention of marriage are not to be received by town clerks of persons under eighteen and sixteen years respectively except on order of the Judge of Probate after consent of parent or guardian, forbids the alteration of the record of a birth, death, or marriage except on such evidence as is required for original entry, and authorizes the clerk to require oath to the truth of statements made and to refuse a certificate if he has reasonable doubts of the statements made to him. In New Jersey the Governor vetoed a bill providing a system of marriage license. New York has prohibited marriage between uncles and nieces or aunts and nephews. Ohio has imposed a penalty for unlawfully performing the marriage ceremony, and made it a misdemeanor for a married man to represent himself as unmarried making proposals of marriage. Rhode Island provides that certificates of births, marriages, and deaths of nonresidents in a town or city shall be sent to the town or city where the parties or their parents reside. Vermont has limited the continuance of libels for divorce to succeeding terms of court, and amended the provision for divorce on the ground of refusal to support. Virginia has substituted three years in place of five as the period for which desertion must continue before a divorce can be granted.

Nineteen of the States have within the last two years passed one or more acts each in amendment of the marriage or divorce laws or both, and several have increased their protection against licentious practices. In these and other years twenty-three States have created commissions on uniform legislation on marriage, divorce, and several other subjects, Iowa, South Carolina, and Virginia being among those recently added to the list. A conference of these commissions was held last year, and it is expected their number soon will be increased. Much interest in the subject is being taken in legal circles, and some prominent men have expressed themselves in favor of proposing the enactment by Congress of a statute providing for the appointment of several commissioners whose duty shall be the forming of codes for all the States and for the nation. The report notes a tendency toward essential uniformity in marriage and divorce laws in all civilized countries, and states it to be probable that some greater degree of international uniformity will be found practicable before many years have elapsed. In view of all this the proposed retrograde action in South Dakota especially merits severe condemnation.—Chicago Tribune.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR.
R. S. SALYARDS - - ASSISTANT EDITOR.
JOSEPH LUFF - - - CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, MARCH 20, 1895.

WHERE IS IT?

JOSEPH SMITH in a statement furnished by him to I. Daniel Rupp, of Pennsylvania, to be incorporated in a History of Religions in the United States, published in 1844, gave the estimated number of Latter Day Saints to be 150,000 to 200,000. This statement was made a little while before the death of Joseph Smith, and is supposed to be fairly made. In a late statistical statement being published in the news journals is the following among the "Figures from the the Churches." "The Latter Day Saints, Mormons, have 856 churches with $1,051,791, and a membership of 166,125."

The ministerial career of Joseph Smith, covered the period from 1827 to June, 1844, and in the church after its organization from 1830 to 1844, nearly three months over fourteen years. The estimated number of communicants—150,000—shows a phenomenal activity of the ministry, and a success in evangelization equally as phenomenal. An equal ratio of increase if it had been had would have sent the aggregate up into the millions; but after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, for reasons that somebody is surely responsible for, there came a change and the tide of conversions ceased; and after the passing of fifty years the Utah Mormon Church so zealously claiming to be the true church has a showing of barely sixteen thousand of an increase over the lowest estimate made for the year 1844. Where does the responsibility for such discrepancy lie. Is the Reorganization in the fault, and how?

The Reorganization began with a few. This few were moved upon by the interests of self preservation and divine direction. Their first conference was held June, 1852, and was composed of officers and members who held membership and official standing in the aggregated thousands of the church in 1844; and against all the bitterness of opposition from sectarianism which the original church met and the accumulated difficulties thrown in the way of progress by those responsible for the departure from the faith and the decadence of evangelization, there are in fellowship with the new movement some 400 churches (or branches), and some 30,000 membership, with a rapidly increasing force of rising young men whom the Lord is using as evangelists to spread the gospel of salvation.

APPEALS FOR AID.

THE HERALD is receiving from many directions appeals for help, made by individuals ostensibly belonging to the church, some being from branches and districts already organized, of whom we know nothing, neither as to the fact of their membership, nor as to the necessities of the case. While it is not proper to turn away from those who have need, it is not the province of the HERALD to stand sponsor for every call for help made to the Saints through the HERALD, or sought to be so made. It is an irregular and very doubtful way to secure help when it is really needed, as it comes to those already burdened, and who have so often responded that they pass such appeals by in a manner indifferent, if not callous to them. The great mass of those who take the HERALD are poor, in the sense of not being rich; and while they are generous, they often give beyond the warrant of the conditions surrounding them.

It is better to make appeal to the Bishop, or his agents, that the case may be inquired into and help afforded, if needed and it be practicable. Bro. Kelley's address is Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa.

The "chain system" of appeal is being overdone. It would work well if it were only now and again one, but with the mails groaning with them, the system is a failure and many a one falls flat because of the demand on time, money, and patience on the part of the "chained."

If the Saints will but put themselves under the influence and operation of the law of tithing directly, there will soon be a much better system available than the "chain," or an unauthorized and personal appeal to the general public.

W. K. LAY.

THE readers of the HERALD may remember that some few years ago, a man by the name of W. K. Lay presented himself to the people of DeKalb and adjoining counties, as a prophet, who was to accomplish a great work for the benefit of man. The same man moved into Iowa, still continuing to hold evangelical and prophetic powers, first at Iowa Center and then at Atlantic City, and from there went to Columbus, Nebraska.

At his request we sent Bro. Jonas Chatburn to interview him while he was at Atlantic City; and after his removal to Columbus, he has been a close acquaintance with Bro. H. J. Hudson, one of the staunchest of Saints, who has quite thoroughly tested him as to his claims. While Bro. Hudson has been favorably impressed with Mr. Lay as a man, in a sense able and possibly conscientious, he does not accept the claim made by him, but treats him fairly as a Christian gentleman should. There are some at Columbus, however, who are not so inclined to treat Mr. Lay, so of late a charge of insanity was made against him and on Monday, February 11, the matter was tried before a properly constituted commission according to Nebraska laws, which commission found as a verdict that W. K. Lay is "morally insane," whatever that may mean, but "was not a fit subject for treatment at the asylum; neither was he dangerous." He was therefore discharged.

Bro. Hudson sent us the Argus and Journal each containing a digest of the proceedings, which appear to have been decidedly unique, to say the least of it.

Mr. Lay has ideas differing widely from his neighbors on religious topics, and the requirements of the duty of man to God; but there is in that no grounds to find him even "morally insane;" if there were then there are a great many who are morally insane, who now stand fair before the people as being, not only sane but seriously and honestly sound in mind.

We have been much interested in the final outcome of Mr. Lay's career, from the consideration that he is above the average in intellectual development, and while possibly he may have held some views upon scripture that are extreme and adverse to all the current opinions held by the sects, and may now hold those views, he has the right to so hold, and that too without being held to be insane. We shall see futher on.

A NOTABLE MAN DEAD.

THERE died at Kansas City, Missouri, on the morning of February 27, 1895, Gen. Mason Brayman, notice of whose death is of interest to the Saints by reason of the part he took in the troubles at Nauvoo and in Hancock county about the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. We copy from the Kansas City Star for February 27:—

General Brayman was born in Buffalo, New York, in 1813. His farm life and the common schools gave him his early education. He entered the office of the Buffalo Journal and learned the printers' trade, and the second year was made foreman. From the types to preparation for the bar was the next step, and at 20 years of age he was editor of the Buffalo Bulletin. At 23 he was admitted to the bar, and married Mary Williams, a descendant of Roger Williams. In 1841 and 1842 he was editor of the Louisville Advertiser. In 1842 he moved to Springfield, Illinois, where he entered upon the practice of law, in partnership with the Hon. Jesse B. Thomas. Two years later, under appointment of Governor Ford, he revised and codified the statutes of the State, and the result of his labors, which the legal profession facetiously called the "Braminical Code," was authority in all Illinois courts for many years, and is to-day.

In 1845 he was made a special State's attorney and commissioned to prosecute offenses which grew out of the Mormon war at Nauvoo. In 1851 he was attorney for the Illinois Central railway. He was associated with the late Governor Bissell, and the presence of the latter in Congress devolved most of the care and responsibility on Mr. Brayman. He was next engaged in a railway enterprise to connect Cairo with Texas, Galveston, and the Pacific. It was a huge undertaking. Mr. Brayman was president of the two companies engaged in it, and the prospects were flattering until the commencement of the war, which laid aside the "Southern route to the Pacific."

On the breaking out of the war he, with McClernand and Logan, at once offered himself to his country. Governor Yates gave him a commission as major of the Twenty-ninth Illinois volunteers, forming a part of General McClernand's brigade. He was appointed chief of staff and assistant adjutant, for which position his business habits and decision gave him eminent fitness. He was in the battle of Belmont, and General McClernand speaks of him "as entitled to gratitude for the zeal and alacrity with which he bore orders in the face of danger and discharged all his duties in the field." He also participated in the Battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Corinth, Pittsburg Landing, Jackson, and Bolivar. During the battle of Pittsburg Landing, at a critical juncture, when the enemy came on to carry a battery, and the supporting regiments faltered, Major Brayman seized a flag which had fallen, and, passing to the front, rallied them, while the enemy's musketry was pouring a shower of balls about him.

Major Brayman became colonel of the twenty-ninth infantry April 15, 1862, and for his meritorious conduct at the battle of Pittsburg Landing he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general by President Lincoln. He commanded until June, 1863, at Bolivar, Tennessee, also until February, 1864, at Camp Dennison, Ohio, reorganizing some seventy Ohio regiments; then at Cairo during the raids of Forest into Western Kentucky, then was ordered to Memphis as president of a court of inquiry into the Sturgis disaster at Guntown. From July, 1864, to the spring of 1865 he commanded at Natchez, his district comprising lower Mississippi and Louisiana north of Red River. In March, 1865, he was ordered to New Orleans, and for three months served as president of a commission for examining claims against the government, and succeeded in exposing and defeating enormous frauds. On being mustered out of service at the close of the war he was commissioned brevet major general. After the war was over, General Brayman returned to Springfield, Illinois, and became editor and co-proprietor of the daily Journal. But his health having been much impaired by hard services, and a partial sunstroke during the war, he moved to Green Lake, Wisconsin, where he lived for a number of years. In 1876 President Grant tendered him the governorship of the Territory of Idaho, which he accepted, and remained there four years, the term of his office. His most conspicuous and useful service there consisted in efforts to protect the people against Indian raids and the public treasury against organized plunderers. This ended his official life.

General Brayman has always taken a great interest in educational and religious movements. He became a member of the Baptist church in 1839. He has been trustee and one of the regents of the University of Chicago, which was organized in his office; one of the first trustees of the Illinois State Industrial university; was one of the founders and first members of the Chicago Historical society, which was also organized in his office; was president of the American Baptist Publication society, and has several times been president of the General Baptist Association of the State of Illinois. While in command at Natchez he established schools for the colored people and gave great aid in school matters at Little Rock, Arkansas, while residing there. He was admitted to the bar of New York, Michigan, Illinois, United States supreme court, Arkansas, Idaho, Wisconsin, and New Mexico. He was the oldest editor, lawyer, Mason, and soldier in this State, probably in the United States. For the last nine years he had made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Theodore Gowdy, in this city, in almost complete retirement, writing a history of the Mormon troubles from personal experience and his reminiscences for his family.

General Brayman was an intimate personal friend of Presidents Lincoln and Grant. He knew Lincoln long before he was nominated for the Presidency and accompanied him to Washington when he was first inaugurated. During Lincoln's term General Brayman lived in Lincoln's house at Springfield.

While acting as special State's attorney upon the appointment of Geo. Thomas Ford, General Brayman visited Nauvoo in the latter part of May and first days of June, 1844, charged by Gov. Ford with the duty of making such inquiry into the matters there, as would enable the Governor to determine whether he could legally answer the writ of requisition issued by Gov. Reynolds of Missouri, and deliver Joseph Smith up to the authorities of Missouri to be tried as a fugitive from justice from that State. Gen. Brayman was at Nauvoo some days, made the requisite inquiry and reported to the Governor the results of his investigation, upon which report the Governor refused to honor the writ of Gov. Reynolds, or to deliver Joseph Smith to the sheriff sent with the writ. We have no doubt that it was through the influence of this man, now dead, and the respect that Gov. Ford had for his integrity and ability as a lawyer that Joseph Smith was saved the annoyance, danger, and trouble of a legal struggle for defense against unjust charges in Missouri courts, and possible death by unlawful violence in the midst of enemies in that State.

We remember the visit of Mr. Brayman, and seeing him when we were a boy; and it was with pleasure that we met this aged man at his home in Kansas City a year ago last winter and conversed with him touching the things herein referred to. He was then busy writing memoirs of his life, part of which referring to the visit to Nauvoo he read to us at the time. Should his writings be published we shall read with interest what he had to say of those stirring times.

AUTHORITY—ITS USE AND ABUSE.

TO OFFICE in the Church of Christ attach both honor and responsibility. To the divinely chosen occupants qualification is pledged under stated conditions. A call and assignment to office expresses confidence by the chooser in the fitness of the one chosen, under that pledge. An acceptance of such call by any man is the equivalent of a return pledge to faithfully bear the responsibility, in return for the associated honor. Should the occupant of an office arrogate to himself the honor that rightly belongs to the office alone or should he use the office as a means for exacting services and courtesies or exercising prerogatives which the creator of the office made no provision for, he may be said to have abused his trust. Should his successors in that trust continue his course, the office itself is liable to come under a shade of suspicion and reproach among those not careful in making discriminations and he who thus occupies forfeits his claim upon the promised qualification until he repents of having abused a sacred trust.

No office in the church takes on any additional prerogative because of the priestly standing of its occupant, nor should any authority belonging to him outside of said office be used as an enlargement of the prerogatives of that office while he holds it.

An officer who seeks to exact more recognition than his office warrants will, in a short time, be likely to receive less. Every organization, whether general, district, or branch, is greater in its entirety than in any one of its parts and possesses the right to reverse or annul, at will, any procedure instituted by its parts without its consent.

Presidency over an organization carries no authority to make rules for the government of that organization. Where such are or seem to be needed, consultation should be had with those who are to be affected thereby, that they may have voice in deciding as to their character. Otherwise dissatisfaction is almost certain to ensue, resulting in loss of confidence in the wisdom of the president. Should any departure from this order of procedure be indulged, it is the privilege and duty of the organization to veto the movement of its president, should the movement be considered ill-advised or improper. And no officer whose love for the cause is greater than for himself would try to find ground for complaint in such action.

Members should always honor the officers of the church, notwithstanding the occupants of those offices fail at times to wisely perform the functions thereof. A refusal to so do is equivalent to withholding due service from God because a fellow-being has taken undue license in office. No government can long be maintained where such support as is properly due is withheld. Within the church we are under obligation to God to uphold his appointments. This does not require, however, that we shall sustain officials in anything but the performance of that which the law enjoins upon them. If the judgment of a lay-member is at variance with that of the presiding officer, and the matter involved is serious enough to require a decision in settlement, such decision can be had upon respectful application to the leading quorums of the church. Meantime the ruling of the officer should be respected, at least so far as to abate all disputings.

A presiding officer is the servant of the body over which he presides. His duty is to execute the will of that body and when he is no longer willing to so do, he should resign and thus permit the selection of one who has a better conception of such an official's duty. When once a branch, district, or general assembly has disposed of a matter in settlement, the members should avoid agitation of it again, and should seek to enforce the rule indorsed, thus allowing the virtue of the rule to manifest itself while in operation. No wise officer will contract debts for the body over which he presides, unless so instructed by the body. Should he act contrary to this he should not complain if the body leave him to pay the debts contracted. It is always easier for an officer to counsel with the body and obtain an understanding as to its will. When that is secured his pleasure should be to execute it and leave the consequences with the body. Confidence between the officer and the members is thus maintained and unnecessary friction avoided.

In organizations where the membership is large, varieties of opinion are almost certain to exist, and a presiding officer need not be surprised if he fails to please all. If a goodly majority approves of his course he should be willing to proceed, always however manifesting a spirit of toleration and showing a decent respect for the views of the minority. Arrogance is as unseemly in an officer as is churlishness in a member. The disposition to dominate is entirely out of character with gospel work. The body owes to every member respectful hearing and a consideration of the views he presents. Every member owes to the body graceful submission should his position be overruled. The right of appeal in cases of grievance, real or fancied, inheres to all. He who feels most certain of the correctness of his position can best afford to be considerate and patient. A little time spent in self-examination will surprise the best of us, as to our own liability to err in judgment and action. The ablest leader, the sublimest teacher, and the highest officer ever known to the church was the humblest servant of the people we have any record of. A frequent comparison with him and his course will be helpful to all of us. "Hear ye him," said his Father. "Learn of me," he himself said.

THE Seventh-day Adventists are workers; it is well known that laity and ministry are very zealous in the work of disseminating their religious tenets. The following shows that they mean to increase rather than diminish their zeal, and may serve as an example to others. It is good to be zealously affected in intelligent prosecution of good work.

BATTLE CREEK, Michigan, March 3.—Religious liberty work occupied the Adventists' conference to-day. Resolutions were adopted urging renewed zeal in that work and an increased circulation of literature; also that a competent man be retained at the National Capital in the interest of the denomination. A resolution was adopted that documents be printed explaining the right of appeal from Supreme Court decisions touching constitutional questions.

IS THIS A HERESY?

THE following is from the Dreadnaught, an organ of the Advent Christians at Springfield, Nebraska, in the issue for February 14, 1895. Elder F. C. Watkins, who was located at Leon, Decatur county, Iowa, some few months ago, is the editor of this paper, and may be alone responsible for the peculiar philosophy found in the extract:—

FROM SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Brother:—I have seen several copies of the Dreadnaught and finding you stood square on the nonpreexistence question, I thanked God and took courage. Knowing that most if not all our publications were closed against God's eternal truth on this question, I have wondered whether or not God would raise up someone with knowledge, courage, and strength sufficient to stand in the breach and ably defend one of the clearest propositions found in the Bible; to wit, that Jesus was "made (not uncreated—not self-existing, but created) of the seed of woman when the fullness of time came,"—not made of some existing personality as an angel, or spirit.

I would as soon believe the woman existed six thousand years ago as that her seed did. We had just as well turn Mormons and believe all souls preëxisted, and that the soul is immortal as to believe that Christ preëxisted as a being of any kind. There is just as much Bible proof that the dead are alive as that Christ lived before he was born. I am glad this question will soon be settled, and the popish doctrine of the trinity, or three-one-God doctrine, together with the dogma that Christ made the earth, sea, and all things therein, will sink with the old harlot to rise no more at all.

J. D. CAREY.

[The editor takes nor asks no glory to himself for the rehabilitating of this much-muted truth. Though we have read carefully everything we could get our hands on, that promised in any way to shed light on the question of the personal preëxistence of the Savior we are only the more profoundly convinced it is an unscriptural figment. The editor is not alone in the fight. God has reserved to himself many who have not bowed the knee to this Baal. We mean to do what we can, and ask all friends of the truth to send their mite.—ED.]

We confess that it should take considerable courage for anyone claiming to hold a belief in God and the Scriptures called the Bible to openly deny and deride the preëxistence of Christ, as does Editor Watkins. But it is a sort of "last ditch" affair, resorted to in order to defend the favorite dogma of these same Advent Christians, the unconscious condition of man after death. This is not the first time it has been resorted to, nor will it be the last. These men are following fast in the steps of that sect that denied the "existence of spirit and the resurrection," while Paul, even before his conversion as well as after, confessed both.

Christ was before John. (John 1: 15.) He was to come. (John 4: 25.) He could not "come" if he was not. (John 4: 26.) He was to be sent. (John 4: 34.) He could not have been sent if he had not been there to be sent. (John 3: 13; 6: 38; 8: 23.)

Jesus affirmed concerning himself that he was before Abraham:—

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.—John 8: 58. (Isa. 43: 14; see also John 17: 5-24.)

Men are sometimes driven to strange straits to defend extreme opinions, but how anyone can conscientiously deny the preëxistence of Christ, and then claim to be an Advent Christian (?) and wear that name as a badge of distinction among his fellows, is a curiosity. Ingersoll dreads naught too; and some men will be fearless enough now to deny the Lord (Christ) that bought them. It is by reason of such that "the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." (See 2 Peter 2: 1.)

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. G. M. L. WHITMAN, Omaha, Nebraska, the 29th ult:—

I left Omaha, January 29; just home to-day. I was up in Burt county with Saints belonging to the Lake Shore branch. Residing there was a lady having cancer on her arm. By request the president of branch and myself administered with good results; she says she is healed. Herself and husband were baptized and seven others—nine in all—all adults and good people. More near the door. I also preached the funeral sermon of Father Walters.

BRO. J. S. ROTH, Nashville, Iowa, March 12:—

Bro. W. H. Kephart and the writer are holding forth here in the Baptist church with a good sized congregation and good interest. We will continue here till I start for General Conference. Bro. O. B. Thomas has gone to Clayton county again. He writes me some have given their names for baptism, also that he and an Advent are going to have a debate on the immortality of the soul. Our conference at Fulton was well attended considering the opposition we had from the storm, mud, and high water. Everything went off harmoniously. The Sunday school convention was a success. But how could it be otherwise when Sr. Ella J. Green is at the helm? This district is in better condition spiritually and financially than ever before, and so may it continue.

BRO. J. W. WIGHT, Logan, Iowa, March 13:—

Baptized two at Woodbine the last day of February; very fine people; one the daughter of a Congregational minister.

From Bro. and Sr. Gildersleeve, Grand Rapids, Michigan, the 11th inst.

The work here is prospering. My husband and I have been seeking for truth for years, but were never satisfied till we heard Bro. Levi Phelps preach the restored gospel; so we embraced it, and rejoice in the Lord that we are free. There is much interest in the city, also outside of it. We had a large congregation, from all parts of the city, yesterday. Bro. Phelps is kept busy holding meetings in various places in the country and city. We think a great work will be done if he can be kept here. We rejoice in the interest manifested. Praise the Lord.

Mr. J. T. Foster, writing from Sequachee, Tennessee, March 9, says:—

Please send me information of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Bro. T. C. Kelley preached here last fall. If he is where you can get him word, tell him to write and let me know what he is doing. I have been an elder in Baptist Church, and, from what I can learn, I have started in at the big end of the horn and come out at the little end. I want to get right. I feel that I ought to go to work in the cause of Christ. Send an elder as soon as possible, and give me information so I can do some good to the cause. The opening is good. I hope to receive a favorable reply.

The above is but one of many of the inquiries that come to the Herald Office for the preaching of the elders and literature of the church. The field is widening and the people becoming more ready to hear and heed the message. The spiritual and general conditions of the people of our country certainly were never more favorable to prosecution of the work among them.

BRO. W. R. PICKERING writing from Springfield, Missouri, late date:—

I expect to try and get the work started in this place. There are lots of nice people here. We got Bro. Wedlock up from Ozark, and he preached Sr. Kiner's funeral in a little church, with good attendance and interest. All the neighbors were very kind and considerate.

BRO. F. M. SLOVER, Rector, Illinois, March 12:—

I have just closed an interesting meeting at Rural Hill, and baptized four. Some of them were from the Baptist Church. This is the place where Bro. Curtis met Rev. W. J. Moore in discussion last September. Others are almost ready to obey; so you see that fair and honorable discussion does not injure us in the least. Bro. Curtis has done a good work in this mission.

Bro. F. C. Smith, Elmira, Michigan, March 13:—

I am still at work trying to advance the truth. We have lots of snow in this country yet, but interest is getting better now. People are very prejudiced against us here. The preachers and infidel have told lots of things against us that are false, and we preach right the other way, and some of the honest in heart are beginning to believe the gospel. We expect to get a good many in the spring. The Saints feel well in the work. Elder J. J. Cornish's debate with the infidel and preacher did them much good and confirmed their faith. I expect to go to Fife Lake and Burdickville soon.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

LATTER Day Saints, and the children of Saints who are taught the principles of the faith by their parents, do not often forget the gospel with its power, and peace, and comfort. Evidences to this effect constantly multiply as letters come from such Saints scattered abroad. Sr. Eliza Goff, nee Henderson, of West Branch, Ogemaw county, Michigan, formerly of Plano, Illinois, writes requesting the ministry of Northern Michigan to call and labor in the vicinity of her home. She lives six miles from town, and near a schoolhouse. A good home and team are at the disposal of an elder, also the help of Bro. and Sr. Goff and family. Possibly Brn. David and F. C. Smith could give attention to this call.

Mrs. Lydia E. Brambarger, of Manville, Indiana, a member of the Baptist Church, writes a statement of blessing received in healing in answer to prayer and administration by the elders, on whom she called while they were preaching the restored gospel. Her husband and a number of others were obedient to the gospel. Brn. J. D. Porter, M. R. Scott, Jr., W. C. Marshall, and others have labored there. Prospects excellent.

Bro. E. H. Ebert, of Wellman, Ness county, Kansas, writes that some would be glad to see Bro. J. M. Brown in that region again, when times are better and opportunities more favorable. Bro. Ebert held a discussion with a local minister, of which he reports favorably.

Bro. G. H. Brush, Grindle, Missouri, has a word to say in behalf of users of tobacco, but against the practice of using it. It is his opinion that harsh and unkind rebukes are often administered to those who have acquired the tobacco habit. He also thinks everyone should free themselves from it; that one should not only ask help to do so, but himself make a proper, determined effort to gain the mastery over it. He understands the command "Be ye clean" to require this, that the Holy Spirit may more fully abide within the heart.

The Herald Office wishes to obtain copies of January, 1894, Autumn Leaves. Those mailing copies will be credited with two months' subscription on forthcoming numbers. Can you accommodate us? If so, mail the number, writing name and address across the face of it. This the postal laws permit.

Pres. Joseph Smith arrived home on the 14th, from a missionary visit to Southwestern Missouri.

Bro. A. H. Smith reached Lamoni from the Western Iowa field on the 13th inst.

Bro. George L. Spencer, located at El Moro, Colorado, would be pleased to see any of the missionary force laboring in Colorado. Bro. Spencer joined the Reorganization early in the sixties and continues a devoted adherent to the faith. He is engaged in business and tries to do what he can to teach the word.

Bro. J. L. Tempest, of Terre Haute, Indiana, extends an invitation to the passing, traveling elder to call on him. Address No. 1227 South Second street.

By letter from Mr. S. J. Howery, Bottineau, North Dakota, we learn that the labor of Bro. I. N. Roberts in that locality has caused many to become interested in the faith, and some are ready to obey. The prospect appears bright from the fact that several local ministers are up in arms, using various means to injure the cause of truth, but really aiding its progress. Bro. Roberts expects to reap abundantly in that field if returned.

Pres. Joseph Smith and J. W. Wight were the speakers at Lamoni on Sunday, the 17th inst.

Saints at Eldon, Iowa, would like a call from Bro. J. C. Crabb.

And now comes a good brother of another faith with the information that the two sticks of Ezekiel 37 are the United States and England. As they were to become one in the prophet's hand, the theory does not seem to possess the merit of probability.

We thank brethren for copies of the Melbourne Age, the Manchester Guardian, and the South Wales Daily News. In the Age we find a long review of the general conditions prevailing in Australia in which the increase in disastrous casualties, the growth of spiritism, and the disturbing forces beneath the surface of society political, social, and industrial are noted. The Guardian contains a lengthy review of the Roman Catholic claims to supremacy, and successorship to the apostles, by the Bishop of Manchester. We find nothing marked nor of special note in the News.

"God's greatness flows around our incompleteness; Round our restlessness, his rest."

THE TRUE VISION.

"THE world looks at things from a worldly standpoint. It honors success. It despises failure. But it may not always know success when it sees it, and may sometimes deem that to have failed which has had the greatest triumph. The death of Christ was a victory when viewed from the vantage ground of his resurrection, not when viewed from the dark hour of the crucifixion. Get at the right point of observation before you proclaim your conclusions. Your inability to see the Christ-life in one who differs from you may be due to defective spiritual vision."

How much of truth there is in the above should best be answered by the strong appeal which it makes to the heart experience of those who, reaching, stop long enough to reflect. If it were only the world who passed this mistaken judgment, the matter would not be so serious as it becomes when those "who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before them in the gospel," make the same mistake. Forgetting that God chastens those whom he loves and that pain is sent to purify, they bow the head in grief which should be lifted in thanksgiving, reflecting the peace of the heart which trusts. Only to feel that God is our Father, that his power is infinite, and his wisdom like his love cannot fail, is enough to cause us to wrap the mantle of his peace about us and accept with thanksgiving and praise that which his hand dispenses. Upon this subject Trumbull very recently wrote, "God's best blessings come to us as pains rather than as pleasures, as trials rather than enjoyments. Man's realest helps in his upward path appear to him as hindrances. It is the one whom God loveth that he chasteneth, or correcteth. If God did not love a man he might let him have his own way. This is a truth taught plainly in the Bible and recognized by the wisest of those who never had the Bible. Mencius, who stood first among the disciples of Confucius, said, "When heaven is about to confer a great office upon any man, it first exercises his mind with suffering, and his sinews and bones with toil. It exposes his body to hunger and subjects him to extreme poverty. It confounds his undertakings. By all these methods it stimulates his mind, hardens his nature, and supplies his incompetencies. From these things we see how life springs from sorrow and calamity, and death from ease and pleasure.

"When Jesus refused the thrice uttered prayer of the Apostle Paul, that the stake in the flesh might be taken away, he told the Apostle that it was better for him to suffer in that way than to be free from suffering: Christ's power is made completest in his disciple who is weakest. Then it was that Paul cried out, 'Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong.' What comfort there is in this truth to any of us who are called to unlooked-for trials and sufferings in Christ's service! These are but tokens of God's love, and helps to our higher attainment in Christ."

NEW EVERY MORNING.

Every day is a fresh beginning;

Every morn is the world made new.

You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,

Here is a beautiful hope for you,

A hope for me and a hope for you.

All the past things are past and over.

The tasks are done, and the tears are shed.

Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover;

Yesterday's wounds, which smarted and bled,

Are healed with the healing which night has shed.

Yesterday now is a part of forever.

Bound up in a sheaf, which God holds tight,

With glad days, and sad days, and bad days which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,

Their fullness of sunshine or sorrowful night.

Let them go, since we cannot relieve them,

Cannot undo and cannot atone.

God in his mercy receive, forgive them!

Only the new days are our own.

To-day is ours, and to-day alone.

Here are the skies all burnished brightly;

Here is the spent earth all reborn;

Here are the tired limbs springing lightly

To face the sun and to share with the morn

In the chrism of dew and the cool of dawn.

Every day is a fresh beginning.

Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain,

And, spite of old sorrow and older sinning,

And puzzles forecasted, and possible pain,

Take heart with the day and begin again!

—Susan Coolidge.

PASSING THINGS ON.

"THE most pernicious habit in the world is the habit of saving every article, scrap, piece, and bit of stuff in general, with the feeling that at sometime, somewhere, and somehow it may be of use. By virtue of fidelity to this undefined conviction, drawers and attics and closets become filled with old rubbish and accumulations, trash and stuff that are of no earthly use to a human being: that attract moths and mice, and all the domestic pests; that are a burden and a weariness to handle and sort over every now and then, and are, indeed, simply worse than useless. The true way is to apportion. The moment a certain thing is unfit for specific use let it be given to the person who can use it. There are always to be found people who have the time and patience to mend, make over, repair, and who must make this time and handiwork serve in lieu of money; and to those persons should go all such wares. For people whose time has a value beyond that of repairing and refitting, it is worse than folly for them to waste it in such a way. Where life is on a fairly well-to-do scale, it is always better to buy new and give to those to whom it may be of service while it is yet good enough to be of service. To hoard things against a possible time of their being wanted is idle. The time will never come. Fabrics go out of fashion, or they are cut in a way to make changes impossible, or they cannot be matched with new material, or they are not worth putting with new material. The same truths apply more or less to all household articles. It is idle and useless to store them. Passing things on is the law of life."

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. ANNA HARTSHORN, of Marathon, Iowa, asks your faith and prayers in her behalf that she may be healed of a sore affliction from which she has long suffered.

Bro. Isaac M. Smith requests your earnest prayers in behalf of Sr. Cecil C. Flagler, of Angola, Indiana. She is a very great sufferer, has recently joined the church, and if some of our sisters who see this request and have the time would write her words imbued with the spirit of the gospel, it would cheer and comfort her greatly. Perhaps Sr. Albert Page could respond.

Request for prayer by Sr. Catherine Nutt:—

To the Prayer Union:—One who has suffered much for the cause of Christ in the early days, has been driven and buffeted about, taking "her life in her hands" (in connection with her husband), and has stood boldly to the front when the enemies have swooped down upon them, threatening their lives, and who is now suffering through past exposure, crippled in all of her joints, and has been so for the past five years, desires your prayers, that if it be God's will she may be healed. Give her your earnest prayers, sisters, for she deserves them.

MEMORY TEXTS FOR MARCH.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Mo.,
March 3.

Editors Herald:—The smoke of battle has cleared away and the grouping of casualties is now in order. My discussion with J. M. Clark, at Virgil City, passed off very nicely. It was a clear-cut argument, clean from all dirt or villification, and while a complete victory for our cause, signally so, yet it did not nor will not reach out very far; and it will merely pass over on the victorious side as a matter of course. Yet like the small shot to fill in the spaces between the larger ones, to hold them more firmly, seems to be really necessary, so this victory of a sharpshooter may take its place among the big guns as merely necessary filling.

Bro. Clark went home a wiser man and with a buzzing in his ear caused by a severe jolt against this great latter-day work, which no doubt will set him to thinking, and to commence properly he purchased some of the church works. We have some reasons for hoping his thinking may terminate favorably.

The all-important question is the complete and triumphant victory of I. N. White over "I, Clark Braden." The "cyclone" debater did him up nicely, to the complete satisfaction of Saints and sinners, and some Campbellites. I. N. outgeneralled him at every turn, turning his own guns on him in every battle and routed him "horse, foot, and dragoon." As we passed through there on the 6th, after the discussion, we were beset by a swarm of inquiries, "When are you going to open up in El Dorado?" "When is I. N. White coming back?" etc., etc. There is a grand opening there now for our work, and I feel sure a gathering in will be had; but the theological rocks have been rolled against every church door in town, with the inscription, "No Mormons need apply. Our flocks are in imminent danger! So we shall keep the doors barred even to the disgust of the laity, and the most prominent citizens of the city."

We advise that as soon as the weather permits the tent be employed and a series of meetings instituted with Bro. I. N. to superintend. We think a branch could be raised up here, and a church of our own built. Quite a little encouragement has already been proffered for the enterprise and if a proper committee could be appointed at once some fine donations could be had.

The conference at Coal Hill chapel passed off nicely together with the Sunday school convention on the Monday following. At the entertainment quite a degree of ability was manifest, and they are on the highway to success in that line. Bro. Beebe, superintendent of district, is an able worker and has an ambition that will win in time. Brn. Keck, Duncan, Schroder, Lloyd, and others are earnest workers and deserving of success. Bro. Duncan's lung power is at present considerably impaired, but he is a wise counselor and a safe man for the church on the outposts of duty.

VASSAR, Mich., March 6.

Editors Herald:—Of late I have been laboring in Flint. There are only a few Saints there, but noble and zealous. They procured an M. E. church and I preached eight times, the weather being extremely cold; yet we had fair crowds and good attention. I gave one lecture on the difference between us and Utah Mormonism. At the close the colored minister arose and said he saw the difference as plainly as the lamp before him, and of course we continued on and as the light began to shine the minister and a few began to feel a little frightened, I suppose, and finally they sent word that we could have the church on condition that we leave out water baptism and probation. In conversation with the elder on baptism by immersion he thought it was utterly impossible for the twelve apostles to immerse three thousand souls on Pentecost day. I showed by the Scriptures that the number of the disciples were about one hundred and twenty (Acts 1:15), and as the Lord sent out first twelve apostles, and seventy elders, and other seventy, possibly there were more than one hundred and twenty to do that baptizing. We talked and talked. Just how he feels I do not know, but one thing I do know, I had the satisfaction of presenting the everlasting gospel in its fullness.

SMITHLAND, Iowa, March 8.

Editors Herald:—While preaching near Kingsley, Iowa, I met quite strong prejudice. Rev. Carver, the M. E. minister, would not announce my services, and shut the door against my using the church. At Moorhead where I labored during about two weeks of the coldest weather, I had good audiences and marked interest. Several administrations to the sick while there were quite marked in their results for good. Two were baptized; one formerly baptized in the Christian Church, but had not been satisfied. I learn she is rejoicing in the influences and assurances of the gospel, and promises to be a useful member. At the close of the series of meetings here I was taken sick, returning home the following day, where I remained for nearly two weeks ailing.

On Monday, February 11, I began a series of meetings at Mondamin by request of Bro. A. M. Fyrando, who had been holding regular services there every two weeks and had created considerable interest. Remained there with Bro. Fyrando till the 21st, when I baptized Bro. William and Sr. Jane Davis. Sr. Davis is a niece of Bro. John Rounds. While at Mondamin the editor of the local paper printed notices for posting each day, on which was an announcement of the subject for the evening, and proved that he was, so far as we were interested, favorable to a free press. The Saints all assisted much to make the services successful. They have organized a Bible class, and contemplate the organization of a Sunday school soon. At no place have I seen a more united effort to lead souls to Christ, and make the name of Saint honorable. One strange incident happened. A young lady had been strangely afflicted, which puzzled those who had the case in hand to either tell what the affliction was or prescribe for her. Her mother claimed that she was told by a voice to have her administered to and she would be blessed. None of this family are members of the church. The mother brought her daughter and requested administration. I went, but before going I was given evidence that she was possessed by an evil spirit. After instructing those present in regard to God's purposes and his kindness in restoring to us the privilege of ancient Saints, I administered. The Spirit of God was present, and the afflicted one blessed, and for weeks had no return of the affliction. Whether she will keep herself free from evildoing and prove herself worthy of protection from the return of the evil, or whether she will be driven by evil surroundings into a condition favorable to a return of it, is a thing of the future; but this I know, that God did rebuke the evil spirit, and it came out of her. To God be all the praise.

After preaching two nights about six miles from Mondamin, I returned to hold services, and baptize Sr. Nancy Daywalt. This young lady has tried Methodism until she is satisfied it is not what it claims to be. She is an earnest, devoted worker in whatever she undertakes, and as she now feels satisfied that she is engaged in the way of life, her future will be an enjoyable one laboring for the advancement of gospel work, with the continued assurance that she is pleasing Him who has called her into a greater spiritual light.

From this place I went to Union Grove, where I preached from Monday till Thursday night, baptizing two on Thursday, and leaving several others ready, they having so stated. Greater interest I have seldom seen than there. This is in the neighborhood where Bro. P. C. and Daniel Kimmish have lived for years, and have kept up a Sunday school, and to which may be credited, largely, the present interest in favor of the church. Brn. W. A. Smith and William Bullard have done a noble work in this place of late, baptizing seven, I believe, during their labors this last winter.

On last Friday I attended the Sunday school convention of this district, it being one of the best, and I believe I can say the best this district has ever held. On the following day began the most spiritual and advantageous conference I ever attended. Five were ordained to various offices in the church, and others were called by prophecy. Brn. A. H. Smith and J. W. Wight of the missionary force were present to assist. Several gave their names for baptism, but for various reasons all postponed their obedience except one, who was baptized on Monday.

On my way here I stopped at Mondamin, River Sioux, and Onawa, preaching one sermon at each of the two last named places. I began services here last night in the Adventist church. Marked interest shown; prospects bright for an ingathering soon. As my faith grows stronger my hope grows brighter, and I find myself longing daily for greater ability to tell the gospel story effectually, but as God wills. Calls from various sources of a very urgent nature come, so that it is very puzzling to know where to go first. Daily comes the evidence of the need of praying the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the vineyard, and daily comes the evidence that he is answering that prayer. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

RICH HILL, Mo., March 4.

Editors Herald:—On the 24th ult. I closed a three weeks' meeting between Butler and Rich Hill, in which I was very successful. I was greeted each night with large crowds, on some nights several being unable to get in. Unabated interest was manifest from first to last, and that, too, where modern Phariseism has planted its batteries and its pusillanimous advocates, in the absence of our elders, have charged our people with the foulest crimes, averring that our people are about everything that is bad, not even hesitating to personate myself and others of our ranch. One preacher has lectured against us several times. I have generally replied with telling effect. I have baptized his brother-in-law. I am informed that this same preacher made false reports of us while we were holding a public discussion with his society last year. Accordingly there was a committee secretly appointed to investigate affairs, but this committee failed to report favorably and the matter was dropped. They threatened to egg us, closed houses against us, and warned their flock and the people in general, berated and misrepresented us, told the people to stay away from our meetings and we would die out; but to the contrary our fame has spread the more, and the inquiry is now made from Lone Star to Butler, through Adrian and on to other localities, "Whence this man of such power?" The whole community is astonished at the demonstration of God's power and the clear-cut truth poured forth under the inspiration of heaven. Under my preaching prejudice melted away and many received the truth. Seven, all heads of families but one, chose to follow Christ instead of listening to the opinions of men and building their hopes upon human organizations. Opposition has become as the "chaff of the summer threshing floor," while diamond truth rises upon the ruins of creedology, towering proudly above her foes and oppressors.

A nobler cause was never defended by man! Foes may persecute, opposers may ridicule, the indifferent may laugh, the haughty may shun, the crank perjure, the busybody meddle, the preachers kick, the Pharisees rant, the deceiver profess, and the learned denounce, but this proud ship will gallantly sail on through storm and tempest till the theological world will be circumnavigated and all nations will bow their heads to reverence her in heavenly attire.

NETAWAKA, Kan., March 7.

Editors Herald:—I have been at my post discharging duty to the best of my ability. At home for a few days; thought I would send some items to your columns, that those I have labored among might hear from me. The Saints and ministry in the part of this mission that I have worked are being blessed of the good Master. New points that have been opened have proven abundantly that the Lord is working with his servants, in causing many to hear the truth and be friendly. I have done considerable labor in the Atchison branch. I look upon them as a noble band of Saints, and believe if they overcome some little troubles incident to all Saints that they will realize an ingathering of souls. A good interest is taken by quite a number out of the church. May God give them wisdom to see their golden opportunity. Last week I was with the Saints of Fanning. Found them united and, what is but natural, the Lord is blessing them. Bro. William Gurwell is their president—the right man in the right place. They have a new church just completed. See what faith and works will do. President Joseph Smith is expected to dedicate it after General Conference. We trust the Lord will bless them by adding souls to their number. Bro. Hudgens, of Baker, preached a splendid sermon for the Saints of Fanning on Sunday, at eleven a. m., while we were with them.

On February 8 I commenced an eight nights' discussion with R. G. Moody, of the Christian Church, near Topeka, Kansas. The Lord blessed us in the effort. Father J. T. Davis aided as my moderator and I find good moderators to be half the battle in discussion. Mr. Moody did not want more debate. He had asked me several times during the discussion of his proposition to maintain the "Book of Mormon," which was unfair and out of order. We told him to bring on his man. The man was not furnished. I have got to the point where I am ready for another when they bring him along. We have this to say about the debate: We did the best we could, and leave the results in the hands of God. There were a great many complimentary remarks in our favor, even their own members giving us credit of defeating Mr. Moody. I do not look upon such remarks as infallible proof of victory. It was not human laurels I was seeking when I entered the debate, but wanted to tell the people where they could find the truth. It is in their own hands at present and I am free.

Yours truly,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

OLDHAM, N. S., March 7.

Editors Herald:—When I last wrote you I was in Washburn, Maine—sometime in October last. I stopped there about three months, working the surrounding openings to the best of my ability while striving to keep the latter-day work before the people of the town. I was kindly cared for at the home of Bro. and Sr. Simpson. My thanks are due all the Saints and friends for their kind remembrance of the temporal and spiritual wants of the traveling elder. I think none but traveling elders with all they have to meet, especially if of sensitive disposition, know how far a little kind consideration goes. The cold climate was too much for physical make-up and my neck and ears becoming partially stopped up, I was unable to do much preaching the last week or two. However, I left the county with a number of openings where an elder can go in and do good. The Saints testified of being greatly strengthened and helped in a better understanding of the work, and indeed they are progressing finely. I baptized one and left a number who permit themselves to be called Latter Day Saints who have not yet put themselves in a position to enjoy the gospel blessings.

I returned home about the middle of January. Was detained about three weeks on account of my own ill health and a siege of scarlet fever in the family. We all have recovered now and I for several weeks have been on the "war path."

I was at South Rawdon over two Sundays. Was much encouraged to find the young Saints alive in the work, also some of the old ones. How good it would seem if all would stand by the work with the same persistency and zeal that our somewhat aged brother, John W. Dimock, exhibits! But then, I don't know all the peculiar trials that each have, nor how many ways the Devil has of robbing Saints of their birthright, so don't feel like condemning anybody, but I feel that the Lord will bless those who impart of their means to help the cause when it is so much needed. (I know you don't do it. My thanks nevertheless; I thank you just the same). I was pleased to find that the young saints had gathered seven or eight dollars for fixing up the chapel a little inside—a new set of blinds, etc. This is good and commendable. The Lord has more to look after his house than those that love him, and if they are content to tidy up their own house and let his go shabby, well, of course he has to put up with it, like some wives whose husbands won't tidy themselves up for them as they did before the wedding; they put up with it, but would love them better if they did, and vice versa.

I am now at Oldham, trying to plant the truth in the hearts of the people. Have good liberty and feeling finely so far as the gospel is concerned, but sad to think so many are throwing up bulwarks against their best friend—the gospel. Have been blessed in administering to the sick. Will proceed into Cumberland county when done in the neighborhood.

I am much pleased with "The Book of Mormon Vindicated" in current Herald. Would like to see it in pamphlet form.

Yours in hopes,

H. J. DAVISON.

DOW CITY, Iowa, March 12.

Editors Herald:—Quarterly conference of the Galland's Grove district closed at this place on the 10th inst. We had a profitable session and a good feeling prevailed throughout. Bro. Alexander Hale Smith was with us and gave us some excellent and timely advice. Bro. Smith preached three discourses before and two during conference, and Bro. J. F. McDowell also favored us with two discourses. The reports read showed that missionaries and local ministers had been busy in the work of the Lord.

The entertainment given by the Sunday school in the evening was quite good. The little folks who took part did well, thereby showing that Sr. Baker and those who may have assisted her in training them had been both patient and persevering in their work. On Saturday and Sunday evenings the house was filled to overflowing.

EMMITT, Idaho, March 4.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Levi Wilson and I have been laboring together this winter, mainly in Logan county. We opened the work at Clover Creek and Briggs. At the latter place a good interest is manifest; and at Hagerman and vicinity with the assistance of the Saints and friends to the cause, quite an interest is awakened. Where the Saints are letting their light shine, barriers are being removed and openings for the work effected. O, that the Saints throughout Idaho could realize the responsible position they have been called to occupy, and put forth an effort that would indicate to the people that they were really in earnest in their professions! A great work would surely result, as the field seems white for the sickle. We arrived here last Wednesday. Have held three meetings and assisted a Methodist minister in one meeting. The interest is increasing. Had a crowded house last evening. And one old gentleman who had walked three miles to attend said he was coming the following night and going to bring more with him. Another remarked that we need not fear of wearying the people, as they were anxious to hear. Methodists and Baptists have just closed a series of religious revivals and wrought the people up to a very favorable condition. The prejudice my brother John and I met here in 1888 we do not find this time. We are not asked if we are Mormons, but are treated as teachers of God's word. Quite different was the reception at Mt. Home and at Clover Creek. At those places Mormonism means all that is dark and evil, and a minister told me that Joseph Smith was the greatest impostor of the nineteenth century.

We came here by team—Bro. Wilson's outfit—traveling one hundred and twenty-five miles and sowing by the wayside as opportunity offered. Bro. W. has been very sick since our arrival, but was able to be with us yesterday, though weak from severe suffering. We design continuing in the field, and earnestly solicit the active coöperation of all elders and Saints throughout Idaho. The need for missionary work is indeed great, and opportunities increasing. Let us put forth a united effort and by precept and example prepare the way before our Lord. We may at least be able to save ourselves. The promise of reward is to the "willing and obedient." We pray that God may speed his work, but do we labor to the same end? Remember that the work is "intrusted to all," and our reward will be surer if we labor as well as pray. Those desiring to hear from us may address us at Hagerman, Idaho.

Original Articles.

IS ROBERTS CORRECT?

IN The Contributor, volume 10, commencing on pages 19, 48, and 90, respectively, is contained three of a series of articles on the Book of Mormon, by B. H. Roberts, under the caption, "A New Witness for God." Candor and fairness demand the concession that the articles are good; and while they may contain few, if any, points which are new to the leading Elders of the Reorganized Church, they are full of well-chosen points, presented in an apt and attractive manner. (The above statements do not refer to Elder Roberts' first articles, contained in volume 9 of the Contributor, but they express my judgment on the three indicated, and I take pleasure in presenting them.)

There is, however, one position assumed by Elder Roberts to which I call attention, not for the purpose of criticising, but as a means of inciting investigation among those who accept the Book of Mormon as a true history which contains a revelation of God's will to man. The point may be best indicated by a brief quotation from volume 10, page 21:—

The Book of Mormon, for the most part, as I have already stated in a previous chapter, [chapter 7, volume 9] is an abridgment from the larger plates of Nephi, and has a style that one would naturally expect to find in a work of the character—that is, the historical narrative condensed from the more voluminous records of Nephi, with occasional verbatim quotations from the larger records, and the whole mixed up with explanatory notes, observations, and even exhortations, prophecies, and warnings by Mormon—rather a complicated style, and one that Joseph Smith would have been totally incompetent to have adopted and consistently persevered in to the close of the volume.

I question the correctness of the statement that "the Book of Mormon, for the most part, . . . is an abridgment from the larger plates of Nephi." It seems to me that it is an abridgment from the smaller plates of Nephi, which account contained a brief history, but was more fully devoted to doctrine, prophecy, etc. From a careful reading of the statements made concerning the plates, in the Book of Mormon, I find what appears to me to be proper bases, or evidences, for the following conclusions:—

1. Two records were kept on plates by Nephi, the son of Lehi, and his successors.

2. One of these records was larger than the other, though not made with the same degree of care. It was more historical, and, after the days of Nephi at least, in some sense, secular. This record was kept by the kings, and pertained largely to their national affairs, wars, etc.

3. This smaller record was the more sacred one. Its historical portion was very brief, but it was made with great care, and was more complete in doctrine, prophecy, revelation, etc. This record was, as a rule, kept by the prophets.

4. Nephi, referred to above, was both king and prophet, and he kept both records from the times God commanded them to be made to near the end of his life. At his death, or from the time that he delivered up the records, his brother Jacob kept the more sacred record, while the other one was, perhaps, kept by the man whom he appointed to be his successor as king. These were the immediate successors of Nephi.

5. The later and more valuable record was not commenced till thirty years after Lehi left Jerusalem; but when begun, it started just where the other one started, and was made to cover the same historical period of time.

6. This smaller and more sacred record, as we should reasonably expect, was the one over which the Lord seemed to exercise special care. He manifested to Nephi, nearly six hundred years before Christ, and to Mormon some four hundred years after Christ, that the ministry, and the prophecies, the more plain and precious parts of them should be written upon these plates: and that the things which were written, should be kept for the instruction of my people, who should possess the land, and also for other wise purposes, which purposes are known unto the Lord.—2 Nephi 5: 47.

Or as Mormon puts it,

And I do this for a wise purpose; for thus it whispereth me, according to the workings of the Spirit of the Lord which is in me.—The Words of Mormon, 1: 3.

7. In that part of the Book of Mormon written by Nephi, the son of Lehi, he occasionally refers to the larger historical record in such a manner as to not only indicate the character of the record, but to show that he made provision for the keeping of these two records by all his successors. He says:—

Wherefore I, Nephi, did make a record, upon the other plates, which gives an account, or which gives a greater account of the wars, and contentions, and destructions of my people. And this have I done, and commanded my people what they should do, after I was gone, and that these plates should be handed down from one generation to another, or from one prophet to another, until further commandments of the Lord.—1 Nephi 5: 47.

My references are to the Plano edition of the Book of Mormon, which is a reprint from the "Third American Edition."

8. Other and later writers made clear reference to the larger record. In the Book of Jarom 1: 6, we have the following:—

And it came to pass that two hundred and thirty-eight years had passed away, after the manner of wars, and contentions, and dissensions, for the space of much of the time. And I, Jarom, do not write more, for the plates are small. But behold, my brethren, ye can go to the other plates of Nephi: for behold, upon them the record of our wars are engraven, according to the writings of the kings, or those which they caused to be written. And I deliver these plates into the hands of my son Omni, that they may be kept according to the commandments of my fathers.

9. All the records fell into the hands of one Mormon, between three and four hundred years after Christ, who made an abridged record from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem, about six hundred years before Christ, till his death. This record was completed by Moroni, the son of Mormon, about A. D. 420, and by commandment of God, was hidden away in the earth.

10. When Mormon began his record, he took his account from the larger plates of Nephi. He continued to use this record till he came down to the reign of King Benjamin, or about two hundred years before Christ.

11. From the reign of King Benjamin on down to the end, the smaller and more sacred record was used. (It must be borne in mind that both sets of plates were called the plates of Nephi.) Mormon makes the following statements:—

And now, I speak somewhat concerning that which I have written: for after I had made an abridgement from the plates of Nephi, down to the reign of this King Benjamin, of whom Amaleki spake, I searched among the records which had been delivered into my hands, and I found these plates which contained the small account of the prophets, from Jacob, down to the reign of this King Benjamin: and also many of the words of Nephi. And the things which are upon these plates pleasing me, because of the prophecies of the coming of Christ; . . . wherefore I chose these things, to finish my record upon them, which remainder of my record I shall take from the plates of Nephi; and I cannot write the hundredth part of the things of my people.

And now I, Mormon, proceed to finish out my record, which I take from the plates of Nephi; and I make it according to the knowledge and the understanding which God has given me. Wherefore, it came to pass after that Amaleki had delivered up these plates into the hands of King Benjamin, he took them and put them with other plates which contained records which had been handed down by the kings, from generation to generation, until the days of King Benjamin; and they were handed down from King Benjamin, from generation to generation, until they have fallen into my hands.—The words of Mormon 1: 2, 4.

I also quote from the words of Mormon as found in the Book of Nephi, who was the son of Nephi, who was the son of Helaman.

And thus had the twenty and second year passed away, and the twenty and third year also, and the twenty and fourth, and the twenty and fifth; and thus had twenty and five years passed away [since Christ], and there had many things transpired which, in the eyes of some, would be great and marvelous; nevertheless, they cannot all be written in this book; yea, this book cannot contain even a hundredth part of what was done among so many people, in the space of twenty and five years; but behold, there are records which do contain all the proceedings of this people; and a more short but true account was given by Nephi; therefore I have made my record of these things according to the record of Nephi, which was engraven on the plates which were called the plates of Nephi.—Book of Nephi 2: 11.

While the last quotation is not definite on the point under consideration, the inferences are all, I think, in favor of the claim that Mormon used the smaller and more valuable record as the basis for his abridgment, from the reign of King Benjamin on down to the end. Moreover, this last quotation must be interpreted in harmony with the one which precedes it, which is quite plain.

The very fact that Mormon pays so much attention to the church, the work of the ministry, prophecy, revelation, doctrine, etc., is the best of presumptive evidence that he used the more sacred record. More than this, it should be considered that the very things so carefully preserved in this sacred record were the things which the holy men of God, among the Nephites, desired should be preserved for the benefit of their brethren; and because of their faith and prayers, God promised that they should be preserved and, in his own time, brought forth to the people.

The further facts that the Book of Mormon was to establish the truth of "the records of the prophets and of the twelve apostles of the Lamb" (1 Nephi 3: 42, 43), and so enlighten the minds of those who should be found honestly seeking to understand "the glorious gospel of Christ" as to fulfill the following words of the prophet,

They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine (Isa. 29: 24; 2 Nephi 11, 19), is good proof that the Book of Mormon was to be preëminently a book of doctrine; hence it is an abridgment of the smaller record of Nephi, so far as abridged at all.

Joseph Smith translated from Mormon's abridged record till he came to the reign of King Benjamin, and at this time, or very soon afterwards, the manuscript fell into the hands of an enemy. The wording was changed, and thus an effort was made to destroy Joseph Smith and the work he was seeking to establish. But it failed. The Lord commands him not to translate over again from Mormon's plates, but to translate from the plates of Nephi (evidently the smaller ones) and publish it as the record of Nephi, till he came to the reign of King Benjamin or to the manuscript which he had retained. Right here at the reign of King Benjamin, is where Mormon commenced to use the smaller plates in making up his account; so that the Book of Mormon contains the full account as originally kept on the small plates, down to the reign of King Benjamin, and after that Mormon's abridgement from the same plates, together with the accounts written by Mormon and Moroni in the times in which they lived. This gives us the benefit of the more sacred, doctrinal, and carefully made record, as a whole all the way through.

Elder Roberts admits that we have this record in full in the first part of the Book of Mormon, but claims, as we have seen, that "for the most part" the Book of Mormon "is an abridgment from the larger plates of Nephi."

I herewith present a list of references for the benefit of those who may wish to investigate this point, and which, it is thought, sustain the positions set forth in this paper. My views on the "history of the plates," are also set forth in "Objections to the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted," with a number of quotations from the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, beginning on page 14.

1 Nephi 2: 27, 28; 3: 1, 7; 5: 46, 47; 2 Nephi 3: 5; 4: 5, 6; Jacob 1: 1; 5: 8, 9; Jarom 1: 6; The Words of Moroni 1: 2-4; Mosiah 13: 1; Nephi 2: 11.

Am I right? or is Elder Roberts right? We elders of the church should not be afraid to exchange our thoughts freely and frankly, (though we may differ to some extent,) lest ill feeling should be engendered. Such a standard is entirely too low for ministers of Jesus Christ, and representatives of the Church of God.

J. R. LAMBERT.

RELIGION.

THERE have been in our town of late, certain ministers of the "Holiness" persuasion, who were very zealous in seeking to convert our citizens from what they supposed to be the error of their ways unto the faith that they had espoused. They frequently interrogated our people on the streets—the writer included—as to whether they had got religion.

The question, in the opinion of the writer, is a proper one; but for him to answer it he would want to know what is understood by the term "religion"—what is its definition. The lexicographer, Webster, in one of his definitions—not the primary one however—says it is "any system of faith and worship." According to this rendering if our friends had asked the Catholics, the Episcopalians, the Baptists, the Methodists, the Christians or Campbellites, or all of the different denominations of professing Christians, with the Pagans and Mahomedans, yes, and the Latter Day Saints also, the question, "Have you got religion?" all could have answered in the affirmative, and their answer would have been correct; for all have a system of faith and worship, though differing one from the other in many points. All could not have answered correctly that they had the religion or faith and worship of Jesus Christ, for the Scriptures say in Ephesians 4:5 that there is

One Lord, one faith, one baptism.

There must have taken place a fulfillment of the prediction of Paul to Timothy:—

Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith.—1 Tim. 4:1.

Or, a departure from the system of faith, and consequently from the true worship of God, not having the true religion of Jesus Christ. Religion is defined by the same lexicographer, in its primary or comprehensive sense to include a belief in the being and perfections of God, in the revelation of his will to man, in man's obligation to obey his commands, in a state of reward and punishment, and in man's accountableness to God. . . . It therefore comprehends theology as a system of doctrines or principles as well as practical piety, etc.

Religion, then, consists not only of a belief in the being and perfections of God, in the revelation of his will to man, and man's obligations to obey that will by keeping his commandments; but it consists in a system of doctrines or principles. Doctrine is defined primarily,

In a general sense, whatever is taught.

Jesus came as the great Teacher sent from God to reveal unto the children of men the will of God the Father; for he said:—

I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.—John 5:30.

For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak, therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.—John 12:49, 50.

Jesus came under express command of the Father as to what he should say and speak to the children of men to tell them how to obtain life everlasting. Whatever he taught involved a belief in the being and perfections of God, and also a belief in him as the Son of God. He says:—

Ye believe in God, believe also in me.—John 14:1.

It involved the revealed will of God to man of the plan of salvation, and consequently man's obligation to obey God's commands in order to obtain salvation. It also involved a state of reward for obedience to the gospel plan, and of punishment for disobedience. It involved the accountableness of man to God. It also involved a system of doctrine or principles. It, then, had all the defined marks of religion; and Christ being the teacher, it was Christ's religion, Christ's doctrine, or the doctrine of the Father, taught by Christ; for he says:—

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.—John 7:17.

It is written in John 3,

For God so loved the world, that he gave [or sent] his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

In John 12 Jesus states that the Father gave him a commandment what he should say, and what he should speak, and he says he knew that his commandment was life everlasting; and in John 3 Jesus says the Father sent him and whosoever believed in him should have everlasting life.

It is plain to the thinking mind that if we reject any of the teaching of Jesus Christ we do not believe in him, and consequently could not receive everlasting life. One of the plain principles that Jesus taught by both example and precept as necessary to be obeyed for life and salvation—baptism, or immersion in water—is denied as being necessary to that end, by these selfsame individuals who ask us if we have got religion. We think with one, "O consistency, thou art a jewel!" If religion consists of a system of doctrines or principles, and doctrine is defined as being "that which is taught;" and the great Teacher sent from God, who was commanded what he should say and what he should speak that should constitute the plan of salvation, taught a system of doctrines or principles and even one of those principles should be denied, or ignored, as not necessary to accomplish that which the Teacher said it would, could that man or set of men so denying be in the possession of the religion of Jesus Christ? Or, could they obtain that salvation that was to be obtained by obedience to those principles in the religion of even one of them?

Infinite wisdom knew just what was necessary to constitute that plan of salvation, and if one of the principles had been unnecessary it never would have been incorporated in the principles of the doctrine of Christ. The great Teacher taught both by example and precept that baptism in water, was incorporated in the commandment given him by his Father of what he should "say and speak" unto the people for life and salvation. The writers of what are called the four Gospels bear testimony to the fact that the Savior was baptized of John in Jordan. Matthew records the transaction thus:—

And then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan, unto John, to be baptized of him; but John refused him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and why comest thou to me? And Jesus, answering, said unto him, Suffer me to be baptized of thee, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And John went down into the water and baptized him. And Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and John saw, and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and lighting upon Jesus. And lo, he heard a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him.—Matt. 3:14-17.

In view of this testimony, is there a candid, thinking mind that can come to the conclusion (if baptism is not essential to salvation) that the Savior would have set an example to the human family, for the performance of that which was unnecessary to be done, and insist so strenuously that John should baptize him, stating it was necessary that all righteousness should be fulfilled by the human family; and that the Father would take the pains to send the Holy Spirit upon his Son, and proclaim by his own voice from heaven his being well pleased by the action, and command that he should be heard—or that strict observance should be paid to what he said—if the performance of baptism was only a farce, a non-essential? If there is such an individual, he differs widely in his conceptions of the character of the infinite One from that which is revealed of him in the Scriptures. But we find, according to scriptural testimony, that he not only yielded obedience to the ordinance himself, to do the will of his Father, but he administered the ordinance to others that they also might do his will in that respect. We read:—

And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he who was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and he receiveth of all people who come unto him.—John 3: 26.

Again:—

When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John.—John 4: 1.

The reader may direct the writer's attention to the next verse, placed in brackets, in King James' translation, as a refutation of the statement that Christ administered the ordinance of baptism himself. It reads thus:—

(Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples.)

I would turn the reader's attention to what we consider a better, or, in other words, from the "Inspired Translation," for a rendering which we believe is more in keeping with the proof texts already referred to, as also with other of the sayings of Jesus. It reads as follows:—

Now the Lord knew this, though he himself baptized not so many as his disciples.—John 4: 3.

It will be perceived that this rendering does not antagonize the foregoing quotations, but supports them. The other sayings referred to will be found in Matthew 20: 26–28.

But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

If he came authorized of the Father to teach baptism as necessary to be performed in order to fulfill all righteousness, and set the example to all his followers by being baptized himself, who shall deny him the right to administer baptism to others? He not only set forth the necessity of baptism by his being baptized, and by baptizing others, but he emphasized it in the commission given to his disciples. Matthew records it thus:—

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.—Matt. 28: 19, 20.

It is plain to the most casual observer that that which these men were commissioned to teach, was universal in its character; that it concerned all the inhabitants of the world, "of every nation," and that to be benefited by what was taught they must yield obedience to it in every particular; especially when we consider that the voice of the Father at his baptism acknowledged him as his Son, in whom he was well pleased, and commanded that mankind should hear him. Through Moses it was predicted by the power of the Holy Ghost,

A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.—Acts 3: 22, 23.

He himself said before his death and resurrection:—

The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.

And after his resurrection he came to his disciples and said:—

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth: Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them, etc.

You will perceive that they were to teach all nations what was necessary for them to observe before baptism, and after baptism they were to teach them to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them, as the rule for their faith and practice after adoption into the fold, or family of God.

The Savior while with them set them the example of what they should teach his followers to observe, to fulfill all righteousness. In his sermon on the mount, he closes with saying:—

Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock.—Matt. 7: 24, 25.

The Book of Mormon, speaking with reference to this rock upon which we should build, says:—

And now my sons, remember, remember, that it is upon the rock of our Redeemer, who is Christ, the Son of God, that ye must build your foundation, that when the Devil shall send forth his mighty winds; yea, his shafts in the whirlwind; yea, when all his hail and his mighty storm shall beat upon you, it shall have no power over you, to drag you down to the gulf of misery and endless woe, because of the rock upon which ye are built, which is a sure foundation, a foundation whereon if men build, they cannot fall.—Book of Helaman 2: 15.

And that rock must be the teachings of Christ.

If, reader, you desire to know what these men taught the people to do before they were ready for baptism, follow the record of their acts as contained in the Book of the Acts of the Apostles and in the several epistles they have written, and you will find that they taught faith in God and his Son Jesus Christ; repentance of sins, or a turning from the service of Satan unto that of God; baptism in water for the remission of sins; and then was promised unto them the gift of the Holy Ghost; which would lead them into all truth. It would be their constant guide, if they did not by disobedience drive it from them; for the Apostle Paul has said that they that are the sons of God are led by the Spirit of God; and if guided into all truth, then "the truth" will make them "free"—free from sin and all its consequences; for the Savior has declared it.

But those same individuals repudiated all doctrine, and said that the preaching of doctrine had made more disturbance in the religious world than any other thing. In this assertion it will be apparent to the biblical student that they not only account one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ as nonessential, but all of the principles of that doctrine are repudiated. It is evident that the Savior was not of the same way of thinking; for he came preaching the doctrine of his Father. He said:—

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7:16, 17.

This needs no comment; it is plain that Jesus preached doctrine.

If Jesus received a commandment from the Father of what he should say and speak as the way of life and salvation, and gave his disciples the same word to preach or teach that he was sent to teach, as he told the Father he had done, as recorded in John, chapter 17, and he taught the doctrine of the Father, and said unto his disciples,

As the Father hath sent me so send I you, then they were sent to preach the same doctrine, for the same purpose; namely, life and salvation; and all who are attempting to teach people that they can obtain life and salvation without preaching the doctrine of Christ are deceiving themselves and all who subscribe to their teaching, and cannot be in possession of the religion of Christ.

John, the beloved disciple, in his second epistle, says:—

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 9.

It seems that John followed the command of his Lord by preaching his doctrine, and admonishes us that if any come unto us and bring or teach not this doctrine, we are not to receive their teaching, nor bid them Godspeed in it. From the above we can see that he that departs from the doctrine of Christ is without God and Christ, without true hope of life and salvation, and cannot while in that condition have the religion of Jesus Christ. But he that abides in the doctrine hath both the Father and the Son. This is in keeping with the Savior's saying recorded in John 14:23:—

Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

What consoling words; what encouraging words! They ought to encourage those who have not accepted

Christ's words, his doctrine, to procrastinate no longer, and those who have been adopted into Christ by obedience to the first principles of his doctrine, to strive to live by all his words, that we may be loved by the Father and the Son, so that they will not only take up their abode with us here, but that we may be permitted to dwell with them in eternal or celestial glory.

Resolved that W. H. Garrett act as district president for the ensuing year. Resolved that this conference rescind the present rules governing representation of this district.

Resolved that from and after the passage of this resolution the basis of representation and the rules governing the same shall be as follows:—

1. That each branch of this district shall be entitled to two classes of delegates; viz., delegates at large for the organization and delegates of representation, based upon the number of members in good standing.

2. That the number of delegates shall be one delegate at large for each branch organization; and that each branch shall be entitled to one delegate of representation for each twenty members in good standing, provided that where a branch has less than twenty members, it shall be entitled to one delegate of representation; but where the membership exceeds twenty members there shall be but one delegate for each full quota of twenty members.

3. That delegates of representation shall be elected at the branch business meeting at which the branch report to conference is adopted, and further that both delegates at large and delegates of representation shall be provided with credentials, attested by the branch clerk; and also that said credentials shall be only transferable to properly elected substitutes or alternates who may be elected at the same meeting as the delegates.

4. The members of branches in good standing, or the traveling ministry only shall be eligible as delegates of representation, provided that no such delegates shall be accredited as the representative of more than one branch.

5. That the president of each branch shall be ex officio, the delegate at large for that branch; and the presiding priest of the branch, the alternate ex officio.

6. The traveling ministry shall be accepted—when present—by vote as delegates at large, without specific representation unless having credentials from some branch.

7. Each elder of the district in good standing shall be a member ex officio of the conference, without specific representation unless having credentials from some branch as delegate of representation.

Resolved that this conference is unanimously of the opinion that all Sunday schools of this district should unite with the General Sunday School Association and that the secretary notify each school by mail of this resolution. Resolved that the delegates of this district to the Annual Conference for 1895 be instructed to vote for the holding of the next General Conference at Kirtland, Ohio. NEWBERRY.—At Argyle, Iowa, March 7, 1895, Elder James Newberry, aged 77 years, 2 months, and 28 days. He was born in Orange county, New York; came with his parents to Iowa, in 1838. He was married to Edith A. Benedict, September 19, 1847. To them were born six sons and three daughters, who are all present, except Smith B. and an infant not named, who wait to meet them in the spirit land. He united with the Reorganized Church in 1860, in which he was an honored member. He was an affectionate husband, a kind father, an accommodating neighbor, a true friend, a charitable Christian. Bringing himself up to the highest moral and Christian standard of right, he wished to help others to the same standard. His life has been an influence for good that will be known in eternity. The funeral sermon was preached at Argyle church, by Elder James McKiernan, to a large audience at eleven a. m., March 8. Burial took place at the Meek cemetery, near Vincennes.

SELLERS.—At his home in Union township, Harrison county, Iowa, February 2, 1895, Alfred Sellers. Deceased was born February 5, 1823, in Ohio, and came West in an early day. He had been married twice, and was the father of ten children, seven of whom, with his second wife, survive him. Deceased united with the church in the days of the first Joseph, and followed the fortunes of the Thompson faction as far as Preparation, Iowa, when he became disgusted with religion and held aloof ever since, until within three days before his death, when he sent for the elders to come and pray for and administer to him, which they did. He was respected by all who knew him. Funeral services in charge of Elder P. C. Kemmish; sermon by Elder D. Chambers.

BEARSE — At Dennisport, Massachusetts, March 5, 1895, Sr. Sally J. Bearse, aged 62 years, 3 months, and 20 days. Funeral at the Saints' chapel March 7; sermon by Elder John Smith to a full house of attentive listeners. She was a woman who honored the church by a quiet, saintly walk, and was loved and revered by many children and grandchildren, and respected by her neighbors for her truly womanly qualities.

"She's gone; her work on earth is done;
Her battle fought, her victory won."

ERWIN.—Charles Lyman, infant son of Bro. J. D. and Sr. Maggie C. Erwin, was born at Coalgate, Indian Territory, January 24, 1895; died February 20, 1895. Funeral services the 21st by Rev. Jas. Denison, of the Christian Church.

HIRONS.—Sr. Jane Hirons died at her home in Carroll county, Iowa, March 5, 1895, aged 77 years, 10 months, and 19 days. She joined the Baptist Church when thirteen years of age, subsequent to which time she united with the Christian Church. She was baptized into Christ by Elder Thomas Dobson, twenty-seven years ago, since which time she has been a faithful member of the Reorganized Church. She was the first person to unite with the church in her neighborhood and stood faithfully for the truth against much prejudice and opposition. She was so exercised upon by the Spirit of Christ that when her bitterest enemies were sick she visited their house and nursed their sick. Her house was a home for the Saints and ministers of Christ. Sr. Hirons came West when nineteen years of age and has been a resident of Carroll county, Iowa, for thirty years. Funeral services were conducted at the M. E. church, March 7, in charge of Elder W. W. Whiting, the pastor, Mr. Elliot, offering prayer, and the sermon was preached by Elder J. T. Turner, of Deloit, Iowa.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH, THE SEER.

A 48 page pamphlet, 32 pages of which contain an account of the angel's visits to Mr. Smith, the finding of ancient plates—the records from which the Book of Mormon was translated. It briefly recounts the leading events connected with Mr. Smith's early experiences up to the organization of the Church, in 1830. Three additional chapters describe American Antiquities, and Hebrew Relics, one containing the statement of Dr. Lederer, a converted Jew, etc., all corroborative of the claims of the Book of Mormon.

Its parliamentary rules are based upon the latest and best works of accepted authorities. The Articles of Association of the Reorganized Church, also the General Conference Rules of Representation are included. A book of 200 pages, cloth bound, exhaustively indexed; price 40 cents.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD.

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

MANUSCRIPT FOUND.

This is the notorious Manuscript Found, written by Rev. Solomon Spalding; a verified and certified copy of the original now in Oberlin College, Ohio, of which so much has been said and written in connection with the theory that it furnished Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon the chief groundwork and material from which to write the Book of Mormon. The preface to the work contains an account of its coming to light, by which it can be traced back to its author—Solomon Spalding. The work, suppressed for years by enemies of the Latter Day Saints, is a complete refutation of the charge made that it is the basis from which the Book of Mormon was written.

THE REFLEX OF INFLUENCE.

ONE of the greatest temptations men and women of strong mind have to fight is the temptation to control the wills of those about them; to compel unconsciously a blind following that neither questions nor analyzes causes, motives, or objects. A double injury is wrought. The stronger become the arbitrary; the weaker become less capable of independence of thought or action. Blind following is not complimentary to the one who leads. True strength trains to independence; and it strives the harder to secure this as its possessor sees the inevitable interruptions of life and death. The leader who builds well does not forget to use all the knowledge the world has to give him, and calculates the resistance that his structure must withstand. The men and women who do most for their fellows are those who train them to study, to think, and to weigh, without prejudice, every question presented for decision. A second temptation peculiar to people of strong wills is the temptation to mold the lives of those about them; they are always advising, planning, discussing, deciding questions which keener perception would show them were remote from their province. Uncontrolled strength of will may become intrusion. It is possible to force ourselves into the lives of others and assume relations which are a positive insult to the divinity that lies within every man.

'A man said to his slave, 'I am your master no longer: I make you free.' 'No, master,' said the slave, 'my work is not oppressive, and I fare well; and in being a slave I feel no degradation.'

'But,' said the man, 'I feel the degradation of being your master: you are free.'"—The Century.

To put into a life impulses that give it freedom, and move it toward its highest possibilities, is to work as a servant of God. To train the will as well as the mind, to awaken spiritual ambition, to rouse to independent activity another soul held in the bondage of ignorance, of weakness, of blind love, is to be the herald of redemption. On the other hand, to hold a human mind a slave to personal leadings, and to the blind acquiescence in a stronger will, means slavery of master and follower, and shows but a faint comprehension of the true relation of man to man.—Outlook.

READING NEWSPAPERS "FOR KEEPS."

IN front of me in the cars sat two business men. They bought their papers, as they had bought them every morning for the last thirty years, and at once buried themselves in their voluminous folds.

"Aha!" exclaimed one, suddenly. "They've been having a revolution in Brazil, I see."

"Um!" grunted the other. "That so? I hadn't seen anything about it."

That Brazilian revolution, which knocked poor Dom Pedro from his throne and overthrew the last monarchy on the American continent, changing into a republic the largest nation of South America and one of the largest of the world, was, in its character and results, one of the most interesting and important events of the century, and it had taken place six days before. Their newspapers had faithfully reported each of these days the startling occurrences, but these confirmed newspaper-readers had just seen it for the first time, and evidently didn't care then.

The whole world, it is often said, lies spread out before us in each copy of a daily paper. So it does; but how many see it? I run no risk at all in asserting that the last portions of the paper to be read are usually the columns of foreign news and the letters from foreign correspondents.

Why is this? Because people are lazy. The newspaper has no space for a section of the lexicon, encyclopedia, dictionary of biography, and gazetteer every morning, nor can the world part of the newspaper be read with any interest and permanent profit without these aids.

A lazy man read a newspaper? He can read the murders, suicides, fires, scandals, embezzlements; but he can't read the news—the really new and fresh and important things. The first he knows he will stumble against such a term as Bundesrath. "Now, what's a Bundesrath? Is it an animal or a town?" Or he will strike Moukden, or the Transvaal, the Parish Councils, the Centrists, the Sofas, Ellesmereland, the Kara Sea, Greytown.

To read the world in that newspaper, you see, he must do a little work. He must mark the words and allusions he does not understand, and the library must interpret the newspaper.

I once knew a group of enterprising young folks who divided up the world among themselves, and set out to conquer the newspaper coöperatively. One looked out for Asia, one for Europe, one for America, and one for the rest of the world. Then they kept changing their fields. They met once a week and told each other the news, and soon they knew more of what was going on in the world than the oldest newspaper reader in town.

There's no royal road to newspaper reading.

Don't get the impression, though, that the meager columns devoted to foreign news are all that the newspaper has for your profit. Don't skip the story of Congress and of your State Legislature. Do skip therein, however, the gossip, the empty political prognostications, the reports of parliamentary quarrels and repartee. Notice what bills are introduced. It is at this time that the newspaper gives an account of their purpose, henceforth referring to them merely by title; so that, if you miss your information at the start, you are likely to flounder in confusion through the entire discussion of the bill. Notice what bills are passed. Read with care the speeches that are reported in full, the President's messages, and similar matters.

And then read the comments on all these that are given in the editorial pages.

Throughout the whole keep a level head. Cablegrams from foreign countries are very costly, and therefore very curt. What you read of foreign news has been "padded," and not always wisely. The editorials are likely to be biased by personal or partisan prejudice. Learn to be the judge of what you read, not its slave.

Some weekly papers give magnificent reviews of the week's news, that will set in their proper relationships all that you have been reading and clear up many a doubtful point. An hour with such a weekly paper far more than doubles the value of a daily paper.

There are other things of value in your morning "Gazette" or "Herald" or "Journal." There are the biographical accounts of famous men when they die. There are extracts from the last magazines, that gives us the cream of a score of valuable articles every day. There are book reviews, poems, accounts of eminent men, travel articles, descriptions of great commercial enterprises, scientific notes. All of these are well worth reading "for keeps."

And when will you have time for all this? Why, bless you! all this occupies only a small part of your newspaper, and the larger portion of the mammoth sheet—the portion over which most men mull—I wouldn't have you read at all.

Never read newspapers unless you are able to skip the greater part of them.

Measure up, and you will find that the most space in your newspaper is occupied by prize fights, races, the theater, murder trials, accidents, fires, scandals, defalcations, and the like. Read these things "by title," as they read many of the bills in Congress. Learn the art of righteous skipping, or your newspaper reading will do you more harm than good.

With this plan of reading newspapers, you will be delighted to see how rapidly your knowledge will grow. A reference, once mastered, unlocks a dozen others. An unfamiliar geographical allusion, investigated, gives vividness to a score of paragraphs to come. You speedily begin to feel at home here and there, all over the world. You have established a sort of proprietary right in Sierra Leone, and Behring Sea, and Siam, and Honduras, and a thousand other places. You can imagine, as you go about your tasks, something of what is happening in Constantinople, in the palace of the Czar, in the councils of Lord Rosebery, in Peary's lonely camp up toward the Pole.

And so your sympathies have expanded, your horizon has widened, your life has become enriched by a host of new and intense interests. Petty worries have less power to vex you, and narrow views have less power to dwarf your mind. While none the less a patriot, but a thousand times the more, you have become a genuine citizen of the world.

Is it not worth while?—A. R. Wells in Outlook.

METEORIC STONES.

METEORIC stones themselves are most interesting objects, being as they are the only fragments of matter of extra-terrestrial origin which we can hope to see and handle. There are two main forms of these "stones"—masses of "meteoric iron," and of "meteoric stone." The former consists of a peculiar alloy, mainly composed of iron and nickel, but which also contains small quantities of cobalt, magnesium, carbon, copper, etc. The meteoric stones, properly so called, are masses of stony matter composed of minerals which are found more or less abundantly in lavas and trap-rock—and which are, therefore, of a more or less volcanic origin. Gases, such as hydrogen, are often contained in the crevices; but no elementary substance not found upon the earth has ever been detected in these bodies. The fall of such a mass is generally accompanied by striking phenomena. The famous fall at Aigle, in 1803, took place at one o'clock on an April afternoon. "An explosion lasting five or six minutes was heard, taking place in a dark, almost motionless, very small cloud; it was followed by three or four detonations like cannon-shots, and by the noise resembling the fire of small arms and the roll of many drums. At each explosion some of the vapors forming the small dark cloud were seen to detach themselves and float away." The stones, which were numerous, fell upon an elliptic area five miles long. The fall of meteoric iron has, strange to say, been very seldom observed, though this substance has been often enough found. Meteoric iron has been occasionally put to use.

It is on record that in 1620 the Mogul Emperor Jehanjir had a sword made out of a mass that fell in the Punjab; and Sabine found in his explorations in Baffin's Bay that the Esquimaux knives were made of iron of this kind. In Baffin's Bay enormous masses have been found embedded in basalt, which must have fallen in the later geological times. Formerly, the extra-terrestrial origin of these various masses was denied by scientific men, but the investigations—initiated by Chladni—of the last hundred years have proven beyond a doubt that in meteoric stones, of whatever form, we actually see and touch substance which once constituted a portion of one or other of the heavenly bodies.

LADY SOMERSET ON SOCIAL PURITY.

One of the features of the March magazines is Lady Henry Somerset's paper in the March Arena on "The Welcome Child,"—a study in social purity. The writer has become a well-known figure in the reform line of workers and thinkers and speakers of our country and her article will undoubtedly receive wide attention. A fine autographed portrait of Lady Somerset forms the frontispiece of the number. Lady Somerset's views are presented with considerable frankness and they will probably provoke some criticism as well as meet with much approving comment.

LAMONI, IOWA, MARCH 27, 1895.

THE "RETURN."

THE Return, a paper published at Davis City, Iowa, and dated March 1, 1895, is laid on our table with a request for an exchange. It is an eight-page pamphlet form, and according to its imprint, "Published semi-monthly at $1.00 a year, C. A. Wickes editor and proprietor."

It is, ostensibly, a taking up of the work attempted by the late Ebenezer Robinson, whose widow Mr. C. A. Wickes has married, and quoting his own words proposes to do what he believes Mr. Robinson undertook to do:—

We take it up right where he dropped it, without reference to any other work or issue.

Our only apology for so doing is that we have felt the burden laid upon us, and the means to do it have been placed in our hands without any seeking on our part.

In this issue of the Return the will of the late Elder George Adams, made September 22, 1890, running to the "Church of Christ, commonly called the Whitmerite Church," is published. This will was probated at the January term of the district court for Decatur county. The articles of incorporation of "The Church of Christ," with John C. Whitmer, of Richmond, Ray county, Missouri, Ebenezer Robinson, Frederick Cunningham, Simeon La Point, S. L. Losey, Sarah Cunningham, M. A. Robinson, and James E. Hockert, of the county of Decatur, and State of Iowa, named as incorporators, and dated December 4, 1890, are also published.

The preamble to these articles declares that Joseph Smith, Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and others established the Church of Christ in New York, in 1829; and that said Church of Christ was organized agreeably to the laws of the country April 6, 1830, and continued through David Whitmer and others' authority; and that those persons named as incorporators were members of that church. Of these incorporators Ebenezer Robinson alone could date his uniting with the church back in the thirties, and it is a question how the others—baptized at a quite recent period—could have been members of that church organized April 6, 1830.

The will of Elder Adams runs to the church "of which John C. Whitmer, Ebenezer Robinson, and Solomon Thomas are members." This will was made September 22, 1890, and these three men were made executors. Two of them—Robinson and Whitmer—are named as incorporators; all the rest of them are of recent adherence, the most of them having first been members of the Reorganized Church.

It will be interesting to the members of the Reorganized Church, and possibly to the "Whitmerites," so-called, to learn that Ebenezer Robinson was baptized October 16, 1835, by Joseph Smith himself. This was after the organization, April 6, 1830; after the organization of the High Council, February 17, 1834; after the call of the apostles, February 14, 1835; and after the Solemn Assembly held at Kirtland, August 17, 1835, at which the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants were accepted and indorsed as the standard books of the church. In the winter of 1835–36, occurred the endowment in the temple at Kirtland, at which Ebenezer Robinson was present; and of the wonderful power and manifestations occurring during that endowment many have heard Ebenezer Robinson tell with characteristic impressment and pathos. If Ebenezer Robinson was a member of the church organized April 6, 1830, was he not made so by the baptism of Joseph Smith, administered by him after the period charged by Elder Whitmer in the Appeal as being the time of his fall as a prophet?

If the Church of Christ has held no council since July, 1890, as Mr. Wickes states when suggesting a council meeting in this March issue of the Return, by whom is the paper authorized as an organ following Elder Robinson's work, and how are the executors of Mr. Adams' will carrying out the provisions bequeathing some five thousand dollars to a church not yet in existence as a corporate body, when said will was made?

These are questions possibly suggested to others as well as to the HERALD.

IN HONOR OF LOVEJOY.

SPRINGFIELD, Illinois, March 14. — Mr. Herb, of Madison county, introduced in the Senate to-day, a bill appropriating $25,000 for a monument to be placed over the grave of Elijah Parish Lovejoy, who, in November, 1837, was shot to death by a mob at Alton, Illinois. Elijah P. Lovejoy was an abolitionist and his were the prophetic utterances giving warning of the abolition of slavery. The history of this remarkable man is but little understood and known by the present generation. He was born in Maine and came to St. Louis in 1827. He worked on newspapers in that city for several years, and believed in the freedom of the slave. He did not know how this result was to be accomplished, but was firm in the conviction that the slaves should be free. He was driven out of St. Louis and went to St. Charles, Missouri.

Forced to leave St. Charles he came to Alton, where he attempted to establish a newspaper, pledged to support the abolition of slavery. He was a persecuted, oppressed man. He was not permitted to give public utterance to his sentiments, and three separate times his printing presses were thrown into the river and destroyed. The fourth press came and was stored in the warehouse of Godfrey and Gilman. The building was attacked by a mob and set on fire. Lovejoy and a party of men were on the inside defending the press. Volunteers were called for to go another part of the building and subdue an incendiary fire placed there by the mob.

Lovejoy was the first to volunteer, and as he went on his dangerous mission he was shot down. It is supposed he was killed by a man named Jennings, who was afterward cut to pieces in a bowie knife fight in barroom at Vicksburg.

Lovejoy's body lay upon a cot in the counting room of the warehouse until the next day after he was killed, which was the thirty-fifth anniversary of his birth. There was no inquest held on his body. The funeral was private, the Rev. Thomas Lippincott officiating. Few persons went to the house or the grave, and the services over this martyr's body consisted of simple prayers. A public demonstration, or even a decent funeral, would have provoked a riot. His body was buried in the city cemetery of Alton. When the grounds were laid out and improved the main avenue passed directly over Lovejoy's grave. A colored man, by name Johnston, buried Lovejoy the first time and superintended the removal of his body to a grave which is now surmounted by a small pedestal of New England granite. William Johnston, the colored man, and the Rev. Thomas Dimmock were for years the only human beings who knew where Lovejoy's body was buried. On his monument is an inscription in Latin, which, being translated, reads: "Here lies Lovejoy. Spare him, now that he is buried."

None of the members of the mob that murdered Lovejoy was ever brought to justice. They were tried, it is true, but the proceedings, as will be seen by reference to the printed account of the trial, were farcical. At this late day it is proposed to do justice to the memory of this most distinguished man. The citizens of Alton have long felt the stigma which is attached to the name of that town on account of the murder of Lovejoy. It must be remembered that Alton was a great city when Chicago was an unknown quantity. . . . There is no doubt Lovejoy was killed by men who infested the river and whose affiliations were always with slavery. The inhabitants of Alton are ready to contribute $25,000 toward the monument. Senator Herb will use his best efforts to get the bill through the General Assembly, and it is to be hoped the appropriation will be made—in recognition of the merit of the man, who boldly said:—

"But, gentlemen, as long as I am an American citizen, and as long as American blood runs in these veins, I shall hold myself at liberty to speak, to write, and to publish whatever I please on any subject—being amenable to the laws of my country for the same."

That utterance probably cost Lovejoy his life.

The foregoing is from a late issue of the Chicago Tribune. Fifty years ago Lovejoy, the first abolitionist martyr of his times, was assassinated; fifty-eight years afterward a legislator in his native State and the citizens of his home city join in a movement to erect a monument to his memory. Such are the changes wrought by time; such the compensations it brings. The principle for which Lovejoy contended has been asserted, vindicated, maintained. Then his views were held by the minority; now they are championed by the great majority, so radical has been the change, so complete the education and reversal of public sentiment on the question of human slavery.

The soil of the State of Illinois has been more than once stained with martyred blood. Seven years after the killing of Lovejoy two others yielded up their lives for truth, for principles similar to those for which he gave his life, and under circumstances considerably like those that resulted in his death. On the 27th of June, 1844, Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith were assassinated at Carthage, Illinois, by an armed mob and in defiance of law. This occurred while the Smiths were prisoners or hostages of the State and under promise of its protection as pledged by the then governor, Thomas Ford.

Our readers generally are so familiar with the circumstances of the imprisonment and death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith that it seems scarcely necessary to make lengthy statement of the facts. However, while popular sentiment has, in a measure, been educated above the conditions that then prevailed, justice has by no means been done the memory of those men, nor has their worth yet been recognized, nor credit been given them as men who withheld not their lifeblood in behalf of and in defense of truth, for the welfare, the emancipation of fellow man.

The causes that led to the killing of Lovejoy and the murder of the Smiths are similar, the parallels striking. Lovejoy was firm in his belief that slavery was wrong and that the black man should be freed. The conviction that he must work for the emancipation of the negro race was deeply rooted in his soul and he continued to assert it fearless of opposition, violent persecution, and oppression. Three times was his printing plant destroyed, and in the last effort he was shot down while seeking to defend it. He was taken off in the prime of life; was privately buried, because a public funeral might have provoked a renewal of mob violence; the trial of his murderers was a farce; they were no doubt those in affiliation with slavery, etc.

Joseph Smith began his career called directly to the work of preaching the truth by which men were to be delivered from spiritual slavery; from religious error and the superstitions of their fathers. He came in contact with the religious prejudices of the day and provoked the hostility of sectarians; and, like the prophets of old, was persecuted because the truth he advocated could not be successfully resisted by fair, open methods. Error, darkness, wrong, and violence go hand in hand. When men cling to one they partake of the other, if continued in preference to light and truth; hence, as anciently, those called to represent and maintain the truth became targets for the shafts of the foe of humanity and his agents; and persecution, oppression, and at times even death is the result.

Joseph Smith and his coworkers were the objects of persecution from the commencement of their religious career. From the day he announced the angel's visit and proclaimed the dawning of the latter-day dispensation his enemies kept up a harassing, relentless series of cruel misrepresentations and heartless opposition. Not content with this, mob violence was resorted to, resulting in the driving of the Saints from Ohio into the then wilderness of Missouri, where, opposed by this same pro-slavery element that put Lovejoy to death, himself and the early Saints were hounded and driven from the State into Illinois, and where his Missouri persecutors and other lawless elements finally succeeded in bringing about his assassination, also that of his brother Hyrum.

Subjected to over fifty vexatious lawsuits upon trumped-up charges, Joseph Smith was never convicted of crime. Fanaticism, religious and pro-slavery persecution could not reach him by fair methods; but by violence he was slain; as his persecutors said, they could not reach him by law, but could by powder and lead. For this his persecutors and murderers have never answered to any earthly tribunal, nor did the maligning of his name cease with his death. But the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ—the primitive faith of Christ and the apostles as restored in these latter days—for which Joseph and Hyrum Smith and their coworkers have labored and suffered, have to a great extent leavened and transformed the world. The spirit of freedom that accompanied the gospel message has permeated all departments of society and the upheaval and transformation is not yet ended. Class distinctions are being leveled; the so-called divine right of kings to rule and the efforts of priests to lead blindly the masses has been challenged and successfully resisted; republican principles and the equality of man are obtaining sway. "Knowledge" is increasing and a more liberal spirit prevails. Religious creeds, political codes, and general principles are being subjected to close scrutiny, hence liberty and equality are being made secure and are prevailing everywhere.

The monument to Lovejoy is one indication of the triumph of right sentiment. It is not only a monument to him; it is both a commemoration of his sacrificing spirit and a recognition of the truth for which he contended—that all men are inherently entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Joseph and Hyrum Smith gave their lives in defense of those principles, and in a larger sense. They died in the maintenance of the principles that make men free in the fullest sense. Their toil and lifework were in behalf of the truth that makes men "free indeed." That work was not ended in their death. The principles for which they contended took deep root in good soil. and though the tares of error had been well planted, the gospel seed has partly rooted them up, and promises to largely occupy the field until "the time of the harvest"—the end of the world.

Will the public mind be as ready to confess the crime committed in the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and make public confession of it by erection of a monument to their memory as in the case of Lovejoy? If not, why not? Can it afford, will it do less?

We hope not, we believe not; but look for the time to come when the people, educated to the proper standard, shall confess the sins of their fathers of the generation past and make atonement, if atonement has not been made, or redress. Atonement they may not be able to make; redress, acknowledgment, they can. We shall not be surprised to see it done, and at no distant day, and shall rejoice in it as a vindication of those worthy of it; as a tribute to truth, as an acknowledgment of principle; above all as an evidence of the God-nature, the nobleness of man when emancipated and true to the divine nature whose image he bears; of his willingness to acknowledge what God has wrought in the world for the common good of all.

NOT COMPULSORY.

THERE is a general understanding among the people that it is quite an undertaking to get a newspaper discontinued when once it has been taken; and, having had some experience in the line of getting rid of publications persistently sent, we are decidedly of the opinion that if the common understanding of the law had been correct, the newspaper law is a most perverse invasion of the rights of the citizen. We are therefore pleased to see the following going the round of our exchanges, and hope it is as correct in fact as it is in good sense:—

Assistant Attorney General Thomas, of the post office department, has made an important ruling in regard to the so-called "newspaper laws." Mr. Thomas decides that a publisher who makes a demand for payment of subscription to his paper through the mails, accompanying the demand with a threat of enforcing it by the use of these pretended laws, may be prosecuted for attempting to obtain money under false pretenses, provided he knows that these laws have no existence as laws or as judicial decisions. The so-called laws referred to are those often promulgated by some newspapers to the effect that subscriptions to a paper cannot be stopped until full payment of arrearage has been made and that a publisher may prosecute in criminal action a subscriber who refuses to take his paper from the office, not having paid full arrearage, or a subscriber who takes a paper and refuses to pay for it. These rules, the Assistant Attorney General says, have no existence under the law.

The publisher of a newspaper has no more right to force his wares on a citizen than has the butcher, the baker, or the grocer. If the publisher can continue to send his paper after notice to discontinue it has been given, the same right to force his wares on people inures to everybody who has goods to sell and has sold any of them to a customer; because he has once bought, he must continue to buy, whether he wishes to or no.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

JOSEPH MORRILL, who is at the farm in Smith county, Kansas, some few miles from Smith Center, would be much pleased to have an elder come and visit him, and do some labor there. Bro. Morrill is one of the old veterans, and bears a faithful testimony. He accepted the work when it required courage to stand in defense of it. He writes:—

I know that work is of God, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet sent of God; and also that the words that you, his son, spoke to me in Plano, came to pass, as truly, as did words of Elijah about Jezebel. It will be fifty years the 17th day of May, since I obeyed the gospel.

Bro. T. W. Williams, Council Bluffs, Iowa, March 17:—

Our church house is getting to be too small to accommodate the people. We have to place two rows of chairs in the aisle and crowd the people in as best we can. Interest still increasing here; people were turned away from the church last evening unable to get in. The church was crowded as it never has been before; entirely too full for comfort. It is truly encouraging to see such an interest; I trust it may continue. The Saints feel encouraged, and I hear some talk of a new church building.

Bro. S. B. Kibler, Woodbine, Iowa, March 18:—

Sr. G. A. Blackman and F. C. Oviatt have just been converted and joined the church under Bro. J. W. Wight's efforts here, and many more are convinced, and seed has been sown on good ground, that I am sure will bring forth fruit. The outlook here was never so promising, for which I feel to thank God. It is what I have long prayed for. May we all be watchful as well as prayerful, especially watching and cultivating self.

Bro. C. A. Butterworth, Somerville, Victoria, February 8:—

The work moves very slowly out here, but we keep trying, and occasionally one finds the fold. There are a number of obstacles which hinder the work at present. Hope you all will have great success at home and God's ever present blessing.

Bro. J. A. Browning writing from Salt Lake City, February 22:—

Sr. Dr. Higgins gave a dinner and very pleasant entertainment on Thursday, the 21st, at her home, 649 First West street, Salt Lake City, to the "Ladies Mission Aid Society,"—some eighteen being seated at the festive board. After doing justice to the sumptuous repast, the evening hour was spent in a varied but informal program, being interspersed with enjoyable music, (vocal and instrumental,) social converse, etc. Following are the names of the sisters in attendance: Lucy Barrows, Alice Wilson, R. J. Anthony, Isabel Wilson, Jane Pettit, Sarah E. Derry, of Lamoni, Iowa, Sarah Wilson, S. Shepherd, J. Larsen, Ida Chase, Emma Warburton, Jane Chase, of Ogden, and Pauline Higgins. The writer, Wells Chase, of Ogden, with the hospitable Doctor were interested spectators at eventide, and witnessed the mirthful and successful efforts of the society.

Bro. R. C. Evans, Grand Valley, Ontario, March 14:—

Since January 1, 1895, I have had one debate, baptized eight and confirmed six, preached forty six times, blessed seven, ordained two, administered to sixty-four, held ten prayer meetings, organized one branch, preached two funeral sermons, performed one marriage. A number of times great crowds have been turned away—not standing room.

When I preached Bro. Matthew's funeral sermon in Waterford church last Sunday night, it is said over two hundred persons were unable to get a seat. I am feeling well, but tired.

Bro. Abram Jones, Taylorville, Illinois, March 17:—

Taylorville is the county seat of Christian county. It has about five thousand inhabitants and is a religious community; but there are no Latter Day Saints here besides us. No Latter Day Saint minister has preached here, and our doctrine is strange to the people. We have had promise of the courthouse for the elders to preach in when court is not in session. We would like to see an elder.

Bro. T. W. Chatburn, following the late effort made at Blendville and Webb City, Missouri, upon the occasion of the dedication at the former place, writes March 18:—

Troubled the waters yesterday at "Soaper-noga;" three baptized, heads of families; and more to follow. Grand interest manifested here; new church filled to overflowing last night; standing room at a premium. Fine impressions made here by Brn. Joseph Smith and Joseph Luff. It is pleasant to follow the tracks of such servants. The Spirit of God is working with the people and the horizon is growing brighter continually.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ANY of the ministry traveling in the vicinity of Catlin, Illinois, on the Wabash railroad, eighty miles east of Springfield, and one hundred and fifteen southeast from Chicago, who will call on Charles Thomas, will be kindly received. The address is given to Bro. J. H. Wells by Charles Thomas, son of Mr. Thomas, living at Catlin.

Bro. Peter M. Hinds, engineer of the Herald Office and Librarian of the Lamoni Sunday school, was married on Saturday, March 9, to Mrs. Ida Hobson, formerly of New Salem, Iowa. The ceremony was performed at the residence of Elder Asa S. Cochran, and by him. A large number of friends gathered to pay their respects and extend congratulations to the happy couple. Bro. Hinds is well known as a worker in various lines of labor connected with the young people's societies and a faithful employee of the publication plant. All join in wishing him and his life partner a prosperous and happy future.

Bro. L. L. Booth, Vernon, Idaho, is ready to welcome Bro. R. J. Anthony when he comes in May, as he expects to do, and will do what he can to make Bro. A's effort to reach the people a success. The Probate Judge at the county seat will also help get an opening there. Bro. Booth thinks that openings and a hearing will be had.

Bro. John Smith, writing from Milnrow, Lancashire, England, March 4, states that there is a town of eighty thousand and within some four miles radius are twelve other towns ranging from hundreds to thousands, a field which offers more people to preach to within easy reach than any other he knows of in that region. O that some one would go in and help occupy.

Bro. Charles H. Arms, Hanging Dog Post Office, Cherokee county, North Carolina, extends an invitation to elders to call on him. He will provide both a home and a place to preach the word.

Mr. Ishmael Hutchinson, address Box 41, Kellogg, Iowa, his mother a Latter Day Saint, writes, asking us to note that he would like to obtain work at blacksmithing, etc. He can shoe horses, sharpen plows, cultivators, harrow teeth; can also run an engine, etc. Has had one year's experience in shop work; is aged nineteen, and weighs one hundred and seventy pounds and is of average height, wants to complete his trade. Anyone needing his services, address as above.

Bro. J. C. Foss baptized one at Little Deer Isle on the 10th of March, and the names of two others are given for the rite.

Bro. J. W. Lane writes from Mt. Pisgah, Iowa, that the meetings of Bro. J. W. Wight were well attended. As a result, "several well to do farmers, not of our faith, offered fifty dollars each toward building a church, without solicitation on our part."

It is the January, 1893, numbers of Autumn Leaves that is wanted by the Herald Office, and for which two months' subscription will be credited. We were misinformed as to the number. All who sent the '94 number will be credited, however. Send us the January, 1893, number and two months' subscription will be credited.

Lamoni arrivals en route to General Conference: Bro. and Sr. I. L. Rogers, Bro. and Sr. G. T. Griffiths, Brn. J. H. Lake, C. Scott, J. W. Wight, E. A. Stedman, C. Danielson, and O. Elefson.

ABOUT RATES.

BRO. F. G. PITT writes from Chicago to Bro. H. A. Stebbins, March 21, 1895:—

I have just had a talk with Mr. Bevington of the Alton road. He has not heard anything definite from the association, but they will grant us a one and one third fare over their road for a company of twenty-five or more from any one point. It is likely that more than that number will pass through this city. If so, they might as well get the advantage of this reduction.

A DREAM.

BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

I dreamed that I walked in the dusk of the eve
By the side of the murmuring waters,
And sought me a balm for a spirit that grieves,
For a weak faith that stumbles and totters.

I fancied I saw how the cause that we trust,
And the hope and the faith we have cherished

Have left us with naught but a handful of dust
And a thorn where the roses have perished.

I fancied I saw how the Saints in the past
Were neglected to sorrow and weeping, Unanswered their prayer, and unheeded their fast,
And unnoted their long vigils keeping.

At Carthage, of old, by the kiss of the State,
Was our prophet betrayed to the mobber;
I heard the low sobs of the orphans that wait,
And I saw their homes sacked by the robber.

I saw where the prairies were marked by the course
Of the Saints from their city out driven,
And heard the wild winter storm howling and hoarse
With the cry of the perishing riven.

My heart grew so heavy and bitter and sore,
With no thought of a gentle forgiving;
A cry of revenge for the dead gone before,
A tear for the wrongs of the living.

I dreamed that I walked in the dusk of the eve,
By the side of a beautiful river,
And heard the night wind rustle down through the leaves,
Like the breath of the bountiful Giver.

I saw on the beach and the billows a light
That illumined the stream to its edges,
And heard a low voice calling down through the night
Like the plash in the waves of the sedges.

"My plans seem entangled, my child, unto you,
Like the leaves o'er your head intertwining;
My laws are eternal, unchangeable, true,
Like myself, and they work my designing.

"I never have laid on my people a care,
Nor have left them alone in their sadness
Save I strengthened their shoulders to bravely bear,
And rewarded their sorrow with gladness."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"May our lights be always burning,
And our loins be girded round,
Waiting for our Lord's returning,
Longing for the welcome sound.
Thus the Christian life adorning,
Never need we be afraid,
Should he come at night or morning,
Early dawn or evening shade."

[THE following is a copy of a letter written to a friend by Sr. Phipps, shortly after her baptism, and will be found interesting to our readers.—ED.]

My Dear Sister:—I find you in error with regard to my church standing. You thought that after I withdrew from the Christian Church I united with the Methodists. Far from it. And now if I could have an all day talk with you instead of writing, how glad I would be; for I have something to tell you that will surprise you, and I have purposely refrained from writing it, thinking you would be here this winter, and I could talk it over so much better than to write it.

To begin with, I will tell you that I am a Latter Day Saint, to all intents and purposes; and that, though the very name is scoffed at and derided, though all manner of evil is said of us, yet I rejoice in the name, feeling that it is well pleasing to God. As you well know, I left the Christian Church because I had outgrown them spiritually. I felt and knew there was something more in the Christian religion than what I saw among them. Often when hearing them preach, after I had entered by faith into a higher spiritual life, I felt like saying, "Come up higher, brother; there is more for you than you ever dreamed of. You are living on too low a plane, and instead of lifting the church up, you are keeping them down with yourself." The time came when we had nothing in common. If I talked to the preacher on divine healing, he laughed at me, and said that was only in Christ and the apostles' day, and then preached two sermons to convince me of my error. I told him that it was folly to preach to me on that subject; that his arguments were too far fetched, while God's word was so plain and simple: that he only made me stronger.

We had a new preacher come. I talked with him the most of one day, and as I left him I asked myself, "What have I in common with the church?" I had talked and persuaded my sisters in prayer meetings to take a part, but to no effect. I had one man tell me I was the first woman he had ever heard pray in any Christian Church where he had ever lived. One of the elders often asked me to fill his place when called on to talk, saying he didn't know as he had anything to say. Well, I had got to that place where I always esteemed it, not a duty, but a great privilege to say something for my blessed Savior. How many times I went from my private prayer room to church, filled with love to God and man, but left the prayer meeting at its close, feeling such a weight and oppression, and even deadness, that only a lack of spiritual life could give me.

And so I went out from them because I was not of them. I had no definite plan in mind at that time. The Methodists seemed to have more spiritual life, and for a time I enjoyed myself with them. I think God had a purpose in keeping me from connecting myself with any church. During all this time I was reading some Latter Day Saint literature, and would advocate the gospel as taught in Mark, last chapter, and I Corinthians twelfth chapter, to Christian or Methodist. One day at the Methodist church I saw several young people sprinkled, also a baby. I went home feeling, "no Methodist Church for me."

My soul revolted, and I began to study and ask questions more than ever concerning the Saints. At last but one thing stood in my way; that was baptism. I had been immersed in good faith, and how could I repeat it? "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," often came to me when studying on the matter. Would it not be wrong for me to be rebaptized? Would it not be taking the name of God in vain? And I dare not do that, yet they would not accept me without it. Bro. A. Kent and wife were my friends to whom I went with many questions, and from whom I borrowed literature. One day I went more burdened than ever. I was willing to be baptized if it was right, but I could not feel justified in doing so. It seemed to me that they did not have half the interest in me that they ought. After he left the house, Sr. Kent and I still kept talking until I proposed that we pray over it. I had been weeping bitterly, and both crying together we besought the dear Father to lead me into the light; to show me plainly what to do. When I left she gave me a sermon,—I think it was by Bro. Luff,—saying perhaps that would help me. Well, it did. That night when the rest were in bed, I read the sermon, and the necessity for being again immersed was made so plain that I accepted its truths and made my decision. The next day I sent a note to Sr. Kent, telling her about it, and asking Bro. Kent to come over and make the arrangements, not thinking of the opposition I would meet.

When telling my husband, there was a positive refusal, but God kept me in perfect peace. I said but little in answer and did not mention it again till after some days he brought it up, saying he supposed I had decided whether to live with him, or go with the Mormons. I told him no; I had given it all to the Lord, and him with it, too. It was in God's hands, and he would attend to it. He talked more, but as I was so quiet, he soon stopped. It went on for a couple of months, when he told me he would withdraw his objections, and took me to church that day himself. I had in the meantime never mentioned the subject, but I am sure God's Spirit was at work with him to bring it about.

Now, we will look at it for a few moments. First, I had read for years all I could get hold of against the Saints, and was very much prejudiced, just as anyone is apt to be when reading but one side. But a few years ago I commenced to read the other side, and the more I read, the more I saw my mistake.

The Mormons, or Utah Church were very different from the Reorganized Church among us. Continuing to read and ask questions, and learn all I could, I became fully convinced that it was the church as set up in the days of Christ and the apostles. There is none other like it, and if Christ should come to the Christian Church or any of the others he would not find his church as organized eighteen hundred years ago. Go to the Scriptures, and you find none but the Latter Day Saints that fill the bill. As the Lord gave Moses a perfect pattern in the mount to work by, so Christ gave his disciples a perfect pattern for a church. To learn whether the churches of to-day are carrying out the principles of the gospel, read I Corinthians 12: 7-11. How many of these gifts are in the churches? Then read the twenty-eighth verse, to learn what he has set in the church. First, apostles; second, prophets; third, teachers; after that, miracles, gifts of healing, helps, governments, and diversities of tongues. Then read Mark 16:15, where he tells them to go into all the world and preach the gospel, etc. "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Now I would ask, if we accept Christ's doctrine that "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" as being continued until our day, what right have we to reject the balance and say it is not for us, too? "But," you would say, "these are not seen in the churches now." No; but what is the reason? Because they have all apostatized. They have done away with apostles, etc.; they rejected the gifts of the Spirit, and so the Lord has in a measure left them because he must have a willing people. But there is a people who are following the Lord, that have come back to the original standard, and who do receive from the Lord the gifts of the Spirit spoken of. You believe in divine healing. What right have you to separate it from the gift of tongues, etc.

You remember Paul thought he was doing God service when persecuting the church, and many to-day are repeating it toward the Saints. I was very careful to understand what I was about before going into the church. I remembered that I had been called changeable and crazy by some because I had taken higher ground spiritually than those in the Christian Church, so I wanted to be very sure that I was right before committing myself; and when I would think, They may be mistaken, there are so many churches nowadays, I would go to the Bible with it, where I found ample confirmation.

I reasoned thus: They teach just as the church did eighteen hundred years ago. They go just according to the word. God's word must be true, though every man a liar, so I can't be wrong in casting my lot with them. If I were not a Saint now, with my knowledge of the doctrine, I would certainly be an infidel.

Jesus said, "If any man shall do his will he shall know of the doctrine," and I do know so well that I would lay down my life, if necessary, rather than renounce it. It was only eight months ago that I united with the Saints, and am very much stronger than then, although my opportunities have been limited, as I have heard but four sermons since that day, my husband's health not permitting it. But we have prayer meetings that I attend occasionally, and how God does reveal himself to us in tongues and interpretations, and in revelations! I wish you could attend one of these meetings. God surely does meet with us, and when I leave the private room where our little meetings are held, I think, Not all the churches in the city have been blessed with God's presence as we have. The young people, boys and girls, pray as well as the older ones. I am so thankful every day that God has led me into the light and I am satisfied.

I have written you a long letter, and you, too, may be sorry that I have been led away by this people, but all I ask of you is to examine God's word, then you will know by comparing it with their writings that I am right. God is preparing a people for his coming, which is undoubtedly in the near future. Hoping you will examine for yourself, prove all things, and hold fast that which is good, I remain,

Your loving friend,

MRS. M. J. PHIPPS.

MOORHEAD, Iowa.

Dear Sisters:—As I sit and read the letters from the sisters I am filled with gladness and a desire to strive more earnestly to teach my little ones the way of truth and righteousness. I receive much good instruction through the Home Column.

I rejoice to see the cause moving forward. We have a nice branch at Moorhead, and it seems so good to meet there. Everyone seems interested in the work; the young especially take an active part in the prayer meeting. How I wish I had been brought up in this work! It seems easier for them to do good. I have been in the work six years. I was baptized by Bro. Putney, and I thank God for bringing me to see the true light. The church publications are a great blessing to me. It seems like I am acquainted with the sisters we read about so often. Ever praying for the advancement of the cause,

Your sister,

BOSTON, Massachusetts.

Dear Sisters:—I am no writer, so to speak, but I feel I would like to let you know how I enjoy the Home Column, and the letters about the children. I have had six children; one dear little boy has gone to rest beyond the trials of this life, and five others I strive to teach the things they ought to know, and I find it very perplexing sometimes. It is very helpful to me to be able to turn to one or another of the sisters' letters and see what their views are regarding different subjects. May they not get tired of giving advice to those who are not so capable.

Your sister in the gospel,

TUNCURRY, N. S. W., Feb. 13.

Editors Herald:—The general aspect of the work in this field is not at present as gratifying as might reasonably be desired or expected, chiefly owing to the fact that the requirements of the mission—which comprises a very extensive territory—are very inadequately provided for from a missionary point of view. It is simply impossible for the present number of missionaries engaged therein to practically observe but a small proportion of its demands; and it being a "field" which is fraught with many difficulties, the least of which, perhaps, is not the theological antagonism which has inevitably to be met—often from formidable sources—the need of additional men of experience and capability is obvious. Doubtless the Australian Saints have reason to be, and are, proud of the worthy pioneer who—under incalculable difficulties and hardship—bravely unfurled and established the gospel "standard" in this land. The names of Brn. Rodger, Gillen, and Burton, have become household words, and are held sacred in the hearts of those whose privilege it was to be more immediately acquainted with, and thus more fully appreciate the virtues of these noble men. Nor can we overlook the labors of more recent men, notably Brn. J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth, who were companions in the undertaking of this mission some seven years ago. To-day we see these then single young men, each with the added responsibility of fatherhood, while the broad Pacific separates them—the former having returned to the land of his nativity, and the latter remaining in that of his adoption.

Bro. Wight accomplished a good work in this mission, the extent of which cannot be fully estimated. He is just the stamp of man it requires, a fact which the Saints were not slow to appreciate, nor were they less oblivious to the loss this mission sustained by his departure.

After a few years' absence from this Colony, Bro. Butterworth paid us a visit from Victoria (where his home is) remaining here for three months (from October to January), during which time he, accompanied by Bro. Kaler, traversed the district, both preaching at every opportunity. To those who were previously acquainted with "Neilly" his visit was especially refreshing and the pleasure of which was intensified after sitting under the sound of his voice and realizing the marvelous preaching powers attained by him during his absence in our sister Colony. Full of gospel vim, jovial yet unassuming, he is an ideal missionary whom (to use a common aphorism) "to know is to love." The church might well be proud of such representatives not only in an individual sense, but for the fact that through their endearing influence and example the "work" generally is adorned and benefited. About twelve were added to the church under his hands during his brief stay here. Assuredly the declaration, "And, lo, I am with you alway," is exemplified in the character of such men. We contemplate with pleasure a future visit from this young brother.

Our annual conference, which was held in the vicinity of Sydney, passed off quietly. The Masonic hall, Balmain, was engaged for the occasion and very fair audiences attended the preaching services—thanks to the energy of Bro. Seaberg and others in circulating notices of the meetings. Brn. Broadway, Kaler, and Butterworth were the speakers, and considerable interest was apparent. Bro. Kaler remained in the neighborhood to continue preaching, and good results are anticipated. As usual, many of the Saints embraced the opportunity conferences afford, to meet familiar and welcome faces which time and distance had widely separated, and a pleasant reunion was had. Three were baptized and confirmed during the session. Thus our enrollment gradually swells while on the other hand the counter-agency of death occasionally reduces our numbers. This district—Forster, which up to the present time represents the whole of New South Wales—comprises five branches which have an aggregate membership of two hundred and twenty, in addition to which there are forty-eight "scattered" members. A fairly healthy condition seems prevalent.

With deep regret I record the painful and sudden death of Sr. W. Taylor, of this village. It occurred on the 25th of November last, after an illness of three days. A sorrowing husband and nine young children are left to mourn their sad bereavement. But verily this was "the death of the righteous," for she was a devoted and exemplary mother and faithful Saint. Her decease has left a conspicuous blank in our meetings, which is keenly felt by the Saints. Also the youngest child of Bro. and Sr. Magennis which was four years old, died on the 7th ult., after a week's sickness. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away.

Amongst the glad tidings borne to us through the Herald columns we hail with pleasure that of the brightening outlook of the church generally and the hastening progress of the gospel chariot in "Joseph's" land. Evidently the "set time to favor" "Zion" has arrived and the revelation of last year to the church is being practically confirmed. We await with patience and hope the time when the way will be opened for the conveyance and acceptance of the gospel message in this land, in a measure commensurate with the magnitude of its claims and resources. Unfortunately it has for a few years past been suffering from a severe commercial depression, as a result of which the finances of the mission have fallen off considerably, a fact which does not assist the dissemination of the "word;" for traveling expenses alone are a very material item in this part of the country, to say nothing of other necessary considerations which depend upon the "wherewithal." We however look hopefully for that "silver lining" which is said to ultimately develop even on the "darkest cloud," both for the work's sake and the good of the country generally.

Trusting you will bear with me for any undue trespass I may have made upon your resources, and with best wishes for the speedy triumph of this latter-day "marvel,"

Yours in the faith,

C. S. McLAREN.

SYDNEY, Australia, Feb. 14.

Editors Herald:—Since writing a month ago I have continued preaching here to some attentive listeners with excellent liberty. Last Sunday I baptized three, and others are near obedience. I believe a good work will be accomplished here in the future if the Saints live humble and faithful. I don't look for any great "revivals," but the honest in heart will come in by ones and twos. Much rain of late, and great destruction by floods.

My address is Tuncurry, New South Wales, Australia. Hopefully,

Editors Herald:—I received the Book of Mormon in due time and in good condition. Have read some of it and I consider it a very good book. I have not found anything unreasonable in it, nor anything contradictory to the Holy Bible. I have never seen a copy of it before but had always heard it condemned; however, I never condemn anything which I know nothing about.

AFTON, I. T., March 4.

Editors Herald:—In February, 1894, I went to Union schoolhouse to hold a meeting. I was a licentiate in the Baptist Church. I went to visit Bro. W. N. Stuart's family who are Latter Day Saints, and Bro. Stuart gave me the Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants to read. I read them. I tried to lay aside all prejudice and went to God in prayer for light and asked him to reveal to me the truth; and, thanks be to God, he heard my prayer and I received a revelation that it was the Church of Jesus Christ, and to go and join it; and I obeyed. I am a member of the Angola branch in Labette county, Kansas. I am trying to keep all the commandments of God and the church. I have prayed to God to send an elder here. I will still pray for the spread of the truth, and if any of the elders come this way, I am at Mr. W. H. Hall's, four miles west of Afton. Come and see me.

Yours for the truth,

CHARLES H. FREEMAN.

PEORIA, Ill., Nov. 12.

Editors Herald:—The inclosed advertisement is a straw that indicates the direction of one spiritual wind. We attended the services of the man therein advertised—Rev. Dr. Burk, of the Church of the Twelve Apostles. He entertained (?) us about three quarters of an hour with the strangest mixture that I ever had the (dis)pleasure of listening to. Some good moral talk was interspersed with a great deal of boasting of his wondrous cures; and some immoral talk was expressed in the slang of the alleys; and with it all was the modern exhortation "to come to Jesus." The remarkable part of the service came at the last, when in rapid succession about fifteen people testified to being healed or relieved of as many different diseases, some as serious as blindness. The cures appear genuine; the people testifying seem intelligent and honest. Behind his stand Mr. Burk has a sign reading, "Rev. Dr. R. Burk, the Evangelist, cures all diseases," and a few crutches, etc., taken from people cured, hang on the wall. His handbills are headed, "Church of the Twelve Apostles." When I asked him where they were, he said "the twelve of the New Testament." I asked him what of the other six or more of the New Testament, but he seemed ignorant of their existence.

The doctrine of the man, his manner, and all connected with him, save a few minor details, are out of harmony with the Scriptures; but because he offers a temporal benefit with the name of Christ posted upon it, he finds many followers. He is but one of a large class of those showing "great signs and wonders to deceive." Surely these are the latter days.

Some time ago we saw in the store windows announcing, "Grand Opera House, March 2. The overthrow of Mormonism, by W. H. Hedrick, son of a prophet and President of the Mormon Church." The night of March 2 came and we went to the opera house to find it closed and learn from the ticket agent that the seventy-five dollars necessary to open the doors had not been forthcoming, not one ticket having been sold. So you see how Peoria is interested in "Mormonism." Later we found Mr. Hedrick (a son of Granville Hedrick) who claimed to know a great deal about Mormonism, but nothing new. He had been identified with his father's faction, but had departed from that faith. He regretted his inability to get an audience on account, as he thought, of the hard times! We invited him to attend our services next day, but he "knew our doctrine" and would leave town the next morning, early. As he had spent about twenty-five dollars advertising, I suppose he went home, not so happy as when he came, but much more wise.

Last Saturday night and Sunday I was at Orange Prairie, where some are anxious for the truth, and preached three times to attentive listeners. Sr. Epperson and her two daughters are telling the people of the gospel there, "warning their neighbors" according to scripture.

Editors Herald:—Our work in this district is still onward. We have put in full time, preaching nearly every night for some time past with good audiences, at Glenwood, Egypt, Bartlett, and Elm Creek. At Egypt we baptized three and were ably assisted by Elder Samuel Orton. Called here to attend to the funeral of our much esteemed and beloved sister Griffith, yesterday; preached twice in the church.

To-morrow we start for Hamburg for a few nights, thence to Plum Hollow for the latter part of the week and Sunday next.

OAKLAND CITY, Ind., March 15.

Editors Herald:—This has been a year of incessant labor for me, and nearly altogether in new fields. Commencing just one year ago, in Sullivan county, with the Denney-Daniel debate, we had a hot contest, as Bro. M. T. Short told you in his letter soon after the contest; and, of course, one contest called for another, and in August following the Short-Perkins debate commenced in Rose-dale, and M. T. was assisted by the writer as best I could. Immediately after the close of that discussion I was again challenged by Mr. Williams, of the Campbellite faith, which contest came off in September at Shelburn, Sullivan county.

That being ended, accompanied by my companion—M. T.—we went to the conference at Byrneville, Indiana, where we met many of the Saints and elders and had a time long to be remembered, the gifts being had copiously by Sr. Scott and others. I then returned to the bedside of Bro. J. T. King and remained until his spirit took its flight into the paradise of God. I then returned home in November, where I labored in three different places during the winter until February 5. I then started to the conference with the Hope branch, in Perry county, Indiana. I went by the way of Daviess county, where I preached once, then on to this place—Oakland City—where I was hindered by missing connection with the train—providentially however; for I formed the acquaintance of Bro. and Sr. Edwards, of this city.

Boarding the train who should I meet but the missionary in charge, I. P. Baggerly. We traveled together until we reached the conference, and maybe we didn't have a time! We arrived at Boston, Indiana, at four in the morning and awoke Bro. and Sr. Robinson. The good Saints soon had a nice repast ready, and after indulging freely we walked out, and, lo and behold, the snow was a little less than twelve inches in depth, and we with a trip of thirty miles over the hills of Perry county and no conveyance but shank's filley! The wind was blowing and things looked blue indeed. Presently we looked, and behold, a mule team going south, which we hailed and rode a few miles, then walked to Marietta, where we preached to a few young folks, it being too bad for anyone else to come out. Then we walked two miles up the hill to Bro. Maman's, who took good care of us until morning, when his son took a horse, and tied our grips together, threw them across his back, and started through the worst blizzard Southern Indiana ever knew. We traveled until about two p. m. when we reached Bro. Sadridge's place, where the writer filled up with the good food set out by those good Saints. The missionary in charge being overcome with fatigue, we left him and pressed on to the place of conference to the surprise of all, they not looking for a soul.

The conference passed off quietly. After it, accompanied by Bro. Charles Barmore, I went west five miles and preached at the Hyde schoolhouse; then south eight miles to Rome, where we preached three times; thence north to Derby, where we joined Brn. Baggerly and Barmore; then back to the place of conference, where I preached once; thence west to the Lilly Dale branch in company with Brn. A. C. and C. Barmore, where we spent a few days; then the boys went home for a few days, and I on to Oakland City, where I commenced meetings, which have resulted in much good. This city is stirred to its center. I reckon there has been more Bible reading done in the last three weeks than in three years before in Oakland.

After we had preached about a week, and six had been baptized, and many more investigating, the Christians of this town began persecution by first closing the doors against us and encouraging some of the baser sort to violence. We got the Red Man's hall, commenced there last Monday evening, and on Tuesday evening just as the first song was being sung we were shocked by hearing the window glass rattle all around us. The congregation starting to leave the hall, I stopped singing long enough to call them to order, which was done easily, then we sang as if nothing had been done. I then opened the meeting with prayer, when Bro. A. C. Barmore preached a rousing sermon, which he is able to do by the aid of the good Spirit. Many more will obey soon, but I think not at this meeting.

The stones did not miss our heads over twelve inches and fell against the wall on the other side of the hall and burst open. If they had struck us they would have damaged us badly. The good people of this town are opposed to that kind of treatment and many are our friends. We will continue over next Sabbath, then Bro. A. C. Barmore will go west, and I north. The missionary in charge, Bro. I. P. Baggerly, will be here to look after an organization in the near future, there being seven other Saints near enough to hold membership here. One of those I baptized was a local preacher of the Baptist Church, and his wife.

Hoping the good Lord will continue his well-begun work in Oakland City, and all over this district, and bless all the laborers in their respective fields, and be with the conference at Independence, and give all a good time, I close, with love to all.

Respectfully,

L. F. DANIEL.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 7.

Editors Herald:—I arrived home February 1 from Montana and Idaho, and on the 3d attended services. It being sacrament day, only the Saints were out, and not all of them. At night there was a goodly number out to hear Bro. H. O. Smith. I spent the following week in the city after an absence of eight months. On Sunday the 10th I spoke to the few Saints at eleven a. m. and Bro. Smith continued his subject, "Why I am a Josephite" at night. A fair audience heard what he had to say.

On February 15 I meet with a few of the Saints at Bro. John Woods' house in Sandy. The object was to reorganize or more fully organize the Union branch. Since the death of Bro. W. P. Smith, at Union Fort, they have been without a presiding elder. But the weather was unfavorable; a deep fall of snow the evening before prevented the people from coming out. On the 17th I returned again to Sandy and had the pleasure of talking to about all the Saints of the branch living within a reasonable distance. Bro. John Woods was chosen as presiding elder and Sr. Woods secretary; Bro. Phillip Stone resigned. We had a pleasant time together. It was a pleasure to meet those who were good to me in 1873 when I tried to preach the gospel to them. I don't know that age has made me better, but I felt glad to see the same, dear good Saints standing just as firm in the faith now as they were then.

Monday, the 18th, I boarded the train for Pleasant Grove. On my arrival there I met with kind and dear friends to me. Bro. H. N. Hansen was there and had preached the first sermon the day before in the neat little brick church, an honor that was reserved for the writer of this, but a previous appointment at Sandy prevented. I was glad Bro. Hansen had the privilege to thus occupy. He had baptized a sister the day before, and she was confirmed in the church—an omen for good, we hope. I occupied the next night, and was to hold forth the next night, but Bro. H. O. Smith wired me that Father Ransom had passed away, and to come to the city if possible. I left Bro. Hansen to continue the services there. On my arrival I found that Bro. Smith had everything nicely arranged for the funeral for the next day at one o'clock. I preached the sermon and Father Ransom was laid to rest by the side of his first wife. His friends expressed themselves as well pleased with the treatment he had received at our hands.

By request of Bro. H. B. Sterrett, president of the Pleasant Grove branch, I returned there on the 22d. Bro. Hansen baptized four, and at the house of Bro. Henry Radmal we confirmed them. The good Spirit was with us to cheer, after which a goodly number partook of the bounties prepared by the good housewife, reminding us of the early days in Western Iowa. At night I preached to a fair audience, and the next day Bro. Hansen went to Provo. I remained, holding the fort until the next Monday, when Bro. H. O. Smith arrived on the battle field. Bro. H. B. Sterrett had rented an organ for the occasion, and in large letters advertised him as a lecturer and singer; that is, he was to lecture on the reason "Why I am a Josephite," and was to sing hymns composed by David Smith. He was greeted at night with a goodly turnout, and delivered four good, logical discourses. Really, on succession, each night his congregation increased. On the evening of March 1 he left for the city. All the time during the meetings the roads were dreadful; snow, slush, and mud. I spoke that night to a splendid turnout, and the next night just before the meeting time a strong wind sprang up from the north and rapidly increased until it made us think a regular blizzard was upon us. Fourteen good sturdy souls heard what the preacher had to say, while some started but had to return home. After meeting we returned to Sr. Sterrett's and by the time we got comfortably settled down the wind ceased, and all was calm and serene, and then we wondered if the prince did have somewhat to do with it. It happens that way sometimes. On Sunday we partook of the sacrament with the Saints and preached at night.

I intended to leave for the city the next evening, but the sisters began to insist on my remaining over until Tuesday. They all seemed to be wonderfully interested in the matter. Bro. Hansen was coming from Provo on Monday evening, and I must stay. I began to wonder how it was they had never gathered around me that way before; in fact, they were too many for me, and I capitulated after Bro. Will Sterrett told me the sisters were determined to make me stay. I saw that it was no use to make excuses or plead business. I told them to command me. Bro. Hansen arrived on the evening train and we talked over the propriety of an attack on Lehi, as an opera house could be procured there three nights for ten dollars; but where and how to procure the ducats was not clear. Sr. Sterrett insisted that we should remain over Tuesday and take the evening train for that place, and so we rested. I told Bro. Hansen that I expected there would be a kind of jubilee, or love feast, or something happen at Sr. Sterrett's that night; but nothing occurred to disturb, and so we spent the evening with the family. Next morning I asked Bro. Sterrett if he couldn't take us over to Lehi, and he said he guessed he could. He had a bandana twisted around his neck and said his throat was sore. It happened just at the right time. His mother said he could not go, but he said he guessed he could take us, and so the time passed on. Hosea hitched up and without letting us know, he went away, and about one o'clock he returned and was ready to take us; but instead of to Lehi he drove around to the church, and there was a grand, a regular feast prepared. I confessed to the surprise, for I had not counted on that part. It would be useless for me to undertake to describe the affair. It was just grand. All were happy, joyful, and glad, and the best of order prevailed; and I was glad the sisters captured me. The two pilgrims were made very happy indeed. Our mind was carried back to 1873, when I first met Sr. Sterrett and family, when it was impossible to get a house to preach in and herself and family were hedged in. Her faith, and that of the writer, and her family, was that God would direct and give strength until we should not only be permitted to see the dawning of a brighter day, but also be partakers of the fruits of the labor done. Something over thirty grown people, besides the children, partook of the feast in a neat, substantial little brick church under the most pleasant and favorable circumstances. In a few words we reviewed the situation, past and present. Bro. Hansen also in a few fitting remarks referred to the situation and what honest toil and labor had wrought. We just had time to say good-bye and board the train for the city, and Bro. Hansen for Lehi.

I forgot to say that at the close of the remarks the president of the branch got exceeding religious, picked up a hat, and quietly passed it around, and although the building of the house had been a tax that few would care to bear, they cast sufficient into the hat to send the missionaries on their ways rejoicing. I wished in my heart that I could do something to lighten the burden of that little band of devoted Saints. All we can do is to invoke the blessings of our heavenly Father upon them. The house is to be plastered and painted yet. May the Lord bless them abundantly and all who have in any way aided them in their work.

Yours for Zion's weal.

THE COMMA LACKING.—The omission of punctuation sometimes leads to blunders in signs that are as startling to the public as they must be mortifying to the victims. Thus, in Paxton, Illinois, a sign reads, "A Sample Lawyer." Doubtless the painter was instructed to print it "A. Sample, Lawyer;" but he missed the "point." So in a North Carolina town a similar omission resulted in this legend outside an office door: "A Green Insurance Agent."

SERMON BY ELDER G. T. GRIFFITHS,

At Llanelly, South Wales, August 18, 1892.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

I SOLICIT your attention to the twenty-second chapter of Matthew, beginning at the forty-first verse:—

While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them, saying, What think ye of Christ? whose son is he?

The clause I wish to call your attention to particularly is in the forty-second verse; namely:—

What think ye of Christ?

A very important question, and when we take into consideration the fact that it was propounded by the Lord and Savior, we should feel concerned to that extent that we would be willing to ascertain for ourselves who he was. What think ye of Christ? The Savior who put this question was aware that the people of that period were divided and subdivided in their opinions as to who he was. We ask the question, to-night, Who was he?

I have heard individuals say that he was God, the eternal Father, and that while he was here on earth, as a matter of course, he was absent from the heavens; that the spirit that dwelt in the body was the eternal God; and that the tabernacle or the body was called Christ. Is this statement true when contrasted with God's truth as we find it in the Scriptures, which I hope we all believe?

If it be a fact that God and Christ are one, in the sense that we are taught by many to believe, we ask for evidence in support of the doctrine. They answer by quoting a portion of the prayer that Jesus offered to his Father, a short time prior to his departure, wherein he said:—

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word: that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—John 17: 20, 21.

The passage I have just quoted does not prove that God, the eternal Father and Christ are one person; because it is stated therein that all those who believe on the words of the apostles shall be made one in God and Christ. Now, in what sense are they one? for in whatever sense they are one, in the same sense, will all the disciples be one in God and Christ. We could not be persuaded to believe that all those who have become disciples of Christ are going to lose their individuality at death because it is written that Many [all the believers] shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 8: 11.

Not in God and Christ. Then we see that the noted worthies named retained their individuality.

John, the apostle, says that God, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one; one in the sense that they are coequal in power, love, and glory. The promise is recorded that the children of God shall become heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Now, I want to prove that Jesus Christ pre-existed, or, in other words, co-existed with God, the Father. In support of this assertion I shall call your attention to a number of passages of Scripture. It is evident that all that has been written by holy men of God, and from the Savior's own teaching, that he pre-existed or co-existed with the eternal Father. In John 1: 1-3 I. T. it is written:—

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made.

Here an emphatic statement is made that the Son, or Jesus Christ, co-existed with the Father in the beginning, long before this world was made; and that when this world was made Jesus Christ had something to do with the making of it. Referring to the same grand character the Apostle Paul corroborates the statement of John as follows:—

For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are on earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist.—Col. 1: 16, 17.

And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginnings of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ.—Eph. 3: 9.

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the world.—Heb. 1: 2.

We glean from what we read in the third chapter of Genesis, Inspired Translation (and this passage alone should convince all true Latter Day Saints), that Christ has always existed as a separate being from the Father:—

And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, that Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten is the same who was from the beginning; and he came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever.

There are three persons named in this passage; First, God the eternal Father; second, the Son; and third, Satan; and each of the three are separate and distinct from the others. Hence it is that the Son, who volunteered his service in behalf of fallen humanity, took upon him a body which the Father had prepared for him; for it is written,

Wherefore, when he [Christ] cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me.—Heb. 10: 5.

Again it is said,

God was manifest in the flesh.—1 Tim. 3: 16.

This God who was made manifest in the flesh was the Jehovah of the old Bible. It is apparent that this same being was the person to whom God, the Father, said,

Let us [plural] make man in our [plural] image.

It was by these two grand personages that man was brought into existence.

In Genesis 3 it is related how the man and the woman had disobeyed God. Adam by and by answered to the call, "Where art thou?" and told the Lord the circumstances of the case—that the woman whom the Lord had given him had eaten of the forbidden fruit, and that she had handed it to him, and that he had partaken also. Now said God, Behold, the man is become as one of us [plural], etc.

They not only created man, but both together drove the man out of the garden of Eden.

In 1 Corinthians 10: 4 it is written, And did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ.

How in the name of good reason could the children of Israel drink of the spiritual Rock if Jesus, the Son of God or the Christ, had no existence until he came in the flesh? Paul makes the positive assertion that Christ followed the people of Israel in their sojourn in the wilderness. No doubt this is the being that Moses communed with from time to time, and the one who wrote the ten commandments. Yes, the one who was seen upon Mount Sinai by Moses and was seen by many others, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel.

The great King Nebuchadnezzar saw the Son of God walking in the fire.

Lo, I see, four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God.—Dan. 3: 25.

I presume all Bible students are acquainted with the circumstances that actuated the king to issue such an unholy decree affecting three of God's beliving children.

In John 8: 53-58 is narrated a conversation between Christ and the Jews. They said unto him, Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makest thou thyself? Jesus answered, . . . Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad. Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham? Jesus said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.

Here Christ gave the Jews to distinctly understand that he had existed ere he was tabernacled in the flesh, and that Abraham had seen him in his day. To prove to you that Jesus spoke the truth I will read to you the first verse in the seventeenth chapter of Genesis:—

And when Abraham was ninety years old and nine, the Lord appeared to Abraham, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.

He also appeared unto Jacob.

And God appeared unto Jacob again, when he came out of Padan-aram, and blessed him.—Gen. 35: 9.

I have seen God face to face.—Gen. 32: 30.

I desire to adduce one more proof on this point, which I think ought to substantiate the doctrine of the pre-existence of Christ.

And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.—John 17: 5.

Here Christ communicates the fact that he had existed in the spirit world, and that he had glory before this world of ours was made.

Eusebius speaks of the pre-existence of Christ in the following manner:—

No language, then, is sufficient to express the origin, the divinity, even the substance and nature of Christ. Whence even the divine Spirit in the prophecies says, "Who will declare his generation?" For as no one hath known the Father, but the Son, so no one, on the other hand, can know the Son fully, but the Father alone, by whom he was begotten. For who but the Father hath thoroughly understood that Light which existed before the world was—that intellectual and substantial wisdom, and that living word which in the beginning was with the Father, before all creation and any production visible or invisible, the first and only offspring of God, the prince and leader of the spiritual and immortal host of heaven, the angel of the mighty council, the agent to execute the Father's secret will, the maker of all things with the Father, the second cause of the universe next to the Father, the true and only Son of the Father, and the Lord and God and King of all created things, who has received power and dominion with divinity itself, and power and honor from the Father.—Eecl. Hist., Book 1, Chap. 2.

Now, I am going to prove that Jesus himself taught the people that he and the Father were two distinct and separate persons, and I will then prove that the apostle taught the same doctrine. In John 17: 3, Jesus says,

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou has sent.

Where was Jesus at the time he offered this prayer? Why, here on earth. Where was his Father? In heaven. "Well," says one, "how do you know?" Because, as you recollect, Jesus taught his disciples to pray after this manner:—

Our Father which art in heaven.

Then, according to the statement made by Jesus Christ, we conclude that the Father was in heaven. Now, if he was the eternal Father himself, tabernacled in the flesh, why did he not teach his disciples to pray, "Our Father which art on earth in the flesh?" In teaching them to pray he conveyed an idea to them that he whom they should address in his name was the Father, and that he was in the heavens, and that he in whose name they were to ask for power, and wisdom, and light, and strength, by which they would be guided here on earth, was present with them; and the language which I have quoted conveys the same idea:—

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God.

That was his Father; and it was of equal importance and quite as essential that they should know him (Jesus Christ) whom he had sent into the world; the Father in heaven, and Jesus in the world. Now, is that not plain language? And yet men will teach that God and Christ are one—one great Spirit, filling earth, heaven, and all space.

We now will go a little further. You remember what is said in John 20: 17. Jesus at this time had been crucified, buried, and had arisen. A woman, Mary by name, was interested in him, and went to the tomb to look for him. He appeared unto her, and when she saw him she was very much delighted, and went to embrace him; but he said, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father.

My Father! what do you mean? I thought you were the Father all the time. That would be a correct conclusion if the doctrine taught by many be true. Here we have Christ's body in the tomb and resurrected—come to life again; and now having been resurrected he says, "Touch me not." Why? "For I am not yet ascended unto my Father." I have not been to my Father, but I am going. Go and communicate to the brethren the fact that I am going to ascend to my Father, and your Father, to my God and your God. So you see he had a God.

Again in Mark 14: 34-36,

And saith unto them, My soul is exceedingly sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here and watch. And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt.

What is here implied? That, if there was no Father, or God in existence besides the one who uttered this language in the prayer that he offered in the Garden of Gethsemane where he had taken three of his apostles to watch and pray while he went to another place to pray, Jesus was a deceiver. And is it possible for us to believe that this man, Jesus, whom we have been taught from our infancy to look upon us as an innocent, truthful character, should deceive his apostles in that manner? I cannot believe that our blessed Lord would be guilty of such deception, and make a pretense of addressing some one who had no existence at all. The idea is preposterous that Christ would say, "Abba, Father, not my will, but thine be done," if he were not addressing a power higher, greater, and superior to himself. He calls him Father, the same as he did when speaking to Mary.

You remember that once upon a time he put the question that is propounded in my text to the unbelievers who had gathered around him, I presume out of curiosity, and led thither by various notions, Matthew 22: 42. And now he said to his apostles, knowing they had heard the different opinions expressed by the people relative to himself, Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

Having heard from the apostles what the people thought and how they were divided as to who he was, he puts the question direct to the apostles,

But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered, and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

Did he say the Father was then talking to them; that he was the Father? and there was no other Father besides him? That is what he would have said if he were both the eternal Father and Christ; and I am sorry to say that some Latter Day Saints in places, Wales included, are a little in the dark with regard to this all-important question. Some have gone so far as to make the statement that Christ was the eternal Father because of a passage in the Book of Mormon which says that Jesus "is the very eternal Father." What did he say to Peter?

Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 16: 17.

That should be conclusive proof.

I call your attention to another incident. Now, as it is said by some that God, the Father, was the Spirit that was in the body, and that the body was Christ, we will draw a comparison and ascertain whether that theory is correct or not. This man, Jesus, of whom we are speaking, went to John the Baptist and demanded baptism. John did not accede at once, but after some persuasion he was prevailed upon to grant the request; and the record says that he went down to the river Jordan and baptized him, and that when he came up out of the water the Holy Ghost descended in the form of a dove, and a voice was heard to say, "This is my beloved Son." Now, here we have Christ, which was the body, in the water, and God the eternal Father, which was the spirit in the body; so that John not only baptized Christ, but the eternal Father too! What do you think of it? This is what the theory leads to; John was wonderfully honored in baptizing both Christ and the eternal Father.

Let us look at it from another standpoint. The body, which they call Christ, is one, and the Spirit in the body, which they call the eternal Father is, two, and the Holy Ghost which descended is three, and the voice in the heavens, that the word declares was the Father's, makes four in the Godhead and the Bible only claims three! Or, will they have us believe that Christ was ventriloquizing all the time, throwing his voice up to heaven, and making believe there was a Father there? We cannot believe such a doctrine as that. No!

Jesus went to John and demanded baptism. He was the one to whom the Holy Ghost bore witness; likewise the Father bearing witness to the Son said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased"—the three bearing witness of one another, thus proving they are separate and distinct too. Stephen, when being stoned to death, bore testimony that he saw the heavens open and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of the Father in glory. I want to give you a few more quotations before I get through with this point:—

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.—John 3: 17, 18.

While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the Scripture might be fulfilled. And now I come to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.—John 17: 12, 13.

Here he is on the earth. And again he says in John 8: 42:—

If God were your Father, ye would love me; for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me.

(See also John 16: 27-31; 12: 47-50; Matt. 27: 46.)

You remember that when Jesus was on the cross, just before he expired he made use of this expression,

Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit;—

and it is written, that shortly after giving expression to these words he "gave up the ghost." Where do you suppose his ghost or spirit—which are synonymous terms—went? According to his statement, it went into his Father's hands. Jesus Christ was human and divine; he displayed both human nature and the divine character during his sojourn among men. I read an incident that demonstrates this fact:—

And when he was entered into a ship, his disciples followed him. And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep. And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us: we perish.—Matt. 18: 23-27.

Now, here we find him asleep. You and I oftentimes become sleepy during the day. He was tired, and took what we call a nap, and while he was sleeping there arose a tempest, and the waves rolled, and the winds blew furiously, and the disciples supposing they were going down to a watery grave rushed forward and said, "Lord, save us: we perish;" and whilst he was like his disciples in some respects, yet they knew he was superior to them; hence they appealed to him in their great distress, and he who had the divine or God-power in him commanded the waves and the tempest to be still. And when the disciples saw what wonders had been wrought by his command they cried out,

What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!

Here the human nature was made manifest and his divine power demonstrated to the joy and consolation of his disciples; and he proved to them that he was both God and man.

In John 11: 20 we read:—

Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him, etc.

News had come to Jesus that Lazarus was dead. He told his disciples, "Lazarus sleepeth," meaning, of course, that he was dead; and when Martha heard that Jesus was coming she met him, and told him that her brother was dead, and said:—

Even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee. Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again.

Yes, I know, says Martha, at the last day.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me . . . shall never die. Believeth thou this?

She answered, "Yea, Lord." And when he saw Mary weeping he groaned in the spirit, and was troubled, and said, Where have ye laid him? They say unto him, Lord, come and see.

And when he went to the grave with the weeping sisters and saw the Jews who had come to express their sorrow and grief, the human nature in Jesus manifested itself, because he wept with those who wept; he sympathized with them in their great sorrow, and turning to them said,

Take ye away the stone.

What was he going to do? He was going to raise Lazarus. But he had been dead four days and by that time his flesh was corrupt. Why, did they not believe that Christ was the resurrection? Yes, they believed that. Did they not believe he could raise him up? Yes, that he could and would in the resurrection day, but not then. "Take ye away the stone," he said, and in a loud voice he called to the sleeping dead, "Lazarus, come forth." To their amazement and great surprise they saw the brother that had been dead for so long a period as four days come forth. It was the God-power that brought Lazarus from the tomb.

In the first place he sorrows with them that sorrow and weeps with them that weep, in the second place the God-power is displayed. We read of him that he went away by himself to pray and plead for power, for strength, and for wisdom that he might be able to carry out the work that had been assigned him; and he had been away on such a mission just before the incident which we read of in Matthew 14: 26-22 took place. The record says that the disciples were in a ship crossing the lake, and to their astonishment they saw somebody walking on the water. Here his disciples showed the weakness of human nature, and cried out for fear as they beheld somebody on the water; and asked among themselves what it was. It seemed impossible that it could be the one they had seen and known, the one raised up with them from their childhood! Surely it could not be the carpenter's son! No man could walk on the water! It was to them "a spirit," and they cried out with fear. They could not believe it was Jesus, he with whom they had been brought up from their boyhood days. Who was it? It was to them a spirit, and came straight to them; but presently he said, "It is I;" it was the one they had always been acquainted with. Peter thought he could go to him and away he started, but presently began to sink, and then he appealed to this one to save him and assist him, and Jesus reached out his hand and bore him safely up. Now, why could not Peter do it? If Christ was but human why could not Peter walk on the face of the water? Jesus walked and it was his God-power that enabled him to walk—on the face of the deep. Here we have displayed both the human and divine. He alone had both.

Now, he has gone, he has finished his work here for the time being. Where is he now? What is he doing? Well, I feel like uniting in the sentiment of the poet wherein he says that we have a Savior who is pleading in glory. Paul tells us that Jesus ascended to his Father and that he is seated at his right hand in power, in majesty, and glory; that he is our advocate with the Father, interceding and pleading for his people. So he has not completed his work yet, but is still working in the interest of humanity; and I am glad of it, because sometimes I feel very weak and despondent by reason of the difficulties and disappointments I meet in this life. Then I think of what Jesus said, and enter into my secret closet to make all my wants known to the Lord; and when I remember the manner in which Jesus prayed, it is consoling to me to know that I have one pleading for me who has passed through all my experiences and more. And when I pray for wisdom, and light, and strength, I realize his promise, that whatsoever we ask in his name believing, God will grant; and I am glad when I realize that he in whose name I plead with the Father was once a man of like passions as myself, and that he knows of the struggles I have with the world and all that is likely to make shipwreck of my faith. Knowing this he pleads unto the Father, to be with the weak. Why? Because he has been here upon earth and tempted and had to withstand Satan himself. Yes, he had to meet him here face to face, and knows what evil there is in the world. He knows what human weakness is. He conquered, and now pleads with the Father for all who are weak; and I am glad that I have such a good, loving Savior who knows of the weaknesses of humanity, and who bears and forbears with us, and asks God to bear with us too.

Is not that grand? And when I get discouraged I have faith that he is pleading for me; that he proposes to keep on pleading for his people until he accomplishes this work; that he is willing to redeem all those who are willing to obey the gospel, the means of salvation; and that his work will not be done until he shall descend with the shout of the archangel, coming with all the dead that have died in him that they shall reign with him a thousand years; that in the meantime he will preach to, teach, and counsel them that he may make them perfect as he is perfect; and that when he has made them perfect and holy he will take them to his Father and deliver up the kingdom to him. May the Lord give us strength to continue.

What think ye of Christ? I will tell you. He was the grandest, best, and noblest character that ever graced God's footstool; and we should trust him, lean upon him, and keep his commandments; for if we love him we will keep his commandments; and if we obey him we shall dwell with him forever. He will be our King and Lord when he sways his scepter over all the earth. May his peace and blessing abide with us now and forever. Amen.

DIDN'T MIND CONVERTS.—There is one delightful anecdote touching the King of Ava's reply to the request of an American missionary for leave to try to make converts among the King's subjects. The King told Dr. Prince that he granted his request, and that he might preach his religion, but whenever his subjects were converted by it he should cut off their heads and send them at once into the paradise of which the Doctor had told them.—The Athenæum.

THE WAR AT EL DORADO SPRINGS.

SECOND PROPOSITION.

Mr. Braden affirms his church to be in harmony with the Bible, in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice. He starts out with a very large roll of manuscript, reading his piece like a schoolboy, until "as long as Braden's manuscript," became a byword with the boys in town.

Said Mr. Braden: "We agree on many points of doctrine, so we will not debate the things upon which we are agreed. We believe in water baptism, so do the Latter Day Saints; we both believe in faith and repentance; we both have elders and deacons in our church; so we won't need to debate these questions.

"We are agreed upon nothing," said Elder White. "I challenge your whole system, water baptism and all. I dare you to undertake to prove that you believe in baptism for remission of sins as taught in the Bible. You have nothing in harmony with the Bible, and I demand the proof."

Strange as it may seem, Mr. Braden did not attempt an answer to the above challenge, and we are inclined to think if he had tried to defend his baptism he would have discovered that there were even some things about that in which the Christian Church and Latter Day Saints were not agreed.

Elder White mildly called the attention of the audience to the fact that Mr. Braden had virtually acknowledged the Latter Day Saints Church to be in harmony with the one established by Christ and the apostles; for he (Braden) had started out to compare his church with the Latter Day Saints Church instead of going to the Bible for such a comparison.

It was plainly apparent that Mr. Braden wanted to leave the subject as soon as possible and bring in the Latter Day Saints Church for examination. He feared, no doubt, that a point of order would be raised at this juncture so he advanced very cautiously. He contented himself by simply telling us in his first speech, that the Latter Day Saints were out in the woods in a little shanty, and that he intended to shell them out of the same before the debate was over. He invited all other churches to join him in his crusade on Mormonism, saying, "We will settle our little differences later on."

Here Elder White read from the Christian Evangelist showing the attitude of the Christian Church toward other churches, as voiced by their own ministers through said paper.

This quotation had its effect, and it could be noticed throughout the debate. The tide was rapidly turning against Mr. Braden, and ere the close very few sympathizers could be found outside of his own church.

Many in the audience criticised the moderators for not calling Mr. Braden to order in his effort to leave the question and drag in the Latter Day Saints Church, but later on they could see why the moderators had kept silent and let him have plenty of rope.

Mr. Braden insisted that the church was properly compared to a building and the apostles and prophets were the scaffolding; that when the building was completed the scaffolding was removed. His attention was called to 1 Corinthians 12: 28, "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets," etc. They were in the church, consequently a part of the church, and if there was any scaffold to remove, it was not apostles and prophets, for they were a part of the building itself, the very "foundation," referred to as "lively stones," in Ephesians 2: 21, 22; 1 Peter 2: 5.

Mr. Braden took up his parable and said, "God once created a world and placed man, animals, plants, etc., in this world. He then set natural laws to govern these things and stopped the work of creation." So it was with the church, argued Mr. Braden. God began by miracles, but those miracles gave place to certain fixed laws by which the church was to be perpetuated.

"Very good analogy," said Elder White, "if properly applied. Christ came to earth as the creator of a church. He proceeded to so create, and set in that church certain laws and officers by means of which it might be perpetuated. Apostles, prophets, angel visits, revelation, etc., were some of the laws by which it was to be perpetuated. Destroy these and the body dies. Braden's parables seem to resemble an old "'61" army musket; they make a loud noise, but are so poorly sighted that they scarcely ever hit the mark, and are sure to kick the life out of the man that pulls the trigger.

Braden proceeds to lay down the proposition that anyone who believes in the direct manifestation of God's power in the signs enumerated in Mark 16, is "a liar, a fool, or a knave." He took up the prominent doctrines taught by the Latter Day Saints, one at a time, applying that phrase to each point, and used this expression probably twenty times in one speech. He wound up by challenging Elder White to produce a sign, saying that if he did so, he, Braden, would join the Latter Day Saints.

"Then you would be 'a liar, a fool, or a knave,' would you. Bro. Braden, if I would work a miracle for you?" retorted Elder White. (Applause from the audience and very sober countenances with Braden, Love, & Co.)

Mr. Braden proceeded to give an exegesis of the "more excellent way" of 1 Corinthians 12: 31; said Paul compared the church in his time to a child, and that later on it grew to be a full grown man; that the gifts and manifestations were necessary when the church was in that young and childish condition, but since it had now attained to full manhood these childish things are no longer needed. The church was then a child and was in the excellent way; it is now a man and in the "more excellent" way. Tongues, prophecy, etc., were in part; but since that which is perfect is come that which is in part is done away.

On this point Elder White made some "sledge-hammer blows." The writer became so interested that nothing appears in my notes, so will have to trust to memory in stating the argument. Some of the points presented were about as follows: "Paul's preaching was in the excellent way, but Braden's preaching is in the more excellent way. Therefore Braden is far in advance of Paul. The church in Paul's day was only a childish concern, but Braden & Co. represent a full grown man. The church in the apostolic age with all its gifts and blessings was only a little side show, and Mr. Braden's church is the main circus. We will never attain unto the 'more excellent way' in this life. All that we do here is in part. Our knowledge is only in part; we speak with tongues and prophesy in part as did Paul, but when the excellent way is come and all things are made perfect, then our prophesying will be perfect, our speaking with tongues will no longer be in part, but will be complete. Our knowledge will no longer be in part, but we shall know also as we are known."

Here the speaker illustrated by using the lamp before him. "The time was when people used an old-fashioned tallow candle to make a light, but when the more excellent way came and the coal oil lamp was presented to the world, then that which was in part (the tallow candle) was done away. That which is in part is replaced by something that is better.

According to Mr. Braden's theory, when the old tallow lamp was done away, because of its imperfection, we should never have any more lamps. Braden's more excellent way would simply leave everybody in the dark. In Braden's excellent way they prophesy in part, but as we advance to the more excellent way we do not prophesy at all. In the excellent way we speak with tongues, but in Braden's more excellent way we have no such gifts.

In the excellent way we know a few things, in part, but when that more excellent way of Braden's comes we know nothing at all.

Mr. Braden took up Acts 2: 38, 39, and says: "Any man who will claim that this promise is to him in this age is either a liar, a fool, or a knave."

Here Elder White again referred to the Christian Evangelist and read from Mr. Garrison, the editor, in which he positively states that the baptized believer may expect the fulfillment of this promise to him in this day as well as in the apostolic age. "No wonder," said Elder White, "that Mr. Garrison had such a hard time in indorsing Mr. Braden." This cut like a knife on Mr. Braden, as it was the first reference to the difficulty concerning the indorsement since the debate began. Elder White showed that the promise was unto all men in all ages. Mr. Braden contented himself by saying that the Bible was the standard of evidence, and not Mr. Garrison, that the promise was to "as many as the Lord our God shall call" to receive this power." He attacked the Latter Day Saints' position on a succession of apostles. He said that when an apostle died another was not chosen in his stead.

When his attention was called to Matthias, Paul, Barnabas, and others, he said that Matthias was not an apostle; that he was not legally and properly chosen; that God had no hand in the matter, and that this was all before the day of Pentecost, and therefore the apostles were not inspired, therefore were acting without authority.

Mr. Braden had seemingly forgotten that he had previously challenged Elder White to show a single instance in which miraculous power had ever benefited anybody; and now he sets up an objection to the ordination of Matthias, because he thinks no such power was demonstrated at his ordination. He was referred to the Book of Psalms, where God spoke through the psalmist and ordered just such a procedure, and that the apostles were acting upon that revelation long published to the world. When his attention was called to Paul and Barnabas, he simply said, "Barnabas was an apostle, but not one of the Twelve." "We have apostles in our church," said Mr. Braden, "just the same as we have Christ in the church. Christ is the head of the church. The same argument that proves that living apostles should be in the church now, proves that there should be a living Christ in the church now."

Elder White said that he was ready to admit that Christ was the head of the church in the same way that the husband is the head of the wife. "But," said he, "would you intimate, Mr. Braden, that because you are in this sense the head of your wife that she has no head of her own?" The church, then, needs a head of her own on earth.

"But," said Mr. Braden, "if you have inspired apostles and prophets in your church, give us some proof of it by showing that you have miracles in your church. I don't ask you to perform one here. I just ask for a single proof that such a thing ever occurred in the Reorganized Church."

Elder White replied that if Braden's theory be true, that the apostles were not inspired until Pentecost day, that miracles are not proof of inspiration anyway, as they did many miracles before they were inspired, according to Braden, and if an uninspired man can perform miracles, Braden could proceed to perform his own miracles. John was one of the greatest prophets ever born of woman, and yet he did no miracle. This latter statement Mr. Braden called in question, but was referred to John 10: 41 in proof of the statement.

Mr. Braden said the signs of Mark 16 were limited to the eleven; but when he was referred to Ananias, Paul, Philip at Samaria, Stephen, and the whole Corinthian church, he arose to a point of order. He denied having made the statement, and before the point of order was decided proceeded to explain what he did say, and if anyone could see that he made it any different we failed to find who it was, for it was universally admitted that he repeated his first statement that "the fulfillment was as wide as the promise, and the promise as wide as the fulfillment. The promise was to the eleven and the eleven only;" which he said, at least, twenty times during the debate.

Mr. Braden vainly endeavored to make the use of grammar help him out on this much-dreaded sixteenth chapter of Mark. He went back to verse fourteen for a starting point, in order to be sure and have the whole thing apply to the eleven. The expression, "and these signs shall follow them that believe" "meant the unbelieving eleven," said Mr. Braden. Then, retorted Elder White, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," meant the eleven, too, and don't apply to anybody else. The believer was to be baptized. The signs were to follow the believer.

In his effort to carry his point Mr. Braden made the word "they" refer to the eleven all the way through. Then Elder White read, "They," the eleven, "shall lay hands on the sick, and they," the eleven, "shall recover;" but the sick man would die, of course. He further called the attention of Mr. Braden to a very serious blunder in his grammar. Two persons are speaking here: First, the historian, Mark, is speaking in verse fourteen, and is, therefore, "in the first person." Second, Mark makes a direct quotation from Christ in verses 15, 16, 17, and 18. As a pronoun must agree with its antecedent in person and number, we cannot go back to Mark's language for an antecedent to one of Christ's pronouns. Mr. Braden did this, consequently violated the rules of grammar. In this quotation Christ is the first person, the one speaking; the apostles are the ones spoken to, consequently in the second person; the believer, in all the world, is the person spoken of, consequently in the third person. "He that believeth," third person, and is baptized shall be saved. He that believeth not," third person, "shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them," third person, "that believe."

Mr. Braden objected to the above construction on the ground that a plural noun could not have a singular antecedent, but it would certainly be a difficult task for Mr. Braden to convince any well-informed person that the words, "he that believeth," are used in the singular number. If so, one person is all that was ever expected to believe, and, unfortunately for the fairer sex, that one person must be of the masculine gender. Such is the result of Mr. Braden's logic, if closely examined. Anyone with even a limited knowledge of grammar can at once see that the word "he" in this case is not a singular pronoun, but is a generic term and therefore plural.

Miraculous power ceased, said Mr. Braden, when the last person died on whom the apostles laid hands. In his first speech the last evening he spent probably two thirds of his time in demanding of the Reorganized Church that they show him the evidence that any sign had ever occurred in the history of the Reorganized Church. Mr. Braden had previously flaunted this same challenge to other brethren in different places; and so confident was he that it could not be met he prepared it in the form of a circular so that it would be handy. It seems that this circular had been first printed and directed at Bro. Scott, at Knox, Indiana. Mr. Braden erased this part, however, and changed it to read as follows:—

February 11, 1895.

A CHALLENGE.

To I. N. White and The R. C. J. C. L. D. S. of El Dorado. Has a Sign Ever Occurred in the History of the R. C. J. C. L. D. S.

Messrs.:—

Do not you claim that the C. J. C. L. D. S. was; and that the R. C. J. C. L. D. S. is the true church of God—the true church of Christ, because the signs of Mark 16:17, 18, 19, 20 have occurred in the work and in the history of those organizations?

Do not you assert that the church of the Disciples of Christ, and all other churches, that do not claim that such signs occur in connection with their work, are not true churches of God—true churches of Christ, because such signs do not occur in connection with their work?

Now Messrs.: You are hereby challenged and defied to name one instance of a sign of superhuman power that has ever occurred in connection with the work and history of the C. J. C. L. D. S. or the R. C. J. C. L. D. S. in over six-four years of such history, and from that such signs did really occur. Do not you claim that there are living witnesses that such signs have occurred in connection with the work of the C. J. C. L. D. S. and the R. C. J. C. L. D. S.?

If I will select one lawyer of El Dorado will you select another, and these two a third to act as a committee of investigation and arbitration, to decide whether you can prove that a sign of superhuman has ever occurred in connection with the work and history of the C. J. C. L. D. S. or the R. C. J. C. L. D. S.

All witnesses to be sworn, and cross-examined, as in courts of law. As you claim to have living witnesses that such signs have occurred in connection with the work and history of the C. J. C. L. D. S.; and the R. C. J. C. L. D. S. should not you produce such witnesses, and should not they be treated as all witnesses are treated in the courts of law?

Now Messrs.: Will you prove the claim that is the foundation of your system? Or will you confess it is false by refusing to face a fair investigation?

CLARK BRADEN.

Elder White was "loaded for bear" on this point, and was only waiting for Braden to commit himself and become boisterous, which he certainly did.

Elder White began his reply to this by showing from the Scriptures that these blessings followed the believer and were not alone confined to the apostles. He then proceeded to quote from the early Fathers of the second, third, and fourth centuries, to prove that these gifts did really occur in their day. John Wesley was also introduced in this connection to good effect. I did not note down all the quotations used, as they may be found in the books published by the church, so I will not attempt to give them. (See Presidency and Priesthood, Compendium, and Instructor.)

Elder White next introduced a testimony of healing in the days of Joseph the Seer, as recorded in the history of Braden's own church. It is found in Hayden's History of the Disciples, page 250, and reads as follows:—

"It cannot be denied that Joseph Smith was a man of remarkable power—over others. Added to the stupendous claim of super-natural power, conferred by the direct gifof God, he exercised an almost magnetic power—an irresistible fascination—over those with whom he came in contact. Ezra Booth, of Mantua, a Methodist preacher of much more than ordinary culture, and with strong natural abilities, in company with his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson; and some other citizens of this place, visited Smith at his home in Kirtland, in 1831. Mrs. Johnson had been afflicted for some time with a lame arm, and was not at the time of the visit able to lift her hand to her head. The party visited Smith partly out of curiosity, and partly to see for themselves what there might be in the new doctrine. During the interview the conversation turned on the subject of super-natural gifts, such as were conferred in the days of the apostles. Some one said, 'Here is Mrs. Johnson with a lame arm; has God given any power to men now on the earth to cure her?' A few moments later, when the conversation had turned in another direction, Smith rose, and walking across the room, taking Mrs. Johnson by the hand, said in the most solemn and impressive manner: 'Woman, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I command thee to be whole,' and immediately left the room.

"The company were awe-stricken at the infinite presumption of the man, and the calm assurance with which he spoke. The sudden mental and moral shock—I know not how better to explain the well-attested fact—electrified the rheumatic arm—Mrs. Johnson at once lifted it up with ease, and on her return home the next day she was able to do her washing without difficulty or pain."

Mr. Kennedy's book on pages 121 and 122 has this version of the circumstance:—

"Then he moved to her side, and taking hold of her palsied hand, said in a deep and solemn tone, 'Woman, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I command thee to be whole!' With no further word or look, he abruptly turned, and left the room. The hand that he had lifted did not fall. The lady attempted to move it, and found that it was once more under her control. Upon her return home she discovered that she could use it equally with the other, and thus it remained until her death, fifteen years later."

"Now," said Elder White, "here is the testimony you wanted, right from one of your own books too, and you can't go back on that. But," said he, "I know how Braden will try to get around that. He will tell you about the old white sow after the man on crutches." Then he proceeded to relate in detail the story of the old sow as so often told by Braden. Then turning to the account of the man at the "beautiful gate" who was healed by Peter, Elder White showed how this same "sow story" might be told on Peter and John when they were performing miracles. Braden seemed disappointed in not getting the first slice of pork, but proceeded to tell the old story, notwithstanding the fact that I. N. had gotten ahead of him. It failed to raise the desired laugh for Mr. Braden and that made him feel bad.

Elder White next introduced sworn testimony from Elder W. J. Smith, of Detroit, Michigan, and fourteen others concerning the healing of Miss Alice Morgan on October 28, 1894, of a stroke of paralysis. Also the sworn statement of the same elder and two other witnesses testifying that Ella Miller was healed of lung and heart disease, July, 1894. A sworn statement was also presented from Elder R. C. Evans, of London, Canada, and three others, testifying that Edwin Poil, a raving maniac, had been instantly healed. The following was also presented from the same elder, relative to the healing of George Walker of blindness.

"This is to certify that while in Chatham, Ontario, on Thursday, December 1, 1887, I went to the home of Bro. and Sr. George Walker. Bro. Walker had been working on the new Catholic church in Chatham, and had got some kind of cement with lime in his eyes. They went for the doctor, but by the time the physician reached him his eyes were literally burned out; I was informed by Sr. Walker, in the presence of her husband, that the eyeballs were burned away, and the doctor had hard work to get the lids open wide enough to see the eye, and that all there was where the eye once was, was red lumps a little larger than a wintergreen berry. The doctor said there was no hope of his ever seeing again. He was in a room blindfolded when I arrived. He had been blind for several weeks. We talked some time, when all of a sudden silence reigned, and I heard a voice say, 'He who spat upon the clay can heal this man to-day.' The Spirit of the Lord rested upon me in power, and I walked over to Bro. Walker, led him to the lounge, laid him down, poured the consecrated oil in his sunken sockets, laid my hands on his head and prayed for just a moment, when a power rested upon me and I said, In the name of Jesus Christ I say unto thee, Receive thy sight.' I took my hands off his head and he sat up, opened his eyes, and did see. I bear my testimony to this in the name of Jesus Christ, before whom I must appear. George Walker is now enjoying his eyesight, and is living in Chatham, Kent county, Ontario. When I first wrote the above for publication in Autumn Leaves, for November, 1890, Bro. and Sr. Walker both signed their names as evidence of the truthfulness of the above, George Walker and Fannie Walker, and many times since its publication have they borne testimony both by letter and word of mouth regarding it.

"Signed, Elder R. C. EVANS.

"CHATHAM, Kent county, Ontario,

To the foregoing is appended the following:—

"To wit: We, George Walker of the town of Chatham, in the county of Kent, and Fanny Walker, of the said town of Chatham, his wife, do solemnly declare that we have read the testimony of Elder R. C. Evans contained in a book written by him entitled Autumn Leaves and published in 1890, relating to the cure of blindness effected by the said R. C. "W. G. RICHARDS,

In addition to the above sworn statements Elder White presented the following:—

"State of Missouri, } County of Clinton. } ss

"Personally appeared before me a notary public in and for the State and county aforesaid, Ellsworth Moorman, to me personally known to be of lawful age, of a sound mind, and a reliable, truthful man, who on his oath deposes and says that in the year 1875 my hearing became deficient from some unknown cause, till finally the auditory nerves absolutely refused to perform their functions, and I became totally deaf and oblivious to all around except what I could see. Later on one evening during that year Elders W. C. Nirk, of Rhodes, Iowa, and I. N. White, of Clinton, Missouri, administered to me, and when I awoke next morning my hearing was perfectly restored, not only to its normal condition, but was much more acute than before I was afflicted. And to-day, after fifteen years, I can say I never have had a relapse since; all of which I attribute to the power of God through his servants' administration.

"Signed, ELLSWORTH MOORMAN.

"E. D. CORNISH, Notary Public.

"MRS. E. MOORMAN, Witness."

The foregoing document was read by Elder White. He then said: "Now, ladies and gentlemen, I have given Mr. Braden the testimony he has so loudly and repeatedly demanded. Sworn testimony, too, from responsible parties who cannot be impeached. Now, in addition to this I wish to add my individual testimony. I know the statement of Ellsworth Moorman to be true, as I am the I. N. White referred to in his sworn statement."

Here Elder White related the circumstance in detail, then turning to Mr. Braden, said: "I am now ready to be placed under oath and be cross-examined by these two moderators, who are lawyers, and you can also call another lawyer from the audience if you desire it."

Mr. Braden did not respond to this, although Elder White offered to do so on his own time.

Thus closed one of the greatest public debates ever held by the church.

One can judge as to what the public sentiment was from the following note received by the writer, which explains itself:—

"EL DORADO SPRINGS, Missouri,

"February 16, 1895.

"Messrs. Moderators:—This being the closing night of the discussion, we beg to take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of the Rev. I. N. White for the manly and noble way in which he has conducted himself from beginning to end of this debate. He has acted the part of a polished Christian gentleman—often brilliant—always soaring above the use of language that was more becoming the prize ring than the pulpit, and in so doing has won the esteem and admiration of all unprejudiced minds.

"Very sincerely and respectfully,

"MANY VISITORS,"

"Of El Dorado Springs.

"P.S.—None of us are Mormons or residents of this city."

Accompanying the above note was the following personal letter:—

"EL DORADO SPRINGS, Missouri,

February 16, 1895.

"REV. MR. DUNCAN, Dear Sir:—I inclose a note with the request that it be read at the meeting to-night (White-Braden debate). The letter was written by request of several visitors at the Springs, all of us are nonresidents of this city and nonmembers of the Reorganized Church, which you and Mr. White represent. We do not wish our names given out publicly because we do not care to become the victims of the ungentlemanly bigot, who is not worth a comparison to John L. Sullivan, who opposes Mr. White in this debate. Consequently you will withhold all names.

"Signed, ———.

"P. S.—We have had all we want of Braden. If he declares the letter a forgery say to him you will produce the author and signers before Monday, ten o'clock. We suggest to have it left to the vote of the house to-night and see whether our letter is not indorsed by a majority of those present."

Owing to the difficulty in preserving order and the positive instructions from the "official board" that no speeches should be made or other manifestations of approval or disapproval from any source, the foregoing was not presented. The Latter Day Saints are willing to abide the decision of the public, but Mr. Braden has been scheming for an indorsement from the people of El Dorado, an account of which may appear later on.

For the present, adieu.

In bonds,

C. R. DUNCAN.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

At the Pottawattamie district conference it was moved and seconded that we instruct our delegates to use their influence and vote for a smaller hymn book consisting of about 250 hymns, with words and music written together, as the Harmony is not convenient to carry around. This slipped my memory when I sent the minutes of the conference.

She was the mother of twelve children; only five survive her. Mrs. Parrish's ancestors came to America about 1631. She distinctly remembered the engagement between the English and Americans at Sackett's Harbor in the war of 1812-14. She passed through many trying scenes in Utah. She was a faithful member of the Reorganization at her death. Funeral sermon by D. L. Harris.

HAXTON.—Near Petrolea, Ontario, March 1, 1895, Bro. James Haxton. Deceased was born September 27, 1858, in Michigan; was baptized by Elder J. N. Simmons October 5, 1884, at Petrolea, Ontario. He passed away in peace with the hope of a glorious resurrection.

Funeral sermon by Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa. The little one came to her death by falling onto a pail of boiling water, overturning it onto her, scalding her terribly. After suffering intense agony for nearly six days, she passed on to await the resurrection morn.

"Another hand is beckoning us,
Another call is given;
And glows one more with angel steps
The path that leads to heaven."

DEVORE.—Sr. Mary, wife of Bro. L. F. Devore, died March 9, 1895, at Keighley, Kansas. She was born October 31, 1857, at Pleasanton, Iowa. She united with the Latter Day Saints July 20, 1884, being baptized by Elder M. M. Turpen. Sr. Devore was firm in the faith to the last, and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. May we be prepared to meet her when the trump of God shall call. Funeral sermon by Elder R. W. Davis.

Dearest Mother, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel,

He can all our sorrows heal.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH, THE SEER.

A 48 page pamphlet, 32 pages of which contain an account of the angel's visits to Mr. Smith, the finding of ancient plates—the records from which the Book of Mormon was translated. It briefly recounts the leading events connected with Mr. Smith's early experiences up to the organization of the Church, in 1830. Three additional chapters describe American Antiquities, and Hebrew Relics, one containing the statement of Dr. Lederer, a converted Jew, etc., all corroborative of the claims of the Book of Mormon. Paper covers, 10c.

RULES OF ORDER AND DEBATE.

The book contains rules for the government of General and District Conferences, Branch Business Meetings, and other assemblies. Its parliamentary rules are based upon the latest and best works of accepted authorities. The Articles of Association of the Reorganized Church, also the General Conference Rules of Representation are included. Instructions and rulings concerning General, District, and Branch Records, the holding of Elders' Courts, etc., are also embodied in the work. Revised and republished in 1891. A book of 200 pages, cloth bound, exhaustively indexed; price 40 cents.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD.

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archæology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

MANUSCRIPT FOUND.

This is the notorious Manuscript Found, written by Rev. Solomon Spalding; a verified and certified copy of the original now in Oberlin College, Ohio, of which so much has been said and written in connection with the theory that it furnished Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon the chief groundwork and material from which to write the Book of Mormon. The preface to the work contains an account of its coming to light, by which it can be traced back to its author—Solomon Spalding. The work, suppressed for years by enemies of the Latter Day Saints, is a complete refutation of the charge made that it is the basis from which the Book of Mormon was written.

MORE PURE AIR.

IN Health-Culture, Rev. J. Thomas Wilhide writes as follows: The average laborer will take into his stomach about one gallon of solid and liquid food in twenty-four hours, while he has a lung capacity of about eleven pints of air. Should he breathe eighteen times per minute, eleven pints multiplied by eighteen, by sixty minutes in one hour, by twenty-four hours, divided by eight pints in one gallon, the result will show a capacity of 35,515 gallons of air breathed into the lungs every twenty-four hours.

But there is always a reserve force in the lungs and none breathe to the fullest capacity. The estimate according to Dr. Pettinkoffer, the celebrated German physician is about two-thirds of a pint at each inspiration or 2,160 gallons every twenty-four hours, 788,400 gallons for one year.

Is it not plain we need more air than food, and need it every moment or we sicken and die?

The steamer Londonderry sailed from Liverpool for Sligo, 1848, with two hundred passengers. A storm came on, the captain ordered all below and closed the hatches. The cabin was eighteen feet long, eleven wide, and seven high. In six hours seventy-two were dead and many dying, their bodies convulsed, the blood starting from their eyes, nostrils, and ears, all inside of six hours. The captain was as ignorant of the fact that air breathed over is poisonous, as are many of the builders or architects of our great halls, churches, etc., to-day.

Every schoolboy and girl knows the story of "The Black Hole of Calcutta" how one hundred and forty-six prisoners were shut up in the evening in a room eighteen feet square, one sultry night in Bengal. The only ventilation was two small heavily barred windows. At six o'clock next morning when the doors were opened, only twenty-three still breathed. One hundred and twenty-three had died from suffocation.

How often we go into halls, churches, cars, schoolrooms, and even dwellings and sick rooms, and in a few minutes feel suffocated and sick.

What is the matter? Why simply the air is impure. We are being poisoned by carbonic acid gas. In a large church in a certain city, from one to three persons fainted or were made so sick as to be compelled to leave the house, at nearly every Sunday morning service.

The cause, a low ceiling and no ventilation.

On going from a closed room of oft breathed air, into the open air, how quickly comes a sense of relief and a few full, deep inspirations of common air quickly revives us. Why?

Because the lungs are now able to free themselves of the carbonic acid gas and other impurities, and take up the life giving tonic, oxygen gas, from the air, thereby purifying the blood, increasing the circulation, and stimulating every nerve and fibre of the whole being.

Suffocation is death from want of pure air in the lungs.

To live, mature, and enjoy good health, the air, in the lungs must be frequently changed.

To breathe impure air, or an insufficient amount, is far more hurtful than an insufficient amount of food, sleep, rest, cleanliness, or sunshine, and yet strange to say, we hear but little complaint and practically scarcely any effort toward the thorough ventilation of our public conveyances, halls, churches, schoolrooms, dwellings, etc., but we do hear a great hue and cry if our sleep is disturbed or our food is not up to the standard."

EVERY-DAY RELIGION.

RELIGION consists less in forming ideals than in realizing them. We all have ideals higher than our attainments; religion consists in attaining those which we already possess; though incidentally it gives us, in the process, new and higher Ideals. Religion brings with it high thoughts and noble emotions; but it does not consist in high thoughts and noble emotions; it consists in realizing, in deed and life, high thoughts, and in giving, in deed and life, practical effect to noble emotions. Religion does not consist in thinking great things about God or goodness; nor in feeling high emotions respecting God and goodness; but in doing some service for God and being somewhat like God.

Christ was an idealist. He lived in the eternal and invisible world. The Father was his companion and his friend. The future was full of hope to him. His thoughts of God were noble and ennobling; his trust in God serene and unruffled; his love for God and for his fellow-men deep, true, abiding. But in his pictures of life he never suggested that either great thoughts or deep emotions were the measure of piety. His portraits of saints were never of meditative mystics, or eloquent prophets, or pietistic recluses. The Samaritan who picked up a wounded traveler and cared for him at some expense to himself; the widow who cast her all into the charity box of the temple; the publican who cried, "God be merciful to me, a sinner;" the farmer who sowed his seed in all soils; the merchant who, when he found a pearl of great price, did not covet it or try to get it for nothing, but sold all that he had and bought it in honest dealing; the steward who administered his lord's estate honestly and turned the proceeds over to him when the time of accounting came—these were Christ's types and portraits of religious men. To do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God—this was his representation of religion.

His life exemplifies the same truth; it was a life of everyday religion. He did no great thing. He founded no State; led no armies to victory; wrote no books; formed no great organization; delivered no great orations. He was not great as Moses, or Joshua, or David, or Isaiah. Even his sermons are most of them conversations; and the few that are not are conversational. No schoolboy ever goes to the orations of Jesus Christ for a declamation. He was as eloquent when talking with a poor, sinful, and sorrowful woman on the well curb in Samaria as when addressing a congregation of three or four thousand on the Mount of Beatitudes. He talked to the thousands as he talked to the one. He poured into common deeds an uncommon spirit, and exemplified divinity by showing how a very simple life can be made divine by filling it with the spirit of faith, and hope, and love. The difference between a bit of black carbon and a luminous lamp is in the electricity which passes through the carbon. This is religion—a divine current making luminous a common life. Bringing God into everyday life makes every day a sacred day and every life a divine life.—Outlook.

THE DYNAMICS OF MIND.

The dematerialization, or perhaps what may even be called the spiritualization of physics, as a science, is one of the most marked logical tendencies of recent investigation and philosophy. In the light of recent psychical demonstrations it has been said that thoughts are things, but perhaps it is better to say they are forces. In physical science the theory now is that vibration is a universal law, and the medium of these motions is the universal ether, so that here is a common meeting ground of the spiritual and material. In the February Arena, Henry Wood, writing on "The Dynamics of Mind," extends this conception to the processes of mind, and claims that as matter is now held to be instinct with life, so thoughts are as much dynamic forces in life as any other of the phenomena of nature—electricity or magnetism, for instance.
