"THE HOLY SCRIPTURES."

WE are apprehensive that now and then an elder in the field may become overzealous, possibly oversanguine in regard to the teaching the Bible, Holy Scriptures, and the revelations. The Lord commanded the church in 1831, Thou shalt take the things . . . which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doth according to these things shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—D. C. 42: 16.

This was given before the translation of the Holy Scriptures was begun, and the Scriptures then had by the church was the King James', or Common Version of the Bible. There can be no mistaking what is meant by the foregoing quotation, because in the same section of the same instruction the elders, priests, and teachers of the church were directed to teach the principles of the gospel "which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel." (D. C. 42: 5.)

There is a disposition on the part of some to discard the Common Version of the Bible, and to cast it aside with more or less of vehemence and apparent contempt and scorn, thereby creating in the minds of those who hear them the impression that they discard the King James' version of the Bible as out of date, and unworthy of credence. This is an error in judgment that if indulged in will inevitably destroy the usefulness of the elder that does it, and give additional force to already existing prejudice in them who bear it against the church; and add greatly to the burdens of the more moderate and wiser men in the field.

There is nothing in either of the books, or in any of the later revelations that will justify any elder whether he be high in place, or humble in sphere in treating the Bible in such way, or that will warrant the excluding of it from the field of our controversy with the world. The declaration that when the Scriptures, which were in process of correction and translation should be fully given they were to be taught, does not in any sense mean that then the Bible was to be cast aside; but does mean that then, in company and in comparison with the one was to aid in the comprehension of the other.

When Elder W. P. Brown, of the Whitmerite brethren then, was at Lamoni, a few years ago, he caught the Scriptures from the stand, and cast it with some force upon a chair standing on the platform behind him, saying:—

We do not need the word any more; we have the Spirit; and we will not ever need the book unless we lose the Spirit and get out of the true way, and then we would only need it to know how to get back in the way.

It was at the time thought to be a rash and unfortunate saying for one who was trying to get people to return to the "word of God," as he understood it. If it was a rash and unprofitable procedure on the part of Elder Brown, can it be anything less so on the part of those charged directly to teach the things found in the Bible, the Scriptures?

The elders of this work should remember that the command of the Savior, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me" (John 5: 39), if of force to the Jews who heard it given, is of still greater force to us; because of the additional writings which we are conscientiously bound to accept as "the Scriptures."

It is quite impolitic for us to invite the attention of the people to our work, and tell them that their Bibles contain sufficient proofs to establish the truthfulness of our faith, and the positions we occupy on the themes of salvation, and then throw their work down and our own with it, by putting entire discredit on their book; we cannot afford to do that.

We may think our version the better one; and we may frankly say so; but if we undertake to dispose of the Bible and force the Holy Scriptures upon people who have faith in the Bible, we cannot fail to deprive ourselves of the benefit of both testimonies; the first, because of our discrediting it; the second, because people will not receive it upon our testimony after the attitude assumed toward the first.

We would not be pleased to follow in the field the footsteps of an elder who would treat lightly and flippantly the Bible, or its teachings; not that we have the book in reverence as a material thing; but because of the fact that in it is "contained the word of God," as our epitome of principles of belief asserts. The elders are sent out to represent the church, not to represent themselves, or their pet theories; nor has the church sent anyone out to misrepresent it on the Bible question; and the elder who in his ministry attacks the Bible in asperity of speech, or manner, by which he seeks to carry the impression that the church discards it, or does away with it as containing the word of God, clearly misrepresents the church. The church has not authorized anyone to so teach, or so represent it.

THE MINISTRY REPORTS.

A PERUSAL of the ministry reports to the coming conference is inspiring. All report a widening field, a steadily increasing demand for the preaching of the word, and the rapid decrease of prejudice and unfriendly spirit so long made manifest in hindering the brethren from obtaining a fuller hearing before the people. The field is widening, the work growing, the brethren pushing out in the power of the Spirit, the Lord going before and with them.

The number of baptisms is far beyond any hitherto reported to a General Conference of the Reorganized Church. Reading such a consensus of statement concerning the general conditions of the church and the prospects before it, one gets something of the spirit of the year's advancement, as one senses the growth of the body as he meets and converses with and hears from those who, engaged in the service, grow in power and grace in the rendering of that service.

There is cause for rejoicing in the progress of the work—the best work that can be done, and in which it is not an ordinary privilege to bear a part. New men, new women are coming to the help of those now in file in the service—coming with the strength of new talent and varied gifts and qualifications; these with faithfulness, devotion in service, insuring the progress that results when talents are sanctified by the grace of God.

It is encouraging to note that the army of the Lord is becoming "very great," as the Lord declared it would in the interests of "the redemption of Zion." The success of the Reorganization with the bright prospects now before it, in contrast to the great odds and terrible incumbrances resulting from the evils of the "dark and cloudy day," are enough or ought to be enough, to convince any hitherto skeptical of its divinity that God has directed its course and moved in its development. No human combination could have prevailed in the face of such fearful odds. The best combinations of men, of institutions popularized by religious tradition, strengthened by wealth and social standing, with the additional advantages of special educational qualifications in those assigned the work of representing their theologies, have failed; have gone down as creeds and been "found wanting" in the verdict of popular examination and the developments of time. All this, however, has only served to make bare the true foundation; to show the basic Rock upon which the Church of God is built; to reveal the adamant character of her foundation, the truth; and the gold, silver, and precious stones with which the church is being builded.

When men can go out into the world and return with the yearly repeated statements that every conceivable form of opposition, every imaginable phase of philosophy and creed but serve to bring out and confirm the faith they preach, it is good evidence of the divine character of the message they bear. It consciously inspires them with the cheering and strengthening promise of the Master, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Of this the brethren bear strong witness, that the Spirit of the Lord has been their strength and stay, the Lord confirming the word preached in various manifestations of his power. Upon their work the Almighty has set his seal, and he "is true."

A BRANCH of the church was organized at Blendsville, Jasper county, Missouri, on the 17th of March, following the dedication on the 3d. Bro. F. L. English was chosen to preside, G. H. Hiser priest, and A. P. Free, formerly of Independence, teacher.

A letter from Bro. Chatburn, who began a series of meetings there on Wednesday the 13th, states that the audiences were all that the house would hold, and on Monday evening of the 18th, many could not get in, so great was the interest. Three were baptized on the day the branch was organized, and others had made application. So the good work goes on.

The work at this point was started by Bro. J. Parker, the father-in-law of Brn. J. Luff and William Crick, who in the prosecution of his business and traveling from place to place selling soaps of his own manufacture, visited the house of Bro. George Hiser, close to Blendsville, where in conversation he preached the gospel of the latter days to him.

Bro. Hiser listened, opened his house for preaching, and soon he and some of his household were baptized. The neighborhood was warned, several others followed, and thence, from Bro. Parker's faithful testimony, has risen the Blendsville branch. May the grace of God which abounds toward the faithful, shield, lead, and perfect the branch so happily planted.

NEWSPAPER clippings are not always reliable in statement. We cannot vouch for the correctness of the statements in the one that follows. However, if true, there is need that the admonition, "Beware of false prophets," be more widely stated and more generally heeded. It has long been dinned in the ears of Latter Day Saints for want of a better argument against their faith. We have always regarded it as a sword with a double edge, if not a theological boomerang that came straight back at its sectarian user. But, here is the clipping:—

A dispatch for Tacoma, Washington, says that five prophets have appeared in that city who declare that the world is coming to an end in 1897. They have issued a warning to the people to beware of a false Christ, who will arrive about that time. They are Rev. Mr. Jefferis, Rev. Mr. Price, H. C. Leuters, Henry Baker, and Mrs. Cliff, all evangelists. They declare that nine tenths of the human race will perish miserably by war, plague, famine, pestilence, earthquake, and hail during the next five years. Christ will come with his bride, and Satan will be sealed up in a bottle for a thousand years. Heaven will hang in midair all that time. They have seen hell, and it is six thousand miles across, and long enough to hold all sinners. One of the gentlemen, Mr. Jefferis, was formerly rector of a prominent Episcopal church in Philadelphia.—New York Tribune.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. DAVID McINTOSH, Queensferry, Victoria, January 15:—

Bro. G. R. Wells is at present with us and is doing well, but I suppose he will soon be going to New South Wales. Bro. Butterworth has been in that colony for about six months and has, so far as I can learn, been fairly successful. We have much to contend with in this district in the way of prejudice and misrepresentation of all kinds. The people will class us with the Utah people, and as some of them are about Melbourne, we have sometimes an opportunity to meet them; but they dare not discuss the differences. They must "obey counsel." I have tried to get them to meet me in debate, but of no avail. Just imagine a Latter Day Saint afraid to advocate his cause! I quite agree with Bro. R. J. Anthony that they both practice and teach privately their abominable doctrines.

Bro. T. W. Chatburn, Blendsville, Missouri, March 24:—

Baptized three more to-day, Brn. Ashcroft, King, and a Baptist preacher named Lancaster; ordained him a priest and sent him out to his flock with Mormon food. Have closed in with a Missionary Baptist for discussion. He is wrathful because we are taking his flocks. Three more gave names last night for baptism, and more to follow.

Bro. J. M. Terry, St. Joseph, Missouri, recent date:—

Mr. Carr, an intelligent and worthy man, was baptized yesterday; thus the work moves on.

Bro. John Shields, Toronto, Ontario, March 21:—

The Saints here are all striving together for the faith of the gospel, and are trying to get outsiders interested. Some are believing and we hope will soon obey. Grandpa Hattey still enjoys the love and confidence of the Saints, and the good will of the outsiders as well. There is an increase of outside attendance. I have been here a week and a half. I leave to-morrow for Cameron and north.

Miss Lizzie Compton, Flint, Indiana, March 21:—

Elder S. W. L. Scott has been holding meetings here, and those in sympathy with this (to us) new work are preparing an Easter entertainment. There is no branch here; no one has been asked to or accepted the faith as yet. There are quite a number in its favor; think there will be one established; and we would like to make this our first undertaking a success.

Bro. W. S. Pender, Hallowell, Kansas, March 23:—

I have an appointment at Sherwin next Sunday—my first attempt to preach since along in November.

Some of the brethren residing at and near Centreville, Wayne county, West Virginia, have been troubled by a lawless element that has tried to intimidate them by threats and resorts to various acts of violence. Complaint was made against those so engaged, and as a result the law has been enforced. It is probable that those portions of West Virginia will now be open to gospel work and an advance be made in work there, and in the general conditions of the people. We quote from a letter written by Bro. W. R. Odell, dated Centreville, West Virginia, as follows:—

The Saints are all well, as far as I know. . . . Our criminal court is in session with Judge Marcum on the bench. He is the best judge we have ever had; so everyone says. Of those three fellows who were indicted for disturbing our meeting, one had his trial and was found guilty, and fined twenty-five dollars, and twenty dollars costs, with thirty days in jail; one of the others confessed, and got the same; the other was injured, hence his trial was put off. Bob Hamilton was indicted for disturbing our conference. Our prosecuting attorney and Judge Booth said publicly that we were entitled to the same protection as any other denomination.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By card to Bro. E. L. Kelley, dated San Francisco, March 21, we learn that Bro. Scott and Bro. and Sr. J. F. Burton had just landed from Tahiti, leaving the Evanelia all right and free to proceed upon her missionary voyages to all points among the islands. Bro. and Sr. Burton expect to be at the General Conference.

A Chicago Record reporter in making the rounds of some of the churches called on Bro. F. G. Pitt and the Chicago branch. As a result he wrote up a statement of the church—its faith and the lines of distinction between it and the Utah Church. The article was published in the Record of the 18th inst. It is clearly stated and to the point. Chicago is a center of thought and influence. The success of Bro. Pitt and his coworkers in the great western metropolis will result in good for the church in the surrounding country. It is certainly to the interest of the general church that the work be well planted and well sustained in cities, the centers of population, if not to a great extent the bases of operations and supplies. So many can be reached and the work be so prominently brought to the attention of the people that we cannot afford to neglect mission and pastoral work in the large cities and towns.

We learn by letter from Bro. H. R. Evans, of Malad City, Idaho, of the death of Bro. John Lewis, the "saddler," one of the most faithful adherents of the latter-day work in Idaho. A very eccentric and whole-souled man as one could meet anywhere; genial, happy, and cheerful in disposition, he was the life and soul of the assemblies of the Saints. A good man has gone to his rest.

Samuel E. Flannigan, Esq., of McLeansboro, Illinois, writes March 20 that the church is making good headway in Flannigan township, in McLean county. He adds that he believes that there will soon be a large branch composed of the best class of people. This is good news and speaks well for the efforts of our elders there. Mr. Flannigan is investigating the claims of the Reorganization, and we have hopes that the good Lord may lead him to the work as we hold it. We pray to this end; not only for him but for all who feel to make inquiry after the Lord's ways.

Bro. M. F. Gowell was at Higginsville, Missouri, on the 10th ult., trying to make an opening in gospel work.

In minutes of Southern Nebraska district, published in HERALD of March 13, the following was by some means erroneously omitted in reports of ministry: J. Armstrong baptized 1, A. J. Myers baptized 2.

Bro. S. L. Cooper, Kirksey, Kentucky, sends us a letter from one of his relatives, from which we learn that some were converted by reading the printed word sent them, and are in turn preaching the gospel to friends and neighbors. By this means much has been done and will yet be done in extending knowledge of the work. Each has a part to do and can do it if he will.

Bro. T. Hamilton writes from Willow Springs, Missouri, that the work at Carsville, Kentucky, needs the presence of an elder. Sr. C. Kemper, residing there, will see that a place is secured for an elder to preach in.

A card from Bro. M. H. Forscutt, San Francisco, the 20th, announces that Brn. Haws, Julian, and himself would leave on the 27th for Independence.

Of the total number of Bishop's agents—sixty-four—all but two, the agents of the Northern Wisconsin district and Takarua division of the South Sea Islands mission, have reported. Their reports have been audited and found correct, and will appear, with the Bishop's annual report, in the HERALD, in due time.

Pres. Joseph Smith went to Shenandoah, Iowa, on the 29th, in the interest of matters pertaining to the college movement. He was to return on the 1st.

Arrivals, in addition to those reported, at Lamoni, en route to Independence, Brn. E. C. Briggs, Joseph Luff, G. H. Hilliard, F. A. Smith, A. V. Closson, and W. H. Kelley.

We learn from one of the brethren that in the late discussion between Bro. C. H. Porter and Elder A. Adams, State Evangelist of the Church of God, at Omaha, Nebraska, the former was successful and the truth triumphant. Friends were made to the cause. The discussion was characterized by fairness of spirit throughout.

George W. Howell, writing from Lookout, California, states that there are but few of the Saints there, and who have not been visited for some three years now, but are striving to keep themselves alive to the hope of life in Christ. Will California ministers remember the Lookout Saints?

Bro. C. J. Hunt, writing from Deloit, Iowa, March 28, says: "Have just closed a two-weeks' meeting here; had good attendance and interest. Bro. R. Wight, of Galland's Grove, occupied four times with good liberty, presenting the word with power. I begin a series of meetings at Arion to-morrow night."

Bro. W. H. Kelley and daughter Belle arrived from Kirtland on the 30th ult. He addressed the Lamoni Saints on the Sunday morning following. Bro. G. H. Hilliard occupied the pulpit in the evening hour. Both discourses were good and well received.

MINES OF WOOD.

A curious source of wealth is reported by the French Consul at Mongtze, in Upper Tonquin. It lies in wood mines. The wood originally was a pine forest, which the earth swallowed in some cataclysm. Some of the trees are a yard in diameter. They lie in a slanting direction and in sandy soil, which cover them to a depth of about eighty yards. As the top branches are well preserved it is thought the geological convulsion which buried them cannot be of great antiquity. The wood furnished by these mines is imperishable and the Chinese gladly buy it for coffins. Along the coast regions in some parts of New Jersey there are trunks of cypress trees, deeply buried in the sand, the recovery of which forms a valuable industry, the timber being used for making shingles.

HELPING HAND.

SYNOPSIS OF READING, CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR, HINTS ON CHILD-TRAINING.

THE SORROWS OF CHILDREN.

CHILDREN need sympathy scarcely less than love, for children have sorrows and trials as hard for them to bear as greater ones are for grown up people. Parents and teachers do not always recognize them and are often inclined to look upon childhood as an age free from trouble, and as a brighter and happier period than life can ever give again. This is a grave mistake. These have forgotten their earlier tumults of feeling; as they have grown from them, they fail to remember how they grieved as little ones.

Let us briefly trace the little life from babyhood through this "happiest" period. The first sound of the wee one's voice is a cry, and this is often repeated ere it learns to laugh. Baby's best nurse is not she who can best share in his joy, but soothe him in his grief and oft coming troubles. It is only after baby has learned—has been trained and disciplined—to overcome its inclination to cry that it becomes the happy, joyous little one.

A little older grown, he cannot reach the moon, he cannot play with the bright razor, nor handle the pretty fire. He is constantly meeting disappointments. He is daily, hourly refused pleading requests. Later comes school tasks and the unkindnesses of playmates, and jealousies of classmates, and ere he learns that the mountains of disappointment and trouble that darken his way are but mole hills,—over which the sun can shine,—he becomes discouraged, often finding it hard to see the brighter side of life. To him, to many, "There are more clouds in life's April than in life's August.

Grown older his heart has become more calloused to disappointments, he is not so easily tempted to shed tears when plans are thwarted or hopes crushed. He learns to philosophize over his trouble, he knows time will soften and heal the smart, and that there is sunshine after shadow. What once would have crushed life out, he can now bear as a little thing. Unless he is careful he will almost forget how hard the lesson was learned and look upon children's troubles through his learned philosophy, and will doubt their troubles as being very real, even to them.

Losses and sorrows are relative as are values. That which may be of great moment to one, is of light importance to another. That which one could bear, would kill another. To the boy the breaking of his favorite toy may seem as great a disaster as the bankrupting of business to the man.

A little girl listened to the news of robbers stealing silverware from their neighbor's house, and alarmed, asked her mother if robbers ever took dolls. Her dolls were her treasures, and were they in danger, life had new terror for her. What to her was the loss of silver if her dolls were to be left unharmed! A child's estimate of values may be a false one, but sorrows measured by their estimate are as real as anyone's sorrows.

It must indeed be a sore pressure that will cause a child to wish for death. Yet suicide is more frequent than many suppose. Hundreds are detailed in our papers year by year. "Forgive me for committing suicide," they sometimes write; "I am tired of life." And everything tells of an aching heart. Yet they are only children, their griefs childish, but that is the thought of this chapter. Childish griefs are very real and very trying to children.

Quoting direct from Trumbull: "One plain teaching of these facts concerning the sorrows of children is, that the young need the comfort and joys of a Christian's faith for the life that now is, quite as surely as the aged need a Christian hope for the life to come. The surest way of bringing even a child to see the brighter side of this life is by inducing him to put his trust in an omnipotent Savior, who loves him and makes all things work together for good to him if only he trust himself to his care and walk faithfully in his service. The invitation and promises of the Bible are just what children need to give them happiness and hope for now and for hereafter." F. W. D.

EMSWORTH, Pennsylvania.

Dear Mothers and Daughters of Zion:—How thankful I am this morning that I yet have the opportunity to contribute my mite to the Home Column. How many times when reading letters, my heart is in sympathy with your great and good work. Go on, young mothers! Truth is gaining. The work of God must and will go on triumphantly. My desire is to live so that I may gain an inheritance with the Saints of God, for the promise is to those that overcome.

SARAH RICHARDSON.

Loved Column:—Though a long time silence has prevailed you are most highly esteemed for the many words of instruction your weekly visit brings us in the dear Herald. While reading some of the leaflets and other instructions, I have been led to say, "If I could have had such helps as these when raising my family, how many mistakes might have been avoided. But the record is made and I must meet the issue. May God in his mercy deal gently with the erring! I hope the young mothers will be not only willing but anxious to obtain all benefits derived from the experiences of those who have been successful in teaching and training their little ones aright, also in the study of all good books, seeking for wisdom, that they may fill the mission of love and the responsible positions they have assumed in the marriage relation. When I think upon the vastness of the work and urgent necessity for workers and the few there are engaged in this work, which is deserving the confidence and energy of the entire sisterhood of the church, I wonder why it is. I think we cannot be too energetic in trying to impress upon the minds of the young the necessity of moral and social purity. I am heart and soul with you in the great work that you have undertaken. Have worked whenever and wherever opportunity admitted and have been blessed in so doing. Every effort in the right direction is like "bread cast upon the waters." Let us so work that eternal life may be ours to enjoy. M. A. J.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

SR. SOPHIA WIGHT writes from Beeville, Texas:—

"Before Christmas I knit mittens for Santa Claus and the money received I sent for a picture of the Gospel Boat and framed it to draw people to talk on the gospel instead of gossip. Now when we received the Leaves with the voyage in it, it found its way into places where our literature has never been, and when through reading that it calls for more. So the good work goes on, and the Evanelia is not only doing her work on the great deep, but on land also. The work moves on slowly but steadily, and we are rejoicing, although we feel the weakest of all."

Letter Department.

TEMPLE, Ohio, March 21.

Editors Herald:—This is the first day of spring, and I improve it by sending in a few field notes to conclude the present conference year.

On Sunday, February 2, I was at Fall River, Massachusetts. Attended the Sunday school in the morning and took part in the Book of Mormon class, Bro. John Smith being the teacher. Quite a critical examination of the text read was had. The claim of Nephi that he was constrained by the Spirit to slay Laban was a case difficult for some to reconcile with their notion of the Fatherhood of God; that he is impartial and equally interested in all of his creatures, etc. However, it never looked to the writer to be an extraordinary thing that God should authorize the killing of a mean man of whom there was no hope of repentance and who stood in the way of the success and happiness of good men; especially when he has said, according to the record, that he will put such in hell. The latter is a harder case still for sentimentalists to reconcile with their notions of the essential qualities of the divine Father. The doctrine, however, that "the wicked shall not go unpunished" seems to be essential and sound.

The missionary in charge preached at eleven a. m., and at 7:30 p. m., to attentive audiences, the larger being present at night, Bro. John Smith, the president of the branch, aiding in the services. The afternoon was spent in a sacrament and prayer service. Bro. Smith and the writer in charge. Quite an interest was manifest in these services, some making very strong avowals in favor of the faith.

Monday evening, the 3d, was the time for the regular business meeting. The question of dividing the branch was pending, which had been referred by the district conference to the missionary in charge for consideration and decision. During the day the missionary in charge busied himself in talking up the matter with some of those interested in the movement for a division, and they concluded that under the circumstances it was inexpedient, so agreed among themselves to withdraw their petition. At evening a large number were present at the business meeting—some present who do not attend meetings very often, so said. It shows that an intense interest is taken in business meeting; and usually there is food for all. Some business was transacted before the writer went in, which when concluded, permission was granted to withdraw the pending petition, which was done by Bro. Samuel W. Ashton speaking for those interested in the petition. The request was granted, and on the recommendation of the missionary in charge Bro. Ashton was chosen as the first priest of the branch, and on motion Bro. Daniel Shaw was selected as the second priest. A resolution on branch books permitting a prayer service to be held once a week on the south side was repealed. But those on the south side who constitute the minority, still desired the privilege of a weekday prayer service, as they could not attend at the regular service at the church. Here was the friction point. The missionary in charge submitted a resolution intended to cover this point, which accorded all essential rights to the branch and left the minority free to act without being under any undue censorship, or menacing espionage of branch officials, should they be inclined to exercise themselves in that way, that no excuse might be left for anyone not to move in an orderly manner, so far as relates to rights and privileges. But this was in conflict with certain established notions, and the pot began to boil; heated and unnecessary speech-making was indulged in; the recommendations were not considered; the evening was growing late, and the meeting adjourned with the friction on.

Tuesday the 5th was very cold and I staid indoors, being kindly cared for at Dr. Gilbert's. Next evening I preached to a small audience in a private house at New Bedford, being hospitably entertained at Bro. John Smith's. John and I had a long talk over Massachusetts district matters; pitched right in until two o'clock next morning; fought the war over again. When done the fog and mist had perceptibly cleared away and the sky was much brighter. It is amazing what the imagination of man will do! It is a wonderful inventive faculty, especially when it has a starter to begin with. It can make miserable its possessor and wreath the world in gloom and despair, while rainbows stretch across the sky, and flower gardens, waterfalls, mountain slopes, and supernal day are in present view. True, "Man is fearfully and wonderfully made." It is encouraging to know that all possess something of an imagination. But, "What is the chaff to the wheat?"

On the 7th, after spending a few hours pleasantly at Bro. Talbot's, I went to Boston, arriving just in time to unexpectedly meet, as I had the one previous, another business meeting. This time it was at the house of Bro. F. M. Sheehy, and everything passed off pleasantly. It was a fearful night out, however. The storm king was upon sea and land and destruction and misery in his path. While in Boston I preached for the Saints; preached the funeral discourse of a sister in the suburbs of the city. In company with Bro. Sheehy visited the Peabody Institute or museum, and Prof. Putnam and others, in search of findings of archaeologists and their views about prehistoric America. Attended in the evening of the 13th at the house of Bro. Brought, a most felicitous prayer service. It was encouraging and comforting.

On the 14th the young people's society met at the house of Bro. F. M. Sheehy. The tone of the society was well exhibited by the reading of the paper edited by Sr. Ella Rich. It was instructive, amusing, interesting—"Rich." The supper, superintended by our good sister Sheehy, was bountiful. Outsiders and in met fraternally and the time passed profitably and pleasantly, ending in netting a little sum to help along the expenses.

Saturday afternoon, the 16th, after listening for a half hour in Fanueil Hall, to the great "Salvation Army leader," Bro. Booth, I went to Providence, Rhode Island, and was kindly received by our urbane brother, George H. Gates, young Miss Gates having arrived just a few days before, and was the center of attraction; Sr. Gates doing nicely under the sympathy and care administered by kind and generous hands.

Next day was pleasant and there was a large turnout to the morning and evening services. Fine showing of young people; also the middle aged and aged were there. The Sunday school seemed to be up to standard; Bro. George Yerrington and other younger aids up to the front. Bro. E. O. Toombs, branch president, assisted in the services of the day. The meetings took a very happy and satisfactory turn, and the day closed with a feeling enjoyed seemingly by all, that "It is good to be a Saint in latter days." Sr. Ora Bishop and mother made the writer very welcome at their home, to a Monday meal, a consideration not to be slightly passed by in the world's conflict for the "survival of the fittest." Next day I dined with Sr. Florence Oakly and brother. The young people are moving out in a very commendable way to active success. Florence makes an excellent house manager. Called on Bro. Toombs in the afternoon, and at evening met the branch officers and talked over church matters. On Tuesday I called on Sr. F. A. Potter and daughter and passed a half hour pleasantly. The little young granddaughter was a chief attraction to the home. During the day I called on Srs. Grimwood and Lotie Brown, met with Bro. George Robley and others, and arrived in Fall River at a late hour, struck pretty hard with the lagrippe. Before going to bed I bathed my feet in hot water, yes hot! drank some hot lemonade, took something which looked something like a toy cart wheel, prescribed by Dr. Gilbert, and next morning I was up, and in company with Bro. Sheehy, returned to New Bedford. Arriving at Bro. John Smith's I was about off my feet again. They were just getting over the lagrippe; so knew what to do to meet our case. Sr. Esther took in the situation and proposed to fix us a dose. About this time Bro. Sheehy seemed to feel a little grippy. When ready, we took Esther's preparation. It was a settler. The writer subsided for an hour and a half on the lounge asleep, and awoke ready for evening service, still having the better of the grippe. Bro. Sheehy preached in the evening.

My time was now up for staying in Massachusetts. Boston, Little Compton, and Plainville had not been visited as was contemplated. Some of these the writer had not been in for from three to five years, and not in Fall River or Providence for some two years; so he may be pretty well relieved from sundry imputations cast at somebody by certain Herald contributors, that somebody or bodies are lying around branches, living on the fat of the land, building on others' foundations, or passing the time indifferently.

On the 23d I attended the district conference at Philadelphia. There was not a large attendance at the business sessions. Baldwin, Maryland, had the best representation. There was a sufficient number to transact the business in a satisfactory manner. The evening Sunday school entertainment brought out a hall full, however, and the entertainment was made successful under the skillful management of Srs. Hull, Copeland, Christie, Brn. Trexler, Bacon, etc. Mr. Howard Fraley, elocutionist, acquitted himself well in the pieces he rendered, showing skill and culture, also Mr. Charles Smith, adept at picking the strings of the banjo, and Mr. Jacob Rupetiers as the linen peddler. All rendered good service to the enjoyment of the evening.

Then there was upon the program, Miss May Way, Miss Lizzie Trexler, Miss Laura Christie, Miss Sallie Louis, Miss Ruth Cobb—Ruth is a daisy in her department, from our own Iowa,—Misses Kate and Daisy Cameron, Mr. Thomas Peacock, and others whose names were not secured; all of whom presented themselves most interestingly, as did the doll drill, which, like babies, is always captivating. Last but not least our good Quaker collaborer, Bro. A. H. Parsons, rather beat himself in delivering his telling speech, all, I suppose, because he was in Philadelphia. The entertainment was a success.

Sunday following the writer preached morning and evening, tarrying over the afternoon at Bro. Asa Copeland's. Bro. Parsons and many others attended the funeral of Sr. Stone out of the city in the afternoon, Bro. Parsons preaching the discourse. At evening the conference adjourned to meet in Baldwin, Maryland, at its next session. The writer and Bro. Thomas Lester were kindly cared for at Sr. Cameron's while in the city. She still abides a staunch member of the faith.

March 9 I arrived home, via Brooklyn and Central New York, to find the house quarantined from what is pronounced to be scarlet fever, and three of the children just passing through the last stages of something that showed it had a pretty good grip on them at least. They have been improving up to date, but the quarantine is on.

HUTCHINSON, Col., March 21.

Editors Herald:—The debate between Elder F. J. Chatburn and Elder G. W. Admire, of the Church of God, closed on the 10th inst. There were eight sessions in all, three on each of the first two propositions, and two on the last. The propositions were as follows:—

1. Man is wholly mortal and unconscious between death and the resurrection; Elder Admire affirms, Elder Chatburn denies.

2. Sunday is the Christian Sabbath or Lord's day, and is taught in the Bible as binding upon mankind; F. J. Chatburn affirms, G. W. Admire denies.

3. The Church of God which I, G. W. Admire, represent, is identical with the Apostolic Church in organization, doctrine, faith, and practice. G. W. Admire affirms, F. J. Chatburn denies.

The result of the debate was a complete victory for Bro. Chatburn. I do not see how any person can still persist in argument against the truth after it was made so plain as Bro. Chatburn made it. The Rev. Mr. Admire would read, and punctuate, and twist the Scriptures to suit his position and then exhort the audience to be careful how they read the Scriptures, and to not take the commandments of men for the commandments of God. He would seem to be so humble that some thought he really was sincere in the effort he was making.

When Bro. Chatburn was called to the stand he would come forward in meekness and also that holy boldness that characterizes the children of God when the Holy Ghost is upon them. He would refute all the arguments of his opponent, tell two or three anecdotes to show his opponent's ridiculous positions and logic in about fifteen minutes, and use the remainder of his time (fifteen minutes) teaching as one having authority. The audience were either laughing heartily at Bro. Chatburn's opponent or listening perfectly spellbound to the beautiful and convincing truths of the restored gospel.

The people turned out fairly well at the beginning of the debate, and during the last four or five sessions the house was filled to overflowing. I believe the impressions made by Bro. Chatburn's arguments will be lasting.

There has been a great deal of deep-seated prejudice removed. It has been said by persons outside of the church that Mr. Chatburn and his good wife have done more to unite the people socially in the short time they have been here than all that have been here before them. The Saints all agree with me they are the right people in the right place. They have such an influence over the young people that it must result in good. It is the prayer of every Saint in this branch that the Twelve will continue Bro. Chatburn in this mission. I candidly think it would be a great injury to the work here if he should be removed at present.

The writer had the honor of acting as chairman of the debate. Bro. James Kemp was moderator for Bro. Chatburn, and Mr. James Scofield for Elder Admire.

Respectfully,
P. L. CASE.

Editors Herald:—On September 2, 1894, we began a series of meetings in Fairview school-house, nine miles northeast of El Reno, and with the assistance of Brn. R. M. Maloney, T. J. Smith, S. Butler, and George Montague. We have held meetings since with increasing interest, resulting in December in five baptisms, and each succeeding meeting enlisting new interest and encircling a broader area. At first this produced no unusual commotion, but when the nature of the malady (?) was learned, sectarians "raged" and the pious ones imagined and said "vain things."

In due time, a protracted meeting was begun by the M. E's, and two weeks were spent without any visible results, only that the people were indifferent to their appeals, perhaps because they had had meat which they knew not of. The writer was present at one of these meetings, and in a conversation with the minister, Rev. Hendrickson, was challenged and the following propositions agreed to:—

1. The Church of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the New Testament Church in organization, doctrine, and practice.

2. The Articles of Religion of the M. E. Church are in harmony with the Scriptures.

The time was set for March 5. Bro. J. D. Erwin was on hand to do battle for the truth, and opened the ball, setting forth a summary of our faith from the Epitome. It had been well advertised, and the house was inadequate to accommodate the crowds. Attention was called to the peculiarities of the New Testament Church, as to organization, doctrine, also the apostasy, and restoration by the angel.

Rev. H. did not offer any argument to refute organization, and acknowledged the laying on of hands, but refuted Joseph Smith's claim to angelic visitation with the statement, "I don't believe it." His main fight was on the object of baptism. His positions were, baptism was not "for the remission of sins; was an outward sign of inward grace; a symbol of spiritual cleansing; John's baptism was not Christian, was not for the remission of sins; Christ was baptized preparatory to his anointing and receiving the priesthood, but his baptism neither partook of the nature of baptism nor Christian baptism.

These objections were ably met and the proposition sustained in every particular, "a complete victory for the cause," was the verdict of the outsiders and of some of the Methodists.

On the second proposition he relished on baptism, and tried to sustain infant baptism, claiming it was practiced in lieu of circumcision. This position need only be referred to to be refuted. He claimed faith the only means of justification, and said by it only we entered the body of Christ. He was invited to read: "By one spirit are we all baptized into one body." The god of the "Discipline" was weighed in the balance of truth and reason and shown to be nothing, as he is there represented—without body or parts.

Bro. Erwin urged twenty objections against the M. E. Church which were never answered. Both disputants were kind and gentlemanly, and a good feeling prevailed throughout. However, the M. E. brought his bottle of poison and asked Bro. Erwin to prove to him that Christ told the truth in Mark 16: 17, 18. Our cause gained from the beginning and we look to reap the fruits in the near future. The Book of Mormon will be discussed four nights, beginning March 25, after which we start for General Conference.

This is a ripe field and we need six missionaries this year to meet the needs. Let us have them, and we'll shake Babylon to the center, and liberate her captives. Bro. Erwin is preaching at the Head schoolhouse, and Bro. Montague and I are at Bro. T. P. Powell's, fourteen miles west of El Reno.

Editors Herald:—Leaving home the last day of January for my field, a delay of an unlooked for nature occurred; but the time intervening was occupied in St. Joseph, where a very pleasant time was had with the Saints resident there.

Having been billed to commence operation in Woodbine the night of February 1, but failing to arrive until the 5th, it was found that that "old war horse," Bro. C. Derry, had filled the breach in his usual forcible and logical manner, and had given general satisfaction; and while it cannot be said of him that his "eye is not dimmed," yet his zeal and energy are still with holy ardor fired. While he remained in the place he continued a willing assistance. The meetings were kept up throughout the month with the exception of two nights, and, as previously reported, two were baptized. Never was the power of the Holy Spirit more marked individually than on some occasions of these services. The entire audience seemed to "feel the thrilling touch of the Spirit, filling them with holy fire," while the preacher seemed almost lifted from his feet. One lady, a non-member, testified on one occasion that she saw a bright light encircling the preacher's head. She brought her clothes for baptism but was so delayed by a nephew breaking his arm that she did not reach the place till the others had been baptized, and failed to make her desires known as a consequence.

We changed the base of operations to Jones' schoolhouse, where on every occasion a packed house and rapt attention denoted the interest there. The building of a church was mooted and about three hundred dollars almost immediately promised for such purpose. Some are, by their own acknowledgement, convinced; why they delayed obedience is unknown. This place should be specially worked. The efforts at Logan were attended with much discouragement, but the prospects were brightening, and had it not been that sickness in the family called me home, it is believed that a good interest would have been created. Taken all in all the writer has never seen a time when God stood by him to a more marked degree.

Almost every vestige of sickness has now left our boy. In bonds,

Editors Herald:—Bro. J. H. Lake came here on the 9th and preached twice on the 10th, also on Monday and Tuesday evenings. The people turned out better and seemed more interested than they have been for some time; in fact, some say they never heard the like before. He left for Chatham on Wednesday morning, and on Wednesday evening a large number of the Saints and friends of the Chatham branch, and most of the officers of the Chatham district, met in the Saints' hall to bid the brother good-bye, and also in behalf of the district to present him with a fountain pen as a slight token of respect and esteem. Bro. Samuel Brown was in charge of the meeting; Bro. J. H. Tyrrell made the presentation speech, and the writer read the address. It was intended to have Bro. George Green make the presentation but he did not arrive in time. He and Bro. J. J. Cornish came in a few minutes late and the address was read again for their benefit and others that came in about the same time. The address was as follows:—

"CHATHAM, Ont., March 13, 1895.

"ELDER J. H. LAKE,

"President of the Canada Mission,

"Dear Bro.:—It becomes our pleasant duty in behalf of the Saints and friends of the Chatham district, some of whom are assembled here, to remind you that we are not forgetful of the fact that you are going to leave us, and that you have been sent here by the church to take charge of the Canada mission for the past twelve years or more. For years it has been our privilege to know you as a minister of the gospel, and of the sacrifices you have made of the comforts of home and friends for the promulgation of the restored gospel; also the scoffs and frowns of the world you have endured for the salvation of your fellow men, to present to them the way of life. We feel assured your aim was mankind to bless. The timely counsel and instructions we have received from you shall be of great value to us both here and hereafter, and we are assured God has blessed you with his Holy Spirit both in the gifts of the gospel and in breaking the bread of life to us and the world. And further, we are assured that you have been faithful in the discharge of your duty and that you are worthy of the name of an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. Hoping that your life may be spared many years in usefulness to the church, and to the glory of God, and that you may live to be like a shock of corn ready for the garner.

"Recollecting the pleasant years made agreeable through your acquaintance, your friends herewith present to you this fountain pen (here the Bishop's agent presented Bro. Lake with the pen) and desire your acceptance of the same. This gift though small is a memorial of twelve years or more of missionary work with us, and is presented as a token of the high esteem in which you are held by the Saints and friends of this district. May it remind you of the fountain of God's storehouse, which is full of blessings for the faithful, and the gold bands that surround each end of the same of the crown the faithful receive from our heavenly Father in the sweet bye and bye when he shall say, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.' As you are about to leave us to attend the General Conference, we know not whether you will be returned; but if it is the will of our heavenly Father and the General Conference so directs we would be pleased and glad that you should be returned to this mission. If otherwise, we submit to the will of him who doeth all things well and say, Thy will be done, O God.

"Signed in behalf of the Chatham district.

"GEORGE GREEN, Pres.

"RICHARD COBURN, Clerk."

In reply Bro. Lake said he was taken by surprise, but was comforted in thought of being remembered by the Saints. He said he was of a frank nature, but did not like flattery, and did not think the Saints intended to flatter him. He had been in the church thirty-nine years, and passed through many trials, and at times had endured much for the cause, but hoped he would never see the day—neither in this world nor the world to come—that he would regret the step he had taken when he obeyed the gospel. He hoped to be like Ruth of old who said, "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." He thanked the Saints for the gift they had presented him, and hoped to always retain it in memory of the Saints and friends of this district; not because of its intrinsic value, but as a reminder of the esteem and respect they had for him. He said he felt at home with the Saints of the Canada mission, as Canada was the first country he could remember anything about, and the first mission he took from the church was to the Dominion of Canada, and he came on the apostolic plan, and could bear testimony that God verified his word to him, as he did not lack for anything. If God's word had failed him then it might have weakened his faith at that time in this work. He said he was now on his way to the General Conference, and could not say whether he would be returned here again, but if he was would endeavor to do what he considered for the best interests of the work in the mission. The above is a summary of his remarks.

Short addresses were then made by Brn. Green, Brown, Tyrrell, and the writer, Bro. Green in particular, stating that he found Bro. Lake a good traveling companion and a faithful laborer. A few minutes after eight o'clock hymn 1063 was sung, and Bro. Lake shook hands with Saints and left to catch the train, Brn. Tyrrell and Brown accompanying him to the station. The pen presented to him was a fine, large one. After he left Bro. Cornish addressed the Saints and friends present, telling them his experience in the work, also relating how God had blessed his labors and manifested his power to the convincing of the honest in heart. All present enjoyed the address. Bro. Cornish came here and preached on Thursday night to a fair congregation. Some were quite interested and said they never heard anything like it before. He left on Friday morning for Michigan. We should have been pleased to have had him stay longer, but he had appointments out and could not.

DESELM, Ill., March 22.

Editors Herald:—During the month of February Bro. F. G. Pitt and I held meetings in the Saints' chapel at Sandwich. We were greeted with fairly good crowds each night, and I think there was a better interest than I have ever seen there before. There were no additions, but I feel confident the effort was not in vain. I find in Bro. Pitt an excellent presiding officer, a good counselor, and a genial companion. His earnestness and plain, practical talk please the people everywhere. I shall have no objection if my lot is cast in the field with him another year.

From Sandwich I went to Aurora where the brethren tried to get an opening for me, but the way seemed closed, so I guess if we get a hearing there it will be by means of the district tent. This district has a number of large cities, in which I would like to see the gospel preached. By a little calculation I find that this district embraces about fifteen cities with a population of over five thousand inhabitants, some of them being much over that. When I think that in only a few of them has the sound of the gospel been heard at all, it seems that it will be a long time before they are brought in contact with the latter-day work.

The work in Chicago occupies a large part of Bro. Pitt's time. It ought to have his whole time. It therefore leaves me as the only man now at liberty to travel continually in the district. Ever since I have been here we have been so crippled for want of active ministers that we have been kept quite busy trying to hold the ground we already had, so opening up new places has been necessarily much slower than it might have been had we been better supplied with local talent.

There are many fields much more promising to a young missionary than this, but I am willing to stay here and "fight it out on this line" if it takes a lifetime.

On the 9th inst. I came to this place in answer to an urgent call from Bro. Joseph L. Kahler, who had secured the use of the town hall and made arrangements for meetings. On Sunday the 10th we opened fire, using for a subject, the character of God, as per bills Bro. Kahler had posted. Prejudice was running high, but the audience was quite large and very attentive. The breadth of our platform and the liberality of our views have pleased the people from the first. They could plainly see that it was an advanced light. Each evening of last week the hall was well filled with eager listeners, and I was wonderfully blessed by the Spirit in presenting the grandeur of the restored gospel. Even the Methodist minister said from his pulpit that he could say amen to all my sermons he had heard, and he was there nearly every night. The good feeling of the people was strongly voiced last night by their giving a social for my benefit at the home of Mr. Wesley Shreffler. Quite a large crowd was present, and this morning I was presented with eleven dollars, which I wish to inform your readers was appreciated to the full extent. Considering that I came here a stranger in a place where the gospel had never been preached before, and only one Saint for several miles around, caused me to appreciate this kindness the more. My heart swells with gratitude to God, and my eyes fill with tears as I think of the promise that his angels should go before us to "prepare the way."

Since coming here I have been stopping at the hospitable home of Mr. J. C. Calkins. Both him and his noble wife shall ever have a warm place in my heart for their many acts of kindness toward me. They have surely proven good Samaritans to me and I pray that God's blessing may abide with them. I shall hold forth here awhile yet. I have now held about twenty meetings here, but I find it takes several sermons to acquaint the people with our faith. There have been no requests for baptism yet, but the people are quite generally agreed that they never heard it on this wise before. Zion prospers; all is well.

Yours in the conflict,

JOHN B. ROUSH.

EL RENO, Okla., March 15.

Editors Herald:—This leaves me well and rejoicing over the battle just closed last night with Mr. Hendrickson of the M. E. Church. The doctrine of each church was examined. The people are all stirred up. The god without body or parts along with many other errors seemed to draw the fire from our M. E. brethren. My opponent, Mr. J. T. Hendrickson, is a fair scholar and resorted to his Greek; but we were able to follow him and show his weak, flimsy dodges. I was informed that he was educated for a Catholic priest; but his scholarship availed him nothing. If he made a point during the eight nights I failed to see it. I think about three hundred people attended each session and probably about four hundred the last night, I never felt better over the victory and interest. I hear that some Methodists have turned over on the better side since the debate.

My opponent challenged me for a contest on the Book of Mormon, which I accepted and will debate before leaving for General Conference. Bro. W. S. Macrae, our fine young preacher, also accepted a challenge from my opponent's moderator, Mr. Brown, which will take place sometime in the near future at another place. Bro. Macrae was my moderator in the recent debate. Mr. Hendrickson and the moderator showed their defeat at close and the M. E. people showed dissatisfaction. Bro. Macrae has done a good work in Oklahoma. Everybody seems to like him; even the dogs are friendly toward him. The preachers may not like him so well. We have some fine people here and above this place some noble Saints that stood by us in the debate, and the prospects are flattering for an ingathering soon. Bro. George Montague, our president of mission, is with us. We will labor in those parts until we go to General Conference. Bro. George Montague thinks now is the time to labor in Oklahoma and says it is a promising field.

ANNATON, Wis., March 22.

Editors Herald:—We find the Master is looking after us here as elsewhere. I have been the only one in this county since last August, with the exception of the local ministry, who are doing finely. Brn. Blackburn, Noble, Atkinson, and Houghten preach occasionally when circumstances and opportunity permit. Young Bro. Houghten was baptized last July, yet to hear him speak one would think he was a man of many years of experience. If faithful and humble I believe his power will be felt at no distant day both in the church and out.

Since New Year's I have been constantly in the field, and am too busy to leave long enough to attend General Conference. There are so many calls for preaching that I cannot fill more than half of them. We are having very fine weather now, which affords us a good hearing. My wife and I came here on the 20th inst. and expect to remain but a short time. As our work is well understood here we will put out into new fields.

I am in hearty accord with the recent article of Bro. Blair's. I am usually blessed more when opening new fields than in old ones. Old ones should not be neglected, of course, but the local officers can usually see to them. In reading Mother Smith's History I find that one time in Michigan when the sowers had raised up a number who believed they went to Joseph and had him send some one to care for them while the missionaries went into new fields.

For some time I have been intending to give to the Herald readers some of the evidences of God's existence, given in this part of the vineyard within the last year, which also proves that Latter Day Saints are his accepted worshipers. Early in August, 1894, I was called upon to administer to Sr. Orton, of Ellenboro, this State, and a few days after I received the following letter which speaks for itself:—

"ELLENBORO, Wis., August 8, 1894.

"Friend Peterson; Dear Sir:—I thought you would be pleased to hear how my wife is progressing. She is up, and dressed, and moving about the house. She has a wonderful appetite. The fact is she has not had a pain since you administered to her. You are aware that she had treatment from two of the best physicians in Grant county. She has not taken any medicine since you administered to her.

There are five good, responsible witnesses that know that this healing was done. You are well aware that I had no faith in your manner of healing; but seeing is believing. I am now satisfied that you are called of God to heal the sick. . . .

"Yours respectfully,

"JAMES C. ORTON."

This letter came unsolicited, and its author was at the time of the writing a staunch infidel. He is now and has been town clerk for twenty-two years. Though his town is very largely Republican and Mr. Orton is a Democrat, yet his honesty and ability have won him the support of the opposite party. Besides being town clerk for so long he has been justice of the peace for a number of years, and still holds that position. I have been thinking of getting the sworn testimony of Mr. Orton and the other four, but suppose this will be sufficient.

A case similar to the above occurred in the same vicinity this winter. A lady, not a member of the church, a few days after the birth of her child got a backset and gradually grew worse and worse for six weeks, and finally when told by the doctor that her chances of life were few, sent for me, and we besought the Lord in her behalf and administered to her. About an hour afterward she called me to her bedside and with tears in her eyes, thanked the Master for relief. In a few days she was doing her own work.

The citizens of this country were treated to a sign of the last days in the heavens. Between eight and ten o'clock in the morning, March 14, the sun appeared with two rings around it and two bright spots over on either side. Just outside of these were two half moons much larger than the sun and another just over the sun, only not so far away as the other two. Far to the northeast and far to the southwest were two bright sundogs and a streak running horizontally from them to the half moons on either side of the sun. Besides this, in the extreme northeast and extreme southwest appeared a half rainbow, each bending outward. The sky was perfectly clear and the extra moons and streaks made the day unusually bright. I did not see the phenomenon myself but remember distinctly that I had to move from place to place in the room to get a dark corner to read in, as the light was so bright. Many saw it, and many did not see it; but the witnesses in its favor are reliable, so much so that I believe them.

We go from here to a schoolhouse a few miles north. Lillie is quite a help in the music. We are both well and anxious to be about the Master's business. The Saints are getting along nicely. The work is solidly founded and growing slowly but surely.

FOREST, Ont., March 25.

Editors Herald:—This is almost a new field, in which the gospel plow has as yet made little visible impression. We, a family of four, received the gospel in Michigan; and since then God in his wisdom has directed us here. We are desirous of seeing the work advance and our friends brought to an enjoyment of the blessings found in obedience to the "perfect law of liberty." We will gladly render reasonable assistance to a missionary at any time, though we think the winter the best time for labor. We hope the missionary in charge of the Canada mission the coming conference year will not overlook us.

We are assured by the Spirit that the heavenly Father has a people here, and trust that the efforts that have been made are like bread cast upon the waters which, though lost to view for a time, may be seen after many days. Seed has been sown by Brn. Bare, Brown, Hampshire, Miller, and Blackmore. I think that if some elder filled with the Spirit should come, and come to stay, and sow more, giving all a good, thorough watering, a bounteous harvest would be the result. I have little faith in the result of sermons that are few and far between.

It is nearly five years since I complied with the naturalization laws of the kingdom of God under the administration of Elder W. J. Smith, and thanks to the God of heaven I have not yet been exiled. How wonderful are the orderings of God's providence! As I review my past life, as far as I can remember, I am led to acknowledge the guiding hand of him who rules the universe. I cannot say I have progressed as rapidly as I might if more obedient, but since it is impossible to recall the past I desire to go on unto perfection. I belonged to the Apple-gate branch in Michigan, where I have enjoyed many blessings.

The nearest branch to us is the Petrolea branch which is about twenty-five miles distant. It is composed, I believe, of faithful Saints, and God truly blesses them.

Yours in bonds,

R. H. HUSTON.

CARE IN ORDAINING.

"LAY hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins."—1 Tim. 5:22.

The school of experience is said to be a dear one, but the lessons learned in it are often of great value. In looking over the history of the latter-day work on the Pacific slope, I can call to mind over half a hundred men who have been ordained to the office of elder, but the percentage of those who have magnified the office, is so small that I am led to inquire, in the language of the Master, "But where are the nine?" (Luke 17:17.) Such a host of elders have been reported from this mission that one not informed would think we were well supplied with gospel workers; but the truth is, we have been greatly in need of help from abroad to carry on the work on this coast.

The truth is that either a misunderstanding or disregard of the instructions given in Doctrine and Covenants 17:16 has been a clog in the wheel of the church on the Pacific coast. Some of our first missionaries with the sanction of the word to ordain when there was no branch that a vote could be taken, ordained nearly all the men that were willing to be ordained, and as a rule the office of elder was the one sought.

The first meeting the writer ever attended was a regular ordination meeting, so to speak; for the elder that had the meeting in charge called out, "Now, all who wish to be ordained to the office of elder please rise to your feet," and, of course, several rose up and were ordained; but I never knew of them honoring their calling. It is a fact that a great percentage—and I don't know but a majority—of the men that came into the church at first on this coast were ordained to be elders; and after branches were organized and a vote was taken the matter was but little better, for many were and some still are voted into office or voted to be ordained to office without reference to their ability, qualifications, or willingness to "thrust in their sickles." And I take it that a branch that votes for such an ordination is doing not only the church an injury, but also a great injury to the one ordained.

The Lord told us in 1865 that many elders had been ordained who had come under his condemnation because they had neglected to lift up their voices in his cause, and for such there was "tribulation and anguish." So any branch that will vote for a man to be ordained without carefully considering the possibility of such a one taking the field in the line of duty at once, is voting tribulation and anguish upon such as take the office; and any man who will seek or receive the office that is not in condition to use it for the upbuilding of the church, proves by his accepting of it that he is not worthy of it.

When we consider the matter we see that it is a most serious thing, and the seriousness of it will be magnified when we stand before the great Judge and are called upon to answer for our stewardship. We are very expert in quoting the Scriptures to the world to justify our claim to divine revelation; viz.,

No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.—Heb. 5:4.

Not a great while ago a person said to me, "Don't you think God made rather a poor choice when he called Bro. A. and Bro. B?" What a terrible rebuke for a sensitive nature, and yet how appropriate the inquiry! If God called them, I must say I am doubtful of the call of many if we are to judge the tree by the fruits. But even if they are called, they are yet insecure; for I read in Doctrine and Covenants, page 288,

There has been a day of calling, but the time has come for a day of choosing; and let those be chosen who are worthy.

I may say that although condemnation awaits those that have neglected to lift up their voice, yet I believe that some have lifted up their voices when it would have been much better for the church if they had kept silent, because of their great lack of wisdom.

The Lord has told us that "he that is slothful . . . and learns not his duty shall not be counted worthy to stand;" and now if we would know our duty and the necessary qualifications for the work, we can find it in Doctrine and Covenants, section 3. Read and ponder it, ye young elders who are anxious for position in God's church, and do not forget that the eyes of the Almighty are over the work.

There are many [elders] called but few are chosen, and why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set upon things of the world and are aspiring to the honors of men; they do not learn the lesson that the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principle of righteousness.—Times and Seasons, pp. 131, 132.

I remember hearing a letter read, received by a missionary on this coast from the First Presidency, and I often regret that such sentiments should be like the flower the poet speaks of, to "waste its sweetness on the desert air;" not but what we have an abundance in the books to guide us in these matters, but we sometimes think we want more than "Moses and the prophets." As the letter to which I refer was written more than a quarter of a century ago I will not attempt to give the exact words, but the sentiment was about this: that the priesthood is not given to aid men in working their farms, or at their benches; but it was given that they might go forth in the name of the Lord to build up his kingdom, and that none should be ordained unless they were in a condition to go into the Lord's vineyard, or were needed as local or branch officers. O what a glorious truth; and O that it had been engraved on every Latter Day Saint pulpit.

I have attended conference when there were a host of elders present who had never done one thing in the way of gospel work for the entire year; but when the conference convened were right on hand to tell the people just how the work ought to be done; and of course they must be heard—they were elders, and if they did get wrong, no one was at liberty to "rebuke" "an elder."

It is such an important piece of work, this laying hands on men to set them apart to a sacred office, that it should not be done suddenly or in haste, and we should, when called upon to vote, be careful to inquire into the needs of the church and the qualifications of the candidate. If he is to go out into the world, let us be sure that he is called and that he exhibits the true qualifications, as are required in Doctrine and Covenants section 3. Then we simply raise our hands manifesting that we will sustain him in the place that God has called him. And if he is to be ordained to be a branch officer, let us see to it first that the branch needs such an officer, and next that he is not one of those cold, stiff individuals who repels the people from, rather than draws them to him; for we should remember that he is supposed to represent the church, and the opinion formed of him will be the opinion of the church, and the best defense that such could make for the church would be in keeping silent.

It is quite common to hear some of these inexperienced young men who have been voted into an ordination, telling people "I'm an elder; yes, I'm an elder;" and if such a one is reproved, the one so doing is answered with "Rebuke not an elder," etc. It would be well for such to learn that that saying has no reference to an ecclesiastical officer but to old people, old women as well as old men.

My prayer is that those who are now coming to the front may profit by the experience of those who now must necessarily take a back seat, and that when ordinations take place they be in harmony with God's law, so that none may be made partakers of the other man's sins by laying on hands suddenly to ordain; and that when we preach that God calls the ministry that we can produce men both of wisdom and integrity in proof of it.

SAN JOSE, Cal., January 16., 1895.

DOCTOR DOWIE.

DOCTOR DOWIE has created somewhat of a sensation in this city by advertising himself as a "divine healer." During the World's Fair he erected a frame meetinghouse near the fair grounds. Across the front of this building in large letters is the following inscription: "International Divine Healing Association." Along the side of the building in large letters is inscribed, "Zion Tabernacle."

He attracted large numbers during the fair, and great crowds still continue to come. He has now three homes, where the sick are cared for; homes numbers 1, 2, and 3, besides a good printing plant where is issued a weekly paper entitled Leaves of Healing. In this he advertises his homes, his tabernacle, and services, by attractive pictures; also a detailed account of the many cures which he claims to have wrought through prayer and the laying on of hands, some of them very marvelous indeed.

Among those he claims to have healed are some who were near death with consumption, and cripples who had not been able to walk for years. Some had hip disease and some spinal trouble,—deformed and diseased people of all descriptions, according to published accounts, some coming hundreds of miles, to be cured and return home well.

We have received letters from different places asking us, "What about this man? is he a fraud, or is he doing what he professes?"

To answer these questions is the purpose of this communication.

In company with a brother we visited the tabernacle during one of the services. The building, we judge, would seat five hundred people or more.

Nearly every seat was occupied. Dr. Dowie is a rather heavy-set, robust man, of perhaps fifty or sixty years of age, of Scotch descent, a very positive and animated speaker, and has a good delivery. The speaker's platform reaches nearly the entire width of the building, and while preaching he marches up and down this platform in the most vigorous fashion. He says that in this way he gets his exercise. He is very positive in his statements and to some quite offensive. A favorite term applied to those who use tobacco, or drink whisky is "stink pots." He impressed the writer favorably as teaching the principle of repentance, though perhaps a little harsh. On the wall back of the platform are hung a large number of crutches and medical appliances of various descriptions, numbering perhaps nearly one hundred, which he claims to have "captured from the enemy." A large number of sick people were present, so that when the time came for them to enter another room to be administered to they crowded each other so that some were in danger of getting hurt and had to be sharply admonished "to not crowd so." We understood that about two hundred were admitted each day. One lady testified while we were present that she was healed; others testified that they were getting better daily. Were they healed? We do not know.

It is very easy to cry "fraud," and to ascribe all miracles to the Devil; but Saints ought to practice what they preach, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." We have never been permitted to talk personally with any who have been healed; but we have heard of some, from reliable sources, too, who left claiming they were healed, and left their crutches behind them; but who when they were seen were in need of their crutches as much as ever. One of these we understand is living at, or near De Kalb, Illinois. It hardly seems possible, however, that such an interest could be maintained if all the purported remarkable cures were false.

In order to learn all we could therefore, we decided to visit the "home," though we had little hope of seeing the doctor himself. Accordingly, on Saturday, March 9, Bro. I. L. Rogers and the writer started out together and called at Home No. 1. We inquired for Mr. Dowie and were informed by the doorkeeper that he was busy administering to the sick, and that it would hardly be possible to see him personally, and were directed to Home No. 3, to a representative of the Doctor's, who would be pleased to receive us. While we were talking, however, Mrs. Dowie entered and we were introduced to her. We told her we were Latter Day Saints and that our object was to obtain what information we could concerning this healing power, etc. Upon hearing this she seemed to be quite anxious that we should see the doctor, who she intimated was favorably impressed with much of our doctrine; and so extended to us an invitation to dine with them, this being the only leisure time the Doctor would have.

We were shown into his private office and waited something more than an hour. During this time I should think that between twenty and thirty people came and departed in various conditions of wretchedness, some being led, some wheeled in chairs, some barely able to walk. Finally the Doctor himself came in. He greeted us cordially, and after learning who we were, was quite willing to talk, and answered our questions frankly. He said he had met some of the Mormons in Utah and was favorably impressed with much of their doctrine. We explained the difference between the two churches, which difference he was not altogether ignorant of, as we discovered as our conversation continued; and to our surprise we found he believes in much of the gospel as we do. We would like to give the conversation entire, but have to boil it down for lack of space. Suffice it to say that in answer to our questions he said he believed it is necessary before Christ comes that the church should be divinely organized the same as when Christ left it, with apostles, prophets, etc., which can only be done by direct revelation from God. He believes in present revelation, and in the manifestations of the Spirit as recorded in the first chapter of 1 Corinthians. When I named the six principles of the doctrine of Christ he said no fault could be found with them as stated, only he insisted upon repentance first, faith second; but I take it, he had reference to healing faith.

He claimed that a person must consecrate himself to God before he could reasonably expect to be healed, and that the reason some are not healed is because they do not so consecrate themselves. When I asked him if he was aware that the very divine institution he was looking for was now upon the earth, he answered, "I do not know; I am not prepared to say that your church at Lamoni is the true church." I replied that I did not expect him to do so till he knew more about it. He asked for some of our reading matter; said he had the Book of Mormon; and manifested a desire to know more about our work. Both he and his wife asked if we baptized for the dead. I answered that we did not, that this ordinance spoken of by Paul was not required till God shall authorize it, and when he authorized its performance he would doubtless enlighten us more concerning it, when we would know more about it.

In answer as to his own call to the work he claims that God called him to the work he is doing, years ago, and that God blessed him in it. He recognized the lack of authority as well as lack of power in the other churches, hence refused to be ordained into any denomination. He recognizes none of them as churches of Christ.

He believes himself to be of the literal seed of Israel and claims to have evidence to that effect.

I should think that nearly fifty persons sat down to dinner at a long dining table, the doctor sitting at the head, his wife at the opposite end. A brief blessing was asked upon the food by the Doctor. The repast was all that could be asked for. A spirit of order and neatness was everywhere manifest. Nothing is charged for healing, but at these homes parties are charged for board and lodging.

In conclusion will say, that if Doctor Dowie is the base impostor that some claim he is, I have not yet discovered the evidence of it, therefore cannot denounce him as such, and would rather believe that he is honest in heart, and led by a portion of God's Spirit to reach a class that we may not be able to reach at present. I cannot believe that the Almighty is so indifferent to earth's millions that he hears and answers none but the few Saints he has on earth. I would rather believe he works in a thousand ways that we know not of to bring about his grand purposes. It becomes us, therefore, to do the work assigned us, and not be too quick to condemn everything else as of the Devil.

One thing is certain, if Doctor Dowie is honest in heart he will accept the truth when he understands it; and not until he rejects it will God condemn him; therefore we should not. Time will tell what he is, also what power he possesses. One thing that appeared a little inconsistent was his rejection of all of nature's remedies in case of sickness. He regards all disease of the Devil. He said if he was going to die he would want God to heal him before he died. Yet he is by no means a crank, though he may have some cranky notions. He is an educated and intelligent man. Though brief, our visit was a very pleasant one. We could not have been treated more cordially. We shall await future developments.

FORSTER.

Conference convened at Masonic hall, Balmain (contiguous to Sydney), December 29 and 30, 1894; C. A. Butterworth president, C. S. McLaren secretary. Branch reports: Tuncurry 77, Nambucca 56, Wallsend 43, Sydney 29, Hamilton 16. Priesthood reporting: Elders C. A. Butterworth, J. Kaler, G. R. Wells, J. Wright, H. Broadway, E. J. Haworth, C. A. A resolution from the Forster branch changing its name to Tuncurry branch was duly indorsed. Change on record of scattered members for past year, 2 baptisms, 3 deaths. J. F. Burton and J. W. Wight were appointed delegates to represent this district at General Conference, 1895. Resolved that our next district conference be held at Hamilton, on the last Saturday and Sunday of 1895. Considerable indignation was felt by branch delegates at the action of the conference resolving to determine the question as to where next conference be held—by the individual vote only of the members present, thus nullifying the delegation vote and practically depriving branches of due representation in the matter. This, too, in presence of the fact that this conference had already formally allotted said delegates the representative number of votes, nor was any other form of voting than this (delegate) contemplated until it was found that had the motion in question been decided thereby, the result would inevitably have been different to that otherwise obtained. In justice to the president, let me add that the action received no sympathy from him. The following district officers were appointed and sustained; viz., president, G. R. Wells; vice president, H. Broadway; secretary, C. S. McLaren; assistant, G. Lewis; Bishop's agent, J. Wright. Resolved that J. Kaler, R. Ellis, and H. Broadway constitute a committee to consider the advisability of dividing the present district into two districts (with a view to facilitating conference purposes), and that said committee report concerning same, at our next district conference. Preaching, prayer, and sacrament meetings were held, the former being well patronized by outsiders, and a good and enjoyable time generally obtained. The speakers were H. Broadway, J. Kaler, and C. A. Butterworth. Three were baptized during conference.

RAILWAY RATES TO CONFERENCE.

On the evening of March 26 the following was received from Mr. B. D. Caldwell, Chairman of the Western Passenger Committee:—

"Referring to previous correspondence with respect to reduced rates for the meeting of the Reorganized Church, to be held at Independence, Missouri, April 3-18:—

"We now find ourselves in position to announce a rate of fare and one third on the certificate plan, from points in the territory of the Eastern Committee, this reduction to apply only on certificates issued with tickets sold for going passage on four days. As you are, undoubtedly, better able to say what four days will be most acceptable to your people for the sale of going tickets we would be glad to have you wire us, suggesting the days most likely to accommodate the largest number. On receipt of this information we will at once complete arrangements on that basis."

On consultation with Brn. W. W. Blair, E. L. Kelley, Joseph Luff, and others, it was decided that the meaning of this letter was that rates would also be given in the territory of the Western Committee, as well as east of Chicago; for rates east would be of no use to us without those also in the west. So a telegram was sent, and though the time is very short, after more than two months of correspondence in the endeavor to secure rates, we hope that the agents of all lines will be supplied with orders and blanks in time for all who need them to purchase tickets and obtain certificate receipts.

The days agreed upon were the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th, as being most likely to be used in going to conference. Therefore the Saints will have to govern themselves accordingly.

Be sure to obtain such receipts on purchase of tickets, and it will be the safest way to buy of each road you pass over, so that no trouble may arise about purchase of through return tickets, as was the case in 1893.

And, remember, that those who pass through Kansas City in going must buy tickets over the Missouri Pacific or the Alton to Independence, or the railway agent at Independence will not stamp your certificates over any road, and you will thus have to pay full fare home.

Hence do not take any of the suburban roads, either the Air Line or the Dummy Line, but take the Missouri Pacific or the Alton.

The depot of the Missouri Pacific is the nearest to the town and to the church.

ATTENTION!

Again we are under the necessity of calling your attention to instructions heretofore given, that remittances should invariably be made by post office orders, express orders, Chicago or New York drafts. These can be used at par, and there is no danger of losing your money. Several letters have been lost of late; some with money, and some with post office orders in them. The latter were recovered by applying to the post office department, and duplicate orders were issued and loss avoided. But not so with those containing money. We frequently receive bank drafts with blank indorsements which make them payable to bearer, hence it would be just as safe to send money as to send drafts, unless the indorsement makes them payable to the order of David Dancer. The office cannot be responsible for money unless it is sent as we direct. Do not send personal checks as they cannot be used at par. Justice to our interests would demand that they should be returned to the sender.

When it is necessary to have post office address changed, be sure to give your former address, as well as the one to which you wish your mail sent. Attention to this rule will cause you but little trouble, but will save us a great amount of unnecessary labor. Send the money with orders as much as possible. The charging of small items is a source of inconvenience to us, as well as a great loss to the office in the aggregate, by reason of it becoming necessary to send statements, and the neglect of some in not responding when statements are sent. We furnish catalogues on application. Keep yourselves posted in regard to prices, and aid the good work by spreading church literature among your acquaintances; in other words, let him that is warned warn his neighbor.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Eastern Michigan district.—We are nearing the close of another conference year with perhaps as much or more satisfaction than any year of our past experience so far as spiritual growth and the onward march of the gospel is concerned. There never was a more golden opportunity to reach the people in this part of Michigan with the gospel than at the present and in the near future. Hundreds of people have become interested in the last few months, and want to hear more of the truth. Shall they hear? Let every Saint in this district answer the question to him or herself as the case may be.

Saints, there is a day coming called the righteous judgment of God when he shall reckon with his people and reward them according to their work. I apprehend in that great day there will be some Saints get a golden crown set with sparkling gems on all sides, while others get simply nothing, for the reason that they have never complied with that part of God's law that will entitle them to a reward. God has intrusted the all-important matter of salvation with his people, the church, and shall we say the ministry alone are responsible? I answer, No! Whoever heard of the arms and hands of a man going out to do a work without being backed up by the body? or the legs and feet starting off to walk without being assisted by the body?

Paul says, "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." Now I wonder what he put them there for? Let Paul answer: "From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Eph. 4:16. Notice, "By that which every joint supplieth."

"What is a joint?" may be asked by the reader. It is a member of the body, and an important one, too. Paul so understood it, for he was writing to the Ephesian brethren when he used the foregoing language. Well, what is that that is to be supplied by those joints (the members)? Are all to preach? No; some are to preach, and others to assist in other ways as God has appointed. "Well," says one, "I don't quite understand just what Paul does mean in that saying of his." I will try and draw a picture of just what I understand Paul meant. Some few weeks ago I was in company with a worthy brother whom God had called to preach the gospel, and the church sent him out under general appointment; and while we were preaching the gospel every night to hundreds of eager listeners, he got a letter from his wife telling him that the provisions were nearly all gone and the worthy agent had only been able to send her five dollars to take care of herself and eight children for a month. Poor fellow! Who could imagine his feelings? His family in almost a state of starvation, and him away doing the work assigned him by the good Lord and the church. Just think of it. Joints, or members, in this district worth thousands of dollars in this world's goods, but never have paid a cent of tithing to take care of the widows and orphans while the minister is faithfully telling the gospel.

Did you ever stop and think that God's perfect law enjoins on every member of the body, preacher and all, to pay a tithe, which is a tenth, of their possessions to carry on the gospel work? Well, whether you did or not, it is so just the same. The people throughout Michigan pay two and one half per cent on their actual assessments each year, which means one tenth every four years, and they don't grumble much either, for the reason that grumbling cuts no figure in the sight of the law of Michigan.

"But," says one, "I am worth four thousand dollars, but it takes every cent of it to run my business." Beautiful! The millionaire says, "It just takes a million to run my business." So, Lord, you are out on the finance question with business men. Men that have no business don't generally have any money, so what are we to do? "But," says one, "I have always calculated to pay my tithing, but I wanted to start with a hundred dollars so it would count."

There are two kinds of people in this world that never do very much; the one has no calculation, and the other is all calculation. Now let us split the difference and adopt the following rule and see how it will work: There are about a thousand Saints in our district at the present time. Supposing each member would pay twenty-five cents tithing a month; at the end of the year they would have three dollars tithing to their credit, which would mean three thousand dollars for our little district. Stop, ye Saints that have spent so much breath in praying for the conversion of the world and the redemption of Zion, and go to work and pay one cent a day, or six cents a week, which means twenty-five cents a month, or three dollars a year, and thus answer some of the many prayers you have offered for the onward progress of the gospel. Is there a member in our district that cannot pay twenty-five cents a month? If so, let him tell me and I will tell him just how to get the money. Brethren, let us move together for the year to come and see what we can accomplish.

Yours in gospel bonds,

R. E. GRANT,

Field Missionary in Charge.

NORTH BRANCH, Michigan, March 10.

MISSIONARY REPORTS.

No reports have yet been received from some of the brethren who were appointed to the field last April; and, as their reports will now be too late for the pamphlet that is issued before conference, therefore any who have sent reports which have failed to reach me, or who have not sent reports but desire to report, let them write and their reports will be added to the minutes published after conference.

The following are the names:—

Of the Seventy, J. B. Lytle and D. L. Shinn.

Of the Elders, E. K. Evans, S. W. Tomlinson, W. H. Griffin, and Marce Sorenson.

Of the Priests, S. H. Warren and Adolphus Edwards.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE.

We the officers and members of the Manchester District Priesthood Association were deeply grieved to hear of the recent severe loss which our late missionary in charge, Apostle G. T. Griffiths, and his dear wife, have sustained in the loss of their loved ones. Our brother's intense love for his children was manifest to all when he was amongst us; indeed the young generally received a large share of his attention. We desire to say that the pulsations of the great heart of Christ, which cause the Spirit of life to circulate through every part of the "one body" are felt even in the extremities—far-off England; and as one member suffers, "all the members suffer with it." It is not the "bearded grain" alone which the "Reaper's sickle keen" cuts down, but "the flowers that grow between." We are happy to think that they are beyond the grave where sorrow and death cannot enter, in the region of eternal day.

Dear brother and sister, we offer the following words of Holy Writ for your consolation: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

We are, on behalf of the association,
 WM. R. ARMSTRONG, } Secs.
 S. F. MATHER,

DIED.

GRIMMETT.—At his home in Bloomington, Idaho, March 6, 1895, Elder John Grimmitt. He was born January 4, 1827, in England; united with the church about 1850. Was shortly afterwards ordained an elder, and did considerable preaching in England with a good degree of success, baptizing a goodly number. Having a desire to gather with the people of God he came to Utah in 1855, but became dissatisfied with church affairs there. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church April 29, 1877, in Utah. Moved to Lander, Wyoming, in 1878; did considerable gospel work there and baptized quite a number. He was uneducated but forceful and earnest, and an impressive speaker. His knowledge of the gospel was great and his faith and hope unbounded. To his family and friends he was ever true, and his great attraction was his undeviating kindness and solicitude for their temporal and spiritual welfare. Funeral sermon by Elder A. J. Layland to a large audience in the Saints' church at Bloomington, Idaho.

STROMBERG.—At the poor farm, where he had been working and living for some time, at San Francisco, California, Johannes Stromberg, in, it is believed, the sixty-ninth year of his age. He was faithful unto death. Visited the day before his death by some branch officers, he expressed his readiness to go; but wished to be buried by the church, and not by the county. His funeral sermon was delivered by M. H. Forscutt, who also offered final prayer at the grave. He died March 12, and was buried March 13. Poor in this world's goods, he was rich in faith towards God.

GRUVER.—At the Hope branch, Indiana, February 13, 1895, Emma Elva, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. S. C. Gruver, aged 4 months and 4 days. Funeral services conducted by Elder I. P. Baggerly.

BENNETT.—O. H. Bennett was born in Louisville, Kentucky, July 12, 1820; died February 12, 1895. Three unmarried daughters, Sisters Mollie, Delana, and Addie, had the care of their father some time before and up to his death. He leaves a large posterity and many friends to mourn.

MAULE.—Christina, wife of Donald Maule, passed to a higher life, March 15. She was born September 16, 1831, at Peebles, Scotland; baptized in 1860, by E. C. Briggs. Was the mother of twelve children, ten of whom remain, two having preceded her beyond. Our sister was valiant in the cause of Christ in the early establishment of the work in Western Iowa, and continued faithful to the end. Her example of kindness as a neighbor, mother, and Christian was recognized by all who knew her. The funeral services were very largely attended at the Saints' chapel, March 17. Sermon by A. M. Fyrando, assisted by J. F. McDowell.

BALLANTYNE.—At his home, Soldier, Iowa, February 22, 1865, James Ballantyne, aged 68 years, 3 months, and 26 days. He was born in Ancrum parish, Scotland; baptized September 16, 1840, and soon after came to America. After the death of the seer he went with Lyman Wight to Texas. After the death of the latter he came to Iowa, and united his fortunes with the Reorganization, to which he has since been a consistent and faithful adherent. Elder M. Jensen conducted the funeral obsequies, Elder J. W. Wight preaching the sermon by his dying request, at Saints' chapel, Moorhead, March 10. Notwithstanding a severe snowstorm prevailed, the house was filled. He leaves a wife, six children, and numerous relatives and friends.

KINER.—At the home of her parents, Springfield, Missouri, Sr. Electa Kiner, wife of Bro. George Kiner. Born September 18, 1871; married April 21, 1893; baptized by Elder Samuel Payne; died March 10, 1895. She was a loving wife and a kind mother. She left a baby boy five months old. Before her departure from this life she was permitted to see beyond the vale, and bore her testimony of this grand work to her family, exhorting them to be faithful. Funeral sermon by Elder J. R. Wedlock March 12, at the Missionary Baptist Church. Laid to rest in Maple cemetery park.

WILDERMUTH.—At De Kalb, Illinois, February 20, 1895, Louisa O. Wildermuth, who was born July 9, 1851, in La Fayette county, Wisconsin. She united with the Latter Day Saints at Willow, Wisconsin, July 6, 1868, and was married to Dryden H. Carpenter, December 24, 1868. To them were born four sons and three daughters, who, with their grandchildren, still survive her. She was a great sufferer the last few years of her life, but was very patient. Her faith in the gospel sustained her, and in which she remained steadfast to the end, and departed with her hope bright of a glorious reward. Funeral sermon by Elder F. G. Pitt.

MCINTYRE.—Sr. Amanda McIntyre died at her home in Plano, Illinois, March 18, aged 80 years, 6 months, and 14 days. She was born in Forestville, New York, where she resided with her parents until 1839, when she married Samuel McIntyre, and with him came West and located in Sugar Grove, Illinois, in 1840, to Shabbona Grove in 1841, and to Plano in 1849, where she has lived ever since. Three children were born to them, only one of whom remains to miss the mother, the father having died seventeen years ago. Sr. McIntyre united with the church April 12, 1861, being baptized by Elder John Shippy. She ever stood true to the faith and was well known to the Saints when the General Conferences were being held in Plano, and to her neighbors and friends as a consistent Christian and a good neighbor, showing kindness in sickness and to those in need. Funeral services were held at the stone church in Plano, March 20, by Elder Vickery, assisted by E. M. Wildermuth; interment in the Plano cemetery.

FALLON.—Gustus E., youngest son of W. T. Fallon, was born February 5, 1877; united with the church October 1, 1887; baptized by J. W. Wight; died March 14. The young brother bore his suffering patiently, and from the first he seemed to have a premonition of the end. He also testified of the strong testimony God had given him of the gospel, also of a future work. When his sister Hattie asked him to sing something he sang, "God be with you till we meet again." The young brother will be missed at home, in the Sunday school, and society. His pure life was prominent to all, as shown by the beautiful floral decorations and the vast assembly at the funeral. Services from Saints' chapel, Magnolia, Iowa, March 16; sermon by A. M. Fyrand, assisted by J. F. McDowell.

GRIFFITH.—At her home in Shenandoah, Iowa, Sr. Esther Griffith. She was born October 24, 1818, at Claremont, New Hampshire. Her maiden name was Redfield, sister to William Redfield, deceased. Married April 5, 1838, in Kirtland, Ohio, to Willard Griffith. Baptized in 1839 into the old church, and united with the Reorganized Church in 1861. She ever lived an exemplary life, honored her profession as a member of the Church of Christ, true to her trust, fulfilling and carrying out practically her sacred obligations as wife and mother, without a stain upon her moral character. Her imperfections were few. She leaves her aged husband, one son, and two daughters, with a large circle of loving friends and Saints, to mourn. Funeral services, and sermon at the house, by Henry Kemp. Interment in Shenandoah cemetery.

LEWIS.—At his home, in Malad City, Idaho, March 15, 1895, Elder John Lewis. He was born August 25, 1824, at Llanelly, Carmarthanshire, Wales; was baptized in Wales in 1848 and emigrated to Utah in 1856; and was baptized into the Reorganization, February 4, 1866, and ordained the same day to the office of an elder. His body was borne to the grave March 18, followed by a large concourse of people. Bro. Lewis was a faithful and fearless advocate of the faith, active and to a degree energetic in his service of the church. He was much respected as a citizen and held offices of trust, including that of County Judge of Oneida county, Idaho. He leaves a wife and two children.

CAIN.—At his home, Big Bend, West Virginia, February 24, 1895, Thomas G. Cain, aged 54 years, 10 months, and 29 days. He was born in Monongahela county, West Virginia. A wife, six children, and one brother, with a host of other relatives, mourn. He was kind-hearted and good-natured, and was a kind, loving, and affectionate husband and father. During the weeks of his suffering his children and wife watched by his side every night. Bro. Cain was baptized by James Moler, August 23, 1891. He died firm in the faith, and frequently expressed himself as not wanting to live any longer, as all was well, his work here was completed, therefore he awaits the first resurrection.

SUTHERLAND.—In Fayetteville, Arkansas, while on a visit to that city, March 18, 1895, David E. Sutherland, aged 28 years. His remains were brought home and laid to rest in the Webb City cemetery. He was baptized May 11, 1879, by M. T. Short. Funeral sermon by T. W. Chatburn in the South M. E. church, Webb City, Missouri, to a very large concourse of people.

JACKSON.—Near Floresville, Texas, March 17, 1895, Bro. Aaron W. Jackson, aged 58 years and 15 days. He was born in Jackson county, Missouri. He united with the Christian Church some years ago and strove to live a Christian life in the best light he could obtain in that church. Only a few months before his death he yielded obedience to the restored gospel, and rejoiced in the same until the day of his death. He was baptized by Bro. T. J. Sheppard. Funeral services from the family residence, conducted by L. L. Wight. A large family and many relatives and friends mourn. Our loss is his gain.

WALTERS.—Bro. Elijah Walters was born in Tennessee, April 1, 1803. He removed from there when five years old to Kentucky. When twenty-three, migrated to Indiana, where he lived twelve years. At the age of thirty-five he moved to Missouri, and remained a resident of the State eleven years, moving from thence to Adams county, Iowa, being the first settler in the county, and remaining until 1865, when he made his home in Burt county, Nebraska, where he continued to reside until February 15, 1895. He was, so far as we know, an exemplary man and Christian. In his early life he united with the Baptist Church; later on he became an honored member of the Christian Church; in the year 1879, he united with the Latter Day Saints, being a consistent member and having the respect of the community until the time of his departure. Although the day of the interment was the worst of the winter for wind and dust, yet friends came from twenty-five miles away, and felt it but a duty of love. Services were conducted by Rev. Cross, of the M. E. Church, in their chapel at Decatur, their choir kindly furnishing the song service, which was excellent and very appropriate. Sermon by G. M. L. Whitman.

SMITH.—January 20, 1895, aged 2 years, 9 months and 27 days, Ethel Ivy, infant daughter of William P. and Mary Smith, of Grimes, Iowa. Funeral sermon preached by Elder C. Scott at Oak Grove M. E. church; text, Jeremiah 31:16, 17.

TOOMBS.—Near Willard, Utah, March 14, 1895, Goldy, son of Bro. James and Sr. Anne Toombs, in his 27th year. Deceased was an invalid and as a child all his days. The funeral sermon was preached in the tabernacle in Willard by R. J. Anthony to a large audience. Bishop Zondell, Elder Faver, and two other elders assisted in the services, the choir rendered efficient service, all showing the greatest respect to Bro. and Sr. Toombs and family.

BIRCHELL.—At Burlington, Iowa, March 9, 1895, Dottie, only child of Mr. John A. and Sr. Lizzie Birchell, and granddaughter of Bro. James and Sr. Harriet E. Birchell. The body was brought to Mr. Dreaher's, corner Fourth and Clay streets, Ottumwa, Iowa, where funeral services were held; body interred at cemetery on March 11, 1895. She was born at Cleveland, Iowa, August 25, 1890. Blessed September 25, 1890, by Elder E. B. Morgan, who also preached at her funeral. The mother was blessed during funeral service with the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit to a marked degree, which comforted her heart concerning her loved one.

LATHAM.—Perry A., son of Bro. Thomas and Sr. Annie Latham, was born near Portsmouth, Iowa; died March 14, 1895, aged 9 months and 14 days. Sermon at the home of the parents by Elder W. A. Smith, to a large audience of relatives and friends.

DUNCAN.—Sr. Mary E. Duncan nee Neiman, was born at Springfield, Erie county, Pennsylvania, April 22, 1818, and died September 15, 1893, at Knoxville, Illinois. She was married to Bro. Thomas L. Duncan March 8, 1835. She was baptized November, 1838, by Father Nickerson. She died in full faith of the restored gospel. Her motto was,

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun, Sees from thy hand no worthy action done."

LEWIS.—Miss Mary Jane Lewis, daughter of Sr. Jane Lewis, was born January 15, 1877, in Jamestown, near Springfield, Illinois; died March 23, 1895, at her mother's home, Forbush, Iowa. She was buried March 25, in Centerville cemetery. She was well respected by everybody, and her funeral was largely attended. Sermon by Bro. Frank Izatt, assisted by J. J. Watkins.

HOWARD.—At Batavia, Illinois, March 3, 1895, Mrs. Casendana Jones Howard, widow of the late Philo Howard. She was born at Peren, New York, August 23, 1830.

NEW TREATMENT OF DIPHTHERIA.

From February to August of this year 300 cases of true diphtheria were treated in the Children's Hospital in Paris by Dr. Roux's antitoxin method. Of these seventy-eight died, or 26 per cent, which must be contrasted with the mortality of 50 per cent common before the treatment was used. Of 120 cases of diphtheria without other complications nine died, of whom seven were so ill when admitted to the hospital that the remedy had not time to act. In the more severe cases, where the larynx was affected, 34 per cent of those who were treated with antitoxin died and 87 per cent died of those who were not so treated.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD.

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

MANUSCRIPT FOUND.

This is the notorious Manuscript Found, written by Rev. Solomon Spalding; a verified and certified copy of the original now in Oberlin College, Ohio, of which so much has been said and written in connection with the theory that it furnished Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon the chief groundwork and material from which to write the Book of Mormon. The preface to the work contains an account of its coming to light, by which it can be traced back to its author—Solomon Spalding. The work, suppressed for years by enemies of the Latter Day Saints, is a complete refutation of the charge made that it is the basis from which the Book of Mormon was written.

ORTHODOXY IN SCIENCE.

IT cannot be denied that there is a tendency in the human mind to respect the authority of a great master, and to frown upon anyone who would question that authority by endeavoring to attack from a new point of view some problem universally regarded as already solved. So it has ever been in religion; so in a less degree in philosophy. Mr. Grant Allen is of the opinion that it is now the case in science. In an article in the New Science Review, January, he deplors this tendency in no measured terms, and pleads for an open court in science. There are those who will remember that Mr. Allen himself holds theories in physics that are not accepted by the best thinkers of the day, and who will detect a note of personal bitterness in what he says. He puts his case, however, forcibly and plainly; and every lover of the truth will agree with him in his main contentions. We quote the chief points of his article as follows:—

“It is the tendency of things human to fall into an orthodoxy, and orthodoxy is sleep; baneful though it be, it springs from the somnolent instinct in humanity. It means unquestioning acceptance of certain infallible and unassailable dogmas, to doubt which is heresy, and to deny which is to render yourself anathema maranatha.

“Most people know that this is so in other things; but they think science is a complete exception. The scientific brain, they fancy, is naturally alert, unprejudiced, skeptical. The world believes that the man of science proves all things, and holds fast to the truth. And it is right in a way, for that is undoubtedly the spirit and test of the truly scientific mind—of the men who are born, not made, scientists.

“But routine tends always to establish itself in everything, and in scientific education no less than elsewhere. The human mind is prone to laziness. It is easier to swallow a dogma ready-made than to search the Scriptures, like them of Berea, seeking whether these things are so or not. And the more perfectly organized is your scientific education, the more likely is the student to accept without demur the orthodox standpoint. He comes to the subject with a mind like a sheet of blank paper. . . . He finds himself face to face with a professor who confessedly knows a vast deal more than he does about the subject at issue. Questions are permitted, indeed, but only as to details, and they are answered from the standpoint of superior and apparently exhaustive knowledge. Doubts or objections are not encouraged; skepticism as to fundamentals is treated as hopeless. Science has decided things thus and thus; you will find all about it in Joule or Clerk Maxwell (you will read to the contrary in Müller or Hermann); you will see your puerile objections anticipated and refuted in Tyndall or Helmholtz.

“Moreover, the pupil, thus grounded, grows up with a belief that all these things are not matters to be treated as debatable and uncertain, to be subjected to scrutiny as true or false, but merely as questions to be answered thus and thus in examination. This answer ‘pays,’ that other will pluck you. To-day you must be a disciple of Joule, to-morrow of Kerner. Now Weismannism is fashionable; now this or that other view of Tesla’s, or of Crooke’s, is in favor with examiners. Thus orthodoxy grows into a compact body of settled opinion, with a professional staff just as much interested in keeping up its dogmas as a hierarchy is interested in keeping up the dogmas of its particular church, or sect, or faction. We have established and endowed an infallible and unassailable scientific priesthood.

“Pay men to teach, and they teach accordingly. They become a vested interest. They view with dislike, with scorn, and with terror the intrusion of other and upsetting ideas from the ‘unqualified practitioner.’”

It is Mr. Allen’s opinion that the trouble is with the modern tendency to “Germanize” science. After condemning what he calls “the Teutonic system” as a system designed to produce narrow specialists, to form “bricklayers, not architects,” he proceeds as follows:—

“It was not so that the great leaders of science in the past were produced. Nay, more, it is a fact that no great architect has ever yet arisen in these matters—Kepler, Copernicus, Linnæus, Darwin—who had not to begin, like the French Revolution, by pulling down the whole rotten edifice of his predecessors, and building the entire superstructure afresh from the ground from the demolished materials.

“Look at Darwin, for example. He has become so much of an orthodoxy now himself, and is even further refined upon by our Weismanns and our Ray Lankesters to such an extent, that people have almost quite forgotten that he was once a startling heterodox leader. But I can remember the time myself when there existed in Europe a biological orthodoxy of the school of Cuvier—when people spoke of Erasmus Darwin as ‘an ingenious but crackbrained theorist,’ of Oken as ‘a poor fool,’ of Lamarck as ‘a wild speculator,’ of the ‘Vestiges of Creation’ as ‘clever but unscientific.’

“Now Darwin was not a professor. He was not a trained physiologist. He was not a drilled and dragooned South Kensington student. He was merely an amateur, a lover of truth, who was impelled by curiosity and by sundry ideas suggested to his mind on a journey round the world to observe certain facts and formulate certain theories. The silence of the time at first frowned upon him severely. . . . But still, the new ideas triumphed for all that, because they were true; and as soon as they triumphed—hi, presto, forthwith, they were erected in turn into a fresh orthodoxy. . . .

“Look at Herbert Spencer. No man has more profoundly modified the trend of opinion on all subjects in our century. No man has so revolutionized the ideas of leading thinkers in every direction. No man is going to produce so lasting an effect upon the thought of the future. Yet Herbert Spencer was never in any direction orthodox. He went through no course of drill; he rebelled sturdily against school and college; he determined to look at nature and man from his own point of view, resisting all attempts to warp or thwart his individual judgment. And he came out of the struggle the most profoundly original and pregnant thinker the world has ever known. He made his own views. Unlike Darwin, he is not yet an orthodoxy, because he is still too far ahead of his public. In most things he is heterodox—extremely heterodox; and his heterodoxy is greatest where what he has to teach us is newest and most original. . . .

“The orthodox scientist, then, is the man who follows closely along accepted lines the accepted notions. He can add a detail, but he cannot possibly upset, reconstruct, revolutionize. The last is almost always the task of the inspired outsider. For the outsider comes to the work fresh, and with a fresh impulse. He has not been drilled and dragooned. He is not a mere martinet produced by an educational system for its own furtherance. He takes a lively and personal interest in his subject. He aims at truth. He wants to know, and he goes straight for knowledge. As a rule, he has begun by attacking certain special problems that interested him much, because they demanded an answer of him. In such a case, he tries first the works of the authorized pundits, the acknowledged priests of the scientific hierarchy; and, often enough, he finds no answer, or only an evasive and delusive answer, there. Often enough, again, he spies flaws and absurdities in their treatment of the subject. He notes errors and blunders, and, unlike the docile pupil whom orthodoxy loves, he insists upon following up these suggestive trails, tracking the misconception home to its lair in the heart of the subject, and forcing it to show itself in the open light of day, enveloped in all its disfiguring mist of verbiage and dogma. . . .

“And his way is hard, of course. Most often, like Young (who ventured to discover the undulatory theory of light without consulting the pundits), he goes down to his grave before he has ever succeeded in making a single fellow creature see eye to eye with him. The further ahead his doctrine takes us, the more revolutionary and subversive it is, the more must this be so. The man who sees a thing a few years in front of his contemporaries may live to convince them of the truth of his vision. But the man who sees things a century in front, like Erasmus Darwin, can only hope for their scorn or their pity. ‘Poor fellow, he’s mad, you know; has ideas of his own on the origin of life which the great Linnæus says are untenable,’ or ‘which great Cuvier declares are quite unfounded!’

—From Science Department, edited by Arthur E. Bostwick, Ph. D., Literary Digest, March 16, 1895.

CURE FOR CANCER.

THERE are some people here solely afflicted with cancer, which successfully baffles the efforts of the best physicians to effect a cure. Y Drych, a Welsh paper, of March 7, contains a simple recipe, concerning which it is said there are scores of remarkable cases that prove its value as a cure. Mr. William Davies, of this city, has made a translation, which he has brought to the News with a request for publication for the benefit of sufferers. It reads as follows:—

“Boil Turkey figs, of the best brand obtainable, in fresh milk, until the milk is thickened and the figs tender; cut the latter and place on the cancer as hot as can be borne, whether the tumor is broken or not; wash the sore every time the poultice is changed with some of the milk; the washing process should be gone through night and morning, or, at least, once a day; drink about a quarter of a pint of the milk the figs have been boiled in once a day for three or four months, if the stomach can stand it.”

A number of cases of almost marvelous cures are cited, some of them being given here: One is that of a man who died at the age of one hundred and five years, who was cured six years before his death, by the use of six pounds of figs. In his case the cancer had eaten one side of his jaws and down to his throat. The cure was pronounced so perfect that no sign of a return of the dread tumor was ever shown. Another instance is cited of a girl who had a cancer in her breast, which bled freely, and ten pounds of the Turkey fruit healed her. The remedy is perfectly harmless in any respect, and if its virtue should be proved by experience here, the knowledge of that fact ought to become public.—Deseret News.

HISTORY OR INSPIRATION AGAIN?

A very able paper and one that will attract considerable attention in the religious circles is “The Higher Criticism as viewed by a Liberal Scholar”—J. H. Long, A. M., L. L. B., in the April Arena. Mr. Long writes with a great deal of conservative force and precision, and his arguments are both weighty and suggestive. He brings great scholarship to his task, and the largest intellectual tolerance and reverence.

AMERICAN PLACE NAMES.

Rahway was once Rahwack, the name of an Indian Chief.

Lehigh is a corruption of the Indian word lechau, “a fork.”

Sheboygan means “Stream that Comes from the Ground.”

Passamaquoddy signifies “Good Bay for Catching Haddock.”

Espiritu Santo, the name of a Texas bay, means Holy Spirit.

Itasca is an Indian word, meaning “Source of the River.”

La Moille River, in Vermont, was at first called La Monette, “the seagull,” from the great abundance of these birds.

The Mississquoi, in Vermont, took its name from the abundance of waterfowl. The word means “many ducks.”

The Brazos River, in Texas, was called by the Spaniards Rio Brazos de Dios, “River of the Arm of God.”

LAMONI, IOWA, APRIL 10, 1895.

ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY.

ZION'S Religio-Literary Society met in Annual Convention in the basement of the stone church, at Independence, Missouri, on Tuesday, April 2, 1895, at 7: 30 p. m.; Vice President J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa, presiding; J. C. Hitchcock, of St. Louis, Missouri, secretary.

Hymn No. 182 was sung, after which Bro. E. F. Shupe, of Denver, Colorado, offered prayer.

The president made a few remarks, greeting the delegates, and referring briefly to the work lying before the assembly.

The following named were appointed a committee on credentials: Bro. F. M. Sheehy, of Maine, Sr. Etta M. Hitchcock, of St. Louis, and Sr. Lydia A. Schmutz, of Denver, Colorado.

The committee retired and while making up its report a number of short speeches were called for. Brn. M. H. Forscutt, from San Francisco, E. F. Shupe, of Denver, M. H. Bond, of Kirtland, Henry Kemp, of Western Iowa, Columbus Scott, from the Des Moines district, W. W. Blanchard, of Maine, and J. Cole Moxon, of Independence, responded. All were united in the sentiment that the Religio work was essential to the welfare and general development of the talents of the young people; that the work of the gospel included this feature of service and progress; and that good had accrued to all who had taken up the work of the society—not only in a literary way, but in spiritual development and general progress in much of the practical and social features of life; that the work was capable of continued and far-reaching development, if due care was exercised in directing and carrying out its movements, keeping in view and in possession the fundamental principles that underlie the work of God—the Spirit of truth—of advancement and simplicity; those safeguards that must always be regarded to insure correctness in method and success in labor.

The committee on credentials reported delegates from and representation of the following named points: Independence, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Missouri; Denver, Colorado; San Francisco, Garden Grove, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Oakland, Walnut Creek, California; Boston, Massachusetts; Providence, Rhode Island; Dixfield, Maine; Council Bluffs, Dow City, Plum Creek, Lamoni, Iowa; Kansas City, Kansas; Clear Lake, Indiana. Other points will doubtless be represented as other delegates arrive. Those named indicate how general the work of the society has already become, and give promise of its continued growth.

The next item of business was the reading of reports of officers. The report of Vice President J. A. Gunsolley quite clearly outlined the present status and immediate needs of the organization. It is as follows:—

Associate Officers, Members, and Delegates of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and Friends:— At this the close of the year's work, and the opening of a new year, it may be profitable to consider for a few moments the condition of our work. To do this, let us take two views, retrospective and prospective, and thus find our present, true position.

While we cannot claim so much growth as we should have liked to see, we can say that there has been a steady advance all along the line. Nineteen new societies have been organized, thus adding to our membership something like four hundred. All of the forty-nine societies are using the Program, with somewhat varying success. We are now issuing one thousand Programs and mailing over nine hundred, a gain of about three hundred. We have had quite a little printing done in the way of constitutions, commissions, charters, stationery, etc., and all this at the very small sum of twelve cents per capita.

While, generally speaking, the locals are doing well, we are sorry to note that some have discontinued; whether they have grown weary in well-doing and have fainted by the way, or whether like some others, they have found more pleasure in serving the world, we

Like every other good thing, the society has come up through tribulation. There have been fightings within and without; but thanks to Him who giveth us the victory, it has withstood all, and stands to-day stronger and firmer for having had the opposition. It seems now that the fire of persecution has about died out, there being but a spark now and then, as the persecution is being overwhelmed by good works from the society.

It is much to be regretted that we have been deprived of the very excellent assistance of our president. But you may be assured that it was not because of his unwillingness, nor lack of interest. Sickness in his family, and the added burdens incident thereto have made it impossible for him to do more.

The secretary, treasurer, and all the superintendents have performed their parts creditably, and are deserving our heartfelt gratitude for the excellent service rendered. I believe it could be said truthfully of each of them, He hath done what he could.

The new feature added to the Programs—that of adding a junior department—seems to have worked well. This made them better adapted to a broader range of minds, thus rendering them more generally useful.

But we are not so much concerned in this convention about what we have done, as about what we shall do in the coming year; and since, perhaps, this report should partake somewhat of the nature of an annual message to this the legislative body, you will please permit a few suggestions.

Among the many things which have worked as a hindrance in some localities is a lack of interest, or at best only a passive interest, upon the part of some who could be of very great benefit to the societies. But it is quite noticeable that some of these same individuals find time for active work in the Chautauqua, or some other circle. Instead of helping to make our own societies better, they give emphasis to the thought that the cause of Christ is not popular enough for some of the Saints. Then, too, some of the ministry are not yet aware that ours is a good work—a much needed work. Then there seems to be another class who have no need for anything but the preaching service and the prayer meeting. What we need is to cause such an awakening that every Saint shall have an active interest in our work, from the First Presidency to the last convert.

This awakening depends upon the membership almost entirely; for if we show a lack of interest, we cannot hope to interest others.

In the proposed amendment to the Constitution and By-laws perhaps all will see the desirability for a change without any argument. It seems like placing too much responsibility upon the president to appoint all the committees. It certainly is proper to allow the societies to provide for their appointment, should they so desire.

The main question before this convention is that of literature. Are the Programs satisfactory? If so, shall they be continued in their present form, or would some changes be beneficial? If they are not satisfactory, what shall take their place? The departmental idea must be continued under the constitution, but other plans might be adopted for carrying it out. Shall we have a course of reading added? This demand seems to be growing, and should be considered. If we add a course of reading, of what shall it consist, and how shall it be prepared? Should we decide upon the reading course to be added, and upon the one to prepare it, where shall we publish it? These questions must be discussed and settled. It seems that the deciding of this question is our advance step for this year; and let this step be so carefully, and yet so decidedly, taken that it need never be retraced.

Another by no means unimportant matter is the selection of proper officers for the coming year. Whether there be any aspiring to office we do not know; but should we learn of any such, let us blackball them on the first ballot. The work of the Lord has no place for office seekers, and to see a Latter Day Saint seeking office is proof conclusive that he is not worthy the trust. Let the office seek the man every time, and then if the convention is willing to impose the trust, let loyalty to the work so abound that there shall be no declining. Fitness for the work should be the one thing characteristic of proper candidates for office.

The excellent work of Bro. McDowell in Autumn Leaves should not fail of proper acknowledgment. He has done a good work, and has helped very much to keep the flame of enthusiasm burning; and he has done all voluntarily.

In speaking of the department in Autumn Leaves, the somewhat discouraging thought comes that in response to the call for volunteers who would pledge themselves to do all they could to support with their pen a department to be established and conducted by the society, only three have been heard from. Three out of a membership of fourteen hundred have said, "I will promise to write frequently, or as often as called upon, if necessary, to sustain an official department for the society." How many of you have ever said, "I am willing to do all in my power for the cause of Christ?" Is this the cause of Christ? If it is not, in the name of consistency, let us at this convention resolve unanimously to abandon it. None of us have time to thus foster an error.

Yours in the hope for progress and triumph,
J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

Secretary J. C. Hitchcock's report also adds information concerning the progress made during the year. We give it herewith:—

We have to-night reached the second milestone in our existence, as it were, and who is not pleased with the achievement we have made? The first year exceeded the expectation of even the most sanguine. We believe that the year just past has done more toward substantially founding the Religio than did our first year. We started with more favorable surroundings and we are confident the results of the past year's work are as gratifying as the first year. Conditions were such that more should be expected of us, and more has been accomplished. It may appear to some that such is not the case simply because we did not double our membership; but when we take into consideration that at the commencement of our first year's work there were a great many societies organized and working under different plans, in fact a large number of the large branches had societies, all of which united with the Religio sometime during the first year, consequently our membership would naturally increase quite rapidly.

At the commencement of our '94-'95 work, all the societies were with the Religio, numbering thirty, and about all the branches that are very large had a society and were with us. This year's work has been with smaller branches, and in places where societies have not heretofore existed in any form. Nineteen societies have been formed during the year, and prospects are fair for more in the near future.

In July, 1894, the first commission was issued to a body of young people in a foreign land, to Bro. Gomer Wells, who succeeded in organizing a society at Argent's Hill, New South Wales, Australia. Bro. Gomer has since requested Programs forwarded to him, as he desires to introduce this department of the work wherever it is possible.

One notable feature of the work this year has been a great many of our elders have come to a realization of the merits of the Religio, and several of them have taken a very active part in the way of forming societies where they have been, one elder having been instrumental in the formation of three during the past year, some of which are now among the strongest societies on the list. His field had perhaps been no more fertile in this regard than many others, but others—that is some others—have not yet become fully acquainted with the value of the society in small branches.

With the commencement of the year just past several new features were introduced into the society, prominent among them being the senior and junior departments of the Programs. While with a great many this looked rather overdoing things, and some even seriously doubted the wisdom of the plan, experience has proven it to have been one of the best moves we have ever made. One year ago complaints from the different societies as to the Programs were numerous. A similar letter was sent out a month ago asking what satisfaction Programs were then giving, and most all answers were very favorable, and as yet there has not been one complaint of their being "too difficult," as many of the replies were last year. Some suggest some features that would doubtless be an improvement, but under the present general system of senior and junior we believe the satisfaction is as near universal as it will be possible to make it. Perhaps improvement may be made during the coming year in what the outlines consist of, but to change the general style of the present Program would, we believe, be detrimental to the welfare of the society.

Should Providence be pleased to smile upon us in the future as it has in the past, what can hinder our progress? Let us remember the "Religio" comes before the "Literary," and while we are striving to advance our literary talents, we should not forget religion has the first claim. Literary improvement in the proper way, which we have in the Programs, is advancement in religion.

If you have not had your shoulder to the wheel of the Religio during the past, turn over a new leaf and commence to push. If you have had your shoulder to the wheel all along, keep right on pushing.

J. C. HITCHCOCK, Gen. Sec.

The report of Bro. Russell Archibald, Treasurer, made the following showing: Balance last report $38.50; received $99.97; total $138.47; expenditures $100.06; balance $38.41. The report was referred to an auditing committee.

Adjournment was then taken until morning, Bro. Albert Haws, of California, pronouncing the benediction.

Wednesday, the 3d.—At 9:30 a. m. the convention reassembled. Hymn 190 was sung, prayer being offered by the president. The minutes were read, approved.

The first question was the amending of section 2 of article 4 of the constitution of local societies. The following words were added to that section: "or by the society, as each society shall decide by vote." The section as amended reads as follows:—

Sec. 2. There may also be a Lookout Committee, a Program Committee (of which the President shall be ex officio chairman) a Relief Committee, a Good Literature Committee, and such other committees as may be deemed advisable to be appointed by the President, or by the society, as each society shall decide by vote.

The change wrought by the amendment is apparent.

The all-important question before the convention, "What shall we do about more literature?" was then taken up, the president suggesting that the discussion be confined to practical suggestions, feasible plans, practicable work; something that would tend to solve the problem by furnishing the society with a method of conducting the literary work for the ensuing year.

Addresses was made by Srs. Newton, Schmutz, Blair, Hitchcock, and Brn. Shupe, Sheehy, Gunsolley, and Hitchcock. The discussion involved the continuing of the Programs now issued by the society; the discarding of the Programs and the publication of their subject matter in Autumn Leaves; or the publication of a special magazine for Religio work. The Programs now published by the society contain religious, temperance, literary, and historical departments — senior and junior departments of each. These are mailed to each local society, and at each weekly meeting there is unity and concert of action. In addition to this there has been a Religio department in the monthly issues of Autumn Leaves. The work had grown and had so widened that all felt the need of making an advance to meet its demands, but all were in doubt as to the best course to pursue. However, all were practically unanimous in the opinion that the present Program should be continued, but enlarged; that a special magazine should not be published; that Autumn Leaves being the magazine of the church for its young people, should be heartily sustained and its Religio department be continued. There were many engaged in the work of the society who did not take the Leaves, hence the Program should be continued. It could be published at a very moderate price. The Leaves department would continue to accomplish good among our own people in extending the work of the Religio by awakening an interest among them and bringing our young people to the front. The delegates were also practically unanimous in the opinion that it was not yet time to introduce a "course of reading" similar in general arrangement to the Chautauqua method. The course was desirable, but the organization was not yet prepared to provide for it. All desired to work in harmony with the general movements and spirit of the church; to maintain the spiritual and develop the literary features without antagonizing any other department or phase of work; to not detract from any good already in hand in an effort to step forward and move onward and upward; to be prompt, but not premature.

The question of providing literature was finally referred to a committee consisting of Brn. Gunsolley, Hitchcock, and Sheehy, and Srs. Blair and Schmutz; said committee to report at the afternoon session.

The Kansas City Journal of the 3d inst. gives the Religio the following very friendly notice:—

INDEPENDENCE.

An entertainment will take place to-night at the Latter Day Saints' church, on West Lexington street. It will be given under the auspices of the Religio-Literary Society of the church, which is now in session in this city. Exceptionally fine music will be rendered on this occasion. The program will open with an instrumental selection by A. H. Mills, of this city. The "Independence Chorus" will render a stirring song after which a poem, "Come up Higher," a composition of E. A. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, will be read. R. C. Evans, a sweet singer from Canada, will render a vocal selection, which will be followed by a recitation by Miss Clara Berry, of Kansas City. Miss Grace Gardner, of St. Joseph, will render a musical selection, and W. H. Mills, of this city, will read an essay on an interesting subject. Master Claude Metcalf, of St. Joseph, will render a solo, which will be followed by an oration by T. Williams, of Council Bluffs, Iowa. L. R. Wells, an Independence cornetist, will render a selection, and Mrs. Mattie Mills will also contribute a song. Miss Pearl O. Price, of California, will recite, and little Emma Dawson, of St. Louis, will render one of her prettiest songs. A male quartet will be a feature of the evening. The program will close with a duet by Mrs. Myra Brackenbury and J. Cole Moxon.

At the afternoon session Bro. W. W. Blanchard offered prayer. The committee on literature, appointed at the morning session, reported.

We recommend that the matter of more literature be left to the executive committee and would suggest that the Programs be enlarged and that the president and secretary act as editors. We would also suggest that this convention indorse the work now being done by Autumn Leaves for our society.

The report was adopted.

The assembly then proceeded to elect officers by ballot. The ballot for president was, J. A. Gunsolley 21, F. M. Sheehy 1, J. C. Hitchcock 1. On motion Bro. Gunsolley was elected president by a unanimous vote.

Three ballots were taken before the vice president was obtained. After the second ballot a motion was adopted placing the two highest voted for before the assembly, and on the last ballot the vote stood, F. E. Cochran 14, J. F. McDowell 10. Bro. Cochran was declared the choice for vice president.

Bro. J. C. Hitchcock was reelected secretary by a vote of 23 to 1.

Bro. Russell Archibald was reelected treasurer, receiving all but two of the votes cast.

The president and secretary were authorized to report the proceedings of each General Convention to General Conferences.

The suggestion was made that less time could be taken for the transaction of the annual business by doing away with the evening musical and literary programs; that the business be transacted in one day, thus concentrating and consolidating the work; that it was desirable to lessen the time and thus avoid overburdening the delegates who come to attend the Religio and Sunday school conventions and the General Conference; that a committee would probably be appointed by the Sunday School Convention to take steps to concentrate its work into one day's proceedings; that the conferences would probably allow an evening for the usual evening program. Following this a motion prevailed providing for the appointment of a committee to confer and act with such committee as the Sunday School Convention may appoint.

The question of summer vacations—the cessation of Religio-Literary Society weekly work during the summer season, was discussed. The question did not meet with encouragement. Constant activity in the prosecution of the work was the wish of the delegates, that no time and opportunity be lost. A resolution, that summer vacations of local societies be discouraged, was adopted.

The president announced the committee to confer and act with Sunday School Convention committee: Sr. Maggie Blair, Bro. R. S. Salyards, and Sr. Etta M. Hitchcock.

It was resolved that the traveling and local ministry be requested to cooperate with the society in establishing and maintaining its work.

Adjourned to the evening hour; benediction by Bro. R. Etzenhouser.

The evening program of the Religio closed the sessions of the convention. It was rendered before an audience estimated from eleven to twelve hundred. The main auditorium was well filled. The program as rendered is as follows:—

Instrumental music, A. H. Mills, Independence, Missouri; Invocation, M. F. Gowell, Eastern mission; Song, Independence Chorus; Poem, "Come up Higher," Elbert A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, read by Sr. Abbie A. Horton; Song, R. C. Evans, Canada; Recitation, Miss Clara Berry, Kansas City, Missouri; Solo Miss Grace L. Gardner, St. Joseph, Missouri; Essay, W. H. Mills, Independence, Missouri; Solo, Master Claude Metcalf, St. Joseph, Missouri; Cornet solo, L. R. Wells, Independence, Missouri; Solo, Mrs. Mattie Mills, Independence, Missouri; Recitation, Miss Pearl O. Price, California. Male Quartet, O. L. James, L. R. Wells, Robert Winning, D. J. Krahl; Duet, Mrs. Myra Brackenbury, J. Cole Moxon, Independence, Missouri.

We publish the poem "Come up higher," written by Bro. Elbert A. Smith, and read during the evening, as provided by the program. Its spirit is fitting, suitable to the occasion.

I have watched the quick resulting of long intervals of time,
And have seen their slower process hasten toward the end sublime;
They have rendered us the token of the latter day complete,
When the world of unbelief should cast its gauntlet at our feet.

Oh! I would that I might sound again the notes that I have caught
From the bugles of the vanguard where the war of truth is fought.
They are calling, calling, calling backward to the halting mass,
Like the singing of the soft wind in the bending prairie grass.

There is dearth of manly vigor, there is dearth of woman's truth;
Men and maidens! Sons of Israel! give your years of strength and youth,
Come up higher! Come up higher! let your footsteps mark the way
Where the mountain peaks are shining in the light of endless day.

I have often felt a spirit o'er our congregations bend,
Like the strong, electric presence of a dearly loved friend,
And have known that Christ was looking with his patient eyes and true,
At the promise of the future which was slumbering in you.

Oh, my Zion! White-robed Zion! stand no more contending here.
Should the brother strike the brother with the victory so near?
As the soul of man is higher than the flesh which turns to dust, Let our spirits higher rise to meet the infinite and just.

Heed the voices that are calling through the storm and through the calm, Come up higher! Come up higher! nearer to the great I AM.
Come, ye chosen of Jehovah, ye anointed to the truth,
Let the banner of the higher call unfurl above your youth.

Hark! I hear a distant stirring and the sound of many feet

On the rocky road of ages, with a perfect rhythm beat.

Oh! I hear your pleasant singing and I see your faces shine, Youths of Zion, as you gather into column and to line.

I would rather far be numbered with the very least of these

Than to flaunt the robe of fashion or to turn the miser's keys.

Let the soul that fails or falters backward turn nor meet the shock.

Let the bugle that would sound retreat be shattered on the rock.

Brightly is our pathway shining like the rainbow's golden arc,

And the Savior's perfect manhood like a beacon in the dark.

Let the worldling, if he chooses, yield to pleasure's soft restraint,

I conceive no higher object than to be a perfect saint.

THE GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION CONVENTION.

THE fifth Annual Convention of the General Sunday School Association of the Reorganized Church met in the lower audience room of the stone church, on Thursday, April 4, 1895, at ten o'clock; Superintendent E. A. Blakeslee in the chair, Wallace N. Robinson secretary. A goodly number of delegates and visitors was present at the opening; and there was spiritual life and fraternity of heart prevailing among all in their greetings of one another. The gathering was composed of laity and ministry, the latter also manifesting, as all along from the inception of the Sunday school work, a deep interest in its progress—a disposition to keep closely in touch with it, to be informed concerning its developments.

Hymn No. 43, Winnowed Songs, was sung, and Bro. M. H. Bond, of Ohio, offered prayer. The petition was an earnest, fervent plea for divine guidance in the extension and general movements of the work. After a few brief remarks, the chair, being so authorized by vote, appointed the following named a committee on credentials: Bro. T. J. Chatburn, Sr. Jennie Newton, and Bro. F. M. Sheehy.

During the retirement of the committee short speeches were called for, responses being made by those named, in the following order: Brn. W. W. Blair, J. F. Burton, T. W. Williams, Srs. C. B. Kelley, B. C. Smith, L. L.

Resseguie, Brn. T. A. Hougas, F. G. Pitt, R. S. Salyards, R. M. Maloney, Srs. Belle James, Maggie Blair, Alice Bozarth, Brn. J. F. Mintun, C. Scott, Sr. Anna Stedman, Brn. R. Etzenhouser, M. H. Bond, Sr. Minnie Nicholson, Bro. W. H. Garrett.

The remarks made were of a retrospective and prospective character. All spoke encouragingly, giving abundant evidence that the blessing of the Lord had always followed efforts made in this department of the service; that the divine seal had been placed upon it from the beginning, and was being continued in its growth. It was evident from what was said by all that the same Spirit that had moved upon women and men to enter the church and assist its movements for good in general lines had also inspired in this specific feature of the work. To this inspiring fact a cloud of witnesses bear testimony in words of steadfast earnestness and sincere devotion. An indorsement by the Holy Spirit pledges that the Lord will continue his favor upon that upon which he has set his seal. Such has been and such still is the ground of its success, the grace and overruling watchcare of the Almighty. The consciousness of the bestowment of abundant grace inspires those enlisted in the Sunday school service to continue; to do their work in sincerity, in trueness of heart, and in meekness of spirit, that the power of God may attend and sanctify it to his glory. It will be a success if continued in that spirit of simplicity and safety—if those who labor continue to be found "doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God and the good of his people." This spirit alone can insure success.

The Reorganized Church stands as the representative of and is called to maintain the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; this not only in stated principle, but in method of working in all its departments. Its work is so peculiarly representative of God that it necessarily brings to light every phase of work done and the motives of all who enter the service. It is therefore of a character to show forth the strength of that which is correct in principle and consistent in action, also those things of an opposite character whenever and wherever they exist. It is true now as when written, that God's paths are "straight" and his course "one eternal round." They only can attain to extended and continuing usefulness who "know the truth" by loving it, by sinking and cleansing from ambition, pride, or anything that has not the glory of God in view. None who pledge themselves to service for Christ can too fully realize the need of being made strong in the cardinal, foundation virtues of the gospel economy, and of retaining and maintaining rugged devotion to principle, and meekness and purity of spirit in all they undertake to do. As our work grows and becomes more prosperous and popular, let us build upon the foundation that cannot be moved; let the women and men who compose the spiritual temple be those who have mastered themselves and become so in harmony with the divine nature that the life of Christ is manifest in their mortal bodies. If the Sunday school work, if the work of the gospel is to be a continued success, a beacon light to the youth and to all, it will be so only because it cannot be invaded by the spirit of vanity and the pride of life.

The New Testament statements of the Master, "Ye are not of the world," "I have chosen you out of the world," are repeated to us in this age in the admonitions: "I give unto you a commandment that ye shall not live after the manner of the world;" "Ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good." When we reach the standard erected for us Zion will have become "the perfection of beauty." How consistent the basis upon which the latter-day glory is to be revealed. "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined"! The set time to favor her has come. It is not an ordinary opportunity to have part in a work so important, and so great in its magnitude.

The committee on credentials made report showing membership and representation of various districts and schools represented by delegates thus far arrived to be as follows: Decatur, Iowa, district, 685 members, entitled to 68 delegates; Independence, Missouri, district 653, 65; Little Sioux, Iowa, district 483, entitled to 48 delegates; Massachusetts 466, 46 delegates; Northern Illinois 305, 30 delegates; Clinton, Missouri, 230, 23 delegates; Northeastern Missouri, 233, 23 delegates; Texas Central, district, no report; Des Moines, Iowa, 292, 29; Galland's Grove, Iowa, 313, 31; Northern and Eastern Michigan 1,117, 111; Far West, Missouri, 381, 38; Nauvoo 236, 23; Southern Michigan, no report; Western Maine, 300, 30; Fremont 200, 20; London 321, 32; Southern California 108, 10; Pottawattamie 328, entitled to 32 delegates. Schools: Manchester, England, 282, 28; St. Louis 200, 20; Kewanee 51, 5; Denver 62, 6; Pioneer, Pittsburg, 137, 13; Hopeville 46, 4; Netawaka, Kansas, 28, 2; Omaha 46, 4; Highland, Ohio, 3 delegates; Salt Lake City, Utah, 3 delegates; Pleasant Grove, Utah, school 3; Hastings, Victoria, Australia, 4 delegates. Additional districts: Spring River, Missouri and Kansas, 286, 28; Southern Nebraska 89, 8; Eastern Iowa 125, 12; Philadelphia 160, 16. The report was received, the committee continued.

Bro. T. A. Hougas was chosen chorister, Sr. L. L. Resseguie organist, Bro. Alma Chatburn usher; the organist and usher were authorized to choose assistants. Adjourned to two o'clock; song; benediction by Bro. W. N. Robinson.

The afternoon session was opened on time. A hymn was sung; prayer was offered by Bro. R. M. Elvin. Following this the minutes of the morning session, also those of the convention of 1894, were read and approved.

Bro. E. A. Blakeslee made an oral report. He briefly reviewed the work from its inception to its present development. Five new district associations, and thirty-eight schools, including an enrollment of 2,288 pupils, had been added to the association during the year. The total membership is now over 9,000. There was a balance in the treasury at the Herald Office of over $900, resulting from the sale of the Gospel Quarterlies.

The secretary, Bro. W. N. Robinson, presented his annual report. As it contains much statistical and general matter of importance to the work, we give it in full, as follows:—

During the past year I have spent a good deal of time attending to the duties devolving upon the Sunday School Association secretary, and from all reports received feel that the labor was not in vain.

I have only found time to be present at one general meeting of the Saints since last conference outside of attending our Independence school; partly on account of being superintendent of the school referred to, and partly because of my business preventing me from absenting myself from the office during the week days. The meeting I did attend was the reunion at Logan, Iowa, where in company with Bro. Mintun, et al., we tried to help the cause all that was possible.

I have written a great many letters pertaining to Sunday school matters during the year and sent out a general circular to one hundred and eighty-two of the church missionaries shortly after October 1, 1894. This was followed up in January by a personal letter to each in which a list was inclosed of the district associations and schools and names of officers.

The general tone of the letters received by me is most favorable to the association work. There are a few exceptions yet, however, but these, I am confident, are caused by ignorance of the real aims and intentions of the association. Among the reports received from the missionaries, those that write that they are in hearty accord with the idea of the Sunday school and of the association, but, because of laboring on the frontier or in regions where the Saints are scattered, and consequently cannot report much progress, are the following: I. M. Smith, J. M. Scott, M. M. Turpen, F. W. Heflow, M. R. Scott, M. T. Short, D. M. Rudd, M. F. Gowell, A. Barr, F. C. Smith, H. J. Davidson, G. W. Robley, J. Hawley, J. M. Stubbart, L. F. Daniel, W. W. Blanchard, J. Moler, W. Dowker, J. Kemp, J. W. Jackson, E. DeLong, J. R. Evans, R. L. Ware, J. Carlile, R. M. Maloney, S. Swenson, H. Southwick, I. N. Roberts, C. J. Hunt, P. Adamson, J. M. Baggerly, H. Kemp, W. E. Peak, F. M. Weld, F. C. Smith, A. Knisley, G. Jenkins, J. A. Davis, T. C. Kelley, C. L. Snow, J. R. Wedlock, J. L. Goodrich.

Reports have also been received from J. Armstrong, S. Butler, M. P. Madison. Also from the following who say there is a bright outlook and that each has organized one school; F. M. Slover, Illinois; U. W. Greene, Maine; J. H. Wells, Montana; T. Daley, California; D. Smith, Michigan; J. H. Lawn. D. L. Shinn believes the Sunday school work will accomplish good. J. Dawnup, Sr., Manchester, reports progress in the Manchester district. J. W. Wight, Jr., superintendent of Little Sioux district, has labored considerably. Emsley Curtis, Illinois, organized a district and is in hearty accord. R. E. Grant, Michigan, needs two men who are not general missionaries to devote entire time to Sunday school work. John Smith, Massachusetts, considers Sunday school work a duty and teaches a class regularly. A. Haws, California, is interested, but believes Quarterlies have a tendency to have scholars acquire too much too rapidly. Slower and more permanent growth is his idea. C. H. Burr, Wisconsin, finds the work a big help in missionary work; is in hearty accord with association. W. E. Summerfield, Missouri, has labored some in the work. L. L. Wight, Texas, has deep Sunday school interest; believes it a necessary auxiliary.

W. Thompson, Iowa, schools outside of association are not as thriving as those in it. Levi Phelps, Michigan, believes in schools; has organized them wherever opportunity offered and makes it a point to attend them. F. G. Pitt, Illinois, is superintendent of district and finds the work advancing.

Rather than fatigue you with detailed suggestions in reference to the work, I have thought best to read selections from a few of the reports received from our missionaries and in this way you can glean the information regarding the outlook better.

Our statistical report shows a creditable gain both in the number of districts, schools, and members. It is as follows:—

The secretary read a number of letters from the ministry, general and local, received in reply to his requests to them to aid the work in their fields. The great majority were in favor of the present methods and work of the association. We publish a few herewith:—

PERRY, Iowa, February 15.

ELDER W. N. ROBINSON; Dear Brother:—Your circular relating to the Sunday school work, also communication of 14th ult. duly to hand. Am intensely interested in the cause. My field of labor for the last year has been the Des Moines district, and I believe all the Sunday schools in the district belong to the association.

I have not been enabled yet to study your methods sufficiently to pose as a critic. I need some instruction in these regards.

In my work in Sunday school lines, so far, which has only been in general ways, I find that one of the chief hindrances to success is the "parental indifference." Once get the parents of a given community interested in the work, sufficiently so to attend the schools themselves, and the battle is more than half won. Sunday morning sluggishness is a drag log to the success of the work, viewed from the standpoint of parental indifference. Let us pray the Lord to give parents more industry in this regard.

I do all I can by precept and example for the work. Poor health has retarded my efforts some during the conference year now closing, but am willing to be numbered among the workers in the Sunday school cause. With earnest wishes for the most flattering success to attend you,

Your brother,

C. SCOTT.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Feb. 2.

W. N. ROBINSON, SEC.; Dear Brother:—As the time for the Annual Convention draws near I am reminded that perhaps you would like a general statement of the condition, prospects, etc., of the Sunday school department of church work in this mission. I venture one voluntary and unauthorized.

1. Latter Day Saint schools are few and all small, there are but five in all of Australasia. These will not average over fourteen each.

2. Grown people take but little interest in the school, which accounts, partly, for small attendance. The branch usually appoints the officers and teachers of the school, which tends to a lack of interest on the part of pupils. Real Sunday school enthusiasm is hard to be found. The Gospel Quarterlies are only beginning to be used, but are giving satisfaction in each case.

There exists in this country a prejudice, among members of the church, against collections. This cripples the school's financial success, and often leaves it to individuals to provide money for Quarterlies, etc. The two schools in Victoria (Hastings and Queens ferry) have both instituted collections, which is a hopeful sign.

The methods used are not up to date. As evidence of this, I mention the case of a primary class in one school being taught by an older pupil out of an "A. B. C." book, used in State instruction. As my opportunities for urging and bringing about later methods are better than formerly, I hope to improve matters in this respect. Where pupils of schools are too young to comprehend the idea of the General Sunday School Association, and the teachers only engaged in it for the sake of "duty," it is difficult to get them to join the association. I have succeeded in one case, however, which is already reported to you.

Hoping your coming meeting will be characterized with love, unity, and wisdom, and wishing your department all the success which such a cause merits, I remain,

Yours in hope and from afar,

GOMER R. WELLS.

LEBECK, Mo., March 25.

W. N. ROBINSON, Dear Brother:—Yours of January 14 containing list of schools, etc., to hand in due time.

While our statistical reports may or may not show any great improvement, I can certainly say that the last year has witnessed a marked improvement in the Sunday school work in Southwestern Missouri. Schools that were drifting along with a doubtful future are now a decided success. One year ago the lesson helps published by the church were simply a matter of experiment in our field. To-day they are regarded by many as an absolute necessity; and let me right here remark that I know of no school that has used the helps six months that would try to do without them.

Again. I have never seen a Sunday school "die a natural death" that used the helps. I have a suggestion to offer in this connection: In some places I find Latter Day Saints a little prejudiced against using the helps, thinking it a sectarian policy. Such persons sometimes have influence enough to control a majority vote in the school, hence vote down a proposition to have the helps. I find there is most always a progressive minority that have the foresight and wisdom to successfully use the helps, and a good plan is to just invite all that desire to go into a class to use the helps to give their names and each one pay for their own Quarterly to start with. The skeptical will soon swing into line, as that class will soon be the center of attraction.

Again. We have managed to enlist the interest of the leading minds of the district in the work during the year. There is a decided determination on the part of our elders to study the Sunday school work thoroughly, and especially to be present at all gatherings to exchange "pointers" with others.

In bonds,

C. R. DUNCAN.

The report of Sr. C. B. Kelley, treasurer, was read. It showed the following which we summarize from the itemized report: Balance last year $592.43; received since $1,986.16; total $2,578.59; expenditures $1,650.41; balance on hand $928.18. The report was referred to an auditing committee. Brn. M. H. Forscutt, F. M. Sheehy, Sr. Louise Palfrey.

An additional report from committee on credentials was presented and accepted. The Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district was represented by delegate.

The committee appointed to solicit original contributions and selections of words and music for a new Sunday school song book reported:—

We, your committee on the Sunday school music, report as follows: Since our appointment we have tried to labor to the best of our ability in the work assigned us. We have published several requests for material in the church publications and have solicited privately among the talent known to us. The result of our labor is that we have received, counting words and music as separate contributions, in all 186. Of this number we have found only 18 word contributions worthy of acceptance, while 66 we deemed unsuitable. Of music 13 pieces met our approval, while 68 were rejected; 21, both word and music contributions, were laid by for further examination. We have 10 that have not yet been fully examined by the committee.

From the above statements it will be seen that our work has not met with the success hoped for. Therefore the committee questions the practicability of the effort at the present time, as it is evident that either the proper talent is not in the church, or has failed to manifest itself.

We would therefore recommend that the project be discontinued for the present, and that the matter we have received be placed in the hands of a committee of two whose duty it shall be to receive and solicit contributions for future examination by a committee appointed for that purpose.

For the committee,

F. G. PITT, Pres.

A. H. MILLS, Sec.

It was moved to adopt the report, discontinue the committee, and pay the amount of expense incurred. A substitute to this motion was moved. The substitute was lost, and the original motion discontinuing the committee and adopting its recommendation was adopted. Brn. F. G. Pitt and Sr. L. L. Resseguie were appointed the committee of two, according to the foregoing, and their selection made unanimous.

The following was moved and adopted:—

Whereas many of the Saints, especially the young of England and Wales, have taken considerable interest in the Sabbath school work of late, and whereas the Manchester, England, district has united with the General Association, therefore resolved that we invite all other schools in the foreign missions to unite and heartily cooperate with the General Association; and that we request the traveling and local ministry to lend their aid and influence to aid in this work.

Sr. L. R. Devore presented a report through Sr. M. Walker, which was read. The spirit of this letter and the recounting of work done by her in the Society Islands mission, speaks for itself. It will be read and appreciated by all who love the work of God and esteem the arduous and efficient labors of Sr. Devore.

NIAU ISLAND, Oceanica, Dec. 13.

MRS. M. WALKER; Dear Sister:—I hardly know in what way to write a report of my labors here in the interests of the Sunday school. As you are immediately connected with the Sunday School Association, I desire, if you think it proper, that you will read this before the association and send me the results, whether they be favorable or not. As this is the first real effort made to advance the Sunday school work in this mission, I am led to give rather a lengthy report.

Bro. Mark H. Forscutt, before he left for America, was led by the Spirit to choose and set me apart as Sunday school superintendent over the mission, to set in order and establish new schools and instruct as he had instructed me; he also sent a petition to the April conference and a letter to my husband requesting them to sustain me and give me power to act if they found it convenient. I gave them an insight into the nature of my work among them the best I could, and the vote was unanimous in my favor. When Bro. Forscutt left I was very much at a loss how to proceed, as it was all new work to me; he had helped me hold one teachers' meeting, but I saw that it must be something different from that to do this people much good, and I told some of my plans to him. He said to me, "Do whatever you are led to do, as you know their ways and needs." I promised that I would do the best I could in the absence of help or counsel, but I found that I had taken upon myself a heavy responsibility.

I went to the conference in April intending to return to Papeete, Tahiti, soon after, but on the way there the boat stopped two weeks at another island, and there for the first time since coming into the mission I learned what my real work was among this people and had certain evidences what to do, but put them from me. At the conference, immediately after, the resolution passed. One arose and urged the conference to send me to the two adjoining islands; my husband told them that could not be, yet left me to act as I felt I could stand traveling on the sea. Many from the various isles urged me to go to their place and help them. These things, like Mary of old, I pondered in my heart and prayed to be guided aright and reasoned thus: "Of what benefit could I be to the church among the many isles if I returned to Tahiti?" I had clear evidence (not a command) that if I would go (and I must go alone if I went) among them and do the best I could I would be blessed in my work, and that although I would suffer as usual while on the sea, my general health would not be affected after landing, as heretofore. I had, indeed, a struggle with myself to consent; in short, it cost me a great effort, knowing the terrible seasickness I would have to endure, besides making a sacrifice of nearly all the comforts of life I have had from childhood and nearly all earthly pleasures. Nor was this all; I knew I should meet with an almost continual round of disappointments that make the heart sick.

I decided at last and placed myself in the hands of my heavenly Father to care for and lead. I went forth without books, tracts, or helps of any kind except the two Bibles, one in my own tongue and the other in the native. I did not have even a concordance or Tahitian dictionary, and was able to talk but little in their language. My husband sent books, papers, and letters from Tahiti, but they were six months in reaching me. I visited six islands and set in order the Sunday schools and held teachers' schools in which we prepared questions for the classes. My work among them is in a measure like the Sunday school work in America and the object is the same, but the manner of doing it is different. The tracts and books of the association are as yet of no value here only as I am able to glean instruction from them.

When our missionaries here shall be able to translate correctly in this tongue and a press is established in the mission, then they will do great good. The work which I am doing is preparing them for that and is also bringing out the best talent in the church here. It is the best thing I have yet seen, to instruct and prepare all who can be prepared to teach and instruct others.

Heretofore the most discouraging feature of our work has been that in all our travels we have not found more than three who were capable of teaching in the Sunday schools, but now teachers' schools and lessons are preparing teachers, and those not adapted to teach are released and others chosen who are. We are also forming smaller classes so that all may be benefited. I, too, am learning by experience and can better the Sunday schools on each isle I go to, and were I again at the first ones visited would still change them for the better. I am sometimes astonished to find such talent among them, buried it is true, but waiting development, which is sure to follow, they being properly encouraged, taught, and trained to act. This gives me great confidence in them. They do not need white missionaries to do it all and domineer over them, for, while they are much inclined to have kingly rule over them, yet they very much appreciate thinking for themselves. What is needed is to help them discover and develop their own talent and give them confidence in themselves and while teaching, push them, as it were, on to victory. They also need to have entertainments and by these show them what they are capable of doing; they are like grownup children without education. I will give you a specimen or two: A class of eight singers, four brothers and four sisters, I taught in three evenings two verses and the chorus of one of our hymns (they knowing the tune before). To be sure, they do not speak the words as plainly as we do, but one can understand every word quite well. Another: Seeing the talent in a certain brother I chose him to teach the children for a certain occasion, and he has them taught and trained in two classes, and one of those who learned the new song reads with and is a leader in a teacher's class. I feel proud of them.

The church is greatly pleased with the work I am doing in every isle I have visited, and many are the testimonies given publicly of the same. Some have said that no elder's work is of more benefit than this is. While at work upon one island my presence was discovered by those upon another island, and three came over in a boat to see what kind of work I was doing, and they were so pleased that when they returned home and told the others about it they appointed a prayer meeting and all met and prayed the Lord to send me to their isle soon. Three nights later a dream decided me to go there, and great good was done. I was there seven weeks, that being my first visit.

I find more work than I am able to do, and do more than I am able to stand, but I see no stopping place. I have been signally blessed and led by the Spirit, for, realizing the great responsibility, and knowing the peculiar turn of this people, and with no one to help me I have fasted and prayed very often, sometimes praying all night to be directed aright, for I wanted and still do want truth and right only to prevail. I could not, nay, dare not, trust myself.

Great and marvelous have been my experiences; visions, dreams, discerning of spirits, wisdom, voices, etc. Upon two different occasions in the schools I could not find the proof demanded of me, when an unseen hand gently took hold of mine and directed me to the place in the Scriptures, and there before my eyes was the proof. One night, after meeting with opposition from some influential elders (because I am a woman) I heard a voice in the native tongue speak in low, thrilling tones every few moments all night, saying, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Also a dream was given me which was interpreted by a few of the brothers and sisters, and fulfilled the next day. The same night the leading spirit in the opposition testified that he had evidence that my work was true and I was sent by the Lord to do it. Another time I lay down to rest and was praying, when a beautiful head and arms appeared, hovering over me as you often see a mother over her child. This face was aged, yet youthful, with white, flowing hair. She sweetly smiled and said in native, "Ask me." Another time I saw a star almost as large as the moon when full; it appeared before, and seemed to be leading, the boat we were on in daylight. I lay very sick with my eyes open and saw it. The light from its rays shone on the deck and ropes, and it so affected me that I was able to go the rest of the way in peace and could sit up and eat.

The Lord has verified his word to me; my health has been good, and I have been permitted for the first time since coming in the mission to travel in two large vessels, which seems like paradise beside the small boats in which the body is racked and tossed so that it feels like it had been beaten to a jelly. These seem like hard words, but, dear Saints, the half of it has not been told.

Since the October conference I have been on this isle (Niau) with my husband. Am very anxious to go to three other isles, if I could but get a chance to do so. The Spirit directed me to have a Sunday school celebration. It was the first ever held in the mission, and they never heard of such a thing before. I had previously tried many times to plan one but could not; the time had not yet come. Now it was laid before me like writing in a book; I laid it before my husband, who gave his approval and help, and together we gave an exercise from the Bible alone, as nothing else is among them in their language but a couple of question books of Bro. T. W. Smith's. The day passed off with the little children up to the gray-haired sires taking part, which was a joy to them, and will be forever, and to us also. One aged sister, ninety and some years old, told me she felt happy from the crown of her head to the soles of her feet, and her husband, near or over one hundred years of age, leaning on his staff, often gives his expression of delight, and says sometimes he is joyful all day thinking about these things. They are now preparing to assist on other islands. I want to prepare an exercise to be given at the April conference.

One thing more I want to tell you. In all this region the people eat the blood of hogs, chickens, and fish. Lately, in a teacher's school, our lesson was the twenty-sixth chapter of Matthew, and we were searching the word for the Passover and the days of unleavened bread; one verse was read where they were not to eat the blood. There were present seven teachers, four brothers, three sisters, and the superintendent and secretary; one of the teachers asked me if I thought it not right to eat the blood. I knew the missionaries had spoken against it, but they would not heed. It is an old custom, therefore I felt delicate about answering, but I braved up and answered emphatically, "Yes, it is a sin," and told them also that if the church in America knew of it it would hurt them, and that the conference there would not consent to such a thing. Then we searched for proof and found it in Acts, classed in the same verse with idols and fornication, and I put it before them with all the force and power I had. They sat spellbound for a few minutes, and then reasoned among themselves that they had cast people out of the church for adultery, yet they themselves were sinning by eating blood. Consternation sat on every face. Then the Holy Spirit fell upon me in power and told them the time had now come for them to come up higher, and that if Pohemiti, the mission secretary and the most influential native in the mission, would commence and teach this at the conference he would be greatly blessed, and no work done among them would be greater and that he should have evidence himself. They expressed their thankfulness for the light and truth they had received that day, and on Sunday following when we were assembled, Pohemiti told them and explained to them. They then passed a resolution to put that away from among them and no more eat blood in their branch. Thank the Lord for that much; it is a beginning.

This is quite lengthy, and my only excuse is that I want you to know what I am doing in the interests of the Sunday school, and if you deem my labor to be in accordance with the Sunday School Association or the spirit of it, I shall be glad, and wish the association to give me such advice as it feels to do. It is so different from your manner of work in America. I feel quite delicate in the matter, but the people here, the customs, the manners, in fact, everything is so different that we have to work accordingly. No one law or rule can govern things existing here, yet the design and object is to advance, bring up, and establish righteousness among them that they may be saved in the kingdom of heaven throughout all eternity.

Yours in hope,

ELLA R. DEVORE.

A vote of condolence to the Southern Michigan district was offered on the death of Sr. Hettie Pearson, its secretary.

A committee of five was appointed to consider and report on the subject of Sunday school missionary work. Adjournment was then taken to the evening hour; benediction by Bro. T. A. Hougas.

The evening session was opened in the usual manner, Bro. Columbus Scott offering prayer. The hour was devoted to discussion of what teaching is; and what is essential in the teaching process. Bro. T. A. Hougas was in charge. He used the blackboard in illustrating the points brought out. The large audience present manifested a keen interest in the subjects under discussion by taking an active part in the exercises. The work done was based upon Dr. Trumbull's "Teaching and Teachers," a standard work much used by progressive Sunday school workers, and one that if studied by ministers would prove profitable to both them and the congregations they essay to teach. Dr. Trumbull's definition of teaching is, "Causing another to know." He shows that teacher or preacher may "tell" but not teach because what is told is not comprehended by those who hear; that rote learning or memorizing of prescribed questions and answers does not necessarily impart knowledge of a subject; that the interest and cowork of scholars and teachers by attention and the use of illustration, recitation, and all the methods used in teaching are essentials to the teaching process; but that the proof that a teacher has taught consists in the fact that the learner learns and knows the matter presented to him. Discerning of a child's or hearer's mental capacity and the extent of his advancement, the best method to be employed in securing and retaining his attention and interest, etc., etc., are all clearly and ably discussed in the work referred to. Those who would fit themselves for successful work in teaching would do well to obtain Dr. Trumbull's book. It is kept on sale at the Herald Office.

Friday, the 5th.—At nine o'clock the convention reassembled. By this time the attendance had increased very materially, large numbers of delegates and visitors to the convention and the General Conference having arrived. The convention room was fairly well filled, and close attention and a spirit of deep interest in the proceedings were seen in the demeanor of all present. A hymn was sung; prayer was offered by Bro. J. A. Gunsolley. The hymn, "Cast thy bread upon the waters," was next sung.

The first exercises were those illustrating methods of teaching in primary work, by Srs. L. L. Resseguie and Viola Blair, of Lamoni. A class of Independence primary scholars and teachers comprised the pupils. However, the entire audience gave close attention to the work, showing as much interest as in any feature of Sunday school service yet presented. The teachers sought to teach in the simplest manner possible, adapting their work to the capacities and mental workings of the minds of little children, in a conversational, natural, and easy manner of teaching. By this means the children are led to listen to and watch the teacher with the interest and attention usually given to one who tells them an interesting story, thus the lesson story becomes fixed in their minds. A map of Palestine and the countries in which Paul traveled was used to trace portions of his journey and locate places of importance. Primary work must be seen or done to be understood. Questions were asked and answered. The need of special preparation by study of both the Primary and Senior Quarterlies; the advantage of dividing the primary department into small classes, etc., were referred to. The exercises included those used in both first and second primary classes. The children responded well, taking their part in the lesson, answering questions intelligently, showing that they got the ideas of their teachers and were able to tell what the teachers had been trying to teach them.

Sr. Belle James, of Independence, followed with an intermediate class lesson. Her work, like the preceding efforts, was noted with interest by the delegates and visitors. Criticism upon the work presented by all was invited, to which responses were made in friendly spirit.

Following this Sr. Anna Stedman gave a "superintendent's review," with blackboard illustrations, as announced in the published program. She used the lesson of the previous Sunday as given in the Quarterlies—a review of the Book of Acts.

To those who witnessed the exercises of the morning session was given an opportunity to take home with them a fair idea of primary, intermediate, and senior grade teaching work that will be of use to them and of good to children in school work, and in teaching Sunday school lessons at home. More of the home teaching is essential to the success of the work. It is to be hoped that parents will all become workers by teaching the lessons to their children. If the interest is not taken by parents to that degree they can scarcely expect the children to get all the teaching they ought to have. Sunday school teachers may be ever so faithful but fail to do all that ought to be done for their scholars, because of not having the cowork of parents. And, with all that the regular teacher may do, there remains a part that the teacher cannot do as a mother and a father could do it.

The importance of home teaching and home example in showing appreciation of study and interest in all lines of church work cannot be overestimated. Children live and move and form habits of life, character, and thought at home. "Blood is thicker than water," too, and no teacher can reasonably be expected to have quite the interest and give the attention to a child that parents should have at heart. Heart-work must be in all work done by both teacher and parent, but parent-love ought to be first in its manifestations in this as in other respects. It is a question whether responsibilities in this regard can ever be evaded. Certainly they cannot be ignored without loss to the child, and we believe to parents as well; and, too, we believe that however pressing the home duties may seem to be, mothers and fathers will find rest, and comfort, and the blessing of the Spirit of truth and peace in setting apart a portion of their time for special study of their children and instructing them; thus choosing "the better part," and not being too greatly "cumbered with much serving."

The Spirit of the Lord will bear witness to those who undertake this home teaching, and who "faint not in the discharge of duty" in this regard. Let fathers and mothers try it and note the results upon both their children and themselves. Why should parents neglect the responsibilities of parenthood in this respect, or in any other? Why not see the responsibility that requires intelligent understanding of the scope of home work as well as in other departments of life-work?

As we comprehend the process of redemption we understand it to mean that the race shall become god-like, be redeemed, by each understanding and doing the work required of him in his or her sphere of action, whether that sphere of action be the home, the Sunday school, the pulpit, or in business life. We are apt to expect the Almighty to perfect us without ourselves seeking to do the part that we "must do" in the work of personal and general redemption.

We believe that if Saints would arise and do all they are required to do in thus setting their houses "in order," and in teaching "their children to pray and to walk uprightly," making the home a center of attraction, and a place of truest heart affection,—a school in which life shall take on largeness of scope in cultivation of the religious, social, and general mental culture,—there will be but little danger that children so brought up will ever become estranged from the work of God and the impress of parental influence. May God inspire the children of Zion to see in his loving interest in them and in the strength and constancy with which he exerts himself unceasingly in their behalf, the character of the work to be done by them in behalf of those of tender years and those subject to worldly influences while in the paths of youth. Church work—an education under the influences of the gospel—comprehends an education of the nature of the man or woman entire; the bringing of men and women to "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." To reach completeness in Christ requires complete compliance with the rules and practices by which it is to be attained. To discern the truth, to know it personally, and to then move forward in the light perceived, is the privilege and duty of the child of God. Intelligence and trueness of heart in the individual qualifies him to do this.

At the conclusion of the superintendent's review the convention adjourned until two o'clock.

At the afternoon session the exercises were opened by singing and prayer, the superintendent invoking the divine blessing. Minutes read, approved. The committee on credentials made a further report.

The committee appointed to prepare resolutions concerning the work of Sr. Devore reported.

Resolved that in consideration of the trials and difficulties attendant on the work of Sr. Ella Devore in the South Sea Islands mission, she having the supervision of the Sunday school department there, we as the General Sunday School Convention of the Church of Christ hereby extend to her our hearty greeting of loving fellowship; and while we appreciate her zeal and feel grateful for her testimony of the divine benediction upon that labor of love which she has testified of to us, we assure her of our heartiest sympathy in her work, and pray that the heart of our sister may be comforted under every trial, and her patient endeavors be crowned with the blessedness of joy that shall arise in beholding the moral and social elevation, the mental and spiritual development of many who shall point to her as the instructor God employed for their good.

The report was adopted unanimously.

The committee appointed to draft resolutions of condolence reported, expressing the loss sustained by the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district in the death of Sr. Hettie Pearson as a faithful, devoted worker; also sympathy with her family by whom the loss is more deeply felt. The report was adopted.

Committee on missionary work made report thus:—

Whereas the missionaries of the church as a rule are taking an active part in the Sunday school work and are doing valuable work in extending its interests in all the mission fields. Therefore, Resolved that we heartily approve and indorse their action in this direction and hereby extend to them a cordial invitation to continue to lend a helping hand in this great work, wherever and whenever opportunities afford in their respective fields; that we also request the district officers to push the work in all places possible and if in their judgment it would be advisable and for the best interests of the work, they may send special missionaries into unworked or unorganized territory to establish the work there; and that the expenses of said missionaries may be provided for by district associations by the consent of the superintendent of the General Association.

Be it further resolved that in our opinion the methods now provided for by the constitution, in the duties of the Superintendent of the General Association and those of superintendents of district associations—to keep fully informed as to the necessities and demands of the work and to use all diligence in securing intelligent cooperation in the work intrusted to their keeping; also that the foregoing, together with the valuable cooperation of the missionary force now in the field, local and traveling, is about all we can do or should do under the present conditions.

The report was adopted.

This was also adopted:—

Resolved that the committee appointed to receive words and music for a Sunday school song book be requested to collect as much matter as possible as now published or that may be published during the time of their work, so that the work of publishing of a Sunday school song book may be hastened.

The minority report of the committee appointed to consider the requests of the Southern California district, deferred from last session, was adopted. Bro. M. H. Forscutt voted in the negative and asked that his vote be recorded.

A resolution affecting Religio work was laid on the table. A request for a committee to provide for the use of less time at the convention was also denied.

A resolution was presented expressing it as the opinion of the convention that the use of tobacco disqualified for positions of superintendent or teacher of a Sunday school. It was laid on the table.

A resolution providing for the insertion of a system of blackboard work in the Quarterlies was referred to a committee.

The following was moved and seconded:—

Whereas, the Sunday school work has assumed such proportions and constantly requires such attention to its publishing interests that new literature—suggestions, supplies, and general necessities are likely to be demanded, requiring judicious management that best results be reached,—Resolved that a publishing board consisting of five persons be appointed by the association at each General Convention, which board shall be authorized by said appointment to appoint editors and assistants, and fix their compensation; to provide for the publication of literature and perform all the duties in the interests of the association that the church Board of Publication performs in its behalf.

Resolved, further, that said board be authorized to appoint a revising committee or committees to examine all lesson literature issued; also to provide for the publication of such suggestions as may be needed; also for such general supplies as maps, blackboards, etc.; as they may find essential to the execution of school work.

Further consideration and final action were deferred until the next convention.

A resolution was offered providing that the superintendent and assistant superintendent write an epistle to superintendents of district associations and of schools not in district associations showing that the convention disapproves the selection as officers and teachers of those who use tobacco. The resolution was adopted.

The convention then proceeded to elect officers for the coming year. The result was as follows: Bro. E. A. Blakeslee superintendent, Sr. Anna Stedman assistant superintendent, Bro. W. N. Robinion secretary, Sr. C. B. Kelley treasurer. The selections were made unanimous. Bro. W. N. Robinion was authorized to secure assistance in the performance of his work.

The bill of the secretary for postage, also another item for printing of programs, were allowed.

Brn. Duncan Campbell, E. L. Kelley, and J. R. Lambert were reappointed an examining committee on the lesson leaves.

The committee appointed to audit treasurer's report and accounts reported both correct. Report adopted.

Program committee for next year was left to the appointment of the chair. The chair stated that committees not yet appointed would be announced at the evening hour.

By motion the Revising Board was authorized to appoint and fix the salary or salaries of the editor or editors of the Gospel Quarterlies.

The general officers were authorized to set the time of next convention should a General Conference not be held in 1896. Adjourned to 7:30 p. m. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" was sung and Bro. W. H. Garrett pronounced the benediction.

SUSTAIN THE HERALD.

WHATEVER the issue of the coming conference, we believe it to be the duty, and it should be the pleasure of the Saints, everywhere, to sustain and encourage the HERALD. It is now in the thirty-fifth year of its existence, and being the creation of the church, its organ, and its property, there is every consideration in behalf of the claim it has for being first in interest in the minds of the Saints, so far as a journal for the family is concerned.

There is, indeed, no good reason why any family of the church should prefer to take any other paper to the exclusion of the HERALD. It is true that it does not meet the whole requirements of a secular newspaper; but as a church paper, the church organ, it should be considered first, others secondary. Sustain the HERALD, should be the aim of every elder in the field, and every presiding elder in all the branches of the church, "Sustain the HERALD!"

QUESTIONABLE.

"CONDEMNATION rests upon the children of Zion, even all, and shall remain until they turn, and remember the new Covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments, not only to say but to do the things that are written therein."—Joseph Smith.

The foregoing is the motto printed at the head of the Return, notice of the reissue of which we gave in a late number of the HERALD.

It will be noticed that "Joseph Smith" is given as the author, and the matter put in quotation marks. It is not stated from which of Joseph Smith's speeches or written articles the words are quoted, so that reference may be made to verify the correctness of the quotation.

The objection we make, if any, is to the crediting of the quotation to Joseph Smith, he not being the author of the language attempted to be quoted.

If the reason for thus crediting Joseph Smith with the language supposed to be quoted, is to use the prestige of his name to point the conclusions which the Return may present as drawn from it, it is suggested to us that the effort will be somewhat burdened by the facts: 1. That the article is a misquotation; and, 2. That to true Latter Day Saints Joseph Smith is not the author; and to attempt to draw adherence to the Whitmerite movement by such methods is, to give it no harsher name, questionable.

We hope for the sake of consistency that the Return will revise its motto, and give the proper author and the reference where it may be found.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. C. CRABB, from Burlington, Iowa, April 3:—

Bro. M. T. Short and I have preached here, beginning last Sunday and closing last evening. Bro. S. baptized three, two the outgrowth of Sunday school work, the other a niece of Bro. F. Johnson. Am feeling well, and hopeful.

Sr. Adelia M. Clark, of West Dighton, Massachusetts, writes:—

Brethren W. W. Blanchard and G. W. Robley were here in the fall and held some tent meetings. Quite an interest was manifested. It did not please the Rev. Fuller very much, so he got seven or eight of his reverend brethren together and has held protracted meetings at intervals all winter, to no effect, however. Bro. Blanchard came on the 13th of March and staid until the 18th, preaching some powerful sermons to fair audiences. They were well received by some, but you know that there are always grumblers; so the Reverend Fuller commenced his meetings again, the day Bro. Blanchard went away, and is holding yet, an evangelist doing the preaching, with no effect on the people; with the money put into his hand before preaching. How is this?

That is correct; if the people choose to pay an evangelist for his labors, as it is his business and he is in the market to do it, it is only right he should be paid, what is agreed on by the people.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. C. J. HUNT sends us handbill notices of his meetings at Arion, Iowa, where he is holding forth in one of the town halls. Bro. Hunt is a good advertiser and gets the people out to hear.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"My canary bird sings the whole day long
Behind his gilded bars,
Shut in from all that birds enjoy
Under the sun and stars:
The freedom, grace, and action fine
Of wild birds he foregoes;
But spite of that, with happiness
His little heart o'erflows;
"The world is wide, and birds outside
In happy cheer always abide.
Why shouldn't I?"

HOW MANY!

MARGARET BOTTOME, who edits the department of "The King's Daughters" in the Ladies' Home Journal, writes in a recent issue, "How glad I was after reading letters that seemed like crossing a desert, to strike an oasis at last—a letter that did not ask for anything, and that letter from 'Tranquil Cottage' made me tranquil and happy."

Memory went swiftly back over the years since we have had charge of this department of the HERALD, and we found ourself wondering how many such had come to us. Frankly we could not tell, but we know they have been many, very, very many, which, filled with words of appreciation and cheer, had only for their object the loving, unselfish thought of strengthening one who was laboring in weakness. To us they have not been as the oasis, but rather as the voice of murmuring waters to him who travels by the banks of a stream, almost constant in their loving mission.

And yet, as memory brings before us another class of letters—letters which told of the heart struggles—the falling tears—the dumb agony of soul which only those who have experienced can to any extent appreciate, from our heart we thank God that we have had the privilege of “passing on” the cup of cooling water to the lips of others even more needy than we.

“A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.” Surely the sorrows were not his own! The world was full of them then, it is full of them to-day, for it was and is full of sin. To follow Christ means to find it, to come in close contact with it, and above all, to the full extent of our power, to mitigate it.

Sit down this morning, dear reader, and strive to recall the blessings scattered all along the pathway of your life. Count up the mercies which have been new every morning, and see if you do not find the task a pleasant one—one calculated to strengthen and cheer, to renew your courage and enable you to go on your way rejoicing.

“NOT going to conference!” is the exclamation meeting us very often as we pass a friend who like ourself is abiding at home while many of Israel's host have gone up to the spiritual feast of fat things which God we trust has in store for his people at this session of conference. No, we are not going in person, but as we sit at our table penning this the assurance comes to us that while absent in body, we will still be there. It is a blessed, comforting thought of which we await the fulfillment. Surely, if “we are laborers together with Him” it must be so. How can it be different? If our labors have been outside of him they can but fail, and it is only a question of time as to when. May God hasten the time when all which is not in harmony with him, not only in the church but in the world, shall have an end—sink into oblivion never to be mentioned again.

THE GREAT CATHEDRAL BELL.

When the streets are hushed and still,
Lone the thoroughfares,
And the heart, or good or ill,
Burdened is with cares,
Sounds the great cathedral bell
Out of midnight deeps:
“He that keepeth Israel
Slumbers not nor sleeps!”
“He that keepeth Israel
Slumbers not nor sleeps!”

When the reapers on the plain
Heed the morning call,
And the hosts of golden grain
Like an army fall,
Floats upon the pure, sweet air
With its stroke sublime,
Like a blessing from a prayer,
The cathedral chime:
“He that keepeth Israel
Slumbers not nor sleeps!”

When the children from their play
Mid noon shadows pause,
Their whole life a holiday
Neath God's gentle laws,— Aye, from childhood to old age,
As their feet go on
To fill out life's pilgrimage,
All unchanged the tone:
“He that keepeth Israel
Slumbers not nor sleeps!”

When the toiler of the sea
Spies familiar land,
Back brings heart of constancy
And an outstretched hand.
Hark! the old accustomed note
Melts his eye to tears,
Out the benedictions float
As in long-gone years:
“He that keepeth Israel
Slumbers not nor sleeps!”

When the day of life is o'er,
And night shadows fall,—
When from that mysterious shore
Comes the mystic call,
Mingled with the “dust to dust”
Said by open grave,—
Is that word in which we trust
Mighty still to save?
“He that keepeth Israel
Slumbers not nor sleeps!”

DUTIES OF FATHERS.

SISTER FRANCES:—So much has been said through the Home Column of the duties of mothers that we think it is about time to talk of the duties of fathers; for without the united help of both the fathers and mothers of Zion our work will be greatly hampered in its onward march.

We realize more and more every day that a tremendous responsibility rests upon the father as the head of the family. His teachings are invaluable to his children. He is out in the world and sees and knows more of the temptations and snares that are on all hands than the mother. He can prepare his children in regard to the duties of life and how to avoid being swept off into the moral filth of the world. We believe every father carries with him a power which he cannot but exert upon his children, and if they maintain close relations with that which perverts and degrades, how can they avoid sharing its impurity in some form, and how can their children help but become contaminated through them? You, father, owe it to your children, you owe it to your God, to become clean-mouthed, pure-minded, for thereby you will set such an example to your children that they will seldom travel the road that leads to dissipation, disease, crime, and premature death, but will become useful, honored, and worthy citizens of the Church of Christ.

You cannot shut your soul within your body that it may not go forth. Take attar of roses and fold your hands tightly as you may,—will no perfume go forth? The Bible says, “Ointment in the hands betrayeth itself.” The aroma of your moral life will go out. You may guard your lips, you may shape with minutest care your acts, but your inner life will go out and you cannot hide it from the watchful eyes of the little ones that call you father.

Responsibility goes further than most men imagine. It does not end with words or acts. You are responsible for what is within, since that will go forth for good or ill. That which is within you cannot by all your power keep from going forth. It streams out from you like an unseen power.

When you see your faults do not cry heredity and not try to correct them. If you or your children have inherited any defects from ancestors, go to work and correct them. Environment can influence heredity. If we want a higher type of men and women we must change the environment, so the higher faculties may be brought into use and the lower ones suppressed. We would like to have the sisters give their opinions on the duties of fathers.

Letter Department.

POLLOCK, Mo., March 28.

Editors Herald:—I went to Hannibal, Missouri, March 9, and remained till the 18th, and held ten meetings—eight preaching services and two social meetings—in private houses. The Saints seemed to enjoy my visit to their city, this being the first preaching they have heard by a Latter Day Saint elder there for two years, to my knowledge; and the first social meeting for three or four years. Some of them were somewhat unwell. Sr. Mary Taylor was quite ill with lagrippe, but was much better when I came away.

Though poor in this world's goods, they showed their faith by their works, aiding me financially; and a little financial aid in these dull times makes it easier for the missionary, though I can't complain in this regard.

Among the few that attended the meetings were a German lady and gentleman, the gentleman a young man and single. He has only been from Germany a short while, and I am pleased to note the rapid progress he has made in speaking the English language. He is attending high school, at the same time educating and preparing himself for the ministry. At my last meeting he came to me and gave me a shake of the hand and said he was well pleased with what he had heard, and asked me when I would come back again. He is bright, and has a frank, open countenance, which denotes honesty. I spoke on the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, and had good liberty. He said he was yet undecided as to what church was right. I feel strongly impressed that if proper labor can be done he will accept the gospel, and will some day be a missionary to Germany. He is to remain here four or five years, then return to Germany. Why can we not send him back as a missionary? At present I am at Pollock and surrounding country, preaching every evening to attentive audiences, and had the pleasure of leading four into the waters of baptism yesterday — adults and promising young people. This makes seven baptized here in all; one ordained a priest. The way was already open here through Brn. Petre. They have been reading the books and papers for some time, and wrote Bro. Luff to send an elder, and in time he sent Bro. T. W. Chatburn to sow the seed, and baptized three, and I have come to water it and sow more, with the above results, and there are more to come in time. We expect to have a branch and Sunday school organized here ere long. So you see we can sing, "Tis good to be a saint in latter days."

Fraternally,
D. E. TUCKER.

LEON, Iowa, March 29.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from Flaglers, Iowa, where I have been holding a series of meetings with good results. I had a full house every time, and often an overflow. Good order prevailed throughout the series. Many of the citizens told me that I had maintained better order than any minister that had held forth there. We had good music on the organ and the congregation made up the choir. The result of the effort was five accessions to the church. Most of them had been members of the M. E. Church, one a class leader. They have embraced the work understandingly, and I pray that the Master will continue to lead them by his Spirit. They are anxious for me to return in May to hold another series.

I also preached four sermons in Knoxville. There were some that requested baptism while I was there, but on account of being disappointed in the use of the Christian baptism it will be deferred until a more convenient time. The Saints and friends in Knoxville and Flaglers were very good in supplying my temporal wants, in public collections and in private gifts. May the right prevail.
J. M. BROWN.

DRAIN, Oregon, March 22.

Editors Herald:—In regard to our missionary for Oregon, as the time for conference draws near, it seems me that to have the tent in use from the 1st of May until the 1st of October, or maybe until November, and operated by two elders, and worked in the southern part of the State, which is a new field or nearly so, there might be much good done. There is not much use trying to work in Oregon in the rainy season, especially in the country, as the roads get so bad that it is impossible to get people to come out; still if we could get an elder or two that could stand the rain, cold, and several other inconveniences, and do it with a cheerful spirit, there are several towns of small dimensions that could be worked in the rainy season.

So far as I know there are no Saints wealthy in earthly goods around here, but we feel to have a goodly share of the Spirit of the Master, and would be willing to share the comforts of our lives with those who are willing to come and share with us. If we could get an elder to locate in this part of the State so we could tithe ourselves in such as we have to live on, it would go much further in supporting an elder than what money we can pay in, as it is very hard to raise money here at the present prices for what we raise. Praying that you will give this your worthy consideration and that the result may work for good to all, I am,
Your brother,
WILLIAM TAYLOR.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, March 25.

Editors Herald:—I came here from Floresville last Thursday to find considerable of a change since I left here a few months ago, several of the Saints having moved away. However, the few remaining ones seem to be striving to live their religion under the watchcare of Bro. C. N. Powell. Business is very dull; some of the Saints are distressed for the want of work; in fact, times have been hard here for the last several years. The hand of poverty, caused by continued drouths, has driven a great many families from their homes in the west in search of maintenance for themselves and families.

I have preached four times since coming to San Antonio, and yesterday was made to rejoice in the privilege of going down into the water and burying a man with Christ in baptism. His name is Emeal Phillips, and I think he will be a worker in the cause of Zion. He became interested during the February conference at this place. His conversion is due to the efforts of that conference and the godly walk of the members since that time. I go from here to Bandera, then to Blanco, and on through the north-western counties.

Yours for the truth,

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 29.

Editors Herald:—The work is moving along slowly in these parts. At Broad River, Connecticut, on the 10th of March, a Sunday school was organized with forty present. Bro. Homer Buttery was chosen to superintend the school, assisted by the leading citizens, who have stood by us through the criticism of the past, desiring that this school should be a Latter Day Saints' school, following their method of teaching. A committee was appointed to obtain subscriptions to build a church for the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ," with the understanding that the pulpit should be accessible to all denominations, when not in use by said church. A lot was donated by Mr. Kellogg, and the framing material by Mr. Buttery. The carpentering and mason work was all subscribed and about one hundred dollars promised. At this juncture it was thought best to see if it were not possible to obtain the use of the "union chapel" which these same parties had assisted to build. Hence Mr. Mills took the matter in hand and obtained signers sufficient to call a business meeting, and now we await the result. One building is sufficient for the neighborhood, if the spirit of love can obtain the ascendancy.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy rendered acceptable service, and came near snowing the Parsons in with his eloquence. However, there is some consolation in the thought that where much is given much is required, and vice versa, so we will plod along, making the best of the lesson possible, and say, Come again, Bro. F. M.

Rain, snow, mud, cold waves, freezing, and thawing have been in order since in the Nutmeg State; yet with all this to contend with a fair-sized audience has greeted the speakers each night and twice on Sunday for seventeen days.

Later.—Bro. Sheehy is domiciled at Bro. Christy's in Philadelphia, with Mr. Lagrippe, yet hopeful of moving westward on the 27th. This fellow has no regard for size, color, or profession, and stands at the head of the list "champion." If you do not want to be knocked out take care of yourself and keep out of his company. In bonds,

A. H. PARSONS.

FREDONIA, Indiana, March 26.

Editors Herald:—I feel impressed this morning to write concerning our work here. We were here about three weeks ago, presenting the claims of the church with reference to the restoration of the gospel, etc. Much good was done, as this town seems nearly free from intolerance, persecution, and prejudice, and many have received our word gladly. They are searching the Scriptures to see whether the things declared be true. It seems the Lord has a people here, and ere long we look for a branch to be built up. We have been wonderfully blessed in our efforts and feel that we have done our duty. We have been here nearly a week, but leave to-morrow.

A worthy lady, Miss Sarah McFall, a member of the Christian Church, promised Uncle Isaac that she would seek the Lord with regard to the reality of the restored gospel, etc., and was answered in the following manner: She said there was shown to her two banners, or ensigns, the first was erect and waving with the three colors, red, white, and blue; though obscured by a kind of mist or vapor; the second, which she said represented our banner, was composed of two colors, blue and white, pure and brilliant, and not yet completely raised, being represented at an angle of about forty degrees.

Another lady said to us, "Why didn't you come before with that beautiful doctrine?" The intelligence of the place is on our side and we have met with little opposition. The ministers of other churches have announced from the stand, "Beware of false prophets," "latter-day devils," etc., but without avail, as we have had good crowds of eager listeners all along.

There is another lady here who came from Tennessee, who seems to have bewitched some of the people who thought she was the great power of God. Her name is Mrs. Bohannon, and truly she is a mystery. She speaks with tongues and interprets, also prophesies, and claims to see visions. Hearing of her, I became curious, and called. She soon began to speak with tongues, giving interpretations, etc. She says she believes in faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, etc.; she also believes that God has living apostles on the earth to-day; in the second coming of Christ, millennial reign, restoration of the earth, and the Adamic language as at first. She cannot read a word, uses poor grammar, and is very prayerful and apparently very humble. I tested her by the word of God to see if she was in harmony, and in many instances she was in opposition to it. She says she gets her inspiration by faith, obedience, and prayer. I believe she may be sincere, but that Satan is deceiving and using her as his instrument in order to subvert the faith of the honest seekers after truth in this place who believe in the spiritual gifts as enjoyed by the ancient church. Her claims to divine inspiration seem rather questionable, since she and her husband have opposed our efforts here by holding opposition meetings, but for want of an audience they had to retire. So this is one instance where the opposer has had to take a back seat; so we are rejoicing and hopeful. There are many calls for preaching which we cannot fill. We go from here to the Sulphur Wells.

Yours in the Lord,

J. M. BAGGERLY.

Original Articles.

MINISTERIAL SLANG.

It may seem superfluous and exacting, and I may be deemed unjust and severe in asserting that some of the brethren are given to the use of slang phrases and stereotyped expressions which are entirely beneath the dignity of ministers of Christ. Simply because we are denominated, "The army of the Lord," does not warrant the use of "prize fight" expressions and the braggardism of toughs. The Lord, speaking in 1887, said:—

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they should not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.—D. C. 119:2.

Again.

They must be without blame in word and deed.—D. C. 119:3.

From this I conclude that we cannot be too careful in the selection of our language that it be of that pure, nonexaggerating, and refined character that will not be offensive to the most delicate ear. A few days ago I was looking through some of our church papers, and I selected a few expressions not from one writer but from several, who are all active and earnest ministers in the church, and I herewith present them; and then let me ask, Could not better language have been used?

They took their medicine.

What kind of medicine were you giving them that they took it so readily? If it was gospel medicine it should have shown its effects in conversion on their part. Did it? If it was not gospel medicine, then you were not warranted in giving them any other kind, and in doing so erred. Another:—

I felt anxious for the fray.

Fray means as follows:—

A great crash; havoc; ruin; a broil, quarrel or violent riot; a battle; a single combat or duel.—Webster.

A quarrel with violence; an assault; a brawl, a riot.—Century Dictionary.

Think over it, brother, and see if you were not mistaken. You surely was not desirous for anything to occur that the definition of the word used by you would indicate. Another brother says:—

I was anxious for a tilt.

"Tilt," as here used, is a noun and means as follows:—

A military exercise on horseback in which the combatants attack each other with lances.—Webster.

An exercise consisting in charging with the spear, sharp or blunted, whether against an antagonist or against a mark.—Century.

Surely you never intended this, my brother.

Now, swallow or be swallowed.

This has been used by more than one. This language would indicate that there was one of two alternatives; your antagonist must swallow something or you would swallow him. Would you be willing to "swallow" a man so far removed from the gospel that he would not accept it? This saying savors of the spirit of mastery, and while I do not believe the brethren using it so intended, the reader can so construe without perverting the text. We should not compromise ourselves by promising to swallow; that is, take in anything foreign to the gospel.

Again.

Battle closed at — after a sixteen hours' fight. . . . Quite a number wounded, some mortally.

If this was really the case, that such a battle was fought and that some were mortally wounded, the church had better make an investigation or the State may do it for us. Surely the brother did not intend what his language conveys; but as he is an intelligent American, and not a Welshman, I must accept what he says and not what he meant to say.

Another says:—

Not a W—, for he is laid in the tomb forever.

Did you really kill him? If so, how did you escape being lynched? If you did not, he may surprise you by a "live" materialization sometime and refute your statement.

Run Braden in.

I was under the impression that our brethren, Kelley, Lambert, Scott, and White were doing their utmost to keep this wolf from injuring the fold, instead of running him in.

One brother uses this:—

Who had the horns and ate the hay?

Was it really true that either party had horns and ate hay? If memory serves me, I know about all of the ministerial force, and not one have I seen who had "horns;" and never have I seen one munching at a hay stack; and if any of them have so little considered their calling as to discuss with creatures that do, it is time the church reminded them of their duty to their fellow man.

Here are some more.

Spread-eagle bombast fell flat.

Braden is down flat.

Clark Braden routed, horse, foot, and dragoon.

Take leg bail, contest without gloves.

Bro. — is on top.

These are "prize fight" expressions. Mormon eater.

Lots of taffy.

Briney slunk away in his hole.

Late seat of war.

"Sat down on" a certain measure.

This old rusty chestnut was not used.

This word "chestnut" as used here, is regular street slang.

Bro. — was loaded for bear.

If he was, then he never had anything suitable for sheep. I find nothing in the Scriptures saying that God's ministry are "bear hunters," but they are to be sheep feeders.

Big guns.

No brother who respects his superiors in position, experience, or intellectual ability, will speak of them as "big guns." I have never heard a brother high in position speaking of another brother as a "little gun."

Our war horse.

I think it is bad enough for our brethren to be called names by our enemies, but it is going too far when friends commence to class them with the equine family.

Our cyclone debater.

"Cyclones" destroy everything in their path and make no distinction between that which is good and useful and something worthless. As this term "cyclone debater" has been applied to our noble "defender" of the faith, Bro. I. N. White, I feel to say from my personal knowledge of the man that he is not of a cyclonic character at all. He may be irresistible in his contest with error, but he is also willing to recognize true worth, even if found on an enemy's ground.

I trust the brethren will be more careful and so speak and write that their ministry shall be made effective through example. As I am acquainted with all the brethren whose language I have quoted, I know they have an ability beyond such things, and I am sorry to see them falling into such a slang-using habit.

Believing that the rebuke of a friend is better than the kiss of an enemy, I remain, your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, March, 1895.

AMERICAN PLACE NAMES.

Chickahominy is an Indian word meaning "Turkey Lick."

Cape Mendocino, in California, took its name from that of a Spanish Viceroy. The name was given in 1542 by Cabrillo.

Minnehaha means "laughing water." The Indian word is Minnerara, the Frenchman Hennepin having mistaken the sound.

Borgne, the name of a Louisiana lake, is a French word meaning "blind of one eye." The name was applied to the lake because of a wonderful monster said to have been seen in its waters.

Scioto means "Hairy Stream." In early days, the waters of this and other streams often contained deers' hairs at the season when these animals were shedding and frequently took to the water.

Cape Ann, in Massachusetts, was so called from Anne of Denmark, Queen of James I. Capt. John Smith originally named the cape Tragabizanda, from a Turkish lady to whom he had been greatly attached.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

At the March conference of Galland's Grove district John F. Rudd was expelled from the church. This was omitted in the district report, a mistake on my part.

NELLIE RUDD, Sec.

BORN.

BAILEY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, July 26, 1894, to Bro. Fred and Sr. Celia Bailey, a son; blessed March 31, 1895, by Elders Robert M. Elvin and John H. Lake, and named Charles Henry.

PROCTOR.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, October 1, 1894, a daughter was born to Mr. Leander and Mrs. Ellender Proctor. She was blessed at the Aspey Mission in St. Joseph, Missouri, March 29, 1895, under the name of Daisy, by Elder J. M. Terry.

MARRIED.

CLARK—LOCKE.—At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Wright, Burlington, Iowa, April 3, 1895, at eight o'clock in the evening, Mr. C. J. Clark, of Keokuk, and Miss Bessie R. Locke, of Burlington, Elder J. C. Crabb officiating. Thirty-eight guests partook of refreshments and witnessed the ceremonies. Twenty-one sets of beautiful presents were presented to the bride. The bride was serenaded by two string bands of the city, which rendered several pieces of lovely music, suitable for the occasion.

DIED.

CHAPMAN.—Thomas Chapman was born in Wiltshire, England, November 25, 1825; emigrated to America in 1850, and went to Utah. He was married May 23, 1857, to Deborah J. Blair. In the spring of 1865 he moved to near Persia, Iowa, and remained there until the spring of 1894, when he moved to Persia, Iowa, where he died March 9, 1895. In 1845 he joined the Latter Day Saints Church in England. After being in Utah a short time he severed his connection with that body, and in 1864 he was baptized into the Reorganized Church and ordained an elder the same day, and ever lived an exemplary Christian thereafter, and died with a full assurance of having a part with the Redeemed of God. A wife, two brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends mourn his departure.

CHAPMAN.—Deborah Jane Chapman was born at Maidenhead, England, October 19, 1819. She came to America in 1856, and went to Utah late the same year with a company that crossed the plains with hand carts. Her first husband, David Blair, and one child, died during the journey from exposure. She was married May 23, 1857, to Thomas Chapman. In 1864 she with her family moved to Florence, Nebraska; in 1865 they moved to near Persia, Iowa. She joined the Latter Day Saints Church in England in 1845, and in 1864 she was baptized into the Reorganized Church in Utah, and had lived an exemplary Christian life for nearly half a century. She died March 20, 1895, living eleven days after her husband's death. She was the mother of seven children, only one of whom survives her. The brother and sister are sadly missed, but we know they are resting in the Paradise of God.

BALLANGER.—William Ballanger was born December 4, 1818, at Balley Parish, Gloucester, England; baptized February 26, 1882, at Omaha, Nebraska; ordained an elder December 30, 1883, and died February 14, 1895, at Omaha. Buried from Saints' chapel, Omaha, Sunday, February 17, 1895, services in charge of Elder F. Smith; sermon by President Joseph Smith.

COPELAND.—At the residence of her son in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, March 23, 1895, Margaretta Copeland, aged 79 years. She became identified with the church in an early day and moved west to Nauvoo. As the clouds gathered on the horizon of Zion she became dissatisfied and returned to her birthplace, Philadelphia, where she joined the Reorganization among the first in the city of Brotherly Love. Faithful to the end she said just before passing away, "I am ready," and fell asleep in Christ. Funeral service by A. H. Parsons at the house. Gone, yet not forgotten by her children, three in number, all but one of whom are in Christ.

COGLEY.—Clara May, daughter of Bro. Dexter P. and Sr. Lucinda A. Hartwell, died March 9, and was buried March 11, 1895. She was sick but a week, and was twenty-four years old at time of death. She leaves a mother and husband to mourn. Clara was an amiable woman, and while not a member of the church her faith was with the work and she had expressed a desire at different times to unite with the church, but a seeming objection had prevented every time. Funeral from the house, about three miles from Council Bluffs, T. W. Williams officiating.

JONES.—Bro. Robert W. Jones. He was engaged at the Rock Island roundhouse, and by some mishap fell from the engine which he had charge of at the time, and struck head foremost in a pit about fourteen feet below. He lived several hours, but died from concussion of the brain. The deceased was born in Derbyshire, England, June 5, 1864, and died February 1, 1895. Was married to Jane Roberts at same place December 21, 1885. They came to Council Bluffs in 1889, and united with the church the same year. Although his heart was with the work, his employment kept him from being very active. A wife and four children, two boys and two girls, are left to mourn their loss. The funeral was from the church, February 3, 1895, T. W. Williams officiating.

WARD.—Sr. Mary Ward died February 31, 1895. She was born in Pointon, Cheshire, England, March 3, 1815; was buried on Sunday, March 3, 1895, it being her eightieth birthday. She was married in 1857 to William Ward, and came direct to Council Bluffs shortly afterwards. She had joined the old organization in England and had come as far as Council Bluffs in the western exodus, but concluded to go no farther, and when the Reorganization first came into this western country she gladly accepted it. She was one of the oldest and well-known members of this branch. Her faith remained firm in God and his work to the last. Two daughters and one son yet remain. The funeral was from the Saints' church, T. W. Williams officiating.

MCALLISTER.—At Columbus, Nebraska, March, 22, 1895, Sr. Mary, wife of Bro. James McAllister, aged 77 years and 5 months. She was born in Antrim county, Ireland; at the age of 17 years was married to James McAllister in Glasgow, Scotland, 1834. She united with the Saints in 1845. Emigrated to the United States in 1849, remaining in St. Louis two years, removing to Council Bluffs, Iowa. In April, 1857, she and her husband came to Nebraska and cast their lot with the colony of Latter Day Saints at Genoa, enduring all the privations and anxieties of pioneer life. She was the mother of ten children, five of whom survive her; three sons and two daughters. A true and faithful wife all through her sixty-one years of union with Bro. McAllister, who remains and awaits the message to follow. The past twenty-two years of her life she has spent in her quiet home near the place of meeting, where she constantly attended church, and with the people of her choice, with whom she remained identified for fifty years. In 1865 she united with the Reorganization, and by her quiet, unostentatious, simple life, and by her "testimony of Jesus," proved herself a Christian woman. Her life needs no polished shaft. She leaves in the hearts of all who knew her a more enduring monument that endureth forever. The funeral services were conducted in the opera house Sunday afternoon, a vast concourse of neighbors and friends being present; Bro. George W. Galley conducting the exercises; Bro. H. J. Hudson preaching the funeral sermon.

JENSEN.—Annie Marie, wife of Lars P. Jensen, was born February 26, 1858, and died March 21, 1895. She came to America in 1882; was married June, 1883, and joined the church soon afterwards. She leaves five children, three boys and two girls, also five sisters, one brother, and mother. Her health commenced to decline last summer, and it became apparent as no relief was secured that she was in a decline. She died of consumption. She was hopeful to the last. Funeral from the Council Bluffs church Sunday, March 24. Funeral service in charge of T. W. Williams, who preached the funeral sermon to a crowded house, using Revelation 14:13 as his text.

CASTENSON.—May Esther, infant daughter of Christian and Carrie Castensoa. Born October 16, 1894, and died March 15, 1895. She was sick about nine days. Buried March 17, 1895, in Crescent City. The funeral was from the Crescent church. Funeral sermon by T. W. Williams.

REESE.—Ann E., wife of R. E. Reese, was born at Tredagar, Wales, March 29, 1840, and died March 21, 1895. She had been sick for some time, and although not a member of the Reorganization had been administered to, yet with no apparent relief. She was married to R. E. Reese in Pittstown, Pennsylvania, in 1857, and in connection with her husband came to Council Bluffs in 1864. A husband and nine children are left, five boys and four girls. Funeral from the house, No. 1911 Fourth avenue, Council Bluffs, March 25, 1895. Funeral sermon by T. W. Williams.

THOMAS.—At Cheltenham, Missouri, March 28, 1895, Eddie Thomas. He was sick but one night. The friends mourn their loss sorely, he was snatched away so suddenly. He was a grandson of W. O. Thomas, of the same place. May the friends receive comfort.

SPRAGGON.—At St. Louis, Missouri, March 12, 1895, Sr. Isabella Spraggon, aged 65 years. She had suffered with asthma for some time, but bore it with much patience. She was glad to be released and join the friends on the other shore. Her husband died a little more than a year ago. She was born in Sunderland, England, in 1830. Three children and a number of grandchildren mourn. Funeral service at the Latter Day Saints' church by her request, conducted by C. H. Jones.

DURFEE.—At Farmington, Iowa, March 27, 1895, Elder William R. Durfee, aged 92 years, 10 months, and 16 days. Bro. Durfee was born at Middlebury, Addison county, Vermont. In 1830 he was married to Elizabeth Roberts, in Canada. There they both united with the church and came to Ohio. In 1844 they came to Farmington, and after some time located on Spring Prairie, Iowa, in Lee county, near the Allen schoolhouse. In 1860 they identified themselves with the Reorganized Church. In 1887 his faithful wife died and left him to complete the journey of life alone. He was the father of nine children, four boys and five girls, five of whom remain; the other four have gone to join the mother. Funeral services at the residence of his son George, conducted by Elder James McKiernan, on March 28, at 10:30 a. m. Interment at Meek's cemetery, near Vincennes, Iowa.

ROCKWELL.—Gertie E. Rockwell, November 21, 1894, aged 6 years, 7 months, and 10 days. She was a very bright and promising child, loved by all who knew her. Although very young, she had started on her third term of school, to which she dearly loved to go. She never spoke unkindly about her teachers. God in his wisdom called her home. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. L. Goodrich, at Limerick, Ohio, Sunday, March 31, 1895.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

VALUE OF CHRISTIANITY.

THE Rev. Sylvester F. Schovel, President of Wooster University, Ohio, and eminent as a theologian and thinker, occupied the pulpit at Central Church, Chicago, yesterday morning. He took for the text of his sermon the following passage:—

“Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a busel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 5: 16.

In substance he spoke as follows:—

Our age is thickly settled with interrogation points, and its questions are quickest and thickest when it asks for results. Men tire of programs and promises. They weary of schemes and speculations. They suspect fine writing. Anglo-Saxon brief speech and hard facts are demanded everywhere in business and politics. It is even true that so impatient have many become that they leave no time for incubation at all and expect Minerva projects to burst full-armed from their busy brains.

In such a time it is not to be expected that religion will escape the universal challenge. It deals with duties as well as doctrines. It is a flesh and blood affair. And it is not to be desired, therefore, that it should escape. To claim exemption would be to give up the claim to reality, to vitality, to importance.

Would any Christian be willing to profess a religion which would masquerade in so sadly earnest a world as this, with no visible results? Would he be willing to take up the kingdom of thought or the kingdom of feeling and relinquish the kingdom of action? That would be like the relinquishment to Germany of the empire of the air on condition of ceding to France that of the land and to England that of the sea. Germany declined the offer. So will Christianity.

We are willing to state the case in this extreme form. If Christianity fails at this point we must abandon it. Beneficent results are supreme. The religion which consists “only” in saving men from sin’s consequences after death, is unpractical and useless. It is impossible for such a religion to be divine. There would be no life-giving power in a religion of promise with no pressure upon character and conduct.

Other religions win just in proportion as they appeal to the real needs of man, as is seen in Buddhism and Mohammedanism. No consistent scheme of evidence can be constructed for such a religion. Everything which might be said would lack foundation. There would be no fulcrum for the lever.

The atoning death of Christ himself is never to be held apart from its declared intent to make men holy. Nowhere does God’s justice flash more vividly than from the cross. Nothing so breaks the heart with shame for sin as a view of the love of the cross. The pardon of sin is placed after, while all the forces of revelation are placed before sin.

Two things are plain beyond controversy: First, that wherever civilization has entered without Christianity there the greed and sin of the civilized have so conditioned it that the race touched has withered and deteriorated. Wherever Christianity has introduced civilization the disinterestedness and virtue of Christianity have so conditioned that introduction that the race touched has been elevated and advanced. Second, that whatever blurs that record apparently (as in the Sandwich Islands), and whatever now carries death along with the stream of Christianity’s beneficent influences (as liquor into Africa), is due to the unchristian elements of civilization. And these elements themselves are being effectually antagonized where they exist only by Christianity.

It is true, however, in the world of to-day that the just prominence of particular nations is in exact ratio to their real religion. The scale rises, as, leaving out the East entirely, you come to Spain, pass into Italy, enter France, pause over Switzerland, go into Germany, cross into England, and come finally to America.

Conflicting class interests do not find the church made “a judge or a divider among men,” but they are met with the principles and teachings that touch the very hearts of all concerned. It makes service to fellow-men nobler than serving self, and a surer way to an eternal reward. Thus everywhere the life which radiates through the church soothes conflict, reconciles difference, prompts to all arrangement which modify the rigor of the iron laws of political economy. And it does this while upholding all the foundations of private right and preserving each individual stimulus to duty. It accepts the organic theory of society just as it ought to be adopted, knowing that it is a life current which connects the individual parts and the social whole. And yet, not organic, as the pure evolutionists would have it, for no unconscious organism, enslaved by physical law, can be made out of the conscious units of human free will and responsibility. And the evangelical church goes on practicing this organic theory as it has always done, with a lofty and original power derived from above.

And note that the church always emphasizes that upon which Christ has founded her, the supremacy of character having but one mark of greatness—service—and but one order of nobility—kinship to Jesus Christ.

And all the church holds she holds for all. Into all the lands she goes, wherever men have gone. All men are men to the Church of Christ. We know nothing but the universal right of men to know the truth. So, then, the light does shine, the city set upon a hill is not hid, the candle is there, poised securely on its candlestick; the world is far from the same thing it would have been without the Church of Christ. The fact-line is strong and unassailable, and daily growing stronger. More and more beneficent results are just ready to break forth. Threads of living light, woven in with all earth's darknesses, interplated by innumerable measures with all men's business, and the State's politics, and the national mission, and the international relations—such are Christians to be, and such, in measure, they already are.—Ex.

Thos. France 5795

LIVING FOR A CENTURY.

ACCORDING to an eminent scientist, Sir Benjamin W. Richardson, M. D., there is no just cause why there should not be people who, if they cannot quite vie with Methuselah in regard to longevity, at least can live until they have passed the eleventh or twelfth decade, and even then leaves their sorrowing friends with the bloom of youth still fresh upon their features, contrasting strangely with their graveyard surroundings. He advances the surprising doctrine that most people die for quite inadequate reasons and with quite unnecessary promptitude. He says we could easily acquire the art both of living longer than we do and of getting more physical enjoyment out of our lives. Putting aside all the accidental chances of death, nature intends us to live about five times the period we take in reaching maturity, and the normal standard of life ought to be about one hundred and ten years.

A centenarian need not descend to second childhood. With due regard to natural laws a man of average constitution may expect to interview his one hundredth birthday, if not in a condition of frisky youthfulness, yet with a respectable capacity both for work and enjoyment. Most certainly the world at present does contain a surprising number of men who at extreme age, yet continue to enjoy the full volume of life. Nature does not, like the business world, dismiss all sex-agenarians from an active share in mundane affairs. Gladstone, Bismarck, Pope Leo XIII. are all considerably over eighty years of age, and they are examples of that steadily increasing class of men who, in art and politics, in literature, and science, seem to defy time; but Sir B. W. Richardson says that the art of living a century is so easy that it ought to become common. On purely natural laws it lies within the reach of at least seven people out of ten.

This is a decidedly cheerful doctrine, and it is backed up to a certain extent by the famous athlete, Sandow, who professes to reduce the culture of physical vigor to a science. He is the ideal athlete, with the muscles of an Hercules and the graceful contours of an Apollo, and yet he was not born on these lines, but by his system of living developed these phenomenal powers. It is amusing to know that according to this modern Agamemnom extreme physical vigor is an art to be learned like dancing or whist. The muscles may be "cultivated," like early vegetables, and with results almost as astonishing. Nobody need be afflicted with a torpid liver, imperfectly breathing lungs, or flaccid muscles. There seems to be a possible Hercules latent in every man, just as to the chisel of Michael Angelo there was a possible "Moses" in every block of marble. If this be true a man may play the artist with his own body. He can make it a finely strung and exquisitely poised machine, with every part graceful in contour, and in a state of perfect working efficiency; and with the further gain that the working span of life will be indefinitely widened.

The English doctor's ideal life, outlasting a century, and the Prussian athlete's conception of physical vigor will seem to most people a pleasant but very idle dream. Yet life, it cannot be doubted, might be indefinitely enriched and expanded if the business of living were but conducted with a little more intelligence. Sandow's recipe for full-volumed physical life is delightfully simple. He inflicts on himself no special diet and no heroic self-denials. He eats and drinks anything he fancies. He . . . sleeps on a generous scale, seldom going to bed till midnight and getting up at eleven o'clock in the morning. "All I impose on my appetites," he says, "is that they shall be temperately indulged." Sandow claims that he cultivated muscle by the habit of breathing on scientific principles; the artistic use of light dumbbells, so as to bring every muscle into play; a daily cold bath, moderate "constitutionals," and plenty of sleep. The late Professor Blackie declared that there was an intellectual root to the amazing vigor of his own eighty-five years. "I am not so young as I was," he said, "but there is life in me yet; that comes with living as far as possible on a system and avoiding pessimism and all such devilry." It is well-known that men are killed before their time by worry and fret, and the mere want of cheerfulness. Sandow's recipe is purely physical, and we probably need to combine all methods to secure the highest results. With the hard-headed Scotch professor we must avoid "pessimism and all such devilry." With the English physician we must make the cultivation of "a serene cheerfulness," a fine art. And with the Prussian athlete we must extract all the virtue that slumbers in a simple diet, the habit of "scientific" breathing, and artistic dumbbell exercise. Some impatient people will probably declare that to button up life in strict rules after this fashion for the mere sake of prolonging its term is too great a price to pay for the luxury of being an athlete or a centenarian, and no doubt there is something to be said for this view of things. On the other hand it cannot be doubted that a little rational attention to the conditions of healthful existence would enormously increase the sum total of the world's happiness and multiply the chances of vigorous and enduring existence for everybody.—Ex.

THE GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION CONVENTION.

(Concluded.)

THE convention concluded its session with a musical and literary program, which was rendered before a large audience in the upper auditorium. It included vocal and instrumental music, a paper, "The Sunday school work a gospel work," an address, and recitations. At the close formal adjournment was had, and Bro. F. M. Sheehy pronounced the benediction.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

SATURDAY, April 6.—The forty-third Annual Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints convened at ten o'clock. The conference proceeded to permanent organization by selecting Brn. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair presidents, Bro. H. A. Stebbins secretary with power to choose assistants. Brn. R. M. Elvin, F. M. Sheehy, and M. H. Bond were appointed a committee on credentials. Prayer was offered by Bro. W. W. Blair. The organization was then completed by the choice of Brn. F. G. Pitt and T. A. Hougas as choristers, with power to choose assistants; Bro. A. H. Mills organist; Bro. Alma Chatburn usher, with authority to appoint assistants.

The chair suggested that short speeches be the order of the morning until the committee on credentials was prepared to report. On motion the time of speakers was limited to seven minutes.

We have not met hitherto under conditions that are more propitious for the good of the general work than we meet this morning. Whatever the elements for discord there may be, they are to us unforeseen, and if they be presented during the session the may take us unawares; therefore I warn you at the outset that we must not forget that while truth is aggressive and we as professed exponents of the truth are necessarily progressive and aggressive, we must not forget that we should be Christian gentlemen under all the conditions that may surround us at any time. The chief element of strength in a man is the fact that he is in the right; and while we may be confident that we are in the right, we should avoid being arrogant, dogmatic, or bigoted. The day of proscription is past, and it certainly can find no place in the hearts of those who are believing and earnestly looking for a period when everything that is of a character calculated to oppress or disturb will be overcome, not only by the influx of light, but by the coming of One with authority ruling in love, at the same time ruling in power.

I trust that in our sessions we shall remember that while we may be to ourselves dear and our opinions may be to us of great value, the world is a wide one and individuals in it as individuals are but integral portions, small at the best; and that the general good of the whole is of far more advantage than the good of one; and that however important one may seem to now be in reference to the work, God who rules over all is capable of carrying on his work to its accomplishment without any of us, and it cannot by any possibility be left to be determined upon the existence of one man. Now if we would bear this in mind it would remove from us, possibly, some of those peculiar characteristics which at times turn men from us rather than attract them to us. We ought to remember, too, that the onward progress of the work depends quite as largely upon individual action after we separate in the localities where our work may lie as it does upon what may be done by the body when it is together, looking at the field as a whole.

For this reason, then, we should strive to do, strive to live, as men who feel the responsibility of acting like men of God, not like children, easily moved to pettishness, or churlishness, or resentment. Remember that in the minds of noble men there is no room for resentment; that it is far better to forgive without waiting to be sued to forgive. It brings a better peace than to create antagonism and to rule by overwhelming force.

We congratulate you this morning upon the approach of what we may term better opportunities for presenting the truth, and for the wondrous progress made in some directions during the time that is past since we last met at Independence. May God in his infinite mercy continue those opportunities to us and make us able unto the entering in upon them and the using of them for the benefit of his work as his servants. This should be our constant prayer. It is mine.

Pres. W. W. Blair followed:—

Brothers and Sisters:—After the advice given and the suggestions made by President Smith, it seems to me there need be nothing further said in that direction. If these find lodgment in our hearts, recognition with us, they will be a sufficient guide in the light of God's Holy Spirit throughout the entire session of this conference, and indeed for all time to come. I congratulate this assemblage on the favorable conditions with which they are surrounded, striking conditions almost immeasurable, as compared with what I have witnessed in the early history of this church.

I became identified with what is known as the Reorganized Church in 1857, in the month of April. I had learned of it, however, a few months before. I found the Saints a humble, obscure, but a very spiritual body of people; a people who were zealous for the right, anxious to know the will of God, and resolute to do it. The wide world was against them, in some sense of the term; and the various factions of the church that existed at that time opposed them. And as we have stated before, so I say again, we had the world, the flesh, the Devil, and the different sects or factions into which the church was broken, to oppose us in our labors and hinder our progress. We have witnessed the church from that time gradually rising, spreading abroad, gathering strength on every side where faithfully represented. We have witnessed the nurturing watchcare of our heavenly Father at times in a most marked and significant degree. From ocean to ocean, and from the Canadas to the extreme south in the United States, abroad in foreign lands, upon the islands of the sea, wherever the work of this Reorganization has gone God has placed his seal and sanction upon its righteous efforts, confirming and approving the labors of his ministry, until thousands and tens of thousands of hearts rejoice in its loving efforts and are made glad by its uplifting work.

The chief thing, of course, in respect to the work we have in hand, is to know that God is its author, that God is its guide, its sun, its shield; that we have the divine approval; that we are walking in such manner as is well pleasing in the sight of our heavenly Father, so that the comfort, the light, the sealing testimonies of the Holy Spirit may be with us in our hearts and guiding in all our labors. That is the chief thing. The work we represent is not a human institution, nevertheless God chooses human instrumentalities by which to bring to pass his wondrous purposes. We believe it—nay, we know by our experience—that it is divine in its origin, it is divine in its appointments, and, as before stated, what is needed on our part is to build according to the divine pattern so that we may have the divine approval. Then our work will stand, honor and bless humanity, and be the means of bringing us onward and forward to a glorious triumph in Christ.

The work we represent is dissimilar to that of any other abroad in all the world to-day. We are seeking to establish primitive Christianity, the Christianity of Jesus Christ and his faithful ministry of early times, and to establish it along those lines appointed of God, that it may be completed and that it may be qualified and prove effectual for the very purposes for which God has ordained it. This is our work. It is not to build up any man or any system of religion founded in human wisdom or with human skill or anything of that kind; but to build a fabric ordained and planted of God, and to build it in such manner that the sunlight of God's favor shall be reflected in it and that he shall give it victory, glorious victory, and that reaching into the endless ages to come! It is a wonderful work, a marvelous work, a blessed work; one in which our souls should rejoice, our spirits be glad, and we should consecrate every power of our nature that with careful watchcare of self and of the work committed to our trust we may labor along the lines appointed of God until the final end shall be consummated in glory.

I again congratulate this assemblage upon this meeting and can only wish and pray and labor that unity and light, concord, and a very marked progress may attend it during all its sessions; that power and light and blessedness shall go out from it; that it shall bless the nations of the earth everywhere when they shall be reached, and that thousands and tens of thousands shall rise up, and that at an early date, and praise God for the work in which we are engaged.

Bro. A. H. Smith, President of the Quorum of Twelve:—

Brethren of the Conference:—I feel this morning to rejoice greatly in the prospects that are presented to us in the work in which we are engaged and glad to see so many present; but while I look around upon this occasion I recognize the fact that there are quite a number of our brethren who are actively engaged in this work that are not present with us who are wanting to be with us in this conference assembly; and as I feel the influence of that good Spirit that brings in it a strength and gives the force of this work this morning, I trust that we may realize that our brethren who are in the field who have made a certain sacrifice in remaining away from our number, will be remembered, that they too may feel that Spirit and its influences, encouraging them in the work that they are doing where they are; and I trust that we may not forget this fact, when we are assembled here to transact the business that shall be presented to us, if God is so gracious as to grant unto us his Spirit. We want that Spirit, that we may carry the influence of that Spirit out into the world, that wherever we go it may be recognized that the Spirit of God is with us and that we are his servants.

The brother who has preceded me has spoken just briefly of the events of the past that are of a character to give us something of a comprehension of the nature of the work that we are engaged in, in its progress, and that it is moving forward and moving grandly towards success; but we must not forget that this success must be wrought out by patient labor, by sacrifice, and by trials; and while we bear in mind the thought that it shall be accomplished by patience, labor, and sacrifice, we may also comfort ourselves in the thought that when the work is accomplished the great joy that shall be ours will be of that character that all the sacrifice and labor that we have passed through will be counted as naught. We will look back upon them as evidence only of the achievements that we have made and the grand nature of the work, being included with those that have come up through great tribulation and are worthy to receive the great glory that is promised at the end.

Now during the past year there have been peculiar trials, and we have come through them. I presume that the people of the United States have never passed through a year like unto the last,—the hard times, scarcity and failure of crops; all these things have been upon the people, and yet the reports come to us from all parts of the mission fields telling us of the moving forward of this great work, and how under the circumstances that the people find themselves placed they are feeling out after that spiritual security that will help them in the time of adversity in temporal things, and we are rejoiced; and we believe that the report that shall be made here at this conference of the past year will be grander and greater than has ever been reported by the Reorganization; and we believe that as we go out from this conference we go feeling that the hand of progress is with us and that the time is not far distant when the hills of this country around will be inhabited by the people that are believing in God and worshiping him in truth,—that the people of God will come in possession and obtain possession of the promises that God has given them. We have this hope; we are laboring to obtain it; it is obtainable; but we must not forget that this is to be done in order to reach us. God makes use of means, as has been stated, and if we in the hand of God are the means to bring about this result, we must see to it that we do our part; and if we do it, then there is no doubt but God will do his part and his name will be honored and glorified, his people will be redeemed, and the time will soon come when Christ Jesus our Lord will make his appearance and we shall meet him, meet him in the grand reception and be recognized as children of the family of God to dwell in the presence of Christ and God. May God bless you. Amen.

Bro. W. H. Kelley, of the Twelve:—

I can say that the work we are engaged in is as dear to me to-day as it has been in the past. We have had opportunities in the past to make inquiry regarding it, test it under adverse circumstances and under favorable circumstances, and it presents itself as truth with us to-day; and there isn't anything, it seems to me, that can engage man's attention that may be of more benefit to him than in sustaining that which presents itself to him as truth and right, and that is a great benefit to him, to the world. The presentation of the gospel by St. Paul, when he declared it to be the power of God unto salvation, simply suggests the keynote to this means and that which he established to be the means. It came to him with all that was essential to fortify him and to stimulate him with courage, that among evil report as well as good he was ready to maintain and vindicate it, because he knew it was of worth to man. For a long time we have been associated together as a body of people here in advocacy of what we believe to be the truth, the gospel as enunciated by Christ, preached by the apostles; that is in harmony with New Testament facts, that wherever preached receives the divine sanction; and while we live in a Christian land under Christian influence, our faith has been somewhat antagonistic to the prevailing faith among Christians, hence there has been a conflict in some degree. Like conflicts have occurred in the political institutions of the world, among other means going on for the survival of the fittest in this age of light and wisdom that has prevailed in increased proportions as compared with the past.

We have congratulated ourselves in the past, and do now, that we have not tried to advocate our views and present them where they could not be tried and measured by others' views and ideas, but have been open, free, and frank; and as it was in olden times, it has not been done in quiet, nor in a corner. We have courted inquiry and investigation, have been aggressive; not that we desired to do man's rights away, but we were zealous for the truth; we were in earnest; pushing it that we might gain the attention of the world to the consideration of its truth, and in this inquiry, this work, we have become stronger. When men have antagonized us, criticised us, it only proved in the investigation that the principles we advocate are founded in truth and fact. We have had hearts ourselves that we were willing to turn against it and show it to be inconsistent and erroneous if we found it so; and if it be truth, founded upon New Testament fact, it must be blessed of God; and if the Christian religion be true, there isn't anything that can engross the attention of man in this world of greater worth and that may be of greater moment to the sons of men.

It makes no difference about the traditions of the past, the superstitions of the past. In a political sense and a religious sense the world has been going on in these modern times, and we believe in the survival of the fittest in this regard and that God is blessing mankind, giving them greater freedom by giving them greater thought politically, scientifically, and religiously; and we have been trying to get hold of the truth as sanctioned by him, and to honor that truth; and if we have it and are contending for it, then he is working with it, and is able to give it success.

In my work, so far as I have been able to demonstrate it as an individual, I am to-day in the belief that the gospel cannot be questioned by the skeptic to-day, if he will put himself under its influence in the acceptance of the truth as presented by St. Paul that it may be demonstrated to his mind and he be conscious to-day that God is, that religion is a fact, that God has ordained it as a means to operate upon the minds and hearts of men for good to prepare them for the enjoyment that he has for them in the future; and it is all that has been revealed in the past, known in the present, that will make the necessary preparation to prepare man to meet God in the future. We are in the faith in this regard, and we think that we cannot be engaged in a greater or grander work. May his blessings attend us, and that we may be crowned with success and honor together, is my prayer.

Bro. J. R. Lambert, of the Twelve:—

It seems to me there never was a time when there was greater cause for encouragement to all the faithful and true than now. There never was a time when there was less reason for hope, success, and final triumph to those who are not faithful and true than now. These are the results of previous development that has been going on, and if we are careful, watchful, and prayerful we will be able to see them now; but the Savior informed the people in his time (and he spoke for the benefit of future generations too) that a great many would be deceived. You remember he said, "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation." Some of us forget one of these important duties, some forget the other, and some forget both. It is necessary for us to pray, and we must pray with the spirit and with the understanding also. It is necessary for us to watch, and we must watch with the spirit and the understanding also, and these two have been joined together, and complete success will never come to us as ministers of Jesus Christ and members with the church of God until we have learned to watch and pray in the spirit and with the understanding, and then as ministers we will be able to perform our part in the grand work, and as members of the church of God we will be able to perform our part faithfully and well.

From the history of the past given us in the sacred records of the Bible and the Book of Mormon, we learn that when his people fulfilled these important requirements they were free from that pride which brought ruin and destruction to the people of God. We learn that when pride and other evils obtained little by little as they did in the past (and the Book of Mormon is exceedingly plain on this important question) that destruction came. It never failed. Now it is just possible, if we will closely examine ourselves individually, that we will discover that there is a degree of this evil in our minds to-day, and as God's people in the past needed to carefully guard it, they need to guard against it to-day; and I feel confident, I am sure, if I am in the enjoyment of any degree of God's Spirit, that there is a demand for individual righteousness on the part of this people to-day as there never was before. Wonderful responsibilities rest upon us. We have within our hands through the wisdom of God the power under his instructions to move on the work, and without this individual righteousness and this freedom from those things which have brought disaster and downfall to the people in the past, it will not succeed. May God help us to see and give us the courage to stand for the right and help us to free others from the things which hinder and bring ruin to us, is my prayer.

Bishop E. L. Kelley:—

The organization that is represented here this morning differs in one thing from most every other of the Christian societies. We are peculiar in the belief touching the administration of our church in financial matters; that we should follow as tenaciously and particularly the pattern established by the Master in his time and approved by the apostles in their work as in any other department of church work; that it is not our province to go out in the world and formulate for ourselves rules of action that govern in financial matters in the church any more than rules of action and direction touching the spiritual side. The past two years have developed something of the manner that we may expect the church to be directed touching these lines that were laid down by the Master as recorded in the New Testament when more troublous times shall come.

While in the world there has been greater financial disaster than in most any other period of the past touching its entire peoples, yet the policy of the church or the success of it in following the lines established by the Master for the guidance in its temporal affairs has stood without disaster. I believe that we may congratulate ourselves this morning, then, in that a trial of the work so far as the department is concerned which refers to standing for the principles that were enunciated in early Bible times when followed out have proven that God can maintain his own, notwithstanding the discouragements of the world or the difficulties that are met with and the disasters so far as troublous times are concerned, and especially in that time when we expect more trouble than any other upon the people. The past year has been one wherein the times have been closer in America, in the South Sea Islands, in Australia, and on the continent than in any other time since the Reorganization began its work. Australia was so depleted in the last two or three years by reason of the severe close monetary times there that they could scarcely do anything for the missionary, and all of you are acquainted with the circumstances and financial conditions of the country in which we live here. Nevertheless the work has gone forward, not in the strength of individuals, but it has gone forward under the guiding hand of the Master who laid down the rules, outlined the course for the preaching of the gospel in all the world, when he was here, and we believe that these rules are sufficient of themselves to carry forward the gospel work, and if the people will stand by them it will move forward to the accomplishment of the work of which he gave promise.

In the closing of this year we stand better than we did last year. We may be congratulated on that, on account of the fact that the severe trials have been in the financial world and upon the people of the church with them, and I may say I believe without fear of contradiction that so far as supplying the ministry who have gone forth in the world in order to represent the Master and the gospel of the kingdom that was to be preached in all the world, that there has never been a time in the Reorganization when they have been better supplied, universally speaking, than this year. I believe, then, so far as the work is concerned from a financial standpoint, that we may actually accept the proposition that the lines that were laid down by the Master and the Bible doctrine for the administration of the gospel under the system of tithes and offerings is that that God will bless in the nineteenth century; and so I am in the faith in this system.

Bro. Charles Derry, President of the High Priests' Quorum:—

It is now forty-eight years since I put on the ministerial armor and entered into the field to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, and as I look back those years until the present and see myself a poor, illiterate boy, starting out to compete against error and trying to establish the truth of God, I am forced to confess that God has been true to his promise unto his servants. I have found that when I have gone forth discharging the duties that devolved upon me with an eye single to the glory of God, he has never forsaken me, he has helped me, and has opened my way. It is one great evidence to me of the truth of the work. I realize that God is with his people. I have realized it all through, except in a dark hour when in the West I discovered the abomination that swept as it were over the church and hovered like a dark cloud over the truth of God for the time being. With the exception of that time my mind has been able to grasp the truth that God was with his people. I still feel desirous of doing all I can. I expect to remain still longer if God shall give me physical and mental power to discharge my duties, and to discharge those duties with an eye single to his glory, and I can trust him for the eternal future as I have trusted him all the years that are past.

Bro. J. F. Burton, of the Seventy:—

If there is anything in the past year that has seemed peculiar in my work it has been what we used to know as the special providence of God manifested. I have realized that more in my work than I ever did hitherto, and the work in the Pacific Slope mission in the towns and villages there, with few exceptions, is in a better condition to-day to hear the word than they have been since I have known that country. There is a greater desire manifested and more calls than hitherto, which is an evidence, at any rate to me, that the field is whitening before us of the ministry.

And I wish also to certify, as evidently some of you would like to know something of the work in the South Sea Islands mission, that the same is manifested there too, and that upon the arrival of the gospel boat to the islands, some hindrances seemed to be placed in the way of her proper working, and for a time it seemed as though it would be impossible for the boat to perform the work that was designed for her. It was concluded by the brethren that we had better have prayer meeting, with special reference to the thought that the boat might be free. The native brothers and sisters met in the afternoon in the chapel, while the American missionaries and their friends met in a room adjoining. At the beginning of the meeting the Spirit of the Master rested upon Bro. Pori and all the assembly in such wondrous degree that they were all melted to tears—not from sadness but from joy—for the testimony they received that the boat would be released. There was shown to them a sheet let down from heaven upon which was the ocean, and the Evanelia also was seen sailing on it free and clear. She was considerably listed to one side, but was making good headway. In the room in which the American missionaries were the elder said to the brethren there assembled that the Lord told them last conference that we should find acceptance with man, and that if we did our duty and remained within the lines of our authority that we had the right to receive of our Master in our then circumstances, the fulfillment of that promise, and if we in faith should call upon him we should receive it, and we did, and received like testimony that our brethren did in their assembly.

Just prior to this, I may say, as the reason for the call of this meeting, that the American Consul—whom I wish to speak of here with honorable mention, J. Lamb Doty, Esq.—who in all our work aided us there and is our friend yet, told me that it would be better for us to haul the little vessel up, put her in care of some watchman, and let her lay there for a year and a half or two years; for it would take that time to get her free in a diplomatic sense in the French and American government.

Immediately from that time the way began to open step by step. The troubles went before us, and sunk, and with the governor of the island to whom it was necessary we should preach that he might understand our position and the doctrines that we were presenting to his subjects that we might thus maintain our position, who was our enemy at the beginning of this work, we found such acceptance that he is now our friend. He said to me: "I will do what I can that you may be authorized by the French government."

It was necessary also that the American Consul should understand our views and church organization; and last of all he said: "Mr. Burton, I wish you would tell me of your faith particularly." I did so, and he expressed himself pleased with it.

And last of all, before I left the islands, I had the pleasure of writing to the governor and saying that I had the honor of offering him the grandest system ever offered to mortal. Thus to the governor of that island and to the United States Consul, and to the French government it was necessary that the gospel should be preached; and thus has it gone abroad, widening the field to those heathen people, widening the field to those infidel people, and they themselves acknowledging that the system was grand and beautiful. There isn't a shadow of doubt but the Lord is in this work—is working with this people as it was told us, that within the confines of this association is the authority from on high, and it is being manifested in the world abroad everywhere, and nations are hearing it now in all places—not only in little out of the way towns and villages, but to the great and noble is this message going in spite of all the oppositions that are surrounding us everywhere.

Upon one of the islands, on Kaukura, after we had met there—and we went there to visit Bro. and Sr. Devore—three branches met together. We had the pleasure of meeting them all there together and as we were upon the stand and talking to that people, while speaking to them they sunk from our view and in their place we saw a people sitting before us whose very spirit was yearning with the desire for knowledge, and it seemed to us that they were finding fault with the American people as though they should say to us, "God has given to you the light, now you can come and give to us that we may come up as high as you are." After this I saw them entering into a city; they were as white as the driven snow, and walking in columns with the missionaries leading them—Brn. Devore, Gilbert, and others, and Sr. Devore also, and they were crying, "Glory to God, who has washed us and made us white in the blood of the Lamb."

I know as I know I am living that the Lord is working there as he is here, and he has fitted and qualified Brother and Sister Devore that now they have drank in of his Spirit and he has worked in them in that degree that they want to stay there the rest of their lives to carry on the work of the Master. Thus the Lord blesses the people there as here, and the church has found acceptance with man; and, thanks be to his holy name, with him also; and I feel to praise God for it, and that this indeed is the grandest work of all and my life is in it. I know nothing else, and the grandest of all is to be a Saint of God. May God bless us all and his peace be with us. Amen.

The address of Bro. Burton was attended by the Spirit of the Lord to a marked degree, and had its due effect upon the hearers.

Elder H. O. Smith, of the Seventy:—

I cannot say this morning that I have had as much experience as others, who have preceded me, in expression of their faith, but I can make this statement, that my faith grows stronger with my experience in the latter-day work and my experience in ministerial labor only makes me firmer in my determination to spend the balance of my life in the work in which we have engaged. With the last speaker, I have been for the last three years of my ministerial work engaged with the people of Utah, and I believe a few thoughts in connection with the work there would be interesting to all, and not only interesting but profitable. We have all, I believe, an earnest and anxious desire to see those, whom we believe have been led astray by peculiar doctrines, taught the ways of righteousness as we understand them and brought back into what we deem to be the true fold of God. I can say that so far as my own impressions are concerned I have never had a more earnest desire to preach the gospel to a people in my life than I have had since I have been in the territory of Utah. I never have been so deeply impressed with that desire and yet I can see the hand of God in the fact that we have moved slowly in that mission, and while I believe that there have been mistakes made in the past in our attitude towards them and that our attitude towards them to-day, to a certain extent, is not exactly as it should be, and our feelings toward them not exactly as they should be, yet I believe that God has been over all and that when the time will come that the way will be opened and the progress of the work will be probably more rapid than it has been in the past, but my experience has taught me that that people need the gospel preached to them as well as any other people. It was mentioned to me just a few days before I left the Territory this spring if I did not think it would be a good thing if President Woodruff would be moved to issue a proclamation or manifesto telling the people there that the Reorganization was the correct church acknowledged of God, I told them I thought that nothing could result more disastrously to the Reorganization than that. That I believed that what the people needed there more than anything else was conversion, that they had really lost sight of the true principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ and its effect upon human hearts and what we needed to-day there was to convert them to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ and that God was moving slowly in this matter and that he was moving well, and while I had an anxious desire to preach the gospel to that people that I believed it was best that they came in one at a time. But there is one thing that I believe has retarded our progress more than anything else, and that is in the understanding of the position occupied by both churches, the misunderstanding of our attitude towards them. I have met with more persecution, with more evidence of the misunderstanding of our position among the people in the Territory of Utah than anywhere else I have ever been, less desire to understand the position occupied by the Reorganization, and I can say that my ministerial work has been beset with greater trials to me than any other mission that I have ever occupied, and while the mission is not desirable for anyone, yet I believe that there is a work there for us as a Reorganization to do, that we should act carefully and prayerfully in these matters, and that we will move on to success. We can afford to wait, because we are right, and I am determined, so far as I am concerned, to stay with this latter-day work, God giving me strength.

It may be proper for me to say that for the past three years I have been traveling through the branches of the church. I have watched this church for the past twenty-seven years very closely and I am pleased to state that it is occupying higher ground than hitherto. Members are learning their individual duty, coming up and occupying higher ground. The church is arising, and so I feel pleased this morning that I can stand before you and tell you with a measure of knowledge that the Saints are striving to do their duty more fully than they have ever done so far as I know; and as we have heard this morning, God has been true to his promise, blessed his people, and we have prospered notwithstanding the hard times, and as a whole are in better condition than we have been heretofore. As we have been admonished this morning we feel the necessity of guarding ourselves carefully and well. We must beware of pride and all manner of evil and learn that the great secret of success is personal purity, holiness of life, uprightness of spirit, doing God's perfect will. We want to remember that our success depends entirely upon our personal efforts, and I believe that we can come to a condition where we can feel assured of the promise of God, where perfect love casts out all fear; and so we may feel encouraged that notwithstanding we may make mistakes, have our weaknesses, yet God is strong, and if we can only learn to trust him, rely upon his promises, and look to him continually, he will do all he has promised. His grace will be sufficient; he will be our present help in every time of need. In the past years I have been through a number of the cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts, and in the Canadas, and so I am assured that the church is making progress, satisfied the brethren are understanding the law and each other better, and so far as I am concerned, I am in the faith, satisfied the work will triumph. As we heard this morning, it doesn't depend on one individual. God will carry on his work without question. It is a great honor to have the privilege to stand engaged with this work, especially when we recognize the fact that God is its author and that we can be, we may be coworkers in the work of the salvation of the sons and daughters of men.

Let us lose our selfishness so far as we can and work for the good of all. May God bless us and help us to be better, to be pure, and devoted, and true, and bring ourselves up to the standard of righteousness required, is my prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

Brn. M. H. Forscutt, R. C. Evans, H. N. Hansen, and T. C. Kelley also responded to the call of the chairman. We are unable to publish all the addresses.

The committee on credentials reported, giving the vote of the districts and branches as presented by the secretary, and the credentials of delegates.

The secretary made choice of Brn. A. H. Mills and L. R. Wells assistants. Bro. Alma Chatburn chose Brn. G. Nesbit, C. Brackenbury, W. Ballinger, F. Curtis, B. C. Smith, G. Frick, G. Harrington, and F. C. Warnky; in charge of auditorium, gallery, and vestible.

The president gave instructions that the doors be kept closed during prayer and while the audience was being dismissed; he also requested the ministry and delegates to be on time at the sessions. He then dismissed the assembly.

At half past one o'clock the conference reassembled. Hymn No. 201, "How firm a foundation," was sung, Bro. A. H. Smith offering the opening prayer.

The several quorums were then assigned their places in the assembly. The minutes of the morning session were read, approved.

The secretary read the full list of delegates appointed by the various branch and district organizations. Pending inquiry into the appointment of delegates to represent certain districts, certain petitions for appointment and reappointment of laborers were presented. They were referred to the Quorum of the Twelve.

The report of the General Church Secretary and Recorder was read. It showed the following figures for the conference year: Total number baptized 2,782; received 1,233; removed 1,193; expelled 111; died 311; net gain 2,406; net loss 6; new ordinations 288; marriages 287. Present total membership 32,889. Iowa leads with a gain of 412; Missouri follows with a net gain of 342; Michigan is next in order with 322; after which come Illinois with 172, Canada with 152, Kansas with 112, California with 111, etc. England shows a gain of 55, Australia 47, Nova Scotia 8, Hawaii 4, and Sweden 4. Thirty-one new branches were placed on the general record. The report will be published in full with the regular minutes, in supplement form.

A report of Zion's Religio-Literary Society was presented and ordered spread upon the minutes.

The report of Bro. John Scott, Church Librarian, was read. It is as follows:—

*To the General Conference:—*As Church Librarian I beg leave to report that there are on the shelves 596 volumes of a miscellaneous character. During the past year 123 volumes and 58 pamphlets, consisting of messages, documents, reports, etc., passed by the Iowa Senate and Legislature have been added by donation. With the exception of the last-named books the library has not increased much the past few years, except by purchase.

We would be pleased and are at all times ready to receive donations from individuals or bequests from families, of such books as they may be disposed to give, that the church library may be extended and made more useful to the church.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SCOTT.

The auditing committee appointed to make examination of the accounts of the Bishop's office and the Herald Office made report. The complete report of the finances of the church has already been published, with the ministry reports, which see. The report on the Herald Office showed a net gain since last report of $1,748.24. For detailed statement see report in published minutes.

The Board of Publication reported:—

*To the Brethren in General Conference; Greeting:—*The Board of Publication would say that while we have nothing of special importance to report, we are pleased to inform you that the year that has just past has been a more favorable one financially than the one that preceded it, and instead of reporting a deficiency we are able to show a gain in the assets of the Herald Office, which though small in proportion to the amount invested, enables us to report the prospects much brighter for the coming year than they were one year ago. In addition to the publication of the periodicals, Herald, Hope, Autumn Leaves, and Quarterlies, we have printed the Autobiography of Elder Joseph Luff, and editions of the standard works of the church have been printed, and the stock of books on hand has been increased to some extent. Arrangements have been made with Sr. M. Walker by which the magazine known as Autumn Leaves is published by the Board, and the subscription price reduced twenty-five cents per year. We note with pleasure the rapid advancement being made by those engaged in the Sunday school work, which materially increases the demand for the Hope and other Sunday school literature and supplies.

We can but express the wish and indulge the hope that the Saints universally will interest themselves in the publishing department of the church work, make themselves familiar with its literature, and induce others to do the same.

A petition for the return of Bro. E. C. Briggs to Michigan and Northern Indiana was referred to the First Presidency.

The First Presidency and the Bishop, to whom, as a committee of three was referred the question of di-voiced by the last General Conference, to prepare a statement of the attitude of the church on the nature of the domestic relation and on the subjects of separation and divorce, reported. Because of its length it is not published here. It will be found in the regular minutes supplement to the HERALD to be issued after General Conference. The document was ordered spread upon the minutes and action upon it deferred until next conference.

A communication from the Pittsburgh and Kirtland district was read. It asked that the question of providing support for district presidents be defined according to the revelation of 1894. The St. Louis branch presented a statement concerning the Harmony and asked for the publication of a book with words and music on one page. Action on both was deferred.

Brn. R. M. Elvin, F. M. Sheehy, and R. Etzenhouser were appointed a committee to supply information to representatives of the press.

The presiding officers were authorized to appoint the character and time of meetings, also speakers and presiding officers.

The speaker for the evening hour, to deliver the first sermon of the conference, was Bro. J. F. Burton. Bro. J. T. Davis assisted him.

Sunday, the 7th.—The first service of the day was a prayer meeting. It was in charge of Brn. F. G. Pitt and I. L. Rogers. The Independence Sunday school held its regular exercises in the lower auditorium from 9:30 to eleven o'clock. A large number of visitors were present, "taking notes."

At eleven o'clock President Joseph Smith addressed the congregation that filled the main audience room and the galleries. The subject of the discourse was the need of personal righteousness on the part of the church—laity and ministry. The speaker called attention to the growing influence of the church in the world as a power for good, stating that as it continued to attract the attention of the people to an examination of its faith there was need that those who as members or ministers were called to bear the name of Christ should have a care that their course be in harmony with the principles of truth; that pride and worldliness be guarded against and cleanliness of heart and purity of mind and conduct be maintained for the salvation of others and of ourselves. The sermon was reported in full. Bro. M. H. Forscutt had charge of the service.

At half past two o'clock Bishop E. L. Kelley delivered a forceful sermon on the unchangeable character of the gospel. This sermon was also reported and will be published in due time. Bro. J. H. Lake assisted. After an intermission of fifteen minutes the sacrament was administered by Brn. Charles Derry, John Chisnall, C. A. Butterworth, and J. W. Waldsmith. Brn. Newton, Essig, Blanchard, Gunsolley, Krahl, Bean, Closson, Crick, Stratton, Mills, and Cox made distribution of the emblems to the audience.

At half past seven o'clock Bro. Heman C. Smith preached on the subject of inspiration. It was an able effort and received the close attention of the hearers. The leading points made by the preacher were that scripture had been given to man in language and in degree of intelligence adapted to his comprehension; that revelation did not necessarily represent all the wisdom and intelligence of Deity; that the Almighty dealt with men as he found them, giving that degree of light and truth they were able to bear; that as the teacher taught the pupil, adapting his teaching to the mental capacity and degree of development of his pupil, leading him onward and upward to advanced ground and higher principles, so the heavenly Father had ever done with man, in proportion as he had manifested a disposition to hear and heed what was revealed; that at times man had failed to obtain more and greater truths because he had failed to comprehend and to appreciate that already given. The law of Moses to the Jews was cited as an example. Men and women needed the inspired mind to comprehend the infinite. That which they did not understand did not benefit them because they did not comprehend it sufficiently to make use of it. Jesus called his disciples not servants but friends, because a servant did not obtain understanding, but as friends he gave them a knowledge of things delivered to him by the Father, so far as they were able to bear them, and also gave them promise by obtaining knowledge of "all things." Ministry and laity could attain to the designed condition of progress and usefulness only by understanding the revelations and purposes of God. Salvation without intelligent comprehension of the work to be done and cooperation in it was impossible. By faithfulness more would be given; by indifference and unfaithfulness, light would diminish. The sermon was reported. Bro. J. C. Crabb assisted the speaker.

Prof. C. E. Millard, of Chicago, entertained the audiences of the morning and evening with vocal music. The Professor's singing is excellent. His shading of passages is very delicate, his notes resonant and clear. He is a true exponent of the art of singing. He combines melody and simplicity in his renditions. His voice is rich in tone, full in volume, and delicate in interpretation and expression.

Monday, the 8th.—Brn. I. N. Roberts and John Chisnall were in charge of the morning prayer service. The Spirit of the Lord was present, humbling and comforting the hearts of those present, calling forth expressions of devotion to the work and renewing and deepening affection for it.

The morning sermon was delivered by Bro. J. C. Crabb, the subject, The law of the Spirit of life. Bro. Peter Anderson assisted.

By this time the attendance has become quite large. The presence of new men in the ranks of the ministry and of so many new faces among the laity is noticeable. It is with satisfaction that one takes note of the augmenting numbers in both.

The second business session of the conference opened at two o'clock, prayer being offered by Bro. J. W. Gillen. The minutes of preceding session were read. The secretary stated that he would insert a ruling of the president if the brother calling for it would prepare it.

The Quorum of the Twelve made report as follows:—

1. Whereas, we are of the opinion that for past offenses Bro. J. W. Gillen has suffered sufficiently, and whereas, he now assures us that he has so far overcome the appetite for tobacco as to warrant him in the belief that he will entirely abstain from the use of it in the future, Resolved that we do now remove all disability from him attaching because of the action of the quorum one year ago, and restore him to full fellowship in the quorum.

2. Whereas, death has entered our ranks and removed therefrom our brother, Thomas W. Smith, and whereas, in his removal this quorum loses a member whose unwearied toil within and without its sessions, has proven his deep devotion to the cause of truth and righteousness, Resolved that while we reverently bow to the will of our heavenly Father in this matter, we nevertheless record our recognition of the valuable services rendered by Bro. Thomas W. Smith, during his life, and our sense of the loss sustained by us, and the church in his death. Resolved, further, that we express our deep sympathy with the widow and child of Bro. Thomas W. Smith, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to them; also that they be recorded on our minutes, and submitted to the church in General Conference.

3. Resolved, that while we recognize the Seventy as the missionary force which is subject to the appointment and demand of the Twelve, yet under existing circumstances, we find it impracticable to appoint in complete harmony with the preambles and resolutions of one year ago. Resolved, further, that we now proceed to appoint as nearly in harmony with our action of one year ago as the circumstances now confronting us will permit.

4. Whereas, it is understood that ministers who are appointed to labor as their circumstances permit, have no claim upon the treasury of church for financial support; and whereas, it is the privilege and duty of all ministers to labor in their respective callings, in harmony with local authority, wherever and whenever they can, without an appointment from General Conference; therefore be it resolved, that we take this method of informing the church and ministry that hereafter we will discontinue the practice of so appointing, unless special and extraordinary reasons be furnished in favor of such appointments.

5. Resolved, that in the event of an order by the conference to publish the revelation of April, 1894, in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, we request the body to indorse and order published in connection therewith, the proceedings of the joint council which was provided for in the revelation.

Respectfully submitted,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Sec.

On motion of Brn. M. H. Forscutt and J. W. Waldsmith the report was adopted.

The report of the Bishopric was next read:—

To the President and Brethren in the Conference:—The conference year which has just closed has been at times fraught with considerable anxiety to the Bishopric, but by the especial favors of the divine hand in guiding, and the aid of the faithful brethren and sisters whom the Lord inspired to good works, the missionary force sent into the field at the last annual session has been fully sustained, as provided in the gospel pattern, and other undertakings of the church reasonably maintained.

For the more ready use and convenience of the conference a general summary of the financial work of the church has been published with the ministry reports, to which the attention of the body is especially called.

The question of aiding in securing a suitable chapel in London, England, for our church work, referred to the Bishopric at the last conference, has been duly looked after; and through the assistance offered by Bro. Stephen Woods, of Lamoni, Iowa, it has been found practicable to render the aid asked for to the brethren in London; and upon approval of the Presidency and the Twelve a lease of ample ground has been made in the city of London for the period of ninety-nine years, and arrangements made for the erection of a chapel at once.

On account of the severe drought in Kansas and Nebraska the past year, we have found it necessary to render aid to Saints in some localities in these States, and the Bishop's agents for their respective districts have looked after and reported or relieved those in distress.

Notwithstanding the great failure of crops in the places referred to, it will be noticed in looking over the financial report when published that a good many contributions have come from brethren and sisters in these States to aid the gospel work. They are usually from brethren who have in years past been consistent in doing their part to maintain the work.

The fact that such under the severe hardships and losses have had plenty and some to spare should awaken a resolve to a full response to duty in these matters on the part of every member of the church.

Preparation and arrangement for building the Saints' Home have been continued as it was practicable to do so, and unless otherwise directed by the conference, work on the building will proceed the 1st of May, with the expectation of having it ready for occupancy the 1st of September.

Pursuant to the direction of the joint council authorized last conference, steps were taken early in the year to secure a suitable vessel for the use of our missionaries for the Society Islands. It had been thought possible that such a vessel as would meet the wants of the church might be purchased in San Francisco, but upon reaching that point and carefully looking over the various crafts to be found, in company with Captain Burton, Elder Forscutt, and J. A. Anthony, none was to be had of suitable size that we were willing to risk. The plan was then undertaken of building a vessel, and the Evanelia is the result.

This vessel cost more than many had thought would be required for one to answer the purpose; but not more than such a vessel as we have can be built for.

In the building care was taken that it should be put up in the best manner possible, so that we could feel that our missionaries were not sent out in a vessel we would not be willing to go in ourselves. Aside from the building and rigging of the vessel, it took seven hundred and fifty-six dollars and eighty-one cents to furnish and fit it out properly for the voyage and work at the islands. This was done under the supervision of Captain Burton, but all vouchers were forwarded to the Bishop's office, so that the expenses could be fully audited and found entirely satisfactory.

It is gratifying to be able to report that some of the things that have been a burden to the temporal work of the church the few years past are now nearly or quite lifted, and it is hoped that increased success may come to the work the present conference year. However, the fact should not be forgotten or overlooked that in our work new matters will constantly arise which must be met, and that the place where any may justifiably slacken their energies and seek comfort and ease has not as yet been reached.

Very respectfully submitted,

April 6, 1895.

The college committee also reported:—

The college committee beg leave to report. The committee proceeded to lay off the college grounds, donated by Bro. W. A. Hopkins and Srs. M. Walker and M. A. Wickes, together with twenty-six acres which the committee purchased of Bro. Hopkins, making sixty-six acres in all, devoted to the college purposes.

A pair of scales was bought and considerable quantities of rock and sand were hauled and delivered by those who had signed subscription list to be paid in kind.

It was not practicable to get deeds for the land until this spring, the deeds to forty acres have been made, and arrangements are in progress to secure the other twenty-six acres, and will be perfected before long.

No lots have as yet been sold, the committee deeming it better not to offer any to sale until it could give unquestioned titles. As soon as this point is reached lots will be offered to sale.

The college grounds have been named "Graceland" by the committee, but no name or style of title has been agreed on for the college.

No plans have been agreed on for building, though it is understood that it will be necessary to build at first within the reach of the funds at the disposal of the committee, and in such a way that the other necessary buildings may be properly added.

A little over six thousand dollars have been subscribed in money and labor, which, with what may be raised by sale of lots estimated at between eight and eleven thousand dollars, will, it is hoped, give such a start as will secure the needful buildings to begin with.

It is intended to use the utmost diligence to secure the completion of the enterprise within the power of the committee.

JOSEPH SMITH, Chairman.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 8, 1895.

The committee appointed to obtain correct representation of the faith and history of the church in histories and encyclopedias made report. Their report was received and they continued. It is as follows:—

We your committee appointed to make corrections concerning the church in encyclopedias and current histories, report having succeeded in getting a brief article in Appleton's Annual Encyclopedia for 1894, under the heading of "R." We now have promise from the editor in chief of one of the leading encyclopedias to publish an article for us explanatory of our position.

The matter of issuing a general statement for the use of editors and publishers of encyclopedias and histories, has been delayed, awaiting the final settlement of certain questions by the courts of the land. The committee have collected material for such a circular as will set forth the positions of the church, and the same will doubtless be ready for publication at an early time.

The conference for the completion of this work may appoint a new committee, to which the matter may be referred for this purpose, or continue the present one as may be deemed most proper.

F. M. SHEEHY.
E. L. KELLEY.

The Second Quorum of Teachers presented a resolution asking that all teachers of the church be made ex officio members of General Conference. It was deferred until next conference.

A petition for appointment of a minister to the city of Cleveland, Ohio, was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

The request of the Saints of St. Louis for a hymn book—words and music—smaller than the Harmony, was taken up. After some discussion it was referred to a committee of three.

The request of Pittsburg and Kirtland district—for definition of the law pertaining to the support of district presidents, under the revelation of 1894—was referred to the Bishopric.

The First Quorum of Priests made report. After attention to some matters of minor importance the session was adjourned.

In the evening hour Bro. G. H. Hilliard preached on the subject of "Spiritual gifts" or spiritual manifestations. Bro. Hilliard is too well known to require extended mention of the character of his effort. It was pregnant with "common sense" from beginning to end, and little sympathy was extended to "wildfire" manifestations of spirit power or vain imaginings of enthusiasts. Bro. Hilliard possesses a virtue that is all too rare among men; viz., the power or strength of character to tell people just what they need to know without withholding what is for their welfare through fear of losing their good will. Very few men have the moral stamina to do this as fully as it ought to be done. We notice, however, that the men who discern things as they are and deal with them just as they find them, firmly but kindly insisting upon a compliance with the spirit and principles of the gospel, are the men who, "in the long run," gain and retain the good will of the true in heart. Only men of entire integrity can be used for high purposes. The true servant of God and the faithful servant and friend of the people is the man who has integrity enough to tell them of their sins, and follies, and mistakes. "Pleasant things" are not pleasant to true men and women if they are not true. The true spirit knows too well that, seeking to attain to womanhood or manhood in Christ, the type of man in his highest, in his true normal condition, he must soberly and intelligently discern the exact condition of himself and be able to make a contrast between what he is and what he ought to be as striking and as clear as the facts present them. We state it as what we conceive to be a correct proposition, that the attitude of the sincere child of God must necessarily be that of sturdy, honest opposition to shams, and vanities, and weaknesses in every form and in every place.

It is time for this church to be fully admonished by the history of mankind and his failures and successes past and present. We have no way of knowing or judging the future in this regard but by the experiences of the past. The past is the history of wreck, and waste, and ruin, with but few—comparatively few—exceptions. The evil stands as a warning to us "upon whom the ends of the world are come." The good done shows plainly that it might have been otherwise had men and women all been true and good, what has been—of good or of evil—may be again. Every man and every woman has heaven above or evil beneath, and his course is open before him. God and man can be served and glorified in us, or the power of evil be magnified, if misdirection occur and evil or mistaken ways be followed.

Because of the admonitions of the past the present generation is under greater responsibilities than any that has preceded it. These responsibilities are increased by the greater privileges of the present. The age in which we live is fruitful in varied privileges and conditions far superior to those of the past. "Knowledge" has "increased;" civilization is higher; intelligence more generally diffused. All these enter into the makeup of the men and women of the present, giving them advantages superior to those enjoyed by the generations that have preceded us. The Almighty is focusing or bringing all systems and forces into the arena of open investigation and trial that they may be tested and proved—what their true character is—that the true may be recognized and used, the false be thrown away. The generation of the present and that which shall follow must therefore be better equipped to move forward and occupy higher ground than what has been occupied in the early days of the work. Other men and women have labored and we have entered into their labors. They labored under severe persecution with inferior advantages. We are left free to act under the protection of a more highly developed public sentiment, free to act, unhindered, unhampered by the spirit of violence or strict unprogressive conservatism. A better opportunity was never afforded to a people, a more responsible position was never filled. The world never needed more. Every other system but the gospel system has been weighed and found wanting. Good men and women are anxiously scanning the spiritual, and moral, and intellectual horizon for truth, for deliverance. "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God"—the divine nature within the souls of women and men prompts to higher aspirations than the world inspires. To us is committed the privilege of leading them to "the way, the truth, and the light." "True worth in man or woman is the immediate jewel of the soul." Let us seek it and maintain a standard in all the habits and details of life that shall be in harmony, shall be consistent with it, and we shall have power for good and be among the called, the chosen, and the faithful. "If any man have not the spirit [the mind] of Christ he is none of his."

Let us not forget, too, that God cannot withhold the treasures of wisdom and knowledge from God's people when conditions under which they are obtained are attained. When we show sufficient appreciation of added light and power to use to the glory of God and to continue in the spirit of meekness and service in behalf of the common good of all, the Lord will intrust with all sufficient grace and gifts for the further development and perfection of his people.

Bro. Albert Haws assisted Bro. Hilliard in the service.

Tuesday, the 9th.—The usual morning prayer service was in charge of Brn. A. S. Cochran and Henry Kemp. The meeting was fairly good, interest in it being divided, however, by withdrawal of a large number who attend the meeting held by the Daughters of Zion.

At eleven o'clock Bro. M. T. Short preached on the subject of "faith." It was said to be a good sermon. The speaker was assisted by Bro. James Moler.

Business was resumed at two o'clock. A hymn was sung; prayer was offered by Bro. F. M. Sheehy. Minutes of yesterday were read, approved.

A request for appointment to Burlington, Iowa, of a minister who could speak both German and English was referred to the Presidency and the Twelve.

A statement of existing conditions in the Society Islands, involving the interests of the church in a missionary and general sense, including the possible need of diplomatic intervention by the United States government to secure certain privileges from the French government, was referred to the President of the Church and the Presiding Bishop.

Brn. J. A. Robinson and F. G. Pitt presented their resignations as members of the college committee, because of inability to give college matters due attention. Brn. Daniel Anderson and William Anderson were chosen to succeed them, the choice being made unanimous.

The committee to which was referred the question of financial support of district presidents reported:—

The committee to whom was referred the resolution of the Pittsburg and Kirtland district conference asking a definition of the law touching the support of the families of district presidents under the resolution of 1894, would respectfully report:—

1. That we fail to find any reference in the revelation of 1894 in regard to the support of families of district presidents, and hence nothing that could be construed to change in any regard the maintenance of any family from the plan set out in former church articles.

2. The common and universal rule of the church upon which any elder's family is supplied is based upon the law of necessity, and all are to be supplied according to their several needs under the supervision of the general church authorities, and can hardly expect any variation from the rule; for the revelation states, section 70, paragraph 3: "Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I the Lord have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man." District presidents when under general appointment and giving their entire time, or, by agreement, a part, to church work in like manner, are supplied according to their needs.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY.
E. A. BLAKESLEE.
G. H. HILLIARD.

The report was adopted.

A request from the deacons for the rights of ex officios was referred to next General Conference.

The published report of the Bishop was adopted by the body.

Bro. R. C. Evans was appointed to minister at the African M. E. church in the morning and Bro. T. W. Williams in the evening of Easter Sunday, the 14th. Brn. Evans and Mintun with others to assist, had ministered the word at said church on the preceding Sunday.

Provision was made to hold Thursday's session in the lower auditorium in order to give the Independence branch committee on entertainment opportunity to decorate for Thursday evening's exercises.

A motion was made that when adjournment was taken it be to April 6, 1897. An amendment was offered that the words, "unless convened sooner by the first Presidency," be added. A substitute was moved, that the next conference be held April 6, 1896. The substitute prevailed by a vote of 145 to 47.

The college committee was authorized to incorporate under the laws of Iowa.

A resolution concerning the Order of Enoch, the law of consecration, and the gathering of the people, asking the conference to state that the time has come to move in these matters, was deferred to next day's session. Bro. G. T. Griffiths pronounced the benediction.

The evening sermon was preached by Bro. A. H. Smith, the subject matter a statement of the faith of the church. The discourse was well received. Bro. W. H. Kelley assisted the speaker.

Wednesday, the 10th.—Promptly at nine o'clock Brn. C. E. Butterworth and J. M. Terry opened the service of prayer. It was largely attended.

At eleven o'clock Bro. T. C. Kelley spoke on the subject of the organic form of the church and the means provided for the education of its membership. Bro. D. E. Tucker had charge of the service.

Business was continued at two o'clock; prayer was offered by Bro. J. R. Lambert. The minutes were read, slightly corrected, and approved.

Bro. J. H. Lake made a statement concerning the attitude of the Quorum of the Twelve in regard to the revelation of 1894. The speech made at last conference by Bro. A. H. Smith, president of the quorum, had not been published, its publication being omitted by some oversight. On motion Bro. Smith was authorized to write out a statement of the attitude of the quorum for insertion in the minutes.

The resolution concerning the Order of Enoch, etc., deferred from yesterday's session, was referred to the First Presidency.

The committee appointed to consider the question of issuing a new hymn and tune book reported. The report as amended reads as follows:—

We, your committee to whom the petition from St. Louis Saints, relative to a smaller hymn book, and marked "St. Louis district for abridged Harmony," beg leave to report.

That upon examination we find that while some of the complaints set forth in the petition are somewhat extreme, yet there exists necessity for a work such as the petition calls for, and after a careful consideration, we recommend:—

1. That immediate action be taken by your body to supply the general demand for a smaller and more convenient hymnal.

2. That a committee on compilation composed of three be appointed who shall, as soon as possible after said appointment, make a request that the presidents of the different branches call together the choristers and singers of their respective branches, and make such selections from the harmony as they would desire, not to exceed two hundred and fifty additional hymns, to be published in the new hymnal, each branch specifying the music which they desire to be used with each hymn, and to report within sixty days to said committee.

3. On the expiration of the sixty days, the committee shall immediately convene and take up the work of revision, selecting the most popular tunes and hymns to the number of not more than two hundred, words and music combined, and fifty hymns to be grouped in the back of the work with one bar of the tune above, and on the completion of such revision the result of their labors shall be submitted to the Board of Publication for issue at the earliest possible moment, and that this body make a request that the Board of Publication give this its especial attention.

4. A book about the size and arrangement of "Winnowed Songs, bound in cloth with leather back, at a cost of not more than fifty cents each, would meet with general satisfaction and we so recommend.

5. We suggest that this committee of compilation be Bro. Ralph G. Smith, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Sr. L. L. Ressegue of Lamoni, Iowa, and Bro. Arthur Mills, of Independence, Missouri.

6. It is the sense of this committee that such hymns as "Let us shake off the coals from our garments," etc., should be sung with their original tunes, and wherein they are not original in the Harmony, that the committee arrange to have the original tunes for such hymns published in preference to new tunes which may have been published in the Harmony.

7. We recommend that the committee be authorized to receive a limited number of tunes from other hymnals, providing there is a general demand made from the branches for said insertion.

8. We further suggest that the work be entitled, "The Saints' Hymnal," to distinguish it from the Harp and Harmony.

9. We suggest that the pages in the Harp and Harmony where words and music are selected from be placed just above each selection, so that parties using either book need not be discommoded.

Your committee respectfully suggest further, that owing to the fact that the demand is so general and the need so urgent, that an early issue of the work will meet with general approval by the church.

Respectfully submitted,

T. W. WILLIAMS, }
W. H. GARRET, } Com.
W. S. MACRAE, }

The following resolution was then adopted:—

Resolved, that the Board of Publication be requested to proceed with the publication of the book as soon as they have a guarantee that one thousand copies can be disposed of.

A resolution was presented ordering that the church publishing plant be removed as soon as possible to Independence, Missouri. The matter was laid on the table.

A resolution providing that whereas the present publication of ministry reports is attended with considerable expense, that hereafter the ministry report to missionaries in charge who shall embody said reports in their reports to the conferences. Pending discussion the session adjourned.

In the evening hour Bro. J. W. Gillen preached on the subject of "Christ in prophecy." Bro. J. H. Lake assisted.

Thursday, the 11th. — Brn. I. N. White and Henry Kemp conducted the morning service of prayer and testimony.

Bro. A. C. Barmore, of Southern Indiana, preached the morning discourse, his subject, The baptism of the Holy Spirit. His points were well taken and clearly stated. Bro. M. H. Forscutt assisted. Two were baptized at the noon hour by Bro. I. N. White.

Conference reassembled in the lower auditorium at two o'clock. The room was filled, almost every available seat being occupied. The services opened as usual, Bro. J. F. Burton offering prayer. The minutes were read. Provision was made for the ordination of Bro. F. W. Barbee as president of the First Quorum of Teachers.

A committee on tent work reported, indorsing the use of tents in mission work, and recommending that presidents of missions and districts be advised to make general use of tents in their various fields. The subject of tent work was fairly well discussed, most of the speakers favoring the resolutions; some, however, stating that tent work had not proved profitable in their localities. The resolution advising use of tents was amended by adding the words "wherever deemed advisable," and so adopted.

The question concerning ministry reports, deferred from yesterday's session, providing that conference appointees shall hereafter make report to missionaries in charge who shall condense or summarize their reports and report their labors with their own to General Conferences, was taken up. A substitute was presented prescribing a uniform system of reporting to be followed by the missionaries in charge in making said summarized reports to General Conference. The substitute was defeated, and the original motion indefinitely postponed.

A resolution affecting college matters was presented and adopted as follows:—

Whereas in the prosecution of the college work it is likely that there will be the need of a board of directors prior to the assembling of the next General Conference, therefore be it resolved that this body proceed to name a board of nine directors to be known as the college board, who shall, under the articles of incorporation have the usual authority of such boards, except as may be varied by such articles.

Provision was made for organization of the Fourth Quorum of Priests by appointing Bro. E. C. Briggs to attend to it.

The next item of business was that of deciding where the next conference should be held. Kirtland, Ohio, and Lamoni, Iowa, were named, and the time for discussion of the claims of each point limited to ten minutes. At the close of the discussion five or more delegates called for a yea and nay vote. The various delegations assembled to poll their votes, after which the roll of ex officios and delegates was called by the secretary. The result of the vote was as follows: Kirtland, 611; Lamoni, 361. The choice of Kirtland was made unanimous.

The evening hour had been allotted to the entertainment committee of the Independence branch, who had prepared an elaborate program entitled "An evening with amateurs, consisting of the beautiful in art, music, and literature." It included piano and violin solos, a cornet solo, a vocal solo, vocal duet, vocal trio, choruses, recitations, tableaux, and "shadow-graphs." The tableaux were especially good. Those who arranged them deserve credit for their conceptions of the subjects presented. Their work showed good interpretation of the sentiment and characters portrayed. The church was well filled, and the effort a financial success. The proceeds were devoted to the branch building fund.

This entertainment is the third given since the conference season. The first one was by the Religious-Literary Society, the second by the Sunday School Association. The last one was the best, by far, of the three. More time and labor had been devoted to the arrangement of it, however. The young people deserve credit for talent and energy displayed in their work.

The number of entertainments given has awakened quite a general interest in the subject of church entertainments. For the benefit of those who may desire to know the attitude of the general church in regard to them we refer them to the minutes of the General Conference of 1892 where a general statement of what the character of such entertainments should be, together with suggestions for the conduct or management of them is given, as adopted by the body.

Friday, the 12th.—Prayer service was held, as usual, at nine o'clock, in charge of Brn. F. C. Keck and H. O. Smith.

Bro. R. M. Elvin spoke at eleven o'clock. The effort was in the nature of plea for a constant effort to occupy higher ground that the people of the church might worthily represent it as exponents or illustrations of the possibilities of the faith. Bro. James McKiernan assisted.

The afternoon session for business was opened promptly on time. The hymn, "O Lord thy people bless," was sung. Prayer was offered by Bro. W. H. Kelley. The usual reading of the minutes then followed.

The following resolution was moved and seconded:—

Resolved that we adopt the following resolution as found in conference minutes of 1893: "Resolved that we go on record as believing that the act of conveying the emblems to those partaking forms a part of the work of administering the sacrament and that under the law neither teachers, deacons, nor laity have the right to administer in that capacity."

The resolution was adopted.

President Joseph Smith read an item from the Kansas City Star in which certain sensational statements were made concerning the attitude of the First Presidency and the Twelve towards spiritual manifestations and other matters, by which the general condition of the church was greatly misrepresented. The President good-naturedly called the attention of the members of the press present to these misrepresentations and expressed the hope that while we were in a sense "public prey," that they would see that just representation was made of the church, its condition, faith, etc., etc.

Provision was made for the organization of the Fourth Quorum of Priests by arranging for the ordination of J. I. Young president, Francis Ebeling and R. F. Hill counselors. The organization and ordinations were provided for by referring to the Quorum of the Twelve.

The present Board of Publication was sustained for the coming year.

The following list of appointments were read and approved. Of the Twelve:—

*Brethren of the Twelve; Greeting:—*After mature and prayerful consideration we have decided to recommend for the quorum as follows:—

Resolved that we refer all those who have applied for missions, and who have not been appointed by us, to local authorities where they wish to labor.

Respectfully submitted,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Secretary.

The session then stood adjourned.

THE DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

We publish the following minutes of the meetings of the Sisters' Society known as the Daughters of Zion. The items are those furnished us by the secretary, Sr. C. B. Stebbins.

The second annual meeting of the Daughters of Zion convened in the basement of the Saints' church at Independence, at ten a. m., Tuesday, April 9, 1895. The meeting was called to order by the chairman, Sr. C. B. Kelley. Hymn 43 from Winnowed Songs was sung. Prayer was offered by Bro. M. H. Bond. The minutes of the meetings of 1894 were read and approved.

Sr. Kelley reported as chairman of the advisory committee.

The report of the recording secretary was read and on motion was adopted. This report showed that at last report there were twenty-three local organizations. Fourteen new societies have been organized, making the total number of organizations 37; total membership 567; gain during past year 238.

The report of the corresponding secretary was read and adopted. It is as follows:—

During the past year I have received, letters 73; have written: letters, 65; circulars to locals, 29; circulars to ministry, 130; have received and turned over to the treasurer, moneys $31.71.

Situated as I am, in a position which enables me to view the whole field of labor in our branch of the gospel work, I am pleased to be able to say that it is encouraging in the highest degree. Messages come to me almost daily, telling of organization here, new members there, awakening sympathy in this quarter, added and increasing interest in that. Then, too, comes the gratifying news that this society has met with especial success in one branch of our work; and, hand in hand, comes the intelligence of good results in another line. And one's heart cannot but respond with joyousness. This work is a grand and good one. We have felt that God is at the helm and that this organization has come to stay. A nobler corps of mothers, an inspiring array of workers, and bright throngs of happy-voiced, loyal-hearted children, will stand in the future as witnesses to the fact that this work is blessed. There was a need for it, and it materialized. And it is entrusted to us. Let us then be glad, yes, eager to work on, and the cause will triumph.

The recent letters to the elders of the ministry have met with warm receptions, for which I am truly grateful. Many kind and encouraging replies have been sent to me, and I feel that the prayers and sympathy of the ministry are with us. I believe, as far as it lies within their power, they will assist us. Some have organized local societies at once, others have made efforts so to do, and the seeds of truth dropped will bear fruit by and by.

So, then, I am encouraged. At no time since this work came to me have I felt otherwise. And I can freely say, "God speed the right!"

AUDIE ANDERSON,
Corresponding Secretary.

In connection with this report the secretary read a number of encouraging letters from brethren of the ministry which had been received by the corresponding secretary in reply to letters sent out by her. Following the reading of these letters the report of the general treasurer was read and adopted.

The following resolution prevailed:—

Resolved, that we amend article 3 of the constitution by striking out the words "by delegate system;" and, whereas, the article relating to ex officio members is rendered unnecessary, that we further amend by striking out article 7.

The following also prevailed:—

Resolved that the church Rules of Order shall be used as authority in transacting the business of this organization.

It was moved and adopted that the resolution relating to the young Daughters of Zion be included in the constitution.

The following was introduced:—

Resolved that the resolution passed in 1894 which provides that "each local society shall pay to the general treasurer an amount equal to five cents per month per each member," be attached to the constitution.

A general discussion was had upon this question and the previous question being moved it was carried. The original resolution, being put to vote, prevailed. A motion to adjourn subject to the call of the chairman obtained. The chairman announced a meeting for 4:15 the same afternoon. The benediction was pronounced by Bro. Salyards.

The Daughters of Zion met at 4:15, April 9. "All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung, and prayer was offered by Bro. Haws. Sr. Kelley stated that she had had a few copies of the constitution printed for use in this meeting and had also purchased a Book of Rules and Order for the use of the advisory committee. The cost of these was ——— for printing and ——— for the book, amounting to ———, the bill for which she would like to have allowed by the body. A motion to allow the bill prevailed.

Additional reports were called for and one from the Young Daughters of Zion, of Independence, was handed in and read by the secretary; also Sr. Krahl, of St. Joseph, reported of the organization at that place.

A motion was introduced that we proceed to elect officers by ballot. This was lost. A motion to elect officers by nomination and acclamation prevailed. The following were nominated for members of the advisory board: Srs. M. Walker, A. Anderson, C. B. Kelley, B. C. Smith, A. Stedman, C. B. Stebbins, L. Schmutz, E. Burton, L. L. Resseguie, E. Hulmes, and L. Wight. Srs. B. C. Smith, L. Schmutz, and E. Hulmes withdrew their names, stating as their reason for doing so that they thought the committee should be near together for consultation. The vote being taken resulted as follows: M. Walker 32, C. B. Kelley 28, A. Stedman 23, A. Anderson 22, L. L. Resseguie 18, E. Burton 14, M. Nicholson 11, L. Wight 7, C. B. Stebbins 1. The advisory committee is therefore M. Walker, C. B. Kelley, A. Stedman, A. Anderson, L. L. Resseguie.

Sr. Stebbins was nominated for secretary and was elected by a unanimous vote.

Sr. V. Blair being nominated for treasurer was unanimously elected.

A motion prevailed that we hereby urgently request each local organization to report to the annual meetings.

Opportunity was given for an expression of opinion as to the publishing of the Leaflets. Nine short speeches were made, all in favor of the work being continued on the ground of the great good which the Leaflets heretofore had accomplished.

A motion obtained that we hold a short meeting at the close of the conference business session to-morrow (Wednesday) afternoon. On motion the meeting adjourned subject to this arrangement. The meeting was dismissed with benediction by one of the elders.

At 4:30 on Wednesday afternoon the Daughters of Zion reassembled. "Let us shake off the coals from our garments" was sung, and Bro. Salyards offered prayer. The chairman stated that the time having all been occupied by business at the previous sessions this meeting would be devoted to short speeches. The following brethren and sisters were called upon and responded. Sisters Thorburn, Wright, Stedman, Krahl, Frick, Griffiths, Stebbins, and Short; Brn. Criley, Mintun, and Haws.

All felt that the work which the Daughters of Zion have taken up is a good and a necessary work. Many encouraging words were spoken, some testifying that they had received the witness of the Spirit that the work is approved of God. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" was sung and Bro. Kelley pronounced the benediction.

OFFICIAL JEALOUSY.

JEALOUSY is "as cruel as the grave;" so runs the proverb, as referring to jealousy between married companions. But it is not this sort of jealousy we have in mind now. We refer to that sort that is sometimes permitted to lodge in the minds of officers in the church and is indulged in against their fellow-officers, in either superior or subordinate positions, or in equality.

Some of the evidences of jealousy in an officer is the improper reference to the work, ruling, or ways of a co-worker; a whispered comment by way of detraction, usually in places where it is thought the officer's influence may be lessened by such comment. The willingness to hear unfriendly criticism of a fellow worker and to invite the telling of slips, actual or supposed, by which the officer is brought into disrepute, and his usefulness, real or apparent, hurt in the place or places where it is said to have occurred.

No presiding officer, branch, district, or mission, can in any sense afford to be jealous of the work, address, reputation, or success of his associates in the field. Instead of being moved to envy or jealousy by the success of a brother in his field, whether local or traveling, the officer in charge should be pleased, and should do all that he could to foster the rising, the coming man.

No generous man will be stirred by envy when he either hears or sees that a brother is advancing in the Lord's work. On the contrary, the generous man will welcome every such defender of the faith, give him the honor that is his due, and pray the Lord of the harvest to send more such into the field.

The responsibilities of an officer presiding in branch, district, or mission, are burdensome enough, at best, and his burden may be much increased or lightened by the manner he is received and treated by those over whom he is called or appointed to preside and among whom he labors. If he is cordially received, his position recognized, and the responsibility resting on him realized and shared in by his associates and fellow-laborers, he can go confidently forward and feel secure in the aid and comfort of those with whom his labors lie. If, on the contrary, he is received with suspicion, his methods objected to, and his actions and instructions criticised and lightly regarded, he neither can nor will do the good he would otherwise be competent to do.

We do not intend to advise blind subservience to dictatorial ways or words; but we do intend to be understood as writing that in matters falling within the lines of duty and responsibility of the presiding officer of branch, district, or mission, the opinion, advice, and judgment of such presiding officer should be respected and observed; unless such judgment, advice, or opinion is clearly in the wrong. Nor does it rest with every other officer or layman to pass sentence on the rightfulness or wrongfulness of such opinion, advice, or judgment. If these are brought into question it must be upon proper inquiry made in a proper way, time, and place. No officer of the branch, district, or mission, nor any other member in either, can afford to be permitted to put the success of the work in jeopardy, or throw stumbling-blocks in the way of its progress by antagonizing in public or in private the presiding officer. If the latter has been set in authority by the call of God as an officer of the church, and chosen by the people, or appointed by competent authority in the church, according to command, rule, or custom, it should be the duty and the privilege of all others to aid him in his work until he is replaced by another chosen as he was.

Rules are not a terror to good works, the unruly and the turbulent fear the man in authority. The well meaning and the peace-loving will ever find some way of being aids not hindrances to the general good. The jealous man, the envious officer, whether in high charge or in lowly call, will be sure to find a means to hinder the course of him of whom he is jealous. We cannot move "up higher," until this weight of iniquity is removed.

TALEBEARING.

THERE is an unfortunate tendency in man to magnify the faults, and spread abroad the mistakes of others. One of the injurious things resulting from this disposition in man in the church is the talebearing indulged in and listened to among the elders, in regard to each other, their coworkers, and cotemporaries.

The application of the rule stated by the apostle, "Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses" (1 Timothy 5: 19), would act as a safe and effectual preventive to much of the gossip carried about by the eldership.

An elder is unfit to teach the laity whose lips serve as the retailer of unofficial gossip about his coworker in the ministry. The slanderer of any grade is despicable, but the clerical despoiler of the fair fame of his fellows is deserving the greater measure of contempt; as while he should be an example of propriety in conversation, he is a busybody, a stirrer up of strife, a sower of the seeds of contention, and official bickering as damaging as it is unbecoming.

The talebearer of no note is to be despised, as a matter of course, but of what severer condemnation is not the unworthy clerical talebearer and talebearer deserving.

Of all peoples in the world the one that should be the freest from talebearing is the Latter Day Saints.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

QUES.—Are persons baptized within the precincts of a branch necessarily members of the branch?

Ans.—In the absence of any rule in the branch to the contrary, all persons baptized within the branch; either by the officers of the branch, or with the knowledge and by their consent, are members of the branch. And it is good policy as well as good law that if there is no rule already in the branch on the subject, there should be one to the effect above stated.

A branch may have a rule requiring all applications for baptism to be made to a meeting and to be performed by consent of the branch by vote; but there is no general rule making this rule a necessity.

Original Poetry.

MY TESTIMONY.

T'was one ev'ning in the summer,
That I knelt me down to pray;
For I'd learned to love my Master,
And I sought the narrow way.

I was thinking of the churches,
All of which were saying, "Lo,
Come to us, we have the right way."
How should I escape the foe?

As I knelt, the thought came swiftly,
God will always answer prayer;
So I thought, I'll ask my Master,
And I know he'll tell me where.

So I asked, "Of all the churches
On this earth, which one is thine?"
Scarcely had she words been spoken
When what I had wished was mine.

For, while yet I still was kneeling,
Before my quickened eyes there came
An open book I ne'er had seen,
Whose shining leaves put snow to shame.

As I gazed upon the vision,—
It remained but for a moment,
And therein one word I read,—
Softly as it came, it went.

That one word was quite sufficient,
Causing doubts to disappear;
'Twas the hated one of "Mormon,"
Which has caused full many a tear.

Then I thanked my heavenly Father,
That he thus my prayer had heard.
I had asked him for direction,
And he gave it in one word.

Time passed on, with hasting footprints
E'er the "Gospel" I obeyed;
And the memory of that vision
I, too soon, allowed to fade.

When a brother kindly lent me
"Book of Mormon" to be read;
There with awe I read the promise
Written by those long since dead.

One bright summer day while sitting 'Neath the soft shade of a tree,
Thinking of the days long bygone
And the blessings given to me.

When my eyes upon the book fell,
And the word "Mormon" I see;
While I gazed, the page before me,
My spirit lifted glad and free.

As I looked upon the pages,
As translated by the "Seer;"
I could scarce repress an outcry,
The vision did so bright appear.

Whence the vision, or why given,
I can neither know, nor state;
But it turned my thoughts toward heaven,
For whose blessings now I wait.

Ne'er till I the kingdom entered,
Did this record I behold;
Hence no thought of it did lead me
While I sought the one true "Fold."

But one difference was there 'tween them;
The leaves of one were like the snow,
While the other showed the markings,
Touched by fingers here below.

Could I now renounce God's message,
As revealed in latter days?
No! For God himself has shown me,
That it leadeth in his ways.

EL RENO, Okla., March 29.

Editors Herald:—This leaves me rejoicing in this marvelous work. The debate on the Book of Mormon closed last night, and to-day Bro. W. S. Macrae buried the dead—eight baptized, others almost persuaded. I baptized three last Sunday, making eleven in all since the debate commenced. I debated three propositions with J. T. Hendrickson, of the M. E. Church, lasting nearly three weeks. Hundreds of people flocked out from all parts to hear us. The whole country is stirred and Satan is trying to recruit from other ranks. To God be all the praise for the victory won.

I will start for General Conference on Tuesday. I have three debates on hand now, to take place sometime during the summer. Some of our debaters will please assist me if possible.

In bonds,

FARWELL, Mich., March 18.

Editors Herald:—Times are very close in this part. We have had more snow this winter than for a number of years, and the coldest I have known here, registering as high as 40° below zero, causing many to lose potatoes in cellars. I am trying to advance the cause of Christ. For the past three months I have had an appointment at Brinton some ten miles from here, walking out Saturday evening and back home after preaching on Sunday evening. There is quite a number of Saints at or near Brinton. They have a church of their own, but have not been organized. They have a desire to grow in grace and knowledge. To keep pace with the growth of the church, the purchase of the church works and papers would not only aid them, but the church in general. I herewith inclose list of names for Herald—ten in number. I hope the case will prosper.

Yours in bonds,

R. B. CAMPBELL.

SOUTH BOARDMAN, Mich., March 18.

Editors Herald:—The work was begun here, as far as preaching is concerned, by Elder J. J. Cornish, in the fall of 1890. There was much opposition at first and some talk of eggs, tar, and feathers, and other luxuries; but they never materialized. One Baptist preacher posed as David, with Bro. Cornish as Goliath, but he mistook the weapon and used Samson's instead of David's and drove himself out of town with it; and where there was but one Saint here in 1890, now there are fifty-six on our branch record, with prospects of more.

The work has been carried on by Brn. Cornish, F. C. Smith, G. D. Washburn, and J. E. Hanson. Bro. Robert Davis has been with us about nine months, teaching us the way of the Lord and preaching as much as his age and health would admit. We had a social gathering in honor of his eightieth birthday on Saturday the 16th inst. There were about eighty present of Saints and those friendly to the cause. There is one circumstance in connection with it that I must relate. We had a gasoline stove in the hall with two jets burning, and some of the children turned on the one that was not in use and the room was filled with gas before it was noticed, and nothing but the power of the Master saved an explosion; but thanks to his name he protected us and no harm came of it. Bro. Davis is to leave us on the 20th for his son's on the other side of the State, and we shall miss his wise counsel very much.

Your brother,

C. B. JOICE.

BYER, Ohio, March 13.

Editors Herald:—I have been a reader of the Herald since November last and find great comfort in reading its pages, which affords much edifying and rejoicing. I might add here that I am just a "babe" in Christ, and just begin to learn, and need the "sincere milk of the word," having obeyed the gospel in the ordinance of baptism by the hand of Bro. H. R. Harder in October last. I take great interest in reading "The Book of Mormon Vindicated" by Bro. I. M. Smith, which I think is very able and should be convincing to the unbeliever, and the means of doing much good. However, there is one thing I do not see just as the brother uses it. In Herald of February 27, Article No. 7, he quotes Isaiah 35: 8, which reads "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness." I cannot see how the passage can possibly have the least reference to a railroad; for we read the remainder of the verse just quoted, "the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

We notice that the unclean are not to pass over it. Are we to suppose that this railroad as it is carrying on a general traffic has no unclean passing over it? Well, I think not. We also read the ninth verse of same chapter: "No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there."

Now notice. No lion shall be there, nor no ravenous beast. Are we to suppose there is no traffic of this kind there on this road? Are there no menageries in this country with lions and other ravenous beasts to transport? It is not reasonable to think so; but the redeemed shall walk there, and nothing else.

I have preached three discourses at Richland with good attendance and interest, especially during the last two evenings, and I had such liberty as was surprising to myself.

I have always thought that I could not preach, feeling as though I would not know what to say, and since my ordination I surely felt more so, even to the very crushing of my fondest hope; and while this spirit was striving with me and I had almost concluded that I would be a failure, the Lord showed me in a dream how I was before the people and was preaching to an audience. From that time on, I began to take courage, firmly believing it was from the Lord, and that it was given me to show me that if I trusted in him he would give me what to say. Now I am pleased to say that this has been fully verified. Brethren, I feel to say, Courage, and give God praise; for I know that this latter-day work is of God and not of man. My prayer is, May the Lord hasten his work in its time and all Israel be saved, together with all the honest in heart throughout the nations of the earth. In gospel bonds,
V. M. GOODRICH.

ROSEVILLE, Cal., March 23.

Editors Herald:—I have been preaching to these people about three months. Bro. Parr, of Sacramento, has preached for us four times. I have baptized four, and believe more will come soon. The Devil has run to the end of his chain and our enemies are willing to be our friends, except two or three old self-righteous cranks who saw Joseph Smith walk on the water and raise a dead negro; but they are now ashamed to look at us.

I feel blessed in this good work. I know it is of God and that he will bless his people if they will seek to do his will. Elder Parr is helping us here every time he can. He is a strong arm in the hand of God. May the Lord bless him with the rest of his people.

Your brother,

B. W. PACK.

SAND BEACH, Mich., March 20.

Editors Herald:—It cheers me to see how the gospel is winning its way to the dark corners of the earth. It has been so cold and stormy this past winter that it has been impossible to do much in the field.

I went to Siegel on the 5th of January, where there was once a flourishing branch of Saints, but found them in bad condition, not having had meetings for over two years. I preached and held prayer meetings with them nearly three weeks, and left them rejoicing. I never saw such a time of rejoicing as we had at the first prayer meeting. The brethren confessed their faults with tears in their eyes, and the Spirit rested upon them, and they truly felt that they had lived on the husks long enough, and were desirous to return to their Father's house, where there was meat enough and to spare. Bro. J. A. Grant and I were there again two weeks ago and found them still trying to overcome their evil habits, especially the use of tobacco. I think if some of the brethren who use tobacco could talk with these brethren they would feel like throwing the weed away. One brother got so disgusted with it that he threw both pipe and tobacco away, saying he had no more use for them. Another said that every time he went in prayer to God the tobacco rose up in front of him like a mountain, so that he felt his prayers could not get over it; so he also laid his pipe to one side; and still another said that he knew that the Spirit of God could not dwell in his body as long as it was defiled by tobacco. Brethren, should not all who use the weed follow their example and profit thereby, for their example is truly commendable?

Any of the traveling ministry passing that way who can, please give them a call, as others there are investigating who will obey in the near future if they are looked after.

Yours in the faith,

THOMAS RAWSON.

KIRKSEY, Ky., March 24.

Editors Herald:—The good seed is being sown in this part of the Master's vineyard. Bro. C. L. Snow first preached in this part, followed by Bro. T. C. Kelley, afterwards by Brn. Snow, D. W. Cook, W. H. Griffin. Myself and Bro. Kelley were at the Darnel school-house the first Sunday in March. He presented the restored gospel to them with telling effect. I have heard from them and they say, "Come again." We think a good work can be done in that part inasmuch as the Lord is directing the work. Bro. Snow was shown by dream before he went to the Darnel neighborhood that there was a Latter Day Saint in that part who had been baptized many years ago, and that he had not drank intoxicants (interpreted that he had not drank sectarian doctrine that was to make the nation drunk). When we went down we were told there was an old man named Philip Darnel who had been baptized in 1842, and had not heard a sermon since that time. He is very anxious to meet Bro. C. L. Snow again. He has contended all these lonely years that the signs should follow them that believe.

There are a lot of Utah elders in this country. They are very energetic, going from house to house, leaving tracts at every place. I have heard of them, telling that we all believe in polygamy. We need some tracts showing the real difference between us and them to be circulated among the people.

It grieves me to see the harvest so great and the laborers so few. I have not been obedient to the temporal law of the church, but believe it all the same, and hope to be able to comply with the same soon, as the need is so great.

In hope of eternal life,

S. L. COOPER.

DIED.

PIERSON.—At Knox, Indiana, March 31, 1895, Sr. Hettie, wife of Merchant W. A. Pierson, daughter of Bro. and Sr. J. B. Prettyman, aged 29 years, 11 months, and 30 days. Sr. Pierson was baptized into the church June 5, 1888, by Elder S. W. L. Scott. She honored her profession by integrity of heart, purity of life and character, and true devotion to the cause she loved, and the life that is gone out was a sweet memento of Christian graces that marvelously touched into sunshine even the somber shadows of this. Like the sun moving across the heavens and setting low down the horizon, leaving a sweet halo of beauteous tints in its path, was the death of one so lovely. But an hour or two ere she passed behind the dark cloud, she bore a strong, grand testimony to the sacredness of her faith which, blended with her life here, made a deep feeling in the hearts of her neighbors. She leaves a husband, three sweet children, father, mother, three sisters, two brothers, and a large circle of friends to mourn her demise. The church and Sunday school at Knox will miss an able and energetic worker, society a dear friend. Funeral was conducted in the Christian church to accommodate the people April 2. Remarks by Elder S. W. L. Scott to a large, very large concourse of people. Texts, 2 Samuel 14:14; 2 Corinthians 5:1, 6. Doubtless her rest is glorious!

Touch us gently, Time,
Let us glide adown thy stream
Gently—as we sometimes glide
Through a quiet dream.
Humble voyagers are we,
Husband, lonely children three;
Hettie, gone a step before,
Beckons from the other shore.

S. W. L. S.

RYAN.—At her home near Angola, Kansas, April 4, Lorinda Alice, wife of Bro. Charles K. Ryan, and daughter of the late Catharine H. France and James Hart, formerly of Kewanee, Illinois. Deceased was born at Kewanee, Illinois, November 3, 1862. She was baptized October 29, 1871, by John T. Davies, and lived the life of a saint, always quiet and patient in all her trials. Everyone loved her who knew her. She became the wife of Bro. Charles K. Ryan, October 7, 1883; six children were born to them, five boys and one girl, the youngest boy only two weeks and one day old when she left it. A large number of relatives and friends followed her to the grave. The sermon will be preached in the future.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection.

It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

Three additional chapters describe American Antiquities, and Hebrew Relics, one containing the statement of Dr. Lederer, a converted Jew, etc., all corroborative of the claims of the Book of Mormon.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshipped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

THE ATHLETIC GIRL.

It is a cheering feature of the new woman movement that the athletic girl is coming to the front in a prompt and sprightly manner. For a long time she has been the attractive heroine of fiction; now she is the equally attractive heroine of fact. Hitherto it has been the English girl who has been held up as the model for the American girl to follow in all departments of physical culture; now the American girl is fast demonstrating her physical superiority over her red-cheeked English cousin. An English magazine writer truthfully says:—

"Outdoor life, delight in action, the spirit of sport have taken hold of American womanhood. Girls of strong, active physique, erect carriage, and energetic spirit, delighting in tennis, riding, boating, walking, are now the rule. The feeble indoor do-nothing is the exception, and the result is a tall, vigorous race with free steps and cheeks aglow with the ruddy color of physical health and energy. Walk along the avenues of New York, Boston, Chicago, or any large city at the fashionable hours and the procession of bright, animated girlhood which passes before one's eyes gives ample proof of summer activity in the country and city work in gymnasium and riding school."

That the American girl is making rapid strides in the direction of a higher degree of physical perfection is shown by the work going on in the gymnasiums of schools and colleges devoted to her education and in the outside clubs organized for athletic purposes. Every form of athletic culture is now enthusiastically practiced by young women. They are riding with the hounds, they are on the tennis courts, they are fencing and bowling. They are riding horseback and bicycles, they are rowing boats and sailing yachts. . . . Very few of them have organized with ball clubs or football teams, for there is a point where womanly dignity must stop. . . .

All admirers of gracious, attractive, robust womanhood will rejoice that the hothouse camellias at last are in process of being replaced by vigorous outdoor roses. The day has gone by, let us hope forever, when a school, or academy, or university education of the American girl meant a smattering of the classics and modern languages, maltreatment of the piano, some Delsarte foolishness of deportment, and the cultivation of frills to fit them for drawing-rooms, the outcome being an artificial, languid, flaccid, pale faced creature entirely out of place anywhere outside of the society hothouse. Another creature has taken her place. She has as good an education as the girl of the old times and she has besides this the boon of health and strength adding to her sweet wholesomeness. The Philadelphia Press, discussing this subject, says: "Any one conversant with the modern female school and college knows that one of the best equipped and best patronized of their departments is the gymnasium, and that the result is a race of strong, graceful girls, who are as far ahead of their counterparts of a generation ago as the American college athlete of to-day is ahead of his dyspeptic predecessor of 1860." In all this there is great hope for the new woman. The girls of to-day are likely to become the new women of the new century. If they expect to hold their own on terms of anything like equality with men, a high degree of physical health and strength will be one of their chief requisites. But whether they do or not physical culture will not be a drawback. Clear heads, sound lungs, strong limbs, and forms after the Venus de Milo order will add to their attractiveness as well as to their happiness. As it is probable populating the earth never will go out of fashion, it will be a gain all round if the coming generations are not handicapped in the race by the physical misfortune of heredity.—Sel.

WOMEN ON DIVORCES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 28.—Complaint against the present system of divorce laws was the burden of today's sessions of the National Council of Women. The discussion was led by the official report of the Committee on Divorce Reform, read by Chairman Battelle Dietrick, of Massachusetts. It embodied responses received from a number of State Governors, who were asked to call the attention of the legislatures to the status of the divorce laws and to appoint a committee to consist of an equal number of men and women to consider the matter. The question, the report said, was one vitally concerning the happiness and welfare of 70,000,000 people, of whom half are of the female sex, and added:—

Women should thoughtfully consider the significance of the fact that thirty-one of these masculine servants of the people made no response to this just request of representative women. Only two, Greenhalge of Massachusetts and Brown of Rhode Island, promised to do all in their power to carry out the request. The governor of South Carolina wrote that his State had no divorce laws and its people were better satisfied than their neighbors whose States permit divorce. The report said the fact that twenty-three States have appointed bodies of men to tinker with divorce laws without appointing any women, ought to show women in what estimation the men of the United States hold their opinions. The officials serving the interests of the United States cherish frank contempt for woman's opinions and wishes was the conclusion expressed in the report.

The open discussion was led by Miss Susan B. Anthony, who contended that nine tenths of the divorce-seekers are women who have been treated brutally. She was followed by Miss Kate Field, who urged that in the beginning marriage should be made more difficult. She urged that women insist on national marriage laws. Education of boys and girls for possible fatherhood and motherhood was urged by Miss Ida C. Hulton, of Moline, Illinois.

The Rev. Anna H. Shaw, of Philadelphia, spoke for the equal voice of women in declaring the grounds of divorce, the abolition of the idea of a large bank account as a marriage qualification, and a change in what she called the present system of buying and selling women in marriage.

Isabella Charles Davis, of New York, advocated a universal marriage law, and Mrs. May Wright Sewall, President of the Council, contended that while women were many times victims of brutality, the petty cruelties practiced by women unfortunately were frequent.

Kate Brownlee Sherwood, of this city, and Mrs. Ella B. Dietrich, of Massachusetts, vigorously protested against the exclusive control by men in the codification of divorce laws.

Miss Harriet A. Shinn, of Illinois, delegate of the National Association of Loyal Women of American Liberty, made a plea for the children, who were held to be the greatest sufferers from the unwritten laws of society which govern the home and for the creation of a broader and more nearly true public sentiment in favor of those whose domestic life is so unhappy and unwholesome as to render a legal and final separation imperative.—Press Dispatch.

CHURCH ON WHEELS.

BURLINGTON, March 15.—One of the most unique houses of worship ever erected in Iowa, or possibly in this country, stands at 1446 West avenue, out on West Hill. It is Missionary J. B. Crawford's movable tabernacle, which was dedicated last Sunday with unique services. The structure is made of iron and wood on a steel frame. It is built in sections 8x9 feet in size, each section being hinged so as to fold into a space of 8x4½ feet. Each section is numbered to aid in fitting the parts together. The outside of this unique edifice is of corrugated iron and the interior is lined with hard pine. The walls and sides are erected on a steel frame, which can itself be taken apart and placed in a small compass. The interior of the building is lighted by windows which slip into the lining of the sections while being transported, to prevent injury to the glass. The interior of the building is heated by two stoves so arranged as to take in all the piping during transportation. The building has folding benches which will seat about five hundred people. Everything used in the erection of the building is turned to some good account. Even the derrick on which the frame and sides are raised is afterwards turned into a rostrum for the speaker. When the building is in pieces this derrick forms the wagon bed on which the sections are loaded for transportation. Mr. Crawford, who invented and constructed the building has been in the missionary work in Des Moines county for five years, having graduated from Moody's institute in Chicago and came directly to this field, and has been doing some excellent work since. He has found in his travels through the county, many places where the people wanted services but had no hall or room large enough for the purpose, and in many cases no room at all. The idea of such a building as the one herein described occurred to him and he was not long in drawing up the plans and putting them into execution. The building can be "knocked down," packed up, transported into another township, and erected by two men in less than three days at a cost of less than twelve dollars. It is so arranged that it can be set up on any kind of ground, rolling or level. Mr. Crawford says this building will settle a very perplexed question of evangelical work in the poorer portions of the cities, where rents are high. The building can be transported to some vacant lot, set up, and the services held with very little expense, and he thinks his idea will be adopted by other missionaries in a short time. The cost of the building was about five hundred dollars. Mr. Crawford has been holding services in the building on West Hill for two weeks and has attracted overflowing audiences.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

(Concluded.)

FRIDAY, the 12th.—The address delivered by Bro. J. F. Burton at the opening session, together with other references to the Society Islands mission, had awakened an increased or special interest in the gospel boat and Brn. E. L. Kelley and J. F. Burton were appointed to tell the story of the building of the Evanelia and her voyage to the islands. Bro. Kelley made a statement of the project from its inception; of his visit to San Francisco where the boat was built under the personal supervision of himself and Bro. Burton. The boat had been staunchly built and was good property. The church could have sold her on arrival for more than cost. The object had been to supply the missionaries with a safe, seaworthy vessel. Bro. Kelley then proceeded to make a statement in detail of the vessel's outfittings, their quality, purpose, cost, etc., and did very well until he attempted to designate special items. There he struck a snag and his only recourse was to look appealingly to Captain Burton, who came to the rescue full of nautical terms and salt water phraseology. Old sailors at times experience sympathy for the perplexities of "landlubbers"—Bro. Burton good naturedly took in the situation.

He proceeded to state how from the laying of the keel of the Evanelia (as remarked by the supervising builder, or chief workman, Mr. Dan J. Holdér), difficulties and much opposition were encountered and surmounted one by one. Peculiar conditions had opposed and attended the building of the boat and had continued in persistent efforts to thwart her work throughout the voyage across the Pacific until and after her arrival at Papeete, Tahiti. Like every project or movement designed by the Lord from which much good is to be realized, it had been obstinately, persistently resisted and had only been brought to a successful termination "by much prayer and faith."

On arrival at Papeete local French authorities presented one difficulty, then another, stating that diplomatic correspondence involving much time would be required to secure the right of unrestricted passage among the various islands. The voyagers and native authorities concluded to appeal their cause to a higher tribunal and so resort was had to fasting and prayer; the native brethren and sisters meeting in one place in order to understand one another, the white missionaries meeting elsewhere, that unity of purpose and concurrence in action might obtain. The Holy Spirit attended in great power, and, as stated in the speech of Bro. Burton at the opening of the session, from that time the way began to open and concessions were made until the Evanelia was freed from the embargo placed upon her. Bro. Burton repeated his experiences in vision, in which he saw the natives of the island purified, exalted, redeemed, and made one with their white brethren in the knowledge and attainments of the gospel.

At the conclusion of the address Bro. J. Cole Moxon and Sr. Myra Brackenbury sang the following, composed by Bro. Moxon:—

EVANELIA.

"Go ye unto every nation,"
Was the Savior's last command;
"There, my servants, preach the gospel,
Upon every foreign strand."
Thus the Savior bade his chosen
Break the bread of life to all,
That his message might be published,
Man to rescue from the fall.
Yes, the Savior filled his mission,
And the keys to men he gave
That they might proclaim his mercy
And the vilest sinner save.
Down to us the promise reaches;
Unto us the message came:
"Go baptize in every nation,
In the Savior's holy name."
From the islands of the ocean,
Comes the cry of "help" to-day;

'Tis the voice of pleading servants;
Turn their pleadings not away.
"Build a ship with strength and safety,"
Was the burden of that cry,
"That to other isles and islands,
We may with God's message ply."
Hail the day that prayer was given!
Hail the breeze that wafts it o'er!
Hail the hearts that inspiration
Moved upon from shore to shore!
Bear the tidings o'er the ocean;
Lift the burden from that soul;
Tell the news of Evanelia,
To those loved ones, o'er and o'er.
Built by hands so true and faithful;
Launched upon a rolling sea;
Like a speck on ocean's billow,
Master of the storms to be.
Speed thee on; O, noble vessel!
Great thy message to fulfill;
May the God of heaven protect thee,
Help thee serve his righteous will.
Bless the hands outstretched to greet thee!
Bless the natives and our own!
Bless the work of love engaged in,
Bless the seed that man has sown.
Grant the day, O God of heaven,
When each kindred tongue shall call,
"Abba Father, God eternal,
At thy feet we humbly fall."

Saturday, the 13th.—The prayer session was in charge of Brn. George Kemp and J. M. Terry.

The morning preaching hour was varied from the usual order by three short addresses, by Brn. M. H. Bond, F. G. Pitt, and Pres. Joseph Smith. Bro. Bond presented the principle of the Fatherhood of God, briefly outlining what it meant to those who bore the relationship of children to him, pleading for such appreciation of its privileges as would secure to the church a closer walk and completer union with the Redeemer that the life of Jesus might be made manifest in the mortal bodies of those who claimed the privilege of association with him.

Bro. Pitt outlined the causes that led to his dissatisfaction with sectarianism and his conversion to the faith. Light and understanding had come to him in the gospel. Mere hope and belief had been superseded by knowledge and confidence. Though weak in himself he had received grace and strength to accomplish work given him to do.

Pres. Smith referred to some of the obstacles met by the Reorganization and the peculiar providences by which they had so far been overcome and the work extended. The success of the church in the face of opposition so strong, of perplexities so varied and numerous had proved to those engaged in it that Christ was at the helm building his church, and would carry on the work to ultimate victory.

The audience was deeply interested in the remarks of the brethren. All present were edified.

Consideration of conference business was resumed at two o'clock. After singing a hymn, Bro. I. N. Roberts offered prayer. The minutes were approved.

The Quorum of the Twelve reported an additional appointment—Bro. Francis Ebeling, to labor in West Virginia, as circumstances permit.

The Quorum of High Priests reported. The report showed a total membership of 52; number present 21; number reporting to quorum 21. A summary of individual reports was included. Two resolutions were reported; one referring to the ordination of high priests, the other to books written by those engaged in ministerial work under conference appointment. They are as follows:—

Whereas, in the past much delay has taken place in the ordination of high priests, which delay has hindered some of our quorum business, therefore be it resolved that we respectfully ask the General Conference that whenever it shall provide for the ordination of high priests it also provide that such ordinations be attended to as early as possible, either by the First Presidency, the Apostles, or High Priests, whoever may live nearest to, or be best able to reach the places or arrange for the ordination of those chosen to be so ordained.

Resolved, that it is the opinion of this quorum that when any of the ministers of this church while under appointment of General Conference, and they and their families are sustained with the funds of the church, shall write a book, said book should by right be the property of the church, and that under no circumstances should such books be sold for more than double the actual cost of producing them.

The first, second, third, fourth, and fifth quorums of elders respectively reported; as did also the first and third quorums of priests. All included statistical items of baptisms, confirmations, and other administrations. The reports will appear in full in the minutes.

The Fourth Quorum of Priests reported the completion of its organization. Bro. J. I. Young, F. J. Ebeling, and R. F. Hill had been ordained by brethren of the Twelve, as provided for.

The First Quorum of Teachers also reported.

The following interesting report of the committee on American archaeology was next presented. It will be noted and its value be recognized by all who have an intelligent, progressive interest in the latter-day work.

We, your committee appointed on American archaeology report having spent as much time on the subject as our other duties permitted. In regard to the question raised as to the genuineness of what is known as the "Davenport tablet," we find:—

That the legal evidence in favor of the tablet being genuine is indisputable. There are a number of witnesses of known integrity who testify that they were found in a mound near Davenport, Iowa. Then we have the statement of Prof. Putnam, of the Peabody Museum of Harvard College, who has a high standing as an archaeologist and ethnologist, that he went in person to Davenport and examined the claim for the tablets. He stated that the legal evidence was strong enough to hang every man in Iowa should as strong evidence be brought against them for crime. Farther, that the criticisms made upon the tablets by scientists were that they had been "tampered with" before they were put in the scientists' hands; that is, there was an attempt to bring out the characters more distinctly by rubbing or washing, when the tablets should have been left as found and handed to the scientists before there was any attempt at washing or burnishing. This was the only objection urged against the claim made for the tablets.

Our investigations as to the claim of Dr. Le Plongeon's discovery of the Maya hieroglyphics on the ruins of Chichen-Itza and other cities of Yucatan, and especially his claim to having translated the Codex-Troano, reveal the following facts: first, there is no living explorer of Yucatan that we know of who is so well qualified to be authoritative on the subject as Dr. Le Plongeon, he and his wife having spent some thirteen years there among the ruins. Second, the doctor's translation of the native manuscripts and traditions are strongly supportive of our Nephite history, without committing us to his speculations and theories in their entirety. There will be published this year two works, one by Mrs. Le Plongeon entitled "Yucatan and its Ancient Palaces and Modern Cities," which is expected to be ready during the month of May.

During the latter part of the year, the doctor's own work will also be on the market, in which he will answer criticisms upon his translation of the Maya alphabet. His work being the latest on the subject will evidently be read with interest, especially in the light of his claims of discovery.

In answer to certain writers upon the question of metals being found among the Mound Builders we submit the following as direct evidence in point. (See letter of Prof. Putnam.)

We have spent some time on the work of preparing a map of Nephite geography, but it is so incomplete at present that we only report progress.

We recommend the continuation of either the present committee or some other, as the conference may deem wise.

It is as follows:—

PEABODY MUSEUM OF AMERICAN
ARCHÆOLOGY AND ETHNOLOGY.
F. W. PUTNAM, LUCIEN CARR,
Curator. Assistant Curator.
HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
CAMBRIDGE, Mass.,
February 13, 1895.

MR. F. M. SHEEHY, Boston, Massachusetts;
Dear Mr. Sheehy:—I do not see how anyone could have quoted me as stating that the builders of the mounds in the Ohio Valley had no metals.

It has been known from the time of the first exploration of the mounds that implements and ornaments made of copper were found in them, and in my own explorations I have found objects, innumerable, made of copper, both ornaments and implements, such as ear ornaments, bracelets, beads (by the thousands), pendants, large breastplates, and many designs of various kinds, circles, crescents, crosses, and many other symbols; also many copper axes, needles, awls, chisel-shaped implements, etc.

Besides these various things made of copper, I have found ornaments of silver hammered very thin; and both ornaments and implements made of meteoric iron. In one instance I found a small nugget of gold which had been hammered into tiny sheets, evidently to overlay some objects. This is the only instance, to my knowledge, of finding gold in the mounds, and silver has not been found very often, only a few thin pieces which were probably obtained when hunting for copper. I have found the meteorite iron in several instances.

Now, all these metals are native metals which are found in masses and can be shaped by cold hammering. There is no evidence that the people who built the mounds ever had a knowledge of smelting the ores or even of melting the native metal. This is what I have said and reiterated; and it is probably this latter statement which has led some one to say that I have said the mound builders did not have any metals. . . .

You are at perfect liberty to make such use of this information as you wish. You will find in the various papers and museum reports that I have published during the past twenty years, various references to ornaments made of metal found in the mounds of the Ohio Valley by parties exploring under my direction or by myself. In the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Peabody Museum, published in 1882, there is an account of a number of objects made of copper that were then in the museum. That report had hardly been printed before an immense number of copper objects began to come to the museum from our mound explorations. In fact we know that objects made of copper have been found in the mounds from Florida to Michigan.

In this connection I wish to call your attention to the very important memoir recently published by my friend, Mr. C. B. Moore, of Philadelphia, in which he gives the analyses of a large number of samples of copper from the mounds, and treats the whole subject in a thorough and scientific manner.

Very truly yours,
F. W. PUTNAM.

The committee was continued and a vote of thanks tendered for services rendered.

The items reported by this committee are practically beyond estimate in value to the ministry and membership of the church. Few have opportunity for personal access to such matter; many do not know that such facts or statements are obtainable; others (and most of the body) have not the means of obtaining literature in which similar matter may be found. We call attention to the work done by this committee on American archæology for the purpose of emphasizing the thought that much can be done by the church in the extension of the work that has not hitherto been done, if members of the body are sufficiently alert to see and wide awake enough to move in securing advantages opening or that can be made open to it. What the church has obtained in the past has been secured by repeated continued effort. Those who labor in its interests should see the strong, substantial ground for hope of future success in the list of repeated successes in the past.

It is well, however, to remember that all has not been done and secured to the church that might have been done in its interest. The Lord has said that his servants and his people were "agents" to act for him in behalf of the cause in which their interests and the vast spiritual and temporal interests of the world are involved. It will conduce to our success if we ponder the thought that great movements, vast interests, require great wisdom and much care in order to insure their successful execution and permanent establishment. The past and the present teach us that the inspired mind and the humble heart are essential in the instruments used by the Almighty. No one progresses beyond the need of humble trust in God, of willingness to follow closely his directings. Men may develop greatly and know that they have seen and do see clearly into the policy and operations of the economy of God, but they must not forget that continuance in the spirit of prayer and faith is essential to continual moving forward. No one sees so far but what he might see farther; none are so faithful but what they may be more faithful. There is so much remaining to be done, so much to be learned in order to do the work correctly—to establish its developments permanently—that no one, however satisfactory have been his successes, can afford to relax his diligence or fail to continue in humble anxiety to seek and be obedient to the directings of the Spirit of truth.

Our work throughout is a work requiring divine oversight, direction. It cannot be accomplished without both direction and power from the Master and those who under his direction minister the Spirit by which its character is to be comprehended and developed. We do not fully understand the forces arrayed against the work that everywhere rise up in humanity. We fail to fully comprehend the conditions that prevail in the world and the various changes that are constantly taking place in the social, the political, the religious, and the economic world. Much less do we know of the plans and methods of the adversary and the allied powers of darkness. It ought to be apparent to every man and woman who has the power to look intelligently into the problems of life and the work of the kingdom of God that there is no room, no excuse for the exercise or encouragement of even thoughtless, misdirected effort, much less for personal aims or ambitions. It is a fair presumption that the Lord will place every individual who is willing and obedient where he designs him to labor, where he can do the most good, where he is qualified for service. To attempt to do work to which one is not called or for which he is not qualified is simply to obstruct the progress of the work and to make a personal failure, involving loss or trial to others. To fail to do what one is privileged or required to do is also that that entails loss to the church and to the individual so failing. The Lord chooses instruments because of their capacity to do and the conditions under which they are the men and women for the work then to be accomplished. The success of future work and of others who shall take up the work may depend largely upon what has been wrought by those who have preceded them. Take the life work of the Apostle Paul, for example. His preaching and faithfulness with that of those who wrought with him, resulted in a transformation of the civilized world. The countries in which he labored were the centers of forces and powers that influenced to a great degree the moral and spiritual development of the world. The gospel he preached brought men under the influences of the God idea. The gospel economy made possible the changed and higher civilization that undermined and supplanted paganism. Millions of men and women have been benefited and exalted by the work of those early Christians. They acted well their part and the honor of their service is seen and known in the good that has followed. Some probably did all they could; some doubtless became discouraged and permitted themselves to fail because of lack of coöperation of others and opposition requiring more strength than they rose to the occasion to receive, while others failed, as we know they did, because they wanted to work in their own way and by their own wisdom.

To us it seems a correct presumption or conclusion that individuals to whom the promise is made that they shall be led and guided into "all truth," have the privilege and power at their command "through grace" to receive direction sufficient to know their part and power to do it faithfully, completely. The admonition, "Let no man take thy crown," plainly implies that as individuals and as a people we have to a great extent in our hands the exercise of that that shall determine our own destinies and limit or extend our power for good.

The fact that men and women are children of God forms the foundation principle upon which their work is to be based and suggests the policy upon which it shall be wrought out. In the course of nature the varied forms of life occupy spheres to which they are adapted by nature, and are subject to conditions under which their highest development and greatest good is secured, resulting in each filling the measure of its usefulness in harmony with the design of its being. If inanimate nature, so-called, is strictly obedient to law, man, the highest type of intelligence, can scarcely hope to serve the purpose of his being without like obedience to the conditions imposed by the allwise, overruling power who presides in the midst of all things. That ruling One gave man an example of obedience in the life of his Son, who in all things sought both to learn and to do the will of the Father. Man, with his superior intelligence, seems ever to have been the disturber of his own peace by transcending the laws of his being and deranging the harmony of things. To correct and restore him to his proper place is the work of the gospel. Every principle necessary to accomplish that work is therefore included in the gospel. When man is reformed and stands where he should he will fill the place for which he is fitted by nature. Nothing less than the filling of the high position for which he is fitted will ever place him in his normal condition. Till the work of restoration or redemption is accomplished he will be incomplete, restless, dissatisfied. As that work progresses with us individually and as a body we become more content, more natural, better conditioned to enjoy life and do good in the behalf of our fellow man. The gospel comprehends, includes the specifications and methods by which the problems of life shall be solved and the possibilities of human life determined under the inspiration and power of God. The Lord has said that to his people the kingdom has been given "and power to overcome all things." The expectation of us—that we shall overcome and thus honorably acquit ourselves as the people of God—is therefore a just and reasonable one, and doubtless is entertained by those who have preceded us in the dispensations of the past, also by those who have passed away in the present generation. Inasmuch as God is no respecter of persons we must conclude that the faithfulness that brought people into high favor with God in the past must also be manifested in the present day to bring like results.

There is a principle manifest in the course of nature with which we daily come in contact. It is suggested by the growth of plant life. In it we see a gradual, steady progress until the end of perfect aim is realized. It is and should be just as true in spiritual things, not only in individual life, but in a general sense. The development of the church in the present and future must exceed that of other earlier days. We have the benefits of work wrought out by others. Each dispensation is an advance upon previous dispensations. We see the same principle illustrated in the history and growth of the world politically, morally, and religiously. The general movement has been an advancing one. Every good invention, every progressive march forward in civilization is a step toward God, and all are necessary to and form part of the great plan of the Almighty. The foundation of a building is first laid, other portions essential to its construction are next added, but the finishing processes are reserved to the last. The men of the past could not do the work of the present. The men of the present cannot do the work, cannot meet the demands of the future, unless they continue to move forward. Only as men and women comprehend and appreciate the situation confronting them and rise to the occasion as required can they fill the missions and do the work it is their privilege and duty to do. The Lord has said that individuals must appreciate their opportunities if they would live with profit to his work and meet their responsibilities. And, intelligence and opportunity mean increased or greater, or proportionate responsibility. In the character of Deity we have a symmetrical coördination or combination of trueness, goodness, intelligence, and responsibility. As he understands and grasps the situation and labors for the perfecting of his children, so every faithful, intelligent child loves the truth and is only at rest when doing the work it is his by right to do. There is an eternal fitness in all these things and in the plans adopted for their execution.

It is evident that power must be intrusted to and exercised by every department of the body—the church. One department cannot do the work of another, nor can one be hampered, or suffer loss, or fail to do its part in the economy without other functions being hampered or distressed and loss ensuing.

Good work inspires to other good work. So the work of this archaeological committee has led to a little thought on the subject of what all may be discerning and doing—in looking for good to contribute our part in work and in information to the general body, and to learn to discriminate to that extent that evil shall be prevented and prohibited from hindering the effectual working of the measure of every part, and to the increase of the church by which the body shall edify itself in love. We have written hastily, but trust the underlying principles sought to be brought out will be comprehended.

The report of the General Sunday School Association was read and entered in the minutes.

A letter asking for ministerial labor at Harlan, Iowa, was referred to the missionary in charge of that field.

The assembly then proceeded to make choice of a Board of Directors of the Lamoni college. The following named were chosen and the choice made unanimous: Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, W. W. Blair, J. H. Hansen, D. F. Lambert, E. A. Blakeslee, A. H. Smith, James R. Smith, and P. P. Kelley.

The two last named are not members of the body. Mr. Smith is a resident of Lamoni; Mr. Kelley resides at Glenwood, Iowa. He is a brother of Brn. W. H. and E. L. Kelley. He has been one of the counsel for the church in the temple lot litigation.

It is hoped by those especially interested in the college movement that regular work will soon be under way. The Board of Directors has been appointed that instructors may be provided, a curriculum or course of study be arranged, scholarships be issued, and students entered—just as soon as facilities are furnished by the college committee appointed to erect the structure.

A motion prevailed providing for the ordination of Bro. W. W. Blanchard to the office of elder; Brn. W. H. Kelley and F. M. Sheehy to ordain.

A resolution was adopted authorizing and requesting the Presiding Bishop to appear before the General Passenger Associations and endeavor to secure the prompt granting of half fare permits for ministers of the church entitled to the half rate privilege.

A motion providing for the reordination of S. J. Hinkle to the eldership was referred to the missionaries in charge of Oklahoma and Kansas.

The Bishop was authorized to pay the expenses of the committee appointed to compile the new hymn and tune book—"The Saints' Hymnal."

The First Presidency, the Quorum of Apostles, the Bishopric, the Quorums of Seventy, the Quorum of High Priests, the High Council, the Quorum of Elders in the field and all not enrolled, the Quorums of Priests, of Teachers, and of Deacons were sustained in the order named; also Bro. H. A. Stebbins as General Church Secretary and Recorder; and Bro. John Scott as Church Librarian.

The Saints of Independence were tendered a vote of thanks for kindness, hospitality, etc.

A resolution providing that no one be chosen to represent the church in a local or general sense who did not believe the law of tithing, also one providing that the use of tobacco be a bar to anyone being ordained to or acting in official station, were laid on the table.

A copy of the Book of Mormon was voted to reporters of the Kansas City Journal, Times, and World, the Bishop being authorized to present the books.

A request for the ordination of Bro. W. M. Ayler to the eldership was referred to the missionary in charge of Oklahoma.

Brn. J. A. Gunsolley, R. M. Elvin, and M. H. Forscutt were appointed a committee to audit the Bishop's accounts and the Herald Office books. Pres. Joseph Smith was authorized to fill vacancies should any occur on the committee. The business session then adjourned.

Bro. E. A. Blakeslee, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, announced the following committees: On blackboard work, F. G. Pitt, B. F. Ordway, and C. Ed Miller; on program for next convention, W. H. Garrett, J. A. Gunsolley, and J. F. Mintun.

At half past seven in the evening Bro. F. M. Sheehy discoursed on the general subject of motives, means, and ends in work. He presented the thought that motives must be right and means be proper to secure right ends. Apt illustrations in support of the general statement were presented. Bro. Columbus Scott had charge of the service.

Sunday, the 15th.—The nine o'clock prayer meeting was in charge of Bro. Roderick May. A brother whose name we failed to get assisted. Sunday school exercises were held in the lower room at the usual hour.

Pres. W. W. Blair preached the sermon of the morning hour. He said: "The religion of Christ was and is based, not alone on its exalted morals, its harmony with prophecy going before, but especially upon the multiplied evidences given it of divine indorsement, divine approval, and divine assurance by the Holy Spirit in its gifts, and fruits, and divers manifestations to the faithful Saints, as well as to its ministers. It was and is based on testimony direct from God to the individual believer, and in this way the faithful child of God is and ever has been a witness for God. All scripture contains testimonies of God's servants and handmaidens, and this is notably true, since the day of Pentecost.

"Joseph the Seer said: 'Salvation cannot come without revelation. No man is a minister of Jesus Christ without being a prophet. No man can be the minister of Christ except he has the testimony of Jesus—and this is the Spirit of prophecy. Whenever salvation has been administered it has been by testimony.'

"This latter-day work began in and with testimony direct from heaven to the humble believer and seeker. It began with Joseph, the choice Seer, and has continued with the faithful ministry and membership in all the world down till to-day, and will so continue to the end." He then instanced many divine manifestations given the Saints of the Reorganized Church that had fallen under his own observation, marked his own personal experience, and bore a strong testimony to the prophetic calling and ministration of Joseph Smith, the present president of the church. Bro. T. J. Chatburn assisted.

Bro. R. C. Evans preached at the African M. E. church, of Independence, at eleven o'clock. Another of the brethren occupied the same pulpit in the evening.

Seven persons were baptized during the afternoon. They were confirmed after the afternoon preaching service by Brn. Briggs, Elvin, Kemp, and Garrett. Some were then administered to and some children blessed by those brethren.

The Sunday afternoon sermon at half past two o'clock was by Bro. W. H. Kelley. The leading points of difference between the faith and the general features of sectarianism were noted in contrast—the unchangeable and immovable character of the gospel being well stated and clearly illustrated. We did not get the name of the assisting elder.

Pres. Joseph Smith had been to Kansas City, Missouri, to attend and assist in the dedication of the Saints' chapel at eleven o'clock. The services were in charge of Bro. F. G. Pitt. Bishop E. L. Kelley offered the dedicatory prayer, and Pres. Smith preached the sermon.

The closing sermon of the conference was preached by President Smith in the evening. The house was packed, all space in the main floor, the platform, and gallery being occupied. The speaker outlined the prophetic character of the latter-day work, its peculiar mission to the world in reestablishing primitive Christianity and supplying to those obeying it the necessary communion with the Father and the Son essential to the production of godliness in the lives and characters of disciples. The spiritual accompaniments of the ancient gospel were characteristic of it that the fruits of obedience might be made manifest in those who were called by the gospel covenant to be partakers of the divine nature. Bro. John Chisnall had charge of the exercises.

By Monday morning large numbers of the delegates and visitors had returned home or scattered in various directions, visiting among friends, etc. Some remained for a few days, however, and local authorities provided for further preaching services by appointing Bro. E. C. Briggs for Monday evening and Brn. A. C. Barmore and R. C. Evans for Tuesday and Wednesday evenings respectively. Thus ends the story of the conference.

THE SONS OF ZION.

It has been our aim to furnish the HERALD readers a statement or outline of work done or movements made during the General Conferences, that they be fully informed and be kept thoroughly in touch with the progress of the general work.

The Religio-Literary and General Sunday School Association Conventions, the General Conference, and the Daughters of Zion departments of work have been written up; and now comes an account of proceedings of the "Sons of Zion," for which we are indebted to the Chairman of the Advisory Committee, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley.

With what is furnished we trust that those of our readers who were unable to attend the conference will get the spirit of the progress of the body, that with those present there may be such assimilation in interest and understanding as shall result in mutual advancement.

We have said but little of the proceedings of the Daughters of Zion, leaving that feature of work to appear in due time in the Home Column. When time permits we hope to present some special items of interest in that regard, either in connection with that or the work being done by the Sons of Zion.

The lifework and duties of the sexes are mutual, requiring coöperation. We are glad to see a movement that gives promise of awakening interest and promoting work upon the part of fathers, husbands, and sons, for the purification of society and the elevation of "home life." No place on earth should be higher, none more sacred, nor none happier than the home. To its elevation and the maintaining of all that truly attaches to or forms part of it all should cheerfully give their hearty sympathy and support. It is apparent that the places where the greater part of persons' lives are spent are the places where influences that enter into the formation of life character and general habits are formed, and that it is important that all pertaining to the home be such as is necessary to the general welfare of children, young people, adults, or aged persons — of all who comprise the family circle. Persons denied the happiness of a high order of home life can scarcely reach the usefulness and enjoy the happiness of those so favored, so privileged, so conditioned. People are exalted and benefited according to their opportunities and the use made of them; indeed, heaven itself is to be the result of the proper arrangement of all things in harmony with the conditions for which they are adapted in the eternal fitness of things. Therein are the eternal harmonies revealed.

We have always had faith in the principle that the race, if properly educated, would adhere to such conditions as it was inherently, naturally capacitated to enjoy; in other words, that children, and men, and women, if properly trained under correct home conditions and influences, would not exchange them for the vices or follies of the world; that the occasions or instances when they would do so would be rare, would be exceptional we believe,—at least among those of the household of faith, when such influences so prevail as to become the rule, instead of the exception. When we consider that "Zion" is called "the perfection of beauty," we are led to the conclusion that her children are to become such by so studying and so comprehending and applying the principles of life that they shall be perfected and sanctified by law—the principles of life and being which, observed by them, shall bring them into entire harmony with one another, and with God.

Largeness of life necessarily attaches or should attach to those who bear the image of God. Ability to discern its scope is necessary to fullest happiness. Men, and women, and children must learn and "know the truth" in order to attain and enjoy "the glorious liberty of the children of God." "Zion cannot be built up except it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself," said the Lord to his people in this generation. As the children of Zion are gathering out of Babylon it is in keeping with the spirit of the work that the evils of Babylon be not gathered with them nor be mixed into their social, domestic, or economic system. The spiritual evils—the dogmas of Mystery Babylon—are rejected, and so should all others be excluded. Under the commandment to "forsake all evil and cleave unto all good," that we "shall not live after the manner of the world," we discern the purpose of the Master to gather unto himself a "pure" people.

It is not difficult to foresee how that out of Zion the perfection of beauty God shall shine—his truth be seen and known—when we consider that a people who purify themselves and rebuke the world for its iniquity by revealing the possibilities of the gospel of life, shall be raised up and become "the pure in heart"—which is "Zion."

Foundations of character must be deeply laid in purity of heart and soul. No man has much of the God-nature in him who is unappreciative of the pure, the true, and the refined, in contrast or in preference to the sensual, the untrue, and the coarse. There is a probation of character when an individual comes in contact with and understands a principle or a person. Boys and girls trained to the highest appreciation of what they are inherently capacitated to receive will not exchange gold for dross, light for darkness, nor evil for good.

It is doubtless true that diversity of mind and character exists among every people, but all may so understand their work and so proceed to its accomplishment that each shall find his place and his work, and each continue in line, contributing to the harmony of the whole. And, men and women adorned by the virtues of uprightness, patience, humility, diligence, etc., will be potent for good as factors that lead upward and onward, inspiring others to walk in a high line of religious and general life.

But, here are the minutes of the Sons of Zion.

A meeting was held at Independence, Missouri, April 13, 1895, at eight a. m., to consider means of promoting reform among our young men and boys. Bro. Duncan Campbell was chosen to preside.

After prayer by T. W. Williams, remarks were made by the following brethren: Duncan Campbell, Pleasanton, Iowa; J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa; R. C. Evans, London, Canada; M. H. Bond, Kirtland, Ohio; T. W. Williams, Council Bluffs, Iowa; A. C. Barmore, Bird's Eye, Indiana; F. J. Ebeling, Wheeling, West Virginia; R. B. Trowbridge, Parsons, Kansas; C. P. Faul, Clarksdale, Missouri; E. C. Ingraham, Clarksdale, Missouri; Z. F. Davis, Kansas City, Kansas.

On motion J. A. Gunsolley, T. W. Williams, and A. C. Barmore were appointed a committee to perfect a plan of organization to report at a future meeting. Adjourned subject to call of committee. Benediction by M. H. Bond.

A second meeting convened on call of committee at 6:45 p. m., April 13, Bro. Campbell presiding. Committee recommend that we adopt substantially the plan of the Daughters of Zion; and their Constitution and By-laws was adopted with such modifications as seemed necessary, after being discussed by Brn. Essig, Ingraham, Trowbridge, Gunsolley, and Tyson.

Proceeding to organize, the following-named officers were elected: Advisory committee, J. A. Gunsolley, R. C. Evans, E. C. Ingraham, R. B. Trowbridge, and T. W. Williams; D. F. Tyson recording secretary and C. P. Faul treasurer.

The advisory committee met and elected J. A. Gunsolley chairman, and E. C. Ingraham corresponding secretary, after which the following was agreed upon:—

The treasurer was instructed to furnish the chairman funds to pay for printing two thousand copies of the constitution. R. B. Trowbridge was authorized to purchase two thousand copies of circular letters and one thousand letter heads, provided they do not cost more than one dollar and fifty cents per one thousand. The corresponding secretary was authorized to draw on the treasurer for funds needed to defray expenses for postage for carrying on work of the organization.

The corresponding secretary was instructed to solicit the assistance of T. W. Williams in drafting circular letter.

It was agreed that each member of the committee should investigate the matter of suitable literature for use in local societies and confer with the chairman regarding the same.

The chairman was instructed to furnish the church papers with matter desired for publication in regard to the organization.

The following were enrolled as members: T. W. Chatburn, Independence, Missouri; Charles P. Faul, Clarksdale, Missouri; George Essig, Independence, Missouri; Zeno F. Davis, 613 South 8th St., Kansas City, Kansas; W. S. Brown, Shenandoah, Iowa; Foster Vickrey, Independence, Missouri; Henry Sparling, Burnham, Missouri; R. B. Trowbridge, Parsons, Kansas; J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa; Alma C. Barmore, Bird's Eye, Indiana; Francis J. Ebeling, 4728 Jacob Street, Wheeling, West Virginia; Delbert F. Tyson, Elmwood, Nebraska; Duncan Campbell, Pleasanton, Iowa; Albert T. Davis, Kansas City, Kansas; E. C. Ingraham, Clarksdale, Missouri.

A much needed work is thus commenced, and, if properly supported, is certain to result in much lasting good. Like every other good thing, it must be pushed to make it a success. We hope to have many pushers.

Printed constitutions and by-laws and other matter will be prepared at once; so that local societies may be formed right away.

Our corresponding secretary is an earnest, active worker, and will cheerfully answer all correspondence regarding our work. Let all interested feel free to write him—E. C. Ingraham, Clarksdale, Missouri.

We hope that ere long every branch of the church will have a society doing good work.

The advisory committee will arrange program as soon as possible.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Chairman.

DESERET NEWS, ON KIRTLAND TEMPLE.

THE Deseret News for April 12, has a clipping from an article published in the Cleveland, Ohio, Plain Dealer, in regard to the Temple at Kirtland; at the close of which the News says:—

The legal title to the Kirtland temple now rests in the Reorganized Church, which obtained it through the courts in litigation with persons who had held possession for several years, after the members of the rightful owner, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, had been driven west. It is said that an effort will be made to have the Reorganized Church, which is now holding its conference at Independence, appoint the next conference at Kirtland.

We call the attention of the News to the following facts. Some time after the departure of the church from Nauvoo, and Illinois, one Zadoc Brooks, began an attempt to reorganize the church and succeeded in gathering a small following. He was assisted at the start by Elder John E. Page, who did not remain actively with him long. Among others who were converted by Elder Brooks was Mr. Russell Huntley, a farmer and business man who lived at or near DeKalb, Illinois, quite wealthy and a very good and conscientious man. This Mr. Huntley went to Kirtland, with Mr. Brooks, and endeavored to rehabilitate the old town, in doing which he revived a judgment for a fine against Joseph Smith, on a justice's docket in the township on which execution was issued and the Temple sold, Mr. Huntley becoming the purchaser. Under this sale, Mr. Huntley took possession of the Temple and made extensive repairs upon it; and continued in possession until the Brooks movement failed, when Mr. Huntley left Kirtland returning to his former home at DeKalb, leaving an agent in charge of the Temple which soon fell into decay again.

While living at DeKalb, Mr. Huntley fell sick, and desiring to leave the temple in good hands, as he supposed, he made a deed of the Temple property to Joseph Smith and Mark H. Forscutt, who took possession from Mr. Huntley's agent at Kirtland, and who were in possession when the suit to recover was instituted by the Reorganized Church in the courts of Northern Ohio. In the suit for recovery the church in Utah was made a co-defendent with Joseph Smith, Mark H. Forscutt, and some others, and due notice given that church both of the fact of the suit and the object sought by it. It is now rather late for the News to urge that the rightful owner did not get his dues in the decision of the court in favor of the Reorganized Church.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Saints of Elmira, Michigan, have been treated to an attack on the faith by one Joseph Musser, who did them no harm however. Bro. J. A. Carpenter made reply and satisfied the people with a true statement of the faith. The Elmira Saints have purchased a lot and are about to build a chapel.

Bro. J. P. Benson, Ozark, Missouri, requests Saints in that vicinity to obtain letters of removal from their home branches and join the new branch organized there by Bro. Henry Sparling. Address the secretary, Sr. Addie Hull, at Ozark.

Sr. Ida M. Griswold, Hutsonville, Illinois, reports the branch at Kibbie, Illinois, as prospering. The enemy is quieter and the Saints persecuted less. She asks prayers, especially of the sisters, for restoration of health and strength.

The St. Joseph, Missouri, branch numbers 311, not but 113, as given in late minutes of the Far West district.

Bro. S. A. and Sr. F. D. Rogers, living near Simeon, Nebraska, ask that some of the ministry make them a call and preach to their neighbors. Write them beforehand and they will meet the one who goes. Their request is urgent.

Elders laboring in or passing through Colorado are asked to write Bro. A. A. Fausett, at Mesa, Mesa county. He lives fifteen miles from De Beque, the nearest railroad station.

Bro. Jacob Hershey reports good work done at Shelton, Nebraska, by Bro. Warren E. Peak. People came from long distances to hear; prospects are good for additions to the church when Bro. Peak returns.

Bro. Thomas Daley has been laboring successfully at Potter Valley, California, where he baptized three. So writes Sr. Rosa L. Sides in a late letter.

Another request for preaching from Harrisburg, Nebraska, from Bro. A. Sutton.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"When the cares of life are many,
And its burdens heavy grow
For the ones who walk beside you,
If you love them, tell them so.
What you count of little value
Has an almost magic power,
And beneath their cheering sunshine Hearts will blossom like a flower."

SOUL-HUNGER AND SOUL-FOOD.

EVER since the Lord God lent his gracious presence to Adam and walked with him in the garden of Eden, the divine inspiration to believe in a Creator and to worship a Deity, became so ingrafted into the human heart that the long ages even to this day have failed to eradicate it. Even the benighted Heathen give evidence of its experience in their vain efforts to find peace and comfort in worshipping their idols. Words fail to describe the true nature of this soul-hunger; it must be experienced to be fully understood. And there are few, perhaps, however hardened or darkened with sin they may have become, who have not at times known something of this heaven-sent soul-hunger, even though they might be unwilling to admit it.

Soul-hunger is that hungering and thirsting after righteousness of which the Savior speaks in his sermon on the mount. It is the Divine touch within us, the living breath of the Almighty yearning after some mark of the kinship existing between the immortal soul and its Creator. It is a reaching out of the finite after the Infinite, a longing for something higher, nobler, purer than anything this world can afford. Can this soul-hunger be satisfied by gross, earthly means? If we hunger for bread, will we be satisfied with a stone? Nay, verily.

But we must be sure the hunger we feel is not merely a craving for some new excitement or amusement; we must examine our hearts by the searchlight of God's word, and know of a surety that we desire the pure milk of the word; and that we hunger for the soul-satisfying bread of life. And even as when our bodies hunger, if we are filled with pain and disease, the nourishment we take will do us little good, so our soul-hunger cannot be satisfied while sin is cherished therein.

We must be emptied of sin and self, and with humility and purity of heart, partake of the life-giving manna. For if we regard iniquity in our hearts the Lord will not hear us; and as bread is to the body, so is prayer to the soul, for no other form of worship can so lift the soul from the clinging cares of earth, or can make us so realize the redeeming grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the richness of the love of God, and the blessed communion of the Holy Spirit. It has been truly said that "Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,

The Christian's native air."

Another form of soul-food is the earnest, prayerful study of God's word. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," says the inspired apostle; but surely when we study the words of Jesus and meditate upon them, we are being fed upon the finest of the wheat. When true hunger exists in the soul it will soon manifest itself in a desire to meet with God's people and to worship with them. Well may the hungry and thirsting soul pray with the Psalmist, "O, send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles. For blessed are they that dwell in thy house, for there we may taste of the goodness of the Lord, there we shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of his house, and he shall make us to drink of the river of his pleasures." AGNES MOORE.

JERSEY CITY HEIGHTS.

"CHARITY."

"Have a tear for the wretched, a smile for the glad,
For the weary, applause; and excuse for the sad;
Some help for the needy, some pity for those Who stray from the path where true happiness flows.
"Have a laugh for the child in her play at thy feet,
Have respect for the aged, and pleasantly greet
The stranger that seeketh a shelter from thee;
Have a covering to spare if he naked should be.
"Have a hope in thy sorrow, a calm in thy joy;
Have a work that is worthy thy life to employ;
And oh! above all things on this side the sod,
Have peace with thy conscience, and peace with thy God."

RETROSPECTIVE.

WHILE contemplating writing the letter the sister had reference to in Leaflet No. 4, I was considerably troubled in my mind as to whether it would be proper or not to write such a letter for publication in the Home Column. I was perplexed between propriety and duty. While laboring under this burden I asked God to give me some evidence as to whether I should or should not write upon the question that is vexing the souls of hundreds, yes, and I may say, thousands, of women to-day. God answered my prayer. I was standing in my room bending over a little table, upon which I usually write, when there was suddenly laid before my eyes a large pile of papers. I picked up some and examined them. The reading seemed to be all knitted together as you would knit a stocking, only it was in square sheets. Some were finished off and the yarn made fast, while others were not finished, and in taking hold of the end it could be unraveled. I was rather puzzled to know how anyone could write by knitting.

While wondering in my mind about all this writing my attention was drawn to a certain piece of paper that projected from beneath. I drew it out, albeit it appeared at first to be blank, but the letters suddenly came before my eyes, which were so large it filled about half the sheet, W-r-i-t-e. I turned it over and again the same letters appeared, W-r-i-t-e, W-r-i-t-e. It seemed to be the very paper I was looking for, although it had nothing on than the above. I felt satisfied and I awoke. After writing one or two letters upon the subject which my sisters will remember I called upon others who were more competent to pick up the "dropped stitch" where I had left it. But few seemed to realize the necessity of it at that time, and even now there is a seeming reluctance on the part of those who might aid in this matter to keep it before the Saints. Since then you all know what has transpired. The Daughters of Zion have sprung into existence, a few pamphlets have been printed and issued, and, I think, should be kept up.

Zion's Religio is another good organization; but think this is not complete until the young brothers and sisters can have their separate meetings at certain times appointed, where each sex can be more fully and perfectly taught the laws of their being, the brothers by a brother, the sisters by a sister. As long as we cannot avert the evil in any other way that has followed the children up to their youth, both male and female, let them have their private or select meetings and be taught these things, and thereby forestall much evil that might be brought to their posterity through their ignorance, or for want of being taught, warned, and forewarned of these things.

We are not blind to the fact that this generation is fast passing away and our church will soon pass into the hands of the rising generation, and we should do our utmost to see that they are properly fitted and thoroughly equipped to assume these responsibilities. Our situation as parents may be and is a trying one, especially to one of keen sensibility, but let us bear in mind for what we are laboring, and let not the interest of our posterity become a "side issue," just because we are ashamed to "open our mouths." Bashfulness, to me, is unseemly in this case, when it is a necessity, and so much is at stake, and depends upon it. Why blush to do our duty to our children when they are part of our own beings, our own flesh and blood, subject and heirs to all the temptations and every device of Satan. I have known some people who could stand and talk over the back yard fence for hours together with their neighbors about the sins of other neighbors and their children, while their own were allowed to run rampant to destruction and were indulging in the same vicious and degrading habits. It was so much easier to watch for the sins of their neighbors' children than their own. But it becomes parents to be on their guard with their children against influences that are so destructive to both body and mind, and are a source of more wretchedness and misery than any other one cause, which tends directly to weaken and destroy the force and energy of the physical system and impair the intellect, weaken the memory, and debase the mind. And again I say parents and those who have children in their charge should be on their guard. The habit is generally acquired early in life, and they should be watched, and their movements noted. Look closely for the symptoms; they can easily be detected.

"But," says one, "we have heard enough of this, and it's too delicate a matter to talk about, and it will only put impure ideas into their heads, when perhaps they wouldn't think about it;" and she don't think her children will ever indulge in such degrading practices. Foolish, mistaken parent! It is only false delicacy that restrains you from doing your duty, and if you don't attend to your children's interest and education, some one else will, and it will be too late then to counteract or try to break up the habit. In this case the parent is more to blame than the children for the ruin which this dreadful vice entails, for it might be prevented or broken up in its early stages. Why hold up your hands in "holy horror" at the mention of the work the Daughters of Zion are said to be engaged in, or at the language used in the little pamphlets? (I wish they were issued every week.) What parent would not shrink with terror on beholding her child ready to fall from the roof of the house? But how many will stand mildly by and see that child go down to ruin morally and physically!

Young mothers, who have all the education now at your command, if you will avail yourselves of it and all the lessons you need to be taught in regard to the physical education of your children (which was not our privilege when our children were babes), look well to the ways of your little ones. Don't be afraid to teach them. Begin before they are born. Some may wonder how that can be done. I believe I stated once before, their education began even before the very beginning of that little life, and in that case it may be the little one has received the defilement of its nature through your ignorance of the law of continnence and your own desire for pleasure. Remember there are some sad and well-authenticated cases in which the poor little beginning of child-life has been found in the afterbirth of a living baby. Then it is your duty to try and do your very best for it before its birth, and, to quote from Bro. J. A. Gunsolley in Leaflet No. 5, "The child has certain inalienable rights, and among them is the right to be born properly, the right of equal chances with his fellow creatures, and to deny him this right is to deny him the greatest boon which lies in the power of parents to give. They are a part of your very selves, and if after birth they perchance develop thorns, ask yourselves the question, 'Are they not of our own planting?'" And in this case it is better to begin with them while they are pliable, flexible, and the little twigs are tender. "Turn them to the right." None in the world have such an affection for their interest or should have. You have the greatest authority over them, are the better acquainted with their tempers, dispositions, and inclinations. Your opportunities are many to teach them to respect their little bodies while young. It will be so much easier to do it then than in after years when they have grown older and the young twigs have become an oak.

As I read over the little leaflets again, I ask myself the question, What use to repeat all this again when it has been written so plainly before by others? Ah, yes, so have the first principles of the gospel, which are ever so old, yet ever new, and which have to be rehearsed and re-rehearsed. For are there not continually being ushered into the world souls which need salvation and everyone stands upon its own individuality? So with the physical education as well as spiritual, each one has to receive its own individual treatment.

How willing would I be to again pass through the same fiery ordeal of bringing the same number of children into the world (and it's no small number) if it were possible and I could do so with the experience I already have and the same lessons and opportunities you younger mothers have. But as long as I cannot, I am willing to do the next best thing; that is, use my influence for the good of others. We are living in a day when plain talk is necessary, though I am aware that it is considered by some to be shameful, disgraceful, and who stigmatize the utterances of those who differ from them. But let us bear in mind that the boys and girls of to-day will be the fathers and mothers of the coming generation, and that false modesty has been too long a barrier to the truth. But we must "feel our way." And I think I can venture to say that in the near future the pulpits will not be considered too sacred a place to reveal the truths which have so long been kept veiled because of a false delicacy. The signs of the times cannot elude the active, zealous Latter Day Saint, and "hope" announces in prophetic tones, "she" will fulfill her mission. And may the intent sanctify the form, is my prayer. More anon.

BRO. U. W. GREENE, of Jonesport, Maine, requests your faith and prayers in behalf of Bro. Frank F. Kelley, of Indian River, Maine.

Letter Department.

JONESPORT, Maine, April 8.

Editors Herald.—The new year opens favorably for the work in the "Pine Tree State." In January, accompanied by Bro. Frank Kelley, of Indian River, I visited Tenant's Harbor, the site of our last reunion. Large audiences gave attention to the word and some are near the kingdom. Soon after leaving there, Malvern hall, the use of which was freely tendered us by the owner, Mr. Levi Hart, was burned, together with his store and home. Our visit to Mountainville revealed an interest on the part of several, who expressed a desire to obey the gospel as soon as the ice went out. Winter baptizing in Maine is not always the easiest or pleasantest work, but then we will continue to reach water if the people are ready therefor. We tried to cheer the Saints and friends at North Deer Isle, then crossed the water to Sedgwick, the home of our genial district president, William G. Pert. Given to hospitality, anxious for Zion's prosperity, he is one of our most zealous ministers. I would that there were more of our men like him, instead of so many do nothings. What excuse can any man holding priesthood give the Lord for refusing to do his duty? Some even refuse to attend meetings of the church. Let me suggest to slothful officials everywhere, read the revelation of 1894, paragraph 7, once more and see to it, before God that you do your part by looking after the local interests, that the traveling ministry may push out into the great harvest field.

Accompanied by Hallie Pert, we journeyed to West Surry. The cordial reception given us by Bro. and Sr. Cunningham soon banished from our minds the unpleasant trip. Bro. C. is developing into an able defender of the work. He holds the fort there and at West Ellsworth. Bro. Kelley's health had been gradually failing; he has a tendency to hereditary pulmonary affection. It was deemed necessary for him to return home. Sadly I gave him the parting hand. He is possessed of some of the finest qualities, and seemed eminently qualified to develop into a worker, approved of God and man. We pray he may long be spared to us. A series of meetings held at Green's Landing, appeared to leave a few seriously considering the "question of questions," and a better feeling among the Saints. They will probably erect their church building in a few weeks; lumber all on the ground.

On the first trip of the steamer "Frank Jones," I came to this place. The elders all find a home with Bro. and Sr. Walker, who for years have ministered to their needs. Under all conditions they extend a hearty welcome and make you feel at home. During the winter Bro. Walker has held services on Wass Island, an Advent stronghold. They made threats of personal violence against him, such as tar, feathers, etc., and persistently disturbed the meetings. The schoolhouse was opened for us by the town officers, much to the disgust of the Advents. They constantly affirmed there was "no law for Mormons." On March 31 I went to the island with several brethren. We were forbidden to land, but found a spot they did not control. Bro. Alonzo Beale made us welcome, and a number attended services. On Monday night we detected signs of the coming storm. On Tuesday night it broke in all its fury. Such a scene I never witnessed before; horrible execrations against Joseph Smith, oaths, screeches, demands for miracles, challenges to fight, etc., etc. Our friends were in the majority, fortunately, so no personal harm was received. The fracas was heard in Jonesport one mile and a half away. The next morning I gave the principal cause of the trouble a taste of Maine law. His fun cost him twenty-two dollars and fifty-five cents and a two hundred dollar bond to keep the peace for one year. I was pleased to see the host of friends who rallied to our support. The man did not relish his medicine, but his malady required active treatment.

I baptized two at Indian River last Friday. The district has purchased a tent, which arrived that day. Prospects good in all directions.

In hope of final triumph,
U. W. GREENE.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., March 16.

Editors Herald:—Since writing the last time our meetings here have been progressing splendidly; have had good attendance and good liberty in presenting the restored gospel. I have baptized quite a number more of splendid people. Have baptized fourteen since the beginning of the year and several more say they will obey soon; so the Sydney Saints are rejoicing in the increase that our loving Father in heaven has given them. May they ever prove themselves worthy before the Lord in faith, humility, zeal, and purity, as becometh Saints of the living God.

Bro. Wells has returned from Victoria and I was glad to meet him again after a separation of seven months.

I trust the Lord may give us a prosperous year in gospel work. We ask the church to especially remember us in their prayers that we may have power to do much good for the Lord Jesus.

My home address is Tuncurry, New South Wales, Australia. In hope, JOHN KALER.

Editors Herald:—I have been laboring some for the Master this winter, but it has been so cold, with so much snow, it was hard for people to get out. I have been most of the time alone, but the Lord has blessed me in the work. I have administered to the sick a number of times and the blessing came. One evening as I called at Bro. Robert Perry's I found Sr. Perry very sick with scarlet fever. She made request and I administered to her, and she was healed. Bro. J. A. Grant and I administered to Sr. Flynn, of Akron, and she was raised at once. Sr. Vadie Harder also has another testimony to bear of the healing power of God although the blessing was withheld about two hours; but when it came she knew it was from God.

I left Bro. J. A. Grant in Akron, Tuscola county, where we were having large crowds and a good interest. I was sorry to leave, but Bro. A. McKenzie was there to help, and I had to come home to get ready for farming. We were preaching in Bro. Flynn's new blacksmith shop, and I think we had between two hundred and fifty and three hundred out some nights. We met Bro. J. H. Lake's nephew, Joseph Lake, about ten miles north of Akron, and he received us kindly and came to our meetings in the schoolhouse near his place. He is building a new house and says when he gets it finished he would like to have his uncle come and pay him a visit. I think he is a fine man and Mrs. Lake a fine lady.

Your brother,
WILLIAM DOWKER.

JOHNSTON, R. I., April 9.

Editors Herald:—With a kind of lonesome feeling creeping over me I write this letter; and while it is true that I am in God's Providence, I should very much like to be in God's Missouri about this time of the year.

When last I wrote I was at East Dennis, on Cape Cod. From there I went to Providence and spent Christmas at home. On Wednesday evening, December 26, I met with the Saints at Bro. Gondolf's and enjoyed a very spiritual time; in fact I think I was as near heaven as I ever expect to be in this present life; but then all pictures must have shade as well as sunshine, and as I went from the hallowed place where God met us by his Holy Spirit I felt that in mind I was as near the place where Satan dwells as I ever wish to be in this life or any other. On Sunday I preached in Fiskville in the morning and at Providence in the evening. Attended meeting at Bro. Arnold's January 2, and went to Stillwater on the 3d. My card did not reach Bro. Smith in time, so could only hold one meeting, which I did, speaking to a few with good liberty.

Saturday found me in Brockton, where I was kindly entertained at Bro. Isaiah Ames'. I met with the Saints on Sunday morn in sacrament service and felt the presence of the good Spirit. I spoke in the evening, and continued to hold meetings throughout the week in a number of places in town. The weather was against us and the preacher in poor trim, but we trust good was done, and feel to leave the work in the hands of the Lord.

On Saturday I left Brockton to attend the Sunday school convention. From Brockton to Providence I had company on the train, Miss Maud Cane and Bro. John Hoxie being passengers. At the Providence depot we met with several of the Saints, Bro. F. M. Sheehy's noble form looming up among the rest. The convention was all that could be desired or asked for, marked improvement being manifested at every turn. Thank God for the Sunday school! The evening service was devoted to concert exercises which were excellently rendered. Little Randall Sheehy gave us a German recitation which pleased all. Altogether I should say that it was the best convention held thus far in the history of the Massachusetts association. Bro.

Sheehy went to Swansea, and the writer remained in Providence, meeting with the Saints at Bro. George Gates' on Wednesday night, then went to Fiskville and preached Friday and Saturday. On Sunday I spoke in Providence morning and night. I received a letter from Bro. Sheehy on January 24 to join him at West Dighton and so took train next day. I arrived at Dighton and started to walk over to West Dighton, but unfortunately lost my way and it was nearly dark when I arrived at Sr. Clark's. Then I found that Bro. Sheehy had left that afternoon, concluding not to hold meetings, as the Methodists were about to begin a revival of uncertain duration. It began to storm and the prospects looked rather gloomy. West Dighton I should say is about six miles from everywhere; that is to say, it is the center of nowhere as far as railroads are concerned; but there are good people there as well as elsewhere. The storm abated and I took passage in the mail carriage to Dighton and boarded the train for the "Hub." Dear old Boston, with all thy faults I love thee still! And I guess some of the other brethren feel that way also. Although unannounced I was made welcome and felt—well, glad to meet with my old and new friends in the gospel covenant. I preached to the Saints and friends morning and evening.

Friday, February 1, at home. As the clock on the shelf slowly ticked out the minutes between nine and ten p. m. there came a quick ring on the bell announcing the visitor which proved to be not only one, but two; yet somehow the two were made one in a few minutes, and the branch record in Providence will read: "Sr. Florence Smith" instead of Sr. Florence Briggs as heretofore. Bro. George and Sr. Florence are both workers in church and Sunday school and will make good missionaries. Saturday night found me in Attleboro where I was kindly cared for by Mr. and Sr. Rodgers. On Sunday I walked to Plainville and preached to the Saints in their neat chapel, then went by horse power over to Sheldonville and spoke in the evening. I always find a good home at Sheldonville. In fact, I do most everywhere. On Monday I made several calls among those friendly to our work, and pray God to bless them. Was in vicinity of Providence until the 20th; on the 17th, however, I had the privilege of listening to one of Bro. W. H. Kelley's characteristic sermons, then went with him to spend the night at Bro. George Gates'. On returning we both felt wakeful, so talked, I don't know how long, then Bro. Kelley began to play on a very peculiar instrument. I do not think it could be considered musical, although he seemed to enjoy it.

The next place visited was Haverhill, where the writer was domiciled at Bro. Frost's. Preached Thursday night. On Friday afternoon in company with Bro. Frost I attended a patriotic meeting which was very good. Bro. Bullard came in on the evening train and with his assistance I tied the nuptial knot that made Mr. Frank Brown and Sr. Carrie Steele one. May God grant them a long and useful life! On Saturday morning I was called to administer to the little child of Bro. Frost, who had met with a sad accident. She lingered for a few days and then went home to God, "for of such is the kingdom of heaven." On Sunday I spoke to a few in the hall in Haverhill. On Wednesday I met with the Saints in Boston at Sr. Sheehy's. Quite a number were out and a good time was had. Bro. Arthur Phillips was ordained to the office of teacher by the writer, assisted by Brn. Bullard and Blanchard. From Boston I went to Attleboro but could not make appointments just at that time, so on Sunday met with the Cranston people.

After several attempts to visit Dennis Port I succeeded at last, and Saturday, March 9, found me whirling along in the direction of cranberry bogs and good people; that is, we hope they will all be good sometime. I found a resting place at Bro. Charles Young's, and began to preach in the chapel. A few came out, but the audience kept increasing. On Sunday the 17th I went into the clear cold waters of old ocean, leading Mrs. Garfield, who is now rejoicing in the truth. God grant that others may follow. I continued until the 24th, preaching to good audiences, the last meeting being the best in point of numbers; but I was alone and sick, so forced to stop. I went over to East Dennis, but continued to grow worse, so left for home, where after a number of days of suffering I received faith sufficient to be healed, so sent for Bro. Gates and am all right again. I preached Sunday in Providence and attended meeting in Cranston. To-night I am to preach in Fiskville and continue this week if interest is good. Yours as ever,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

WALKLEY, England, March 30.

Editors Herald:—We are glad that the work of God is moving along in the various parts of the world, and that the gospel gifts are enjoyed like they were anciently. I feel to praise God for the good news that comes to us through the Herald, and that we have such good, instructive books. I am also proud of many of my brethren and sisters here in England and have a warm place in my heart for many in America; yea, the love of God constrains me to love all mankind and to labor for their good. I believe many in the European mission have been made glad by the ministrations of the apostles; they have done great good. We look upon Bro. Caffall as the grand old man. We pray that God will spare his life and land him safely home again, and as the future record will reveal the work done, may he with everlasting joy behold the fruit of the good seed sown. As members of the body of Christ we should use the means at our hands and advance ourselves all we can, and not wait for anybody or anything. It has often been said that God helps them that help themselves, and that learning is better than silver and gold. The Savior said, "Learn of me." If we will do this, we will do well. There is grand importance in those words of Christ, no matter how simple they may appear, and only those that are strict in keeping the commandments of God can realize the blessedness that flows from God to them. The peace, and joy, and freedom from peril and tribulation is of great worth to man. Well might Paul say, "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Peter said, "Abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul." Let us conform to those laws which will bring to us the best reward. It is admitted that all things are governed by law. The Lord said to the Seer, "And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law, is also preserved by law and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willet to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still."—D. C. 85: 8.

We are commanded to be clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. How can we except we comply with the above? The Psalmist says, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."—Ps. 19.

We have heard it uttered that Zion's tribulations are passing away. What welcome news to the Saints!

Again, the Lord says, "O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day."

I feel thankful that we have such a church paper as the Herald. It meets one of the great necessities in life. It is my desire to tell the glorious news to man. We have faith to believe that all the earth will be filled with the glory of the Lord, and the knowledge of God cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

We have one of the finest meeting rooms in this city. We pay twenty pounds per year, for rent; have had it about eight years. There are a few active Saints in Sheffield, and some careless ones too. The branch officers are striving to do their duty, and hope to meet with success ere long.

Yours in hope,

H. HOOLE.

OZARK, Missouri, April 1.

Editors Herald:—I have just closed meetings at this place. Elder John R. Wedlock rendered valuable assistance. At first the congregation was small. The M. E's. South were holding meetings, but our meetings continued to increase in number and interest, so we continued beyond our time, and we had the pleasure of seeing nine souls enter the kingdom, some of them the leading lights of the town.

God blessed me wonderfully in presenting the truth. To him be all the glory. Many were the invitations to return. We left many more near the kingdom and made many friends. Two years ago I was here and had to preach in the streets. This time I had the Presbyterian church. We now have nineteen Saints in town and we organized them temporarily into a branch, with Elder J. H. Wedlock president, Sr. Altie Hull clerk. I left this afternoon for General Conference. All the Saints feel strong.

Could I have staid longer more would have joined, no doubt, but we are thankful to learn that Bro. Pickering, of Springfield, has bought out the lumber yard at this point. The Saints rejoice at the news.

STONE CITY, Texas, April 3.

Editors Herald:—Bro. J. A. Currie, Sr., and I set out March 27, for Lee county to do some missionary work, about forty-five miles from my home. We arrived at Mr. Gainey Sherrill's, on Thursday evening, the 28th, and found the folks all well except Sr. Sherrill. She had an attack of rheumatism. We administered to her as requested, after which she got much better, but not altogether well. Next morning we went about six miles away to see a family whom we understood wanted to hear the gospel. After arriving we sent out an appointment for preaching at a schoolhouse near by, for Friday night. We met a small congregation at said place, and the writer preached to them. We left another appointment for Saturday night, when we met a much larger congregation than on the night before, and Bro. Currie preached to them.

Among the congregation was a Campbellite preacher of note, from Hill county. He wanted to preach at the same place on Sunday night if we did not preach. We told him we could not tell at that time whether we would or not. We met the people on Sunday at eleven o'clock, and the writer preached to said preacher and a congregation of interested hearers upon the identity of the church, taking for a text, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." We talked about one hour and a half upon said subject and then announced that on account of other engagements we would not preach at night, wherefore the preacher arose and stated that they had heard many truths that the oldest man could not deny, but that there were some things he objected to, and that if the people would come out Sunday night he would do as Aquila and Priscilla did for Apollos.

On account of some in the community wanting us to baptize them, we sent one with them to find water sufficient. We went about seven miles away to a public tank, or pond. After we had arrived and were waiting for some to come to be baptized who had gone to get a change of raiment to be baptized in, a man living near by, acting as agent for the adversary of righteousness sent us word by a Baptist preacher that he did not want us to baptize in the tank as he got water there to use. We understood the design; the tank was not fenced; all stock had free access to it. Boys wash in it any time they wish, for it is a public tank, and even dogs have the privilege to swim in it; yet the man objected to us using it to baptize in. The Baptist preacher who brought us the message said he did not think it would hurt the tank or make the water any more unclean to baptize in it. However, we postponed the baptizing until next day and set out again in search of more water. We traveled about six miles to a running stream, nobody objecting to the use of it. The writer baptized four souls and among them one old member of the Campbellite Church, one Baptist, the other two not being members of any sect. There are a number of others in that section whom we expect to come into the kingdom of God. Some are very near it, one lady, who is a member of the Campbellite Church, told me she expected she and her husband would come in. Her husband was away from home at that time. If he had been there I suppose they would have been baptized then. He is also a member of the Campbellite Church. After the baptizing we returned to Bro. Sherrill's, whence we had started out in the morning, where Bro. Currie and I confirmed those that were baptized and left them in the hands of God, hoping that they may fight the good fight of faith and come out victorious in the end.

We expect to be able to go back there in the future and gather together some other scattered members in that section of country and organize a branch of the church. Notwithstanding we met with some opposition and disappointments we went on our way rejoicing.

I find Bro. Currie a very acceptable companion in travel and a zealous worker for the cause of righteousness.

Yours in bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

JASPER CITY, Mo., April 7.

Editors Herald:—Having had considerable correspondence of late by reason of my letter in the Ensign some few weeks ago, I thought it advisable to write a short article for the benefit of the readers of the most valuable paper in the world—the Herald, and more especially to the Saints that contemplate moving from the North to the State of Missouri; or, in other words, the land of Zion; for Zion it is, if we so make it; otherwise it may prove to be just the reverse.

Times here are hard as is the cry elsewhere, and them that have a big plaster on their farms are almost compelled to sell out at some price, hence a good time for the Saints to buy, if so be that they can sell to an advantage where they are; but would under no consideration advise any of the Saints to sell their good homes anywhere throughout the States with a view of buying a farm or home in the State of Missouri, without first preparing the way before you, as God in his word directs. Do not take the word or judgment of any brother or sister in matters of so great importance. I would not have you understand by this that your brethren in Missouri are of a questionable character, without brains, light, or judgment; but we have not all been rocked in the same cradle, but have been brought up in different climes and under different circumstances, hence look at matters and things so differently that what to us might appear green others would call blue; hence to save getting the blues come and see the country for yourselves, and prepare the way before you, and all will be well, and no one to be blamed or have his or her feelings hurt.

This is a fine country, or it appears so to me. Come and see for yourselves, and, you may make my home your home while looking up a suitable location, and I will aid you all I can; or, if you will inclose a stamp with your inquiries I will answer as truthfully as I know how. One day of late I answered fifteen letters of inquiry, so you notice that it takes stamps. My time and paper I am willing to give you, and stamp too if need be. Would say to those that contemplate moving South, bring no northern work horses with you as they are quite liable to die before getting acclimated, unless you do not work them. Young horses will, as a general thing, pull through all right; but teams are cheap here, and can be bought at from forty to one hundred and twenty dollars. So come ye up hither to the land of Zion as you and the Lord shall prepare the way before you. And, why not form a colony and buy up a large tract of land and move up in a body and divide it? Could you not make a heaven on earth? What think you of this? I may write later on. In gospel bonds,

J. C. CHESTENSEN.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

At Lamoni, Iowa, December 31, 1833.

RETROSPECTIVE.

I PRESUME that on the morrow, and probably before the day has come, there will be a good many resolutions made for an amendment of the lives and conduct of the individuals who made those resolutions. I presume that many will to-night take the past year and their lives during it under consideration, and examining them as closely as they may, find out whether or not there was anything in them that required amendment. I am sure that many of the more thoughtful of you will be doing this, and though you may make resolutions which are only to be broken as time shall pass along, it is evident to me that there is benefit to come to every one who will carefully study his past life.

It is possible that your speaker may say some things to-day that may be accounted harsh, sharp, and reflective; but only a little while ago, while listening to one of our eloquent speakers, we heard him say that it was the province of the preacher to endeavor to make the people better; and unless there is a sense of shame left in the human heart, under any and all circumstances there will be no amendment of life. Unless there shall be something that shall react from the administration of a reproof, there is nothing in the child that will warrant effort for reformation on the part of parents or teacher.

You are aware that constituted as I am, in a sense, the life of the whole church, from its highest quorum of elders down to its membership, passes in review before me; and that in a great sense both the church and much of the world hold me responsible for the moral character of the church. The conduct of the membership, and especially of the ministerial membership, is said to reflect the character of the head; and the question is frequently asked me, Do you recognize the right of your ministers to say thus and so? Do you indorse such and such statements, such and such actions upon the part of your ministers? And these questions are asked both by the world and those who are inside the body. If in any sense I have to bear the sins of the body for the past year, I am a worse scapegoat than the one in the wilderness; and if I am to reflect all the good they have done, I am one of the best men in the world; and when I have said this, I have answered, in a sense, to my conscience. I state frankly that there are some things I don't want to confess to God for the body, and I believe that there is not a single thing that I shall do that will divert the stroke of punishment from them that are deserving of punishment, or that will stop the word of commendation and reward to those who are worthy.

In order that you can see what I am driving at let me call your attention to some things. We are told and we preach it, that every man is held accountable for his own deeds and misdeeds; that God has not proposed to take the agency of anyone from him; that he will give him that which will elevate and ennoble him, and in no sense will he rob him of his responsibility; and every one of you know—that is, you who have traversed this weary warfare—that you have to answer to God for every step of progress that you make and every step you lose; and you neither expect me nor any other individual to stand between you and your reward; and necessarily you cannot expect me or anyone else to stand between you and punishment, if you deserve it.

Now I hope that the young will pay attention to what may be said to-day, for I am told that some of our young people are unruly. I have seen boys and girls go out this morning, and that is disrespectful to the body; and if we should carry it to the extent of the law, we can close the doors and keep every one of you here until the benediction, no matter what might be the exigency for you to go out. Let me give these young people some advice,—and tell those who are present for those who are absent,—a father's advice and that advice is this: If you go to the place of worship simply to have it said that you have been there, don't wait for the service to begin, but you go out. Don't do that, because when you do you are making an excuse to your parents or to those who are your guardians, that never will stand in the day of judgment; for the good Spirit knows that you are making a sad mistake; and though you may hoodwink an earthly guardian, you cannot escape the searching eye of him who will finally judge all men.

I have heard the presiding elder plead for order. I have told him if one of my children was acting disorderly I would see that order was kept by that child, for I would see that he did not disturb the congregation. And my children have thought I was hard when I have seen them sitting in the rear corner, and insisted upon their coming forward to sit in the amen corner. If the parent expects the preacher to do the child good, he must see to it that the child is in a condition to understand what the preacher says. I wash my hands of the character of the parents in this congregation by simply telling them that if the Spirit by which we teach is true, it is for our misdeeds that we have to answer and we shall be called to account for the effect our teaching is having upon our children. I use this to illustrate a principle, and that principle is this: that the thing which is right or the thing which is wrong has to be determined in the mind of the individual who does it. You cannot come to me and ask me whether such and such a thing is right, or whether such and such a thing is wrong, and expect me to write down a precept for every action of your life; for that is a mistake that was made under the old law, and the apostle has written that there were statutes written that neither we nor our children could keep. They were grievous unto our fathers, and they could not keep them.

Not a great while ago we heard the doctrine presented that we were to teach our children the law, from the rising to the setting of the sun; that we should teach them when we rise up and when we lie down; and we were to be diligent in teaching our children the things of the law. And it was quoted from the old-time Scripture in reference to it (I think in Deuteronomy). This was a duty enjoined upon the children of Israel, but here is this proposition under the influence of that which is a better covenant, of that which is written of by the Apostle Paul, by which we are given to understand that that covenant was to be put in the heart of every disciple. God was to write his law in their inward parts; he was to write it upon their hearts. Now what would be the result of such a thing as that? Would it be of such a character that I must bind it upon my wrists or phylacteries with the commandments written in it that I should remember it, or of such a brief character that I write it upon my forehead and carry it there in order to remember it? Is it of such a character that I should have it written in a code, and that every moment I should sit down by the wayside and con over that which was written that I might not outrage the covenant, that I might not forget the tokens of that covenant, that I might not forget the conditions of the covenant, but remember them one by one?

One of the reasons why I present this thought this morning is this: We are constantly receiving at the Herald Office, questions like the following: Is it right for the Latter Day Saints to do this? Is it right for the Latter Day Saints to do that? Is it right for a minister that he should teach thus and so, and conduct himself thus and so? Is it right for the teacher or the deacon to do this or that? I confess freely, that under the constant repetition of such questions as these, asked by the people of God, I begin to think we ought to go back under that schoolmaster to do away with this everlasting nagging at each other by such questions as, Is it right to do this? Is it right to do that? It is supposed when persons ask that question of me that I know whether it is right or wrong. If I write down what is my opinion concerning it, if it does not suit the one that writes for it, it is "only Brother Joseph's opinion, and it is worth just so much; but he is no better a judge of the law than I am. I can read it as well as he can;" then his heart is not softened, but his persistence in his own course is hardened.

It is the opinion of your speaker that the office work of the Spirit was intended to fill the office work of the law in its entirety; that it was absolutely necessary to put into the heart of man a Spirit which, if he followed its dictates, would lead him to do that which is right continually. I know there is down in the heart of nearly every individual a wonderful amount of selfish honesty. We desire and affect to act right under all conditions. I am sure of that. I see it illustrated in a great many ways. I have only to pass along where wood is being corded and I can see it; I have only to pass along where hay is being weighed and I discover it; I have only to pass along where corn is being weighed and I discover it; and indeed we may say in all the transactions of man with his fellows, we may discover it. I discover that down in this human heart there is a selfish character that is deadening the moral quality of the individual. He does not intend to be dishonest, but he stretches his honesty to the extremest limit, and keeps within the line of not being questioned. Well, now, he does not do it to break the law, but it is simply his moral conviction that is stifled; he does not let the spirit and influence of that which should be with him as a token of the covenant come in the place of the law. For instance, it is said, "Thou shalt not kill;" but we have to go to the code to ascertain what killing is. There you see it is to take the life of a fellow being, and yet you will say it is justifiable to take human life under certain conditions, and we have been so careful in respect to this specific quality of the law that we have entered upon our code that we cannot punish a man for crime who is not morally responsible, not capable of discerning that which is right from wrong.

Only a little while ago, in October last; the mayor of Chicago, Carter Harrison, was shot down by a disappointed office seeker by the name of Prendergast. He has been tried and the jury has found him guilty of murder, and sentenced him to be hung. A motion for a new trial has been made upon the plea that the man was insane when he committed the murder, and consequently was not responsible. If he was insane, then every man that kills his fellow man is insane—emotionally insane. If that motion of insanity excuses him from answering to the law, then every wrong which men do in the world under the influence of selfish interest is the result of insanity and we ought not to be held responsible for anything we do. I don't believe in the claim of insanity; I believe the man was sane when he slew Carter Harrison; I believe he intended to kill, and the conditions connected with the act which he performed show to me that he intended it, and he managed it all as a sane man would; but after the deed was done, then he proposed to hold himself free from condemnation, because a motion was made that he was insane.

Now, brethren and sisters, do you excuse yourselves that you are emotionally insane when you do your misdeeds? Do you believe that God will hold you responsible for the condition you were in? Will he hold us responsible because we were not acting in accordance with the covenant we made with him? Let me enumerate some of the misdeeds, and see if we were emotionally insane when we performed them. Have any of you gone into saloons where you have not been known and drank, because you were not recognized, and did it freely? Would you do the same in Lamoni? If not, how was it that you did it at all? Have any of you slandered your brother or sister in the year that is past? Have you by cruel innuendoes brought any of them under the suspicion of their brethren and sisters or neighbors? Have you started a story that is not true with the thought of doing to any of them an injury? I am told—I am thankful that I do not hear a great deal of it—I am told that there is a great deal of scandal going on in Lamoni. I am thankful that I do not hear much of it, although I keep house next door to the Sisters' Mite Society. Have you given way, in any sense, to this gossiping habit, and retailed an accusation against your brother or sister, whether they be guilty or not guilty? Have you, in any sense, started evil and suspicious stories about anyone of your fellows? If you have, this is the time to repent of it. And do you know what repentance is? Go to your brother to whom you have done wrong, to your sister to whom you have spoken reproachfully, and quietly and honorably make the statement of what you have said, and confess your wrong, and do so no more. Have any of you given short weight in the year that is past? You know what short weight is.

I was in the St. Louis market at one time, and I saw a busy, bustling fellow come along with a basket on his arm and a light pair of scales in his hand. He stepped to one of the market stands where there was butter for sale, took up a roll of butter, put it on the scales, and then put it into his basket; he took up another roll, weighed it, and put it in his basket; the poor woman that had it for sale begged of him to spare her, but the market master could not; it was short in weight. Have you given short weight? Was the market master there? Have you in any sense defrauded your neighbor, no matter how or when it was done? Can you think back during the past year and discover anywhere where you have defrauded your neighbor? If you have, the Spirit tells you,—it is not for me to write it down that you may carry it with you,—the Spirit tells you it is wrong; that it is not right for one that has made a covenant with God to do that which is evil; you made a covenant with God to do better.

Having said this much we go back to the propositions, Does the Spirit teach us what is right? Does the Spirit teach us what is wrong? Is it necessary for us to carry with us the precepts of the moral law in order that we may not infringe some peculiar application that is in the law? The Savior has said:—

Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

Thus it is not unto your neighbor alone, but whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you. That means your enemy; that means the weary stranger that may be at your door, or whosoever may need your services in any sense; it comprehends the whole mass of mankind.

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

I was reading the other day a descriptive article respecting Berlin, the capital of Prussia, and it was stated that the Berliners were a very heady, aristocratic class, who would pass other individuals not of the same class of themselves on the street without recognition, and yet at the same time these very individuals would jump off the pavement to help to lift up a dray horse that had slipped and fallen down, if there were not already a sufficient number to raise him to his feet, and then when the horse was up go on about their business, never asking who was the driver of the horse, or how poor, or in what condition of life he was in. This heady, higher class, these Germans coming down from a great line of ancestors who were of the elite of the nation, when there was a necessity for an act like that, their fine clothes did not hinder them from getting down and lifting the poor horse onto his feet. That is acting out the principle, Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

That is loving your neighbor. Our neighbor is any individual that needs our help. Then in this sense every man becomes our neighbor, if in any way we are called to speak or act in any way toward him to do good. We should remember that the whole process touching man's duty to man is couched in the one sentence,

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

Let me put a question and see how it works. Does the president of the branch break any law when he calls the priesthood of the branch together and suggests to them that they make themselves a visiting quorum to visit the Saints, to encourage them, to build them up, and to strengthen them? I know what the thought of you people is. In some respects you think it is a foolish question, and yet the same question is asked, and there is division in regard to it. There is no law with which I am acquainted that condemns such action. You ask if the teacher is to visit the houses of the members. I answer that the law does not make the teacher a visiting officer. I have answered it for at least thirty times that this is the way the law makes it; and yet, the teacher, having the authority, if he has a chance, may visit and pray with and teach them; and the members' houses should be opened to him if he conducts himself with due decorum; and if he chooses to take the deacon with him the same freedom should be extended; for it is in the line of his duty to know what is going on, and to obey the law which makes it his duty to see that no harm is being done among the Saints.

Is it the will of the membership that they should not allow their lives to be inquired into? I will tell you what I have said about it; that sometimes I feel that I may be needing the rod; and if I do, let me receive the rod from the hands of my friends, and not from the hands of my enemies. I would feel like the Patriarch David, that I would rather fall into the hands of an offended God than to be turned into the hands of my enemies. If my life has to be corrected, then let it be corrected by my friends—those who are friends to God, those who are friends to humanity, those who are friends to the word and the Spirit of life and peace; let my life be corrected by them rather than by those of my enemies.

But there is great supervision manifested over those who are Latter Day Saints, and I am thankful for it. We cannot be judged rightly by the outside world because their vision of spiritual things is obscured by the things of this world; just as Bro. Wells illustrated it at the Independence Conference when in describing some of the duties of the Saints said that we could not see them because the things of this world covered the sight, and to illustrate took a silver dollar out of his pocket and placing it before his eye said:—

I cannot see anything beyond this.

And why could he not see the thing desired? Because he had placed the the dollar between him and that which he was trying to look at; and how could he look through that mass of silver and see what was going on beyond it? He should have removed the selfish interest so far from him that he could have comprehended the whole world behind the dollar.

Now, it is my opinion that the Spirit is intended to be given to them who are the children of the covenant that it may be in them in the place of the code of the moral law, and that being retained in them it may teach them from day to day as they go forward just what they should say, and what they should do, and what they should not say, and what they should not do; and they have no necessity to carry with them the written code of the moral law to look upon from time to time in order that they may not fail in any of the works contained therein, that they may be God's children on the earth. We ought to let the Holy Spirit have its office work in us. I have thought that it should stand to us, not as a schoolmaster with the rod over us, but that it should stand as Christ, inviting us in the ways of life.

Let us manifest in our lives the tokens of the covenant that we have received from God, that we may be found worthy to be continued in it. We expect him to give us credit for every increase in doing good; and we may expect he will enter into judgment with us for doing wrong. Let us bring ourselves strictly into judgment, by the Spirit which should be in us. I hope that the year that is coming in will find us at the end improved. Let me tell you that the church never stood morally better than it is now.

I am informed (and I am not going to inform you where I got my authority) that those individuals in the West, whose false teachings we have been so long combating, have determined to send out a host of men to attack the Reorganized Church, and they are to win converts from its ranks to the Utah faith; they are going to ride the Reorganized Church down. We have been looking for that for thirty years; they have refused to meet us for that length of time; they had that between them and the world that they could not fight over it successfully. We have stood ready to meet them at whatever time they should proceed to move out their batteries, and now they are going to fight the Josephites.

Remember what our brother quoted last Sunday morning,

It is not the work of God that is frustrated but the work of men.

The works of God will not be frustrated, but the works of men may; and if we have so far reached the limits of our usefulness, in this great work, that our movement is to be superseded by something else, let us say amen to it, and fall into the line to go on to victory. But if the Lord has spoken to us—and we believe he has—let us stand manfully to that, and let us frame our lives to his teachings.

I know I have rambled this morning, but I have tried to show to you that there should be in every heart that Spirit which would dictate that which is right, and that which is wrong, that we may choose to do the right, and refuse to do the wrong, and amend our lives by the shining of the Spirit upon our thoughts, upon our hearts and our conduct.

I trust that the Spirit of peace will continue with us, that it will build us up in Christ, unto the largeness of men and women in Christ, who will be able to manifest that they have been with him, and love him, and have his words in them.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

A MANUAL OF THE PRIESTHOOD.

This is a work by Elder Charles Derry, in which is set forth the order and nature of the Priesthood. The writer also defines the duties and prerogatives of all Church Officials, from the First Presidency to the Deacons inclusive. It is compiled from the Standard books of the church and the History of Joseph Smith as published in the Millennial Star. Indexed for ready reference, 132 pages, cloth bound, 25 cents.

CREDIBILITY OF THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS.

THE Easter season always brings forward a discussion of this subject, and devout reflections upon its importance to the world. We find the topic treated by Rev. William North Rice in The Methodist Review (March), from the affirmative standpoint. In the first place, the writer holds that the Savior's resurrection stands in a very different relation to Christian faith from any of his other miracles; that while other miracles are divine authentications of the revelation which he gave, the resurrection is itself an integral part of that revelation. He argues that there might have been more or less of those other miracles, and our general conception of the character and work of Jesus would have been still the same; that if he had fed the multitude with a few loaves once instead of twice, if he had raised a dead person to life once or twice instead of thrice, if anyone or if some considerable number of the miracles recorded in the Gospels had been left unrecorded, or if the record of some of them should be discredited as unauthentic, it would make no essential difference in our conception of the character and work of Jesus or in the general system of Christian doctrine; but that if the record of the resurrection were lost or discredited our whole conception of Christ and of Christianity would be radically changed, and the residue which would be left would not be historic Christianity—it would not be the faith that has made martyrs and missionaries and has transformed the world's history.

The writer pays attention to the argument against miracles as advanced by Hume. He thinks that nothing but an "absolutely complete knowledge of the system of nature" can entitle us to declare any alleged miracle impossible. That the sun will rise tomorrow we cannot declare as certain; it is possible that it may fail to rise. Hume's argument, however, was that a miracle is, a priori, so enormously improbable that the falsity of any supposable amount of human testimony is more easily credited than the truth of the alleged miracle. Mr. Rice states the argument as follows:—

"The sophistical form in which Hume stated his argument has been justly criticised, and criticised by the agnostic Huxley, as well as by Christian writers; but the force of the argument depends, not on the sophistical form, but on the truth which it contains. That truth is that the amount and quality of testimony necessary to establish belief in any allegation varies with the a priori probability or improbability of the allegation, and that accordingly there may be allegations so enormously improbable that no supposable array of testimony would render them credible. Suppose all Roman historians of the century commencing with the death of Nero, whose works are extant, agreed in the assertion that Nero rose from the dead. Would such agreement establish in our minds a belief in the truth of the allegation? We answer, without hesitation, 'No.' We believe that most of us would not even be brought to the point of seriously questioning whether the allegation might not be true. The supposition of error in all the historians of the period, arising from some mistake or fraud on the part of those who first gave currency to the story, would seem to us immensely more probable than the supposition of the truth of the allegation."

Why, then, asks Mr. Rice, should we believe in the resurrection of Jesus on the evidence of testimony, when we can hardly conceive of any array of testimony that would convince us of the resurrection of Nero? We condense what seem to be the most weighty of the reasons here called up, namely:—

1. That "in so far as the character of Jesus is unique and apparently superhuman, the a priori probability against the resurrection is diminished. If it is conceded that in various respects Jesus differs from all other men, it is thereby rendered more or less probable that he may differ from all other men in other respects."

2. That "to him who believes, or even hopes, that the world is ruled by a God of moral attributes, it must appear more or less probable that such a God may choose to reveal himself to his children and may make the system of nature itself emphasize and attest that revelation. In proportion to the importance of the revelation which is to be made is the probability of some miraculous sign for its attestation."

3. That "skepticism itself does not doubt that the First Epistle to the Corinthians was written by the Apostle Paul, and at a date not more than about a quarter of a century after the death of Christ—at a time, therefore, when the greater part of the more than five hundred brethren who claimed to have beheld the risen Lord were still living. The summary of the appearances of the risen Christ to the apostles, as contained in that epistle, is therefore conclusive evidence that the faith in the resurrection was the faith of the first generation of Christians."

4. That "the obvious honesty of all the narratives and the circumstantial detail which marks John's Gospel as the work of an eyewitness scarcely leave room for doubt that the sepulcher of Jesus was found untenanted on the morning of the first day of the week. In some way the body of Jesus had been removed. Assuming it to be substantially certain that the sepulcher was found empty on the Easter morning, we may remark that the faith in the resurrection derives some incidental confirmation from the impossibility of constructing any plausible hypothesis of the abduction of the body."

In conclusion, Mr. Rice refutes the theory of hallucination on the part of those who claimed to have seen the risen Christ:—

"If the appearance of the risen Lord was a delusion or hallucination [he says], it was certainly a most peculiar one. The natural history of hallucinations has been extensively studied, and their laws are pretty well understood. Somewhat of the history of this particular delusion, if it was one, we can gather from the biblical narratives. The honesty of those narratives is unimpeachable. Even on the theory of hallucination we may assume that we have a substantially veracious, though uncritical, narrative of the subjective experiences of the disciples. So far as we can thus trace the history of this delusion, it seems to have been of a very exceptional sort. A delusion is usually preceded by a state of strongly excited expectancy. The person sees what he has been made to believe he will see. But in this case there was no such expectation. The death of Jesus plunged the disciples into utter despair. Whatever he had said about his death and resurrection had been so completely at variance with all their prepossessions that it had made no impression on their stolid unbelief. When Mary found the sepulcher empty she could only think that some one had taken away the body and laid it she knew not where. The reports of the women to the apostles 'seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.' The mental attitude of the disciples was the very opposite of that state of expectant attention in which hallucinations most frequently originate.

"A delusion most commonly affects only a single individual. Shakespeare is psychologically correct in making Banquo's ghost invisible to the rest of the company, though profoundly real to the guilty fears of Macbeth. But in this case the delusion affected simultaneously considerable numbers of persons—in one instance over five hundred—including, doubtless, men of all varieties of temperament, hopeful and despondent, imaginative and prosaic. All saw the same blessed vision. In the cases in which delusions have become epidemic and affected considerable numbers of persons, they have generally had a history extending over some months or years, in which they have gradually become prevalent and as gradually declined. In this case there was no such gradual development. The faith of the apostles, excepting Thomas, in the reality of the resurrection was established before the close of the Easter Day. The appearances reported are few in number, and all were comprised within the space of forty days. After that short period the risen Jesus vanishes forever. Whatever fantastic visions appeared to the imagination of more or less fanatical Christians, the risen Jesus walked the earth no more. The delusion vanished as suddenly as it came. The dream was dreamed out in forty days. . . .

We realize fully the difficulties which the thought of the present age must find in accepting the faith in the resurrection. We see the solemn procession of the generations marching into

The undiscovered country from whose bourne No traveler returns.

We realize the enormous improbability of an exception to a law sustained by so immense a mass of accordant experience. But, when we think of the alternatives to belief in the resurrection, they all seem so much more improbable that we find it easier to accept the one mystery which explains all mysteries. To believe that the faith in the resurrection was a delusion so contradicting all psychological laws, or a myth which was fully developed in a single day, or a falsehood perpetrated by the disciples to bring upon themselves imprisonment and death—to believe that the system of religious faith which has created a new and nobler civilization had its origin in fraud or self-deception—taxes our credulity more than to believe that Jesus rose from the dead."—Sel.

PARLIAMENTARY POINTER.

The above is a neat little volume designed for the vest pocket, containing all the rules of ordinary parliamentary practice, so arranged as to admit of ready reference while a question is before a meeting and requiring an immediate solution. This cannot be said of any other book on parliamentary law. All others seem to have been designed more for study than for use in assembly work.

The different phases of this subject of which every man thinks he knows considerable, (and yet very few know more than enough to lead them into blunders), are carefully classified, and in many cases the same point is repeated under different headings, thus furnishing immediately the desired information. By a unique system of easily learned abbreviations the whole subject is brought into a space that can be readily concealed in an ordinary sized hand. To any member of any society, open or secret, the "Parliamentary Pointer" is worth its weight in gold. It is published by Thos. J. Crowe, Detroit, Michigan. Price by mail in flexible cloth cover, only ten cents.—Fraternal Tidings.

MAN'S NEED OF A LIVING GOD.

What, he asks, was of all things most needed? and in his philosophy the needs of man are a kind of prophecy or revelation of the possibility of their satisfaction. What we need is not abstract speculation, or negative dialectic. We need something that shall appeal to men of flesh and blood, struggling with temptations and discouragements, confused and baffled by theories of heredity, swayed toward the material side by the humiliating experience of their subjection to their body, and not sure as to how any larger and consoling truth can be welded to a physiological view of life. To meet this need, nothing will suffice but a faith in God, and a living God. A Deity, infallible, remote from all human conditions, gives little help to men hesitating whether to count themselves as beasts that perish or among the sons of God. What bridge can be found to span the immeasurable gulf which separates infinite spirit from creatures who seem little more than physiological accidents? But to Mr. Balfour, although it is a hard thing to believe that we are made in the likeness of God, it is yet a very necessary thing, and if that need exists, can it be more effectively satisfied than by the Christian theory of the world?—From "The Foundations of Belief," by W. T. Stead, in the April Review of Reviews.

A noble life is not necessarily made up of great efforts, but of little acts of duty well performed, well-timed words of encouragement and appreciation, deeds of kindness and charity, gentle forbearance, warm hand-clasps of sympathy, smiles of cheer.

Never let any fault you have committed go by until you have frankly confessed it and asked for forgiveness.

WHO MAY PASS THE EMBLEMS.

At the late session of conference a resolution was passed declaring it to be the opinion of the assembly that neither teachers, deacons, nor the laity may pass the bread and wine to those partaking of them after the same have been blessed and consecrated by the elder or the priest.

The Saints in the various branches will take notice of this action, and in administering the sacrament employ neither teacher, deacon, nor any of the laity; and this rule must continue until there is other action, either by the conference, or by a General Assembly, the church being under obligation to respect the action of conference.

Whatever feeling may have been engendered by any discussion on this question it will be well to let pass, as no good can come to the Saints as individuals or the church as a body by any further agitation of it; the church has spoken and let that suffice for all.

JOURNALISTIC MISREPRESENTATION.

NO SESSION of conference held by the Reorganized Church was ever so marked by a succession of mistakes, misconceptions, and misrepresentations by the current newspaper reports, as was the one lately held at Independence. From the beginning to the end of the sessions, some of the reporters from the daily press, either possessed of the evil magic of the spirit of mischief, or through sheer perversity, persistently and recklessly misconceived, misreported, and misrepresented the people of the conference and their business.

Dates, names, words, and parts of affairs pending were twisted and turned and shaped into possible harmful things against the church, until to the mass of the eldership present the newspaper reporting was a broad farce, with the grin of disgruntled journalism, and disappointed sensationalism grimly seen through the thin mask of press courtesy.

No better opportunity for fair treatment by press reporters was ever given the news-gatherers. They were furnished seats in good places, and well-informed brethren were appointed to assist them by answering inquiries in regard to what might not be understood in passing; all to no avail, with the exception of one, or two of the Kansas City papers, the reporters of which tried, as we think, to deal fairly; more especially toward the close of the session.

As for the rest, the fad for the sensational guided the pencils of the youths sent to "write up" the conference; and where there was nothing of the sensational, the imagination of the reporter supplied it.

For the sake of the prestige of the true spirit of upright and honest journalism, we hope that when the press again chooses to send representatives to attend and report the Saints' conference, men will be sent who will fairly represent what they both see and hear.

A SPECIMEN RESULT OF SENSATIONAL REPORTING.

THE following from the pen of a man who read the daily press reports of the late conference proceedings, will serve to show how wide of the truth concerning the actual conditions attending the work of the conference and what was done; those same press reports carried impressions of to the interested readers both in and out of the church abroad.

This man is evidently pained by the threatening appearance for dissolution of the church, arising from the reported fatal dissensions in the quorum family seen in the coloring of sensationalism the uncomprehending and reckless reporters threw over them.

It is a pity there was possible ground for any such coloring, but a greater pity that the press had not sent men of better discrimination to make the daily report of the "peculiar people":—

"What shall we do in the end thereof?" Either Joseph Smith is what he professes to be or he is not. If he is, then, when speaking or acting as the prophet and seer of the church, the man called and ordained by Deity to guide his church, who can contravene him and be speaking by the Spirit of God? Manifestly none.

When Moses spoke as the leader of God's people those who manifested opposition were very soon brought low; and when he spoke inadvisedly with his lips the Lord punished him by not permitting him to enter the promised land.

But it is claimed that the "one-man power" brought the Church of Latter Days to grief. Granted, but was that one-man power exercised in the cause of righteousness, or for selfish purposes? One-man power, in other words, despotism, is when a man in supreme authority exercises his power for his own ends.

But there is no such thing as a one-man power in the kingdom of God. True, there is a power—a superior power—vested in the man called of God to lead his church; but when that man speaks or acts in his official capacity is it the utterances, or acts of the man, or is he but the mouthpiece of God? If he is, then what will become of the church if it opposes him? On the other hand, if it is not believed that he is speaking by the Spirit of God, "What shall ye do in the end thereof?"

It may be said that the utterances of the Seer are examined by the Twelve, and if they pass them they are to be received as bona fide; if not, they are to be rejected. But, apart from the strange ideas of an imperium in imperio in the kingdom of God; suppose that one, two, or three, or more of the Twelve say nay, and the rest indorse the revelation, who is to be the judge? who decides who is correct? It is not always the majority that is right, vox populi does not always represent the voice of God. It did not when it cried, "Crucify him;" neither did it when it rejected Noah's message. Who then is the one to decide when the Twelve disagree? The prophet being an interested party cannot, who then can? the church at large? Certainly not. The lesser cannot sit in judgment upon the greater. Either the word of the Seer must be accepted, or confusion worse confounded will be the result.

There is something very strange in the idea of sitting in judgment over the utterances of the Seer when acting in official capacity. When not in that capacity, then it is right and proper. When, for instance, as an editor he replies to questions, and expresses his ideas of things sacred or profane, it is the lawful right of the lowest to criticise; but only then—not hewn he speaks officially.

How very strange it must appear to those outside of the church, and to the thinkers inside of it also, when they see, or hear of men who come before them claiming to have been called of God to officiate in the higher offices of his church and kingdom rejecting the teachings of that very man through whom their call and ordination came! What a powerful lever for the opponents of the church!

May they, will they not, say, "You come before us claiming to be called of God to the apostleship of his church, yet you refuse to accept some of his teachings, as given through that very man whom you claim to be the prophet of God, unless they agree with your ideas, ideas which maybe, and undoubtedly are, altogether wrong, when opposing the prophet in his official capacity. If what they should be, how then can you expect us to accept any of his teachings, or believe that you are the apostles of the Lamb? And not only do you reject those teachings, but you actually denounce them as being of the Devil; and you have not even the grace to speak to him kindly and apart, but must needs do it in a blustering way before the whole audience composed of friends and foes. Again, my friend, you seem to be rather ashamed of the utterances of your brethren and sisters as manifested in the gifts, speaking in tongues and prophesying and would have them bring their visions, dreams, and prophecies before you Twelve to be decided upon in direct contradiction to the ancient apostle's teachings. And one of you elders in a very Christian spirit (?) stood up and exclaimed that it was not right to cast 'pearls before swine;' and, of course, we Gentiles are the swine. My friend, these things tell, and you must not be surprised if you meet with scorn and contumely from us whom you politely call 'the swine.'"

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

QUES.—In blessing children, does it constitute them members of the church? And is it proper to say in blessing them, We receive you into the church?

Ans.—The blessing of children as a church rite, when performed, does not constitute the children so blessed members of the church, blessing not being the rite of initiation. So far as the language used in the act of blessing is concerned there is no formula given, nor is there a necessity that there should be; hence, even though the words "we receive you into the church," should be used it would neither vitiate the blessing, nor make the child so blessed a member of the church. The words "we receive you," are quite frequently used without the addition of the words "into the church," by some of the ablest and best ministers in the church, followed by such other expressions as the Spirit may give, or the officer acting be led to use.

The blessing of children is evidently intended to bring the children of believing parents into a relationship with the Spirit of the Master, in the way adopted by the Master himself, and to secure for them so far as can be done for them by the spirit of sacrifice and devotion, the care, nurture, protection, and guidance of the spirit of the family of God on the earth, and so far as the Saints are concerned it is commanded in the law and should be observed, without duety and without controversy.

A GOOD ARTICLE.

"AS A man thinketh, so is he," has become a trite saying. "As a man eateth, so is he" may as appropriately be listed with the proverbs that pass current as coin in the realm of preserved phrases; for what a man eats as food enters into his physical constitution, and also, in a measure at least, affects his mental and moral nature.

This preface is intended to call attention to a pure article of food, or one much used in modern life in the preparation of foods, and manufactured by two of the brethren. We refer to the "Queen Baking Powder," made by Brn. Newton and Williamson, of Independence, Missouri. It is an article guaranteed to contain nothing but pure cream of tartar and bicarbonate of soda, both harmless ingredients. It has been used by some of our best housekeepers, who pronounce it a first-class article, and satisfactory in every respect.

It is well known that many baking powders on the market contain alum and other injurious substances that vitiate the digestive apparatus and impair the general health. It is important to all homekeepers to secure a reliable article for baking purposes, as indeed it is necessary to the welfare of every family to obtain pure food supplies. In consequence of the evils that do and will continue to exist in the hearts of conspiring or unprincipled men humanity is made to suffer, because money is the object sought without reference to the methods by which it is obtained, by many.

An enterprise like the one put in operation by the brethren referred to deserves encouragement, as, indeed, do all movements designed to meet the legitimate wants of the people and correct injurious practices and methods. It is but natural that our own people should move in many if not in all directions by which abuses shall be corrected, and thus provide for themselves and for others legitimate supplies of various demands. By this means they can contribute to their own and the general welfare, in harmony with a principle, essential to the permanent establishment of society; for that which is destructive in its tendencies undermines and destroys; hence those who "make merchandise" of any community or portions of it by placing deleterious articles of food upon the market are destroyers of the public good, while those who do the opposite are benefactors.

Give the brethren a trial on the merits of their manufacture. Address, The Queen Baking Powder Co., Independence, Missouri. Samples and prices on application.

THE Herald Office receives contributions of literature in the form of books, pamphlets, etc., representing almost every conceivable shade of religious opinion and belief including various phases of spiritism and other isms and vagaries. We note another in the list, sent us by a brother. We have not kept track of all because of their rapidly increasing number.

SYRACUSE, Neb., March 4.

Editors Herald:—As you once said you wished to take notice of such things, I copy the following from the National Tribune of February 28, concerning the contents of a book published at No. 77 Bible House, New York, entitled "The Judgment and the Old Liberty Bell," by Author S. Hendrickson.

Your brother in Christ,

CHARLIE F. WOODS.

"This book contains some singular declarations which the author evidently believes, and seeks to prove by the Bible. He makes the announcement that the end of this age expires in April, 1896; that the first resurrection day is July 4, 1896; that Christ will appear on the earth on July 4, 1899, to reign with his saints at Jerusalem. He also claims that the birthday of Jesus Christ was July 4 instead of December 25, and that the Great Pyramid is none other than the Tower of Babel. The most singular chapter, perhaps, in the book is the one on the coming Napoleon as the false Messiah or anti-Christ, in which he claims that the Prince Imperial who was supposed to have been murdered in Zululand, in 1879, is still alive, and will be brought forward during the present year by the Roman power."

"JEWISH COLONIZATION IN PALESTINE."

THE article that follows, under the title given above, shows what is being done in some of the remoter districts of Palestine—away from the city of Jerusalem—for the colonization of the country:—

The attempts to restore the glory of Palestine and to rebuild within its limits a Jewish nation are not making as much noise in the world as formerly, but they are steadily proceeding none the less. A number of colonies have been planted there, and they even have an organ published in Jerusalem. This organ, Mich Foh Merez Israel, publishes accounts of the progress of colonists, and in a recent number gives details which are of considerable interest. We translate as follows:—

"The number of Jewish laborers in the colony of Sichron Jacob, ten miles from Haifa, is seventy-one. Of these fifty-one are German-speaking Jews and the remainder Spanish Jews and Jews from Gemen. As to their nationalities fifteen are natives, twelve are from Roumania, and the rest come from Russia. Twenty of the total number have families, the others are unmarried. Most of these laborers migrated to Palestine eight years ago, and at that time their yearly income was derived as follows:—

2 received 300 francs.	1 received 630 francs.
1 " 350 "	1 " 659 "
1 " 400 "	2 " 700 "
15 " 450 "	7 " 720 "
27 " 500 "	2 " 900 "
21 " 600 "

Ten, also, had from three hundred to one thousand francs in cash. Five were owners of real estate. The number of the colonists [other than laborers] in this settlement is sixty-two, and all of these have families. The monthly aid received by each person from the administration of Baron Edmund de Rothschild is twelve francs per head; those who bring their grapes to the wine distillery receive fourteen francs per person. The vintage of Sichron Jacob for 1894 yielded Indian grapes.....10,797 kilograms. Arabian " white.....169,278 " " " black.....23,948 " Various.....40,540 " 234,558 "

These grapes yielded 138,000 liters of wine. The average harvest of each colonist was 8,000 kilograms of grapes, and there were some who brought 20,000 kilograms to the distillery. The wine is sold at three francs per ten liters.

"The school of one hundred pupils has five classes.

"There are nineteen persons in the colony of Em al Gamel, and in Shavj eighteen are to be found. The aid they receive under the Baron's administration amounts to thirty-six francs per family.

"Good news comes from Upper Galilee, where the silk industry is progressing and affords steady work to fifty people, besides giving work to many families in Zefath, for learning how to weave is acquired in a short time. In order to get water power to the manufacturers, two brooks are going to be connected.

"The condition of the colonists in Meshmor Hajarden [the Watch on the Jordan] is very bad, and as they are unable to pay the Arabs for watching, the stealing [by the Arabs] goes on as before. In the Gedera [Fence] colony, between Ramla and Jerusalem, the settlers have begun to produce cognac from the grapes and the prospect is good.

"The Government has allowed the American Shovj Zion [Returners to Zion] Society to colonize its members in the Holy Land."—Translated for the Literary Digest.

OLIVE OIL.

THE following comes to our table in a late issue of the Homœopathic Envoy, sent us by some one:—

Pure olive oil is useful in infancy, adult age, and old age, in health and in sickness; its increasing demand would very decidedly indicate an increasing knowledge of the laws of health.

Much is sold as olive oil which has nothing of the olive oil about it save the name. Much genuine olive oil is of an inferior grade.

A good, pure oil is valuable, all others are worthless.

Pure olive oil has been well known and freely used by the members of the Continental medical profession in all forms of chest trouble, but in this country apparently it does not receive as much attention as its valuable properties and its successful use would seem to merit.

From the earliest moments of infantile life—and we might add as early as its first bath—olive oil will be found a valuable application for the newborn infant, soothing and nourishing the delicate skin.

One of the most important things to have always on hand in the nursery, therefore, is a bottle of the best olive oil.

In a large proportion of the diseases of infancy and childhood it will be found of the greatest value. It is especially useful in all forms of bronchial disease, whether acute or chronic. It relieves the congestion of the mucous lining of the air passages, maintains an equable temperature, affords a soothing warmth, and is, without doubt, highly nutritious.

It is safer and better than jackets of Indian meal or any of the common applications found in the nursery.

The oil should be slightly warmed, then the patient's chest should be bathed profusely with it. Afterward a strip of clean, old and soft shirting, large enough to completely envelop the whole chest, and thoroughly saturated with the oil, should be carefully applied. Over this a larger piece of dry cotton cloth must be firmly, but not too tightly, adjusted.

Inunctions will be found excellent in all cases where artificial nutrition is sought for.

In all eruptive diseases like measles, and especially in scarlet fever, chicken-pox, and so on, nothing is better for an external application.—Remondino.

ABOUT MARRIAGE.

OUR people in some localities may need a little light on the following phase of the marriage question, which we clip from an exchange. It is good common sense, and that in most cases is good law:—

A Springfield telegram says that an interesting query was propounded to the Attorney General by a citizen yesterday, who inquired whether a man twenty-two years of age and a girl of fifteen may lawfully marry and live together, or whether the girl could be compelled to remain at the home of her parents until of legal age.

In reply Assistant Attorney General Newell expressed the opinion that males over seventeen and females over fourteen may legally marry, but that the consent of their parents, if under legal age, is necessary in securing the marriage license. His opinion was that if marriage without the consent and without a license, the ceremony would be legal and binding, and that the couple could lawfully maintain the marriage relation, but that the law could punish the minister, judge, or justice who performed the ceremony in violation of the statutory restrictions.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

SR. ANN WEBSTER, New Castle, New South Wales, February 17:—

I remit for the Herald which I receive with thanks. The depression still continues. The work goes slowly here, but we expect Bro. Kaler by the end of the month. We are always glad to see an elder. The Saints seem happier and we have good meetings.

Bro. G. S. Niles, Gainesville, Texas, April 19:—

Bro. A. C. Hart will find a welcome at the home of Mr. Si Smith in Purcell, Indian Territory, and any others of the elders too for that matter.

Bro. John Davis, reports from Fairhaven, Washington, March 28:—

Have baptized three since my report to the conference. The mission is not one to be desired above many others; but the warning voice must be to all people; so I will try to do my part wherever my lot may be cast. The field is widening on all hands.

Bro. J. J. Cornish, April 22, in letter from Reed City, Michigan, states:—

Since my report to conference I have baptized eleven more; I feel well in body and spirit.

Sr. E. A. Gill, St. Edward, Nebraska:—

I am all alone out here in the faith in this drouth-stricken country, and sick, and have been sick for over two months. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints for myself and family. I don't know what I would do without the Herald, Autumn Leaves, Hope, and Ensign. I have taken them a long time and would feel very bad if I could not have them.

Bro. A. C. Hart wishes brethren to note that his address for the next few months will be Vinita, Indian Territory. Of his labors he says:—

A challenge to meet a Mr. Jones, of the Campbellites, was given me last night, second-handed; debate to be the affirming of each church as apostolic in all features, etc.; time, place, etc., to be arranged hereafter. It will probably be held in or six miles west of Vinita. Last week, by special invitation of Ervin Jones and congregation, colored, I filled his appointment in a Baptist African church six miles northeast of Chelsea.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PRESIDENTS of branches and ministers in the field will oblige us by sending addresses of Saints who do not take the HERALD that we may send sample copies. We want to place the church paper in the home of every Saint. Please aid us in the effort. Bishop's agents, presidents of branches or districts, and the traveling ministry are requested to solicit subscriptions.

Bro. Thompson Cochran, at Dyke, Oklahoma, writes of his efforts to get the truth before the people in that new country. There are few school-houses erected in which to hold preaching services, but the printed word is kept in circulation as a missionary force.

Bro. T. J. Sheppard writes that he is now located at Maysville, Arkansas. He would be pleased to hear from and visit Saints in that region.

Bro. Isaac Vernon commends the labors of Brn. H. R. Harder and H. E. Moler, in the Ohio district. The late conference at Sand Run was a good one, he states.

Bro. P. L. Claxton presents Carbon-dale, Illinois, for consideration of the ministry laboring in that part of the State, and asks a visit from some of them.

Bro. J. H. Tate, Jr., writes that an elder would do good by preaching at Viroqua, Wisconsin, where some would hear the word.

Bro. A. W. Jackson, Floresville, Texas, sends us a clipping from the Houston Post of February 14, which gives particulars of the finding of extensive earthworks and other evidences of the high civilization to which the prehistoric races formerly inhabiting that portion of America attained. The discoveries were made near Tunis, Burleson county.

CORRECTION.—In the list of missionary appointments please read: H. L. Holt, California, not "Southern California" as erroneously published. We make correction by request of the secretary of the Quorum of Twelve.

That portion of our General Conference report which referred to the High Priests' Quorum should read thus: "Number in quorum 52; number reported 46; number present 22."

Letters are received from L. L. Booth, Vernon, Idaho; D. W. Shirk, Belmont, Nebraska; E. N. Beach, Flora Vista, New Mexico; J. W. Harding, Independence, Missouri; J. L. S., Buel Center, Michigan; V. F. Rogers, Clay Center, Kansas; Jessie Richards, North Platte, Nebraska.

A London press dispatch says that the Times in an editorial on the Pope's encyclical letter to the English people and the Roman Catholic churches says the document was doubtless intended to convey the impression that on doctrinal points no compromise could be thought of. Lord Halifax and his friends, the paper adds, would do well to take this salutary lesson to heart. "The reunion of the churches is a mere dream, and the Pope has done his best to make this perfectly plain."

The Saints of Denver have removed their place of meeting from Twenty-sixth and Lawrence to Twenty-sixth avenue and Ogden street. They request that notice be taken of the change.

Sr. E. A. Lester, Hillman, Michigan, Montmorency county, asks prayer in behalf of her family that they may learn and be obedient to the faith.

Bro. W. S. Montgomery, writing from Parker, Colorado, sends a list of names of Saints in Wisconsin with their addresses, for the information of elders in that State. They are, Bro. D. B. Rasey, Oshkosh; Mrs. Thomas Putnam, Winneconne; Sr. Prestilin, Appleton; Bro. P. O. Cornell, Royalton (take train at Appleton to New London Junction, thence west on the Green Bay railroad to Royalton); Sr. Talmage, Manawa, four miles west on the same road; Bro. H. C. Rue, Birmanwood, same road; Bro. Henry Delany, Antigo. Bro. Montgomery visited that section of the State last winter and found those named and others alive in love for the work. Bro. Rasey, though over eighty years of age, still maintains his interest in the work and offers a word in its behalf as opportunity offers.

Bro. L. C. Donaldson writes that the Saints in Riverton, Iowa, continue to hold regular meetings, though the membership is scattered. They hope by continuing efforts to build up the work locally.

Bro. W. W. Blair held two services at Lucas, Iowa, April 21, and had three more in prospect; attendance good.

It is expected that Bro. C. Scott will meet Elder W. P. Gray, of the Disciples, in discussion, at Tama City, in Tama county, Iowa, beginning May 6. The debate will take place in a neighborhood thickly settled by members of Elder Gray's church. The questions include the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the two churches.

The sisters of both branches of the Daughters of Zion will find the program for the month of May in this HERALD; received too late for insertion in the Home Column.

A card from Bro. J. C. Epperly dated Millersburg, Illinois, April 20, states that Bro. E. E. Wheeler, of the Seventy, died at noon on that day. Bro. Wheeler was a faithful man and an earnest minister of the church. We regret to learn of his death. We await further particulars.

For latest news from the Society Islands, see letters from Brn. Devore and Gilbert in this issue.

THE GOSPEL QUARTERLIES.

BEGINNING with the next quarter (July, August, and September) prices on the Gospel Quarterlies will be reduced. They will be as follows: Senior Grade eight cents per copy, twenty-five cents per year; Intermediate Grade five cents per copy, fifteen cents per year. Prices on the Primary Grade will be given later.

The Herald Office has run short of Senior Grades for April, May, and June. Any who can spare copies will be credited the price if they will forward them. A number are needed to fill late orders. Hereafter the supply will be increased and be ample.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"God placed a duty in my hand,
Before mine eyes could see
Its rightful form, that duty seemed
A bitter thing to me.
The Sun of Glory rose and shone;
Then duty I forgot,
And thought with what a privilege
The Lord had blessed my lot."

CONTRARY to our usual custom we admit to our limited space this week a communication from a brother. Heretofore we have thought that the department, as it was intended exclusively for the benefit of the sisters, should be open only to them. One thing, however, strikes us very forcibly (we admit at a late date) that either its name should be changed or the brethren who are sufficiently interested to write upon subjects pertaining to the home, should find their productions welcome; for the home will never be what God intended it should be, until "They twain are one flesh." To this end man and woman must labor together. There is no sense in which the two can be divided. Hence the departure, and while we still think that in the main it should be sustained by the sisters, we shall at the same time be glad to hear from those of our brethren who are alive to the needs of the hour and recognize the fact that as the home is the fountain from which flows all social, all national life, that the man or woman who desires to see the world better—to see men and women converted to God—needs to begin that labor first of all in his or her own heart, and when their own life is set in order before God and man, then home is a broad field of labor through which their influence can be made to tell upon generations yet unborn.

OWING to circumstances we are compelled to omit for another week some gleanings from the recent meeting of the Daughters of Zion at Independence, Missouri. We hope to have them appear in our next issue.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, April 16.

Dear Sister Walker:—In glancing over the Herald for April 10 my eyes fell upon the headlines to the communication signed "Aunt Fannie;" viz., "Duties of fathers." After a careful perusal I can heartily say "amen." No greater truth was ever uttered than the following: "Without the united help of both the fathers and mothers of Zion our work will be greatly hampered in its onward march."

Until recently, I have failed to realize the grave responsibility attaching to fatherhood. Having full confidence in the motherly influence of my "life's companion" I have left to her the charge and care of our house plants thinking there was nothing special for me to do save to provide for them. I am gradually awakening to the selfishness of men in general and fathers in particular. Frequently have I discovered of late that the corrective influence exercised in our home by the mother has been largely lessened by the careless indifference and thoughtlessness of your correspondent. That the work of the Daughters of Zion is a laudable one none will question, but they will never reach the goal so patiently labored for until they can elicit that interest on the part of husbands and fathers that it becomes a mutual rather than a one-sided work. Please record me as one who is interested in the moral renovation of the race, and, while my ideal is far above me, yet my inefficiency and seeming inability to now attain thereunto does in nowise lessen my appreciation of that which I conceive to be the end and aim of God in his creation, man.

That we are moral pygmies passes without question. May God move on many fearless souls who will be true to convictions and breast the tide of popular indignation and general disapproval which will undoubtedly follow such a course, and planting the moral standard of a Virgin Christ have the hardihood to decry the sham and imperfections in the marital conditions of modern times, and help men and women attain that condition which the Creator designed for them. Inasmuch as "Aunt Fannie" has invited the "sisters" to write I will not trespass farther at this time, on the valuable space allotted to the Column. May God bless your work.

Your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

TWO PICTURES.

(THIS.)

Through frost-bound streets millions of lamps burn bright,

And myriad mansions blaze in splendid hue,
No crowds now choke the ways. A scattered few

Returning from some banquet of delight
Hasten to homes ensconced in some soft site,
Where great fires burn and love is burning too,
To greet the careless comer and renew
The gracious ties that bind the day and night:

Home, fireside, peace, goodwill, and gentle words—These grow here like the flowers that deck the lane

In springtime with the coming of the birds,
And sorrow, care, and want, and bitter pain,
Crouch out of sight nor darken happy doors,
Nor thrust their shadows on these palace floors.

(THAT.)

But look again! The lights are out, the fires
Burn low and penury walks in the gloom
Of darksome lanes where flowers never bloom,
And where uplifted eyes see no church spires,
Where Sin and Shame and all debased desires
Grove in the noon-day as if in a tomb,
And hear about the curses and the doom
Of souls whose joy of life with life expires,
Who know not hope nor catch one gleam of light
To make the earth less dark, less dim the way,
Who have no morning, but a songless night
As in a world where shines no sun's clear ray.
O God! 'tis all thy world! Thy children all!
And some must bear the purple—some the pall.

PERFECT TRUST.

WE in our blindness and thinking only of present enjoyment would often choose for ourselves very different paths in life than the one God sends us. Our will reaches out for life's sunniest days. God's often leads through ways that are dim and shadowy; ours is set to gather flowers. God's sometimes blights them in our hands. The way in which he bids us walk sometimes seems uninviting, dreary, lonely, and so dark and strange, we cannot understand, and our hearts are filled with a rebellious why? Why must I bear more than others? Why has this cross been laid upon me? Why cannot my life be all sunshine?

Thus we question the divine will when we ought rather to meekly wonder at the boundless love which deigns to surround our puny lives, to care for us and lead our wandering feet from world-worn ways into calmness and peace. The sea bird sings when the storm rages no less assured than when all is calm; but we, when storm clouds lower over our lives, even if we refrain from murmuring, our hearts, alas, are dumb, and our lips are mute. It is so hard to say, Thy will, not mine, be done. We have allowed pride and self-confidence to creep in, where only meekness and humble dependence should have been cherished, so our weak, human natures shrink from the needed chastisement, from the pain and darkness.

An aged, pious man, when severely afflicted, prayed earnestly that the cross laid upon him might not be removed until it had wrought in him that for which it was sent. His was sublime faith, worthy of a true servant of God. We need to pray for increase of faith, strong, abiding faith, whose eye, keener far than that of reason, sees beyond the fleeting, trying hour, penetrates the deepest gloom, enables us to rejoice in the sovereign power of the divine decrees, and even in times of trial to repeat from our hearts a psalm of trust. We must trust fully even though every plan we make is set aside, and though the years pass and the longings of our hearts, longings which in our weak judgment could bring to ourselves and others naught but good, are denied us.

If we seek it God will give us grace to see in such denials, in all our blighted hopes and disappointments, not denials, not disappointments, but the guiding hand of God, the fulfilling of his allwise will and the workings of his gracious providence. Then take comfort, all who are weary, struggling, burdened, or bereaved, for there is peace and strength in teaching the heart to meekly say, Thy will be done, and our Father doeth all things well, and e'en his darkest ways are leading on to light and everlasting life.

When the road seems long and dreary
And the trees seem parched and brown,
And your feet are worn and weary,
And the sun beats fiercely down,
And a little rest and surrender
So sweet would be—
Ay, the way is hard, yet remember,
It leads to Me.

AGNES MOORE.

JERSEY CITY HEIGHTS.

WOOD RIVER, Nebraska,

Dear Home Column:—I feel to enter for a few moments, this pleasant Sabbath morning, as we have no church or Sabbath school today. I was thinking perhaps I might drop a kind word or cheer the drooping spirit of some one who has started on the Christian journey.

Since my late visit to Lamoni I have found a few scattered Saints; and although a long way apart, still we hold meeting and Sabbath school every two weeks ten miles from here. If all is well I shall meet with them next Sabbath. I have had the pleasure of meeting some of the Plano Saints (who live out here now). It is quite encouraging to meet, if with only a few, after one has been, you might say, standing almost alone in this part of the world. I shall never forget my last visit to Lamoni, and ever thank my heavenly Father for the addition of one of our family to the gospel of Christ. My prayer to God is that he will guide, shield, and protect the young, who have just begun the cross to bear, and ever be a lamp to their feet and a guide to their path, that they may run the Christian race with patience.

Bro. Peak has been trying to unfurl the gospel banner. I believe he will be an instrument in the hands of God of doing much good. May God ever guide and direct him in every hour and time of need. We are anxiously looking for his return after conference. I shall never forget the comforting words he gave to the scattered Saints, for it seemed a God sent message to us. I long to be with the Saints at conference to-day. This has been a very trying year to all, but considering the hard times and clothing scarce, provisions scant and fuel scarce, still we can lift our voice to our heavenly Parent and thank him for the past and trust him for the future. I hope under all troubles and trials we will hold out faithful to the end.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

MARY A. LIGHT.

MEMORY TEXTS FOR MAY.

"O how foolish, and how vain, and how evil, . . . and how quick to do iniquity, and how slow to do good, are the children of men; yea, how quick to hearken unto the words of the evil one, and to set their hearts upon the vain things of the world; yea, how quick to be lifted up in pride; yea, how quick to boast, and do all manner of that which is iniquity; and how slow are they to remember the Lord their God, and to give ear unto his counsels; yea, how slow to walk in wisdom's paths."—Helaman 4: 8.

Letter Department.

RAIROA, March 8.

Dear Herald:—

How precious are the words you bring
To us here on these distant isles!
Which, when we read, our thoughts take wing
To Zion's land beyond the wilds.

And there we see the brethren dear
Along our flight from place to place,
And, in our fancy, though we're here,
We seem to meet them face to face.

Your letters tell of progress fair,
Of baptisms oft, quite an account;
Of brilliant victories here and there
Of God's own sons of Zion's mount.

Apostles of the church of God
Relate therein their strivings brave,
To plant the work and hold the rod
Of iron ordained of God to save.

The minute men and elders sent
To clear the fields and plant the truth,
Inform us how the twigs are bent
Heavenward, and of luxuriant growth.

Then on your title page we read
The counsels wise, and true, and good,
To come up high in word and deed,
And stand on planes where prophets stood.

The column where the sisters write
Is fraught with gems and ethics true,
That children may, like stars, be bright
And pure as heaven's azure blue.

Your pages give us strength anew
To bear our arms and march along
The rugged steeps, our work pursue,
To win the victory over wrong.

May God inspire his servants true,
To think, to speak, to write, to pray,
And also his handmaidens, too,
For Israel's weal and Zion's day.

Since last writing to your columns I have ridden over many an ocean wave, and, notwithstanding the Psalmist's injunction, "Fret not thyself because of evildoers," have been more or less troubled and concerned in regard to the work here, because of the doings of men that will finally, if they do not repent, bring down upon their own heads the fulfilling of another of the Psalmist's sayings, "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: thou shalt diligently consider his place and it shall not be." While I desire to see all saved in the kingdom of God who will do right, I also rejoice in the provision that God has made that, if they will not repent and cease to be a menace to the peace of others, infringing upon their rights and causing distress in the land, they shall be removed out of the way, as noxious weeds from a beautiful garden.

The winds show that we have enemies here also, and that of a kind that would gladly behold our utter destruction and banishment from these islands. But we know the Lord's work is true, and must spread, and those who fight against it shall not prosper. And when we see men brought to naught and to shame and disgrace in their opposition to this work, we are confirmed in the belief that God's hand is directing in such a manner as not to be baffled by the weak efforts of man.

I came to this island (Rairoa) yesterday. This is where our April conference is to be held. I left Bro. Devore in Kaukura. He is to come on here shortly. The Saints from the various islands will be coming in soon. They expect to have a big feast here just before the sitting of conference, and are now making great preparations. I do not know where the Evanelia is now, but expect her here before long with a load of Saints for conference; that is, if she does not get tied up before leaving Papeete by some opposing scheme. We hope for a profitable conference here, and also in America. May the Lord bless us all to that end, is my desire.

In bonds,

J. W. GILBERT.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., April 13.

Editors Herald:—Since coming into Southern California I have visited and preached in Los Angeles, Garden Grove, El Toro, Beaumont, and San Jacinto. From the latter place I have just returned. I held seven meetings there which were quite well attended. I would have continued, but an unfortunate shooting occurred; two men were killed, and a circus coming and a dance knocked us out, so we concluded to wait for a more convenient season, if it ever comes, and if not, try it in the spirit world, where they may be more willing to hear, and not so fond of worldly amusements. Bro. Schade had rented a nice hall, and in his usual vigorous manner advertised the meetings. What an amount of good the laity can do when they try!

The work in California is steadily onward; there does not seem to be as much interest in California or on the Pacific Slope as there is in the "regions round about." Those "revolving lights" that burst on us from the East once in awhile, cannot judge of the interest here, for they do not see matters as they really are, nor do our own native lights in their yearly circles, see matters as do the every-day workers; but we will work, wait, and pray that a day may come more favorable to the real missionary.

It will not be long now until we will all know our fate for the coming year; another year's toil, anxiety, disappointment, and triumph. And, will the coming year's record be a better than the one just past? It ought to be, with the past behind us. If it is not, we are not "coming up higher." At times I think I am, at other times I have my doubts. One thing I do know, it is a warfare. Trusting we may all fight it out unto the end, I remain,

As ever,
HIRAM L. HOLT.

BLANDFORD STATION, Ont., April 19.

Editors Herald:—In looking over the ministry reports I find Bro. R. C. Evans reports: "During the summer I have opened the work in Quebec, baptizing the first two ever baptized into the Reorganized Church in that Province." Please permit me to correct this statement. The first elder of the Reorganized Church that preached in the Province of Quebec was James W. Mather, who was born at Beech Ridge, Province of Quebec, and had gone west to Illinois, and heard the gospel, and was baptized in the fall of 1871. He went home on a visit and while there preached, and baptized Ellen Nolan and Jane Gault, two sisters (now of California). In June, 1872, Brn. Joseph S. Snively and Duncan Campbell (both now of Iowa) went down there and preached, and baptized fifteen, and organized a branch, ordained one priest, one teacher. Bro. James W. Mather and myself were sent from the Kent and Elgin district conference in October, 1872, when Bro. Mather baptized three more.

I visited there in 1873 and 1874, and I baptized three. This branch was reported to the Kent and Elgin conference several times. My wife is one of those baptized by Bro. J. S. Snively. While traveling through that Province I met several that had heard our elders in the days of the Prophet Joseph. I men one man in Montreal who heard them preach there from a vessel.

Yours in gospel bonds,
JOHN MCKENZIE.

POWERSVILLE, Iowa, April 17.

Editors Herald:—My wife and I came here a week ago to-day, and the next day I put out appointments and have been preaching every night since, in Powersville hall to quite fair audiences with splendid liberty. I find this country a great field for missionary work; so many new openings and places that may be opened with but very little outlay. I have procured the use of the Grand Army hall in the town of Greene, Butler county, and hope to continue meetings in that place so long as interest demands.

I am fully persuaded that when the elders effect an opening in any place and the interest demands continued effort they should not relinquish their hold for the sake of other opportunities, but should continue their immediate work until they have declared unto the people the whole gospel; for this seemed to be a consoling thought to Paul before leaving the Ephesians, that he had not shunned to declare unto them "the whole counsel of God."

Since coming here I am the more convinced that ceasing to labor with interest at hand is doing violence to the work of God. There was at one time a splendid interest in Powersville, but owing to the fact that the elders' time was considered very precious then, they pulled up stakes and left. And, what is the consequence? Why, no sooner had the elders disappeared than the Devil appeared, in a long broadcloth coat, and told the people that those elders were real Mormons and a thousand other lies; and, of course, no one was present to represent the work. The hearts of the people were prejudiced, and to-day we cannot get them out to hear in Powersville, unless a new preacher comes along. I am feeling well, and here to effect many new openings in and around this place.

Yours,
J. R. SUTTON.

BROOKFIELD, Mo., April 17.

Editors Herald:—Having heard considerable said about a prophecy, (so-called by many,) but which was really an interpretation of the gift of tongues, (I was told of a Sr. Roberts,) I herewith inclose the same with the request that you publish it, so that all may have a correct understanding.

Your sister in the faith,
HATTIE R. GRIFFITHS.

Interpretation of a tongue given at Independence, Missouri, April 14, 1895; interpretation by Sr. Hattie R. Griffiths.

"Thus saith the Lord unto you, O my people: If you will come before me in humility and faith, verily I say unto you that those things which are at this time misunderstood by you shall be made plain; I will reveal myself unto you through the man I have chosen. From time to time I will speak unto you, and you shall rejoice in the Lord. Verily, I say unto you, I have appointed a leader to go before you and lead you to Zion, and inasmuch as you will heed his voice, you shall be abundantly blessed."

NEW CASTLE, N. S. W., March 12.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from Sydney, where I went to witness the baptism of my son Ernest, who was baptized with two others on the 10th of March, making seventeen baptized in Balmain by Elder Kaler since the conference of December 29 and 30. Last Sunday at the evening service there were about fifty present, when Bro. Kaler showed that the laying on of hands was a principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ and essential to salvation. There was no excitement, but a calm seemed to rest upon the congregation during the whole of the service, both at the public baths where they were baptized, and at the Masonic Hall, Balmain, where the confirmation was administered. There are three of the members lately added who will be of great help to the church. Bro. Smith has been a leading man in one of the churches in Balmain, and Bro. Holden and family will also be of great help to spread the work, for they are all earnest workers. Bro. Hendrick and family will also be of great help. May they all prove faithful that the work now begun may never cease till all around Sydney the honest in heart shall be gathered into the fold of our blessed Lord.

In looking back to the year 1874, when I first heard the gospel from the pioneers under God of this great work—Brn. Rodger and C. W. Wandell and Bro. and Sr. Ellis, and comparing the results we see to-day, I think, Where is there room to doubt the hand that is guiding the work after the counsel of his own will? While remembering what Bro. and Sr. Ellis did in the infancy of the church in Australia and are now doing in sustaining the work, I am led to think how great will be their reward. These coworkers have entered into their rest; who shall say that ministering angels have not conveyed to them the news that the work they were sent to commence in weakness is now gaining strength? May we so live that we may all be worthy to assist in this great work.

Your brother,
C. A. DAVIS.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., April 22.

Editors Herald:—I arrived safely home from conference and found all well, with report of excellent meetings during my absence. Bro. Robert Garlich arrived home but to find his darling four year old girl very sick, which sickness continued until the morning of the 16th, when the precocious and angelic spirit took its flight to that realm for which it was better suited than to remain on this sin-polluted earth. She was buried at the Pleasant Grove cemetery. A short service was held at the house in the early morning before taking train, conducted by Bro. R. A. Marchant and the writer, Bro. T. T. Hinderks preaching the sermon at the place of burial.

Our city papers copied largely from reports of conference as given by the Kansas City Star, which, as is known, were very erroneous; but the St. Joseph Herald was kind enough to publish a correcting article, which may do more good than the other did harm. Our wide-awake Bro. Dobson succeeded in getting an article in the Chicago daily Inter-Ocean, correcting errors no doubt growing out of reports of General Conference; so while a vast amount of prejudice remains with the world, yet we are gaining favor with the people, and are granted the use of the press, which a few years since we were denied.

As I enter upon the experiences of a new conference year it is with a set purpose to do more for the Master than in the past. As my field of labor is extended to the district, I desire to labor where the most good may be accomplished, and in this I desire the cooperation of local brethren who may know of good openings, or where new openings could be effected. We hope to see a spiritual boom in old Far West the coming year, and with the hustle of Bro. Chatburn, the wise organizing counsel of Bro. Turpen, the love of truth and gospel logic of Bro. Ware, the strong Ephraimic faith and aggressiveness of Bro. Summerfield, the extended influence and argumentative force of Braden's "Stalwart," Bro. J. T. Kinnaman, with the help of local brethren, which is just as necessary, there is no good reason why the work should not move. My district labors will of necessity be limited, as St. Joseph is the objective point. The proportion of the time will be governed by our best wisdom, or as superiors may arrange.

We have commenced to talk "reunion."

The committee will soon meet to locate the place of holding. It shall be the aim of the committee to make the third annual reunion of this district a great success. Let the eyes of all in Northern Missouri keep a sharp lookout for announcement of place and time.

Your colaborer,
J. M. TERRY.

KAUKURA ISLAND,
Society Islands, Feb. 5.

Editors Herald:—From time to time the Herald will be the messenger to carry to the interested ones the news from this mission as well as others; and though others have and will doubtless continue to keep you informed of things past and present among us here, I feel it a duty and a pleasure to send you a few lines at this time.

On the afternoon of January 28, Sr. Devore and I were told that a small ship with two flags was in sight. It was the opinion of most that saw it that it was the Evanelia. We went out where we could get a view, and looked through the glass to catch some additional evidence more than the two flags that it was she, but I would not allow myself to give expression that it was the mission vessel. After beating back and forth for quite awhile she came so near that the yawl boat was lowered and started for the shore. We went to the house and donned ourselves in a better garb, and a number of us went down to the landing to find out what it might turn out to be, but on our way we met Bro. J. W. Gilbert, making tracks for our house in no loitering manner. Then I was willing to believe it was the Evanelia. Come at last!

We all went with him to the landing, and the yawl brought Bro. and Sr. Case and Bro. McGrath. Though they were all strangers to us yet we felt a freedom with them at once, which evidenced that there was no barrier between us. The next boat brought Bro. and Sr. Burton. I suppose they will very likely tell how they got ashore from the yawl. I cannot tell you here just how I felt when I took Bro. Burton by the hand, it being the first time we had ever met. Suffice it to say, I felt that he was a brother indeed, a man of God. Sr. Burton and Sr. Devore were locked in each other's arms before many if any words were uttered by either.

After the crowd of natives who had convened had shaken the hand of each arrival, we went up to the house where the missionaries always put up at in this city. They slaked their thirst by the pure water of the coconuts and seemed glad they were on land once more. Sr. Devore and I were not long kept in ignorance concerning various gifts sent by kind and loving friends in America; and here we ask you, kind Herald, to carry to each one of those who sent tokens of love and regards, our grateful thanks. We cannot repay them. The good Father will; but while we live, their blessings to us will be remembered by us and appreciated.

It was January 30, 1891, that Sr. Devore and I first stepped on the shores of Tahiti, and on January 30, 1895, I first stepped on board the Evanelia—four years to a day. She is certainly all we could ask in a vessel of her size. Truly our worthy Bishop has spared no pains to have as comfortable a boat as it was possible to have of her size. "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" Let our minds go back to Bro. Caffall's letter in Herald and the fifty cents he forwarded to the Bishop, the first contribution made, and then to see the vessel completed and here in the mission, evidences to us the interest the church at home and abroad has in her ambassadors among the isles of the sea. May we continue, one and all of us, to be worthy of your confidence and the vessel-gift you have sent us. I trust that not one who has aided will ever have occasion to regret it, though we do not know but that we as a church may be prohibited by the French Government here from continuing missionary labor, as it is yet an undecided question. Of this trouble Bro. and Sr. Burton will fully detail to the Bishop at least, if not to the Herald. They carry back to California a variety of tokens of the esteem in which they are held by their dark-skinned brethren and sisters here, and we have various reasons to believe that they can make a truthful report, and a favorable one. The natives, as well as Sr. Devore and I, would love to have them return to this field. And we (two) believe that he should be returned, and have charge of the mission, as his experience as a mariner and as a missionary well qualifies him for this field. I was so impressed some two years ago when on the isle of Tuboi, and so wrote the Bishop; and we still feel confident that he should be sent to this field, and that soon. I will say here that he would soon have the tongue as well as I have it to-day; no fears on that subject.

Words of comfort, and precious promises were spoken through them in tongues, interpretation, and manifestations by the Spirit and visions to the missionaries already here, including Bro. and Sr. Case. We needed all these words of cheer; thanks to our Father above. Bro. Burton sees this mission as I have for some two or three years past. If the proper men and women are sent from time to time it will prove a success. What we want as a rule is young married people, clear headed, full of missionary zeal, yet humble, patient, and kind. If the church wants those of us who have been here quite awhile to breathe easy, let them send man and wife when they appoint for this field henceforth. We could give various reasons for this, and we hope Bro. Burton will tell some of them, if he is fortunate enough to be at the April Conference. Let the ability of the wife be scrutinized as well as the husband, for we want missionary women in fact and not in name only. I believe in being as economical as it is possible to be, and yet liberal enough to alleviate every reasonable demand. I will say that to send single men out here is a waste of time and money. This is not written to cast any reflections on those hitherto sent who came single, but in a spirit of sympathy for them and others who might possibly come.

The Evanelia left here on the evening of February 1 for Niau isle, where they were to stop a few days and leave Bro. and Sr. Case. Sr. Devore went along, and would accompany Bro. and Sr. Burton back to Papeete, but she will soon return to some of the isles she desired to visit ere April Conference, if all goes well and the boat is permitted to run. I do not expect to meet her again until General Conference. Bro. and Sr. Burton encouraged her very much in her Sunday school work, and when Sr. Alice Case is familiar enough with the tongue to go ahead, it will be a great incentive to the work here. I think she will learn the language in less time than any of the rest of us. Bro. Gilbert is waiting here for a chance to go to other isles. I expect to remain here till I start to April Conference. My health is still improving and Sr. Devore has become quite stout. We believe Bro. and Sr. Case have so far found the mission in advance of what they thought before they arrived. However, they will doubtless speak for themselves. We are pleased with dedicatory hymn of the Evanelia composed by Uncle Mark, also the composition by Sr. Vida. We still ask the prayers of the Saints for the successful accomplishment of the work in this mission. The Lord bless you all in all your labors of love.

Yours in bonds,
L. R. DEVORE.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 15.

Editors Herald:—As the good work moves along in this part we note the baptism of Sr. Dellis A. Perry, of Michigan, who has been attending our meetings for some time; also Sr. Carr and the two sisters Mann. It was a beautiful Easter day; everything seemed favorable for the occasion, their baptism. Bro. John Stone has been sorely afflicted for some time with rheumatic trouble. He is a little better now. I wend my way to Broad River, Connecticut, calling at Brooklyn to do gospel work. In bonds, LOW MOOR, Iowa, April 7.

Editors Herald:—The battle is fought and victory won. Some very interesting sermons have been delivered by Bro. Warren Turner not long since, and much interest has been taken in them. There are only two families of Saints in the immediate neighborhood, but they have labored hard to get the work before the people. We asked first for the church in this place but were refused, although it was a union church. Then we asked for the schoolhouse, and our request was granted, but the Epworth League met in special session and found it would never do, so took advantage of an ordinance passed by the board at some prior meeting, which prohibited any meetings being held there; accordingly notice was served on us to the effect that they could not grant the request.

By this time those outside of any church began to look into the matter and they determined that Bro. Turner should preach at all hazards. Subscriptions were raised among the worldly people, and a hall was hired. We had six meetings with large attendance and much good interest. At the close of the meetings another purse was raised and given to Bro. Turner—six dollars and ten cents, the paper being signed by twenty-one of our citizens. The following is a copy of the heading: "We, the undersigned citizens of Low Moor, Iowa, and vicinity, after hearing the religious belief of Rev. Mr. Turner, feel satisfied that it has benefited our community. We hereby tender this small donation for the good he has done in our midst."

Such are the feelings here since he left us. Many have expressed a desire for his return, and in a short time will have another series of meetings, which we hope will forward the cause of Christ. This is the first time the latter-day gospel has been preached in this place, but the way is opened now. We feel to thank those who have aided us in paying the rent for our hall. May they be numbered among the followers of Christ, is our prayer.

JUNIATA, Mich., April 15.

Editors Herald.—I just closed a three weeks' effort in Akron last Friday night. It is a village of four hundred inhabitants. I held twenty-four meetings in all; was assisted by Brn. A. E. McKenzie and William Dowker. We held forth in Bro. Flynn's new blacksmith shop the first two weeks, the last week in G. A. R. Hall at the rate of one dollar and a half per night. I feel that much prejudice was removed. We tried as best we could by the assistance of the Spirit to sow the good seed, and hope we may reap the harvest by and by.

I came here Saturday. Will remain for a few days, as there are some to be baptized. May the good work move on is my prayer.

A DREAM.

DOW CITY, Iowa, April 15.

Editors Herald.—While at the home of Bro. Nathan Hayes, in Cherokee county, Iowa, in the month of February, 1895, I saw a night vision in which everything seemed so vivid and lifelike that I am unable to say whether I was awake or asleep. I seemed to be standing in a grove of heavy natural timber which had not been culled, with my face toward the west, when I saw a small package floating in the air, about three feet from the ground, coming from the south towards me. As it approached nearer and nearer the grove became very light, even above that of a clear day at noon. It seemed to be in the fall of the year, as the ground was covered with leaves. A little to my left and about five steps behind me sat my sister, Mrs. C. M. Wilder, on a fallen and decaying log with her face toward the south, while five paces farther east and eight or ten to the right, stood her husband, Bro. C. M. Wilder, with a spade in position for digging, having turned over about six or eight spadefuls of soil, which looked very black and rich. He was facing the north.

The package came gradually toward me, until it was in about the position which one would hold a book while reading, when I took it in my hands and discovered that it was the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. It seemed to be about six by eight inches in size, and about two inches thick. The first one and a half inches in thickness was sealed; not with seals, but looked like a gilt-edged book that had never been opened, the gilt holding the leaves together. The remainder, or latter part of these plates were loose, and I run them from under my thumb as I would the leaves of a book. The leaves or sheets were very bright, having the appearance of gold. I closed the leaves and commenced to examine the first page of the unsealed part, and could distinctly see the characters, though I thought they did not look just as I had thought they should. The characters were arranged in columns, from top to bottom, like columns of words for spelling.

The plates moved off as though they had been alive, going north. When they were about three feet from me it occurred to me that I had not seen or examined the characters on the unsealed leaves, and I reached out my hand to make a closer examination; but they moved off too fast for me, and I could not secure them again. With the plates vanished the light, and I found myself awake and in my bed. I might add that the sheets seemed to be very thin, but little thicker than heavy writing paper, and as I bent them back as I would the leaves of a book and let them slip from under my thumb, I could hear a metallic rustle that rings in my ears to this day.

What seems strange to me I had not been thinking about the Book of Mormon, much less preaching on that subject for some days at least.

PROGRAM.

Program for Daughters of Zion meeting for May:—

Opening hymn, No. 19 Saints' Harp. Scripture reading Psalm 37: 1-6. Prayer. Reading of chapter 26, "Hints on Child-training." Discussion of chapter. Reading of "Retrospective" from Herald, April 24. Question box. Closing hymn, No. 31 Saints' Harp.

YOUNG DAUGHTERS OF ZION.—Monthly programs for the young Daughters of Zion are also contemplated. A weak lye is a useful and perfectly safe tree wash. Also old soap suds that stand a few days after clothes are washed, will keep the bark smooth and the borers off, if trees are washed two or three times in summer. If one pint of crude carbolic acid is added to fifteen gallons of old soap suds or lye, it will keep insects off for months.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

At Independence, Missouri, April 7, 1895.

THAT portion of the lesson to which I desire to call the attention of the people this morning, as read by the brother, was one of the characteristic sermons delivered by the Savior, who in few words expressed a great deal:—

Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

I desire to make this appeal to those of like faith with myself; to those who flatter themselves that they are within the kingdom; that they have not only its interests at heart, but that they have done that which is required of them by which their names are properly written in the records, which are supposed to contain the names of those who constitute the family of God on earth, to be recognized as the family of God in heaven. And, while it would be presumption to say that we have the right solely and exclusively to judge our fellows, it is not presumption to urge upon the attention of the people the fact that as ambassadors for Christ we beseech you to be reconciled to God, which in this sense means to be reconciled to his law, to his commandments, that you may find yourselves within the province of his promises and enjoying the chief one of all—that of eternal life.

One of our members on yesterday morning in the short sermon which he delivered to us touched upon the theme that should be at least in the hearts of all that constitute the kingdom; and that is, that the great necessity which now rests upon us is to accomplish within and for ourselves, individual personal righteousness. And we who have been at the front,—so to speak, for these many years,—those of us who do in a sense feel the impulses of all that is going on around us in the church,—are made to painfully realize that here and there are things at work which while under the surface may not create any disturbance, sooner or later must come to the light; and that when they do come, individuals as well as the collective body will be hurt.

Pretension is one thing. We see a vast deal of it in the world. A proper claim is another thing, and it remains to be tested, and the day surely comes that will bring everything to light; and though it may have been proclaimed in secret or done in secret, it will be proclaimed from the housetop. It will be spread abroad upon the streets and in the social gatherings; it will become known, and the sooner that as individuals we rid ourselves of the complications that might attach to us and see to it that our good names are not thus compromised, the nearer we shall approach unto the great standard by which we shall be tried, whether we shall be worthy to enter into the kingdom or not.

I am not here this morning to flatter you as a people or as individuals; I am not here to claim exclusive righteousness for myself, and that I have the right to lecture others and arraign them for the condemnation of their evils; but I am here to lift the warning voice unto them that are within the fold, while our brethren from the ministry abroad are here, having been warning the people who are without. I am here as an integral portion of the great work to insist upon the fulfillment of the declaration, "Be ye clean who bear the vessels of the Lord." The righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees was of a peculiar character. We see much of it in the world at this time, and if our brother's warning voice was not in vain, he sees some of it elsewhere than within the world; and pride, the rust of the soul that eats out the good intentions that man may form, that always stands by the individual to suggest the importance of self, the smallness of everything else, is said to exist in the human heart everywhere; but is one of the things that should be overcome, at least in times of extremity by them who are aspiring to reach up higher; and while a certain degree of pride is commendable so far even as the outward appearances to the world are concerned, there is a pride that is justifiable to both men and angels, and that is the pride to appear blameless before God and before men under divine law. And it can only be approached unto by them who shall have found the inspiring influence of the Spirit; it can only be reached by a constant supervision over one's thoughts, one's speech, one's conduct; and he that shall so possess his soul in patience that his lips utter no hasty utterance by which himself is compromised and his fellows brought into disrepute may aspire unto it, when that individual by whose close surveillance over every thought manifests that it is bringing his thought into subjection to Christ; when he that is moved upon by that blessed Spirit that bringeth comfort and joy shall find himself finally congratulating himself that he is worthy to enter into the kingdom, to whom the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees is but as an idle tale; his name is written in the hand of the Savior.

I may make inquiry this morning, How many of us feel safe to pass judgment upon our own thoughts and acts? And while doctrinally we may be able to sustain ourselves against the attacks of every comer; while from the ritual of the Lord himself we can stand behind the ramparts and defy criticism; while in the aggressiveness of the thought that we are in the possession of truth we may not fear attack from without; that subtle adversary of human souls that is well acquainted with the weak side of human nature is preparing to take advantage, not of the body politic, but of the individual by which evil is wrought; by which others, being compromised by it in its slow processes shall finally work into circles that shall strive to keep the evil from coming to light, until finally it becomes a great distress to burden the church and to burden them that are innocent.

Now I tell you plainly that we cannot afford, none of us can afford, to so compromise ourselves with these evil things that we see that we shall finally come to the conclusion that so long as we are not discovered we are not in wrongdoing. None of us can so afford to compromise ourselves either in thought or in act as to bring the entire body into disrepute, and cast a burden upon them that are endeavoring to carry abroad the great cause of Christ and the message that he has brought for the deliverance of man.

If there were one lesson that I would desire this morning to impress upon this visiting multitude more than any other it would be this: That while the messenger that goes out to bear abroad his Master's mission, to make it successful among them where his labors lie, if he return bearing but one sheaf, and shall have joy here and joy hereafter, pray tell me how much greater joy shall be with him that walks so confidently in the calling whereunto he is called that he can look back along the history of his life and candidly say, both within himself and when challenged, "I have left no footsteps by which I may be traced as an evildoer among my fellow men; I have taught no principle of unrighteousness either secretly or in public by which my calling has been brought into jeopardy, by which those who have come after me have been caused to blush for shame that a representative of this kind has been permitted to personify what he called truth held by the body"?

We point with pride to the record of these men, a justifiable pride, and it is a glad thing for a minister to come home after he has traversed over the field pursued by another and when he speaks of his predecessor to say, "He is an honorable man; I have followed in the places where he has taught and I have found that in neither teaching nor in personal conduct has he done that that should justly bring a reproach upon the name he bears, or the cause that he represents." Pray tell me if he that returns with his one sheaf, if it be but wheat or other grain and subject to the approval of the Master to be put in the great garner, is entitled unto reward and his name to be emblazoned with the brightest stars, how much more shall it be with a man who under the careful administration of the Spirit for years bears abroad the banner of King Immanuel and does it without personal reproach to himself, without reproach to the cause which he represents?

I call your attention to this this morning because we see the fulfillment of the things which have been predicted in our own minds by the voice of the Spirit whispering through our own souls. We are standing face to face with circumstances and conditions that we have never faced before, and there is focusing upon us not only the sunlight of investigation from men who are without, but the hopes of hundreds of individuals are following our ministerial career and our existence as a church with the hope latent in their hearts that it shall be found not wanting, but able to endure investigation, and the lapse of time, and the corrosion of that which is within: as it is stated, as a maxim, that every body carries within itself the seeds of its own dissolution.

While I may congratulate the ministry (I do from my heart, some of them, and as a mass), I feel the necessity for inviting their intelligence and the attention of the people to the consideration of the fact that he labors best and most securely who is conscious not only that he represents the truth, but that those by whom he is surrounded everywhere are not only conscious of that which he reveals as being the truth, but are so living that they are manifesting the principles which his teachings have been erecting in their hearts, and have eradicated from their nature that which should be overcome, and are standing as living epistles known and read of all men.

The prophetic statement made by the angel to Joseph Smith has been fulfilled; that his name should be had for good and evil among all men wherever it should be uttered; that it should carry with it upon the one hand a conviction of evil and of wrong, and upon the other hand a conviction of that that was good and right. Among his friends he should be known as a man of God; among his enemies he should be known as an evil-minded man. And, we face it everywhere, and in its fulfillment we must see to it that his friends properly represent him; that from their action no man shall say that he was an evil man; that from their teachings no man shall say that his teaching was evil. I have said years and years ago, that my first resolve so far as my life in public should be was to live among my fellow men so that if there was any truth in the statement, "like parent, like child," no man, speaking from my conduct, should say that my father was a bad man. How much more must I have become involved in this great responsibility after I assumed to preach as a teacher of that principle of religion which he projected upon the world, that no man, speaking of my conduct as a minister, should bring reproach upon his memory.

I have lived until I have found his name to be revered among men. I have lived until there has been lifted from his memory many a dark cloud in places where prejudice was strong, where superstition had fastened its hold, and where naught but evil ever accompanied the name of either Mormon or Joseph Smith. Now having done that and seeing the grasp that the truth is having upon the world, and seeing what is written in the public press, I come to you with this direct appeal that you shall make your personal characters of such a nature that the angel's message shall have full force in you and that you shall exceed in your righteousness the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees; that in the little coteries that you shall form in the branches of the church, whether they be large or small, you shall not congratulate yourselves that you shall do only good to them that do good to you, that you shall be prepared to lay hold with all the power that you have upon them who have need of your helping grace in Christ and lift them above the powers of the temptations which surround them; and if you can, help them to stand upon secure ground, yourselves uncontaminated with evil, your characters themselves freed, yourselves having the courage of your convictions, you are ready and able to help them who are not within themselves strong, but who desire to mount the steeps and overcome until they see the glad light of God's sun shining over them as accepted of him. We beseech you in Christ's stead, "Be ye reconciled to God." Do not try and think that you can so transform yourself before your fellows and they seeing only what may appear outside, that you shall by any possible means so blind the eyes of him that sitteth on high that he cannot tell the characters that you are forming, that you have, so that when you shall undertake to enter into his kingdom he shall meet you with the knowledge and you be conscious that his knowledge is of such a character that you are, before presenting yourself for acceptance, unworthy of his approval.

Now you may say to me, How can I so sit in judgment upon myself that I may approve myself as worthy? That Spirit that gives to man a consciousness that Jesus is the Christ has a self-contained power of convincing every man that that which he thinks and that which he does is either good or bad, and it leads him to occupy higher planes of thought and nobler grounds of justice towards his fellows, or to see that he is losing in his spiritual strength and power, and that if he continues in his downward course he shall behold the condemnation of himself and be subject to the contempt of his fellows. There is no disguising the matter at all of any revelation to us that he that doeth certain things shall lose the Spirit and shall deny the faith; and we can easily trace the footsteps of such men as these wherever they may be found, and sooner or later like the sin that followed one of those men of old, it shall find him out and shall point him to the scorn of his fellows.

I plead, then, in the interest of the law. I do not mean the hard, impervious character of the law that killeth; but I plead in behalf of that essential characteristic of the law—the spirit of it that giveth life. Eternal life is that which we are reaching out for; that prize that is set before us; and it is for every one. Not one shall be excluded from the great marriage supper unto which we aspire who shall be found worthy; however humble the sphere occupied here, or however exalted it may be. Now, if you salute them that salute you, what thank have ye? The publicans do that. Let me reiterate the language of the Savior if it be possible to do it with the strength of conviction that may reach every heart:—

Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

It was not said to them that were wicked without; it was not said to those who were acknowledged as sinners; but it was said to them that were striving, and was said and reiterated to his disciples elsewhere; and while it occurs in this sermon on the mount where the beatitudes are expressed, we can easily trace here and there, all through the subsequent life of the Savior and all through the teaching of the apostles, that this was the burden of their effort, to make men worthy in the circles where they dwelt and moved, of being understood as characters that were above the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees.

Just now there is a wave of inquiry going over the world. We must meet it at its crest. We must be either sufficiently strong to arise and ride securely on its forward sweep or we shall be overwhelmed with it; and just as certain as truth is the underlying force of the success of the old philosophers who taught this gospel, so shall truth now be the underlying force that shall bear us up and on, on the top of this great crest of inquiry that is in the world; and if it shall be so that we shall be fortified by the indwelling and enduring principle of this never-dying Spirit that giveth life, we shall live in the conflict; but if not, we shall be overcome, be submerged, and die. Now which can you afford, my brethren and my sisters? Which of these is desirable? "Ah," says one, "Only the one; the other is to be feared!" It lies, then, within the province of your individual effort, within the province of the effort to be made in the branches small or large; and as we have heard that there has been in the past year something like thirty added branches united to the great body; and something over or nearly four thousand additions to the church, leaving a net gain of over twenty-four hundred in this year by baptism, and are rejoiced to know how the work has spread, remember it is not the number but the righteousness that characterizes the individuals, that makes up the swelling multitude of the righteousness of the whole.

I am not among them that delight to prophesy evil. I believe that God's wondrous power is at work with us and that all those who shall serve him in rejoicing and in truth shall preserve the great body against encroachment of every power that seeks its destruction; but I am within the province of them that have the right to call the attention of that which threatens, and I have repeatedly told you, as I do this morning, that it is not by any great and open approach that Satan will seek to destroy the church, but that that insidious enemy purposes if he can to destroy by fomenting differences between the disciples of Christ to excite and keep at work the evils of corrosion by which in small circles he shall be able to destroy the foundations of them that stand in high places, and finally, if he can, bring down to ruin those who of themselves have done no wrong. It is time, then, that we opened our eyes to the existence of these things. It is time that we arose against them and stood steadfastly against them; and that we come nearer to the spirit and to the keeping of the law; not having a desire to punish individuals who may have done wrong to us as individuals, but when we find it is necessary to rise up against that which is evil, to do it, no matter who may stand, or who may be found deserving punishment through the interference of the strong arm of the law. The apostle, I believe, has written that he that beareth the rod is not a terror to those who are not evil doers; but the evil doer himself is the one who is afraid of the law and the rod, and he beareth it not in vain to them that err, not knowing Christ. You can easily understand what I mean; that the innocent man fears not the law but he that is guilty does.

In this great conflict that we see before us it is an easy matter for us to see whom we will make an effort to strive to serve, the Master of life unto life, or permit ourselves to become servants unto him that is the master of death. We know full well what are the wages that are offered unto sin, and just as surely as God manifests his promise and presence to them that do right, so will he permit the adversary to keep his promise to them that serve him. He is your master to whom you give yourselves to obey; his servants you become. "The wages of sin is death;" "the gift of God is eternal life." We are striving to serve unto that better gift. Let me exhort you, then, my brothers and my sisters, strive earnestly, not only for the faith in the Lord that has been delivered to the disciples in olden time, but strive to emulate and pattern after that shining example of the grace made up in Jesus Christ that will enable you to so live that your lives will bear the light of both private and public investigation if it be needed to turn in the search light upon you.

May God help us that we shall so cherish that Spirit that we shall live, not as the scribes and Pharisees, but as those whose righteousness exceeds that.

HEED THE WORD.

WHILE reading Bro. Blair's article entitled Missionary work, I felt impressed to write and say, that if the ministry would heed such instruction, together with the word of the Lord, which we receive from time to time through the prophet, it would not be long until Zion would be redeemed.

In my judgment this is the most important time in the history of the church; a time propitious to us, if we heed the word of God; but perilous, if we put our trust in the arm of flesh.

It is inconsistent for us as a people to assemble annually in a body, at a great expense, spend our time in praying and fasting, importuning the Lord for recognition, asking the Lord for more material with which to build, and for further instruction as to how to build, and then not use the material given us; or if we do, to not build according to the divine pattern.

And moreover it is expedient in me that my elders in going to declare my gospel to the nations, shall observe the pattern which I have given. Two by two let them be sent, that they may be a help and a support to each other in the ministry.—D. C. 115.

The Lord says by his Spirit that it is expedient, that it is proper, that it is a means he has chosen to an end to be accomplished; while the church says by her quorums, and last of all by a popular vote," our wisdom is sufficient;" and then we lean on the Lord and say, in effect, "Surely the Lord is with us, no harm can befall us."

Again we were told at the last General Conference of the church that the Seventy and traveling ministry should keep away from the branches, and push their work into new fields. Notwithstanding this counsel, or the positive command of the Lord, I know of elders who spend most all their time around branches, that would have been better off if they had never come into them at all, while a few miles away were schoolhouses and churches that could have been had for the asking where the people have never had the pure word of God preached to them. Let us not be deceived; "God is not mocked." He has commanded us to live by every word that proceedeth out of his mouth.

I fear that we as a people do not fully understand our responsibilities. I wish I could say all is well in Zion; but I do not believe it; and at the risk of being considered a grumbler, or one that is on the way to apostasy, I make those statements, aware that my influence is not great, but determined while I live to point out the dangers which my brethren do not see because they are in darkness. I know some will think this is egotism in me, but who is in darkness but they who do not obey the truth?

If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John 1: 7.

The word is to judge us at the last day. I should rejoice to see the ministry sent out according to the pattern given of God; then they could receive encouragement one of another. As it is, when they go alone, pushing out into new fields, they spend many lonely hours. In their craving for fellowship with the Saints they are tempted to desert the post of duty, and when once with the Saints they find it hard to break off from such pleasant associations; and finally contract the habit of lying idly around the branches waiting for Sunday to come, that they may occupy the branch pulpit, thereby depriving the local officials from taking the exercise they so much need, and that is so necessary to spiritual growth and development. I always hail their advent among us with joy, and have always endeavored out of meager substance to anticipate their wants; for I consider it a great privilege to assist, or to entertain the servants of God; but it causes us to lose confidence in mankind when we find that our elders are slow to heed the instructions given to them.

C. E. GUINAND.

ATCHISON, Kansas, March 15, 1895.

Superiority is a relative term. All of us know that others are superior to ourselves, even while there are those who count us superior to themselves. A Tamil proverb says: "A child that can walk is a god to a child in the cradle." It behooves us to bear ourselves continually as those who are taken as a pattern by some, and who are striving to attain to a likeness of those whom we know to be better than ourselves.—Trumbull.

Be severe to yourself, indulgent to others; and thus avoid resentment.

Miscellaneous Department.

PASTORAL.

IOWA, (EXCLUSIVE OF DECATUR DISTRICT), EASTERN NEBRASKA, MINNESOTA, NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA,
NORTHERN ILLINOIS, AND WISCONSIN.

The minutes of the late General Conference show that we were placed in charge of the mission comprised in the above-named territory. We kindly request an intelligent and earnest coöperation upon the part of all the Saints and ministry, in order that the work we love may not be hindered but that it may be materially advanced.

By agreement between us we will hold the entire mission in conjoint charge, so that wherever either one or both of us may be found, we will be there for the purpose of fulfilling the duties belonging to our office and calling to the best of our ability; but for the sake of convenience and order in the division of our labors, the ministers who are herein appointed to take charge of "fields of labor" in Eastern Nebraska, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Wisconsin, will please report to Alexander Hale Smith, Lamoni, Iowa; while those appointed to similar charges in Iowa and Illinois will please report to J. R. Lambert, of Lamoni, Iowa. Those not in charge will, of course, report to those who are in charge of the "fields" where they are required to labor.

We have agreed upon the following named brethren for our assistants: Galland's Grove district, C. E. Butterworth; Little Sioux District, J. W. Wight; Pottawattamie district, H. N. Hansen; Fremont district, Iowa, and Nodaway, Missouri, Henry Kemp; Des Moines district, C. Scott; Eastern Iowa and Nauvoo districts, J. S. Roth; Eastern Nebraska, C. H. Porter; Minnesota, North and South Dakota, I. N. Roberts; Northern Illinois (that is, the northern half of the State), F. G. Pitt; Wisconsin, W. A. McDowell.

In these appointments we have done the best we could, all things considered; and while we have probably failed to please all, we request that these brethren be properly sustained in their appointments, and that by affording them every opportunity which belongs to their office and appointment, we may see what they will do for the work. Please remember that they are in missionary charge, and not as district presidents. Their supervision over branches and districts is general and indirect, while that exercised over the missionaries and their work is special and direct. Nevertheless, both should and may work harmoniously together. (See D. C. 120: 4-7; also the revelation of April, 1884, paragraphs 7, 8.)

We call special attention to the necessity of reporting in harmony with the rules which have been published and republished to the church. (See Conference Minutes of 1893, p. 68.) If you are not acquainted with the rules, procure them at once, instead of writing to us for information as to when, and in what manner you are required to report. Do not send us the original reports of those laboring under your direction, except for extraordinary reasons; but furnish us with summaries, together with such remarks or comments as you may wish to make. Occasionally a missionary reports to us without telling us what he has done. We need hardly say that such an omission should be avoided. Then, again, we are sometimes informed that such and such missionaries have failed to report, and "I do not know what he is doing." Well, it is your duty to find out, and to take measures to correct such bad, careless work.

Let us give evidence to God, and to all who are truly his people, that we appreciate the great gospel work in which we are engaged, and that we are indeed willing to do what we can for its advancement and more complete establishment among men.

Your brethren and coworkers in Christ,
ALEX. HALE SMITH.
J. R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 24, 1895.

Brethren and Collaborers of the Lake Mission.—The General Conference of the church has honored you another year to represent her interests in your several fields of labor. The blessed Master, who is the head of the church, has an intense interest in your welfare, has promised his Spirit to be with you, and his angels to camp about you, on condition that you work after the pattern and example he himself set among men.

Do you realize your sacred calling, to be ministers and helpers with God, in Christ's stead, to build up his church on earth? If so, you will have an eye single to the glory of God. O what a thought! how far reaching its meaning! Let us see if we understand the scope of the term. An eye single to the glory of God! Jesus said, "I do nothing of myself," he had no place in his heart to be lifted up in pride because of his own works, for he says, "As my Father hath taught me, I speak these things." Again, "The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." Now, associate the above scriptures with the following: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," and we have the idea.

We do not seek our own glory, but we are called to do the will of the Father and to set an example that will bless and benefit our fellows, just as we would love to have them help us. That we may possess our souls in patience and in love that works no ill to our brother, should indeed be the watchword all along the ministerial line, that the members seeing our example may be guarded against jealousy and every evil work. The least slighting word or innuendo expressed by an elder, which is the most cruel form of slander, is noticed by the Saints, quicker than a flash of lightning, to the discredit of any man who thus lowers his standard and drags the glorious gospel banner in the dust with the dishonesty of a hypocrite who would fain appear good at the expense of his fellow laborers.

I do not write the above because any of us are guilty of any such inglorious acts or words, but that we may all of us see eye to eye on all these matters and work together in love, giving such definition to those words as will build us up together, realizing that all glory is to God in this great latter-day work, so far as this life is concerned.

This world is large and there is room for us all to dwell and do the most possible good, and the books are kept in heaven that will give an accurate account of all our works in his kingdom, and none need fear that his reward is not sure for all he does. The only ones who have any reason to fear are those who do not work according to the pattern, or who, with folded hands, are living by faith alone, and forget to bear their proportion of the expense and burden of carrying the blessed message of salvation to the perishing souls who are famishing for the word of life.

Bro. F. M. Cooper will take charge of the Northern Michigan field, R. E. Grant the eastern field, S. W. L. Scott the field formerly occupied by our most excellent and worthy Bro. I. M. Smith, and I. P. Baggerly the Southern Indiana field as formerly. We trust all will work together in the closest harmony in the interest of the mission. All other laborers will report to their field officers once in three months or oftener as interest and occasion may require. In turn, I trust all the above brethren will report the condition of the work to me, so that if possible we may all know just how the mission is prospering; and that we may know of the demand for preaching, and of the supply in each of your fields, and whether there may be any necessity for strengthening our forces at any one place from time to time, by making changes to supply the most urgent demands where the greatest amount of good may be effected in saving souls.

The conference business all passed off in an excellent spirit. And we saw signs of real growth and union in the working of the various quorums of the church. The discussions had were all in the best of feeling by the live Saints and laborers, and the outlook for the Reorganization was never brighter than now. The greatest obstacle found in the way was means to supply the wants of the families of the traveling ministers.

Brethren, let us all cheerfully move to the front and see that our banner is unfurled in every place in our mission. Those not called on to leave home and its endearments, help hold up the hands of those who are, by your cheerful countenances and promptly providing for necessary expenses. Bishop's agents in all the districts are ready to serve you in behalf of the work. So you all can have the honor of bearing your proportion of the burden as helpers with God in saving the world from sin and impending woe. And as you value the life in Christ you have obtained without cost to you, be equally ready to send the gospel to those who are starving for what you are feasting on through the charity of others who first brought salvation to you. My mission address for the present will be 15 Amherst street, Detroit, Michigan; home address, Lock box 256, Lamoni, Iowa.

With much love, I am your fellow-laborer in the gospel of Christ,

E. C. BRIGGS.

*To the Saints Scattered in the Eastern and Western Districts, South Wales; Greeting:—*I respectfully adopt this method to stir your pure minds by way of remembrance, touching the contemplated reunion, at Whitsuntide, as per resolution of the conference held at Porth, February, 1895. The committee has informed or will inform you as to time and place.

The reason for such a gathering is patent, I think, to all who will duly consider the present status of affairs in South Wales, in a spiritual sense, and all who may desire Zion's welfare.

Much might be said of the past, which possibly might afford satisfaction to some; but how or who would it profit? If all are wounded, then a general concession would be in order. But if some only have been wounded in the house of their friends, then a legitimate procedure, to deal with those who have wounded, were proper, and would be more consistent with our profession than constant efforts to tell of wrongs perpetrated by some one or ones in the church, so making ill feeling (if it exists) more intensified, instead of adopting measures to still the troubled waters, so making peace. What is Christ's method of adjudication? Is it to be treated as a myth, or to be brought into requisition merely to please friends or vex foes? Which? Was Christ more intensely inspired—speaking more authoritatively—when saying, "Come unto me," etc., and "ye shall find rest to your souls," than when saying, "If thy brother trespass against thee, go" and "between thee and him alone" "tell him his fault," etc., and "if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican"? If so, what of the potency and imperativeness of given and accepted law?

It is very possible to be ignorant and thereby commit a wrong. Nor is it impossible for us to be Pharisaical—so blind to our own faults yet so ready to see faults in others—as to demand reparation from them; yet so blind to our own, and so fascinated with some pet theory, as to blunder along as a man in the dark, evincing a determination to rule or ruin. But surely such traits in the character of Latter Day Saints, especially in a representative, were condemnable. And yet, many by misplaced confidence may thereby be led to the brink of ruin. For is it not a fact that a lie under the garb of religion is more effective to decoy the unsuspecting and confiding than one told by a nonreligionist. Paul never showed himself more of a man (as I believe) than when saying, "Follow me as I follow Christ." It were better than a thousand hypocritical prayers to bolster up self.

John was a great witness for Christ, but the latter said he had a greater witness than John. (See John 5:36.) Let us read, study, and do or obey his word. If the stones would cry out through a failure to recognize God's goodness, how know we but they may utter against us, if becoming too boastful? Besides, boastfulness may lead to exaggeration, which may prove a stepping stone to "lying;" and doubtless lying, talebearing, backbiting, idle gossip, etc., are first cousins. Let us shun such demoralizing practices and come up higher and be consistent.

I would respectfully remind you that prejudice caused by our own members, is more formidable than that caused by polygamy, etc. And we certainly cannot claim the right to jeopardize the fair fame of the church. Moreover, building up the waste places, is a part of the mission of the Reorganized church, nor is a duty less imperative if waste or a spiritual drought exist by our own folly. Will not presiding officers interest themselves in informing, and legitimately strive to induce all members to make an effort to attend the reunion, even if a little sacrifice has to be made? And let isolated members who read the Herald, if knowing of other isolated members who don't read the Herald, see or inform them and invite them to come. Finally, let us resolve in God's strength that the past time spent in folly shall suffice, and at the Whitsuntide of 1895, give evidence of the dawn of a new era for spiritual activity by the members of the Reorganized Church in South Wales.

I submit for your serious consideration the seventh, eighth, and ninth verses of Genesis thirteenth chapter, hoping we may govern ourselves thereby, save the last twenty-nine words of the ninth verse. Abraham, under the circumstances, might have been justified in going to the right or left. But Latter Day Saints cannot afford to separate themselves from each other in a spiritual sense. It were far better, therefore, to come down into the valley of humiliation, and if offenses have come, to be honorable, if necessary, in making confession, forgive, and be forgiven, but I would not recommend a reconciliation under the impulse of the moment. I rather think it should be the result of a fair understanding, obtainable by a godly and sober confer-ment, evincing as great a desire to accept as to give a reproof in the interest of peace. So shall we live and prosper. It may be humiliating to say, "I am wrong," but it were better than being Pharisaical, far better.

I further recommend the study of the second paragraph from "My disciples" down, of the sixty-fourth section of Doctrine and Covenants, with the sermon on the mount, Matthew 5.

I wish to offer no threats, but respectfully say that the action of the conference of the Eastern district in reference to licenses, will be in force. Therefore no official will be recognized as a representative of the Reorganized Church who may repudiate the action. And if it be known that officials have failed to report and cooperate with the church for months or years, unless such report themselves, some action will be had in their case. This will not prevent complaints if there are any who wish to make them.

I have no friends to please or foes to vex by transcending bounds or law, but think it a duty to adopt a legitimate procedure to ascertain our numerical strength wherever the church may give me spiritual jurisdiction. Unless prevented by unforeseen developments, the writer expects to be present at the reunion, to, by God's grace, do good and receive good. In gospel bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL,
Missionary in charge.

To the Ministry and Membership in Missouri, Kansas, and Southern Illinois; Greeting:—Having been placed in charge of the work in this field, I have selected the following brethren to act as associates in charge of the places named, to wit.: I. N. White, over Independence, Clinton, Spring River, and Southern Missouri districts; John T. Davis, over Kansas, except that portion within Spring River district; M. H. Bond, over St. Louis district; T. W. Chatburn, over Far West and Northeastern Missouri districts; Henry Kemp, over Nodaway district (to report to missionary in charge of Iowa). Southern Illinois laborers, report to M. H. Bond for the present.

General Conference appointees to any of these subdivisions will please report to the one thus placed in charge, and the one in charge will report to me. Let the counsel of paragraph eight of the revelation of 1894 be observed carefully. Have nothing to do with managing local organizations after effected, except as your aid may be invited by those in local charge. Leave the burdens connected therewith to be borne by the local officers, under the direction of the Presidency of the church.

Let all engage in the work with a determination to make this year eclipse all previous ones in its record of good accomplished. Let the laity stay the hands of the ministry as they may be able, and thus by united effort and combined strength press the cause and its interests upon the attention of the people everywhere. Never was our opportunity better, and never did we need more of divine grace to achieve results. Let us be very humble and always prayerful, and God will make us courageous and give us blessed conquest.

Remember, it is a divine treasure we bear, and we should ever try to make the earthen vessel in which it is being borne a fitting receptacle.

Your coworker and companion in the blessed hope,
JOSEPH LUFF.

To the Saints of Oregon and Washington, Greeting:—Inasmuch as I have again been appointed to labor among you in the interest of the cause we all love so well, I therefore take this method of informing you that I cannot come to you for some weeks yet; and that I wish all Saints who can do so to please write to me and let me know of the work and its prospects in your respective vicinities, and then I will better know how to arrange for effective labor.

Dear brothers and sisters, I do not come to you with that bodily activity that I possessed when first I brought the message of salvation to you over a quarter of a century ago; but I can testify that my zeal and love for God's work have not diminished; and I trust that with the accumulating years my judgment has been made better; and, with my years of experience and your earnest cooperation we will be able to make good proof of our ministry. Then, brethren, let us cheerfully gird on the armor and fight the "good fight of faith," neither faltering nor yielding till Oregon and Washington respond to our call by giving many precious souls for the gospel kingdom. May the Good Shepherd guide us on to victory is my earnest prayer. I ask an interest in all your prayers that I may come to you strong, both in body and spirit. Address me at No. 511 W. Julian street, San Jose, California. J. C. CLAPP.

To the Saints in Alabama and Mississippi; Greeting:—As you see, I am appointed to labor in your locality this year, I aim to reach my field of labor by the 1st of July, and probably sooner. The Saints who want meetings held this summer and all Saints that desire my labor during the year please write to me as soon as you can. My aim is to push the work and get the gospel before the people of Alabama and Mississippi. Address me at Manchester, Texas, at present.

J. D. ERWIN.

REUNION, WESTERN ILLINOIS AND EASTERN IOWA.

The various districts who might be interested in holding a reunion somewhere along or near to the Mississippi River appointed delegates to meet and consider the subject during the General Conference recently held at Independence. Accordingly they held two meetings. Those present were James McKiernan and James L. Wright from the Nauvoo district, F. G. Pitt from the Northern Illinois district, C. Scott and F. A. Smith from the Des Moines district, and William Anderson, R. M. Elvin, and H. A. Stebbins from the Decatur district.

It was unanimously decided by the delegates named that they were in favor of holding a reunion as proposed. Also a locating and executive committee was chosen, consisting of James McKiernan, Daniel Tripp, D. D. Babcock, Geo. W. Johnson, and J. S.

Roth. The following was adopted as their authority and guide in the work to be done, of which they and others will please take notice. Resolved that this committee be and is hereby authorized to locate said reunion, to appoint sub-committees, and to do all things that are necessary in the successful carrying out of the wish of these districts in holding such reunion.

In behalf of the committee,

R. M. ELVIN, Chairman.

H. A. STEBBINS, Secretary.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints of the Florida district will please take notice that at the last conference of said district Bro. Stephen D. Allen was recommended for the appointment of Bishop's agent in place of Bro. B. West, resigned.

The appointment is therefore duly made and Bro. Allen is authorized to represent the Bishopric in its financial work in said district and receive tithes and offerings in behalf of the church under the instruction from time to time from this office.

We hope there will be no Latter Day Saint in the Florida district who will not honor this officer and his work as all others of the church in their work in said district.

Please remember to forward your name with such offering as is possible for the aid of the work to Bro. Stephen D. Allen, Milton, Florida.

Respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

HORN.—To Bro. Frank and Sr. Ida Horn, March 24, 1895, a daughter, and named Iva Tressa. Blessed April 14, 1895, by Elder J. R. Sutton.

DIED.

HANER.—Bro. James Haner was born in McLean county, Illinois; died April 3, 1895, at his home at Reeder's Mills, Iowa, aged 59 years, 2 months, and 15 days. His wife and several children mourn. He was a loving husband and father. He died happy and in the faith to the last. He was one of the first settlers of Harrison county, and had many friends to follow him to the grave. He was baptized July 1, 1878, by Charles Derry. Funeral sermon preached by Elder Wm. A. Smith, assisted by Elder Thomas Thomas.

RANDALL.—Bro. Jacob Randall was born in Somersetshire, England, June 19, 1811, and died at the home of his son-in-law, Bro. Benjamin Sumption, near Lamoni, Iowa, April 21, 1895. His daughter, Sister Sumption, is the only one of eight children who lived until he departed. His wife died in 1838. Bro. Randall accepted the latter-day work in England in 1852, and came to America in 1857, but did not go to Utah. Becoming satisfied that the Reorganized Church was carrying on the work planted in 1830 he united with it in 1875, and remained faithful until death. The funeral sermon was preached by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted at the house by Bro. E. J. Robinson and at the grave by Bro. Thomas France.

BROOKS.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, April 22, 1895, Mr. Henry Brooks, aged 61 years, 7 months, and 15 days. He was born in Canada, but since his boyhood had lived in Iowa. In 1863 he was married to Sister Phebe M. Corless, and eight children were born to them. Six of these are living, and with their mother mourn the loss of the stay and strength of the house. He did not obey the gospel, yet he respected the church and its members, and was an honorable man. By his request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached his funeral sermon, assisted by Bro. A. S. Cochran.

JOY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, March 21, 1895, Fanny, wife of Charles Joy, and daughter of Mrs. Lucinda Wimer, aged 19 years, 8 months, and 17 days. Although she was not a member of the church of Christ, yet she was known to all, within the church and without, as being from childhood a pure-minded girl, one whose conduct and associations were of the best. Her life was cut short by the same consuming disease that took her sisters in the past. The funeral discourse was preached by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

GRIFFITH.—At Vincennes, Iowa, April 8, 1895, Sr. Rachel Griffith, aged 84 years, 4 months, and 7 days. She was born in 1810, in Onondaga county, New York; in 1830 married Bro. Michael Griffith, at Amherst, Ohio; baptized in 1831, at the same place, by Samuel H. Smith. In all the duties and associations of life she was a very faithful woman, and one given to hospitality and kindness. She was the mother of ten children, two of whom still live. Elder Robert Warnock officiated in the funeral services held in the Union chapel at Vincennes.

SMITH.—At Escatawpa, Mississippi, April 15, 1895, Mary A. Williams Smith, wife of E. B. Smith. Sister Smith was born in Jackson county, Mississippi, December 9, 1860. She was baptized by Elder Heman C. Smith, March 16, 1879, being among the first ones to obey the gospel in this part of the State.

KNIPSCHILD.—Jacob Knipschild was born in Germany in 1823. He emigrated to America in 1843, and settled in Missouri. His death, on March 14, 1895, is mourned by a wife and five children. One recompense for their bitter loss is the knowledge that he was a member of the Reorganized Church. As such he died, firm in the faith, and a loyal citizen to the country. His funeral was preached by H. H. Robinson in the old M. E. church, near Norborn, March 16.

MANN.—Bro. Wm. R. Mann, of Sand Beach, Michigan, departed this life on April 5, aged 28 years, 7 months, and 28 days. He was baptized by Elder John J. Cornish on the 10th of August, 1885, since which time he has been a most faithful and consistent member of the church, always ready and willing to give an answer to everyone asking of him a reason for the hope which inspired his service for Christ. He had been an invalid for about a year and a half, but bore his sufferings with fortitude and patience. During all this time he was patiently and tenderly cared for by his loving wife, whose sorrow and grief can only be assuaged by the comforting influence of that divine power which hitherto had cheered her pathway and lighted her lamp of hope while struggling 'neath the cheerless void of gloom and burdens of care. The funeral sermon was preached in the Congregational church at Helena, Michigan, by Elder W. J. Smith, of Detroit, to a large and attentive congregation, to whom the hope of God's people was vividly portrayed. Bro. Mann's earthly remains were interred in the Rock Falls cemetery, to await the final roll call to summon him forth in the resurrection of the just. May kind Heaven grant to cheer the bereaved ones, giving grace to sustain them in their trials of life, that at last they may meet with loved ones on the shore of celestial glory.

LAZENBY.—At Rockport, Missouri, March 6, 1895, Sr. Emma Lazenby. Deceased was born June 5, 1824, at Kingston, Upper Canada. She was baptized February 6, 1871, at Hamburg, Iowa, by Thomas Nutt. She was a daughter of John Vanlabon, of the old organization, and a member of the union branch, Fremont district, Iowa.

MARTIN.—At Hamburg, Iowa, January 2, 1895, Sr. Mary E. Martin nee Gard. She was born July 25, 1869, at Hamburg, Iowa; baptized August 19, 1882, at Hamburg, Iowa, by James R. Badham. She was married to George H. Martin, July 4, 1892. She leaves two children to be cared for by their grandmother, Sr. Sarah Gard.

NELSON.—Near Guilford, Missouri, April 14, 1895, Elsie Maria, wife of Jacob Nelson. Deceased was born June 24, 1831, in Fylerod, Aalborg, Denmark. She was married January 24, 1853. Nine children were born to her, six of whom still live to mourn. She was a loving and kind mother, and kind to all who were in need. Herself and husband left their native land in the summer of 1863 and came to Utah, but did not find things there as they were promised, and in May, 1867, they left Utah and came to Andrew county, Missouri, and later came to Nodaway county, where she lived until the summons came. She united with the Reorganized Church November 2, 1869, and lived a true and faithful Christian until her death. Funeral services were held by Brn. Peter Anderson and John Evans; interment in the Guilford cemetery.

GOULD.—At Silver Lake, Minnesota, April 15, 1895, Elder George Gould. Bro. Gould was born January 18, 1819, in Herkimer county, New York. He came to Ottertail county, Minnesota, in 1867 or 1868, being one of the first settlers of the county, where he has resided to the present time. Soon after he became acquainted with the latter-day work as taught by the Cutlerite sect, and became connected with them; but becoming dissatisfied with some of their teachings, withdrew from them. In 1875 Apostle T. W. Smith came to this country and presented the claims of the Reorganization. Bro. Gould gladly accepted them, and was baptized July 21, 1875, at Clitherall, and was ordained an elder the same day under the hands of Bro. T. W. Smith. Father Gould, as he is called by all of his friends, has filled the offices of branch and district president to the satisfaction of the members of the church in this district. A wise counselor, a meek and faithful follower of our Lord and Savior. As one of the business men of Battle Lake so truly expressed it, he exemplified in his life the golden rule, to do unto others as he would like to be done by. His home was ever a home to the elders in this mission as well as to the Saints of this district. He was a Saint indeed. He leaves a widow and seven children, besides a large number of grandchildren and other relatives. His funeral was held at the Methodist church, Battle Lake, Elder T. J. Martin conducting the services, Elder Alonzo Whiting preaching the sermon. A large congregation gathered at the church and followed to the cemetery at Clitherall, where he was buried.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatharians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

GLADSTONES LATEST TRIBUTE TO THE BIBLE.

It is Mr. Gladstone's conviction, derived, he says, from long observation, that the influence of the negative or agnostic spirit of the day has affected statesmen, "the class engaged in political employment," to a comparatively small degree. Persons who are habitually conversant with human motive, conduct, and concerns," he says, "are very much less borne down by skepticism than specialists of various kinds and those whose pursuits have associated them with the literature of fancy, with abstract speculation, or with a study, history, and framework of inanimate nature."

However this may be, it is certain that Mr. Gladstone himself is a shining illustration of a statesman who has been ever ready to champion the claims of the Christian religion, whether in reviewing a book like "Robert Elsmere," entering the lists with Professor Huxley, or crossing lances with Robert G. Ingersoll. In making up a subscription book to be called "The People's Bible History," it was but natural, therefore, that the publishers (Henry O. Shepherd Co., Chicago) and the editor (Rev. George C. Lorimer, LL.D., of Boston) should have resort to Mr. Gladstone for an "Introduction." The book is not yet published, but the "Introduction" has been, and while this is for the most part a closely woven polemic that it would be an injustice to make broken extracts from, there are some passages that may stand alone without loss of strength.

Mr. Gladstone does not find that there is any disposition on the part of the world to abate allegiance to the Bible. "Indeed," he exultantly exclaims, "it has been simultaneously with the undermining and disintegrating movement that the religion of Christ has assumed more visibly than ever a commanding position in the world." Dwelling upon this idea he contrasts the Bible with the other sacred writings of the world. Its claim to authority is absolute. It takes no notice whatever of these other writings. The God it proclaims is the only and the universal God.

"It is supremacy, not precedence," he says, "that we ask for the Bible; it is contrast, as well as resemblance, that we must feel compelled to insist on. The Bible is stamped with speciality of origin, and an immeasurable distance separates it from all competitors." He proceeds in the following words:—

"The Christian creeds, like the Scriptures as Christians in general hold them, teach the doctrine of the Holy Trinity; but this doctrine of the Holy Trinity presupposes, and is based and built upon, the doctrine of the unity. . . .

"Not only did those Scriptures teach the unity of God, but they taught it with an emphasis, persistency, and authority such as no other work of any period or authorship has equaled: and the doctrine of the New Testament on this subject is really no more than an echo from the doctrine of the Old. If this truth was thus taught by the Old Testament in the law, and the prophets, and the Psalms, to the Hebrew race, and that through a long course of centuries, while it was everywhere else at least and more commonly denied, we have only to take further into view the generally acknowledged truth, that it supplies the only foundation on which the fabric of a pure religion can be reared, in order to make good, as among the old sacred books of the world, not only the superior, but, so far as regards the very heart, root, and center of divine truth, the exclusive claim of the Bible.

"I do not, indeed, deny . . . that authentic traces of this majestic truth are to be found elsewhere in old books and old religions; but it is amid a mass of evil and ruinous accretions, which grew progressively around it, and but too rapidly stifled and suppressed it. This, then, does not alter the parallel and even more undeniable fact, that it is in all these cases traced rather than recorded, recorded rather than taught, and, if taught at all, taught with such utter lack of perspicuity, persistency, and authority as to deprive it of all motive power, to shut it out from practical religion, and to leave it, through the long and weary centuries, in the cold sleep of oblivion or under a storm of overwhelming denial."

In development of the same contrast between the Bible and other sacred books occurs the following striking passage:—

"What may be held truly wonderful is that the Bible in a translated form seems not sensibly to lose its power. In Palestine, the Septuagint competed with the original Hebrew. In the English tongue, the authorized version bears, and has borne for centuries, the character of a powerful and splendid original. It has greatly contributed both to mold and to fix the form of the language. From Germany we hear a somewhat similar accent of Luther's Bible. In general, even a good translation is like the copy of some great picture. It does not readily go home to heart and mind. But who has ever felt, or has ever heard of anyone who felt, either in reading the English or in other translations of the Bible, the comparative tameness and inefficiency which commonly attach to a change of vehicle between one tongue and another? Is it believed that the epistles of St. Paul in English have seriously lost by submitting themselves to be represented in a version? At least it may be said with confidence that there are no grander passages in all English prose than some of the passages of those translated epistles. Such is the case of the Bible in its foreign dress. I am not competent to pronounce that it loses nothing. But it retains all its power to pierce the thoughts of the heart; it still remains sharper than a two-edged sword; it still divides bone and marrow. It does its work. We turn to the other Eastern books—what a contrast they represent! Certainly the same opportunities have not been afforded them of operating through a variety of tongues which have been given to the Holy Scriptures. But Confucius and the Koran were translated into Latin in the seventeenth century; and in English they have been accessible for more than one generation. They each assumed a German dress more than a century ago. The presentation of these books in the mass to the modern world is, of course, too recent to be dwelt upon. But the earlier facts show that, had these books been gifted with any of that energetic vitality which belongs to the Bible, a beginning of its manifestation would long ago have been made; whereas there is not a sign that any one of them is likely to exercise, beyond its own traditional borders, any sensible or widespread influence. They appear to sink into a caput mortuum, a dead letter. It is a sublime prerogative of the Holy Bible thus to reverse the curse of Babel. They, and they alone, supply the entire family of man with a medium both for their profoundest thoughts and for their most vivid sympathies which is alike available for all; and once more, in a certain and that no mean sense (so far, that is to say, as the work of language is concerned), they make the whole earth to be of one speech."

The following are the concluding words of Mr. Gladstone's "Introduction":—

"Who doubts that, times without number, particular portions of scripture find their way to the human soul as if embassies from on high, each with its own commission of comfort, of guidance, or of warning? What crisis, what trouble, what perplexity of life has failed or can fail to draw from this inexhaustible treasure-house its proper supply? What profession, what position is not daily and hourly enriched by these words which repetition never weakens, which carry with them now, as in the days of their first utterance, the freshness of youth and immortality? When the solitary student opens all his heart to drink them in, they will reward his toil. And in forms yet more hidden and withdrawn, in the retirement of the chamber, in the stillness of the night season, upon the bed of sickness, and in the face of death, the Bible will be there, its several words how often winged with their several and special messages, to heal and to soothe, to uplift and uphold, to invigorate and stir. Nay, more, perhaps, than this: amid the crowds of the court, or the forum, or the street, or the market place, where every thought of every soul seems to be set upon the excitements of ambition, or of business, or of pleasure, there too, even there, the still small voice of the Holy Bible will be heard, and the soul, aided by some blessed word, may find wings like a dove, may flee away and be at rest."—Literary Digest.

NEW CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.

From Karkov, in Russia, comes a story of a new cure for consumption by the inhalation of aniline, discovered by Dr. Kremiansky, a professor in the university. A girl of thirteen in the last stages of rapid consumption, was brought to him last February. She was treated with three preparations used simultaneously, pure white aniline, C6 H5 (NH2), a preparation of aniline and thénol, and one of aniline and essence of pine, which she was made to inhale deeply and slowly. At first only ten to twenty inhalations a day were administered, but gradually they were increased to two hundred. Under this treatment and a special diet the child is said to be in perfect health.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR.
R. S. SALYARDS - - - ASSISTANT EDITOR.
HEMAN C. SMITH - - - CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, MAY 8, 1895.

SALUTATORY.

It has been with some reluctance that I have concluded to accept the position of "Corresponding Editor" of the HERALD to which I have been chosen by the "Board of Publication." But after having advised with those with whom it is my duty and privilege to advise, I assume this responsibility prayerfully trusting that I may be permitted to accomplish some good.

This is a department of the work for which I have had neither ambition, inclination, nor premonition, and hence my selection came as a complete surprise.

In accepting this grave responsibility I have no promises to make. Should I write I can only do so as the conditions, at the time, my feelings and convictions, seem to me, to dictate.

I think, that he who writes editorially, may, if he avoid becoming strongly partisan upon issues which are before his readers, encourage a full, free, and broad investigation, and by non-partisan, and kindly suggestion lead to a better understanding, and to increased confidence. Otherwise he may compromise himself, humiliate his friends, and embarrass his opponents, thus becoming a hindrance to proper investigation and freedom of thought. However if he represent the organ of a body, when that body speaks he should steadfastly stand in defense, and protect such action against assault.

He should carefully avoid making his paper the special organ of his own views; and yet he should fearlessly speak when occasion demands, or when the interests of morality, Christianity, and the best good of humanity require. I may not reach this standard, but shall endeavor to act, and fearlessly speak my convictions; leaving results in the hands of Him, whose guiding hand I trust will ever lead me.

In appearing before the readers of the HERALD in this capacity, I will only say that I hope our new relation may be both pleasant and profitable.

While I expect and invite the broad mantle of charity to save the novice from embarrassing criticism; yet I am conscious that for my own acts, be they well or ill advised, I must and should bear a just weight of responsibility.

In other fields untried and new, I have been made conscious of an abiding and sustaining Presence, and my confidence that this experience will be continued is my support in making this venture.

Fraternally,
HEMAN C. SMITH.

AS OUR UTAH FRIENDS SEE US FROM PRESS DISPATCHES OF THE CONFERENCE REPORTS.

CONFERENCE AT INDEPENDENCE.

SERIOUS difficulties seem to have broken out among the members of the Reorganized church of latter-day saints, now in conference at Independence, Missouri. If the dispatches received this week concerning the proceedings at the sessions give a fair account of the situation, disruption of that church may be imminent. A house divided against itself must fall.

It appears that about a year ago a so-called revelation was given to the church concerning the vacancy in the first presidency, David H. Smith, one of the counselors, being confined in an insane asylum for a number of years. The "revelation" reads:—

"My servant, David H. Smith is in my hand; and his bishopric shall be continued for a season; if he fully recover, he will enter again the work. If I take him to myself, another will be appointed in his stead when the quorum is filled."

A great many of the members of the church openly claim that the Almighty would never have expressed such ignorance as to the probable future of the afflicted counselor as the "if" indicates. Is it possible, they ask, that God does not know whether David H. Smith will recover from his sickness? and they refuse to accept the "revelation" as authentic. Among the skeptics are some of the twelve apostles, while others claim to have received satisfactory testimony as to its truth.

The Reorganized church has evidently encountered a dilemma, either alternative of which is unfortunate for its position. Either the section quoted is a genuine Divine revelation, or it is not. If it is, all the apostles and elders and other members who refuse to accept it are arrayed against the Almighty, failing to discern the truth, and consequently groping in spiritual darkness. "He that is of God heareth the words of God," says the Savior; and the inference of this is that those who do not hear the words of the Father are not of God. If, on the other hand, the revelation is not genuine, the president of the Reorganized church, by offering it as the word of God, stands charged with a most serious offense, and the apostles and others that claim to have a supernatural testimony as to its truth appear in the light of deceived or deceivers. What conceivable escape is there from these conclusions? Both are equally fatal to the claim that that church is guided by light from above.

Another issue of serious importance has arisen. One of the apostles introduced a resolution stating that it was the sense of the church that members of certain degrees of the priesthood were not empowered to assist in the administration of the sacrament. A member of the first presidency declared against the views expressed in the resolution. The question then came up whether in matters relating to the rules of the church the voice of the presidency had the deciding authority or whether this was vested in the members of the church. A vote on the resolution resulted virtually, it seems, in a declaration against the presidency.

While these conditions may be regrettable in some respects, they are no surprise to those familiar with the cause represented by the Reorganized church. For years the questions now openly discussed have formed subjects for private conversation and meditation; and their solution had become a necessity. Revelations on these matters presumably were expected, but, it seems, in vain. Yet we are inclined to think that these clouds on the horizon of our Josephite friends and brethren are intended to be one of the greatest blessings to them. There are in that church many good, honest men and women, whose only desire is to know the truth and to do what is right. For some reason or other they have been prevented from thoroughly perceiving the whole situation as it is. If by the discussion at the conference these should be led to investigate more thoroughly the Gospel as revealed through Joseph the Prophet and receive a testimony that only in the Church founded by him according to Divine command and still building on the rock of revelation is the whole truth to be found, they will perhaps humbly embrace the opportunity and return to the "old paths" leading to a fulness of knowledge. Unity sometimes evolves out of schisms; tearing down often precedes building up. Possibly the events of the conference at Independence may result in the return of some honest saints to the church and be a preliminary to the reunion of friends who never ought to have been separated.

The foregoing is an editorial comment on the conference affairs as presented from one of the Kansas City papers, and press dispatches, in the Deseret News for April 10, to which we add an article from the pen of John Nicholson, a former editor of the News, cut from the same issue.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH.

THE LOGIC OF THE POSITION LATELY ASSUMED BY ITS HEAD.

Editor Deseret News:

I have read with much interest the dispatches relating to the recent conference of the "Reorganized Church of Latter-day Saints," and fully agree with your editorial based upon the information obtained by telegraph. The spirit of your article was kindly, and therefore not of a character to wound the feelings of the class to whom it referred. The people who belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, established, under the direction of God, by Joseph Smith, are necessarily interested in the members of the family of that great Prophet, and regret to see them assume a false position. The same sentiment is entertained toward their followers, who, although deceived, are, doubtless, in most instances honest.

I desire space in order to direct attention to a special point connected with the present predicament of the "Reorganized Church." In doing this it is pertinent to introduce a paragraph from the revelation claimed to have been received by the president of that organization relating to an alleged vacancy in the first presidency:

My servant, David H. Smith is in my hand; and his bishopric shall be continued for a season; if he fully recover, he will enter again the work. If I take him to myself, another will be appointed in his stead when the quorum is filled.

For further elucidation the following from a dispatch is also inserted:

The revelation in dispute says that the supposed vacancy in the presidency was not a vacancy in the eyes of God. David H. Smith, who was the third member of that body, is not dead, as had been supposed by many of the council, but is insane, and is now confined in the Illinois asylum and has been so confined for the last twenty years.

The position taken in the above quotations is that insanity and confinement in an asylum for an indefinite time does not disqualify a member of the first presidency from retaining his office.

For the sake of truth and in all kindness, I must here present the logic of such a proposition:—

(1) If insanity does not disqualify an ecclesiastical officer from occupancy of an exalted position in a church, continuous and confirmed mental aberration would not be a bar to eligibility for selection for and election to a similar position.

(2) If the proposition applies to one member of the quorum of three at the head of the organization, it necessarily likewise would apply, under similar conditions, to the other two.

(3) If the principle has application in relation to the first presidency or any one of them, it would logically operate with regard to every other office and officer throughout the entire organization.

One of the most regrettable features of this most unphilosophical and illogical assumption is the claim that it came from God. The real revelations given by that Holy Being show that in the conduct of His work He moves in unison with the natural laws of economy and adaptation. This course is made especially prominent with regard to men who figure conspicuously as instruments in His divine hand for the attainments of His purposes. Nothing could be more in conflict with the economy of God than the position assumed in this alleged revelation and attributed to Him.

There is not a true Latter-day Saint in this region but deplors the terrible affliction of which the man who figured so conspicuously in the recent proceedings of the Reorganization is the victim. As a body they also regret that so many worthy people should continue to labor under false conceptions of the nature and identity of the work which Joseph Smith the Prophet was the instrument in the hands of God in founding. It is hoped that the recent proceedings under consideration will stimulate thought in such in the direction of truth and consistency.

JOHN NICHOLSON.

Mr. John Nicholson may be a shrewd reasoner upon things within the sphere of his knowledge and observation, but in his zeal to grasp at anything looking to the disintegration of so strong an opponent as the Reorganized, or Josephite Church, has been to the Utah Church in some chief and characteristic features of church doctrine and polity, he may fail.

It is a rule in argumentation that if the premise of an antagonist is destroyed, there is no need to attempt a refutation of the argument based on the premise.

A few facts will illustrate this. The question of the disqualification of David H. Smith, as a chief officer in the Reorganized Church, for the reason of his condition of unsoundness of mind, was disposed of ten years ago, when at the April session of 1885 he was released from his office of counselor to the President, by vote of conference, upon the following direction:—

The voice of the Spirit is that David H. Smith be released. He is in mine hand.

Since that time no question concerning him has been raised in the church.

All the argument of Mr. Nicholson based upon the supposed "if" involved, falls flat, because of there being no "if" upon which it was based.

The clause quoted by Mr. Nicholson, as being taken from the supposed disputed revelation of 1894, and referring to David H. Smith, has no existence in relation to that man. It is a clear case of flagrant and mischievous interpolation, which has sadly distorted the truth and laid a trap into which Mr. Nicholson willingly fell.

There is a clause in said revelation of 1894, referring to one of the Twelve, Thomas W. Smith, which we quote from the document itself:—

My servant Thomas W. Smith is in my hand; and his bishopric shall be continued for a season; if he fully recover he will enter again into the work; if I take him unto myself, another will be appointed in his stead when the quorum is filled.

In order to make the 1, 2, 3 of his argument, each of which he begins with an "if," Mr. Nicholson throws in the comment of a reporter wholly incompetent to grasp the subject he was writing upon, and who either ignorantly or willfully made a statement of the existence of controversy and unrest among the members of the Reorganized Church concerning David H. Smith, the revelation in question and the filling of the vacancy in the quorums that had no foundation—a sensationalism discovered by a light-headed reporter with about as little regard for the real truth of the situation as the graphite filling of his pencil might feel; and from the garbled quotation and the reporter's misstatement he defines the "logic of the position lately assumed by" the head of the Reorganized Church—unhappy premise; unfortunate logic.

To give Mr. Nicholson some data from which to make infidel play on the word "if," in relation to the real or to be supposed knowledge of God, we suggest Exodus 4: 8, 9. In this, the Lord answering to the inquiry of Moses regarding the unbelief of the Egyptians, says: "If they will not believe thee;" Mr. Nicholson's logic applied. Did not the Lord know whether they would believe? Or, to come nearer to the time and reason for inquiry and application of this same sort of logic, see the revelation to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, December, 1830, section 34 of Doctrine and Covenants, our own edition, and section 11 of the Utah editions prior to 1876, paragraph 4, latter part of the paragraph. The Lord speaking of Joseph Smith, said:—

And in weakness have I blessed him, and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead.

Again, the Lord speaking of the same man, in the revelation of February, 1831, unto the elders:—

And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.—D. C. sec. 43 (14), par. 1.

In both of these words of the Lord to the church, by revelation, the same mischievous word "if" occurs, and in a similar manner expresses a doubt. Did not the Lord in 1830 and 1831 know whether Joseph Smith would "abide" in him or not? Why should he have used the term in such a way as to suggest a doubt, liability, probability, or possibility that Joseph Smith would apostatize from the faith or be guilty of crimes so great that he would be cast out by the Lord? Our friends of other factions read the revelation to mean that Joseph would by transgression fall from his position and become a fallen prophet, and have so taught.

In one of these "words of the Lord," the expression occurs "until he be taken." This is the doubt in another form, and implies that there is a possibility that for some reason Joseph Smith might be taken from his post, either by death or removal. In this light our Strangite friends have held this clause, and cite it as effective to prove that there had been prophetic declaration pointing to the occurrence of a vacancy which was to be filled by appointment through the seer, after or before his fall, or being taken; as suggested in paragraph two of the same section. Did not the Lord know whether Joseph Smith would or would not be taken? And if he did so know, he would be likely to have made it known.

The purport of the revelation of 1894 as referred to and commented on by Mr. Nicholson, and the reportorial newspaper comment and history of it made to carry the idea of a serious break in the Josephite ranks and an imminent disruption in the church as a consequence, by both Mr. Nicholson and the editor of the News, are quite foreign to the facts, as will be seen by contrasting the argument, its assumed logic, and the revelation itself, with a comparison of the quotations given from the revelations of 1830, 1831, and the quotation from the one of 1894.

T. W. Smith was in the spring of 1894 a paralytic, apparently recovering. At his home at Independence, Missouri, he attended the morning worship in the chapel, on Sunday, May 20, and offered the prayer at the opening of the service before the sermon, standing at the desk. President Joseph Smith preached the sermon and assisted Bro. T. W. down the pulpit steps at the close of service. There is not the slightest doubt on the minds of any of the members of the Reorganized Church, but what the Lord knew on April 15, whether he would fully recover, take up his interrupted work and finish it, or suffer the penalty of death passed upon all flesh, before the expiration of the year; the fact remains, however, that on the morning of May 27, a little over a month after the word concerning him was received by the church, he fell asleep in death. To those who thought deeply on the subject, the word to the church, "My servant Thomas W. Smith is in my hand; and his bishopric shall be continued for a season," was of solemn import, and silenced some foolish clamor, here and there, in the churches regarding him, his condition, and his work, and reminded some of the loving Savior's words to Peter,

If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.—John 21: 21.

That the purpose had in view by the Lord concerning the man would be fully looked after by him who said he "is in my hand," none doubted; and few, very few were even curious to know, patient waiting being a striking attribute of God's people when in line of their duty. It was our business to occupy, trusting all else to the Lord.

All that part of the sensational reports on which Mr. Nicholson built his "logic of the position" of the head of the Josephite church, and from which the News editor gathered the pith of his editorial that the Reorganized Church had "encountered a dilemma," was purely a fabrication of an incompetent news-gatherer. There are not now, nor have there been many, nor a few of the members of the church who have openly claimed that "the Almighty would never have expressed such ignorance as to the probable future of the afflicted counselor as the 'if' indicates." No such question as to whether God "does not know whether David H. Smith will recover from his sickness," has been, or was urged among the members of the church in controversy, either in public or in private; either last year, or at the late conference. All admit without question that God did know in 1885 and in 1894 whether David H. Smith would recover; and that he does now know. All admitted in April, 1894, that God did know whether T. W. Smith would recover or not. All knew in 1885 that God did not reveal to the church, in what should be recognized as an authoritative manner, whether David H. Smith would or would not recover; but all knew it was their duty to release him from his counselorship, and it was done.

No discussion as to whether God considered lunacy a bar to preferment or continuance in office was ever had in the church in controversy, public or private. No position of the sort named by Mr. Nicholson that "insanity and confinement in an asylum did not disqualify a member of the first presidency from retaining his office," was ever taken by the head of the Josephite Church. Nor has such position been taken in regard to any other officer in or out of the church.

There was not an array of "apostles and elders and other members against the Almighty," or rejecting the revelation of 1894, neither at the session of 1894, nor since then. No such thing occurred at the last session of conference at Independence, nor did anything occur there out of which such wanton misrepresentation could have been made. The divinity of the revelation of April 15, 1894, or its acceptance or rejection by either quorum or church was not called into question. Nothing occurred at any session of either quorum, or the conference, public or private, that raised either of the above contingences. No conflict of motive or interest, nor any design shown, nor attempt made to change the church rule, to dominate by dictation to the people in either doctrine or practice of, or by the President, Joseph Smith, the Presidency, as a quorum, or by the Apostles, the Twelve, or any other quorum, was had at the conference; nor did there anything take place in any of the sessions, either of the quorums or of the body, warranting a report of the sort that intimated, or alleged any such conflict, or division.

The Quorum of the Twelve put themselves on record at the conference of 1894, clearly, and as was then believed by the great mass of the church, satisfactorily, accepting the revelation, which the reporters made such a bugbear of, in the following terms:—

Resolved, that while we have no special testimony from God, as a quorum, upon the revelation, we cheerfully accept it as a law to govern the church, under the conditions that at present obtain.

At the time the revelation was presented for final action in the assembly, the President of the Twelve, Alexander H. Smith, being authorized to speak for his quorum, at the proper time rose and answered:—

While the quorum as a quorum have received no especial spiritual testimony that the communication presented is of divine origin, we have examined it carefully, comparing it with past revelations, and so far have found nothing in it to warrant our rejecting it. Two of our number have testified that they have received marked spiritual evidence of its divine origin; while the rest have not received such testimony; however, we have resolved to accept, and adopt it as a rule and law to govern in the present seeming crisis of the church; hence, in our report we so formally announce, and earnestly pray that God may enlighten those whose minds may be unsettled upon the matter.

This acceptance of the revelation, to be the rule and law to the church, made in such frank and manly terms, is all that reasonable men ought to expect. If no special testimony came to all, it would have been hypocritical to have stated to the body otherwise. That such testimony came to some, was frankly stated.

The fact that the quorum had carefully examined the document itself, comparing it with the revelations of the past, and after such examination decided by unanimous vote to "cheerfully accept it as a law to govern the church," is an indorsement of a high order; and indicates that the men forming the quorum were not willing, either to be imposed on themselves, or to help impose upon others, and were manly enough to state their convictions, and upon them, special testimony not being granted to all of them, were willing to array themselves in acceptance of the answer to the prayers of the church, with their brethren, acting in good faith with themselves, the church, and their God.

During the year since the action of the body we have every reason to believe that the Twelve, and all others whose action may have been affected by the revelation, have acted in accordance and compliance with the acts of the general body; and no cause for improper comment, or for the growth of unhealthy antagonism has occurred in regard to the matter involved.

It is time that all innuendo, or insinuation of ulterior designs on the part of coworkers, by those not within the immediate knowledge of the councils, and counsels of the quorums, and criticism upon half truths, and whole surmisings should cease; and men, all men, be given credit for the degree of manly devotion to truth and the good of all, that men themselves feel entitled to in relation to their own motives and actions.

The "issue of serious importance," which our Utah News editor thinks has arisen, is but another instance of reporters' exaggeration.

Two years ago the Quorum of Twelve, and the Seventy, passed resolutions expressing the opinion that neither teachers, deacons, nor the laity, could properly be employed in passing the emblems during the administration of the sacrament. These resolutions went on record in the minutes with no action of conference regarding them. The Presidency did not agree with the opinion; but did not at the time seek to get their opinion also on record; and, an article on the subject having appeared in Herald in contravention of propriety as some supposed, because of conference action, one or two of the brethren believing that some action should be had that would result in uniformity of observance in the sacramental service introduced the resolution in the form passed by the Twelve and Seventy, and moved that it be made the opinion of the conference.

In the discussion that ensued an element of dispute, not found in or contemplated by the resolution, was injected into the debate, which was talked on earnestly and vehemently, as was the manner of some of the brethren; and from this our Utah friends have gathered the idea of an imminent dissolution of the Reorganized Church.

That from the acts of the late conference good will come to the church founded in God's divine economy and in accord with his command we join the News in believing; but that what occurred presages rupture and departure of any numbers from the truth as held by the Reorganized Church, we most cordially dispute.

SENSATIONAL REPORT.

THE following is from the Kansas City Times, for April 15, and is given to show the animus of the spirit of the sensation-seeking reporters. We have not comment to make.

HE STANDS NEXT TO GOD.

THAT IS THE LATTER DAY SAINTS' ESTIMATE OF JOSEPH SMITH. BUT THE TWELVE APOSTLES HAVE APPARENTLY QUESTIONED THIS—IT IS SAID THAT THEY EVEN THREW OUT AS UNAUTHORITATIVE ONE OF THE PROPHET'S REVELATIONS—TROUBLE BREWING IN THE MORMON CHURCH—END OF ITS CONFERENCE AT INDEPENDENCE.

The forty-third annual conference of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints was brought to a close at Independence last night. The conference convened April 6. As already announced in The Times, the next session will be held at Kirtland, Ohio, in April, 1896.

The meetings yesterday were devoid of special interest, with the exception that the sermon by Vice President W. W. Blair in the morning and the address of President Joseph Smith in the evening were brilliant efforts in a religious way.

The conference just adjourned has proved a most important one. President Smith has lost prestige with his council, and no little amount of it. The rebellion of his council of Twelve was not the result of temporary or recent trouble, but is a storm that has been gathering slowly but surely for years. As reported in The Times Saturday, Mr. Smith was sat upon and in a decided manner by the members of this quorum on Friday afternoon. His right bower, Vice President Blair, also came in for a share of the abuse on that occasion. From present indications the fight is still in progress, despite the love feast held Saturday afternoon. Not in a public way, however, but in a quiet, yet effective, manner.

The influence of this war on Mr. Smith will be far reaching. Of this no doubt can exist. For a half century now he has been the recognized prophet and leader of the church, with but little opposition. Certainly it is that never before in his reign has he been so severely attacked by his own council as on Friday. Yet, at the same time, it is maintained by a majority of the Saints that if the president of the church is ousted or otherwise ceases to rule the church will immediately decay and crumble away. This fact being recognized the action on the part of the Twelve in attempting to metaphorically cut Mr. Smith's throat seems suicidal.

The prophet, however, is himself partially responsible for all this trouble. At least it is so thought by a majority of the church. They say that he has held the reins too loosely and has put too much confidence in the Twelve. It is further stated that certain short-sighted members of this council aspire to lead the church and think to gain their end by creating a bitter feeling against Joseph.

On Thursday, as told in The Times Friday, a strong rumor was current that President Smith had received a revelation regarding the position of first president. A vacancy has existed in this office for ten years and the report caused considerable comment and attracted a large crowd that afternoon. Mr. Smith presided at the meeting, but made no mention of a revelation. It is since strongly intimated that the rumor was well founded, but on account of the estrangement between Joseph and the Twelve that the latter as a body refused to indorse the revelation, hence it was worthless and not announced. If this can be established as a fact there will be some warm times at the next conference, and perhaps before.

W. W. Blair is at present a first president appointed according to the Saints' belief, and law, by a revelation from God made through Joseph Smith. Mr. Blair's associate first president died in 1884 and no successor has been yet approved by heaven unless, as stated, the revelation came at this conference and was killed by the Twelve, who pass upon such matters before the conference receives them.

The prophecies made by the several members Saturday, and reported in full in The Times yesterday had a wonderful effect on the body of the church, but it is not thought that the Twelve were in any way pleased by them. Whether this is from disbelief in their reliability or a careless disregard of consequences, it is impossible to say. The priests, elders and other quorums believe that God spoke to them through Miss Brewster, Mrs. Harrington and Mrs. Griffin on Saturday morning, and their confidence in their president was immediately restored. It is not strange, then, that they should feel a trifle sore at the Twelve, or, as they have been termed by some, "the scoffers."

"We follow the customs and teachings of the New Testament to the best of our ability," said an elder to a Times reporter yesterday, "and anyone who is at all acquainted with that book is well aware that in those days visions, demonstrations, prophecies and revelations were of frequent occurrence. Then if we drop our belief in these things, have we not lost faith in the very origin of the church? It is ridiculous in the extreme to believe that only high officials may be delivered of these prophecies. A Saint is a Saint whether high or low, and in my opinion is so considered by God. The Twelve will find themselves in a most unpleasant predicament if they continue in their fight against Joseph Smith.

"O, yes," he said, in answer to a question, "I am quite well aware that they were supported by our vote on Friday, but that was a case of personal opinion and not an expression of our condemnation of Brother Smith. His father founded our religion and he succeeded his father. We have always worshiped him next to our God, and we will continue to do so."

The outcome of this internal trouble in the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints is awaited with interest by its members.

BRETHREN TO THE RESCUE.

SOME time ago the Inter-Ocean, of Chicago, answered some queries from one J. J. S., of Atlantic, Iowa, in which the old-time stories and charges against Joseph Smith were rehashed. Bro. E. T. Dobson, took occasion to write the Inter-Ocean a manly protest against such misleading statements, being published in so well-known and able a journal. The protest was published in the Inter-Ocean for April 20; and is a short, able, and pithy statement of the facts. We thank the Inter-Ocean management for the courtesy of permitting a reply.

Bro. J. M. Terry, of the same city as Bro. Dobson, St. Joseph, Missouri, indignant at the newspaper treatment during conference, into which the Herald and Gazette, local papers, were misled, also presented to those papers corrections of misstatements which were published; thus counteracting in a degree the result of inconsiderate and mischievous reports.

Good, others of the brethren abroad will see to it, we do not doubt, that those unfortunately misleading misstatements shall meet with refutation where it is possible to do so.

CORRECTION.

EDITORS HERALD:—In the report of "Saints' Hymnal committee" as published in Herald of April 17, page 249, the following mistakes occur:—

Section 2 reads: "Not to exceed two hundred and fifty additional hymns." The word "additional" should be omitted. Section 3. Supply the word "additional" after the word "fifty," so it would read "and fifty additional hymns to be grouped, etc." Section 6. The following occurs: "wherein they are not original in the Harmony." It should read, "wherein they are not supplied in the Harmony." As it does not do justice to the committee the way it is, please correct.

T. W. WILLIAMS, of Committee.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, April 19, 1895.

The report as published was handed us by one of the committee on Saints' Hymnal, with changes in their original report, and as we supposed, made to conform to the action of General Conference in amending. However, we gladly insert the correction.

SONGS OF SOLOMON.

JOSEPH SMITH, the Seer, stated that the songs of Solomon were left out of the Holy Scriptures (the Inspired Translation) because they were not inspired. The same author stated that himself and Oliver Cowdery were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood by John the Baptist, by command of Peter, James, and John.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. FRANK P. SCARCLIFF, writing from Scranton, Mississippi, April 21, states:—

I visited the Theodore, Alabama, Saints last Sabbath and preached to them twice. Tuesday the 16th at two p. m. I preached the funeral sermon of Sister Mary A. Smith, in the Baptist church near Moss Point, to a large congregation. I felt very well and tried to remove some of the prejudice which has existed in the minds of many of the people in this section. The Lieutenant Governor of the State, and the county treasurer were among the pall bearers. The pastor of the M. E. Church opened with prayer and closed the services with some feeling remarks in which he testified to the Christian character of Sr. Smith. In the last issue of the county paper, in Sr. Smith's obituary, which I wrote at Mr. Smith's request, I presented more important matter explanatory of her faith. I expect to follow this up in the next issue of the paper, with a brief outline of church history. Utah elders have been in Mobile county, Alabama. As usual they have been defending polygamy, stating to one of the brethren that they believed it was "a righteous doctrine," but they "were not allowed to practice it." We look for progress all along the line in this part of the mission during the coming year.

Bro. J. H. Lawn, Mulberry Post Office, California, April 21:—

Our Central California district conference held at Santa Cruz, April 5-8, was profitable to all present. I had the privilege of baptizing two, and by vote of conference ordained Bro. Walter Scott an elder. Before that he was a priest and president of the Santa Cruz branch; a noble man, full of energy and good works.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

SOME one writing from Stockton, California, requests elders in the Northwest who can call on George Heaton, at Blackfoot, Bingham county, Idaho; to inquire for his daughter (name not given) in that city, who will furnish his address.

Bro. A. J. Smith, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, reports the few who adhere to the faith in that city as striving to build up their branch. Their efforts, however, provoked the ire of one Rev. J. Wesley Hill, pastor of the Fauler M. E. church, formerly of Ogden, Utah, who traduced the name of the seer and misrepresented the faith; and who refused to correct his misstatements after they were pointed out. Bro. Smith would like to see Mr. Hill taken to task publicly for his wrongdoing.

Sr. Nettie Tharp writes from Flora Vista, New Mexico, April 22, that Bro. R. H. Wight preaches there the second and fourth Sundays of the month, and is evidently doing good in so keeping services.

Brn. I. N. Roberts, J. W. Gillen, C. Scott, and Bro. Henry C. Smith and wife left Lamoni for their various fields of labor during the past week.

A cyclone did much damage near Hutchinson, Kansas, May 1. The storm left death and ruin in its path over a section of country sixteen miles in length. Ten persons were killed, and twenty-five were injured. Twenty houses were razed, and many barns and buildings were destroyed, and cattle, horses, and hogs killed.

An earthquake shock did some damage to old buildings and church towers at Guadalajara, Mexico, May 1. The volcano of Jorullo, in the State of Michoacan, is showing unusual signs of activity, probably caused by the outbreak of the Colima volcano. The earthquakes are short and sharp and have thus far been felt in Colima, Zapotlan, Patzcuar, Uruapan, and in many other places.

Dr. Heber Newton, of the Episcopal Church, has publicly stated his disbelief of the literal bodily resurrection of Jesus. The leading churchmen have taken note of the doctor's attitude on the question and another heresy trial is probable.

A terrific hailstorm swept through Wilson, Bexar, and Medina counties, Texas, April 24, doing much damage. Hailstones the size of goose eggs fell. The damage to stock and other property is estimated at $200,000. Railroad tracks were blockaded by the hail.

Earthquake shocks have been frequent in various parts of Europe of late. A dispatch dated Odessa, April 22, reports severe earthquakes on the 19th in Tashkend, Asiatic Russia. Another dispatch from Vienna, the same date, reports continued earthquakes in the neighborhood of and at Laibach.

Earthquake shocks continue at Laibach. Their renewal causes great alarm among the people, who fear a repetition of the disastrous shocks of a few days ago, when ninety-eight per cent of the houses in the city were damaged.

A newspaper published in Pekin is said to be the oldest in the world. It dates from a period two hundred years prior to the Norman conquest of England. Naturally its prolonged existence in an autocratically governed country like China has been marked by many vicissitudes, not the least of which is the fact recently announced in its columns that during the years of its existence nineteen hundred of its editors have been beheaded, or, roughly speaking, two per annum.

FREEDOM.

Is true freedom but to break
Fetters for our own dear sake,
And with leathern hearts forget
That we owe mankind a debt?
No! True freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear,
And with heart and hand to be Earnest to make others free.—Lowell.

"YE shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

What a volume of meaning is embraced in these words of our divine Teacher! When we consider our claims as a people in reference to truth, surely it follows that if these claims are true, if our professions are genuine, then we should be the freest people upon the face of God's earth. But are we? It is the mission of Christ's gospel to free his people from every fetter of bondage. To make their fear (or love) of God so perfect, that the fear of man can find no place in their hearts; but being fully convinced that they are in the right, they will not hesitate to follow where he leads, no matter what the opinion of others may be. This is the true freedom of the gospel. In it there is no place for wrongdoing, no place for evil, no liberty for evil speaking, for gossip, backbiting, or slander, but each one is commanded to go and "learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

As Daughters of Zion, how well, how thoroughly are we learning this lesson? Are we breaking from us day by day the fetters of prejudice and ignorance, and merging into the liberty of the gospel? This liberty was bought with the precious blood of Christ, and well might the apostle exhort those who were in it to "stand fast."

Before us a grand work is opening. The field is vast and the grain is whitening to the harvest. The husbandman will tell you that if left without gathering until over-ripe it falls to the ground. What a call this fact should be to the putting forth of every effort in our power that it may be gathered into the Master's granary.

We must not be for one moment discouraged by the vastness of the work. Just the little spot near us. Our own homes first of all. God will take care of that we cannot.

In looking over the various reports presented at the general meeting we select first that of the treasurer, as we deem it only just that each member be informed in regard to our financial condition. It will be seen that we have funds sufficient to resume publication of leaflets, which will be done at an early day.

It has been said "that the last thing about a man to be converted is his pocketbook." If this be true, and true of women as of men, then the financial report of the Daughters of Zion should be an earnest to all of the deep and abiding conviction these sisters entertain of the great importance and need of the work they have undertaken.

A LETTER.

"I had 'a letter from God' this morning;
 God is my Father, the Infinite One,
 'Twas writ on a pansy leaf, tinted and turning
 From purple to gold in the kiss of the sun.
 "And it said, 'Good cheer for the living and loving,
 Go forth in this flower-world, dear Soul of mine;
 Earth and all heaven are thine for the proving,
 Fret not to find thee a boundary line.'
 "Now I am glad as the grass in its growing,
 Glad as the hills and exultant and free,
 Sure that his purpose in all things is showing,
 Plain as this letter directed to me!"

HELPING HAND.

SYNOPSIS OF READING, CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE, HINTS ON CHILD-TRAINING.

THE PLACE OF SYMPATHY IN CHILD-TRAINING.

A CHILD needs sympathy, and the lack of it is a great cause of unhappiness among children. Many parents love their children who do not realize that they ought to sympathize with them, and that in no other way can they gain so great influence over them as by showing sympathy with them.

Sympathy is a twofold force. It is a response to another's feelings or needs. Love may go out toward one and that one fail to be affected by it, but sympathy is an answer to a call, and is sure to be welcome.

A child needs some one to share both his joys and his sorrows. It is a greater help to a child who has hurt himself, to show him that you feel his pain, and then show him how to be cheerful and patient over it, than to tell him that he must not cry, or that his hurt does not amount to anything. And the same in times of joy. It does him more good to know that you feel with him in his delights than to have you look on, as from the outside, approving of his enjoyment.

Children show great desire for intellectual sympathy. The baby is not satisfied until you notice its toy, or hearing a new sound, until some one else listens too. Children come running to mamma to show her this or that; and very foolish is that mother who feels annoyed and chides them for so doing. When little children gather flowers, how they run with each one they pick, to show to nurse or mother, and make sure of her admiration. How eagerly a boy will tell of some new sight, if only he can get some one to listen.

However, there are many parents who are more ready to provide playthings and books for their children than to share their delight in their amusements, or to enjoy with them the pleasures of knowledge-gaining. They would buy a toy to replace one lost, sooner than to give sympathy for the loss; and perhaps the sympathy would be the more acceptable; certainly it would be the more profitable in giving the parent power for good over his children. Parents who do sympathize with their children in all things can train and sway them as they will; for perfect sympathy between two persons insures that the stronger one will control both.

To sympathize with another, you must put yourself in his place, and see a thing as he sees it. Different conditions of life might make sympathy between two persons impossible, but the parent ought to be able to learn the child's ways of thinking and feeling so that sympathy between the two might at all times be possible. The parent may know how the child ought to feel, but the child knows how he does feel. A parent must learn just how the child looks at any matter before he can come alongside of the child and win his confidence so as to work with him toward a more correct view of it. To stand off and tell a child how he ought to think and feel may dishearten him as he sees his distance from the right. But to stand with him and point out the path toward the right will give him courage to keep trying until he thinks and feels as his parents wish him to.

A parent can grow into the very life of his child by showing a ready interest in all his occupations and amusements. Such sympathy from the parent greatly increases the child's enjoyment, while to withhold it necessarily leaves the child alone, practically parentless, in so far as it is withheld.

The parent's special opportunity for good is in having sympathy with his child's weaknesses and failures. When a child has had wrong thoughts, is being tempted, or has given way to temptation, it is natural for him to want to confess his faults to some one to whom he looks up. If his parents listen with sympathy to his confessions, he is drawn closer to them, but if they only express their displeasure and surprise at his misdemeanors they build up a wall to shut their child from them and he is left alone in his bitter life-struggle.

How much better when a child can talk freely to his parents of his worst faults, without a fear of anything that would chill his confidence. It is a great thing to have greater regret for a child's sorrow over a mishap, than for the loss that may be occasioned by the accident. Sympathy with children secures the greatest power over children.

It is far better for parents to show their children that they are "their best friends," not simply to tell them that they are; not to give their children cause to think as Herbert Spencer says many children do, that parents are "friend-enemies." Children ought to have cause to think that no other such appreciative friend can be found as are their parents.

Some parents have such love for their children that they would die for them, and yet they have no sympathy with them, and consequently lack their confidence which would give the power to sway them as they would.

Sympathy is a power that needs to be cultivated. A parent may train himself to be sympathetic, by feeling it his duty to learn how the child thinks and feels, and by recognizing the great gain of getting close to his child, in loving tenderness, in order to point him to better ways. However great the parent's love, without sympathy with his child, he cannot accomplish the best results in his training. C. B. S.

INSCRIBED TO THE MEMORY OF SR. HETTIE PIERSON.

How strong are the ties of affection that bind together the hearts
Of kind and dutiful sisters; and when one for heaven departs,
The heart never ceases to love, but will constantly hallow and bless
The memory of a saintlike sister, though her body be silent in death.

Oh how can we write the name Hettie; that our sister, our darling, is dead!
Is dead? Yes, O no! Alive with God and angels instead;
I know that she is living (and some may want to know why)
Because she came in my slumber to bid me a kindly good-bye.

"I have come to say, 'good-bye' now," she said, for "I am going away."
We looked at each other a moment, and I did not quite understand,
And then as if anxiously awaiting, and hurriedly extending both hands
She said, "I have come to say good-bye now, for I am going away;
Jesus has called me!" I pleaded in vain for her longer to stay.
She turned, and peacefully left me, to join others I'd noticed before,
And ascended bright and happy toward the heavenly shore.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, April 8.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday being the first Sunday in the month the branch partook of the sacrament, after which they spent an hour in prayer and social meeting, and despite the inclement weather a goodly number of the Saints were present, and God was pleased to shed forth his Holy Spirit upon us, and to grant us a real, old fashioned season of rejoicing. One of our number spoke in tongues, and the testimony was confirmed and gave great joy to our hearts. During the meeting many wept for joy, and some bore witness whose voices had not been heard before. We felt greatly encouraged and strengthened.

At our last business meeting Bro. Williams was chosen to preside over the branch for this quarter, thus giving our venerable ex-president a much needed rest; yet we shall still have his wise counsel when needed. Our new pipe organ will likely be put in the church this week, then Bro. Schwartz will be able to fill the old church with melody. The young people deserve great credit for their work in the purchase of this fine instrument. They will give an entertainment soon, when the organ will be christened. The branch is much pleased to secure the services of Bro. Williams this year. He has a strong hold on the minds of those without, and our little house has been filled with intelligent and thoughtful people, who find something refreshing in his manner of presenting the truths of this latter-day work. I predict that if this branch humbly keeps God's law, and prays that the gifts of the gospel may be manifest among us, that God will make us a power in this wicked city, before which Satan's kingdom shall tremble, and man-made institutions no longer deceive the honest in heart.

When I see how pride and the follies of fashion have marred and destroyed the simplicity of the worship of God, and how the poor are neglected, I wonder if the Church of Jesus Christ will ever become so proud and full of vanity that it will depart from the simplicity of the gospel and lose the gifts and blessings that ought to be in it. God forbid that it shall ever be. But is there not danger? As long as the ancient church walked humbly with God their candlestick was not removed, but when they became lifted up in pride, God removed their candlestick.

I have observed that fine temples of worship, Turkish carpets, and upholstered pews, are not, as a rule, conducive to humbleness of heart and simplicity of worship; and it might come to pass that the broken sentences and stammering tongue of the unlearned Saint, and the sound of unknown tongues, might grate harshly on the cultivated ear, and not be consonant with the studied and well rounded periods of learned and high ones. May God keep us humble, that we forsake not the old paths.

Yours for the truth,

J. S. STRAIN.

E. L. Kelley, Dear Brother:—This writing may be difficult for you to understand, but we sincerely trust that the imperfections of the same may be overlooked, and that you will pardon our presumption in penning this little epistle. Please accept our hearty thanks for the part you have enacted in bringing your unworthy servant to the knowledge of the truth. We have already thanked the Father of lights to whom belongs the praise, and feel it our duty to thank his servants for their part of the work. As this may be unknown to you, we have written for the purpose of encouraging the brethren and, if possible, strengthening their hands. It may be a wonder to you as to the way and manner the effect of your labors reached me, seeing that we have never beheld one another in the face. Therefore we wished to briefly state how the same was accomplished that you may rejoice that your labors in years past have accomplished good to the cause a great distance from the place where the same were enacted.

From early childhood I had been taught that Joseph Smith was only a devil in human form, and was very strongly confirmed in the same by reading the works of his opponents. The charges of polygamy, self-exaltation, fornication, etc., combined with the tenets of popular opinion gathered the mists of superstition and intolerance around my mind in such a heavy cloud that for years I never had any inclination to investigate both sides of the question. Added to this, I endeavored for a long time to be a skeptic, but could not easily accept the idea that man is no better than a creeping insect of the dust. After groping in the dark a long period, I joined the Disciple or Campbellite Church, having concluded that spiritual gifts were confined to the first centuries succeeding the mission of Christ on earth. I supposed that the canon of Scripture was complete and that God ceased to give revelations to man. Thinking the Disciples came nearest to the apostolic standard, I remained a member of that institution over two years, but could not fail to see a striking dissimilarity between them and the apostolic church. I could not see when or where spiritual gifts were designed to cease, and why apostles, prophets, and inspired teachers were no longer needed in the church; especially as the Disciples claim to follow Bible practices, call Bible things by Bible names, and speak in Scripture language, the baldness of the theory became more and more apparent.

Becoming dissatisfied, I came very near throwing away everything that bore the name of religion, and my feet began to wander in the downward way. Finally, after a great deal of wavering in doubt and despair, I chanced to converse with a young man who lived in the neighborhood of a community of Latter Day Saints. He was not a member, but believed the doctrine and earnestly contended for the truth, presenting his arguments with such consummate skill that I concluded to search whether these things be so or not. A short time afterward, I read the debate held between you and Braden at Kirtland, Ohio. In the meanwhile, I reviewed the Bible, carefully comparing its teachings with the theology of to-day, bringing the most popular creeds to the test of scriptural truth. I found no apostles and prophets in any of them, no laying on of hands, gifts of the Holy Ghost, and no signs following them that believe. Next I found that the Latter Day Saints preached the ancient gospel as it ought to be preached, but the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith still stood in my way.

I set out to read that debate with the sole purpose in view of knowing all about the claims of the Book of Mormon to be of divine authority. Having already an outline of the scriptural doctrine of the Saints, it remained for me to inquire whether the Book of Mormon was of divine origin, and Joseph Smith a prophet or not.

In reading the first proposition of the Kirtland debate, I was astonished at the strength of your arguments, and the feebleness of the negative. Error is always weak, and the sophistry concurrent in Mr. Braden's argument showed plainly that he was on the side of error. I called to mind the admissions of several opponents of "Mormonism" that Smith was an unlearned man and their attempts to account for his wonderful advancement. By the time I finished reading the first proposition, I could see a reason for the faith, hope, and practice of the Saints. The defeat of Mr. Braden on the second proposition did not surprise me. On the third proposition I decided that not a man in the world could successfully reply to your first speech, and the murky clouds scattered away, leaving free access for the truth to my hitherto benighted mind. Then as I found myself an alien to the commonwealth of Israel, a stranger to the covenants of promise, and without God in the world, your feeble servant took his case to the Lord, according to the advice given in one of your speeches on the first proposition. As I continued the investigation, strange as it may seem, certain things were shown to me in a dream, the fulfillment of which has been remarkable. "If a prophet hath a dream, let him tell a dream; but he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully," saith the Lord through Jeremiah. The time has not yet come for me to relate this dream in full, but every item has been brought to pass thus far.

Thanks be to the Most High, I have obeyed the ancient gospel and now rejoice in hope of eternal glory.

Pardon me for this writing, and accept our thanks for your part in this matter. Had I never read that debate, perhaps I would now have been out at sea without chart or compass. Praise God for his unspeakable gift.

Pray for us, Bro. Kelley, that we may continue faithful to the end and obtain the crown of celestial glory.

WHEELING, W. Va., April 25.

Editors Herald:—It is with pleasure that I cast in my little mite in trying to say something encouraging to those striving to live the gospel law. Truly this is a very progressive age, and the work that we all so dearly love is onward, and it behooves us to strive earnestly to keep the faith and do the will of God, that we may all be able to enjoy eternal life.

Since attending General Conference and receiving the shells sent me by Bro. and Sr. Devore, I take this means to express my thankfulness to them, hoping it will reach them some day, that they may see that I truly appreciate their kindness. I think many times about your grand work, and I truly know that our heavenly Father is watching over his own.

Truly the time is at hand when each one should strive to do his whole duty before God. For one I find all in all in this work. My heart often goes out for those who were once workers in this cause that have let Satan hinder them from doing their whole duty before our God; for truly the time is coming when we must all stand before him, and how will we stand the test. Those who will be called to attend to such will be blessed as was Peter when Ananias and Sapphira fell dead before him; for they will have the power given from God. The Spirit of God searches all things, yea, the deep things of God. Truly I want nothing to come between me and my God, for I count the gift of eternal life worth more than all in this world, for it will never fade away, but will grow brighter and brighter.

I truly find some very great things in my life to overcome, and I must begin with every day's life, so that I may be able to gain eternal life. As I pen these lines I feel that I have no friend so dear as my heavenly Father. As I feel him my dearest friend, I want him to be with me in all I do. And I can also say that I truly love him more than anyone on earth. I feel that I want to adhere to all his will and strive to live to keep the same.

I cannot fully write my feelings in this grand work that we so dearly love. My hope and prayer is that each of us may see it as it is in all its glory and be able to come up higher. Truly each one that has a knowledge of this work should feel to thank our God, for every one of us is just what God has made of us, and to him let us ascribe all the praise. I find so much for all to do; fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters, and all, that not one should be idle. I truly love the move of the Daughters of Zion and know it will result in great good to the work of God and to future generations. I remain, a worker for truth and right, your sister,

AUBURN, Iowa, April 29.

Editors Herald:—I reached this place Saturday and began meetings the same evening; attendance and interest quite good. The Saints here are taking steps to build a church house. A railroad land company gave them a suitable lot and they have the stone for the foundation on the ground. I expect to visit Webster county in May.

I have assisted in writing up the testimony of Sr. Frances A. Ernst (now Lumley) who was healed of blindness. The article covers about ten pages of legal cap paper. I think it will be of interest to all Saints. Have secured her sworn statement, also that of Bro. and Sr. J. W. Chatburn, of Harlan, Iowa. When I secure statements of two others, will forward to you. While at home (Deloit) a few weeks ago I felt impressed to call on Sr. Ernst and secure her testimony. Hope it will be instructive. I feel joyous in this the Lord's work. May God's blessings be with you all. Yours in hope, Editors Herald:—I was not permitted to be at conference, but am thankful to hear as favorable a report from it as what has been given both by the church papers and from others. It is true it was reported that some misunderstanding existed among the ministry. If such report be true, I hope all was made right before the close of conference. The house of God must be a house of order and not of confusion. One of the missionaries—Bro. Joseph Ward—who has formerly labored in our district is sent to Northern Arkansas. He is a good worker in the Lord's vineyard and we will miss him very much in this district, but what is our loss will be gain to the good people of Arkansas.

I believe Bro. Sparling and the writer are the only ones of the traveling ministry now here, but by the help of God and the local ministry and the members one and all we hope to do a great work this year. Brethren and sisters, you have known the truth, now tell it to your neighbors. Read the church books and publications. I hope all the Saints in the Southern Missouri district will live so that their neighbors cannot truthfully speak evil of them.

Editors Herald:—Two weeks ago I went to Mikado, where I opened up the work some time ago, and promised them I would return again in the near future; so on my way to this place I called there, preached eight times, and baptized four, and others will follow. I also called at Oscoda, preached twice to the few Saints there with good liberty, baptized one, and left them feeling encouraged. I then came here and am preaching in the Saints' church every night to fair crowds. When I leave here I will likely go to West Branch to give attention to the wishes of Sr. Eliza Goff, as she desired through the columns of the Herald that an elder should call there and preach. I am feeling good in the work. Let us pray for the advancement of the cause.

ELLENBORO, Wis., April 30.

Editors Herald:—I have been preaching constantly since January 5, but notice that there is more than the usual amount of opposition. Elder Gardner, an ex-Advent minister with whom we have been having some trouble for two or three years back, has taken it upon himself to lecture against us at every opportunity. Likewise a German minister of the Reformed Lutheran Church is doing the same kind of work. I do not understand German well enough to do much with him, but a very zealous young brother of less than a year in the church, and who is a German, usually entertains the crowd after the minister's sermon, very much to the displeasure of the minister.

The "Book of Mormon" seems to be the chief point of attack with both these men. Each of them has a Book of Mormon, and very frequently if not usually they misquote or misread it. With the German minister his bread and butter is at stake. He frankly admitted last Sunday that of sixty new converts only sixteen have remained faithful since the "false prophets and dupes of Joseph Smith" had come around. But with Mr. Gardner it is different; he has no congregation, but still I think he is trying to make money out of it; at least he is trying to gain notoriety but he got very poor satisfaction out of me the last time we met, as I refused to notice him but once, after which I explained to the people his position and ours, stating that private views could be settled privately, but if he had public views, to let him get an indorsement from some church or society to the effect that he believed what he preached himself; that is, not simply an indorsement to debate with me, but an indorsement that he was sound in the faith.

He tried to palm off an old indorsement of a year or so ago, but he had admitted before about a hundred people that he believed in our idea of punishment, also that he believed in a spiritual resurrection, the kingdom in the heart; that God had implanted himself in man at the beginning like leaven is placed in a measure of meal, and that we would finally be made like God. With these ideas I knew very well that he could not get an indorsement from the Christian Advent Church, and so I demanded a new indorsement.

He denies that Palestine was ever barren, and I find that several books and encyclopedias rather support that idea. Looking through our church works I do not find what I want. Several speak of the recent rains in abundance but do not say that they had none before. Aside from this point and one other I answered him satisfactorily.

The other point is a grammatical one, and is concerning "the words of a book" which was to be delivered to a learned man. The pronoun which evidently refers to the word "book" and not "words" as is shown in the words that follow: "Read this I pray thee." The word "this" stands for a noun in the singular number, but "words" is in the plural. As a pronoun must agree with its antecedent in person and number, it shows that the book was to be delivered to the learned as well as the unlearned. I wrote the County Superintendent about the matter and he wrote me substantially as above. In reply I stated that in that case there was no need of the words "words of" as they were meaningless; besides, that very much of the Bible is ungrammatical in its construction, and if tested grammatically would be useless.

To-morrow I am to baptize Mr. Orton and others. Mr. Orton is the man who sent me his testimony concerning the healing of his wife, as printed in my last.

In breaking new ground last week I met much opposition. At first a general belief prevailed that I was a Mormon fresh from Salt Lake (if any thing could be fresh from so salt a lake). I obtained the use of a hall for one night and explained our position, reading the "Temple Lot suit," "Canada suit," and recent article in Chicago News Record, also our articles of faith, after which I heard expressions to the effect that at the next school meeting the schoolhouse would be opened for us by vote. We expect to start the tent in about two weeks. Was laid up three days last week with the "grip."

WHO ARE EVANGELISTS?

WHEN considering the scripture which says, "He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists," we are left to ask the question, What office did an evangelist fill? Webster defines the word "evangelist" thus:—

A preacher authorized to preach, but not having charge of a particular church, and not allowed to administer the eucharist.

This, evidently, is a modern definition, for Donnegan in his Greek Lexicon, in defining evangelistes, gives it thus:—

A bearer of good or joyful tidings. A teacher of the Christian doctrine. In the apostolic times, an aid or assistant preacher of the apostles, who went on missions from church to church.

This definition comes very nearly defining the duties and position of a seventy, as we have it given through revelation; yet I cannot harmonize that thought with what we have revealed in regard to evangelists. In the first place, Doctrine and Covenants 104: 17 says:—

It is the duty of the Twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers.

Now a seventy is not a branch officer, nor has he any special duties to perform in the branch after it is organized; but rather, he is not to labor in the branches, but to go out into the fields. He is no more a branch officer than is an apostle. They are officers of the church at large. Branches have nothing to do with their ordination, and they may as well be members of small branches as large ones. Not so with the evangelist. We read of him nowhere except in connection with branches or districts, and the branches requiring his services apparently to be "large branches."

Then as the evangelist, evidently, is not a seventy, let us see if we can get any clue as to what office he does hold in the church. The revelation referred to, after speaking of evangelical ministers being ordained in all large branches, goes right on in the next sentence and says:—

The order of this priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made.

Then after telling how it was handed down from Adam to Noah, it says, "Who were all high priests."

The words, "The order of this priesthood," must have referred to the "evangelical ministers" just mentioned, as that was the only order or ministry spoken of in that connection, and it says they "were all high priests." These were not only high priests, but they evidently held the presidency of the high priesthood, and were "the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made."

Neither do these facts prohibit them from being evangelists—bearers of glad tidings or teachers of the doctrines of Christ.

The high priest is preëminently a teacher of the doctrines of Christ as well as a presiding officer. The First Presidency is composed of three high priests, stakes are to be presided over by high priests with high priest councils. All large branches and districts are to be presided over by high priests.

If an elder be chosen who may by experience be found qualified to preside, as soon as practicable thereafter he should be ordained an High Priest.—D. C. 120: 2.

These should be the best expounders of the gospel. Since we have learned that high priests are to be ordained "in large branches," and evangelists were to be ordained "in all large branches," we see that they hold a very close relationship to each other, and we see how the high priests spoken of before could be evangelists. The objector may say that they could not be the same for the reason that high priests had to be "ordained by the direction of a high council, or General Conference." (D. C. 17: 17.)

That is true, but we find in the last revelation, in paragraph 8, in speaking of the duties of the Twelve, it says they are "to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church," that "it is the will of God that they do this, . . . observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers.

One "law already given," was that the Twelve were to ordain evangelical ministers in all large branches, and we find that the Twelve were also to ordain high priests in the large branches.

The objector may say that the two offices cannot be the same, for they were to ordain high priests and also evangelists. If there be a difference between the two, then we have a new presidency in a branch; but Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2 says,

A branch may be presided over by a High Priest, an Elder, Priest, Teacher, or Deacon.

There is no room in the branch for the evangelist to preside, so far as we have found, unless his office is synonymous with one of those mentioned.

It cannot be that he is just an elder, for elders may be ordained in any branch, besides the elder is only an "appendage" belonging to the high priesthood (D. C. 83: 5), and not necessarily as much an evangelical or gospel teacher as a full member of the gospel priesthood. He should only have the right to officiate as president in the absence of the high priest. (D. C. 104: 6.) Besides, the same objection is met in his case as with the high priest, for said revelation says to "ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers."

All three are on a parallel; but, as we have observed elsewhere, the elder is only to act in such office till he can be ordained a high priest, or some high priest be found or ordained to take his place. The evangelical minister here mentioned may have reference to the high priest that is to be ordained to take the place of said presiding elder. Besides, there may eventually be need of more high priests as the large branches become stakes.

The evangelist was very close to the apostle, anciently, in point of authority, "an aid or assistant preacher of the apostles," evidently next to the apostles in authority. The late revelation, paragraph 9, says:—

The parallels [in authority] are; in the Presidency, the President and counselors; in the second presidency, the Twelve; in the missionary work, first the Twelve; second, the Seventy; in the standing ministry; the Presidency, second, the high priests; third the elders, etc.

Then in the standing ministry, the high priest comes next to the Presidency—the same position occupied by the Twelve in missionary work. So we see that the high priest and the evangelist occupy the same position, both being local or branch officers.

So far as traveling from church to church is concerned, we read in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 42:—

And they [high priests] may travel, also, if they choose, but rather be ordained for standing presidents.

So there is nothing inconsistent in their traveling from church to church.

Some think the term "evangelist" could better be applied to an elder, for he is more adapted in his calling to be a bearer of glad tidings and travel than the high priest; but we read this in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 43:—

Which quorum [of elders] is instituted for standing ministers; nevertheless they may travel, yet they are ordained to be standing ministers to my church, saith the Lord.

Then they are no more qualified to travel than the high priest, if as much so. Besides, an elder is considerably below the apostle in authority.

OCTAVIA, Neb., June 19, 1894.

YE ARE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

FROM close observation and a long and careful study of the past and present conditions of the world and of the latter-day church, I am fully satisfied that we, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ as a body, have not in the past, neither do we at the present time, appreciate to that degree that we should the wonderful rights, duties, privileges, and responsibilities that we have voluntarily taken upon ourselves when we became members of the body of Christ, and covenanted with God to be Christ's light bearers and to light the world with good works, that the great source, our Father which is in heaven, may be glorified:—

Ye are the light of the world. . . . Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 5: 14-16.

These texts do not limit the light ncr its shining and lighting up the world by good works, but they command the church and every member in it to let their light so shine that those around us may be constrained to glorify our Father in heaven from seeing that we, as a body and as individuals, have a greater light than they have and that we are in deed and in truth the light of the world. Therefore, it is our bounden duty as the light bearers of Christ's church to put on Christ in spirit, in truth, and in good works, and make our bodies fit receptacles and fit conductors through which this holy light can shine, remembering that it is impossible for this wonderful light, which all of the sons and daughters of God are entitled to, to either remain in or shine through unholy bodies or temples any more than the Edison electric light could shine through mud and filth without wires, poles, and other lawful necessities and conditions.

Now, my beloved brethren and sisters, every one of us claims to be a part of the church which is the light of the world, and that we are entitled to a portion of this holy and wonderful light, which exceeds the light of the moon as much as the Edison electric light exceeds the light of an old tallow dip, a lamp, or gas light. Brethren and sisters, you will all admit that we as a people make these claims and that they are our legitimate rights and privileges; but right here arises a big "but" in the form of a question which every one who makes these high claims of being the light of the world must answer for himself. The question is this: Are we, as the Church of Christ and as individual members of that body, capable of practically demonstrating to the world that we are the light of the world, by stepping lawfully and rightfully to the front with our lights and letting them shine not only in all the written law but in the unwritten law, and in every good word or work until, like Edison with his electric light, we prove positively that we are not only in precepts but in examples, the light of the world, because the world is religiously starving to death on the precepts, and dogmas, and light of men? Then in order to make our claims good, we, the church individually, must put away our old tallow dips, and lamps, and gas lights, and legally possess ourselves of God's electric light that will not only electrify and purify us, but will electrify those around us, and that will push us to the front in all of the world's lawful reformatory measures. And, our lights should outshine theirs so much in all of the walks, words, and ways of life that the world would be left without an excuse and thus be forced to give glory to the Father of that light that lights the world.

Now, beloved Saints and friends, let us each one, at this the beginning of another year, make a thorough examination of ourselves. Mark well that I say, ourselves. And let us not deceive ourselves, but be practically sure of just what kind of a headlight we are carrying and letting shine. We may deceive ourselves and others with an old tallow dip or a wax candle, or a fine coal oil lamp, or with an Edison light and lots of gas force to back them with, and yet remain in darkness as to the true light of Christ—the light of the gospel; for the light of the gospel means something more than simply believing and being baptized for the remission of sins and having hands laid upon us for the Holy Spirit, and then sitting down satisfied with the light of tongues, healing, miracles, and other blessings we are entitled to for obedience to these first principles. These are to give “much assurance,” and to prepare and to electrify us with the light, power, wisdom, knowledge, and understanding of all things, and all truths, that we may in deed and in truth take the lead and be the light of the world in all good works, words, and ways.

These are our duties, these are our privileges, and for the faithful execution of our covenant to so let our light shine before men that they can see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven; for God will hold us accountable at the great day of reckoning, and our light, glory, honor, and power, will then shine as the sun if we have been lighted ourselves and have lighted others with the light of the sun of righteousness. Then, let me exhort my beloved brethren who are carrying more than an Edison headlight with much priesthood, and who are looking to a time when they are to become kings and priests and to reign on the earth, to be very careful how they let their headlights shine down upon us lesser lights, and upon the dear sisters who have no priesthood to fall back upon. See to it, brethren of the priesthood, especially those in high places, that there is neither contentions, fault finding, evil speaking, jealousy, backbiting, nor anything else that offends or weakens the faith of the little ones; because it would be better for us to be cast into the sea with a mill stone about our neck than to offend one of these little ones.

Again, I say, brethren of the priesthood, let us turn our headlights from all of these things and from one another's weaknesses and let all of our faces be turned to building one another up and to encouraging and strengthening the weak ones, especially the dear sisters in their prayer meeting and in their meetings, writings, and endeavors to educate mothers, and daughters, and children, the Sunday schools, the religious all and other reformatory measures, until we reach antenatal conditions, and there commence at the great fountain head of all reforms. And so mote it be.

Your brother in Christ,

A. HAWS.

OAKLAND, Cal., Jan., 9, 1895.

“FEED MY SHEEP;” “FEED MY LAMBS;” “FEED MY SHEEP.”

THE above triple injunction of our Savior was given to those into whose charge he had committed the care of his flock on earth. And the threefold repetition represents and emphasizes at once the paramount importance of this great charge, and the earnest care and love he has for his sheep, the children of God. The respective terms, “sheep” and “lambs” apply to all the members of the flock, and especially does the term “lambs” express the tender care and infinite love of the great Shepherd of the flock, without respect to youth or age, standing or condition.

The sheep were scattered throughout the world, and to Peter and his brethren were committed the work of gathering them into the true fold. “Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature” (Mark 16: 15) was the great commission; for it was necessary “that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem.” (Luke 24: 47.) The Twelve Apostles were not the only ones upon whom this duty devolved. He had appointed other Seventy also, and these with the Twelve were to be “fishers of men.” He gave also prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, as assistant shepherds over the flock. (1 Cor. 12:

28; Eph. 4: 11, 12.) During the great apostasy as foretold by Christ and his apostles the order of the church or fold of Christ has been lost sight of and a different order, or, more properly speaking, many different and conflicting orders have been set up, each claiming to be the true order which Christ established, forgetting that God does not contradict himself either in word or deed.

The works of his hands are verity and judgment; and all his commandments are sure. They stand fast forever and ever, and are done in truth and uprightness.—Ps. 111: 7, 8.

Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it.—Ecl. 3: 14.

In consequence of the apostasy, “many plain and precious” truths have been left out of the history of the ancient church; so that in the New Testament we have but a fragmentary account of the order of that church, yet sufficient to show that it differed very materially from the churches which men have set up. But in the restoration of the gospel as foretold by Christ and foreseen by John, God has again revealed in full the true order of his church as established by Christ. Again the great commission is renewed and the divine injunctions with all their imperative-ness and force, “Feed my sheep;” “Feed my lambs,” “Feed my sheep.” And while it is the special duty of the Twelve and the Seventy to go into all the world and gather the sheep into the fold, and to organize them into branches and districts, or stakes, God has made provision for other servants to be appointed as shepherds under the direction of the chief shepherds of the flock on earth.

The high priests and elders holding the same priesthood [as the Twelve and Seventy] are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the Presidency and the Twelve.—D. C. 120: 8. (See also D. C. 107: 42, 43.)

Still further God has provided “helps,” or assistants to these shepherds, as “priests,” “teachers,” and “deacons.” (D. C. 17: 8-12; 104: 31.) In section 17 we find each officer's duty clearly defined, and God has said to his church:—

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so. Amen.—D. C. 104:44.

Woe to the idol [or vain] shepherd that leaveth the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.—Zech. 11:17.

Fellow shepherds, God has called us to the work of feeding his flock; we have accepted that duty, and when we were set apart to that sacred task we pledged ourselves to be diligent in our calling; and from that covenant we can never be absolved. We cannot escape the obligation by resigning our priesthood. That priesthood covenant will remain binding upon us. It is perpetual, and we must account for the manner in which we have honored or dishonored it. If we are not diligent in our calling, we are vain, wicked, or "idol" shepherds, "unprofitable servants." "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness," is the eternal fiat.

Then how important it is that we gird up our loins and discharge the duty that God has laid upon us! Are not many of the branches languishing for the means of grace which God has provided? The wanderers are not sought after as they should be; the lame are not cared for; the weak are not strengthened; the "ready to halt" are neglected.

It is not enough that the "traveling ministry" should visit the branches, and bring forth their strong reasonings to convince the world of the truth of the gospel. God saw the necessity of the sheep being fed by other hands—the "standing ministry;" and no other set of men can do our work. How often do we see when a traveling elder comes among us, with fluency of speech, every member is present, and great apparent interest is manifest as the logical reasoner and apt scriptorian cudgels the sects, and proves the theory of our religion to be biblical and logical; and he thinks perhaps that that branch is a live, working, spiritual branch; but alas! when he is gone where are the evidences of spirituality and godly activity?

A "baker's dozen" greets the president at the next meeting, and but little sign of spiritual vitality is seen. The fault is not with the traveling minister, it is deeper down. The members of the flock have not learned the beauty and power of practical religion; because those who are appointed to the immediate watchcare have neglected their duties and have not fed the flock of God. The gospel of Christ cannot benefit us unless we practice it. "Blessed are they who hear the word of God and keep it," said Jesus. Practical religion must be taught, and all must practice it or suffer loss. "A blow from a friend is better than a kiss from an enemy." May God help us all, both teachers and members, to "come up higher" as the Holy Spirit invites; and may all upon whom the great duty is or shall be laid as shepherds over the flock of God, obey the chief shepherd's injunctions, "Feed my sheep;" "Feed my lambs;" "Feed my sheep."

CHARLES DERRY.

TOO HARSH.

EVER and anon comes the word from some quarter that some standard bearer of the gospel has been too harsh. Some of those complaints may not be well founded, but that often it is but too true is undeniable. Who is it that takes kindly to the effort of another, which however true and just, falls harshly on your ear? While thinking of how well you like harshness adjust to its use, if you can, thus:—

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them.

There is a standing premium by Latter Day Saints for those who will examine our position upon its merits in kindness, and those who do so we call gentlemen. Section 38, paragraph 9 of Doctrine and Covenants contains this:—

I say unto you . . . every man . . . let your preaching be the warning voice, . . . in mildness and in meekness.

I emphasize "mildness" and "meekness," neither one of them being the synonym of harshness.

In 1887 the Lord, having occasion to give what the church needed, said, among other things to the elders:—

They shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.

I emphasize "courtesy" and "win," as harshness is not the embodiment of either.

But the man given to harshness says:—

I am not harsh; it is only my natural way of saying it.

The bear could say as much, for it is only his natural way of doing when he tears the lamb to pieces.

To be harsh is to offend the sensitive and finest of minds, by which they are closed to the reception of the truth temporarily in all such cases, and with some during their lifetime. It does not only thwart the effectiveness of the one who is harsh, but makes a thorny road for the mild, meek man who follows. It can never do any good but blights, ruins, destroys.

If those who are the called, trusted servants of God, who have the strength of his Spirit to sustain them in bearing it, are not to be so dealt with, why deal so with those without whom we seek to bring into the kingdom?

In April, 1894, the Lord said, My servants have been harsh one with another.

He expected them to stop it. Will they all do so with one another and mankind?

And with the poet

Speak gently, it is better far

To rule by love than fear;

Speak gently, let not harsh words mar

The good we may do here.

An elder in the field is responsible for the above, and simply withholds his name so as to not strike direct and appear harsh; for he has been substituted somewhere for the harsh man, whatever his name may be.

EXPLANATION.

In our Pastoral Address found in Herald for May 1, page 285, we discover two omissions which may be misunderstood by some.

It is only Northern Illinois that comes under our jurisdiction; Southern Illinois has been added to the mission of Bro. Joseph Luff.

When we speak of Bro. F. G. Pitt being in charge of the Northern half of Illinois, we mean exclusive of the Nauvoo district, which is under the direct charge of Bro. J. S. Roth, of Grinnell, Iowa. That is, Bro. Pitt's charge comprises Northern Illinois and Kewanee districts.

Respectfully,
ALEX. HALE SMITH.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints in Webster and Taney Counties, Missouri:—I will say that I hope to visit you soon; but let us be careful in the work, and let us not be so fearful of wrong that we will do nothing at all. The Doctrine and Covenants teaches that idlers shall not have place in Zion and that the "willing and obedient" shall eat the good things of Zion in these last days; also that if our language is not meek and edifying, it is not of God. So let us honor the Lawgiver by keeping the law, and we shall be blessed accordingly.

I wish to thank the Saints in this district for aiding me in getting a horse on which to ride.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

POMO, Howell county, Missouri.

To the Ministry and Saints in the Southeastern Mission: Greeting:—Having been appointed by the late General Conference to labor in and have charge of the Southeastern mission, I take this method of addressing you to ask your hearty coöperation in the great work to us intrusted. United, persistent effort, energetic, zealous labor, on the part of all is what is desired. The mission, I believe, will have a greater number of laborers this year than heretofore, but most of the elders who come from abroad will be under the disadvantage of laboring in fields that are altogether new to them, and it is hoped the local ministry and the membership generally, will assist these brethren in becoming acquainted with the fields where they labor, and otherwise aid them all they can so that the efforts all may be more effectual for good.

As I view it there is before us a year of incessant toil and unremitting labor. Let us be brave and true; enduring that toil with what patience we may, performing that labor to the best possible advantage, according to our ability, always remembering that God requires us to do our best, and that he will not be satisfied with less. This is a day of sacrifice and constant service; of cross bearing and true devotion. The cause in which we are engaged is worthy of the very best effort we can possibly make. No hardship through which we may have to pass will be so great but that we should bear it with patience and meekness. No sacrifice the Lord may require will be so great that we cannot safely afford to make it. In fact, we cannot afford to not make it.

"Gather my Saints together unto me, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice," said the Psalmist David. If we are to be gathered with those here styled "my saints," does it not follow that we must be prepared for such gathering in the way indicated, that is, by making covenant with the Lord "by sacrifice?" "He that will not deny himself," etc., "cannot be my disciple," said Jesus.

It is a glorious work in which we are engaged, the work of carrying the gospel, the "glad tidings of great joy," to the people that are in darkness. What an opportunity! What a privilege! How sad, should such an opportunity be neglected! What a loss, should such a privilege be unimproved! Remember, we are "laborers together with God," and that we are enjoined to "labor together for the good of the work "entrusted to all." Laborers with God! Just think of it! Should we not rejoice to be engaged in the same work with our heavenly Father? Let us see to it that we do the work well, and then shall we have cause to "rejoice evermore."

I hope the laity will feel that they have their part to do in carrying on this great work as well as the ministry. The work is intrusted to all. We can all do something. In doing that something, however small the work may seem, we will, if the work be done well, be in a position and condition to hear and appreciate the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant," when the day of rewards shall come. All cannot proclaim the gospel from the pulpit; all are not called to that work. But the work is "entrusted to all," and the efforts of the ministry unaided by that of the laity will evidently be not nearly so successful as if all were laboring together to get the people to see and walk in the light of truth. So, while all may not be able to do pulpit preaching, they may assist in aiding others to go. And to my mind the one who enables the elder to go and preach is entitled to and will receive as great reward as the elder who does the preaching. As it is written, "How shall they preach except they be sent?" How indeed?

People in all the world are hungering for the bread of life. The gospel "is the power of God unto salvation," the very thing that will supply their wants, and the only thing that will. The ministry are ready to take it to them, but how shall they preach the gospel to a benighted people unless they be sent to them? Echo answers, How? Truly the work is intrusted to all.

Let us all remember to pay our tithes and offerings, and not rob the Lord by withholding them. Not that I would impose a burden upon anyone, but I suggest this as the best means of removing all burdens in a temporal way, for by proper observance of these things we are promised a blessing so great that "there shall not be room to receive it." Do not say, "What I can give would be too little to do any good." Remember what was said of the widows's mite, "She hath given more than they all," etc. When this gospel goes into all the world it will be carried by small sacrifices made by big hearts. The sacrifice of one, however small, if properly made, will be just as acceptable to God as any other, however large. These are the sacrifices in part, that will fit us for the gathering before referred to. Remember it is not the amount that tells, but the principle that prompts the giving. The world is full of shallow forms and empty professions that satisfy not. These will never bless nor save the world. They may do for the devotees of man made religions; but for Saints of God—those who expect to have part in the first resurrection and participate in its glories, nothing but the "faith which works by love and purifies the heart" will stand the test.

My permanent address will be Independence, Missouri. My mission address, until further notice, will be Pilot Oak, Graves county, Kentucky. Any mail carefully addressed to either place will reach me in time. Will the brethren under conference appointment please be prompt in sending in the reports of labors, etc., at end of each quarter.

Yours in gospel bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 23, 1895.

To the General Conference Appointees and the Saints of the Southwestern Mission; Greeting:—Having been appointed in charge of the mission, I desire to obtain all the information possible in regard to the wants and needs of the various parts of the field, hence take this method of addressing you and inviting correspondence, not only of the missionary force but of any others that may know where labor is practicable or especially needed.

Bro. A. J. Moore will please take the active oversight of the work in Texas; Bro. H. H. Robinson will take charge of the work in Arkansas and Indian Territory and Bro. G. W. Shute of Oklahoma Territory. We all desire the best results in the part of the field where we are appointed to labor, therefore let each one see to it that with zealous care we labor together in unity and brotherly love, avoiding unkindly criticism of others' labors or methods, that the Spirit of the Master may dwell richly with us and enable us to do a work the coming year that shall ring down through the ages in the joyful acclaim of the redeemed ones that shall be brought to the knowledge of the truth through our instrumentality.

My home address is Moorhead, Iowa. My mission address till farther notice will be Webb City, Missouri.

With love and kind regards for all, I am,

Your brother and colaborer,

GEORGE MONTAGUE.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, April 17, 1895.

To the Saints of the Nauvoo District:—As I have been placed in charge of the Eastern Iowa and Nauvoo districts, I hereby inform the Saints of the Nauvoo district that I will meet with them at their conference, which convenes at Keb, on the 1st of June. I hope all the conference appointees, also all who may be able to do labor in the district, will meet me there, so we can arrange for systematic work for the year, for in union there is strength.

J. S. ROTH.

GRINNELL, Iowa, April 29, 1895.

MARRIED.

GRAVES—PRICE.—At the residence of Elder J. M. Terry, Saint Joseph, Missouri, April 24, 1895, Mr. Wm. D. Graves and Sr. Etta Price were united in marriage, Elder Terry officiating. We feel assured that blessings will follow this union. The contracting parties are from Doniphan county, Kansas, the bride being the daughter of Bro. J. D. Price, near Fanning, Kansas. Their future home will be near Troy, Kansas.

SAGE—CULL.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, March 4, 1895, Mr. Wm. E. Sage and Sr. Rebecca J. Cull, Elder J. M. Terry officiating. A few invited guests partook of the wedding supper.

DIED.

GARLICH.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, April 17, 1895, Josephine, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Robert Garlich, aged 5 years, 6 months, and 4 days. Funeral service held April 19, in the Pleasant Grove church; sermon by Elder T. T. Hinderks, assisted by A. W. Head. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

DARRIN.—Viola May Gertrude, daughter of Wm. H. and Ozeta Darrin, died April 14, 1895, at Hamburg, Iowa, aged 9 months and 17 days. Funeral at Hamburg, April 16, at ten a. m.; sermon by Priest H. F. Durfey, from Mark 10: 14 and Matt. 18: 10.

WHEELER.—Edward Everett Wheeler departed this life at his home in Millersburg, Illinois, April 20. A complication of diseases baffled our skill, and took the coveted prize from our weeping throng. This great and good man was born at Garrettsville, Ohio, November 15, 1862, and was wedded to Catharine Davis, November 15, 1886. Three sons and two daughters were the result of this union. The wife and children all survive to mourn their irreparable loss. This indefatigable worker and ardent adorer embraced the faith in June, 1883, in Southeastern Kansas. He was ordained to the eldership on January 27, 1885, and as a Seventy January 5, 1892. This sleeping soldier was wide awake to the interests of the church, and tenacious for his convictions of right. His earthly sojourn was not quite so long as that of the dear Savior whom he has joined to part from no more. He lies in our village cemetery. The obsequies were conducted by Elder J. Chisnall and the writer. A large concourse paid tribute to the memory of the honored and lamented man. May the loving Hand supply the needs of the afflicted family.

M. T. SHORT.

RAWSON.—Myrtle Rebecca, youngest child of Bro. Thomas and Sr. Mary E. Rawson, was born January 10, 1894; died April 17, 1895. She was a bright and loving child, and leaves two sisters, one brother, and a sorrowing father and mother, to mourn the loss of their little one. Funeral sermon by Elder A. Barr and C. Loomis, April 19, to a fair audience.

We laid her away in deep sadness,
Yet not without hope in our breast,
For again we shall meet her with gladness
And enter that heavenly rest.

YOCUM.—Edith Clara, infant daughter of Bro. J. A. and Sr. Verna Yocum, aged 2 days. Interment in Walnut Hill cemetery, Council Bluffs, Iowa. She was blessed a few hours before her death by John Carlile. T. W. Williams conducted the services; prayer at the grave.

HAYER.—At Mission, Illinois, January 17, 1895, Olen Edwin, son of Bro. Elias and Sr. Annie Hayer, aged 6 years, 1 month, and 14 days. Olen was a bright boy; was very fond of books and Sunday school, of which he was a regular attendant up till his death, which was very sudden. He fell asleep in Jesus in perfect peace. We loved him dearly but God loved best. Funeral sermon by Thomas Hougas, assisted by M. J. Danielson, April 15, 1895.

BISHOP.—Bro. James Bishop died at St. David's Place, Mountain Ash, South Wales, March 31. Deceased was born August 14, 1814, at Wedmore, Somersetshire. Was baptized in the days of Henshaw. Was rebaptized February 15, 1869, by Elder John Watkins. Was ordained an elder April 4, 1869, by Jason W. Briggs. He was interred at Llanelly. Funeral sermon was preached by Elder Adolphus Edwards, in the Saints' chapel, Llanelly, April 4. Deceased was noted for his hospitality, and his residence was always a home for the traveling ministry. He was strictly honest and truthful, and died firm in the faith. Some few months since, when his son, Elder A. N. Bishop, called upon him, when going to conference, he said: "Tell them in conference, my boy, that I am with them in this life and shall be with them in the life that is hereafter." He leaves a large family of sons, daughters, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren to mourn.

CLARK.—William Orlie, son of Bro. E. O. and Sr. Janet Clark, at Boonesborough, Iowa, February 27, 1895, aged 4 years, 6 months, and 3 days.

TROUGHEAR.—Ann, wife of Bro. James Troughear, at Boonesborough, Iowa, March 29, 1895. Sr. Troughear was born in Oughterside, England, December 14, 1819, and emigrated to this country in 1869, her husband having preceded her about seventeen months.

After having been an exemplary member of several religious bodies, she at last united with the Reorganized Church in May, 1879, in which church she enjoyed such blessings and manifestations as only faithful Saints can enjoy. She was loved and respected by all who knew her, and although an invalid for three years previous to her death, suffering all but death many times, she never was heard to murmur or utter one word of complaint. Her husband and two children survive her.

PRATT.—Tina, daughter of Bro. Henry and Sr. Christina Pratt, at Boonesborough, Iowa, February 27, 1895, aged 2 years, 9 months, and 22 days. Memorial sermon of both children was preached Sunday, March 24, in the Saints' chapel, Boonesborough, by Bro. W. C. Nirk.

NIGHT PARTIES FOR CHILDREN.

Says a physician: "I abominate night parties for children. I believe every physician does. It is not so much the exposure, and the eating in the night, and the bad associations formed (of a high-toned sort, possibly), but the breaking into the sleep habit. Equally bad it is for children to study in the evening. It gorges their brains with blood, and if they sleep they dream. I had a little patient of twelve years, who was wasted and nervous, and whose dreams were filled with his problems. It was a marvel and a pride to his parents that the youngster worked out hard problems in his sleep such as he failed to master when awake. But he came near his final problem. I locked up his books at four o'clock. He must not touch one after his supper. He must play and romp and then go to bed. He is now robust. You cannot emphasize too strongly the mischief of children's night study."

"A stern chase is a hard one." He who has fallen behind in any race of life finds that it is not an easy matter to regain his lost ground. Even if he makes as good speed as the best racer in advance of him, the distance between him and the front is not lessened in the smallest degree. But when after a long struggle a man finds himself abreast of the foremost line in the race he is running, let him not think that that race is now to be won with ease. Any slackening of endeavor on his part will put him again at the rear. Catching up is a hard task; so is keeping up. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear; and he that hath nerves to use, let him use them.—H. Clay Trumbull.

Within reach of everyone there is an ability to be and to do which is in one sense outside of and beyond one's own natural ability. This ability is a willingness to hear and heed good advice. It was Goethe who said that to be willing to take good advice is practically to have the same ability that is shown in the advice itself. And so the man who refuses to consider the proffers of an adviser deprives himself of a power at once greater than his own, but which he yet might have as his own.—Et.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

Three additional chapters describe American Antiquities, and Hebrew Relics, one containing the statement of Dr. Lederer, a converted Jew, etc., all corroborative of the claims of the Book of Mormon.

Nothing in This World

Is so cheap as a newspaper, whether it be measured by the cost of its production or by its value to the consumer. We are talking about an American, metropolitan, daily paper of the first class like THE CHICAGO RECORD. It's so cheap and so good you can't afford in this day of progress to be without it. There are other papers possibly as good, but none better, and none just like it. It prints all the real news of the world—the news you care for—every day, and prints it in the shortest possible space. You can read THE CHICAGO RECORD and do a day's work too. It is an independent paper and gives all political news free from the taint of party bias. In a word—it's a complete, condensed, clean, honest family newspaper, and it has the largest morning circulation in Chicago or the west—140,000 to 150,000 a day.

Prof. T. J. Hatfield of the Northwestern University says: "THE CHICAGO RECORD comes as near being the ideal daily journal as we are for some time likely to find on these mortal shores."

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archæology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

LINCOLN'S FAITH IN PRAYER.

THE religion of President Lincoln has sometimes been questioned, but there is ample evidence on record, especially such as has been transmitted by his biographers, that he was essentially Christian. The latest testimonial of this kind comes from Gen. James F. Rusling, who has contributed a paper to the "Lincoln Number" of The Independent (April 4), in which he says primarily that it may be that Mr. Lincoln's early beliefs were unsettled, but that it is certain that our great war, as it progressed, sobered and steadied him, and that in the end he came to "walk humbly before God." As striking evidence of this fact, General Rusling gives a conversation that occurred in his presence in July, 1863, in Washington, on the Sunday after the battle of Gettysburg. General Sickles had lost a leg on the second day of Gettysburg, and arrived in Washington on the Sunday following (July 5). As a member of General Sickles' staff, General Rusling was called to see him, and while there Mr. Lincoln called, with his son Tad. We let General Rusling tell the story:—

"He [Mr. Lincoln] greeted Sickles very heartily and kindly, of course, and complimented him on his stout fight at Gettysburg, and then, after inquiring about our killed and wounded generally, passed on to the question as to what Meade was going to do with his victory. They discussed this pro and con at some length, Lincoln hoping for great results if Meade only pressed Lee actively, but Sickles was dubious and diplomatic, as became so astute a man. And then, presently, General Sickles turned to him and asked what he thought during the Gettysburg campaign, and whether he was not anxious about it?

"Mr. Lincoln gravely replied, no, he was not; that some of his cabinet and many others in Washington were, but that he himself had had no fears. General Sickles inquired how this was, and seemed curious about it. Mr. Lincoln hesitated, but finally replied: 'Well, I will tell you how it was. In the pinch of your campaign up there, when everybody seemed panic-stricken, and nobody could tell what was going to happen, oppressed by the gravity of our affairs I went into my room one day and locked the door, and got down on my knees before Almighty God, and prayed to him mightily for victory at Gettysburg. I told him this was his war, and our cause his cause, but that we couldn't stand another Fredericksburg or Chancellorsville. And I then and there made a solemn vow to Almighty God that if he would stand by our boys at Gettysburg I would stand by him. And he did, and I will. And after that (I don't know how it was and I can't explain it) but soon a sweet comfort crept into my soul that things would go all right at Gettysburg, and that is why I had no fears about you.' He said this solemnly and pathetically, as if from the very depths of his heart, and both Sickles and I were deeply touched by his manner.

"Presently General Sickles asked him what news he had from Vicksburg. He answered, he had none worth mentioning, but that Grant was still 'pegging away' down there, and he thought a good deal of him as a general, and wasn't going to remove him, though urged to do so; and 'besides,' he added, 'I have been praying over Vicksburg also, and believe our heavenly Father is going to give us a victory there too, because we need it, in order to bisect the Confederacy and have the Mississippi flow unvended to the sea.' Of course he did not know that Vicksburg had already fallen, July 4, and that a gunboat was soon to arrive at Cairo with the great news that was to make that Fourth of July memory in history forever.

"He said these things very deliberately and touchingly, as if he believed thoroughly in them. Of course, I do not give his exact words, but very nearly his words, and his ideas precisely. He asked us not to repeat what he said—at least, not then—lest 'people might laugh, you know.' But his tragic death, and the long lapse of years since, and his imputed infidelity if not atheism, would seem to justify my speaking now. General Sickles also well remembers the above conversation, and gave the substance of it in a recent after-dinner address in Washington."—Literary Digest.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON'S BELIEF IN IMMORTALITY.

MR. WILLIAM E. BRYANT gives to the readers of The New England Magazine a very entertaining account of a recent visit to "Crow's Nest," the Northern country home of Joseph Jefferson. Mr. Bryant discovered in Mr. Jefferson "a religious man, with faith in God and a firm belief in a future existence." In this connection he writes:—

"One pleasant summer's day, after enjoying a fishing excursion with him, while riding home to 'Crow's Nest,' jogging along through the forest path, I had occasion to remark, turning from some discussion of stage matters, that it sometimes seemed to me that life was not ordered as wisely as it might have been, that we had too little opportunity to exercise our mature judgment and utilize our experience. The first twenty years of life, I said, are spent in preparation, and the next twenty in experiments and blunders, and when we are old enough to appreciate life and its opportunities, when we are really well balanced mentally and physically, then decay begins, and before we know it we are ready to be shelved, if death does not cut us down before our powers have begun to decay. Mr. Jefferson listened quietly to my murmurings, putting out his hand occasionally to guard his face from the overhanging branches of the trees as we drove through the tangled wood-path, and then said with a quiet earnestness that was impressive:—

“My friend, you are not right. You would be right if this life ended all. It does not. I feel sure you are wrong. It seems to me that there must be a hereafter, where we shall continue to grow. I am convinced that this is merely the beginning of life. There is much in nature itself to enforce the idea of immortality. The caterpillar even teaches that. Would God have made that crawling, unpleasant grub, and transformed it into a beautiful butterfly, perpetuating its existence from one state to another, and leave man, the noblest of his creatures, to grope through this world and be annihilated? O, no, my friend, there is surely a future for you and me not bounded by time. What it is I have no very clear idea; but it will be somewhere. It will be where we can grow and expand.”—Ex.

PRUNED TO DEATH.

LOOKING over an orchard that was pruned last year in woodchopper's style, the remark of a neighbor after seeing the results, that the pruner must have been short of firewood, was a natural one. The trees were uniformly “pruned up” — lower limbs taken off, and very little thinning done to let in air and light among the upper branches. Where limbs were taken off by the saw, stubs several inches long were left, while with the ax the cut was just as it happened. In neither case was any precaution used to prevent a removed limb from taking with it a considerable strip of bark. The wounds were not painted or otherwise protected.

But the surprising thing is that while the “remains” of this orchard, in common with all apple trees this year, bloomed very freely; the trees are now bare of anything but leaves. New branches started out everywhere from the ground up, and it is evident that all the vitality of the trees is being expended to repair the loss of wood. I also observed a few trees in my own orchards, both pears and apples, which dropped their young fruit, and in these cases it has been as a sequence of pruning last year, though it was done with moderation. This impresses upon me anew the importance of paying more heed to the proper forming of the heads of fruit trees by knife pruning, followed up with judgment and care all through the spring and summer. Shock is as pernicious to the vegetable organism as to that of men and animals, from the surgical point of view.—Garden and Forest.

A POLAR CITY.

Numbers of explorers who have sought the Arctic regions in quest of the pole have told of a mysterious city mirrored against the northern sky—stately buildings in choice architecture, tall and imposing spires, but such as differ from anything we know about. Whether the foundation of this mirage is a reality and only unrecognizable because of transposition as to directions, whether it is a work of some mysterious remnant of our race that once occupied the pole, or whether this is some fanciful feature of the frost, as the peculiar shubbery we see on the window pane—whatever this is, it must be consigned to the perplexing enigmas of the unknown region. Who knows but some spot, once the theater of busy and advanced human life, may have escaped the general cataclysmal wreck, and this city may be the silent and as yet undiscovered witness of pre-polar time, standing alone in the dead desolation, in the rigid shroud of now polar death! If we must be barred from entering this undiscovered country, we may add to our equipment by a careful noting of its mirage, and then give to the base of these phenomena a most thorough study.—Sel.

ELEPHANTS IN AFRICA.

The elephant of Africa is still a tolerably abundant animal. Its numbers, though doubtless diminished by more than one half within this century, are probably to be counted by the hundred thousand. Nevertheless in less than one hundred years the field which is occupied has been greatly reduced, and between the ivory hunter and the sportsman, armed with guns of ever-increasing deadliness, it will certainly not require another century of free shooting to annihilate the African species.

An interesting item has reached us from Ohio, where a Roman Catholic priest gave notice at two services of a benefit which was to be held in the town in behalf of a Lutheran pastor who had lost all his property by fire. The priest recommended that his people buy tickets and so help a man whose misfortune was great, but the worth of whose work all recognized. That is an example of real Christian unity which deserves to be specially commended.—The Outlook.

THE FOUNDATION STONE OF SUCCESS.

The one great rule of business is that of honesty, absolute and unqualified honesty, writes Edward W. Bok in the May Ladies' Home Journal. All the rules of business are worthless if they are not founded on that one and only foundation stone to true commercial success. Honesty is not alone the best policy in business; it is the one and only policy. Upon it, and upon it alone, can a good reputation be built, and a man in business without a reputation for honesty might just as well stop. Any deviation from the rule of honesty in business may bring temporary gain, but it invariably means permanent loss. On the other hand, a strict adherence to an honest policy may mean a temporary loss, but it is sure to result in a permanent gain.

A CRITIC OF RENAN.

A paper that will attract widespread attention in orthodox circles is a scathing criticism of Renan's “Life of Jesus,” from the pen of John D. McPherson, of the United States Supreme Court, which appears in the Arena for May. McPherson goes carefully through Renan's famous work, and upon the examination of the authorities he cites shows that his deductions are not sustained by historical evidence. Several of the most important criticisms of Renan on the character of the ministry of Jesus, such as his conscious imposture as a thaumaturgist, are alleged to be based upon insufficient and flimsy evidence. The paper will most assuredly be read with avidity in orthodox circles, for Mr. McPherson's acute legal mind has brought forward several important points which have escaped other critics.

RUDYARD KIPLING TO REVISIT INDIA.

Much interest will be felt by the public in the return of Rudyard Kipling to India. He has just agreed to furnish a regular contribution to The Cosmopolitan Magazine for the coming year, beginning his work upon his return to India. India has never been critically considered by such a pen as Kipling's, and what he will write for The Cosmopolitan will attract the widest attention, both here and in England.

The rapid growth of the summer conference idea as a factor in American progress is illustrated by a somewhat elaborate article in the May Review of Reviews, in which forecasts are given of not less than seventy-five important scientific, religious, patriotic, reformatory, and educational gatherings to be held in the United States during the next six months. The article is of value to teachers and other intellectual folks as an aid in determining the mooted question, “Where to spend the summer.”

LAMONI, IOWA, MAY 15, 1895.

THERE was a striking and satisfactory advance in church work for the Reorganization during the last conference year, and present indications manifest promise for a much greater advance the year now fairly opening upon us.

No halfway hesitating policy for work will do,—the time for halting and tampering with the work to be done, is past; forward and onward are the words for the workers this year.

The word coming to us from those already in their fields is cheering. "I have never enjoyed a better degree of liberty and the Spirit than since the late conference," writes one. Another, "I have at times hardly known myself; so uplifted has my spirit been in preaching the word." Another still, "The word has never been plainer, the promises of the gospel clearer to me than now." And so does the Master work with those who are "workers together with God."

MISTAKEN AGAIN.

THE Deseret News in a subsequent issue to the one from which we lately quoted matters regarding the affairs of the late April session of conference, in a spirit of possible repentance, has published the following, which we give for a purpose:—

THOMAS, NOT DAVID SMITH.

The attention of the NEWS has been called to the fact that in the press dispatches last week regarding the conference of the Reorganized church of Latter-day Saints at Independence, Missouri, in the quotation of an alleged revelation concerning vacancies in certain offices in that church, the names of David H. Smith and Thomas W. Smith were given so as to convey a somewhat misleading idea of the proceedings at that conference. A copy of the "revelation" referred to has now been received. It bears the date of April 15, 1894. The part dealing with the vacancy in the first presidency reads:

"It is not yet expedient in me that the quorum of the presidency, and the quorum of the twelve apostles shall be filled, for reasons which will be seen and known unto you in due time. My servant David H. Smith is yet in my hand and I will do my will in the time for its accomplishment."

The paragraph quoted in an editorial of the NEWS on the proceedings of the conference and also in a correspondence subsequently published refers to Thomas W. Smith. The exact words are,—

"For the same reasons in me that it is not expedient to fill the quorums of the first presidency and the twelve, who are apostles and high priests, it is not expedient that a patriarch for the church should be indicated and appointed. My servant Thomas W. Smith is in my hand; and his bishopric shall be continued for a season; if he fully recover he will enter again into the work; if I take him to myself another will be appointed in his stead when the quorum is filled."

The subject is again referred to in these columns because of a desire to present it with greater accuracy than it was possible to do from the necessarily brief account received over the wire. The fact remains, as previously stated, that the members of the Reorganized church, as far as can be judged by the proceedings of the conference as reported, are divided on the question whether this purported revelation is authentic or not. That this is a serious dissension in the ranks cannot be denied. We again express the hope that even this division may ultimately result in benefit to the honest in heart. The "revelation" itself states with reference to the long vacancy in the presidency that it "shall be well for my work in the end." It would be well indeed if it should prove to be a means whereby many of those who love the Gospel and yet pursue a course separate from that of the Church for which Joseph the Prophet laid down his life, were led back into union with their brethren. In the end it will be apparent that what leads to division and dissension among the followers of the Divine Master is not from Him and must result in error, weakness and defeat.

The NEWS is decidedly unfortunate in mistaking what it purports to publish from the press reports. The quotation from the revelation of 1894, over which the NEWS is so nicely patting itself on the back in the foregoing attempt at a correction of itself, will be found in section 122 of Doctrine and Covenants, late editions, and is numbered as paragraphs 14 and 15, the latter paragraph beginning with the words, "My servant Thomas W. Smith," just as we gave it in a former article. The two paragraphs are by the NEWS joined mischievously, whether purposely or otherwise, and for the intent to save argument supposed to have been made in regard to the revelation over which the NEWS believes there has been and is now so much division among the chief officers and quorums of the Reorganized Church, presaging its disruption.

In a former article we gave a clear statement of the facts in the case, in regard to the action of the elders and the conference with reference to the revelation of 1894.

The NEWS seems to be laboring under the idea that Joseph Smith, the first president of the church understood to have been instituted by divine direction in 1830, laid down his life for the Utah Church; but this is a grave mistake. If the lives of Joseph and Hyrum Smith were laid down because of any righteousness on the part of our Utah contemporary it has not yet transpired what it was, and to assume that such laying down of life was in demonstration of the present attitude of the church in the valleys is assumption without warrant. That Joseph and Hyrum Smith were made the victims of religious and political hate, because of the attitude of themselves and the church with which they were united and over which they presided toward the great questions of religious and political economy, none may dispute; but to affirm that martyrdom reached them in favor of a system of things foisted upon the church after their death by other men, and for which they were not in any justifiable sense responsible, is unmanly, and unchristian, and decidedly ungrateful toward the memory of him whom these same Utah Church people claim so much to revere.

Quoting the closing part of the editorial,—

In the end it will be apparent that what leads to division and dissension among the followers of the Divine Master is not from Him and must result in error, weakness, and defeat.

One thing is certain; the history of the Church of Jesus Christ, organized April, 1830, shows no more striking instance of "division and dissension" than the introduction of plural or polygamous marriage under the deceptive title of celestial marriage and all the subtle sophistry attending the teaching of it; and, recognizing the aptness of the statement of the News as to the origin of such things, we can but state, as we have done so often before, that until every vestige of the delusive dogma is removed from the faith of the people, and the practice not only abandoned, but the insidious teaching of it as a heavenly doctrine is also put away, there can be no actual spiritual rest, or church progress such as there should be among a united people to be called the people of God.

PRESIDENCY AND PRIESTHOOD.

A THIRD edition of Presidency and Priesthood has been issued by the Herald Office. All orders for this valuable work can be filled promptly; price $1.25 per copy. Those desiring to make arrangements to handle the book should address the Herald Office at Lamoni, or Bro. W. H. Kelley, the author, at Temple, Ohio. See advertisement.

BRN. J. W. GILLEN, Henry C. Smith, and Columbus Scott left for their fields this week. The first goes to Denver, Colorado, direct; the second to Milton, Florida; the last-named to the Des Moines district.

"As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you," was the statement of the Master to his apostles in his day: wonder, is it so now? If not, Why?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. A. F. RUDD, Dow City, Iowa, April 29:—

The good old Herald is like an anchor to me. Every week it brings consolation to my soul, in my old age, of the grand and glorious news spreading abroad and the way being prepared to gather Israel, the honest in heart, from among the nations. I was baptized by Orson Hyde, in Pennsylvania, in 1834. I was in Kirtland, Ohio, while they were building the temple. I was in the midst of the mob troubles in Ray county, Missouri, near Richmond. I knew John Roland who was killed, and the Tarwaters that were cut across the face three times with the sword, another across the head and hand.

Bro. J. C. Foss, writing from Rockland, Maine, May 1:—

I arrived home on Monday from a visit to Eastern Maine, Head Harbor Isle. I had not visited that people before for three years. I preached five sermons, and baptized five; others are near the kingdom.

Bro. G. L. M. Whitman, No. 3713 North Twenty-second street, Omaha, May 1:—

On Sunday evening I had the pleasure of addressing the Saints with quite a number of outsiders present. After preaching service, administered the ordinance of baptism to three, and on the last evening to one other. Whilst I feel to rejoice for those added, the credit is mainly due to Sr. Agenstine, Sr. Suttly, and Bro. Matthison; with the exception of one, perhaps, who heard Bro. C. H. Porter preach once, and commenced from that time to search more than ever for the true way of life.

Elder Henry Resch, writing from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, April 29:—

I have come here to labor for a short time, and while I am here I expect to labor what I can for the Master. I have opened a new point since coming here, (four miles south of Cedar Rapids, on what is called the Iowa City road,) in a union church, and preached my first sermon at this point yesterday; cannot say as yet what can be done, but think that there are some here that would accept the gospel. I would like to have the name and address of the elder that has charge of this part of Iowa. Address: Box 378, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Bro. Thomas Daley has had success in his labors at Florin, California. He wrote, May 1, as follows:—

The work is onward here. I baptized eleven in two weeks, fifteen since my report to conference. Will baptize two men next Sunday.

Bro. F. C. Smith, Burdickville, Michigan, May 1:—

I am having quite a good interest, and expect some to obey the gospel soon. All goes well.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. JAMES W. GILLEN occupied the stand at Lamoni, Sunday morning, April 28, and Bro. Joseph Lambert in the evening.

Bro. and Sr. William Cline, of St. Catharines, Ontario, have given out the printed word and worked up an interest in our work in that city. They request assistance from the ministry in Canada.

Bro. Fred Pyer wrote from Farwell, Michigan, the 28th ult., bearing witness to the divine character of the faith.

Bro. W. O. Wetherbee, of Clayton, Illinois, wishes elders laboring in the Nauvoo district to labor there. A stand in the public park for preaching and a good home with Bro. W. are offered as inducements.

Bro. J. R. Lambert left Lamoni of late for various points in Iowa and Illinois; and Bro. E. C. Briggs for the Lake mission.

Bro. A. H. Smith went to Independence on the 10th, called there by the death of a grandchild, the daughter of Bro. and Sr. William Kennedy.

Bro. J. S. Ro'h was at Edgewood, Iowa, May 8, ready to begin tent work. He reports a good demand for preaching in that entire region. He will labor until June 1 and go then to Keb, Iowa, to attend conference of the Nauvoo district.

Brn. E. L. Kelley and E. A. Blakeslee arrived at Lamoni from Independence on the 12th inst.

Bro. F. A. Smith preached in the morning and Pres. Joseph Smith in the evening of the 12th at Lamoni.

Revised lists of the people killed by the Iowa cyclone of May 3 show that fifty-five persons are known to have been killed, while the total estimate of lives lost is placed at two or three hundred. Great damage was done to property in Iowa, Wisconsin, South Dakota, and other States.

There was a severe earthquake shock at Mendoza, capital of the province of that name, in Argentine, on May 7. The people were terror stricken and fled. The place was destroyed by an earthquake in 1869.

REPORTS.

LAST week we gave the report of the treasurer of the Daughter's of Zion in full, feeling sure that all our readers would be interested therein, and we now present a few items gleaned from other reports, which cannot fail to be acceptable to those who are watching and praying for the progress of this work.

"The organization here," writes one, "is the fruit of the work of the 'Advisory Committee,' in sending out circular letters to our brethren of the ministry, and I believe that in doing this they were moved upon by the Spirit of the allwise God. May his blessings attend every good work in Zion!"

Again; from the far West we see the good resulting to the work from the active coöperation of the ministry where an organization has been formed in connection with the Prayer Union. And just here we wish to re peat what we have before said, that in our opinion they are but different phases of the same work, and wherever practicable should be combined. The Prayer Union stands as an expression of our faith in God, and the Daughters of Zion as the works without which, James tells us, our faith is vain. And for this reason we would suggest to the brethren that wherever a Prayer Union is organized, or one already exists, that they recommend the incorporating therewith the work of the Daughters of Zion. The Union (as a rule) holds weekly meetings, but the Daughters of Zion meet once a month, and it would only be necessary for the Union to devote half the time of every fourth meeting to this work in order to carry it on successfully.

From many encouraging and interesting reports we now pass to notice two from the "Young Daughters of Zion," and as we do so our soul is moved to its depths, and there rises before us a vision of the power for good which these organizations now in their infancy are yet to wield. Just the dawning of a few days, the rising and setting for a few times of the life-inspiring sun, and these young girls will take their places in the great battle field of life, each one of them to become a center from which shall radiate circles of influence destined to deepen and broaden until they touch the shores of eternity. The lessons learned in youth are lasting. There may come times when they will not be heeded, but forgotten they never will be, and in hours when the Spirit is striving to reclaim, they will come back with added force and strength to join their pleadings to that of the still small voice. At this meeting but two reports were handed in, yet we know of other places where organizations exist, and before another conference we look for many more to be formed.

At Independence, Missouri, a membership of forty-six is reported with well-attended meetings and good interest. To the report is added the following item: "We have taken measures to organize a class in physical culture, which we think will be of great benefit to our girls."

We were greatly pleased to learn this, and look upon it as the proper thing, not only to train and develop the bodies which are so "fearfully and wonderfully made," but also as being calculated to awaken and deepen the interest felt. We feel constrained to especially commend this feature of the work at Independence, to the notice and adoption of classes elsewhere, as we believe it will prove both beneficial and helpful. Let it be held as subordinate, however, to other features of the work which, instead of being benefited might be injured (or at least neglected) if it were given an undue prominence.

The other report we give in full, as it is written by one of our girls, and for this reason will carry with it an influence all its own, and which no words of anyone could enhance. God bless the young girls of his church who are so nobly coming to the rescue of his truth, is our earnest prayer.

REPORT of the Young Daughters of Zion, of Lamoni, for the year ending April 1, 1895:—

We have twenty-two names enrolled. Of this number about twelve are regular attendants. The society is upon a firmer footing now than it ever has been. It has its faithful members and those who are beginning to take an active interest.

We have read a "Song of Life" by Margaret Morley, and are now reading a book entitled "For Girls," by Shepherd. We have taken up some outside work in connection with our regular reading, such as practicing deep breathing and studying of exercises which help to restore to the body, when lost, its normal rhythm.

Besides our regular lesson at each meeting we have a select reading and a synopsis of the last lesson by members of the society. We have also been greatly benefited by a lecture by a sister in connection with our work.

Though we are few in number we are carrying on a good work, and many of our members testify to the benefit received in the past year.

MAGNOLIA, Minn., May 6.

Editors Herald:—On the 25th of April, in company with Bro. D. T. Tyson, I left home and friends for Magnolia, Minnesota, arriving here on the 27th, all in good shape. There being an appointment out for us, we went to work at once, the good Lord blessing us with his Spirit. We are still here and having good meetings; not very large crowds, but good. Bro. Delbert Tyson preached his first sermon on May 1. He did well; in fact it was so good that some of the people thought he had been at the business before.

Many are near the kingdom here, but something holds them back. We will continue meetings this week and then on to the other places, where we hope a good work will be done. I feel so thankful that I have some help this year, and I propose to make good use of it; so onward to victory, my brethren, onward. Ever praying for the success of all, I am,

Yours for truth,

I. N. ROBERTS.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 8.

Editors Herald:—After close of the General Conference we made a flying trip to Shenandoah, Iowa, for a brief visit among old friends and relatives. Spoke twice in Saints' chapel at that place. Tarrying one night upon our return to Independence with Bro. John Robinson and his cheerful family, the next morning, April 20, found us in company with Brn. Barmore and Stead speeding away over beautiful prairies toward St. Louis, where we arrived and were met at the Union Station at evening by Bro. John Hitchcock, whose pleasant home has since been our general abiding place. On Sunday morning we were introduced to the nice Sabbath school in charge of Bro. Joseph Swift, and to our new friends generally; and the first pleasant impressions have since gradually been strengthened so far as acquaintance has been made in our new field.

Bro. Barmore gave us an excellent sermon in the morning, the writer occupying the speaker's place in the evening, Bro. B. leaving us Thursday following. Our time has been occupied since in preaching in and near St. Louis, attendance upon the sick, business meeting, marriage ceremony, baptism, visiting and making new acquaintances, etc. Have preached at Cheltenham and Oak Hill, and find all around lots of nice things, things to gladden the preacher's heart, with a few other things sandwiched in as we pass along,—just like it is everywhere where the task of trying to erect and maintain the order and dignity of the kingdom of God is attempted in all this round world of ours.

B. O. Russell Archibald, the presiding branch officer, seems to have matters fairly in hand, and to be the right man in the right place, and capable of administering sensible and courteous treatment to everybody in their place and order. With watchfulness and care there seems to be a prospect for numerical growth and, we trust, permanent foundation for an acceptable representation of the gospel of Jesus Christ in this city by all who are called of God to share in its inestimable blessings.

Weather warm—hot, even for St. Louis they say; and July and August are already here for perspiring and suffering. We have got rid of that Ohio grip anyway, for the present at least.

It is not unlikely that we may remove our family to where church privileges may be enjoyed, and the place will probably be St. Louis.

In bonds,
M. H. BOND.

FLINT, Ind., May 7.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday we stood on the banks of the beautiful Sylvan Lake for the second time and ten noble ones marched into the waters of baptism. This, the new point opened up in January, 1895, promises to be an important one in the cause of truth. Many are believing, and interest intensifies.

I am expected to deliver the "memorial" sermon here, the 30th at ten o'clock a. m.; also at Lake Gage, at two o'clock p. m. Baptisms are promised at that time. The wheels move grandly throughout.

Those baptized are all heads of families but two. The postmaster and his wife at this place are included. A great work is expected.

MAYSVILLE, Ark., May 4.

Editors Herald:—I wish to call the attention of all Saints and friends through your columns to the fact that I have been appointed to labor in the Indian Territory this year. My permanent address will be, Maysville, Arkansas. I have begun my work at this point in company with Bro. T. J. Shepard, but we are to separate as soon as we close a series of meetings at this place, which will begin on the evening of the 5th.

All in my mission field interested in this great harvest of souls please write me at the above place. Dear brethren and sisters of this Indian country, let us have your hearty coöperation this year. Come brethren, it is hard to preach without your assistance. I have a pony and cart and I am willing to hunt you up and preach for you as best I can. So let me hear from you, whoever you are and wherever you are; and I pray the Lord to bless us in our efforts this year.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting:—As I have been appointed to the charge of the work in your midst, I am anxiously solicitous to receive your coöperation in making the mission work there, this year, a success. I am assured that the work there, as elsewhere, is in the hands of the Lord, and hence we should not be alarmed nor discouraged whether the advancement be rapid or otherwise; and yet we should be anxiously on the alert that no opportunity to benefit the erring pass unimproved.

In doing this we should remember that we are, or should be, in spirit and demeanor the followers of the "meek and lowly Jesus." The policy of bringing railing accusations against men and measures I am persuaded is a mistake, especially against dead men who have gone to their account. If necessary to discuss issues, do so firmly, and never compromise the truth, yet be kind, courteous, and respectful. That the peculiar people with whom our labor largely lies have made mistakes, and some very serious mistakes, we are well satisfied; but they should be treated as mistakes. To question the motives of men is hardly within our province, nor are we competent to do so. In considering a doctrine or practice our chief concern is, Is it right? not who is responsible for its introduction, or who practiced it?

I expect to reach the field not later than June 1, and shall assume no responsibility until I come. Bro. Anthony, who has hitherto been in charge, will remain in charge until my arrival, and to him I will refer you with all matters needing adjustment. Let all arrangements made by him continue until further notice.

My permanent address will be, Box 307, Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa.

Fraternally,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 5, 1895.

To the Ministry and Membership in Kansas; Greeting:—Having been retained in charge of the work in the State of Kansas, less that portion in Spring River district, I have made, after due consideration, the following appointments in different parts of the field:—

1. J. Arthur Davis and J. W. Hugins in all that part of Northeastern Kansas district that is north of the Kansas River.

2. J. Alfred Davis and Alma Kent in all that part of Northwestern Kansas district that is north of the Kansas River.

3. W. S. Pender and R. W. Davis in all that part that is south of the Kansas River, less that portion that is in Spring River district. I will divide my labors between the different parts of the field as needs may call and wisdom dictates. May the Master and his Saints encourage and bless the ministry.

Brn. Pender and Davis's field is a vast territory with but little done in it from the eastern to the western lines of the State, and I wish to ask all the Saints in and all around the border lines of this large field to help and encourage these brethren so that the kingdom of our God may be presented and established therein.

I hope the brethren will occupy in their fields as faithfully and as constantly as possible, remembering the rules of reporting, etc.; and if they correspond with me I will give them some valuable items in regard to these fields.

All who desire labor will please address me or any of these brethren in their fields.

In bonds,

J. T. DAVIS.

NETAWAKA, Kansas, May 4, 1895.

To the Saints of Minnesota and the Dakotas; Dear Brethren and Sisters:—As I am appointed by Brn. A. H. Smith and J. R. Lambert to take charge of the above-named States, I take this method of appealing to you for that assistance that is necessary to make the efforts of the missionaries a success this conference year.

I have arranged for Brn. Peter Anderson and D. T. Tyson to labor in Southwestern Minnesota and South Dakota, and I hope the Saints living in the places above-named will coöperate with these brethren and render them all the assistance they can that the work may advance as rapidly as possible. The above-named brethren may be addressed at Pipestone, Minnesota, Box 401.

Brn. E. A. Stedman and Hackett will labor in Minneapolis and Southeastern Minnesota. Will the Saints please assist these brethren in every legitimate way that they may be able to push the work ahead as rapidly as possible. We want the work to advance far ahead of any year previous.

To the Saints in Northern Minnesota and North Dakota: Will you please render me what assistance you can in carrying the work on to victory. I will be among you soon, and hope the local ministry will arrange to render assistance when called upon. My health is first class and the Spirit of God is with me in power. My mission address will be Pipestone, Minnesota, Box 401. Calls for preaching and other church matters will be looked after as fast as possible for us to do so. Ever praying for Zion's weal, I am,

Your colaborer,

I. N. ROBERTS.

To the Saints in Eastern Nebraska; Greeting:—Whereas Brn. J. R. Lambert and A. H. Smith have seen fit to appoint me in charge, under them, of Eastern Nebraska, I do hereby invite the hearty coöperation of all the Saints in said mission, and trust that all will consider themselves personally interested in the furtherance of the work, and that each will consider himself a worker with his brethren, under the divine guidance, for the establishment of righteousness in the earth, and that we may do this effectually let each strive by example and precept to let his light shine before men.

The conference has given us an additional force of able men, and we feel confident that each of the missionaries will do good work.

The local laborers last year did well, and we trust that this year may also be prolific of good deeds by them. Last year was one of drought and business stagnation, yet the Lord blessed his Saints. This year we enter upon the work under more auspicious circumstances, because of the seasonable rains, etc., therefore let us take courage and each strive with all his ransomed powers to do his whole duty, in his own place and lot in the church of the living God, and then we shall surely enjoy the blessings of our heavenly Father in our efforts and shall be his instruments for the accomplishment of much good.

Any of the scattered Saints that need assistance in labor from the missionaries will please address me at Wilber, and we will see that all such matters are attended to as promptly as possible.

The missionaries will please remember that it is written, "All ministers who are not in charge are required to report on or about the first day of the months of July, October, January, and March, these reports to be made out and sent to the minister who is in charge of the field of labor where the work is performed."

I shall be glad to render any assistance possible by way of suggestion, etc., to my collaborators that hearty and earnest cooperation may be had by us in the mission. Let our motto be, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

Your brother and collaborer in Christ,
C. H. PORTER.

To the Saints of the Fremont and Nodaway Districts; Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Having been returned to labor among and with you the coming year in the Master's cause, with pleasure I greet you, trusting that our labors of love in this glorious work this coming year may not slacken or decrease, but that our zeal and energy may be intensified by the power of God's Holy Spirit to the end that we may be able to accomplish more, and in greater harmony with the law of the gospel than ever before.

I feel thankful for the past blessings received, for the good wrought and the spirit of unity, and the love that has filled our souls, enabling us to rejoice together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus our Lord; and when clouds of darkness have hung over us and the enemy has come in like a flood, God's Spirit has raised up a standard against him.

The brethren appointed to labor with us did the best they could under the circumstances, we believe. Bro. Evans did nobly in the Nodaway district to the satisfaction of all among whom he labored, and we regret his removal, but trust that the vacancy shall be amply and ably filled by Bro. E. B. Morgan. Bro. J. B. Heide worked very effectively in bringing souls to a knowledge of the truth what time he devoted to the ministry in the Fremont district, and Bro. M. P. Madison not one whit behind the chief, did well as president of the Nodaway district. Brethren Woodhead, James Thomas, and others in the district did well in laboring as their circumstances permitted and the Saints with the Bishop's agent, Bro. Ross, came forward and did bravely for the cause so dear to their hearts.

And now of this district. Their works in the past testify to their faith and zeal. Bro. D. Hougas as president, Bro. T. A. Hougas as secretary, with the presidents of branches and all the local force—I think I am safe in making the statement that generally speaking we have seen eye to eye in all matters of importance. We are satisfied with one another, and by the efficient help of Bro. O. B. Thomas, appointed to work with us, we hope to be able to do much more the coming year than heretofore.

To the brethren and Saints of both districts, accept my sincere thanks for the noble manner in which you have sustained me. I trust by right doing and faithful service to merit your favor, and good will, and the blessing of the Master in the future.

And now, dear Saints, let us move forward in one grand phalanx to do the will of our Captain and Leader. May the good work move on to victory through him who has loved us and given himself for us, is the prayer of your brother and fellow laborer, HENRY KEMP.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, May 6, 1895.

To the Missionary Force and Saints of Southern Indiana:—As stated in the recent pastoral of our chief missionary in charge, Bro. E. C. Briggs, as honored representatives of the Church of Christ in Southern Indiana, you will labor in the same districts assigned you last year. Of course we expect to see the work pushed in all these localities with vigor, and hope to see our efforts crowned with success. You will please not forget the missionary rules of the church.

Scattered Saints will please correspond with me with regard to the wants of the church. If there are Saints living in Evansville, Indiana, they will write me at once, so I may know how to find them.

My permanent address is Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa. Address me for the present month at Washington, Indiana.

Trusting to see the church better sustained this year than last, I subscribe myself your fellow laborer in the Lord,

I. P. BAGGERLY,

In Charge of Field.

To the Saints in Florida:—Please take notice that Bro. Henry C. Smith has been appointed as missionary in charge of Florida. All ministerial labors, all calls for preaching, and all other matters where the advice or counsel of the missionary in charge is desired should be reported directly to him and not to me.

I feel to say for Bro. Smith, that he is a man in every way worthy of your confidence and support. Hoping and praying that the blessing of God may rest upon his people and his work in the "land of flowers,"

Yours in gospel bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Galland's Grove district will convene at Deloit, Crawford county, Iowa, May 31, at 1:30 p. m., continuing over Sunday. Branches will please appoint delegates to represent them; and if branch officers will forward all credentials and reports to the district secretary, Sr. Nellie Rudd, Dow City, Iowa, a few days before conference, it will assist us very much. We hope every missionary and local minister in the district will favor us with a report of his labors. The district Sunday school association will occupy Saturday afternoon and evening, the exercises being under the management of District Superintendents R. Wight and William McKim. Those coming by rail should notify Bro. J. T. Turner, Deloit, Iowa, of their intention in due time, who will, without doubt, see that they are provided with conveyance from Denison to Deloit. An invitation is extended to all, and everybody will be made welcome.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH, } Presidents.

Quarterly conference of the Little Sioux district will convene at Woodbine, Iowa, Saturday and Sunday, June 1 and 2. Reports of ministry and branch clerks desired.

NOTICES.

To the Presidents of Branches:—By the late General Conference the undersigned have been named as a committee to compile a "Hymnal" from the Saints' Harmony.

By their resolution we are requested to ask you to call together your choristers and singers and make such selections of words and music from the Harmony as you may desire, not to exceed two hundred and fifty hymns, specifying the music you desire to be coupled with each hymn.

The committee will receive and insert a limited number of tunes selected from other works, provided there is a general demand for such.

All selections must be sent within sixty days to Ralph G. Smith, No. 6113 Howe street, E. E., Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, who will receive them for the committee.

Your earliest cooperation is desired.

RALPH G. SMITH.

MARRIED.

PRUDEN—GUNSOLLEY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, on the evening of May 1, 1895, Bro. Louis M. Pruden and Sr. Stella M. Gunsolley were united in marriage. The ceremony took place at the residence of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, the bride's brother, in the presence of relatives and friends. Bro. H. A. Stebbins spoke the words that legally made these happy two to be one in the sacred bond.

During the most peaceful years the world has 8,700,000 men who are withdrawn from productive occupations to pose as soldiers.

SIT UP STRAIGHT.

Nothing is more abominable in a young person than the habit of stooping, and except when caused by malformation or actual weakness, nothing is more inexcusable. A slouchy, stooping habit of carriage always suggests laziness, and often stealth and dishonesty. Carry your head erect, and expand your chest, throw back your shoulders, or you will never possess grace or a commanding presence.

The Creator "made man upright." Round shoulders and bow-shaped spines may be avoided by watchfulness during youth, and retained in maturity without any effort.

If you bend over too much in your studies get a lower seat. Saw the legs off an old chair and then sit down so low that your chin will come just above the table; make the hind legs a little shorter than the fore legs, and then read and write with your arms on the table, and it will take out some of the crook from your back.

One mother, whose daughter was getting the habit of stooping, used to have her lie flat on her back without a pillow, for an hour each day, while she read to her out of some interesting book. In a little while she was as straight as need be, and a picture of health and strength.

In some countries the women carry pails, tubs, and heavy loads on their heads. This keeps them erect. Throwing back the arms is another means of keeping straight. Remember, you may add years to your life by keeping straight; and you may not only have a longer life, but a stronger, broader, deeper, happier, and more useful life, if you go about with head erect, chest expanded, and lungs well developed, with rosy cheeks and fresh complexion, than if you go about bent over, cramped up, stooping, flat-chested, sallow, nervous, and miserable. — Blue and Gray.

TO SUPERSEDE THE COMPASS.

Very wonderful things are told of the solarometer, the instrument which is intended to take the place of a compass on shipboard, and give more accurate results than can possibly be obtained from that instrument. Without attempting to describe its construction, we may say that from a single observation of a heavenly body the exact position of the ship in latitude and longitude may be determined. It has two great advantages over the compass. One lies in its furnishing the exact position of the ship, while the compass can indicate only the course, leaving the position to be worked out by dead reckoning or observation. The other is that it is not affected by the magnetism of an iron or steel vessel. The adjustment of a compass on such a ship has to be corrected frequently on account of polarization of the hull by the earth's currents. — Hartford Courant.

OUTPUT OF MALT LIQUORS IN EUROPE.

Germany leads the list of beer-producing countries, according to the trade report for 1893, just published, with 1,202,132,074 gallons, an increase of over 34,000,000 gallons over 1892; 33½ gallons a head was the average for the empire, the product ranging from 62 gallons in Bavaria to 12 in Elsass-Lothringen. Great Britain was a good second with 1,164,752,952 gallons of malt liquor, over 30 gallons a head. America (including South America) came next with 1,084,433,460 gallons, 16 gallons per head. Then comes Austria with 385,256,168 gallons. Belgium with 209,856,174; France with 196,630,- 500 gallons, Russia with 98,638,892 gallons; Denmark brewed 45 million gallons, Holland 33 million, Sweden 28 and a third million, Switzerland 26 and a sixth million gallons. The other countries for which statistics are given all produced less than 20 million gallons apiece. The total output of malt liquors in Europe and America was 4,500 million gallons, in making which 7,270,000 tons of malt and 82,000 tons of hops were used.

On strictly exgetical and historical grounds, baptism must be immersion. Without prejudice no other interpretation would ever have been given to Bible baptism. It is the most natural interpretation, and such we must always give. Immersion is natural and historical; sprinkling is artificial and an expedient for convenience's sake. All the symbolism of the text (Rom. 6: 3, 4), and everywhere in the Bible, demands the going under water and coming out of it to newness of life. Sprinkling has no suggestion of burial to sin and resurrection to holiness. In order to be true to its original meaning, and its vital relation to redemption through Christ Jesus, baptism must be immersion. Why do you wish to get rid of it? Eminent theologians have wasted their learning attempting to defend infant sprinkling. Imposition is not exposition. All the early defenders of Christianity taught that nothing but immersion was baptism, and all the Greek or Oriental churches continue to immerse to this day. — Dr. Schaff.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archæology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

SACRED FRESCOS THIRTY-SIX CENTURIES OLD.

It is almost incredible that frescos painted more than three thousand six hundred years ago are still so well preserved as to yield accurate copies, yet such is the case. These designs are being discovered in ancient Egyptian tombs, the most remarkable work of this kind having been found in the tomb of Rameses I. Egyptologists and scientific explorers are bitterly complaining about the vandalism of tourists in those now unsealed sepulchers, and they report that the paintings on the walls are smeared with grease and smoke from the candles of the guides. An indignant artist has recently taken photographs by flash-light of the wall of the tomb of Rameses I., to show how the frescoing has been defaced. The Christian Herald (New York) says:—

"It [this picture] is especially interesting to Bible students from the fact that Rameses I. was the grandfather of the Pharaoh who, it is now generally believed, was the oppressor of the Hebrews. This Pharaoh was Rameses II., the son of Seti, who was the son of Rameses I. The interior of his tomb is covered, like those of other Pharaohs, with frescos all richly painted in colors which are still fresh after more than thirty-six centuries. There were also a number of statues of the king found in his tomb, all singularly lifelike. It was for a long time a subject of wonder that the Egyptians should have devoted so much skill and labor to the production of works of art which they took special pains to conceal from the sight of men. They knew, or rather hoped, that no one would ever gaze upon them, yet they lavished upon them all their best efforts. It is now suggested as a result of study of their ancient records, that they had philosophical reasons for the apparent inconsistency. They believed that every man had a principle of life, differing from his mind and soul, permeating his being, and this they called his ka. They thought that at death it was not extinguished, but merely left the body and would reanimate it after the lapse of a long period. The ka, they supposed, went to the tomb with the body and waited there with it until the soul returned from long pilgrimages, when the man would be reconstructed and live eternally. If the body were accidentally destroyed the ka would be homeless. The embalmers did their utmost to prevent the catastrophe, but if all failed, then the statue of the deceased might serve as an abode for the ka, or it might even occupy it while waiting for the soul to return. In the absence of any more reasonable explanation, this may be accepted as certainly plausible, if not absolutely true. It shows how in that remote time men were groping and searching for the truth, which the Apostle Paul records: 'We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.'—Ec.

MORAL USES OF SUFFERING.

DR. HILLIS on "The Moral Uses of Suffering;" text, "If we suffer we shall also reign."—2 Tim. 2:12. He said:—

"Culture and character are through suffering. Life is God's university; happiness is the graduating point, but trouble and adversity are his chosen teachers. The world is built for joy, but man comes to his full estate only through the tutelage of sorrow. Even Christ, who brings glad tidings of great joy, is exhibited as passing through the uttermost of pain on his way upward toward the utmost of pleasure and the world's throne. Suffering is an alchemist refining out coarseness and transmuting bad into good. Sin and selfishness dig great furrows in the face, so suffering is sent in to iron the lines smooth again. From Paul to Livingstone what heroic leader hath worn soft raiment? What Luther or Lincoln was reared in king's palaces? The frontier lines of ignorance begin to recede when we consider that as men go up toward manhood they go toward the possibility of pain. Suffering is an inflection of a large, sensitive, and godlike nature. Coarseness and rudeness suffer little, but refinement much. The iron bars over jail window answer wind with no vibrating melody, but the silken threads sing for the gentlest zephyr. The historian says: 'Sorrows sweep over society like sheeted storms; blood flows like rivers; tears are too cheap to count.' But man's large endowment prophesied all this. As he journeyed away from birds and beasts he left behind their painlessness. As he goes up toward Jesus Christ he goes up toward sensitiveness. As men go up toward the throne of universal sympathy, love, and helpfulness they go up toward the possibilities of suffering and sorrow. If a man will espend and degrade himself to the beast's level he can cut most of the nerve paths for pain. But susceptibility to suffering argues man's nearness to God."

LESSONS OF TWO GREAT MEN'S LIVES.

DR. THOMAS preached on "Washington and Lincoln," at the People's Church; text: "A good name is better than precious ointment."—Ecc. 7:1. He said:—

"Washington and Lincoln were great, not alone in the history of their own times and events, but great in the history of the world; and though young as compared with the older nations of Europe to this land belongs the high honor of being the first to distinctly announce the great doctrine of innate right to freedom and to es-establish a government upon this fundamental principle. Such a doctrine can be found by inference only in the Bible. In Greece and Rome the masses were slaves, the few free, and Roman citizenship was a conferred right rather than belonging to man as a man. The 'good name' of Washington made possible the final victory and helped in the organization of a free and united government. The 'good name' of Lincoln gave confidence and strength in the war of the rebellion that ended in making the Declaration of Independence consistent with itself, and a realized fact by conferring the rights of men upon those who had been slaves. A new era of prosperity has dawned and is now in the process of organizing our great industries and purifying our national and municipal politics and protecting our free institutions. There is needed now the noble inspiration of the patriotism of peace, the glad giving of the greatest minds and hearts of the public service of the city, the State, the country, and unless this is done in large measure there is great danger that this land may lose by neglect, by selfish devotion to personal ambitions, and by luxury, injustice, and corruption, the priceless inheritance of the past."—Exchange.

MOHAMMEDAN DEGRADATION OF WOMAN.

"WHEN we think of the part played by women in the religious world of Christian life; when we remember how women have come to the front in every progressive movement in Christian lands; when we think of their place in art, in literature, in the functions which give the delights of music, entertainment, and festive pleasure to society; when we note how in such nations women are honored and protected;—then we begin to realize that some immense power must have entered the society where women were once secluded, degraded, and oppressed. Exactly the opposite of all this is witnessed in the whole Mohammedan world. This alone accounts quite sufficiently for the decadent history of the faith which Mohammed planted. A religion which perpetuates the degradation of woman is doomed, and it is dying. Indeed, every country is at this moment under a fatal blight where polygamous institutions flourish. This is the secret of the strange condition of Turkey and of Persia. Society is paralyzed by the absence of any sentiment in favor of the elevation of the female part of the community. The Koran, which contains so many noble inculcations, yet fatally brands woman with the stamp of complete inferiority. In doing this it sinks morality, purity, and society itself under a deadly weight. Some curious Englishmen and a few eccentric Americans some time ago tried to make themselves famous by importing Mohammedanism into England and the United States. The attempt at a new sensation was a complete failure. The world has no place for a new faith of that sort."—The Christian Commonwealth, London.

PROGRESS OF PROTESTANTISM.

THE Deutsche Kirchenzeitung of Berlin has computed on the basis of the latest scientific sources accessible a suggestive table of the religious distribution of the peoples of the globe. The population of the Earth is estimated at one and one half thousand million, distributed as follows:—

Europe.....	381,200,000
Africa.....	127,000,000
Asia.....	854,000,000
Australia.....	4,730,000
America.....	133,670,000
Total.....	1,500,000,000

The leading religions are represented by the following figures:—

Protestant Christians.....	200,000,000
Roman Catholic Christians..	195,600,000
Greek Catholic Christians..	105,000,000
Total Christians.....	500,600,000
Jews.....	8,000,000
Mohammedan.....	180,000,000
Heathens.....	812,000,000
Total non-Christians.....	1,000,000,000

According to these data one third of the population of the Earth is Christian. Especially notable is the fact that the Protestant church has according to the estimate outstripped the Roman Catholic by more than four millions; and yet the preponderance of Protestantism appears all the greater when viewed from other standpoints. Practically Protestantism exercises the controlling influence on the destinies of the leading nations of the Earth. England, the Netherlands, the United States, and Germany are predominantly Protestant lands. These Protestant countries together with their colonies control nearly one half of the entire population of the globe. One third of all Mohammedans are under Protestant English government. The Hinduism of Hither India is entirely under English dominion. The English educational system and literature are slowly but surely opening up a new world of thought for these people; and even the Buddhism of Borneo, Siam, and Tibet, and other countries, the German writer thinks, will not be able to hold its own against this onward march of Christian civilization. In the so-called great Buddhistic countries, such as China and Japan, Buddhism is little more than an external decoration of public life, and not at all a spiritual power controlling and directing the hearts and minds of the people; and its cloisters and monasteries are the seats of spiritual and moral starvation. In this way the conditions for a rapid spread of Christian principles are present in innumerable unchristian lands, and this onward march is being materially aided by the railroad, telegraph, and steamer.—Literary Digest.

THE SAINTS' HYMNAL.

PRESIDENTS of branches, choristers, singers, musicians, and all interested are asked to note the request of the committee appointed to compile words and music for the "Saints' Hymnal." See notice in this issue.

The time in which to aid in this good work is limited, hence those who can help it should act at once. It is important to all concerned that the committee be earnestly seconded in the effort to provide the words and music desired. There is no reason why the work should be delayed. The conference provided for an early issue of the book, and if all concerned will give the committee the benefit of the suggestions asked the new book will soon be in the hands of the Saints.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

By the term spiritual gifts we do not mean those peculiar endowments with which some seem to be blessed by nature, and by the use and enjoyment of which they are pleasant leaders and teachers of those around them; but we mean those gifts, through which it is discoverable that persons have obeyed the gospel, and received the testimony of the Spirit evidencing that the gospel is true, and Jesus is the Christ.

Paul in 1 Corinthians, 12, makes the statement that the gifts are given to the profit of those with whom and among whom they are manifest; from which we conclude that where no profit may accrue, there the display of the gifts may not occur, by the wisdom of him who giveth them. If not by the direction of such wisdom and spirit, is it improper to conclude that mischief may come where manifestations without them are had.

No disciple, Latter Day Saint or otherwise, can afford to oppose the manifestations of the Spirit in the church; for several reasons, chief of which is the fact that God placed them in the church, as stated by Paul, for definite objects, all of which are still essential to the well-being and advancement of the Saints individually and collectively. No other reason than this need be urged, this being sufficient.

The benefit of the gifts is to accrue to the church, rather than to the unbeliever, or those outside the church. Hence, these gifts under the direction of the Spirit will be instructive, comforting, and assuring to the membership; always bringing calmness of mind, sweetness of thought in the train of their happening. It would seem fair and proper then to conclude that in case any supposed manifestations should bring doubt, or darkness, or distress upon the minds of saints, such manifestations ought not to be classed with those known to come by the Spirit, for the things which should follow, are wanting. To illustrate, several years ago, a sister in a branch was lying sick; prayers were being offered, in fasting, for her; during the season of prayer an aged, well-beloved brother and officer, rose and in the name of the God of Israel prophesied that the sister would recover. The brother spoke with great emphasis and seeming power; but another brother, likewise an elder, but not presiding in the meeting, felt the room turn dark, as if the lights had been suddenly put out, and he said, in his heart, "She will die."

Here were two conflicting manifestations; one spoken, as by the spirit of prophecy, the other by witness only. What was the duty of the two? One had exercised his privilege in open meeting, a presiding officer present and in control, and spoke as he stated in the name of the Lord; the other sitting by did not speak, nor was he commanded to speak, but he had received a testimony contrary to the one who did speak. The life of a well-beloved sister in the church was trembling in the balance; the one witness testified she would recover, the other that she would die. There was apparently but the one thing for the brother sitting by to do, and that was to wait until time should apply the test. This he did; the sister died within a week's time. The question remained, Which witness was from the Spirit? And how was it to be tested? What is a member's duty in such a case?

This is only to suggest inquiry, not to stir argument, or strife; to set men thinking, not to dictate the course, nor to belittle the gifts, or decry the manifestation of them. The Lord can and will care for his own, if they will but let him.

BRO. WILLIAM H. KELLEY, of the Twelve, wrote from Temple, Ohio, May 8:—

I preached in Savannah, New York, Sunday evening last (the fifth). The room was warm, but those present paid respectful attention; more listening from the outside than inside the hall. Bro. Griffiths and family arrived to-day.

A new application is in for preaching to-day, one, day before yesterday. Painesville has sent to know when the writer is to occupy the stand in the Temple; they want to come. It is something not to lose prestige altogether, even at home."

Indeed, Bro. Kelley, it is a good thing to have local people make inquiry about resident speakers of the faith. What about the proverb, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country, and among those of his own house"? We are pleased there is an exception to the proverb.

WE notice with some pleasure a statement in the Ensign that the suit of John Earnshaw against the Building Committee of the Independence chapel, before a referee, has been decided again in favor of the committee; they having paid to Bro. Earnshaw over a thousand dollars more than due him on contract. The Ensign says: "Unless an appeal is now taken this matter is decided." It seems a pity that there are such opportunities afforded in the laws for a perpetual harassment of men over things done by them when they are in no wise in the fault, or are acting for the best. We hope no appeal will be attempted in this case, or if taken that the court deny it.

BRO. A. J. MOORE secured insertion of a statement of the faith, in addition to the following friendly notice in the Amarillo, Texas, News of May 11:—

The Rev. Amos J. Moore, of the "Church of Jesus Christ" (or Latter Day Saints of the Joseph Smith branch) began a series of sermons at the Red Front on Wednesday night. Confining his remarks to the doctrine or tenets of his church, the News reporter up to last night, could pronounce them pretty fair orthodox Protestant gospel. He is not an eloquent or rhetorical speaker, and hardly a fluent one, but is logical, graceful, cautious, and a pointed reasoner, apt and accurate in Bible references, and does not make the common mistake of over talking himself. His earnest, humble faith, and pleasant tone, and easy manners add to render him entertaining. Fairly large and very respectful congregations greet him.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. W. H. KEPHART, from Runnells, Iowa, May 13:—

I baptized one at Runnells, Sunday, May 12, and had the pleasure of preaching in the Saints' new church there Saturday and Sunday the 11th and 12th inst. It is a neat building 40 x 50 feet, and is now ready for plastering. And though times are hard and money scarce, the little band of good Saints "have a mind to work" and are paying as they go and will not need to beg before the house can be dedicated. I go to Warren county on the 17th to hold meetings there.

Bro. R. J. Anthony, North Platte, Nebraska, May 14:—

I am still stopping here and preaching in private houses to a few souls. Bro. Gowell is here, and he and Bro. Payne are out in the country preaching. I expect them in town to-day, and I shall go to Cottonwood the last of the week to hold a series of meetings. The interest is good out there.

Bro. A. C. Hart, from Vinita, Indian Territory, May 15:—

It does me good to hear of good done by our feeble efforts. The letters from Franks, Indian Territory, are encouraging on the part of the efforts made by the young members. A young lady was baptized yesterday, and another "hopes to be ready when I go again." Two aged persons, heads of families, have also talked of and do still think of uniting. Each at the place where the much talked of debate was expected. Some say the debate is inevitable. Different buildings have been offered in which to hold it, one a large hay barn one hundred feet wide by two hundred long. Others say Mr. Jones will never meet us although he has got himself where he must deny and back out, or go ahead. Rumor and all indications now hold him in a position of denying "his faith," "Campbellism," and ever having made a challenge. The way it seems now is that all his friends want the debate worse than Mr. Jones does, and from his last note I am led to believe that he will never meet me unless he can get the advantage in a proposition.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. EDWARD POWELL, writing from Milton, Florida, May 7, reports the work revived in the Florida district and now in condition to move onward. Bro. Chute, of the Mobile district, and Bro. Booker, of the Alabama district, and Bro. Powell, of the Florida district, were all present at the late conference of the latter. The Lord blessed his people and they gave evidence of renewed strength and a closer walk with God. Under the administration of Bro. S. D. Allen as Bishop's agent there was increased receipts of tithes and offerings, and Saints were availing themselves of the privilege of contributing to the extension of the work. Bro. Henry C. Smith and wife had arrived in that field and were expected to begin labor the following Sunday.

Sr. Emma Payne, of Hiawatha, Nebraska, wrote, May 5. Her husband is in the field and she isolated from Saints. She is thankful that he is worthy to be a servant of God and tries to cheer him in his work, in which she rejoices in the hope of the Saints. Elders preaching near Oklahoma City or Council Groves, Oklahoma, are requested to call on the family of her brother, Charles Taylor, who will welcome them.

We are pleased to hear the good news from Runnells that the Saints there will be successful in securing their building, and are keeping out of debt in doing it. All such efforts are encouraging.

By letter from Bro. W. W. Blair, dated Blue Rapids, Kansas, May 13, we learn that they had full congregations at that place, Saturday night and Sunday, the 11th and 12th. On the 12th two ladies were baptized, one the head of a family. Bro. Blair would go to Netawaka, for a week's sojourn. Bro. J. T. Davies was with him and in excellent spirits.

Seven were baptized by Bro. F. C. Smith at Burdickville, Michigan, on the 12th. "More to follow," Bro. Smith writes. He sends names for sample copies of HERALD. All the ministry are requested to do likewise, to also send subscriptions.

Sr. Pearl O. Price, of Oakland, California, who since the fall of 1894 has been secretary and bookkeeper in the Bishop's Office, left Lamoni for her home on the coast on Monday, the 20th inst. Sr. Price is a first-class stenographer, typewriter, and accountant, and during her occupancy at headquarters has rendered good service in the transaction of church business. She has made many friends during her stay in the East and returns home with the sincere good wishes of all.

Sr. Magdalene Hepburn writes from Glasgow, Scotland, where she and her brother are the only witnesses for the cause. She was baptized at Leeds, England, in 1893, since which time, as she testifies, she has been blessed with much spiritual light and comfort. She had formerly been a member of the Episcopal Church for six years, but never then experienced what she now enjoys. Brighamite elders are active in the vicinity of Glasgow to some extent and sending some of the people to Utah. She considers Scotland a good field for labor and hopes to see elders of the Reorganization at work in that country bringing the people to a knowledge of the truth, and setting forth the faith in its true light. She asks prayer that she be sustained in her efforts to do good.

Bro. David Crow, Grand Junction, Mesa county, Colorado, wishes to hear from Saints in that region.

Letters are received from Brn. W. B. Weston, Phoenix, Nebraska, and J. W. Hudgens, Meriden, Kansas. The latter has been laboring in connection with Bro. J. Arthur Davis at Meriden, a new opening, where they have been well received.

SMILES.

"Most of the smiles you get from others
Are the reflections of your own;
You may think the world at pleasure
With you, but when wiser grown
You will find 'tis but responsive
To the giving you bestow;
So, 'tis well to give your kindness
If more kindness you would know."

DEEP BREATHING.

DR. STEELE says "Food, air, clothing, heat, sunshine, bathing, drink, and sleep are all needed for the body; but not one of these needs is so pressing as air, and we need it every moment lest we die.

"Oxygen gas is the vital element of the air and the stimulating, life-giving principle. No tonic is to be compared with it, and we cannot obtain it from doctors and drug shelves, but by full, deep inhalations of common air."

To enjoy good health the air in the lungs must be frequently changed. We breathe about two thirds of a pint at each inspiration. This is about 788,400 gallons per year.

In times of old, physicians used to often recommend daily exercise of full, deep breathing as a cure for disease. When the lungs are not fully exercised and do not properly perform their functions, they, like every other part of the body, lose their elasticity and power to do so, and as a result, various diseases originate there and in other parts of the body affected by the condition of the lungs.

There must be coöperation of the abdominal with the chest motions in respiration. The abdominal walls must rise and fall just as regularly as does the chest. This must be in order that the contents of the pelvis receive the oxygen which they need in order to keep them healthy and able to perform the functions assigned to them by the Creator.

When the contents of the pelvis have a sufficient supply of oxygen it stimulates the circulation, secures a constant renewal of vital force to all of these organs, and as a consequence they do healthful work.

The introduction of more oxygen into the system gives one a good appetite with power to digest, and enriches the blood. When there is not enough oxygen taken into the body the wasting matters which have served their uses, cannot be expelled from the system as they should, because there is too little oxygen supplied to them and they are partially retained in the body. This creates disease.

"The ordinary and healthful actions of the muscles of the abdomen are a part of" right breathing. The digestive organs which give nourishment to the body, have in health a gliding motion one upon another which is necessary to a healthy condition. Their needs require that the rhythmic waves, or that gliding motion which is a part of proper breathing, should extend through the entire mass.

The wearing of tight clothes prevents this proper abdominal breathing. This can easily be demonstrated by a trial of the exercise suggested, first in the ordinary dress worn in the day and again when ready to retire at night.

The needs of the whole body require such a supply of oxygen as can be gained by learning how to breathe properly and then doing it.

IN practicing the breathing exercise stand with shoulders well back and the weight of the body resting on the balls of the feet. Try folding your arms behind you as a help to gain the proper position, then drop them loosely at side. Close the lips, draw the air slowly through the nostrils until the lungs are full.

You may think they are full long before they are. Do not be satisfied until you cannot inhale longer. When the lungs are full, hold the breath while the teacher beats five, increasing the number of beats at each trial until you reach twenty. L. L. R.

and to persons desiring to enter the general organization. She shall also seek to awaken interest in those not yet engaged in the work.

Those remote from local societies may become members by being received in the nearest local society, as per constitution.

ARTICLE VI.—LOCAL SOCIETIES.

Admission to Local Societies.—Candidates for membership shall be received upon presenting their names for membership.

Time of Meetings.—Local societies shall meet monthly, the day of meeting being determined by themselves.

Dues.—Each local society shall pay to the general treasurer an amount equal to five cents per month for each member.

Young Daughters of Zion.—The classes formed among the young sisters and known as "Young Daughters of Zion" shall be considered members of the local branches of this society and shall be so enrolled. They shall have a voice in the business meetings of the society. Their leader shall be elected from among the Daughters of Zion.

INSTRUCTION TO LOCAL SOCIETIES.

In organizing a local society, it may be desirable for the sisters to interest their branch president or other minister who may be willing to assist them. Should this be found to be impracticable they may proceed to effect organization without such aid. It is thought advisable to make public announcement of a meeting for that purpose, explaining briefly the objects and character of the society.

At the called meeting, after choosing a temporary chairman fuller explanation of the work may be made by those interested. Permanent officers may then be elected; the length of their term of office and the time and place of monthly meetings being also decided upon.

At the regular meetings the chairman presides, following the printed program as nearly as possible. She may call upon any member for prayer, reading, or comments. After the opening prayer, opportunity should be given for all to pray who may so desire, especially where the Prayer Union is combined with the Daughters of Zion. This combination is to be desired wherever a Prayer Union exists, and only necessitates occupying a little less time for the Prayer Union one Thursday in the month, when the Daughters of Zion program is followed.

Trumbull's Hints on Child-training may be obtained from the Herald Office. Price $1.00. The readings should not be passed over hastily, but time should be given for discussion of the thoughts presented.

The Question Box is intended to draw out discussion upon matters of interest to the society. The chairman may select from questions handed to her and call upon members for expression of views in answer to the question.

The secretary shall keep a list of members, sending the names to the recording secretary for publication. She should call the roll and mark the attendance at each meeting. She should also send an annual report to the general convention as to the numerical, financial, and general condition of the society. It is her duty also to write orders on the treasurer for any moneys to be paid out by the society.

The treasurer should collect the contributions at each meeting, have charge and keep a book account of all moneys of the society and report quarterly to the local society. The rule adopted concerning the amount to be sent to the general treasury does not make it obligatory upon each member to contribute a certain sum, but leaves it with the society to make up the amount in any way they choose. Hence, let none be debarred from becoming members, because of feeling unable to pay dues.

This money should be sent in quarterly where practicable to do so.

The church Book of Rules of Order has been adopted as authority in transacting business.

The duty of the visiting committee is to visit, with the object of arousing interest in the work of the society, and to invite attendance at its meetings.

REMARKS.

Observe that the first object of this association is "To unite for mutual benefit and to increase love for the sanctuary of home." The tendency of the age is to break down, ignore, and abolish this sanctuary. Let it be ours with God's help to acknowledge, defend, and build it up.

The second object presented is, "To study to educate our children in the principles of the gospel, to prepare them to resist the evils of the world, and to become active agents for good."

The gospel will prepare them to do these things if we let it have its perfect work. The gospel law, like all laws of our being, must be understood before it can be applied, and when not applied it is of no value. "Faith without works is dead, being alone."

The third object presented is "To promote social purity and teach the sisters the great responsibility of motherhood, that they may be mothers indeed, guarding the interests not only of their own children, but of the children of others."

The carrying out of this object as well as the placing of it clearly before the church and the world will involve much thought and prayer. Many leaflets will be demanded and the best talent of the church must be laid under contribution for their preparation. Be patient, sisters, and while you wait, pray. Pray to the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into this department of his vineyard and to enlighten their minds by his Spirit, that this work be not hindered, and while you pray, go to with your might and labor. Send to the Home Column of the Herald such articles as you find in your reading having a bearing upon this matter, that the editor may have much to select from, and by this means obtain the best.

The fourth object presented is, "To extend a helping hand to erring ones and to do all in our power to win them to paths of righteousness." That this is gospel work is plainly declared by Christ when he says, "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." This department of the work will also call for talent consecrated to God, and for great wisdom in its prosecution. But as surely as we exercise faith in him the demand will be met, and the work will be done. We know of some eminently fitted for this work, and the Lord will raise up others.

The fifth object presented is, "To be ready to sustain every good work, that our influence may assist in the establishment of Zion, the pure in heart." Is not this a thought lying very near to the heart of each one who loves the Lord? Does it not seem that it is a good work to be engaged in?

"Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

"O how foolish, and how vain, and how evil, . . . and how quick to do iniquity, and how slow to do good, are the children of men; yea, how quick to hearken unto the words of the evil one, and to set their hearts upon the vain things of the world; yea, how quick to be lifted up in pride; yea, how quick to boast, and do all manner of that which is iniquity; and how slow are they to remember the Lord their God, and to give ear unto his counsels; yea, how slow to walk in wisdom's paths."—Helaman 4: 8.

Letter Department.

HAVEN, Iowa, May 7.

Editors Herald.—I reached this point in my field of labor the 4th inst., ready to begin the debate to be held at a point some five miles southeast of Chelsea.

I met Elder Gray yesterday at Chelsea, to conclude arrangements for the discussion. As no suitable house for holding our debate in at the place where it originated could be had, no church being in the neighborhood, we proposed getting a large hall in Chelsea, as that would about equally divide the distance between the Cole schoolhouse and the Richland Creek branch, the two neighborhoods directly interested in the matter. But Bro. Gray would not consent, claiming that such arrangement would not be doing justice to the people of the vicinity of the Cole schoolhouse. And, further, we having no tent at hand and not being able to determine definitely when we could get one onto the ground, and as all agreed that it would be unwise to attempt to hold the discussion in the schoolhouse, because it is too small, it was decided to defer the debate till Monday, July 22, next, to begin at two o'clock; and as three propositions are to be discussed, involving the claims of the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the claims of the Christian Church, so called, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, it will continue some seventeen or eighteen sessions. Thus the matter stands.

I trust the missionaries appointed to labor in this (Des Moines) district of the mission will notify me of their presence in the field, that we may confer concerning the work, so far as necessary. I hope the Saints, also, will cooperate with the ministry, giving us information as to new openings and the needs of labor. The brethren will please remember that we shall expect brief reports from each; of time occupied in the field by them, the amount of labor done, the counties, cities, in or near what cities they have labored, on or about the 1st of the months of July, October, January, and March. Be prompt, as those sharing responsibility with the missionaries in charge are requested to send to them summarized reports as early as the 10th of the months above-mentioned.

My address until further notice will be Room 513, Youngerman Block, Des Moines, Iowa, Care G. W. Johnson; or Lamoni, Iowa.

By faithful, diligent labor we hope to see the work move with even greater rapidity than hitherto. May we not forget that we live in that period of the church's history when the character of the "foolish virgins" is being formed. Neglect of duty to God and man forms that character. Have we ceased to be prayerful, ceased to attend promptly the church and Sunday school services, ceased to make special effort to meet our obligations, great or small? Do we allow the mere weaknesses of brethren, when there is no intention to offend, produce coldness in us, to discourage us, it will help us form the character of the "foolish virgins." The Holy Spirit will be grieved away, and ere we are aware of it, our lamps are "gone out"!

A couple of Brighamite elders are operating in this vicinity. At their services the other evening some ten or twelve persons being present, the elder, during the talk (for it was not a preach) read from the late utterances of Wilford Woodruff, a plaintive and very pathetic appeal to the members and elders of the Utah Church not to be too inquisitive as to whether Adam, Jesus, or Jehovah be God! How unlike Moses, Paul, or our Savior this counsel is, "That they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ."—John 17:3. "That they should seek the Lord, . . . and find him."—Acts 17:27.

Is it possibly true, that some of the many misled in Utah are waking up from their long nap? Are they beginning to realize their gloomy covering? Let the good work go on. Let the inquiry extend all up and down those valleys and Rocky Mountain vales and canyons. Let the acclaim be heard echoing from all those "Mountain fastnesses," "Watchman, what of the night?" and let the watchmen of Zion, of the Reorganized Church reply all along the line, "Arise, . . . and Christ shall give thee light." When such an infinitely important question as Who is the Lord, "that we should serve him?" is propounded to President Woodruff by the people, why does he not seek to satisfy their longings for light? Why seek to add weight and gloom to their benighted condition, by saying, "Hush; it matters not?"

If Mr. Woodruff were not an official usurper, and were he in fact fulfilling the functions of the office he pretends, yet falsely, to fill, he could easily settle the matter for himself, as it is a question of eternal life or death to the people, by entering into "the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant" (D. C. 104:9), and then by the application of the gospel provisions, the question could be unfolded to the satisfaction of all concerned. The question is not a settled one with them, for their elder would not tell me whether he referred to the God who created Adam out of dirt, or the Adam so created, as his Father in heaven. He replied by saying, "Brigham knew what he was saying, 'Adam is our God and the only God with whom we have to do.'" "Adam was of the earth, earthy" (1 Cor. 15:47), and frequently it is that things that are "of the earth," are sensual and devilish." And is it not the Devil who seeks to shut out the knowledge of God from man? (See D. C. 36:5; Luke 8:12.) In the churches which are built up "and not unto the Lord," the rulers are to say "unto the people, Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept." (2 Nephi 12:1.) This is one of the signs that was to follow those belonging to the churches of men, and it has followed the people of the Utah Church ever since they declared as an article of their faith that the priesthood are the living oracles, and the books (of God) are not worth the ashes of a rye straw. "Hearken unto us." Strange!

The crop and fruit prospects are bright in this part of the State. Health fairly good. Brethren here alive to the interests of the work, so far as I now know. Hoping to accomplish good, I am, FREESOIL, Michigan, May 13.

Editors Herald:—I am doing what I can for the spread of the gospel. On my arrival here I found brother G. D. Washburn working away in the gospel and all alive to the work. One was baptized here yesterday and one today, both intelligent and promising young men, and others are beginning to investigate our work.

I baptized three at South Boardman on the 5th, and some others are seemingly believing the gospel. At South Boardman as well as here I see the Saints have advanced spiritually, being more firm and settled in the good work. To-morrow evening I commence in Onekema, a place where I opened up last fall. I felt then that God surely had a people there, some of whom may obey at this time.

I have not heard much from others of the ministry in this district, but all I have heard of, or nearly so, has been encouraging, except the case of Bro. Musser, who "went out from us," and who is now going around lecturing against us, and who is trying to do us all the harm he can. To those who may be troubled by him I would suggest that you examine the letter which he wrote in Herald (I think) December 12, 1894, signed "Joseph Musser." How he can reconcile that with his present lectures I am unable to answer.

Poor man! I feel sorry for him. What a change! But, then, the Savior would not have spoken as he did about the "sin against the Holy Ghost," if no one would ever sin against it. Truly he spake some "love darkness rather than light," but there is a reason assigned, "Their deeds are evil." He has been in both. Many are the churches of other denominations whose doors are open wide to him, many are the calls he receives to "come and lecture in our church against the Saints," and the larger the lie the greater the applause. So far even the youngest and weakest Saint does not seem to be moved from the faith, but the feelings of some are hurt because of the fear entertained that some who are near the kingdom may have their minds so poisoned that they will never enter; but, dear brethren, fear not, God has established this work; he rules in it; he will turn and overturn everything for our good and his honor and glory. "No weapon formed against" Zion "shall prosper!" If some of the honest ones are moved now, they will "come to an understanding" later on. Many others will find their mistake, and may express themselves as the infidel did once to me, "Cornish, I'll cease to fight it! there's a God back of it somewhere!" Those who willfully fight against God and his work, and abuse his people will feel the chastening hand of the Almighty upon them.

Let us defend the cause on all occasions as best we can, and leave the results with him who gave us this beautiful gospel, and who said the gospel gifts, powers, and priesthood would never be taken again from the earth until the sons of Levi would again offer up a sacrifice acceptable to God.

Let us "come up" (if need be) "out of great tribulation," and wash our robes and make them white. And the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, and of latter-day Joseph—the God of ancient and latter-day Israel, and of all Saints, will help us to bear the cross, and cause us to wear the crown, when the wicked cease to trouble and our joy will be complete.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, May 11.

Editors Herald:—I was called to Fontanelle last week to administer to Sr. Olive Baker. Preached twice while there with good results. Bro. Butler is looking after the interests of the work there.

Have been kept busy this week visiting and administering to sick. Preached a funeral sermon at Crescent yesterday; drove above twenty-five miles and officiated at a funeral to-day. To-morrow night I leave for Blandinsville, Illinois, to engage in discussion with Rev. Samuel Magee of the Christian Church, all arrangements having been made by missionary in charge. Expect to be gone ten days. Am announced to deliver the memorial sermon at Harlan, May 26, and have promised to deliver an oration at Little Sioux on Decoration Day. Have been so busy I have made no preparation for discussion, but I go trusting in God. Pray for me and the success of truth.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

MANCHESTER, Texas, May 7.

Editors Herald:—Since leaving General Conference I came down to Seligman, Missouri, and found the Saints anxiously waiting for me. They had not heard any preaching for about seven or eight months. I held meetings one week with fair attendance, and left the Saints cheered and willing to continue.

I then came down to Standley, Indian Territory, where I formerly lived one year, and held meetings one week with a full house. I have many warm brothers and sisters at Standley, hence it was sad to part with them, not knowing when I would have the privilege of meeting them again. I arrived at Manchester, Texas, my old home, April 30, and found that the Saints had built a nice church in a beautiful grove. Indeed, this brought joy to my heart, for they have been without a house ever since their church was burned up. They built a church 24x40. It will be a good house when finished. I had the privilege of preaching the first sermons in their new house, May 4 and 5. All seem to be glad of their house to worship in. They can hold meetings in it, but owing to the busy times, have postponed completing it until summer.

The outsiders or nonmembers contributed liberally to help build it. The Manchester branch is on the rise once more. The Christian or Cambellite people divided and built two new churches in Manchester. Religion seems to be on the boom here at present. I hope all will result for truth.

I will leave for my field—Alabama and Mississippi—the 1st of June. I have received several letters from Saints in Alabama and Mississippi in the last few days, requesting me to come as soon as I can; so I will hasten away to my new field, trusting that Brn. A. J. and A. B. Moore will look after the great demands for preaching in these parts. I have two challenges for debates on hand, but will turn them over to A. J. Moore, not fearing we will lose anything by risking our cause in the hands of this wise little man. The Saints hate to give me up in this mission, but say it is probably for the best. I am satisfied with the change. In bonds,
J. D. ERWIN.

FOSTER, Mo., May 8.

Editors Herald:—Since conference I have been laboring for the bread that perisheth through the week and have been preaching every Sunday. I have opened three new places and have standing appointments at the same. Have more calls than I can fill. It is no use to try to preach during the week for people will not come out. There is quite an excitement here; the cause of it is the writer baptized one of the leading Baptist preachers of this country. Satan rages and the people imagine vain things. The brother will be an honor to the church if faithful; his voice will be heard in defense of the gospel.

The writer and Bro. Maylock will go Sunday to open another new place where the restored gospel has never been heard. Where we have been preaching there is good interest and some are investigating our claims. I preached three times Sunday with good liberty and large congregations. At two of the places there was hardly standing room. This is the ripest field I have seen for some time.

Your brother,

MAYSVILLE, Ark., May 2.

Editors Herald:—When you heard from me last I was at Percilla, Texas. I left that country and went to Oscar, Indian Territory, about the last of February. I was led from Houston county to Oscar by that same Spirit by which I preach the gospel. While there is to be a good work done in that country, it was made known to me that my own part of the work was at an end, at least for the present.

When I arrived at Oscar I there learned that the power of God had been manifest to the Saints in a grand way through the gifts of the gospel. For a year the Saints have been receiving manifestations by dream, vision, etc., to the effect that they would soon leave there and go in a northeasterly course. In administering to the sick last summer it was made known to some that they would leave that country and be led to a land, and the course of travel be northeast.

About the last of February, at the Saints' prayer meeting, prophecy was given to the effect that a scourge would pass over the country. They were warned to leave the country and go at once. The Spirit of prophecy was manifest on two consecutive Sundays and came in such great power of the Spirit that all the Saints believed, and even some out of the church were so moved upon that they believed it to be of God and left the country. The Saints were promised to be led to a land prepared for them, and that an angel of God would go before them to protect, etc. The prophecy was not a call to Zion, as some might suppose, only a warning to leave the country, which every Saint made an effort to do, and as they did, had to meet considerable ridicule from the outside element.

On Saturday, the 23d of April, they all left but four or five families, and they were making arrangements to get away; about ten families left at once. Our crowd consisted of eighteen wagons, covered emigrant style, and sixty-four people. It is quite a sight indeed to see eighteen emigrant wagons leaving a country and, as we see them, contemplate the fact that they are leaving on the strength of their faith in God; and, quite curious indeed, to one who does not even believe in Jesus Christ. The distance here is about three hundred and fifty miles from Oscar, and was made without accident. The faith of the Saints was well tried. We were stopped by the same means we were started. We all landed about six miles from South West City, Missouri, and were told to settle round about. The Saints after some prayer, accepted the word to that effect, and at this date are well pleased with the move.

We find Bro. Joseph Sutherland located here. He came to this country last year from Southwestern Texas, near San Antonio. When we arrived we all stopped on the good old brother's farm till the Saints could get located. When we arrived we found the old brother nearly bedfast with pneumonia and afflicted with a distressing cough. We administered to him by request and he was restored to health. In the administration the word of the Lord was that he had come here led by the hand of God, and was laying the first stones in a great work that would be done from and in this part of the country, and more.

Prospects look grand for a great work, if the Saints and workers are faithful and industrious.

A recent letter from Oscar, from a disinterested party, shows that the prophecy is being fulfilled, that the scourge is on them. The letter said, among other things, that a three days' sandstorm had been blowing and was worse by far than any that had ever been known there. It was so terrible that most of the crops were destroyed by being blown out of the field. In some fields all the plowed ground, crop and all, was blown away; of others it was blown in piles, the space above ground was fairly filled with dirt and sand. A waterspout flooded the country and a cyclone did some mischief blowing away one house, not even leaving a stick, and the top off a dugout; but no one was hurt. The house blown away was occupied by a sister whose husband does not belong to the church but he believed the prophecy and came with the Saints. He looked ashamed and yet glad when he was told of his house blowing away; ashamed that he was negligent about obeying the truth; glad that he had been so wonderfully protected by the hand of God.

That country or place is in great confusion. About that time a general storm and norther over the west killed thousands of cattle. The people of this world must know that God is God, and bow the knee to his perfect law, with no parts done away or ordinances changed, and thereby have their souls converted and reap eternal life with Jesus Christ.

W. C. CATHER.

MORRISTON, Wales, April 23.

Editors Herald:—It brings one much comfort to feel that our church is so thoroughly established as to be able to support these mediums by which all the Saints far and near, from the highest to the lowest, old and young, rich and poor alike, can have a glimpse of the progress and state of the church in almost every part of the world.

Since, then, these little messengers bring to us so much satisfaction and joy, we should endeavor to show our appreciation of their invaluable services by aiding and supporting their existence to the best of our ability—financially and influentially.

The Saints in Wales at present are comparatively few and far between. The branch at Morriston numbers about eighteen members, seven of whom are in regular attendance. The town boasts about seventeen thousand inhabitants. How sad to think that only seven out of this number serve the Lord according to the plan set down by him for the redemption of their souls.

Outdoor preaching, apparently, has proved a failure in this part. It may be that we have not been sufficiently diligent. Anyhow these few Saints have bethought themselves of another plan—a last resource,—they have taken unto themselves a neat little chapel—an iron building which accomodates very nearly three hundred people, from the modest pulpit of which they intend that the word of God shall go forth in its purity and wonderful simplicity, to warn all of the unchangeable commands of the Lord, and invite all the honest in heart to take up the cross which alone will gain for them eternal glory.

We need the prayers of all the Saints to support us. We are weak, being but a few; but our faith is strong, and "if God be with us, who can prevail against us?" The Lord will not forsake his people while they endeavor to live upright and just. He is mighty and all powerful, and if he designs that we shall climb huge mountains of trouble, why, let us face the task bravely, and with an assurance of victory. They are but trials of our faith; let us not be weighed in the balance and found wanting. If our path be light and even, where then is the subject of our reward?

In presenting the gospel to the world we are sure to encounter opposition, defiance, and scorn. Looking upon these with a worldly eye and trusting in our arm of flesh, the barricades of the enemy seem impenetrable, their hills of destruction insurmountable; but if we place our trust in the Lord with an eye single to his greatness and glory, the strongholds of the foe, which are but built upon foundations of sand, will surely fall before the mighty strength of God's unchangeable word. Brother Job firmly planted his feet upon the rock of faith. He did not stir; all the wily advances of the evil one he manfully repelled and ultimately came off victorious. Let us not trust in the arm of flesh; it changeth, as all things human change. We are all human—individuals in the church, stones comprising the building. Let us therefore support one another by faith and love with Christ as our foundation, example, and leader; and while we have our faith fixed in him we cannot fall, we cannot fail. We are the light of the world; let it appear so. The magnificent brightness of its purity confounds the inhabitants of the regions of darkness. The strength of their mind's eye is weakened by reason of their having been led and governed by the darkening sun of tradition, but the light is dawning upon them gradually, the dawn of the Lord's second coming has broken in upon the darkness of the night, and when the sun of his glory has reached its summit, all will rejoice in the warmth of his love.

May God bless all engaged in his glorious work. Let love be our stimulant and perfection in Christ, our ambition in carrying on this mighty crusade against the willful perversions of men. Our probation here is but short at most; let us therefore dedicate all in our power to God's service. There are a thousand ways of doing this. It brings us joy and happiness in this world, the which will be multiplied tenfold in the great hereafter.

"Onward" let our watchword be,
Our aim to come up higher.

Yours in gospel bonds,
S. J. G.

COATS, Arkansas, May 7.

Editors Herald:—I started for my field April 22 and stopped on the way at Woodside and preached eight times, and baptized two—Bro. Simpson and wife—and left several more interested who had hitherto been some of our persecutors. Bro. Perego took me to Cain Hill, May 3, and Bro. Frisbie sent me to Coats on the 4th, accompanied by his son Elmer. Having sent my appointment ahead, I commenced meeting at Coats the night of the 4th. I met a large congregation for a country place like this. I will open up a new place commencing next Saturday night.

This field has nothing very flattering in sight as yet, but I cannot predict what the future may be. We have built no air castles, and don't expect to. We have entered the field with a determination to do all we can to build up the cause, ever praying for the assistance of Him who has all power and for the cooperation of all the Saints in the field.

I would like to hear from the missionary in charge of Arkansas, and if any of the ministry have occasion to travel over the Gulf railroad, I would be pleased to have them stop and help us out with a meeting or two.

My field address is Coats, Sharp county, Arkansas, to July 1. My home address is Pomo, Howell county, Missouri. Mail sent to my home office will always find me.

Your brother,
JOSEPH WARD.

SERMON BY ELDER G. H. HILLIARD.

At Independence, Missouri, April 8, 1895.

IN the eighth chapter of Romans, the fourteenth verse, you will find this reading:—

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

In the seventh verse of the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians, this:—

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

And in the First Epistle General of John, this:—

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God.

I have chosen these verses to-night as a foundation of my remarks, because I expect, if I shall have the liberty of the Spirit, to try and present some thoughts concerning the Spirit of God. It will be remembered that all these passages of scripture quoted were addressed to the saints of God. They do not apply to the world, and so we have the statement by the Apostle Peter on Pentecost day, that those who would believe and be baptized for the remission of sins should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. This is the promise of God to all his children without one exception; and this Spirit of God that is promised is given because of our necessities. In the first place, God has promised to give it unto his children as the pledge on his part of their acceptance, recognizing them as his, and to impart the strength or power they need to accomplish the work required of them in the world. We believe there are a great many in the world who do not have the proper conception of the work of the Spirit of God. Christ says, in John's first chapter of his Gospel, that he is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world; and I believe it is because of the light of God's Spirit that we are enabled to comprehend the good and the evil, hence we have the light of God to a certain extent given to all, and we are placed in this world upon our agency to exercise our power of will and as intelligent creatures to choose the course in which we will walk, with the assurance that if we will choose the right and walk in the path of duty, conforming to the law by which we should be governed, the Spirit of light and truth will be with us.

The Spirit of God, it is said, will be in the world to "reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment;" but because of the many promises God has made to his children, a great many persons who are out of Christ have concluded that if they would only ask God he would grant them his Spirit. While I may concede that they may receive a portion of the Spirit that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world, I cannot conceive that those out of Christ will receive that measure that Jesus denominated the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, that he has promised to his children only, as an abiding Comforter. I believe that Spirit will come to individuals in a sinful state—I believe it will work with them—work in their minds and hearts and lead them to God if they will yield to its leading and enticing; but not as an abiding Comforter. It is not promised to them, but it comes to them to convince them of sin as I have before stated.

What a man experiences he knows better than anything else in the world; and I am sure that the Spirit of God will come to wicked persons and make them know they are doing wrong, re-proving them for sin; and so it leads men to accept the truth, leads them to Christ; and hence the statement of Christ,

No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him.—John 6: 44.

The Spirit of God works with the proclamation of the word, and works separate and apart from the proclamation of the word many times. When men want the truth, when they desire in their heart to know the truth, the Spirit of God comes to them, enlightening the mind, informing the judgment, and enabling them measurably to comprehend the truth; and so when the word is preached, the Spirit working with the proclamation of that word, we are led to see our condition,—that we are sinful creatures. We see that we must die; we know we must pass into another condition; we desire the best condition possible; and realizing our own condition we feel the necessity of a change of life. Christ has died that we might have life, but we must be born again. Until we are born again we cannot see; that is, we cannot comprehend the kingdom of God. We are begotten by the word of truth. It finds a lodging place in our hearts, germinates, grows, and develops, and the Spirit works with it until it brings about repentance. It is denominated by some, "getting religion." It is called "a change of heart." It is called "conversion." I prefer this term, for "convert" means to "change."

I believe of all that come into the church or kingdom of God as they should, that they are first begotten by the word of truth, and that develops and goes on until they realize their condition, and repent of their sins, and experience a change of heart, and are converted to the truth. Many have made this sad mistake and thought that conversion brought to them all that God had promised; that they then were in possession of the Holy Spirit as an abiding Comforter. They have been contented to stop there, when in fact they have never been born again; and now we remember what Christ said when he was talking to Nicodemus, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 3, 5.

And while these words stand clear and plain, many have concluded that they are now actually born into the kingdom, when they have only experienced conversion, only been brought to that condition or preparation for the birth; for all who can comprehend the language of Christ know that there is a quickening first before there is a birth in the world naturally, and so we must receive that measure of the quickening power of God's divine Spirit, before we are born in the church and kingdom of God, otherwise we are still-born, we are dead; hence we see that God has provided that through this perfect law we shall be inducted into his kingdom and receive this new life from him. He says through the Apostle Paul, writing to the Romans, the eighth chapter and sixth verse,

To be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

We know that in our carnal, natural condition we are dead to God, we are separated from him until we are born again—born of God; but when we are born of the Spirit of God we are brought into communion with him, made alive unto him, and as his children we are entitled to his Holy Spirit, the life-giving power by which we are placed in holy communion with God, and can receive from him as our needs require.

And now to such as have brought themselves in this condition this language applies:—

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.—Rom. 8: 14.

If they are not led by the Spirit of God the opposite would be true—that we would not be the sons of God; but by placing ourselves in this condition we are entitled to all that God has promised to his children. Now a thought here. If this be true, the gospel is God's power of salvation and he being no respecter of persons, whenever persons in any age of the world place themselves in the condition of the son or daughter of the Almighty, they are certainly entitled to this same Holy Spirit that Jesus promised as an abiding Comforter and that the Apostle Peter promised to the obedient on Pentecost day. If it be true that we are all entitled to this, we should not stop when we are converted, but should move right on. Being led by the Spirit of God, we should accept the doctrine of Christ, and accept God's word and be led by him in all things; and we cannot for a moment conclude that God has required at the hands of men anything except that which will be for their good. Nothing is incorporated in the law of God but what is essential; hence everything that is laid down for the children of men to obey in one age of the world is required in every other age of the world, and obedience to this law must produce the same results in every age alike. How the thought ever found place in the mind of any intelligent man or woman that the people in one age would be favored above those of another, if all obey the same law and do the Father's will, has always been a mystery to me. I find the promises of God are unlimited and that he is unchangeable and no respecter of persons, therefore whenever men and women put themselves in harmony with the law of God the same results must follow; and if we are the children of God we are entitled to his Holy Spirit; and we are assured that that Spirit is given to every one to profit withal. Then the Spirit does not come to you or me merely with a "guess so" and "hope so" and bear you up for a time and then go away and leave no lasting benefit. The Spirit comes to enlighten the mind and develop the intellect, to enable us to comprehend the things of God, and to make us strong to resist evil and do that which is right; and if we are led by this Spirit and receive the proper operation, it will perform its work; and the only consistent view, I believe, that we can possibly have concerning the gospel as God's saving power is, that when we obey it and receive this promise from our heavenly Father, it will come to us to impart the strength we need, the power, the grace, that we may be able to make this warfare a success, that we may overcome the evils of the world, the weakness of our nature, and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit according to the pattern given. And I hold this: that if the Spirit does not perform that work for us in this life, so that we shall make progress in the divine life, overcome the carnal nature, the weakness of humanity, the evils of the world, and bring ourselves in harmony with the Christ-life,—if it does not perform that work for us measurably in this life, and if we do not constantly progress in this divine life, we have no grounds on which to base our hope that we shall have eternal life in the presence of God in the world to come.

If the gospel cannot save me now, what grounds have I for hope that it will save me in the world to come? I have my weaknesses to contend with, God knows that. I have the evils of the world to contend with. I have all those things that are not in harmony with God's will to overcome or else I prove a failure. God knows we cannot do this ourselves, and that is why he has put himself on record and pledged himself that through the medium of the Holy Spirit he will impart the strength we need to enable us to accomplish this work, to resist the evils of the world, and give unto us the wisdom we need, that we may walk in the path of duty, developing, unfolding, progressing, and going on to perfection.

And this is not obtained all at once. You might just as well talk about a person being born into this world a full grown man as to talk about a man being born of God full grown right at the start. It is not true. He is a mere babe in Christ when he first enters the kingdom, and so he begins in this divine life as a child, as a babe, and knows nothing comparatively. If you are like I am, you can just cast your mind back to the time when you first entered the church and see how ignorant you were, and how you desired to know, and you can comprehend easily that you knew but very little; and then if you have done your duty, you can see that you have made some progress in the divine life. You understand spiritual things better—the things of God more perfectly; you understand what you have to meet better; you know better how to meet it and how to overcome it; and so by this experience it is a constant growth and a constant development, and unfolding, overcoming and coming up higher and higher in this divine life. The Lord knows we have all this to do, so he promises us that he will work with us, and by this power we shall grow stronger, and be able to overcome and make this work a success; hence he says:—

The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—1 Cor. 12: 7.

Now if the Spirit of God is given to every man to profit withal, there is no necessity for God to give through the Spirit a thing that I already know. I don't need that. There is no use for God to reveal a fact that he has already revealed; but there is a necessity for him to confirm to us those truths that he has revealed to others, for if he does not confirm them to us we do not know they are truths. Some one else knowing that God had revealed the truth to them, and that the gospel was God's power of salvation, and they putting that on record and leaving their testimony with us, is only sufficient to create a faith in us, and by reading their testimony and the promises of God through them we are led to obey. For what purpose? That we might receive like testimony; and so these truths that God has revealed to others must be confirmed to you and me, and God puts himself under obligations to do this. Jesus put himself on record when he said,

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7: 17.

Sometimes I tell them when I read it that "know" does not mean "believe," and we are promised we shall "know."

The question might arise, How shall we know? Some tell us we don't know anything only what is written in the book, therefore we must be satisfied with that. Some say they must have the assurance of the Spirit, but all the assurance of the Spirit they get they get in conversion; and others go on and say that they must receive the Spirit and the testimony direct to themselves of the truth of the doctrine. I belong to the class that must receive the Spirit direct, and receive the evidence of the truth of the doctrine; and until we do this we can never know. John says in the third chapter and last verse, of his first epistle, that we know "by the Spirit which he hath given us." Not because somebody wrote it in the book, but by the Spirit which he has given us; hence the Spirit comes to God's children to make them know the truth, that the gospel is God's power of salvation, that they are his children, accepted of him, and then they start out in this new life.

Then there are certain outward manifestations of that Spirit, and these outward manifestations are enumerated in the epistle of Paul to the Corinthians. They are manifested in different ways. The Lord imparts faith. That is not an outward manifestation, but it is a gift from God all the same. "To some wisdom." I have thought it would be well if we could have more of that precious gift. A great many of us need that. We may have good sense, but we lack in wisdom and good judgment many times, and for that reason sometimes you see that we poor mortals when we have been blessed with the Spirit and receive the evidences from God of the truth of the gospel, lack this important factor, wisdom; and every once in awhile we are showing it to the world, in the General Assemblies of the church; we show nearly everywhere we pass along in life that we lack wisdom, and knowledge, and discretion; and it is a thing greatly to be deplored. The wise man says:—

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom.—Prov. 4: 6.

We need it.

To another he imparts the gift of tongues, to another interpretation, to another prophecy, and so on. These things are all desirable, they are all good in their place; but there is no use for God to keep giving to an individual that which he already knows; and so when the Lord has instructed us and we know what he wants us to do, there is no use for him to tell us over every time we meet what to do; for we know what he has told us, and unless some emergency arises there is no necessity for him to speak again on that subject.

Now here is where I think that even Latter Day Saints sometimes make mistakes. They think when they assemble together in the meetings that unless they have some outward manifestation of God's Spirit, such as tongues and interpretation, or prophecy, or something of that kind, they have not had a meeting worth a cent. They must have that or they have not had a good meeting. Now that is owing to circumstances. If we need it, it is all right for God to give it; and if we put ourselves in proper condition so that we may receive, if God sees we need any special gift he will bestow that upon us. It is all right to covet earnestly the best gifts, but we should not select something and conclude that we must have that, if we don't know whether we can use it right or not. God knows best what we can use properly, and for the benefit of the church, and we ought to leave the selection to him and ask him to give us that which he sees will be beneficial; not only to us, but to others, leaving God to make the choice, submitting ourselves to his will; then he will give us that which we shall be profited by. But if we seek something simply because we desire it, and not take God's will into consideration, and whether we are prepared to use that special gift or not, there is danger in this; for possibly you are setting up your will against God's will, and when you do that, danger comes in, and the evil one has his rights just as well as any person in the world. God has given him certain limits and bounds and permits him to act until a set time shall come. That was demonstrated by the Savior when he was in the world. One time the evil one came to him and said:—

Art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God.—Luke 4: 34.

They knew there was a set time when their work would have to cease, but until that time they had their rights, hence having their rights according to the will of God, they are here; and we remember reading in the Book of Job that when the sons of God met to worship, Satan came also. From this we learn that the Devil attends church. When the Saints of God come together to worship, the Devil is always there. And if we do not keep ourselves in harmony with this spiritual law of God, Satan takes advantage of the opportunity and because of our weakness he enters in and operates, and we are none the wiser concerning it sometimes, and therefore sometimes good meaning persons are under the influence of a false Spirit. They give false gifts, and sometimes it causes a great deal of trouble and division. Sometimes it ruins individuals, because they thought they were all right and after a series of years (perhaps it will take that long, sometimes) they find they were mistaken, and their faith is wrecked, and their confidence destroyed, and they fall victims to this delusion that they have gotten under; and for this reason Jesus Christ promised when he sent his disciples out to preach the gospel in all the world to those who believed and obeyed that gospel, "In my name they shall cast out devils."

Did you ever think why Christ promised this? Just think in a philosophical manner for a moment. If we are the church and kingdom of God, and Jesus Christ the great Head, the power of God in the church, is it reasonable to conclude that Satan can come in, enter the ranks and stay there, and there be no power in the church to cast him out? Christ and God have declared that both of them will dwell in the church by the Spirit, and then Christ promises for the protection of his people that his power shall be in his kingdom, and that by his authority, in his name, they shall have power over the enemy and have power to cast him out, unless we will to keep him there.

We read that in the Church of God in ancient times certain ones possessed of an evil spirit came to Jesus, and he cast the devil out, then they were all right again. While this power is not reposed in every one, it is resident with God, and it is exercised through Christ's authority, and through whom he will; and every soul in the Church of God that will do his duty, put himself in harmony with God's will, is entitled to protection from the powers of the evil one. And if through their weakness they are overcome by the enemy, and he gets possession of their bodies and minds, if they in their hearts want to do right and are willing to be delivered, and walk in the freedom of the gospel, the power is in God's kingdom to do this; hence this is the reason why Jesus Christ in the first promise that he told his apostles to give the disciples in obedience to his gospel, declared that in his name, by virtue of his authority, they should "cast out devils." They would not be left here at his mercy; they would be protected and through his authority have power to command the enemy and he must obey. And hence just as long as the Devil is loose, until the time comes when Satan is bound, wherever God's kingdom is, that power must be there or else it is not the kingdom of God. Jesus Christ has lost his power if that is not in his kingdom. The gospel is a failure if that power is not resident in the kingdom of God on earth. And if it cannot save me from the power of the Devil now in this world, I ask what hope we have that we will be saved from his power in the spirit world, or world to come? We have nothing on which to base our hope of salvation in the future if that salvation does not begin here. Hence this is the reason why the promise was made,

The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—1 Cor. 12: 7.

God, knowing the weakness of his children, knows he will have to teach, and instruct, and bring them up just like you would have to bring up little children, and that their minds may be developed and they enabled to comprehend his truth, he has promised them that his Spirit shall be with them as an abiding Comforter, and that by this they will be enabled to comprehend the things of God, and so they go on developing in spiritual life. And to some he says he gives the "discerning of Spirits." Now I don't think that means that by the discerning of spirits I may know your spirit and know the difference between this man's spirit and your spirit. He is talking here about the spirits that have gone out into the world. Many false prophets are gone out into the world; and false spirits in the world; and so we are promised in the gospel that we shall have the gift and power of God to discern those spirit manifestations, those spirit powers so that we will be able to know when there is a manifestation given whether it is of God or not; that his children might be protected from evil spirits, that the evil spirit might not come to church and get up and speak through some individual and by that means deceive the brethren. That is the object of that gift from God. Let me say right here that the man who does not possess it is not qualified to preside over the assemblies of God's people, and hence this is the reason why God has said this in his word:—

And unto the Bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church, and to be elders unto the church, are to have it given unto them to discern all those gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing and yet be not of God.—D. C. 46: 7.

And unless God does this, I ask where the qualification comes in as a presiding officer? Our experience has much to do with these things in the world. I remember that once, a short time after coming into this church, they were living very faithful in the branch and one good sister through some means or other put herself in such condition that a false spirit got hold of her, and she would come in to the meeting and seemingly enjoy the Spirit very much and she would begin to tremble, and shake, and make everything shake about the house—they used to hold services in private houses then, twenty-five years ago; and then she would prophesy, and the brethren all being newborn babes in Christ, or most of them, just sat and took it down as a grand thing, a glorious meeting. I said to the presiding elder, that it was not the Spirit of God, and privately told him by himself, not in a public meeting. "O, certainly it is," said he. I said to another elder, "That is not the true Spirit." But he thought it was. Says he, "Some things she says come to pass." "Suppose they do," I said; "the Devil can tell what he knows, and a whole lot of things that he can do too. It doesn't all come to pass, though; there is the trouble. It is not absolutely reliable."

When I was a boy spiritualism got very strong in our country, in the State of Ohio where I lived, and it got to be so that nearly everybody around there was trying this spiritualism; and I like other boys thought I would like to know something about it, and so I went to their sittings and saw its operations, and after awhile I got so it would work for me nicely, and I could make the table get up and rock around, and do almost anything I told it to do. One night when my parents were gone I got this spirit to work. My older sister went and got the old family Bible and laid it onto the table. "Now" said she, "it won't work with the Bible on there." I told the spirit to throw the Bible off and it threw that Bible onto the floor. "Now," says I, "you see how much power there is in the Bible—just the same as there is in any other book of the same weight, and no more." But when I proved spiritualism I found it was unreliable; that it came from beneath. It could tell a great many things that were true, and some things that would come to pass; but it would just as likely tell that that was not true, and deceive. And so it was with this false spirit that got into the church; it was the same kind. It was simply an evil spirit, and it came to church, got in, and deceived the brethren; and it went on for months. By and by it got the church divided and it would have destroyed the branch if it had not been that God directed a man to cast it out and it was done. Then it troubled us no more.

I speak this for your edification. When the Spirit of God comes upon an individual he should act in harmony with what we are told in God's word, that that which cometh from above must be spoken with care and by constraint of the Spirit; so we have to watch as well as pray and be sure that these manifestations are in harmony with God's divine will. Then again sometimes because we are promised the Spirit of God, when persons are confirmed in the church, or when the sick are administered to, they think there must be some wonderful manifestation or there is nothing effected. When I was confirming some individuals in the church in a certain place the question was asked me, "What kind of a confirmation had they?" I said, "About an ordinary confirmation." "Well, but what were the promises made?" "Not any; no promises made;" said I. They had got the idea in their minds that a confirmation was not good if there was not a lot of promises made for the future. What is the use of those promises being made unless God especially directs it? They had better let that alone. They have all the promises that God has guaranteed to his children in his word. Unless there is some special work for them to do, unless God has some special thing to point out, why should he take the trouble to give them that which is already contained in his written word and that they know they are entitled to? And so I look upon it as just as good a confirmation if I have hands laid on me by proper authority if there isn't a word spoken over me in prophecy; I don't see a bit of difference. If God has something to point out I will be glad to receive it, but when it comes I want to receive the assurance that it is from God.

I rejoice in my soul and thank God for the gifts of the gospel, but while this is true, I have the desire that we may be instructed in spiritual things, and know the spirits, and receive that which is profitable to us. That which is not profitable we do not want, and so it is, if we will put ourselves in the proper condition we have the promise that we shall be led by the Spirit of God, and then the promises of God to his children are that those who have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide and have not been deceived,—they are the ones that are going to stand in the end. Simply because men and women may have received the gift of tongues or prophecy is no evidence they are going to be able to stand in the end and be justified in the great judgment day; for Jesus Christ himself said, when he was preaching,

Many will say to me in that day, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. —Matt. 7: 23.

You say, "That does not apply to Latter Day Saints." It does not? Who does it apply to then? "That applies to those other people." But most of them tell us that these things are done away. Many of them do not pretend to have the gifts. True, there are some professing to do these things, but this was written to the brethren, to the disciples, and it applies to them. Paul understood his business when he said,

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.—1 Cor. 13: 2.

It won't save me in the future. These things are given to profit withal and we must have the love of God in our souls and must desire these gifts not for our own exaltation, but for the good of the church that the church may receive edification and be instructed. The Lord may give them to us sometimes for our own special benefit, for our own instruction. Then if he does we do not need to run and tell it. We must wait when God gives us anything until we are moved to speak, then speak with care and by constraint of the Spirit. If we do not there is danger of speaking wrong. Then if God wants us to tell anything he will move upon us, and we will feel constrained to so speak, and God will bless us in so doing.

You will discover here that it is a peculiar place to occupy, and that while there is some danger of being deceived by false spirits, it is a fact that unless we put ourselves in position to receive the true Spirit of God, we have no claim to a place in his celestial kingdom. It is an essential thing, then, that we do receive God's Spirit, and unless we do we have no promise that we shall be his. Then the secret of success is that we live very humbly and very trustfully before God, that we pray much, fervently and secretly as well as before the public, that we may receive that abiding Comforter that it may enlighten the mind and enable us to comprehend these things. But if we find ourselves going a little down grade and we desire the gifts of God's Spirit to raise us up in the estimation of the brethren, do you not see that is done through the wrong motive? The object is not to glorify God under those conditions, but it is to exalt ourselves; and as a rule God does not make any show of himself in public. When the Spirit of God comes it comes in meekness, in humility, in God's way; and of these marvelous things that are so wonderfully demonstrated before the eyes of the world the Lord does not do much of that. It is wonderful in the estimation of the world when a person speaks in a tongue they have not learned, and sometimes they have thought they were mad or drunk as we read; but the Spirit of God comes and operates in a gentle manner, usually. There will be some difference owing to the temperament, and organization, and disposition of the person operated upon; and while the Lord says, "He that trembleth under my power shall be made strong," it must not run on and go too far. If it does, you may watch it and watch it carefully too.

When one gets up in a meeting and waits and sees if he cannot tell something after we have made a long testimony, that is not right. If God wants us to do those things he will put his Spirit upon us and constrain us to speak. Then again, when God is speaking through an individual he never corrects himself. Watch that and if you see a man or woman prophesy and stop to correct his words, the Lord isn't doing that. God has never yet had to correct himself; he doesn't do it. So you can tell many times whether it is God doing it or somebody else, and we have to be sure that we are in harmony with his word. If we are not in harmony with the law, it is not of God. We must not be deceived. The promise of God is to them that are not deceived; they will be led by the Holy Spirit.

I have had some experience in this work, for more than a quarter of a century, and never in one instance where I have seen the declaration made by the Spirit of God has it failed at all. And yet I have seen things published, even in the papers, and they would tell what wonderful manifestations they had, and tell what was going to transpire and what the result was, and the result was not exactly what it ought to have been.

It has not deceived me because it was not in harmony with God's law. I knew it was not from God. It was from the other source; they had forgotten that the Devil had power to appear as an angel of light. God makes no mistakes, and his plans and purposes are not frustrated at all. When he speaks that word is going to be accomplished, hence we need not be deceived unless we want to. If we want to be deceived and allow ourselves to go on in this way, the Lord is not going to hinder us, for he cannot make anything out of us and take away our agency; but if we will put ourselves under his care, and trust in him, and desire the gifts of the Spirit, from pure motives and for proper purposes, for the edifying of the body of Christ and the building up and strengthening of its members, then we will not be deceived nor be led materially astray. God will never permit an honest soul that is doing the best he can, if he will put himself in harmony with his law, to be led astray. He may withdraw his Spirit and let him have trial. That is sometimes necessary. He did that with his own dear Son, and he suffered such wonderful mental agony that he sweat blood at every pore and cried out in the anguish of his soul, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" And so we may be left, and come in contact with those evil powers. I know this myself. The Devil does not sleep; he is always on the alert. He gives false promises as well as false gifts, and he can operate on our minds at night just as well as God's Spirit, and dreams and visions are given by both spirits and powers, and unless we are able to comprehend the difference we may be deceived, and that is the reason why we are sometimes led off by these visions.

I have known men in the church who have trusted more in their visions and dreams than in the law of God. Anything you receive that is not in harmony with God's law do not accept as coming from God, and when we hear of those wonderful manifestations, (I heard of one since I have been here, it was something in the form of a woman and said, "Follow me,") I do not take that as coming from God; for no man or woman should say "follow me," only as far as they follow Christ, and when they do not point you to the Lamb of God, do not accept it as coming from the right source. It does not point high enough; they must point beyond, as Paul did, and say, "Follow me as I follow Christ." Just so far as they follow Christ we can follow them, and no farther. And when a true manifestation comes it will come in the right way. We have to watch that we be not deceived, for many false spirits are gone out into the world and are deceiving many.

The Saints of God should not be deceived. We, as the children of light ought to walk in the light, and it is our privilege—if we will do our duty and live as we ought—to comprehend these spiritual powers, for they are not all alike. Every gift of the gospel is a different manifestation, and if we are wise in spiritual things and God gives that power needful, we may be able to discern these spiritual manifestations and know whether they are of God or not. And when God chooses men to watch over the church, to instruct the church and bring it up to perfection, he must endow those men with the needful qualifications, and while we all expect to become perfect sometime, we must not forget that it is through this means that God says he will perfect the Saints. He has set in the church apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, and so on; and the very first purpose enumerated in the word referring to them is that they are "for the perfecting of the Saints." How? Through these officers that God chose to teach his law by his Spirit, and instruct his children. And they will receive the same Spirit; they will feel the evidence of the truth and so they will go on together, being instructed, perfected, and taught in principle, and doctrine, and knowledge in spiritual things. This is God's means of perfection; hence it is a necessity that these men that God has called shall live so they may understand these spirit operations and be not deceived themselves.

I am satisfied and know that many times there are those occupying positions they are not qualified for; and because of their lack of qualification not only themselves but the Saints are deceived and led astray. This being the case, we want to be careful and watchful. It isn't so very essential that we enjoy a great number of those spiritual gifts. It is right that we enjoy them and receive them whenever needful, but when it is not needful, God will not bestow them; and when the gospel comes to us salvation comes, and while we continue in harmony with the gospel economy we are safe in Christ; and while our hearts are pure and we put ourselves in harmony with the law in our work, in our desires, in all that we do, we are perfectly secure; and if we get so that we want to elevate ourselves, build ourselves up, then we are insecure and the adversary will take advantage.

And now brethren and sisters, in conclusion, I ask you to watch as well as pray, and be not deceived. Put yourselves in condition that you may be led by the Spirit of God. Live faithful to your covenant. You will have your weaknesses to overcome, but you will not do it all at once. It will be a constant work to learn to control yourself, your temper, your passions, your powers, to bring that carnal nature of yours into subjection. I believe that if I can do that, any person can; for I was dreadfully bad. Obeying the gospel did not take away my nature. I have had it to contend with all along the line of my life. I have it to war with yet, but while this is true, I do not complain of wonderful trials I have had to pass through. I knew that I had myself, the flesh, and the Devil all to contend with, and I made a resolution to that effect. I said in my soul and then to my wife, "I am going to obey the gospel and try to live right, if no other man does beneath the heavens." I didn't start out to look to some man for a pattern. I had the example of Jesus Christ, the only pattern I needed, and I was commanded to look to him. I expected imperfections in mortality; I expect it yet. I find them in myself, and while I have so many of these, I expect some in others and I make allowance for my brother.

Sometimes I say I have no confidence in a man's religion when he does not try to walk up to the law and do as he would wish to be done by. I have been misunderstood in that. I have reference to the religion of the man. A religion that does not make a man honest, and truthful, and make him do to others as he would have them do to him, is not the religion of Christ; and I have no confidence in any religion that does not bring forth the right fruits; hence if I am in the Church of God I must put myself in harmony with God's law; and I must desire your good, I must work for your interests, and my religion must go with me in all departments of life. It must be with me in my business, in my trade. In all that I do in the world my religion must be there; and I must treat you like I would desire to be treated under like circumstances; and if I do not do it you have no grounds to have any confidence in me, and I don't ask it. And if I do not live according to my teaching, your first duty is to point that out to me, and if I do not correct my life I am not worthy of your confidence, and I don't ask it of you. I will correct my life whenever it is pointed out to me by any man or woman in the church or out of it.

I believe that with God's help I can overcome any weakness of my nature and can do God's will on the earth. I don't say that I am doing it perfectly now,—I am trying to; but I have started out to accomplish that work, and I have no more fear of a failure than I have that I will sink under this floor in a half a minute. Why? Simply because I have confidence in God's promise. Not because I am strong. No, God forbid; but I do know that God is strong, that he is able to hold me up, that his word will do to rely on; and this is why I do not say I am afraid I will fail. What am I afraid of if I am doing the best I can and God knows my heart? I don't want to answer for the sin of unbelief. I have come into this church and pledged myself to serve God. I know whether my heart is set to do God's will or not, and so do you know yours, and if you will only examine yourselves and see that you love God's truth more than you love yourself, you need not fear. If you have your heart filled with the love of God, "Perfect love casteth out fear." Let us get ourselves in that condition and try to so live that we may be secure in the protection of the Almighty, then when God sees fit to bestow upon us the gifts of the Spirit we will prepare to receive and profit by them. And if you live just the best you know how, if you will ask God to bestow what he sees is necessary for his work, he will give you gifts you never asked for. He will tell you what to do and how to do it, and you can rely on him every time.

Let us be free in Christ Jesus, let us desire nothing only that which will be for the glory of God and the good of his work. Let us work with one heart and one mind to build up the kingdom of the Redeemer, giving to God the honor, and the glory, and the praise continually. Remember that God is strong, that he is mighty, that he is able to save us and bear us up. Let us come up and live this higher life. Then when these trials come they will amount to nothing. We have to pass through trials occasionally to be sure, and we will find joy, peace, and consolation when we have passed through and overcome; and when we have overcome we are stronger for the next trial, and when we have overcome again and again our confidence increases, and then when the dark hours come we can realize that it is the will of God, that it is laid upon us for our good, and we can say that while we cannot see the good, we are sure it must come. Just give us grace and we will pass through it manfully and never murmur nor complain. My soul is filled with the love of God and my heart is overflowing with joy. I have many trials, but suppose I have, that makes no difference. I don't care what the trial is nor when it comes, just so God will give me grace and strength to overcome. And I don't feel to murmur; and as I have said before, I never become discouraged. That may seem strange. It is all the time a trial and all the time a warfare, and we believe will finally be a victory. When you are all the time hoping for victory why need you be discouraged? We have sometimes a few days of darkness and trial, but that doesn't amount to anything; we will come out all right. If we will do our duty we will not be one day with our heads away down and the next day soar away up yonder. We will take a straightforward course, moving along in the line of duty. And, all the time see to it that you do your duty; and when you stand up in the testimony meetings and say you want to do all you can in the service of God, don't forget that when you go out of the meeting, and your soul will be filled with the love of God and the peace and joy in your soul will be as a living fountain.

May God help us to be led by the Spirit and may we never be deceived, is my prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

After the reading of the minutes the following substitute to a resolution was moved and sustained: Resolved that this convention instruct its delegates to the General Convention to insert an article in district by-laws to make officers and teachers of local schools ex officio members of district conventions. The superintendent was authorized to appoint a committee on program for our next convention. Adjourned to meet at 2:30 p. m. on Friday previous to convening of our next district conference, and at the same place.

NOTICES.

To the Sunday Schools of Southern Indiana District.—I send you to-day a copy of the Constitution and By-laws of the General Sunday School Association, asking you to indorse the same and send your indorsement accompanied by the names of your officers and the number of pupils and classes to the district conference of June 8. Our Sunday school association will transact business then. To have it connected with the General Association is our object in making the above requests. A good delegation is desired as the removal of Bro. J. M. Baggerly to the Florida mission will necessitate the election of a secretary. A treasurer and an assistant superintendent will also be chosen. Notices were sent to the branches where there are no Sunday schools, the object being to learn their attitude toward the Sunday school cause. Let us make a diligent effort to be in harmony with the body in this department of church work. Be prompt, brethren. ALMA C. BARMORE, Supt.

PASTORAL.

To the Ministry and Saints in General of the Eastern Mission; Greeting.—The recent General Conference appointed the writer again in charge of the Eastern mission, with the States of Ohio, Virginia, West Virginia, and Western Pennsylvania—the territory in Bro. G. T. Griffith's charge last year, added. The missionary force in this charge will please take notice that there will be no change made in its organization for the present, the same persons continuing in charge of "fields of labor" that were appointed last year. This will save time, facilitate work, and each one will know just how to proceed without further consultation.

It is expected that the General Conference appointees will push out at once into the active service, and not procrastinate. The church desires labor done. We have consented to do it. It is a favorable time now to work, and an energetic effort should be put forth before the hot season comes on. Then it will be very human to long for a vacation and exclaim, "It is too hot, let's tarry awhile, etc. Then again there are criticisms made by parties indicating that the ministry in some parts are not as active at times as they might be, or as some would like to have them. This may or may not be made in justice; any way it will harm no one to examine himself with a view to improvement, whatever the cause may be for such examination, even if we are "fearfully and wonderfully made." It is manly to respect a proper criticism, and without such the best of consciences might grow a little easy and elastic, unobserved, leaving the American fire or pride, snap and push to die out by littles, and these are leading monitors or incentives to duty, high aims, and lofty thought—the springs upon which appeal is made for improvement and progress. There is a kind of nagging, pique, or faultfinding indulged in by some people, however, with which no one of proper conception can have any sympathy, scarcely toleration. But we are all "laborers together with God," or have so assumed, and to each active member the right adheres of inquiry and judgment upon their public servants; so it is rather unbecoming to grow indignant or smart overmuch from wholesome strictures, but we should improve when we may and pay no attention when they are unjust.

By the way, would it not be a desirable thing for the local officers and membership to take a little of this examination business to themselves and see what radical changes for improvement may be made and new life and increased diligence infused in their lines of labor the present year, as well? Why not? Without doubt we all mean well. This is much to begin with. The Saints in general have a great deal to vex and try them; and the branch officers do not occupy enviable positions. All are entitled to sympathy, encouragement, and comfort.

The mission made a good record last year, and the opportunities seem to be improved for a better one in this. There is no time to become discouraged. Difficulties no doubt lie on the way as in the past. We should surmount them if we can. The prize lies at the end of the race, the conflict between. There is no other cause so full of merit as ours, none that proffers such rich returns for labor done. It should claim some at least of our best thought and effort. There is no place to which we may look away or back. It is darkness and gloom—a fearful looking for. To move forward is to be filled with contentment, encouragement, and hope. We are not required to run faster than we are able, and our strength lies in the justice of our cause and trust in the Lord. We cannot succeed alone. The gospel is to be preached in power. This comes by fastings, humility, and prayer, with a treasuring up of the word. The signs of the times are so full of meaning that we are constantly impressed with the importance of the gospel message, and that the great events presaged in former and latter times are at hand—slow, to us, as the world at times seems to move. There seems to be no place for our energies to cease this side of the coming of the promised king.

The late General Conference was a means of much encouragement in some directions. Important if not paramount, was the clean-cut and decided assertions and triumph of liberty and progress over sentiment, and a tendency to bondage, showing the church to be in line with her record and up with the light and progress of the age, if not in the van—leading. This puts heart and hope into the workers who have been observing with a little concern some strange tendencies in some quarters of late. The church knows no Master but Christ. She has been in conflict from her beginning. Born at a time when grievous wolves had entered in and assuming high and unwarranted prerogatives had scattered the flock, and lo, they were wrong! she took hold of the "iron rod," the word of God, and upon this has waged a successful conflict as against blindly "following the living oracles." On this basis she has made a conflict and won. She has a high regard for her chief offices and great respect for her chief officers, but she is not ready for a sole interpreter of the law, whose utterances are to be received without question, and binding,—an infallible head. She has had none such in the past, and needs none in the future. It will be time enough for this when Jesus comes. It is late in the day to revive the old dogma of infallible utterance that has been a menace and hindrance to human liberty and progress in the past, and remains so in the present, which the whole Protestant world and civilization has been contending against since the dawn of the Reformation. The results of the conference are refreshing.

It is a little amazing that newsmen should put in circulation that there was schism and discord with a threatening of breaking of ranks manifest at the late conference. Those who thought so could not have been initiated. It was about the tamest conference that the writer has attended for years. Some expressed it that it was so tame that it did not seem like conference. Some may have attended with their heads full of measures to be received but when they did not obtain they concluded chaos was about to ensue. There was discussion, of course, sanguine and earnest. There always have been discussions in the church assemblies and always will be while men are permitted the freedom in the law. The example was set at Jerusalem. (See Acts 15th chapter.) This is one of the things the elders assemble for. A forced union is no union in this enlightened age; an intelligent conception and conviction of duty and right with "common consent" or agreement by those interested is a formidable bond of union and gospel oneness most difficult to break. Those attending General Conference expecting to meet with a body of say-nothings and think-nothings, sitting down Quaker style, without lisping a word, waiting for unity to come and business to go on of their own accord, had better remain at home until they are fully converted and then put on their thinkers and come to General Conference expecting to meet men who have seen service as soldiers in the field, in conflict with the world, and who have the courage of their convictions in any assembly. Those looking for hothouse plants that may be broken with a slight gust of wind should not go to General Conference.

Little concern need be felt in regard to the world without, who are simply servants of others whom they seek to please. Newsmen serve a constituency, as a rule one that has no interest in the success or honor of the gospel message of latter days. Those feeding themselves with the thought that there is dissension and schism at work in the church for mischief and dissolution had better attend the next session of General Conference to be surprised by seeing all of the schismatics present in a happy mood, contending for the faith in the church as well as out earnestly and faithfully. It is where the winds do not blow that the most deadly miasma accumulates.

The President of the church was well and never appeared in conference to better advantage or presided with more perfect decorum. The preaching was of a high grade and the meetings in general enjoyable. This may benefit some.

Brn. Rudolph Etzenhouser, Arthur Mills, and I. M. Smith are expected to be in the mission soon, if not in at some point already. Coöperation should be cultivated between "field laborers" and branch and district officers. Go on in the good cause. May God bless our labors for the year.

Missionary in Charge.

TEMPLE, Ohio, May 7, 1895.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints in the Northern Illinois District:—You will please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. Thomas Hougas, Bishop's agent for the Northern Illinois district, and the recommendation of the conference of the same, Bro. F. G. Pitt has been appointed Bishop's agent for said district.

We hope and trust that you will give to Bro. Pitt the hearty and earnest support in behalf of the work that Bro. Hougas has had, and that each and every one in the district may see that their names are duly placed upon the Bishop's agent's record with whatever contribution under the law it is proper to give, ere the close of the year.

The Bishopric feels greatly indebted to Bro. Hougas for his faithful and efficient services in the past and regret that circumstances and failing health have made it necessary for him to ask a release from this part of his work.

We trust that the Master will reward him and all others for every faithful duty performed.

All communications and remittances for the district should be sent to Bro. F. G. Pitt, No. 254 Garfield avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Ever trusting in the wisdom and direction of the Lord, I remain,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 17, 1895.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints in Colorado; Greeting:—Whereas the church coffers in this State are empty, I wish to remind the Saints of their present duties in regard to sending in their tithes and offerings. It is not our past righteousness that is going to save us, but a constant and continual effort, and perseverance in working the works of righteousness until the end. Whatever we may have done in the past towards contributing to the general church funds the Lord will surely bless you for, and he does not forget his promises. But the "machinery," you know, needs a continual "oiling" in order to save friction, hence, a reminder of our duties is necessary, in order to keep the "ball rolling." Our past offerings will not suffice for the present year. The families of those who have been called to the missionary fields will need aid and support. Therefore let all remember to send in their mites as the Lord may have blessed and prospered them. Let us not forget the promise of the Lord in the third chapter of Malachi, tenth and eleventh verses: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts." Let all come up to the help of the Lord, then the work will go ahead, and we shall all be blessed together.

Please send all moneys by post office money order on Evergreen post office, Colorado, and address all letters to me at Conifer, Jefferson county, Colorado. You will observe that our post office has changed its name from Hutchinson to Conifer, so please take notice. Hoping to hear from some soon,

In gospel bonds,

JAMES KEMP,

Bishop's Agent for Colorado.

CONIFER, Colorado, May 10, 1895.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the Bible. 200 pages.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD,

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archæology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from Scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of the Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first day of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

BALFOUR'S DEFENSE OF CHRISTIAN FAITH.

ENGLISH statesmen are proverbially fond of reaping laurels in fields other than political. Burke, Macaulay, Gladstone, Disraeli, McCarthy, recur to the mind at once, but they are only a few of many who have achieved fame in literature, art, science, or philosophy, as well as in affairs of state. The young leader of the Conservatives in the House of Commons, Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, who eleven years ago was not even considered of enough prominence to be included in the "Men of Our Time," a volume purporting to give biographical sketches of all living men of any note, especially in England, has just published a book on "Foundations of Belief" that calls forth the applause of the Christian world to an extent hardly second to that evoked by Benjamin Kidd's recent book. Mr. Balfour's work is described in a sub-title as "Notes Introductory to the Study of Theology." It is an assault upon the various forms of scientific naturalism, and upon the sufficiency of reason as the guiding star of the world. It is, in other words, a defense of Christian theism. While there is a logical arrangement of ideas, yet the discursive character of these "notes" renders an adequate summary of the book very difficult.

He opens with the consideration of moral laws as explained by science unassisted by religious faith. No moral code, he says, can be effective that does not inspire reverence; and the sentiment of reverence and the naturalistic creed, which bases morals simply on scientific law, are antagonistic. He says:—

"For not only does there seem to be no ground, from the point of view of biology, for drawing a distinction in favor of any of the processes, physiological or psychological, by which the individual or the race is benefited; not only are we bound to consider the coarsest appetites, the most calculating selfishness, and the most devoted heroism, as all sprung from analogous causes and all evolved for similar objects, but we can hardly doubt that the august sentiments which cling to the ideas of duty and sacrifice are nothing better than a device of nature to trick us into the performance of altruistic actions."

As reverence for the moral law, and therefore the efficiency of the law, finds no root in natural science, so the destiny of the human race as interpreted by science is unable longer to satisfy "aspirations and emotions nourished upon beliefs in the everlasting and divine." Man becomes but an episode. We quote again:—

"Man, so far as natural science by itself is able to teach us, is no longer the final cause of the universe, the heaven-descended heir of all the ages. His very existence is an accident, his story a brief and transitory episode in the life of one of the meanest of the planets. Of the combination of causes which first converted a dead organic compound into the living progenitors of humanity, science, indeed, as yet knows nothing. It is enough that from such beginnings famine, disease, and mutual slaughter, fit nurses of the future lords of creation, have gradually evolved, after infinite travail, a race with conscience enough to feel that it is vile, and intelligence enough to know that it is insignificant. We survey the past, and see that its history is of blood and tears, of helpless blundering, of wild revolt, of stupid acquiescence, of empty aspirations. We sound the future, and learn that after a period, long compared with the individual life, but short indeed compared with the divisions of time open to our investigation, the energies of our system will decay, and the glory of the sun will be dimmed, and the earth, tideless and inert, will no longer tolerate the race which has for a moment disturbed its solitude. Man will go down into the pit, and all his thoughts will perish. The uneasy consciousness, which in this obscure corner has for a brief space broken the contented silence of the universe, will be at rest. Matter will know itself no longer. 'Imperishable monuments,' and 'immortal deeds,' death itself, and love stronger than death, will be as though they had never been. Nor will anything that is better or worse for all that the labor, genius, devotion, and suffering of man have striven through countless generations to effect."

If the spiritual aspirations and ethical ideals are, then, inconsistent with the naturalistic creed, they are foredoomed to suffer change if that creed is to hold the field, and how that change can fail to "eat all nobility out of our conception of conduct and all worth out of our conception of life," Mr. Balfour is unable to understand. It is true, he admits, that many people who hold to the naturalistic creed retain the ethical emotions apparently unimpaired. This fact he explains, however, by an illustration:—

"Biologists tell us of parasites which live, and can only live, within the bodies of animals more highly organized than they. For them their luckless host has to find food, to digest it, and to convert it into nourishment, which they can consume without exertion and assimilate without difficulty. Their structure is of the simplest kind. Their host sees for them, so they need no eyes; he hears for them, so they need no ears; he works for them, so they need but feeble muscles and an undeveloped nervous system. But are we to conclude from this that for the animal kingdom eyes and ears, powerful limbs, and complex nerves are superfluities? They are superfluities for the parasite only because they have first been necessities for the host, and when the host perishes, the parasite, in their absence, is not unlikely to perish also.

"So it is with those persons who claim to show by their example that naturalism is practically consistent with the maintenance of ethical ideals with which naturalism has no natural affinity. Their spiritual life is parasitic. It is sheltered by convictions which belong, not to them, but to society of which they form a part; it is nourished by processes in which they take no share. And when those convictions decay, and those processes come to an end, the alien life which they have maintained can scarce be expected to outlast them."

The writer goes on to subject to analysis the reasons for belief in "the scientific theory of the world." The theory rests "on premises supplied by experience." "These experiences . . . are for the most part observations of material things or objects and of their behavior in the presence of or in relation to each other." But science tells us that each such experience is simply the final link in a long chain of causes whose beginning is lost in the complexities of the material world. He again illustrates his thought:—

"Take, for example, an ordinary case of vision. What are the causes which ultimately produce the apparently immediate experience of (for example) a green tree standing in the next field? There are, first (to go no further back), the vibrations among the particles of the source of light, say the sun. Consequent on them are the ethereal undulations between the sun and the object seen, namely, the green tree. Then follows the absorption of most of these undulations by the object; the reflection of the 'green' residue; the incidence of a small fraction of these on the lens of the eye; their arrangement on the retina; the stimulation of the optic nerve; and, finally, the molecular change in a certain trace of the cerebral hemispheres by which, in some way or other wholly unknown, through predispositions in part acquired by the individual, but chiefly inherited through countless generations of ancestors, is produced the complex mental fact which we describe by saying that 'we have an immediate experience of a tree about fifty yards off.'"

Now such observations, or experiences, are not only occasionally inaccurate, but "habitually mendacious." For instance, color is not a property of the thing seen, as our vision seems to indicate, but a sensation produced in us by the thing. In other words, naturalistic science, which professes to be based upon observation or experience, itself hastens to discredit this experience as never wholly true. Experience alone furnishes us, therefore, with an insufficient basis even for the most ordinary beliefs.

Proceeding to the real causes of beliefs, the writer gives us what is, perhaps, the most striking chapter of the book, namely, that on "Authority and Reason." He undertakes to vindicate the right and even necessity of grounding the larger proportion of our convictions upon the former rather than the latter. We quote again:—

"Suppose for a moment a community of which each member should deliberately set himself to the task of throwing off so far as possible all prejudices due to education; where each should consider it his duty critically to examine the grounds whereon rest every positive enactment and every moral precept which he has been accustomed to obey; to dissect all the great loyalties which makes social life possible, and all the minor conventions which help to make it easy: and weigh out with scrupulous precision the exact degree of assent which in each particular case the results of this process might seem to justify. To say that such a community, if it acted upon the opinions thus arrived at would stand but a poor chance in the struggle for existence, is to say far too little. It could never even begin to be; and if by a miracle it was created, it would without doubt immediately resolve itself into its constituent elements."

Taking up the question of morals again, and inquiring into the causes of our belief therein, he finds that while authorities agree, for instance, that it is wrong to commit murder, the process of reasoning by which they profess to reach this conclusion is very varied. One reasons from conscience, another from expediency, another from altruism, another from the commandments of God; but all reach the same goal. Plainly the conclusion was in each case predetermined, reached by some other process than that of reason, and this process is simply called in to defend it, not to create it. The relative importance of authority and reason are thus described:—

"I have somewhere seen it stated that the steam-engine in its primitive form required a boy to work the valve by which steam was admitted to the cylinder. It was his business at the proper period of each stroke to perform this necessary operation by pulling a string; and though the same object has long since been attained by mechanical methods far simpler and more trustworthy, yet I have little doubt that until the advent of the revolutionary youth who so tied the string to one of the moving parts of the engine that his personal supervision was no longer necessary, the boy in office generally magnified his functions, and regarded himself with pardonable pride as the most important, because the only rational, link in the chain of causes and effects by which the energy developed in the furnace was ultimately converted into the motion of the fly-wheel. So do we stand as a reasoning being in the presence of the complex process, physiological and psychical, out of which are manufactured the convictions necessary to the conduct of life. To the results attained by their coöperation reason makes its slender contribution; but in order that it may do so effectively, it is beneficently decreed that, pending the evolution of some better device, reason should appear to the reasoner the most admirable and important contrivance in the whole mechanism.

"The manner in which attention and interest are thus unduly directed toward the operations, vital and social, which are under our direct control, rather than those which we are unable to modify, or can only modify by a very indirect and circuitous procedure, may be illustrated by countless examples. Take one from physiology. Of all the complex causes which coöperate for the healthy nourishment of the body, no doubt the conscious choice of the more wholesome rather than the less wholesome forms of ordinary food is far better from being the most unimportant. Yet, as it is within our immediate competence, we attend to it, moralize about it, and generally make much of it. But no man can by taking thought directly regulate his digestive secretions. We never, therefore, think of them at all until they go wrong, and then, unfortunately, to very little purpose. So it is with the body politic. A certain proportion (probably a small one) of the changes and adaptations required by altered surroundings can only be effected through the solvent action of criticism and discussion. How such discussion shall be conducted, what are the arguments on either side, how a decision shall be arrived at, and how it shall be carried out, are matters which we seem able to regulate by conscious effort and the deliberate adaptation of means to ends. We therefore unduly magnify the part they play in the furtherance of our interests. We perceive that they supply business to the practical politician, raw material to the political theorist; and we forget amid the buzzing of doubt the multitude of incomparably more important processes, by whose undesigned coöperation alone the life and growth of the State is rendered impossible."

One more extract, in the same line of thought, is all that we can here give. It is a sort of a summary of the claims of the two causes of belief of which the author is treating. He says:—

"Looked at from the outside, as one among the complex conditions which produce belief, reason appears relatively insignificant and ineffectual; not only appears so, but must be so, if human society is to be possible. Looked at from the inside, it claims by an inalienable title to be supreme. Measured by its results it may be little; measured by its rights it is everything. There is no problem it may not investigate, no belief which it may not assail, no principle which it may not test. It cannot, even by its own voluntary act, deprive itself of universal jurisdiction, as, according to a once fashionable theory, primitive man, on entering the social state, contracted himself out of his natural rights and liberties. On the contrary, though its claims may be ignored, they cannot be repudiated; and even those who shrink from the criticism of dogma as a sin would probably admit that they do so because it is an act forbidden by those they are bound to obey; do so, that is to say, nominally at least, for a reason which, at any moment, if it should think fit, reason itself might reverse.

"Why, under these circumstances, we are moved to regard ourselves as free, intelligent, forming our opinion solely in obedience to reason; why we come to regard reason itself, not only as the sole legitimate source of belief—which, perhaps, it may be—but the sole source of legitimate beliefs—which it assuredly is not, must now, I hope, be tolerably obvious, and needs not to be further emphasized."—Literary Digest.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR.
R. S. SALYARDS - - - ASSISTANT EDITOR.
HEMAN C. SMITH - - - CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, MAY 29, 1895.

"SAY NOTHING BUT REPENTANCE UNTO THIS GENERATION."

THIS was the command of the Lord to Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith in April, 1829.

It was repeated to Hyrum Smith in May of the same year; and to Martin Harris in March, 1830. To the same man the Lord said:—

And of tenets thou shalt not talk, but thou shalt declare repentance and faith on the Savior, and remission of sins by baptism and by fire; yea even the Holy Ghost.

Behold, this a great, and the last commandment which I shall give unto you concerning this matter; for this shall suffice for thy daily walk even unto the end of thy life.

We sometimes wonder if some of the present preachers of the faith would not do well to stop a little and think whether the same advice would not be profitable to the work at large, if they would but apply it to a choice of topics in preaching in the region round about.

It is better to draw men to the faith than to drive them from the preachers.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

ONE office work of the gifts named by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12th, is to bear witness that Jesus is the Christ; that is to say, Jesus said, "I will manifest myself," and in keeping with this statement of promise, the gift of the Holy Ghost, made manifest in any of the forms enumerated by the apostle, is a witness to the declaration, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Nor is one of the list of manifestations any more a testimony than is any one of the remainder—all are alike the gift of the one and selfsame Spirit, and each in itself bears witness of the giver, to the disciple.

Some have in a sense mistaken an oft quoted text, "The spirit of prophecy is the testimony of Jesus," when it should be, "For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Revelation 19: 10. This is equivalent to the statement, that whatever testifies that Jesus is the Christ is the equal to the spirit by which a man prophesies. And surely any of the gifts named in Paul's letters to the Corinthians and Ephesians, being the result of the supervising care of the great Missionary sent from the Father, and divided "to every man severally as he will," testify unmistakably that Jesus is the Christ, hence the Revelator well may say, "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."

He that hath the "word of wisdom," and he that hath the "word of knowledge," and he that hath "faith by the same Spirit," is equally under necessity to say, "I have the witness of the Spirit that Jesus is the Christ." So, he who may be blessed by the visitation and benefit of the "gifts of healing," through which the powers of the Spirit for the relief of pain and sicknesses of the flesh by virtue of obedience to the gospel and in verification of its promises, is the companion in truth with him who by command is permitted to work miracles, or witness their occurring in reference to himself or others around him, both in regard to persons, things material, or the transpiring of events, the sequence of which is only possible to divine direction and power. To these may be added those who, each by Christ's clemency and wisdom prophesies; has the power of "discerning of spirits," which must mean both the ability to comprehend the character, nature, and disposition of men under ordinary and extraordinary conditions, and the power to perceive the kind, or sort of spirit, unseen spirit by which men move, speak, and act in a spiritual or religious sense; a gift especially beneficial to those who may be called and chosen to be "overseers of the flock;" to speak in tongues and interpret tongues that are spoken, understanding them by the selfsame Spirit, by the instrumentality of which, through divine interposition and direction the various manifestations are made to "everyone severally" as Christ "will."

From the reasoning of the apostle found in the same chapter and following the enumeration of gifts, it is safe to conclude that while there may be preference in these several gifts, all of them are essential to the whole, the body of Christ, the church, yet each testifies with every other, equally, that Jesus is the Christ. Nor is it proper to say of any one of them, "We have no need of you." The preference named by Paul is that men should "covet earnestly the best gifts." If he had written what he considered to be the best gifts it might have removed some points of difference; but he did not, except as it may be inferred from his afterthought, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy."

We may believe that Paul's preference was to prophesy, without concluding that the gift of prophecy, or the ability and power, or privilege and spirit to prophesy, must necessarily be the "best gift;" for he lauds charity as the greatest and urges the coveting the "best gifts," as a duty. He also couples together as the things above all others that abide, faith, hope, and charity. Charity is the love of God, and hope is born of desire and obedience to God's commands; both are results, while faith is a gift. Reasoning from this, it is easy to conclude that the "best gifts" are "wisdom," "knowledge," and "faith," ranking in value in the order they are named.

The wise man said:—

Get wisdom, get understanding; forget it not.

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding.—Prov. 4: 5-7.

Understanding is a well-spring of life unto him that hath it.

The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips.—Prov. 16: 22, 23.

For God giveth to a man that is good in his sight, wisdom, and knowledge, and joy.—Ecc. 2: 26.

The lack of wisdom, the power to rightly use knowledge, has wrought much mischief in the world, and in the church; for which reason we join with Paul in commending that the Saints covet earnestly the best gifts; and unhesitatingly declare it to be our judgment that wisdom, knowledge, and faith, the first three gifts written of by Paul are the best, preëminently the best, though not so frequently seen, heard, or noticed in the church, as some others named by the apostle.

Wisdom will enable a man to be useful; knowledge will give him power and enhance his usefulness; faith will enable him to endure when prophecy fails, tongues cease, and the knowledge of this world vanishes away.

DISCUSSION AT BLENSVILLE, MISSOURI.

THE Joplin, Missouri, News, for May 15 has this passing notice of the debate between Elder T. W. Chatburn and Rev. Carlin of the Baptist Church now going on at Blensville, Missouri:—

The Baptist-Mormon debate opened Monday night with a big crowd. The grounds are illuminated with electric lights, well seated, shaded with thick trees and leaves covering the grounds so that the audience is well protected from dampness, etc. The debate will last eight nights. Come out, all.

A short synopsis of the matter offered by the disputants is given in the News daily. Rev. Carlin's effort is much like the old sort, reading from "books attacking the life and character of Joseph Smith."

MEANS TOWARD UNITY.

ONE of the most peculiar, and yet one of the most pleasing and convincing features of our faith is its ability to delight so many casts of mind, and improve such a variety of characters. We meet in our daily association men and women, in countless numbers, from whose sense of honor, virtue, and loyalty we differ widely. Their sincere convictions of domestic, political, social, and ecclesiastical duty, and policy, seem to us to be not only erroneous, but in some instances almost criminal. Were we to speak hastily, and in harmony with our impulses, we would give expression to the oft repeated phrase: "I dont like him," or "I dont like her;" but experience and observation have taught us that often they love our common faith as sincerely and devoutly as do we; that they would sacrifice just as much for its interests as would we. O what a field for the exercise of the Christian graces of patience and forbearance is here presented.

Then how much nearer our opposites in nature seem to us when we realize that they can meet us on common ground, and that they love with a sincere and intense devotion that which to our hearts is dearest and most sacred. This fraternal sentiment, in turn, begets a deeper and more abiding admiration for the system of faith that makes these conditions possible, and hence leads us to more earnest efforts towards its establishment, while our whole being is filled with inexpressible gratitude to the "author and finisher of our faith." Perhaps in some of these opposite views we are wrong, in others they are right. We would not have them concede the correctness of our views until they can make them their own. Such a procedure would decrease our confidence, and we could no longer trust their honor. Our sense of honor and self-respect forbid that we should adopt their views, until our convictions change.

Considering the vast variety of minds to which this gospel is adapted, and for whom it was intended, we are not surprised when friction occurs and differences arise, but we are pained when these differences result in questioning of motives, and heartburnings. What then should we do?

Prayerfully, watchfully, trustingly, and patiently await, confident that if we preserve our integrity in humility, the Spirit will "help our infirmities" causing a healthy growth "in grace and the knowledge of the truth," until we emerge into a glorious and desired unity.

Though our view is limited, yet from our standpoint we are encouraged in this expectation.

When we stand beside the tiny rivulet and see its water drawn constantly onward, by the force of gravitation, or when we stand by the majestic river and see its broad expanse of water sweeping on impelled by the same force of nature, we are certain that each will find a common level and lose their present peculiarities in the broader expanse of the mighty ocean. Just so certainly, if our different and opposite minds are drawn with admiration towards a common faith; and with reverence, devotion, adoration, and love we accept, honor, and obey our common Savior, all that is worth the preserving, in us, will find its proper place, and our present peculiarities and weakness be swallowed up in the great ocean of God's love.

Who would not gladly invest time, talent, and means in such a cause, not fearing permanent loss through the attacks of the foe or the mistakes of the devotee.

A GOOD THING.

WE have examined at some length Bro. R. Etzenhouser's new book, "From Palmyra to Independence," and cordially commend it; especially that part of it treating of the assumed evidences against the Book of Mormon, and the character of Joseph Smith, O. Cowdery, Martin Harris, and others, during the formative period of the church's history.

Bro. Etzenhouser has wisely adopted the plan which utilizes what others have done and said; in that wherein he deems that where another has made a statement of fact, or argument better than he might have stated the same thing, he has so used such statement, giving due credit for it; thus avoiding the charges of plagiarism and egotism, to which aspiring authors are sometimes liable. He has gathered from many sources, and has gathered well, and made a valuable work for reference, besides making it readable.

TO PERPETUATE THE INDIAN RELIGIONS.

THE following is forwarded us by a brother, going the round of the press:—

Wichita, Kansas, April 27.—A. J. Blackwell, the rich and erratic squaw man of David City, Indian Territory, has announced his intention of erecting at that place a magnificent temple, the cost of which is to exceed $300,000, for the purpose of perpetuating the Indian religion. Blackwell acquired a vast estate through his Indian wife, owns immense herds of cattle, and is the founder and almost the absolute owner of the towns of Blackwell and David City. He realized large sums of money from the sale of town sites and was thrown in jail by the Indians, who hold that such disposition of allotted lands was treason. Blackwell says that angels visited him in his prison and loosed his bonds. His religious fervor is so great that he proposes to erect a temple that shall exceed in splendor the Mormon Temple at Salt Lake City. The most expensive material is to enter into its construction, and the work is to be done by the most skilled artisans and the finest artists whose services money can secure.

Why not? But the Temple at Salt Lake City cost more than $300,000.

MERCHANTABLE WARES.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, April 16.—Rev. J. J. Dunning, a Catholic priest, has begun suit against Bishop Louis Fink, of the Kansas City, Kansas, diocese, for $100 on a claim for divine services at the Catholic Hospital at Fort Scott, Kansas. His bill of particulars itemizes the services in this way:—

To performing divine services on Sundays from May 1, 1894, to August 14, 1894, ninety times at $1 each, $90; to offering benediction forty times at 25 cents, $10. Total $100.

Bishop Fink has been served with a summons to appear Thursday to make answer.

BRO. G. J. WALLER sends us the following clipping from the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, published at Honolulu, Hawaii, April 4, 1895:—

IMPORTANT ARCHEOLOGICAL DISCOVERY.

Mr. Walter Scott, of Ellerslie, Auckland, New Zealand (eldest son of the late Dr. William Scott, Moffat, Dumfriesshire), writing to a relative, states that a remarkable discovery has been made there. The scoriæ of the extinct volcanoes in the neighborhood of Auckland is used as metal for the roads. While the workmen were recently quarrying for the road metal in a hill forming part of an extinct volcano they found what proved to be a carved stone among the scoriæ. The stone is four inches long by two inches broad, and about one inch thick in the middle. So severely had it been burned that it was not easy to determine what it was composed of. Round the edges are carvings of human faces, exhibiting six different faces, with apparently the remains of two others. The lips are thick and the foreheads slope back, being similar to the prehistoric carvings found in Mexico. The supposition of those on the spot is that the carved stone was the work of some prehistoric New Zealander.

Bro. Waller also sends a portion of the New Zealand Herald Monthly Summary, of September 7, 1894, published at Auckland. It contains a lengthy obituary of the late New Zealand King, Tawhiao, from which we extract this brief statement:—

Tawhiao was of the very noblest blood of the Maori race. No chief in New Zealand could compare with Te Wherowhero, Tawhiao's father, in genealogy, and in his many relationships with the highest in rank in many tribes. No Maori chief is great unless he can trace his descent to some one of the leaders who came in the canoes from Hawaiki. Tawhiao's ancestor was Hotonui, who came in the canoe Tainui, which made the land at Kawhia. One of the most famous men in the line of descent was Tapaue, who had a number of sons, who founded tribes. These sons were: Te Rorokitua, who was the ancestor of the Ngatipaoa; Te Putu, Tahau, Te Apa, Huiarangi, Ratua, Hikaurua. The son of Te Putu was Tawhia, whose son was Tuata, whose son was Te Rauanganga, whose son was Te Wherowhero, whose son was Tawhiao, now deceased. The name of Tawhiao's mother was Whakaawi, a woman of high birth, of the Ngatimahuta tribe.

Some of the brethren have claimed that the people of Hawaii, of New Zealand, and of the Society, and other islands of the Pacific are descendants of the people inhabiting America in Book of Mormon times. Early traditions and other features peculiar to each have been cited in evidence of the claim. Hagoth's companies, who left the main body of the Nephites and went to sea, mentioned in the last chapter of the Book of Alma, will be remembered by readers of the Book of Mormon. The reference to "Mexico" in the first clipping, and that to "the first canoes" in the second, give additional color to the theory of a Nephite origin of the inhabitants of those countries.

THE Bevier, Missouri, Appeal for April 26 has this notice of Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths:—

Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, wife and children of Kirtland, Ohio, came here last week to visit his mother, Mrs. Martha Griffiths, and other relatives. They came here from Independence, Missouri, where they had been attending the Annual Conference of the Latter Day Saints Church which was in session for over a week at that place. Mr. and Mrs. Griffiths suffered a great bereavement recently having lost three of their children, three boys, through the visitation of death. Elder Griffiths, who for some time past has been engaged in mission work for the church in Europe, has again been appointed to European mission. He has traveled extensively while engaged in his work all over the various countries of Europe. He is a close observer, and is well posted on the condition of the people over there especially those of the British Isles. He is a gentleman of fine presence, genial in manner, and an entertaining conversationist. As his work brings him in contact with all classes, his knowledge of the condition of people, and of social and political thought in England, is very extensive. He has spent considerable time in London, Manchester, and other large cities. American machinery, he says, is largely used in many of the factories and manufacturing establishments over there. At Llanelly, Wales, he during his stay there refixed a very old Latter Day Saints' church located there, and made some improvements on it on the American style. Mr. Griffiths and family will leave to-night for their home in Kirtland, Ohio, and he will probably leave for his mission work in Europe in June.

THE WORK IN HAWAII.

OF the condition of and prospects for the work in Hawaii, Bro. G. J. Waller wrote May 8, from Honolulu, as follows:—

We received news of conference through the church papers and are glad to learn that a peaceful time was had, also to hear of the onward movement of the work during the past year. I am sorry Hawaii could not make a better showing, but it cannot be helped; we have done what we could. We see that no missionary is appointed to this mission and, to be sure, feel a little disappointed, but not discouraged.

We notice with pleasure the favorable reports that come from Tahiti, and hope ere long that the natives here may drink in the same Spirit that the Tahitians seem to have been blessed with. I am encouraging them all I can, showing them how the Lord is blessing their brethren in Tahiti and on the islands there, and presenting before them the promises made in the Book of Mormon to the house of Joseph.

My recent teachings on the Book of Mormon have been well received and have done much good; and the natives now, many of them, are anxious to read it and learn its teachings.

The translation of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is finished and will soon be out of the printer's hands. I will forward a copy then.

I have baptized one since I last wrote, and there are others who have spoken about entering the fold.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. H. A. MCCOY, Haven, Iowa, May 19:—

Bro. C. Scott is with us and is preaching in the Union church at Haven, with quite a good interest. Some begin to squirm in their seats, but so far all are passive. This is a Methodist stronghold, and it is gratifying that after a lapse of ten years, since the house was refused to Bro. I. N. White, not one was now opposed to our using it. So much for the way the Saints have lived here, and thus is the promise verified. May we all live faithful.

Bro. Gomer Wells reports continuing advancement being made in Australia. He wrote from Sydney, New South Wales, April 18:—

Matters in Sydney move favorably. Six gave names for baptism last Sunday, which will be attended to to-day. Others are considering. This will make a total of twenty-three added since General Conference.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. HEMAN C. SMITH, Corresponding Editor of the HERALD, has been receiving letters containing orders and remittances for the Herald Office. As Bro. Smith is not often at Lamoni, and will be in a distant field, engaged in the missionary service, remittances or orders sent to him will cause him unnecessary trouble and occasion delay and extra trouble at the Herald Office. All remittances should be addressed to David Dancer, Business Manager, and all communications for publication to the editors, at Lamoni, Iowa. The office patrons are requested to observe this rule. The business and editorial departments are separate branches of the office service. Matter for one should not be addressed to the other.

Bro. H. A. Stebbins left Lamoni on the 23d for Harlan, Iowa, where he will deliver the address on Decoration Day. He will go thence to Woodbine, Iowa, and be present at the conference of the Little Sioux district, June 1 and 2. From there he goes to Persia, Iowa, to deliver a series of lectures on the Book of Mormon, June 3-8.

On Sunday, May 12th, three were added to the Atchison, Kansas, branch, by baptism, and one on the Monday following.

Bro. James Houston, writing from Sparta, Illinois, recounts the mercy of the Lord to him, in sustaining in trial of faith and sickness. He bears witness to the loving kindness of the Master, and expresses confidence in the work, which he believes will move forward with added power. His hopes of life present and future are in the church, in which he expresses a desire to be true and faithful. His letter, like others, is crowded out because of demands upon our space.

Bro. Cornelius Edwards wrote, the 17th inst., from Zonker, Missouri, in good spirit. Limited space prevents insertion of his letter.

Bro. J. A. Currie, Sen., writes from Cook's Point, Texas, May 15, addressing the Saints of the Lone Star State through the HERALD. He expresses a deep interest in the welfare of his brethren and sisters among whom he has labored, wishing them to know of such interest, also that he is laboring for the advancement of the work at many places in that field, and where he has been well received. He exhorts all to earnestness, to sacrifice, and the spirit of unity, that the blessings of God may attend them.

Bro. J. T. Johnson was at Raymore, Missouri, the 18th, from which point he orders books, pamphlets, etc. Bro. J. is a bookseller, in which occupation he presents the printed word and seeks to thus sow the seeds of gospel truth.

The Deseret News for April 30 has a characteristic letter from Bro. E. T. Dobson, of St. Joseph, Missouri, correcting the misapprehension of that journal concerning the Reorganized Church and a possible disruption of it. It is a good letter and is taken in good part by the News.

Severe earthquake shocks have occurred of late in various portions of Italy and have done much damage.

Telegrams dated Victoria, British Columbia, May 10, announce the probable loss of the gospel boat "Glad Tidings" engaged in the service of the Methodist Church. Ten persons were on board, including some prominent missionary workers.

Bro. M. McDonald, of Grindstone City, Michigan, reports that the Saints have now secured a building of their own for church and Sunday school purposes, in which lines of work they are having good success. They are striving to bring the light to others.

A card from Bro. J. A. Grant states that Brn. Briggs and Evans are expected at the Eastern Michigan district conference to be held at Detroit, June 8.

ACCORDING to the dispatch that follows, staid, conservative Catholicism seems to be adopting some of the modern methods of proselyting:—

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 24.—Catholic missionary workers are about to start a movement of the greatest importance among the masses of population in this city. It might be called a Catholic Salvation Army movement, except that some of the old features of the Salvation Army will be omitted. The missionaries have the indorsement of Bishop Horstmann, of this diocese, to the plan of street work, and meetings will soon be begun on the street corners and curbs. An organization will be formed, and, as soon as practicable, will be made national and extended to all the great cities of the country. So enthusiastic are the local Catholic clergy that several will resign from their parishes to engage in the street work.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Yes, I have two precious jewels,
Of such priceless worth are they,
That I'd be a wealthy lady
Had I nothing else to-day.

"They are rosy, laughing jewels,
They were God's best gift to me—
Two little blue-eyed winsome children,
That I love most tenderly."

HELPING HAND.

"I FEEL that it is my duty to elevate myself in every way possible, and know of no better way to gain strength and knowledge. . . . Although I have no children, I live in hopes that the Lord will bless me with some, and by joining your organization I will feel more capable of teaching them the ways of truth."

S. A.

"Our Saints here are alive in the work, and, I think, will strive with a will to do all they can to advance the cause."

M. H.

"We desire to do all the good we can, and in our weak way help roll on the good work; for we have long felt the need of such a work."

J. C.

"The sisters are active in the work. We have had some sickness among the little folks of the Saints but the Lord has been merciful and has spared them all. Praised be his name!"

"We know the work we perform should be done with pure hearts and with motives for good. . . . We should try to let our light shine to the world that they may see our good works and be made to rejoice with us in our God and perhaps accept the truth."

W. G. V.

"We believe our minds are in line with the noble work of 'Zion's Daughters,' and of late we have had an opportunity of practicing our motto, 'Mankind to bless.' . . . We are called to go, to leave our dear ones at home, our household duties undone, sacrifice sleep and many other things necessary to our physical strength. We return home tired of body and wearied of mind, some looking upon us almost as being partakers of evil deeds; not realizing that we are trying to raise the fallen, to help them stand once more. . . . Then, and not fully until then, can we feel the magnitude and responsibility of our calling, the importance of our work, and how greatly we need the power of God's Holy Spirit to direct. . . . We realize how good it is to bless others, to 'lend a helping hand in time of need.' I am glad to say our society is progressing, or, in other words, its work is onward! May heaven's richest blessings attend all the sisters in their labors of love."

M. J. H.

"We, as a band of sisters, feel that we want to do all we can to help on the work that we love so well. . . . We wish to work in harmony with our sisters in other localities."

L. M. W.

"I think the mothers' work is very important and we must be diligent."

"When wisdom opens a way we wish to be prepared to act in this matter humbly and in the fear of God, with his love burning upon the altar of our hearts. We realize that when we are inactive in regard to these matters, the adversary is all the busier. How often have I wished that there had been such wise counsel given in our church literature, years ago, when I was a prospective mother! So, now, the Lord being my helper, I will do something while life shall last to help the young mothers in Zion—the Lord bless them! . . . I feel it is my duty to throw in my little mite in their behalf, warning them against some mistakes which I have made, and, perhaps, allowing them to profit by my example when, by the grace of God, I have been led aright in the training of my dear children. . . . The principles governing the society are good and true, and, if carried out, must be a blessing to Zion's children. I am not one of those mothers who say they have always done for the best; but we did the best we knew at the time." E. G.

"The writings of the sisters on this subject have been the most interesting to me of anything I have ever had the privilege of reading. As one sister has written, I have never understood the nature and sacred duty of the sexes; but since my first thought of assuming the responsibility of wife and mother, it seemed to me that it was greater than most of those assuming it appeared to think. My heart has been pierced by many a dart because of the sad ignorance we once groped in; and now, since the bright light of the gospel of Christ has illuminated the minds of the dear Saints, how changed we feel, how differently we think, and how much more good we are enabled to do.

"Precious gospel, truth divine!
Souls to save is thy design!

My whole sympathy and and strongest interests are with the mothers' work. I have an evidence not of human giving of the sacredness of their work, and of the unlimited good it is sure to accomplish."

CLEARWATER, Nebraska.

Dear Sister Walker:—I have just been reading Bro. T. W. Williams' letter in late Herald for the second time, and can truly say that I am heartily glad that one father has been converted. Not but what there have been a few all the time who have come down off from their high pinnacle and made themselves one with their wives instead of the one, but their name is not legion.

I have always maintained that it took the united effort of both parents to make a success of the home problem, and then sometimes there is an apparent failure. There are so many side branches to this home question that need to be considered. It is not all in the care we bestow on the children after they are with us, or the amount of moral and religious teaching we give them that forms the character of our children, though it may do much to correct it. If influences that date back two or three generations have a telling effect, then we need to cast about us and see if the influences that surround the present mother are all that they should be, and right here many fathers are at fault. I believe that every act or word of the husband has its influence on the wife at times that will be reflected more or less on future generations. I hope the time has come when the fathers in the church at least will wake up to the fact that they have as important a work in running this family machine as have the mothers.

It was with much pleasure that I read, "Lines from the pen of Sr. Rodger." Words from her pen come from her heart, and are loaded with that spirit of humility and love that they go right home to the readers and cause them to strive more earnestly to walk in the paths the Savior has made for us. "Dollie," too, like her mother, sends us such sweet, comforting words. Though the wound in their hearts never heals, yet their sorrow is smothered by the thought that the husband and father died like a true soldier at his post battling for the cause he loved. He had never deserted or retreated. I have in mind husbands of noble wives who were soldiers of the cross but died deserters. How bitter must be their cup.

Sister Mina Perkins' poems always breathe a tender sadness. I always feel like reaching out and taking her in my arms as I would the little child whose heart had been broken by some great grief. I love to read them. The list is too long. I couldn't name all whose letters are eagerly read. The Herald and Autumn Leaves always bring a feast.

The mission in the Society Islands has always been of interest to me, and the building and sending the Evanelia there has been no small undertaking. Often I have thought of that mere speck of a craft out on the ocean with only the few brave souls on it, trusting in the One who is mighty to save. That his omnipotent hand guided and brought them safely through I firmly believe. May we all put our trust in God and keep his commandments.

MRS. E. X. GAMET.

HOLDEN, Missouri.

Dear Sisters:—I wish to thank you who have written so many words of cheer from time to time. Sometimes I become very much discouraged. But I realize if we have no trials to bear or no temptations in this life, we will not be permitted to wear a crown in the life to come. I have a large family of little ones to raise but I would not exchange places with any woman who has no children. What else could I do? I have no talent to do any great work for the Lord in any other way, and what greater work can we do than raising little children, if we do it right? My experience has been that we must trust the Lord constantly and pray daily and hourly for his help and his guiding Spirit, for many times we become perplexed as the natures and dispositions of children vary so much. But the Lord has promised to give us wisdom when we lack if we ask. I ask an interest in the prayers of all that I may be guided by God's Spirit at all times.

Your sister,

"GOOD—LIKE YOU."

When I reproved my little girl,
Her clear, gray eyes were grieved and wet.
She owned her fault, for pardon plead,
And spoke some words I can't forget:
"If you were little, just like me,
Would ever you be naughty, too?
If I were only all grown up
I could be always good—like you."

She meant it! Her sweet innocence,
Which sent so sharp and sure a dart,
Knows nothing of the wicked moods
That sometimes sway her mother's heart.
Wrath, envy, folly, discontent,
The selfish purpose—not withstood—
These things accuse me; but my child
Believes that I am always good.

On Sabbath days, the man of God
Reproves me often unaware,
Ashamed, I hear his earnest voice
My own unworthy deeds declare.
And nobler lives rebuke my own,
But none had ever shaft so true
As she whose loving faith declared,
"I could be always good—like you."

MEMORY TEXTS FOR MAY.

"O how foolish, and how vain, and how evil, . . . and how quick to do iniquity, and how slow to do good, are the children of men; yea, how quick to hearken unto the words of the evil one, and to set their hearts upon the vain things of the world; yea, how quick to be lifted up in pride; yea, how quick to boast, and do all manner of that which is iniquity; and how slow are they to remember the Lord their God, and to give ear unto his counsels; yea, how slow to walk in wisdom's paths."—Heldman 4: 8.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

A SISTER living in Nebraska asks your faith and prayers in behalf of her husband that his hardness of heart may be removed and that God may awaken him to a sense of his duty.

Sr. Lucinda Rose, of Ball, Indiana, earnestly requests your faith and prayers in her behalf, as her health is very poor.

At Kansas City, recently, the Women's Christian Temperance Union adopted a resolution that "we will hereafter remove our hats at divine worship and all indoor speaking." What next? Let them rather concentrate their efforts as against the saloon, and they will command the fullest sympathy of all good men.—The Christian Observer, Louisville.

Original Poetry.

THE LATTER DAY.

BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

As the earth goes whirling onward
Through the boundless realms of air,
Turns her face still smiling sunward,
Are her latter days still fair?
Are her limbs still full and rounded,
All untouched by care or time?
In their youthful beauty bounded
With her starry robe sublime?

Is her light still full and steady,
Shining o'er a pleasant range?
Or has age now marked her ready
For the fiery time of change?
Comes there yet the doubt and fearing
To the hearts of many men?
As the hour of fate is nearing
And the call is heard again,

"I will gather me a people,
I will make them all mine own.
Worship not with bell and steeple,
Worship with the heart alone."
Very distant seems the morning
When God sped us toward the light;
All the times are full of warning,
All the days are full of night.

Many sons of men are grasping
What would seem truth's steady hand;
Air and ashes they are clasping,
And they totter where they stand.
Is the hope of life then bounded
By the fleeting things of time?
No! but on their ruins founded
Rests the structure all sublime

Of fair faith, that rising higher
Than the earthborn want or care,
Lifts the soul from its desire
To the sunlight and the air.
And the earth must grow and cherish
Fruit that blossomed in its youth;
Sin must ripen, sin must perish;
All eternal is the truth.

As the earth goes whirling onward,
Comes the gospel's call to men;
Let each creature's face turn sunward,
Strong with youth and love again.
And once more to joy and beauty
Springs a newer world to light,
That shall find the path of duty
With the stars of blessing bright.

SOUTH NORWICH, Ont., May 6.

Editors Herald:—Could you furnish me with some tracts, as I feel I could do more by visiting from house to house this busy time of the year than by preaching through the week. The work is onward. I came here January 15, to Priest Addison's. Much prejudice prevailed. We had two school-houses locked against us. I then adopted visiting from house to house and soon the doors were thrown open for us and great sleigh loads came night after night. Prejudice gave way, and soon we commenced to baptize. I was assisted by Priest R. D. Addison, who rendered service in opening meetings for us. Soon afterward Elder A. E. Mortimer came to our assistance, and now we expect to organize a branch, as there are sixteen Saints here.

I was compelled to stop for a few weeks on account of sickness. I labored so hard and the winter being so rough I caught cold, but am back to resume my labors again. The weather is very hot and dry now; farmers are busy putting in crops.

Yours in bonds,

SAMUEL TOMLINSON.

WILLIAMSDALE, N. S., May 10.

Editors Herald:—I think I was at Oldham when I addressed you last. From there I came to this place and began holding meetings, which were well attended and a good interest manifest.

After some two weeks I went to Glennville, a new opening some eleven miles away. I met with sharp opposition from the clergyman in the way of going from house to house, cautioning the people from attending, consequently the attendance was not large during the week. Nevertheless some interested ones came right along. But on Sunday several teams went from this place, and the turnout there was good, so we had a fine time and left a splendid impression upon the people. How it helps out for the Saints and friends to stand by the work in that way.

I then came back here, and beside our preaching meetings we had some business meetings concerning a church building, which were so far successful that we have the land donated by Bro. Hazen Johnson. Have also between two and three hundred dollars subscribed, and some timber on the ground. The intention is to move slowly and surely.

Of course all this had a peculiar effect upon the enemies of the work, so they sent for the Rev. C. E. Vincent, of the Baptist faith, who, by the way, is an able speaker and withal a very clever man, who has been waging ecclesiastical war against the Saints in other parts, and spent eight months in preparing a lecture against the Book of Mormon, according to his own statement. He came to Collingwood, some four miles from the center of my work, and before a packed house spent over two hours in eloquence against our position, mainly upon the Book of Mormon.

The effect was to rejoice the hearts of the opposers and sway the multitude in his favor, almost dazing the minds of those who were favorable to the work; but they made a mistake when they sent for him, for of course we were on the stand to take notes, and when he was done arose and announced a reply in one week. We had a tilt there and then, in which Mr. V. came out a bad second. As usual, during the week the excitement got quite high, and on the night appointed some of the baser sort tried to see how mean they could act; but a large majority desired to hear what we had to say, and in two hours they got, not brilliant eloquence nor side-splitting anecdotes, nor ridicule, but hard facts and logic of such a character that the verdict of the large majority is that Mr. Vincent's lecture is worse than a dead thing; for the book stands two to one better than it did before. Friends have been made, the wavering ones are settled in our favor, and the Saints are fairly jubilant. They are satisfied that if a man of Mr. Vincent's caliber can be so thoroughly and completely vanquished by the arguments that can be brought from the books just by an ordinary, uneducated man, they need not fear for the future of the book.

There is a distant muttering to the effect that he will come back and renew the battle. Well, let him come. The Saints have given his friends to understand that they will even pay his car fare here and back for the sake of the investigation. They seem to feel that the cause will lose nothing by being attacked, when we have a fair chance to reply. God is standing by his work and will so long as the Saints live right. I expect to leave this part of the field next week if nothing unusual turns up.

Later.—One promising young man is to be baptized to-day. All goes well.

Yours in the work,

H. J. DAVISON.

NANTYGLO, South Wales, April 30.

Editors Herald:—I write concerning the work at Bryn Mawr and Nantyglo. You will understand that there was in existence a Nantyglo branch about ten years ago, but they all died except two; but Bro. A. N. Bishop came to reside here about two years ago and revived the few that remained; and I began to be in a dilemma, which of the churches was of God. All represented themselves to be the right one, so after hearing the above brother preach the gospel of Christ I asked in the sectarian congregation where I attended, if there was a testimony of the Pentecostal power among them. They stated that it was a bygone power, and not required to-day; so I said, "I'll try the Latter Day Saints; they preach that God is unchangeable;" and I obeyed the ordinances required and received the promise of the Savior to those that believed; and I am very much pleased to state that the two daughters and two sons of Bro. A. N. Bishop, and my mother were baptized at the same time, and on the following Sabbath when confirmed it pleased the Lord to give them the witness of his Holy Spirit, and all our hearts rejoiced.

I would also like to bear testimony to the power of the Spirit in the gift of healing. I was very sick, and was administered to by Elders A. N. Bishop and J. Jones, and was instantaneously healed, for which we all gave glory to God. When Bro. Caffall visited us some time ago I was ordained by him and Bro. Bishop to the office of priest, and I hope I will have the power to fulfill the duties of it.

I see by the Herald that Brn Griffiths and Lewis are coming to Wales on a mission. I would like to call the attention of these brethren to the fact that there is to be held in Morryston, on June 1, 2, and 3, a reunion of all the Saints in Wales, and I am sure the whole of the Saints would be delighted if they were present.

Your brother,

THOMAS JONES.

HARLAN, Iowa, May 10.

Editors Herald:—We in this part of the Lord's vineyard have much cause to rejoice. Though we suffered some from the drouth last year, the winter was tempered to suit the condition of the people, so that stock came through with about half the usual amount of feed, and the spring is a month earlier than usual. Indeed, nature seems inclined to atone for its partial failure last year. We have had the necessary quantity of rain and everybody seems much encouraged. If the good Lord will protect us from the ravages of frost, hail, and cyclone, we hope to reap an abundant harvest. The year is in her prime and Mother Earth has donned her beautiful robe of green, and everything seems to rejoice in the goodness and glory of God. "Praise ye the Lord," all ye his Saints. How beautifully the present season of the year represents the life, wisdom, power, goodness, and grandeur of God as represented in the truth, and power, and glory of the restored gospel. O how faithful, and wise, and persevering every child of God should be! We have a right to watch as well as pray; and yet it should be done in love, and kindness, and the fear of God. We have a right to watch over the work committed to our care with a jealous eye, every man in his own office and calling, being careful to lose sight of self or selfish aspirations. It is hard indeed. I cannot believe that my fellow ministers are not as deeply interested in the advancement and safety of the work as I am. We may not be able to see eye to eye on every point of law or doctrine until he comes whose right it is to reign and we are permitted to "see him as he is."

We have a right to reason together in the fear of God that we may be enabled to work together in unison and love for the salvation of souls and the glory of God.

Jealousy, and suspicion, and malignant whispering is below the dignity of a Saint, much less a minister of Christ.

We often offend unintentionally in word and in writing, and therefore if I have hurt the feelings of any while discharging what I believe to be my duty, I humbly ask forgiveness of all.

The work in the Galland's Grove district is moving along nicely, all things considered. Our missionaries will all be in the field by the 1st of June and we hope by the help of God to be able to do a good work the present conference year. I shall be glad to hear from scattered Saints, or branch officers, or friends, as to the necessities of the work in their vicinities. Address me at Dow City, Iowa.

Local ministers are doing quite well, some of them making quite a sacrifice to preach the word. While at Deloit a short time ago I found the Saints willing to listen to the word and learned from their presiding officer that they were having good meetings and that the branch was in a fair condition. I think the same may be said of every other branch in the district.

I called at Panama and preached four discourses to fair-sized audiences, who were quite attentive, and I enjoyed the Spirit while speaking. While there I made my home with Bro. and Sr. C. M. Wilder who did all they could to make my stay pleasant and my meetings a success. I found them devoted to the Lord and holding a family Sunday school, which I think is very commendable under the circumstances. At the Salem branch I preached five discourses and enjoyed my visit with the Saints. I came to this place on the 6th instant and have been preaching each evening and shall continue as long as it seems wise to do so. Since coming here I have visited some of the Saints and find them all kind and most of them interested and alive in the work. I found Bro. and Sr. J. W. Chatburn usually well and cheerful.

The sun shines forth so bright and clear,
And nature laughs and shouts with cheer;
The earth has donned her robe of green
And spring is now enthroned as queen.

The King is God, the great I AM,
His truth is spreading o'er the land;
His servants go from land to land,
To bear the truth from God to man.

The present year is at her prime,
And every Saint should know it's time
To rise, and work, and watch, and pray,
And teach mankind the narrow way.

The Son of God shines forth to-day
And by his Spirit and power will stay
Until the work of God is done
And his own people's victory won.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

TUNCURRY, N. S. W., April 5.

Editors Herald:—Your issue dated February 27, (just to hand,) contains a letter from Bro. John Kaler, wherein he refers to a matter of business dealt with at our last district conference; viz., "appointing the location of next conference." In justice to all concerned, and especially those who felt aggrieved at the strange procedure adopted and the consequent issue of the question, kindly permit me to point out that the brother has not stated the case properly and therefore (unwittingly no doubt) misrepresents the attitude of the "two branches which have a majority delegate vote in the district," on the occasion under consideration.

These "two branches"—"Nambucca and Tuncurry"—comprise a combined membership of 133 as against 83—the aggregate of the remaining three branches in the district; hence it is obvious that in the event of their voting together in the same direction the result is a foregone conclusion. In the light of this circumstance the brother's remarks convey the inference that collusion had taken place between the said two branches with a view to settling the question at conference just as they desired it, by asserting their combined and self-recognized balance of voting power, regardless of the wishes of the other branches. Such a construction is entirely at variance with the truth, for as a matter of fact the said two branches were absolutely ignorant of each other's wishes or intentions; nor were they known until the discussion of the question at conference revealed them. It then transpired that one of these "two branches" (the Nambucca) respectfully requested that the next district conference should be held in their neighborhood, whereupon the delegates of the Tuncurry branch announced that they were instructed to support such request in the event of it being made, because it was considered that according to the usual method of rotation the Nambucca branch was entitled to first consideration in the matter. The discussion proceeded at some length when the writer, to save unnecessary talk and delay, reminded the conference that the two branches favoring the same place of appointment represented a majority, and must eventually carry the motion that way. This remark proved the signal for a torrent of remonstrance from some of those who failed to relish a foreknowledge of an inevitable defeat, and indignation was the order of the hour.

However, by way of pouring oil on the troubled waters, recourse was had to a measure calculated to counteract the preponderance of voting power possessed by the above-named branches. A resolution was passed on the show of hands, deciding to settle the much vexed question by the individual votes of those present, and it was accordingly disposed of. By this course the conference enacted the inconsistency of summarily depriving the delegates of the representative vote which only a few moments previously it had formally granted them, and as a result of this their branches were practically disfranchised on the question.

It will thus be readily perceived which side had occasion to feel indignant, and that the matter was far from "ending well" as the brother states in his letter. The "ending" was made more irritating because of the fact that after all had been said and done to defeat the wish of the two branches in delegate majority, the purpose was attained by only the scanty majority of two votes (one of those being that of a child).

Much might be said in adverse comment upon the apparently inconsistent and unjust procedure herein explained, and which has given rise to subsequent complaints from all directions. It may possibly (as some affirm) be justifiable under some indefinite law governing such matters, but even so, the moral injustice of it is palpable. One of the foremost brethren in the district—writing to me on the subject—characterizes the procedure complained of, an "absurdity" which makes him "feel indignant every time it occurs to his mind."

With reference to further remarks contained in Bro. K's letter, I submit that no one is justified in assuming that because a branch happens to bind its delegates to vote in a certain way they do so "regardless of the interests of the work or the guidance of the Holy Spirit." Are we to understand that the Spirit's influence is not to be expected in branch deliberations and that the Divine hand directs those of conference assemblages exclusively? This seems to be the inference. I am in a position to say that the "Tuncurry" branch in considering their motions and instructing their delegates for the conference did so in good faith and with pure motives, and we accredit other branches with similar purpose in their measure, hence we may be pardoned for feeling pained to find our action described as attempts to "settle" matters which should be left to the conference, and "regardless of the interest of the work," etc.

I might here explain that our delegates were "bound" only on two questions. No, brother; we don't "think the delegate system is faulty!" Where the fault lies is in the action of prohibiting the delegate system (or vote), and this just at the very time when circumstances justly demanded the vote.

In a district so extensive and scattered, and where the means of travel are so difficult and expensive as this, and as a consequence of which only a few of each branch (excepting that where the conference is held) attend the conferences, unless these branches are allowed delegate representation, they simply are a nonentity in the matter. They will have no weight of voting power, hence their wishes and interests are disregarded, and as a brother remarked, "We might just as well let the branch where the conference is held do the business of the district, as they can, and do almost invariably, have a majority of members present."

In conclusion I wish to add that I have endeavored to place the nature of the case before you in its proper light, for many who were not present have desired to learn the particulars, and thus draw their own conclusions. Apologizing for trespassing so far on your space, I remain,

Yours for truth and equity,
C. S. MCLAREN.

LONDON, Ont., May 7.

Editors Herald:—On my arrival home from the field of labor, I read in Herald for May 1 a letter from Bro John McKenzie, in which he seeks to correct the following statement found in my report: "During the summer I have opened the work in Quebec, baptizing the first two ever baptized into the Reorganized Church in that Province."

When I wrote the above I had no desire to rob Bro. McKenzie of the credit of baptizing three in that Province over twenty years ago; nor did I willingly, or knowingly pass by the good work performed by the other elders in those early days referred to in his letter.

When I wrote my report, I can say, like good old Jacob of Book of Mormon times, "I conclude this record, declaring that I have written according to the best of my knowledge."

I have been connected with the church nearly nineteen years, and have attended the district conferences, and till I read Bro. McKenzie's letter I have not heard of a member of the church or a branch of the church in Quebec. I have made two missionary trips to that Province, but heard nothing of branch or member, nor did I ever hear of Bro. McKenzie going to Quebec or elsewhere as a missionary up to the time I read his letter.

For seven years I was president of the district in which such branch or members should be reported, yet I never heard of a branch report from Quebec till I read his letter.

That Bro. McKenzie "met several that had heard our elders in the days of the Prophet Joseph," and that the brethren named by him did labor, as stated by him, I have no disposition to disbelieve; but that the very last labor performed by them was accomplished over twenty years ago, and that the little branch referred to has not reported in all those years, is a fact.

If there has been a branch or a member of the church in the Province of Quebec during the last twenty years prior to my labor there, I did not know it. Trusting the above will explain my reason for reporting as I did,

Your brother,
R. C. EVANS.

SAN BENITO, Cal., May 14.

Editors Herald:—On arriving in San Bernardino I found that the rumor of theological war which reached us while in conference at Independence had faded away, but the Saints of San Bernardino engaged the Pavilion and persuaded the renowned debater and evangelist, J. C. Clapp, to occupy the rostrum and show the citizens the truth as taught by the saints of former days, as well as by the Saints of latter days. I have not heard the particulars concerning the meetings, only that Bro. Clapp had good audiences, attention, and liberty in defending the faith.

I left Bro. Clapp with Brn. Gibson, Harris, Jones and a host of old friends and Saints to help him, and went to Santa Ana. Was met at the station by Frank and Bro. H. L. Holt and on Sunday morning had the pleasure of listening to Bro. Holt deliver one of his unique discourses, which was highly commended by the Saints. On Monday evening the chapel at Newport was crowded to hear the Evanelia story, which was rather a prosy story according to the captain's idea of it. However, some seemed to be satisfied, and he must needs be.

I had received word twice from Emma to come home as she was quite sick, so did not feel extra jubilant, and on Tuesday started homeward visiting by urgent request a few places by the way and on Saturday evening got home and found Emma sick abed with asthma and lung fever, but was getting better and was able to-day to take a short ride in the buggy. On Friday I go on to Gilroy for Sunday, as Bro. Putney has made arrangements for two services for me there.

I have been home three days and find letters here urging me to either come or send elders to various places from Washington to Arizona. The Washington Saints think they ought to have help right away without fail, and commend Bro. John Davis very highly; but the territory is too large, the calls too many for one man. Oregon knows they ought to have several elders right away, and from the Northern California field of labor comes a cry for more laborers; and that you may not suppose that we missionaries are idle, as a reason for so many calls, I will just say that Bro. Daley, of the Northern California field, reports fifteen baptisms since he reported to General Conference. Central California is waiting anxiously for the coming of Bro. Harris, who with his valor and push will make the valleys and mountains ring with the joyful sound of the gospel soon, while Bro. Lawn continues to smile aloud, scattering seeds of happiness and carrying glad tidings wherever he goes.

Bro. Baly, south, near Anaheim, has opened up the work in a small settlement and the people are delighted with the story of the gospel as told by him. Brn. H. L. Holt and R. R. Dana will open up with the tent in places where they have been invited and will reach the pleasure seekers and others who may care to hear the truth. Bro. Dana was my companion on my first real missionary trip, and has from thence until now proven himself a firm, faithful man; and now, after having sought wealth in the mines for a number of years, has for the past few years returned to his former work, which he loves so much—the missionary field—and is proving himself a valiant "soldier of the cross," and no doubt Bro. Holt and he will do a grand work this coming year; while Bro. Gibson is actively laboring in and around San Bernardino and has just opened by request a new place near Cucamonga.

While the calls are thus pressing upon the missionary force the branches are also feeling the force of the progress of the work, and the Garden Grove Saints are considering the necessity of enlarging their accommodations for their increasing audiences, and are talking of building a larger chapel this fall. On the Sunday and Monday evenings that I was there the chapel was uncomfortably filled. Thus, as the Spirit that guides in the latter-day work told us—the fields are widening before us, the elders are also reporting excellent liberty, and surely the way is opening before us, the work progressing, and our prayer is, Lord, send us more laborers, that we might supply the many calls upon us for help.

We think we are entitled to the assistance of at least one of the Presidency and one of the Bishopric this summer, as this is a very important mission and so few laborers. We would all be delighted to have you come over the mountains' top and let us hear your voices again in the Pacific Slope mission. Come and help us.

In bonds of love and truth,
JOSEPH F. BURTON.

LUCAS, Iowa, May 13.

Editors Herald:—Our district president, William Anderson, and Bro. Joseph Snively were with us. On the evening of the 4th Bro. Anderson addressed the Saints and was greatly blessed in his effort in instructing and encouraging them. Bro. Snively assisted and gave some wholesome advice in addition to the noble effort already made. Bro. Anderson preached on the night of the 5th, while Bro. Snively spoke twice, ten miles out in the country, during the day. He is talking up the tent, soliciting aid from all, and I believe he will do good work under the circumstances.

I think it would be injustice to Bro. A. M. Chase if his faithful work was not mentioned. He certainly is an expert in Sunday school work. His labors while here are greatly appreciated by the school, and he will be a welcome visitor whenever he returns. He was with us from the 4th to the 8th inst. May his shadow never grow less.

I go on the 15th to the field appointed me, would have been there some time since but was detained. We are all creatures of circumstances. I have labored right along in this place and vicinity. Great good can be done in this region of country. The people are kind and attentive; they take us to their homes and feed us, and many of them manifest a degree of faith in our mission. Bro. David Daniels is active in prosecuting the work in the surrounding country, and the other young brethren give him assistance, while others are zealously engaged in Sunday school and local work. It is to be hoped that each of us will be blessed with divine aid wherever we are stationed, that we may labor as seeing him who is invisible.

E. B. MORGAN.

AMARILLO, Texas, May 13.

Editors Herald:—I have been here preaching to the people a week, and to-day I baptized Bro. and Sr. Umphres and William Meeks the station operator. Surely these good Saints will do good here. Bro. Maitland first brought the gospel to this people, and Bro. J. E. Nicoll, believing Bro. Maitland's teaching, went to Independence and was baptized and came back here and has been advocating the gospel ever since. Bro. Nicoll being cashier and agent and a strict business man, has gained the confidence of the people, so much so that he obtained the use of the Christian church to hold meetings in. We now have seven members here, including Bro. and Sr. Tysen and Sr. Dalton. The three last named moved here last fall.

May the good Lord bless these Saints to do much more good. I believe he will. There were some baptized at Beaver last week. We hope all will be well with us in Texas.

Your brother,

SERMON BY PRES. JOSEPH SMITH.

Independence, Missouri, April 14, 1895.

ONE of the moving questions of the hour, so far as religious circles are concerned, and very largely among those who are watching what is being done in the social and theological world, is this one: Is there a practicable unity to be reached between those of different faiths of a religious nature in the world? To make the question as narrow as may be practicable, having regard to the area in which the movement might begin, we may put it in this form: "Is it practicable for those of religious differences in faith in the United States to reach that degree of unity that shall result in a common faith being held by all who believe in God, and in Christ, and in the message of salvation coming to the world through Jesus the Savior?" Perhaps no one in this congregation to-night realizes the extent and the burden of this question more than does your speaker. If we might credit our own hopes in reference to it, it is a question in which every one is more or less directly interested, for upon its settlement may finally turn the answering of the great question which has been asked by him whom we expect shall be our ultimate Redeemer, "when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

As a basis for the inquiry of the evening I present you a portion of the prayer offered by Jesus, as recited in the seventeenth chapter of John's Gospel; and that we may not be mistaken in regard to the character of this gospel and what it was, we turn unto the opening chapter and read a portion of the word:—

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.—John 1: 6, 7.

Taking up the thought as expressed by this, we may read with confidence what appears in the prayer because it was uttered by him of whom this man sent from God bore witness.

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—John 17: 20, 21.

You will discover that by the terms of this prayer his work was not to be confined alone to the period in which that was uttered, nor to the apostolic quorum or the disciples in whose presence and for whom it was immediately uttered; but it was to reach out into the bounds of time wherever men should be called to believe in Christ through the words of these apostles. I stand to-night, possibly, to represent the new against the old; to strike with the iconoclast's hammer, in a religious sense, at some of those things which have been striving for the mastery, asserting that the object which has been had in view is the unification of the faith of man, but which has resulted in separating, not in drawing men closer together; not resulted in lifting them en masse, in thought, in principle, and in purpose and practice before God, but separating them, and raising up continually renewed barriers against the final unity of the faith. And one thing that has been consciously derived from this controversial field, in pursuing this inquiry whether it is practicable that there can be established among men that that shall bring a unity of the faith,—our minds have been and are turned directly to the august character of the individual in whom this unification must finally center; unless there has been a mistake in his sending and in the authorizing him in making a declaration, and the belief of man that God sent him.

Now let us look, if you please, to some things which we as a people believe to be eminently practicable in religion; and while the reporter has said, touching your speaker, that he looked like a successful man of business, let me inform him that his business has been the service of God not upon the Sabbath day only, but to teach men from Monday morning to Saturday night the truths which should be told on the Sabbath day and acted during men's lives. A business; a plain matter-of-fact business; a recognition that God's business through Jesus Christ was to save the world. The best business that man ever engaged in; the one that brings into exercise all the common sense that may be in a man. And I have heard it said that common sense was a wonderfully good thing to have in the house; and if it is needed in a house where men dwell every day, there is no place where it should have its final and best application more completely than in the house of God; for by it we shall recognize that which comes to us of the divine, and comparing the spiritual with that which we comprehend of the finite, our minds may be led out through the revelation of him who comes to save us, and we finally be able to comprehend what he has declared should bring to pass the unity of the race. It has been said in these New Testament Scriptures by one of the writers, that when man failed by wisdom to find out God, "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." In order that you may understand what I mean by this plain, practical business consideration of this matter, let me explain.

Over in the New Testament Scriptures, in fact the closing book of it—that that has been given to us, and which the religious world has long considered to be a prophetic epitomizing of what should transpire in the world after that period of time—there was a declaration made that the angel should fly through the midst of heaven having something to declare unto the race of man. It was to be preached in all the world, unto every kindred, tongue, and people under the whole heavens. The messengers that were to be sent out were to make the declaration, which was this:—

Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.

It has sometimes been the practice to endeavor to bring men to a unity of the faith in Christ by representing to them the dire consequences that should ensue to them if they should be found unbelieving when Christ should come, if they should be found unregenerate, when he should come, "taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Looking upon this declaration in a common sense way, I, as a business man, intent upon the business of making my life secure in this great Savior of mankind, make inquiry, How shall I stand when this cry shall come? How shall I comprehend what is required of me in order that I may pass judgment when that great judge shall come? How am I to understand and obey that gospel of the Son of God in order that I may not be condemned by it when the time of his coming shall be? If you tell me that it is declared in what we call the New Testament Scriptures, I answer in the language of one who was riding in his chariot in olden times and a man approached him and asked him the question, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" and he made answer to him, "How can I, except some man should guide me?"

You tell me that the knowledge of God is found in the New Testament Scriptures; and when I turn to its pages I read that no man can understand the things of God save by the Spirit of God which may be in him. Is that Spirit of God in him as a natural man? If so, the apostle made a mistake when he said that the carnal man is at enmity with God; and I find myself at the outset of this controversy standing face to face with difficulties in the application of this that is called the gospel of the Son of God that no man, however wise he might have been, has yet been able to reconcile in the days that are past; and how shall I, as a plain business man seeking for a business salvation, how shall I settle and arrange the differences that I see? I am answered, as I was upon one occasion, "You must take the word of God to be the man of your counsel." I am told that this may be reiterated by every believer in the Bible, and I thank you, generous hearts, I thank you, open-minded people, that upon this broad platform we to-night may begin to agree: "Thou shalt take the Bible or the word of God as the man of thy counsel." And now let me find if I can, some counsel in that book, in that word, which will enable us to successfully answer as individuals, whether we can collectively or not, unto the wide world, we may individually as between ourselves and our God, how we shall bring about a unity of the faith:—

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.—Mark 12: 30.

And him only shalt thou serve.—Matt. 4: 10.

Now mark, the Apostle Paul says:—

If there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Rom. 3: 19.

Here is the whole duty of man expressed in one or two pithy sentences. The august Master of life said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God;" and we are not left in doubt as to how we can make manifest our love to God, because if we love him we will keep his commandments. He himself has said:—

He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me. . . . He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings.—John 14: 21, 24.

Now listen, if you please. I kneel before the altar, and looking up, say, "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven;" and when I have done that I take up this "man of counsel" and I read from its sacred pages that which fell from the lips of the sacred Teacher, and when I read it to you I read the solemn declarations of this man after he had passed into the confines of the grave, after he had paid the penalty that mortal life must pay to that which gave it being, and I see him standing prepared to take his flight on high and take his place at the right hand of the Majesty who sent him, and I ask you in the solemnity that should mark us under the inspiration of such language as that, Am I at liberty to discard it or disregard it? In the sixteenth chapter of Mark I read the declaration to the apostles:—

Go ye therefore into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

Is this the man of our counsel? Are we at liberty to disregard this word? Ah no, say our neighbors upon the right hand and upon the left. I answer them back, Where am I to draw the line of discrimination between these sentences penned in the sixteenth chapter of Mark uttered on the same memorable occasion by the same personage and at the same time? Where am I to draw the line of distinction between that which I must take as the counsel of God unto me uttered by this man and reject the rest?

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Mark 16: 16.

But I am answered by many, as I was to-day when I made the quotation, "He that believeth not shall be damned," as follows: "Ah, but it does not say, Elder, that if he is not believing and is not baptized." There is not a schoolmaster or a schoolma'am present,—there is not a scholar in the hearing of my voice but what in reading that sentence and putting it upon the blackboard analytically knows that the rule requires that the ellipsis must be supplied and be filled in this form: "And he that believeth not and is not baptized shall not be saved." That is the language of this "man of my counsel."

Reading along further in this sixteenth chapter of Mark I find this: "And these signs shall follow them that believe;" and at once my neighbors upon the right hand and upon the left,—those who are striving after the unity of the faith,—at once reject it and say, "These signs shall not follow them that believe." The Savior said they should; our neighbors say they shall not; and I am answered as I was to-day, "You do not do these things, you have no power to do these things." I answered, "The power rests not in man. I never have made the declaration that I had within myself the power spoken of there in reference to these signs, nor have these, my brethren, ever claimed it; but they have claimed that the "Man of their counsel" said it should be so, and he being the power by which the salvation of man is to finally come, I have no right to set up my mortal declaration against his, he who was and is the Divine One.

I make the approach unto this declaration of the Savior without fear, without hesitancy. I am cautioned by you to take it as the man of my counsel, and reading it I meet this declaration here coming from the lips of that sacred Man in whom we are to have life everlasting, in whom if we believe we shall not perish but shall have everlasting life. I ask you how is this everlasting life to be vouchsafed unto me? and I read again:—

In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Matt. 16: 17, 18.

And I make inquiry, Were those things intended to reach only those for whom this Divine One prayed as written in the seventeenth chapter of John's Gospel which I have read in your hearing and taken as my text? And I am answered, Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word.

And in the word we find the apostolic words written by this historian, that these are the things which should characterize the believers in Christ.

Now as a business man making a business proposition, I have found an individual sent upon a business errand into the world, and when he comes he says, in reference to it, to them that would deter him, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" What was that Father's business? He tells us in the twelfth chapter of John.

I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.

Then let those who are seeking for the answer to this question as to what may be the means of your unification of the faith among the children of men, answer as I answer you, that you must, taking the "man of your counsel" to be he whom God sent upon this extraordinary business, accept him when he makes the declaration as to how that business of saving the world is to be accomplished. Is there anything fanatical about that? The St. Joseph papers only a day or two ago said that there was a lot of cranks down here in convention like many other cranks. I thank the St. Joseph papers, but while doing so I remember that it is the crank motion that moves the world.

Now as a plain business proposition I want you to face it, please. I am a crank because I believe that Jesus Christ said that a man should be saved by baptism. My neighbor is a sane man who says that baptism is not essential to salvation. Is that a business proposition? Place the two side by side upon a common sense platform, make a business examination of the two, if you please, examine them by the principles upon which you would judge other things of similar character, and what is your answer? Your answer must inevitably be that if Jesus Christ was sent upon the business to save the world, and he comes, making this declaration that a man must be baptized to be saved, there is no other proposition upon which he will be received by God unto salvation. That makes it essential unto his salvation.

Now again: this same divine Teacher, as I read in the first chapter of Mark's Gospel in this book which I am to take as "the man of my counsel" gave the commandment, "Repent and believe the gospel;" and yet today I am met in San Francisco, in Kansas City, in Chicago, and I may say in a vast number of other places by the declaration that we may be saved by a belief in Jesus Christ only, without reference to such a thing as his gospel, which may be said to be his doctrine; and when I delivered a temperance lecture in Council Bluffs only a little while ago in the hall occupied by the Salvation Army, he that was the leader at the time, following me and knowing who I was and that I was preaching in the city, took the pains to tell the people assembled there that they didn't want any doctrine, they didn't want any organization. Then I ask the "man of my counsel" to tell me what it means when I am told by it in the closing of the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, that God added to the church daily such as should be saved; and asking the question touching the application of this prayer of the Savior unto myself, I wonder if in the day in which I live there is a church unto which I may be added with the thought that thereby I may be saved.

Now a business question—a business application. At that time it seemed that the church was essential unto the salvation of men. Is the church essential unto the salvation of men now? God in his infinite mercy set himself to do a work by which men were added to the church and by thus being added to the church they were saved. "Ah no!" says my friend upon the right hand; "Ah no!" says my friend upon the left hand. "What that text means is this: that here is a man who has been ordained, by virtue of the divine clemency of God before his birth, that he should be born unto life and salvation, and he cannot help himself. Here is a man upon the other side that has been selected by divine command, by divine providence, and by divine instigation, and by divine foreordination to be eternally damned from his birth, and he cannot help himself. That is what that text means." Do you believe it? The "man of my counsel" says no. Why? Because the Apostle Paul writing afterwards said:—

Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also you are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you.—1 Cor. 15: 1, 2.

It was the gospel that saved them, and it was the means through which God added unto the church daily such as should be saved. I make then the business answer to the business question that if we are seeking knowledge there is a way by which we can reach it, and that is by agreeing with the gospel of the Son of God as taught in the New Testament Scriptures; and that shall be the means by which we shall be brought together; and that is through the statement, I believe—not in Jesus Christ alone, but in his word, I believe that my salvation depends not only upon the mercy and clemency of God through Jesus Christ, but results to me by virtue of my obedience unto his commandments.

Now let me see a little further; I am going to try to make a business application. On Friday last individuals looking upon us convened together here as a convention saw dire distress and disorder staring us, as a convention, in the face, because there seemed to be an irrepressible conflict between the preachers of the faith; and the world looking on outside heralded abroad that the seeds of dissolution were in this Reorganized Church. That was the conclusion that many would reach, and yet at the close of our session yesterday evening like one solid body we rose up men and women to acknowledge and give our consent to the continuation of the organization without a break. What produced this unity? Was it the fact that we might have differed in our opinions touching some things in which the law itself was not clear? No, but it was in the fact that each one of this body had received or accepted the declaration of Jesus Christ that by baptism they were to be born into the power and see the kingdom of God, and by the baptism of water and of the Spirit had been born into such condition of things that one faith, one Lord, one baptism, one Spirit by which they had all been baptized into one hope of their calling, had prevailed among them as a people. There is unity for you in that faith. A business proposition states that here are gathered men and women from many States, from many countries, under many conditions, and from many different faiths, representing different churches,—and coming out from the midst of them all, meeting together here for the first time in the flesh, bearing witness to each other that they have received the testimony that they belonged to the family of God on earth. Now when you can get such testimony as that at work in the world, when you can get men to accept the theory, and the doctrine, and philosophy coming from this "man of their counsel" by which they can reach such a condition of things as that, if it could be made universal, you have solved the question as to how there can be produced a unity of the faith in the United States or the world.

I will illustrate this by telling you a little story. When I went into the little town of Plano, Illinois, in 1866, moving there to take charge of the Herald Office as its editor, I met good people of other faiths that would cross the street rather than meet me face to face for fear that the contact of my garments would be sacrilegious. I passed along the street. "There goes the son of old Joe Smith," said one, and once upon a time a gentleman said to me, "Are you the son of your father?" I preached this gospel of unity. I preached this message of salvation, and after I had become thoroughly established there, and while I was pastor of the church, I met a doctor, a practicing physician of the place, one of those whose wife was a member of the most popular church in the place, and he says to me, "Elder, will you answer me a question?" I said, "Yes, Doctor, I will if I can." "Do you believe the Bible?" "Yes, sir, I do." "Do you believe that the sun stood still?" There was a poser! I had told him that I believed the Bible; he struck right at the root of my faith. In answer to the question he had a reasonable right to believe that as an honest man, as a business proposition would not turn and go back upon that which I had said to him, and I answered, "Yes, sir, I do, and I believe that other fish story, too." "And what is that?" "That the whale swallowed Jonah." He didn't ask me any further question, but I had the satisfaction of hearing that in conversation with some friends in his office he said that our people were consistent in their belief at least, for when he asked if I believed the Bible, I said, Yes; and when he asked if I believed the sun stood still, I also said, Yes.

Now, mark you, I am not drawing a line of combat against the scientists; I am not here for that purpose. I am here to discuss the business of life and salvation; that which is interesting to every man and every woman, and in regard to which we find the Bible as the great palladium of our liberties, telling us how to reach heaven, and happiness, and home; and the Lord tells us how it is done; but it is not done by human invention. I am answered, "Mr. Smith, I am surprised at your expressing such a belief, when everybody knows there is no such thing as the sun standing still." Granted, for the sake of the argument. But who put this sun and moon in motion? The Creator. Is it a much more stupendous miracle for him to put his hand upon the mighty machinery and say, "Peace be still" than it was for him to put it in being, create its laws, and put it in motion at once? Ah no! Please do not circumscribe the power of the Almighty.

A Baptist lady once found fault with us because we limited the power of God and said that our faith was that God did not make the world out of nothing. She believed he did. I argued the question with her for something like two hours and then finally said, "Do you believe that matter is indestructible? You may divide and subdivide, you may change its form, its appearance, its qualities apparently, but still matter though subdivided and sublimated in its character can never be destroyed." She replied: "Yes, I believe that thoroughly." "You say I circumscribe God's power when I say I don't believe he made the world out of nothing. You believe that he did, and that he created this world out of nothing, and when he had made it he had a thing he could not destroy and make nothing of it again. Who is it that limits the power of God in this particular?" Take this stupendous miracle now, if you please, and you have but to think that if God put it in motion, God could stop it just as easily as he who is acquainted with the machinery which he directs may put his hand upon a throttle valve and start or stop that machinery. That is my faith in God and in his word. I bring it to that understanding for this purpose: We will suppose that many who find fault, find fault honestly with us when we place baptism as a saving ordinance in the house of God, and that man cannot be saved without it. We ask them if they have organization. They answer, "No; we have evangelists, those that are revivalists, and they are going out into the world preaching Christ unto the children of men, and they are inviting them to come forward in all sorts of ways, and they are instantly saving them, transforming them from the dark hued characters of those that were once evil, and at once transplanting them into the condition of those that are saved without the possibility of being lost. There is a stupendous miracle, and one that is wrought without the intervention of this cleansing process by which they are to be saved, in case the language of the Savior is complete in itself and in force among us as a business proposition, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned."

There is so much connected with this subject that it would be pleasurable to discuss, did time permit, but we proceed to some other. The question of doctrine has been dividing the world from the time that the first or Roman and Greek Church divided away back yonder upon the simple question as to whether the bread which was eaten in the sacrament should be leavened or unleavened; until the time that men have divided in this country upon the proposition that men had a right to hold the black man in servitude and yet remain members in the Church of God. One man believed that they could, another that they could not; that slavery was a divine institution, until only a few years ago an individual coming into this place should ask the question, "Tell me what building this is?" the reply would be something of this kind: "Yes, sir, that is the South Methodist, the other is the North Methodist church." Was there an agreement there? Ah no! The original contest was, one believed that God had permitted slavery as a divine institution, the other believed that he had not. These were strong lines, and these lines have not yet been thrown down; and slowly upon either side those holding them are encroaching on each other's territory, the one representing the South the other the North before slavery died.

We have another popular church in the State, and represented in this city, one half of which believes that they can trace their apostolic order away back yonder to Peter and the seat of the church at Rome, and the other half believing and saying, You cannot trace it back,—no possibility of it. There is no unity there. There is another popular church which not long ago turned one of the ablest ministers they had in the church out because he preached and believed in the atonement differently from what some others did, and they could not abide him and turned him out. Another popular church turned out another minister who afterwards preached successfully to an independent congregation in Chicago, because he did not agree with some of the articles of faith, and when they arraigned him for trial for heresy, he said, "You know, brethren, that none of you teach these things." They had outgrown the creed. These creeds that bind men's consciences and that create these divisions must be done away.

Returning to the "man of our counsel" in Jesus Christ we would take him as the proper representative of a business proposition coming from God, sent upon his Father's business to save man, and himself having the right to declare the way, and believe him when he tells us how we can come to him. If we shall obey it we shall see it as one man. We may not be able to see all the details of God's economy, even though we pursue its study till we overwork the brain. We may not be able to change traditions, we may not be able to overcome convictions that have reached us by education and our environments, nor change the prejudices that have been borne in upon us by ages of hereditary influences; but we can come to a unity of the faith in this, that believing in God and in Jesus Christ we can go down into the waters of baptism, and be baptized by one method, by the authority which God has sent, and receive the birth of the Spirit by which we can be accounted as the children of God.

And I believe as an individual, looking out upon the great field of controversy as I have been striving to do for the past few years, I believe this unity of the faith among men never will be brought to pass until men having the courage of their convictions, stand together, and believe that God meant what he said through Jesus Christ when he said:—

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 16.

Also this:—

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 38.

That as uttered by the Apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost.

Now listen! Only a little while ago a reverend gentleman of some note in the church in which he belongs made this remark, especially referring to that which is said in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles on what is called the day of Pentecost, he said: "The man that states that the Holy Ghost is now conferred as it was upon the day of Pentecost, is either a fool or a knave." Why, are you sure of this? I believe the answer to the inquiry written here—"men and brethren, what shall we do?" if it had been the question what shall we believe, there might have been an opportunity for controversy; but it was narrowed down to the query, "What shall we do?" and an individual standing up and answering the question says,—"

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

As a business proposition, where does that promise stop? As a business proposition, are we within the confines of that promise? Are we within the reach of that divine clemency that authorized its declaration then? I answer you as a teacher, as an individual seeking for light and believing the New Testament Scriptures, It certainly must be within our reach; we must live within the province of its wonderful promise and its continuity. How are we to understand it? I will answer you. Peter thus standing up and speaking by virtue of the Spirit that was upon him said:—

The promise is unto you [that circumscribed the limit to those who heard him], and to your children [those who should come after him, and then the width and the height and the depth of the wonderful power by which he spake, gave him to comprehend], and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 39.

And whenever I hear a revival sermon, any minister behind the sacred desk making use of the language, "Come unto me;" "the Spirit and the bride say come;" "whosoever will may come," I think I hear the voice of inspiration moving upon that divine man upon the day of Pentecost and find myself breathing the prayer with confidence to God, "Give unto me that salvation which thou didst authorize to be declared upon that wondrous day of Pentecost." I hear that call, I answer from my heart; I realize how sinful I have been, how hard-hearted I may be in my unbelief. Enable me to put it away from me, to accept the man of counsel thou hast sent that I obeying him may find life according to the promise. Guide me, and let me embrace it.

Now let me impress it upon you, as I think it should be. In this great conflict there is a means of unity, there is opportunity for men of faith in God to unite; and it is upon this broad platform laid down by the Almighty through Jesus Christ that it is written, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

PASTORAL.

To the Elders, Priests, Teachers, Deacons, and Saints in Florida:—Having been appointed by the missionary in charge of the Southeastern mission to look after the interests of our Father's kingdom in this State, I hereby call upon every one having a name on the church records to lend us a helping hand, that by our union of action we may spread the gospel news if possible throughout the entire State, and comfort each other by words of good cheer and deeds of charity becoming Saints.

We have no time to waste; let us clothe ourselves with garments fitting for the bride-chamber, and go to with both mind and means to redeem the honest in heart everywhere.

Bro. James Baggerly is associated with us, and we will with such local assistance as may be offered try to hold meetings in every town and place at our disposal.

Two days' meetings are in order. Do you want them? Obtain places for preaching; confer with us; circulate appointments.

Arise and work, though great or small,
For by our works we stand or fall.

Address me at Milton, Florida.

HENRY C. SMITH.

To the Saints and Friends of Northwestern Kansas District; Greeting:—I have been appointed to labor in Kansas this year, and by a subsequent appointment, to this district, and by the late conference held at Blue Rapids as your presiding officer. I feel the importance of the work before us, and the necessity of a general and united effort upon the part of all to insure success, and especially the local ministry, to come up to the help of the Lord, unfurl the banner of King Immanuel to the breeze, and march forward in the grand work of rescuing the perishing. We all fully realize that to the extent of our effort will be our reward. For this purpose I make this appeal to you. The Master said, "If you love me, keep my commandments." "By their fruits ye shall know them [the Saints]." Ye are a light in the world to guide the erring to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Dear Saints, let each be found at his post as a good soldier, guarding with care the work assigned him, each in his place, holding up the hands of those appointed to labor in doctrine; and as the Lord has blessed let each impart that portion required in the law to carry on the gospel work that the work be not hindered.

I love the people of Kansas. It is a pleasure to labor with and among such. They are so hopeful. Drought, hard times, or adversities do not discourage them nor dry up the fountain of love or their faith in God. In the language of another, they are "clinging closer" to the Lord in these adverse times. In joyful remembrance of Jesus' warning, when you see these things come to pass, stand in holy places and be not moved. Oh! may our heavenly Father give help and strength to all his Saints to live closer to him, that amid tribulation they can live rejoicing every day, continuing in prayer and supplication. In everything give thanks to God who has been so good and loving with his children. May God sanctify our trials to our good and his glory, is my prayer.

Brethren, let me hear from you and the condition of the work in your localities. This will enable me to arrange my labors and distribute my time to the best advantage and assist in building up the work throughout the district. I will make an effort and use all the means in my reach to visit all the branches as soon as it is practicable. In the meantime I trust the local ministry will render all the assistance they can and labor as circumstances may permit. There is plenty of work for all. None need be idle. Dear brethren, we are laborers together in the Lord's vineyard. Let our labors be so directed to the building up of the kingdom of Christ on earth that his will may be done in us to his glory, and our salvation. My permanent address will be Clay Center, Kansas.

Yours in bonds,

A. KENT.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Pacific Slope Mission; Greeting:—Through the blessing of our heavenly Father we are permitted to enter upon another year of happy toil and labor, and pleasurable anxiety and care, in the grandest work allotted to man, and I hope every Saint in the mission will feel the responsibility resting upon him to fulfill his duty in his lot and part in this portion of our Lord's vineyard. We should all remember that we are collaborators together in the great latter-day work, and if one, even the least one, should lag behind, the work intrusted to all is that much hindered. The ministry are honorable men, active and willing workers, and are to a man fully determined to work with all their strength this year to make their record worthy to be presented, through the church, to their Master, and while making it good as to toil and labor, to also make it clean and pure. Saints, will you help them? will you encourage them, and work with them to advance the work? We have confidence in you as in them, and do not doubt but what our record in this mission this year will surpass any year's record yet made, as it ought. To the brethren of the ministry we may say that we may still claim the blessed promise made by the Captain of our salvation in 1894, and we may expect the fields to still widen before us, and the angels of God to be with us, and that we shall find acceptance with men within and without, and God will be with us in all our labors, cares, blessings, and conquerings. A great harvest is before us, and few, so few, laborers, so that every one must do his part to gather in the sheaves, if we would receive the commendation of our Lord.

After due consideration we have decided that the following brethren had better labor as follows: J. C. Clapp in charge of the "field of labor" in Washington and Oregon, with Brn. John Davis and B. R. Turnbow as assistants. Thos. Daley in charge of Northern California and Nevada. D. L. Harris in Central California in charge, with Brn. J. H. Lawn and F. H. Lawn as assistants. H. L. Holt in charge of Southern California and Arizona, with Brn. C. Baly, Wm. Gibson, and R. R. Dana as assistants. Bro. Wm. Newton on his return to America will labor in Northern California and Nevada under the direction of Bro. Thos. Daley.

There are so few of us missionaries that we hope the branches will not expect us to labor with them, but we expect the branches will encourage their surplus ministry to labor in the vicinity of their branches, and thus aid in spreading the work. Yet we expect the brethren of the missionary force to use wisdom and help the work where and when needed most; with an eye single to the glory of God in building up his kingdom wisely and well. The work is opening up so fast, and increasing so rapidly, that we feel burdened with the weight of the work which lies before us this year, but are not discouraged, because we know that God will aid every willing worker in this his glorious work, and he will most assuredly give strength and wisdom to his servants while they are toiling prayerfully and humbly to maintain his cause. The Lord is in the work, and well knows our cares, toils, troubles, weakness, doubts, and all difficulties, and his own Son endured more than we can, and so knows just how to help us, and he is our Master. Then let us fear not, but be valiant soldiers and labor in brotherly love, kindness, meekness, and purity. So shall the Lord bless us, and our labors be crowned with many sheaves, and much rejoicing.

If the church in this mission should need work done which cannot be conveniently attended to by the branch or district officers for any reason, they will please apply to the missionary in charge of their field of labor, who will notify me, if it is impracticable for him to attend to such request, and I will at once do all I possibly can to comply. Our enemies are on the alert up and down this coast, and our missionaries are wide awake, a noble band of valiant workers, and we expect some strong work this year, and we will need to put on the whole armor of God, our loins girt about with truth, and have on the breastplate of righteousness, and the shield of faith, and lay aside all evil speaking and jealousy, and keep the "sword of the Spirit" bright; then we will run and not be weary. My address is, 3010 Sixteenth St., San Francisco, California.

In bonds, your brother and collaborer in the Lord,

J. F. BURTON.

REUNION NOTICE.

At a meeting of the reunion committee and Liberty branch, Bro. T. J. Beatty president, J. L. Goodrich secretary, the following business was transacted: J. L. Goodrich, Emmitt Barton, David Dull, and Jeff Martin were added to the committee. By motion which prevailed our reunion is set to commence on Thursday, August 29, 1895, at Limerick, Ohio, and continue over two Sundays. A motion to secure the district tent also prevailed. Resolved that all branches or individuals who expect to attend the reunion and to provide themselves with tents, etc., report the same to the secretary, J. L. Goodrich, Byer, Ohio. Also those who expect to attend and be provided for, do not fail to report to secretary by the 1st of August, that suitable arrangements may be made, as we expect a large attendance. Brn. T. J. Beatty, James Moler, and David Dull were appointed to select a suitable site for the pitching of the tent. The following motion prevailed: That it is the desire of this district that a special effort be made to have the presence of Joseph Smith at this reunion, and that he accept this notice as a special invitation from this committee, and branch, and district, and that Bro. James Moler personally invite his attendance. A special invitation to all the ministry and membership of other districts, who can attend this reunion is hereby given. The following brethren have consented to be at the railroad stations at Byer and at Jackson, on Thursday, with teams, and all coming must let the secretary or some of the committee know by the 20th of August and whether they will come to Jackson or Byer, so we can divide the teams accordingly: Jefferson Martin, Jackson, Ohio, Sherman Bierly, Jackson, Ohio, Emmitt Barton, A. B. Erwin, Leach, Ohio; James Moler, Limerick, Ohio; T. J. Beatty, Limerick, Ohio; J. L. Goodrich, secretary, Byer, Ohio. Voted that this meeting recommend and request the young people and others to meet together to practice vocal and instrumental music, with a special view to the reunion, and that other branches as well as Liberty branch, are included in this request. Saturday, the 31st of August, will be used for conference purposes instead of the date selected at last conference. Adjourned to meet as a committee on August 24, 1895.

BORN.

TALLMADGE.—Harry Vernon and Eathal Lillian, children of George and Edwina Tallmadge, were born February 17, 1892, and October 15, 1893. Blessed at Manawa, Wisconsin, January 5, 1895, by W. S. Montgomery.

HOUGAS.—Ward Alma, son of Bro. T. A. and Sr. Emma Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, was born March 11, 1895. Blessed April 28, 1895, by Elders D. Hougas and Amazon Badham.

MARRIED.

MINIER—CAMERON.—At the residence of R. Warnock, Farmington, Iowa, May 16, 1895, Mr. Fred S. Minier, of White, South Dakota, and Sr. Ida M. Cameron, of Farmington, Iowa, R. Warnock officiating. Mr. Minier is a young man of excellent address; he gives evidence of a pure life and good character. The bride is an exceptionally good young woman; only words of commendation can be said of her. Their future home will be in South Dakota.

DIED.

DOUGHERTY.—Sr. Love Zila Dougherty, of Kansas City, Missouri, departed this life December 23, 1894. Sr. Dougherty was born August 22, 1853, at West Union, Iowa. Married Mr. Frank Dougherty September 19, 1878, who, with one son, survives her. She alone of her family accepted the latter-day work, being baptized July 11, 1894, at Independence, Missouri, by George E. Harrington. She was a great sufferer, but with firm faith in her God she continued to trust him, hoping for the blessing of health which it pleased our heavenly Father to not give. Yet he was not forgetful of her, as she often testified. She seemed happiest when the beautiful songs of Zion were sung and prayers were offered, which she often requested. May it please God to direct the loved ones left behind to the fold that she entered, that in the future home of the redeemed they together may enjoy the felicities of a blissful eternity. Funeral discourse was delivered by Elder Joseph Luff.

BAKER.—At her home in Fontanelle, Iowa, May 7, 1895, Sr. Olive Baker. She was born in Greenwood county, Kansas, April 14, 1875. Baptized November 14, 1892, by Elder S.

Butler. She was a true child of God. Patient in her afflictions, she had full faith in the ordinance, and was blessed through it many times. She was beloved by all who knew her. The funeral was on the 9th; sermon by Elder Butler. The church was filled to overflowing and many could not gain entrance. The high school paid a loving tribute to her memory, each one dropping flowers into her grave. Father, mother, and three loving sisters mourn. We sorrow not as those without hope.

OLIVE.

A tenant soul,
That one day 'scaped its earthly throngs
Far soared above May's blooms and songs,
And, spirit-guided, floated on To paradise.

A bitter cup
Was pressed to lips that vainly prayed
That flight of soul be longer stayed.
Oh cup, that passed not One betrayed!
Gethsemane!

The same dear Hand
That gave the dregs both here and there,
Prepares such cup with tenderest care,
Knowing these draughts doth make more fair—
From bittersweet.

A loving Voice
Reverberates through being deep,
Bidding, Be strong, the germs now weak,
Pleading, the God-called child to meet.
O Voice! I list.

EMILY ALDEN.

FONTANELLE, IOWA.

KENNEDY.—Cecile Grace, daughter of Bro. W. F. and Sr. Emma B. Kennedy, of Independence, Missouri, May 9, 1895. Cecile was born June 3, 1894, at Lamoni, Iowa, and blessed October 15, by Brn. R. May and J. A. Robinson, at Independence, Missouri. Her loss is greatly felt by her parents, being the third loss to them. Funeral services in charge of Bro. Joseph Luff.

IN MEMORY OF CECILE GRACE KENNEDY.

'Twas with many a loving smile that they watched her all the while,
It was never deemed a trial her to cheer;
Naught could be like that denial of Cecile dear.
Castles built in father's mind; mother's love no chain could bind.

'Twas on these hopes they reclined without a fear—
That she for earth had been designed, sweet Cecile dear.
But for the best, God surely knows, at his command sweet Cecile goes

Where infants find their sweet repose, a heavenly sphere,
God took her from these earthly woes, sweet Cecile dear.
She'll that sweet band of angels swell, where glory that no tongue can tell,

Where Christ is King and Lord as well, no death to fear,
Where God, and Christ, and angels dwell, sweet Cecile dear.

A little harp with strings of gold, infinite joy that can't be told,

Harp strings touched by young and old, each soul to cheer;—

O that we were within the fold with Cecile dear.

DAVID J. KENNEDY.

PARRY.—At Lucas, Iowa, May 9, 1895, after many years of sore affliction and helplessness, Sr. Margaret Parry, at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis. She was the mother of eight children. Her husband and three of them have preceded her to the spirit land. She was 67 years of age and born near Merthyr Tidvil, South Wales. United with the church in the year 1869 at St. David's, Illinois. At the time of her death she held her membership in the branch at Keb, Iowa. She was afflicted with rheumatism for 20 years so that she was very feeble for the greater portion of that time. She was a very noble-hearted woman. Peaceful and patient, she had an unwavering faith in the gospel the Son of God as restored in these last days. Funeral services were held at the house on the afternoon of the 10th, Elder Evan B. Morgan doing the preaching from 1 Corinthians 15. The body was taken on the cars early on the morning of 11th and interred at Flagler's, Iowa, the same day.

WILLIAMS.—At Atchison, Kansas, May 7, 1895, Addie, daughter of Bro. Will and Sr. Nellie Williams, aged 4 years, 11 months, and 7 days. The body was taken to Netawaka, Kansas, for burial, where Bro. J. T. Davis preached the funeral sermon in the Saints' church. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of Saints and friends.

"Thus the little ones are going,

When with summer, earth is dressed.

In their cold hands holding roses,

Folded to each silent breast.

Snowy brows—no care shall shade them;

Bright eyes—tears shall never dim;

Rosy lips—no time shall fade them;

Jesus calls them unto him."

THOMPSON.—At his home near Garden Grove, California, March 31, 1895, Bro. Howard L. Thompson, aged 34 years and 9 months. Bro. Thompson united with the church some twelve years ago, and by his uprightness and integrity, as well as by his kind and friendly disposition, had won the love and esteem of all who knew him, and by his Christian walk and life made many friends for the cause. He bore his illness, though suffering acutely at times, with much patience, and at last peacefully fell asleep ready to meet there the Master he had striven so peacefully to serve here. Funeral services by Elders Baly and Pickering.

GOUGH.—At North Platte, Nebraska, May 16, 1895, John W. Gough. He was born at Nebraska City, February 2, 1870. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder R. J. Anthony, assisted by Elder S. D. Payne. A large audience listened to the preacher. Deceased was a grandson of Sr. Graffit, formerly of Nebraska City. I spent the last two days of his life with him in prayer and conversing upon the life and hope beyond. Although he had not obeyed the gospel yet the Lord wondrously blessed him, giving assurance that all would be well. A short time before he passed away he called each one to him and bade them good-bye, admonishing some to be good. His face fairly beamed with light. He passed away with a smile on his face. It was the grandest sight I ever beheld. R. J. A.

MIZELL.—At Escatawpa, Mississippi, February 17, 1895, Sr. Ella Young Mizell. She was born in Jackson county, Mississippi, March 4, 1875; baptized by Elder F. P. Scarcliff August 7, 1887. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Buried near the Saints' chapel, Three Rivers. The mound that rises above her remains will oft remind the loved ones of the dear one gone on before, and silently, yet with plaintive voice, call on them to so live that they may meet again.

STUBBART.—At Octavia, Nebraska, April 24, 1895, Dollie Anna, infant child of Bro. James M. Stubbart and wife, aged 24 days. Funeral at the Baptist church, April 25, 1895, conducted by Elder James Huff.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

By Lucy Smith. This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographic sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr. Smith is given with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

HIS PROPHETIC MISSION VINDICATED AND THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF MORMON DEFENDED AND MAINTAINED.

New and Revised Edition. This is a reply of Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Advent Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, and a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The author has gathered excellent matter from many sources and compiled in compact form much that is of interest and value to students interested in the Book of Mormon, the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and the like. 200 pages.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD.

Is a book of 240 pages, written by Elder Samuel F. Walker. The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the Universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The later chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the Western Continent.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, OR WEEKLY REST DAY.

By Elder Columbus Scott. This is a work of 147 pages, divided into fifteen chapters, in which the "Sabbath" under the Mosaic Law, and "The Lord's Day," "First Day of the Week" or "Christian Sabbath" under the Gospel Dispensation are fully treated from scriptural and historical standpoints. The work is concise and able, and clearly refutes the arguments of Seventh-day Sabbatarians, establishing the first of the week as "The Lord's Day." An added supplemental chapter by Elder W. W. Blair is included.

INFLUENCES OF CHRISTIANITY OVER HINDUISM.

THOSE who complain that there is not enough evidence of the missionaries' presence in India will find themselves sharply taken to task by the Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost. In a paper published in The Friend of India, Calcutta, he strongly denies that the power and progress of Christianity may be judged by the comparatively few native Christians whom one meets in India. Nor is it possible to arrive at a just comprehension of the progress of Christianity by a study of missionary reports and census returns. The evidences of Christian influence lie much deeper. Dr. Pentecost thinks there is scarcely an institution, a caste, a belief, or a social custom in India that Christianity has not affected. He says:—

"One hundred years ago Hinduism was solid; there were, practically, no schisms in its vast body. The Brahman schools were crowded, the temples flourished, the Brahmans reigned as the supreme spiritual lords of the people. Widows were burned, religious suicide encouraged and practiced, child-murder was common, and the rites of Juggernaut were in full force. Self-torture was inflicted in the name of the gods, under whose protection the thugs practiced their profession and the thieves were recognized as a caste. Prostitution was an honorable profession; a woman giving herself to that trade no more lost her social position than a European woman who practices medicine. It may be said that these things were put down by British rule, but the British Government (in no sense a Christian one) has acted in obedience to the Christian conscience of both Europe and America."

Another evidence adduced by Dr. Pentecost is the gradual but certain waning of caste restriction. The men of the highest caste, the Brahmans, were worshipped like gods formerly. All that has changed.

"The caste restrictions of India to-day are no more what they were than the relation of the English aristocracy is the same to the commons to-day as it was in the days of Norman supremacy. Fifty years ago the gates of cities and towns were closed at five in the evening and not opened again till nine the next morning, and the low-caste people excluded, lest the shadow of some low caste man fall upon some passing Brahman, and so defile him. To-day the boys of the very lowest castes and the sons of the Brahman sit together in the same schoolroom, and separate railways carriages need no longer be provided for the different castes. Men no longer cast themselves upon the ground to worship Brahmans, a Brahman has to work for his living the same as other people, and they have to compete with boys of the lowest castes. It is true that caste is still the chief obstacle to Christianity, but it is to-day fighting for life in the very keep of its castle. I do not believe it will last another twenty-five years."

Mr. Pentecost also claims that the great mass of educated Hindus do not any longer pretend to defend idolatry, except so far as to say that women and the ignorant people must have some sensuous object of worship, because they cannot understand anything else. But the educated Hindu will not confess that he worships an idol.

"He will tell you in justification of his presence in the temple, and his participation in the idol ceremonials, that the great idols are but symbols to help the imagination in grasping the idea of God. As for the rites, I have failed to find any intelligent explanation of them. The common answer of the priest in the temple is 'custom.' Constant preaching of the gospel and the penetration of Christian truth has made the average educated Hindu ashamed of his religion."

The writer then turns to the outward aspect of Hinduism, and points out that it is no longer solid. The Hindus are surely, though slowly, dividing into sects.

"Not to speak of the wide spread of skepticism, there are now several great and growing cleavages in the solid system of Hinduism, the result of Christian influence. I do not lament the wide spread of infidelity among them, for no faith is better than a false faith. . . . There is also the prevalence of Theism. Many declare their belief in idolatry, they lament the ignorance and superstition of the people, but for themselves they are never tired of declaring that they believe in one God who is above all. He is, in fact, none other than the God of the Christian; I may say also of the Mohammedan. That Mohammedanism introduced the truth concerning the being of the one only true God there can be no doubt; that this conception has been heightened and purified by the teaching of Christianity is more than equally true."

The writer declares that, to him, the evidences of Christian influence are so many and so indisputable that he is unable to see why Christians can feel discouraged. He concludes his remarks as follows:—

"The habit of consulting statistical tables in our missionary reports, and forgetting all else, has blinded us, narrowed us, and kept us from seeing the truth. The cry 'Show us converts' is a most misleading one, and has misled many good missionaries. It will, no doubt, be a matter of surprise to many for me to say that the burning question is not 'How shall we multiply converts,' but rather 'How shall we overtake with Christian training and instruction those who are pouring in upon us faster than we have the teachers by whom to take care of them?" God is delivering into our hands just as many converts as we are able to take care of. In all India there are not as many missionaries as there are ministers of the gospel in New York, and yet the number of converts yearly in India will be from five to ten times as great as the number of conversions in New York. The harvest is ripening and in many places rotting on the ground for the lack of reapers and harvesters."—Literary Digest.

PLENTY OF SOUND SLEEP A GOOD THING.

VARIOUS remnants of the old Puritanic way of thinking and doing still survive among us, and notable among them is the heroic method of dealing with children, and of trying to make their lives conform to the standard which in its day eliminated all but the soundest and strongest from any sort of life. This is seen, as often as in any other form, in the way the mother will have all her children out of bed at a given early hour, regardless of eyes still full of sleep, of little limbs not yet quite over their weariness, of the faint answers and long lingerings after a second call, either because she likes to have her family breakfast together, or wants to make one piece of work of it, or has a notion that early rising is good for the health. Each of these reasons is a good reason. Certainly it is pleasant, conducive to good cheer and family life, to have all the household breakfast at once; and quite certainly it adds to the heaviness of the housework very materially if there are stragglers at the morning meal, and one breakfast has to be served after another, while of course early to bed and early to rise is a saying not without truth in relation to making one healthy, wealthy, and wise.

But there are always the circumstances which alter cases. The stout and hearty child who went to sleep with the birds can afford to get up with the birds; his body, his brain, his nerves, have had all the rest they need in the sweet hours of slumber, and if he does not respond to the call he is possibly a sluggard whose fault must be amended.

But the mother will do well to make sure of the fact that he has in reality had all the sleep he needs before she wakes him with an imperative summons. If he is not a stout and healthy child it is not certain that he has slept well, for both restless nerves and indigestion have a part to play in the night, if there is no other more patent trouble. And if he is an excitable child, precocious or studious, then, the hours of sleep being the only ones in which the brain repairs its loss and hurt, it is a matter of vital moment that those hours should have their full number. An old physician of long practice and great wisdom used to say that a slight ailment often did good if it obliged the patient to go to bed a few days, as he gained thereby the rest of the bed for the whole body, which was often of essential benefit. And of quite as much benefit is this same rest—the abandon, the prostrate position, the lifting and holding of every portion of the frame by the bed—to the growing form and tired muscles of the romping child, who, with his natural impatience for daylight and its new pleasures, is really unlikely to take any too much of it.—Harper's Bazaar.

CHRISTIAN LITERARY FINDS IN ABYSSINIA.

ACCORDING to the Centralblatt für Bibliographie, early Christian literature is again to be enriched from one of the many Eastern sources which have been made accessible during recent years. The oldest Christian people in existence that have retained their national independence are the Abyssinians, and to them Christian scholarship has been indebted not only for a valuable and ancient version of the Bible, but also for such works as the Book of Enoch, the Book of Jubilees, the Ascension of Isaiah, and similar specimens of earliest Christian or Judæo-Christian literature, which had been lost to the rest of Christianity. Now new treasures are to be brought from this hermit nation of Eastern Africa. The present king, Menelik II., has recently undertaken an expedition south of Shoa to the islands of the Znai Sea, which are some of the oldest civilized spots in Abyssinia, and has brought from them a large collection of old manuscripts, which he proposes to put into the library of his new capital, Addis Abeba. Tradition says that during the Mohammedan inroads into Abyssinia in the sixteenth century, the libraries of the Abyssinian kings were transferred to these islands, especially on the island Debra Simon, or Mount Sinai. The fact that a large collection of very old and valuable literary finds were discovered there shows that these traditions are not without foundation. As Ethiopic or Abyssinian literature is purely and entirely of a Biblical and theological character, and has been especially rich in works of a very early era, it is more than probable that valuable works will be restored to the church. A preliminary examination has also led to this belief.—Translated and condensed for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

AMERICAN PLACE NAMES.

Kearsarge, the name of a Maine mountain, signifies "The Pine Mountain."

The Indians called the French Broad River Tockyeste, the "Little Roarer."

Hell Gate was called by the Indians Monahntonuk, "Place of Bad Water."

The Saulte Ste. Marie was so named to distinguish it from many other saultes or leaps. The Indian name was Pawateey, "Water Falling Over Rocks."

The Brandywine took its name from a Dutch brandy distillery on its banks in the early days. The Dutch name for brandy is brand-wijn, or burn wine.

The Columbia River was named after the Boston ship, Columbia, by her captain, Robert Gray, in 1788. The Spaniards called the stream Rio de St. Roque.

The Pearl River, in Mississippi, is named from a translation of the Indian name Tal-lachatchie, meaning the "River of Pearls." It is said that pearl oysters were formerly found in its waters.

THE SURVIVING SOLDIERS.

THE John R. Andrews Post of the G. A. R. held their memorial Sunday service in the Saints' church at Lamoni at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of May 26.

The post flag was draped against the wall at the back of the pulpit, and was supported by numbers of small flags, with a ten-foot copy of "Old Glory," laid over the railing at each side of the speaker's desk; the stand itself being decorated with flags and flowers.

At a little before the hour the post and its soldier guests, some thirty strong, marched in and were seated in the seats directly in front of the stand. The choir sang a voluntary, and then the services began with the selection, "Unknown," by Miss Gaylord, one of the soprano singers, supported by the choir in the chorus. The prayer was offered by Bishop E. L. Kelley, a feeling presentation of thanks for the blessings of freedom and its present enjoyment, and a fervent appeal for future care, direction, and divine guardianship for the people, State, and Nation. "Dropping from the ranks," was then sung. The sermon was by Pres. Joseph Smith, from the text:—

For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself for the battle?—1 Cor. 14: 8.

The house was full to overflowing, the day being lovely, and the sermon was listened to with marked attention. After the sermon the selection, "Soldier boys in blue" was sung; the benediction spoken by Pres. Alexander H. Smith, and the great audience passed out to the consideration of how rapidly the passing of time was depleting the ranks of those surviving of the vast armies who fought the latest battles in vindication of the principles of a "government of the people, for the people, by the people," and won a victory that will stand the test of time.

LOCAL WORKERS.

THE region round about Lamoni is being pretty thoroughly canvassed by the ministry located, or living at and near that place. Every Saturday and Sunday the brethren are off from five to twenty-five or more miles, to occupy the schoolhouses and little churches wherever an opening occurs, or can be made.

Bro. William Anderson, president of the district, leads out, and Brn. Snively (Joseph and Hugh), Robert Elvin, Thomas Bell, Marcus Shaw, John Shippy, J. A. Gunsolley, John D. Bennett, W. I. Murray, H. A. Stebbins, Frank Weld, Frank Cochran, A. M. Chase, and others are filling appointments in almost every direction.

On Sunday, May 19, Bro. Thomas Bell, filled three appointments at as many different places, finishing at Andover at night, six miles from home. He says that he really does not know where to stop within the limit of his "power to do."

In most of the places occupied by these local brethren there are good audiences, and more or less interest to hear the word preached.

A JUST TRIBUTE.

THE church was told in August, 1831, that he that kept the laws of God should keep also the laws of the land:—

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.

Joseph Smith has been charged with gross violation of the law of the land; and we have been censured for disbelieving the charge. We give below a refutation of the charge by a man through whose instrumentality, in a sense, Joseph Smith has been evil spoken of:—

Joseph Smith was not killed because he was deserving of it, or because he was a wicked man; but because he was a virtuous man. No law or constitutional right did he ever violate. He was innocent and virtuous. He kept the law of his country and lived above it. He was pure, just, and holy as to the keeping of the law.—Pres. Brigham Young, in Millennial Star, volume 14, page 675.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

THERE is still another phase of the spiritual gifts subject; one upon which we fancy there has been either a lack of understanding, or a misunderstanding as to its teaching, or the effect, or possibly both.

In the same chapter where the strong evidence in favor of the gifts is found, the apostle writing in the confident view of a man acquainted with the subject he was treating, states: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, . . . then helps, governments," and following the subject of the gifts directly, "yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue."—1 Cor. 14: 19. (For speaking in a like manner some have of late been supposed to be in opposition, or unbelieving, or doubtful in regard to the manifestation of the gifts.)

It is clear to every spiritual-minded man that for some purpose known to himself, God has put certain principles at work among men; and that some of the most effective are those connected with the introduction and perpetuity of the gospel plan of redemption and salvation. And it sometimes occurs that in the word or words of God, as they are found in the three books, there are found statements from which a purpose may be discerned. Of this sort is Paul's,

But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.—1 Cor. 12: 18.

Just why it may have pleased God to set "helps and governments" in the church, we may not discover; but if it pleased him, that ought to be sufficient. However, reading from Ephesians 4: 12, we gather that one object to be served by the gifts made to the church, was the "perfecting of the saints, the work of the ministry, the edifying of the body of Christ." The body of Christ is the church. In this work for the church, the gift of "helps and governments" must have its place; and it is only reasonable to believe that if the end to be reached for the church could have been attained by the other gifts alone, then there would have been no propriety in setting these in the church. What may be included in these terms, "helps, governments"?

The work of the apostles seems to be quite well understood, so with the work of prophets, pastors, evangelists, and teachers; these all being men, and the offices named indicative of calling and authority; but prophecy, tongues, discerning of spirits, interpretation, are attributes or qualifications resulting from the presence of the Spirit, and are for the benefit of those through whom the manifestations are made; but helps and governments must be of the nature of the things of which Paul seems to speak as the things about which he had an understanding. Whatever is expedient and necessary for the wellbeing of the church, or for its advancement, not clearly definable under the head of church organization proper, or derivable from the duty of apostle, prophet, pastor, teacher, etc., will come under the head of helps and governments. Of these are the various societies that are, or may be instituted in the church, for work not specifically under the tutelage or direction of the priesthood authorities. In these associations the talents of many may be utilized, and no just exception be made on account of age or sex. And, we are strong enough in faith to hold that should anything be originated by any in the church, which after trial would be found unproductive of good, the strong devotion to truth, the better sense of right among those engaged in it, would direct its abandonment, and it would be done. Sunday schools, Daughters of Zion, mite societies, Religio-Literaries, choral societies, singing classes, orchestras, mutual improvement societies, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants classes, all pursuing the same object, "the perfecting of the saints, the edifying of the body of Christ," the church; and all trending toward that better condition in which the membership should no longer be "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine," are not only permissible but commendable under the word of God, and by virtue of his "gift" to the church.

Branch organizations, district conference, local and general meetings for prayer, for business, to teach each other the law and doctrine of the church, the books of the church, the history of the church, for financial themes connected with the church, the study of civil and ecclesiastical government, their principles and their application, are all a part and parcel of the same wondrous prescience which gave the church apostles, prophets, pastors, "helps, governments," and all others of the gifts.

This is strongly supported by the revelation of God to the church in our own time:—

Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves.—D. C. 58: 6.

Let all willing hearts take courage, for none, however humble, is disregarded in the provisions of the gospel economy for those who will work.

HALF A CENTURY.

ON May 23, 1845, a beautiful day, a young man and woman made covenant in marriage; and seven years later settled in Decatur county, Iowa, where they remained, planted their hearthstone, and erected their roof-tree for life.

Fifty years from that date, their home was invaded by some of their neighbors and friends to congratulate them on their long continued companionship. A number from Lamoni, including the editor, drove to Pleasanton, where, at this half-century home they found Bro. Alfred W. and Sr. Lydia Moffet, with their children, sons and sons-in-law, and grandchildren, and some of their immediate neighbors of Pleasanton gathered as at a festal party, to give the hand of cheer and hearty good fellowship to their citizen, comrade, and companion on the completion of their half hundred years of married life.

This fifty years of Bro. Moffet's life covers one of the most eventful periods in the history of the church, of which he and his wife have long been faithful and esteemed members. From 1845 to 1890, the grossest departure from the faith of the new covenant dispensation had sway. Bro. Moffet was in the midst of the hosts fleeing westward at the dispersion from Nauvoo, and stopping by the wayside with Brn. Robinson, Morey, Booth, Marble, Little, and many others, concluded to wait until the Lord remembered Zion; and when the Lord did so remember Zion, he with his wife became again active, faithful, devoted, and intelligent adherents and advocates of the faith once delivered to the Saints; and this too, when it required courage of no mean character to stand steadfast for that faith. But, having set his face Zionward, "Forward," was his watchword, and he could not go back; as he once remarked to the editor, "If I leave the church where shall I go? I have nothing left. The church is to me all, or nothing."

The unwavering fidelity of these aged companions, the one seventy-one, the other just near seventy, is worthy of emulation, and those who witnessed the occasion of which we write, will not fail to appreciate the lesson taught them that day; the proper application of the rule of life laid down by the Creator, at the institution of marriage; and faithfully emphasized by the Savior, "what God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

Forty-seven, of the family and their guests, graced the board and partook together of the cheer provided, and after a pleasant visit bade Bro. and Sr. Moffet a happy continuation of the life so far happily spent together, and left them with a reminder of the occasion that they will not forget.

GOSPEL TENT AND MISSION HYMNS. ELSEWHERE will be found an advertisement of "Gospel Tent and Mission Hymns"—a collection of about twenty-four hymns selected from the Saints' Harp, printed in eight page pamphlet form, with Epitome of Faith on the back.

The pamphlets are not bound, but simply folded, in order to place them in the hands of tent workers at a very low price. For further description and prices, see advertisement.

"OUR CREED—ALL TRUTH,"

THERE are truths that are wholesome and truths that are unwholesome. Do unwholesome truths form any part of our creed? If so, shall we amend the creed?

It is a truth that the "adversary of souls" seeks to destroy the faith of the Saints in Christ and in each other; and it is an unwholesome truth that such interference by the adversary in our affairs, is not often in the line of our choice of trial, or experience; and while our usefulness depends largely upon our development in spiritual things, this development is aided or restricted by the sort of experiences through which we pass, and the manner in which we bear, or are exercised by them.

It is the duty of the Saint to assimilate those truths which will enhance his usefulness, and to refuse to be affected by unwholesome truths. The province of the Spirit is to aid the Saint to a proper recognition of truths, to appreciate the wholesome, to know and to keep free from the unwholesome truths.

"DROPPING FROM THE RANKS."

THE following will serve to show the rapid rate at which the ranks of the survivors of the Union armies are being depleted. From an exchange we glean:—

But few people have a correct idea of the number of deaths and survivors of the Union army. The following figures are approximately correct: The total number of Union soldiers was 2,128,948; the number of deaths from wounds was 43,021, and from disease 224,596. This leaves only 1,748,292 mustered out at the close of service. Eighteen months ago the number of soldiers living was stated as being 1,209,968. Of these it is calculated that no more than one half are now living.

BRO. JACOB HEGER sends us this clipping from the Ukiyah, California, Press of March 29:—

Wednesday evening Elder Daley, a Latter Day Saint, closed a three weeks' series of meetings which he has been holding in Centerville. He is a bright man and a very interesting speaker. He closely adheres to that which he believes to be right and boldly denounces that which he believes to be wrong, regardless of public opinion. In his discourse upon spiritualism Sunday morning he declared that spiritualism is not mythical as many conclude, but has a real existence and is an evil power directly exercised by Satan and his dusky imps. He does not hesitate to utilize the whole force of his eloquence in expressing his disapproval of Catholicism. He believes that there are different degrees of excellency in heaven and that every one is rewarded by a station there corresponding to the merits of his work in this world. His sermon last Sunday evening on the subject of "eternal judgment" set forth this doctrine. In his judgment death-bed conversions are of no avail. On Monday night the subject of his talk was "The eleventh hour." He has had two converts, Misses Lulu and Rose Sides, who will be baptized by immersion Wednesday next.

THE Blandinsville, Illinois, Gazette, for May 16, notices the debate between Elder McGee, and our brother, T. W. Williams, of Council Bluffs:—

The people of this vicinity are being treated to a battle of intellectual giants. The McGee-Williams debate which is now going on is a case of diamond cut diamond, Greek has met Greek. The past three nights have been spent in discussing the following proposition. Elder Samuel McGee to affirm first question as follows: Is the church of which, I, Samuel McGee, am a member of, the Church of Christ, and identical in faith, organization, teaching ordinances, worship, and practice with the Church of Christ as was left perfected by the apostles?" On this question the combatants are about equally pitted, and while Elder McGee affirms his side of the question ably, displaying ability and a brain power superior to most men of our day, yet on the other hand we find one who negates with an ability that would do credit to one much older in years. To-night Elder Williams affirms on the proposition: "Is the obedient Christian of the present time entitled to the operation of the Holy Spirit the same as in the apostolic age." And we expect to hear the speakers advance argument on each side that would do credit to a Webster, a Douglas, or a Spurgeon. Our people will, perhaps, not have their minds greatly changed by this debate; but at the same time many of them will be led to investigate the Scriptures. And in them ye have the truth, for "thy word is truth." There is one pleasing feature about this debate and that is that the contestants avoid personalities and stick to the argument of the question instead of indulging in unpleasantries.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. F. P. SCARCLIFF, writing from Scranton, Mississippi, May 19:—

Two weeks ago, during my services at Three Rivers branch, several signified their desire to unite with the church, among them my little eleven year old daughter; and to-day was appointed for the baptism; and in the waters of a bay leading into the Gulf of Mexico, in the presence of two or three hundred people, we buried our brave little darling in the likeness of the Savior's death. Some of the best families in the towns of Pascagoula and Scranton were present, and under a special blessing of the Lord, I was able to present the word to many who had never heard it before. The publication of recent articles in the county paper provided by me, and the friendship and good will of some people of influence, though not of our faith, some of the best of them not identified with any religious organization, is having a tendency to remove a great deal of prejudice.

Bro. M. C. Fisher, Boston, Massachusetts, May 22:—

Work prospering nicely, especially among our young people. Bro. F. M. Sheehy spoke for us Sunday in our new hall.

Bro. Henry Kemp writing from Bartlett, Iowa, May 25:—

I baptized one here Wednesday last, making four here this spring in all; and one on Plum Creek. Prospects fair for the future. I have held twenty-seven meetings since returning to my field, April 25. Have been preaching nearly every night to good, attentive audiences. Have preached in Hamburg, Mill Creek, Shenandoah, Glenwood, Egypt, and Bartlett.

Bro. Hiram L. Holt from Long Beach, California, May 25:—

Came here last week and commenced preaching in our district tent. Have held eight meetings, some of which have been very well attended. Prejudice is quite strong against us and, what is worse, indifference everywhere abounds. Men care but little for God or his ways, and are willing to go with the tide; for they don't really believe there is much in the whole affair. Some take advantage of this and lead them at will. I am alone at present, and don't relish running a tent with such a very small force. Bro. Baly would have been with me but is detained by sickness in his family.

Bro. W. W. Blair was at Council Bluffs on May 27. He attended the conference of the Pottawattamie district, at Hazel Dell, the 25th and 26th, and would hold services at Crescent City the 28th and 29th, and be at either Omaha, Nebraska, or Woodbine, Iowa, June 1 and 2; and at Atchison, Kansas, to assist in dedicating a chapel there June 8 or 9. Of the work he writes:—

My reception thus far has been most cordial and encouraging by all the people, in the church and out. This is notably true of the children of old-time Saints not yet in the church.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. R. J. ANTHONY was at North Platte, Nebraska, May 20, at the home of Bro. J. C. Richards, who was very sick, being called there because of such sickness. He had preached at Cottonwood, where a good interest seemed to prevail, and Bro. Payne was following the effort up, Bro. Anthony being called away, as stated.

Bro. E. B. Morgan, appointed to labor in the Nodaway district, wrote from Bedison, Missouri, the 24th inst. Farmers were busy, hence the brethren would labor for the present in small towns and localities where the most good could be done.

Twenty-one baptisms at Lamoni during the month of May is fair progress.

There is a movement on foot to connect Salt Lake City, Utah, with Los Angeles, California, direct by rail. Mr. George Q. Cannon, and some others, business men of Utah, have visited St. Louis to confer with business men there, looking to the object named.

In the Octographic Review of May 14, published at Indianapolis, sent us by Bro. C. Scott, we find a lengthy extract from Our Hope, a Jewish monthly published at New York by "Christian Jews," in which one of the editors proceeds to inform modern Christians that the New Testament does not bear out the popular idea preached from so many pulpits that the world is to be converted and "brought to the Redeemer's feet" before Christ's second coming. The editor shows very clearly that the gospel was to be a witness to the world, not a conqueror of the world, in the present age. We note it as a matter of interest. Our Jewish-Christian friend has certainly read the word more understandingly than his "orthodox" Christian brethren, on the matter referred to.

Bro. R. R. Dana sends us a clipping from the Los Angeles, California, Times of May 20, which contains a lengthy account of a sermon preached by Bro. J. C. Clapp, in which the leading points of difference between the Reorganization and the Utah Church is set forth. Bro. Dana expects much good to result to the cause there from a proper understanding of our position. Brighamite missionaries had been working in that part of the State, hence this effort to correct misapprehension of the faith delivered to the Saints.

Bro. Peter Adamson, writing from Wilberton, Indian Territory, May 21, states that good work is being done at Standley, Indian Territory, by Bro. Ellis Short and his colaborers. Bro. A. J. Moore was present at a two days' meeting held there May 18 and 19, and which Bro. A. drove fifty miles to attend. He reports Brighamite elders at work in the Territory.

Brethren of the Reorganized Church are invited to visit him at Wilberton.

Bro. E. E. Williams extends an invitation to the ministry to visit him at Marceline, Linn county, Missouri. He is doing something for the cause and desires help.

Bro. C. M. Fulks, of Manchester, Texas, requests some of the elders in the vicinity of Clayton, Michigan, to call on Mr. Matthias L. Davis, a relative of his.

Bro. John Shippy has been doing local service in the Decatur district of late at New Buda. Interest is such that he will continue the effort.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths was to sail for Liverpool on the steamer Campania, on Saturday, June 1. The HERALD wishes him a prosperous voyage and success in his ministry.

Bro. A. H. Smith left Lamoni for Northern Minnesota May 29; Bro. C. H. Jones for St. Louis, June 1.

The dates on which subscriptions expire are given on the HERALD label with the name of the subscriber. Those in arrears on the subscription list or who owe on book accounts are asked to remit promptly. Address business letters to David Dancer, Lamoni, Iowa.

Elders in the mission fields, also branch and district presidents and Bishop's agents can obtain supplies of the Herald Office Descriptive Catalogue of Books, Tracts, and Sunday School Supplies, for judicious distribution. The catalogue will be found useful in getting the printed word before the people. Address the Business Manager for a supply. They can be used to advantage.

A Frenchman has invented a machine that will make forty-two cigarets a minute.

The Thames pours 40,000,000 cubic feet of water into the sea every hour.

New Hampshire cotton mills have a capital of over $50,000,000 and pay $15,000,000 annually in wages. Over 300,000 yards of cotton cloth are produced daily.

Capt. Pratt reports the Indian school at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in a flourishing condition, with 818 pupils, among whom fifty-four tribes are represented.

"Helping another may be the best possible method of helping ourselves. Selfishness will often prompt us to desire help from others; but it is not selfishness that impels us to give help to others. Therefore it is that we may be losers through the gratifying of our selfish desires, when we would be gainers through the exercise of our unselfish endeavors."

Across this sea I sail, and do not know
What hap awaits me on its farther side;
In these long days what dear hope may have died;
What sweet accustomed joy I must forego;
What new acquaintance make with unguessed woe,
(I, who with sorrow have been long allied)
Or what blessed gleam of joy yet undescried
Its tender light upon my way will throw.

Thus over Death's unsounded sea we sail,
Toward a far, unmapped, unpictured shore,
Unwitting what awaits us, bliss or bale,
Like the vast multitude that went before,
Scourged on by the inexorable gale
The everlasting mystery to explore.

TO THE DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

Where is the diadem that ought to sparkle on thy brow adorned with many gems?
I know thou hast believed on Me, and life through Me is thine;
But where are those radiant stars that in thy crown should shine?
Yonder thou seest a glorious throng, and stars on every brow;
For every soul they led to me they wear a jewel now!
And such thy bright reward had been if such had been the deed;
If thou had'st sought some wandering feet in paths of peace to lead.

My Dear Sisters:—For many years my heart has been stirred with a desire that just such an organization as the "Daughters of Zion" should have its birth in the church, and I hailed its advent with thankfulness and many hopes for its future good works; and my prayers shall not cease to rise in your behalf who are permitted to be workers in the great work of leading to higher attainments those of our own faith and to seek after those less fortunate. I believe God will bless the earnest workers of the Daughters of Zion. He has called us to "come up higher," and made many glorious promises to us as a church, and if our hearts are knit together in love and united in a holy purpose for the happiness and betterment of our fellow creatures, he will surely recognize our efforts and bless us as an organization for good. So let us put our faith in God, and our "shoulder to the wheel and pull all together," and we shall yet have a strong wall of social purity, that shall surround all homes of Saints; for if God is for us, who can be against us, or who would place a limit upon the work to be done?

Every man or woman who dares to stand fearlessly, frankly, firmly for the right when evil has its legions, is the true moral victor in this world; and in the world to come there is no doubt but they will be crowned with glory and honor.

But remember, if we take Christ for our pattern and follow in his footsteps, we shall often be found in the company of "publicans and sinners," in the haunts of vice and crime for the "hastening time" (D. C. sec. 86) is upon us, the time when the Master will send his faithful servants out into the highways and byways and compel guests to come into the marriage feast of his beloved Son; and the lame, the halt, the blind are the very ones for whom the blessed Son shed his precious blood, and many of them have never heard his name, excepting in profanity!

I realize deeply, the need of a missionary in every local branch of our society, a tender-hearted, sympathetic woman, who could meet the fallen and the outcast, like a kind and pitiful sister; such a one, as could point them to the cross of Christ.

If our salvation is so precious and so important, is not the salvation of those poor brothers and sisters we see around us of equal importance? Their personal character may not be like ours. Yet the same immortality dwells in them, the same capacity of growing into the image of God and enjoying the glories of eternity; consequently their souls are as precious as ours, and their salvation as important. Did not Jesus die for them as well as for us? are they not just as much the purchase of his blood and capable of being redeemed by his love as we are? It is a grander, a sublimer result to save a human soul, than to gain a whole world of earthly possessions. No wonder that the inspired writer said, that he that saves a soul is wise. It is the greatest wisdom, because it causes the greatest joy in the highest sphere of usefulness, and is the accomplishment of the greatest good. O let us choose this the greatest of all ambitions, of effort, of aspiration, and pursue it according to the teaching of the Bible, looking to God and not man for approval and encouragement!

I believe there are enough earnest, thoughtful girls in our church to work wonders in the temperance and social purity cause, if fully aroused to the necessity. Dear girls, will you help us? In the name of Christ we ask you. First of all, will you be so true to yourself, and to God, so pure in your inner and outer life that you shall have a right to ask that the young men with whom you associate, and especially those you marry, shall be the same? Pure, sweet girls, kept from the touch of evil through the years of their girlhood, give themselves with all this costly dower of womanhood into the keeping of men who in their associations have learned to undervalue all that belongs to them. And, there is only one way out of this which I can see; that is, for you—the young women—to require in association and marriage, purity for purity, honor for honor. There is no reason why the young man should not be as virtuous and pure as the young woman; and if the loss of your society and love is the price they must pay for their vices, they will forego them, for the price is too costly. The awful gulf of dishonor is close at your feet, and in it are fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, lovers, all going down the murky stream to darkness and eternal death, unless some loving hand is held out to pilot them to the true river of life. I ask you again: Girls, will you come and help us in our work, for your own sakes, for the sake of lifting up a higher standard of morality in the world where you move, for the sake of the unborn generations, for the sake of Him who suffered and died that sinners might be redeemed to God? Do not forget that we are working for a higher destiny than this earth, working for that no human eye hath seen, no mortal ear hath heard. What our mind in its noblest flights has not been able to conceive is in store for them that love God and keep his commandments.

But it is so pleasant to be in the society of the good and pure that there is danger that we indulge ourselves and gratify our selfish natures, "and sit at ease in Zion," instead of being about our Father's business. But it is worth our while to strive and sacrifice in this life if thereby we may do good; for if we are so blessed as to remain faithful to our covenant with God, we shall have a whole eternity of felicity and joy in which to associate with one another. There are many things that woman has gained by contests, and it has often been only by hard battles against the prejudices and oppositions of public opinion. Many privileges have been denied us, and some have been grudgingly given as not being ours by right, we being called woman were not considered capable of dealing with the great and grave things of life, especially the spiritual things. There is, however, one right that never has been questioned, one supreme privilege that no man has ever dared to contest, her right and unrivalled capacity, that commemorates to the world the greatest honor that God ever conferred upon a human being.

I have thought much upon this subject, and I saw as if in a vision the glory that God had placed upon woman; and the great, broad, beautiful fields where she can labor if she will, and I trembled as I gazed into the future lest faithlessness to such a great and holy trust may banish her forever from the presence of him who was nourished in the arms of the gentle Mary. Just think of it, sisters, Mary's little Son—to all appearance like any other helpless little newborn baby! Yet he grew to be the light of the world, the desire of all nations, and a joy forever to his mother. She shared in his joys and sorrows as we do with our little ones. Isn't her example enough to sanctify motherhood to us? It seems to me that the more a woman's heart develops the more her whole being and capacity grows and expands, it is made capable of bearing in meekness great and exquisite joys with thankfulness.

I beg of you, dear sisters, consider these truths as sacred before God, who created woman for a holy purpose. Do not thwart your heart and nature in their growth by false laws of soulless society. If you do, a change will take place in your nature, and you will become only an imitation of the high and divine ideal.

The woman that perverts her life is the most pitiable of all creatures, for she has wrested and misplaced a precious and holy gift; she never knew, or she has grown careless to the fact that in the beginning woman was the crowning work of God's creation. So it is especially desirable that girls should be early instructed to understand their holy capacity, holy responsibilities, that they may have knowledge; since their future life will associate them so nearly with the physical welfare of others; for their own present and future are attended with more danger from the deplorable effects of ignorance than any other evil.

Many a woman whose childhood was bright with promise, ended an after life of misery, because through a false delicacy she remained ignorant of her physical requirements.

Most of the suffering in the world comes directly from ignorance that is criminal because it is unnecessary.

With these lines that I learned in my girlhood I will close my letter for this time:—

"Better the house and company of pain,

Better distress;

Better the stones of strife—the bread with tears,

Humiliation, despair, and fears;

All, all, the heart suffers the soul knows,

Than with the bestial train to go

With base rejoicings, ignorant of woe."

Your sincere friend,

ELLA M. ROGERS.

SYNOPSIS OF READING, CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX, HINTS ON CHILD-TRAINING.

INFLUENCE OF THE HOME ATMOSPHERE.

In the world of nature, the atmosphere is essential to the existence of life. On the other hand, the atmosphere brings death to every living thing when poisonous elements predominate in it. There can be no life without a life-sustaining atmosphere.

The temperature and measure of movement of the atmosphere as well as its component elements affect the life that may be preserved within its influence. Without a due measure of oxygen the atmosphere is death giving. Oxygen and warmth may be as needed to preserve life and yet the swift moving air may destroy life. The gardener, for his plants, and the physician for his patients, know the value of right atmosphere. As in the natural world, so in the moral sphere; life and death are in the atmosphere.

It is a vital question concerning every home. Is the atmosphere of this home suited to the life and development of a child's best nature? It is to be deplored that there are homes where this question cannot be answered in the affirmative; for the atmosphere of a home is more effective than to all other training agencies employed there.

The conduct and bearing of the parents and of all whom they influence make the spirit or atmosphere of the home. We cannot see the air, but we can feel it and observe its effects. So with the atmosphere in a home; and the better it is, the more quietly does its influence work.

In one home you feel the balmy air of love and sympathy. All seems harmonious between parents and children. They live for one another, and a restful peace abides there. The tendency of the moral and social atmosphere in that home is to foster the best in the child-nature. It cannot but be easier for a child to be good and do well in such a home than in many another.

In another home the household air chills you from the first. You know that child-nature needs more warmth than is to be found there. Again, an excited and ever-driving household life withers with its heat the more delicate tendrils of young hearts in training there. Again, explosive storm-bursts of passion tear through the air and place the young of a home in peril.

It is the home atmosphere that gives the tendency of the home training. Parents ought to realize that they are responsible for the atmosphere of their home. They need to do more than to have a lofty ideal for their children and to strive to have their children come up to it. They themselves must come up to it. They must keep before the children examples which are lovely and good, and let them drink in of a pure atmosphere, full of the oxygen of love to God and love to man. The home atmosphere ought to be balmy and refreshing, gentle and peaceful, even in the ways of living, warm with expressions of family affection, but not hot with social activities.

Parents ought to guard the air of the home against unloving words or thoughts, unsympathetic manners or exciting ways, faultfindings or bursts of temper.

Parents may have gone on without a thought of their responsibility in this regard; but only as they take care to guard it, can the atmosphere in their home be such as their children need.

C. B. S.

Daughters of Zion:—Although it has not been my privilege to meet with you, I am interested in the cause. I believe the cause you advocate is a part of the plan of salvation, and without such teachings the church can never become pure. Truth has been perverted by the sins of men, and by this means the world became polluted and through the teaching of truth the world must become pure. The time will come when we shall be called to examine ourselves to see if we are in the faith.

I know whereof I speak. When I first came into the church many things were shown me concerning this. After conversing with some who did not understand it in the light the Daughters of Zion do, I was at home alone and I began to inquire of the Lord if I had taught anything wrong, and the Spirit came upon me, and I seemed to be in a large room standing before a large company of sisters; and O, if I could tell you the things that were shown me, and the language uttered. It was the end from the beginning—the work of the Daughters of Zion; not only the daughters but the sons of Zion; for as yet there were few who understood the meaning of the word overcome; and it was just as needful for one sex as the other to purify themselves. Many will oppose but it will triumph over all opposition. God will have a pure people, and this can never be under the present state of affairs.

Yes, God is ready to bless the Saints with health if we ever learn to keep his commands, even the Word of Wisdom. When the Saints become fully acquainted with these truths, when they are fully impressed upon their minds, there will be no disposition to disobey; for where truth is once set in the heart there is no pleasure in sin.

But this is not alone the daughters' work; the sons are needed as well, otherwise the daughter will not know how to make choice of a life-companion. This is the most important step in one's whole life. Nothing can affect your life so much, nothing so hinder your progress, nothing affect your offspring either for good or evil like this. No step that can be taken should be weighed with such deliberation. If your companion's view differs from yours, it hampers, binds, destroys the work you might do. When the fullness of the everlasting gospel is brought to our light, when we are able to comprehend, it shows us what ignorance we have been in, and we realize that it means something to be a Latter Day Saint, and we cry out, "God forgive our ignorance, our innocence, and enlighten our minds by the standard of truth."

How thankful we feel that the young of the church may profit by the experiences of the older ones, and not grow up in obscure darkness to go as chance permits; for when all things are in order the women and children will have no small part in this work.

"There's a work for me, and a work for you, Something for each of us now to do."

Let us work while the day lasts, whether on the mountain top or in some quiet corner.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, May 24.

Editors Herald:—The Magee-Williams debate closed the 18th, lasting six evenings; from six to eight hundred people in attendance. Brn. McKiernan and Lambert were with me, the former acting as moderator. We lost nothing and left the Saints and many new-made friends happy over results. The future will more clearly reveal success. Bro. Magee's dissatisfaction was clearly apparent. Amidst our rejoicing we render glory to God. By invitation I spoke Sunday evening in the M. E. church. Large church, crowded house, excellent attention.

Preached Monday evening at Burlington and was domiciled with Bro. and Sr. Wright till morn. Visited Ottumwa and Keb Saints Tuesday, speaking in their new church at night. Spent Wednesday with Lucas Saints, preaching in the evening. Attend Hazel Dell conference to-morrow. Will deliver memorial sermon at Harlan Sunday morning; on the program for Decoration Day speech at Little Sioux.

Bro. F. A. Smith delighted the Saints with an excellent gospel sermon on Sunday evening. Bro. D. K. Dodson creditably acquitted himself as morning speaker. Am well in mind, but worn in body.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

No. 6 Martin street,

PLYMOUTH, England, May 14.

Editors Herald:—We on this side of the Atlantic are feeling jubilant over the success of the great latter-day work in the land of Joseph, and trust it is but the dawn of a new era; and, so far as I know, we too, are striving for success under the same old gospel banner. There may be some spiritual inactivity, but the pressure of the times has a depressing effect upon many, and whatever may tend to discouragement if settling under that discouragement, our efforts are correspondingly neutralized; but I think we are doing the best we can. We are doing well. We ought to be fully persuaded we are really doing our best before saying to ourselves, Well done. For the well-being of self, self-government is highly essential, whether giving evidence of a proficiency or not. I seem to feel the necessity for it, that certainly is something toward it, for one must think before he acts.

That sermon in Herald for May 1, was to me at least, most effective in bringing one within the realm of selfdom; and was of greater worth than an eloquent essay on the density and distances of the stars. How saddening are the effects of lack of self-culture, or self-abnegation, which is sure to beget a misguided zeal! Nothing could be more injurious to a people claiming to be so qualified in spiritual matters as to teach others.

I, by God's grace, intend to pay heed to advice given by Bro. Clapp, in a late Herald, on care in ordination; and I suggest a consideration of the same to my collaborators. In being confronted with the blighting effects of hasty ordinations I have thought it is not always the one who commits the error that is confronted with the evil effects thereof. Others who had nothing to do with the indiscreet act are often bothered and perplexed therewith, proving a hindrance to legitimate work, which otherwise might be possible and pleasant. It's a pity that such wonderful importance should have been attached to ordination as to make one think one's ultimate salvation is made to depend upon it, or that an ordination might be conferred as a compliment, or to keep some one good-natured, or because the law authorizes ordination in a case of necessity, therefore ordination may be lavished indiscriminately without regard to necessity or adaptability. Anything more erroneous could scarcely be conceived; save efforts to eliminate God-ordained distinctions to keep one from falling away in the thought of domination, officiousness, etc.

Nothing could be more effective than imparting instruction calculated to beget a proper conception of the verity and imperativeness of revealed and accepted law than a proper advocacy of that law; for that would lead to an understanding as to the importance of the same, showing the advantage and benefit of being governed by law on the one hand and the consequences to ensue on the other hand if violated. Thus we may act intelligently. If this is not the purpose of law, what purpose does it serve?

If I advocate baptism by immersion for remission of sins to those who have been taught to believe sprinkling, pouring, immersion, as you like, or neither if you don't like, I may expect to witness the curl of the lip, the snapping of the eye, with some withering-like glances, as indicative of opposition, and with loud claims of loving the blessed Jesus. Must I therefore palliate to cater to their pious claims? I grant you, I need not add sarcasm of my own, or heap ridicule upon them because of their proclivities; but though I may evince the mildness of an angel, the consistency and positiveness of a Paul, I am liable to be misrepresented by those who stick with greater tenacity to their creeds than to the simplicity and verity of God's word. So it would be with church members whose love might be divided (if that were possible); half for the law and half for some cherished theory. A becoming love and consistency for the enforcement of given and accepted law would subject me to unkind criticism and probably indirect charges of wrongdoing, if not moving for a change under the claim that the present incumbent is dominating, etc. The prostituting of power to unholy purposes, to wreak vengeance on somebody were monstrous. But I can't see that the palliation of law to please somebody were less monstrous; hence I would think it best to be right, and be free.

The teeming masses of this great nation are paying but little attention to us at present. It seems that his Satanic Majesty sees no immediate prospect of additions to our numbers and so is willing to let everybody jog along peaceably.

Though I heard some time ago as to some prospects of Bro. Joseph Dewsnap, president of the Manchester district, having a brush with a preacher of Church of God proclivities, have been waiting to hear results, but at present all is quiet. I have felt no way apprehensive as to the wellbeing of the cause. I "sorter" feared for the preacher if he came to time.

I left Llanelly, Wales, March 24, and stopped at Lydney, England. Though few, the Saints here engaged a public hall for seven meetings, at a cost of thirty shillings beside printing; but few came out. But one, a very worthy young man, was baptized, who through the labors of the brethren was brought to investigate the work which I think he did thoroughly, so came into the church understandingly, and by God's grace he will become useful in the great cause. I came thence to Broadclist, near Exeter, Devonshire, a small village, where by priestly domination and the effects of intoxicants the people are blinded to all that would make for their peace. I held a few meetings in Bro. Tucker's private house, and came to Plymouth, a large seaport town; indeed, there are three towns in close proximity. The census of 1881 gives the three towns a population of over two hundred thousand. Churches, lecture halls, theatres, penny shows, public houses where intoxicants are dealt out, are numerous; indeed, the throngs of people of all classes perambulating the streets on each evening of the week and Sunday are truly astonishing. The improprieties of young men and women seen in groups of twos and fours, is made visible to even the casual observer, which makes one wish there was a large and influential body of the Daughters of Zion in the big town of Plymouth. The Salvation Army seems to lead all others in sensationalism and additions. They have large barracks here with a fine band, and draw large congregations. However deficient of evidence other places may be as to the fulfillment of Christ's prediction relative to the condition of the world, as the signs of his coming are made visible, there is enough here.

There are nine sisters here and two brethren. Most of the latter are on the western side of life. Sr. Downes is eighty-seven, is sick and feeble. Her husband died last fall about her age. We have occupied a fair-sized room in a densely populated neighborhood, for a month, advertised, circulated tracts, but very few have honored us with their presence. Had we two active elders that would be ready to bring their physical strength into requisition and would labor for a year in a systematic way, it could be determined by that time as to what might be done. There are hundreds of thousands of people here within a small radius.

If there are brethren within the limits of a district, by conferring with the district president they may work. If not within the limits of a district, such may confer with the missionaries in charge. My permanent address is No. 17 Dawson street, Manchester.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths has not arrived yet. I am not a strong advocate for outdoor preaching, but if nothing better can be done better do that than do nothing. But for my part, in that position, I shall do my best to avoid useless cavil. A public speaker is under no obligation to answer questions that may be foreign to the subject on which he treats. In justice to himself he should have if possible, his audience under some restraint. Fair-minded persons will generally respect one who tries to respect others and himself. We should not allow cavillers to get advantage over us if it is possible to avoid it.

It is barely possible that my esteemed brother, Henry Hoole, of Sheffield, may in his next letter, inform the Herald as to a five miles walk, how he got left in trying to walk the old man down, etc. I "sorter" think he forgot that little item.

I would like to hear from the brother in Iowa, who came to England last year, having a brother between Sheffield and Clay Cross. I wrote to said brother, but he did not respond. I have mislaid his address and that of his brother. In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

WEBB CITY, Mo., May 28.

Editors Herald:—I inclose you a few names for sample copies of the Herald. I am at this place, about ready to go to Wentworth for a week or so. From there I go to Springfield to commence work with Bro. Sparling in a tent. I will work in that country through the tenting season. I did intend coming to Iowa this summer. Bro. I. N. White received a letter from Bro. W. R. Pickering offering to buy a tent if he could get an elder to help Bro. Sparling. Bro. White has seen fit to send me to assist. I appreciate this position, for I am made to believe that if we have the united prayers of the Saints and all live as becomes "Saints of God" we will do a great work. This "little stone" is a marvel indeed and must not be trifled with.

Here I met dear old Bro. George Montague on his way southward. I had a nice talk with him, about the gospel and in connection, his dear children on the far-away South Sea Islands. My acquaintance with him causes me to love him dearly. Bro. White left for Eldorado Springs to-day.

There is a debate going on near here. Our representatives, Brn. C. R. Duncan and H. H. Robinson; our opponent's name is S. W. Motley, a nonorganization man. So far it is in our favor.

Yours in the faith,

W. C. CATHER.

WEBB CITY, Mo., May 21.

Editors Herald:—The work is rolling on in Southwestern Missouri. Generally speaking the field is ripe and ready for harvesting, but the laborers are few. Most all of the conference appointees are in the field, wielding the weapon (the Bible) that is proving fatal to sectarianism.

For some time past the excitement has been running high at Blendville, but now the great battle is over, and, as the Baptist minister, Bro. Carlin, has said, "The victory is won." But the Latter Day Saints and outsiders think that Bro. Carlin's "insinuating slush" fell without effect on the intelligent minds present. The debate has resulted in good. It has been the means of opening the eyes of some to see the truth. Some are troubling the waters every few days, and last Sunday Srs. Edith King and Maud Lancaster came into the kingdom, who, if faithful, will be an honor to the cause. The time is now at hand when the "upper tens" of society are accepting God's everlasting truth and Satan can no longer argue that the Latter Day Saints' Church is composed of drones and the weak-minded class of humanity. But as a rule we notice that it takes men and women of intelligence to comprehend the fundamental truths of the gospel and live in humble submission to the commandments of God.

Another debate commences at Prosperity next Saturday, May 25, between Bro. C. R. Duncan and a Rev. Motley, a nonorganization man. The gospel ball is rolling as it never rolled before and the prospects look bright for a large ingathering.

I am still in the faith and my greatest desire is to unfold the gospel banner to all that know not God. In bonds,

ARTHUR M. BAKER.

KEB, Iowa, May 22.

Editors Herald.—It is with a degree of pleasure I pen these few lines to the Herald, our weekly treasure boat that comes laden with the precious truths of God's people and of the gospel. My heart swells with joy this morning as I think of the grandeur of this latter-day work and of its progress throughout the land. I pray that God will bless his people and give them strength to overcome; for it is written, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Rev. 3: 21. My hope is growing larger, and my faith stronger, and my love for Christ and his gospel is on the increase. My desire is to progress and become a faithful worker. There is a branch here and there are quite a number who are striving in their weakness to be humble and faithful. May our heavenly Father help each one that we may always strive to do that which is right and pleasing in his sight. The Saints have lately erected a house of worship. The building is 38x24 and was put up at a cost of about three hundred and fifty dollars. The most of the carpenter work was done by the brethren. Others have helped us in different ways for which we feel thankful. The sisters have also helped in furnishing blinds, carpet for stand, stain and varnish, also velvet for pulpit; and are talking of doing more. We thank God that he has blessed us thus far and enabled us to erect a building that we needed so much. We have burdened ourselves with quite a big debt and I take the liberty to ask the Saints to pray for us that the way may open up for us to meet our bills as they become due. We have a noble band of sisters in this place. Though poor in this world's goods they are rich in the gospel. They have their weekly Prayer Union and their monthly Daughters of Zion meetings, and from what I hear are blessed to a great degree by the Holy Spirit. Elder John R. Evans has been here and in the vicinity for about two weeks, working for the interests of the Master: and his fatherly advice and good, sound reasoning wins him the affection of all honest-hearted people. Last night we had the pleasure of listening to a splendid sermon by Elder T. W. Williams. He called here on his way home from Illinois where he has been engaged in a debate. Come again, Bro. Williams, and may God's blessings attend you wherever you go. Our local ministry are doing well, preaching at Keb and Ottumwa. I pray that they may be blessed in their efforts to further the gospel and be instruments in God's hands in bringing many honest hearts to a knowledge of the truth. We anticipate a good time at the district conference and at Sunday school association to be held here. All come who can. You will receive a hearty welcome.

Yours in hope,

JOHN BRENNAN.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 28.

Editors Herald.—Having concluded arrangements for setting up the gospel tent in the city of brotherly love, I wish to inform the Saints where they may find us for a time; also to extend an invitation to the ministry who can, when passing this way, lend a helping hand. If possible let us know beforehand and arrangements can be made to utilize the time better than otherwise.

We shall be pleased to have the Presidency to remember us as well as the missionary in charge, and call as soon as convenient. This is the first attempt in tent work in the city. We hope to make a success of it. The tent is located on Second street above Allegheny avenue. Services at eleven a. m., 2:30 and 7:45 p. m. Young people's prayer meeting at 6:30 p. m. each Lord's day; eight p. m. week-nights.

A. H. PARSONS.

KNOX, Ind., May 28.

Editors Herald.—Please say that Elder L. F. Daniel, of Whitestown, Indiana, will attend the Gallen, Michigan, conference, June 9, and labor in the district a month or six weeks. He is a forcible speaker of fine address. Was formerly a Methodist minister for sixteen years and has been with us eight years. His two experiences form a contrast pleasingly illustrated by him, carrying conviction to his hearers of his honesty of purpose and good heart. He has led eight precious souls into the waters of baptism in the last week in this place and is to deliver a memorial address at Crown Point, Indiana, on Thursday.

Brethren, do not fail to keep him busy while in the district. All he wants is an opportunity and he will preach every evening and three times on Sunday.

Elders R. E. and J. A. Grant are scoring a victory in their field and baptizing on the 25th and 26th at Lake Port and Black Creek. Bro. William Davis is carrying on the work at Bell River. Bro. I. P. Baggerly is having interesting meetings near Plainville, Indiana.

I have been assisting Bro. Daniel in this place since the 17th. He had been holding meetings every evening a week before my arrival, and though it is such a busy season, yet our daily services were well attended. I expect to be at the Detroit and Bay City conferences June 9 and 16. Everything is encouraging so far as I hear, in all parts of the mission.

I wish the elders would report promptly to their respective field officers, and all the Saints seize the pen as often as they see an opportunity and urgent demand for preaching in their respective localities and let your presiding officers know how hungry you are and who are really starving to death to hear the word of God. And, I am desirous to hear from all parts of the mission, soon and often, and of the demand for the welfare of the cause we love so dearly; also to hear that every Saint in the mission is doing something, and all they can, to sustain the missionary force. There are eight or ten good elders and preachers in our field who would be in the ministry all the time if they were not detained at home to labor for the support of their wives and little ones. Just think, if all of the Saints would pay in twenty-five cents a month into the hands of the Bishop or his agents and solicitors of every branch, as suggested by Elder R. E. Grant in his recent pastoral letter, what an amount of money would be raised every month! Our ministerial force would be increased very much this very year, and be ready to double by next General Conference, and, you each would have the credit in the Book of Life kept in heaven, how you are indeed helpers together with God in the salvation of the world. Try it, brethren, and see if God will not pour you out a blessing "and rebuke the devourer for your sakes." (See Malachi 3: 10, 11.)

I go to Flint this week. Frost, I guess, has killed all of the fruit in this part of the land. Remember that my mission address is No. 15 Amherst street, Detroit, Michigan.

Hastily,

E. C. BRIGGS.

HILLS, Minnesota, May 27.

Editors Herald.—On my way home from conference I visited our people in Nodaway county, Missouri; preached some, and on Sunday, April 28, I baptized two, man and wife, in the Platte River, Brn. A. Jensen, M. P. and Ole Madison assisting at baptism and confirmation. Those people came from Aalborg, Denmark, last year and while there had read some of our tracts. Since coming to this country they have been further instructed in the work by the above-named brethren and others.

I arrived here on the 29th, and on the 16th of this month left for this mission, arriving at Pipestone on the 17th. There I found Brn. Roberts and Tyson comfortably located at Bro. Henderson's. Together we held a few meetings, but interest did not seem sufficient to justify our continuing further at present, so we left, Bro. Roberts going to Minneapolis, and Bro. Tyson and I coming to this place. We came here on the 21st. Next day Bro. Midgorden secured the town hall and we commenced meetings the same evening and continued till last night. This is the same hall that was closed against me last fall. Attendance was good considering that this is but a small town, and I think some are interested in our doctrine. Great credit is due Bro. Midgorden for his efforts to get the work before the people here.

Yesterday we baptized Bro. Midgorden's wife, his oldest son, and Anton Hynden, a young man who has been working for Bro. M. for some time. A goodly portion of the Spirit attended their confirmation, testifying to the future usefulness of these young men, providing they continue faithful.

To-day we leave for Salem, South Dakota, expecting to labor in that vicinity for some time. Saints scattered in Southwestern Minnesota and South Dakota will confer a favor upon us by informing us of their whereabouts and the prospects for laboring in their respective localities. Letters in care of A. F. Henderson, Pipestone, or O. H. Midgorden, Hills, Rock county, Minnesota, will reach us any time.

Yours for the work,
PETER ANDERSON.

CANBORO, Mich., May 25.

Editors Herald:—For the last twenty days Joseph Musser, of Beaverton, Michigan, has been zealously at work in our district trying to tear down the gospel work, telling the people the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants were trash, and that Joseph Smith was an impostor, while the Reorganized Church was nothing more nor less than Utah Mormonism in disguise.

He entered our field at Bell River and in company with some Methodist preachers began his tirade of abuse, telling his hearers that Latter Day Saint preachers were afraid of him, and that he always annihilated the doctrine wherever he went. It was only a few days until I received a letter from Mr. Harrison asking me to come and defend our doctrine. I accordingly went and on my arrival found that Musser had gone to Fargo. Elder William Davis also hearing there was a wolf in the field hastened to the locality, but arrived too late to get a peep at him. We announced two lectures, then went and saw those Methodist preachers and told them what we were there for, and that we would expect them to come and defend what they had said and sanctioned a few nights before. Only one came however, and when he saw how we unraveled their twaddle he concluded the only way was for him to run a bluff by challenging me to discussion and then present such unfair propositions that I would not meet him, and thus get an opportunity to tell the people I had backed out. Unfortunately for him I saw his scheme and told him to formulate his propositions in writing, set his time, and then read it to the audience. He accordingly did so, and notwithstanding they were as one-sided as a jug handle, I told him I would meet him just the same.

Poor fellow! He had set a trap for me, and got caught himself. He wiggled and twisted and tried to hunt his way out, but the people held him to his agreement. When he saw there was no possible chance to get out fairly he dived into a hole like a prairie wolf by telling the people he would not debate at all, leaving them to conjecture for themselves, while I went to work and plugged the hole up; and if he ever gets out it will be when he has burrowed another way.

When we got through with our lectures the people thought more of the doctrine than before Musser came there. A card from J. A. Grant informed me that Musser had begun to lecture against us at Fargo, and when he arose to reply at the close of the lecture, the Methodist pastor (England by name), forbade him having a word to say, as it was in his church, thus placing Musser behind exclusive walls. Bro. Grant announced that he would reply the Thursday and Friday nights following at the Frenchtown schoolhouse, about two miles from there. Musser and the Methodist concluded that was their time to go to the Teets schoolhouse—while Elder Grant was busy filling his appointments at Frenchtown, and accordingly gave out their lectures, supposing their way was clear before them.

By this time I had got over in that vicinity, leaving Bro. Davis to continue the meetings at Bell River, and awaited Musser's arrival. The time came, and the house was packed at an early hour. Musser started off as usual with his sickening trash, misreading the books, breaking sentences in the middle, and would wind up with a challenge for anyone to correct it if they could. Of course he did not know I was there until I arose and told him I accepted his challenge, and would meet him on his own proposition. He seemed surprised to think I was there, and at the close of his lecture I arose and told the people to just keep their seats, and I would reply to what they had heard, then offered Musser the chair I had occupied during his lecture, and to my surprise and the surprise of those present, he utterly refused to meet me, either in private or public, or to even stay and hear my reply. The chairman tried to prevail on him to stay; but, no sir; he had lied, and he knew it. So seizing his hat and coat he fled amid the scoffs and jeers of the audience. I replied to his slang, and showed the people just how he had misread our books, and when they saw what he had done they seemed better satisfied with the doctrine than ever.

During all this time the Methodists had been in hot chase after us to assist Musser. I concluded to give them a problem to solve while they stopped to cool off, so I gave out that I would deliver a lecture on Methodist doctrine, and when the time came hundreds were present. I showed them from their own Discipline that they worshiped a "God" that had no "body or parts;" that they believed, "that Christ had come to earth to reconcile that kind of a thing to man;" that, "matrimony was not a sacrament of the gospel," according to their Discipline, and then opened the door of their menagerie with the key, ("Crimes of Preachers,") and placed on exhibition one hundred and sixty-eight Methodist preachers, professed scoundrels, that had either committed adultery, rape, theft, or murder, and had managed to escape with some other man's wife, or else been sent to prison—all in the short space of seven years. Disciples had also taken an active part with Musser and the Methodists and needed touching up, so they got it. They had forgotten during their unrighteous zeal that the cesspool of their iniquity was full to the very brim, and with a single touch would rush upon them like the flood at Johnstown. I lectured for two hours with splendid liberty, but didn't hear many "amens" coming from either Methodists or Disciples.

At the close of the lecture I gave way and told the audience if there was a man there that thought he could disprove what I had set forth to come to the stand and do so and I would sit down like a gentleman and listen to him. But no one came. I told them I would give ten dollars each for every preacher in Michigan belonging to the Reorganized Church that had run away with another man's wife; but thus far have had no applications. Poor fellows! They thought I knew as little about them as they did about Joseph Smith. One old Disciple whined out that if Grant continued to proceed against other churches with the mistakes of their preachers it would completely destroy their influence. "Let them go down then!" said another. They could begin to see by this time that if human "character" had anything to do with doctrine, theirs was a failure long ago.

Of course, Mr. Editors, this was a special effort in behalf of Methodist and Disciple preachers, as they had been following us for two years, like the damsel did Paul of old, crying out, "These are the servants of Joe Smith;" polygamy;" "Mormon;" "delusion;" etc.; until I concluded to lift the curtain from off the dark vale and show them and the world that among all the downright dead beat preachers Methodists took the lead,—not a crime known among men that they were not guilty of.

Several of the Methodist people shook hands with me at the close of the lecture and said that was truth just the same. The Methodist pastor that refused Bro. J. A. Grant the privilege of replying to Musser in his church, is in quite a dilemma, and claims I have nearly broken up his class. Musser has lost his influence among thinking people (that is if he ever had any), while the good old "banner" of the "gospel" is waving triumphantly over the field; "Babylon" is crumbling, and "Israel" goes on.

Bro. Grant is to trouble the waters with candidates, while I had to come home to look after some money that was stolen from a register. I think I have the thief located.

In gospel bonds,
R. E. GRANT.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 21.

Editors Herald:—When last I wrote I was about to go to Fiskville, Rhode Island. Well, I went there and held meetings throughout the week, then went to Woodville, but through some misunderstanding did not meet Bro. Toombs who was to be there. In the evening I attended the Sunday school concert in Providence which was very nice and all seemed to enjoy it. April 20 found me in Brockton, ready for anything that might turn up. I remained there over two Sundays, holding meetings during the week with no visible results; but who can tell what may happen?

Sunday, May 5, I met with the Cranston Saints and Thursday preached at Fiskville where we trust in the near future to have a church building of our own. Saturday in company with Bro. Joseph Fenner, a young man of promise, I left home for the district conference at Boston. Quite a number of the Saints were at the depot in Providence and we were all good natured as Saints should be. The conference was a spiritual one and there were many good resolutions made which we trust may be carried out. The preachers of the conference were Bro. John Smith and the writer. Stormy weather did not prevent many from attending the services. Monday after the morning meeting I went to the medical college with Dr. John Gilbert and listened to an interesting lecture, Bro. Gilbert being the lecturer. On Tuesday evening in company with Bro. Bullard and Sr. Edna Toombs I went to Haverhill, where we were met by Mr. George York, who escorted us to his home, and from there to the Baptist church, where a new font where never yet had man been baptized was waiting for us. Bro. Bullard took charge of the services and the writer immersed Bro. Geo. York and wife and a daughter of Bro. Harvey Thayer. Every kindness was shown us by the good deacon and others. May the Lord bless them! I forgot to mention that Bro. Bullard baptized a noble sister in Boston on Monday evening. We confirmed those baptized and returned to Boston. Thursday night I boarded the train for Fall River and took passage for New York on one of the finest steamers afloat said to have cost one million and a half of dollars. From New York I went to Philadelphia and here I am. I preached to the Saints here yesterday and am now waiting for Bro. Parsons and the tent.

Yours as ever,

G. W. ROBLEY.

OLMITZ, Iowa, May 23.

Editors Herald:—It is now twenty months since I wrote you, but my harp has not hung idly upon the willow all that time; have faithfully improved each opportunity presented to advance the cause of Christ, and every effort to do so was blest of our heavenly Father. Trials and disappointments hard to endure have come to me; but so far, thank God, I have not lost confidence or faith in him or his work, and the ultimate triumph of truth over error, that the reign of peace and righteousness shall be established, that all the faithful in Christ shall receive an ample and full reward for abiding in their gospel covenant.

I wish to confess that I was greatly helped and strengthened during the past conference year by that portion of the word of the Lord which reads, "Yea, verily, thus saith the Lord, unto the elders of the church; continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end." I bless God daily for the comfort and enlightenment I have received from the revelation of 1894, and for the witness that he gave me, and the quorum to which I belong of the truthfulness of the same, and on my knees often do ask for grace and humility to do the Father's will.

After returning from the General Conference, at the request of Bro. A. M. Chase, I went to Andover, Missouri, and heard Professor Fertig abuse Christians in general and Saints in particular. He boasted much of his ability to do up any elder, and throw him over his head in two minutes and a half. I offered to stand for the church in debate, but he would not, so I spoke two evenings with good liberty to a full house in defense of our belief in God and Christ.

I next spent ten days at the Latta schoolhouse, and perhaps I never "made a spoon nor spoiled a horn." The people turned out well considering that it was the busy season of corn planting and we had four rains during the meetings. I still think some will enter the fold there.

Here I am at present writing in the northeastern corner of Lucas county. About a year ago Bro. Wiley Young wrote me to come, as he had the promise of the M. E. Zion church in which to hold meeting. Last February his brother-in-law, J. W. Morton, wrote me to come, and when I informed him of my coming he applied for the use of the M. E. Coal Glen church, the place where he worshiped but was refused it; so I spoke three times in the Zion church, and then the trustees thought it best for me to go to the schoolhouse and I went. Permit me to say: the people and the trustees seemed willing for me to occupy the churches, but Rev. Alfred L. Bates, the minister in charge, was not willing. I do not think I created any excitement, for the people were in a hubbub on my arrival, and have given me a good hearing and fair order has prevailed. The other day the following dialogue took place in a little town near here between a man of the town and a lady of this locality:—

"Have you a Mormon preacher down in your neighborhood?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is he preaching down there?"

"Yes, sir."

"Does anyone go to hear him preach?"

"The schoolhouse is full every night."

"Why don't you raise a mob and run him out?"

"Why, we took him in."

The majority of the church members of this vicinity are Methodists, and a larger part of them profess sanctification and holiness. Many of them seem to be earnest and honest in attempting to serve God. Since I came here I have been cared for wholly by those not of the faith, till Tuesday morning, when I baptized J. W. Morton, and their kindness has been all that I could ask or expect.

Let me recite the following circumstance: Oliver Fluke, evangelist, and another man went to Lucas to preach holiness. They were both members of the M. E., and yet the pastor of that church at Lucas closed his house against them. However, our people opened their house to these men. I want to thank the Saints of Lucas for that kind act, and to exhort all Saints to never miss an opportunity to be kind to the ministers of all churches, for of a truth it is bread cast upon the water. It is a strange thing to me that those professing holiness are loud in declaring, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me," while they claim to live without sin and at the same time continue to comply with the word: "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth."

I have met the usual prejudice and ignorance of our work that are generally found in all new places. However, I am pleased that friends have been won to the cause and the invitations to "come again" were numerous from professor and outsider. I closed last evening and expect to go to Hiteman tomorrow. I spoke plainly and in simplicity to the people, and thank God for divine aid in the reception of the Holy Spirit.

On duty,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

OZARK, Mo., May 24.

Editors Herald:—We now have twenty-two members at this place. Bro. Sparling has been with us for two weeks. We could not have the use of any of the churches in town, so Bro. Pickering loaned us lumber to build an arbor in a grove in town, a nice place; but the weather was so cool that we did not have a very large congregation. Bro. Sparling was called home by the sickness of his wife. He baptized three before leaving. Bro. Spurlock was also with us a few days then left for another appointment. Two years ago there was only one member of the church at this place. We hold services on Sunday and prayer meeting during the week.

Your brother,

J. R. WEDLOCK.

BRANCH, DISTRICT, AND GENERAL RECORDS.

WHAT CAN BE DONE TO MAKE THEM AGREE?

KEEPING of records is one line of church work. It is one of the important things that the Lord has commanded, and it is a sacred duty. There seems to be little or no interest taken on the part of some to ascertain a system so that regularity and exactness may be the result.

In choosing a secretary for branch or district one should be made choice of that will appreciate the situation. Reports from each of the above-named secretaries are required. In the Book of Rules, page 152, you will find valuable instruction:—

It shall be the duty of the several churches composing the Church of Christ to send one or more of their teachers to attend the several conferences, held by the elders of the church, with a list of the names of the several members uniting themselves with the church since the last conference, or send by the hand of some priest, so that a regular list of all the names of the whole church may be kept in a book, by one of the elders, whoever the other elders shall appoint from time to time, and also if any have been expelled from the church, so that their names may be blotted out of the general church record of names.—D. C. 17:25.

From this explicit order we see that it is necessary for all the branches of the church to make out and send from time to time, or from conference to conference, full and correct reports thereof. And, furthermore, that this law is made obligatory, and is of binding force upon each and every one of said branches, to the intent that a record of all of them may be kept in a regular manner by the general church recorder. For, according to the passage quoted, the object of this reporting—the whole object of it—is the placing in the possession of the church recorder (as quickly as possible) accurate and systematic reports from all parts of the church, said reports being made out for that purpose, and for that purpose alone.

The sending of them to conference is only a primary or preliminary movement for the purpose of insuring their transmission to the appointed recording officer of the church. It is distinctly written that "it shall be the duty of the several churches" to conform to this regulation. And to make certain that this important matter shall be carried out a further regulation requires the providing a sure transit of these valuable documents to their destination, and this by means of certain officers, who shall see that they are regularly conveyed to the various conferences. It is plainly a duty to get them there, and it is intended, doubtless, that if these cannot go in person they shall send the reports.

After reports are in the hands of district officers it devolves upon them to see that the reports are sent to the general church recorder. (See Book of Rules, sec. 174 (a).)

But suppose the district secretary is not present at the conference? In that case if the secretary pro tem. does not send him all the reports and minutes, how can he transfer to the district record the names and items contained on the branch reports?

I can recall instances where the secretary pro tem. failed to do his duty, and of course it made a difference in the records.

1. It is the duty of branch clerks to make a record of all the required items on the branch book and at the proper time make out a complete report for the branch to approve, and when that is done send it to the district conference.

2. It is then the duty of the district clerk to copy on the district record all the changes that have taken place in each branch.

3. Then, as the law provides, he should send to the general recorder the original branch reports.

When the above method is properly complied with all three records will agree.

I now mention the illegal methods of removing names from branch records. Sometimes at branch meetings charges are preferred against members and they are expelled at the same meeting, without the persons concerned being present, and without any court of elders being called or labor being performed in the effort to correct evils.

The branch simply says, "We withdraw the hand of fellowship." In such instances clerks should not drop the names. I know of a branch where five or six elders hold membership and one of the number got discontented and did not desire to be retained as a member any longer, so wrote a letter to said branch assigning his reason for dissatisfaction and requesting that his name be dropped, which was done. Is that legal? No. And wherein the General Recorder gets exact items he does not drop names; so again records conflict. Each and every clerk should avail himself of the privilege of reading and ascertaining how to record and what to record, how to report and what to report, and come to the front in this line of church work.

In hope of all things being right when we stand before God's tribunal,

Your fellow laborer,

M. R. SCOTT, Jr.,

Sec. Southern Indiana district.

WIRT, Indiana, March 10, 1895.

The foregoing article was sent to me for inspection and amendment, if needed. I approve of the sentiments expressed, for there is need that branch and district clerks should pay more close attention to the matters written of by Bro. Scott.

And they often need the assistance of branch and district presidents, and of the traveling ministry, especially in their supplying the clerks with items of birth, baptism, etc.

Under the head of number two it should be added that when the district clerk sees that present branch reports do not agree in number or otherwise with the preceding reports they should inquire into the matter, either in person or by correspondence, in order obtain corrections in numbers, also in items where errors are seen to exist.

It would be well for each district secretary to keep a minute from conference to conference of how each branch stood at the last report, and then when the next report comes and a discrepancy is seen, call attention to it in the conference. If it can be explained then, that is well; if not, then the report should be returned to the branch officers for correction.

As Church Recorder I find that the majority of reports are more or less imperfect as to numbers; or in the items of when and where born; when, where, and by whom baptized; or when, where, and by whom ordained; and in this correction and in the writing back for corrections, or for the real facts, in this consists the real work in the recording department of this office; namely, in the constant repetition in sending incorrect or incomplete reports.

H. A. STEBBINS.

HIGH PRIESTS.

BY W. W. BLAIR.

THE theory is held by many religionists professing Christianity that there never was but one lawful high priest on earth at a time, that he was, prior to the advent of Christ, the type of Christ and that when Christ the anti-type came, the office of high priest ceased by limitation. This theory has been, and is to-day, advocated by a few among Latter Day Saints; and it is with the purpose of getting at the truth and the right of this matter that I now write.

PRIEST—WHO IS HE?

A proper understanding of the word "priest" will enable the reader to judge wisely as to what and who is a high priest—a chief priest. Both Buck and Webster, say that "the word priest is a contraction of the word presbyter," and is "of the same import with Elder."

Dr. William Smith says:—

The idea of a priesthood connects itself, in all its forms, pure or corrupted, with the consciousness, more or less distinct, of sin. Men feel that they have broken a law. The power above them is holier than they are, and they dare not approach it. They crave for the intervention of some one of whom they can think as likely to be more acceptable than themselves. He must offer up their prayers, thanksgivings, sacrifices. He becomes their representative "in things pertaining to God." He may become also (though this does not always follow) the representative of God to man. The functions of priest and prophet may exist in the same man.—Diet. Bible, p. 763.

The foregoing is doubtless essentially correct, is sufficiently full for my present purpose, and may suffice to remove the mystery that in times past has been thrown around the idea of priesthood, priests, and high priests, showing that these are simply authorized ministers "in things pertaining to God," under whatever dispensation found.

"The Psalmist David speaks of 'Moses and Aaron among his [God's] priests.' Psalms 99: 6. Aaron was the high priest of his order, and Moses held priestly authority over him, and, being the type of Christ (Deut. 18: 18), held the same order of priesthood as did Christ, namely, the Melchisedek, and ministered before the Lord (Ex. 24: 4-8) when Aaron had not yet been invested with the office of high priest in his particular order, as see Leviticus chapters 8, 9, etc. And, added to these facts we find the further one that Jethro, "the priest [not a priest only] of Midian" and "father-in-law" of Moses (Ex. 2: 16; 1), who was also his "maternal uncle" (Justin Martyr, Apology, 184), "took a burnt offering and sacrifices for God; and Aaron came and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread [sacramental?] with Moses' father-in-law before God" (Ex. 18: 12); this showing that Aaron and the elders of Israel recognized and honored this "priest of Midian" in his priestly ministrations. And now I add another notable fact, namely, that "the priest of Midian" said to Moses, authoritatively:—

Hearken unto my voice; I will give thee counsel, and God shall be with thee. . . . So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he said.—Ex. 18: 19, 24.

Jethro was, without successful question, the high priest of Midian, as Moses was the high priest over Aaron and all Israel, and Aaron was the high priest over the Levitical-Aaronic division of the priesthood. If this position be true, then there were at the least, three high priests living and ministering at the same time, in their respective spheres, and all recognized of God and his people as ministers called and authorized of God.

Abel, Noah, Melchisedek, Abraham, Jacob, Job, Samuel, David, Elijah, and others, officiated as priests with favor before the Lord, for the Lord answered their ministrations with marks of distinguished favor,—and these were not Aaronic priests, but doubtless they were high priests of the order of the Son of God—the order of Melchisedek.

Smith in his Dictionary of the Bible says that the New Testament writers "recognize in Christ, the Firstborn, the King, the Anointed, the Representative of the true primeval priesthood after the order of Melchisedek, from which that of Aaron, however necessary for the time, is now seen to have been a deflection."—Art. Priest.

Of this high priesthood the Apostle Peter says:—

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood.—1 Peter 2: 9.

And John the Revelator says of this high priesthood:—

Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God his Father.—Rev. 1: 5, 6.

And the redeemed say of Christ and the high priesthood in Rev. 5: 8-10:—

Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth.

That this high priesthood is continuous and eternal, is further shown in the following:—

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.—Rev. 20: 6.

In view of the foregoing facts it is fair to conclude that many persons may, at the same time, on the earth, hold the priesthood after "the order of the Son of God"—the Melchisedek, or high priesthood. And in this light intelligent Saints should indorse the statement of Polycrates, bishop of the church at Ephesus, who said:—

John, that rested on the bosom of our Lord, who was a priest that bore the sacerdotal [priestly] plate.—Eusebius' Eccl. Hist. Book 5, ch. 24.

Bingham, in his Antiquities Christian Church, page 50, says:—

St. Jerome, who will be allowed to speak the sense of the ancients, . . . says that both in the Old and New Testaments the high priests are an order, the priests another, and the Levites another.

And on page 60 Bingham further says:—

Now this is most expressly said by Theodoret, that he [Ignatius] received the gift of the high priesthood from the hand of the great Peter.

I now turn to the Book of Mormon for further and conclusive testimony that high priests of the Melchisedek order—"the order of the Son of God"—were numerous in the church of God in all ages, many living and ministering at the same time. Here is what is said by Alma the prophet, seer, and the presiding high priest over the church in "the land of Zarahemla" (Alma 3: 1), set apart and consecrated thereto by his father (Mosiah 13: 6), whose competency to teach truly and wisely should not be questioned by anyone who believes the Book of Mormon to be of divine authenticity:—

And I would that ye should remember that the Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son, to teach these things unto the people; and those priests were ordained after the order of his Son, in a manner that thereby the people might know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption. And this is the manner after which they were ordained: being called and prepared from the foundation of the world, according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works; in the first place being left to choose good or evil; therefore they having chosen good, and exercising exceeding great faith, are called with a holy calling, yea, with that holy calling which was prepared with, and according to, a preparatory redemption for such; and thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, while, if it had not been for this, they might have had as great privilege as their brethren. Or in fine: in the first place they were on the same standing with their brethren; thus this holy calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts, being in and through the atonement of the only begotten Son, who was prepared; and thus being called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest, this high priesthood being after the order of his Son, which order was from the foundation of the world: or in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from eternity to all eternity, according to his foreknowledge of all things. Now they were ordained after this manner: Being called with a holy calling, and ordained with a holy ordinance, and taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order, which calling, and ordinance, and high priesthood, is without beginning and end; thus they become high priests forever, after the order of the Son, the only begotten of the Father, who is without beginning of days or end of years, who is full of grace, equity and truth. And thus it is. Amen.

Now as I said concerning the holy order of this high priesthood: there were many who were ordained and became high priests of God; and it was on account of their exceeding faith and repentance, and their righteousness before God, they choosing to repent and work righteousness, rather than to perish; therefore they were called after this holy order, and were sanctified, and their garments were washed white, through the blood of the Lamb. Now they, after being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, being pure and spotless before God, could not look upon sin, save it were with abhorrence; and there were many, exceeding great many, who were made pure, and entered into the rest of the Lord their God. And now, my brethren, I would that ye should humble yourselves before God, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, that ye may also enter into that rest; yea, humble yourselves even as the people in the days of Melchizedek, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken, who also took upon him the high priesthood forever. And it was this same Melchizedek to whom Abraham paid tithes; yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed. Now these ordinances were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the Son of God, it being a type of his order, or it being his order; and this, that they might look forward to him for a remission of their sins, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord.

Now this Melchizedek was a king over the land of Salem; and his people had waxed strong in iniquity and abominations; yea, they had all gone astray: they were full of all manner of wickedness; but Melchizedek having exercised mighty faith, and received the office of the high priesthood, according to the holy order of God, did preach repentance unto his people. And behold, they did repent; and Melchizedek did establish peace in the land in his days; therefore he was called the prince of peace, for he was the king of Salem; and he did reign under his father. Now there were many before him, and also there were many afterwards, but none were greater; therefore of him they have more particularly made mention.—Alma 9:6; 10:1, 2.

To the foregoing I add the further fact, that while Alma was high priest over the church in the land of Zarahemla, Ammon was "high priest" in "the land of Jershon" (Alma 16:3), and Giddonah was "high priest" in "the land of Gideon." (Alma 16:4, 5). Here were three high priests, living and ministering at the same time, in as many different localities.

I now offer more and very conclusive proof that in "the church" of God many high priests served in righteousness at the same time and were approved and blessed of God. The three sons of Alma (who was the son of Alma), who was a presiding high priest as we have seen, were all, at the same time, ministering high priests in "the church" of God, and were named, respectively, Helaman, Shiblon, and Corianton. (Alma 17:1, 5; 18:1, 2; 19:1.) And of their preaching it is said:—

And now it came to pass that the sons of Alma did go forth among the people, to declare the word unto them. And Alma also, himself, could not rest, and he also went forth. Now we shall say no more concerning their preaching, except that they preached the word, and the truth, according to the spirit of prophecy and revelation: and they preached after the holy order of God, by which they were called.—Alma 20:1.

In the above quotation we find Alma and his three sons, all high priests of "the holy order of God," ministering at the same time, and in the same region of country. And that these three sons of Alma were high priests, this text should be conclusive evidence:—

Thus they [the Nephite saints] were led away by Amalickiah to dissensions, notwithstanding the preaching of Helaman and his brethren; yea, notwithstanding their exceeding great care over the church, for they were high priests over the church.—Alma 21:6.

At a period about thirty years after the above occurrence, a great revival and reformation took place, and this is said of it:—

And it came to pass that in this same year, there was exceeding great prosperity in the church, insomuch that there were thousands who did join themselves unto the church, and were baptized unto repentance; and so great was the prosperity of the church, and so many the blessings which were poured out upon the people, that even the high priests and the teachers were themselves astonished beyond measure. And it came to pass that the work of the Lord did prosper unto the baptizing and uniting to the church of God, many souls; yea, even tens of thousands.—Helaman 2:6.

In conclusion, I quote the teachings of Oliver Cowdery relative to the "priests" mentioned in the Book of Mormon, where he says:—

Now, as it is, and very correctly too, Lehi and his sons were blessed with the high priesthood—the Melchisedek priesthood. They never made any pretense that they were descendants of Aaron, or ever received that priesthood which was conferred upon him by the hand of Moses, at the direction of the Lord.—Messenger and Advocate, p. 91.

This teaching of Oliver furnishes an essential explanation of the meaning of the word "priest" found in the Book of Mormon from opening to close, and shows that those priests were called "after the holy order of the Son of God"—"the order of Melchisedek." Oliver was the authorized "spokesman" for Joseph the Seer (2 Nephi 2:3), was the second "apostle" in and to the church (D. C. 16:3), "the second elder" of the church (D. C. 17:1), and was second in authority in teaching and expounding the word of God given to the church. 2 Nephi 2:3, and D. C. 27:1, 2; 29:2. His teachings therefore should be heeded by all called to be Saints.

Joseph the Seer, having been called and appointed of God to be like unto Moses (1 Nephi 2:2, 3; D. C. 27:2; 104:42), being "inspired of the Holy Ghost to lay the foundation" of the church, "and to build it up unto the most holy faith" (D. C. 19:1), and to expound "all Scriptures unto the church;" and having the promise of God that, "it shall be given thee in the very moment what thou shalt speak or write" (D. C. 23:3); also appointed of God to "set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom" (D. C. 87:5), it is fair to conclude he did this official work well and truly, as the Lord assures us in 2 Nephi 2:2 he would do, saying,

And I will give unto him a commandment, that he shall do none other work, save the work which I shall command him. And I will make him great in mine eyes; for he shall do my work. And he shall be great like unto Moses.

In view of all this, it is safe to say Joseph did the Lord's work when in organizing and setting in order the priesthood, he ordained high priests and taught them their duties. He claimed to organize and set in order "the authorities of the church, agreeable to their respective offices" (Mill. Star 15:593), and to do so "according to the order which God had shown to" him (Mill. Star 15:643), thus working by the divine "pattern," as did Moses when the Lord said to him, "make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the mount."—Heb. 8:5; with Ex. 25:40, etc.

David Whitmer, William E. McLellin, and some others resisted and rejected some of the official work of Joseph the Seer (notably the calling and ordaining high priests) and undertook to correct it and set it in order according to their peculiar "opinions" and "convictions." All of these met with discomfiture and defeat in that undertaking, while the Lord vindicated and prospered Joseph the Seer in his official teachings and ministrations as he promised to do, and that, too, in a most wonderful manner, as church history fully proves.

MATTHEW 24: 14.

AND this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations; then shall the end come.—Matt. 24: 14.

It is no doubt true that the above passage of scripture has been the basis of a sermon or sermons by every elder in the Reorganized Church, and perhaps may be considered of little importance at so late a day; but I claim forbearance just this once.

What constitutes a witness? a chosen witness for Christ? Others may answer the question to suit themselves; but we propose to answer it in this paper as we pass along in a manner acceptable to God and the church to which we belong. For we have no wish to speak or write anything that will not be acceptable and at the same time instruct both the writer and the reader, as the elders are edified when speaking to their respective congregations, so is the writer when the Spirit indites the matter in hand. Now, the question is once more asked, What is a witness? We certainly witness many things every day, of one kind or another, whether of importance or not. Some things pass from the mind as soon as seen, others again are attractive and call forth more attention. Again, we may witness something that may cause us to be called up before the court, before a judge and jury, then we become witnesses of importance. How so? Because, before we are allowed to be a witness, we are sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; we could not testify, no matter how much we knew, unless we are sworn. So we see that even in earthly matters there must be a qualification to make the testimony of any value. Now to the Savior's words:—

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations.

But when? Answer: After the apostles had received that power that would make them witnesses;

After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: . . . ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

In temporal or earthly courts the oath gives the power but in Christ's kingdom the Holy Spirit is the power. It makes men ambassadors for Christ, and without the Spirit no man is qualified to preach the gospel. In the case of Peter and John and the miracle at the beautiful gate, the chief priest and the rulers brought them before them, and commanded them not to preach in the name of Jesus Christ, and even threatened them. But, Peter and John were not to be frightened. God was greater than the high priest. So they continued to preach and were finally arraigned once more, and they were asked if they were not forbidden to preach in the name of Jesus, and went so far as to counsel together to slay them.

What Gamaliel had to say in defence of the apostles might have had something to do in saving the lives of the apostles, but the apostles' reason was the grandest of all. In the fourth chapter of Acts the statement is made, and this is it:—

Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye, for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.—Acts 4: 19, 20.

After the second arrest, when the question was asked if they had not been commanded not to preach in that name, Peter answered:—

We ought to obey God rather than men.

He then offers the strongest reasons he possesses why they should preach in that name. That it was:—

The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.—Acts 5: 30-32.

Here, then, is in reality the power and authority of a minister of the true gospel, and that makes him a witness. But how ridiculous the idea of those rulers charging the apostles with bringing the blood of Christ upon them, when they had of their own choice offered to bear the blame and suffer the consequences of the crucifixion by saying, "His blood be upon us, and upon our children." When Pilate was willing to release him, and now to state that these apostles were determined to bring his blood upon them! No wonder they were cut to the heart, and could the apostles have been intimidated by the arrest and threats of those men they would have been recreant to God and the trust committed to them. They had been told by their Master that in the world they should have tribulation, and when it came they were prepared for it, in him they should have peace.

They were not long waiting for the tribulation and persecution, and some of them even death itself. But the Comforter was more than a match for all their enemies could do; it has been the comforter of all the servants of God from the earliest history of God's people, as well as a witness, from Abel to the present day. And if this gospel is to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all people, it will be preached by a people who will be led by the Spirit of God, a people prepared to receive revelation from to day, as the necessities of the case require, and who will preach it in the wisdom of God and not of men, in demonstration of the Spirit and with power, and not according to the precepts of men, creeds, or disciplines. Every man and woman born of God has the witness in themselves, for the Spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, for that is the seal of our adoption, the earnest of our inheritance. And again, no man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost, a direct revelation from God, as in the case of Peter, when the answer from the Savior to him was that flesh and blood did not reveal it to him, but God had revealed it to him, as the outpouring of the Spirit was a witness to Peter and the others with him on Pentecost Day, so it enabled Peter to be a witness to the multitude gathered together to see and hear the wonderful things that were manifested there at that time, and enabled him to refer to the old prophets and to the Psalms of David, men who had been witnesses for Christ, and in whom the Pharisees and others profess to believe, but who Stephen said had but recently been his betrayers and murderers. These holy men of old spoke as they were moved by the same Holy Spirit that rested upon the disciples on Pentecost and certainly would witness to the same truths. Neither can the gospel be preached in truth without the inspiring power of God's Holy Spirit; as the seal of this government must be stamped upon that which makes a man a true representative of this government, so must the seal of heaven be visible in Christ's ministers when they preach this gospel of the kingdom, or their preaching is vain, and they more apt to build with wood, hay, and stubble, than with anything else. Paul tells us that it never entered the heart of man to conceive the things that God hath prepared for them that love him; only as the Spirit reveals such things can we be assured. But one would think, to hear some of our neighbors express themselves, that they know all about it. From the way they describe heaven, it would seem they had been there and brought back with them a map of the whole thing; thrones, harps, and palms, and were now prepared to insure a through ticket on the terms they offer.

O, that God may help each one to strive for the Spirit, which alone can insure us a part in the first resurrection. If we secure that, all else is secure; for if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in you, now, here, every day, not merely on Sunday when we meet together for worship but all the time, holding the plow, at the anvil, behind the counter, or in any of the avocations in life; and if such is our happy condition when the spirit and body dissolve their connections, then we may be sure we shall be quickened by that same Spirit that raised up Christ from the dead, and each one may be sure that it is the only guarantee of life eternal. The witness of the Spirit constitutes us witnesses for Christ and by it will the gospel be preached for a witness to all nations, and the absence of that Spirit will be a bar to every attempt to preach the gospel as Christ and his apostles did either in Jerusalem, in Judea, or in Samaria, or on this continent as described in the New Testament, or Book of Mormon.

What a joy there is in every heart that feels the Spirit of God moving us onward, upward, a Comforter truly, truly.

These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.—John 16: 33.

MAGEE AND WILLIAMS DEBATE.

THE debate lasted six nights of two hours each, the speeches being of thirty minutes duration, commencing on Monday evening, May 13. It was held in the Christian church, which, it is said, will seat about six hundred. Three nights were devoted to each proposition. Elder Samuel Magee, of the Christian Church, affirmed the following proposition:—

Is the church of which I, Samuel Magee, am a member, the Church of Christ, and identical in faith, organization, teaching, ordinances, worship, and practice, with the Church of Christ as left perfected by the apostles.

Elder T. W. Williams, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, affirmed the following:—

Is the obedient Christian of the present time entitled to the operation of the Holy Spirit the same as in the apostolic age.

The attendance was unusually large, and the attention and interest unusually good. The house was literally packed—both seating and standing room—except the first night, when, I think, the seats were about all occupied.

Elder Magee is a very ready talker, and, it is said, has received a liberal education. He has evidently been regarded by his people as a champion, also by some others. He felt the necessity of leaving the propositions and catering to the supposed prejudices and ignorance of the people, occasionally, but upon the whole, was fairer and freer from the despicable business of mud-slinging than our opponents usually are. How much credit he is entitled to for this is a question which I shall not attempt to settle, as the surroundings were somewhat peculiar.

The debate was a success. Bro. Williams acquitted himself as a servant of Christ, which he certainly is; and with the benefit which will result from added experiences and proper reflection upon efforts made, he will become an advocate of truth and right whom no devotee of error will be safe in meeting; provided, of course, that humility of heart and trust in God shall continue.

By invitation of Rev. Ballou, of the Methodist Church, Bro. Williams addressed a well-filled house on Sunday night. It was Rev. Ballou's own appointment in his own church, but he gave way in favor of Bro. Williams. A good impression was made.

Bro. Sherman and family are the only Latter Day Saints residing in Blandinsville, Illinois, (where the debate was held,) I believe. They did their part nobly and cheerfully. Brn. Solomon, Don, and Fred Salisbury, with some others from the Pilot Grove branch, came to the rescue nobly in providing for the expenses of Bro. Williams and Bro. James McKiernan.

The beginning of what resulted in arrangements for this debate was a talk between Bro. R. Sherman and Elder Magee. The arrangements for it were made afterwards by Bro. McKiernan, so far as our side is concerned, and they were made wisely and well. The missionaries in charge were then called upon to furnish a man, etc., and they tried to do their part, and they feel well satisfied with their choice. May the good work move on.

FIFTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

We are now entering upon a new conference year, and with it will come new experiences and difficulties to contend with. We feel to urge you to active and persistent effort. It seems to be the intent of the quorum to have members only who can consistently declare the whole counsel of Heaven, and hence the resolution that those who use tobacco will be dropped from the quorum at the General Conference in 1896 (there are six or eight in the quorum who use tobacco); and also those who do not report labor done for two years will be dropped from quorum list unless a good reason is given for not laboring. We learn from the quorum books that during the past year nine of our number did not report at all; twenty-four did not report a sermon. This makes thirty-three who did not help the quorum report. Sixty-three elders preached 3,500 sermons and baptized 247. There were thirty-seven who paid no dues. So, brethren, you see about two thirds of our number have done the work that goes to make up our annual report. We cannot say whether this could have been otherwise or not; you must answer that for yourselves. You who have reported labor strive to do more, and you who have not preached, strive to the very best of your ability, and if an opportunity does not present itself, push out and make one. With our Father's help we can do much.

If any of you should change your permanent address notify the secretary and president at once. This quorum work is our Father's way of doing, and he always has regard for his own work.

If there should be any member who has no elder's diary, write to D. W. Wight, Ridgeway, Missouri, and he will send you one at quorum expense, as we want you to be sure to keep a record of your labors.

Presidency, { J. H. WELLS, Courts, Mont.,

F. M. WELD, Lamoni, Iowa.

D. W. WIGHT, Sec., Ridgeway, Missouri.

Attention of the Fifth Quorum of Elders is called to the following resolutions passed by the quorum at the recent session of conference:—

"Resolved, that no elder who uses tobacco in any form be eligible to membership in this quorum.

"Resolved, that the members of the quorum be notified through the Herald of the resolution passed at this session regarding the use of tobacco, and that all members using tobacco will be dropped from the quorum at the session of 1896."

NIAGARA FALLS REUNION.

JUNE 29—TO JULY 7.

The Latter Day Saints of Canada have made arrangements to hold a reunion at this far-famed pleasure resort. Arrangements have been made with the M. C. R. R.; G. T. R. R., and C. P. R. R. for cheap rates over said railways. There is no fixed rate for board, but all will be expected to contribute a small amount for board. We expect some of the leading American elders to be present, and a large gathering of Saints. All coming please notify William Place, Niagara Falls, Ontario.

Would you hear the gospel preached in purity, see the awe-inspiring Niagara River, gaze upon the wild, splendid leap of the tremendous Falls; listen to the deafening roar of the "Cave of the Winds;" watch the awful splendor of the dashing, foaming, magnificent rapids; look at that vortex of death,—"the Whirlpool;" visit the historic battlegrounds of "Lundy's Lane" and "Queenstown Heights"—Brock's last battle, and have a soul-reviving time, come to the Latter Day Saints' Niagara Falls' reunion, June 29 to July 8.

{ J. H. LAKE, Pres.
{ R. C. EVANS, Sec.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference will convene with the Farmington branch at the temple near Farmington, Kentucky, July 27 and 28. The reunion, beginning the 29th, will be held in connection with the conference. Come all who can.

ALBERT SNOW, Clerk.

The Northern Michigan district conference will convene at West Bay City, June 15, 1895. Inasmuch as the Saints of this branch are all poor in this world's goods, and hardly able to sustain the conference, it would be well if those attending would bring their baskets along, if situated so they can, and thus assist them what they can.

J. H. PETERS, Pres.

The conference of the Independence, Missouri, district will convene June 8 and 9 at the Kansas City, Missouri, chapel, No. 2423 Wabash avenue. Branch officers and the ministry, please take notice and have your reports all properly sent in. We hope for a good representation of the members and ministry present. The election of officers takes place at this conference.

R. MAY, Pres.

BORN.

WALDRIP.—Neata Pearl was born May 6, 1895, in St. Joseph, Missouri, to Bro. Darwin and Sr. Lillie Waldrip. This darling bud was blessed at the social meeting of the St. Joseph branch, May 26, 1895, by Elders J. M. Terry and R. A. Marchant. We truly felt in the blessing that "of such is the heavenly kingdom."

GRAY.—At Turner, Missouri, Earnest Jewell, son of Bro. and Sr. S. N. Gray, aged 8 years and 1 month.

DIED.

PENNEY.—At her home near Tabor, Iowa, Mrs. Lou Penney, aged 51 years, 6 months, and 29 days. She was born October 20, 1843, in Meigs county, Ohio. Married to Mr. John Penney March 27, 1887. She was not a member of the church but a firm believer in the gospel, but had neglected to obey. She called for the elders to administer to her, after which she rested peacefully so far as her future condition was concerned, and bore up under her sufferings patiently. Before passing away, she had a bright vision of the future, and beheld the blessed condition of those who accept the gospel in this life, and live it faithfully, so as to obtain the paradise of God; they were happy indeed. The condition of those who had not obeyed in this life was not so glorious; but those who had done good and lived honorably and uprightly in this world, dying in the faith of the gospel, were happy in the thought that the mercy of God as revealed in the gospel, would reach them, and that his justice would bring them to praise his holy name, in the mansions prepared according to his divine purpose. She selected Matthew 24:44 as a text for her funeral sermon. She was beloved by all who knew her, ever ready to lend a helping hand to all; a dutiful daughter, a loving sister, a true and affectionate wife. Thus she passed away with a bright hope, having the assurance that her God, as a loving Father, had made rich provisions for her. Funeral sermon by Elder Henry Kemp to a very large attendance of mourners and friends. She leaves her husband, mother, sister, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn.

NOSKER.—At her residence, near Shelburn, Oregon, on Monday, April 15, 1895, Mrs. Mary E. Nosker, aged 50 years, 7 months, and 28 days. Mrs. Nosker was born in Pennsylvania, in Dauphin county, was married to Wm. Nosker, February 23, 1862. She lived a devoted Christian life for twenty years.

The Medical Record says that "the nervous system requires complete rest after blows caused by sorrow. Recent medical observations show that the physical results of depressing emotions are similar to those caused by bodily accidents, fatigue, chill, partial starvation, and loss of blood. Birds, moles, and dogs, which apparently died in consequence of capture, and from conditions that correspond in human beings to acute nostalgia and 'broken heart,' were examined after death as to the condition of their internal organs. Nutrition of the tissues had been interfered with and the substance proper of various vital organs had undergone the same kind of degeneration as that brought about by phosphorus or the germs of infectious disease. The poison of grief is more than a name. To urge work, study, travel, the vain search for amusements, is both useless and dangerous. For a time the whole organism is overthrown and temporary seclusion is imperative for proper adjustment."

JONAH IN NINEVEH.

H. CLAY TRUMBULL.

In the discussion of the question of the historicity of the book of Jonah, two seemingly grave and weighty objections have been urged, against its genuineness: 1. The seeming lack of a sufficient reason for so unique a miracle. 2. The essential improbability of the instant, reverent held of an entire people to the simple religious message of an unknown visitor from an enemy's country.

In face of these and numerous other arguments against the authenticity of the asserted miracle, it is well to ask if there is anything in the modern disclosures of Assyrian life and history that would seem to render the miraculous element in the story of Jonah more reasonable, and the marvelous effect of his preaching at Nineveh more explicable and natural.

Prominent among the divinities of ancient Assyria was Dagon, a creature, part man, part fish, and which, it is clear from the monuments, was an object of reverent worship. According to the various fragments of Berosus, preserved in later historical writers, the very beginning of civilization in Chaldea and Babylonia was under the direction of a personage, part man, part fish, who came up out of the sea.

His language was articulate and human, and he instructed them in agriculture, in science, and the arts.

Berosus also records that, from time to time ages apart, other beings of like nature with the first great teacher came up out of the sea with fresh instructions for mankind, and that each one of these orators or incarnations marked a new epoch, and the supernatural messengers bore a new name. Such beliefs being current among the Assyrians during all the period to which the Book of Jonah can be ascribed, there is an appreciable reasonableness, or logical consistency of movement, in the asserted miracle and the marvelous success of the fish-ejected Jonah in the Assyrian capital. He could have had no better heralding as a divine messenger.

It would certainly seem to be true that if God desired to impress upon all the people of Nineveh the authenticity of a message from himself, while leaving to them the responsibility of personal choice as to obeying or disregarding his message, he could not have employed a fitter method than by sending that message to them in a way calculated to meet their most reverent and profound conceptions of a divinely authorized messenger. And this divine concession—as it might be called—to the needs and aspirations of a people of limited religious training, would be in accordance with all that we know of God's way of working among men. There is another point in the record of Berosus that has a possible bearing on the story of Jonah at Nineveh. Berosus gives the name of the Assyrian fish-god as "Oannes," while he mentions the name "Odacon" as that of one of the avatars of Oannes. Now as the same Dagon appears frequently in the Assyrian records from their earlier dates, and no trace has been found in them of the name "Oannes" or anything like it, the question suggests itself, Is there in this name Oannes any reference to Jonah, as the supposed manifestation of the fish-god himself? While Oannes is not the precise equivalent of Jonah, it is a form that might naturally have been employed by Berosus while writing in Greek, if he desired to give an equivalent for Jonah, and if it were a literal fact that a man called "Yonah" had come up out of the very mouth of a fish in the sea, claiming to be a messenger of the great God to the people of Nineveh, and had been accepted by king and people accordingly, is it not possible that Berosus, writing long after the event, would connect the name Jonah with the primal divinity of Nineveh?

A suggestion of the possible relation of Oannes and Jonah was made by Professor F. C. Baur as early as 1837, and it has been many times repeated since then; but the mistake in every case has been that of supposing, or of taking it for granted, that the name Oannes occurs in Assyrian story earlier than the date of Jonah. Hence the attempt has been made to derive Jonah from Oannes instead of Oannes from Jonah, but so far (as I am informed by Prof. Dr. Hilprecht) it has been impossible to identify Oannes with Babylon's Assyrian divinity of the cuneiform inscriptions. On the other hand, the preservation of the name, Jonah, at the ruins of Nineveh would seem to indicate, or to confirm a historic basis for this connection. When Xenophon's army passed the site of Nineveh no trace of the city remained. As soon, however, as modern discoverers unearthed the mound that had for long ages—perhaps from the days of Nineveh's destruction—been known by the name of Neby Yunas they found beneath it the ruined palaces of the kings of Nineveh.

These facts are not in themselves conclusive as to the question of the historicity of the book of Jonah, but surely they ought not to be ignored by scholars who are discussing that question.—Journal of Biblical Literature, Andover, Vol. 11., Part 1.

SMOKING CLERGYMEN.

ONE reason why there are so many victims of the tobacco habit is because so many ministers of religion smoke and chew. They smoke until they have bronchitis, and then the dear people must send them to Europe. [Laughter.] I can name three eminent clergymen who died of cancer in the mouth, an evil caused by tobacco. There has been many a clergyman whose tombstone was all covered up with eulogy, who ought to have had an inscription, "Killed by too much cavendish." Some smoke till the room is blue, their spirits are blue; everything is blue. The clergymen who are indulging in the habit should repent. How can a man preach repentance when he indulges in such a habit? I have known Presbyteries and General Assemblies and General Synods where there was a room set apart for ministers to smoke in. * * There are ministers of religion to-day indulging in narcotics dying by inches, and they don't know what is the matter with them. My experience was that it took ten cigars to make a good sermon. A generous tobacconist of Philadelphia offered to keep me in cigars if I would settle in Philadelphia. But I said to myself, "If I smoke more than I ought now, how much more would I smoke if I had an unlimited supply?" That was twenty years ago. I quit then, once and forever.

I shall not be offensively personal on this subject, for you nearly all use it. You say that God made it, and it is good. Yes, it is good to kill moths, to kill ticks on sheep, to strangle all kind of vermin. You say that God created it for some particular use. Yes, so he did henbane, nux vomica, and copperas, and all those poisons. You say men live to be old who use it. Yes, in the sense that the man lasted well who was pickled. Smokers are turned into smoked livers. . . .

You should advise your children to abstain from it, because the whole medical fraternity of the United States and Great Britain pronounce it the cause of the wide-spread ill health. Drs. Agnew, Hamilton, Woodward—the whole medical fraternity, allopathic, homoeopathic, hydropathic, and eclectic denounce it.

The use of tobacco tends to drunkenness. It creates unnatural thirst. The way that leads down to a drunkard's grave and to a drunkard's hell is strewn thick with tobacco leaves.—Talmage.

THE ARENA FOR JUNE, 1895.

The June Arena comes as usual full of piquant discussion of alive and up-to-date questions of interest. John Clark Ridpath, the well-known historian, whose United States History has been such a popular success, appears as the frontispiece of the number, and he contributes an interesting article called "An Epoch and book," recalling the condition in the South and the Southwest before the war. The book which is the starting point of his summary of the epoch is Helen H. Gardener's "An Unofficial Patriot." The Editor of the magazine, B. O. Flower, describes a sojourn in Florida, a paper which is copiously illustrated. The author of the "Preston Papers" contributes an interesting article on "Boston Schools and teachers." Solomon Schindler writes about "The First Steps in Nationalism." A writer signing himself an ex-Democrat discusses "Mr. Bland and a New party." E. W. Smith considers the "Laws Governing the Age of Consent." Marcus J. Wright describes "The British House of Commons." A very forcible and striking paper, raising a somewhat peculiar question, is B. O. Flower's trenchant criticism of certain features of the marriage laws, which he claims foster prostitution within the marriage relation. J. K. Miller asks a very pertinent question in a paper called "Are the people of the West Fanatics?" which will probably elicit all sorts of replies. Emil Richter considers certain phases of the industrial problem presented in the Brooklyn trolley strike. Prof. Frank Parsons of the Boston University Law School contributes a very valuable study of the lighting of cities, called "The People's Lamps," in which he makes a strong argument for municipalization of the electric light service on the grounds of economy. An American Girl, who says she has studied art for two years in Paris, asks the question, "Shall Our Young Men Study in Paris?" and concludes that the moral atmosphere of Parisian studios is bad for them. Mrs. Margaret B. Peeke writes on "The Psychic and the Spiritual," and Grace Shaw Duff writes a suggestive bit of fiction called "Two Beasts."

VENTILATION IN THE COW STABLE.

No feature in dairying is more important than ventilation. Do not stable cows where their food is stored. The best stable floor is made of concrete and should be washed often. The stable should be light with plenty of windows, the cattle facing each other. On the roof should be a ventilator that can never be closed. Ventilation by windows should be regulated daily. On entering the stable in the morning open the doors and blow out the impure air the first thing.—Farm and Home.

DEPARTMENT THE TEST OF CHARACTER.

AN earnestly devout man is never mistaken for a hypocrite. He means what he says in reference to his religion and his hope of life and salvation, and says it in such a way that he is known to be an honest man. He may mistake what he holds to, but to him it is a reality, and he impresses his sense of right and conviction of truth upon others; so that, though he may mistake in his view, others do not mistake him.

An advocate of the faith honest in himself, gives an opponent credit for honesty, also, until by experience he proves him to be otherwise; and even then, in discussion he will lean toward the side of fair dealing, rather than put his opponent to shame, if it can be avoided.

No advocate of the gospel can afford to disparage his own work and administration by a peevish, fretful, or jealous criticism of a fellow worker; nor will he suffer himself to be led into such course by the improper criticism of associate ministers by others in his presence. The spirit of true courtesy will lead a man to rebuke detraction from a brother ministers work, rather than to listen to it.

No elder in the field, or at home, for that matter, can afford to so conduct himself that the cause he represents and the church may be reproached justly; hence any sort of immorality, or its appearance, is out of harmony with his calling and incompatible with the character he is presumed to bear as a message bearer of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ.

Scandal is sometimes encouraged by ministers, priests and elders being too friendly with the wives, widows, grace widows, sisters, and daughters among the membership in their respective fields. Conduct of this sort is reprehensible; and any elder, or priest, indulging in it, however innocently or thoughtlessly, should be remonstrated with by the more thoughtful and sober; and when so remonstrated with should at once mend his ways; and if he does not, he is in danger and liable to be silenced and relieved from his appointment.

If a minister in such case becomes angry and tells his careful brethren that it is none of their business, and he will do as he pleases, he is very near to guilt, if not worse, and evinces a spirit not creditable, to use no harsher term. The membership of the church everywhere have an interest in the well-doing of the preachers of the faith, and a right to demand that they shall be men free from just reproach for wrongdoing. In fact like Cæsar's wife, they must not only be innocent of wrongdoing, but "free from suspicion."

"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," means much.

THRUST IN YOUR SICKLE.

TO ASSIST in any great and good work is a laudable ambition possessed by the pure, noble, and true everywhere. To assist God in the work of human redemption is the highest honor, and the most ennobling yet extended to man. In this honor all who have a desire may share, as we are informed from a revelation to Hyrum Smith, Doctrine and Covenants 10: 2:—

Behold the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God; yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God, etc.

Here is no provision for a privileged class; all who desire can share in the labor and the consequent reward, and the same are called of God.

Happy thought! The desire is evidence of your calling and acceptance. We are persuaded, however, that this has been misunderstood, and this passage has been made to do duty as evidence that men with desire for office are called to the priesthood, and should be ordained. This misunderstanding may cause men to be ordained to office who possess neither qualification nor gift requisite, and result in mortification and discouragement to the party, as well as loss and trouble to the church. That this is a strained construction is evident from the revelation referred to, for after the broad commission to all who have desire, the Lord adds:—

Behold, I command you, that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called, etc.—Par. 8.

Then to thrust in your sickle and reap does not necessarily mean preach. All who have desire are called to reap, but are commanded by the plainest implication not to suppose that they are called to preach until they are called. Sickle, then, does not necessarily mean priesthood, but may mean any gift necessary to the accomplishment of a given work. Here allow us to invite attention to the revelation of 1887, Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all.

Then if you have desire you are called of God; so go forth joyfully, thankfully, into the harvest. Clamor not, nor idly wait for ordination, but thrust in your sickle and reap, using such gifts as you may possess, or God may graciously bestow, glad that you can be a colaborer with God, angels, and holy men; for the field is ripe already for the harvest, and there is opportunity and demand for all. God and the church need not only ministers, but also capitalists, skilled workmen, merchants, farmers, and men of the professions who desire to come up unto the work of the Lord; and who will diligently use their gifts to honestly accumulate, and then impart as the law directs.

Such are called of God. Let them thrust in their sickles and reap while the day lasts, that they may treasure up for their souls everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

AMONG other things that are safely within the province of the Spirit, by whom the gifts are bestowed upon mankind, is the giving of prophecy.

Moses was of the opinion, and ardently desired that "all the Lord's people should be prophets" and that the Lord "would put his Spirit upon them."

Aside from the consideration that by the visitation of the Spirit the fact that Jesus is testified of as "the Christ," there remains the supposed office work attaching to the calling of a prophet, that is, the foretelling of the future.

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you.—John 16:13, 14.

It appears that some have held the idea that to the office of a prophet attached an immediate and perpetual knowledge of whatever was transpiring; in heaven, of the counsels and designs of God touching the earth, and man as an inhabiter of it; of the things of the earth concerning men and things by whom the prophet might be surrounded, and with whom the scenes of his life and his labor should be.

Where this idea originated, is not known, for there is no warrant for it in the history of God's dealings with man, nor in the word of God.

The office work of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of truth, as stated by the Savior, in the language quoted above, is of itself a refutation of the idea of all prescience being an attribute of the prophet, for the Spirit of truth "shall not speak of himself; but what he shall hear, that shall he speak." The prophet can do no more.

If follows then that while it is within the role of a prophet to declare the things of God, he can do so only as he may hear them first through divine messengers, or from the ministration of the Spirit; then as he shall hear, he may speak. So also in regard to future events. A prophet does not from what is within himself, his own thoughts, or the movings of his own mind, the whims, imaginings, or dispositions of his own human will, forecast and foretell the events of the future. If he did, then would not only the "spirits of the prophets be subject to the prophets;" but all other of the powers and forces of the universe would be called into subjection to do the bidding of the prophets; and human happenings would hardly be the product of the intervention and direction of one spirit. If, however, a prophet is but to declare what he may be advised of by messenger direct from God, or through the Spirit of truth; it follows that until he is "moved upon by the Holy Ghost," or is commanded to declare, of the things of God, or what is to take place, he is justified in holding his peace, and refraining from prophesying. Whatever may be revealed unto a prophet, that he is justified in declaring as revelation, or the will of God; in other regards he is left to the exercise of the wisdom that may be given to him, and by that teach what is written and has become the accepted word of God unto himself and fellow believers. An objection has been urged against the faith of the church, to the effect that the church is under obligation to accept the words of the Palmyra Seer, or any other occupying that prophet's place, the same as and to be the same as if they were spoken by the Lord.

This objection is based upon a misconception of what was stated in a revelation given April 6, 1830.

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith.—D. C. 19:2.

No objection to the latter-day work, ever rested upon a greater misconception, or misconstruction of language than the one referred to. The principle involved in the passage quoted from the revelation is identical with the one stated in John 16:13, Whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak.

That no false expectation was intended to be raised is seen by what is given in the fourteenth verse,

For he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you.

There is nothing on record to show that Joseph Smith himself was impressed with the idea that his word was to be considered as the word of God, unless that word was given him of God to declare unto the church. Nor do we believe that any such notion prevailed to any marked extent among the Saints of the prophet's day; certainly not among those whose speeches and writing we have access to. The idea that the words of the prophet were as the words of God, grew into being after the death of the prophet; and, it is likely that the objection referred to was based upon such afterthought, mischievous as it was. However, no matter whence the idea, it was a mistake and was not, could not have been a proper deduction from the revelation of April 6, 1830, any more than from the words of the Savior seen in John 16:13, 14.

The Lord could not be held responsible for the words of Joseph Smith, either as being their author, or if predictions, to cause them to come true, only when he by divine direction gave him the words he should speak. In such case, the words given would be the words of God, and Joseph Smith would speak them as he received them.

It is but a fair conclusion that Joseph Smith, the Seer, held himself in readiness at all times to hear and deliver what might be given him; and that he could only present what should thus be revealed at the will of the Lord; his time and place being at the discretion, pleasure, or will of God; his messages being in no wise dependent upon his own desires, or will. The same is true of every prophet, whatever the age, or time when he lived and served God.

In this prophetic gift, by whomsoever it may be exercised, it must be as in the gift of tongues, knowledge, faith, wisdom, interpretation, and all others, that it is exercised only as the divine wisdom and knowledge of God may decide it to be needful to his work on the earth, and the benefit of the church and the people. If this divine wisdom may not be trusted, and God be acknowledged to know when, where, what, and how he reveals, then men have little faith in him. If the Lord does not know the exigencies of his work, and how best its interests may be conserved by revealing or withholding those things which a prophet must speak, then man can have but little hope in the Master, or in his management of those affairs appertaining especially to his domain.

WARNING!

By letter from Sr. Nane D. Cooper, Ogden, Utah, we learn that a man representing himself to be a brother of Bro. George S. Lincoln, of San Francisco, is victimizing the Saints through that region, by representing himself to be a brother in the church and securing gifts and loans of money to help him to railway fare from one point to another, where he has, either relatives or a chance to get something to do. He is somewhat crippled, having a club or turned foot. He is going from house to house seeking sympathy and aid. He has already borrowed sums which he promised to pay but has not. Look out for him and do not be imposed upon. The needy are deserving of help, but those who deliberately prey on the good will of the people come under the ban, "The idle and vicious shall not eat the bread of the industrious."

A GOOD TESTIMONIAL.

WHILE attending the Dedication at Blendsville, Missouri, and the district conference, we learned that one of the guard that had held Joseph and Hyrum Smith and their brethren in custody upon the occasion of their arrest at Far West, lived in the little town, so in company with Bro. Stephen Maloney, of Webb City, we visited him and found him a pleasant and intelligent man. Before leaving for home we suggested to Bro. T. W. Chatburn that it would be well to get a statement from Mr. Sebree, for publication in Herald. Acting on the suggestion, we received the following from Bro. Chatburn under date of May 21, 1895:—

Editors Herald:—I procured the within statement from Mr. Sebree while at Blendsville, Missouri, he giving it freely and on his own motion; and, as the elders are in need of just such statements in defense of the character of Joseph Smith, I herewith send it for publication.

Statement of Mr. E. S. Sebree; of Blendsville, Missouri, made May 21, 1895.

I was born in Kentucky, in 1816; and came to Missouri in 1835. I was a member of the State Militia that went from Liberty, Clay county, Missouri, to Far West, in Capt. Moss' company; and was present at the surrender of Joseph Smith and others on the public square in the city of Far West; and was with the detail and went to Liberty with them as guard, where they were placed in jail in the month of November, 1838.

Joseph Smith was, in my opinion, a good man. I never saw or heard anything to the contrary. As for his being a thief, murderer, or a bad, vicious, man, I did not believe it then, nor do I believe it now. He was a fine appearing man, and would compare favorably with any other minister of my acquaintance. I never heard anything of the doctrine of polygamy. It was not talked of, nor heard of, to my knowledge; and the Latter Day Saints, as a class, in my opinion, was as virtuous a class of people as I ever saw; not a taint of suspicion of any kind did I ever hear against any of them, so far as prostitution was concerned.

I do not belong to any church; and have no motive in making this statement only that the truth may be known; neither am I prejudiced in favor of the Latter Day Saints; for I was a pro-slavery man, and naturally opposed to the free soil ideas of the Latter Day Saints; which in my opinion was the cause of their expulsion from the State of Missouri.

THE GOSPEL VS. THEORY, SPECULATION.

THE best, most reliable antidote and remedy for Faith-Cure philosophy, Health-Science, Theosophy, and the like, is the preaching of the gospel, pure and simple. Indeed, the gospel is the moral touch-stone in the religious field, under the touch of which truths, wherever found, are crystallized and made to do duty in the Lord's service. He who in the spirit of devotion which should characterize the minister for Christ, preaches the gospel, not only protects himself from the cheap theories taught as precepts, but will greatly help others to keep out of their wildering meshes.

Dr. Elliott Coues, has said this of Theosophists and Theosophy:—

First, those who wish it can remain fools; secondly, let them get unfooled if they can; and, third, turn fakirs if they must! I have investigated the question of theosophy, both in psychological and ethical aspects, and the conclusion I have reached is, it is a vile, wicked humbug.

This is of course strong language; but as the American branch of theosophists have cut loose from their eastern, or Asiatic compeers and predecessors, under the plea that there was need of and prospects for higher development if the American theosophists were free from the apathetic indolence of the eastern wing, it follows that the whole affair is but the human striving after the infinite in human ways only, and of course, it must fail.

The gospel has divine origin; all that is higher and nobler in development in man has in its principles ample opportunity and warrant in freedom, without the hindering causes of either eastern apathy or western iconoclasm, the truth thrives wherever the gospel principles are preached and taught; and spiritual development follows; men see human duties and human philosophies more clearly, value what is lasting and good, and cast aside the transitory and bad.

Brethren, preach the gospel; it is the Saints' bulwark of safety, the people's guarantee for life, happiness, and peace, here and hereafter.

THE TRUE WAY THE BEST.

WE have received from Bro. A. H. Parsons, a missionary in the field, the following by eard:—

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 27.

Editors Herald:—I was refused a clerical order over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad this spring on account of the action of the Trunk Line Association passing a rule that Mormons would not be recognized; and they define the term "Mormon" to mean Latter Day Saints and but one class. After a continued and persistent effort, drawing the line of demarkation between us and the Utah people, I obtained an order with this understanding with Mr. Chas. Scull, the General Passenger Agent, that all applications made by our ministry would be signed "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S.," otherwise they would not be recognized.

A. H. PARSONS.

This brings the question quite home; but we were not aware that any of the eldership had obtained or attempted to obtain a recognition from the railway companies on any other than the proper statement that they were members of and ministers in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. However, Mr. Charles Scull is right. We should stand before the world, railway companies included, for just what we are and in our proper name.

We hope the brethren will take notice of the item and principle involved in Bro. Parson's card.

Railway companies are made up of men, and the officers are usually shrewd, intelligent, business men, whose duty requires them to deal with all classes of human beings; and in the course of that duty they see plenty of shams, posing as honest men, asking for favors; and it is not to be wondered at if they demand that those dealing with them as ministers of the gospel should deal squarely, and in their proper name. "Provide things honest in the sight of all men."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

QUES.—Will you please explain feet washing through the Herald. On whom is it binding—on all members of the church or only the Twelve and all the elders? It seems that except some class follows it they have neither part nor lot with Christ.

Ans.—It is an ordinance applicable to the priesthood, and which, when performed, indicates that those receiving it are clean from the blood of the people because of their faithful testimony and preaching of the gospel. For a fuller statement see HERALD 1884, page 625.

The following concerning some of the interests of Judaism we clip from a late issue of the Chicago Tribune:—

Rabbi Edward B. M. Browne of the Congregation Emanuel will sail for Europe June 1 on a mission of importance to students of Judaism. He has received an invitation from Hebrews in Jerusalem to become a member of a committee the work of which is to be an investigation of the archives and historic legends preserved in Jerusalem since the days of Christ. He will join a number of European Jewish scholars in an effort to stem the tide of anti-Semitism that Dr. Browne says has been spreading over Europe for some time, and for this purpose the records in the possession of Hebrews in Jerusalem will be examined. By this means alleged falsehoods now current in anti-Semitic books are to be refuted to the confusion of the enemies of Judaism. Dr. Browne will go directly to Buda Pesth, where he will join the Rev. Dr. M. Kaiserling, Chief Rabbi of Hungary, and with other members of the commission proceed to Jerusalem.

THE ARRAIGNMENT.

The Blandinsville, Illinois, Star, for May 23:—

The following is a summary of Elder T. W. Williams' argument in the first proposition in the late Magee-Williams discussion:—

The proposition was, "Is the church of which I, Samuel Magee, am a member, the Church of Christ, and identical in faith, organization, teaching, ordinances, worship, and practice with the Church of Christ as it was left perfected by the apostles?" Samuel Magee affirming, T. W. Williams denying.

In his closing speech Elder Williams said: "The Christian or Disciple Church of which Samuel Magee is a member is not the Church of Christ, because

1. They assume that God gave them the name "Christian" when the Bible does not say so, but gives us to understand that Christ's followers were so called by their enemies. (Acts 11:26. See also Eusebius, chap. 3, page 41, Crusé's translation; Alexander Campbell's statement in Purcell debate, p. 77.)

2. Bro. Magee while maintaining strenuously that "Christian" was the only name given of God for the church, finally says: "We are willing to be called by any name, even Campbellites, if you have anything to give us." This position is untenable, for God's children were always called saints. (See Jude 3:1; Thess. 3:13; Eph. 4:12; 1 Cor. 1:2; Rom. 8:27.)

The church is the body of Christ. (1 Cor. 12:27), and should bear his name (Acts 4:12); hence God's children should be called Saints, and the name of the church should be "The Church of Jesus Christ."

3. It is not identical in organization.

(a) The church so long as we have any Bible record thereof had apostles in it. They have none.

(b) The apostolic office continued in the church, and as soon as one apostle passed away another was chosen in his place. See Matt. 10:6; Matthias (Acts 1:22-26); Barnabas and Saul (Acts 13:1-4; also 14:14, 15); James the Lord's brother (Gal. 1:18, 19); Silvanus and Timotheus (1 Thess. 1:1, 2; also 1 Thess. 2:5-7. See also Tertullian's apology, chapter 32; Gieseler's Eccl. Hist. vol. 1, p. 65. See Origen, chap. 2, verse 3.)

(c) The Church of Christ so long as we have any Bible record of it, had prophets in it, such as Agabus (Acts 21:10); four daughters of Philip (Acts 21:8); also John the Revelator. "The church of which I, Samuel Magee, am a member," have none except weather prophets, and as he confesses "are false ones."

(d) Every officer in the church in Christ's time was called of God (See Rom. 10:13-15; Heb. 5:4-6; John 15:16; Acts 13:1, 2; also Acts 20:28), while not an officer in the Christian or Disciple Church even pretends to be called of God.

(e) The Christian or Disciple Church has so-called elders in the church, but they do not claim to have been called of God, while elders in New Testament times were called by revelation. (See Acts 20:28.)

(f) The Christian or Disciple Church has so-called deacons who do not claim to possess or be filled with the Holy Ghost, while deacons in Christ's time were filled with the Holy Ghost. (See Acts 6:3.)

(g) They have no officers specifically known as teachers, as there were in Christ's Church. (See Eph. 4:11.)

(h) There is not an officer in the Christian Church that has the divine qualification for officiating in Christ's Church; viz, a call from God.

4. They are wrong in faith.

(a) Their faith is historical or theoretical, and not practical. They teach that God operates by his Spirit only through the Bible, while the Bible teaches that man can pray and receive a personal acknowledgement of his prayer. (See James 1:15; John 7:17; Acts 17:26-28.)

(b) They teach the changeability of God in that he has changed his plan of operation and his manner of blessing men in that he bestowed blessings on men in New Testament times and now withholds them.

5. The Christian or Disciple Church is wrong in teaching because,

(a) They say "the Bible and Bible alone," while Jesus said, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth" (John 17:17); hence Jesus did not confine himself to the New Testament, but his creed was, "All truth."

(b) The Bible is but the record of God's word. And God never held any man responsible, neither has he ever punished any man unless that man has first heard his word from himself direct or through a living representative. (See Mark 16:16-19.)

(c) Man cannot obey the will or law of God unless there is an administrator who is authorized to administer. See Philip, a man sent from God at Samaria (Acts 8:5-17); Paul, a man sent from God at Ephesus (Acts 19:1-6).

Cornelius had to send to Peter, a man authorized of God. (Acts 10:1-8.) Saul had to have Ananias, who was a man sent from God to induct him into the kingdom. (Acts 9:1-18.)

(c) The Christian or Disciple Church teaches that certain ordinances are done away, while Christ says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away."

6. The Christian or Disciple Church is wrong in ordinances.

(a) They have an historical faith and not a practical, spiritual one.

(b) They teach a repentance devoid of real operation of the Spirit, while Christ said the Spirit was "to convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." (See John 16:7-12.)

(c) They ridicule a conversion independent of the New Testament Scriptures and through the Spirit's operation, while Paul was converted in a miraculous way without the New Testament Scriptures (Acts 9); three thousand on Pentecost (Acts 2).

(d) They teach that an unbaptized man without even a command from God, who knows not God, yea, "even a Pagan," can baptize another and the act be legitimate and recognized of God, while there is no warrant in the Bible for such a claim.

(e) They teach that a man can obtain a remission of sins through baptism, even if he is not baptized for the remission of sins. There is no warrant in the Bible for this.

(f) They teach that anyone can baptize. This is contrary to Scripture. (See John 1:6; 15:16.)

(g) They baptize men into the name of Christ, while the Bible teaches that we should be baptized in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. (Matt. 28:19, 20.)

(h) They teach that an immersion under water alone is baptism, while the baptism taught by Christ was one administered by a legal officer.

(i) They deny the direct operation of the Holy Spirit.

They claim to be identical with the church at Jerusalem and Antioch, and yet deny the manifestations of the Holy Spirit, while they had the gifts of the Holy Spirit at Jerusalem, (Acts 2,) also at Antioch, (Acts 13). They do not have the spiritual gifts in their church the same as were in the church so long as we have any record in the New Testament or history.

7. We read that God placed in the church, first apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues; and as they do not have these in the Christian Church, they are not identical with Christ's Church.

Hence the Christian Church is wrong.

1. In name.
2. In organization.
3. In teaching.
4. In ordinances.
5. In worship.
6. In practice.

TO THE SAINTS.

TO WHOM this may concern, greeting: Trusting that you are interested in the Publishing Department of the Church to that degree that you will put forth an extra effort to further its interest in every reasonable way possible, we adopt this method of suggesting for your consideration various methods by which you may promote its interests and benefit yourself and those in whose welfare you are interested:—

1. If you are not a subscriber to the Church Periodicals, HERALD, Hope, and Autumn Leaves, we suggest that you subscribe for them, or such of them, as you think you can afford, and are best adapted to your wants, or the wants of your family.

2. If you are already a subscriber, is your subscription paid up? If not, the interests of the work would be promoted by seeing that it is paid as soon as possible.

The amount due the office from those in arrears for subscription is very large, which if paid would relieve us from paying quite a large amount of interest and furnish means for actual necessities that are constantly pressing upon this department of church work; therefore notice your colored labels carefully, and if in arrears, do something for us at once.

The colored label will show the date to which we have you credited as having paid, and is the only account that is kept with subscribers, so that your account is always before you just as we understand it, except that two or sometimes three weeks may elapse, from the time we receive the money before change of date may appear. There are several ways in which errors may occur in these dates, but a record is kept of all moneys received, and letters are kept on file, so that if any errors are noticed, drop us a postal card that it may be corrected at once.

3. If you have not purchased the books of the Church, we would call your attention to our Catalogue of Publications, and urge you to not only purchase them yourself but get them before your neighbors and friends as much as possible. Cannot each one to whom this may come do something to aid the good cause, by getting additional subscribers for the periodicals, or circulating books and tracts? The necessities of the times and the work intrusted to us demand that we each do something to aid the cause we love. Address, David Dancer, Lamoni, Iowa.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. I. YOUNG, writing from Foster, Bates county, Missouri:—

Since I baptized the preacher, the Baptists have raged; at last they got a man to come and expose "Mormonism" as they term it, which will take place June 1. I cannot be here, but Bro. Rowland will be and will take notes. He is the one that I baptized and he will look after the gentleman. I will reply, June 9. I am preaching every Sunday. There are some who say that when I return they will be baptized; we are laboring through the week.

Bro. T. W. Chatburn in a brief note says of the debate at Blendsville, Missouri:—

The debate ended with all the sentiment of the people in our favor. Three baptized at the beginning of debate and two at the close.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

FATHER T. P. GREEN, of Jeffersonville, Illinois, requests prayer by the brethren and sisters for restoration to health. Bro. Green is a veteran in the service in which he still desires to continue as health permits.

Bro. H. O. Hatch, Hartford, Michigan, has "twelve or thirteen volumes of the HERALD, nearly all complete" which he wishes to sell. Bro. Andrew Hall of Council Bluffs, Iowa, has complete volumes of the HERALD—beginning with the first number we think, which he also offers for sale. Those interested should write these brethren.

Bro. L. T. Pew, Low Banks, Ontario, asks prayer for a sister of the Low Banks branch who is very sick.

Bro. Joseph Maxon, of Bannings, Fayette county, Pennsylvania, formerly connected with the William Bickerton movement, writes stating his conclusion to accept the Reorganization and ordering its publications.

The United States Government has been experimenting with the kindergarten system among the Indians with such success that the extension of the system to many reservations has been decided upon. The young Indian children had been shy and almost unapproachable in many cases until the kindergarten system of instruction was established among them, since which time they have made rapid progress.

A request comes from Sr. N. V. Pearson, of Haman Post Office, Gorzales county, Texas, for an elder to visit that point soon, the second Sunday in July preferred for special reasons. Some are interested and extend the invitation.

The minutes of the Lamoni College Board of Directors will be found elsewhere in our columns. Those interested in this educational movement will read them with pleasure.

P. P. Kelley, Esq., of Glenwood, Iowa, counsel for the church in the late Temple Lot litigation and member of the Board of Directors of Lamoni College, has been visiting Bishop E. L. Kelley while attending the sessions of the board.

Sr. Cynthia Cato, Eureka, Kansas, June 5:—

We do not expect to remain longer than September. We hope to go where crops are more certain and there is plenty of fruit. We expect to go southeast into Missouri or Arkansas. We have lived in Arkansas and like it very much. Eureka is in spiritual darkness. If any of the brethren pass through we would be glad to have them stop.

We have received from the publishers — Messrs. Funk and Wagnalls, New York, "Five Minute Object Sermons to Children," by Sylvanus Stall, D. D. It contains forty-three brief sermons to children, with an object lesson from everyday life. In each five-minute discourse the author seeks to present to the eye and ear important truths of the gospel to the ready comprehension of young and old. The aim has been to be childlike, but not childish. The author has entered upon an important field that might well be occupied by others. The price of the book is $1.00. Address the publishers.

Letters are received from Srs. Annie Derrickson and Lizzie Parker, of Missouri Valley, Iowa. Work in their branch continues to the good of the cause there and in the surrounding country. They find plenty to do and enjoy the blessing of God in doing it.

Sr. Mary Trengove, one of the isolated Saints, requests the remembrance of prayer in her behalf that she be sustained in faith to do the will of the Master.

Bro. Heman C. Smith departed for his field—the Rocky Mountain mission—on the 5th inst.

Bro. J. R. Lambert arrived from an extended tour into Illinois, on the 3d.

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus,
Ye soldiers of the cross;
Raise high the royal standard,
It must not suffer loss."

EARNEST WORDS OF MISS SHAW.

A HIGHLY esteemed friend has sent us San Francisco papers containing accounts of the Woman's Congress recently held in that city, and from these we have gleaned the following earnest, truthful words, and commend them to the thoughtful reading of the Daughters of Zion especially.

"Miss Shaw is a graduate of the Boston University in the regular collegiate course," said Dr. McLean in introducing her to the audience. "She has also taken a medical degree in the same university. At that time she was already an unordained preacher. She was at one time a pastor in two denominations at the same time—the Protestant Methodist and the Congregational. I take great pleasure in introducing her to you."

Then Miss Shaw began in a very soft voice, which gradually rose until it filled the great church with its rich tones. She announced that her text was that thirteenth verse in the sixteenth chapter of First Corinthians where Paul shows himself most the true reformer.

"Every reformer must be sure of his victory, as though it was not sometimes hundreds of years in the future," Miss Shaw said. "The keynote of this passage of Scripture is the key of the Christian's character. Now character is what we are. Reputation is merely what other people think of us. No man's character is greater than himself.

The character which all of us shall carry on and on is the character we begin the eternal life with.

"I want it to be understood that when I say 'man' I include both men and women. It used to be that when 'man' was used and it meant suffering and self-denial, it included men and women, but when it meant power, glory, and triumph, it only applied to the males.

"So when I say that it is the duty of all men to be strong, I mean it is the duty of all women, too. There is a great deal of sickly sentimentality about heredity. We call crime a disease, but we forget that every man is responsible for his own sin. I believe that the gospel of John the Baptist needs to be preached now more than anything else. 'Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand.'

"I have heard more about environment in the last ten years of my life than ever I did before. A man is usually quite as responsible for his circumstances as his circumstances are for him. God only commands when he gives his human children the power to obey.

"Now, then, how shall a man be strong? The first of the three most important things is moral courage. We call on physical courage with a great cry. There was a time when the world needed it, but that time is past. A man must have the moral courage, after the truth of God has entered into his soul, to stand by that truth. It is a hard thing to turn away from social conventionalities until people draw themselves away lest touch contaminate.

"And yet there was never a time when the Lord called his people away with a plainer call than now. It is a very easy thing to spring into a pit and save a nation while the world looks on applauding. But it is a very different thing to sacrifice silently, spat upon, smitten, as Christ was. But the men and women who have uplifted the world have made these silent sacrifices.

"I know there are people who say women should not participate in government because their biceps are not strong enough to fight with. It is true that government is founded on power, but it is not physical power.

"The man of strong character must have faith in God. No man has ever lifted the race toward higher power who has not been able to place his hand in that of an infinite power. There never has been and never could be a state of atheists. There is nothing in atheism to draw men together. The men of strong character who have been the force of the world have been those who had faith in God.

"I do not know how it is in this part of the country, but with us there are very few men in the churches. The young men think that religion is something very well for old men and women, but there is something sentimental about it, and it is no thing for young and strong men. They have not yet learned that the strong man is the man of God. The strong man must be possessed of uncompromising obedience to God. The man who is fit to be a teacher and reformer is the man who can obey orders. God has given to each one of us, if not a harp of divine song, a soul so divinely attuned that if we will but listen we can hear the voice of God himself. The child of God, strong of moral courage and obedient to commands, is able to hear the voice of God.

"I believe that God speaks to-day as plainly as he ever has in the history of the race. No true thing can come to us from any other source. In these better days we have come to see that whatever God has made is good and that no man has any more right to lay waste his body than his soul. The man of strong character is he who can, in the face of temptation, keep himself pure and unsullied.

"You say to me, 'That is a hard life.' But it is God's word and his word is always true. It is a high standard. God's standards are always high. If God's standard bearer cannot be seen above the standard bearers of the world all is not well. We are always being told to wait until the world is educated up. How can we wait? How can the world be educated up unless some one stands above it to lift it up?

"And we shall not be alone. God says, 'Lo, I am with you always.' We sometimes think, as we look in the battle-scarred face of some reformer, of the heartaches when they stand alone. But they never stand alone. The Lord never leaves his people, for the child of God is immortal until his work is done.

"Therefore it is for us to do our work whenever it can be done, morning, noon, or night. We must sow the seed broadcast, not knowing which will prosper.

"Then watch ye, stand firm in the faith, be strong."

Dr. McLean said that there was only one hymn available and fit to be sung after that sermon. Then the whole audience stood and sang, "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus."

HELPING HAND.

"IN answer to prayer God has given me more of a contented faith, willing to leave all in his hands, satisfied that this is God's work and that God is true. H. W."

"Our members show a goodly amount of interest and I believe we shall do much for the betterment of this branch and be able to reach some outside the church as well. We have one member who is not a member of the church. C. D. G."

"It is a grand cause and must result in good. I hope and pray for its success as a general organization. A. L. S."

"We begin to see that the time is at hand when we must be at work in earnest. There are but few of us, but we are alive and trying to do all we can. I often think that if we had as many to help along as you have, it would be easier; but then, we lay hold of the promise that where two or three are assembled in His name, he will be there to bless. . . . We have had many good meetings. The Lord has poured out his Spirit upon us; we have been melted to tears, and our prayers have been answered in regard to the sick and they have testified to the same. May God inspire each heart to press forward in the grand work of the last days so that when he comes he may find such faith on earth that we may all receive the welcome plaudit, 'You have done your work well; now receive the reward!' Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her people, your sister, L. B."

FROM THE BRETHREN.

"I feel thankful for the noble work the sisters are doing for the Master. May God bless and prosper them in the same! I. M. S."

"I am glad to know that something is being done to encourage the weak ones and those who have had but little knowledge and experience in that which goes to build up or that which breaks down manhood or womanhood. There are many in the church who might be active workers if they had the knowledge and experience they ought to have, but their powers are latent, they have not been awakened to the duties that are already upon them to perform. My hope is that the Saints will indeed see things aright and act wisely. I have had this experience. When the evil power has the better of me I cannot and do not understand things to be as they really are; but when the good Spirit takes possession, everything seems to be light and understanding. J. W. M."

"The motto of the Daughters of Zion is a good one and should meet with the support of all Saints. C. E. B."

"... I believe it to be a noble work if its aims are carried into effect. ... May God bless you all and your work, and may you indeed be the means of raising the fallen and cheering and supporting the weak. J. M."

"... I am interested in any of the societies of the church and especially one which has the interests of the family for its object, as I believe the Daughters of Zion have. E. E."

"... I only can say, God speed you in your labor of love. C. P. F."

"... I am in full accord with the aim and object of the Daughters of Zion and verily believe the movement to be of divine origin as one of the 'helps' ordained of God to better the condition of earth's children and believe its influence has been felt for good in the prosecution of the great work we love. ... Hoping and praying for the prosperity of Zion's cause in all its departments and the benedictions of heavenly grace upon all her children, W. J. S."

"... The new education that is to raise your motto above the ordinary line of sentimentality calls for teachers and workers whose life experiences permit counsel, suggestion, or advice that is not found in the three books of the church. To promote social purity first among all the potent influences within your reach is to secure by all means possible the more widely and universally diffused idea of responsibility, to advise the coming generation of mothers of the slaughter of the innocents that has been, and now is, going on, not only in the world, but within the pale of the church of God—which ignorance of not only spiritual but mental and physical law, permits us all to see, if we only have eyes open to see. The sooner the church universally learns that the remedy for the slow and painful growth which manifests itself in so many if not all quarters, lies in a better understanding of universal law as adapted to every and all the conditions of life, the better it will be for her. A false and terribly fatal modesty has hindered necessary progress in the past. Happily there are signs, in certain quarters, of improvement, but it is a hard matter as yet, in many rural districts especially to get the burdened and overworked mother to understand the secrets of her own being, her Christian right, or her ability in all cases to inform herself upon tabooed subjects, or questions that lie beyond the practical grasp of her mental faculties. Let us remember that we shall have to do better than our fathers have done, or, with our present opportunities and the demand of the times, we shall not even 'do as well.' M. H. B."

MOORHEAD, Iowa.

Dear Sisters:—As I do not often see any letter from here I thought I could not spend this Sabbath afternoon better than to try to write a few lines. My desire is to ever be found trying to do something to further on this good work, although I can do but little. I love the gospel of Christ and think that it is about all that is worth living for. All else is sorrow and disappointment. But having the gospel of Christ I desire to bear with patience all the trials and afflictions that it is the Lord's will for me to pass through. I suffer a great portion of the time with the rheumatism and desire the prayers of the Prayer Union in my behalf, that if it is the Lord's will I may be healed.

I will relate an experience we had in our branch the past summer. You know it was very dry here as well as elsewhere. Our crops were suffering and the prospects were that we would not raise anything. The Saints appointed a day of fasting and prayer that the Lord would send rain that we might not suffer for the lack of crops. We met, a band of truly humble, united Saints, and the Lord heard and answered our prayers, for we had a good, soaking rain before the morning of the next day.

It ran along dry again for three or more weeks and the crops were suffering again. Another day of fasting and prayer was appointed and the result was another good rain, and we raised fair crops, some of us good ones. I relate this to prove that the Lord does hear and answer prayer when we come down in the depth of humility and humbly put our trust in him. I hope this will strengthen some of the weak and disappointed ones. Your sister, S. T.

RHODES, Iowa, May 28.

Editors Herald:—There is a little band of Saints here who are trying to keep the campfire blazing, and who forsake not the assembling of themselves together from time to time to worship God.

No converts are being made that we know of, and sometimes the prospect appears very gloomy; but notwithstanding this we believe the work is gaining ground here, though almost imperceptibly. The Saints are gaining favor in the eyes of the people, at least; and not by compromising truth either.

Bro. William Thompson, one of our missionaries in this district, visited us on the 10th inst. and spent six days with us, preaching seven discourses; five at the house of Bro. Nirk, and two in the M. P. church; that people kindly giving up their regular prayer meeting night that Bro. Thompson might occupy. The people seemed pleased with the preaching, one man declaring it to be the best sermon he ever heard in that church. Bro. Thompson showed the people in a mild, kindly, though forceful manner the necessity of a unity of faith among the people of God; and that his servants should all speak the same things. He showed how the heathen had become confused and disgusted with the Christian religion because the missionaries who are sent to preach, preach different gospels. His teaching to the Saints was excellent, and breathed the Spirit of the Master. How well our Savior knew the needs of his people when he said to Peter, "Feed my sheep;" for it seemed indeed like manna to the hungry soul, as this is the first time we have been favored with a visit from our missionaries since our June conference, in '94. Bro. Nirk, the president of our branch, is also the president of the district, and his duties in the district keep him away from home most of the time; so it is only on rare occasions that we have the pleasure of having him among us. Bro. Thompson met with us and took part in our little Sunday school also, and talked to us encouragingly of the work which we are endeavoring to do, which made us feel like pressing on. Notwithstanding our little school being organized under such unfavorable circumstances, having no public place to hold it, and not having the coöperation of all the Saints, it has prospered, and is growing in interest and numbers. More than half the children who attend belong to families who are not members of our church.

We are glad to see the traveling ministry taking such an interest in Sunday school work. While they have little time for personal work in the school, they have many opportunities to drop words of counsel and encouragement to the workers; who need every help possible. We are sorry that all Saints cannot see and understand the great necessity for such a work. But so it is, and we can only pray that the time will hasten when none who have become acquainted with the gospel and been made partakers of the heavenly light by the gift of the Spirit will withhold their assistance from anything that the church indorses, which is elevating and instructive in its nature and calculated to lead us to a higher plane, and give us a clearer knowledge of God.

And I want to say to the busy workers, not only in the Sunday school but in every department of church work, persevere. Though duty may at times seem a task, and your way all hedged up, and you have scarcely light enough for one step more, the poet says:—
Each little humble step I take the gloom clears from the next.

And, so it is. We need not see any great distance ahead. 'Tis better that we should not. For if the future holds for us bright, happy days, and victories such as we have never yet been able to achieve with sunny skies and flowery plains, seeing these ahead we would not have patience for the toil, and burdens, and homely duties of to-day; while, on the other hand, if looking ahead we saw a steep, rough, thorny path over which our weary feet must pass, fraught with danger, disappointment, and bitter tears, I fear we would faint with our journey incomplete. Let us be content, then, to walk by faith rather than by sight.

"What though before me it is dark,
So dark I cannot see;
I ask but light for one step more;
'Tis quite enough for me."

Knowing our duty to-day let us faithfully perform it, trusting God to mark out the way for to-morrow.

"Let nothing be done through strife or vain-glory," but all for the glory of God and for the good of his work.

With a perfect faith in the ultimate triumph of this latter-day work, I am,
Your sister in the gospel,
MATTIE HUGHES.

RADCLIFFE, Iowa, June 4.

Editors Herald:—I left home May 1 for my present field of labor, the Des Moines district, preaching at various places till our conference convened. On June 1 I was at Head Grove, Wright county. It has been quite a pleasure to labor among former acquaintances and I believe I have enjoyed the Spirit of the Master in my work so far.

The Sunday school work is yet in its infancy in this district. Many of the Saints do not realize the good that may be done by this means, both to themselves and the world. Why a branch with sixty members cannot have a Sunday school is to me a conundrum, when Sr. Davis, of Flagler, has been conducting and maintaining a Sunday school alone, successfully, since, the scattering of the Saints and disorganization of their branch, which never was very large. She might now be called an old lady and has to labor under physical disabilities. Where there is a willingness to labor for God, opportunities are many and a continued effort in the right direction will tell for good in the end. I do not think a branch of the church is complete without a Sunday school.

It was to me a real pleasure to meet the Saints at Head Grove. They seemed to be so earnest in the work and have a good Sunday school. Bro. Lewis, superintendent, has the work at heart. Their entertainment on the evening preceding conference was well rendered. The sisters are proving themselves to be good helpers in this work and are found in the front ranks on the Sunday school question.

I came here yesterday with Bro. Jacobs. Commence meetings in the Christian church to-night.

In bonds,

WILLIAM THOMPSON.

TRENTON, Missouri, June 4.

Editors Herald:—I left home May 7, and went out to Wakenda branch, in Ray county, and preached twice in the Saints' church. I went from there to Dawn, in Livingston county, and preached five nights in Bro. Shenogle's house. I then went to Grunday county, eight miles south of Trenton and procured the use of a Baptist church, where I preached five nights. The interest was fair. Will try to open up in Bramer if I can get any place to occupy. Bramer is in Caldwell county.

In bonds,

R. L. WARE.

HAVEN, Iowa, May 28.

Editors Herald:—The work is onward here. Bro. C. Scott has been with us and did effective work. He came to hold the discussion with Elder Gray of the Campbellites or Disciple Church, but for want of a suitable place it was deferred till July 22 then we put him to work here. Bro. McCoy got the M. E. church at Haven and Bro. Scott held forth, and if ever the people heard the gospel they did there. They were greatly interested and much good was done and prejudice removed. It is the first time they would open the house for the Saints, and now we can get it most any time they do not occupy it.

We then commenced meetings at Richland schoolhouse and had good interest. We had the pleasure of baptizing two dear souls into the kingdom; so the work is onward in these parts. May the Lord bless Bro. Scott with health so he can remain in the field. Such noble men as he is ought to be encouraged by the Saints and as the apostle says, "esteem them highly for the work's sake." May God bless all the ministry everywhere and raise up friends to them. By what I can learn the work is onward all over the district. So may it continue.

Ever praying for Zion,

GEORGE W. SHIMEL.

AMARILLO, Texas, May 22.

Editors Herald:—Bro. A. J. Moore has just left us, with the promise to return this fall. He was here six days and preached six times, doing much good and allaying prejudice to a great extent. I am satisfied his timely visit here will be felt later on, and I hope many will be led to embrace the truth and cast their lot with us. The Baptists held a protracted meeting all the time our services were going on. There was no talk of a meeting being held in the town until I had made the announcements for our services. We were not to be allowed to proceed and have the field to ourselves; but notwithstanding the opposing forces we had a good number of people attend, and I am sure we will get more the next time. Three were baptized, which were largely the fruit of seed sown by Bro. W. T. Maitland, who worked hard to establish the work in this part of the country. He was instrumental in bringing me into the work, and would not let a chance pass to talk on the subject of the gospel to anyone; would be up early and late telling the glorious news. Bro. Maitland sacrificed his business for the work in this place, and was at one time threatened with being run out of town for proselyting among the other flocks.

Bro. Moore is the right man in the right place, and we will be glad to welcome him back to break the bread of life.

Should any elder happen to pass this way we shall be happy to welcome him.

Yours in love,

J. E. NICOLL.

BEAGLE, Kansas, June 3.

Editors Herald:—I am now striving to push gospel work in my field, and would like to hear from all scattered Saints who desire preaching in Central Kansas. My field comprises Central Kansas from east to west. Please write me at Holden, Missouri, my permanent address.

Yours,

R. W. DAVIS.

MENOKEN, Kan., June 5.

Editors Herald:—Bro. J. W. Hudgens and the writer started out for Atchison, Kansas, April 27, to commence the mission work of 1895. We had a good meeting at that place; three were baptized by us while there. On May 6 we left for Effingham to see what could be done there. We found Bro. Thatcher and family to be good Saints and well respected by the people. They obtained the use of the Presbyterian church two evenings for us.

On May 8, we went to Meriden, a distance of ninety-five miles and found kind-hearted Mr. S. G. Crawford and family, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa. By his assistance the use of the Baptist church was had and good crowds came out to hear the truth. One of the noble men of the town, whose name we haven't got at present gave us the use of a good hall which we can have one Sunday in each month. Arrangements have been made to go there the last Sunday in each month. We were told that the M. E. Church pastor of this place spoke despisively of the Latter Day Saints last Sunday. We trust he will be fair-minded enough to first come to hear us, then if fault can be found we will exonerate him from all blame. I trust and hope the good Master will bless the true and honest of the town so they may see the light. On May 13 we went home for a few days' rest, as I was not well. We found Bro. W. W. Blair on the grounds. He did all the Saints good and got the people of Netawaka to come out. I do like to see the leading men of the church come into the mission, as it gives the work a new life. On May 22 arrangements were made to hold meetings at Whiting, in the Christian church. As no interest was taken we closed on the 24th, Bro. J. T. Davis preaching the last time.

On May 27 started for Menoken. Since coming here there have come splendid rains, which were very much needed, and the people are in much better frame of mind, to present the gospel to. We have been tendered the use of the Prairie Home Christian church. It is out in the country, and it is impossible to get the people out week nights, so we have abandoned the country church for the present. Yesterday, June 4, we went to Topeka, a distance of five miles, to see if work could be done there. There is one of our members living there by name C. E. Tillinghast, No. 1336 Western avenue, North. We found the brother and talked matters over as to the best way to commence work, found a house, had meeting last night with quite a good crowd and most excellent attention. We hope good can be done in the city and will report results further on.

The Lord is opening doors on every hand and Bro. Hudgens is getting to be a good workman, and if humble will do good in his day. Should like to hear from any of the Saints in the part of the mission that we are to labor in when you have some point you think needs work. May the Master bless the great work everywhere.

Yours truly,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

SCRANTON, Miss., June 3.

Editors Herald:—I baptized seven of the Sabbath school children of Three Rivers branch yesterday. Two children and a married lady baptized by Bro. Migel the Sunday before, together with one baptized by me the preceeding Sunday, make eleven baptized recently. Expect Bro. Erwin tomorrow.

Original Poetry.

"I AM HIDING IN THEE."

TUNE.—Hiding in thee.

O Savior wilt thou not come nigh with thy help,

My spirit to cheer as it droops in the fray;
And grant me the light of thine own precious self

Ere I stumble and fall 'neath my load in the way.

Thou art my stay, help me I pray;
For thine is the light that can lighten my way.

Offtimes in the gloom of my falt'ring despair
When my spirit is fretful and tuneless my lay,

There comes a sweet song as if voiced in the air,

That "I am the life, and the truth, and the way."

Thou art my stay, help me I pray;
For thine is the light that can lighten my way.

Again when regaining thy light, I can read
How thyself need'st to call for thy help from above,

I glean then that this is the way thou doest lead

To the rivers of life and the fountains of love.
Thou art my stay, help me I pray;

For thine is the light that can lighten my way.

Then let me be fixed with my purpose in life
To walk in the way as thou planned it to be;
And then when the shadows come over my light,

Let me sing the sweet song, "I am hiding in thee."

Thou art my stay, help me I pray;
For thine is the light that can lighten my way.

SUBJECT, INSPIRATION.

I INVITE your attention to a reading of a portion of the first chapter of the Second Epistle of Peter:—

Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me. Moreover, I will endeavor that you may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the daystar arise in your hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

I do not consider it necessary to invite your attention to any particular part of this lesson as a text, but I wish to speak to-night, if I shall be permitted to do so, upon the theme of inspiration. It is a subject upon which there has been much thought and much dispute. I do not propose to-night to discuss all the issues that have been raised in regard to the subject, but simply to impress some thoughts which seem to me to be suggested by this passage in connection with other passages that treat upon the subject. If it is a fact that man can be, or ever has been inspired in the sense in which we understand inspiration, it is the grandest boon that ever God delivered to man. To my mind there is no blessing that man has ever inherited, no privilege that he has ever enjoyed that can be compared with the privilege of being inspired to know the will of God. If I might be permitted to express it in that way, I will say that there are degrees of inspiration; that some men have been more fully inspired than other men. In fact I believe that man is inspired in a sense to do all the good that he ever does. He may not be especially inspired, but in a sense I believe that he receives the inspiration, the disposition, and the desire to do good from the Divine source, and this general inspiration on up to the highest degree of inspiration that man has ever enjoyed comes directly from the divine source of life—from our heavenly Father.

The apostle here speaks of having heard the voice of God, and before he makes the statement says,

We have not followed cunningly devised fables.

He gives as a reason for knowing that it was not a cunningly devised fable that he heard the voice of God when he was in the holy mount with him; and some of us may have thought that this would be the grandest privilege that man could enjoy; that if we could hear the voice of God speaking audible words in our ears, nothing could be better than that; and yet the apostle after having made the statement that they heard the voice of God says: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy"—more sure than that which he had spoken of before wherein he heard the voice of God. There is something, then, more sure, more certain than the hearing the voice of God speak in audible words in the ear of man; and he carries the idea further than that: even this more sure word of prophecy was not the greatest that man can enjoy, but he says,

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the daystar arise in your hearts.

This prophecy that he speaks of he says we would do well to take heed to, and I believe that this word of God which we call prophecy, the proclaiming of future events, is one of the best evidences of the inspiration of the Bible and the revelations of God to man that we can have. When we consider it, it is a good thing to convince us of the truth of inspiration. It is something that will lead us to the conviction that God has indeed inspired man. When we see transpiring before our eyes the things that were foretold hundreds and perhaps thousands of years before they transpired our faith is stronger. But when we shall have been convinced that inspiration from God is a fact, and that man or woman can be enlightened by the Divine Spirit of the Almighty, this prophecy and this evidence of divine inspiration is a secondary matter, and the inspiration we receive within ourselves and the knowledge we receive within ourselves is first, and best,—grander than the evidence that comes to us either by the voice of God himself or by prophecy which men have written in olden times.

The reason why I believe that the voice of God is not the best thing that we can have, is because it is possible that God may speak by the audible voice to us and we not comprehend what he says. He may deliver to us the mysteries of the kingdom of God, but our minds, if they are darkened, will not be able to comprehend the meaning of his words; hence when we hear the voice of God speaking to us, it is not the best thing that we can have. The best that we can have after having been convinced that this doctrine is right is when the day dawns and we feel the quickening power of the Spirit of God; when the day-star arises in our hearts and we get the inspiration in our souls and our minds and hearts. This is better than hearing a voice that we do not comprehend. If we could have both it would be glorious, but considering them separately, the comprehension alone is better than the voice alone. I would not care to have God talk with me unless I could comprehend the meaning of his words. But if in connection with the voice of God I can have that understanding imparted to me that I can comprehend his sayings and know his will, then I have the highest degree of inspiration that is necessary for me to have in the condition that I am placed. The apostle here says, Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Now the question arises, How were they moved to speak? Did God take possession of their organs of speech and use them, talk through them, and cause that they should speak his word? or, did they retain their identity and their individuality during the time? And did God impart the light to their mind so that when they spoke they spoke intelligently to themselves instead of simply speaking words as they were moved upon by a power using them as you would use a machine? Which is the best? I believe that it is possible, and probably under some circumstances God has given the first kind of inspiration,—that God has taken and spoken through men when they did not really comprehend what they were speaking, that he has spoken through them the words that he desired should be uttered; that they were taken possession of and their individuality was swallowed up and they were made to say what they did say; but I do not believe that is the best kind of inspiration for us. It may be necessary under some circumstances that some such revelations be given. Some might think it was the best from the fact that it was absolutely correct, but it does not make any difference how correct it is, how high it may be, from what elevated standpoint it may have been spoken. If the mind is not made to comprehend it as it goes along, it is lost; that is all there is to that. We don't proceed upon that principle when trying to impart information to others. When we send our children to the public school if the teacher knows his business he does not speak words that are far beyond the comprehension of the child, but he speaks according to the ability of the child to understand, always, of course, a little in the lead;—always suggesting something in advance of what the child already knows; but he confines himself to such questions as the child can comprehend, and when he does that he leads the child onward and upward to the comprehension of higher principles, until by and by he can speak his own mind and can talk with the child upon the advanced principles of science so that he can comprehend it. So I believe it is with God. He does not speak from the highest standpoint of intelligence always, but adapts himself to our capacity when he speaks and tells us the things that we are competent to comprehend, always, of course, a little in advance and beckoning us onward, suggesting to us something that we did not know before, but which is within reach of our capacity, until he leads us step by step to higher and grander thoughts.

The other way seems, as I stated, to be a little the safest because of the fact that if man's intelligence is not used at all and his agency is entirely swallowed up and destroyed it would be more likely to be exactly correct; but at the same time the effect would not be the best; and so it seems to me that though there is danger of being deceived by spiritual influences, when we retain our identity and our individuality, and think and comprehend as we go along, yet with that danger is coupled the fact that the results will be better if we are not deceived, and if we comprehend what we say. If we comprehend what is revealed to us as we proceed we are instructed in a far better way than we would be if God spoke to us things that are beyond our comprehension—so far beyond it that it would be impossible for us to conclude what he means. It seems to me from reading the Bible and from reading the other records that we accepted as the revelations of God that this has been God's plan of dealing with men; hence when I read the Bible I do not read it as a standard of God's intelligence always. It may be possible, as the skeptic has often affirmed, that the revelations contained in the book or some of the things revealed there claiming to be by revelation very intelligent men could comprehend without a revelation. I believe that is so; but, as I stated before, I do not read it as being the standard of God's intelligence, but it is adapted to the capacity of those that are spoken to. There may be a revelation come to me to-day that would be useful to me, and enlighten me, and yet you might comprehend more than that revelation expressed and it would be useless to you. You could not in justice weigh God by that revelation and say, "The Author doesn't know as much as man knows or as much as I know;" because he is not speaking from his standpoint or expressing all he knows. He is talking to me, and as I happen to be a little more ignorant than you are in regard to the subject, he tells me things I need to know. If we are so far advanced in this age of the world as some of us think we are, if we understand principles better than is expressed in the Bible, that is no evidence against the inspiration. Why, the fact is that the people back there, to whom God spoke didn't know as much perhaps as we know in regard to those things, and God spoke to them and he told them something they didn't know, whether you know it or not. So I say I don't read the Bible or any other revelation given by God as expressing the full capacity of God's intelligence. I do not judge it from that standpoint, but from the standpoint that it is adapted to the capacity of those spoken to, or to him through whom God speaks.

There is no better illustration of this point or any better confirmation of it than the statement made by Alma contained in the Book of Mormon. For the benefit of those who believe the Book of Mormon I quote this as authority, and to those who do not believe it to be a divine record I would recommend the thoughts expressed here for their consideration. It is said here:—

And now Alma began to expound these things unto him, saying, It is given unto many to know the mysteries of God; nevertheless they are laid under a strict command, that they shall not impart only according to the portion of his word, which he doth grant unto the children of men.—Alma 9: 2.

Those who know the mysteries of the kingdom of God are to impart to the people that which God intends for the people; so when we read statements made by the prophet of God, (one who has communicated with God,) we should not come to the conclusion that it is the expression of all that God knows in regard to the subject. It may not be the expression of all the prophet knows in regard to it, but is simply the revealing of that which God intended for the people to whom it was given. If we look at it from this standpoint, I think we will discover by examination that every revelation given in any age of the world, as contained in these books, was adapted to the peculiar condition of the people to whom it was given; and they were only given a part sometimes because they were not qualified to comprehend the whole. Just as I stated before about the teacher that teaches the infant class, he teaches only what the class is able to comprehend and is under strict obligations not to impart everything to the child, because it cannot comprehend it. Continuing, Alma says:—

Nevertheless they are laid under a strict command, that they shall not impart only according to the portion of his word which he doth grant unto the children of men; according to the heed and diligence which they give unto him.—Ibid.

It is weighed by that. He is to impart unto the children according to the diligence and heed that they give unto the law, and if their diligence and heed is not what it ought to be, then they will not get so much inspiration of God, or of the revelations of God, as they would if they put themselves in better condition. Now every one of the elders who has ever been in the field preaching the gospel realizes the truth of that statement from practical experience. We go into a neighborhood to preach and if the minds of the people are open to receive the word of God,—if they have been living humble and seeking for truth, and they are just ripe to receive the word of God, we have liberty of the Spirit to tell it to them, and we rejoice in the presentation of it. We and they rejoice together; the hearer and the speaker comprehend each other, and so their ministrations are a benefit to both. But if the people there are estranged from God and do not desire the truth,—if their minds are closed up so they are not willing to hear, and investigate, and try the doctrine, then you don't feel the same liberty to impart to them; you are laid right at that time under strict obligations not to impart to the people only that portion that is necessary to them according to the heed and diligence which they give unto God. That principle, as I stated before, is demonstrated in our experience everywhere we go; and it is probably to some extent demonstrated to all others who essay to teach the gospel of Christ, whether they agree with us or not. But here is a serious thought in connection with this as we read on:—

And therefore he that will harden his heart, the same receiveth the lesser portion of the word.—Ibid.

Now when we are reading the word of God we want to take that into consideration. If the people are a hard-hearted people that have not given heed unto the commandments, we may expect, as we read it, that it is the lesser portion of the word of God, and so don't watch it from the standpoint that it reflects all the wisdom of God. When you read a revelation to the Jews or other people, consider it from the standpoint of their needs. If they have been hard-hearted, then they receive a lesser portion; you needn't expect to find anything but the lesser portion when you read it:—

And he that will not harden his heart, to him is given the greater portion of the word, until it is given unto him to know the mysteries of God, until they know them in full.—Ibid.

Now there is a possibility that a man may arise to that degree of acceptability before God that he may know the mysteries of the kingdom of God in full. Then he may receive the fullness of the gospel and the fullness of God's will concerning him; at least he is prepared to understand more than he did before. But if God had told him this fullness before, he had a disposition to understand it, when his heart was hardened and his disposition was not to heed the word of God, it would be lost upon him. So I say the effect of his speaking thus, if he spoke in an audible voice, is not so good as the inspiration that comes to the mind and enlarges it and expands it so he can comprehend God and know the fullness of his truth.

We are given to understand here by the Prophet Alma, that this is a dangerous condition for a man to be in. Even though he may receive the word of God, if he only receives a part of it, he is not prepared for the greatest good, and the consequence is that as he hardens his heart he receives the lesser portion all the time until he goes into darkness. God is striving long with him, revealing to him the little portion he is able to comprehend, and if he does not prepare and develop himself to get more and more, he gets less and less until he gets down in the dark. That is what he says right here:—

And they that will harden their hearts, to them is given the lesser portion of the word, until they know nothing concerning his mysteries; and then they are taken captive by the devil, and led by his will down to destruction.—Ibid.

They get less and less all the time because they do not develop and are not prepared to comprehend the will of God. They get to doubting and harden their hearts against it, and then they are not so well prepared as they were before. Here is the danger of depending solely on past revelations. We may feed upon the lesser portion of the word of God continually until we get so little that we are not prepared to resist the overtures of the adversary and he takes us and leads us down to destruction at his will. To my mind that seems reasonable.

It is evidently the opinion of Alma that man receives according to his capacity and willingness to understand, and that degrees are given to men according to the way they use their privileges and liberties granted unto them. And I have thought possibly that this people, that the church to-day, has not received as much revelation from God or as great a portion of the word of God as they should have done, because of the fact that they have not sufficiently developed themselves to comprehend more. This thought is suggested when I read in the revelations for years that are past so many temporary provisions. He often reveals something temporary in its character and does not reveal the permanent rule by which we are to be governed in some things, but says that until such and such thing shall occur you shall do so and so. It may be possible that we have not lived so as to be worthy to receive that which is to be of a permanent character, and we had just as well look into it a little individually and collectively, and see if we cannot make an improvement in that regard and come up a little higher, and so use our privileges by living so humbly and contritely before God that we can be prepared to receive a greater portion of his will, so that temporary provisions may not be necessary so much, and permanent regulations may be given for the carrying on of his great work. I think it possible; it is worthy of thought at least. To take this into consideration and ask ourselves the question if this is not the reason why we have not received a greater portion of his word, and the reason why we have not received permanent directions by which to establish the church more fully than it has been established is commendable.

Now the last time that the Lord spoke to us he said that certain things were not yet expedient and that certain things should be done at a certain time, for reasons that shall appear in due time. It seems to me then, that we are not able to comprehend these reasons or they might appear now, and if we were better able to comprehend to-day these temporary provisions might not have been made; but God might have given us a greater portion of the word of God than he has. Now this may not be the correct solution of it, but I think it is worthy of thought. Should we not take that into consideration and see if we cannot discover where we can make an improvement in that regard and be better prepared to receive the word of God? The Prophet Alma affirms that if we are prepared and harden not our hearts we will receive a greater portion of the word of God. Right in harmony with this statement is the statement of the Master when he said to the people in his time that because of the hardness of their hearts Moses wrote unto them a certain precept.

And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept.—Mark 10: 5.

If they had been in a condition to receive the higher law, this thing would not have been done. He said that explicitly in regard to one precept mentioned there and indirectly in regard to many others. Upon this very principle they were not able to comprehend more, hence they had the lesser portion of God's will; and it was so little, friends, that it gendered to bondage. Paul said in those olden times, that when God spoke to the people he gave them a law that gendered to bondage. Now they might have had a greater portion of the word of God according to the principles here expounded by Alma if they had been prepared for it, but because of the hardness of their hearts God did not give them the greater portion of his word. I want to see this people arise to that condition that they will be able to receive the greater portion of the word of God individually and collectively that they may advance faster and grow more than they ever have done in the past. It may be that we are getting along just as fast as God is willing to have us, but that principle is true or Alma is wrong; and it may apply to us; and it won't hurt us any to think about it.

Looking at it from this standpoint it seems to me that the position taken by the world, especially in opposing this latter-day work, is not a tenable one; for this reason: they tell us that the days of inspiration are past and that men cannot hope to be inspired of God to-day; that God inspired men in times that are past, and they say that this Book is inspired; and every line, every chapter, and every word, some of them tell us, is inspired; and I believe every word of it to be the word of God. Well, if God inspired it, and if inspired men uttered it, do you pretend to tell me that you have sense enough in your own natural capacity without any inspiration from God to understand the sayings of an infinite mind, the revealments of God's will, and that which man in ancient times had to be inspired to know? If you do, you have a better opinion of yourself than I have of you. I believe if God inspired the words that are uttered here, it will take the same degree of inspiration that moved upon the man that spoke it to comprehend it. In fact I believe that the word is not in the strictest sense of the word inspiration. In the sense in which the word is used, I believe the Bible is inspired; but I believe, more properly speaking, that the words written there are the product of inspiration and not the inspiration itself. I believe the inspiration deals with the mind; that God enlarges the perception or understanding, and makes men to comprehend the truth, and the result of their comprehension was the words they spoke. So it is the product of inspiration rather than inspiration itself. And I don't believe that we need inspired truth so much as we need something else. In fact I don't see how you could improve upon a truth by inspiring it. If a thing is true, you will never make it any truer than it is by having it inspired. If it is false, you cannot make it truth by inspiring it. Place two truths one alongside the other and say one is an inspired truth and the other a truth not inspired. The one without the inspiration is just as true as the other. If it is true, it is true; that is all there is about it.

When men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost they were inspired to know the truth, their minds having been enlarged to that extent that they could comprehend God's will. As the influence of God's mind rested upon their minds, enlarging their perceptions and giving them a better understanding of the truth, they rose higher and higher until they could comprehend God,—imperfectly at first, but comprehend him in some things, then enlarging upon their comprehension until after awhile by arising in this scale of progression they were able and worthy to dwell with God and commune with him in the highest sense and receive a fullness of his word. That is the way I look at it.

I am prepared to demonstrate I think, to every thoughtful mind, that a man cannot be saved without he is inspired. I don't care in what age he lived, whether he lived in the times of Abraham, Moses, the prophets, or the days of Jesus Christ and the apostles, or whether he lives now, I lay down as an axiom that truth is infinite; that is, it has no bounds; and I lay down as another proposition that you will all agree to, that the mind of man is finite, limited, bounded, cannot go outside of a certain circle. He may try, he may undertake to soar higher, but he cannot go any farther than certain limits. The mind of man is finite, and truth is infinite and the finite cannot comprehend the infinite. So he cannot be saved if it takes truth to save him. If it takes truth to save a man and he cannot comprehend the truth, then he is lost unless some provision is made for him, and what special provision could there be made that would save him? Why, that that mind which is infinite; that mind which is unlimited, that mind which has no bounds, that knows all things, shall impart to this finite mind the inspiration and the ability to comprehend and enable him to rise above and let his mind soar beyond natural limitations to comprehend the truth, the saving truth that will elevate him, purify him, and prepare him for salvation in the presence of God. If he can get that, he can be saved. If he cannot get that, he never can be saved, I don't care when he lived or how he lived, he cannot be saved without inspiration.

Paul says,

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.—1 Cor. 2: 9.

I suppose he meant the finite ear, eye, and heart. It had not entered into their heart to know anything about it; could not comprehend it; could not think about it. We cannot enjoy anything we never thought of. You could not enjoy a condition that you had no conception of. If you do not know anything about it can you enjoy it, can you ever enjoy the things that God hath in store? Paul says,

But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

Then Paul was prepared to enjoy heaven and the things that God had in store for them that love him. The people that he spoke of when he said, "But he hath revealed them unto us," they were prepared to be saved because God revealed unto them by his Spirit, and the Spirit searcheth all things. We must comprehend, if we would be saved for that is what it will take to save you and to save me. That is the reason why I believe that God didn't intend that we should be dictated to or directed absolutely by anyone; that we were not to be slaves, told to do this or that and required to do it without knowing the reason why; that he ordained the plan and gave the privilege of comprehension upon the part of those who were taught, that they might get the benefit of whatever was revealed to them. If we were just taught to go and do a thing and we did it, without comprehending why we did it, if God dictated to us in that way himself, or if he authorized anyone to dictate to us, whether it be the Pope of Rome or some one else, and we were required to follow his direction as infallible we would never be saved by the things that were revealed. We would simply be moving like machines, as we were moved upon. But when man is told to do anything, he should have an inspiration that would enable him to comprehend and know the reason why. Jesus stated unto his disciples, "Henceforth I call you not servants." It would be a high position for a man to occupy to be a servant of God, but he says something better than that, "for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." (John 15:15.) I have enabled you to comprehend it.

The revelations of the last days are perfectly in harmony with that statement. When the Lord says, as you will find recorded in the fiftieth section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants,

And now come, saith the Lord by the Spirit, unto the elders of his church, and let us reason together.

I am going to reason with you. We cannot reason with him from the standpoint of his intelligence, but he will come down to our standpoint and reason with us, so we can comprehend it, just as we reason with our children, not from the height of our intelligence, but from their standpoint. So God says to the elders of the church,

Let us reason together, that ye may understand: let us reason even as a man reasoneth one with another face to face: now when a man reasoneth, he is understood of man, because he reasoneth as a man; even so will I, the Lord, reason with you that you may understand.—D. C. 50: 4.

He intended that the elders should understand. They would reason, and he would give them reasons that were adapted to their comprehension so they could understand. The Lord would meet them upon ground where they could reason, and then they would be educated by the will of God revealed to them. Now when one man reasons with another the Lord says they understand each other and "even so will I, the Lord, reason with you that you may understand." He is going to give us reasons and going to inspire us and give us comprehension so we will understand. We are not going to be made slaves; he is not going to dictate to us, nor authorize anybody else to do it, no matter who he is. We should understand and comprehend him, and know what we are doing and why we are doing it.

Wherefore I, the Lord, asketh you this question, unto what were ye ordained? To preach my gospel by the Spirit, even the Comforter which was sent forth to teach the truth; and then received ye spirits which ye could not understand, and received them to be of God, and in this are ye justified?—Ibid.

Are ye justified in receiving a spirit that you cannot understand? God does not expect you to do it, but he does expect you to so live that you may understand what he reveals, to live so humbly and have such a desire to receive knowledge from God that your mind may be prepared for it. Then you will get the inspiration that will enable you to comprehend the truth and to know his mind and will. Until you get into that condition you will be in a dangerous condition, for you will be darkened in mind and have less and less of the Spirit of God, until the Devil gets possession and draws you down to destruction. You are not always justified in rejecting a spirit that you do not understand. We should live so we could comprehend what God gives to us. There is a promise that if are hungering and thirsting after righteousness we shall be filled; and it is true.

Behold, ye shall answer this question yourselves, nevertheless I will be merciful unto you; he that is weak among you hereafter shall be made strong. Verily I say unto you, he that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? and if it be by some other way, it be not of God.—D. C. 50: 4, 5.

Now if you preach the truth in any other way than by the Spirit of truth, it is not of God. That is what he says. The truth may be of God, but the preaching is not. If you preach it by your own intelligence, by your own natural gifts, it is not of God. God isn't in it; you are doing that upon your own responsibility. So the revelation says to us, and we want to see to it that when we preach the truth we preach it by the Spirit of God, so that we may enjoy that Spirit, and it may be within us in the interpretation of it to the people. We may be laid, as Alma says, under restriction sometimes and not be able to tell because the people are not able to comprehend; but we want to be governed by that Spirit in preaching always.

And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? If it be some other way, it be not of God: therefore, why is it that ye cannot understand and know that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth, receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth? Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter, and brighter, until the perfect day.—D. C. 50: 5, 6.

Now he that teacheth and he that heareth understand each other, so says the Master. There is no dictation, there is no tyranny, there is no one justified in undertaking to lead people blindly to do as they are directed; but if the people are living right, and the preachers preaching right, they comprehend by the Spirit the word of truth; they understand one another, and they labor together for good. That is the way we want to receive the word of God; live so we can comprehend it and be built up by it. There is no power being exercised by the infinite one above that would force us to do anything without our comprehension. However, we may fail to comprehend sometimes because we do not live as we ought, because we are not as humble as we ought to be, or do not give heed to the word of God; and hence we get less than we otherwise would.

Sometimes when I am thinking about this subject and the condition of the people involved in the great latter-day apostasy, especially in regard to that doctrine that was the distinguishing feature for many years, I think that they were not prepared for the revelations of God to them—even from their own standpoint; for if it be true, as they affirm, that God commanded them to enter into the practice that was made so distinctly a part of their belief, they were not prepared for it; they were not able to comprehend it, nor to rejoice in it. If a man gets so far along as to receive a revelation and is able to comprehend the wisdom of it, it comes to him in light and power, and he rejoices in it. These folks tell me that when it came it brought sadness to them; they did not receive it with gladness; it did not bring joy and satisfaction to their souls, but they said, "It was a hard trial for us, and we saw many sorrowful days; and men and women have been brought unto sorrow and trouble in regard to it, but they submitted to it because it was God's will." Now if they had been prepared for that revelation, which from their standpoint appertained to a righteous principle, it would have come to them joyfully, they would have been prepared for it. Then they were not prepared for it when the Lord told them to quit it either. They had not got so far along in seeking for light that they could comprehend it and quit the practice without grief. I read in ecclesiastical history written by B. H. Roberts, where he gives a history of this doctrine, and he says that "the Latter Day Saints were neither responsible for its introduction nor its discontinuance." The Lord commanded it and they entered into it. And he again says, Government was relentless. In the midst of these afflictions and threatening portents, President Wilford Woodruff besought the Lord in anguish and prayer, and the Lord inspired him to issue the manifesto which discontinued the practice of plural marriage. □

When the manifesto was presented "the people, with hearts bursting with grief submitted to the will of heaven." So says Roberts. Now if they had been prepared for it they would not have been so sad. The culmination of events may bring sadness, but principles of righteousness should beget joy. They did not receive either with joy. If they had been living as they ought to have lived in the sight of God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, they would have been filled with gladness and peace both when it was enjoined and when it was discontinued, or at least at one time or the other. I don't care so far as the argument is concerned, whether it is true or false.

Now, is it not possible that we are not prepared to receive the will of God always? There may be some things come to us in the future that will be grievous for us, but if we are prepared and waiting, longing for the will of God to be revealed to us, and our minds are wrought upon by the inspiration of God's Spirit, if it is revealed by the Spirit of God, the spirit that is within us will comprehend the utterings of the Spirit and it will come to us with gladness and with joy. If it comes to us in pain, it is an evidence that we are not living as we ought to do. I hope we will take this matter into consideration and try to live nearer to God, so as to be worthy of a greater portion of the word of God, and that we may receive more and more, and that our hearts will never break with grief when we have to submit to the will of heaven. It is possible they may though.

This is my standard by which I judge revelations of God. When I read a revelation I don't ask, Does this represent God? Does this represent the highest wisdom of God? Does this represent all that God knows about this subject? No. I ask the question, Is it such a lesson as was needed by the people to whom it was given? Is it adapted to the capacity of those whom God revealed it to? Will it accomplish that that God had in view in educating the people and bringing them up a little higher that they might receive a greater portion of the will of God according to the proposition laid down in the book of Alma? Is it the thing needed? not, Does it represent the highest wisdom of God? I don't suppose that any revelation he ever gave the people was all he knew. I hope we will get more by and by and go on. I look upon the revelations of God as being infallible in that sense that they are true, but not that they are perfect so far as fullness is concerned. There may be more added from time to time, and if the world is not receiving revelation from God now; if they are not being enlightened by it, then there is no advancement whatever, then the world isn't any farther along than it was eighteen hundred years ago. God would speak to them if they were prepared for a portion of his word, and if he doesn't do it, it is a positive evidence to me that the world has been standing still and your boasted enlightenment is a farce. In fact I don't believe that theory about this age being enlightened anyhow in regard to truth. They tell me that this age of the world is enlightened and that the reason that people away back there had to be inspired of God more particularly than now was because they didn't know so much. If it was a question of astronomy, I would admit we know more than they. If it was a question of geometry, chemistry, botany, or anything of that kind, I might admit it; but when we come to talk about the revelations of God, I can't admit it. I don't believe that we know more about the truth as contained in the gospel than they did. We talk about our boasted enlightenment and then say, "O, that I could have lived in the days of the apostles, and sat at their feet, and heard the inspiration that fell from their lips!" What is your object in wanting to go back there now if you know more than they did? It is not a fact that we are moving in the enlightened age of the world in regard to God's truth. These men that God worked with had the privilege of sitting yonder at the feet of Jesus Christ and hearing that memorable sermon drop from his lips, in all its power of inspiration and light, that we only have a synopsis of; and they saw the lame leap as a hart; they saw the eyes of the blind opened, the ears of the deaf unstopped. They stood by the tomb of Lazarus and heard the command, "Lazarus, come forth," and saw the dead heed the voice of the Son of God and live. But that was not the best of it. What they saw and heard was a very small thing compared with the fact as related by Jesus Christ himself when he said in his prayer to the Father,

I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me . . . they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me are of thee.

That is better than seeing, and better than hearing a thousand miracles; and if you do not enjoy that inspiration to-day, don't talk to me about your enlightenment. They are ahead of you in regard to that subject, if in nothing else.

I trust that we will take this matter into consideration and carefully examine it; and if I have said anything that is not in harmony with your views and if you cannot find that my views are sustained by the word of God, I do not ask you to accept them; but my idea is that we are to receive from God the intelligence by inspiration that will enable us to comprehend his word without which the word will be of no avail to us. The word of God when given if the inspiration is not in the heart and in the mind of those who hear, that they may comprehend, is lost upon them, and it does them no good. If we can so live humbly before him as to comprehend God's will we will receive a greater and greater portion of the word of God, and upward and onward we will progress until we are prepared to dwell with God and angels and be able to comprehend the sublimity that God has prepared for us to move in in the bye and bye, when we shall enjoy that which God has in store for them that love him. May God's peace ever be with us, is my prayer.

(Reported for the Herald by Belle Robinson James.)

HALT!

MAY it not be that we are going too far in the organizing societies? There seems to be almost if not quite a craze in that direction. There certainly is danger of forming too many of them. Any man, or company of men, having too much business, is likely to fail in all.

First to receive our attention should be home; next, the church. Is there not danger of neglecting both while attending these many societies?

It may be said these are mainly for the young. Anything that draws them much from home is hurtful to home interests. Enjoyment and useful information should be found at the home, not be too much sought after away from it. The home ought to furnish much of both, and will if it is a real home. But it cannot do so if its inmates are obliged to be out six or seven evenings of the week; and three or four days, attending societies. There should be great care exercised that the attention and interest of the family be not too much directed away from the home. We have just so much time, and the more devoted away from home the less can be at home, the foundation of all good, church included.

Babylon is rushing headlong in that direction, and already many are getting alarmed at the effect their many "blunders" are having on home, and are crying, "Halt!" but find it hard to enforce the command when home discipline is gone, or nearly so; and such will surely be if home interests are not carefully guarded. Home is yet the great bulwark against crime, so let us guard the foundation of our nation and the church with jealous care.

The work done in those societies may be called church work, and these societies be regarded as helps to the church, and in a sense they may be; but let us be careful that we do not get too many helps, and the church and her interests be overlooked. Her work covers about all the good of this life. Some of these societies may be necessary. The Sunday school certainly is, and the Daughters of Zion.

BORN.

FLINN.—Emmet H. and Everett E., twin sons of Bro. D. W. and Sr. Jennie E. Flinn, were born near Pleasant Grove, Missouri, April 10, 1895. They were blessed at the Pleasant Grove church June 2, 1895; the former by T. W. Chatburn and J. M. Terry, the latter by J. M. Terry and T. W. Chatburn.

DIED.

KLEMENSEN.—At Guilford, Missouri, May 28, 1895, Jensine Klemensen, aged 21 years, 3 months, and 26 days. Elder M. P. Madison conducted the funeral services and preached the sermon.

STONE.—Bro. Stephen Stone, of New Canaan, Connecticut, died May 24, 1895. Bro. Stone was a firm believer in the latter-day work and was always ready and willing to do what he could to help on the cause that he loved and to bear his testimony to the truth of the restored gospel. There was quite a large gathering of friends and relatives as a witness that he was well respected in the town in which he had lived for a number of years. Funeral sermon by Elder Joseph Squire.

Do not try to do some great thing or you may waste all your life waiting for the opportunity which may never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they come, from a great motive, for the glory of God, to win his smile of approval, and to do good to men. It is harder to plod on in obscurity, acting thus, than to stand on the high places of the field, within the view of all, and to do deeds of valor at which rival armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and the ultimate recompense of Christ.

To fulfill faithfully the duties of your station; to use to the uttermost the gifts of your ministry; to bear the chafing annoyances and trivial irritations as martyrs bore the pillory and stake; to find the one noble trait in people who try to molest you; to put the kindest construction on unkind acts and words; to love with love of God even the unthankful and evil; to be content to be a fountain in the midst of a wild valley of stones, nourishing a few lichens and wild flowers, or now and again a thirsty sheep, and to do this always, and not for the praise of man, but for the sake of God—this makes a great life.—F. B. Meyer.

OPINIONS ON CHURCH UNITY.

THE Gild of St. James is an organization inside the Protestant Episcopal Church, one of the objects of which is, as stated by The New York Herald (May 19), to bring about a union of the three great Catholic churches—the Roman Catholic, the Greek Catholic, and the Episcopal Church—also to endeavor to promote Christian unity. The Herald publishes a compilation of opinions intended to give a general idea of the subject as viewed by representatives of various denominations, to whom letters were addressed asking if Christian unity is a good idea—a possible one—and would it benefit the churches and the world at large? Of the Protestant ministers the question was asked if they would favor unity with the Roman Church. Of the Roman prelates it was asked what terms of unity their church would offer. We append the gist of a number of replies, as given by The Herald.

Mgr. Satolli, the Apostolic Delegate: "You ask if it is possible. We believe, relying on the promises of Christ, that it is not only possible, but one day it will surely be accomplished. The benefit of such a thing to the churches and the world at large cannot be doubted, since it would mean the end of all religious strife and the living together of mankind in the harmony and peace of unquestioned truth. The Roman Catholic Church is not only willing but most anxious to effect this union, and her head, the Pope, is continually inviting separated Christians to return to that unity which existed at the beginning, when all Christians, laboring together by their concerted action, made such rapid strides in the conversion of the heathen world. As regards the conditions of unity, they would have to be settled on by long and careful deliberation.

"The Church, however, would, of course, stand firm in requiring the acceptance of the entire deposit of Christian truth as possessed by her alone."

The Right Rev. Henry C. Potter, Bishop of the Diocese of New York of the Episcopal Church: "As is the case with most Christian people, I presume I am a friend to Christian unity. The absence of it as an organic fact is an immense evil and the source of an enormous waste of men, means, and energy. But it will not come by conformity to any one communion, as several communions now exist, and to bring it to pass no communion will have to make larger sacrifices than that to which especially you refer—the Church of Rome.

"Happily, the influence of American ideas and institutions is daily producing in this direction a very interesting and hopeful revolution, which, however, is as yet far from complete."

Rev. Theodore C. Williams, of All Souls' Church (Unitarian), New York: "Your scheme for the organic union of all denominations seems to me impracticable. You ask if Unitarian churches would accept the Roman Catholic doctrine as it now is? They could not. . . . I think that all we may now practically accomplish is not ecclesiastical union, but universal toleration and charity. If the present enlightened Pontiff fails to reunite two churches so similar as the Roman and Greek, how can the Gild of St. James look for a reunion of all?"

Rev. Dr. Thomas Gallaudet, of St. Ann's Church, New York, "The grand idea of organic church unity for Christendom has been in my thoughts and prayers for many years. The Roman Catholic Church cannot, in my judgment, unite the various bodies of Christians. It has added too much to the faith once delivered to the saints before divisions came. The system laid down in the Book of Common Prayer is in my opinion, the only one which can bring Christians together in organic unity, so desirable in preaching the full gospel with all its positive institutions and in fighting against the world, the flesh, and the Devil."

Rev. Dr. Henry Y. Satterlee, of Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church, New York. "I beg leave to state that the present movement toward church unity has my hearty cooperation, as well as deep sympathy. So full of promise are all impulses leading to it that we may deem its consummation a matter of time."

Dr. Henry Mottet, Rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York: "In answer to your question, 'Would I or my communion accept the Roman Catholic doctrines as they are?' I would say most emphatically no. The renaissance for which Martin Luther on the continent and the English Reformers stand has settled for all time the fact that the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church as a whole is not the teaching of Christ in the early church."

Rev. J. W. Peters, First Methodist Episcopal Church, Hamilton, Ohio. "If this spirit of unity were realized, there would be harmony in all church work in heathen lands and in denominational work in the south. That spirit would lead churches to think more of the advance of Christ's kingdom than of their denomination, and rivalry would be a shame. . . . We should favor the hope of the coming unity of all disciples, and wait until times are ripe. We cannot go faster than Providence; we shall be happy if we keep step with him."

Rev. Morgan Dix, Rector of Trinity Church, New York. "I will simply say that I do not think there is any value in Christian union apart from Christian unity. In other words, I care nothing for an alliance or confederacy of separate sects, as I think the point to aim at is unity in belief, organization, and worship."

Rev. G. R. Robbins, Lincoln Park Baptist Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. "I am profoundly thankful for all that the Roman Catholic Church has done for art, for architecture, for music, for literature, for betterment of humanity. There is not, however, the faintest shadow of a possibility now or in the future that the Protestant Church will ever unite by accepting the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church."

Rev. Sydney Strong, Walnut Hills Congregational Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. "You ask me a question about church unity. Organic church unity is a dream of the future. Spiritual unity is possible now, at once, and is in a measure realized. Between the best Roman Catholics, Congregationalists, and Episcopalians there is already spiritual unity. As the years go on this will increase, until there is complete spiritual unity. Would the Christian world accept the Roman Catholic idea? No."

Rev. J. E. Smith, Swedenborgian Church, Riverside, Jacksonville, Florida. "I do not believe the movement a good one. I do not believe it possible to be done. I do not believe it possible as Rome now is or ever will be. The denomination to which I belong would not unite in such a move, though all others should."

The Right Rev. Camillus P. Maes, Bishop of Covington, Kentucky. "The Roman Catholic Church would, in my opinion, and likely to the astonishment of many honest yet misinformed Protestants, put absolutely nothing in the way, and that for the very good reason that all the essential truths of Christ's teachings, which are accepted by all and by each of the Protestant denominations, are freely accepted by the Roman Catholic. Should the various Protestant churches be as ready to accept what truths she has to offer upon the authority of the Bible and the church, and put aside the unfounded fear of any and every teaching of the Catholic Church being doubtful, because it is taught by her, the proposed union would not only be a possibility, but an actual fact. . . . I hope that in God's merciful Providence the union will some day become an accomplished fact."

Prof. Fritz Hommel, University of Munich, Munich, Germany. "As the views about church government, Christian liberty, special dogmas, etc., constantly differ, it is a question whether a union of all Christian churches (in case it were indeed possible) would be really an advantage. A certain superficialness and indecision would be the result, and we need in the conflict against the anti-Christian powers certainly, on the contrary, not laxity, but decision of purpose. One thing, however, would I consider possible, as well as full of blessing—a union of all the special churches peculiar to the various German States in the German Empire, or to use to you a more familiar comparison, of the United States of North America. Each would keep through a long historic period her individual form, ceremonial rites, customs, and teachings; but in the common belief in salvation through Jesus Christ and in his resurrection and ascension they would unite themselves in one (or several) yearly church service and in common work of love."—Literary Digest.

SILK MADE FROM WOOD PULP.

At Bradford, England, silk has been made from wood pulp so much like the real thing that it bids fair to occupy a place in commerce and use. It is produced by subjecting vegetable fiber to the action of various acids, the result being a product said to be identical with the filament of the worm, having its lightness, luster, and all its qualities, including that of durability. Commercially speaking, the importance of the discovery can hardly be overestimated, and it is possible that it will produce the most revolutionary consequences in the trade in that commodity everywhere. The world's stock of silk, both woven and raw, is immense, and has always held a stable value likely to be much shaken and disturbed by the intrusion of a new supply which can be cheaply and abundantly produced. Samples of yarn, fringe, braid, gimps, sewing silks, handkerchiefs, brocades, and other fabrics, dyed in various colors, have been exhibited by the Bradford makers to the trade and pronounced all right and up to the commercial standard in all respects. With artificial silk and artificial diamonds and rubies such as are now being turned out in great abundance, modern society will doubtless take on a style of splendor hitherto unknown, outshining the courts of Solomon or the Queen of Sheba or the retinues of Mahmoud or Haroun Al Raschid.—Philadelphia Ledger.

AMERICAN PLACE NAMES.

Mississippi was originally Meche Sebe, "Father of Waters." It was first spelled Misisipi by Tabott, a Jesuit explorer, and one consonant after another has been since added until it is now loaded down. The Choctaws called it "the Long River"; the Illinois Indians knew it as the "Great Fish River"; on old maps it is designated as La Grande Riviere, Riviere Conception, Riviere Baude, Fleuve St. Louis, Rio del Esperitu Santo, Rio Escondido and many other names. The Indian tribes that lived on its banks named different sections to please themselves, and it is said that from its source to its mouth it was originally called by more than a hundred names. Some philologists doubt the correctness of the translations given above and commonly received, and think the original word means "all the rivers of the earth."

Cape Fear River is a corruption. The name was originally Cape Fair River.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR.
R. S. SALYARDS - - - ASSISTANT EDITOR.
HEMAN C. SMITH - - - CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, JUNE 19, 1895.

A MISTAKE.

THE following is passing the rounds of the newspaper world, and is intended to be mischievous. This same George A. Ritter, wrote the editor during the April session of conference, at Independence, that he had some reason to believe that the titles to some lands in and about Nauvoo, rightly belonged to the Mormons, and offered to aid in an attempt to secure them by remedy at law. We replied to him that we had no titles to real estate in the town that would warrant litigation, and had no desire to stir up such litigation.

We advise any and all Latter Day Saints to keep out of the trap of litigation, which it would appear Mr. George A. Ritter has set for some of the unwary, for there is reason to think that if these applications, stated by him to have been made have been so made it has been by the solicitation, and advice of Mr. Ritter himself. He does not like the town, or professes not to, and if he can stir up a foment about the land titles of the old town, it will in a way do a great injury, put the people into distress and possibly into bad temper. Such agitation now would quite mar the pleasure anticipated by many to be enjoyed at the proposed reunion at Nauvoo this summer or fall.

The Saints of the Reorganized Church are specially warned to keep out of the useless agitation and litigation in regard to titles to property in the beautiful city, which have so long since passed by limitation in both the common law and statutory enactments. The notice is a mischief breeder.

MORMONS CLAIM LOTS.

George A. Ritter sent the following item to the Fort Madison Gem City, dated May 20: "Now comes the news that John Jenkins, of Salt Lake City, Utah, claims to own two city lots in Nauvoo, Illinois, one north and the other a little northeast of the Mormon Temple. John Preece of the same place, claims to own four lots just a little north of the temple. David Cluff, John Telford, Daniel Allen, and a number of other Mormons of Salt Lake City, own lots at or near the same surroundings where these lots are."

—Nauvoo, Illinois, Independent.

CAN IT BE TRUE?

CORRESPONDENTS to the HERALD who are elders in the field, and have from time to time met with elders from Utah, have stated that there was some reason to believe that some portion of the church membership in Utah still held and practiced the plural wife dogma; while the authorities claimed that the practice had been abandoned. It has been said that these statements from our elders were erroneous and should not be made. The following, however, if true, would seem to confirm rather than to deny what these elders have stated. It is from the daily Signal, Middletown, Ohio, for June 1, 1895:—

SALT LAKE CITY, June 1.—John Beck, a prominent and wealthy Mormon, was indicted by the United States grand jury for unlawful cohabitation. Mr. Beck is president of the Beck Mining Company. This is the first arrest since the manifesto against polygamy was issued by the church authorities four years ago.

DISCIPLES IN BAPTIST SUCCESSION.

IS IT generally understood that Alexander Campbell was baptized by Rev. Luce, a Baptist minister, in 1812? Can you tell whether Elder Luce came from the Baptist Church founded by Roger Williams in America in 1738, or the church founded by Menno in Holland in 1536? C. J. H.

It is understood by those familiar with our history that Mr. Campbell was baptized by Elder Luce, a minister of the Baptist church, and that Disciples are therefore in the true line of Baptist succession; but as to the ecclesiastical ancestry of Mr. Luce, we know nothing and care as much. He was a Baptist in good standing and full fellowship, and that suffices.

The above is a question propounded to the Christian Evangelist and the answer given by that journal in regard to the origin of the authority of Rev. Alexander Campbell. Question by Bro. C. J. Hunt.

AN EXCELLENT SHOWING FOR LAMONI HIGH SCHOOL.

THE class of graduating scholars from the Lamoni high school, at the third annual commencement, held June 7, consisted of thirteen, five young men and eight young ladies. The average of merit in the orations and essays, both in matter and manner of delivery, was so even that there was practically no best one; all were above the average of attainment in ability, and the class is an excellent example of what the school methods pursued in Lamoni schools can do.

INDEPENDENCE CHURCH BUILDING.

BRO. JOSEPH LUFF, of Independence, Missouri, informs us by letter that the suit of Bro. John Earnshaw against the Building Committee is at last ended, the committee being vindicated by the affirmation of the Referee's report, by Judge Dobson, which report, in substance, found that the committee had paid to Bro. John Earnshaw some hundreds of dollars more than was due him on the work done by him; and this in effect put the matter of costs upon him, which, owing to the long and persistent effort to mulct the committee, has been considerable. Bro. Earnshaw is a poor man and we should have been sorry if the inquiry by the court had found that the committee had in any way defrauded him; as it is it appears that the committee was not in the fault for whatever loss he may have sustained.

We hope that now the matter is settled, the branch will arise to the necessities of the case, make such repairs as damages have made necessary, rectify some mistakes in judgment that the condition of the building shows somebody to have made, and then finish it. There is no finer looking building in North Missouri, that we have seen, when it is finished according to design. It will be well worth seeing when ready for dedication. Brethren, instead of a groan, give a cheer and make another effort, all together.

It is rumored in the gossip column of the Tribune, a weekly paper published at Independence, that Bro. Earnshaw, having dropped the matter in the courts now proposes to make some startling disclosures in regard to the committee and its procedures. We hope for the sake of consistency that the brother will do nothing of the sort, for he can know nothing to the discredit of the committee, or credit to himself, which can in any way help him in the eyes of the community, that he would now be justified in making public if he failed to present it to the court when the case was tried. That was the place and time to have put in all his evidence; to proceed out of court to stigmatize the committee would be, in our way of thinking, an improper method to pursue, and could only result in harm to himself with thinking people.

AT LAST, DISCUSSION.

BRO. JOSEPH DEWSNUP and Mr. A. Brown of the Church of God have had a discussion at East Ardsley, England.

Bro. Dewsnup sent us a copy of the Free Press, Ardsley, for May 25, and clippings from the same paper for May 11 and 18.

There were three sessions, upon three propositions:—

1. The Church of God is identical in doctrine and practice with the New Testament. Brown affirming.

2. The Church of the Latter Day Saints is identical in doctrine and practice with the New Testament. Dewsnup affirming.

3. Is the Book of Mormon a fraud. Brown affirming.

The notices given in the Free Press were excellent. Mr. J. T. Pinder, of the Church of England, was chairman, and the debate was orderly. Of the first session the Free Press had this to say:—

East Ardsley is at present in the throes of a theological discussion. For the time politics and sociology have been thrust aside, and public attention seems centered upon the relative claims of the "Church of God" and the "Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints." So at least we judged with regard to the interest taken in the matter when we found the new Board School well filled on Saturday evening to hear a discussion between advocates of the two bodies. Not only was there a large attendance, but the addresses of the two champions were most carefully followed, many persons having brought their Bibles in order to help them in doing so. It was a thoroughly appreciative audience, and our recognized teachers and pastors in the orthodox churches will find something very suggestive in the fact that so many intelligent people could be drawn together on a Saturday evening to hear a decidedly religious debate. Mr. A. Brown represented the "Church of God," in connection with which there is a meeting place at Thorpe. The views of this organization, as put forward by Mr. Brown, may be described as evangelical in doctrine and democratic in church life and government. The other side was taken by Mr. J. Dewsnup, of Manchester, an elder of the "Church of Latter Day Saints." The Latter Day Saints are, of course, known the world over as Mormons, but one of the members to whom we spoke on Saturday was careful to tell us that Mr. Dewsnup and his friends formed part of the "Reorganized Church," and that they had nothing to do with polygamy. It was he, not our representative, who mentioned the ominous word, and he was evidently very anxious that it should be understood they had no sympathy with a plurality of wives.

VINDICATION.

SOME one has sent us a copy of the Greenfield, Illinois, Argus, for May 24, which contains an article four columns long, entitled "Among the Mormons," from the pen of W. L. Andrews, which is the fairest and best we have ever seen from the pen of one outside the faith. It is a capital article. We excerpt the following:—

Some years after Brigham Young became established at Salt Lake City, the remnant that refused adherence to this leader set up a church government of their own. Feeling that polygamy was wrong in its very nature and wishing to rid the church of such false doctrine, they have bitterly denounced polygamy, denying that it was ever a part of the faith as taught by the prophet, and that it is nowhere set forth in the published documents of the church during Joseph Smith's lifetime; that these obnoxious features were an aftergrowth introduced by Brigham Young, for which the original church and faith were not responsible. Thus the anti-polygamists, under the leadership of Joseph Smith, son of the martyred Joseph, are now rapidly building their craft on the fast-decaying ruins of the Brighamite Church and it is anticipating a vigorous growth in the near future, one unprecedented in the history of the church. It already has a membership of 30,000, and when its anti-polygamy proclivities become well known, its followers are probable sanguine of becoming more popular with the other religious creeds and with the people in general. Hence we see that Mormonism in a little different aspect is making a new start, notwithstanding the fact that in belief and doctrine it does not claim to vary from the original Mormon Church. This church is denominated the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and the following is an epitome of their faith as given in one of their tracts. . . .

THE Persia, Iowa, Globe, of the 7th has this good word to say of Bro. H. A. Stebbins' lectures on the Book of Mormon:—

BOOK OF MORMON.

Elder H. A. Stebbins, of Lamoni, Iowa, is delivering a series of lectures this week at the L. D. S. church on the Book of Mormon. The lectures commenced Monday evening, and are being continued each evening.

He is an interesting and fluent speaker, and thoroughly conversant with his theme. His object is to prove from the Scriptures, scientific investigation and research, and otherwise, that the Book of Mormon is authentic and of divine origin.

He claims the Book of Mormon to be a true record of a race of people, highly cultured and civilized, but now extinct, that formerly inhabited the western hemisphere, the ruins of whose temples, cities, etc., are in existence and in evidence.

He claims that the Bible, the prophets, scientific investigation and research, history, both sacred and profane, so called, and the Book of Mormon are all in harmony respecting this people and all concerning them. Whether his premises be true or false he is able to handle his subject logically and well, and his presentation of the subject is sufficiently interesting and instructive to well repay one for the time spent in listening to him.

BRO. TALMAGE is evidently a very hopeful man—perhaps extremely so in some respects, and possibly entitled to be classed as an optimist. He certainly is not cynical nor pessimistic. He said some good things to a newspaper man, which we give below:—

Charity was never so much needed as now. Kindness is pervading all our cities. This is a pleasant world to live in. I have always been glad I got aboard this continent. We cannot all think alike. Different men have different opinions of the same picture. I would rather live ten years now than five hundred years in the time of Methuselah. The faultfinder, like the porcupine, is all quills. If he ever gets to heaven he will quarrel with St. Peter and will not like the music. All the fine clothes a tailor's goose ever hatched out never made a gentleman. Good manners is the generous touch of a generous nature. Miserable people try to make every one else miserable. If your father was so unfortunate as to have been hung, disagreeable people talk to you about capital punishment. Society will bear anything rather than a bear. Parents should teach children the elements of good manners. Politeness is no indication of weakness. We always live better when we have company. People that have the most trouble are often the happiest. There is something wrong in the heart of a man who doesn't love a horse. The best paying investment in life is good cheer. A religion of "don't" is a poor religion. We have no reason to be concerned about the future of our country. It does not depend upon the success of this or that party.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

By note from Bro. R. M. Elvin, we learn that the Coal Company, at Hite-man, Iowa, have secured to the brethren there a lot on which to build a meeting house, Bro. Robert writes:—

The branch will push the building to completion. It will be 22x32 feet in size.

Bro. J. J. Leabo, Salem, Oregon, June 4:—

Send me one thousand of Epitome of Faith, also some good tracts. I want them for distribution among the people. They seem to have just awakened from a sleep of negligence and are now inquiring for the way of truth. O, how badly we need an elder here. I am asked every day when an elder will come to preach. I hope and pray we will have one soon.

Bro. J. F. Mintun, writing from Bee, Nebraska, June 7. From his letter we quote:—

I find the work in this mission very needy, both to satisfy the demands from the ministerial and the Sunday school departments. Much interest is manifest, and I see no reason why a great work cannot be done by conjoint labor of the brethren appointed to labor here with the brethren and sisters now residing here, and with God. I hear pleasant mention made of those who have ministered in this mission previously, and hope to so conduct myself that no reproach will be brought upon the cause by what I may say or do. . . . After the General Conference I baptized five at Magnolia—all Sunday school children—my daughter Ruth being one of them. At Smithland I baptized six; at Oto one; and at Moorhead three; all of whom seemed to fully realize the solemn obligations of a child of God, some of whom had investigated long and deeply ere entering into covenant with God. Just began services here at Bee, last night, with the use of the Christian church, there being a fair attendance, and the interest of those present was good.

Bro. A. H. Parsons, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, June 12:—

A large audience greeted us Sunday night and fair attendance all the week at eight p. m. It has been a long time since so many came together in this city to hear the gospel story as last Sunday night, possibly never. The prospects are fair for good results; at least we are hopeful.

Bro. John Smith, New Bedford, Massachusetts, June 6:—

The gospel horizon brightens; two were baptized last Saturday, and at the confirmation and sacrament meeting last evening there was much to comfort and encourage.

Bro. R. M. Elvin, from Hiteman, Iowa, June 6:—

I spoke ten times in the schoolhouse; the attendance was from twenty-five to seventy-five. Monday evening we fixed seats with boxes and lumber, an old water barrel for a pulpit, in the center of town, attendance from two hundred to five hundred nightly; and nearly the whole town talking religion.

Bro. V. D. Baggerly writing from Fredonia, Indiana, June 3:—

I have been laboring this spring altogether in new places, and have met with some success. I have never seen the time in the history of the church in Southern Indiana, when the people were more anxious to hear than now, no trouble to get houses to preach in, and very good crowds. The masses do not stand with other churches and begin to see that the churches do not preach the doctrine of Christ.

Bro. J. R. Evans, Burlington, Iowa:—

The tent is to be set up to-day. Bro. Roth is here. We trust some good will come to the work by the efforts of the tentworkers.

Bro. Blair wrote from Thurman, Iowa, June 4:—

Had fine conference at Omaha. Held services here last night and continue to-night. All goes fairly.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser, from Middletown, Ohio, June 3:—

A man cannot long be boosted for more than he is worth, or, his real worth be suppressed among the people of God, so both here and hereafter we seek or find our level, as water does. I enter the year's campaign under better conditions, if possible, than ever before.

Bro. George Jenkins, Leavenworth, Indiana, June 6:—

The work is moving along nicely here. Five precious souls have united with us this week—sixteen in all; others will unite with us in the near future. I will close work here to-night to go to conference at West Fork branch. From there I will begin the work west of Leavenworth, where the people are anxious for us to come. The harvest is great but the laborers few. May the Lord work on the hearts of them that have to give that they may give into the storehouse of the Lord that more laborers may be sent into the field.

Sr. Ann Webster, New Castle, New South Wales, May 14:—

We had Bro. and Sr. Kaler with us for a month. They think we will not get on till we get a meetinghouse, so they are going to try and get one. Bro. Broadway has offered a piece of ground with a frame on it and hopes to have it ready by conference. He has married one couple and baptized three of late.

Bro. T. W. Williams, Council Bluffs, Iowa, June 11:—

We have commenced our tent meetings and had good attendance last night.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. W. W. BLAIR returned to Lamoni, June 10. He reports excellent conferences of the Pottawattamie district, also at Omaha, Nebraska, and Atchison, Kansas. Dedication at the latter place, to full house.

Decatur district conference at Davis City, is reported to have been a most excellent and enjoyable session. A grandson of Lyman Wight made his maiden effort in the stand before the Saints, and is spoken well of by the brethren as a coming man. There are now some three or four of the sons and as many of his grandsons in the ministry in the Reorganized Church.

Bro. H. A. Stebbins returned home from a tour in Western Iowa, on Thursday, the 13th inst.

Brn. J. S. Snively, R. M. Elvin, and J. R. Lambert went to Concord church, near Lineville, Iowa, to hold services with a number of ministers of other churches on Sunday, June 16, when a platform for a common faith was to be discussed. We await the result of the comparison of views.

Sr. Sarah Davis writes from Keb, Iowa, expressing gratitude for restoration to health in answer to prayer; also from the help she derives from the work of the Daughters of Zion.

TITHES AND OFFERINGS.

TO THE SAINTS:—It has been now more than two years since the Bishopric have made any appeal to you through the press touching the duties of all the household of faith under the law, in the matter of tithes and offerings. The closeness of the times in monetary affairs and the many incidental things which require a sacrifice on the part of Saints in order to properly maintain and advance the gospel work, have caused us to hesitate to urge special attention to the importance of closely observing the law of tithes and offerings, for, knowing the watchfulness and untiring zeal of so many of the Saints in the Master's cause, it has been our desire and prayer to unburden, rather than to call them to more special duties and service. Time, however, revolves and brings upon swift wing other cares, as the discharge of duty lays aside those we have faced to-day, and thus circling, to us is brought the charge of duty in temporal matters as revealed by the Master in his law. The inquiry arises, then, Shall we faithfully observe not only part but the whole that he has given?

Provision made for preaching of the word and building up the kingdom included this part—a wise man will not undertake to build until he has first sat himself down and counted the cost; nor did Jesus command the sending of the gospel into all the world without making proper provision for carrying it; and so to-day we find ourselves—preacher and laymen—under the burden of this duty of bearing to the world the gospel message, and the predictions of the past, angelic sentries and the Man of Galilee unite in bearing testimony of a sympathetic interest in its faithful discharge. Will anybody hesitate or swerve from duty at this serious hour?

To-day we have a large force of missionaries in the field; their necessities and those of their families must be supplied.

The time for building and completing a Saints' Home, is upon us and cannot be justly deferred or overlooked; care must be had for the aged and the poor. Ample provision for the first will certainly aid and insure the success of the second and this will be fully attained by a compliance on the part of every member with the law of tithes and offerings.

The matter is so very important that we feel the Saints themselves would not excuse the neglect to urge the necessity of immediate, active work at such a crisis.

It is proper, then, for us to ask that all make this appeal a personal matter and with approved minds and consciences upon the scriptural order of work in our Father's house, answer to him or herself the questions, Have I done my whole duty under the law? Cannot I further aid in the moving forward of this great work?

Brethren will please remember to pay their contributions to the agents of their respective districts or send to the Bishop direct when more convenient.

With a firm and united effort to sustain the work we are certain of decided success for the cause of Zion and the approving favor of the Master. To this end may the Lord rebuke the evil one; and strengthen his children with consolation and hope in his promises.

In bonds of fellowship and progress in the truth, I am, your coworker,

E. L. KELLEY,

Presiding Bishop, Reorganized Church.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Ere yet the glowing summer says "Farewell,"
She leaves a trail of sweet and peaceful light;
In tints subdued she decks the mountain height,
And o'er the woodland weaves a glowing spell.
Oh, faint and few the choristers which tell
June's faded hours of glory and delight!
The faint, sweet airs and tones betoken flight
Of many gladsome gifts, beloved well.

Yet, can a mortal stand unmoved and feel
The laughing hours of bloom and bee go past?
Oh wondrous hour of pathos, solemn, vast!
Let this great aspiration o'er me steal:
"That as my life doth near its close, the last Faint hours may glow with undiminished zeal!"—Selected.

THE PURE HEART.

"BLESSED are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." Oh! what a great and glorious thought that we mortals shall be permitted to see God! How can we be able to see him, if Moses was permitted to see only his back, as he passed by the cave in which Moses was hid? He must have been pure in heart, for meekness and purity go hand-in-hand, and he talked with God face to face, as one man talketh with another.

"How is it that?" queries the reader. When communing with him he was as conscious of his presence as a child is of his father's presence when conversing with him, and yet he saw him as through a glass darkly—was not permitted to see him in his glory. No one while dwelling in the flesh can thus behold him, and yet all who are pure in heart can realize his presence, and talk with him even as Moses did, for he is no respecter of persons: "He that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Anyone, everyone, who has by the help of God driven out the impurities that lurk in the heart can come forward to the throne of grace and pass in their claim for the most glorious, the most blessed of sights. The physical heart, the seat and center of physical life, may be supplied with pure blood, and consequently with good nerves and good circulation, and yet the soul that dwells within that body be very impure.

As a continued perfect circulation of the blood makes perfect the body, so a continued circulation of God's Spirit within our spirit will make us pure in heart. Not that the spirit or mind is the physical heart, but because the operation of the mind is felt, or realized in that organ, whether it be malice or love, that is indulged in—the former corrupts the blood, the latter purifies it. We have many thoughts and many words, which have no heart force in them,—not deep enough, only flit through the brain,—and yet they may bar out the good thoughts that are waiting to come in and purify us. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." We, our real selves, are just what our thoughts have made us, are dwarfs if our thoughts have been low, impure, or selfish, but giants if our thoughts have been pure. Thus we are made blessed, made happy, given success, joy, and favor of the Most High.

Who has the promise of all this? They who overcome their own impurities, their own evil propensities, by watchfulness, decision, and constant reliance on the Divine; those who have incorporated into their being the text: "Set a watch over my mouth and keep the door of my lips," and look up for thoughts, as the flowers look up for the sun's rays and the evening dew. Thus may we see God according to the degree of our purity, even as all of his close followers have been permitted to do. See him in the clouds, in the sunshine, and in the storm; see him in the insect at our feet, in the grand and noble beasts, in the wonders of the human form, and, above all, in the mind, or by the vision of a well-trained mind. Such are the possibilities in this life, and in the beyond, the realization of his greatness and his glory.

Oh! the necessity of keeping our hearts free from our own natural impurities, and oft-times greater still, the necessity of keeping free from from the surrounding impurities! If we have by obedience to God's commands become pure, and then indulge in the repetition of other people's vulgar, obscene, or profane language, we make ourselves unclean or impure, just the same as filling a pure vessel with impurities makes it impure. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

Dear reader, may we be among that number.

ALMIRA M. SNOW.

IN GOD'S TIME.

My path I cannot see before me
But trusting, step by step I go,
Knowing the Father's care is o'er me
Through all my life below.

For years with longing I have waited,
The granting of my heart's desire—
So strong desire and so fervent
My spirit thrilled with holy fire.

I felt the gospel's saving power
And prayed that those I love so dear
Would see, and render full obedience
To him who made the way so clear.

I feel at last my utter weakness,
God's plan I cannot hurry on.
In his own time the full completeness
Of his most holy will be done.

ELLA J. GREEN.

HELPING HAND.

FROM THE BRETHERN.

" . . . I shall be glad to assist you in what I believe to be a well-begun work. Your letters breathe the true spirit of progress, and I hope you will meet with abundant success in your efforts to do good. C. J. H."

" . . . I am thanful to know that some of our sisters are engaged in such a grand work, and for your success I shall ever pray. . . . "E. C."

" . . . I assure you I heartily indorse the movement of the Daughters of Zion and shall do all in my power to encourage and assist the work. I shall try to inform myself so as to be useful in this branch of the great latter-day work. This mission is certainly in need of just such work. May success attend your efforts is my earnest prayer. C. R. D."

"I am in harmony with the Daughters of Zion so far as I have the ability to understand its high and holy object. No more holy work than the 'Daughters' have taken in hand, has ever been committed to the trust of humanity; and while I feel how poor and weak my efforts may be, I feel to promise that I will, so far as I can, strive to sow this seed which may grow to be plants of renown in the garden of the Lord. From this time, I will try to become more acquainted with the work which you request me to assist in helping onward, and wherever I go I will call the sisters together, and present the claims upon them set forth by you. I feel sure if the sisters in this mission can be brought to see the work, they can and will accomplish much. I shall strive to become more acquainted with the work of the society and thus be prepared for usefulness in that direction. May the dear Lord bless all the officers of the society. R. C. E."

"... As an anxious parent of five children, I see the necessity of such work as your society is doing. God speed your cause. "W. S."

"... I heartily cooperate with every movement put forth for the establishment of truth and righteousness in the earth, and the rescue of mankind from the vices and follies to which the children of men are prone. Therefore the interests of your society have my sympathy and shall receive my support as opportunity may present. "J. S."

FROM THE SISTERS.

"I believe the work of the Daughters of Zion to be very necessary and very praiseworthy. I think, too, that the teachings contained in the leaflets are most excellent. "A SISTER."

"... We as a society feel encouraged and are going on the best we can. Some recent letters and instructions accomplished much good, starting some to work and cheering others. We expect to be more diligent in the future. F. V. B."

"Feeling the need of earnest, faithful work being done by the Daughters of Zion, and realizing that the leaflets are accomplishing great good, I send in my mite to help along the work. I realize more and more the needs of working and being one of the Daughters of Zion, not only in name but in deeds. While we are standing idle the enemy is working faithfully to accomplish his mission and I fear he is gaining to such an extent that we will need to redouble our efforts. God bless all the workers in his cause, and especially those who labor to bring mankind up to a higher standard of purity. In this way I believe they can lessen the work of those who are preaching the gospel. N. I. H."

"I write to thank you, one and all, for the many words of comfort which have so often come to me through the Herald and Autumn Leaves and the leaflets. I am not so situated that I can meet with the workers, but I am trying to let my light shine and to do all I can for the advancement of the cause we all love. I lend the leaflets and they are very acceptable to those who read them. Many are interested, and I have a hope that an elder may call this way to 'thrust in his sickle,' for the harvest is ripe. I ask an interest in your faith and prayers that I may ever be faithful and do the little my hands find to do. I know this work is accepted of God, for he hath blessed me with innumerable blessings. I wish ever to be found at duty's post with a word or deed. Let us press on, dear Saints, for we know we shall receive eternal life if we but prove faithful. Trials we all have; but let us strengthen one another with our prayers and words of encouragement. I lack words to express my gratitude to each of you who have given so much to cheer me. L. W."

"We think the leaflets are just what is needed, and if they had been in circulation years ago what great good they might have done for many of us. We will not mourn over what might have been, however, but press on in the good cause and do the very best we can in the future. I am determined, with the help of our heavenly Father to do all that lies within my power to do. C. H."

"I think the leaflets grand and must be such a help to mothers. Surely there are great blessings for such noble workers. I often wish I could do something to help—but then I fear I do not do properly what I can. Pray for me that I may be more faithful. Oh, what comfort I get from the leaflets and Home Column. If my husband only belonged to the church it seems it would be such a help—so much easier to live right if we could have family worship at home. I hope and pray he may yet obey the gospel. Asking an interest in your prayers in behalf of my husband that he may yet accept the truth, I remain, Your sister, "M. L."

TO AN ALTAR OF PRAYER.

"Farewell, thou sacred spot of thought;
I ne'er shall see thee more.
My home's beyond that rolling sea,
On a far and distant shore.

"Think of me, dear friends, who living near,
This pile of stones shall see;
For, by its side, in solemn prayer,
Thy friend remembered thee."

August 26, 1873.

WHILE visiting at the home of Bro. George Eden, at "Mt. Eden," near Queensferry, in Victoria, the above lines were handed me to read, with the explanation that they were written by Elder Glaud Rodger, just before his departure from their home. As I read them I expressed a desire to see the altar, but was informed that it had fallen down. We then agreed to visit the spot, which was located further up the mount.

After dinner we started up, going slowly, for the ascent is quite steep. As we went Sr. Eden related that Bro. Rodger left the house about eleven o'clock each day and went up among the trees. He appeared to take this opportunity of going aside for prayer and reflection, as well as to give them a better chance to complete their morning housework. The message he brought was so full of interest to them that housework seemed to be a secondary consideration, and the whole time was absorbed in conversation while he was present. Just before his final "good-bye," he informed one of the daughters, Lillie (who has since then followed him to the other side), that he had built an altar above the house on a certain ridge, and had deposited a few lines under one of the stones; that the first one who got it could have it. After his departure a number of them had a race to see who would get there first. Lillie seemed the fleetest and secured this memento.

Having arrived at about the place the spot was pointed out to me by Nellie, the only one of the family who remembered the location. Here we rested and conversed on the life and labors of so good a man, and of the motives and secret of his life of self-abnegation. There was no sign of an altar left, so I decided to rebuild it the following day. We then marked the place and returned to the house.

It is probable that the cattle are responsible for the "digging down" of this altar, for it is now a part of a large "paddock." While rebuilding it I was stung on the finger by a poisonous "Bull-dog ant," but received no harm. This little fellow seemed to think I had no right there, disturbing the stones around his nest. After a half hour's labor the altar was complete and I sat down beside it to rest and reflect over the history of the pioneer minister of the Australian mission, whose memory I was celebrating in the restoring of this altar. As I thought on his pure example left for the younger ones of the ministry—an example of energy, sacrifice, meekness, and prayerfulness, I felt humbled and insignificant before it. With a bosom swelling with emotion, I too, bowed in the same spot and rededicated my life to the service of the Master, and asked for help that I might do my part as nobly as Bro. Rodger did his.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. BELLE JACKSON, of Euclid, Arkansas, requests your faith and prayers in behalf of her little son who is afflicted.

A cotton shower, looking exactly like a snowstorm, is a common sight in the cottonwood groves in Colorado.

Siberia is exceedingly rich in all sorts of precious stones.

TO-DAY.

Be swift to love your own, dears,
Your own who need you so.
Say to the speeding hour, dears,
"I will not let thee go Except thou give a blessing."
Force it to abide and stay—
Love has no sure to-morrow;
It only has to-day.

Oh! hasten to be kind, dears,
Before the time shall come
When you are left behind, dears,
In an all-lonely home;
Before in late contrition
Vainly you weep and pray,
Love has no sure to-morrow;
It only has to-day.

Swifter than sun and shade, dears,
Move the fleet wings of Pain;
The chance we have to-day, dears,
May never come again.
Joy is a fickle rover;
He brooketh not delay.
Love has no sure to-morrow;
It only has to-day.

Too late to plead or grieve, dears,
Too late to kiss or sigh
When Death has laid his seal, dears,
On cold lip and eye.
Too late our gifts to lavish
Upon the burial clay;
Love has no sure to-morrow;
It only has to-day.

MT. CARMEL, Ill., June 7.

Editors Herald:—I reached my field of labor May 6, but did not begin work for some time, as I didn't have a house in which to hold services. However, we began church at Beall, Indiana, May 18, and continued until the 3d inst. We occupied the large mill of the Knox County Lumber Company at ten a. m. and two p. m., for two successive Sundays, the thirteen other sermons preached in that locality being delivered in private houses. Seed was both sown and watered.

I opened that place for gospel work in January, 1884. There are ten members, all of whom embraced the work in Daviess county. They have done well for the church, considering their depressed physical and financial condition. Religiously, the Catholics predominate, which greatly militates against our work. There are also a few Methodists whose numerical strength is productive of a kind and tolerant attitude toward us, but the majority are as yet unfettered by any creed.

I came here the 6th inst., and am now holding church in a private house on the opposite side of the Wabash River, so those in charge will see I am not out of my field.

I heard a lady remark recently that she had never been interested in religion prior to my first series of discourses at the place previously mentioned, but that since then a day had not passed in thoughtlessness upon that subject. Such consoles me with the thought that my efforts have not been entirely without avail.

While en route from General Conference I stopped at St. Louis, Missouri, and Xenia, Illinois. The Saints there have a splendid little Sunday school in successful operation. I was pleased to hear one without the fold remark, "That Sunday school is growing." May God bless all departments of his work. I shall return to Beall July 28, and cooperate with Bro. L. F. Daniel in a further effort there.

Yours in the gospel,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 13.

Editors Herald:—To whom it may concern; the Little Sioux district in particular: After a long and forced absence from my field of labor incident to completing our home, I had anticipated reaching the above district about the 15th instant. "Man proposes; . . . God disposes." By a fall down the cellar way on the morning of the 10th inst., Mrs. Wight had her left ankle dislocated as well as the inner bone of the same limb broken just at that joint. The doctor says it will be one year before she can walk on it. Through the skill of the physician and the blessings of heaven she is doing better than is usual under like conditions. Unless those in authority see fit to change my field of labor it is possible that I will reach there for a fall and winter campaign. A movement is already in progress looking to the supplying my place in the meantime.

Your faith and prayers are earnestly solicited in her behalf.

"Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all."

In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

PEORIA, Ill., June 6.

Editors Herald:—My wife and I on arriving home from General Conference, found the family all in good health and the Saints generally well, except the late Elder E. E. Wheeler. He had failed rapidly in our brief absence and passed peacefully away and was tenderly laid to rest. On April 23 I was also called upon to aid in the funeral of Mr. Jacob Cool, the thorough-going, great-hearted husband of Sr. Hester nee Terry. This generous, kind, affable man was a native of York State. Having been an old resident of Aledo, the county seat, and an auctioneer, or crier of public sales, he was well known, both far and wide. He was clever to a fault; but he never espoused any particular religion. Elder Walkenshaw, a former pastor of the Presbyterian church, who was an old acquaintance and family friend, occupied the stand with me, a Mr. Morgan conducting the music, and the large M. E. church was fairly full of intelligent hearers. In my say I talked in a general way, upon the kindness and moral worth of the subject; the mercy and goodness of God; his infinite compassion and everlasting justice; the law of love, and the far-reaching power of the atonement; disciplinary chastisement and the great restitution; rewards and awards in proportion to good or evil character developed; and the superiority, safety, and blessedness of the good old way. After this service I held forth a few times in the Congregational church, but the weather and other causes seemed to hedge against me having good houses.

I lately paid the coal mining town of Gilchrist my third visit, and lo, I found many warm friends. Bro. Samuel Adams brought me there and introduced me last winter; also aided in opening up. The Methodist directors of a union church—the only chapel in town—took it upon themselves to refuse me access at any time. The schoolhouse was available through the kindness, firmness, and nobility of Mr. Henry McIntire. The Salvation Army has had a brief run, but, behold, it is on the decline, and the M. E. Church, too, seems to be on the wane. I canvassed freely some of the most controverted subjects, such as the Book of Mormon, and, lastly, the prophetic calling of Joseph the martyred seer. I feel that I have crossed the Rubicon with that dear people; for, indeed, they stuck to me in all these vicissitudes, and purchased about ten dollars worth of church works. I held forth in the Christian and United Brethren churches several miles south of Aledo and Viola respectively. These places being in the rural districts, fall and winter will be the best times for meetings; so we hope to resume there and then.

On April 27 I invited a Japanese divine of the M. E. persuasion to dine at my pleasant village home. Elder J. T. Davis being in the place to console and look after his daughter, Sr. Wheeler, he, too, was called to the festal board on this occasion. We found the man intelligent, seemingly quite humble, and apparently willing to learn. It was his first interview with any of our faith, and his candor and fair-mindedness were pleasing to behold. I assure you that my yearning heart and longing soul went out for not only this good, sensible person, but the brown race of the Japanese Empire, that they may obey the truth.

Last Friday our nice new tent was erected, seated with two dozen folding seats; platform and stand equipped; two large gasoline lamps to suspend on each center pole; and an organ, too, as well. The whole expense, including freight, was only a hundred and fifty odd dollars, and, thank fortune, it is all paid for. Bro. D. S. Holmes, of Buffalo Prairie, was booked to christen the cotton pavilion or tabernacle, but being somewhat ailing, I was told to fill the breach for a brief while. F. G. Pitt spoke Saturday and Sunday evenings; David H. Sunday morning, and it fell to your humble servant to deliver the dedicatory discourse in the afternoon. The conference was fairly well attended and the very best of feelings obtained throughout. Bro. John Chisnall declined to serve the district any longer as its presiding genius. Elder A. J. Keck, of Peoria, was duly elected president for one year on the second ballot; whereas Alma Whitehouse, of Kewanee, was reelected as our worthy secretary. Bro. Dean Smith, of Dahinda, Illinois, was recommended to the Bishop for appointment as his agent in lieu of the retiring one. The tent is left in care of the district president, while I am associated with him in this line of work. Last evening we had more aliens out than at any other single service. Behavior and interest appear good, hence we feel real hopeful. We are planking down some rugged truths, but, withal, in a kind and clever manner. Bro. Pitt got his great toe and both wrists sprained badly, and his knee barked in getting off a street car last Sunday afternoon. It was moving, and the paved street proved too hard even for a Chicago expert, so he has now gone home for rest and repairs.

It is alarmingly dry around here, although at my home and elsewhere we learn of copious rains, and in some places it has been actually flooded. This city has, or claims between fifty and sixty thousand inhabitants. It is evidently celebrated for its wealth and beauty, as also the number of her immense distilleries. It is too bad that the deadly nightshade grows alongside of the rose. The poison ivy will choke to death the beautiful tree that supports it as well as endanger the hand that chances to come in contact with it. Tobacco fumes inoculate and befoul God's sweet air that I have to breathe, and pollute his footstool wherein I walk; but I must take it all in as meek as Moses, lest peradventure I hurt some sensitive plant. O, that our people would live up to just half what they know to be right, then they would let anyone tell them the whole truth nor angry be at this revelation.

M. T. SHORT.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 30.

Editors Herald:—All is going well with us in this far-away city, and we are still holding the fort and keeping our cause before the people. Our meetings are well attended and much of the Good Spirit is enjoyed. We have a new set of officers in the branch, who are energetic and active, and under their watchcare the condition of the branch is much improved. The members are now receiving better care and more attention than for a long time, and general improvement is to be seen on that account. Some of our meetings are very spiritual and instructive, and we feel much blessed of our Father. I have never felt more earnest in presenting the word nor more aided by the Spirit than of late.

How beautiful and grand this latter-day work appears when one is illumined by the light of inspiration, and how happy we feel after an effort to "tell the story" when we realize that God's Holy Spirit assisted us! How I have enjoyed over and over again the thoughts and ideas presented by inspiration. O, that I could only live in that happy condition! But there come times to us when we seem left alone in our efforts, and then how disgusted we feel with ourselves; but with the return of the Spirit all is forgotten again, except this glorious work and the desire to present it aright. I have been much blessed in administering to the sick, especially of late, and the Spirit has been present in power to comfort, to cheer, and to heal. I can verify the promise of our Savior, "Lo, I am with you always."

I am happy to say that our branch is coming up to the required standard to enjoy this. Occasionally Satan shows his cloven hoof among us, but that is to be expected. Sometimes a member allows himself to be influenced by him, but that must not surprise us. We are sometimes offended by another's actions, but as the gospel net gathers all kinds, we must expect that, and I have learned that some calling themselves Latter Day Saints, are very queer creatures. But better times are at hand, and better prospects for our branch, and looking at the future we can say, "All is well." May God give renewed courage and strength to all who read this, is the prayer of

LAMONI, Iowa, June 5.

Editors Herald:—I left home on May 4 for a preaching tour in the Nauvoo district. My first stop was at Burlington, Iowa, where I spent two days, preaching twice on Sunday.

At Rock Creek (my old home) I spoke six times and spent two Sundays. Also attended the debate at Blandinsville, Illinois, which lasted six nights. Spoke twice in the Cottage schoolhouse, at the Pilot Grove branch. Spent a few days in Montrose, Iowa, where I spoke twice. From Montrose I went to Burlington, where I spoke once, and then made my way to the conference which was held at Keb, Iowa, June 1 and 2.

I returned home last Monday, after a month's absence. Was treated kindly everywhere, and feel assured that my efforts, though made in weakness, were not in vain. The Saints love the work, as a body, but some love it much more than others.

Our experiences are made up of trials and blessings. My last trip was no exception to this rule. But God is good, and the work is true; so we are satisfied, and struggle on, in faith and hope.

CENTER JUNCTION, Iowa, June 8.

Editors Herald:—It has fallen to my lot of late to be engaged in tent work. Should the future reveal as many unpleasant items as the past in this line, by the fall season I will need a very large spiritual poultice to bring life to the surface.

When I took charge of the tent I was told of this and that place that desired tent meetings, hungering, and thirsting for the bread of life. When we had done sufficient work, or nearly so, where the tent was located I thought I would investigate the requests for tent meetings, and to my utter astonishment, after searching diligently for days, I reaped from the statistics the tail end of speculation. Now, dear Saints, I would say, when you learn of a certain place desiring meetings, be sure that the people are as willing to do as to hear. The elders must have a home, or some place to stay while they are presenting the gospel.

Our tent is shipped to Anamosa, and Bro. C. E. Hand and I will begin a series of meetings, and hold forth so long as interest demands. Our meetings at Edgewood were well attended. Sectarian preachers shot at us, at long range, so we paid no attention to them.

I effected a grand opening in Greene, Butler county, baptizing one lady of that place who will be an ornament in God's kingdom and also a good worker. Bro. Farr desires that a tent be brought to Greene, and he will furnish an organ, a place to put the tent, and a home for the elders. The work is moving nicely in this district.

EAGLE GROVE, Iowa, June 6.

Editors Herald:—After a stay of over three weeks at Richland Creek, Tama county, I came to this place, May 28, preparatory to attending the conference here June 1 and 2.

The two Brighamite elders referred to in my last were still moving about in the vicinity of Richland Creek, but creating no great stir. While there I was signally led in a number of my sermons to show the distinction, on a number of points between the teachings of Joseph the Seer and the Reorganization and the false views set forth by the Brighamite Church. The people were enabled to see quite clearly the distinction between the two churches, and the inharmonious of the Utah Church with the books. On Sunday, May 26, after the morning services the congregation went to the Creek and witnessed the baptism of two at the hands of Bro. George Shimel. The day and the surroundings were lovely, and new joys were added to the occasion by the Holy Spirit's glow, as it rested on the hearts of the Saints, causing joyful tears to flow from the eyes of nearly all present as we prayed and sang praises there. I wish all Saints were as wide-awake to the interests of Zion's weal as the faithful ones at that baptism. Saints and friends there were very kind to me. I shall try to remember it gratefully.

Bro. C. E. Hand has left this field and gone to the assistance of those who labor in the good cause in the Eastern Iowa district. We hope good success will attend him in that field. Bro. Hand is getting past middle age, but is zealous for the faith and goes at his own charges. I wish it was so Bro. George Shimel could be continually in the ministry. He is able to maintain the gospel claims, and seems willing, but the tide of circumstances of a temporal character seems to be against him at present. Bro. George has hope, however, and we have hope for him, that he may soon be liberated to labor as he desires.

The district conference held at Head Grove, June 1 and 2, was quite well attended notwithstanding the busy season and the locality; this being the extreme northern part of the district, or nearly so. Officers and Saints from a number of the branches, also a number of the scattered members, were present, besides a number of the Saints of the Galland's Grove district, among them Elder Ford, to rejoice with us in the good work. Business was done amicably; Saints were united, and the sessions peaceful. Arrangements were made to procure a district tent at once, and it is expected that it will be in charge of Brn. D. M. Rudd and William Thompson. A number of places are awaiting its advent that labor be done in it. It is hoped that brethren of the district living in or near towns where no branches exist will arrange to correspond with the brethren charged with tent work with a view to aid them in the work in new places. Please remember that those laborers will need aid financially, and it costs something to run a tent in the interests of the work. A united effort on the part of all the Saints and the work will surely move.

One was baptized at the conference, and others here are interested and investigating. Bro. Thompson is at Radcliff, the home of Bro. Oden Jacobs, looking after the interests of the work—Bro. Rudd is looking after an opening at Holms, eight miles north of here. Services here at Head Grove church are well attended considering the busy season. Bro. W. C. Nirk, our worthy district president, is in the field most of the time and has the confidence of all. Local brethren in various parts of our field are doing what they can to aid the work along—Brn. Morgan and Johnson, of Angus; Bro. M. H. Cook, Des Moines; George Shimel and Bro. Resch, of Cedar Rapids, and others. Let us be encouraged and labor for the right.

For the cause,

OAKLAND CITY, Ind., June 10.

Editors Herald:—On the 20th of March Bro. James B. and I returned to Alton, but only held one meeting, the town being distracted over a Methodist revival. Only a small crowd greeted us on this occasion; still we have a few friends in Alton, and some are seriously considering our claims. We passed on to Fredonia, where we were so cordially received the month before. In the interval the United Brethren Church had held a conference and had tried to turn the people from us, but had failed; so again we were greeted with a full house. We continued our meetings here till March 28 and left some believing. This place must be looked after. It is in V. D. Baggerly's field, and he will see after our interests along this line. We had the Divine recognition at Fredonia.

The 28th found us at the Buckeye schoolhouse, in Perry county, where we labored till April 8. A number are convinced here, and I hope have united with the church ere this. We passed on from here to the Jericho schoolhouse, but discerned that they had no interest in the gospel; still we bore our testimony to them. Here my yokefellow left me and returned home. The 13th found me again at Fredonia, and the 19th at the Buckeye schoolhouse, where I labored till the 23d. Here ended our Ohio River campaign, and the 24th found me at Boston on the railroad. James M. joined me here to say good-bye. May God bless him in the land of flowers, whither he has gone to preach the gospel.

Here I took the train for Oakland City, where James and I and Alma C. Barmore had introduced the gospel one year before. Brn. Alma and L. F. Daniel had come here after the district conference in February, and held a protracted meeting in which six united with us. I labored here till the 4th of May, then proceeded to Tom's Hill, and preached till the 12th, when I went to the Plainsville branch, laboring there till the 18th, when I was prostrated by a bilious attack.

On the 24th we resumed our work. Had quite a good time here and at Washington till the 30th, when I returned to Oakland City, hired a hall, and held three meetings, and on the 2d baptized Bro. W. J. Baldwin and wife. The 3d found me ten miles from here in Pike county, near Augusta, where I preached till the 7th, on the 8th returning to this place to consider the advisability of the organization of a branch. We finally concluded that it was best to defer organization till further developments. Sometimes it is best to make haste to go slow. There are about sixteen members at this city and in the immediate country. The outlook is good. My impressions when I first came a year ago were that God had a people here. At all the places except one where I have labored, some are believing. It seems to me that I have been granted good liberty in preaching the word, for which I feel very thankful. I start in the morning for Evansville to look after a call there for preaching.

The traveling ministry of this field will remember to report to me at Lamoni, Iowa, by the 1st of July. All matter directed to me there will reach me at any time.

I. P. BAGGERLY.

OMAHA, Neb., June 7.

Editors Herald:—I arrived here Friday, May 17; found the Saints looking anxiously for the missionary appointed to Omaha, and nearly all seemed quite hopeful for the coming year. At their business meeting the following Friday night I was chosen to preside, with Bro. A. L. Lightfoot as priest, and Bro. John Agenstine as teacher, Bro. Thomas Miller acts as deacon, Bro. E. E. Barber as clerk. The two for priest and teacher are both young men and new beginners, and we ask that God may bless them with wisdom that they may labor acceptably. Our meetings are quite well attended, both preaching and social services, and a very good spirit is manifest among the Saints, some have not come as often as we would like to see them, but we hope to persuade them to take a more active part with us in due time.

On last Friday night our district conference convened with Bro. G. M. L. Whitman in the chair. After the organization Bro. W. E. Peak was asked to preach and we listened to a very nice talk. Bro. W. W. Blair being present was asked into the stand and assisted the presiding officer all the way though very effectually. The business was all done in very good feeling and passed off nicely. Bro. Blair preached us a very good discourse on Saturday night. Sunday was a busy day with us. There was prayer service at 9:30, Bro. J. W. Waldsmith in charge; preaching at 10:45 by Bro. J. F. Mintun; Sunday school at one; baptism at two; preaching at 2:30 by Bro. C. H. Porter; one child blessed by Brn. W. W. Blair and J. F. Mintun; and at 7:45 Bro. Blair was our speaker again; also one confirmed and one ordained. Two were ordained at the morning service also, the morning preaching being in charge of Bro. E. R. Alstrand, the afternoon in charge of Bro. Owens, both young men in the ministry, Bro. Richard Brown officiating at the baptism. Altogether it was a great day; and though very hot and some rain, the house was well filled, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. The conference, as a whole, was a complete success; the district was well represented and showed considerable growth in numbers as well as in its spiritual condition. There was quite a large force of the ministry present, both local and traveling, and the Saints should feel encouraged, as the outlook for the district is very bright just now. The brethren have all scattered and gone to their respective fields of labor, and the work of the year has now fairly commenced. May God prosper it everywhere.

As we went to the train the other day to see one of the brethren off we ran across Bro. H. O. Smith bound for Utah, his mission this year. As he had to wait some time, we took him with us and had a very pleasant visit; then of course had to say good-bye and he was off to the West. He expected to meet Bro. Heman C. Smith at Oxford, Nebraska, that night. We felt lonely with the brethren all scattered out, we left here in this city with vice and sin surrounding us on every hand. Just think! There is the excursion, the lake, the baseball game, the balloon ascension, the park; and then in order to have things convenient the old Father of lies has an open ticket office to hades (the saloon) at every turn, with an obliging agent, where they will cool your tongue now and torment your soul in the flames in eternity. And now what can I do to divert the people, and call their attention to the awful wrath that awaits them if they continue in their present course? is the all-important question that we must stare in the face and seek to solve; and unless the great Father of love, the Master we serve, shall come to the rescue and give us wisdom and strength, we are as the leaf in the whirlwind; we are shaken, tossed, and lost in the great whirl with which we are surrounded, and can accomplish nothing. May God give us strength and wisdom as our needs may demand, is my prayer.

We would be pleased if the elders passing this way would give us a call, especially if they could stay over Sunday with us. The church is on North Twenty-first street, between Clark and Grace. Should any others be passing through and have occasion to stop over, we would be pleased to have them visit the church.

May the glorious work of God be rolled on to a triumphant victory, and the day when good-byes and partings will be no more speedily come, is my prayer; and I labor to be among the righteous and worthy at that time.

Yours in gospel bonds,

FREDRICK A. SMITH.

COURTLAND, Ont., June 5.

Editors Herald:—Elder Daniel McGregor and I are laboring in this part of the mission. We find much prejudice caused by those who, like them of Ephesus, find their craft in danger. We are holding bush meeting every Sunday afternoon, and so far the attendance has been good.

Priest Robert D. Addison secured use of Orange Hall in the village of Courtland, but the people will not come out as they do in other places, and I feel constrained to make further attempts to get the message to them. It is our intention to personally visit those who have come out, also those who have not. The ministers of the various denominations, Episcopal, Methodist, and Baptist, especially the latter two, have visited their flocks and strongly advised them not to come near us, but to leave us severely alone, and that we would soon tire of preaching to empty seats. We intend, if possible, to disappoint them, believing there are honest-hearted ones in the place who, if not influenced by the preachers, will be glad to hear the truth. Our desire is to get it before them.

Bro. McGregor is young in the work. He is a young man of fine character; is very studious, and is the making of a splendid defender of the faith. He has not preached much, but his sermons are plain, simple, and show evidence of considerable study.

Bro. Addison is of very material assistance to us, as he is so well known. He can secure halls in the neighboring towns and villages. He is to try for an opening in the town of Tilsonburg, of between four and five thousand population. It is a fine place, a splendid center of business for the farming community, and is altogether a desirable place to get a foothold.

SERMON BY ELDER F. M. SHEEHY.

Independence, Missouri, April 13, 1895.

SUBJECT: MOTIVE, MEANS, AND END.

I WILL read a few verses found in the tenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, commencing with the thirty-fourth verse:—

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:) that word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him. [I emphasize this particularly here, you notice, for a purpose.] And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree: him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly; not to all the people, but to witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

There are a few underlying principles that govern us and they are such as it is impossible for us to detach from ourselves. Everybody as individuals, as societies, are governed by them; three of them I will mention,— “motive,” “means,” and “end.” To dispense with either of these means incompleteness. Now, as a people, we attribute to all of our friends, and I like to impress this thought upon our friends always, that we feel towards them that they are equally as honest and as sincere in their desires as we are. We know this to be true from our own experience previous to our joining the church from the various religions that we were subject to, our motives were just as good as they are now and so our friends who may differ with us in regard to religion are in the same sense just as pure and true and their intentions as holy as ours were; we know how it was with ourselves. Now this is the way we feel towards everybody. We would not confine this concession to those who may be termed Christian, but we would broaden it to all the children of men everywhere, so then, we say, we are all equally honest, especially upon this question of religion and, as far as that is concerned, just alike. The second element that I called your attention to we will skip and take up the third, viz., the “end.”

In a general way we are all aiming for heaven. The objective point or the end we desire to reach is heaven, a place of happiness, peace, and contentment. There may be differences of opinion as to what that is or may be, different kinds of ideas, but the thought is the same. We are all aiming for the very best, aiming to go to heaven and in that we are just alike with this difference that I have already expressed, but really the objective point is the same, and in that sense we do not differ.

There is a difference however in relation to the second part. While we all agree touching the motive that moves us, and by the way that point of motive is a very important one, especially as it enters into morals, we are all alike as far, then, as the motive is concerned and alike in a general way so far as the end that we aim at is concerned, but there is a wide and varied difference when we come to the question of means to attain unto that end, and herein lies principally the difference; and much of this is the result of belief, as expressed from this stand previously, that so far as the belief is concerned we are not responsible altogether for it, for we don't believe altogether as a result of our will, but from the force of evidence convincing us, and once convinced our belief is not dependent entirely upon our will, but very often in spite of it. We are all believing honestly and sincerely, and of course it follows that one of the most reprehensible things in this world is to blame each other for believing certain things when we cannot help believing them. I can't help believing as I do as a Latter Day Saint; the evidences are such that I am forced to believe. I ought not to be blamed then for believing as I do. There ought not to be so much trouble on this question of religion when we come to consider it in this sense, we all are so nearly alike in so many essential points and features.

Now the doctrine of motive, that I refer to as entering into morals is a very important one and many of the purported acts of benevolence and generosity are, nearly always, if not altogether, determined by the motive. You know there is the exercise of a great deal of what we would call generosity and benevolence, much of them are manifested in the world and a great deal of credit attributed to certain ones when really so far as the genuine effects in the moral world are concerned there are none. It is true that a man may give his means, his money, his time, his talents and, at the same time, be doing what is really immoral, hurtful to himself and others; for everthing that we do that is hurtful to ourselves has its psychological effect upon those that surround us—we are so wonderfully blended together in this world, and not only in this world, but also in a sort of harmony or touch with the world beyond.

In regard to music, it is said that a musical instrument tuned up to a certain key here, for instance, to G, and another one there tuned up to G, if you touch it here, that in chord with it there responds; the test is very delicate, but sufficient to demonstrate it and that this continues in its harmony throughout the vast universe. Whether or not that is the way by which the heavens and earth are connected I do not know, but the thought is a beautiful one, that every good thing on this earth affects the heavens, somehow they are affected by such things, for we read that when a man repents of his sins and turns unto God upon the earth, that the angels in heaven are made to rejoice. So it seems to me a beautiful thing that every good thought or act on our part meets with a response in heaven.

Now I ought to define "good." I don't mean that it is relatively so because it is a little better than something else, but in the absolute. Good I understand to be that that is in harmony with God. The terms themselves, I believe, are somewhat synonymous, "good," "God;" so whatever is really good must be that that is in harmony with the standard of God, and that is why I emphasize the word "good" in reading this, that it is something that God is doing in a distinctive sense, not in an indirect manner, as we may say, that God is carrying on his wonderful purposes all through nature and even through human society, for God works in an indirect as well as in a direct manner. We might illustrate it, for instance, in the case of Nebuchadnezzar, or Cyrus the prince of Persia, but when we come to his dealings with Daniel, there he works in a direct sense,—with the others indirectly. But now we are speaking in a direct sense when we say that God works in harmony with himself. Whatever, or wherever, or whenever he works directly he is working out according to this principle of good and it is good when it is in harmony with him, that the turning from the evil, the repentance from sin is in harmony with God, a step in that direction, hence it is good, being defined from that standard.

Now in regard to this question of motive. It is just among the possibilities that ourselves as the people of God, presuming that we are so, may be moved to do certain things and they may be of a kind of a religious character; but unless the motive is right the act is fruitless. We will say, for instance, the giving of money. If the giving of money or paying of tithing, even the principle or the practice of consecration, the free-will offerings, to illustrate it in a way that we may understand it ourselves, if the motive is not the right one there is no reciprocity, no benefit to come. Now it is a true principle, if in many instances it may be perverted. The proper motive is essentially necessary, we will take myself to-night, as a preacher I really believe that my effort can be made a fruitless one if the motive actuating me is wrong. If I am here for the purpose of self-aggrandisement, for the purpose of self-praise, or any other sordid motive, my effort will be fruitless, will not benefit me and the chances are very much against its benefiting you; the motive must be right.

I think the key to it is given largely in the statement of Peter where he says that "Christ . . . suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." If our motive is to bring men to God and tends in that direction, that is the kind of faith necessary; and you see in the gospel the principle of selfishness is put at such a wonderful discount that we are, as has been preached here so beautifully, we are individuals working out our own individual salvation and that this individual salvation determines largely the work of the church as a body, so that every one in his individual acts must have pure and right motives. We are therefore taught by the Spirit of truth—this is evidently clear to many of you—we are taught distinctly by the Spirit of truth that the thought must be pure, and how strictly we are enjoined that if we allow the thought to dwell upon anything that is wrong, so that the thought is contaminated, the effects to follow are just the same as would follow the overt act, that is in the spiritual world, as it certainly means spiritual disease or death whichever case it may be.

Then we are to think right, our motive and the very depths of the soul must be right in order to have the desired effect upon ourselves and upon others. There is no salvation then, unless we recognize this principle; for in every act, even in the giving of tithes and offerings, there must be a proper motive, and that motive, while it might not always be the one that naturally actuates man, must be pure. I don't believe that men can naturally of themselves work out their own salvation. It is the result of coöperation, and as that coöperation comes largely through regeneration, then it is God that works in us to will and to do of his good pleasure, while at the same time we coöperate and work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. We work with him and he works with us. So much for motive.

We will now take up the second part—"means." A man then, you will observe, may be honest and sincere as far as the motive is concerned, and he may in regard to the end or his objective point be all right, but if he doesn't use the proper means to bring about the end, he loses. Now, for instance, the Pharisees in the days of Christ were exceedingly religious and they had a great deal of ceremony that with them was sacred, they looked upon it as sacred, revered it as such, but Jesus said of them, "In vain they do worship me." That is a very hard statement, but remember my text here; "God is no respecter of persons, but in every age he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." These people, while they were very religious and their zeal as spoken of by Paul was wonderful, it was without knowledge, and they would compass land and sea to make a proselyte and when they made him a convert to that system, he was really worse than he was before, for the perversion of a thing is a great deal worse than for one to be without the thing itself.

When any good comes to us and its use is perverted, it is more disastrous to us than if we had not had it, so in that sense a bad religion is worse than no religion. The Pharisees' religion made the people twofold more the children of hell than they were before they were converted to it, Jesus arraigned them and told them it was in vain. For people to spend their entire lives and be very zealous religiously and when they are through their life work find that it is all in vain, amounts to really nothing, worse than nothing, for it is vanity.

In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

I want to illustrate this thought by a very common illustration, but I think a very forceful one, the credit of which I will give to President Fairchild, of Oberlin College. He uses this illustration: You may take a doctor who goes to attend a patient. It is presumed that any physician will do his best, it is said that a doctor prolongs a case sometimes—I am rather inclined to think that it is the exception. He approaches the bedside and with the very best of intentions and we have his objective point or his end brought to view, and his motive also. Now if with this intention of curing the sick one, and also this end, he gives the wrong medicine, there is not one in this audience but recognizes the fact that the good intentions of the doctor will not alter the facts, the effects of the poison. There will be the result of error. Take that illustration as an analogy in the sphere of morals. It is so in everything in life; causes and means are followed by their legitimate results no matter what the intentions may be.

We want to be very careful in using the proper means to bring about the desired end, starting properly with the motive. The motive is right when it is begotten in us by the gospel, and so we read that attending the word there must be the Holy Spirit. God's Spirit must attend the preaching of the gospel to get the right start in this moral and spiritual thing, and it must not only work through and with the preacher, but upon those who hear. The responsibility for not receiving this degree of spiritual enlightenment I presume they are largely accountable for themselves, not being receptive for it, but where there is an honest heart desiring to do that which is right and being in what we term a receptive condition, it is always ready, and that I presume means that the Holy Spirit will touch them in response to the preaching, and convince them of judgment, of righteousness, of sin, and of all those things; but the question follows right there as to their acting upon their impressions and convictions. Many people are convinced of sin from preaching who do not act upon their convictions, but allow them to remain dormant and as a result of that the convictions die out.

Two laws are operating always in every principle in life, one is the law of growth and development by use, the other is the law of extirpation by not using, so if we neglect to use ourselves properly we grow less and less powerful to do the good. If we make the effort in the direction of right, we grow stronger and stronger in our power to do right, so that when we hear the gospel preached and the conviction of mind comes, we want to cherish, and cultivate, and care for these convictions. This pricking of the conscience, as we read of in the New Testament, "They were pricked in their heart and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren what shall we do?" and after Peter told them what they should do, supposing then they did not do it, would not the pricking process that is referred to here cease? It certainly would, for God will not always strive with man. Man is largely responsible then as an individual and will doubtless be held so in the day of judgment.

In regard then to the means that are intended,—by whom? Why, by God; the whole thing relating to religion is divine. Man cannot invent a true religion—religion has always been in the past the result of revelation and only by divine revelation is there any true religion. The history of the world is replete with the fact; there never has been a true religion distinct from revelation from God.

Now I have another text I want to bring up here supportive of the one I already used. You notice the breadth of statement expressed there:—

Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.

That was quoted at this broad gathering of the religious world at Chicago and I remember myself years ago thinking that it meant whenever a man was honest and sincere and doing the best that he knew how, he must necessarily be accepted of God because of his honesty and sincerity; but we must interpret that passage of Scripture by other passages, we want to use no isolated passage, for we read in the Bible that "no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." Paul says in the first of Romans:—

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed.

Now you catch the thought. The righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel to every one, not to people back there in the days of the apostles exclusively or to those in ages preceding them, or to some that may come in the future, for remember the application of the thought in the text here, "God is no respecter of persons."

What do you mean by the righteousness of God? We receive it in the gospel. There is such a thing as men establishing their own righteousness: righteousness means there, doubtless, their conception of right and wrong and men have certain conceptions of right and wrong, they have certain ideals that are moving them on and they are doing the very best they can under these circumstances and conditions, but are they right? Not necessarily so for this reason: it isn't a question as to what we may conceive is right and wrong from our standpoint, it is a question of right and wrong revealed from God, a distinctly divine something that comes to us, God's righteousness or right way that he would have us to do, comes then by revelation, in the gospel of Jesus Christ, then, he that fears him and works righteousness, the righteousness defined here by Paul in this first chapter of Romans that is revealed in the gospel, is accepted with God. Now the point: could God be just,—and the attribute of justice we dare not for a moment think of depriving him of,—could he be just to require in the days of the apostles that kind of a means to bring about the desired end or religion for humanity, and then allow some one else, you, or our neighbors, our our friends, to attain to the same end by other means? You can see at once that it would be illogical, that it would be unscriptural. The same end can never be attained, as a rule, except by the same means; there may be exceptions, but as a rule the same end is never attained by different means, strictly speaking.

Now we hear this very fanciful statement that we are all going to heaven only we are all going in a little different way. There is just one way to go towards heaven and that is to point in the direction of heaven. The same end as a rule cannot be attained without the proper means and there is usually a means found proper and adequate for every end. In regard to religion now, men are accepted of God if they work the righteousness that is revealed from him. Paul comes here to our assistance:—

And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

Not our will and our judgment. I am not afraid to confess that my judgment and my will, all honest and sincere as I was before I joined this church, would not have led me to the proper goal; my will was in another direction, my reason appealed to me in another direction and there were many things that I could do as far as my reason was concerned without any compunction of conscience and I had a tolerable conscience too, still I had one like Paul that would allow me to do a great many things contrary to the will of Jesus of Nazareth.

We are transformed by the renewing of our mind, not an instantaneous process, but growing and learning all the time, proving what things are acceptable unto God. Then his righteousness is revealed to us in the gospel and the gospel then becomes the means by which we attain to the end desired, namely, heaven. Now to illustrate that as far as we are concerned as a people, it is our basis in argument that the carrying on or the working out of the ministerial work with us must be in harmony with the Bible, we must have apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. That being laid down here as the divine method, the revealed method, the gospel method that God has ordained, if there is anything that we can prove from the Bible standpoint, if that is evidence sufficient in any case, it certainly is in this case: "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments," "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith."—1 Cor. 12: 28; Eph. 4: 12, 13. Now we have it fairly stated, that God set these in operation and they come under the heading here of "means." We say distinctly that it must be the means for it so states there. The objective point is what? That we may "all come in the unity of the faith," "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." These means are ordained of God. Would you wish to say, my friend, or to take the ground that you can attain to the same end without it, after what we have produced here by way of illustrations if they are forceful, and I am inclined to think they are? They can be supported by many more, if necessary, but it seems to me that we have made the point clear and distinct that motive, ends, and means are indispensable.

Now whose and what means shall we use to attain to heaven? We go back to the institution revealed here of God called the gospel and we have apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. Now, my good friend, that may belong to some other church here, I have attributed to you all the honesty that I ask for myself, that is as far as you could require of me, and I am willing to say that your desire for heaven is just as great as mine can be; but there is a difference between us, and right here is where it hinges. You doubtless think that you can attain that end in a different way from what I think. I simply support my thinking by these Bible evidences and call your attention to what you are willing to admit as competent because I am presuming you believe the Bible to contain the word of God. Now the indispensable part of it is, that the perfecting of the saints must be done by apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. Now if you don't believe in prophets, if you denounce apostles in the scriptural sense, if you discard these means, do you not see where the trouble is? Can you, when the time comes for the making up the rewards, can you find fault with God? Why, no. You will be aware of this fact that God is no respecter of persons and if he has ordained a way and means for us to attain unto this high place called heaven, that he must, if he is in harmony with himself, be just, and if just he could not allow me to reach that end in any other way than that which he has demanded and required of other men. What did he require back there? What we have already quoted; he required apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. He enjoined that, and set them there for that purpose and they were wonderful means, for you see the end is the fullness of character like Christ; this was intended for that purpose.

There is where we rest our argument, here is where we largely rest our case as a church and as a people, and our work in the world is not an antagonistic one against our friends, but a requirement that they shall notice what God has said, and we do not make any claims of greatness in the discovery of this proper means, we fall back upon the humble position that we are not responsible for it—it is divine, God has ordained it, God has revealed it, and you will have to admit also in harmony with this, though I have already expressed to you this point, that if it was the revelation to every one then, it must be the revelation to every one now. It is simply out of the question for this man or that lady to have the revelation to them that answers for me. That is entirely out of harmony with human experience. The only benefit that comes to you and me is that which becomes ours by virtue of our possession and assimilation with it, so that if you possess anything and it benefits you, that is yours, and in order for me to have the benefit I must also possess.

Then you cannot detach the doctrine of immediate revelation, taught by this church, and the one that causes a difference largely with our friends, for we think it absolutely necessary, we put that word absolutely there, and I make it just as strong as the word will allow, absolutely necessary that there shall be the operation of what we term revelation to every one; to the Jew first and then to the Greek, especially to all that believe. Now that is the rule. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Now "every one" of course means us and that is the limitation of this, as was argued here the other morning, if you remember the argument, the limitation was to all that God would call, "Even as many as the Lord, our God, shall call," and of course it extends to us.

We don't wish to spend our lives here in things that are vain and ask that God will accept of it when he has told us distinctly that he will not. If you will read the Bible you will discover these thoughts I have expressed to you. "In every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." There is no exclusiveness with regard to nationality now; there may have been in the days of Israel, now nationality has nothing to do with it, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. But that righteousness is not man's own conception of what may be right or wrong, but God's revelation of it, and he has revealed it in the gospel, hence we must, in order to be accepted with him, work out the righteousness that is in his gospel, using the means; apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, which is a part of it. We cannot, of course, dispense with faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, in fact any part of the gospel paraphernalia. God being no respecter of persons, he cannot break laws for our benefit and be just. It is said by some that God can do such things but really he has to recognize these principles of justice, mercy, and love and in order to be just he must maintain equality, must deal with every man alike. He requires of you repentance as well as he does of me. He requires of you baptism as well: and if he required it then in the days of the Savior he requires it now and he will reveal now if he revealed then. You see there is nothing very staggering about this, it is easy of comprehension, a child may comprehend it.

I will simply summarize a moment, and leave the matter with you. Go back with me to the thought expressed that our motives must be right, that we must be honest and good for the truth's sake. Now men must not be moved by the motive that they are going to heaven simply to get rid of hell—that is not the thought intended to be in the soul of man by the power of God. While there is a respect for God's law and a certain amount of regard for penalty, yet the motive is to do right because it is right, and God's goodness leads us to repentance rather than the pseudo emotional feelings that we see so much of. We don't wish to be moved only by the highest and best consideration, then we want to serve God because he wants us to and it is his desire that we should, and to acknowledge his law and his commandments is the whole duty of man, the highest and best exercise of our being. We are grander men and women, we are employing the highest functions of our body and soul when we serve God and keep his commandments. It is the height of the rational to bow the knee in submission to superiority, it is right that we should reverence that which is worthy of it, and when we present the Christ, the grandest character of all time and all ages, and I suppose I may properly say, all worlds, I can conceive with you tonight that God can have nowhere in any planet within his realm anything grander than the revelation of himself to us in Jesus Christ, for he is God manifest in the flesh; the reverence and the respect then that belongs to Jesus Christ, that is due him from you and me is that that appeals to our reason and we consider then we are higher and grander as men and women when we bow reasonably and reverently to the principles of life that are revealed in Christ, and submit our conception and our ideals to his conception and his ideal, and work the righteousness of God that is revealed in him.

PASTORAL WORK.

DURING my recent tour attending conferences in Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska, I have seen what has been confirmed to me repeatedly since 1858, that the minister who wisely, prayerfully, and faithfully does pastoral work succeeds much the best. The minister needs to come into close contact with the people, thereby giving them opportunities to present questions touching the divine message he bears and enabling him to learn and resolve their doubts and fears by furnishing proper information. Patient, prudent labor in this direction works well in winning converts to Christ, also in teaching, encouraging, and confirming the hearts of the Saints. Church building after this manner gives strength and firmness, and cultivates godly zeal and resolution. It also reacts upon the minister, blessing him with larger, clearer views of human wants and needs and teaching him as to proper methods and means, ordained of God, to supply them. Ministerial visitation ought not to be limited to Christ's flock within the fold, but should be extended to the "lost sheep" outside that they may be gathered in and saved. Many of "the good Shepherd's" sheep are to be found outside the fold, wandering "upon the mountains" without good pasturage and safety, even as many "good fish" are outside the gospel "net," dispersed far and near in the great ocean of humanity. All these should be hunted and gathered in every available way, and this can be done only by the ministry seeking them faithfully wherever they may be found, bestowing upon them needed attention and labor to ensure their safety and godly edification.

The Lord requires in this latter-day dispensation, that his ministers shall teach to individuals, and to households, as well as to villages and cities, the "good news" of salvation in Christ restored by the hands of the angel promised in Revelation 14: 6, 7, as see the following:—

Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples. He that receiveth you not, go away from him alone by yourselves, and cleanse your feet, even with water, pure water, whether in heat or in cold, and bear testimony of it unto your Father which is in heaven, and return not again unto that man. And into whatsoever village or city ye enter, do likewise. Nevertheless, search diligently and spare not; and wo unto that house, or that village, or city, that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony concerning me. Wo, I say again, unto that house, or that village, or city, that rejecteth you, or your words, or your testimony of me; for I, the Almighty, have laid my hands upon the nations to scourge them for their wickedness; and plagues shall go forth, and they shall not be taken from the earth until I have completed my work, which shall be cut short in righteousness; until all shall know me, who remain, even from the least unto the greatest, and shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and shall see eye to eye, and shall lift up their voice, and with the voice together sing this new song, saying.—D. C. 83: 16.

Active, patient effort, in visiting from house to house doing ministerial work, teaching and explaining, "communicating in all good things," has won for some of the ministry in Western Iowa, also in Nebraska and Kansas, the profound regard and highly commendatory words of Saints, investigators, and of many other influential citizens, and also resulted in gathering some into the fold who have needed such ministrations to help them to learn "more perfectly the way of the Lord."

The Lord says to his ministry:—

Behold I sent you out to testify and warn the people; and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads.—D. C. 85: 22.

From the above it is seen that a wide field is open to all who have received the latter-day gospel message. All who have "been warned" should "warn his neighbor." This means diligence and urgent work toward the individual. Heaven hates idleness. Loving, faithful ministers will carefully seek opportunities to warn, and teach, and testify, in all wisdom and prudence, and so will the laity. "Let all things be done unto edifying." Those who observe to do this work will be richly blessed of the Lord; the Saints and many non-members will honor and sustain them, and the work of the Lord will prosper and prevail gloriously wherever worthy Saints are found.

INTERROGATION POINT NEEDED.

IN a work published by Robert Morris I find the following criticism on Exodus 6: 3:—

"And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty; but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known unto them." And yet, in Jacob's vision of the ladder, God revealed to him his name, as he had before done to his forefathers, Abraham and Isaac: I am Jehovah, the God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac. And we have the most satisfactory evidence to prove that this was the same name which God revealed to Adam, and afterwards to Enoch.

Shuckford says, with his usual penetration,

Our English translation, of the latter part of the third verse of the sixth chapter of Exodus, "but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them," is undoubtedly a faulty translation; not rightly expressing what Moses intended in this place.

The best and most accurate writers have remarked, that the latter part of the verse should be read interrogatively; thus: "By my name Jehovah was I not known unto them?"

If we take the sentence interrogatively, every one will see that it plainly intimated that the Lord had revealed himself to them by this name, which is agreeable to Moses' account of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob's knowledge and worship of Deity; but to take the words without the interrogation, and suppose them to intend that the Lord who appeared to Abraham was not known to him, to Isaac, and to Jacob, by this name Jehovah, cannot be reconciled to some very express passages in the Book of Genesis.

After reading the above I turned to the Inspired Translation for further light, and found the following:—

And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob. I am the Lord God Almighty; the Lord JEHOVAH. And was not my name known unto them?

This is interrogatively spoken as these learned critics suggest. I hardly need to say that after reading this latter rendering I felt an additional interest in our Inspired Translation.

[THE supposed quotation of Morris from Jacob's vision is incorrect. The passage reads as follows, in King James' version: "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac," etc. (Gen. 28: 13.) The name "Jehovah" does not occur, at least in the common version. We publish the article, as the point is made in favor of the Inspired Translation.—ED.]

THE PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.

THE following occurs in Mr. Stead's Review of Reviews for May 15, 1895:—

In the United Service Magazine for May Major John has an interesting article "The passage of the Red Sea by the Israelites," which was suggested to him by an experience of his own when in Egypt.

One day, when employed between Port Said and Kantara, a gale of wind from the eastward set in and became so strong that I had to cease work. Next morning on going out I found that Lake Menzaleh, which is situated on the west side of the canal, had totally disappeared, the effect of the high wind on the shallow water having actually driven it away beyond the horizon, and the natives were walking on the mud where the day before the fishing boats, now aground, had been floating.

This set him to thinking, and before long he came to the conclusion that he had witnessed precisely the same phenomena which three thousand years before had overwhelmed Pharaoh and his armies. In this article he gives the result of his investigation.

Resolved also that the heartfelt sympathies of this conference be extended to his bereaved companion and the other members of his family in this deep affliction. The good Spirit was present, and most especially at the 2:30 p. m. prayer and testimony meeting on Sunday. All the branches of the district reported, showing a marked increase in membership, with bright prospects in the future for more. One important move of the conference was in passing a resolution that the tent committee purchase the tent that had been contemplated for the past six months, and put it in operation as soon as possible, money having been pledged and paid in to the amount of $130.07. An enthusiastic spirit manifested a desire to see the gospel work brought before the world in such a way as to reach the greatest number of people in the most speedy manner. Sunday School Associations.

MANCHESTER AND SHEFFIELD.

A short convention of the Manchester and Sheffield district association was held on Easter Sunday, April 14, 1895, at Leeds. The proceedings opened at 8:30 a. m., with hymn 99 (Sankey's), and prayer by Bro. Mair. Elder Henry Greenwood read an excellent paper on "The Duties of Superintendents," pointing out, 1. The necessity of the superintendent being a man of sound judgment and Christ-like character; 2. Those portions of school work requiring particular attention from the superintendent. Elder S. F. Mather followed the paper with a model lesson on "The first Missionary Journey of St. Paul." Two special points of note in the lesson were the use of a splendid map, executed by Elder W. R. Armstrong, and the skillful handling of the blackboard by the teacher. "The Relation of the Sunday School to the Church" was the next item on the program, a paper by Elder Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., ably emphasizing the great importance of the Sunday school work and pointing out the necessity of the Sunday school working on parallel lines with the church. Hymn 7 (Sankey's) was sung, and the district superintendent (Elder S. F. Mather) delivered a ten-minute address, dealing with the work of the Sunday school, more particularly in its district capacity. Bro. B. Green now read a paper on "Music in the Sunday School." The writer gave a brief sketch of the history of music from the Biblical point of view, and then passed on to consider the benefits of music, concluding with some practical hints as to the way in which Sunday schools may attain excellence in that sublime art. The paper was preëminently successful in its exposition of the subject. "Question time" followed; the questions asked, and answered, bore mainly on the local government of branch Sunday schools. Elder E. R. Dewsnup utilized a few minutes with a chalk talk on "The Efficient Teacher," diagnosing him under the heads of discipline, instruction, and sympathy. After a few encouraging remarks from the president of the district, a most successful convention came to a conclusion. All in attendance were pleased and satisfied, and the Sunday school work in this vicinity has received a further impetus.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA REUNION.

To the Saints of Southern California.—According to your decision the committee on arrangements for reunion is limited to the month of July. We have decided on the 12th of July, which will be on Friday. This is about the time it has been the past two reunions. It will be held in the grove close to the depot as usual at Downey, commencing at half past ten o'clock. All arrangements will be carried out according to instructions as near as possible, such as having good water, fuel, hay, and all needful things to make it a pleasant and profitable time for the Saints. Those desiring hotel accommodations would do well to notify the committee, one or both, as they choose, who will secure such accommodations as reasonable as can be had. All desiring tents furnished also notify committee when and how long you wish them. The reunion will last ten days. There will be the old district tent put up the same as last year, which can be partitioned off the same as last year for sleeping apartments, but Saints, remember to bring your blankets or bedding, as this is a camp meeting.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us come together bringing the Spirit of the Master, Jesus Christ, with us, and we shall have a time of rejoicing. Let us make all the effort possible to gather together at this time as it is only once a year and we need the rest and spiritual food it is ours to enjoy if we so desire. Hoping to see a larger gathering than we have ever seen, we your committee will labor and pray.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Resolutions passed at a conference of the Kewanee district, held at Peoria, Illinois, June 2, 1895:—

Whereas, it has pleased almighty God to remove from our ranks our beloved and much esteemed brother, Elder E. E. Wheeler, and transported him to a higher and nobler sphere of life and action, Be it resolved by the Kewanee district conference now assembled in Peoria, Illinois, that we acknowledge the hand of God in this dispensation of his providence and fully recognize and appreciate the most efficient labors of our beloved Bro. Wheeler as a faithful minister of Jesus Christ during the six years he labored among us as a missionary. Be it further resolved that the Saints of Kewanee district extend their heartfelt sympathy and condolence to the grief-stricken family of our deceased brother in this their hour of great bereavement, and commend our sister, the companion of our deceased brother, into the care and keeping of the allwise Father who doeth all things well, and provides for the widow and fatherless in their afflictions; that in her grief and loneliness she put her trust and confidence in him who instructs us that not a sparrow falls to the ground without the notice of our heavenly Father. Be it further resolved that these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Kewanee district, and that a copy of the same be furnished the Saints' Herald and Zion's Ensign for publication, and that a copy be sent to the family of our deceased brother.

J. R. SUTTON.

BORN.

HARVEY.—At Davis City, Iowa, May 22, 1895, to Mr. Refine and Sr. Eugenia Harvey, a daughter. Blessed June 9, 1895, by Elders R. M. Elvin and J. S. Snively, and named Ruby Irena.

JACKSON.—To Bro. L. B. and Sr. Elizabeth P. Jackson, Euclid, Arkansas, January 6, 1895, a son, and named Lewis MacRea. Blessed by Elder J. W. Jackson, January 13.

JACKSON.—To Bro. J. W. and Sr. Belle Jackson, Euclid, Arkansas, May 7, 1895, a daughter, named Evanelia Maybelle. Blessed by Elder J. W. Jackson, May 18.

DIED.

WHITE.—At Clinton, Missouri, June 7, Sr. Viola V. White, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Alfred White, aged 21 years. She was baptized by Elder J. C. Foss, at Independence, in 1883. Her illness continued long and was very distressing; but relief came temporarily at times under the gospel administration. Her remains were taken to Independence, Missouri, for burial. The services were held in the stone church, at 11:30 a. m. on the 8th, Elder Joseph Luff preaching the sermon. Many Saints were in attendance to pay the last tribute of affection to one who had lived and was universally loved among them. May the good Master comfort the stricken family.

BRAMBURGAR.—Sr. Lydia E., wife of James Bramburgar, departed this life May 4, 1895, at Manville, Indiana, aged 44 years and 26 days. She was baptized ten days prior to her death. She leaves a husband, five children (two having preceded her), and a father, aged eighty-five years. Funeral sermon preached by Elder W. C. Marshall to a large congregation. Text, 1 John 5: 4.

BROWN.—At Utah, Illinois, May 22, 1895, Bro. Warren Brown, aged 30 years, 6 months, and 26 days. He was born in Henderson, Illinois, and lived in Knox and Warren counties in his young manhood, except a few years spent in Iowa. He was married to Charlotta M. Watson, February 12, 1889, who now mourns the loss of a kind and loving companion. He took charge of his father's farm near New Virginia, Iowa, but in 1894 became helpless from the trouble that finally ended his earthly life. So his father brought him home in October, 1894. On his return he told his parents he wished to unite with the church as soon as his strength would return to him. So on May 4 he was baptized by Elder D. S. Holmes. The funeral was from his father's home, and was the largest gathering in the east end of Warren county. The funeral was in charge of Elder J. W. Terry; sermon by Elder D. S. Holmes.

NORRIS.—Wm. Carlos Norris died May 30, 1895, aged 19 years, 3 months, and 11 days. This young man met with an accident at eight years of age that injured his spine and made him a cripple for life. He had been a great sufferer for over eleven years, growing worse during the last year. He became acquainted with the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints during the last few months of his suffering, having the beauties of the resurrection explained to his understanding by Sr. E. J. Moore, H. F. Durfey, and others. He expressed a desire to regain his health sufficient to obey but was not permitted do so but passed away relying on the mercy of a just God. Funeral at the family residence, Tabor, Iowa, by H. F. Durfey, from Job 14: 14. Prayer by S. J. Roberts. Interment in the Tabor cemetery. Father, mother, one brother, and one sister mourn their loss, but what we believe is his gain.

COUSINS.—Sr. Abbie G. Cousins, of Brooksville, Maine, departed this life May 15, 1895. She was born January 8, 1815, and was baptized by Elder T. W. Smith, April 29, 1868. She lived and died a true Saint of God. She leaves two sons, Mace and Willie, to mourn.

OLNEY.—Near Juliaetta, Idaho, March 22, 1895, Sister Olney. Deceased was born July 5, 1842, in Hopkins county, Kentucky. Her maiden name was Mary Ann Ray. She was married to William Henry Clark August 2, 1864. About this time she united with the Baptist Church. Moved to Missouri, where her first husband died. She was afterwards married to Benjamin Olney. Moved to Oregon, where she heard the restored gospel, and she and her husband were baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ, April, 1877, by J. C. Clapp. She lived a faithful member to her death, and in her last hours rejoiced in hope of a glorious resurrection. Sister Olney was the mother of seven children, five boys and two girls, all of whom are living to mourn their loss. Funeral sermon was preached by B. R. Turnbow May 19, 1895, at the Union schoolhouse, near Juliaetta, a large concourse of people being present.

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET AND HIS PROGENITORS.

BY LUCY SMITH.

This work is familiarly known as "Lucy Smith's History." It was written by the Mother of the Prophet, most of it previous to his death, and is said to have passed under his personal inspection. It is a book of 312 pages and contains biographical sketches and the genealogy of Joseph Smith and his ancestors. A history of the religious movement established under the ministry of Mr Smith is given, with many remarkable incidents connected with the development of the latter-day work not recorded in other publications. The reader is furnished a plain and truthful statement of facts concerning the Smith family, its origin, character, and history, in contrast with the mass of unreliable and untruthful accounts published and circulated by its enemies. It includes an account of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES.

OF great interest to archaeologists are the recent discoveries of De Morgan in Egypt. A year ago this judicious explorer of the burial places of the ancient Pharaohs found in the galleries of one of the smaller pyramids, southwest of Cairo, the tomb and burial treasures of Amenemhat III. of the twelfth dynasty of Egypt, together with the tombs of several royal princesses and also the resting places of two other Egyptian kings; Convinced that Amenemhat would not be sleeping in death without having near him the remains of those dear to him, De Morgan surmised that the pyramid would probably be surrounded by tombs covered by the desert sand. Acting on this supposition he set to work to discover, if possible, the entrance to these chambers. Sounding after sounding was made without success until last February, when a huge rock was struck. After this had been removed, a gallery was disclosed and what is believed to be Amenemhat III.'s royal house of death was opened after being closed for thousands of years. In it was seen the mummified bodies of Princess Ita and Queen Khnoumit, loaded with jewels and surrounded by scent boxes and all kinds of dainty ornaments such as must have been dear to female hearts at a time anterior to that of reliable secular history.

The mummified remains of the princess were covered with ornaments and her golden death mask shone in the dim light of the pit. A jewelled dagger with a blade of bronze rested on her breast and among the various decorations were gold leaves so thin and fragile that they moved with the slightest breeze. The queen was also buried with a wealth of precious ornaments. There were numerous bracelets, strings of pearl and costly stones, and also crowns, scepters, and adornments for the hair and bits of rich stuffs and fine linen, giving a slight hint of the magnificence of the period in which they were worn.

As the most valuable find, is mentioned a crown formed of interlacing threads of gold and enriched with precious stones, gems by the score, each of which is worth almost a king's ransom. Exquisite and beautiful in the extreme is the design of this crown. Its threads of gold are worked into the shape of a great circle of myotis, the delicately formed blossom of each having in its center a jewel. Six crosses, resembling greatly that design known as the Greek cross, occur at regular intervals, the center of each being a huge blazing gem, and the cross itself being four golden lotus flowers joined at their stems and incrustated with vari-colored jewels of wonderful lights and sheen.

Amenemhat III., the fifth king of the twelfth dynasty, during the reign of which some suppose the immigration of Jacob and his sons took place, stands out from the dark background of the past ages as a famous engineer, ruling the country during a time of perhaps unparalleled prosperity. He regulated the inundations of the Nile and constructed the immense reservoir known as Lake Mo, where water for irrigation purposes was stored up. Near the lake he built the famous labyrinth consisting of 6,000 rooms, the remains of which were found by Dr. Lepsius.

Undoubtedly, the discoveries now made by De Morgan will lead to further researches in places where hitherto nothing but the burning desert sand has met the eye of the traveler. It is not impossible that many of the puzzling questions of ancient chronology, and with them the history of the early civilization of the human race, may yet be answered through further discoveries in the city of the dead, of inscriptions or records now hidden, but destined to come to light in due time.—Sel.

THE EVIL EFFECTS OF FOUL AIR

PERHAPS the most thorough investigation of the bad effects of the foul air of ill-ventilated rooms is that just completed by Drs. Bergey, Weir Mitchell, and Billings. Its results, described in a paper read before the National Academy of Sciences on April 16 and just published in Science (May 3), are very interesting and may overthrow some accepted ideas on the subject of ventilation. It appears that air expired by healthy animals contains no special organic poison, and that the injurious effects of such air are due entirely to decrease of oxygen and increase of carbonic acid. Says the report:—

“[It is] very improbable that the minute quantity of organic matter contained in the air expired from human lungs has any deleterious influence upon men who inhale it in crowded rooms, and hence it is probably unnecessary to take this factor into account in providing for the ventilation of such rooms.

“In ordinary quiet respiration no bacteria, epithelial scales, or particles of dead tissue are contained in the expired air. In the act of coughing or sneezing such organisms or particles may probably be thrown out.”

In rooms in which diseased persons are present, of course the conditions are different. To quote further:—

“The air in an inhabited room, such as the hospital ward in which experiments were made, is contaminated from many sources besides the expired air of the occupants, and the most important of the contaminations are in the form of minute particles or dusts. The experiments on the air of the hospital ward, and with the moisture condensed therefrom, show that the greater part of the ammonia in the air was connected with dust particles which could be removed by a filter. They also showed that in this dust there were micro-organisms, including some of the bacteria which produce inflammation and suppuration, and it is probable that these were the only really dangerous elements in this air.”

The liability to disease of persons inhabiting crowded, ill-ventilated rooms is due, then, simply to the greater probability that the air of such rooms will contain the germs of disease—not to any poisonous qualities of the foul air itself, though possibly “impure atmospheres may affect the vitality and bactericidal powers of the cells and fluids of the upper air passages . . . and thus predispose to infection.” On this point “there is yet no scientific evidence,” but it would seem from the experiments on sewer gas (recently quoted) that it is extremely probable. It is certain, however, that, no matter what it may be about foul air that makes us ill, it is another and a comparatively harmless property of it that makes us uncomfortable, just as it is not the ill-smelling sulfurous gases from coal that* are deadly, but the non-odorous carbon monoxid. In the words of the report:—

“The discomfort produced by crowded, ill-ventilated rooms in persons not accustomed to them is not due to the excess of carbonic acid, nor to bacteria, nor, in most cases, to dusts of any kind. The two great causes of such discomfort, tho not the only ones, are excessive temperature and unpleasant odors. Such rooms as those referred to are generally overheated; the bodies of the occupants, and, at night, the usual means of illumination, contributing to this result.

“The results of this investigation, taken in connection with the results of other recent researches summarized in this report, indicate that some of the theories upon which modern systems of ventilation are based are either without foundation or doubtful, and that the problem of securing comfort and health in inhabited rooms requires the consideration of the best methods of preventing or disposing of dusts of various kinds, of properly regulating temperature and moisture, and of preventing the entrance of poisonous gases like carbonic oxid, derived from heating and lighting apparatus, rather than upon simply diluting the air to a certain standard of proportion of carbonic acid present. It would be very unwise to conclude, from the facts given in this report, that the standards of air supply for the ventilation of inhabited rooms . . . are much too large under any circumstances, or that the differences in health and vigor between those who spend the greater part of their lives in the open air of the country hills and those who live in the city slums do not depend in any way upon the differences between the atmospheres of the two localities except as regards the number and character of micro-organisms.

“The cause of the unpleasant, musty odor which is perceptible to most persons on passing from the outer air into a crowded, unventilated room is unknown. It may in part be due to volatile products of decomposition contained in the expired air of persons having decayed teeth, foul mouths, or certain disorders of the digestive apparatus, and it is due in part to volatile fatty acids produced from the excretions of the skin and from clothing soiled with such excretions. It may produce nausea and other disagreeable sensations in specially susceptible persons, but most men soon become accustomed to it and cease to notice it, as they will do with regard to the odor of a smoking-car or a soap-factory after they have been for some time in the place. The direct and indirect effects of odors of various kinds upon the comfort, and perhaps, also, upon the health of men are more considerable than would be indicated by any tests now known for determining the nature and quantity of the matters which give rise to them. . . .

“Cases of fainting in crowded rooms usually occur in women, and are connected with defective respiratory, action due to tight lacing or other causes.

“Other causes of discomfort in rooms heated by furnaces or by steam are excessive dryness of the air and the presence of small quantities of carbonic oxid, of illuminating gas, and, possibly, of arsenic, derived from the coal used for heating.”—Sci.

THAT COLLEGE.

FROM what will be found in other places, this issue, it will be seen that college matters are progressing. The committee, being desirous of urgently pushing the enterprise, have decided to secure by loan a sum sufficient to go right along with the building. It occurs to us that now is a good time for some of those who have been waiting for some time to do something a little more than ordinary for the work, to do it. A few hundreds or thousands donated to this college work, either as a subscription gift to its funds, or as a loan is an investment that no man who makes it will ever have need to be ashamed of. Let the committee hear from you at once.

THE ADVENT MOVEMENT, ETC.

IN the Original Articles department will be found some letters on the Advent movement inaugurated by William Miller, of which Bro. C. J. Hunt writes in the letter published herewith. It would be well if others of the ministry who secure valuable items of general information would likewise give fellow-ministers the benefit of what they become possessed of, for the benefit of the work and the mutual aid of colaborers.

AUBURN, Iowa, May 2.

Editors Herald:—Inclosed please find letters that it may be well to publish, as they will probably give some an idea how the great Adventist Church began, etc. Please take especial care of those letters from Uriah Smith and W. N. Glenn and return to me at Deloit. If my comments are not correct, please correct them, if thought best to publish.

I feel quite sure that Bro. Jared Carter did missionary work in the Eastern States in 1832-34.

I had a pleasant chat with an Adventist minister not many weeks ago, and gave him a little history of the Millerite and Advent Churches, and he acknowledged most of it, with apparently some pain.

I have secured some good admissions from our Christian (Campbellite) friends; from Elders J. H. Garrison, Hopkins, Pinkerton, Tyler, of New York, and Dr. D. R. Dungan. Bro. J. F. McDowell is writing a tract on their faith, etc., and will make use of the letters. Hope to be able to send to Board of Publication for inspection soon. Hastily,

C. J. HUNT.

STRIKES, WITH VIOLENCE, UNLAWFUL.

IT was thought by some last summer that the HERALD Editor was not justified in taking the view of the then pending strike that he did; and he was quite severely censured by some of the HERALD readers for having anything to say about the strike, and was told to confine his literary efforts to preaching the gospel. A year has now passed, Mr. Debs the labor leader, agitator, and strike inaugurator of last year has been arrested, tried on appeal to the Supreme Court, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, for the part he took in the strike riots of the summer. The following editorial from the Chicago Tribune for May 29, 1895, will give a fair presentation of the case as it stands now.

The President of the American Railway Union talks very gloomily about the decision of the Supreme Court in his case and seems to think that the republic has gone to smash because he is going to jail. It is natural that he should take a pessimistic view of things, because his occupation and that of other men of the same class is gone. They have lost their bread and butter. They can no longer stir up dupes to insurrection and be paid by those dupes for leading them astray and getting them into trouble. It has been decided that the judge is mightier than the anarchistic walking delegate. Naturally this is not pleasant news for the latter.

But when the revolutionists of last July say that the effect of this decision is to put a quietus on strikes, meaning thereby that they have been declared unlawful, they say what is not true. When they defined a strike last year they said it was a concerted, peaceful cessation of labor to make an employer grant better wages or better conditions of labor. Such a strike was not unlawful then, nor is it now. There is nothing in this latest decision which makes it impossible for a railroad man to quit work when dissatisfied with the terms of employment. If he has made a contract to work for a certain length of time and breaks it he can be sued for damages, and if he has any property may be made to pay damages. But he cannot be prosecuted criminally, nor can he be made to work against his will.

If, however, Debs and Howard mean by a "peaceful strike" one where men who do not wish to work take up stones, coupling-pins, and other weapons and drive from their engines men who do wish to work, then the Supreme Court has said such a strike is unlawful. It never was otherwise, but the Debsites did not appreciate that fact a year ago as they do now. Last year's strike was a sympathetic, causeless, and violent one, which extended from here to San Francisco, and was marked by lawless features from one end of the route to the other. The Supreme Court has said that kind of a strike must not be tolerated. That is no new deliverance. That has been the law always. Unfortunately the law has not always been as well enforced as it was last summer.

Debs says "State rights are practically eliminated." Not at all. They are the same they were last July, but national rights have been upheld. "Every Federal Judge" has not been made "a Czar," but the power of a Federal Judge to punish for contempt law-breakers who will not heed his warnings and drop their weapons has been vindicated. Men who obey injunctions will not suffer. The right of a citizen to a trial by his peers is not broken down, and the "death knell of the wage system" has not been rung. Everything will go on just as before, with the slight difference that Debs, Howard, etc. will be in jail for a few months.

That may seem an important matter to them, and possibly is the reason why they think republican institutions have been upset, and a tyranny substituted for them. When they are released from imprisonment they will find the country free and happy, getting along very well without its Debs, its Howards, and other anarchistically inclined individuals who have been earning a living by stirring up strife and dissension.

The right to labor is a birthright to all men, the right to better one's condition by proper means attaches to the right to labor as a consequence, and there can be no legitimate interference with either right. But, the concession of such rights by society to the individual by no means concedes the right to individuals to seek to advance their interests and better their condition, by the use of such measures as disregard the general good of society, do violence to others, destroy property, and put society to distress and expense to maintain order and protect citizens from injury.

The country suffered greatly last year by reason of the strike inaugurated by Mr. Debs and his associates; and it is to punish the wrong done to society at large, and to other workers besides themselves, and to vindicate the principles upon which the compact of the State is based, that the supreme court has condemned Messrs. Debs and Howard to imprisonment. We hope that the lesson taught by the strike and its results will be salutary and final.

A RIGHTEOUS DECISION.

In the fight against the evils of intemperance in Indiana the following occurrence took place:—

Mary E. Haggart and Sarah C. Rathwell owned property on College Avenue, in the Second Ward of the city of Indianapolis, for a number of years, occupying the property as a dwelling place. The locality was settled and occupied by people noted for morality, sobriety, and the better qualities of good citizenship, and who were opposed to saloons. There had not been up to a certain time a saloon in the ward or the locality. Residence property had been sought for both to buy and to rent by a similar class of people, and had an enhanced value because of the conditions named above. One George Heidt owned a piece of land with a building on it adjoining the lot of these women and fronting on the same street. On the 16th day of June, 1890, this man, George Heidt, rented his place to John H. Stehlin for the purpose of his keeping a saloon in which he proceeded to do, putting out signs, and inviting people in to drink. His business flourished and soon persons, male and female, black and white, were seen passing in and out, and often under the influence of liquor, both by day and night.

Mesdames Haggart and Rathwell sued the two men, Heidt and Stehlin; alleging that the business carried on by them was offensive to those living in the neighborhood, and to those who by reason of the good reputation which the place had before the saloon was opened, desired and sought to reside there; and that they had suffered injury in a financial way, because the saloon lessened the value of their property from $5,500 to $3,000, and its rental from $35 to $20 per month; they therefore asked judgment for $2,000 damages, and that Heidt and Stehlin be enjoined from the continuance of the acts complained of.

Heidt, the owner of the property on which the saloon was kept, answered to the complaint that he not keeping the saloon no case was made against him; this defense the lower court allowed. Stehlin answered that he held a license to keep the saloon, which he held to be a good defense. This the court also allowed.

The women demurred to this defense claiming that a license was not a protection for the saloon in the locality. The court overruled this demurrer, and Mesdames Haggart and Rathwell appealed to the Supreme Court. The suit was brought on the 23d of February, 1891. On January 26, 1892, the Supreme Court decided against the women plaintiffs. But on a proper petition a rehearing was granted, the case thoroughly argued, and the court set aside its former decision; and on the 14th day of December, 1893, the court rendered a second decision in the favor of the women plaintiffs and against both the saloon keeper and the owner of the real estate who had leased it for saloon purposes.

The decision, in substance, was:—

First, the act of 1875, requiring license to be taken out by a person selling intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises is constitutional.

Second, a nuisance may be both public and private, and where the damage to the individual is more than to the public, or where he sustains a special damage not common to all, he may maintain a private action for the nuisance.

Third, where one locates and maintains a saloon near to a dwelling house in a quiet neighborhood devoted mainly to residence purposes and made up of quiet and orderly people, and thereby reduces the rental or selling value or enjoyment of owners of such dwelling, they may maintain action for damages and to enjoin the nuisance, against the saloon keeper and his landlord.

Fourth, the fact that the saloon was licensed according to law is no defense to such an action.

The account of this case is made a leaflet for use in the prohibition cause in Indiana, by the Anti-Liquor League. Copies of it may be procured by applying to E. M. Goodwin, secretary, 70 East Market street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

A copy of this leaflet was placed in our hands by that friend of the right and indefatigable worker, Sr. Frances; hence this notice.

This decision is of wide import in the great contest of sobriety against the liquor traffic, and the principles on which the court finally decided it are righteously and morally sound. In effect they are that given a locality where morality, sobriety, and quietude from the disturbance of the liquor traffic and its consequent scenes of drunkenness, are existent, there is no right, justice, nor statute enactment that can make lawful the invasion of that locality by those who openly disregard the conditions, and who choose to carry on a business destructive of the peace and good pleasure of the dwellers there. Those living in other places where similar occurrences may happen, will do well to remember this decision of the Indiana Supreme Court, and be encouraged to resist in the proper and legal way, as did these women, Haggart and Rathwell, the invasion of their rights.

THE SAINTS' HYMNAL.

In response to the demand for a hymn and tune book smaller than the Saints' Harmony, the General Conference appointed a committee to compile words and music from the Harmony for the smaller book—"The Saints' Hymnal."

In order to insure satisfaction to the church in general the committee on compilation was instructed to request presidents of branches to call together their choristers and singers to make selection of words and music and send report of their work to the committee, which was to take up the work of revision and select the most popular hymns and tunes to the number of not more than two hundred, with words and music combined, and fifty additional hymns to be grouped in the back of the work with a bar of music above the words of said hymns, making a book about the size and according to the general arrangement of Winnowed Songs, the Sunday school book now in general use—which measures about five and a half by seven inches, and is about half an inch thick. The committee was authorized to receive a limited number of tunes from other hymnals, if there was sufficient demand made for such by local singers.

We understand that such hymns as

"Let us shake off the coals from our garments" and other specifically Latter Day Saint compositions are to be published with their original tunes; also that the pages of the Harp and Harmony from which words and music are taken are to be placed above such words and music in the Hymnal that either book may be used.

The General Conference requested the Board of Publication to proceed with the Hymnal just as soon as the sale of one thousand copies was insured. The Herald Office management wish to be ready to issue the work promptly on receipt of manuscript from the committee appointed to compile words and music; for that reason the attention of the Saints is called to the new Hymnal. The price, as stated, will be fifty cents per copy. If higher priced binding is desired, such will be furnished, in flexible or any style, on receipt of order. The regular edition will be tastefully bound in cloth, with leather backs, and be made substantial and durable.

We request that orders for the new Hymnal be sent in at once that the list of one thousand may be completed at an early day. It is required by the management that remittances accompany all orders, in advance. The low price of the work and the special arrangements necessary for its publication make payment in advance necessary.

"The Saints' Hymnal," words and music, in convenient size, attractively bound and conveniently arranged; price 50 cents per copy.

Address orders to David Dancer, Herald Office, Lamoni, Iowa.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

QUES.—"Therefore as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives be subject to their own husbands in everything."—Ephesians 5: 24.

Are we to understand by this that wives are to obey their husbands in that which is wrong as well as that which is right?

Ans.—The completeness of the quotation turns on the word "as." "As the church is subject unto Christ," "so," in like manner, "let the wives be subject to their own husbands."

If it is reasonable to suppose that the church is subject to Christ to the doing of evil and wrong, then it is reasonable to understand the foregoing passage to mean that wives are to be subject to their husbands, in that which is wrong as well as in what is right, and not otherwise.

No such meaning was intended by the apostle. Nor are we to understand the passage as in any way sanctioning the doing of what is wrong by the wife, at the command of her husband; though it may sometimes occur that things may be required of the wife, which to her may seem wrong, but which the husband may believe to be right; but which of themselves are either right or wrong by reason of conditions obtaining at the time; in such case the rule is with the husband to decide. Husbands are not justified in requiring wives to be subject unto the doing of wrong; it is inconsistent with true manhood, Christian obligation, and the peace which should reign in every household.

Q.—When did this following language of Jesus have its literal fulfillment? "There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down."—Matt. 24: 2.

I have heard that it did not have its fulfillment until the nineteenth century; and if that be a fact, and positive proof can be had, it will be another strong proof in support of our claim, and we can use it in discussion.

Yours in bonds,

JOSEPH WARD.

A.—Whatever may be said about the fulfillment of the words of Jesus above referred to, not having occurred until the nineteenth century, the fact remains that the temple, the object concerning which the prophecy was delivered was utterly destroyed by the armies under Vespasian, Titus, and others of the Romans; aided and doubtless urged forward by the dissensions among the Jews themselves, under the Maccabees, and John, and Simon. The final destruction coming, as is generally believed, about August in the year 70, A. D., when the temple and city were razed to the ground.

WE received through some one's kindness a copy of the evening Democrat, Richmond, Missouri, for June 14, containing the sad and startling news that David J. Whitmer, son of David Whitmer, had been caught in a cave in of a sand bank some two miles from Richmond, and smothered to death. He was born in Clay county, Missouri, November 27, 1833, and at his death was sixty-two years of age. From the Democrat we quote:—

David J. Whitmer was married November

6, 1861, to Miss Stockwell of this county. The parents of the bride objected to the marriage and induced Mrs. Whitmer to come home after having lived with her husband two weeks. She did not return and in a few years obtained a divorce and married a man named Fowler, and they lived in Kansas. Several years ago she was divorced from Fowler and she and David Whitmer were again brought together, and in August, 1892, were again united in marriage. During all the years Mr. Whitmer was true to his wife and believing in the eye of the Almighty she was still his wife.

Mr. Whitmer was the keeper of the original transcript of the Mormon Bible and many other valuable papers.

AN ASTONISHING CASE OF SUFFERING.

SEVEN MILE, Ohio, June 14, 1895.

EDITORS HERALD:—Inclosed find clipping from Cincinnati Enquirer of this date. Is this not a literal fulfillment of prophecy in Doctrine and Covenants 28: 5? Surely the last days are upon us. Yours in bonds,

A. L. YINGLING.

PORTLAND, IND., June 10.—John Evert, a farmer, living in Blackford county, is in a fearful condition, and is afflicted as no man ever was since the days of Job. Writhing, crawling, and struggling in his flesh are thousands of worms; ugly, red creatures, about the length and thickness of a common pin.

They are not trichinae, nor hog parasites, nor anything like them. One of the worms which came from the unfortunate man's body lately was as large as a person's finger. Neither are they worms which infest the alimentary canal, but they live in the flesh and emerge from all parts of Evert's body.

He suffers excruciating agony, and has not been free from pain for a second in the last two years. His skin drops off in large scales, his whole body is raw, and the palms of his hands are cracked until the bones are plainly to be seen.

Evert is past fifty years, and was a soldier in the civil war. He is married and has a large family.

The best physicians from Hartford City have been baffled by the case, and eminent medical men from Cincinnati, New York, and Chicago have been powerless to diagnose the case, much less to cure the unfortunate sufferer.

"CONFESSIONS of an American Opium Eater," a two hundred and fifty page book, neatly printed on good white paper, has been placed on our table to be read and criticised.

The story is by Bro. H. G. Cole, of No. 93 Walnut street, Brookline, Boston, a printer, who wrote and put the work in type himself, and is an account of his own subjection to the evil allurements of the opium, or morphine habit. The story is told in an easy, readable way, and is very interesting. It is a 12 mo. volume, bound in cloth, and sold for $1, post paid.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. A. H. PARSONS, Philadelphia, June 17:—

Tent work is moving along nicely; audience last night the largest ever had in the city by our ministry; good order and the best attention prevailed during the day. The attendance is not so large during the week, yet growing with an increasing interest. Bro. Robley ministered the word to the people at Baldwin, Maryland, on Sunday to a fair audience. We are doing what we can to let the people know we are in the city, having had fifteen thousand hand bills printed, and spend our spare time scattering them.

Bro. Alexander H. Smith, from Detroit, Minnesota, June 11:—

The conference on the 1st and 2d inst. was not numerously attended, but we had a fair representation. Bro. I. N. Roberts was in attendance, en route for Dakota; Bro. William Sparling from Dakota was also with us. The meetings were interesting and all seemed to enjoy them. T. J. Martin and Uncle Billie McLeod and wife, Bro. William Nunn and family, Henry Way and family, with others unknown and known to you, were interested participants, among them Sr. Grace Sherman. Bro. I. N. goes to-day into Dakota on his mission work. I shall remain in this neighborhood a couple of weeks and then move into Wisconsin. Speak in Cormorant next Sunday. Address Detroit, Minnesota, Box 80. All join in loving kindness.

Bro. R. M. Maloney, Norman, Oklahoma, June 5:—

Please say to Saints and friends that I would be glad to receive their old Heralds and Ensigns, as they can be used to good advantage in this field. Send to my address, Box 98, Norman, Oklahoma. I arrived here yesterday; found many inquiring and anxiously waiting for preaching. Prospects are good here for our work. I hope much good will be done.

Bro. and Sr. Alfred White have been called to pass through severe ordeals caused by deaths in their family, of which Bro. I. N. White wrote in a late letter to Bishop E. L. Kelley from which we make the extract given below. We sincerely sympathize with the bereaved.

Bro. Alfred has lost two of his girls. Sr. Mary Cummings now lies in my front room a corpse, having died only one week after the death of her sister, Viola. Sad indeed. This is three of his girls in two years, and all he has. She died triumphant in the faith. A grand and bright evidence she left.

Bro. D. M. Rudd, Dow City, Iowa, June 20:—

Please say to the Saints in the Des Moines district who want tent labor done in their vicinity, to write to me soon, stating when they would prefer and we will then make arrangements to reach all points that seem of greatest importance. Bro. Scott has placed the tent work in the hands of Bro. Thompson and myself. We expect our new tent in ten days or two weeks at most.

Bro. John Shields, Toronto, Ontario, June 17:—

I have been holding meetings here steadily for over two weeks. The Saints are alive to the work and its interests. They hold regular branch services of prayer meeting Sunday morning, preaching in the evening, and Sunday school in the afternoon, Brethren's Prayer Union on Monday, regular prayer meeting on Wednesday, and Sisters' Prayer Union on Friday of each week. Elder Hattey is still pushing nobly and well as branch president and is loved by all. Since my coming we have had several open air meetings on the street corners and thus far we have had large crowds of attentive listeners. Some seem to be getting interested and as a result several strangers attended our meeting in the hall last evening.

In a postscript to a letter from Bro. F. G. Pitt, Chicago, June 20:—

Our conference at Mission was a success, fifteen were baptized; splendid interest, large attendance, and good meetings. Conference convened in our district tent, in order to accommodate the large attendance. Brn. Roush and McKiernan continued meetings a week after adjournment of conference. They begin tent meetings this week at Custar Park. Prospects in the district excellent for a good work this summer. We are getting along nicely in the city. The local brethren have started a mission at No. 2933 State street. They have rented a store, furnished it neatly, and we are conducting preaching meetings every night with good interest. This will afford the local brethren an opportunity to develop their talents, besides spreading the work.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. E. C. BRIGGS wrote the 11th inst., from Detroit, Michigan, that tent services would be held at the corner of Scotten avenue and Baker street every evening while the interest continued. Bro. W. J. Smith was in charge of the city work, Brn. R. E. and J. A. Grant and William Davis had been assisting. Bro. R. C. Evans was helping during the week ending on the 15th. Bro. Briggs was to attend district conference at Bay City June 15 and 16.

Sr. Walker requests those who owe on past subscriptions to Autumn Leaves to remit the amount due at an early date. See her card in the miscellany.

Bro. Richard Farmer, of Magnolia, Iowa, is now on a prolonged visit to Utah, and has been visiting relatives and friends at Herriman and Salt Lake City. Intends visiting other points in Utah and Idaho, preaching to, or reasoning with the people as opportunity offers. Sr. Douglas, of California, and Bro. and Sr. J. M. Stubbart, of Nebraska, are also in Utah visiting among relations and friends and speaking a word in regard to the faith whenever and wherever wisdom dictates. That is right; insert the leaven and wait patiently. There is a very large lump to leaven in those valleys and it may require some time.

We cannot publish unsigned communications. Brethren who write up matter for the HERALD should sign their names, giving date and address.

The mission address of Heman C. and Hyrum O. Smith is Box 1182 Salt Lake City, Utah.

FAILURE.

"To one who learns, there comes no greater strength
Than that which comes through failure. This I know—
That while success forever proves our loss,
Failure has pointed with unerring hand
To some still grander failure. Thus my soul
Has had no chance to fold its weary wings
And rest in apathetic victory.

"And still the purpose of an earnest mind
Does reach fruition every day and hour.
Rather, it makes fruition as it goes.
It fails, but counts its failures as success,
And in a world on fire, on fire itself,
Still feels the breathing of a deep content."

DUTIES OF PARENTS TO CHILDREN.

THAT mother is fortunate who is enabled by quick intuition to read aright the disposition of her children and guide them with never-failing tact from the shoals in their path. Such a mother holds the respect as well as the love of her children her lifetime. Though they have risen to high places and she pursues what are lowly ways in the world's esteem, they still go back to her with the same delight with which in childhood they came home from school. She is the one mentor who has touched the secret springs of their nature, and with whom there is rest from all the conflict, turmoil, and jealousy of the world. It is this type of mother, ever ready to sacrifice herself to the interest of her child, yet ever commanding its reverence and respect, which represents the ideal motherhood which is revered by all.

No woman who has children to rear can afford to become a drudge, merely to care for their food and clothing, and take no thought for the better part of life. She must share in the intellectual and spiritual growth of her children in order to keep pace with them. It is just as much the parents' duty to live in such a way that their children will honor them as it is the duty of the child to obey the commandment to honor his parents. There are a great many parents, worthy people, oftentimes filling worthy places in the world's esteem, who seem to look upon their children as mere adjuncts to themselves. They appear to think that the fulfillment of their responsibilities according to the letter of the law entitles them to endless honor and gratitude. Such parents are likely to be disappointed. They have done no more than the brute mother, who provides for her offspring until it is able to take care of itself and asks no reward but the gratification of maternal instinct. The human parent for what is practically the same thing demands the slavish devotion of a life. Only so far as mothers and fathers become noble exemplars, parents in a higher sense than that of earthly parentage, can they expect the honor of their children. Little is said of the duties of parents, while much is written and preached of the duties of children. The mother who makes her daughter a sort of menial to wait upon her whims, equally with the mother who becomes a drudge to gratify the selfish impulses of her child, is to be condemned. Such mothers imagine their daughters are ungrateful if they fail to honor and respect them. Natural love is all that can be given to such a mother, and sometimes pity. To the mother who is her daughter's noblest friend and dearest confidant is given that honor that neither slave nor taskmaster can command. It seems inexplicable that a mother should consent to become either the one or the other.—New York Tribune.

Dear Sisters:—Often while engaged in reading the Home Column I have felt impressed to write something for its pages, but again would put the thought from me thinking I had nothing to write about, and therefore had best keep still, and have acted accordingly. Last evening, however, while doing the evening's work and thinking of an aged sister from whom I had lately received a letter, a part of that letter passed through my mind. She had been wishing me all happiness from my recent marriage, and then wrote as follows: "I know you will be happy if you live for each other. . . . Never speak cross to each other." I think Sister See will pardon my using this part of her letter; but the first words were written with so much assurance, "I know," etc.

How much more encouraging to a young wife are such words as these than to have a woman of experience speak of marriage as a bondage and something into which they wish they had never entered. Yet how many mothers will speak thus to their daughters and others both before and after marriage. Thus it is that many a young wife starts out wrong in married life, and perhaps has as much or more trouble as was pictured out to her by her mother or older friends, and in turn feel it her duty to warn all her young friends to beware of the snare into which she was lead. Sisters (I am speaking to the older sisters now), we should always be willing to accept advice from you. But as you value a young wife's happiness, do not speak words which may have a wrong tendency. Some, of course, from what their lives have been could not perhaps speak with as much assurance as did Sr. See in the letter quoted in the beginning of my letter. But if you cannot speak words that will be encouraging in their effect then it is far better to keep still and leave the young wives, as the saying goes, to paddle their own canoes. Hoping I have not intruded on space that might have been put to better use I will close.

As ever, your sister in Christ,
CORA B. COHRT.

[SR. CORA, we think the space well occupied, and we trust that God will increase your faith in the sacredness of the relations into which you have entered and strengthen you that you may faithfully and prayerfully discharge its duties.—Ed.]

Dear Sisters:—How wonderful are the works of God. His way is not our way. Sometimes we have our mind set upon doing something which God is not pleased with and he tells us in some mysterious way that it is not right, and is not his will. Then if we do not heed his warning voice he leaves us to battle alone for awhile. I want to say as one who has had a trial of it, that it is not very pleasant, but is a trial I hope none of us will have often. One can hardly explain her feelings when left to herself. Everything seems dark; our best friends seem to us our worst enemies; the trees, grass, and beautiful flowers have all lost their charm, and we can see nothing beautiful in all the workmanship of our heavenly Father. But when we feel that comforting Spirit guiding us, every leaf, tree, and flower has a grand and beautiful lesson in it and we love to ramble through the woods or across the country and study nature.

I have often seen my boy when discovering an insect creeping on the ground, get down on his knees to see what it looked like, and before he left it he could tell whether it had wings, legs, or eyes. He could tell just how it looked, and if I was near and knew what kind of an insect it was he always knew before he left it. He was not told that it was a plague sent upon the earth, but one of the beautiful things of God. We can learn lessons even from the insects. There is nothing created that is more persevering than the ant. I once heard a brother say that while sitting down to rest by a steep hill his attention was drawn to a little ant trying to climb the hill with some dirt, and he counted ninety-eight times the ant climbed almost to the top of the hill and fell back to the bottom. Without any encouraging word from a friend (as we often have when we make a little fall of not half so far) the little ant would start back up the hill with its load, and the ninety-ninth time it climbed the hill and gained the victory.

How many of us would ever reach the top if we fell to the bottom half as many times? I am afraid the most of us would say about the third or fourth time we tried, "I will not try another time; it is impossible, and I cannot reach the top;" and we would call it a failure.

We as mothers sometimes think we cannot teach our children to do as we would like to have them, and we give up the second or third time we tell them how we would like to have them do, and instead of putting ourselves on a level with our children until we have them taught that which we would like to have them learn, we become discouraged and say we cannot do it. Let us, like the ant, keep trying in every good work until we climb to the top.

Your sister in Christ,
NELLIE M. PINKERTON.

FAIRLAND, I. T., June 13.

Editors Herald:—I left home May 20 and came direct to Webb City, Missouri, where I met Brn. H. H. Robinson, I. N. White, and others of the ministry, with whom we enjoyed a very pleasant visit. On the 28th in company with Bro. O. P. Sutherland I started for Maysville, Arkansas. Here we met Brn. Sheppard and Simmons, together with the Saints who had recently arrived from Oscar, Indian Territory. After prayerful consideration and consultation we organized a branch to be known as the Maysville, Arkansas, branch; ordained one elder, one priest, and one teacher. We were made glad on this trip, feeling that the Master had accepted and was pleased with the work done. Prospects are very bright for the work in this part of the field. Calls for preaching are urgent and frequent, and the brethren appointed to this part of the mission are capable and active and we confidently look for grand results from their labors the coming year.

Again in company with the efficient president of the Spring River district we made the trip from Maysville, Arkansas, to Webb City, Missouri, and at night through the courtesy of kind friends were permitted to attend the commencement exercises of the Webb City high school. The next morning found us again on the road to attend the conference at Pleasant View, Kansas, where we met with the Saints and ministry of the Spring River district. The crowds attending that were not able to get into the house clearly demonstrate the necessity of a church house in which to hold conference, as well as the increasing demand for labor to be done to keep pace with interest manifest in our work.

From the conference I came here to find the M. E. people occupying the ground nightly, holding forth in a large tabernacle. How long they will continue is not known. I shall likely remain here or in this vicinity until Bro. A. C. Hart arrives and then move forward as best we can. Saints who desire labor done in their localities can address me here in care of J. D. Kelley, and we will do the best we can to respond. Ever praying for Zion and her children, I remain,

Your brother in hope,

GEORGE MONTAGUE.

DETROIT, Michigan, June 11.

Editors Herald:—Our conference was a blessing to the Saints who attended. At the evening sessions the tent, 30 x 60, would not hold half the audience, who stood all around with profound attention. Elders R. C. Evans, of London, A. Barr, and the Grants were our orators and pleasing preachers. A good Spirit prevailed throughout the session, and a real determination to do all they could to prosecute the blessed cause to their utmost ability was seen on their countenances with a contentment that showed they were right without a doubt.

The report of the Bishop's good faithful agent was the only sad feature of the conference. Out of twelve hundred members of the church he had only two hundred and sixty names on his book who had paid tithing; but they had paid the nice little sum of about five hundred dollars. Just think if the nine hundred and forty had done as well what an amount of money would be raised! I hope, and by this request, all the branches to appoint financial solicitors, who will take pains to get the names of all members on their books and bring to their notice each month that the wise are showing by their works they are in the faith.

I have had twenty letters in the last week asking for elders to come and preach. That's right, brethren and sisters, let us hear from you and of the demand for preaching in all your cities and neighborhoods; also please give me numbers of members of our church in your respective places, if you can. All the elders are alive to the work and doing all they can now, and just as soon as possible they will come to your assistance; although I am fearful that some will be obliged to leave the ministry for awhile to replenish their home necessities—if the five wise do not forward their little free will offerings soon again. Remember that every month requires rents in many places where the elders live; and those who have families to support, just think of the little ones whose fathers are in the ministry and by your voice in conference are sent, and how they need just as much to eat and wear as your children do; and that you by solemn agreement by vote promise to sustain them and the Bishop in their respective missions by your faith, prayers, and means. Have you sent your regular dues to the treasury of the Lord to pay the expenses of the kingdom? If not, what reason have you to think you should be blessed every season of the year with plenty?

The hastening time to gather in the harvest of souls is surely here. Now my brethren and sisters, please take it to heart, every one of you, and see how much you can spare every first day of the week to pay on your tithing and freewill offering, so none of the elders will be hindered in their missions, and that others may also be called to take the ministerial field all the time to answer the hundreds and thousands of calls in our own missions to hear the gospel where our elders as yet in many places have never been.

I have heard in the last week from most of the ministers in our mission and they are all alive, but can't fill one tenth of the calls that are daily pressing upon them. The people are really famishing far and near to hear the word of life; and as you each value your own soul's salvation won't you lend a helping hand to feed the families of those brave men who will face the cold, frowning world with the restored gospel of Christ? I can hardly sleep nights when I think of how much we need help to prosecute our great mission to a perishing world and know that the night soon cometh when no man can work, and that the foolish virgins will stand out and say, "Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out." Remember that the constant laborer's who patiently toil, sacrifice, and help to carry on the work until victory is gained are the only ones who are the "wise virgins" to enter into the marriage supper of the Lord; and that while the others go to purchase oil, the door is shut and they must wait until the lesser glory is offered them with the rich man in a place of torment. In this connection just stop and think how many of you want to lose the celestial glory and all because you have failed to do your whole duty in this life. Many lose it because they cannot spare that that will perish when they get through with it; for one cannot carry a cent of it with him any more than the rich man who died and in torment immediately began to beg for even the smallest favor, which was then denied him; and then in all his agony of soul he plead for a missionary to be sent to his five brothers "lest they also come into this place of torment;" and even that request was denied him with the rebuke, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." You see, dear Saints, this life is the time to work with our heavenly Master; and just think if Jesus was here in person and should ask you to labor with him how gladly you would forsake all and serve with him in the glorious kingdom. I am all anxious to see you every one do something to help on the work that you may have a reward, and that souls, precious souls, shall be saved through your efforts.

The good men, all good agents of your several districts, are your servants to wait on you, to give receipts for all you do in this blessed cause; and what is recorded on their books will certainly be found in the book of life in heaven, and you retain your name honorably there by having it renewed just as often as you show by works that you are worthy.

For your convenience I will give you the addresses of your agents in each district: Elder Andrew Barr, Forester, Sanilac county, Michigan; J. H. Peters, Coleman, Midland county, Michigan; William Lockerby, Coldwater, Branch county, Michigan; J. M. Scott, of Southern Indiana district, Borden, Indiana.

Please see that these brethren get your regular offerings every month or week. Those not located in branches, do not forget. You are requested to not forget your obligations to contribute something every month so the work will not be hindered for the lack of means; and do not let little things get you out of patience so you stop work. You must remember that Christ is your Master, and that we must all account to him; and if his servants try your patience sometimes, that does not release you from your obligations to the law of life that makes you free indeed.

And, we must all try and be patient, though we see so many trying things in our warfare. The gospel is true and the Christ will soon come to claim his own and be admired in those who are saints; and those who profess and are not will be left out with the tares.

Your colaborer,

E. C. BRIGGS.

No. 15 Amherst Street, DETROIT, Michigan.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, June 15.

Editors Herald:—Our conference at Keb was an enjoyable affair. The Sunday school association was good; the program was well gotten up and excellently rendered to a large and appreciative audience. The scholars and teachers acquitted themselves nobly. The singing would be hard to beat anywhere.

I came here on the 3d, held meetings in the church till the 10th, then Bro. J. R. Evans and I set up the new tent which this district had made here. It is 35 by 55 feet, with two center poles, with a rope around the lower edge and a rope up every main seam, ten ounce top; all for eighty-five dollars. It is well made. We dedicated it on the evening of the 10th, but so far our crowd has been rather small. Some of the Saints are alive to the work here, and at their post every night, but if the Savior should come to the tent some of these evenings to gather his jewels some Saints would be left sure, for they have not been there a night yet.

O, ye Saints,

"Arouse, arouse, why idly stand,
Why sit at ease with folded hands;
There is a work for you to do,
No other one can do for you;
Arise and work, though great or small,
For by our works we stand or fall."

"Arouse thyself to diligence,
With others' works take no offense."

—Saints' Harp No. 1068.

This hymn is worth reading.

O, when will the Saints all wake up to see the needs of setting an example worthy of emulation by our neighbors! May we all strive to be of the wise virgins with oil in our vessels and waiting for the Bridegroom to come, awake and at our post, or rather go to meet him.

We expect to remain here till the 1st of July, then move to Blandinsville, Illinois, for a time. I am trying (and hope to succeed) to have Bro. J. R. Lambert with us at our conference at Fairbanks in the Grove Hill branch, September 1. I left the tent of Eastern Iowa in charge of Brn. J. R. Sutton and C. E. Hand, but have not heard from them since. I baptized a good old deacon and his wife at Edgewood, Iowa, and I believe if he will put himself into the Potter's hands that the Lord will make him a mighty instrument to wield the gospel sword in subduing sin and bringing souls to Christ. May God bless him and all who love and obey the truth.

In bonds,

J. S. ROTH.

NEW PITTSBURG, Ohio, June 13.

Editors Herald:—By request of Bro. John Davis I began meetings here on the 6th in the large schoolhouse, and have preached every night since and twice on Sunday. Have had large congregations most of the time, with profound attention. Satan is stirred up, and has agents busy at work, and some of them are doing considerable lying; but his efforts are not as effective as at some other points, for quite a number are believing and some good men of the world are daily disputing with these false accusers, telling them of their falsehoods.

I have baptized four since coming here; others are almost persuaded and may obey yet before I leave. I expect to continue here over Sunday and longer if needed. The Saints of Sand Run and Coal Gate contribute nobly with their presence and their prayers and singing. I go from here to Coal Gate to hold a few meetings, then on to Hemlock to confirm some who have been baptized by Priest John Nevills. I have been blessed with good liberty to present the word. I believe all the missionaries in the district are pushing ahead with their might. I feel restless and great concern for my own and my fellow man's welfare, as I believe that wonderful things will transpire in the near future. May we all as Saints of God abide the coming of the Lord.

Hopefully and actively in the conflict,

JAMES MOLER.

DANWAY, Ill., June 13.

Editors Herald:—The triennial conference of the Northeastern Illinois district was held at the Mission church, the first chapel built by the Reorganization, June 8 and 9; Sunday school convention on the 7th. A good attendance was had at all the meetings; in fact not near all could be seated in the large tent that was placed near the church. The Sunday school entertainment on Friday night was a success in every particular and though but a short time was given the schools to prepare for their various parts on the program, they showed a thoroughness and zeal that is commendable and speaks well for their teachers and superintendents.

The business sessions of the conference were harmonious and were ably presided over by Bro. F. G. Pitt, who preached an able and practical sermon on Saturday night. A spiritual testimony meeting was held on Sunday morning followed at 9:30 o'clock by Sunday school. At 10:45 Bro. Carter was to preach, but not being present the writer was substituted. At 2:30 Bro. J. B. Roush preached an excellent sermon, after which the congregation in wagons, buggies, etc. went to Fox River and Bro. Roush baptized fifteen. In the evening those baptized were confirmed by Brn. Pitt, Hougas, Roush, and McKiernan. Then the order of the meeting was changed and the writer occupied the time, speaking on the operation of the Spirit. The meetings were continued, Bro. Pitt speaking on Monday night. A good interest is indicated by the good order and the number attending. From here the tent goes to Custer Park where Bro. J. B. Roush and I will occupy.

Yours respectfully,

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

MARATHON, Iowa, June 14.

Editors Herald:—The writer, in company with congenial C. J. Hunt, made advent to this place on the 7th inst. The tabernacle was erected on the 8th and services opened the same evening. Copious rains have militated a little against a full attendance; last evening witnessed a good audience. The Holy Spirit is attending our efforts and we rejoice in the same. It is a very excellent blessing to enjoy, so kind in our Father to bestow the favor, and we seek to be worthy of it. Last conference year God gave me some special blessings. I presume I stood in need of their strength-giving power. We know they filled our heart with much gratitude; and this year since rallying from recent illness God has conferred added light upon his word. New ideas, brighter, clearer conceptions of his truth, and power in declaring that truth, have been given and happily received. Many times this spring has the Spirit filled our being with his genial influence and audiences "have felt the thrilling touch;" words have failed us in expressing the joy experienced. All this is very gratifying and confirming, and we praise God for it. The firmness of the foundation upon which we as a people stand becomes more and more apparent. No doubt it is of eternal duration. The author and builder is, we are assured. No weapon formed against it can prosper, so we need entertain no fear as to its stability; puny man cannot overturn what God upholds. Christ was and is right in all he taught, and everybody who desires to be right should fall into line and walk where he trod. There is no discount to be placed upon his word, no apologies to be offered for anything he said or commanded. We keep no theological lunch counter, but furnish a full gospel meal of rich viands, and very palatable desserts. So we can invite a hungry world to sit at the Lord's table and partake of the divine spreading; there is nothing about it to create spiritual dyspepsia, but a good, health-giving, toning invigorant.

It is amusing to learn of what some reverends have to say. Bro. C. J. Hunt has been corresponding with one C. E. Hunt, of Eldon, Iowa, and in a letter of very recent date he comments on Bro. S. W. L. Scott's articles on debate which were sent him and says: "I think that a man could not tell a bigger falsehood in fewer words than to say that the Church of Christ is a Campbellite church." We think so too, and it would be equally bad to reverse the saying. That "restoration of primitive, original, apostolic Christianity" by Messrs. Campbell et al. was a poor job. If God had only helped them it might have been better. What say ye? The whole Protestant world has been weighed in the gospel balance and found wanting. The world is in a pitiable condition, and how gladly we would show them "the way," but tradition and private interpretation have done a sorrowful work, and carry with them a terrible influence; darkening, blinding, perverting. But the fermenting quality of the gospel is quite perceptible and we thank God for it. The "little stone" is rolling on, bless His name, and soon shall fill the whole world, for "The morning breaks, the shadows flee,

Lo, Zion's standard is unfurled;
The dawning of a brighter day
Majestic rises o'er the world!"

We pray this conference year may abound with blessed results from the labors of a gallant ministry, armed with the panoply of God. We may, each one, have trials hard to bear, and the way at times may seem rough; but our Captain leads on to certain victory if we but follow his commands and pursue a faithful course. There is much to encourage, for the promises are exceeding great and very precious, and he is true who has promised. His word never faileth, we should, therefore, stand firm;

"'Tis a war that calls for valor,
'Tis a conflict with the world;
There can be no furlough granted—
Never must the flag be furled."

It is good to know of so many young men being called to the work, qualified by divine wisdom at the presence of which the wisdom of the world perisheth and the understanding of the prudent is brought to naught. How marvelous it all is in our eyes, yet how beautiful and inspiring to the soul of a believer! In gospel bonds,

J. F. McDOWELL.

SYDNEY, New South Wales, May 18.

Editors Herald:—Since my last I have returned to New South Wales where the demand is greater than in Victoria. Since arriving in Sydney seven have been added to the branch, which, with those baptized by Brn. Butterworth and Kaler, make twenty-four in about four months, and a few others are believing. Thirty-six have been added to the mission within six months. The late death of Elder E. G. Jones, of Hastings branch, Victoria, was a matter of deep regret to me. "He was a good man," one of the reliable ones. Within the last ten months have said "good-bye" to six, which was really "farewell." The number is much greater since leaving native land and friends at home.

The "reunion of Christendom" has been a topic of newspaper correspondence and pulpit discourse lately. A cable came out from London announcing that the Pope was anxious for a union between the Roman and Anglican bodies; and that opened the subject on these shores. No basis of union could be found outside of a complete surrender to Rome. It is restoration not reformation that the world needs. But will they see it? Even were it possible to unite the heterogeneous elements of modern Christianity, it is a question as to how long it would enjoy union. The facts are these: Division is unscriptural; on the other hand union is sure to involve a compromise and sacrifice of truth; and that, too, is unscriptural. A united Christianity would possess less truth than a divided one. The world is in a dilemma. It needs the "new evangel"—new only because of an apostasy from apostolic standards. It furnishes the only remedy: "Come out of her, my people."

In the discussion alluded to both Romanists and Anglicans referred to the Catholic church as "the mother church." Thus they innocently furnish an interpretation to Revelation 17: 5.

God speed the new evangel—the glad tidings, restoration! It is a pleasure to preach the gospel of these latter days, when helped, as we have been lately.

GOMER WELLS.

MILTON, Florida, June 14.

Editors Herald:—The work is onward here, having received renewed impetus through the energies of our newly arrived missionaries, Brn. Henry C. Smith and James M. Baggerly. Bro. Baggerly is leading off as a valiant laborer. He preached last Sunday in the courthouse at Milton, filling Bro. Henry C. Smith's appointment. Yesterday, the 13th, he lectured before the grammar class at the Teacher's Institute, in Milton, by invitation of Prof. C. P. Walker, of the State Normal School. He did well and is making friends for the cause by his everyday deportment. Bro. Smith will address the Saints at Coldwater, next Sunday.

The Saints and people generally are falling in love with Bro. and Sr. Smith by reason of their kindly manners and saintly behavior. Bro. Smith has thus far divided his time between the Coldwater and Milton branches, ill health having prevented his branching out into the larger fields as yet. The Saints are preparing to build a churchhouse at Milton. They have a lot engaged and are to organize a building committee at once. Our quarterly conferences are an assured fact, and the Saints are commencing to pay their tithes. There has never been a Bishop's agent's report from Florida, but there will be from this time on.

As we have ever been backward in the discharge of our duty, remember us in your prayers, that we may continue to "come up higher," until we learn to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

Yours in the faith,

S. D. ALLEN.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, May 11.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have passed through an experience new as well as instructive and trying. We, myself and wife, have been hindered to some extent by the French authorities from doing the good we might have accomplished. I made my first attempt at preaching in the native language, March 24, as soon as the restriction placed upon me by the authorities was removed. I preached once since and baptized two, one of whom was the little girl Bro. and Sr. Smith kept while here. I think I will be able to get along without an interpreter without much trouble, for which I am thankful. My wife has suffered quite severely from seasickness and the change of climate, but trust that her health will soon improve. We intend to remain at Papeete for some time on account of her health and the assistance I may render in making some necessary changes on the ship. In the meantime shall be busily engaged at this branch and the one at Teona (or Zion) only two miles distant.

Our conference was quite well attended, there being about five hundred natives present. All the white brethren and sisters were present except Brn. Janssen and Hawkins. Business passed off quite smoothly. Brn. Devore, Gilbert, and a native brother by the name of William, presiding. The Spirit of the Master was present to assist, cheer, and comfort, especially in the organization of the priesthood into quorums and the ordination of the officers. When the aforesaid William was ordained president of the elders' quorum we were all moved by the Spirit and wept for joy. He is a noble defender of the work, having successfully defeated two of the Mormon missionaries (white men), at the close of which contest he baptized ten of their members and seventeen others. So you see that the natives are coming to the front to assist in the work of the Lord.

While the landing of the Evanelia caused Satan's host to foam in battle array, we are planted firmly in front and expect to keep pounding away until we have gained the victory. We were informed yesterday by the American Consul that our trouble was not at an end but we need not fear as to the outcome. He has laid the case before the authorities at Washington. We framed a petition at our conference to send to the President of France with several hundred names of the natives attached, asking for recognition and redress.

The Mormons were treated far worse than we have yet been, the conference having been broken up, their assembly dispersed, and they called thieves and robbers, besides being threatened with imprisonment and banishment by the Governor. The Advents also are in trouble.

There were seven baptized at the conference and Bro. Gilbert has baptized fourteen since, on the island of Makatea, where my wife and I stayed about six weeks previous to conference. We feel sorry to see him go away now as he is such a help to the mission. He goes to-day on the packet "Tropic Bird," for America. Hope he may return before Bro. and Sr. Devore take their departure. They now intend to go home next year. Bro. Newton expects to return to America in July next. We met him at the conference for the first time. It seems now as though our force would be small. Bro. and Sr. Devore expect to go away to the east where the isles have not been visited much and the work is not very well established, to spend the coming year. They have endured much and accomplished much for the good of the cause. We enjoyed their company very much while permitted to occupy the same house; the one formerly occupied by Bro. and Sr. Smith, on the island of Rairoa. Remained there six weeks thence to Tikehau, where we parted with them and came on our way to Papete. Nine days seems like a long time to be on a journey of only two hundred miles; four days of which we were becalmed.

Bro. and Sr. Devore speak the native tongue quite readily, and Bro. Devore's sermons are clear, simple, and forcible. All who write us place on the envelope "via San Francisco."

Your brother and coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

PLYMOUTH, England, June 6.

Editors Herald:—All things being considered, the reunion of the Eastern and Western districts of South Wales was fairly attended. The few Saints at Morrision have rented a very convenient chapel which will accommodate over two hundred and are industriously working to establish a Sabbath school. Though not present, I learn there was a very interesting entertainment on Saturday evening, June 1; some friends assisting Sr. E. Gibbs, who is an accomplished pianist, in the musical department. All in attendance enjoyed it very much.

To reach Morrision from "Ilfracomb," Devonshire, I was necessitated to cross the Bristol Channel, about two hours sail, in the steamer "Brighton," which proved like a cork on the water and whose motion was to my mind most ridiculous; and though I lost nothing, the sea squamishness was of sufficiently large proportions and the heavings sufficiently effective to have entirely dislodged the whole contents from my capacious stomach. The battle was short, but fierce, and long enough for me. And I thought I could sympathize with Sr. Devore.

There were two social and two preaching meetings on Sunday, one priesthood, one preaching session, and one for five-minute speeches on Monday. Interest, peace, and good will, by the Saints, was plainly manifest. We hope for good results from the reunion of 1895 in the Eastern and Western districts, in a general way; but time must determine. The entire eradication of noxious weeds is difficult indeed.

The prejudice caused by polygamy, etc. and bad conduct of some members of the Reorganized Church is deep rooted, and the result of uprightness that all members of the church should evince is by the few in South Wales an absolute necessity to live down this prejudice. Will they do it?

I have no wish to unduly applaud the Saints in America, but in the long ago President Joseph Smith said, "We want to live to make the name Latter Day Saint honorable;" and more recently he said, "We want to convince the people that the Reorganized Church has come to stay." I think many in America are untiring in their efforts to cooperate with the President in this godly work, which is but their reasonable service. Shall we in South Wales and elsewhere be behind in the good work? I hope not.

It is bad enough to get offended, but to let our anger burn to such an extent as to evince a determination to rule or ruin were infinitely worse. How effective the trouble caused by a failure to discriminate between liberty and license? Why should any informed Latter Day Saint give evidence of such a deplorable deficiency? How can we be effective teachers of others if failing to govern ourselves? Who will answer? How essential the work, consisting of a practical procedure, to prevent trouble? Shall we not more assiduously labor to become practitioners? Why not?

The reunion was well advertised by the Morriston Saints, but few were attracted thereby. One is at times disposed to evince a righteous indignation at the perfect indifference evinced by the masses, however attractive the publicity or invitation; and if there had been a general concert of action in this particular the indifference or silent contempt could hardly have been more visible in England or Wales. But this gives no license for inactivity on the part of the Saints. No, we should rather be stimulated as was the gallant little company with Captain Burton at the helm, who, in the thickest of the storm, bent to their oars more vigorously, thus reaching the objective point. The church and God will expect this at the hands of the Saints in Wales and elsewhere. God help us to be noble and valiant. The visiting Saints were well provided with lodging and food, the burden of which was cheerfully borne by Bro. Gibbs, Mrs. Gibbs, and family. In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

COATS, Ark., June 15.

Editors Herald:—Bro. H. H. Robinson and I are engaged in a series of meetings here. At present the interest and attendance is very light. We will close Sunday night and Bro. R. will leave on Monday for Standley, Indian Territory, and I for Wheeling, Arkansas, as Bro. J. W. Jackson and I are both missionaries in the great State of Arkansas. I desire to know his post office address as I wish to write him. I also call the attention of the scattered Saints and friends in the northern half of Arkansas to my permanent address, Pomona, Howell county, Missouri. Those who desire the work opened up in their neighborhoods will please write me at my permanent address and in writing please give name of county where you live as well as post office. I have opened up in two new places, one of which is near Ravenden Spring. I had about twice as many out to hear me as could get in the house at the close and many invitations to come again, and while I was preaching at this place Mr. T. W. Wells, a prominent citizen and member of the general Baptist Church, accompanied me to the scenery. Wonderful! There I saw a cave and a spring in it and a natural knoll in front with trees and grass and other vegetation growing upon it, while the creek divided and ran on either side. Next was a hole about midway in the bluff which is two hundred feet high or more, where the ravens used to live. We then came to the Lone Rock, which is about fifty feet in diameter at its base, one hundred and twenty-five feet high, and about twenty feet across at the top, and there is a beautiful cedar growing on top of it besides other vegetation. Opposite this rock is what they call the Needle's Eye where we started in the bluff and had just room to squeeze through, and after winding through the rocks for considerable distance we came out on the top of the ridge about half a mile below the spring and while I was viewing this wonderful scenery in this remote place in the forest my mind went back to the account given by the Nephites (Book of Mormon) of what took place here on this continent at the crucifixion of Christ.

Bro. D. R. Baldwin, an elder from Lincoln, Nebraska, is located near this spring and rendered valuable service in the meeting. We organized a Sunday school and promised the good people that we would return in the near future, if it was the Master's will. Bro. Baldwin is preaching in some of the school-houses every Sunday. He is determined that the people in his community shall know what he believes and why he believes it.

ZONKER, Mo., June 14.

Editors Herald:—If you see proper you may insert this in the Herald, as there are so many looking for homes. I want to say that they can find land that they can make a good living on, near Zonker, five miles southwest of Mountain Grove in Douglas and Wright counties, Missouri. I cannot describe the land through the paper, but I will be glad to correspond with any and all interested parties and tell them all I can about the country. This country is what would be called a rough, hilly country, but the most of the land is tillable and we have good health and good timber, good range, good water, good people, a good climate and a good lot of Latter Day Saints in here. There is some government land here, but not any large bodies of it. I own four forties and I will give anybody choice of three of them or all three for three hundred dollars each, and they are all improved. One is all under fence and part in cultivation; one has some in cultivation and some fruit and a large log barn and five other log buildings; the other forty has eight or ten acres in cultivation. Water can be got on either one.

As I said before, I cannot ask you to give a full description of the country, but I only ask you to modify and correct my mistakes and publish the substance or what you think necessary. I will sell on good terms; one third down, or to make it short, on three yearly payments.

I have been in the latter-day work just one year and I can tell that I am gaining strength all the time, and I hope I may continue until I come to perfection. I see that we all have something to do, and I want to do my part and do it freely and with a willing heart, although I may make some mistakes; but God is able to forgive me.

Your brother,

CORNELIUS EDWARDS.

* INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITORS SAINTS' HERALD:—I hand you herewith letters to and answers from Elder Uriah Smith, Editor of Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Michigan; also letter to Editor of Signs of the Times and reply from W. N. Glenn, of the Signs of the Times, Oakland, California.

Believing the historical matters, etc., will be of interest to your many readers, I send it.

It will be well that the Saints note this: that during the years 1832-34, Bro. Jared Carter did missionary work in the Eastern States, and that William Miller, then a Baptist, heard him preach the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and he (Miller) became very much wrought up over the subject and began to expound the prophecies in the Bible to mean that Christ would come on a certain day in 1843, then afterwards set a day in 1844.

To my mind the following points are quite clear; viz.: The Adventist Church is an outgrowth of the Millerite movement; and that they are indebted, directly or indirectly, to Bro. Jared Carter for the truth they teach concerning the second coming of Christ.

EDITOR REVIEW AND HERALD,

Dear Sir:—I am in need of information on the following subjects and trust my wishes may be complied with:—

1. What church was William Miller, the leader of the Millerites, a member of, before beginning his distinctive work? Was he an ordained minister?

2. Were Elder James White and Mrs. Ellen G. White members of the William Miller movement? and were they present in 1843-44 when so many gathered, believing Christ would come on the days set by Mr. Miller?

An early reply will greatly oblige,

Yours truly,

C. J. HUNT, ESQ., Deloit, Iowa,

Dear Sir:—Yours of April 10, received. William Miller was a member of the Baptist Church before he commenced his work of publishing and expounding the prophecies. He was not then an ordained minister.

Mrs. E. G. White was a member of the Methodist Church before she entered the Advent movement, and Elder James White was a member of the Christian Church. They took part in the movements of 1843-44, but I do not know what you mean by the language, "When so many gathered, believing that Christ would come on the day set by Mr. Miller;" for there was no general gathering on that day, but the churches of course held religious services, each in its own locality.

Very truly yours,
URIAH SMITH.

EDITOR REVIEW AND HERALD,
Battle Creek, Michigan,

Dear Sir:—Can you give me information on the following questions:—

1. Was William Miller, of the Millerite Church, formerly a member of the Baptist Church, founded by Roger Williams in America, in 1838, or the church founded by Menno Simon, of Holland, in 1536?

2. What year was the Seventh-day Adventist Church organized?

Thanking you in advance for information asked for, I am,

Yours for truth,

MR. C. J. HUNT, Deloit, Iowa,

Dear Sir:—Yours of April 15 received. In reply I will say:—

1. William Miller was a Baptist of the Roger Williams stripe, and not a Mennonite.

2. The Seventh-day Adventist Church began in 1845, but was not regularly organized; that is, no special church organization was started among them, until the year 1857, when what we call church order was established among us. This at first related to individual churches only, but has since been extended to State Conferences, General Conference, Tract Societies, Sabbath Schools, and lastly to the International Religious Liberty Association.

Of legal organizations we have Publishing Associations, Educational Societies, Health Institutes, and General Conference Association.

Very truly yours,
URIAH SMITH.

MR. C. J. HUNT, Deloit, Iowa,

Dear Sir:—Your letter addressed to M. C. Wilcox asking information is at hand, and as he is absent for a time, I will reply briefly:—

1. William Miller was a member of the Baptist Church, of Low Hampton, New York, and was licensed to preach in 1833. I believe he was not an ordained minister.

2. Elder James White was a member of the Disciple Church, and Mrs. White (then Ellen G. Harmon) was a member of the Methodist Church. They were both interested in the movement conducted by Mr. Miller. Mrs. White never did any public labor or writing until after that movement was past. Elder White did some preaching in connection with that work, being then but a young man.

Respectfully yours,
W. N. GLENN.

DEBATE AT BLANDINSVILLE, ILLINOIS.

BRO. R. SHERMAN, of this place, attended the Christian church occasionally and heard some statements made by the pastor, Rev. Samuel Magee, that were not according to the gospel as Bro. Sherman understood it; so he asked him if he was willing to affirm a proposition covering some of the grounds of difference between the two churches. Rev. Magee readily answered, "Yes, every day in the week and twice on Sunday." This led to a correspondence on the subject by Bro. Sherman with the writer, Bro. Joseph Smith, and the missionary in charge. After General Conference, under instructions from the missionary in charge, I visited Rev. Magee and we agreed on the following propositions for debate and appropriate rules to govern:—

1. Is the church of which I, Samuel Magee, am a member, the Church of Christ and identical in faith, organization, teaching, ordinance, worship, and practice with the Church of Christ as it was left perfected by the apostles? S. Magee affirms.

2. Is the obedient Christian of the present time entitled to the operation of the Holy Spirit the same as in the apostolic age? T. W. Williams affirms.

For what appeared to us good and sufficient reasons Bro. T. W. Williams, of Council Bluffs, was selected to represent the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the results demonstrated the wisdom of Bro. J. R. Lambert's suggesting him and ours in accepting the suggestion. The debate began on Monday evening, May 13, at the Christian church. At seven o'clock the meeting was called to order, and Rev. Magee selected as his moderator Elder Griffin, Bro. Williams selecting Elder James McKiernan as his moderator. These selected Dr. Emery as presiding moderator. The propositions and rules were then read and the discussion was carried on by half hour speeches, alternating between affirmative and negative, and continued for six successive evenings of two-hour sessions each.

The interest never flagged from beginning to end. It was estimated that the house would seat six hundred and it was crowded every night but one, and then rain prevented many from coming; but the seats were nearly all occupied. The best of order and respectful attention was had. The moderators had to call for order but once and that was when some standing in the vestibule made some disturbance by talking.

It is impossible for me to give even a synopsis of the arguments used and do them justice, so I will not make the attempt. Rev. Magee came nearest to meeting the propositions and arguments on their merits of any debater I have heard. Only a few times did he resort to the scandalous stories so often used by our antagonists in debate; otherwise we were treated with the utmost courtesy by him and all his church members. By invitation Bro. J. R. Lambert, Bro. Williams, and the writer dined at different times with Rev. Magee, Elder Griffin, and Rev. Ballou,—the latter the M. E. pastor.

Bro. Williams conducted his side of the discussion in a very able manner, setting up a counter claim for a church organized after the apostolic pattern with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, etc., with all spiritual gifts promised to that age, and placed it in contrast with the "church of which I, Samuel Magee, am a member." It was a move the reverend was not prepared for and took him by surprise, from which he did not sufficiently recover to reinstate his church in the estimation of the majority of his auditors.

In the second proposition Bro. Williams, being in the affirmative, led out on what it took to constitute an "obedient Christian." This gave an opportunity to introduce (so far as time would permit) every principle of the gospel to be obeyed; the question of authority, church organization, etc., and he made good use of the opportunity. This was another unlooked for move, and placed him so far in the lead that his opponent was so busy following him that he had no time to resort (if disposed) to the usual tactics of abuse, without leaving such strong arguments unanswered that the audience would consider them unanswerable. He seemed greatly put out because Bro. Williams quoted so much scripture to substantiate his positions, claiming the congregation knew what was in the Bible and that it was unnecessary to quote so much, and in harmony with this thought made very few quotations, but contented himself with the assertion, "We believe," or, "the church at Blandinsville believes" thus and so; or on the other hand assuming that the passages quoted did not apply as used.

The main struggle centered around 1 Corinthians 13:8-12, the reverend assuming that the statement "when that which is perfect is come" referred to the perfect book—the Bible—the "parts" to the Gospels and Epistles, etc., scattered among the various churches. When these were all collated and placed together by Polycarp then "that which was perfect had come"—the perfect book—and therefore spiritual gifts were no longer necessary. But Bro. Williams showed that according to this logic, as soon as the parts came together and perfection ensued, then the parts were to be done away—the Bible is composed of these parts, therefore as soon as the Bible was compiled it was done away, because the whole cannot exist after the parts of which it is composed are done away. Also that neither did the Christian church then nor since "see eye to eye" when Polycarp had collected the apostolic writings, neither did they know as they are known then or now; so went down that "forlorn hope" where the last stand was made and with earnest but mistaken zeal hotly defended.

The papers stated previous to the debate that Bro. Williams would wish that the Mississippi had swallowed him up before Rev. Magee got hold of him; but I think that Rev. Magee wished (metaphorically) that the Mississippi had swallowed Bro. T. W. before he let go of him. But I could do the matter only partial justice if I should occupy your space, so I shall stop here and only say that the debate could be fully appreciated by those who carefully and candidly heard.

Yours for truth,

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

DANWAY, Illinois, June 13.

HEALED OF BLINDNESS.

TESTIMONY OF FRANCES A. ERNST
LUMLEY.

THE subject of this sketch was born April 11, 1831, in Toronto, Canada; a daughter of George W. and Rebecca Cutter; was baptized by Elder E. C. Brand, and her sight was restored after nearly four years of blindness caused by erysipelas, having had large ulcers in each eye.

During the fall and winter of 1866 terrible, malignant erysipelas broke out in Southern Illinois. Many suffered with it in Clay county where I then lived. My husband, Charles F. Ernst, was smitten with the dread disease, his flesh in places being ulcerated to the bone. In preparing wash and poultice for him, I struck my arm on the stove, cutting it quite severely. The disease was taken into my system through this wound. It went to my face and eyes, and in a short time I was blind.

I received treatment from many doctors. The eyeball being ulcerated, they ordered poultices saturated with chloroform, and gave me opiates; only waiting for my eyes to burst out, only waiting to die. The doctors had lost all hope, for my money was all gone. They came to lance my eyes, but God stayed their hands.

Alone in my hut I prayed to know if the Bible was true; if there was any Jesus, any God, and did the Savior say (Mark 16:17, 18), "These signs shall follow them that believe"? If so, where are the believers? Is the beautiful story of blind Bartimeus told in Mark 10:46-57 true, and is God no respecter of persons? James, the Lord's brother (James 5:13-15), told us what to do; but I knew better than to send for the elders of the Christian or Campbellite Church, of which I was a member twenty-five years, or those of any other church of my acquaintance; for they told me it was mockery.

My husband, though feeble, went away nearly every day, doing such work as he could thus procuring our food. One day while he was reading aloud to me from the Bible, he read Mark the tenth chapter, and as I listened a light came to me; not to my eyes, but to my soul. Heaven seemed to open and I began to utter the following words, which I requested him to write:—

BLIND FANNIE'S PRAYER.

O thou who heard Bartimeus,
Hear me also while I pray;
Remove this grievous blindness,
Let me follow in the way.

Like him, I ask not pleasure,
Or gold or earthly bliss—
I ask of thee one treasure,
Dear Savior, it is this:

O take away this blindness,
Restore to me my sight;
O Jesus, in thy kindness
Turn my darkness into light.

Or, if it is denied me,
Grant this, I humbly pray—
Thy loving hand to guide me
O'er life's dark, thorny way.

And though I never never may
Behold the rising sun,
Help me, O help me, Lord, to say
Thy will, not mine, be done!

When life and pain and tears are o'er,
May I lean upon thy breast,
And breathe my life out sweetly there
And calmly sink to rest.

Then bear me from this world of night
To that celestial shore
To dwell in everlasting light
With loved ones gone before.

Now I felt much better in mind, and my faith in God was increased. In prayer that night Mr. Ernst thanked God for this great blessing, after which he lay down by my side to watch over me, fearing I would die and he not know it. While I prayed for Jesus to heal me, to open my eyes, a voice said, "Take off the bandages and you shall see." While wrapped in a beautiful vision, I saw one standing by me and he laid his hand on my head and said that I should suffer no more as I had done with my eyes. I saw also many things, heard beautiful music, words of comfort assuring me I should go on a long journey and some one would cure the ulcers in my eyes; that my sight would be restored at a time and place greatly to the glory of God the Father. I suffered no more, although I then had the third ulcer in my right eye and the second in my left was so large that it was very difficult for me to close the eyelids. The friends and doctors said they would burst open.

A short time after this my husband took me to Indiana to visit his relatives. While there they had me cover my eyes, for they could not bear to see them. On our way home I spoke a few times on the subject of temperance and at the close of the last night's lecture, before reaching home the next day, my husband said: "Now, don't tell any more about being cured, for we will be home tomorrow and no one has come to cure your eyes." To this I replied, "If my feet were on our doorstep, I should not enter till I had received the blessing, for the Lord has spoken it."

That evening we were going to stay with a Baptist minister and as we came to the steps, my husband leading me, the kind minister said: "Good news in Zion, Sister Ernst." "Thank God," I said, "I know what it is." The minister asked, "What is it?" "God has sent some one to cure the ulcers in my eyes," was my answer. He said he did not know whether it was God or who it was that sent him, but that there was a man in town who had been with the Indians. "He has been here and said to bring you to his drug store in the morning and he could cure the ulcers in your eyes." I went and he treated my eyes for a few weeks. The ulcers dried up, the balls shrank back and felt dry and bad. After that I could distinguish a glimmer of light with my left eye.

While under treatment my husband exchanged our few earthly possessions for a team and wagon, and we started for Dunlap, Harrison county, Iowa, reaching his brother Hyrum's in July, 1870. My brother-in-law had recently laid his companion to rest in the dark, silent grave, and her father and mother, William H. and Mary Jordan, were there much of the time caring for the little ones. I called these good old people Father and Mother, for I had no relatives living that I knew of. Father and Mother Jordan were members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and they told me this church was the true Church of Christ; that the everlasting gospel had been restored; that the angel spoken of in Revelation 14: 6, 7 had come to earth and the organization of said church was begun April 6, 1830, by divine command and built according to the New Testament pattern. (See 1 Cor. 12: 27, 28; Eph. 2: 19-22; 4: 1-16, etc.) To my surprise they said the gifts of the Holy Spirit mentioned in Mark 16: 17, 18; 1 Corinthians 12: 1-11, etc., were enjoyed by this church; and that the first principles of the gospel recorded by Paul in Hebrews 6: 1, 2 were preached and practiced by them.

In September, 1870, by their request I attended the Semiannual Conference held by the Latter Day Saints at Park's Mill, near Council Bluffs, Iowa. I heard several of their ministers preach and was convinced that it was the doctrine of Christ. I also attended their prayer and testimony meetings and heard some of them speak in unknown tongues and give interpretation, while some were blessed with the gift of prophecy, and others bore testimony of having been healed of divers diseases by complying with the instruction given by the apostle in James 5: 13, 15. After hearing the glad sound of the restored gospel and experiencing to some degree the Spirit of the blessed Master, I said: "It is enough; I am ready to obey."

On the 19th of September, 1870, I was baptized in the river at Park's Mill, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, by Elder E. C. Brand. Many hundreds were present who witnessed the baptism. After a fervent prayer was offered for the Lord to bless me with his Holy Spirit, I was confirmed at the water's edge by the laying on of hands by Elders E. C. Brand and Thomas Dobson. While their hands were upon my head in confirmation one of them spoke in unknown tongues, and a part of the interpretation was, "Be thine eyes opened, and receive ye the Holy Ghost." Those words were verified to me at that time, for my whole being was enveloped with the Holy Spirit, and my blind eyes were opened and healed instantly.

Now, in the evening of my life I again give my testimony to the world, that I was blind and the Lord healed my eyes, as stated above. Nearly a quarter of a century has passed since my sight was restored, and I have never used spectacles in reading, writing, or doing my housework. To God and Christ be all the praise. I am now and have been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints since that time, and a resident of Deloit, Crawford county, Iowa, for nearly twenty years.

GOD ANSWERETH THE PRAYER.

As there are some who'd like to hear
God's answer to Blind Fannie's prayer—
Would like to know how I was healed,
How God his love to me revealed,
To you I'll tell his wondrous plan:
His will is now revealed to man:

Dear reader, it's the GOSPEL LIGHT
Now shining through sectarian night;
The Spirit and the word agree,
And thus the Spirit said to me:—

Your groans, and cries, and prayers, and tears
Ascend the throne of grace;
Rejoice! they've reached the Father's ear,
And give to God the praise.

Go, heed the prophet's warning voice,
I've called in latter days;
Go, make a free, a happy choice,
And give to God the praise.

Obey the gospel I have given
Through him in latter days;
You shall have sight, and life, and heaven,
And give to God the praise.

Your brother,
